Under date of Alabama, July 13th, Rev. G. D. Hunt says: "We are reducing our church debt to $100 or a little less. I am very happy over this. I am leaving Lanett Church at the close of the present Conference year. I have no plans for the future. The Lord will provide. My soul is happy over what I have been privileged to accomplish in past years and still press on with hope and faith and love."

Rev. J. F. Apple, Elon College, N. C., pastor of Bethel Church, reports closing a very successful revival at his church, Friday night, July 12th. He was ably assisted in the services by Rev. B. J. Earp of Greensboro. The church was much revived and there were five additions to the membership at the close of the meeting. Brother Apple is this week conducting a revival at Mt. Zion Church. Rev. J. L. Neese, Reidsville, is assisting him in these services.

From the church bulletin of one of our pastors we quote the following: "Thanks to the regular and faithful contributions, both large and small, from everybody, our church is able to maintain its standard throughout the year. Everyone understands that his contribution, even though it may be very small, is a right and regular requirement of the church's financial program, and he gives it gladly. Many people on going away on a vacation pay their church dues before they go away. Not a bad idea." How many of the pastors of our constituency can make a similar statement? Happy are those who can, yet it should be borne in mind that such a condition in a church can only be the result of a hard-working, consecrated pastor.

We learn from Dr. F. P. Ensminger that the Summer School of Leadership training at Wadley, which closed last Sunday, was one of the best attended Summer Schools held at Southern Union College. It was regretted, however, that representations were missing from some of the most faithful churches. The teachers and staff of the Summer School this year included: Revs. A. R. VanCleave, C. Carl Dollar, Ross Ensminger, and Dr. Ensminger; Miss Annie Campbell and Miss Marguerite Davison, our extension workers in that territory, and the following Student Summer Workers—Malcolm White, Elsie Adams, Miss Bernice Boyette, Miss Lorene McGlawn, and Miss Floris Johnson—and staff members—Misses Eunice Stevens, Nonnie Looser and Burna Veazey.

We congratulate our friend and brother, Dr. E. A. King, corresponding editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and pastor of Miami Beach Community Church, Miami, Fla., on having reached the 35th anniversary of his ordination to the Christian ministry and having served successfully our Miami Beach Church as pastor for the past fourteen years. Dr. King was ordained to the ministry July first, 1900, at Maryville, Ohio, the eminent Dr. Washington Gladden of Columbus preaching the ordination sermon. At the present time Dr. King is moderator of the Southeast Coast Association of Congregational-Christians, a director of the state conference, a member of the national commission on religious radio broadcasting and a member of the national missionary education committee of his denomination. He is vice president of the board of trustees of Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., corresponding editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, published in Richmond, and writer for the Advance, Boston.

Possibly some of the honest and sober adherents of repeal are becoming disillusioned now as they behold a fact or two. For instance, they took their training and propaganda for repeal from news items and editorial utterances of their daily papers. Possibly they see now why these papers advocated repeal, since the first year of repeal netted these papers, through their advertisements of liquor, $10,000,000 in round numbers. They are still getting advertisements and, of course, the papers are getting their pay for having educated (?) their readers to the cause of repeal. Another fact may help to disillusion our good repealist friends. They were promising that bootlegging would be largely, if not wholly, abolished. Now let them take this stubborn fact from no less authority than Honorable Joseph H. Choate, Jr., Federal Alcohol Administrator: "Bootlegging has increased one hundredfold since repeal of prohibition," or, if that is not satisfying, how about the statement from Attorney-General Homer S. Cummings that "law violation commitments since repeal have increased throughout the country ninety-five per cent," and that "if these violations continue to increase at the present ratio, we will have to go to Congress for more Federal prisons."

Rev. R. L. Williamson, R. 4, Charlottesville, Va., writes under date of July 9: "My health is much improved, and I am happy in my work. I am serving the following churches: Mayland, Island Ford, Mt. Lebanon, Mt. Olivet (G), Whistler's Chapel and Woods Chapel. I served all of the above churches years ago except Island Ford and Mt. Olivet." It is with genuine joy to his host of friends in the ministry and laity that this faithful pastor has so improved in health as to be again busy about his Master's work. We rejoice with Brother Williamson and congratulate these churches in securing the services of this devout and faithful man. The way he goes about his work is indicated by the following lines from his letter: "I am enclosing check for missionary offering from Mt. Lebanon. It is not large, but it represents quite a number of gifts, many from children. I did not know until I received your letter that some of the other churches of my charge had not sent in their offering. I shall be glad even at this late date to urge them to send in what they have collected, as I presented the cause to the other churches of my charge." One could wish that some others of our pastors would be as conscientious and loyal to their Conference and their churches in this matter for which the church is being built in the world by our Lord.

THE WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONVENTION OF SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETIES.

The Convention met on Tuesday, July 9th, with the Pleasant Hill Church near Liberty, and the welcome was as hearty as the hospitality was excellent. The attendance was neither large nor representative, and proved disappointing to the host Church, disconcerting to the speakers and disheartening to the officials.

The speakers however, were able to free themselves from any atmosphere of futility for they spoke with fervor and effectiveness and every major emphasis and work of the Convention was presented. During the periods designated for business the reports of the work of the Convention were presented and discussed. It cannot be stated any of the reports measured up to expectations and it seemed to be the general feeling, unuttered or expressed, that something must be done about it.

The Committee on Resolutions endeavored to meet the situation with a stirring challenge for cooperation, beginning with the ministers. The following ministers of the Conference were present: Revs. Pollard, Green, Crutchfield, Loudermilk, Penn and Lightbourne. And Churches are urged to have their Sunday Schools and Endeavor Societies represented by delegates. Less than fifteen of the Conference's thirty-six Churches were represented. And only a few Sunday School superintendents and Endeavor presidents were present to answer to the roll call.

The guest speaker for the sessions was Rev. F. C. Lester, Chairman of the Southern Convention Board of Christian Education. Mr. Lester presented the work of the Board at the morning session and in the afternoon he was heard in a splendid address on the general work of Christian Education.

The Convention did not receive an invitation for the sessions of 1936 and so this matter was left with the Executive Committee of the Convention. It was voted to ask all schools with enrollments over 400 to contribute five dollars, schools with an enrollment over 200 two dollars and all other schools one dollar as a gift for the year 1934-1935, and that for 1935-1936 the regular assessment of two cents per-enrolled member be met.

The present staff of officers was re-elected but no one seemed overly pleased. Probably they are all very human and probably in a few months they will be in better humor and ready to try to rally the forces of the Convention for a better Convention in 1936. REPORTER.

FROM CAROLINA.

June 17th-21st was an enjoyable week for pastor and people at Carolina. Each morning from 9 till 12 the pastor conducted a Bible School for the children. The boys and girls responded splendidly to the challenge of the school, the total enrollment reaching 47. Each evening was used by various speakers who presented the challenge of the Cross and the Church. On the program as speakers for the evening services were Brother Robert Wagoner, a Methodist layman; Rev. Chas. Coble, a young licentiate of the M.-P. Church; and your writer. The services were well attended and a fine Christian Spirit prevailed each day and night.

THE PRIVILEGES OF A MINISTER.

ARTICLE VI.

FRIENDS.

A minister, if he has the faculty for friendship, forms many rich and lasting friendships.

His sermons tie many men and women to him. The youth who are summoned by his appeals and for whom he opens up visions of life, the middle-aged who are strengthened and steadied by his messages, the aged who receive comfort, the sick whose trust and hopes are brightened, the couples whom he has married and who have "sat under his preaching," are many of them tied to him with hoops of steel.

His pastoral contacts, perhaps even more than his sermons, form companionships and friendships. To pass through sorrows with others, to consecrate the children from many homes, to share in the birthday and wedding anniversaries, to receive the confidences that men and women share with no one else, bind him to his parishoners. The years pass but they still love the old thoughtful, friendly minister whose advice and interest meant so much to them. The true pastor never loses a brooding love for those whom he has pastored. Whenever he hears of the death of a former parishoner whose faithfulness endeared him to the pastor, he feels that he really ought to have been with the friend during his illness and to minister at the memorial services. Many laymen have the same feeling for the pastor long since absent from the parish.

Friendships are formed with his brethren in the ministry. It is only an occasional minister that allows the unholy spirit of rivalry to mar his relationships with his brethren. Their purposes are the same. Their responsibilities interlap. They are often together in meetings and mingle their prayers, their hymns of praise and their pledges of loyalty. Forty-six years ago a friendship commenced with two other young ministers, which has deepened through the years and has meant much to me. The pressure of Dr. Gladden's arms around me as I finished the sermon at the State Association held in his church and sat down after quoting his poem, "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee," without giving the author's name, is as vivid now as then. I often announce the hymn and at every time it is sung I feel those pressing arms and recall the last visit I had with him at the National Council in New Haven, when he was physically frail.

But denominational barriers cannot limit one's friends. Bishops Bashford, McDowell, Cranston and Vincent have meant much to me, a younger minister. The Presbyterian Ministers of Washington, D. C., who gave me delightful fellowship during my pastorate in the Mt. Pleasant Congregational Church. Dr. Green and Dr. Muir, during the same period, did not hesitate to share with me their friendly life, though they were Baptists and I of another fellowship, and the pastorate in Boston was enriched with the friendships of ministers and laymen of all denominational affiliations. Ultra orthodox and liberals were cordial and helpful.

Among the friends a minister wins are some who are not members and often not regular attendants of any church. They are interested in the works of welfare and when they find a minister who has a passion to serve others and does not regulate that gift of himself entirely to his own congregation, they give him their friendship and support. In Galesburg, a lawyer who lived the Sermon on the Mount and who, when a lad, had a view of the Bible slightly different than the standard view of that day and was asked by the pastor of his church to withdraw his membership, became a dear friend. He had been President of the Bar of Illinois and his friendship helped me wonderfully. In every community where the writer has been pastor, men and women of this kind have finally rallied to the work of the church. One man in Sandusky whose life was not exemplary but who was an ardent Prohibitionist gave me strong support. Later he was united with the church and is now an honored member.

As one grows older and his steps take him down the Western slope of life, the departure of friends into the eternal world, makes that life seem more real and cheering. Frank Gunsaulus left us, as it seemed to his friends, ten years too soon, but in the loneliness of life that his departure brought me, came also the thought, and it comes over and over, that he awaits me there. I wonder if that eloquent voice that moved men here stirs the hosts of Heaven?

THE GRANDVIEW, TENNESSEE, LEADERSHIP TRAINING SCHOOL.

They are very much alike no doubt, these summer schools for young people; so perhaps there is nothing novel to tell about this latest born of the summer school family. The Leadership Training School at Grandview in the mountains of Tennessee. But just as every new baby comes into the world with possibilities of its own, so it is with this infant school. It is difference just because it is new.

The conference at Blue Ridge which has served our Southern young people for a number of years has been given up because of its high cost and two others have been organized in its stead, one at Elon College in North Carolina and this one at Grandview, Tennessee. Perhaps to be entirely accurate, therefore, I should call this one of a pair of new-born twins.

For meeting place it uses the campus and buildings of what was once Grandview Normal and Industrial Institute, but it is now leased from the A. M. A. by two Chattanooga families who use it for a summer music camp for a month each year. The L. T. S. rented the place for a week and the two of the owners who make their summer home there gave us all the assistance in their power. And we needed all we could get. The camp is equipped for fifty or possibly sixty campers. Our total registration was one hundred and twenty-five. Accordingly many things, such as lights cooking utensils, beds and wash rooms, had to be hastily improvised and were not always adequate.

The group, however, took all inconveniences with surprisingly good temper. Indeed, the thing which most impressed the writer—It was her first conference—was the ease with which that hundred young people and their leaders adapted themselves to the exigencies of camp life. To lessen the expense all the work of the camp was done by the campers themselves, which certainly made for good fellowship. More than one of those boys put their hands into dish-water for the first time in their lives.

The division of the day was the usual one, classes in the morning, sports in the afternoon, assembly at night—all of them well planned and well carried out.

The place is appropriately named Grandview, situated as it is on the crown of Walden's Ridge with far vistas in many directions. But even wider and grander was the view which we looked out upon through the eyes of those with whom we shared experiences.

Here was an English clergyman and his wife who had been missionaries in the city of Jerusalem. There was an S. S. S. worker who had lived in the Hawaiian Islands and gone to school with children of three races and half a dozen nationalities and neither knew nor cared which were which.

The "bright star" of the class of dramatics had lived most of her life in China. At least three fourths of the way around the globe we could see through her eyes.

Then there was the group who had "dipped into the future far as human eye could see;" the workers from Pleasant Hill, up to their eyes in the task of making life richer for the hungry people of the mountains; the men from the "Homesteads," which we had the joy of visiting, T. V. A.'s project for giving the tiller of the soil his chance; the young woman from the Highlander Folk School where they are throwing all their energy into the effort to persuade the community to live cooperatively. If any young person came away from that week in the mountains without having looked out upon a larger world than he had dreamed of before it was only because he was one of those unfortunates who "having eyes, see not."

CONVENTION POSTPONED.

When this article appears, the time for the Youth's Congress of Eastern Virginia, which was to have met at Bethlehem, will have passed. The Congress will have to be held later if it meets this year at all.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Eastern Virginia Conference is also postponed indefinitely. The action concerning these two bodies has been taken by the Executive Committees upon the advice of the heads of the Boards of Health in the communities where the meetings were to have been held because of the Infantile Paralysis.

The Board of Health of Newport News advised Mr. W. H. Baker, the Secretary of our Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention not to try and hold the Convention until cold weather. The health of our children must be safeguarded, yet it is with regret that we call off the Convention because we feel that the interest was splendid and that we would have had one of the best conventions ever this year.

If the group does not meet, our work can go on. If each pastor and Sunday School superintendent and the president of each Christian Endeavor will see that the dues and reports are sent to the Secretary of the Convention, Mr. W. H. Baker, 1028 24th St., Newport News, Va., the report will be properly taken later and due credit given to the local Sunday School and C. E. Society for the amount of money sent in with the report, then the proper distribution will be made for the welfare of the work as a whole.

There is no need of the work of the Board of Christian Education being crippled if each organization will comply with the above request. For it is through the amount of money raised by the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies that the board is able to carry on its work. That work is conducting various training schools at Elon, Norfolk, Suffolk, Newport News, and anywhere else that the people will organize for it and call upon the board to help. There are many other things it does of a helpful nature which are too numerous to mention here.

If you read this article please see that your school complies with its request.

Yours respectfully,

J. E. MCCAULEY, President,
S. S. & C. E. Convention.

A man may call himself a Christian, but the measure of his Christianity is the occupation of his mind and heart with Jesus.—Maclaren.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

SHOES.

A lover of mine, two lovers, to be accurate, united in sending the writer a pair of clever and comfortable shoes. They are clever (the shoes are) because they attract and please, though quite modest and unobtrusive. They are comfortable, because, besides a low, soft rubber heel and a flexible sole, the upper leather is so sliced and curved together as to admit an abundance of fresh air without being obtrusive or spectacular. I like my shoes. Shoes, though not conspicuous, play a very conspicuous part in our happiness or unhappiness, comfort or discomfort. This has been the province of shoes, hence their great significance in history. Maybe Adam and Eve had no shoes, save some comfortable slippers made of fig leaves, but it was not long till man had devised this covering and protection of the foot and evidently had used this device with recklessness and even desecration. When Moses, the great law-giver, stopped to investigate the bush that would burn but would not be consumed, he heard the voice of God saying, "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." And Joshua, successor of Moses, heard the same words from the Prince of Jehovah as he fell on his face to worship. "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet; for the place whereon thou standest is holy. And Joshua did so." Thus early in the history of mankind, the humble shoe began to play its mighty part. But early in the history of Israel the shoe came to be recognized as a symbol of a sealed and sacred contract. Ruth 4:7—"This was the custom in former time in Israel concerning redeeming and concerning changing, for to confirm all things; a man drew off his shoe and gave it to his neighbor: and this was the manner of attestation in Israel." And so these lovers of mine attest their lasting and abiding friendship, and by this attestation I am made very happy and full of gratitude. I realize now more deeply than ever the significance of our soul-stirring Negro spiritual:

"I got shoes, you got shoes,
All God's chillun got shoes.
When I get to heab'n, goin' to put on shoes,
And shout all over God's heab'n."

And so, as you and I, reader, look upon our shoes, whether purchased or donated, we may be reminded, as we should be, of the solace and sacredness of our way and our walk through life and of Him who said, "I am the way," so that walking in this Way we too shall be permitted to join in the heavenly chorus some day.

GOD'S UNCHANGING PURPOSE.

Bishop Arthur J. Moore of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has spent more than a year in seven mission fields abroad—China, Korea, Japan, etc. Bishop Moore tells a message to his people that may come with full force and fervor to our own people, since conditions, as Bishop Moore finds them, seem to be very much the conditions that our own Dr. Fred Field Goodsell is finding in our mission fields at present. We quote Bishop Moore from the National Christian Advocate:

"It has been an enriching experience to know our missionaries. I have found them enthusiastically loyal to Christ and His Church. They are identifying themselves with the interests and struggles of the people to whom they have gone. They are occupied with the proclamation of a great gospel—a gospel adequate to satisfy the deepest longings and highest aspirations of the human heart and the human race. Despite reduced budgets, depleted ranks, and multiplying problems, they remain sacrificially devoted to their task and stand eager to join the Church in America in a fresh adventure with Christ in his redemptive mission.

"This is emphatically not the time for the Church in the homeland to give less, either in personnel or money, than we have given in the past. Choice young men and women of unquestioned consecration and outstanding talents, with special training, should be sent at once to reinforce our missionaries who have carried on faithfully in these years of depression. Such men and women are greatly needed and will be received with an eagerness which can scarcely be overstated.

"That we are in a critical and fateful hour no one can deny. The entire world is in serious trouble. There is confusion everywhere. Turn where you will, you will find the rampant forces of radical prejudice, assertive nationalism, blind economics, coupled with the age-old human passions and lusts. All these are contesting every inch of Christian progress. The Christian movement is hindered not only because some oppose its teachings, but because so many ignore it.

"As one goes about the world one has a sense of being in transit, of being on the way—whether to better or worse, only the future can tell. One cannot escape the conviction that the peace of the world and the future of the Christian Church are bound up with solution of the problems now perplexing the nations over which we have raised the flag of Methodism. Our missionaries stand at the very center of this rapidly developing and critical situation. They face a combination of problems such as would baffle the wisest counselors and challenge the boldest leadership.

"However, the situation is not without encouragement. The steady progress of Christianity in these lands makes stirring reading and calls for gratitude. The books are not closed, and many a golden page for the history of Christian missions is being written. I have returned to America with a deepening assurance of the adequacy and universality of the Christian message. We may be in a time of transformation, but not of defeat. The growing complexity and difficulty of the work may call for reconsideration and restatement of plans and programs, but I was never so sure that in all the turmoil and confusion of individuals and nations, Christ's uncompromising conquest goes on. The missionary enterprise rests not upon our human frailty and shifting economic conditions, but upon God's unchanging purpose and Christ's unwearied compassion for all men. my heary is the assured hope of final and glorious success."

J. O. A.

I AM A CHRISTIAN.

Mr. Jesse R. Wilson, General Secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement, thinks we ought to be emphatic about it. In fact, he has convictions in the matter. He can't see why one should be ashamed on this account. Both from ancient and modern history and experience, Mr. Wilson derives this conviction. An instance is given of a woman brought before a magistrate in the early Christian era charged with being a Christian. She was given the choice of denying or of being put to death. Her only reply was, "I am a Christian." Sentence of death being pronounced and asked if she had anything to say, her reply was, "God be praised." That was a long time ago. Now coming to modern times, Brother Wilson states that the question arose in a social group as to whether we of today as Christians on threat of death would recant our faith. The first reply was, "Don't be silly. Of course I would and so would you." Wilson replied, "I believe I would not." He declares he is not a Buddhist nor a Mohammedan, a Confucianist nor a Hindu, a humanist nor a pagan,—"I am a Christian." He admits that he has not yet attained, nor been made perfect, "but the bent of my life is settled. I no longer debate the question; the die is cast. Perhaps I could turn back, but I doubt it." Secretary Wilson's declaration is worth further quoting:

"In today's world men carry many labels—liberal, fundamentalist, radical, conservative, Baptist, Methodist, democrat, republican, pacifist, communist, socialist, fascist. I like none of these. Some of the others may apply to me, but for myself I want only one label—Christian. I know that this term is made to cover many social attitudes and many religious concepts. Some of these I repudiate. Some have connotations far removed from the Spirit of Christ. Nevertheless the word itself is the most potentially significant word in any language. It derives from Christ Himself. It needs to be redeemed from anything that is unlike Him. It can and should mean only that which is deepest and best in this world. In this sense I claim it for myself. It is the only badge I want. Above all else I want to be a man of one label—a Christian."

So much to his Prologue. In a small volume, paper bound, of 64 pages, published by the Student Volunteer Movement, 254 Fourth Avenue, New York, Secretary Wilson certainly gives the Christian world something to think about when he declares that for him at least being a Christian involves four things, which are the four chapters of his book—

1. A Christian Experience.
2. A Christian Faith.
3. A Christian Philosophy of Life.
4. A Christian Hope for the World.

It is a personal confession that this man makes, and possibly some of us reading it will be strengthened in our faith and renewed in our zeal for the Christ Whose name we are permitted to share.

Having quoted from the Prologue, I know of no better comment on this stirring confession than to quote the Epilogue in Wilson's own words:

"Yes, I am a Christian—a convinced if not a complete Christian. As such I have a Christian experience, a Christian faith, a Christian philosophy of life, and a Christian hope for the world. I wish everybody in all the world were a Christian. I am sure there is no one, no matter how good he may be, that would not be infinitely better and happier if he should have a deep and vital experience of the love of God in Christ.

"Because of this, I am a missionary-minded Christian—frankly a propagandist. Everyone is a propagandist for the things which he most surely believes—provided these things are significant enough to make a difference in his life. I eschew many of the methods of propaganda because they are un-Christian, but I believe in all propaganda for Christ that will stand the test of Christlikeness.

"This means that I believe in conversion. I am not foolish enough to believe that I can convert anyone, but I believe that God can, and that I can be an agency through which His Spirit works. I believe that through me, by the Spirit of God, men's lives can be completely transformed and changed—made over. I believe it because I have seen it take place. And if through me, then through all who in sincerity, humility, and gratitude can say with me, 'I Am a Christian.' "

We can certainly commend this little volume to readers of The Christian Sun.

THE VENERABLE BEDE.

Many school boys have wondered how the Venerable Bede got his name. His death at sixty-three demonstrates that to be venerated a man does not need to grow a flowing white beard and seam his countenance with the furrows of eighty winters.

Bede was the most learned man of his age in Britain, and perhaps anywhere. But that is less than half. He was both honest and modest. He did not square off and tell the universt how to run itself, as is the temptation of small souls endowed with superior knowledge. He lived long, long before the dawn of the age of modern science, but he had the true scientist's reverence for facts. He knew that all his ideas were not his own, and he faithfully gave credit to those from whom he derived them. And he constantly strove to keep within his facts. He has properly been called the father of English history for he had the historical sense highly developed though living in an age of ignorance and crude magic.

But best of all, he used his knowledge for the benefit of others, and especially for common folk. He spent his last days translating one of the Gospels into the vernacular of his period. This is the first time any portion of the Bible got written into English. Nor was any serious attempt made to go on with this work for more than six centuries. Wycliffe was born about six hundred years after Bede had died, and Tyndale did not appear for more than a century and a half later still.

On May 25, 735, Bede completed his translation of St. John's Gospel, and on that day he died, 1200 years ago. This work was his last labor. In excessive weakness of body he struggled through the last portion of the task. His clerk told him that they had come to the last sentence. On through that he went. The clerk said, "Now, it is finished." "Finished, indeed!" said the good man, turned on his couch, murmured the Gloria, and died.

Bede's Latin was good. He knew Greek. He probably knew some Hebrew. He had access to a good library, good as libraries went in those days and on his far frontier of the world. This was centuries before the art of printing was invented. Bede devoted his whole life to his learning and his writing—labors, as he said, undertaken for the benefit of his brethren. He wrote history, volumes of it. He prepared a grammar. He wrote a treatise on music. He put knowledge within the reach of those who could use the only language of scholarship then known. And at the last he set about getting the Bible into the vernaculth of the humblest.

It would be refreshing to take in hand this familiar portion of the Bible on which Bede worked, though none of those who read anew the Gospel of John will follow the language which Bede himself used, for the English of today has no speaking acquaintance with the English of Bede's day. Furthermore, the Bede text is no longer within reach; no copy is known to exist. The loss, however, is somewhat sentimental, for only the rarest scholar of today would be able to read a verse of it. The student in high school and college has a hard time making head and tail of Chaucer, and Bede lived six hundred years before Chaucer.

Bede never traveled. In all of his life he moved not more than a few miles from the place of his birth. Men like Bede make it clear that provincialism is a disease of the mind, a blight of the soul, and not the accident of travel or the lack of it.

There is some speculation as to why Bede chose the Gospel of John for his first essay in translation. To a less discriminating spirit than his it may seem to be the least suitable of the four gospels for presentation to a rough and ignorant populate such as that by which he was surrounded. May it not be that it was precisely because life of the times was so drab that Bede chose John's Gospel? The same Jesus appears here as in the other Gospels. He walks the same streets, trudges along the same dusty highways, ministers to the same hunger and misery. But in John's Gospel this pre-eminent life rises above its surroundings as in none of the others. The transcendent significance of life is depicted.

Is it not likely that Bede sensed this, and hastened to put this interpretation of the life of Christ before the starved and suppressed spirits about him? He wanted religion to mean to them the fullest possible emancipation. He would have them know that narrow confinement and drudging duties need not stifle the soul in men. He had experienced the truth in himself, this man who had never traveled, had never held high office, had never been lord or bishop of anything but of himself and his own exalted purposes.

With this insight take down your Bible and read anew John's Gospel, for reading it means communion with the most exalted Spirit of the ages, and encourages acquaintance with the Venerable Bede, a great soul, worthily venerated because he caught the spirit of Jesus, lived, wrought out his mission and died in the power of that spirit.—Selected.

A PAGE FROM THE PAST.

While walking around in Cedar Hill Cemetery on the last Memorial Day, Bro. W. W. Ballard and myself came to a large stone slab, in the part of the cemetery containing the bodies that have been removed from what was formerly known as Willow Hill Cemetery in Suffolk, Va. It bears the inscription, "Lucinda Anderson, born May 12th, 1795, died Nov. 20th, 1879." Bro. Ballard asked me if I knew who that was, and I did not know. He then told me that it was the grandmother of Rev. William T. Walker, who was the pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church from 1879 to 1882. She was the daughter of William O'Kelly, a state legislator of North Carolina, and his wife Mary Merritt; and she was the grand-daughter of Rev. James O'Kelly and his wife Elizabeth Meeks. When Rev. William T. Walker's mother died his grandmother took him and cared for him until he was grown. She was advanced in age when Rev. W. T. Walker was called to Suffolk, and was living with him, and moved with him to town. She sickened and died before the family had gotten their furniture arranged in their new home. Her grandfather, Rev. James O'Kelly, was the Presiding Elder in this section in 1789, 1790 and 1792, the year he and his associates left the Methodist Episcopal Church in the Baltimore Conference of 1792, and began to organize the Christian Church in the South. Therefore the Suffolk Christian Church has near here one of the descendants of the organizer of the denomination. No doubt the Christian Church in the vicinity of Suffolk owes its prestige to the early influence of the leader, Rev. James O'Kelly.

THE WINDOW OF THE SOUL.

The above title of the very recent book by the Rev. John Lewis, M. A., Ph. D., pastor of the First Congregational Church of Scranton, Pa., was most wisely chosen for this inspiring, informing, and suggestive series of heart-searching and mind-stimulating meditations.

Dr. Lewis, a welshman by birth, and an American by choice, has that rare insight into the spiritual realm which is characteristic of his race. His exceptionally fine educational background received in the schools of England and Scotland gives the scholarly tone to this book that at once arrests the attention of his ministerial brethren. And his deep personal religious experience and understanding make the meditations of lasting value to all who read this truly worth-while book which was written "for such a time as this."

Every minister of the Congregational and Christian Churches should possess this book by one of our fellowship.

It is different from most books of its nature, being both philosophic and practical.

This unique treatise on the spiritual life was published in England, and is just off the press. I recommend it most heartily to my brother ministers. It can be procured from Reisman's Book Co., of Scranton, Pa., at $1.50 a copy.

Knowing the author personally, and enjoying the book so greatly, I am confident that "Windows of the Soul" will prove to be "windows" to a larger appreciation of the spiritual life to hundreds of readers.

Dover, Del.

To you of the clergy, I would say that few of you realize how weak is the faith of your people. You have preached to us on theological questions which may interest you but do not interest us because they seem to have but a remote relation to our daily lives. You have taken it for granted that we know the elementary principles of the Christian faith. Here you are mistaken. We know little, we believe little, we practice little of Christianity. You have given to us a religion which is indeed a comfort in time of sorrow, but has in it little of the heroic. You issue ringing denunciations of the evils of the world in general, but preach little on the widespread indifference to our solemn pledge to give of ourselves and of our substance to God's work, to guide our daily lives by His laws.—Dr. Lewis B. Franklin.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

On Sunday, July 14th, at 11:30 A. M., the new Sunday School Annex at Berea Church, Driver, Va., was formally dedicated. Dr. N. G. Newman of Holland, Va., a former pastor of Berea for thirteen years, preached the sermon. The topic of the sermon was: "Building the Church." Despite the threatening weather a good congregation was present. The Sunday School attendance was 84. The Junior Choir furnished the special music, with little Jewel Francis singing a vocal number and Mr. James Wesley Parker of Portsmouth, Va., rendering a violin solo. Mrs. Russell T. Bradford was pianist.

The story of building the Sunday School rooms is interesting and encouraging. In the early part of 1934 several members were visiting in the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Harrell on Sunday afternoon. Reference was made to a bequest of $100 in the will of the late Miss Mary Brinkley for Sunday School rooms. Some of the ladies said: "We think it is the time to begin building." Mr. Harrell said: "I will give the lumber in the old Beech Grove M. E. Church Building, if the members will tear it down and haul it to Berea." One day the next week, Mr. Harrell called the pastor over the phone and said: "They are tearing down the old church building: come on down and see what they are doing." The pastor went at once and found a group of men busy and enthusiastic over their work. That was the beginning of the actual building.

In a few days a Building Committee was appointed and a plan for the building was drawn up and approved. The plan provided for an annex 32 feet by 56 feet, containing seven rooms and a hall. The Committee agreed to build on the pay-as-you-go plan. Contributions were solicited on this basis. The response was generous and encouraging. In the late Spring actual construction was begun under the superintendency of Mr. Frank Pierce. The people offered to give cash, material and labor. Doubt was turned into faith and indifference into enthusiasm. The attendance at Sunday School began at once to increase. The building was completed in the Fall of 1934. Equipment has been added during the winter, and the building was dedicated free of debt, with $2,11 in the treasury of the building fund.

The cost of the building is estimated to be about $2,500. Actually only $1,541.17 in cash, was paid into the treasury of the building fund. In addition to the cash gifts, contributions of nails, electric fixtures, hardware, rubber tracking, labor and other materials were made from time to time, of which no record could be easily made: Mr. J. C. Ramsey donated the new lumber, window and door frames valued at $287.92. Counting also the value of the old lumber and bricks from the Beech Grove building, it is conservative to state that the actual value is more than that stated above.

A fine spirit of response and cooperation was evidenced in this work. The membership of the church is small in number; the financial conditions in the trucking section are very discouraging, and have been for several years. But somehow the people had an unusual faith inspired of God to face this task. An experience like this has great value to a pastor and the church. Faith cannot be worked out on a mathematical basis. Logic and love cannot always find the same solution to an argument. Faith transcends mathematical calculations and love supplants and surprises the methods of reason and logic. For that reason alone the church will always be superior to the powers of the world when it loves God supremely and lives by faith and not by sight.

On behalf of the Berea, Nansemond, Church, the pastor wishes to thank all who have helped to make this good work possible. For this record we praise God and thank our generous friends.

THE YOUTH OF TODAY.

Elon College is greatly interested in young people. The college was founded in their interest, and has been maintained throughout the years for their training and culture. Hundreds and thousands from the various walks of life have come to her campus for inspiration and help, and have gone out to battle with the realities of life, some to succeed and some to fail. Still they come. We want them to come; we invite them to come; we urge them to come. We are anxious to have them here because we feel that we can offer them what they need.

When I say what they need, I know that I cover a wide territory. To analyze the needs of the youth of today is a difficult task. Perhaps too difficult for any laboratory other than the laboratory of experience, which the individual must open and enter himself. But no one can open and enter the laboratory of experience without the proper tools. We propose to provide youth tools of information, inspiration and accentuated ideas of the value of clean living and right thinking, which must result in wholesome achievement. The wrong impression made on the bark of a tree remains so long as the tree lasts. The wrong impression made on the mind in its period of training remains until it is removed by a higher Power.

It is not the purpose of Elon College to disturb the religious convictions of anyone, provided those convictions are in accord with the teachings of the scriptures and the highest demand of the individual's own conscience. But it is the serious intention and determined purpose of Elon College to add to faith and enrich the Christian experiences of all who come. We believe that religion is essential to life and living; that Christ is the great head of the Church and should become the master of all.

I would like to express my opinion of present-day youth. I do not believe that they are all bad, nor do I believe they are all good, but I believe that, generally speaking, they are endowed with great possibilities. I think that present-day youth is frank and fearless; that it has very little regard, perhaps too little, for the precedence of the past and the accepted customs of society, unless such precedence and customs meet what youth considers essential. In other words, the average young person today feels that he should be left free to think for himself, arrive at his own conclusions, and proceed in the direction which to him seems to be wise. There is something arresting about the prospectus of the average young person who has had a sufficiently broad experience in life as to give him respect for his own opinions.

The writer has not yet become accustomed to shirtless, shoeless, sockless, and pantless youth. He does not believe in a nudist colony, but a glimpse of the beaches, the average tennis court, or resort place will reveal that a large percentage of the present-day youth believes in very scanty attire on certain occasions. They tell you that they want a coat of tan, and that the sun's rays beating on their bare bodies are good for health, and increase vitality. I don't know. I have never tried it. However, I have never seen an overwhelmingly convincing of increased vitality on the part of sun-coated individuals, even though they wear their coat of tan.

As a rule women are more immodest than men. Until recent months you rarely ever saw a man in public with bare arms, waists, and limbs, but frequently you would see women in very scant attire. For instance, men never thought of going without hose until women set the pace. I am not intending to reflect upon the fairer sex, but only to give the credit for originality. I am sure, however, that the youth of today are not responsible for this well-nigh nudist fad, but that the idea was inculcated and the example set by adults, as is usually the case.

Youth is adventurous. It is unwilling to travel always in a beaten path. It likes to experiment. It travels face foremost, not so much interested in what has been done, but greatly concerned about what is to be done. It is not so much concerned about which road to take, just so the road is crowded with the unexpected and filled with thrills. It is looking for thrills, mark you, and what thrills youth oftentimes disgusts maturity. At any rate youth is facing the rising sun, and is confidently expecting the day to dawn that is full of brilliancy and happiness.

Youth is advanced. Young people today, generally speaking, are more advanced in mental and social development at twelve years of age than they were at eighteen a score of years ago High schools in our American cities have a more inclusive and more advanced curriculum than the average college presented two score years ago. At that time high schools were unknown in small towns, villages, and the open country. Public education has proved a blessing and a benediction to the youth of our day. Individuals interested in the progress of the country and the development of citizenship have rendered great service in advocating and securing a universal public school system for our country. Naturally ambitious youth on the completion of high school is anxious to go further into the science of education. It desires more and more information. The colleges and universities of our country stand at the top of our educational system and are inviting young men and young women who care to come and see what mature minds trained for specific things with adequate equipment have to offer.

Elon College exists primarily for the young men and young women of the homes of our Congregational and Christian churches. From a denominational standpoint, with a profound religious background, a conscientious and consecrated faculty, we are prepared to offer the highest type of training and are anxious to have the young people of our own church take advantage of the opportunities that we offer. In taking this position and making this appeal we are no less anxious for, nor less appreciative of, the young people who come from homes other than our own church. Never at any time are denominational lines drawn on our campus, or are advantages offered to members of our church superior to the advantages that we offer to our other students. When once you matriculate at Elon College, you become a member of a good family, and are accorded all the privileges of the household, without preference or deference.

We are preparing for an increased student body for 1935-36. Our fall term opens September 3rd, and if you are going to college, we earnestly invite you to consider the invitation that Elon College extends.

Dear Friends:

The work on our new barn will begin in earnest this week. We have been hauling sand and rock and part of the lumber has been put on the site. When we think of the mountain of extra work it is going to put on all of us it almost makes one sick. We hope to duplicate the other barn as near as possible. It suited our needs to perfection. Then, too, it was one of the nicest dairy plants in this section. We used it in teaching our boys dairying. They always took a great deal of interest in keeping the barn and the milking department clean.

Visitors often asked: "How do you keep it so clean?" We are trusting to our friends to make it possible to replace it at an early date so we can furnish the best of milk for the children.

To produce good, wholesome milk you must be prepared to handle it in a sanitary way and it requires the proper equipment to do it.

Out of the ashes of the barn destroyed we hope to see one equally as good and modern rise up within the next few weeks. We have faith to believe this will be true. There are too many good men and women in the Christian Church who have a warm place in their heart for the little children in the Christian orphanage for it not to be true.

We are counting upon your help.

HAW RIVER.

The Third Sunday in May marked a memorable occasion for pastor, people and friends of the Haw River Congregational-Christian Church. The occasion was a two-fold one: First, it was home-coming day, and second, we dedicated a memorial window to the memory of the deceased deacons of our church. One name which appears thereon, however, represents a living deacon and the chairman of our present Board of Deacons.

Since the founding of the Church, its deacons have labored faithfully and energetically and as a token of our appreciation for their work, there has been dedicated to them a memorial window which reads as follows:

CHURCH WITH ONE MEMBER.

Going through a West African village where he knew there was no church, the Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Accra was astonished to come upon a little building about ten feet long, with a cross on it. He looked inside and found it unmistakably a church. It had a rough altar with a handmade cross, and three little bamboo pews. While the Bishop was looking a man came running to him from his work in the fields.

"Who are you?" asked the Bishop.

"I am the owner of the building," the man said. "I built it."

"And how many Christians have you?"

"Only one at present," the man said, "but when we had our harvest festival, every seat was full. When I came to live here I was the only Christian and no one would listen to me, but I thought if the people see that I built a house for the Christian God, they will take notice of my message. I will not rest until they have found the Lord."—Exchange.

GIRLS SOLD FOR TAXES.

Here is further proof that militarism is a curse. Japan's farmers must pay 60 per cent of their earnings in taxes; no less than 30,000 Japanese country girls have been sold to help meet these taxes. The government spends annually 46 per cent of the national revenue for maintaining the army and navy.

Girls of salable age range from sixteen to twenty-three years and prices for them run from $3 to $300. One farmer rejoiced when he sold his tyenty-year-old daughter for 1,000 yen, but changed his tune when he learned that the broker took about 30 per cent as his commission.

The National Christian Council of Japan has been concerned about the welfare of the Japanese girls and steps have been taken to prevent such sales.—Exchange.

TOMORROW.

The future policy of society with regard to the beverage alcohol traffic will not be settled by default. The course of governmental action relative to this perplexing problem will not be determined by permitting the liquor traffic to have its way for a season in reckless disregard of social welfare values. The idea of allowing moral and social conditions to get as bad as possible in the hope that the public may finally be aroused and driven to action by reason of such conditions is a theory born of despair rather than of reason. Worthwhile permanent results arise out of constructive planning and organized activity.

Within the next three years a majority of United States voters will be those who were under age when National Prohibition went into effect in 1920. During the next ten years 20,000,000 additional new voters will come on the stage. Almost half of these are now in colleges, high, and upper elementary school grades. The most practicable way to reach these new voters is by contacting and informing those leaders of thought and action who have influence with modern youth. There are 60,000 college professors and instructors. There are 600,000 teachers in high schools and the upper elementary grades. There are more than 1,000,000 Sunday school teachers that contact young people of those ages. There are 150,000 Protestant ministers and probably another 100,000 clergymen and leaders of all other religious groups. There are tens of thousands of athletic directors, youth leaders and heroes of the younger generation. These can best contact modern youth.

Every possible effort is now being made by the sponsors and advocates for the liquor traffic not only to entrench that traffic, but also to promote a most insidious pro-liquor propaganda in an effort to undermine the effects of past temperance education and to make all such efforts doubly difficult for the future.

What shall we do about it? We cannot avoid the issue. We dare not fail. We cannot personally contact the great number of leaders who influence the voters of today and tomorrow; but we can reach them with facts through periodicals and literature. We can place source material where it will be easily and quickly available to them, and in numerous other ways we can supply leaders of thought and action with the truth about the various phases of the alcohol problem.

This is the day of opportunity. Whether the possibilities for temperance progress tomorrow shall be realized depends upon the friends of sobriety today.—Ernest H. Cherrington in The American Issue.

THE CHURCHIEST CITY.

Los Angeles is, I suppose, the churchiest city of America. I noticed in the telephone directory 64 different faiths represented in the different churches and, I suppose, this was not near complete. Here are some of the churches: Church of Applied Psychology, Church of Divine Power, First Church of Astrology, Honwaji Buddhist Church, Koyasan Daishi Mission, Pillar of Fire, Church of Egyptian Theology, Truth Center, Unity Center of Divine Truth, etc.

I wanted to go hear Aimee McPherson, as I saw she was to be in her temple here yesterday, but I couldn't be everywhere.—J. B. Ivey in N. C. Christian Advocate.

Do you affirm, then, that you are faint? I reply, you may be still pursuing, and though not with the rapidity of the robust, yet with all the strength which a willing mind can command.

A Story for the Children

WHO'S FAULT?

By MARGARET A. FASSITT.

"Carolyn, where's Billy?"

Mother Elliott had just come back from a shopping trip and was looking for her active two-year-old son.

"Ummm?" Carolyn did not raise her eyes from her absorbing story.

"Where's Billy? I left him in your care."

"Billy? Oh, he's with Nancy. At least I think so."

Mother sighed. Carolyn cared far too much for stories, and far too little for household responsibilities. Something must be done to waken her up, why, she would be fourteen next month. Just then Nancy came running down the hall, humming a gay tune as she came.

"Where is Billy, Nancy? Carolyn said he was with you."

"Oh, she did, did she? Well, he's not with me, hasn't been, in fact. But I expect he's with Roger. I heard some noise out that way."

Of course he would be with Roger. He adored his big brother, and Roger was devoted to him, when he was not too busy with other things. All the children were so busy with their own interests.

Roger was located in the back yard making an airplane, with the help of hi cshum, Richard Brown.

"Billy? No, he hasn't been out here, has he, Dick? I haven't seen him. It's the girl's business to look after the kid when you're away. Saturday only comes once a week, Mums. Now don't be hard on a fellow," as he saw disapproval written on his mother's face. "We're making a dandy plane. Shouldn't wonder if it would really fly. See?"

But mother was gone, her baby must be found.

Sally, the maid, had been ill and was away for a few days, so where might Billy not have wandered with all the doors open, and the three children of responsible age, all busy with their own plans?"

The house was searched, but no sign of the little boy. The older children were aroused to real alarm now, and did their part looking for the little curly-headed lad whom they really loved dearly. Long and earnestly they hunted, but no sign of Billy. Stories of kidnappers came to all of their minds. Carolyn's face was whitest of all, for well she knew that he had really been left in her care.

"Shall we call Daddy, Mums?" Roger's voice had a quiver in it. "He might be able to think of something."

"I don't want to disturb him at the office if I can help it. We'll try once more. You go down the street again, Nancy. Roger can go up to State Street and around there. Carolyn and I will go across the garden toward the stream in the meadow," mother's voice broke, as visions of her baby boy wandering into the stream after " 'ittie bitte fishes" that he adored, came to her.

Two hours had passed, but no signs of Billy. Then when mother was about ready to call the police, Daddy Elliott appeared. Roger had not been able to stand it, and had gone to his father.

"Now cheer up, Mary," said daddy after one look at mother's white face. "We're going to find that chap, and after that—" but as he saw the scared faces of the three children, he thought perhaps they were getting punishment enough, without adding a scolding which they richly deserved.

"It will be dark soon, I'll take my flashlight."

"Let me get it, Daddy," Carolyn was only too eager to be of service, as she started upstairs.

"Wait, Carol. I think I left it in my overcoat pocket last night, and the coat's right here in the closet under the stairs," he opened the door and got the flash, then turned it on to see if it was working. "Come here quick, Mother," he cried, and there curled up in a little ball was baby Billy Elliott, with one thumb in his mouth, fast asleep.

"We looked everywhere else in the house, and never thought of that closet," said mother as she hugged the baby close. "How did he ever get in there?"

"I was in there for some string," Roger said slowly. "I 'spose I left the door open."

"And I pushed it to as I came in the hall," Nancy said. "But I never thought of it afterwards."

"Well, I know one thing," Carolyn said very thoughtfully. "I've learned my lesson. I'll never neglect things again, for an old story. I've been too badly scared this time."

And did she ever forget her promise? What do you think?

DIAMONDS FROM THE MINES OF LIFE.

The diamond was known, and used in early Bible times. Its value then, is suggested by Exodus 28:18 where instruction is given to place it as one of the sets in the second row of the priest's breastplate.

In the spiritual sense a number of diamonds should be selected for one's breastplate if righteousness is to shine out from one's life as something beautiful and desirable. Diamonds reflect sharp rays and sparkle, most in the sunshine. Our lives are most attractive when reflecting the sunlight of God's love. It is the privilege of each one to flash at every angle.

Diamonds are common stuff transformed. God is the Master Cutter and if we will hold steady against His skillful hand, any of us may become marketable even though we vary in our karat.

Faith is a necessary diamond for every one to own. Faith cuts through. There are so many hard things in life which nothing but diamond points of faith will penetrate, that it is very essential. One is lost without it. Faith is the strong hand that leads where one cannot see. It is the gem that can be cashed in when the emergency arises, and should be purchased early in life before the stress of great need comes upon one. Faith is a gem worthy of the best mounting.

Another of the most precious of all spiritual diamonds according to Paul, is Hope. Hope sends the "Brightening ray far down the future's broadening way." "Hope maketh not ashamed." It is the past. The waters of adversity will not melt it sparts away. Hope, like trust gives confidence, self-possession, calm. Storms may break, in fury roll, lash and beat, but hope assures that God is and careth for His own. Hope is beautiful and actually worth thousands upon thousands of dollars to its owner.

Love is a diamond rare. "Love is of God, for God is Love." The one who loves his fellowmen has contacted with God. An interesting and beautiful variety of color plays about such an one. In the waters of sin, deep waters, this diamond looks black, but when brought to the light of one's personal acceptance of Jesus Christ, how desirable it is. Selfishness, greed, sensuousness, pleasure are then seen to be the chemicals in these waters preventing the beauty of love from reaching the eye. Our Lord waded deep waters. Love thyself last is His lesson.

Centuries are required to produce diamonds, even in the rough. These spiritual diamonds cannot be secured in a day's effort. "Take time to be holy, speak oft with thy Lord." Dig, search, they are worth the labor. May success crown thy effort and the beauty of Holiness thy soul.—J. E. Tripp in M. P.-Recorder.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

DID YOU READ IT?

If you didn't, then look for the paper and read it now. I mean that fine editorial of Dr. Atkinson's in last week's paper on, "The Tide Is Sure to Win." It is a great article. He is a great editor and deserves the honor and esteem which those who read after him have in their hearts. But that article inspired me in an unusual way.

I am a "land-lubber," or "hill-billy," who has come down by the sea and finds no end of delight in the mighty ocean. I like its quiet ripples, its constant motion, its rolling waves and bursting billows. It speaks a language of its own. The Master lived by the sea and seemed to like it. I enjoy sitting in the sands where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours. It is a good place to meditate.

Why do the tides rise and fall? What makes the mighty waters move constantly? What power holds them in check so they do not cover land as well as sea? From whence came all this water? What lies beneath the depth of the sea? Explain to me all about the sea, and you have told me of God.

Yes, the storms may rage, the breakers roll, and the very demons of the sea do their worst, but the tides always win. I shall remember that when storms upset me on the sea of life. I shall remember that when temper threatens to destroy my soul. I shall remember that when some great passion claims the better of me. I shall remember that the great tides (desires) of the soul will conquer all storms that arise. The God of the tides on the sea is the God of my soul; and the tides shall win. The storms will pass. The foam will cease. Quiet will come. The tides will continue throught the ceaseless ages that lie ahead. I yield to the tides of the soul that are fed by the fountains of God.

NO WORK IN AUGUST.

The Board of Christian Education is eager to help Sunday Schools, Churches, Christian Endeavor Societies and anyone needing help whenever it is possible. We do not want anybody to be disaappointed who asks for aid. However, if you want help soon, please ask for it before August.

This writer, who is chairman of the Board, and his office secretary need a bit of rest and want to get it in August. Whatever you call for before then we will try to meet your request, but if you wait until after August 1st to write, you may not get a reply until September. One or the other of us will pass the office occasionally to see who it is who has not read this announcement, and if it is an urgent matter we may respond even on a hot day in August.

We have a new supply of New Testaments for ten year old boys and girls, and we can be a little more generous concerning the age limit than heretofore. If you need copies of the New Testament for the boys and girls in your Sunday School who are about ten years of age, please let us have your order which should include the names, addresses, and birthdates of all to whom you expect to give the books.

Please remember that we do not want to work in August. Let us have your reuests at once so we can serve you now. With September we will be back on the job and ready to do all within our power to assist you.

PICNICING ALONE.

Most people need rest in the summer time. Office workers who have been housed up all the year need to get out for a while in the summer and let nature have a chance to restore their physical energy. Even farmers need to take time off from their daily duties and rest a bit. Vacation parties, church picnics, and such like have their place in American life and can be of real value.

In this section it seems wise to not go into large gatherings on account of wide spread of disease. This does not mean that the joy of summertime shall be lost, but rather means that we need to learn new ways in which to enjoy life. It seems to me that families or small neighbor groups could very well spend some time in the forest and fields where it would be perfectly safe and yet where they could have a wonderfully fine time together. The call of the open has been heard by multitudes through the years. You are doubtless familiar with the poem by Elizabeth Barrett Browning in which she said she lost the little cares that worried her out in the fields with God. In these days of constant rain one could enjoy the poem by Dr. William Stidger in which he says that he saw God wash the world last night. William Cullen Bryant wrote what he called a "Forest Hymn" which I think is worth reading, and I am passing it along to you. If you can study this poem for a while and then go out in the woods for a picnic alone or with a very small group, I believe you will have a happy vacation anyway.

The groves were God's first temples. Ere man learned
To hew the shaft, and lay the architrave,
And spread the roof above them,—ere he framed
The lofty vault, to gather and roll back
The sound of anthems,—in the darkling wood,
Amidst the cool and silence, he knelt down
And offered to the Mightiest solemn thanks
And supplications . . . Let me, then, at least,
Here in the shadow of this aged wood,
Offer one hymn—thrice happy, if it find Acceptance in His ear,

Father, Thy hand
Hath reared these venerable columns; thou
Didst weave this verdant roof. Thou didst look down
Upon the naked earth, and, forthwith, rose
All these fair ranks of trees. They in the sun
Budded, and shook their green leaves in thy breeze,
And shot toward heaven. The century-living crow
Whose birth was in their tops, grew old and died
Among their branches,—till, at last, they stood,
As now they stand, massy, and tall, and dark,
Fit shrine for humble worshipper to hold
Communion with his Maker. These dim vaults
These winding aisles, of human pomp or pride
Report not. No fantastic carvings show
The boast of our vain race to change the form
Of thy fair works. But thou art here; thou fill'st
The solitude; thou art in the soft winds
That run along the summit of these trees
That, from the inmost darkness of the place,
In music; thou art in thy cooler breath
Comes, scarcely felt; the barky trunks, the ground,
The fresh, moist ground, are all instinct with thee.

INFANTILE PARALYSIS.

The unusually large number of cases of Infantile Paralysis first in North Carolina and now in Virginia has made it seem wise to some of our church people to discontinue meetings that might increase the number of cases of the disease. Some of our Carolina churches no longer have their children's division of the Sunday School. The Eastern Virginia Youth Fellowship postponed its Annual Meeting from last Tuesday until such time as it may seem wise to have it.

Doctors are not familiar with the germs that cause Infantile Paralysis, the methods by which it is spread, nor even the way to cure it. Experiments have been made and are being made rapidly to combat the disease, but as yet knowledge concerning it is very limited.

The only safe thing to do seems to be to stay away from those who might spread the disease. Children should value their lives sufficiently to forego the pleasure of movies, picnics, swimming parties and other things that might give them this very dreadful disease. Parents and young people can help greatly in this matter by developing the right attitude relative to it. Church people are correct in taking the lead in the prevention of the disease, and it is hoped that commercial enterprises will be willing to do the same kind of thing.

Love Thyself Last.

Love thyself last.
Look near, behold thy duty
To those who walk beside thee down life's road;
Make glad their lives by little acts of beauty,
And help them bear the burden of earth's load.

Love thyself last.
Look far and find the stranger
Who staggers 'neath his sin and his despair;
Go lend a hand and lead him out of danger,
To heights where he may see the world is fair.

Love thyself last.
The vastnesses above thee
Are filled with spirit forces, strong and pure;
And fervently these faithful friends shall love thee,
Keep thy watch over others and endure.

Love thyself last,
And thou shalt grow in spirit
To see, to hear, to know and understand.
The message of the stars, lo, thou shalt heart it,
And all God's joys shall be at thy command.

There are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave,
  There are souls that are pure and true;
Then give to the world the best you have,
  And the best will come back to you.

Give love, and love to your life will flow,
  A strength in your utmost need;
Have faith, and a score of hearts will show
  Their faith in your word and deed.

Give truth, and your gift will be paid in kind,
  And honor will honor meet;
And a smile that is sweet will surely find
  A smile that is just as sweet.

For life is a mirror of king and slave,
  'Tis what we are and do;
Then give to the world the best that you have,
  And the best will come back to you.

Discussion.

How selfishness reacts upon us! "All that we send into the lives of others comes back into our own." Can that statement be used in connection with our topic this evening? If others are crushed by our desire to get things for ourselves, do we later feel the sting? Who is hurt most, the person who receives the unfair treatment, or the person who is responsible for the treatment?

Mary, an only child, was granted her every wish by her parents, grandparents, uncles and aunts. When she went away to school and did

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

DAVID (The Great-Hearted).

Lesson III—July 21, 1935.

Golden Text: "Not looking each of you to his own things, but each of you also to the things of others."—Philippians 2:4.

Lesson: I Samuel 26:5-12; II Samuel 1:23-27; 23:14-17.

No list of representative men and women of the Bible would be complete or representative, without the name of David. He is one of the best known, and best loved characters in the Bible. Indeed he is referred to as "a man after God's own heart." The story of his life, and the songs which he wrote—he did not, of course, write all the psalms, but he did undoubtedly write some of them—have been the inspiration and the hope of a large number which no man can count.

David was not perfect. He was guilty of a heinous sin, which in turn led to other sins, culminating in murder, at least murder in the indirect sense. But even in this he showed himself to be a man at heart, for he repented of his sin, and brought forth work meet for repentance. In his attitude toward his sin and his moral failure, he was a man after God's own heart.

Today's lesson shows him in one of his greatest and noblest moments. In his attitude toward Saul, his enemy, and especially when he had his enemy at his mercy, David showed the mark of true greatness, a greatness seldom attained by men and women, even in this enlightened Christian era. Let us get the background of the story.

David had come as a lad to the army of Saul to bring some gifts from his mother to his brothers who were in Saul's army. He attracted the attention of Saul, who sent for him, and made him one of the court attendants. His chief function was as a court musician, but in every way the young man showed such promise that he rose rapidly in place and in power. Unfortunately Saul had a jealous disposition as well as a morose nature, and the situation was not helped any when Saul learned that David had been chosen as his successor to the throne of Israel. From secret suspicion and smouldering jealousy, Saul blazed into open hatred and deadly purpose, and finally David had to flee for his life. He was hunted as he said "like a partridge." On this particular occasion Saul had learned through spies where David was located and had come out with an army to take him, alive or dead, preferably dead.

One night as Saul and his army lay sleeping, David with his faithful captain, crept into the camp, and came actually to the place where Saul lay sleeping heavily. Abishai, feeling that the big moment had come, begged David to allow him to thrust Saul through with the spear. But David was made of nobler stuff. He sternly rebuked Abishai, and taking Saul's spear and his cruse of water, he hastily crept away to a place of vantage and safety, from whence he chided Abner, Saul's general, and from which he also received Saul's pledge of safety and expression of penitence—which characteristic of Saul was meaningless.

What would you do if you had your bitterest enemy in your power and could do with him whatever you wanted to do? That question goes straight to the heart of the matter. And that question is one test of character, one of the acid tests of character.

We must remember that David lived in a far-away day in which moral ideals and principles had not been revealed in the light of Christ's teaching and spirit. He lived in the day where it was the custom to take an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. He had every human justification for doing Saul to death, for Saul had sought to do him to death, and would have done it on the slightest provocation. Furthermore, David knew that it was already settled that he should be the next king, by divine sanction. How easy it would have been to reason that God had delivered his enemy into his hand. In spite of all of these factors, however, he blessed his enemy, he did good to the one who had despitefully used him, he did unto another what the other would not have done unto him. And it was not due to fear that he withheld his hand. It was his idealism, his inherent chivalry, his great-heartedness, a permanent quality of his mind and heart.

"Have you forgiven all your enemies," a dying man was once asked. "Forgiven them? No," said the man, "I have killed them." Alas that this is all too true of many people who name the name of Christ, that is true in spirit. We have not learned to love our enemies, and to bless them who persecute us. Let this story of the great-hearted David shame us and inspire us in this matter.

The lesson presents also another evidence of David's great-heartedness. When he learned that Saul and Jonathan were dead, he composed a beautiful elegy, a tribute to those whom he called his friends. He paid tribute alike to Jonathan and to Saul. "Saul and Jonathan had been lovely and pleasant in their lives"—he had to be generous to say that about Saul if he had looked only at the man's faults. But he judged Saul not by his worst features but by his best. It took a great-hearted man to do what David did. And it was not a lot of "baloney" either. Whatever resentment he may have had against Saul was wiped out by his death. Here was the fruit of the Spirit manifesting itself in the life of this man in that far-off day, a fruit of the Spirit so badly needed today between individuals, communities, and the nations of the earth.

THE YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

not get everything as she wanted it, she thought she was being treated very unfairly. What do you suppose the teachers and students thought about her?

John was the finest president the C. E. Society had ever had. After two years the society elected a successor. Because of John's criticisms and unwillingness to cooperate, the society became weak. Why couldn't John be happy seeing his society, under the leadership of the new president, reap some of the seeds he had sown when he was president?

Do you know of such incidents and other incidents when selfishness wrecked things?

Experience and observation have proven to me that selfishness brings unhappiness in that we lose the love and respect of friends, and our characters are weakened. Nothing gained, everything lost the result of selfishness.

A PRAYER.

My God and Father, who dost promise rest to the weary and peace to the troubled heart, I thank Thee for this sabbath of rest! Grant that I may have this day not only rest to my body, but rest also to my soul! In quiet and confidence renew my strength! Still for me the fever of life, and in Thy presence afford me escape from all anxiety for the morrow! Suffer me to go apart from the throng and the noise of the world, and rest awhile! In Jesus' name.—Amen.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

MONDAY.

"FULL OF COMPASSION, AND GRACIOUS."

"Thou, O Lord, art a God full of compassion, and gracious."—Ps. 86:15.

All children of God can testify of the compassion and graciousness of the Father. But when the question is asked, "How is He, and in what is He compassionate and gracious?", it is found difficult to reply in a way to help others to see and understand, and convince them of the reality of the compassionate love of God.

It is not enough to cite Christ's deeds of compassion, in such cases as turning water into wine at the marriage feast, healing the nobleman's son, opening the eyes of Bartemus, and raising Lazarus; it is necessary to have in one's own experience evidences of that same Christ. One must bear in his own consciousness the character of God as a flowing stream of satisfaction.

To be able to do this, one is admonished to "Acknowledge God in all thy ways," which, having done, one easily sees his own weaknesses and faults, and becomes conscious that God is not searching out sin for punishment, but He overlooks our transgressions.

God's blessings are a river of spiritual satisfaction to them that recognize Him. They are a spiritual foretaste of the torrents of pleasure to be experienced at the heavenly feast midst the riches of the house of God.

Prayer—Our Father, we want Jesus. Have mercy upon our ungrateful souls. Thou hast done so much for us which we have not recognized. We lay our all upon Thy altar this day. Make us Thy true children in love and service.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"OUR DEBT."

"Be ye therefore merciful, as your father is also merciful."—Luke 6:36.

The fullness of Christian experience cannot be realized without the right attitude towards others, and especially towards enemies. The second petition of the Lord's prayer places one in this attitude, "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors."

Our Lord insists that our Father's mercy, compassion and graciousness is to be imitated, to the extent that we suppress ourselves and cheerfully endure wrong, if need be, and to let no ill treatment affect our unalterable benevolence to those who may wrong us.

This mercy and compassion on our part is not to compensate for His goodness toward us, but it is a condition of soul which alone makes it possible for one to receive His mercy. It is like fruit bared to the sun to receive into its body the glow of sunshine for its lusciousness.

Prayer—Our Father in heaven, may we be found of Thee this day letting Thy light shine in us, that others may see and walk with Thee.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"OUR COMPASSION."

"Judge not and ye shall not be judged."—Luke 6:37.

To render proper and correct judgment upon condemnatory acts of others is next to impossible. The other fellow has a point of view and has motives which may be hid from our view and understanding. Only God sees the heart and understands all things. Only He can render judgment.

Therefore the refusal to judge on our own account makes it possible for us to receive consideration from others when we would be censoriously judged, and it also makes it possible for us to announce or apply divine truth and judgments, when we are sure they are divine.

Prayer—Dear heavenly Father, bless us in this one undertaking to live unto Thee, for the good of others and for Thy Kingdom in this world.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"CHRISTIAN UNITY."

"So we, who are many, are one body in Christ, and severally members one of another."—Rom. 12:5.

Weymouth interprets this text thus: "So collectively we form one body in Christ, while individually we are linked to one another as its members." The point here is, that "severally" means "individually," and that, as the members of one's body coordinate and work with one another as a unit to make the body action complete, so we are related to one another to make life perfect in Christ.

This means we are to inculcate humility in the exercise of individual gifts, endowments, and individual powers; and that each one must be cautious not to usurp functions to which he has not been called, or to strain after effects which are beyond his powers; yea, being more or less selfish, he will struggle all the more for that humility which precludes egotism or personal aggrandizement.

Prayer—Our Father, and our God, may we and all Thy people live close to heaven, and thereby closer to one another.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"HOW CAN WE?"

"Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you."—Luke 6:27.

There is a great deal of enmity in the world. There are works and shops where anyone making a decided profession of Christianity has to suffer annoyances and ridicule; and there are homes and friends, too, where the tenderest relationships should exist, suffering from unkindnesses and malignity which have been rendered in the dark, or to one's back. It is easier to dispose of the great questions of the world than it is to overcome these things. We are so prone by the spirit of revenge to take literally the injunction of "Heap coals of fire on their heads," and scald them with a pan of hot water.

The only remedy for this sin is Christ's spirit, who being reviled, "reviled not again," but prayed to the Father to forgive them. He was even charitable enough to say that they did not know what they were doing, giving this as a reason for mercy. Would you be like Jesus?

Prayer—O Lord, what we are and what we have belong to Thee. Take us and make us Thine in all things. In Christ's name we ask it. —Amen.

SATURDAY.

"MY HIGH PLACES."

"He setteth me upon my high places."—II Samuel 22:31-37.

In the day when Devid was delivered out of the hand of all his enemies, he wrote this psalm of thanksgiving to his God. The king knew that his own strength was as nothing. Thinking back to the lowly days of his shepherding, and remembering the marvelous train of providences since, he was well assured that however strong had been his muscles, he could not have reached his high place unaided. The arm of the Lord had been beneath him all along.

Thus also as we go in life, whatever our ambitions, may we be certain that we can not accomplish them without God; and to whatever height we may attain, let us be very sure that it is not we that have attained it, but our God has placed us there.

Prayer—So we will praise Thee, O God. So we will acknowledge Thee to be our Lord. Thou art our Inspirer. Thou art our Guide. Thou art our Sustainer. And Thou hast set us upon our high places.—Amen.

"KNOWING OUR IGNORANCE."

"And Joseph answered Pharaoh, saying, it is not in me; God will give Pharaoh an answer of peace."—Gen. 41:14-25.

Joseph had received wonderful visions, and he had made true interpretations of the visions of others. Why, when Pharaoh sent for him to reveal the meaning of his mysterious dream, should he say, "It is not in me"? If that wisdom was not in him, in whom should it be?

The young man's answer was the answer always to be given on any demand for sagacity or power or grace. These are not in us. However many times they have been manifested through us, they are not in us. Each time it is God who will give an answer through us.

If we are not thus humble, thus lowly relying, our answer will be emptiness and our strength will ingloriously fail.

Prayer—Be Thou our reliance, O God. Be Thou the might within us, O Christ. Be Thine our guidance, O Holy Spirit of the Father. So alone shall we give Pharoah an answer of peace. —Amen. AMOS R. WELLS.

A PASTOR GIVES THANKS.

By PHILIP J. CLEVELAND.

For church where I can preach the gospel's theme
With love and courage each new Sabbath Day;
For good folk sharing song's glad ministry
And for the wistful faces raised to me—
I thank Thee, Father.

For little children in the great, front pews
Who lift their wonder-eyes to watch the smile
Of sun on sacred windows—for the light
Of heaven in old eyes, on hair grown white—
I thank Thee, Father.

For rows of little homes that swing their doors
To me, the kindly people dwelling there;
For pleasant afternoons and evening's glow
When old men rest and patient women sew—
I thank Thee, Father.

For splendid youths who seek my house to ask
Thy blessing on their wedded life; for strength
To fold away the old in arms of rest—
Who gave the Master all and served Him best—
I thank Thee, Father.

For moments shared in church and in the home
With those in pain; for hours the Master came
To bless our fellowship and by his smile
Soothed all our longing with his Afterwhile—
I thank Thee, Father.

For work to do as long as years hold out
And making life the Lord's blest Sacrament;
For faith that soon his Kingdom must come in
To heal our ills and right the wrongs of sin—
I thank Thee, Father.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

Rev. John G. Truitt, D. D., Pastor.

IS CHRIST ENOUGH?

By Rev. Ashley Leavitt, D. D.
Pastor of the Harvard Church, Brookline, Mass.

[This sermon was delivered one year ago before the General Council at Oberlin, Ohio. Possibly a majority of the audience to whom Dr. Leavitt spoke was ministers, but the message is applicable today, none the less, and to minister and lay leader alike.]

"Christ the Power of God, and the Wisdom of God."—I Cor. 1:24.

One hesitates to characterize the age in which we live, in these days when vocabularies are being exhausted for words of ominous intent to indicate how serious are conditions in our immediate world. It is the end of an era. The doom of civilization is just around the corner. The overturning of social and economic systems is already under way. What a temptation it is, when the message of good will and trust in God has grown rather stale through monotonous repetition, to awaken the people with prophesies of impending revolution. Even the time-serving prophets who have long cried "Peace, peace, when there is no peace" may be counted on to grow weary of the slight regard in which they have been held, and to exchange a colorless popularity for the thrilling importance of a prophet of disaster.

They may be right. But mine is a milder characterization and of more immediate significance. Certainly in our lives there has never been a time when earnest Christian men and women were in greater danger of being led off on eccentric or tangential lines of thought and endeavor. There is no intention to say here what is eccentric to the main purpose of the Christian faith. It is enough to say that the temper of the present time makes us peculiarly susceptible to proposals of principles and programs that have the merit of being sensational.

Two dominant moods are upon us which promise everything for a renewed Christian Church if we are rightly guided; and at the same time by reason of the power that is in them may make us responsive to immediate challenges for action to the extene of forgetting or even violating the essential principles of our Christian teaching.

In the first place there is a profound penitence and contrition prevalent among us. It is like an acute and constant pain in the hearts of most of us. Whatever good there may be in our hearts, we know that organized Christianity is in a humiliating position in the world of today. It is still a power, but it is not a power to be reckoned with. Its counsels of peace, of brotherly love, of the supremacy of spiritual values are known wherever anything is known of Christianity, but in spite of a multitude of shining examples of Christian living in individual cases—the life of the world seems changing for the worse rather than the better. Christian leadership, Christian principles are not shaping the systems of political and social life by which the fortunes of all men are affected.

Many of us had some years of ministry before the world war engulfed us. We cannot forget how we were involved in it. With the insights born of later disillusionizing experience, it is inconceivable that we should have been so blind and so credulous. And we were the living exponents of the Christian faith. Insofar as it failed in an hour of opportunity that may never come again with any such prospect of great accomplishment, it failed in us and through us.

Then, though we had begun to be repentant and sensitive about our obtuseness and provincialism in the period of the war, we did it all over again in the prosperity days of the last decade, when we were choked by the cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches and were once more unfruitful.

This indictment need not be lengthened. We are reminded of our humiliation every day. It is said that present Christianity is too closely implicated in the sins of imperialistic nationalism. If so, it has been so implicated in and through us. It is said rather savagely that the Church has sold out to a secular society. If so, we sold it. And I do not know whether our situation is more hopeful or more tragic because we knew not what we did.

We have been penitent. We are penitent and we distrust ourselves. At least we ought to. If our penitence is deep enough to go that far, it has great possibilities for a truer spiritual life. But is it deep enough?

If it may be said of the penitence that is upon men there is danger of a betrayal of many into certain sidelines of thought and action as though they were the main lines, it will be because penitence does not go deep enough. It is not necessary to warn of the dangers of contrition. The flagellants are here and there among us. Unpopular causes can be sought and espoused simply because they are unpopular, and offer some satisfaction to the craving for expiation. One hears of those who are planning hopefully for martyrdom forgetful of the fact that the really great martyrs of the church were never morbidly exercised over bringing about their own tragic ends, but have rather been absorbed in a joyous living of the Christian life, leaving the persecution end of the business to minds less creatively active than their own.

What is the price of true penitence? It is not that through a tragic knowledge that ignorance, pride and selfishness can make one untrue, there follows a humble dependence upon the higher will whence a true guidance may come.

The second dominant mood which is upon us, is a scarcely restrained impatience in the face of certain crying needs of our world. Here again we have evidence of a vitality in our Christian faith which presages one of those revivals of religion which from time to time have sprung up in times of decadence and created a new epoch for the world.

But here again we have to be on our guard. Impatience is evidence of new vision, courage, and a passion for accomplishment. It may make us play into the hands of the most magnetic rather than the soundest leaders. It may lend the whole force of the group under the spell of this fine temper, to action that is of temporary rather than of permanent significance.

It is interesting to note that at present the most insistent, the most challenging, I was going to say the most popular, voices among us are freighted with a scorn for a material well-being of mankind. It is the dispossessed, the disinherited, the underpaid, the unemployed whose plight excites the passionate pity of a vast army who are becoming increasingly eager for action. The action that seems so necessary is to be directed toward improving the material well-being of the dispossed and the distressed.

It is not fair to say that the action contemplated stops there. It is part of the aim of these heroic humanitarians to lay the foundations and open the way for a fuller spiritual life for all mankind. But at the moment the traditional spiritual approach to the problems of life is an evasion and an irritation to many. People are hungry. They are without employment. Multitudes are being cheated out of life's best values by forces of greed and hate. Other multitudes are being maimed and killed, and spiritually brutalized in the score of wars now being waged in various parts of the world, and all of us are under the threat of wars yet to come.

The most powerful temper we have to reckon with in our own religious family grows out of sensitiveness to the sorrows, sufferings and injustices visited upon large groups of the human family. It is intensely this-world minded. This temper does not necessarily fear those who can kill the body, but it has aroused a vast concern for the physical misfortunes of men. In this it is Christian. It is Christ-like.

If it were necessary we might take the time to dwell upon the meaning for religion in our day and in days to come, of this acute, impetuous sympathy for the distresses of those who have fallen among thieves of various kinds on modern roads to Jericho.

As a protest against complacency, and mere pious wistfulness in the presence of the increasing tragedies wrought by the world's ignorance and selfishness, it has the refreshing effect of an angry thunderstorm in the middle of a sultry day.

Its realistic-mindedness is all on the side of sincerity, truthfulness and love. The man whose mood is expressed in words like—"Let us do something"; whose eagerness calls for action even before the final detail of the program has been worked out, supplies a tonic much needed all along the line.

We have grown so used to letting matters work themselves out; with eternity set in our hearts we have become so accustomed to perpetual debates, that action of some sort toward the great ends, our religion has set up, has become a moral necessity if we are to keep our spiritual integrity.

Under the drive of our fully aroused, passionate sympathies, we can do one of three things. We can claim the sanction of our Christian faith for any and all the forms of ameliorating action into which we can go. We are Christians. We arrive at the decisions we do because we are Christian, so it is easy to feel and to claim that our line of action is a true expression of Christianity in our time.

It seems unnecessary to point out in this way there is constant peril. In one of Niebuhr's books there is a paragraph to the effect that men are always prone to claim the sanction of the absolute for what is only relative and tentative. Christian men are being driven along under the lash of such cries as that Christianity is too much implicated in the sins of imperialistic nationalism, or that the Church of Christ has sold out to a capitalistic and secularized society. Well, we are going to end the compromising associations. We are going to free ourselves from these damaging partnerships.

Before setting up new partnerships, or claiming the sanction of the absolute for new associations, let us stop to think that a later generation may complain that Christianity has been too much implicated in the sins of a ruthless internationalism, and that the Church of Christ has been sold out to some form of State Socialism.

The difficulty is that we cannot foresee how our schemes for rebuilding the social order are going to work out. That is particularly so when our impatience to get some things changed makes us hurry by the seemingly incorrigible factor.

There is no scheme which in the hands of ruthless, selfish men may not be productive of all the evils that seem inevitable under our present orders of life. It is too bad to be halted in our haste to change the world, by this ancient problem of our corruptible human nature. That is old technique, and because it has so largely concentrated on this business of making over individual lives the Christian Church has moved haltingly along in its attack on such evils as ruthless commercialism, and the war system.

We cannot wait. We can do something about it. We generally adopt this wishful thought that men in the mass are somehow going to be better men when the system has been changed; or that enough enlightened men can control or coerce the rest. How risky it all is.

An emphasis that is foremost with a great many passionately earnest Christian men and women of our time is concentrated on the problem of a fairer distribution of material goods. Surely in this gathering we can be reminded that the men and women who gave us the distinction of belonging to an order of faith that gave birth to our nation, faced and endured economic insecurity and starvation rather than continue to live under tyrannies that may easily return under many of the schemes proposed for social and economic betterment. There are many here not more than one generation removed, from pioneers who braved the dangers of starvation and did starve to death in their heroic fight for liberties which same among us would easily surrender for a dream of an economic Utopia.

It is not easy to say this, for this is just the sort of thing many are saying who care for nothing but to hold on to their disproportionate gains from the present order of our social and economic life. But the things must be said when many are tempted to tie up the Christian gospel with any program that must by the nature of the case be relative and tentative.

What then we ask, still impatient at these suggestions so curbing to impulses to sacrificial action.

There is a second course we may take and some are already advocating. We can agree that there is no absolutely perfect plan for a society of men, that Christ has given us no definite picture of an order for community life, no organization of government or the business of getting a living which can be called the Kingdom of God on Earth. This is largely a human affair. Christ will ever inspire the passion to promote justice, to open the ways to an abundant life to all, but men in whom these impulses have been awakened will go about expressing them pretty much in their own way. It will be the best way they know, but every program mapped out and worked on will have relative value only. The structures set up will be of human devising. Experience alone will prove whether the kingdom of the spirit flourishes more perfectly in this one or the other.

Meanwhile there will be no claim of the sanction of the absolute. Men will say, "This is an expression of the spirit of Christ," but not divisively or exclusively, and not wholly. In a real way Christ will be left outside or above as the ideal which suggests and guides and impels, but never too much implicated in any approximation to it.

The Church of Christ will be left outside, in a vital sense, for there will be a greater need than ever of an ideal which will restrain and guide the intemperances and impatient zeal of good men largely involved in social and political action.

This is the way it may be done. We are not to be held to inaction because we have not a perfect pattern. A day of tremendously significant action of immense practical value lies before us. Men made alive by the spirit of Christ are bound to make their contribution to the order of world affairs. The Kingdom of Heaven suffereth violence, and the violent will take it by force, but it will be a tragic day for the world if religion does not in some measure remain aloof, to steady and correct when plans go wrong, to mediate between good men who differ, and to preserve the ultimate conceptions of love and goodness that may be lost sight of in the struggle. There must be a church that will keep itself apart from every plan of action, a church that may ever proclaim to all, such finally true sayings of Jesus as, "They that take the sword shall perish by the sword," in class struggle and in war among the nations. "He that is greatest among you shall be your servant." "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." And "The Kingdom of God is within you."

But this does not do justice to Christ, and his meaning for us and for our time. The language we have used is strange language, the picture of Christ aloof from heroic action is an unhappy picture. What we have attempted to say is that if there must be commitments and action such as is contemplated in many quarters, Christ and his gospel must be kept from being too closely implicated. The world will need him more above the struggle. All of this may come to pass and be one of the phases of life that Heaven will suffer because of the hardness of men's hearts.

But we cannot relinquish our faith that Christ is enough, that his method will be adequate to the world's need, that he can prompt all the action necessary to save society, and can be in and through it as it is undertaken.

First, let us admit that Jesus in his own lifetime aroused the same impatience that men are feeling today with organized Christianity. His method seemed inadequate, his approach seemed slow, and the results he gained pitifully meagre. It is a plausible explanation of Judas' defection that he was not just a mean-spirited fellow, but rather a zealous patriot whose heart was torn by the misfortunes of his oppressed people. They were tyrannized. They were robbed. They were bullied by a predatory alien government. They were suffering all the distresses which so much excite us in our own time. And there were many who wanted action. Judas may have been one of them. Coming under the matchless spell of Jesus, he thought him a leader of destiny. Then his ardor cooled, his faith was shaken as Jesus evaded the one issue he thought paramount. There was his challenge, "Who made me a judge or a divider over you," and the futility along with the sweetness of his dealing with a penitent here, and a paralytic there. Then he went on to his defeat and death, he who if he had said the word might have led a multitude into sacrificial action. So he lost the credentials of leadership.

There were two men who walked to Emmaus, one of whom said, "We trusted that it had been he who would have saved Israel." Many are tempted to the same despondency in these times. His spiritual leadership has for long, long years been foremost in the world, but the great evils by which men are beset,—war, lust, ill-will and greed—how little they have been allayed. We, too, trusted that by this time he would have saved the world. Is Christ enough, or must we take this world in our own hands, and in our own human impetuous way break it into bits and try to remold it nearer to our heart's desire?

Such a mood is natural, and understandable, but is it not good. It is not fair to dismiss as some seem to do all that has been done by the spirit of Christ in the centuries of his commanding influence, because of any crisis that is upon us. The very exaggeration with which some speak of present day conditions is an evidence of lack of balance. No doubt in other times human affairs have been at the crossroads, with doom impending as seems to many now; but recoveries have been made leading the way to accomplishments of permanent value, not perfect but reaching toward the mark.

We are not the first Christians to bow under the burden of the world's problem. We ought to be the best Christians by reason of the ground broken, the ways made straight by men whose spirit at least we shall with difficulty surpass even though our vision may and should carry us farther than they.

Is it not a true historical view which maintains that we have just come to the end of an era, and that the era of pioneers and pioneering. In that era there was work to be done which we do not have to do, which possibly we could not do. And great work was done. In that era Christ was the inspiration of great pioneers. John the Baptists they may have been, voices crying in the wilderness—Prepare ye the way of the Lord. They leveled the mountains and filled up the valleys and made ways straight for spiritual adventures that will carry further than they dreamed. Among those born of women there will never be greater than they, nor a faith more heroic than theirs.

Theirs was a religion of pioneers and for pioneering. They had the faults as well as the virtues of their romantic days. They were individualists and had to be. They were contemptuous of questions of material well-being. They had to be. The expression they gave to the Christian faith was a frontiersman's expression. They gave us evangelism, typically a pioneering expression of religion. They gave us our ordinary missionary enterprises, an adventure on frontiers. They moved on from post to post. They captured new positions, never cultivating very deeply the areas taken. They viewed Christ from their provincial point of view, nor did they explore very thoroughly the social implications behind the characteristic great religious transactions of conversion.

Now there are no frontiers. Ours is a new task, the less romantic task of setting in order the positions so courageously taken. It is not for us to bemoan the fact that they did not hand over to us a world more nearly cleansed of war, or more perfectly cleansed from selfishness. They cleared a way. It is for us to build a road and travel on it to new spiritual achievements.

We have not inherited from them forms of thought, conceptions of the meaning of religion, or even organizations adequate to our task of ordering life after the frontier has become a settled community. We have not even inherited a conception of Christ that is adequate to our task.

If our question is,—Is Christianity enough? the answer must be, No! not in the content we have just learned to give it. Is Christ then enough? Our answer must still be, No, not in any comprehension we yet have of his meaning to the world.

But he is enough in those meanings we can discover in him in the light of our present task, provided we are as free, as daring, as original in the use we make of him, as every generation has been in earnest to follow him into the life to which they have been assigned.

Christ inspired the pioneer and made him supreme. He will yet inspire a social type and make him supreme.

There is one fallacy we just abjure, and that is that our spiritual ideal is an abstraction, hung up somewhere in heaven, and impossible of realization in any society of men on earth. If there had been no Christ, men might be pardoned for thinking so. The incarnation means this, that God's ideal was realized in human life and suffered no taint in the process.

In a sense we have not an ideal. Our religion centers in a life that was lived in the terms every life on earth must be lived. To know him requires not a logician who can formulate an ideal, but a lover who will follow a personality.

And whatever Jesus was as a teacher, as a thinker, and a spiritual idealist, as a man he was very much a member of a human society and whom understood will set the type for an era when human relationships of every kind and degree furnish the field for spiritual achievement.

We shall have to enlarge our conception of Christ. We shall have to set him free from our conventional patterns of spiritual leader. We shall have to set him free from the whole religious pattern and gladly turn him loose on a world which may be saved in some measure by the purely human values in him. We shall have to enlarge our somewhat stereotyped idea of salvation—the essential religious transaction of past faith—when man was to be brought into right relations with his fellowman through Christ. To the individualistic pattern of Christ the mediator between man and man. In every thought of God and His grace we must remember that Christ conditioned the flow of grace from God to man on the like flow of grace from man to man. "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." To the fact that Christ's valiant death reconciled God and man, will be added the equally supreme fact that his passion may reconcile man to man.

Is Christ enough? He can be enough to enlighten, direct and energize all men in all phases of life which our world adventure may mean.

To those who are not betrayed by impatience to take the shorter way and the rougher way, whose minds are open to understand him, whose hearts are set to follow him, he will yet prove to be the power of God and the wisdom of God for all of life, now and evermore.

The fragrance of a flower in your name,
Yet one more sweet, of poignant memory,
You are environed with the morrow's claim
Upon the chalice of identity.

OBITUARIES

HAYNES.

Dorothy Estelle Hayes, infant daughter of Brother and Sister Lonnie Hayes of Nelson, Va., was born February 10, 1935 and died June 24, 1935. Her stay was brief. Her going away is a great grief to her parents. Dorothy lived only a few hours after she was taken sick. My prayers are that father, mother and the three brothers may so live here as to be privileged to be with her in heaven when life's tasks are over and the summons comes.

The writer conducted the funeral assisted by Rev. Mr. Crane of Clarksville, Va., and the burial was in the Mulchi Cemetery, Buffalo Junction, Va.

COX.

Bereavement entered our community and Pleasant Ridge Christian Church Wednesday morning, June 19, 1935, when God the Father in His transcendent wisdom, called our beloved friend, co-worker, and brother, H. C. Cox, from a consecrated life of faithful service on earth to the enjoyment of his eternal reward in the Mansion prepared for him.

Brother Cox had been a member of Pleasant Ridge Christian Church for a great number of years, and had served as Deacon for the past forty years.

We wish to express our gratitude for his tireless efforts in behalf of the Kingdom and to emphasize our deep affection for him by the adoption of the following resolutions:

First: That in his death Pleasant Ridge Christian Church has sustained the loss of a true and tried friend and a loyal promoter of the Church of the living God. His deep abiding faith, his stirring Christian life, his Godly counsel, and his cherished friendship will ever be a precious memory to us who mourn his departure.

Second: To the family of our beloved Brother we extend our heartfelt sympathy and commend them to our Saviour, through whom we have promise of a joyful reunion and life everlasting.

Third: That a copy of these Resolutions be entered in the records of the Church, a copy be sent to the family, and a copy to The Christian Sun for publication.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Ethiopia.—

Ethiopia, the Biblical Cush, is a mountainous land of approximately 350,000 square miles. It has an estimated population of 10,000,000, all of whom are of the Coptic sect of Christians, and of Hametic-Semetic origin. It has no seacoast, being cut off from the Dead Sea, by a fifty-mile strip of land under Italian control.

AAA Pays $767,195,606.—

For the eleven months ending June 1, 1935, the AAA had expended a total of $767,195,606. The expenditures were divided as follows: Rental and benefit payments to farmers, $535,547,698; buying farm surplus, $10,043,550; drought relief, disease eradication, etc., $145,595,764; expenses, including administration, trust fund operations, disbursing, and tax refunds, $76,008,292. Rental payments and benefits were divided as follows: Corn-hogs, $292,435,801; cotton, $102,503,017; wheat, $97,503,986; tobacco, $23,784,768, and sugar, $15,320,123. The balance on hand on June 1st, was $150,849,829.

England Abandons Naval Ratios.—

Reports from England this week are that she is abandoning the naval ratios that were entered into between that country, the United States and Japan, in 1922. Under the treaty of that year, which was supplemented in 1930, the naval tonnage ratios of the leading powers were established at 5 each for Great Britain and the United States, 3 for Japan, and 1.5 for both France and Italy. The abandonment of the treaty is said to have come as a surprise to the officials of the United States Navy, inasmuch as it had been recently announced that our naval construction program would not be altered if other nations continued to obscure treaty limitations.

The World's Population.—

The Hague Institute of International Statistics recently announced the world's population to be 2,000,000,000. This would indicate an almost impossible increase of 400,000,000 in the last two years. In round numbers, Asia leads with a population of 950,000,000; Europe has 550,000,000; the Americas, 230,000,000; Africa, 150,000,000, and Australia, 7,000,000. Commenting upon the above figures, the Watchman-Examiner points out three facts: "Three-fourths are absolute heathen. The vast majority of increase is among heathen nations. Christians are falling down on the job of carrying out the command of their Master to 'make disciples of all nations.' "

Great Thinkers.—

We Americans pride ourselves on being great thinkers and doers, but evidently we are wrong at least as to the former qualification. We are told that if Dr. Will Durant, the philosopher, is correct, America has not produced a single great thinker. He says: "America is too young to have bred a thinker capable of diverting or adding to the world's great thoughts." Certainly Dr. Durant must have forgotten all about our "Brain Trust" which for a while stood in the limelight in Washington—or did they cause him to everlook Benjamin Franklin, Alexander Hamilton, Thomas Jefferson and George Mason—we thought them great thinkers, but we are not philosophers. Yet one must agree that doctor has picked a goodly list when he picked his "Ten Great Thinkers." They are: Confucius, Plato, Aristotle, Copernicus, Bacon, Newton, Spinoza, Voltaire, Kant and Darwin. And he may not be so far wrong when he lists Dr. Einstein as the greatest of living philosophers.

A Return to Despotism.—

Probably the nearest approach to despotism to which a democracy has come in modern times is reached in the bill which passed the lower house of Congress last week, and is pending in the Senate. Here it is: "Any consent which the United States may have given to the assertion against it of any right, privilege or power whether by way of suit, counter-claim, or set-off, recoupment or other affirmative action or defense in its own name or in the name of its officers, agents, agencies or instrumentalities in any proceeding of any nature whatsoever heretofore or hereafter commenced, upon any bond, note, certificate of indebtedness, treasury bill, or other similar obligation for the repayment of money or for interest thereon made, issued, or guaranteed by the United States or upon any coin or currency of the United States or upon any claim or demand arising out of any surrender, requisition, seizure, or acquisition of any such coin or currency or of any gold or silver, is withdrawn." The doctrine that the "sovereign cannot be sued without his consent" is, of course, ancient, and possibly is to be expected today in such countries as Russia, Germany and Italy, but it is little short of amazing that the present administration should be able to force such legislation through our legislative bodies. In plain English the bill says : The government may issue bonds, notes or currency as it wishes, and may repudiate them at will; it may seize or confiscate gold, silver, or any other coin, at will, and there is no means of redress for him from whom it is seized. "The government can do no wrong," the private citizen has no rights where it is concerned. Rather strong language, but evidently not stronger than the administration approves. For the President told newspaper men last week that he saw no reason why the United States Government should not have the same immunity from suits that other "sovereigns" possess. There are already laws which adequately protect the government, in case suit is instituted by a citizen, and such legislation would be riddiculous if it were not serious in its attack on true democracy. Daily the need for an educated and well-informed electorate is becoming more pressing.

The Ideal of Building.—

At the North American Conference of Church Architecture, held in New York, last May, E. M. Conover, Director of the Interdenominational Bureau of Architecture, declared that American Protestant churches rate less than 10 per cent efficient in modern church program and worship, religious education and recreational work, as compared with the average public school. He also stated that building church plants up to "modern efficiency" will require an expenditure during the next quarter of a century of nearly three hundred million dollars, and that many churches are losing ground because of their failure to adjust plant and equipment to the changed program. He suggested that "sending pastors, religious workers and trained recreational personnel to many of these out-of-date churches might be likened to a great industrial corporation compelling highly trained engineers to work with obsolete machinery driven by hose power in an electrical age." Without minimizing the importance of architecture and matters of external efficiency, may not one question the worth and implications of these comparisons in a consideration of the church's ultimate nature and task? Three hundred millions in twenty-five years would not seem to be an exhorbitant amount for building to efficiency by American Protestantism in a country that every year spends more than double that amount on its military program, but is that the point of chief, or even vital, emphasis? Is there not a deeper lesson to be learned from the public schools at a time when their increased equipment and external efficiency have not forestalled the almost universal complaint concerning their failure in character-building? And has the widespread substitution of electrical for horse power advanced us much in recognition of moral values or in the solution of problems of human relationship, either in the specific field of industry or in general life? Is there not a danger of forgetting our chief spiritual ends and emphases, and our ultimate spiritual means? What a sorry spectacle Jesus and his little company, in organization, equipment, and resources would have made in comparison with Roman efficiency and with the typical and stupendous building projects of that age as illustrated in such cities as Caesarea and Antioch? Is the comparison, after all, without suggestion or significance for our own day?—Advance.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. A. R. Flowers, who has been preaching and lecturing in behalf of Christian Education in many schools and churches of South Carolina, has returned to Eastern North Carolina where he has many engagements to fill for late summer and autumn. Brother Flowers made many friends while in South Carolina, and the various communities and churches to which he ministers in Eastern Carolina will welcome his return with gladness and profit.

By invitation, Rev. J. L. Foster visited and preached for a congregation at Lucama, N. C. Brother Foster finds a neat and well built house of worship, equipped and paid for, a congregation of sixty to eighty worshippers and a well organized Sunday school of seventy-five or more members. He finds it quite congenial and agreeable to worship with this congregation, which so far has not joined any Association, Convention or Conference.

A very pleasant visitor to THE SUN's editor recently was Rev. F. Ervin Hyde, Brown Summit, N. C. Since his graduation at Elon, Brother Hyde has served our Monticello Church every Sunday and studied a year in the Duke School of Religion. In September he goes to Vanderbilt, Nashville, Tenn., pursuing further his study looking to the winning of his Bachelor of Divinity degree next June. Brother Hyde is one of our zealous, consecrated Christian pastors. He is to be succeeded at our Monticello Church by Rev. Brother Sanderson from Ontario, Canada, who is to enter Elon for further study in September.

Rev. T. J. Green, Ramseur, N. C., reports a very happy and soulful revival at his Shallow Ford Church the past week. He was very ably assisted in the service by Dr. J. H. Lightbourne, Burlington, N. C., who won the hearts of his hearers with the presentation of his gospel messages. The church was much edified. Next week Pastor Green is to be assisted by Rev. H. V. Cox in meetings in Kallam Grove, Rockingham Co., N. C., and beginning the first Sunday in August, Rev. O. D. Poythress of Norfolk, is to assist Brother Green in meetings at Mt. Bethel, Rockingham County, N. C.

One of our good pastors writes a significant note in a personal letter: "As I write these lines and while I am trying to think and plan for helping to send the gospel of the Prince of Peace to others, seventeen army planes are flying over my church drilling for war." There, indeed, is the writing of tragedy to you. What if the people of this Christian land of ours were allowed to spend even one-half as much in giving the gospel of the Prince of Peace to others as we spend in preparing to kill and to destroy others, it would not be long, indeed, until the kingdoms of this world would become the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ.

Many of our pastors are engaged in evangelistic services at this season. This is, indeed, the harvest time of the year, and there should be earnest prayer throughout the church for the successful outcome of these meetings. There is no more important work known to man than that of soul-winning through faith in Jesus Christ. Moreover, it is to be borne in mind that winning a soul is not the end but the beginning of true evangelism. This beginning, however, is essential if the whole person is to be saved and built into a temple as a fit dwelling place for the Holy Spirit. Churches need reviving; even the best of church members need soul-refreshing and "showers of blessings," and in every community there are those who are unreached by the gospel message. This should be not only a season of evangelistic effort, but of prayer, praise and thanksgiving.

What a yawning abyss between our solemn pledge and our trivial accomplishment. Our Lord testified of His disciples that the world hated them because they were not of the world. Today the world does not hate the Church. Our never-ending compromises have made us one with the world instead of one with Christ. We have tolerated within our own membership neglect of worship, neglect of prayer, neglect of the sacraments, neglect of service and neglect of giving. That is why we are an ineffective instrument for the accomplishment of God's purpose. At the very root of the trouble lies the fact that few of us members of the Episcopal Church have any adequate reason for the faith which we profess, or any real conviction of the value of that faith as applied to every-day living. No wonder that communism with its virile message of complete self-surrender is making such headway. No wonder the missionary cause languishes. Power! That is the need of the Church. And that power is ours if we will receive it and use it. Christ has told us in simple, clear language just how we may obtain this power. There is, however, a definite condition upon which this power can be retained by us—God's power is promised to us in unlimited measure, but only if we will use it. Out from the sheltered camp! Let us put our training to the test! Let us use that power of God, lest we lose it.—Dr. Lewis B. Franklin.

WHERE MEN AND GOD MEET.

Illustration is one of the most effective ways of pointing out moral and religious truths. Jesus used parables because all thinking is done by comparison of some kind. An interesting story is told of two brothers who lived on adjoining farms; one was married, the other was single. It happened, one year, that the grain crop was much less than usual because of a drought, and neither one had enough for his own needs. One night the married brother spent much of the night sleepless, thinking of his single brother. The lonely fellow, thought he, does not have the comfort and happiness of home as I do. He is discouraged over the poor harvest. So I will get up and carry him a bag of my grain. The same night the bachelor brother lay awake thinking of his married brother. The poor fellow, thought he, is married and has a family; his needs are much more than mine, so I will make him happy by taking him a bag of wheat. So they arose and went out in the darkness, each bearing a bag of wheat to his needy brother, until they stood face to face with each other in the pathway where they met. They exchanged bags of grain as a token of brotherly love and each returned to his home much encouraged and happier. This was soon known to the neighbors and a church was erected on the spot where these brothers met; and this became known as "The place where men and God meet."

Is it not true that the brotherhood that comes nearest to filling the true mission of Christ is the one that brings most happiness and good will to mankind?

This is always found where men and God meet. I believe it was Dr. Rufus Jones who said, "We are ourselves plus"; and the "plus" is the greatest thing in it. Our love for Christ's service is the one great motive that will make self-sacrifice a positive joy.

A Story for the Children

UNCLE BEN'S BOYSHOP.

By Lydia Lyon Roberts.

"Stop it, Jimmie! What are you chasing that cat for?" said Uncle Ben as he caught hold of the small boy who was running past him.

"I wasn't going to hurt him," muttered Jimmie Scott, wriggling in the old man's firm grasp.

"Well, the cat didn't know that," said Uncle Ben sternly, but his eyes twinkled as he looked at his captive.

"There isn't much to do around here, anyway," said Jimmie, brushing the mop of red hair from his freckled forehead. "The big fellows have all gone on a picnic and Bert has the measles and Dan is helping to deliver groceries. Pete and Sam and I don't know what to do when school is out. There isn't any playground near home."

"Well, well, I guess what we need around here is a boyshop," declared Uncle Ben, nodding his white head.

"What's that?" asked Jimmie, sitting down on the front steps of the little brown house where Uncle Ben lived with his daughter.

"Oh, a place where boys can paint and pound and hammer and saw and knock things to pieces and put them together again," explained Uncle Ben.

"I wanted to help dad when he painted our house, but he said I wasn't much bigger than the paint brush," said Jimmie gloomily.

"Ho! Ho! I've seen paintbrushes lots smaller than you and not half so lively," said the old man with a hearty chuckle. "Now I have an idea," he continued. "You go get some of the other boys this afternoon and bring them around to my old shed in the back yard. If any of you boys have an old chair that needs fixing, or a clock that won't go, or something that needs painting, bring it with you. I don't care how old or worn-out it is. Come about three o'clock, because I won't have the boyshop ready until then. And mind now," Uncle Ben lifted a bony finger and waggled it in from of Jimmie's turned-up nose, "no more chasing cats or other tricks."

"No, honest, I won't even look at a cat," promised Jimmie earnestly, his eyes shining. "I'll hurry and get the other boys and tell them the news and we'll be here on time." In the middle of the afternoon a strange procession appeared on the narrow streets lined with small brown and gray houses. Jimmie walked ahead, as befitted the leader. Over his back was a kitchen chair with most of the rungs missing. Each arm stuck out over boxes, and hanging from one finger was a battered alarm-clock which rang suddenly, causing an elderly woman who was passing by to jump nearly two feet in the air. Following Jimmie were five other small boys, one pushing a cart on three wheels, another lugging an old clothes-basket, and the others burdened with rope, wood and stray wheels and an old doll-carriage.

Uncle Ben, who was waiting for them at the door of the old shed, threw up his hands at the sight of the procession.

"Sakes alive, did you clean out all your cellars?" he asked with a broad smile. "Come in, and make yourselves at home."

"Say, this is great, Uncle Ben," cried Pete Brown, dropping the doll-carriage on his toe, but hardly noticing the shock in his excitement.

"Look at the sign over that table!" cried Sam.

"Look at the pots of paint over in that corner!" cried Jimmie. "I bet we could paint this old shed all over."

The boys turned in the direction he pointed and exclaimed delightedly at the wooden sign which in big red letters were painted the words "Uncle Ben's Boyshop."

"What do you mean, Uncle Ben? Are we going to work here with you? Can we come every day? Shall we start in painting some things new?" Jimmies tongue could not wag fast enough for him.

"Whoa there, get your breath before it runs away from you," said Uncle Ben good-naturedly. "Well, you see, this old shed was only used for junk, so I cleared some of it away so we fellows could have some fun. There's two old benches here for us to work at, and plenty of tools. I thought we might set up a little repair shop and do repairing and painting after we learned to use the tools and paintbrushes. Most everyone has something that could be repaired or painted to be useful a while longer. You boys can bring odds and ends from your fathers' cellars and anything your mothers want mended. We can use most everything. I thought the Boyshop might be a good meeting place for us boys where we could talk and work and have some fun together."

"Let's hang the sign over the door of the shed and then we are all ready for business," said Pete eagerly.

"There, that looks all right," said Uncle Ben as the five boys helped to hang the red-lettered sign. "Now bring on your boys and your old furniture and we'll get to work."

"I guess we'll show every one around here that Uncle Ben's Boyshop is the best thing that ever happened to this town," said Jimmie proudly.

THE PRIVILEGES OF A MINISTER.

Article 7.

As A Pastor.

Some ministers insist that they cannot do pastoral work and keep up their pulpit work. There is a kind of pastoral work that is a waste of time and strength, but to be a real pastor makes one's sermons more effective and enables a minister to come into sacred and closest fellowship with men and women and children of all types and needs. Charles R. Brown was voted by the subscribers of a ministers' magazine as the greatest preacher in the United States, yet he, in his large pastorates, kept a prayer list in his little note book and always had time for needed pastoral visitations. Dr. Theodore Cuyler was a preacher to hold his cultured congregation in Brooklyn for fifty years, but he knew his people and gave them direction and comfort in their needs. Frank Gunsaulus, with the direction of Armour Mission and preacher at Central Church, always had time to advise and sympathize with a humble minister, and to take a word of comfort to any stricken one in his congregation. There is something in this personal contact with one's congregation and the awakened appreciation and sympathies that make a preacher vital.

A minister has no office hour at eight o'clock and it takes a strong will to hold one's self to early rising and to an active program. If a minister arises as the mass of men and women are compelled to do and does not waste his time, by ten or eleven o'clock he has studied as much as any person's system should be taxed.

On the part of many of us there is a dread to start out to visit the sick and the wilful and the stranger. For three years I had to drive myself to it. Then I asked God to make pastoral visitation a blessing to others and a joy to myself. The last clause of the prayer has been answered hundreds of times and I hope that help has been rendered.

Then a minister should do pastoral work through others. John Wesley with his converts divided into tens, with one person as a lay pastor over each group was wise and effective. Arrange your members and attendants into groups, often by city precincts and soon you will find your congregation growing and your calling simplified. The leaders of these groups will tell the minister where calls are needed, and will save him from wasting his energies. The form of lay oversight will be different in different congregations, but it will make any church a growing church and a church whose efforts are appreciated in a community.

Pastoral calls should be informal, friendly and spiritual. I mean by spiritual that whatever one does as he calls, when he leaves the people should have a deeper respect for the pastor and the aims of the church. A couple who could not be interested in the church were won when the pastor called after the birth of a baby. The father was so elated that the minister must go into the room and see the wife and baby. He stayed only two or three minutes, but before he left, he put his arm over the shoulder of the young father and asked God in two or three sentences to bless the little family. It was not many months until the minister had the joy of receiving the father and mother into the church and consecrating the dear little baby.

Letters have their place in pastoral efficiency. The writer had the funeral of a barkeeper one Sunday afternoon in June in Galesburg. As he came to the house, four barkeepers were on the porch. He greeted them. The few words he said in the service centered in the twenty-third psalm. As he left the house the owner, a saloon keeper, asked him to step aside, and said, "I want to thank you for speaking to those barkeepers on the porch. If we would follow what you just said in the house, from that Psalm, no one would be in this damnable business." A week later I wrote him a brief letter, asking him to give up the saloon. He never answered the letter. But a few weeks after I had left that remarkable church, I was asked by Dr. Huget and his Board to return and assist him to receive three hundred members. Among them was Mr. Marble, the saloon keeper, and his wife and two children. He had given up his "damnable business." I could trace all but sixteen of the host that came into the church that day to some little pastoral touch of the minister or some member of the church.

(This is the seventh and concluding article in this series by Rev. Clarence A. Vincent, D. D., Pastor Miami Shores Community Church, Miami, Florida.)

WEALTH IS DISTRIBUTED IN WAGES.

Observation shows that the productivity of the American worker, reinforced with power and with improved machinery, is the greatest in the world, and that the income thus produced has been widely diffused among all classes of the population.

If this were not the case, the widespread distribution of automobiles, refrigerators, radios, telephones and individually owned houses, which actually took place, would have proved impossible. On the fact of things the absurdity of the myth that 2 per cent of the people receive 60 to 80 per cent of our national wealth and income is apparent.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THAT OTHER AMERICA.

Practically all of us when the name "America" is used think immediately of the United States. And therein we err, and very greatly so. We ignore the fact that the United States is only one portion of America. We forget that there is a continent to the South of us just as zealous as we are of the name "America" and that they have as much right to the name as we have. When a South American writer uses the term "Americanos," he is usually talking about South America, and when he refers to the United States, he usually uses the term "Yanquis," and to this part of the continent as "Yanquilandia." Dr. John A. Mackay has written a most engaging book about this other America. We advise every reader of this paper to send $1.00 to the Friendship Press, New York, and secure a cloth-bound couy of this book or sixty cents and get a paper-bound copy. It is worth the prices many times over if it does nothing else than to show us that we are not the only people, the only nation, the only tribe or the only tongue that inhabit America. "Twenty independent republics make up the major part of the vast continent that stretches from the Rio Grande, southward across the equator, to the stormy headlands of Cape Horn. In eighteen of those twenty republics, ordinarily called Latin America, Spanish is the official language. In another called Brazil, larger in territory than the United States (exclusive of Alaska), Portuguese is the spoken tongue. In one, Haiti, French is the official language." Dr. Mackay's book is an eye-opener and gives to the reader many startling facts and thrilling events about the life, country and peoples to the South of us. These republics, like our own, are having their struggles, their temptations and their trials. In masterly fashion, Dr. Mackay, a graduate of the University of Aberdeen, a native of Scotland, has lived for many years in Latin America as a missionary of the Free Church of Scotland in Peru and lecturer in the universities of South America and Mexico. He is well acquainted with the people and the countries about whom he writes. The people of the United States are simply not acquainted with our neighbors to the South, of their burdens, their trials or their triumphs. It is a land of revolutions, upheavals and yet of unlimited wealth and resources. Dr. Mackay declares that Latin America furnishes one of the most perplexing and yet most promising fields for cultural, ethical and spiritual activity on the part of the Christian peoples of the United States. "The volume closes with a strong challenge to Christian action to meet this yearning for a new faith, 'not with a luminous idea or a universal ethical imperative, but with a Person who is altogether lovely, strong and true.' ". It is seldom that one reads a book written in such chaste language, with such power of analysis and description and with such dramatic interest in events and personalities. There is not a dull paragraph in this volume of 215 pages, and every chapter has its thrills and challenging adventures. J. O. A.

PREPARING FOR WAR.

The League of Nations and all other nations seem to be standing idly by while Mussolini, dictator of Italy, is planning to wage a war on peaceable Ethiopia. There seems to be no excuse for attacking this most ancient of Christian nations, who is a member of the League, other than Mussolini's desire for exploitation and more territory. It is a pitiable spectacle, indeed, and we are glad to note that while the diplomats seem to be unable to help, a National Committee for Ethiopia has been organized against Italy for its threat to wage war against a non-aggressive and peaceable people. We are glad to note our own Dr. Frank G. Coffin, a member of the committee-formed for this purpose. From the N. C. J. C. News Service, we gather the following:

> The committee which, when completed, will include both clergymen and laymen, at present numbers in its membership the following clergymen: Rev. Christian F. Reisner, New York City; Rev. John Clark Williams, Arlington, Ohio, president of the Ohio Conference of the M. P. church; Rev. John Franklin Knott, Melrose, Mass., president of the New England Conference of the M. E. church; Rev. Frank G. Coffin, Columbus, O., former moderator of the General Council of Congregational and Christian churches; Rev. P. K. Emmons, Presbyterian church, Scranton, Pa.; Rev William L. Burdick, Ashaway, R. I., national secretary of the Seventh Day Baptist Missionary Society, and Rev. Samuel Trexler, of New York City. Robert F. S. Harris is secretary of the committee.
> It is asking clergymen of all faiths to set up Sun. August 18, as a nationwide day of protest and prayer against the "threatened rape of Ethiopia."
> Under the slogan, "Save the oldest Christian nation in the world," the committee plans to disseminate facts about conditions and events within Ethiopia to the press and other vehicles of public opinion in this country, and will attempt to "prevent communist elements from taking advantage of the Italo-Ethiopian crisis to further their present subversive propaganda and agitation among Americans of African descent."
> Another aim of the committee will be to erect in Addis Ababa a modern, short wave wireless station for contact with the outside world in case present communications are cut off by hostilities. The committee also plans to organize and equip a modern, mobile hospital and ambulance unit to be sent to Ethiopia and to assemble and ship medical and other non-military supplies to Addis Ababa.
> Petitions will be circulated asking the League of Nations to act upon the pleas now being made by Ethiopia, a member of the League.

Writing about Ethiopia's appeal, the Nashville Christian Advocate has the following facts:

> The past week has seen Ethiopia seeking for a friend who will invoke the Briand-Kellogg Peace Pact in an effort to check Mussolini's aggressive war program. But King Haile Selassie's plea fell on deaf ears at Washington, and European nations have been equally unresponsive. This type of diplomacy causes the uninitiated to wonder what peace pacts are for. Why sign them, if in case of aggression by one member the others are too timid to life a finger in remonstrance? Whatever unfairness lies behind the crisis, Italy's refusal to arbitrate or submit the quarrel to the League of Nations puts Mussolini in a bad light before the world. The same deadly paralysis which left the world to drift into war in 1914 seems to grip the nations today. It has been said that if Sid Edward Grey had only spoken when he did not, Germany would not have taken the fatal step. Some nation needs now to speak to prevent Italy from taking the same fatal step. But no voice is heard.

Is it not pitiable, indeed, that nations can rush madly on spending millions for war and then are helpless to prevent war? J. O. A.

THE CHURCH.

It is very, very easy to criticize the church. In fact it is sometimes difficult not to do so. Many members criticize their church because it gives them easy excuse for non-support or ill-support.

The very best things of this life are easy to criticize. This is because no institution, however serviceable or sacred, is perfect. They are all composed of more or less frail and faulty human beings. There is no institution or enterprise, or movement or undertaking of the church that does not affort an easy mark of attack for the critic and the fault-finder. It helps one to learn that seeking for the best is far better in character building and making than seeking for the poorest and the worst.

It will help us to remember that while the church has its defects and makes its mistakes, it is a divine institution and, as such, gives to the world the best that heaven itself has to offer while we are on this earthly pilgrimage. We should bear in mind that Christ is the Founder and the Builder of the church, though He must needs use human beings as His agents. The church gives us the best we have in song, in fellowship, in friendship, in faith, in hope and in love. On this account, if for no other, we should cherish it and hold it near and dear despite any faults or failures that we may easily discover in it. It gives the gospel of peace and feeds the heart and the soul of the spiritually hungry. It supplies and breaks the Bread of Life and nourishes the soul of men and women. It is the one agency that looks to making this world a brotherhood and seeks to bring about an understanding among the peoples of the nations and of the world, an understanding not only of the Living God but of living mortals. The church is the only world-wide institution thus going beyond the borders of all states, nations and empires in its visions, its scopes and its aspirations.

This is why the church is spoken of as the House of God, the very gate to heaven, the door into the kingdom and the presence of God. The church has given to the world, and is giving to the world, its noblest men and women, its most faithful and distinguished heroes and heroines.

We should bear in mind that while the church, with its institutions and enterprises, can be easily criticized, it is the noblest, the best, the highest and the holiest institution known among men.

BIBLE STUDY IN THE MOUNTAINS.

A year ago a young man came to me at my log cabin summer home and said he was interested in reading the Bible but had no books or guides to help him. He stated that he expected to be shut in a great deal during the winter and would have long evenings to study. He became interested through a copy of Moffatt's translation of the Bible that I had given one member of the family a year before. We had several talks that summer about the Bible, its origin, meaning, etc., and when I left the mountains I promised to send him some literature. Out of this contact grew a correspondence that has proven interesting and mutually helpful.

This summer I am living in the same log cabin and one evening the same young man came to see me bringing a handful of books and pamphlets to show me what he had been doing. He has read the Bible with great profit and along with it Herbert Willets' "The Bible Through the Centuries"; J. Paterson Smyth's "How We Got Our Bible" and John H. Kerr's "A Harmony of the Gospels." On the fly-leaf of "How We Got Our Bible" there are nineteen names of people who have read or are in process of reading. At the top of the page the following is written, "'Read and pass on to the next name after your own name when you have read." Thus he created a sort of circulating library among some very important people of the community.

During the winter he followed a course of study put out by "The American Institute of Sacred Literature" of the University of Chicago. In connection, he has used two of their correspondence volumes, "The Old Testament Books," containing their origin and religious value for today and "The Truth About the Bible,, containing ten chapters by such scholars as Bosworth, Fullerton, Soares, Mathews and others.

But the course of study that he followed was contained in seven copies of "The Institute" and called "Great Affirmation of the Christian Faith." I venture to say that this young man has profited more by this course of Bible study than anything else he ever did. His example should inspire others to do likewise. He is planning to take up the study of Archaeology next winter.

His studies are not entirely selfish, for his own development but he uses his knowledge in Sunday School teaching in a nearby church during the winter season. Such use of leisure time should be encouraged. If a young man shut in by the cold of a mountain winter can make such good use of his time why cannot our young men in cities and small towns do the same? There is nothing more rewarding than Bible study under competent leadership.

—AND SUDDEN DEATH.

By F. C. FURNAS.

[This is vacation time, and many motor cars fill the roads. The following article—gruesome as it is—is reprinted with the hope that its readers will drive just a little slower and with a little more care than they otherwise would have. Perhaps, if its warning is heeded, one life that may have been picked by death, will yet be spared. Copyrighted by The Reader's Digest Association, we reprint the article by special permission of the editor of that magazine, who warns that it "will nauseate some readers. Those who find themselves thus affected at the outset are cautioned against reading the article in its entirely."—J. T. K.]

Publicizing the total of motoring injuries—almost a million last year, with 36,000 deaths—never gets to first base in jarring the motorist into a realization of the appalling risks of motoring. He does not translate dry statistics into a reality of blood and agony.

Figures exclude the pain and horror of savage mutilation—which means they leave out the point. They need to be brought closer home. A passing look at a bad smash or the news that a fellow you had lunch with last week is in a hospital with a broken back will make any driver but a born fool slow down at least temporarily. But what is needed is a vivid and sustained realization that every time you step on the throttle, death gets in beside you, hopefully waiting for his chance. That single horrible accident you may have witnessed is no isolated horror. That sort of thing happens every hour of the day, everywhere in the United States. If you really felt that, perhaps the cold lines of type in Monday's paper recording that a total of 29 local citizens were killed in week-end crashes would rate somethin more than perfunctory tut-tuts as you turn back to the sports page.

An enterprising judge now and again sentences reckless drivers to tour the accident end of a city morgue. But even a mangled body on a slab, waxily portraying the consequences of bad motoring judgment, isn't a patch on the scene of the accident itself. No artist working on a safety poster would dare depict that in full detail.

That picture would have to include motion-picture and sound effects, too—the flopping, pointless efforts of the injured to stand up; the queer grunting noises; the steady, panting groaning of a human being with pain creeping up on him as the shock wears off. It should portray the slack expression on the face of a man, drugged with shock, staring at the Z-twist in his broken leg, the insane crumpled effect of a child's body after its bones are crushed inward, a realistic portrait of an hysterical woman with her screaming mouth opening a hole in the bloody drip that fills her eyes and runs off her chin. Minor details would include the raw ends of bones protruding through flesh in compound fractures, and the dark red, oozing surfaces where clothes and skin were flayed off at once.

Those are all standard, everyday sequels to the modern passion for going places in a hurry and taking a chance or two by the way. If ghosts could be put to a useful purpose, every bad stretch of road in the United States would greet the oncoming motorist with groans and screams and the educational spectacle of ten or a dozen corpses, all sizes, sexes and ages, lying horribly still on the bloody grass.

Last year a state trooper stopped a big red Hispano for speeding. Papa was obviously a responsible person, obviously set for a pleasant week-end with his family—so the officer cut into papa's well-bred expostulations: "I'll let you off this time, but if you keep on this way, you won't last long. Get going—but take it easier." Later a passing motorist hailed the trooper and asked if the red Hispano had got a ticket. "No," said the trooper, "I nated to spoil their party." "Too bad you didn't," said the motorist, "I saw you stop them—and then I passed that car again 50 miles up the line. It still makes me feel sick at my stomach. The car was all folded up like an accordion—the color was about all there was left. They were all dead but one of the kids—and he wasn't going to live to the hospital."

Maybe it will make you sick at your stomach, too. But unless you're a heavy-footed incurable, a good look at the picture the artist wouldn't dare paint, a first-hand acquaintance with the results of mixing gasoline with speed and bad judgment, ought to be well worth your while. I can't help it if the facts are revolting. If you have the nerve to drive fast and take chances, you ought to have the nerve to take the appropriate cure. You can't ride an ambulance or watch the doctor working on the victim in the hospital, but you can read.

The automobile is treacherous, just as a cat is. It is tragically difficult to realize that it can become the deadliest missile. As enthusiasts tell you, it makes 65 feel like nothing at all. But 65 an hour is 100 feet a second, a speed which puts a viciously unjustified responsibility on brakes and human reflexes, and can instantly turn this docile luxury into a mad bull elephant.

Collision, turnover, or sideswipe, each type of accident produces either a shattering dead stop or a crashing change of direction—and, since the occupant—meaning you—continues in the old direction at the original speed, every surface and angle of the car's interior immediately becomes a battering, tearing projectile, aimed squarely at you—inescapable. There is no bracing yourself against these imperative laws of momentum.

It's like going over Niagara Falls in a steel barrel full of railroad spikes. The best thing that can happen to you—and one of the rarer things—is to be thrown out as the door springs open, so you have only the ground to reckon with. True, you strike with as much force as if you had been thrown from the Twentieth Century at top speed. But at least you are spared the lethal array of gleaming metal knobs and edges and glass inside the car.

Anything can happen in that split second of crash, even those lucky escapes you hear about. People have dived through windshields and come out with only superficial scratches. They have run cars together head on, reducing both to a pile of twisted junk, and been found unhurt and arguing bitterly two minutes afterward. But death was there just the same—he was only exercising his privilege of being erratic. This spring a wrecking crew pried the door off a car which had been overturned down an embankment and out stepped the driver with only a scratch on his cheek. But his mother was still inside, a splinter of wood from the top driven four inches into her brain as a result of her son's taking a greasy curve a little too fast. No blood—no horribly twisted bones—just a gray-haired corpse still clutching her pocketbook in her lap as she had clutched when she felt the car leave the road.

On that same curve a month later, a light touring car crashed a tree. In the middle of the front seat they found a nine-months-old baby surrounded by broken glass and yet absolutely unhurt. A fine practical joke on death—but spoiled by the baby's parents, still sitting on each side of him, instantly killed by shattering their skulls on the dashboard.

If you customarily pass without clear vision a long way ahead, make sure that every member of the party carries identification papers—it's difficult to identify a body with its whole face bashed in or torn off. The driver is death's favorite

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Four cases of Infantile Paralysis have been reported in Nansemond County. On account of this disease a number of church group meetings have been postponed. So far nothing has been done, officially, towards closing the movies and other places of amusement. Many people are afraid to send their children to Sunday school, but they follow the crowds to the baseball park on Sunday afternoon. The yelling and cheering at the ball game on Sunday afternoon may be regarded as an antidote to the poison of the disease. The doctors have not fully agreed as to how the disease is transmitted. The disease is serious and dangerous. So much has been published in the papers that many people are panic stricken over the possibility of having their children exposed to this grave danger.

Since this disease is being discussed in private groups and public meetings, it may furnish an illustration for moral and spiritual study and reflection. Perhaps the reader may be interested in a practical discussion. Here are a few random thoughts for consideration:

1. Children and young people seem to be in most danger. A large percentage of patients are young. Criminal statistics indicate that sin does its most deadly work in the days of youth. Youth is the time when there is great danger of being exposed to evil. Impressions are easily made. Motives are changed. Ideals are raised or lowered overnight. Childhood and youth should be protected. Society should be as deeply interested in the moral protection of youth as in the physical protection from Infantile Paralysis. But many parents permit their children to patronize a suggestive moving picture and prohibit them from attending Sunday school. There are times when the child should be kept from Sunday school, if an epidemic of contagious disease is in the community. And the same precaution should be exercised in reference to the danger of immoral and character destroying influences in the community.

2. Patients are in danger of being crippled for life. Very few patients entirely recover from the effects of this dreaded disease. When sin attacks youth a scar will remain for a lifetime. The only hope of recovery or escape is the saving grace of Jesus Christ. The regenerating love of God is the only hope of sin infested youth. "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." (James 1: 15). Sin in worse than paralysis. "The wages of sin is death." (Romans 6:23.)

3. The disease is communicable. So is immorality. Temptation is communicable. Individuals and organizations exercise a great influence over others. This tendency is most powerful in the days of youth. People who are alarmed over the danger of some communicable disease such as Infantile Paralysis or Typhoid Fever, close their eyes to the cesspools of vice and the dens of iniquity. They enter their protest against the exposure to disease, but encourage and consent to the exposure to immoral influences and institutions. The danger of evil fellowship should be recognized, at least, on a par with disease.

4. Youth should be protected. When a dangerous disease appears in a community the state offers the protection of a quarantine. Society recognizes this as just and approves such a course. But is it consistent for the state to quarantine a communicable disease and open a place of business where people buy liquor to ruin body and soul? Is it consistent for the state to forbid the assemblage of young people as precaution against the spread of a communicable disease and then give it's consent for the violation of the sanctity of the Lord's Day by permitting people to pursue their secular work in the upkeep of roads, in industrial plants, in shop and office, and, furthermore, to indulge in every conceivable type of recreation and pleasure on this Holy Day? Some of the writers for the daily press boldly declare that it is out of date to suggest any restriction of labor or amusement on the Sabbath, or take any steps to control the moral destiny of youth. Youth needs protection. The state should help.

ELON PREPARES FOR EXPANSION.

The prospects for a record-breaking attendance at Elon for 1935-36 are excellent. We have the largest number of paid reservations at this time in the history of the institution. Registrations to date are more than twenty-five per cent in advance of last year. Our prospective list has not yet been exhausted by any means.

Present indications are that our next year's student body will be an increase in students outside of the State of North Carolina. At this writing indications are that there will not be a material increase in students from Virginia. We are hoping, however, that this section will show a decided increase from now until September.

An increased student body requires an increase in accommodations. At Elon our equipment for classroom and all grades of college work is entirely adequate and modern, but our accommodations for living quarters for students is not what we would like for them to be. However, we are planning definitely to improve this part of our equipment.

Some years ago members of the church erected a building near the campus for a publishing house. Machinery was installed; THE CHRISTIAN SUN was published for a number of years, and also job work was done by the publishing company. This building was finally abandoned by the publishers and the college acquired the property. This building is being transformed into an up-to-date dormitory for young men. A modern heating plant has been installed, and a modern lighting system. The building has twenty-four excellent rooms with adequate bath room facilities on both floors. It will be equipped with hardwood floors, single beds, new tables, chairs, etc. These will be just as good rooms as we have for college students. We do not have a name for the building. It cannot be called the publishing house. Will someone suggest a name?

There is also a decided increase in the number of young ladies enrolling this year. Additional rooming space will be required for them. Ladies' Hall, a building on the campus formerly used by young ladies on a cooperative basis is being reopened and reconditioned. This building has sixteen large rooms, sufficiently large to accommodate four girls each if necessary.

West, North, and East Dormitories are being cleaned and set in order. With the two additional dormitories opened this year, we will have room for approximately three hundred and fifty boarding students. We are hoping to have every available room occupied. These, together with the day students, will give the college a most excellent student body.

I trust that the alumni and the friends of the college will continue to use their influence in behalf of the college. We need and appreciate your assistance.

An increased student body not only demands expansion in rooming facilities, but also requires additional teaching force. We are anticipating and preparing for this requirement. Certain members of our 1934-35 faculty will not return, however, we have employed five additional members to our faculty. Dr. T. E. Powell, Ph. D., Duke University, returns to the active teaching force. Dr. Reinard Harkema, Ph. D., Duke University, will be associated with Dr. Powell in biology. Dr. J. D. Messick, Ph. D., New York University, becomes dean of the college succeeding Dean A. L. Hook, who has served faithfully in this capacity for a number of years. Dr. Messick also becomes head of the department of education. Mr. D. J. Bowden, Jr., of Norfolk, Virginia, who completed all of his residence work at Yale Divinity School, New Haven, Connecticut, becomes associate professor in the department of Christian education, and Miss Laura Howard, who has her master's degree from Columbia University becomes teacher of Home Economics. The teacher of Home Economics will not serve as dietician as heretofore, but will give her entire time to the development of this department. With these additions from the standpoint of scholarship, Elon College will have one of the strongest faculties in its history, and an unusually strong faculty for a small college.

In order to make sure that our teaching curriculum will meet the educational requirements of this advancing age from the standpoint of public schools of the State of Virginia and of North Carolina in particular, I personally have visited the state superintendents of education of the above mentioned states and the superintendents of the department of education have helped to work out and perfect our curriculum so as to make sure that every requirement for preparation of teachers in our public schools is met. We are prepared, and we do prepare, teachers effectively for efficient work in our public schools. Not only are we prepared to prepare individuals for the teaching profession, but we are prepared to give pre-medical, pre-law, and pre-engineering courses and of course our special field is religion. We prepare Christian workers; in fact every student who graduates from Elon College is required to take one year of Bible. Thorough courses for the lay-workers and the ministerial students are offered.

Our fall term opens September 3rd. Catalog and other information will be cheerfully sent to any address on request.

THE MINISTER'S WIFE.

I was grown before I knew ministers had wives. Until I went away to college I never, or rarely if ever, saw one. At least I never until then knew one personally. I knew ministers were heroes (?), but it had never occurred to me that they were husbands. Sometime ago I heard a pastor of a large city church talking at length about the "loneliness of the minister." A little later I heard another minister talking about the "sacrifices of the ministry." Every now and then some preacher pens on paper the "curse of clerical kindness," and craves to be a "regular fellow." The expression "the poor preacher" is kept alive by ministers themselves.

And ministers are still writing in papers read by ministers about privileges, pastimes, and prophecies of ministers. And sometimes the wife who has married the timid-soul type of preacher takes her pen in hand to tell about the self-sacrificing person that sits behind the throne. But who will say a word for the girls, reared as girls are, not better nor worse than just the fine regular girl in a normal average home without any "divine calling," or "special preparation" who without having very much of an idea of what she is bargaining for becomes with the reading of the ring ceremony a minister's wife! Even the happy groom is not often aware of what really has happened. He thinks she has become the bride of a regular fellow, not realizing that she has become in the eyes of the congregation, the minister's wife.

He has been especially prepared for his job. Or he should have. And if he has not he still labours under the comforting opinion that he has. But the wife is a "preacher's wife" without being told aforetime by lorgnetted professors in long-standing seminaries about the "sacrifices" she is making. I have been attending ministers' meetings for a long time and yet I have never heard the ministers discuss, not one single angle, of the subject of the minister's wife. They talk about the study, the pulpit, the pew, the prayer-meeting, the church building, the church roll, the church militant, and the Ladies' Aid, but never the lady that aids the preacher in the business of being a regular fellow and living a real life! Once in my memory the wives thought they would organize as a group and meet in a separate room while their husbands held their meetings, and when the women told their husbands about it they smiled, and the husbands laughed, and that ended it.

Lonely? The preacher who follows his task day in and day out in company with the men, women, and children of his parish,—in and out out of their homes, in and out of their businesses, in and out of their meetings, clubs, and associations should not get so terribly lonely. He has plans, programs, preachments in public places in mind. He has his own home as a haven, and his study as a citadel. But how about the minister's wife? She is as circumscribed as he is without the press of social duties through which he may find release. The preacher chose to make his adjustments through years of deciding to be a minister succeeded by other years of preparation for it, but the wife must make her transition under greatly differing circumstances and in much less time. I can see how at times she might get really lonely for the friendships she would otherwise have naturally made.

Sacrifices? The minister who enjoys the opportunity to serve, has a place in which to work, a congregation to whom he may minister, and the blessings of life, should never feel that he has made any sacrifices. He chose, as I say, after long deliberation, and large preparation to make sacrifices if needs be; and then he asks a girl who has not been schooled in that process of thinking to step into the role of minister's wife. Love is blind, they say, but the minister's wife who makes good at that sort of a bargain eventually gets her eyes wide open, and keeps her wits about her all the time. And she never feels that she is making sacrifices. She knows that she is giving the very best she has, unselfishly, and she asks no greater reward.

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA S. S. AND C. E. CONFERENCE.

The session of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention which met with the church at Liberty, in the Eastern North Carolina conference this week, was the best we have had in several years. The beauty of it was, the folks who were there did not mind saying it was the best. Look over the program and see what you missed, if you were not there.

The program was well arranged and the speakers of the occasion did themselves credit. Rev. S. E. Madren was the efficient President and kept his hands constantly at the wheel leading up to a climax with the last two sessions. The committees were on the job and did fine work.

So anxious were those in attendance, in their concern of the work that they wished more of the schools could have been represented. Really there is a great deal of good to be derived from conventions. Even if the things presented might not agree with one's own ways, it could make him more determined in seeing the good of his own. It encourages a pastor for his schools to send reports and delegates to these conventions; and, now as the convention is over it would be a great help if those schools which failed to send reports would send them in to the secretary and, along with the report, the dues.

The convention wants a place to meet next year. Should any church like to have the convention meet with them, write to Rev. Robert Kimball, Manson, N. C., he will make your request known to the proper ones.

KANSAS FIGHTS ILLICIT LIQUOR.

Following a conference with the federal heads of liquor control in Washington, the attorney-general of Kansas is directing a crusade to prevent illicit liquor from being brought into dry Kansas. The state highway patrol head is cooperating by throwing up barricades on all the principal highways leading into Kansas from Missouri. Numerous arrests have been made, and all pleaded guilty in court and were fined in two counts—with possession and transportation of intoxicants. The penalty imposed is $150 and thirty days on each count. It is believed that evidence is in hand to convict several Missouri wholesale liquor dealers, due to selling wholesale to unlicensed retailers.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

WITNESSING—WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

By E. M. MARTINSON, D. D.

The principle function of the church of Christ is to witness. If the same mind is in us which was also in Jesus Christ, we cannot live without this daily witnessing by lips and by life, by loyalties and by labors. The very genius of Christianity, as well as the direct commission of our Lord, requires nothing less than this. The witnessing has not always and everywhere been equally clear and conclusive, but the spirit and genius of Christianity have always been unique and powerful. The world-wide witnessing of the church has been more through the diffusion of the spirit and principles of Christ than by direct campaigning for world peace.

A perfectly stupendous success attended this witnessing. After Pentecost this little band of disciples in the upper room in Jerusalem "turned the whole world upside down" in less than twenty years, and in less than three hundred years the whole Roman Empire and the known world were found acknowledging the spiritual supremacy of the Christian enterprise. The Christian fellowship called God "Father" and their fellowship "brother," worshipping the One and unselfishly seeking the best welfare of the other. It was a revolutionary and perilous confession in a day when, as Dr. Philip Schaff says, "Heathenism had no conception of the general and natural rights of man. The ancient republics consisted in the exclusive dominion of minority over an oppressed majority. The Greeks and Romans regarded only the free, i. e., the free-born, rich and independent citizens as men in the full sense of the term, and denied this privilege to the foreigners, the laborers, the poor, and the slaves." Terrible persecutions and martyrdoms under the Roman emperors testify to the courage and consistency of the Christians in witnessing.—N. C. Christian Advocate.

WHY MISSIONS?

It is impossible to be a Christian and not to be missionary-minded. To be a Christian is to be a follower of Jesus Christ, and the preeminent purpose of the life of Jesus Christ was to proclaim the Gospel. To follow our Leader is not only to emulate His example. It is, also, to obey His commands. And, Jesus said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." To disregard the orders of the Commander-in-Chief is to imperil our discipleship and to elevate our personal prejudices to a height whence we look down disdainfully upon the practice and conviction of God.

To say, "I do not believe in Christian missions," is to say, in effect, "Jesus Christ was mistaken in His conception of the absolute importance of humanity to God. The Divine favor rests, as a matter of fact and of experience, upon the relatively few, and when we include ourselves and the fortunate minimum, we exclude everybody else." In other words, "Christ is the Light of my parish, my diocese, and my countrymen. He is not the Light of the World."

To state such an attitude in black and white, even in brief, is to shudder at the logic and the spirit of consecration of the person who utters it. With St. Paul, we may "suffer fools gladly," or, with Mr. Chesterton we may "enjoy fools uproariously"; but our hearts are saddened, even as our minds are bewildered, at the realization of the spiritual loss involved in such a policy of widespread and stupid self-pleading.—Bishop Abbott in Spirit of Missions, July, 1935.

GOD LEADS.

The life which many of us live is not an easy and simple thing. And yet there is one word which we can carry with us that will unlock all the perplexity for us, that will keep us in the midst of fears and misgivings, quiet us in the midst of all the turmoil, and give us a restful heart under all the difficulty and complication of our life. It is a word in the first chapter of the Epistle to the Philippians. It was a favorite verse of a noble Christian physician, Dr. David Bovaird: "Being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it against the day of Jesus Christ." As Christ put it, with God the thing is possible. How good it is to believe this, to realize that all that we need to do is to be as little children, who come confidently to the One they love, who said years ago, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not," and to put our hands in his and say to him: "Lord, I am not wise as I once thought I was, and life is not a very intelligible thing to me by myself; but I would be Thy child. Lead me. Lead me—how otherwise can I find my way?—when the sun is going down and the evening stars are shining—to life and home"!

—Robert E. Speer in Christian Realities.

"WE CHOOSE CHRIST" WILL BE TWO-YEAR THEME.

In more than a dozen great mass meetings and more than two hundred and fifty conference sessions, Christian Endeavorers in international convention at Philadelphia, July 2nd to 7th, launched a new two-year program. "We Choose Christ" is the slogan which was selected. Campaigns in evangelism, social reconstruction, alcohol education, good literature, and world peace are included in the new emphases, adopted by the fifteen thousand youth delegates at the Philadelphia meetings.

"We Choose Christ" supplements and extends for young people's Christian Endeavor societies and kindred leadership-training groups the united youth theme of "Christian Youth Building a New World." Throughout the conference sessions or school of the convention, conducted under the chairmanship of Dr. Harry Thomas Stock, the themes were used interchangeably. In number of sessions and attendance these conferences set new records for even an International Christian Endeavor youth congress. All available rooms and smaller halls in the spacious auditorium building were used, and the convention overflowed into two buildings of the nearby University of Pennsylvania.

Leading speakers included Dr. Robert E. Speer, Dr. Lynn Harold Hough, Dr. Norman E. Richardson, Dr. Oscar W. Blackwelder, Dr. Norman V. Peale (who conducted the well-attended daily Quiet Hour meetings), Dr. William H. Foulkes, Miss Margaret Slattery, Dr. Samuel W. Hughes of London, Dr. Edwin T. Dahlberg, Dr. Lester H. Clee, Dr. Louis H. Evans, and Rev. Vere W. Abbey, who returns to India this fall as general secretary of the Christian Endeavor Union of India and Burma. A number of Negro speakers and conference chairmen participated.

Philadelphia churches joined enthusiastically in the biennial Christian Endeavor parade, which was credited by newspaper reporters with fifty thousand marchers, forty bands, and several hundred floats, and unsurpassed save by two processions in Philadelphia in this century.

Into its new campaign, Christian Endeavor carries a World Peace Fellowship, of which twenty-eight-year-old Ernest R. Bryan, educator, traveler and radio speaker will be superintendent. By its enrollment, its educational literature, and its facilities for mobilizing youth for specific goals in world peace, the fellowship appears to have unusual promise as a means for common action, without committing youth for or against a personal position of complete pacifism. The enrollment becomes world-wide through the means of the World's Christian Endeavor Convention, meeting in Budapest in August, and the eight months' around-the-world tour of President Poling, in which he will meet and speak to Endeavorers of thirty-four countries.

Dr. Poling was re-elected president; and the following executive officers were chosen: honorary vice-president, Dr. Howard B. Grose (editor emeritus of Missions and one of the original trustees of the movement); vice-presidents, Dr. William Hiram Foulkes, Harry N. Holmes, Dr. A. E. Cory; associate secretary, Dr. Stanley B. Vandersall; financial secretary and treasurer, Carroll M. Wright; and extension secretary, Robert S. Nance. Two state field secretaries will be added to the executive committee, on nomination by their own associates, under a new by-law. A general council is created to aid in fixing policies and united activities, in which members will be the presidents and field secretaries of state unions, denominational young people's national leaders, and representative trustees of the International Society.

Guests of the convention, included Mrs. Francis E. Clark, who with the late Dr. Clark founded the first Christian Endeavor society, and William Shaw, former pioneering general secretary of the movement, as well as Dr. Grose. All gave stirring messages to the delegates. The music was in charge of Homer Rodeheaver, and Professor Raymond L. Lyons directed a splendid chorus of several hundred. The Junior convention, directed by Miss Mildreth Haggard and Miss Rebecca Hughes, was particularly notable.

The program launched at Philadelphia bids fair to be historic, particularly when to the impetus of the American convention is added that of Budapest and the various European and Asiatic meetings with similar emphases.

—AND SUDDEN DEATH.

target. If the steering wheel holds together, it ruptures his liver or spleen so he bleeds to death internally. Or, if the steering wheel breaks off, the matter is settled instantly by the steering column's plunging through his abdomen.

By no means do all head-on collisions occur on curves. The modern death-trap is likely to be a straight stretch with three lanes of traffic—like the notorious Astor Flats on the Albany Post Road where there have been as many as 27 fatalities in one summer month. This sudden vision of broad, straight road tempts many an ordinarily sensible driver into passing the man ahead. Simultaneously a driver coming the other way swings out at high speed. At the last moment each tries to get into line again, but the gaps are closed. As the cars in line are forced into the ditch to capsize or crash fences, the passers meet, almost head on, in a swirling, grinding smash that sends them caroming obliquely into the others.

A trooper described such an accident—five cars in one mess, seven killed on the spot, two dead on the way to the hospital, two more dead in the long run. He remembered it far more vividly than he wanted to—the quick way the doctor turned away from a dead man to check up on a woman with a broken back; the three bodies out of one car so soaked with oil from the crankcase that they looked like wet brown cigars and not human at all; a man, walking around and babbling to himself, oblivious of the dead and dying, even oblivious of the dagger-like sliver of steel that stuck out of his streaming wrist; a pretty girl with her forehead laid open, trying hopelessly to crawl out of a ditch in spite of her smashed hip. A first-class massacre of that sort is only a question of scale and numbers—seven corpses are no deader than one. Each shattered man, woman or child who went to make up the 36,000 corpses chalked up last year had to die a personal death.

A car careening and rolling down a bank, battering and smashing its occupants every inch of the way, can wrap itself so thoroughly around a tree that front and rear bumpers interlock, requiring an acetylene torch to cut them apart. In a recent case of that sort they found the old lady who had been sitting in back lying across the lap of her daughter, who was in front, each soaked in her own and the other's blood indistinguishably, each so shattered and broken that there was no point whatever in an autopsy to determine whether it was broken neck or ruptured heart that caused death.

Overturning cars specialize in certain injuries. Cracked pelvis, for instance, guaranteeing agonizing months in bed, motionless, perhaps crippled for life—broken spine resulting from sheer sidewise twist—the minor details of smashed knees and splintered shoulder blades caused by crashing into the side of the car as she goes over with the swirl of an insane roller coaster—and the lethal consequences of broken ribs, which puncture hearts and lungs with their raw ends. The consequent internal hemorrhage is no less dangerous because it is the pleural instead of the abdominal cavity that is filling with blood.

Flying glass—safety glass is by no means universal yet—contributes much more than its share to the spectacular side of accidents. It doesn't merely cut—the fragments are driven in as if a cannon loaded with broken bottles had been fired in your face, and a sliver in the eye, traveling with such force, means certain blindness. A leg or an arm stuck through the windshield will cut clean to the bone through vein, artery and muscle like a piece of beef under the butcher's knife, and it takes little time to lose a fatal amount of blood under such circumstances. Even safety glass may not be wholly safe when the car crashes something at high speed. Your hear picturesque tales of how a flying human body will make a neat hole in the stuff with its head—the shoulders stick—the glass holds—and the raw, keen edge of the hole decapitates the body as neatly as the guillotine.

Or, to continue with the decapitation motif, going of the road into a post-and-rail fence can put you beyond worrying about other injuries immediately when a rail comes through the windshield and tears off your head with its splintery end—not as neat a job but thoroughly efficient. Bodies are often found with their shoes off and their feet all broken out of shape. The shoes are back on the floor of the car, empty and with their laces still neatly tied. That is the kind of impact produced by modern speeds.

But all that is routine in every American community. To be remembered individually by doctors and policemen, you have to do something grotesque as the lady who burst the windshield with her head, splashing splinters all over the other occupants of the car, and then, as the car rolled over, rolled with it down the edge of the windshield frame and cut her throat from ear to ear. Or park on the pavement too near a curve at night and stand in front of the tail light as you take off the spare tire—which will immortalize you in somebody's memory as the fellow who was mashed three feet broad and two inches thick by the impact of a heavy duty truck against the rear of his own car. Or be as original as the pair of youths who were thrown out of an open roadster this spring—thrown clear—but each broke a windshield post with his head in passing and the whole top of each skull, down to the eyebrows, was missing. Or snap off a nine-inch tree and get yourself impaled by a ragged branch.

None of all that is scare-fiction; it is just the horrible raw material of the year's statistics as seen in the ordinary course of duty by policemen and doctors, picked at random. The surprising thing is that there is so little dissimilarity in the stories they tell.

It's hard to find a surviving accident victim who can bear to talk. After you come to, the gnawing, searing pain throughout your body is accounted for by learning that you have both collarbones smashed, both shoulder blades splintered, your right arm broken in three places and three ribs cracked, with every chance of bad internal ruptures. But the pain can't distract you, as the shock begins to wear off, from realizing that you are probably on your way out. You can't forget that, not even when they shift you from the ground to the stretcher and your broken ribs bite into your lungs and the sharp end of your collarbone slides over to stab into the side of your screaming throat. When you've stopped screaming it all comes back—you're dying and you hate yourself for it. That isn't fiction either. It's what it actually feels like to be one of that 36,000.

And every time you pass on a blind curve, every time you hit it up on a slippery road, every time you step on its harder than your reflexes will safely take, every time you drive with your reactions slowed by a drink or two, every time you follow the man ahead too closely, you're gambling a few seconds against this kind of blood and agony and sudden death.

Take a look at yourself as the man in the white jacket shakes his head over you, tells the boys with the stretcher not to bother and turns away to somebody else who isn't quite dead yet. And then take it easy.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTIONS.

It has been my privilege and duty as chairman of the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Convention to attend the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions in Virginia and the Carolinas. As I look back, there are certain things which stand out in my mind.

In the first place, there was fine fellowship of the leaders in our churches. The Virginia Valley Convention met among the mountains and brought together many whose names are familiar to those who know Christian Church work in that section. The North Carolina and Virginia Convention met among the little hills near Burlington, and familiar friends from my home section were there for a day and a half of labor and refreshment. The Western North Carolina Convention had in it some of the older leaders and several of the younger group. The Eastern North Carolina Convention met near Henderson and had present a large section of the younger generation as well as several of those who have labored in the convention for years. In each convention there was a very friendly and courteous attitude on the part of all. It was fine fellowship; the kind that gives new faith in the goodness of humanity and makes one want to do things that are worth the doing.

A second impression is to the effect that some of our Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor societies are alive and at work, but that many are far from what they should be. Without having the figures at hand, my guess is that only about one-third of the schools and societies were represented by delegates or report. Those who were represented showed some signs of life and growth, but there was little way to guess what was going on in those churches where pastor, superintendent, teachers, and leaders are not sufficiently interested to attend the convention or to send a report. It is true, of course, that circumstances may have kept many from attending, and that reports do not make a school or a society grow. But unless there is some interest outside the local community, there is always a pretty good reason to guess that the interest in the community is not very great.

A third impression is to the effect that the conventions can mean much more to the schools, societies, and churches than they have been doing. This is not said by way of adverse criticism. The fact that so much is being done lends to the belief that more can be done. If one or two days can be used to advantage by bringing together the leaders for reports, study, inspiration and plan-making, isn't it possible that more meetings of leaders can mean even more? Suppose, for instance, that the officers get together now, just after they are elected, or re-elected as most of them are, and set themselves to the task of making suggestions to the schools and societies of things to do the coming year, and give detailed plans of how these things can be accomplished. Isn't it likely that something important could come out of such a meeting and such plans. I believe that Convention officers should work all through the year, and not just enough to hold a convention once per year. Maybe I am wrong, but I think I am right. I believe that the leaders in the local churches should call on the convention leaders for leadership all through the year. And I hope that they will.

THE BOARD OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

The Board of Christian Education of the Southern Convention stands back of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention ready to help in every possible way. Printing of Report Blanks is only a small service to render, but one that should be important, for it is through this method that we check up on what is being done educationally in our churches. We are always glad to share in the making of the programs, in planning through the year's activities, and in printing of minutes and the distribution of information, or in doing any other service possible.

The Board also renders service directly to Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor societies. Pastors, superintendents, teachers, Endeavor leaders, always receive a courteous response to calls for service. Hundreds of books are loaned to those who are interested in reading. Program materials go to those who are eager to find a new way to do old tasks. Suggestions are gladly given to those who have problems to solve.

The Board sponsors the young people's work. There is now an organized Youth Fellowship in each Conference in the Southern Convention. Some are more active than others, but all are taking on new life, and leaders in each group are studying their work with an eagerness that is surprising and inspiring. It is a delight to be associated with such eager Christian young people. Plans are now in the making for a Christmas Conference of these Fellowship officers not only for the Southern Convention but also for the Southeast Convention.

Another service the Board renders is the distribution of New Testaments and Bibles to ten-year-old children. Some three thousand copies of these books have been distributed free during the past five years. The man who pays for the books is eager that about three times as many be distributed from now on. The Board is glad to send them wherever they are needed.

FINANCING THE BOARD.

The Board is run as economically as possible. The service rendered is only in proportion to the amount of money available. When the money gives out the work has to stop. If there was a larger income the work could expand. At present, there is not enough money in our treasury to pay the expenses for July. What the future holds of marvel or surprise no one on the Board can tell.

Our support comes from a very small percentage of the Conference Apportionments—when we get it; whatever the Sunday School Convention gives us; and an annual offering from Sunday schools, with an occasional gift from individuals. Last year we received nothing from Conference Apportionments. This year the Conventions have given us all the money they had except just enough to run their own work, but only a small part of the churches responded with their dues which makes this source of income very small. Our only hope seems to be the annual offering in October and the possible share of the Conference Apportionments this fall.

If each Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society will make an offering in October, preferably on Rally Day, and if every church will see that the amount designated for the Board of Christian Education is sent to the Board or to the Conference with instructions that it come to the Board; I say, if these two good things can happen this fall, the Board of Christian Education will gladly serve the churches in their educational work the coming year. But if the churches and Sunday schools simply let the matter slip by without thought or plan or offering, then the services of the Board can be only very, very limited. Can we hope for the best?

WORDS OF PRAISE.

I never like to finish my part of this page until some word is written that I think may have real value in the life of those who read the page. And sometimes I wonder who reads, if any one. But there are readers. A sick man over among the mountains of Virginia told me that he reads my page every week. A young lady in Carolina tells me of those whose hair has turned to silver who watch the page weekly for some bit of hope and cheer. Young people here and there tell me sometimes that they read the page and like it. Occasionally some leader in the Church has a kindly word to say. But I am not blowing my own horn. I am perfectly willing for it not to get blown.

But words of praise should often be spoken. They help to make life more joyous. And there is none too much joy in this old world. Children can be directed by commendation for the good things they do equally as well as by scolding and punishing them for false conduct. Young people who have real soul quality will not explode with the "big head" because they receive some praise for valiant service or noble living. If a man takes a risk in business because of his religious principles, it will do him good to know that someone approves besides the Almighty. Those who bear sickness with a smile will be still happier if someone tells them how the sunshine of their smile warms another heart. Aged people can radiate even more light when those who love them give deserved praise for their radiance at the sunset-time of life.

Don't be afraid to give words of praise. A certain minister used to tell young fellows to "keep down," by which he meant to urge the needed humility. But most young people I know (and older ones too) are too low in spirit most of the time to do their best service. A word of praise will often bring back the needed confidence and hope so life can climb to the heights of attainment.

The Master says that when life's days are ended and we face the Great Judge to give an account of our stewardship, the things that will mean most to us then will be the words: "Well done, good and faithful servant." We may not have accomplished much. We may have failed much. But if we have done well, done our best, been faithful, then that is enough and the words of approval and welcome will be sufficient for eternal joy. Words of praise can help us here and hereafter. Don't be stingy with them!

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

AMOS (Prophet of Social Justice.)

Lesson IV—July 28, 1935.

Lesson Text: Amos, Chapters 4 and 7.

Golden Text: "Let justice roll down as waters and righteousness as a mighty stream."—Amos 5:24.

The Book of Amos may seem like dry reading to some folks, but not to those who know something about the man and his times. Here was a man of the soil, a simple-minded, out-of-doors man, plain in his living but high in his thinking, a keen observer, and a fearless speaker, a man with keen spiritual insight, and a vivid experience of God, who left his ancestral home in the South and went to the religious center or capital of the North, and in the name of "the Lord of Hosts, or the God of Hosts"—that was a favorite name with Amos—denounced the sham and the hypocrisy of priest and people, and pronounced doom upon the nation. It is all remarkable in that he did this at a time when the nation was at the height of prosperity and most meticulous about its religious observances. But Amos had prophetic insight; he knew that at heart the nation was rotten; he knew that forces were already at work that would bring decay and doom to the nation; and he knew that such religion as the people of his day had, was superficial, and lacking in that vitality which could save the situation. Thus it was that this unknown and unheralded prophet—a prophet is primarily one "who speaks for God"—suddenly appeared at Bethel, the royal sanctuary, and at the height of a religious festival, in plain and picturesque language spoke words that even after all these centuries, throb with passion and with power. Let any man read about the time in which Amos lived and then read his messages—they are the first prophetic utterances to be reduced to writing—and he will understand something of the greatness of the man. Amos was great in spiritual insight, great in moral courage, great in his capacity for compassion, great in simplicity of life, and great in his experience of God.

A Plumb-line.

In a pictorial or symbolic way, Amos shows how Jehovah had put the plumb-line to Israel and had found it sadly out of plumb, the nation, both priests and people had gotten far away in their perpendicular relations with Jehovah, and likewise far astray in their horizontal relationships with one another. And just as a mason would reject a wall out of plumb, just so had Jehovah rejected his people because of their sins against Him. Indeed Jehovah is always doing just that. Nations as well as individuals are constantly being judged or tested by the eternal principles of righteousness and justice. Happy is the nation whose God is the Lord.

Laid Waste.

"And the high places of Israel shall be desolate, and the sanctuaries of Israel shall be laid waste." What was this fool prophet saying anyway? The idea of such a thing. Of course Jehovah would destroy the other nations of the earth; they deserved it. But Israel laid waste, the places of worship destroyed!—surely this fellow was "nuts" to suggest such a thing. It must have sounded preposterous to the religious leaders and to the people of Amos' day. As preposterous as it would have sounded to the proud Babylonians, or the proud Romans, or the proud Greeks, to have had that prophecy proclaimed in their streets and in their places of worship. And as preposterous as it would sound to us today to have some uncouth, uncultured prophet say that about our great country. But it was true. The high places of Isaac have been desolate all these years, and the sanctuaries of Israel—even the magnificent temple itself—have been laid waste. The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God. The security of our nation or any nation is not to be found in wealth, or wisdom, or in works, but in character. And the lack of character is the fundamental lack in our American life right now. We have wealth enough and brains enough to save the world; we do not have character of the right sort in sufficient abundance.

"Prophesy Not."

Then, as now, there were those—especially in high places—who wanted the preacher to "stick to the Gospel." Amaziah the priest at Bethel—shame on him—suggested that Amos might do his stuff to better advantage in Judah, and suggested that he go there. Indeed he threatened him with dire consequences unless he did. Then, as now, the gospel is a fine thing, unless it cuts across our pride and prejudice and possessions; it is a fine thing as long as it deals with glittering generalities; but it is not quite so nice when it comes down to particulars, and when it interferes, as it certainly will interfere, with our personal indulgences and selfishness.

Of course Amaziah picked the wrong man. Amos had seen the face of God and he was not afraid of the face of man. Thank God for preachers who cannot be muzzled. Thank God for laymen who dare to speak the truth.

A Herdsman.

"I was no prophet, nor the son of a prophet, but a herdsman, and a dresser of sycamore trees." God calls men into the ministry and uses them in large ways, uses them in proportion not only to their gifts, but their consecration. But God calls also laymen, humble-minded as well as brilliant men and women, and he uses them according to their willingness to give themselves to Him. We have magnified the call to the ministry and rightfully so. But we ought also to magnify the call to other walks in life, and to other forms of service.

Doom.

"And Israel shall surely—the word has significance—be led away captive out of this land." The wages of sin is death, for the nation as well as the individual. Decline of vital religion and consequent decay of character—the two are inextricably bound up together—are fatal alike to the nation and to the individual. The ministry of the Church of Jesus Christ was never more needed than in this day, a day when it seems as if America was fast becoming a pagan nation. This is not rank pessimism; it is the sober judgment of many competent leaders, especially those with religious insight. Now is the time for all brave ministers to come to the aid of their country.

Cast all thy care on God. See that all thy cares be such as thou canst cast on God, and then hold none back. Never brood over thyself; never stop short in thyself; but cast thy whole self, even this very care which distresseth thee, upon God. Be not anxious about little things, if thou wouldst learn to trust God with thine all. Act upon faith in little things; commit thy daily cares and anxieties to Him; and He will strengthen thy faith for any greater trials.—E. B. Pusey.

MONDAY.

"WHAT MANNER ART THOU?"

"Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost."—I Cor. 6:19.

There is a manner of person whose mind and soul is led or directed by the body; and there is another manner of person whose body is only a covering for the mind and soul, and the mind keeps that body informed and subordinated to its direction.

The first is a person who yields to the inclinations of the body without regard of consequences. At times he may be grave and show some inner light, but usually his actions are meaningless and useless. His conversation is light and without soul. Such an one is usually found among the drifters, giving himself to the lesser life around him.

The other manner of person regards his body as a house to live in. Though light and cheerful often, he makes no misdirected movements. His conversation is wholesome and his works are righteous. He has ideals of the true, the right and the noble, and he is determined to acquire them. He whips his body into subjection to his will and whatsoever he doeth commands admiration.

What manner of person art thou? "If ye, through the spirit, mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live."

"Food is meant for the stomach, and the stomach for food— The body is not meant for immortality, but for the Lord, and the Lord for the body."—I Cor. 6:13. (Moffatt.)

Prayer—Our heavenly Father, we come to Thee offering our bodies unto Thee a living sacrifice, praying that Thou will keep us as Thine and dwell within us forever.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"SAVING FAITH."

"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house."—Acts 16:31.

These are the words of Paul spoken to the Phillipian jailor on that eventful night of the earthquake when these prisoners were set free, and these were the words that became the medium of salvation of both the jailor and his family. They opened to him the possibility of saving faith.

Saving faith is that faith that brings the soul into vital union with God through Jesus Christ, so that one's destiny is bound up with God forever. It is taking Jesus at his word, which to do, makes one feel that when Christ speaks God speaks.

Christ so accepted, one's soul rests in God's forgiveness; God enters and there is a sense of freedom, cleanness, and peace that is heavenly.

The greatest blessing of this Saving Faith is not the salvation of a soul, but the salvation of many souls. A light lit in the darkness cannot be limited to a single individual. It giveth light to all in the house. "Men do not light a candle and put it under a bushel." Neither can the light of God in a soul be limited to one soul, but it shines and lights the faith of others.

Prayer—Our Father, we thank Thee that the light of the world shines for all. Grant to us the light that saves the household. The community and all, far and near. Make us that light. In His name we ask it.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"GOD'S ANNOINTED."

"God annointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with Power."—Acts 10:38.

Why did Luke write this? Was this not taken for granted?

The Book of Acts bears every evidence of having been written to prove that Christ is the Son of God and that He is the manifestation of Divine Power; to show that the work of Christ did not end with His death, resurrection and ascension, but that it goes on with augmented power through the annointing of the apostles in the same way Jesus the Son was annointed. "Ye shall receive power after the Holy Spirit is come upon you, and ye shall be my witnesses." The work of the Spirit, after Christ was gone, was to be performed by the agency of redeemed men working in the Power of His annointing. It has ever been thus. And every bearer of His light shares a part of this apostolic mission. Only by such will the world be saved.

Prayer—Our Heavenly Father, illuminate us body and soul for Thy redemption. Help us to let Thy annointing light shine in us and through us that all who may see us may take knowledge that we live for Jesus. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"VAIN GLORY."

"Let us not be desirous of vain glory, provoking one another, envying one another.—Gal. 5:26.

"But in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves."—Phil. 2:3.

This is the way Jesus did.

Paul refers to this in I Cor. 1:10-12 in which it is said that vain glory was a special danger of the Greek communities. However, we do not believe that divisions, contentions, egotism, selfishness, haughtiness, self-aggrandizement, and all that goes to make up the "big I, and the little you," is peculiar to any race of people. Where we find humanity there we find these things, save where Christ has come in and become the prevailing spirit.

The Congregationalist gives us a very apt saying appropriate to the great sin of vain glory. It says, "A bubble is bigger than a drop, but it does no more to fill up the spring, for bubbles are but drops distended." Bubbles of pride, bubbles of hypocrisy and self-assertion, bubbles of outward seeming unhelped by inward worth, shine on the surface of the river of time, until God's finger touches them, and then they are gone, and there is nothing left."

Prayer—Our heavenly Father, deliver us from the sin of vain glory. Help us to see others as Thou dost, to consider them as brothers and love them to a consciousness of Thee. In Christ's name.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"ABOUNDING IN THE WORK OF THE LORD."

"Be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."—I Cor. 15:58.

Is this too much to ask? Is it not beyond the possibility of the ordinary man to make the work of the Lord so prevalent in his life that it is the abounding thing? Answer: The "Work of the Lord" is to transform man from what he is to what he ought to be, and this chapter gives us the transforming process.

Paul is talking about the resurrected body and its relation to the natural body. There are "earthy" men who live earthly lives; above the level of that life they never rise. There are others who are "heavenly" men; in them the higher ideals, the nobler principles of life, and the spirit of God, is alive. There is no escaping the "earthy." All men are "earthy." But Christians rise from the earthy unto the "heavenly" through Jesus Christ and bear the image of the heavenly.

This rise, however, takes place by placing the natural life under conditions of the spiritual, and there, like the seed planted in the ground, it germinates and lifts up the earthy (devoid of the spiritual element) to the level of the heavenly as it is seen in Christ. The text is an appeal of Paul's to that unwavering faith.

Moral: Steadfastness and unwearied energy in this spiritual living; every thought that we may have and every act of our being, brings us face to face with the question of wrong, and it challenges us to the right. And in so far as we are able to heed this challenge we follow the gleam from the earthy to the heavenly. That is "abounding in the work of the Lord" to which all people are heirs.

Prayer—Our heavenly Father, we would be lifted up and be heavenly. Come Holy Spirit and warm these cold hearts of ours till we shall blossom and bear fruit for Thee in heaven forever.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"THE PROOF OF FAITH."

"If thou faintest in the day of adversity, thy strength is small."—Prov. 24:1-10.

When the champion in any game refuses to meet a well-attested antagonist, he forfeits his championship. When a general conducts nothing but a defensive campaign, continually retreating, he is soon defeated. Strength is proved on competing strength, and power that fears this test is nothing but weakness.

If a Christian shrinks from trouble, he thereby proves himself to be very little of a Christian. Adversity to a Christian is what the contest is to the athlete. His Christianity has been given him for that purpose, has been nurtured to that end, that he may meet and overcome all evil .

A sheltered, easy life is no life for a Christian.

Prayer—We would rejoice in the combat. Our Captain! For the battle is sure to be ours, since Thou dost lead us to it and in it.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

"SALTLESS SALT."

"Salt shall have lost its savor, wherewith shall it be seasoned?"—Luke 14:25:35.

This is one of our Saviour's most solemn warnings, and yet it is seldom recalled. For what is the salt but the first fine flavor of a Christian zeal —the initial ardor of our love for the Lord?

If it is cherished, how good it is! How it grows in power! How it increases in loveliness! How it expands in joy! What a measureless blessing it becomes to its possessor and all around him!

But if the salt loses its saltness, how can it be resalted? What fresh contact, what new impulsion, will restore its flavor? It is henceforth good for nothing but the refuse heap.

Prayer—Forbid, O Christ, that such should be the fate of our religion. May We seek ever the reviving of the Holy Spirit.—Amen.

Rev. John G. Truitt, D. D., Pastor.

THE SECOND MILE.

By John G. Truitt, D. D.

"Whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain."—Matt. 5:41.

The Roman soldier was everywhere. And what a nuisance he was! It was bad enough to be subjects of unholy Rome, but to be tormented with the constant sight of Roman soldiers was adding insult to injury. Then when one hated most to be bothered by those "insulting dogs" from across the sea he would perhaps place his filthy pack on one's back and force him to carry it a mile. One could spend many unhappy moments worrying about this Roman insult if one cared to. It was there. There was no way of escaping it. It was one of the bitter complaints of life.

These soldiers were enough to upset the composure and happiness of any man. Everybody could understand what a nuisance they were. Here comes Jesus into life at Palestine. Jesus who had such balance, and power of self-control; Jesus who had such unearthly things to say about kindness, and such breath-taking things to say about love; and such unreasonable things to say about "my father and my mother, my brother and my sister." What would he do with such a nuisance as the Roman soldier?

He licked him! Without calling his name, or characterizing his kind, or soiling his own soul he licked him. "Whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain." "You, there, heigh there, carry this pack to the bottom of the hill." And there is no refusal for worse would follow. And one who has only love for all mankind, and loathes the strange systems that bind with hoops of steel, takes the pack with such manner as to dispossess his commander, and as they walk, he perhaps talks with him about service, obedience, courage, kindness, and burdens! At the foot of the hill his soldier asks meekly for the pack and Jesus in turn asks him to let him carry it to the top of the hill for him! And as they climb he tells him that he knows soldiering is a hard business, one must get mighty tired of wasting his youth and years, and the burden of soul must be much more to bear than the burden of his back, indeed, "You should learn of me for the cords with which I bind you are easy, and the burden which I should lay on you is ilght."

It is not a strange thing that later when his own son is sick, sick unto death, that this Roman soldier should remember the strange burden-bearer, and feel sure that he could lift the load of fever from his son's bdow. He could. He did. And his Roman soldier was completely licked.

It was the secret of the second mile. If the burden-bearer had fretted and fumed with the first mile every mile thereafter would have been a 'first mile' unto the very end of life's journey, and every mile a drudgery. But Jesus was so busy with sympathetically understanding the strange, hard predicament that the Roman soldier was in that He had no time to worry about himself. He saw an opportunity to become acquainted and to become helpful. He needed a second mile to finish up his work! One mile and he was only half done. It would have been a shame to have missed the second mile. The first mile was an opportunity, and the second mile a victory.

Jesus is preaching his sermon on the mount. Multitudes flock about him. His disciples are very near. He speaks as never man spake. And they listen as never before had they listened. Burdens, trials, disgrace, mockings, persecutions, Roman soldiers, all; but if they compel thee to go a mile, go with them twain. And Jesus put himself into his sermon, for later when they compelled him to bear their burdens to Calvary's heights he went a second mile, and bore them to heaven's throne in his marvelous prayer: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do!" And a Roman soldier standing by said, "This was indeed the Son of God."

Jesus, alone, had licked the world with love! So that today you and I gather about this Communion table praying that we may be his servents as the highest ideal of our souls. Napoleon is reputed to have said after his soldiers had made crimson the highways and low ways of Europe: "Thou hast won, O lowly Galilean." And he had. And he shall. With plowshares and pruning hooks! The arts of peace, and life, and love! And as we gather about this table today may we join with him in the ways of service and peace.

We, too, shall find the Roman soldier. He will force us out of our way, and into his way. There will be disappointments, and compulsions which it shall be our duty to overcome with the second mile. Moses had a slowness of speech. He couldn't talk, he told God, and God said: Write. And for thirty-five centuries the world has not surpassed his writing. The Roman soldier of blindness came upon Milton's way and yet out of that darkness he has enlightened the English speaking world with his beautiful poetry. The Roman soldier threw Paul in prison, but Paul went further and won the household of Caesar to Christ. He prevented him from preaching in Asia Minor, and in so doing gave him the opportunity to preach through thirteen books of the Bible to the whole wide world.

What is your Roman soldier? Is it sickness? Come with me, and I will show you happiness, joy, and inspiration in a single room with both the husband and wife almost helpless. Is it loss of material blessings? The one who was supremely happy, and helpful had no place to lay his head! Is it disappointment? Carry the pack, and help others carry theirs. Our disappointment is often God's appointment. At first it may not seem so, but remember there is opportunity in the first mile, and victory in the second.

The victorious mind is well exemplified by the mind of the scientist of these days, unhampered by prejudice and traditions, and undeceived by the superficial and the temporary, unfaltering in the face of withering skepticism, bitter opposition, or the accepted order. In the quest for good there is no social class, no race problem, no religious conflicts, but man is a unit—"intelligence struggling toward a common goal."—Dr. Edward Ellery.

We are living in a time when deliberate reordering and planning of society, such as was done by the men who founded this nation, is imperatively necessary. Only by so doing can we be true to the past and likewise meet the responsibilities of the present and the future. Such planning is demanded of us not as a theory, but because of a condition that confronts us, and a difficult, distressing condition it is.—Raymond C. Knox.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

The beautiful showers that we have had for the last ten days make upland corn and beans look like bottom land. We hope to have seasons so our bean crop of hay will be good. We lost all of the hay we carried over from last year and all our spring crop in the fire.

The orphanage has taken every precaution to prevent getting infantile paralysis in our group of children. We quarantined the children from going to shows or anywhere they might get in a crowd. We want to do everything in our power to prevent their getting it, and then if they should contract it, we will feel we did all we could to prevent it. The health of our children has been remarkably good this year, so far.

The vacation season is on, but I am afraid, on account of the quarantine, that we will have a number who will not get a vacation until late in the season.

Soap wrappers are still coming in, and we hope by the end of the year to get our one hundred thousand.

A number of our churches have sent us contributions to help replace our barn. We trust that we will receive enough to be able to pay for it when the last nail is driven. If everybody will help, we'll be able to do it!

THE YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

Thurs.—Value of Prayer. John 17:23, 24.
Fri.—His Connection with God. John 10:14:30.
Sat.—The Future. John 14:1-6.

This summer Sunday evening may well be held out in the open where Jesus did much of His teaching. If it is to be in the open, find the loveliest quiet spot available. Perhaps a picnic supper will help. But a prepared program is necessary. Do your best.

The daily readings suggest things that Jesus was sure of. Read the Scriptures. Get different people to study them, and speak on the topics. Jesus was sure of much. He never doubted God. He was sure of His own mission. He was sure that men worked with God. Prayer was His daily method of work. He and the Father were one—that was His assurance. The future was to be glorious. He was afraid to risk life on his beliefs. Are we? Do we have things for which we would die? If so, what?

The Sunday School Herald gives fine program material for this topic. So do The C. E. World Quarterly, and The Pilgrim High Road. Do not try to work without materials. A good farmer does not. A mechanic doesn't. A hospital can't. Neither should Christians. See that your society is supplied with many helpful materials.

But never use everything someone else suggests any more than you would get out the auto in order to take a walk for health. Use your own mind in making your program. Only those who worship as they prepare their program can lead others in worship with the program. Search everywhere for materials for your program, but don't forget to search your own heart for what is stored there. Some of the best lie there. Use them. Then you can use the songs, poems, stories and Scriptures that others suggest.

EVERYDAY FAITH.

You do not worry when the bright day fades,
And the twilight earth grows dark and chill;
You do not worry when the midnight shades
Hide in their gloom each pleasant glade and hill;
You close to sleep your tired eyes, and say:
"Tomorrow, God will send another day."

You do not worry when your garden fair
Beneath the winter snowdrifts lies entombed;
You do not worry when the icy air
Stirs but bare twigs where once the roses bloomed;
You only say, content as one who knows:
"God sends again the summer and the rose."

If you trust God in darkness for the light,
If you trust him in frost time for the rose,
Then, why not trust him with a faith as bright
In all your daily frets and fears and woes,
And say to every anxious thought and pain:
"Life's shadows pass, God sends the sun again."

AT SUNSET.

Hush! It is twilight vesper hour;
The woods are still;
The respectful silence of the evening falls
Upon the hill.

The gates of heaven open to receive
The retiring sun;
A blaze of glory breaks upon the world
And day is done.

"Be still, O Man, and know that I am God."
The still, small voice
Comes to us in this solemn twilight hour
And we rejoice.

To meet Him in the thoughtful silences
Of quiet ways,
Or, joining heart to heart, we softly sing
Our evening praise.

WEALTH DISTRIBUTED BY WAGES.

As a matter of fact, if such a maldistribution actually existed, the very mass production and mass consumption of goods, in which the United States has excelled, would have been impossible. In other words, the soap-box orators, who have been poisoning the public mind with false statistics, have been engaged in trying to explain away reality.

As the Brookings Institute has demonstrated, those engaged in gainful occupations receive approximately 85 per cent of the national income as wages. The remaining 15 per cent goes as compensation to capital, more than half of which is owned by individuals of moderate incomes.

This generalization is substantiated by a study of the Federal income tax statistics. As a matter of fact, those receiving incomes of $5,000 or more in 1933 accounted for less than 10 per cent of the entire national income. That group numerically represented about 3 per cent of the population.

Those with incomes in excess of $100,000 in 1932 and 1933 accounted for 1 per cent of the entire national income.

It has been further computed that, if in 1933 the entire income of all those receiving five thousand dollars and more had been confiscated and redistributed evenly to the remaining 120,000,000 persons, the per capita increase for each would have been exactly $35 per year.

The public needs to be reminded that before wealth can be distributed it must first be created. The soundest way to distribute income widely is through wages paid to those in gainful employment.

Any muddying of the social waters by false propaganda concerning the nature of the distribution of wealth and income in the United States merely holds back sound recovery.

Labor, the overwhelmingly largest recipient of the national income, is the heaviest loser.

A SONG OF TRUST.

By JOHN H. ANDRESS.

Let me learn to trust as the wild flowers trust,
Perfectly, O my God;
Courageously pressing with upward thrust,
Piercing the cold black sod;
Not questioning whether the sunshine or frost
Is waiting each tender birth;
Believing that nothing of worth will be lost
By the Lover of all the earth.

Let me learn to trust thee as trusts the lark,
As he lifts his voice to sing;
Happily praising the one who doth mark
The faintest fluttering wing.
Soaring and singing the long day through,
He has no fear of the night;
Knowing the morning will break anew,
And morning will bring the light.

Let me learn to trust as the little child
Who lies on his mother's breast;
As she sings her lullaby tender and mild,
And bids him safely rest.
The world may be filled with wild alarms,
They cannot reach him there.
He's safe so long as a mother's arms
Are strong with a mother's prayer.

Yet I am not child nor bird nor flower
But a man in a man's hard place.
I cannot stand in this trying hour
Without thy gift of grace.
Let me learn to trust thee as a man
Standing for truth and right;
Linking my life with an infinite plan;
Girded with infinite might.

The democratic suspicion of learning, whatever its grounds, is a sound reason for renewed faith in the pursuit of science and scholarship. There never was a time when they were more needed. They must be made more convincing.—George E. Vincent.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Representing the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches.

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY. IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY. IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY.

VOLUME LXXXVII. RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, AUGUST 1, 1935. NUMBER 31.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Only Two Billions More.—

The Federal debt on July 15th amounted to $29,177,786,318, the expenditures for the first week of the new fiscal year, amounting to $535,-249,207. The total debt now exceeds that of a year ago by approximately $2,000,000,000. Incidentally plans are under way in Congress to increase taxes.

Hotter than the Sun.—

The surface temperature of the sun is said to be 9,000 degrees Farenheit, and this temperature was recently exceeded by the electrical development of a temperature of 13,000 degrees. Either one is hot enough, it would seem, yet we are told that in the interior of the sun, it is thought that temperatures reach the unrecordable high of 40,-000,000 degrees centigrade.

A Foolproof (?) Air Flivver.—

"How long does it take you to fly to work?" may yet become a common question. There has just recently been developed a flivver airplane, to meet the Bureau of Air Commerce specifications for a $700 airplane. This new plane is said to be capable of landing in a very small space, "with no danger of nosing over" at all. Its builders claim that the average man can be taught to operate it safely in a few hours time.

Beating the Weather.—

Due to abnormal rains that have followed the drought in some sections of the West, we are told that retail trade has suffered. One store in a city of moderate size decided to try an experiment—to give a discount of 10 per cent on purchases made while it was raining. It is reported (we don't vouch for its truth) that the first purchase made after the announcement was published was that of an umbrella, made by a lady wearing an organdie dress.

How Much Money is That?—

Roger Babson was recently quoted as declaring that "the Federal Government is going into debt to the tune of $66,000,000 a week. Millions and billions, too, have become such common terms that one no longer realizes their immensity. But it is not slang to say that a million dollars is "a big pile of money," for a stack of that much money would tower 250 feet in the air, while the government's weekly expenditure would reach the astonishing height of 16,500 feet, or more than three miles.

Polio Wave Not an Epidemic.—

Despite the 278 poliomyelitis cases in Virginia, Virginia's health commissioner denies that there can accurately be declared that there is an epidemic, when the number is compared to the total population of the State. Says Dr. Riggin: "The ratio is approximately 10 cases to each 100,000 of population in Virginia, and while there has been a decided increase in prevalence of polio, we are neither alarmed nor discouraged." Dr. Riggin's department is advising, however, that children be kept away from public places, though there have been no arbitrary regulations issued. It is expected that when cooler weather comes, there will be a decided falling off in the disease.

The Iran Hat Decree.—

"Many Slain in Riots over Iran Hat Decree," or similar heads were in quite a few papers recently and possibly at first sight many readers thought that the riots had something to do with iron hats, or helmets. However, the decree had nothing at all to do with them but with the ordinary hat worn by the average American or European. The Government of Iran (better known to us as Persia), like Turkey, is in a hurry to Westernize itself, hats and all. As a result of this desire it has recently put a taboo upon the moslem fez, and decreed that all citizens shall wear European hats. The Moslem priests objected and as a consequence, they, with their pious followings have made attacks upon anyone obeying the government decree. Riots and slayings have followed.

Small Decrease in Tuberculosis Deaths.—

Death due to the White Plague decreased slightly in the United States during the year 1934. Survey of forty-six cities shows a decline of 4 per cent in deaths, bringing the rate down to 69.6 per hundred thousand of population. While this is the lowest rate yet recorded for large cities, the report cautions against being too sanguine, and calls attention to the fact that in sixteen of these cities there was actually an increase in the death rate. Two of these cities had an increased rate in 1933, while fourteen of them showed a decrease. On the other hand eight which showed increases in 1933 showed decreases for the year 1934. Thus the survey "would seem to indicate that we can scarcely hold too close a check on the disease, as it is constantly surprising us by reappearing unexpectedly where it was thought to be under control."

England's Building Program.—

According to England's "secret plans" she is to spend more than $750,000,000 on her navy. Her building program includes twelve new battleships, thirty-three cruisers, three destroyers, twenty-one submarines, and three aircraft carriers. The schedule includes a total of one hundred and thirty new ships. England is preparing for the unpleasant but evidently expected eventualities. It is evidently her intention, in case of trouble, to be able to keep her sea lanes open and by defending her commerce to prevent food shortage in the British Isles. A building program similar to that of Great Britain would probably cost somewhat more than $1,000,000,000 in the United States, due to higher production costs, yet is seems that the only alternative to such expenditures would be a much closer accord between the English-speaking nations of the earth.

Colonel Dreyfus Dies.—

The death of Lieutenant Colonel Alfred Dreyfus, which occurred in Paris on July 12th, in his seventy-sixth year, recalls what was probably the most famous spy case of modern times. The "Dreyfus Case" began in 1894, when he was arrested, charged with selling military documents to Germany. He was convicted and served four years on Devil's Island. At the end of this period, the case was reopened, and Colonel Dreyfus was given a new trial. He was again found guilty, but "with extenuating circumstances," and was given a pardon. Being free, he exerted every effort possible and by 1906 had fully established his innocence. He was restored to the army and served France during the World War. Though he lived to a fairly ripe age, the effects of his trial and confinement are said to have never been obliterated.

Why Not Buy a High-Priced Auto?—

Business Week thinks that the man who can buy a high-priced auto, and buys a cheaper one is not doing his entire duty. We quote: "It is still hard to sell the higher-priced cars, though the rest of the automobile business is improving splendidly. Sales managers declare people with money are afraid to show they have it. They are afraid their workmen will demand more wages. . . This is bad business for the country. It hurts the capital goods industries, which use a much larger number of man-hours in their labor operations than other industries do. The purchase of a high-priced car is a sure way of putting money into the workingman's pocket. When frightened multi-millionaires live in the gatekeeper's lodge instead of in the house . . . the inevitable and obvious result is unemployment. It is to the interest of labor to encourage the rich and the well-to-do to spend their money. High-priced cars are a suitable purchase for a great multitude of people in the middle-income brackets. They can afford to spend the money, and they should be encouraged to do so."

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

"There is no need for sad despair,
When God is shining everywhere."

"It is magnificent to grow old, if one keeps young." We most heartily agree with Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick in that bit of good philosophy.

The Valley of Virginia Conference meets in annual session with our Leaksville Church, Aug. 7th and 8th. Rev. A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg, Va., is pastor of the host church and secretary of the Conference. President L. E. Smith, of Elon College; Dr. S. C. Harrell, President of the Convention, and Superintendent C. D. Johnston, of the Christian Orphanage at Elon, are listed as visiting speakers at the Conference.

In the absence of the pastor, Dr. L. E. Smith, last Sunday, Rev. A. L. Granger, licentiate of the Eastern Virginia Conference and assistant for the summer to Dr. C. H. Rowland, First Church, Greensboro, preached at the eleven o'clock service in the Elon College Chapel. Though his audience was not large, it was, indeed, appreciative and greatly enjoyed the message of this devout and promising young man who gives signs of becoming a useful minister and a blessing to the church.

The Alamance County Sunday School Convention (for all denominations) is to be held at Bethel Methodist Protestant Church near Graham, N. C., Saturday, August 3, 1935. This Convention is for all Sunday school workers of all denominations in the county. Representatives of the State Sunday School Association will speak, as will also other Sunday school workers. The program as issued by the president, Mr. M. R. Kirkman, Graham, and the secretary, Miss Eula Wheeler, Burlington, is an attractive one and gives promise of a very helpful session.

The North Carolina Christian Advocate, July 25th, lays this before its readers: "How tragic this slaughter on the highways has become! Two families killed and maimed last week end. Sheriff Fenner N. Spivey of Franklin County, N. C., killed, wife at point of death and five children broken and bleeding. Near Tarboro, C. C. Harris and his wife and son were killed and three other persons injured. Both these cars were crashed into by drunken drivers, according to press reports. This, too, in that section of N. C. and Virginia where liquor is under control. Somehow liquor stores do not furnish the control so much heralded in the press. As a matter of fact every sensible man knows that this much vaunted liquor control is to befool the folks. But when it leads to the slaughter of families the glamour fades."

Town and Country Review, a magazine of over half hundred pages, reaches us from London, this being a beautifully illustrated May number. In the magazine we are pleased to discover the fine face and form of our venerable and beloved Dr. Martyn Summerbell, president of Palmer Institute, Starkey Seminary, Lakemont, New York. In closing a two column biographical sketch of Dr. Martyn Summerbell, our London contemporary says: "Dr. Summerbell, who was for twenty-three years on the Executive Committee of the State Christian Endeavor Association, holds in addition to his presidency of the Palmer Institute Starkey Seminary the positions of Visiting Professor of Elon College, N. C., and to Defiance College, Ohio, being Vice-President also of the latter. Dr. Summerbell has always favored a more cordial relation between Christians of the several denominations, and assisted in the organization of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and has been a member of its Executive Committee to this date. He holds good repute in authorship, his productions including 'Religions in College Life,' 'Faith for the College Man,' 'Christian Home Training,' 'Christ in World and Work,' 'Re-birth of Europe,' and other well-known volumes."

THE BIBLE CONFERENCE AT MASSANETTA SPRINGS.

By DR. W. H. HUDSON, Conference Manager.

Again Massanetta Spring is taking the lead in the field of Bible Conferences. Not only will many of the speakers be of national reputation, but it is planned to put on in connection with the Convention a great Biblical Drama, of such scope and magnitude as to be the most impressive and inspiring production of its kind ever staged in the South, to be presented at Massanetta, four miles east of Harrisonburg, during the Second Week of the Bible Conference, on August 20th-21st and 23rd.

The pageant will include a series of dramatized stories from the Old Testament and the eight Episodes to be enacted at each performance of the pageant will be as follows. Noah Hears the Voice of God; Lot's Wife Fails to Obey; Abraham's Trial of Faith; Jacob and Rachel; Jacob Wrestles with an Angel; Moses and the Burning Bush; Aaron and the Golden Calf; and The Ten Commandments.

The production will be staged at night under artificial lights in a specially constructed outdoor amphitheatre at Massanetta Springs, which amphitheatre will seat over 10,000 spectators. Costumes will be historically correct in every detail, and scenery is designed to carry the illusion of settings of four thousand years ago.

The Pageant book is the work of T. Beverly Campbell, the author and director of some twelve of the largest historical pageants in the United States, including "The Mirror of History," "the Wisconsin Shakesperean Pageant," "The Adventurers," the Sesquicentennial Pageant of Charlotte, and others.

Mr. Campbell will also supervise the staging of the production, this being the fifth large pageant produced in Virginia under his direction, the list including the Yorktown Sesquicentennial Military Pageant, 1931; The Pageant of the Shenandoah Valley, Harrisonburg, 1932, The Virginia Historical Pageant, Richmond, 1922, and the Siege of Petersburg Pageant in 1933.

It is proposed that the Biblical Pageant be made an annual fixture at Massanetta Springs, thereby giving the Valley of Virginia the distinction of having two of the most outstanding outdoor events of a religious nature in the United States, the other being the annual Sacred Music Festival which ranks with any in America.

Among the outstanding speakers at the Bible Conference will be Dr. Robert E. Speer, New York; Dr. Albert W. Beaven, Rochester, N. Y.; Dr. Wm. Erskine Blackburn, Pastor of the Egremont Church, Liverpool, said to be the largest Presbyterian Church in England; Bishop Arthur J. Moore, San Antonio; Dr. Joseph A. Vance, Detroit, Mich.; Dr. H. A. Ironside, Chicago; Dr. S. D. Gordon, New York; Dr. John McDowell, New York; Dr. Andrew W. Blackwood, Princeton, N. J.; Dr. Wm. Evans, Los Angeles; Dr. J. Layton Mauze, Kansas City, Mo.; Dr. Samuel M. Glasgow, Savannah, Ga.; Dr. T. K. Young, Memphis, Tenn.; Dr. H. H. Thompson, Bristol, Tenn.; Dr. F. Berry Plummer, Hagerstown, Md.

"SINGLE EMPHASIS MINISTERS."

By Roy C. Helfenstein, D. D.

Minister, People's Church, Dover, Delaware.

We have all frequently met people who had "a single track mind,"—people who are unable to direct their thoughts along different lines, or people who, when doing one thing, are oblivious to everything else. While trying to observe the social amenities, they forget about the more important social responsibilities and vice versa. While thinking of righteousness, they neglect the ways of right living, which, after all, alone constitute true righteousness. While concerning themselves with the ugly aspects of the social order, they neglect their own personal appearance. While promoting the peace of the world, they make no room for peace in their own lives, and even fail to promote the interests of peace in their own homes and communities. While appealing for racial justice, they are unmindful of their many injustices to members of their own race. While looking for something to criticize in the status quo, they overlook what fairness demands they should commend. While engaged in eating, they are unable to engage in conversation. While driving a car, they drive by much that is beautiful without even seeing it. While thinking of their own interests, they overlook the interests of others, etc., etc., etc., ad infinitum. While trying to think about one thing, they forget the many other things they ought to keep in mind. For some, the "single track mind" is an indication of approaching senility. But it is not so in every instance. It is often characteristic of young people as well as of those in advanced years. It is a tendency against which every person, both young and old, should constantly be on his guard. The "single track mind" is a lamentable handicap to any life, and "single track minds" are a liability to society as a whole.

The "single emphasis attitude," however, is an entirely different problem. It is pardonable in some. It is unpardonable in others. It is pardonable for the person whose field of effort requires "a single emphasis." It is unpardonable for the person whose field of effort calls for varied emphasis. It is pardonable and even most desirable for those engaged in certain realms of endeavor. The single emphasis attitude is essential in the field of science. It is dangerous in the field of religion. Even in religious work, however, the "single emphasis" seems quite fitting for the Secretary of a Department. But it is entirely out of place in the life of a pastor or in the life of anyone else who serves the general interests of the Kingdom. Even with a Department Secretary, "the single emphasis" attitude may limit his usefulness in the general enterprise of the church. Men who can see the Christian problem in its wholeness instead of seeing only one factor of the problem are better qualified to know and present whichever factor of the problem it is that commands their special attention and interest.

It is deplorably tragic how "single emphasis men" have retarded the progress of the church! Men who see one phase of the church life, but fail to recognize and appreciate the other phases which are equally important, weaken their usefulness in supporting the particular phase which they have championed.

We all appreciate the fact that this is a day of specialization. Medical Science offers a vivid illustration of this fact. The general practioner treats all the ills of the human anatomy. The specialist treats only the eye, the nose, the ear, the skin ,the feet, the heart, etc. The limits to which specialization has gone in medical science is illustrated in the question put by a business man to a young medical student who said he was "specializing on the eye." The business man asked him "which part?"

But in medical science, the successful specialist must first know what the general practioner knows. He travel along with him in his study of the whole human anatomy. And then he takes one part and gives special study on that. He knows what the general practioner knows, plus. He appreciates the importance of the relation to the whole body of the particular part of the body on which he specializes. The eye specialist, for example, does not think that the eye is independent of the rest of the body. He does not think it is more important than the other parts. But because of the importance he attaches to the whole body, he specializes on the eye.

How much the church has suffered from the lack of this scientific but common-sense attitude on the part of those who minister to its life and well-being!

Those who recognize the devotional needs of the church so often fail to consider its many other needs. And so with those who recognize the missionary responsibility of the church, the social responsibility, the educational responsibility, the evangelistic responsibility, etc., etc. The church has suffered from having "single emphasis leaders" who failed to appreciate the other emphases that were essential to the life and growth of the church. Not only do some "single emphasis" religious leaders fail to appreciate the other emphases of the church, but they even actually discount those emphases, often discrediting the intelligence or the religious sincerity of those who champion them.

But the churches have suffered most from "single emphasis pastors." A ministerial student is inspired by a "single emphasis professor" or a pastor attends some great convention where single emphasis men are usually most in evidence and is inspired by the address of some "single emphasis leader." They at once conclude that the millenium will be ushered in by that one emphasis. So they proceed to the "single emphasis men" themselves, to their great loss and to that of the churches to which they may minister. No man can render his largest service to the Kingdom by "a single emphasis" attitude. No church can serve its day and generation in following a single emphasis leadership. Every pastor, for his own sake and for the sake of his church and the Kingdom, should recognize that his must be "a many emphases" ministry. A successful pastor cannot be "a specialist." He must of necessity, by reason of the nature of his work, be "a general practitioner." No matter how worthy any emphasis may be, no single emphasis will suffice in the work of the Christian ministry.

The evangelistic emphasis, the phychiatric emphasis, the personal religious experience emphasis, the political or legislative emphasis, the international peace emphasis, the missionary emphasis, the racial emphasis, etc., etc., etc.—each extremely vital to the life of the church—yet no one of these alone is sufficient to maintain the life of the church or to enable the church to fulfill its mission in society. It is a great day in the life of a minister when he recognizes the peril of "a single emphasis" in his ministry and when he enthusiastically accepts his "many emphases" responsibility. Churches have died by the hundreds from the ministry of "single emphasis men." And thousands of others today are "sick unto death" because of "a single emphasis leadership."

The Kingdom of God on earth tarries because of "single emphasis leaders," and "single emphasis programs." God only knows what progress the church would experience if all religious workers would "see the problem whole"! If the evangelistic minded folks would also become social minded, and if the social minded folks would also become personal religious experience minded, and if the personal religious experience minded folks would also become religious education minded; if the spiritual minded folks would also become practical minded, and if the practical minded folks would become spiritual minded, what a day —what a day—it would be for the church of Jesus Christ! And there is no reason whatsoever why it should not be that way.

As followers of Jesus, we are supposed to be Christ-minded, and Christ-mindedness includes all these and the many other interests of Christian thought and life.

The day has come when the church must vigorously denounce any "single emphasis" which disregards, discounts, or discredits the other Christian emphases. Moreover, the Church of Christ should be done with the "either-or" manner of accepting ways and means for advance, and adopt universally the "both-and" procedure. For instance, the life of the church and the salvation of human society does not depend upon "either personal religious experience or social action," but upon both personal religious experiences and social action. No Christian philosophy, no Christian life, no Christian program is complete without both personal religious experience and social action. A religious experience without a social passion is an abortive experience. A social passion without a religious experience is a gleam without a sustaining light.

Similarly the future of the church does not depend upon "either an adequate program of religious education or a rational but whole-hearted program of evangelism"—it depends upon "both an adequate program of religious education and a rational but wholehearted program of evangelism." The same is true of all the other items of Christian thought and life in their respective relationships.

The story of the four travelers coming upon the huge triangular prism illustrates the point in consideration. One traveler stood on one side of the triangular prism and said, "It's a red prism." "No," said the second traveler, looking at the prism from another angle, "You are wrong, it's a green prism." The third traveler, looking at the prism from still another angle, emphatically declared that both the other travelers were wrong, for, said he, "It is a blue prism." Each declared the others to be color blind. Each ridiculed the stupidity of the other two. Each knew he alone was right. The fourth traveler, wiser than the rest, walked clear around the prism, and commented that they were all three right, for, said he, "The prism is red, it is green, and it is blue. But, you are all three wrong, for the prism is not all red or all green, or all blue. It is red, green, and blue."

The Church of Christ has many sides to its prism of responsibility. Each side contributes equally to the whole. As followers of Jesus, we will not foolishly declare that "one side" of the prism constitutes the whole. Instead, we will follow him clear around the prism and learn that the responsibility of the church is not evangelism alone, not personal religious experience alone, not worship alone, not religious education alone, not social action alone, not political reform alone, not church administration alone, not international peace alone, not the present life alone, not the future life alone, but that the responsibility of the church includes them all. And as disciples of Jesus, we will include them all in our thoughts and prayers and service.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

VACATION.

This is vacation season with many individuals and churches. It may be truly said that there is no grace more gracious than that of being able to spend one's leisure pleasantly and profitably. Vacation should mean, and can be made to mean re-creation. We do not need to abandon all restraint in order to have vacation and recreation. We ever need the restrain of honesty, of purity, of temperance and of due consideration for our bodies , minds and souls as well as the welfare of others. Our vacation can be made times of spiritual and moral recreation if we will, with diligence, seek to put into practice the injunction that Paul gave to the Church at Philippi: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

Vacation time should enable us to have pleasant thoughts, agreeable reflections, wholesome prospects, delightful visions, glorious anticipations.

WHAT THE METHODIST CHURCH THINKS ABOUT LIQUOR.

Bishop Kern, of the Methodist Episcopal Church (South), has toured the Eastern North Carolina area of his church and heard much about liquor and saw something of what the newly opened liquor controlled stores were doing in that area. Bishop Kern tells in the Christian Advocate of last week something of what he saw and how he feels and desires to leave no doubt in the public mind as to his attitude and that of his church to the whole business. Hear him in this paragraph:

> If anybody is in doubt about what the Methodist church thinks about this business let that doubt now be dismissed. We are against the whole traffic in any form. We believe in total abstinence. It is not our business to follow "public opinion." It is our business to proclaim the Christian ideal of life for individuals and society. Our laymen must not expect us to compromise on this issue. Nine-tenths of them would not respect us if we did. Intoxicants do no one any good. They do endless harm to multitudes. The drinker wastes his money, endangers his health, imperils his home, jeopardizes his business, slows down his brain power, hastens his departure from God and religion. And anything that contributes to that type of moral and physical collapse is diametrically opposed to Christ's idea of human personality. Liquor is not a food or a medicine; it is a poison, slow but deadly.

And then as to his own attitude and individual conclusion, the Bishop says:

> I hate the insincerity and the lying propaganda of the liquor advocate. He shuts his eyes to the effect of drinking drivers on the highways, to the insidious efforts to spread drinking among women, to the fact that one-half the liquor sold in America is still bootleg liquor (it was all to go when prohibition went), that our newspapers are flaunting seductive advertisements of whiskey to create an appetite, that we are rapidly recreating the old saloon and also making liquor available at drug stores and road houses. Arrests for drunkenness are steadily increasing. It's bad business, has always been bad business, will always be.

WHAT A YEAR!

Sometimes a faithful pastor's heart is made heavy at the close of the year when only one name has been added to his church roll. Likely that was true of the pastor of a little Scottish church years ago, when he looked sadly upon what seemed to be a very poor fruitage of his labors of the year. He knew he had labored faithfully and had, seemingly, done his best, and yet only one, and he a lad, had joined his church during the year. And yet what a year! This lad grew up to be David Livingstone, whose life and labors opened a continent to Christianity and has resulted thru the years in bringing millions of otherwise unsaved souls into the kingdom of righteousness. We do not know what else Blantyre Church did for the world or what else the faithful pastor of Blantyre Church did, but in the providence of God they gained immortality and won a place of worth and merit in the eternities through the service rendered of this one lad.

It is the part of the faithful pastor to cast his bread upon the waters, and if he is faithful, sincere, and true to His God and fellowman and, in doing this, gives the best that is in him ,he need have no fears and neither does he need to despair.

One is amazed that through all the disappointments, difficulties and hazards of the Apostle Paul, John Wesley and souls of their kind the sound of despair is never heard in their voices and the melody of hope and good cheer sweetens and gladdens their lives.

PROHIBITION A FAILURE.

They tell us that prohibition was and is a failure. Maybe so. Now they are telling us that repeal of prohibition is a failure. Recently a bill drafted by prominent lawyers was introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman U. S. Guyer of Kansas, providing for a dry District of Columbia. Representative Guyer stated that "he believed the conditions developing would compel Congress to act," and then he pointed out some of the conditions already developed under repeal: "There are practically 2,000 saloons here in Washington, all of which are immoral in their influence and many of them are veritable dens of vice." And then the Congressman gave evidence of his reason for introducing the bill from the police records of our National Capital:

"1,493 arrests of women for intoxication during eleven months of the past fiscal year; in 1934, 510 minors arrested for intoxication; and in that year (the first under repeal) there was an increase of 57 per cent arrests over that of 1832 for driving motor cars while intoxicated, an increase of 11 per cent in the daily average arrests for intoxication."

Prohibition, they tell us, failed in that it did not stop bootlegging and the consumption of illicit liquor. In this particular, Joseph H. Choate, in charge of Liquor Control for the United States under repeal, now declares that "bootlegging has increased 100 per cent since repeal," and Secretary Cummings, of the United States Department of Justice, declares that under repeal "arrests are increasing so rapidly that the government will have to build additional prisons unless something can be done to stop the increase of crime."

Yes, prohibition was a failure. Repeal is a failure. This, we presume, gave Mr. W. T. Bost, who furnishes the Sunday "Sermon" for the Greensboro Daily News, to say recently: "Whatever is about liquor is a failure." He might have said the same language about rattlesnakes and copperheads: "Whatever we do about them, rather than destroy them, is a failure."

Possibly we will now come to our sense and realize that the only hope of safety and security to the States, our homes and the community is the teaching, the preaching and the practice of temperance.

THE CHILD'S POINT OF VIEW.

I read an item in the newspaper the other day that was supposed to be a joke. It ran this way, "A mother of a little boy scolded him severely because he was afraid of a dog that stood on the corner as they passed. The little boy said, "Well, Mama, I guess you'd be afraid if you were as low down as I am and had to look up at him!"

And there you are! How much is said to children and done for children just to please the adult! A friend of mine commented to the "joke" as follows: "When I was working in the Junior Christian Endeavor Society back home we had a young girl helping us who insisted on putting all pictures at the bottom of the screen so they would be on a level with the little children's eyes!" That was a new idea to my friend, then, but now she realizes that it would have been hard for the children to look up at the level of adults' eyes!

There are a lot of people who still talk to children in a language they do not understand, and yet children, fairly grown, do not want to be talked down to. That is not necessary, but a child's point of view may well be taken into consideration.

FROM MOUNTAIN HOME TO PULPIT THRONE.

Being a story of George W. Truett by one who has known the world famous preacher since he was called "The Boy Wonder from Mountains."

By William D. Upshaw.

It has been said of this land of measureless opportunity that "from America's Log Cabin" to the White House of the nation there is a "Great Appian Way" along which the awakened conscience and court of public appraisal, asks but one question of the ambitious American boy—not "Who was your father, but who are you?"—not "Where did you come from, but where are you going?"

Even so in the gracious processes of redeeming love in the kingdom of God many of the princeliest preachers the world has ever known have been men of cabin birth—rocked in the cradle of poverty, steeped in the stimulating atmosphere of domestic purity and imperative effort, and finally climbing by the miracle of regeneration and the guardianship of the "Everlasting Arms" to a throne of power among the moral and spiritual leaders of the world-leaders.

Whose names are writ
Where stars are lit.

These inspiring contemplations came to me in a positive baptism of radiance—sometimes mellowed by tears all about me—tears that were crystal with the light of the skies, as I sat in the crowded auditorium of the First Baptist Church in Denver on the morning of June 23rd, when many had come up from the Northern Baptist Convention at Colorado Springs to celebrate with that historic church the laying of the corner stone for the new building. The setting was ideal to pull out of the world-famous preacher, George W. Truett, the best that was in him—and George Truett at his best, under God, can almost make the stones cry out, the trees clap their hands and the stars to sing for very joy.

Kemper Also at His Best.

Dr. Clarence W. Kemper, the beloved and popular pastor, was also at his best—for it takes a rare order of consecrated genius to know just what to say and how to say it on such an epochal occasion—the cornerstone of the new church was to be laid that afternoon and George Truett, the best lover Baptist preacher in all the world, was there, by God's grace, to help prepare all hearts for that sacred milepost on the highway of progress for Denver Baptists. Clarence Kemper knew the amenities of announcement and introduction. He knew when he was through and the people, eager to hear Truett, were almost sorry when Kemper quit and opened the door to the President of the Baptist World Alliance, who, for thirty-eight miracle years, has stood in the pulpit of the First Baptist Church at Dallas, Texas, displaying a quality of constructive and enduring leadership, at once the wonder and the inspiration of the religious world.

And Truett's words of introduction and felicitation were spoken only as George Truett can speak, meticulous in their exquisite exactness and tenderly beautiful in their Christian spirit. (The Scripture had been impressively read by Dr. Pratt who is a former pastor)—and when Dr. Truett announced his text "Thy will be done on earth as it is done in Heaven" all hearts were ready to be lifted into the very vestibule of Heaven.

Describing the Indescribable.

It just can't be done—you can't describe the indescribable!

And George Truett in action, with all the spiritual batteries of the skies working in his mighty brain and his wonderful heart, is simply indescribable!

I had whispered to one of the genial ushers, who, I supposed, had never heard him: "Get you an extra handkerchief, for you will cry your eyes out!" Not that he would not be intellectually challenged to dig at the roots of things, build pyramids of mental concepts and scale the heights of divinest contemplation; but everybody who has ever heard George Truett knows that he is supremely a premier preacher to the hearts and souls of men. And when he had finished that marvelous sermon that morning in the First Baptist Church in Denver, with hundreds in joyous victorious tears, I went forward with the throng that pressed about him and said: "Brother George, I have been hearing you now these forty years, and you never did my soul more good than you did today." "Heaven bless you, old friend," he said, even as he was saying that or kindred words to everybody who grasped his ready, cordial hand.

The Mountain Boy's First Fame.

And this is a good time and place to tell it, it seems to me, for those who never knew how, when, and where the world's best-loved preacher leaped into sudden fame. It was during my seven years on bed as the result of a spinal injury received while hauling wood on the farm. My father who had been a school teacher for many years, training his three boys, eight, ten, and thirteen, to "speak" in the declamation contest at the Georgia State Fair, was always attracted by youthful ability and eloquence. Being a devout Baptist deacon, he attended the Georgia Baptist Convention at Marietta, eight and one-half miles from our Cobb County country home. One day when he returned from the convention he stood by my bedside, his fact aglow with eager interest and said: "Well, my son, we had a thrilling sensation at the convention today." "Tell me about it," I said. And then with graphic words (for he was an easy master of English) he said in substance: "F. C. McConnell (cousin of Truett) was speaking about Mercer University, especially its influence among the mountain people. He said: "There is a bright boy of nineteen here who ought to be in Mercer. He is now at Hiawassee Institute. I wish he would stand up and say a few words to this convention. "Get up, George, get up!"

And the slender and diffident youth stood up and began: "My knees are making war against each other. I was never so badly scared in all my life. I hardly know which one of my father's boys I am. I never saw so many fine-looking, smart men in all my life before. But as I have listened to this discussion I am convinced that some people in this convention do not realize the great influence which Mercer University is exerting up in my country."

Mercer Light on the Mountains.

"They have not seen, as I have, the beams of Mercer light transforming every place where its glory shines. They have not seen that holy influence lighting up the valleys, gilding the mountain tops, electrifying and uplifting our churches, our schools and our homes! They have not seen" —and by that time that marvelous mountain boy —his resonant voice ringing like music had set that convention wild! Men and women were in tears before he had finished and when he sat down C. B. Willingham, a great-hearted business man (brother of Dr. Robert J. Willingham, of missionary fame), sprang to his feet and said: "I want the privilege of putting that boy through Mercer University."

George Truett, the "wonder boy of the mountains," was from that hour a son of "fadeless fame."

He did not go to Mercer, for his father moved from his country home near Haysville, North Carolina (just across the Georgia line) to Whitewright, Texas, and George entered Grayson College there.

He Emancipated Baylor University.

Naturally, his eloquence in college debates and church and Sunday school gatherings began to attract wide attention. Baylor University, at Waco, Texas, was staggering almost to its fall under a debt of more than eighty thousand dollars. The Baptists of Texas were woefully discouraged. They had gone home from their last state convention agreeing to be much in prayer that God would raise up some unusual, magnetic leader who could arouse Texas Baptists and save Baylor University. One day R. F. Jenkins, the stalwart prayerful pastor of the Baptist Church in Whitewright, arose from his knees with the face of George Truett before him. He wrote what must have been a very remarkable letter to Dr. B. H. Carroll, Pastor of the First Baptist Church in Waco, urging that George Truett, that wonderful young student of Grayson College, be called to lead the campaign for Baylor's emancipation.

Dr. Carroll wrote Truett; but he promptly declined. "I couldn't think of it," he said, "I am only a boy, barely out of my teens, and a stranger in the state. Men of great parts, scholarship and experience have tried this big job and failed. Of course, I am not the leader you are trying to find."

Truett Came Near Dying.

Then young Truett was stricken with measles, relapsed and came near dying. Thank God, he did not die! Even as we shudder to think what would have happened to our Revolutionary struggle if George Washington had been supplanted by Gates after he defeated Burgoyne (as many Washington critics clamored for him to do) so our hearts almost stand still as we contemplate: "What if young George Truett had died then?" What would the cause of evangelical Christianity, and especially our own Baptist cause have done during the last full generation, if the Gulf Stream of George Truett's glorious life had not flowed into it with all its fructifying influences?"

Finally, young Truett was induced to meet Dr. Carroll at a Baptist Association at McKinney. I was later guest in the Crouch home where they met, talked and prayed. Brother Crouch told me: "George Truett seemed to stay on his knees just about all the time." And when he decided to go to Baylor, the abandon of his consecrated purpose is reflected in what Truett personally said to me when I was guest in his home after his great victory: "Brother Will, I prayed with almost every revolution of the car wheels: "Lord if I am not your man for this great task, please do not let me reach Waco."

And then after a campaign of twenty months—such a campaign for vital Christian education as America had never seen before, eighty-three thousand dollars in spot cash paid Baylor University out of debt; and with great pulpits calling him on every side, George Truett, with the acclaim of thousands—even millions rising in his ears—utterly unspoiled by the "sweet seducing charms of popular applause"—this consecrated young leader entered Baylor University as a student, saying: "Now my mother to be, teach me!" After five years, having happily married the beautiful and

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The rainfall in Suffolk for July to date (27th) has been 15.87 inches. This is about the normal rainfall for this section for a period of four or five months. Of course this abundant supply of rain is threatening the growing crops and the outlook for our farmers is not very encouraging. There is a promise of a good early corn crop; but peanuts and cotton will suffer greatly from this excess of waterfall. This is a condition which seems to be limited to a few counties in Eastern Virginia, but it affects the area where the Christian churches are located. On this account the effect will be evident in the financial operations of many of our country churches.

The weather is a daily topic of conversation. It is new every day, and never becomes stale with age. If people discussed religion as much as they talk about the weather this would become a very religious nation. But the weather is for all nations and all races. It is no respecter of persons. The rain falls upon the just and the unjust; the wind blows upon the saint and the sinner. It comes without money and without price. Approval does not encourage and criticism does not change the weather. However, it is always subject to changes without notice.

The weather is used as an excuse for many failures. The farmer who fails to make a good crop may lay the blame upon the weather. It was too wet or too dry, or something went wrong with the weather. The neighbor took advantage of the weather, cooperated with nature and made a good crop. Weather conditions may make it easier to make a good crop; but usually the crop depends more upon the farmer than upon the weather. Vegetation has life. This life can adapt itself to varying conditions of heat and cold, drought and flood, and overcome almost insurmountable obstacles to growth and harvest. Difficulties and obstacles are a challenge which nature accepts with a silent determination to engage in a conflict which shall be victorious. Nature waits but does not stop.

Last week I saw a massive oak standing on the steep shore of Lake Prince. Probably seventy-five years ago an acorn pushed itself up through a little bed of soil and began its task of living on that hillside. Year by year it has sent its roots into the soil and gathered strength to grow in that precarious position. Today that oak lifts its head in majestic grace among the other trees of the forest. It has not complained about the stress of holding on to a steep hillside, while its neighbors lived on a more favorable and friendly soil. The oak is a hero and a marvel among its kind.

Poor man! He is, by creation, the crowning glory of earth. Yet he complains at hardships and sulks over misfortune. If sickness comes to his household he is alarmed; if misfortune comes he is dismayed and discouraged; if difficulties stand in the way, he is ready to surrender. A few aches and pains will send him to the physician or to bed. Yes, he wants everything to be favorable to his success, before he will adventure. A little cloud in the sky foretells for him a storm. So he waits for fair weather. When the sun shines and the winds blow, there will be a drought and he cannot face that situation. He waits, he delays, he falters—he fails!

Here is a boy who should become a college graduate. His poverty may hinder him, or it may be a challenge and help him. That depends upon the boy. The boy who is unwilling to work for an education might not be worth the cost of a college degree if some friend should give him the money and pay his expenses. Work in all kinds of weather. Lift up your eyes unto the hills and learn the secret of personal achievement and human character. Storms strengthen the oaks of the forest. Adversity and hardships should develop human character and lead man to a saving knowledge of God.

SEVENTEEN TO TWENTY-FOUR.

The other day I had a very serious conference with a lad about life and about how best to prepare himself for life. He was sensible in his conversation, and sane in his judgments. He was eighteen years of age, of good physique, good habits and good mind. He was a high school graduate with an ambition to accomplish something that was worth while. He knew that the competition of the future would require not only ability and determination, but preparation and thorough training. He wanted to prepare himself; he meant to; but when, was the question. Thus far he had had no really vital question to decide. Now he had his high school diploma, the colleges of the country are open to him and inviting him. The most natural thing for him to do is to accept the invitation of some college and further his preparation. On the other hand, the business world is open to him and inviting him. A position with a fair salary is offered. As he hesitates, the possibility of increased salary at an early date is held before him. Which shall it be, college or business? This particular lad has not yet reached a decision, but he is inclined to further his preparation in college.

This lad is not alone in facing these two alternatives. There are scores and hundreds in the same boat. Four years in college and some two or three years in university looks like a long grind, and it is. And when the grind is over, what assurance does the graduate have? On the other hand, should he enter business and accumulate money, of what permanent value is it? With an adverse turn of the wheels of fortune, to which this age is not a stranger, and life's accumulations are swept away. He finds himself unable to enter the professional field, and without ambition to tread the business path a second time.

I said to the lad with whom I conferred, and I say to high school graduates here, there, and everywhere, that between the ages of seventeen and twenty-four, one is given the opportunity to prepare himself for life. This period is the age for mental development and personal culture. The colleges of today offer inviting opportunities for such individual improvements. If the youth does not take advantage of these opportunities before he is twenty-four, they will be gone forever. If he should take the time to avail himself of the opportunities that are offered by higher education, when he has exhausted such opportunities the business world will still be open to him, and infinitely more favorable. In addition, the professional world will likewise invite him.

In venturing such counsel I am aware of the fact that the general attitude towards college graduates is radically different to what it was a quarter of a century ago. Then the mere fact that a youngster had graduated from college almost insured him, not only a position, but the choice of positions. It seemed to be an accepted fact that the college graduate was worthy of the best, and should have it. There is no such attitude today. College graduate or what not, the individual wins his place by his own merit. A diploma from a college or university is by no means a passport to success. The individual must seek his place, must apply himself, and by his own ability, register his achievements, and thereby make for himself a place in whatever line of industry or professional field he may elect to spend his efforts.

This is not bad, but good. It is wholesome when an individual is thrown on his own responsibility, and must rely on his own ability, to secure his position in society. Young man and young woman, think of the disadvantage of an untrained mind in a day like this. What chance have you? Your competitors, the larger number of them, will be better prepared than you. The position that you crave will be filled by another who has taken the time and gone to the expense of preparing himself. The prepared mind always has the advantage of the unprepared. A few years in college not only multiplies one's self respect and his individual happiness, but greatly accentuates his ability in whatsoever field he may choose to labor.

At Elon College we are prepared to meet your needs. We are improving our equipment, our faculty and everything that goes to make up a college, solely for your benefit, and we invite you to come. For the past three weeks we have averaged a little over twenty new applications a week, accompanied by reservation fees for membership in our 1935-36 student body. The average young man or young woman finishes his high school courses between the ages of sixteen and eighteen. We will have a number at Elon next year sixteen years of age. The indications now are that we will have a select student body, coming from the best homes in our territory, and the largest number that Elon has had in years.

We appreciate greatly the help and cooperation of last year's student body, the alumni, members of the church, and friends of the institution. My dear reader, won't you please send us the name of a friend whom you would like to see a student at Elon College? We will be glad to do our best to induce such a one to come. Our fall term opens September 3, 1935. For catalog or other information, write the undersigned.

LANETT, ALABAMA.

It may be of interest of readers of The Christian Sun to have a line from Lanett, Alabama. Lanett is still on the map and is an industrial city of no little consequence. It has some five to seven thousand population. It has approximately 2,500 or 3,000 laborers. Lanett, with its population and its great industrial interests is presided over by some mighty fine men. Mr. Geo. H. Lanier is president of the West Point Manufacturing Company. Mr. Reuben W. Jennings is superintendent of Lanett Cotton Mills.

Mr. John A. Simmons is superintendent of Lanett Bleaching and Dye Works. To say that every interest of Lanett is safeguarded by noble spirited, generous-hearted men would not be an exaggeration in the least, for such is the case.

These men of authority are all friends to the church and they are generous supporters of the same. It has been the joy of my life to find them so responsive to the needs of our church during this period of indebtedness and we feel so thankful to every one who has helped us in any amount to reduce the debt to its present status. We only lack about $20.00 of having the church free from all debt, which amount we hope to have in hand by the fifteenth of August.

Everyone who desires to have a part in this final joy will have to hurry. Everyone who has contributed or shall in the future contribute to this fund, is hereby cordially invited to attend our Home Coming service which will be held the second Sunday in September, next, at which time we expect a great Rally and a great gathering of men, women and children in a mighty service for God.

The church will begin the new Conference year with a clean slate and it must do a greater work for God and humanity or suffer the consequences. This church ought to be a great missionary church and if it ever reaches the glorious attainment for which it came into existence, it will be.

The fact of a church's existence is proof conclusive that God wants it to be a light to the world. If it shall be a light to the world it will of necessity be missionary.

This church, this Lanett church, ought to support a missionary on the firing-line. It would grow thereby. No church can attain fullness of joy, until it gets into action for God. I am constantly praying that this church may get a vision of spiritual conquest.

I pray that God may lead the mind to a higher life and that the church shall be so thoroughly consecrated to God and to His Holy Cause that they may find joy in service. I pray that such a fellowship may be built up here, that the Kingdom of Satan will fall before it.

Victory is one day coming to the Kingdom of God—why not this church put forth an effort to bring it about and share the joy that shall await it in that day.

I pray that God may give this church a leader after His own heart and that there shall be a constant and steady growth in things pertaining to godliness and spiritual piety.

I am trusting His hand to guide as ever.

Yours in His Name,

G. D. HUNT.

SAVE THE SABBATH.

The other day we heard a good woman—the daughter of a fine old Virginia family—talking to another woman, as women will do. She was alone in the world now and had been boarding in a house that kept summer boarders down by the Tidewater. She said:

"Am sick and tired of these Week-Enders. I don't like to hear people refer to the Sabbath as The Weekend. These Week-Enders seem to work a few days merely for the purpose of trying to crowd the dissipation of the entire week into Sunday."

Here are words to be pondered. The Week-Ender is a new creature of these latter days. And he is a very numerous herd. The crop of Week-Enders has been very large, and the kind is very active. They work a few days with one thing in view—what to do with my week-end?

That was the question a freshman asked the professor after the lessons on Friday as they walked across the college campus in the rain. The professor wore a hat and a slicker, while the freshman went it bareheaded and uncovered. When he asked the professor what to do with his week-end the professor said:

"Put a hat on it."

These Week-Enders are playing havoc with the Sabbath program. To many of them Sabbath is no more than a week-end of frolic and dissipation takes its place. They rush in hordes over the country to public places of frolic, or visiting, keeping both themselves and others from the house of God.

A while ago this dissipation was confined to the city centers, but now it has spread over the land. Many country mill ponds have been turned into Sunday bathing beaches, where multitudes come for their week-end frolics as they throw reserve to the winds. Things are sold now all over the countrysides as they were once sold by real sinners in the city centers. There is little difference between Sunday and Monday in the trading, except business increases on Sunday.

Baseball on Sunday has swept over the land until there is hardly a community that does not have the Sabbath air torn and blasted by the noises like those we used to hear on the Fourth of July and other special occasions. We have seen a number of Sabbath schools where teachers and scholars hurry from Sunday school to get dinner and go to the ball games, in which they are not only observers, but players.

The tide has swept over us and brushed the old-fashioned Sabbath away. And it was a bad day when we swapped the Sabbath of the Christian Church for the week-end of modern society.

Will we try to save the Sabbath or will we give up and see it go the way of other old-fashioned things of a by-gone age? Will we try to make it a day of rest and worship in which we get poise and quiet for the struggles of life, or will we make it the big mad rush day of the week, in which we reach the climax in dissipation and indulgence?

Will Sunday movies, public baseball, horse racing and every other form of dissipation sweep over us on the Sabbath and take from us the orderly day we so much need these times to quiet our raging emotions and keep us from dying with high mental blood pressure?

Will we save the Sabbath or swap it for the WEEK-END?—Richmond Christian Advocate.

WOMAN'S PLACE IN THE FUTURE WORLD PROGRAM OF THE CHURCH.

(Address of Bishop John M. Moore, before Council, 1935.)

In addressing the Woman's Missionary Council on the subject assigned him, Bishop Moore's advice to the women was to create strong personalities, indomitable and high visioned, who will have the force within them to follow the example of their predecessors and set out to attain a goal over an unexplored territory. As the purpose in mind, he said, will determine the tools a sculptor will use, so with the church. It must find its conception of what women can best do to bring the human race to its highest life and thought and work to achieve that end.

Calling the roll of the pioneers in the woman's missionary movement, Bishop Moore said: "They were what you would call elect women in the finest meaning of that word. They thought broadly, felt deeply, acted wisely. All they needed was to be agreed upon the ends to be attained. Their personalities became their program, and that is why we have our woman's missionary society and woman's missionary council. They were IT, just as John Wesley was more than a man; he was an institution. He came to a conception of what should be and he set about to do it.

The church has no program except what the Master Mind and its great pioneering spirit create. An inheritance has its value only through the heirs. Programs are personalities in action and if there be personalities there shall be the marking out of the way of the church and that way is the way of those who are its truth and its light. When you talk about the program of the church you talk about the personalities of the church. The church has its life, its history, its soul, capabilities and power, but they await personalities that can express them.—N. C. Christian Advocate.

THE RURAL BILLION AND MISSIONS.

By THOMAS JESSE JONES.

With all human organizations, missionaries have made mistakes, but their errors are not more numerous than those of government, or business, or education or even science. The Laymen's Inquiry was missionary in origin and in purpose. Naturally and inevitably there were differences of opinion. So are there differences as to every form of human endeavor. But the sound conclusions of the Inquiry are taking root in the adjustment of modern missions to the everyday need of humanity for the more abundant life everywhere.

The rural billion men, women, and children—a billion scattered all over the world—are the direct and special concern of Agricultural Missions Foundation, organized in 1930. Deans of agricultural colleges, secretaries of mission boards, and laymen distinguished in economic and social service have combined to interpret and to transmit American rural experiences to the rural masses of the world. John Reisner, the executive secretary, is a graduate of Yale and Cornell. His experience as Dean of Agriculture at Nanking University was an extraordinary preparation to understand the rural needs of the millions in foreign lands.

Brayton Case on the "Road to Mandalay" is but one of many missionaries who are serving humanity on the fringes of civilization. Dr. John Henry House, for more than fifty years in Old Macedonia, founded the American Farm School to abolish hunger and poverty in the Balkan cauldron of ever-recurring wars. The Near East Foundation takes to the classic countries around the Aegean Sea the vital lessons of farm and home demonstrations, health and recreation centers, and the cultural influences of Christian civilization.

The Village Welfare Service of the American University in Beirut, Syria, includes every phase of community life—the home, the school, the farm, the health, the recreation, the cultural and spiritual needs. Members of the faculty and volunteer students move from village to village and remain as long as useful service can be rendered. Thus they start the villages on the road to permanent freedom from ignorance and poverty, and the students themselves learn methods of community work to be taken to their homes in Iraq. Abyssinia, Egypt, Turkey, and all the historic countries of the Near East.

The purpose of the Ting Hsien Experiment is to explore the potentialities of the masses and find a way of educating them not only for life, but to remake life. The fourfold Reconstruction Program is to correct the four fundamental weaknesses of Chinese life, namely, "ignorance, poverty, disease, and civil disintegration."

These are a few of the missionary men and movements who are teaching the Way of Life from Mandalay to Timbuctoo. They are laying the foundations of the permanent peace for which the world yearns. To them the religious life finds its true expression not in the ecstasies of emotion, but in the doing of the common things right. Their life is conditioned and controlled by him who said: "If ye love me, keep my commandments. He that will be chief among you, let him become the servant of all."

CHINA AND HER WALL.

Dispatches from the Orient have been telling of Japanese troops crossing China's Great Wall, and newspaper writers have been delving into the history of that "eighth wonder of the world." It is long since the once formidable barrier ceased to check any advancing host, but for stormy centuries it was a strong defense against the invader. The wall stretched from the sea to the desert—a distance of about fifteen hundred miles, crawling over mountain, valley and stream. It was built, like the pyramids, by forced labor, and we read that two hundred thousand convicts with iron collars about their necks, worked till they died in their tracks. The wall averaged a height of twenty feet and was fifteen feet wide, with towers at intervals of one hundred yards. It lives on as an ancient landmark, whose removal the common sentiment of mankind would deplore. It serves, see, as a memorial, reminding the present generation that China had a civilization and a long history ages before our Western nations were born. "A people with China's past deserves," says the New York Times, "the respect of those peoples whose arts have been more lately developed . . . And if history teaches us anything, she teaches, as a high authority recently stated, that a race as numerous and sound as the Chinese will not perish from the earth."

GOD'S CHALLENGE TO MAN'S FAITH.

By W. L. REBER.

Some twenty years ago the Lord started to call me in a very definite way to give full time to His ministry. For a time I thought I could satisfy Him by teaching a class of junior boys in Sunday school. The call for wider service was more insistent and I took on larger responsibilities until I was superintendent of the church school, and was elected as one of the elders of the church. I attended all the meetings, was chairman of the Board, and did everything from janitor work to acting as assistant pastor of the church. Finally I came to the place where I had to stop and say, "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord, and I'll do what you want me to do." The burden rolled away and immediately I received a call from the American Sunday School Union and was commissioned to this district on January 15, 1921. From the beginning God has blessed me in every way. His Grace has been sufficient at all times. When He says "Go," there is only one thing left to do and that is, to go!

Upon entering this field I found sixteen Sunday schools in operation, but it was not long until we had forty-five. We still care for this number and it is a real man's job to follow up each phase of their religious activity. Let me tell you something about the organizing of the Juanita Union Sunday School and of its development.

Juanita is located in a very fine district across Lake Washington and has a very fine bathing beach. If any place in the country needs a Sunday school, it is one near such summer resorts.

While many very fine folk gather there, it is nevertheless largely operated for the most part, by worldly people. After making a house-to-house canvass in the Juanita district, inviting folk to the schoolhouse for the purpose of organizing a Sunday school, we established the school with twenty-five present on the evening of August 21, 1921. In three weeks we had enrolled seventy-two. We now have an average attendance of eighty. Many of the folk said, "You are going up against a real difficult job for it cannot be done. The folk will not come for they do not want a school here." But the Lord said, "Go," and I knew He would be with me. The schoolhouse was there for a meeting place and the folk were living there without any religious meetings and I was there to do the work. It was done and it is continuing and growing in every way.

We have some very capable folk in the Juanita Union Sunday School and they are really concerned about the welfare of their young people and are trying to provide for their many needs. We have an active Sunday-school Board which meets regularly, a mid-week Bible Study Class and prayer meeting, an eight-piece orchestra and three Christian Endeavor Societies. A Daily Vacation Bible School is conducted annually. Our folk attend at least one Group Gathering and such Institutes and Conferences as are available to them. They provide for preaching services as often as they can. They teach missions and support the Society. Some have learned the joy of tithing.

One year ago last fall we established a mid-week prayer meeting and began praying for an evangelistic meeting. When the time seemed ripe for the meeting, it was suggested to them, but some had little faith and said, "We'll not guarantee you anyone outside of our teachers and officers." Others said, "We cannot finance a meeting." I told them that I expected an average attendance of one hundred and that we would finance the meeting with one offering and it would not deplete our treasury by one cent. The date was set for December 4th. The Rev. C. M. Ridenour was to do the speaking ,and I was to do the personal work and direct the singing. On the first night it poured rain but we had sixty-eight people present. It continued to rain day and night until the floods covered all the low lands around us. But the audiences grew until we reached an attendance of eighty-three. We cared for the finances with one offering and then they wanted to take up a "love offering" for the speaker and for the Society. They said then, "It can be done for it was done." Last fall it was not so difficult to put on another meeting and it has been gratifying to see souls won and transformed for the Lord. Faith has been increased, doubts have flown away, folks have been spiritually nourished, prayers have been answered and many are being trained for service as God is being glorified.

I am glad I listened to God and turned a deaf ear to men. Men thought they knew but did not. He does not ask us to do the impossible thing for He does that for us. Had I listened to men there would be dozens of folk in Juanita aimlessly going through life without God and without hope of eternal life and Juanita would today be without a Sunday school. May the Holy Spirit continue to lead us and make us fruitful in our various fields of service.—In the Sunday School Missionary.

In China today everything is challenged in the earth and in the heavens—religion, marriage, family affection, respect of son for father, or pupil for teacher, or servant for master.—Basil Mathews.

A Story for the Children

THOSE NAUGHTY KITTENS.

(A True Story.)

Muff and Fluff and Puff were three little kittens who belonged to the Bryant family; and they thought they were a part of the family just as much as Janet and Betty, the two little daughters of Mother and Father Bryant.

For hadn't Janet chosen the little gray Muff from a whole family of cats and kittens at a neighboring farmhouse and brought him home with her? And also hadn't Betty chosen Fluff, the lively little kitten who was spotted like a circus pony? So Muff belonged to Janet and Fluff belonged to Betty, but where does Puff come in? Certainly he wasn't chosen by Mother and Father Bryant, for they thought that two lively little kittens were almost too many already. Puff was the handsomest of them all and he had appeared at the back door one morning and cried for his breakfast. Of course Janet and Betty heard him right away and invited him to eat breakfast with Muff and Fluff.

"You may feed him," said Mother, "and then let him go. Perhaps he belongs to some other little girl."

They fed him and then he stayed. He liked Muff and Fluff right away and he liked Betty and Janet. And so, no one had the heart to turn him out, for even Father said he was the handsomest little cat he had even seen. He was a black striped tiger and his fur was so long and soft that he might have been part Angora.

As the weather was cold, these three kittens had apartments in the basement. They had three rooms, the laundry room, the furnace room, and the fruit cellar, only they were not allowed in the fruit cellar usually. Sometimes in the morning they were allowed upstairs, and what fun and frolics they had! They would chase each other around from one room to another, under the portieres and across the hardwood floors until the whole family would stop eating breakfast to watch their antics. One day, naughty Fluff jumped up on a portiere and swung back and forth. Janet and Betty laughed joyously, but Mother scolded him. She told Betty he must be punished if he did that again, for he would tear the curtains. So Betty took him in her lap and shook her finger at him.

"You naughty kitten!" she said. "I shall have to switch you with a peach-tree switch if you ever swing on the curtain again; and you will have to stay outdoors all the time instead of coming in with Muff and Puff to visit with the family.

But Fluff only raised his paw and tried to cuff Betty's cheek, as if she were the naughty one and had been swinging on the portiere. So Betty put him down in the basement while she and Janet started to school. If she didn't, those naughty kittens would follow them all the way to school.

That morning, Mother went to the fruit cellar to get some canned fruit and some potatoes to fix for lunch. She was in a hurry, for Father had telephoned that he would bring two guests home with him. As usual, the three kittens met her on the cellar steps and she had difficulty in getting down without stepping on them. They followed her into the fruit cellar and when she came out again, with her peaches and potatoes, they preferred to stay where they were.

"Come, kitty, kitty, kitty," she called. "Come out so I can close the door."

But they enjoyed poking among the potato crates and apple barrels and perhaps they smelled a mouse, for they wouldn't come out.

"Well, stay there!" exclaimed Mother. "I haven't time to run after you." So she left the door ajar and went upstairs.

She had just put her dish of potatoes into the oven to bake when she heard a dreadful crash below. She hurried down to the fruit cellar and turned on the light. All was quiet and not a kitten could she see. But lying on the floor under the fruit cupboard was a glass jar of peaches all broken to pieces and a jar of home-canned corn running all over the cement floor.

"Those naughty kittens!" cried Mother. "They must have been playing hide and seek among my canned fruit."

"Kitty, kitty, kitty," she called. And presently Muff stuck his little gray head out from behind a potato crate.

"Come, kitty, kitty," she called again, and Puff peeked out from behind an apple barrel. She picked them both up and put them in the laundry room; then she hunted for Fluff.

"Maybe he has been hurt by falling fruit jars," she thought. But just then two green eyes gleamed at her from the fruit cupboard. And there he was sitting right up beside a can of peaches, looking as saucy as if he were saying, "What are you going to do about it?"

"You naughty little kitten," scolded Mother. "You can just stay outdoors the rest of the day."

But Fluff did not care very much, for he knew that when Janet and Betty came home, everything would be all right.

And sure enough, when Janet and Betty came home he was loved and petted as usual; and even Mother forgave him, for she realized that he was just having a good, kittenish time with his little brothers, and did not mean to make trouble.—By Carrie Belle Boyden in Zion' Herald.

"THE LOVE OF MONEY IS"—

"Take the profit out of war" is now a slogan. It is proposed to take over all munition plants and run them for the government and not allow any concern or individual to profit from war. If that is ever done we will have no more wars. It is selfishness and greed on the part of politicians and munition makers that causes most wars.

"Take the profits out of liquor—We were told this by the newspapers that have the first year taken in ten million dollars from liquor advertising. If the profit was taken out of the support the newspapers give the liquor business, these papers would no longer support it. It is the ten million dollars that determined the editorial and news policies of these papers toward the liquor traffic.

If we could take the element of gain out of selling the liquor, men would no longer sell it. It is the greed for gold that makes manufacturers and dispensers, whether they are bootleggers or legal saloon-keepers, sell liquor to their unfortunate fellows. If we would take the money out of it the State and the nation would no longer protect it. It is the love of money—revenue—and not a desire to promote temperance that has made the legal liquor business our greatest industry.

The love of money—human greed—is the root of all the evil that curses the race. When men stop being greedy they become gentle and sympathetic to their unforunate fellows.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

Given a man full of faith, you will have a man tenacious in purpose, absorbed in one grand object, simple in his motives, in whom selfishness has been driven out by the power of the mightier love, and indolence stirred into unwearied energy.—Alexander Maclaren.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

THE BETTER WAY.

The Elon Summer School of Leadership Training tries to help people with their personal living as well as to train them in the arts of leadership. For this reason the pupils are presented with a booklet to guide them in their Morning Watch, or daily devotions. It is suggested that each one take the booklet and a Bible and find some quiet place where they can read, meditate, and pray for some fifteen minutes before breakfast each morning.

The booklet this year was prepared by the editor of this page, and was called "The Better Way." Topics for the week included "The Way of Personal Development," "The Way of Communion," "The Way of Faith," "The Way of Love," "The Way of Service," and "The Way of Consecration." Since the school closed one of the pupils wrote to express appreciation for the booklet, and inclosed a poem of her own which was the outgrowth of the last day's meditation. I am giving herewith the materials for that day, and the poem which she wrote.

THE WAY OF CONSECRATION.

Words of Wisdom.

"Ye cannot serve God and . . . "—Matt. 6:24.
"Sell that thou hast, and . . . "—Matt. 19:21.
"Let this mind be in you . . . "—Phil. 2:6-11.

Comments of the Compiler.

Service to God is supreme. It must be an undivided loyalty. He takes no half-heart. We give Him all or none.

The rich young ruler had much to his advantage, but his land was in his way. To follow Jesus meant a complete sell-out. It does for us.

"The mind of Jesus" would settle many of our problems, and in the best possible way. "It pays to serve Jesus," but it is hard work. It takes all our energies. There are none left for evil.

"Give of your best to the Master." Do it today.

Philosophy of the Poets.

I gave my life for thee,
My precious blood I shed,
That thou might ransomed be,
And quickened from the dead;
I gave my life for thee,
What hast thou given for me?

—Frances Harargal.

A charge to keep I have,
A God to glorify,
A never-dying soul to save,
And fit it for the sky.

To serve the present age,
My calling to fulfill;
O may it all my powers engage
To do my Master's will.

—Charles Wesley.

My life, my love I give to Thee,
Thou Lamb of God who died for me;
O, may I ever faithful be,
My Saviour, and my God.

Some Things I Think Today.

(Here was a blank space for the pupils to write down some of the things that seemed important in their own minds.)

My Moment With My Master.

O Master of the Sabbath, hear Thou my Sunday prayer of consecration. My heart is glad because I came to Summer School, and to this quiet place with Thee. Go with me now and lead me as I turn again home.

Bless my friends, both new and old, who have brought to me a blessing from Thee. Send me home a new person to live in a new realm of thought, emotion, and action. Teach me to truly live "the better way," and to serve as best I can.

Take my life and make it Thine. Help me to count life not dear unto myself but to hold it dear for others and for Thee. All that I am or ever hope to be gladly I give to my Master.—Amen.

CONSECRATION.

My life is yours, dear Master,
To use as Thou dost will;
I do not mind the rugged path
Nor climbing up a hill.

For I know that Thou art leading,
And if I slip and fall,
Thy hand will gently lift me
Up again, if I but call.

My life is yours, dear Master,
Thy very own to be;
For I desire no other way,
Than just to follow Thee.

EDUCATION AND EVANGELISM.

In these summer months while some of our city churches are taking vacation from the strenuous work of the year our country churches are holding evangelistic meetings and doing more work than in the winter. This gives a year-round program for the entire Church, and there is reason back of the programs of both city and country. And it takes both city and country to make a real Church.

Sometimes evangelists in their enthusiasm for winning people to allegiance to Christ say things which seem to indicate that they do not believe in religious education—or perchance any kind of education. As a matter of fact they do not really believe in doing away with education. Their preaching is education. The fact that they take pains to point out spiritual difficulties and point the path to salvation shows that they do believe in education. They say the way to be saved is to believe, but they seldom stop until they tell what to believe, and that is education. These enthusiasts are eager for people to study the Bible, and that study is religious education of the first class.

People never learn too much. They may not know what to do with their knowledge and may, therefore, make a wreck of life, but the fault is that their training has not been sufficient in the field of religion. Those who know the Jesus way of life from study are prepared to use knowledge so as to develop the self and others. That is why we have religious education. The Church believes in education, and has through the centuries. For a thousand years it was the Church that kept alive the spark of learning. No one need fear to study, and especially if the study is in the field of religion. God is not ignorant, and does not want His children to be ignorant any more than a parent wants the child to be an idiot.

The religious educators are the co-workers with the evangelists. The teacher works first. The evangelist builds on the foundations laid by those who teach. If the teacher works well, the evangelist has good success. Many an evangelist has been delighted with a large increase in membership of the church and professions of faith who has simply reaped the harvest made ready by faithful teachers in Sunday school, Christian Endeavor, and church services. These teachers may seem to take infinite pains in the presentation of certain truths, but the ultimate goal is not the memorizing of the facts, but the acceptance of the truths which in reality is the Truth—Christ. I cannot imagine a real teacher of religion stepping aside when the evangelist comes and saying, "This is something new and different. I will have nothing to do with it." On the contrary, they know that the visiting minister is helping them to complete their work by getting a personal decision for Christ. And they know also that months and years of work lie ahead, for they are to help the converts to "grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord."

There should be, then, a very happy and cordial relation between the teacher and the evangelists. They both work for the same good end, Christian character. They should understand each other, and know just how the work of one fits into the work of the other. In this way the children and young people who are making life decisions can be led into a fellowship with the Master that will grow richer as the years come and go. And this writer wants to say very sincerely, "God bless all who are working to win followers to Jesus."

Another way to state the topic is: "How the Laws of God Work for Our Good." Use it whichever way you like. But dig into it and find the real truth that will help those who attend the service to live nobler lives. Perhaps the science teacher nearby would give a talk on the laws of God in nature. If there is a psychologist near, call on him to tell of the laws of the human mind. A physician might give considerable information on how people grow. A farm demonstrator could tell of the laws needed for successful farming. There are many possibilities of getting good talks for this meeting. But do not forget the talent within the church and society. A teacher or the minister might well tell of the laws of spiritual growth.

The worship service should be well planned. If the program includes such speeches as have been suggested above, and the speakers do their jobs well, the worship service may well come at the close of the evening rather than at the beginning. We worship when we come into fellowship with the Infinite, when we have the feeling of awe and admiration. This feeling should certainly be the outgrowth of the discussion of this

DANIEL (Temperance and Health).

Lesson V—August 4, 1935.

Golden Text: "Know ye not that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit which is in you, which ye have from God?"—I Cor. 6:19.

Lesson Text: Daniel, Chapted I.

When this lesson is studied, large numbers of our young people will either be going on their vacation, or soon be going to college. The lesson is in point in either case, for it is the story of a young man, freed from home restraints, facing new temptations, meeting new problems, thrown in a new sense on his own resources. And it is a story as modern in its spirit and problems as if it had been written yesterday. Young people do not dress like Daniel did, they do not live in the kind of material civilization that Daniel lived in, but they faced essentially the same temptations and they need to be guided by the same ideals as he was guided by. The lesson applies, of course, to the matter of drinking, but it applies in a more inclusive way to ideals of character and conduct, and to the fundamental philosophy of life itself.

A Young Man with a Purpose.

"Daniel purposed in his heart." He had carefully thought out the thing, he had considered alternative courses of conduct, he had considered the ideals by which he was going to govern his life. And he had come to a great, heart-purpose. He had made his choice in the quiet places of solitude, undoubtedly in the place of prayer, and when he came out into the stress and strain of life, he had a great, central controlling purpose. He was unlike so many young people, and older people for that matter, who have no great settled convictions as to what is right or wrong, and who take their ideals of conduct from the standards of the crowd, or the desire of the moment, and as a result they drift along, following the line of least resistance. Because they aim at nothing, they hit it every time. Because they do not have any great heart-purpose, they never achieve.

How easy it would have been for Daniel to have compromised his ideals and to have justified himself in doing it. He was away from home, he was among strangers, everybody else was doing it, his chance of advancement seemed to depend upon being a "good fellow," his folks back home would never know about it, and besides what is the use of trying to live up to ideals anyway? Many a young person going on a vacation or going to college will reason thus with himself. Let Daniel speak to us of the value of a great, dominating purpose, especially a purpose as touching personal conduct, and a purpose rooted in religious ideals.

A Young Man with a Sense of Social Responsibility.

Daniel undoubtedly wanted to be efficient. He knew that simple living paid in terms of physical efficiency, as well as in religious satisfaction. For that reason, if for no other one, he refused to drink the king's wine. But there was more to the matter than that. Daniel had some friends with him, friends for whom he felt a sense of social responsibility. Perhaps "he could have taken a drink, or let it alone, but what about his friends?" What about his influence? What about the impact of his religious ideals on others, if he compromised those ideals? This is the nub of the matter. Daniel refused to be a partner in the thing—although it had the guise of respectability upon it—because of the social factors involved. This is a point which the liquor interests, and those who use liquor deny or ignore. For the Christian at least, it would seem that it is not a question simply of temperance, but rather a question of abstinence. Can a man as a Christian afford to give his influence in any way to a traffc which is a denial of everything that the gospel of Christ stands for?

Of course this principle applies to things other than drinking. We may not be our brother's keeper, but we are our brother's brother. Let every man take heed lest he put a stumbling block in the way of his brother, for whom Christ died.

This social aspect of personal religion needs emphasis in our modern life. The kingdom of God involves more than saving individuals; it involves the transformation of the social order. Persons must be saved as persons, of coure, but they must be Christianized in their social contacts.

A Young Man Who Was Willing to Put His Ideals to a Practical Test.

"Prove thy servants, I beseech thee, ten days." "Put us to the test. Judge my ideals in terms of their fruitage. I am willing to match my ideals with my life. If my religion is wrong I want to find it out, and the sooner the better. If it is right, I am going to stick by it, no matter how much it costs me." That was the attitude of Jesus. "Come and see" said Jesus. The thing is simple. Just let a man try Christ's way of life, try it honestly, try it in all sincerity. If Christ's way is wrong we ought to find it out and the sooner the better. But if it is right, we ought to follow it, no matter what it costs. The trouble with most of us is that we are not willing to pay the price of living by our ideals.

A Young Man Who Won.

Of course it turns out that way in the story books. But in the long run it turns out that way in life too. There are many intemperate men who are brilliant, and there are even great athletes who are not abstemious. But by and large, and in the long run, the total abstainer beats the others to it. Plain living and total abstinence will vindicate themselves. Then, too, there is another angle to the matter. It is not a question of whether a man can drink and still be a good athlete or a brilliant thinker, but whether he can be the best possible man. Christ wants us to be our best. Anything that keeps us from being our best is sin. And that goes for intemperance in eating, or any form of dissipation, as well as for drinking. Godliness is profitable unto all things, said Paul, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. To sit at the close of day, or at the close of life, and to know that one has tried to live up to his ideals, is far better than to have gained the whole world and to have lost one's soul.

Many people who are conscious of their wrongs and are not willing to get right will resort to many plans to gain recognition. People of like character, of course, will come to their rescue, thus fulfilling the expression: "Birds of a feather will flock together." A wayward brother, who is not willing to do right, will seek the association of others like himself. All the recognition and sympathy from whatever source will not make the wrong right. When a man recognizes that he is in error, he should follow the Lord's plan and get right. Simon was told to repent of his wickedness and pray God for forgiveness.—E. M. Borden.

MONDAY.

"HE RAISETH UP THE POOR."

"He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the needy out of the dunghill; that he may set him with princes."—Ps. 113:7.

With all the poverty there is in the world, and among devout Christian people, how can the text be understood?

The Psalmist often speaks of the poor and needy as constantly identified with the godly, the righteous and the faithful; that they suffer undeservedly; and that God has a special care of them and listens to their cry.

It is true that poverty has a tendency to lift people from worldliness; and, though poverty may be grinding to an extent that makes spirituality impossible, it is true that the poor often rise strikingly to spiritual life. In fact history bears this out, that the Kingdom of God has ever been the Kingdom of the poor.

Consequently, as Matthew puts it, "The poor in spirit" are the ones who are indeed rich. As people become "poor in spirit," they realize His cleansing power, arise with self-respect and hope, they "put their best foot forward," so to speak, and their lives transcend the mean and the sordid.

Prayer—Our Father, we thank Thee for all this. Give us this spirit, lift us up daily from what what we are to what we ought to be.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"WHY NOT THE RICH?"

"Woe unto you that are rich."—Luke 6:24.

In the same breath in which Jesus blessed the poor He pronounced woe upon the rich. He also said, "how hardly shall a rich man enter into the kingdom of God."

The answer is just this: it is not to be understood that Jesus condemns those who are spiritually rich, even if they do possess worldly goods, but it is understood that "a full hand helps a man to forget an empty heart," and it is truly said that, "the getting of riches carries with it the loss of desire to give it away." The man who is busy with many possessions and with the getting of gain is in certain danger of shutting out the alluring light of the city of God and also of observing his own vision of eternal values. For the getting of gain increases desire to get more, and the storing of possessions stimulates determination to add more to it.

But God is just. His truth is the same to both the poor and the rich. It is very far from being true that all poor people are Christians; and likewise that all rich people are lost. When He said that riches cannot inherit the kingdom of God, He explained His meaning by restricting it to them that "trust in riches." Thus His blessings are upon those who embrace "poverty in spirit"; and the rich may do that as well as the poor; it is only harder for them to do it. The poor have fewer obstacles and obstructions between them and the kingdom. They are not surrounded with satisfactions. There are not so many things between them and the kingdom. The rich have more of these obstructions.

Prayer—Our Father, help us to forget whatever we may possess, and allow nothing to stand in our way of growing rich in heart and the things that be of the kingdom.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"THE POOR IN SPIRIT."

"Blessed are the poor in spirit."—Matt. 5:3.

One commentator says, "In saying, 'blessed are the poor in spirit,' Jesus is saying, 'blessed are the unworldly; blessed are they who, though in the world, are not of the world.' The world says get all you can, and keep all you get." Jesus says, "Freely ye receive, freely give," "give to the poor." "Give God praise." Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these ye did it unto me." In other words, "Blessed are they who in will and heart have nothing for themselves, but have everything for others who need. to be sure He does not say to everyone, "Sell all that thou hast and give to the poor." That is a perfection beyond the average man. But He does say, "Do not cling to your possessions as though they were all your own by some inalienable right, to be used upon yourself while people starve about you."

When thou art ready to resign some of thy possessions freely and cheerfully, if need be; when thou dost remember that thy riches are but a trust from God; when thou are ready to use this trust in His service and for the good of thy fellowman; when thou canst do all this, thou art "poor in spirit," and the blessing is thine.

Prayer—O Lord, in Christ's name we ask all this for our souls.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"THE HIGHER SOUL."

"The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God."—Rom. 8:16.

There is a spirit which we call our own, and there is a spirit within us, which is of God. Our spirit is of ourselves, the lower; God's Spirit is of Him, the heavenly; and between these spirits there is a connection by which the heavenly comes down and lifts up the lower by which it is transformed unto the higher.

They who are at ease in the world and who look at everything through only worldly interest, live in the lower self; they are in the basement of their soul. Conscience has little place in the heart of one like that. He is essentially hostile to the kingdom of God, and it is in this realm the heedlessness and sinfulness of the world takes place. Prolonged existence thus finally destroys the finer, better and purer feelings and aspirations of the higher. And when this is accomplished, such an one stands out an antagonist to all that is good.

Poverty of spirit which we have been discussing, is not poverty in the lower soul but it is a realization of the higher part of man which comes into immediate contact with the Divine, and lifts him from the lower self to the higher where he comes face to face with God; and when this takes place, something "bears witness,"—tells him that he is a Christian.

Prayer—Dear Father in heaven, we would be like Jesus. Raise us up from ourselves daily unto Thyself, that we may dwell where thou dost dwell and be with Thee forever.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"'THE POOR IN SPIRIT' DEFINED."

"Christ in you, the hope of glory."—Col. 1:27.

According to the commentators, according to the church, according to the teachings of Jesus and all human understanding of them, and according to Christian experience, "poverty of spirit" proceeds from coming face to face with God.

To be "poor in spirit" is not humility. A man may be "poor in spirit" while his soul may be on fire with enthusiasm for God. Jesus was as poor in spirit when he cleansed the temple as he was when he prayed in the garden.

The poor in spirit have the consciousness of Divine greatness and Divine nearness. It is shown in his acceptance of the will of God in everything; it is shown, not in self-depreciation, but in strength that comes in trustfulness; it is an attitude that renders entire dependence upon God, emptying the life that God may fill it. It is a power that impels a man to pray in hours of greatest successes and most thrilling triumphs as well as in hours of direct need. It is God "within him."

Prayer—Our dear Father, give us that receptive attitude that receives in order that it may give. Transform us by that inward power which is Thine own, and inspire us daily to those higher things of life that make Thy kingdom most to be desired by all.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"A PILLAR FOR REMEMBRANCE."

"Remeber Lot's wife."—Luke 17:28-37.

Our Lord set Lot's wife before us an example of the folly of yearning for the things of earth. She could not let go of Sodom. She looked back on the wicked city and was overwhelmed with its destruction.

Lot's wife thus became for all of us a pillar for remembrance. She is a standing token to us of the folly of worldliness. If she could speak she would warn us not to look backward but forward, not to look downward but upward, not to look outward but inward.

How shall we remember Lot's wife? For we easily forget her. Money and power and fame and pleasure are most alluring. We need constantly, though without morbidness, to remind ourselves how pitifully inconsequential they are, how soon they will all vanish and die. Not without continual effort can we remember Lot's wife.

Prayer—Thou only canst help us here, O Christ! Thy presence with us is our only safeguard against the waste of life. Teach us the lasting joy, we pray Thee, and hold us to it by Thy grace.—Amen. AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

"GLORIOUS SUFFERINGS."

"If any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God in this name."—I Peter 4:12-19.

Peter knew well what it meant to suffer as a Christian and every Christian should know it as well. For there is no service of Christ without Christian suffering. It is all sacrificial service. We are all to take up our crosses and follow Him. If we leave our crosses behind us, if we adopt the easy way, He will look upon us and say, "Ye are no followers of mine."

But how glorious is this suffering! It admits us into the fellowship of the Son of God. We are indeed members of His kingdom. We are His partners, doing His work with Him. Ashamed of it? As soon would a king be ashamed of his crown.

Nor is it we alone who are glorified; God also —wonder of wonders!—is glorified by the glorious suffering of His people. We are marvelously permitted to add somewhat to the splendor of the Most High God, and there is no accomplishment greater than that.

Prayer—Therefore lay Thy cross upon us, divine One. Let it be a heavier cross, as leading to a greater dignity. And we know that Thou wilt delight to bear it with us.—Amen.

SAUL SUFFERS DEFEAT.

By JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

"What meaneth this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?"—I Sam. 15:14.

Saul suffers defeat, but that in itself may not be a crime. It is mighty fine to lose even one's life in great service for others. Moses turned down one of the most influential thrones on earth to espouse the cause of his slave brothers. Paul counted all things but loss for Christ. Jesus laid down his life on Calvary for the redemption of the world. So defeat may be victory. And loss may be gain. But Saul suffered a very sad defeat.

Saul's rise from the farm of Kish to the throne of Israel is a very interesting story. What a great chance he had in history! He came to life's call with such complete equipment. His was a choice childhood. He came of a very influential family. "Now there was a man of Benjamin, whose name was Kish, the son of Abiel, the son of Zeror, the son of Bechorath, the son of Apiah, a Benjamite, a mighty man of power." Such was the father of Saul. Back, back through a line of aristocrats to the beloved son Benjamin, of the beloved wife Rachel, of Jacob, son of Isaac, son of Abraham.

Saul came of a great family. A thousand years after him another could still rise up and boast his descent from Benjamin,—even Saul of Tarsus. It means something to come from a great family. Especially if it be a family who loves God, and honors him in all the rearing of their children. Ah, what a tragedy to have to admit in later life that one had all such blessings, and threw them ruthlessly, and foolishly to the winds! Neither noble birth nor full measure of wealth makes a guarantee against defeat in life. It takes more than that. In fact in the merciful economy of God it does not even take those things to make a beautiful life. For many a child in poverty born, and with a name unknown, has risen to bless his day and generation, and add somewhat to the general uplift of the race.

Saul had more than noble birth. "Saul, a choice young man, and goodly: and there was not among the children of Israel a goodlier person than he." As I look at the fine young men of this congregation how I admire them. What lovely homes many of them come from, what fine educational advantages they have had, or are having, and how alike they look today. For three Sundays I have asked Brother W. E. MacClenny to let me teach his class of young college-trained men. They are an inspiration, and I asked the privilege in order that I might become personally acquainted with each one of them. "None goodlier in all Israel." How even is their stand today, generally speaking. But twenty years from now—what will the story be? What is that strange something that makes such a difference as the years come and go? What is it that fixes such a wide gulf between them?

You and I can recall, many of us, the 'teens and twenties of our own lives,—the associates, classmates, companions of those days. How wide are the ways that separate some of us today. It gives one a melancholy feeling to contemplate it. And the large host of lovely young girls who make up several groups, or classes, in our church, how fine they are today. In them their parents may well repose great hopes, and of them truly noble things must be expected. What an excellent program I witnessed tonight in the Young People's Christian Endeavor! It is inspiring to know and work with the young people of our church and city. What is it that will make such a difference in their individual lives twenty years from now? If I should say it with one word, and say it so that every young person, and older person in this congregation might understand it, I should say one word: God!

Saul started out with noble birth, a choice childhood, and a "none goodlier" young manhood; and to him was given the chance of one in many millions:—that of becoming the first king of the Chosen Race of Israel, and setting up its first dynasty. What a privilege it was! And how much might have been gained in the fashioning of national laws, and international laws had the son of Saul come to be his successor! Had you ever thought that when you fail how likely you are to deprive someone else very dear to you of their proper birthright. Saul let the wine of success go to his head, and caused him to stoop to selfish conduct of his kingdom, forgetting the request of God, in order that he might please his own vanity, and thus lost his throne. Saul had a noble son,—Jonathan, the very epitome of friendship. How the nations have needed something of the friendliness of Jonathan on their thrones! How posterity has probably suffered because Saul deprived his son of a throne and a dynasty of kings! True a great successor was found, David. And quite true that a great line of kings succeeded him. But at any rate Saul had suffered a severe defeat both for himself and those who were to follow him.

Another rich, young ruler in the days of Christ thought of self rather than others, and the world has never heard whether or not he had a son! So completely did he miss his chance that we do not know what chance he missed. We only know he missed for himself the blessed privilege of being a favorite follower of Jesus. And isn't that a great deal to miss?

What besetting sin remains covered in our own lives? What passion or power lies there ready to wreck you? What yielding to appetite, or lust, or greed is there to blight your own name and the name of your goodly family? Saul forgot God! Saul suffered defeat! Will we forget God? Will we court failure?

Let me suggest to you that we remember God. In these vacation days, when temptations well up about us, or when success tempts us with its toys, let us not forget the goodliness of our childhood, the nobleness of our birth, the trust of our parents, and our loved ones, and let us not forget God. It was not imperfection that wrested the throne of Israel from Saul, but selfishness, or self-dependence, rather than a continuation of humble trust in God. The successor was not perfect, but his heart was noble enough to break with his sin, so that there was real repentance, and not desire to place blame upon others, as had been the case with Saul.

So then I suggest that we forget not the Christ, and the church which he has established for the comfort, strength, and blessing of all who need help. There will be ever and anon something about the church which will keep you on the right track, something to keep you humble, or inspired as the need may be. And at its altar a peace and pardon are found which the world cannot give and which it cannot take away! And if we suffer defeat following the Christ, keeping company with Him, and obeying His commands in love, then those who love us will in the years to come rise up to call us blessed.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

We are publishing in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN a list of the contributions sent in to help us replace our barn. This list will be published from time to time as offerings come in.

We are grateful for every dollar sent us. We want to say that we have already commenced to build the barn back and have the compartment where the cows are housed and milked nearly complete.

We hope to get started on the main part of the barn as soon as lumber is placed on the ground. We have the foundation already now for the framing to be put in place.

We truly hope that friends and churches will contribute enough to pay for it when the carpenter drives his last nail.

THE YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

topic. Let the Scripture readings and ideals have an important place in the program.

Nature hymns and poems can be used. "For the Beauty of the Earth" is very appropriate. The closing hymn or hymns should be rather personal, and very worshipful. Select them carefully so they fit into the program and present the thoughts and stir the emotions that will help.

Several problems can be raised for discussion. Could we live without law? Suppose the farmer planted potatoes and reaped wheat. What are the laws for physical development? for social well-being? for spiritual growth? Can we violate law and "get away" with it?" Think of eating too much, of telling lies, of being dishonest in business, of committing crime when no one knows about it, and of crime that is detected. What happens to those who cheat in school? Try to find how law works right through life, and how it brings freedom to live abundantly.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

The biennial convention of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, which met in Philadelphia last week, was composed of 10,000 delegates, representing some 5,000,000 Endeavors. The President, Dr. Daniel A. Poling, in his opening address, urged that the youth organize to work for permanent world peace, evangelization, and alcohol education. Dr. Poling defended the American plan of government, declaring that communism and fascism "have no freedom we do not now possess, but they are weighted with tyrannies we have never known." In his visits to the nations which are experimenting in government, Dr. Poling declared that "under no other social or political plan than ours are there fewer abuses than we confront, while with us there are liberties and opportunities immeasurable, beyond those achieved under any other system."

Near the close of the convention the youth marched through the city in one of the most impressive parades held in Philadelphia since the World War, according to a news story. Dr. Poling was re-elected President of the body.—Exchange.

MOUNTAIN HOME TO PULPIT THRONE.

gifted daughter of Judge Jenkins, a Baylor trustee, George Truett graduated at Baylor. I went a thousand miles to hear that graduating speech—not so much for the ringing eloquence that I knew would be in it; but because of the wonderful background which made his graduation a national inspiration to young manhood of America!

While a student at Baylor, George Truett had introduced me to a great crowd in Dr. Carroll's Tabernacle when I lectured from a rolling chair under the auspices of the University Literary Societies, in the fall of 1896. Since then I have watched him go and grow, as John Temple Graves said of Henry Grady "from easy effort to success." I had the honor of being elected Vice President of the Southern Baptist Convention for the second time when he was elected President in Louisville. And although he said somewhat playfully, "I know nothing whatever about Parliamentary Law, and must throw myself on the mercy of your boundless generosity and forbearance," he made one of the most expeditious Presidents in dispensing business that our Southern Convention ever had. And anybody who saw during the recent Northern Baptist Convention how genuinely he is loved, knows that the only reason he has not been elected President of that great body is because he is not a member of the Northern Convention.

And here is my final lesson for young preachers: Every time I see George Truett sitting or standing on the throne of his power, whether as pastor thirty-eight years of one of the largest churches in the world, or President of the Southern Baptist Convention and the Baptist World Alliance—above all, standing in the pulpit as I saw him at Denver, bending from his world-eminence at the foot of the cross with the clinging faith of a little child, I remember the words of my old-fashioned Christian father around our family altar: "Rob a preacher of his humility and you rob him of his power."

Standing upon his present throne as the best-loved preacher in the world, George Truett's Christ-like humility is the comeliest crown which is worn today by this world-famous prophet of God.—The Christian Index.

DESERTED CHURCH.

An old forgotten shell I see it stand,
The trees are pressing in on either hand
As though to shield its sorrow from a land
That cares no more.
Grey, it seems with years, its head is bent
In silent prayer, perhaps, for those who went
Once through its door.

Its shoulders sag, as though in tender pain,
Its colored eyes are dimmed with dust and rain.
A story says its bell once rang again,
A feeble cry,
Above a rushing storm one night, they tell,
It sounded, just before the steeple fell
With a sigh.

Now puddles on the shallow steps are beat
Into the hollows worn by humble feet,
And in the church new worshippers may meet,
The earth and sun—
'Tis but a sepulcher whose soul has fled
Into the world; a mighty Voice has said
"Thy work is done."

DORA BYRONS.

Pomona, Fla.

The keen, acute cynicism of Satan has just enough truth in it to make it the acid test requisite for solving the problem. Every outwardly good deed, every outwardly good life, admits of a two-fold explanation until the inside facts are known: and Satan is within his right in insisting that only the acts of the man himself, under severe testing, can really prove exactly what he is.—D. M. Panton.

A "Fool-Proof" Safety Switch.—

A new mechanical device recently developed will, no doubt, be welcomed by forgetful owners of automobiles, airplanes, motorboats, etc. It is in the form of a special switch, which, when turned to "off" position, disconnects all electrical energy at the battery. As well as saving battery power and dollars, danger of fire is minimized.

Eliminating Accidents.—

A western truck express has shown a remarkable accident record for the last year and a half. With 116 employees and covering 10,000 truck-miles a day, there has not been a single accident in seventeen months. Drivers of trucks receive a bonus of $50 at the end of the year provided their records are accident-free. In addition to this any accident occurring is taken up by an "examining court" composed of two drivers, the garage superintendent, the traffic manager, and the superintendent. If the driver is found to be at fault, the penalty is instant dismissal.

New Tax Bill Passes House.—

By a vote of 282 to 96 the administration's tax bill passed the lower House of Congress on last Monday. It is estimated that the bill as it passed the House, will bring in additional revenue of probably $250,000,000. It has yet to pass the Senate, and will probably be re-written by that body. The house bill provides that corporations may have credit on their income taxes for charitable gifts up to five per cent of the earnings. The President will more than likely try to have the Senate eliminate this provision. Impatience on the part of Senators to get home and go fishing may aid the passage of the bill in its present form.

Old Testament Accuracy.—

New proof of the accuracy of the Old Testament as a historical record has been obtained by the Smithsonian Institution. The findings—three inscribed terra cotta cones found in a temple wall at Ur of the Chaldees—were memorial tablets buried to perpetuate the name of the King, Libit-Lshtar, fifth ruler of the Isin dynasty, who reigned about 2075 B. C. Included in the cuniform inscriptions were references to several early cities, mentioned in the Book of Genesis. The fourteenth chapter of Genesis gives Ur as the birthplace of Abraham, presumably during the reign of Rim-Sin or of Hammurabi, 2000 to 1900 B. C.

"There's An Idea for You."—

In the "Voice of the People," a department in the Richmond Times-Dispatch, we find the following from Lucy Lee Rice, we do not know whether it is Mrs. or Miss, of Pamplin, Va.: "To the Editor, Sir:—The churches of Appomattox County have been closed on account of infantile paralysis—not the condition itself, but fear of it—since there are no cases in the county at this time. I was sitting on a neighbor's porch last evening, talking about this—also that, and the other! Finally we spoke of the two little boys from the Presbyterian Orphanage of Lynchburg who recently were run over by a drunken driver and seriously injured, and of the case of a young friend of ours in Goochland County who suffered a similar fate at about the same time, and had to be taken to a Richmond hospital for treatment. My neighbor said: 'It seems to me the epidemic of drunken drivers is much more menacing than the epidemic of paralysis. They have closed the churches on account of the paralysis, so why not close the ABC stores until this epidemic of drunken driving is over?' There's an idea for you!"

Fourteen Ambassadors of Good Will.—

On August 1st, fourteen ministers from various parts of the United States sailed for England. These ministers will preach in historic churches of Great Britain during the months of August and September under the auspices of the Council on Interchange of Speakers and Preachers Between the Churches of Great Britain and America. The British Council has arranged a speaking itinerary covering the principal cities and historic places of England and Scotland, in the interest of promoting a better understanding between the English speaking nations. A similar number of speakers from the British Isles will speak in churches in various American cities. Among the American delegation is Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, who is pastor of People's Church in Dover, Delaware. This is the second time that Dr. Helfenstein has served on this delegation, having served in 1928. This year he will have quite a full program. There will be held morning services in the Dover Church during the absence of the pastor, they being under the supervision of his assistant, Mr. Herman C. Taylor.

"An Announcement to Our Readers."—

"On October 1st Advance will become a monthly. In making the change there is a definite purpose to make the monthly a new venture in religious journalism. Religious weeklies have been common and conventional, and religious bi-weeklies have also become common under pressure of financial situations. There is a place for a religious monthly. It is not proposed to make the new monthly merely a monthly publication of what has hitherto been a weekly paper. For months committees and groups of counselors, along with the editorial staff, have been studying the whole situation in the hope of producing a new type of paper that may develop new interests in new directions, and that will meet old needs in old ways and in new ways." This announcement appeared in the August 1st issue of Advance. THE SUN hopes that the step which has been taken in this instance may be an advance step—not meaning to play on the word—but there is fear in our minds that there will be left unfilled a tremendous need. Advance has continued four religious papers, including the national Congregational organ, The Congregationalist, and the Christian weekly, The Herald of Gospel Liberty. As the continuation of the latter, it has the distinction of being the oldest religious paper published. If it is to step out of the field which its predecessors filled, there will be still a greater demand for the regional weeklies of the combined Churches. And in an effort to strengthen such papers, the National Council cannot do better than to give official recognition to the places they occupy.

Balance Sheet.—

Once a year the United States makes a thorough check of its business with the rest of the world. This job for 1934 was completed several months ago, but the final audit has just been released. Highlight of the year will remain the flood of gold which came to this country—$1,187 millions. Computed on the old $20.67 an ounce basis, or the new $35, it is a record. Washington experts list two significant reasons: greater confidence after the dollar was devalued, and political uncertainties in other lands. What we sell abroad is seldom balanced off by what we buy. Last year we piled up $478 millions for goods we shipped abroad above the value of our imports from foreign countries. This is the largest balance since 1930. In part counterbalancing this accumulation at home were the expenditures of Americans traveling in foreign countries. Last year, they paid $314 millions to foreigners, compared with a bare $292 millions in gloomy 1933. Foreigners reciprocated, however, by increasing their travel expenditures in the United States by $23 millions. One of the outstanding features in United States travel abroad last year, revealed in the report, was the marked increase in departures for non-European areas. While the number of our citizens who sailed for foreign destinations showed an increase of 3 per cent over the preceding year, the departures for European ports were 6 per cent less, while sailings to other oversea areas increased 14 per cent. Immigrants still send money to the "old country." Remittances last year dropped $5 millions below the total for 1933, still amounted to more than $105 millions.—Business Week.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Elon College has an unusually strong faculty for 1935-36.

Advanced enrollment for the College is most satisfactory. Definite applications for 1935-36 are the largest in the history of the institution at this date and are in excess of last year on opening day.

Prof. C. C. Gulley, of the College Business Department, is doing post-graduate work in Texas University. Prof. J. W. Barney is doing post-graduate work at the University of North Carolina.

Dr. E. L. Moffitt, a former president of the College and a resident of the town for the past four years, is preparing to move to Greensboro. We are sorry to lose Dr. Moffitt from our community. He is employed by the Prudential Insurance Company. His many friends here will wish him continued success.

Dr. C. H. Rowland, of our Greensboro Church, seems to be improving in health. He is able to preach at the morning service on Sundays. Mr. A. L. Granger, a member of the Biblical Department of Elon College, has been secured as supply for the summer. Mr. Granger is an excellent student, a fine spirit and a good preacher.

Dr. J. U. Newman, a member of the original faculty of Elon College, appears hale and hearty. The doctor is always vigorous in mind, even though at times he may not be so vigorous in body. His life is a benediction to the College and to all students who come under his influence.

Mr. D. J. Bowden, Jr., who recently graduated from Yale Divinity School and who is to be associate professor in the Department of Christian Education, has moved to the College. Mr. Bowden and his wife have apartments with Miss Ann Watson in the Dr. Watson home here. Miss Watson has had the residence completely overhauled and built into comfortable apartments.

Rev. J. E. Franks, one of our beloved and faithful pastors of the Eastern North Carolina Conference, writes under date of July 27th of his illness. Brother Franks is suffering from a serious and critical case of appendicitis. His physicians recognize the seriousness of his condition and everything possible is being done for his recovery. THE SUN'S editor and the entire SUN family wish to express sympathy and to assure him of earnest prayers in his behalf. May the Lord be with Brother Frank and strengthen him.

A very happy party gathered at "The Tavern" in Asheville the other evening in honor of Rev. John Chapman and his bride-to-be, Miss Deana Jo McCurry. The dinner party was given by Dr. and Mrs. Edwin C. Gillette of Jacksonville, Fla. Other guests present were Eben Chapman, brother of the groom-to-be, Rev. Milo J. Sweet of Elon College, Rev. Wm. T. Scott of Winston-Salem, Dr. Elisha A. King, Mrs. King and Miss Jennie H. Leach from Miami Beach, Fla. Mr. Chapman is pastor of the Congregational Church of Asheville and his brother Eben is supplying the Asheville pulpit during the vacation of Mr. and Mrs. Chapman. He is a student attending Union Theological Seminary, New York City. Mr. Sweet and Rev. Scott had spent the day in Asheville in conference with Dr. Gillette who is Superintendent of the Southeast. Dr. King and family are spending their vacation at Fairview, N. C.

WINCHESTER, VIRGINIA.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

At the Congregational-Christian Church here in Winchester, we are very proud of our new pastor and his wife and the work we have been doing here for the past six months under their able leadership.

For our evening services during July and August, we are having special vesper services at 6:30 P. M. on the beautiful lawn of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Cather's home. We have had two of these services and are to have two more. The setting is lovely and the service is worshipful and uplifting. Special music includes violin, cornet solos and vocal solos. Special readings by talented people are also featured on the programs.

I am enclosing a copy of July 28th vesper services. Our next one is to be on August 11th and is to be a candlelight service. The young people from the Timber Ridge church are to be especially invited.

MISS ELSIE MATHEWS.

FIRST CHURCH, PORTSMOUTH, VA.

On Wednesday night, July 3rd, at the close of the midweek prayer service, the members of the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va., gave a "surprise party" in honor of their pastor, Rev. Robert A. Whitten, the occasion being his birthday anniversary.

The church dining room was decorated with cut flowers, lighted candles and the birthday cake with the appropriate number of candles.

At the close of the prayer service, Rev. Whitten was "persuaded" to attend a business conference in another part of the church, while the membership assembled in the basement. When all were assembled he was called into the dining room, where the only light was made by the candles on the cake. His expression was full evidence of his complete surprise. Ice cream, cake and mints were served, and Rev. Whitten received quite a number of presents as an expression of the love and good will of the membership.

News has been received by friends "back home" of the passing of James Herbert Huber, infant son of Rev. and Mrs. Lester E. Huber, missionaries in Zemio, Africa. James Herbert was born in Zemio on February 5, 1934. Several months ago he developed a bronchial condition, which turned into double pneumonia, and on May 13, 1935, at 15 months of age, he returned to his Creator. He leaves to mourn his passing, besides his parents, a sister, Martha, two and one-half years old.

Rev. Huber is a member of the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va., and a minister of our Eastern Virginia Christian Conference. He will be remembered as associate pastor of the First Church, Portsmouth, of several years ago, at which time he endeared himself, not only to the members of that church, but to all with whom he came in contact. Mrs. Huber's stay in Virginia was of short duration, but during her stay her pleasing personality put her in a high place in the affections of the people.

Their message reads in part: "Our hearts have been broken and crushed in the natural, but His grace has been sufficient, and He has kept us in perfect peace because our minds have been stayed on Him, and we are trusting in Him. The Lord has been so precious and real to us during these days of deep sorrow, and His Word has been a source of strength and rich blessing."

IS THE MINISTRY A PROFESSION?

By WALTER HORACE UPTON.

He was a clean-cut young chap. There was something about the way he walked and carried his brief case which gave one the impression that he was not just a highway "moocher." Although I had consistently passed up hitch-hikers on the road, daylight or dark, there was something about this fellow that caused me to slow up, apply the brakes and bring the car to a dead stop opposite this young "knight of the road."

We drove along for several minutes without saying a great deal, except to comment upon the weather, crop conditions and the general appearance of the landscape. It developed that he had arrived in the university town two days before to make arrangements about entering the university the coming autumn. He had put up at a "frat house" with some friends. And it was great to roam about the campus just looking things over. The fellows had all made him feel very much as though he really belonged. He believed he was going to like university life exceedingly. The pictures of life on the campus had not been overdone. Of that he was very sure.

To this lad, brought up on the farm, the past two days had seemed like wandering in Paradise. They were all too brief. But it was all over—at least for the present. He was out on the road hitch-hiking back to the farm; the pigs and the cows and horses, the foul smells, the drudgery of the morning and evening chores—these would all be awaiting him upon his return.

He would "take up engineering" at the university. There was something dignified and manly about the professions. They gave a fellow the feeling of assurance and worthwhileness. The field was overcrowded, but by the time he was ready, he reasoned, there would be a place for him. Anyway there is "always room at the top for the bird who has it in him!"

The conversation was along this line for several miles, when my young companion happened to glance at the registration card on the steering post of my car. "I see you are a minister." I acknowledged my classification and then followed a most enlightening and interesting half hour. His next question was: "Is the ministry a profession?" I soon found that he knew something about churches and preachers. He had been president of the Christian Endeavor in his home town. He had attended the young people's summer conference. Did I know Rev. —— of ——? "He was a good egg!" Two or three ministers he had known were to him, "regular fellows!" This clean-cut young chap was paying my profession a real compliment. In his own language, of course, but understandable, none the less.

I was really sorry the next town was his stop. There was something warm about the way he gripped my hand as he closed the car door and said: "So long!" His retreating figure in the other direction was soon lost to my view and I found myself pondering over his query of the half hour before, "Is the ministry a profession?" In justification of my own choice of life work I began to recall, as best I could, what Webster had said about professions. "A calling or occupation which requires a superior education." "An occupation which requires learning." That was it. And it fitted in exactly with what a ministerial friend had said at an ordination service, which I had attended: "I like to think of the minister in a community as being the best educated man—well-informed, well-read and well-bred." Why not? I mused that, after all, the day of leaving the plow handles for the pulpit was past. The professions require solid and thorough preparation and certainly the ministry should be no exception.

Five years out of the seminary have not changed my mind in the least about the seriousness of my calling. I recall that in the "business administration" classes a good deal of stress was placed upon the fact that a minister should not only know how to preach, where and how and when to make pastoral calls, but that he should know the language of the board of trustees. My young friend of the highway said as much when he asked if the ministry were a profession.

Confirming the same question as was in this young man's mind, a professional man (a lawyer) recently asked: "What are the seminaries stressing? What type of men are they seeking to train for the ministry?" Then in the same breath he deplored the fact that he had known too many men of my profession whom he playfully classified as the Kiwanis-cheer-leading type."

I am coming more and more to look seriously upon this question propounded to me by the university-bound farm youth as a legitimate interrogation. I am sure the ministry at its best is a "possession" rather than a profession. The connotation of the word "professional" does something to me. The acquisition of spiritual values must not be obtained nor dispensed professionally. Love, the minister's chief stock in trade, cannot be professional; if and when it is, it ceases to be love.

But there is so much evidence to refute my feeble argument. My young friend of the highway had doubtless attended church services where, at exactly eleven o'clock, the minister entered the pulpit to lead the people in divine worship. At eleven minutes past eleven o'clock the minister read a "few verses of Scripture." Then followed an anthem by the choir. At precisely thirty-five minutes past eleven o'clock he offered the pastoral prayer whether he was in the praying mood or not. And his sermon—it was "one of those Sundays when he just couldn't get going." It may be that this young man had seen his minister officiate at a number of funerals. He noted the professional manner and tone. Everything went so smoothly. "You always do everything just right." "You never miss, do you?" And so on and on. I don't wonder that he asked, "Is the ministry a profession?" He knew so well that it was.

Is it asking too much of our seminaries, and our graduates who come out of them that the ministry be looked upon as a "possession," rather than just a profession"? It took a hitch-hiking Iowa farm lad, just out of high school, to challenge my thought anew on this matter of my own profession. At first, I thought he was questioning whether the ministry was important enough to be classed as a "profession," but I soon discovered that his experience with churches and men in the ministry had led him to the conviction that the ministry should be classified as something beyond a profession—perhaps a "possession."

More power to that clean-cut chap from an Iowa farm who wants to study engineering! My guess is that he will carry something into his chosen occupation that will make of it something more than a profession; it may be an obsession, but above all a "possession!"—Advance.

GOD'S GARDEN.

It is interesting to consider that every flower, no matter how highly valued, or carefully cultivated, came originally from God's Garden, that is, from Nature herself. Even the choicest orchids grown in the conservatories of the very wealthy owe their origin to some far distant tropical forests. In fact, we may say that all our garden flowers, many of which, however, have been improved by cultivation, are but brothers and cousins of those which grow wild in God's Garden. It is the same with the trees which decorate our lawns, in all their beautiful variety and luxuriant growth; they can all be found somewhere in what we call a wild state upon this earth of ours. The flowers and trees and the grass which carpets the earth are all God's free gifts to us and we hold them in trust from Him. "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." And again, "The trees of the Lord are full of sap, even the cedars of Libanus, which He hath planted." These are but two of many passages which might be quoted to show the close relationship which exists between the Creator and the works of His Hands. To these might be added the following: "He maketh the grass to grow upon the mountains and green herb for the use of men." The earth, then, is God's Garden, and like the Garden of Eden, He has placed man in it to tend it and care for it and to eat the fruit thereof.

It is sad to think of how far men's minds have strayed from this beautiful conception of our relation to Nature and to God. The reverence with which we should regard Nature, as manifesting God's love and care for us, is almost entirely lost. We have forgotten that this is God's earth, and we have come to regard it as so entirely our own that we can rob it of its beauty, and to a large extent we have turned the garden into a wilderness. The trees of the Lord have been treated as a spoil by those greedy of gain, and if it had not been for the creation of National Parks by the Government, the wonderful giants of the forest, which have survived the storms and winters of thousands of years, would have been swept away with a ruthless hand. Even our heathen forefathers had an awe and reverence for Nature which formed part of their religion, and the loss of this reverence on our part, can by no means be regarded as a mark of progress, but rather as a complete failure to understand that the beauty of Nature is one of the most important refining influences of civilization, a proper appreciation of which enriches our lives and characters.—Southern Churchman.

"SUNDAY SICKNESS."

Sunday sickness is a disease which is peculiar to the church members. Symptoms vary, but (1) it never interferes with the appetite; (2) requires no physician; (3) never lasts any more than one day; (4) always proves fatal in the end to the soul; (5) fearfully prevalent, destroying thousands every year. The attack comes suddenly on every Sunday morning; no symptoms felt Saturday night. The patient sleeps well, wakes feeling fine, eats a hearty breakfast; but about church time the attack comes and continues until services are over for the morning. Then the patient feels easy and eats a hearty dinner. In the afternoon he feels much better; he is able to take a walk, drive, read the Sunday papers, or even play a round or two of golf; eats a hearty supper, but about church time he has another attack and stays at home. He wakes up Monday morning much refreshed and able to go to work, and does not have any trouble with this disease, or even any symptoms, until the following Sunday.—Exchange.

When the Holy Spirit says a thing is necessary, it must be accepted. When a condition is expressed by which we are to receive a blessing, it is unbelief to say we can get the blessing without complying with the condition.—Annual Lesson Commentary.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

JEHOVAH GOD AND SAUL.

Readers of last week who failed to note carefully the sermon by Dr. John G. Truitt on his sermon page missed the best of the many valuable and interesting features The Sun had to offer in that issue. The Truitt thesis, pointedly developed, was that one who leaves God out, from character building and conduct, commits a fatal blunder, and ultimately becomes a mental, moral and spiritual bankrupt. Dr. Truitt, it seems, had been facing for a number of Sundays teacher McClenny's class of young collegiates and other intelligentsia. This question arose in the Truitt psychology: "These men will be quite different in character and conduct twenty-five years hence: what is going to be the line marking the great divide?" Jehovah God, says Truitt—just that will mark the difference and tell the story of those lives. "How are these young lives going to look at God?" That is the one essential question in every life. And it marks the destiny and writes the career of every life.

Dr. Fred B. Smith, in possibly the greatest and most epoch-making baccalaureate sermon ever preached to Elon graduates raised the same question. "Twenty-five years from now," said Smith to the class before him, "some of you young men will come back here and you will love this place and the house of God and sacred things. Others of you will be back and asked about God and prayer and worship, you will shake your heads and say, 'Well, I don't know much about such and I am not concerned.'" Why the difference? Well, some of you next Sunday will seek the house of worship, and will do that every Sunday until it is a part of your life. Some of you will not: you will be off on the golf links or fishing or reading Sunday papers at home until God is forgotten and worship is left out. Then doubts arise, skepticism comes, and paganism takes possession. Saul and other moral bankrupts come because they left God out, and ceased to worship.

GOD SEEKING.

A very able writer on devotional topics—Dr. Cushman in his Spiritual Hilltops—says that in the Bible we see men and women trying to find God; here is man's quest and it is a good one. And here we join issue with the good and learned Dr. Cushman. The Bible does not differ from other books in that we here find men and women seeking after God; but it does differ from all other books in that here we find God seeking after men and women. It opens with a scene like that. "In the cool of the evening God walked in the Garden and called out to Adam, Where art thou?" God was approaching Adam here, just as He approached Jacob at Bethel through angels on a ladder, and as He did Moses at the burning bush and as He did scores and hundreds of others throughout the Book saying, I am God—go, speak, or go, tell." And in this Book, as in no other we find Jesus going about doing good, seeking to save: God speaking directly to the world through His only begotten. No. the joy, the glory, the life, the blessedness of the Bible lies in the fact that here as no where else on this earth we find God, even our God, seeking us out, trying to find us and have converse with us and inspire our souls to worship Him and do His will.

IMMORTALITY.

Opinions of careful thinkers on the subject of immortality are always wanted. Dr. Ralph Harlow, one of the professors at Smith College, Massachusetts, has been spending some time this summer lecturing at the Graduate School of the Y. M. C. A. at Blue Ridge, N. C. The other day he spoke on "Immortality."

Dr. Harlow said that the subject of immortality is very little thought of on any college campus these days. Students were inclined to leave the subject to middle aged and older people to think about. Modern American youth are not thinking along these lines. And yet Dr. Harlow keeps emphasizing the subject before college groups because he thinks it is important.

He seems to think that one reason why young college students do not study the subject is because they have heard so much said by preachers and others about heaven that their trained and critical minds are repelled by such warped ideas. Be that as it may, he thinks young people should think about it with much care. Another reason why people in general do not think of immortality is because in Modern Economic circumstances they have to give most of their attention to things and as a result they have very little time left to think of such a theme as immortality. They are not much concerned with the question of living forever! But Dr. Harlow insists that this is a living universe and a thoughtful man either believes the universe is a part of a definite plan or else it is a mere accident. If the latter is the case then man becomes the highest form of being. This idea, he thinks, is far more conceited on the part of the believer than the Christian belief that places God as the Creator and the head of the Universe.

"In discussing the question of immortality," he says, "it must be remembered that God's integrity is at stake, for any belief contrary to immortality is a direct claim that there is no rationality in life." One of the best and most pointed things he said, in conclusion, was this: "The real and most fundamental reason why immortality does not become real to many people is they have not given their attention to anything that deserves to be immortal. If you want immortality you must think and live the things that are worthy of being immortal.

SOCIAL DISCOVERIES.

The Western North Carolina mountains are full of religious and social conferences conducted largely by the Christian churches. At Hendersonville, recently, Dr. C. Rankin Barnes of New York spoke before the Rotary Club on "Discoveries in Social Work." Dr. Barnes is executive secretary of the department of Christian Social Service of the Episcopal Church. Among other things he said, "Poverty cannot be cured by alms alone. The practice of giving alms only keeps those individuals in this class facing the same problem. Unless giving is skillfully done it has a tendency to keep these individuals below the poverty line."

Another discovery is this: disease cannot be cured by medicine alone. It is just as important to develop personality as it is to develop community health. He emphasized the fact that during the last year one-fifth of those who died died of preventable diseases. This is an indictment against the standard of living.

The third discovery is that crime cannot be cured by jails alone. It is important that the prisoners be studied and treated as individuals.

He spoke good words for community wholeness and said, "The time is coming when communities will be judged by the calibre of their parks and of their jails. Social work cannot do its job without the cooperation of the community. The community life is so interlocking that we cannot give it anything but our best."

Such talks as this are very important and there ought to be many more of them in our towns and villages. Social welfare work is very important and requires trained workers if it is to be carried on successfully. Most anyone can hand out food and old clothes and money but it takes considerable skill and patience as well as loving-kindness to study a family in its misfortunes and put it on its feet again. All of our best welfare work is calculated to destroy poverty, to find out the causes that make poverty and try to remove them. It is important, of course, to see that both individual and family are fed and clothed and then their other problems solved later.

WORSHIP'S REAL PURPOSE.

How often we arrange our programs of worship so they will be progressively beautiful and effective. Church attendants often say at the close of the meeting, "What a beautiful service!" "How I enjoyed the service this morning!" That may all be true and yet the persons who say such nice things to the minister may have missed the purpose of it all.

A writer in the Christian Observer for July says on this point, very wisely, that the form of worship is not necessarily worship. The mere going to church, participating in the formal prayers, and in the singing of the hymns are not in themselves worship. They are the forms of worship and the means by which we enter into the spirit of worship.

To regard these forms as worship is to lose the power that worship will give. True worship is something deeper and higher and nobler than the forms of worship, however beautiful they may be in themselves. Worship is entering into fellowship with God. It is the heart speaking to Him and knowing that He hears. It is the soul reaching out to its Maker and experiencing the blessing of the revelation that He makes in response. It is becoming so sensitive to His will that we are alive to His presence with us. In such a spirit, like the Psalmist of old, we are glad to go to the house of God, and through prayer and praise to enter into the Holy of Holies where we may experience a renewed sense of His love and grace.

A NEW RELIGION THREATENS CHRISTIANITY.

Have you realized that there is a new religion in the world: a religion which is intense in its passions, vigorous, vehement, and determined either to subject the Christian religion to its dominance or else to crush it out of existence?

For general substance the creed to which the new religion demands assent may be summoned up in two sentences: "I believe in my Country, right or wrong. I put loyalty to my Country before all other loyalties human or divine, and put obedience to its commands before every other obedience."

Accept that creed and the new Religion of the State cares very little about the addenda which you may then affix. You may believe in God and go to church if you want to. When you have first assented to the creed of the State, those become only minor loyalties. You may not be a very good Christian, but you will be a good citizen. And being a good citizen, an unquestioning, unresisting, blindly obedient servant of the State, is the supreme excellence of life according to this new religion which, in one country after another, is demanding its right to be supreme: in fascist Italy, in nazified Germany, in bolshevist Russia, in militaristic Japan, in revolution-torn Spain, in nervous France, and here in the United States of America. Take the recent talk about the "teachers' oath bill" as one of the latest manifestations in this country: an effort of the State to assert its supremacy over personal judgment, conscience, and loyalty to God.

Love of country is not religion, nor any adequate substitute for religion. It is sometimes the negation of religion. Love of humanity includes more of religion in its embrace but even that is not enough to give the soul of man what it needs. Religion is in an inner companionship with the Highest in the universe. It is a loyalty to God which is supreme above all other loyalties. God, and the will of God, and the mind of God, and the spirit of God: those things first. The soul that is wanting in the sentiments of awe and adoration as it faces the Eternal Mystery of the universe is incomplete, unripe, and unfitted to make a success of the job of living.

Any thoroughgoing attempt to determine what it is that is wrong with modern humanity must take account of the lack of any sense of awe and adoration. That is one charge against the churches of recent times. Not against all of them, but against a very great number of them. They have failed to inspire awe and adoration in the men and women and boys and girls who entered their portals in abysmal need of a great and commanding vision of God.

It was part of the mission of Jesus Christ to take God down out of the skies and make him seem near to the common, everyday man; but Jesus always lived close to Eternal Mystery, and to the awe and adoration which the Eternal Mystery of the universe suggests. It thundered, and to Jesus the majestic sound was the voice of God. A cloud overshadowed him, and that overshadowing was the mystic Presence of God. A sudden storm swooped down upon a lake that was black with the blackness of night, and Jesus was so filled with a consciousness of the all-embracing imminence of God that no motion of fear gave his heart a tremor. His problems and soul-hungers drove him to prayer, and not with easy and informal familiarity did he approach the Infinite and Eternal, but out under the midnight stars on a lonely hillside where his spirit would be stirred to awe and adoration.

The loves, aspirations, ideals, dreams, efforts, loyalties, zeals, that go with the Christian idea of God, these are the greatest the world has yet conceived of. The teaching of them and of their implications, is the supreme function of the church. The hymn books reflect the other mood. Those that have come off the press in recent years are rich with hymns of human fellowship and social service, and that is a gain. But there is serious loss in the omission of such words as—

> Holy and infinite! viewless! eternal!
> Veiled in the glory that none can sustain,
> None comprehendeth thy being supernal,
> Nor can the heaven of heavens contain.

Take words like those, sung to the dignified tune Leila, and the service that begins with them at any rate starts by lifting the the soul to visions and communings which can help it to strength of a greater kind than ordinary worldly life affords. And that is what the soul needs. And it is what a church service should stand for.

An old, old lady, speaking recently of her early experiences in church, said that "the prayers and sermon made almost no impression," but that from childhood "the hymns were my delight and joy." "This deep love of the sacred hymns of the church from early childhood has been my religion. The Bible has been more or less familiar from hearing it read, at home by my father, and in school and church," she says; but the hymns spoke in a way that was different. They were not something passively heard. They made the soul an active worshiper. By the utterance of them the soul was moved to awe and adoration, in a day when worship, in the non-liturgical churches, was made little of, and perhaps not any too much really felt in the liturgical churches. "For years," said this old lady, "I did not know that the hymns were worship. I thought the other parts of the service were the real thing. I wish I had known that the words of some of our greatest hymns, with the great music, were worship, high and lofty!"

The world is always with us. Its bonds, its earthliness, its immediateness, its unspirituality—they are always shutting up our souls in prison. "Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers." There is nothing to call forth adoration. And the spirit of man wearies and lapses if it knows not how to exalt itself by adoration of that which is greater than itself, and to be moved by awe of that which is utterly beyond itself.

The great leaders in the deeper and fuller life of the soul have bowed themselves before God in silent awe, they have let the thought of God flood into their minds and souls and then lost themselves in adoration, so that they even forget to voice the clamorous desires of their hearts for which they had meant to pray. And thus they have made their souls big, and learned to live with God until they knew themselves to be in union with him. "Thou dost penetrate my blood," says one such in a fine passage, "my fibres, the smallest particle of my sensible being; wherever I go I breathe Thee, I move in Thee, with Thee, under Thy sway." Compare that utterance of Lucie Christine's with even the greatest thought that the Religion of the State can call forth.

Modern church life has come perilously near to substituting other interests for the interest in God, and making other knowledge seem more important than the knowledge of God. While that was particularly true during the Great War, when from not a few pulpits the Religion of the State seemed rather to be preached than the religion of God, it is also true now. But while the public needs education in many large and important matters, in nothing does the public, even the church-going public, need education more than in the thought and knowledge and awe and adoration of God. The church quite properly inculcates the feeling of patriotism, and teaches social justice and love of humanity; but its supreme and unique function is to lead men to the thought of God, and to a glorious fellowship with God which will have a transforming effect upon all their thoughts and feelings and judgments and actions.

It is true that the profoundest experiences of the spirit do not come to all. We are of different natures. The old, old lady who wrote about the hymns has probably never had the Lucie Christine kind of experience; but she has had in her own way the experience of being carried away with awe and adoration. And the point is that the soul needs in some way to be carried out of and beyond the bounds of earth and of its daily affairs by coming into personal and humble contact with the divine Source of all things. Religion has its economic and human and moral connotations, its patriotic and social reflexes; but religion's fundamental and chiefest mission is to exalt the spirit of man by leading it up to the loftiest intellectual and emotional loyalties of which it is capable.

We do not spoil our lives by thinking big and high thoughts. By low and little thoughts we spoil them.

To know God: that is life. Nothing else is life. Other things contribute to life, but life has not come until there is connection with God.—By Winfred Rhodes in Advance.

THE ORPHANAGE BARN.

I am most grateful to the individuals and the churches who are contributing money to rebuild the barn at the Orphanage. It fills my heart with joy to have people contribute to such a worthy and needy cause. We are using all economy possible and we hope to get enough money to rebuild the barn and to replace the feed that was burned. Let us all say we are going to replace the barn and when completed, not owe a dollar on it.

Sincerely yours,
J. M. Darden,
President of the Board.

The common tendency in Protestantism is to construe religion in terms of human action. What we do for God and the world rather than what God has done and is willing to do for us is the main thing. The New Testament should be our corrective here. Many of the great verbs describing our salvation are in the passive voice. That is more than a point of grammar; it teaches the sublime truth that a work is done by God upon us. Even our self-examination means little unless we are conscious of an inner Critic.—Thomas Tighe.

Mrs. Susie Brinkley Harrell, daughter of the late Mr. L. Parke Brinkley and Mrs. Sallie Brinkley, was born in Nansemond County, Virginia, March 28, 1877. On October 25th, 1904, she and Mr. Jesse Edward Harrell were united in marriage at Liberty Spring Christian Church. After their marriage they made their home in Norfolk, Virginia, where Mr. Harrell was engaged in business. For several years Mr. Harrell has been the owner of a shoe store in Portsmouth, Virginia. Their church membership was transferred to the Christian Temple.

Last September Mrs. Harrell was stricken seriously ill by an attack of heart trouble which kept her in bed for several months. Recently she had improved, and was thought to be on the road to permanent recovery. Last Wednesday, July 31, 1935, she and her husband went to the parental home, where Mr. Chammie Harrell and his sisters reside. While sitting on the kitchen porch, she said: "I believe I am going to faint." Mr. Harrell was standing near and gently laid her on the floor. She passed away instantly without another word or struggle.

The funeral service was conducted August 2, 1935 at Liberty Spring Christian Church, by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. S. Maxey, pastor of the Whaleyville M. E. Church, South. Official members of The Christian Temple, Norfolk, acted as pallbearers and Mr. Mordaunt Etheredge sang "The Golden Bells," representing the Christian Temple Choir, of which Mrs. Harrell was formerly a member. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor of The Christian Temple, was in New York on vacation and could not be secured for the service. A quartette from Suffolk sang "In the Hour of Trial," and "Goodnight and Goodmorning." Many beautiful floral tributes and a large congregation attested the high esteem in which the deceased was held.

Mrs. Harrell is survived by her husband, a daughter, Miss Ruth Harrell, a brother, Mr. F. F. Brinkley, of Nansemond County, Virginia, a sister, Mrs. B. F. Ashburn of Newport News, and a number of other near relatives. She was a woman of pleasing personality, devoted to her family, a lover of home, loyal to her church, sincere and frank in her friendship and beloved by her friends.

This united family represents two families which have been influential in the social and religious life of Nansemond County for many years. Relatives of Mr and Mrs. Harrell have been active in the promotion of the educational and spiritual interests of several of our strong churches. It was normal and natural for them to be deeply interested in The Christian Temple, Norfolk. They never ceased to be interested also in the work at Liberty Spring, the church of their youth. The body of the deceased was laid to rest in the cemetery at Liberty Spring.

What varied experiences find their way into family life! Happy days of courtship and marriage! The establishment of a new home, filled with love and blessed by sweet and happy fellowship. The joy of hearing the laughter of happy childhood. The happy embrace and greetings of father and mother and child at evening time. Then health followed by sickness, with all the anxiety and tender effort to bring comfort to the suffering. In the quiet hour the heart is anxious, and fear quickens the heart beat—yes, there is a vision of a cloud—and a storm—and a funeral—and a new-made grave, where the loved one must sleep for awhile, until the morning dawns.

After all, it may be that death is as important as living on earth. Jesus came to die. Man must die. Life is glorious, in the fear and favor of God; for death opens to the child of God an indescribable glory and opportunity for fellowship with God—and the loved ones, not lost, but gone before. Faith should encourage the believer to accept the will of God, with full confidence and assurance that "God's way is the best way."

ELON COLLEGE AND THE FUTURE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The idea of an institution of higher learning for the Christian Church was born in the minds and hearts of the leaders of our denomination a half-century ago. By faith and enactment the college was authorized and founded. Heroic spirits made the venture. Inspired by Biblical promises and made strong by the spirit of devotion they dared to undertake a building program which resulted in the converging of the educational efforts of the church at a place in Piedmont North Carolina which they came to designate Elon College. A faculty was selected largely from the membership of the Christian Church; a curriculum was formed and the actual teaching task of the college was begun, which in reality was the effort of the church itself.

The purpose of such an undertaking was to provide adequate and trained leadership for the church; not only for the pulpit, but for the pew as well. For nearly a half-century the college has been performing its task in conformity with the purpose of its founders. All through the years it has been, and is today, embarrassed on account of the lack of funds, but it has always been rich in faith and purpose.

During the first twenty-five years of its existence the church was practically a unit in its support of the college both from the standpoint of contributions and of patronage. In later years patronage from the families of the church seems to have decreased. It may be possible that the members of our church who send their sons and daughters to other institutions for their training find superior advantages for them. I say it may be possible. However, the Christian Church is the loser. Her own institution is deprived of the privilege of placing the hands of instruction and guidance upon her own youth. The church in turn suffers because of the apparent necessary estrangement from the church itself as a particular church.

Last year the college enjoyed an increased student body. For the first time perhaps in its history students from the homes of other denominations exceeded the students from the homes of the Christian Church. Looking over the prospective student body for 1935-36, this condition is greatly accentuated. I am disturbed, and I am taking this occasion to appeal to the church to rally to the support of the college. And when I make this appeal I am mindful of the fact that there are many, many strong institutions to which our young people may go for training. But I am also aware of the fact, and I wish that the constituency of the church might know, that we have at Elon College a superior faculty. Practically fifty per cent of our faculty for 1935-36 will have their doctor's degrees from the leading universities of this country. We will add four young men to our faculty for another year, two of whom have their Ph. D. degrees from Duke University, one from New York University, and one from Yale University. And perhaps we are to add a fifth with his Ph. D. from Brown University. These are all thoroughly prepared for their requirements at the hands of the college.

It is the purpose of the present administration to see that we have a faculty that will measure favorably with a cross section of the faculties of the more outstanding universities of this country. We will be able to give superior advantages to the young men and young women who come. I would not appeal to the homes of our church to send their sons and daughters to Elon if we were not able to give to them the advantages that they ought to have in college life. I am making this appeal not simply because we need students, but because we need students from the homes of our own church. From all indications we will have a record attendance in college next year. We have at least 400 at this writing who have placed their applications for admittance in September.

A faithful pastor and loyal friend of the church said to me recently, "Why is it that the members of other churches recognize the value of Elon College more readily than the members of our own church?" I answered, "They do not" and I meant it. I fully believe that the members of the Christian Church will rally to the support of the college and add such assistance as they may have that Elon may take its rightful place in the field of Christian Education and fulfill more perfectly the purpose of its founders.

We have room in the dormitories at Elon for twenty-six more girls and six more boys. These figures include Men's Hall (the old publishing house) for boys, and Ladies' Hall. As soon as rooming space in the dormitories is exhausted we will provide comfortable accommodations elsewhere. Let no one turn aside feeling that there is not a place for him at Elon. We will always make room, and give the best that we have to the ones who apply.

Our fall term opens September 3rd. For additional information, please address Leon Edgar Smith, President, Elon College, North Carolina.

WATCH YOURSELF GO BY.

Just stand aside and watch yourself go by;
Think of yourself as "he" instead of "I."
Pick flaws, find fault, forget the man is you,
And strive to make your estimate ring true.
The faults of others then will dwarf and shrink
Love's chain grows smaller by one mighty link,
When you, with "he" as substitute for "I,"
Have stood aside and watched yourself go by.

Go on in all simplicity; do not be so anxious to win a quiet mind, and it will be all the quieter. Do not examine so closely into the progress of your soul. Do not crave so much to be perfect, but let your spiritual life be formed by your duties and by the actions which are called forth by circumstances. Do not take overmuch thought for tomorrow. God, who has led you safely on so far, will lead you on to the end. Be altogether at rest in the loving holy confidence which you ought to have in His heavenly Providence.

A Story for the Children

HOW THE WRIGHT BROTHERS LEARNED TO FLY.

Two boys were sitting together near a big window watching for their father, who would soon come home. Their names were Wilbur and Orville Wright. When at last Mr. Wright came in sight the boys ran out joyfully to meet him. They noticed that he held one hand behind him.

"What is it?" they cried together. For answer Mr. Wright brought out a queer little object that looked something like a tiny box kite. "Here's a heliocopter," he said.

"Look, I will throw it on the ground," and he tossed it away from him. Wilbur held out his hands to catch the little object, but it did not fall. Instead it rose up into the air.

The boys had never seen such a thing.

"Daddy," said Orville, "if birds and a heliocopter can fly, why can't we?"

"Because we have no wings," Mr. Wright answered.

"But why don't we make some?" Orville wanted to know.

"Well," said Mr. Wright, "some day when you grow to be a man perhaps you can make some wings big enough to use yourself."

"I will," said Orville.

"I will build a kite big enough to ride on when I am a man," said Wilbur.

This happened way back in 1878. The year 1900 came, and Wilbur and Orville Wright were now young men.

"Well, Wilbur," said Orville one day, "you never made that kite big enough to take a ride on."

"No," answered Wilbur, "and you never made your wings to fly with."

"I still think," Orville said, "that we ought to be able to fly. Just think of those big eagles that fly so easily. Some of them are most as heavy as we are."

"Well, let's watch the birds and see if we can find out how they do it," suggested Wilbur.

To help them carry out their plan the two brothers began to build a "glider." This glider looked something like a very large kite, and it also looked in some ways like the little heliocopter that Mr. Wright had brought home to Wilbur and Orville so many years before.

When the glider was finished they picked it up and started out for the little town of Kitty Hawk by the sea. Around on all sides were great sand dunes and thousands of birds soared in the sky.

The Wright brothers spent long hours lying in the sand watching these birds and they learned that they could fly long distances without flapping their wings. That showed that the birds were floating on air currents just as a swimmer can float in the water. They saw how the birds tipped their wings this way and that in order to balance and steer.

"Now that we have seen how they do it," said Wilbur, "let's try it, too, with our glider."

Out on the dunes they took the glider fastened to the end of a strong rope. They tugged it to the top of Little Hill and balanced it on the edge of the slope. Finally they gave it a gentle push out over the cliff. Down the slope it went—slowly at first, and then more and more quickly, until it was fairly racing. The brothers held their breath. Suddenly a rising air current caught the wings. The glider swept off the slope and flew!

The brother were very happy about this, but their work was not done yet. They knew now that the glider would fly—but could they ride it? Could they steer it?

Again they brought the glider to the top of Little Hill. This time Wilbur was fastened in and Orville pushed it off just as before. Again it was caught up and again it flew.

"Now," said Wilbur after he had returned to the ground, "we must learn to steer the glider and to balance it so that it will stay in the air a long time." Day after day they practiced until both could steer and balance quite well.

"Now," said Orville, "I think we ought to put a motor in our glider." They began at once to build the motor and when it was fastened to the glider the engine was started and it rose into the air and carried a passenger.

The Wright brothers' glider became known the world over. Its name was changed to airplane.

THE SUN'S EDITOR ON VACATION.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Editor of THE SUN and Mission Secretary for the Southern Convention of Congregational-Christian Churches, together with Mrs. Atkinson, left for Virginia Beach last Wednesday. They are located at One hundred and twenty-first Street and Ocean Front. They plan to spend the month of August there. The doctor spent a good part of the winter in Florida and was greatly benefitted by his stay there. He came back to the College greatly improved in weight and spirit. It is the hope of the writer that he may find even greater help in this visit by the sea. The ocean is always optimistic, but not nearly so optimistic as is our Editor and Mission Secretary. When he speaks, he is always well, feeling fine. It is our hope that he will keep on making such expressions until he is really and truly well physically. He is always well spiritually and alert mentally. We shall miss him and family at the College, but we are glad for them to have these few days of rest and recreation.

NEWS ITEMS OF SOCIETIES.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Rosemont Church is enjoying a profitable year, under the leadership of their president, Mrs. O. S. Mills. Two study books have been read and discussed under the efficient guidance of the pastor's wife, Mrs. J. F. Morgan, and many of the members greatly appreciate the opportunity to attend the all-day meeting at Suffolk, and to hear the book "Orientals in America," so delightfully enlarged upon by its author.

Another day that was greatly enjoyed by the society was the one when the District Rally was held with us at Rosemont, and Dr. and Mrs. M. J. W. White entertained with accounts of their work as missionaries in the Philippines, and also exhibited samples of clothing, beautiful embroideries, and other curiosities brought from the Philippines.

In March a delightful luncheon was held, at which Rev. and Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle were our guests, and entertained with speeches.

Many enjoyable meetings have been held, one especially interesting being a Clipping Social, to which all the members brought clippings cut from The Christian Sun, and other missionary and religious sources.

We feel that our spiritual life has been deepened under the leadership of our Spiritual Life Superintendent, Mrs. H. E. Roane, and we are glad to see the approaching of the apportionment goal being reached, as usual in this society, entirely by free-will offerings.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Berea Christian Church, Driver, Va., celebrated its 18th birthday anniversary June 6th, at a lovely party with Mrs. R. J. Bradford as hostess at her home, Town Point, on the Nansemond River.

The Bradford home was lovely with cut flowers in pink, white and blue.

Devotionals were conducted by Mrs. H. P. Harrell, followed by a short business meeting, presided over by the president of the society, Mrs. M. H. Watson.

The hostess presented the following program: Vocal Solo, Mrs. W. E. McCardell; Reading, Mrs. I. W. Johnson; Vocal Solo, Mrs. Jno. G. Truitt; Address, Dr. John G. Truitt.

After the program the guests were invited into the dining room which was decorated with pink and white cut flowers and lighted tapers.

The table was laid with an Italian cut work cloth, and the center piece was a beautifully iced birthday cake with eighteen lighted candles. The cake was cut by Mrs. I. W. Johnson of Suffolk and the hostess was assisted in serving dainty ices cake, nuts and mints by Mrs. W. E. McCardell and Mrs. Richard Savage.

There were forty guests and members present. Every year the society has a birthday party and the members contribute the number of pennies equalling the number of years they are old to help raise their missionary money. This year they had as their guests the Woman's Missionary Society of Beach Grove M. E. Church. The birthday offering this year amounted to $21.80.

This is a small society of only 18 active members, but they have already raised their apportionment for the year.

VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL WOMEN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

Thursday, July 25th, was a splendid day at Concord Christian Church near Timberville. A good number of representatives from the churches of this conference gathered for a day's study of missions together.

In the absence of Mrs. B. J. Earp, the president, who has moved from our conference, the meeting was presided over by Miss Helen Showalter, vice-president. The morning and afternoon devotional services were conducted by Mrs. A. F. Kite and Mrs. K. H. Sale.

Rev. A. W. Andes is pastor of this church and he was present and led the singing. Fine addresses were made by Mr. G. W. Rothgeb of Luray, and by Rev. Ivan R. Smith, pastor of Winchester Church.

Dr. M. L. Weekley, Linville, preached a strong missionary sermon, using as a basis of his sermon Matt. 26:18—"All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." He said the power Jesus referred to was not financial or political power but a good power—a power that healed and helped — the power that takes envy and jealousy out of the hearts of men. The penetrating insight of Jesus looks into a life and sees the possibility of making a life into a power for good. We share the power of God by co-operating with Him."

Mr. Rothgeb is the father of Mrs. M. J. W. White, who, with her husband, Dr. White, have been medical missionaries in the Philippine Islands. His information was first hand and he presented it in such an interesting manner that his address seemed too short.

Rev. Mr. Smith spoke of the results of mission work. He told of how Kagawa's life plan was changed by coming in touch with the missionaries. Kagawa is a power for good among his fellow Japanese.

Solos were sung during the day by Mrs. Ivan R. Smith and Master Edgar Kennedy and Howard Shiflet.

Miss Joy Grigsby of Elon College, N. C., was present and gave two interesting talks. Miss Grigsby is spending some time among the Valley churches holding Vacation Bible Schools.

The treasurer, Miss Verdie Showalter, reported a total of $325 raised during this year. We were encouraged to know that this is not the worst year that we have had.

The following officers were elected for the coming year:

President, Mrs. K. H. Sale; Vice-President, Mrs. A. W. Andes; Secretary, Mrs. B. F. Frank; Treasurer, Miss Verdie Showalter; Supt. Cradle Roll Department, Mrs. E. Lena Rothgeb; Women's Societies, Miss Ora Scott; Young People's Societies, Miss Helen Showalter; Literature, Miss Minnie Dofflemyre; Spiritual Life, Mrs. A. F. Kite.

The people of Concord served a bountiful dinner on a large table on the lawn. The visitors praised the good dinner highly. While the spiritual feast was great the material things were also abundant.

GREETINGS FROM AFRICA.

Amanzimtoti Institute,
Adams Natal,
July 15, 1935.

Members of the Prudential Committee, Honorary and Executive Officers, Missionaries and Corporate Members, Friends of the American Board:

Dear Prayer-partners:

Africa calling! Station ABCFM!

Greetings from the annual meeting of the South Africa Mission of the American Board. Here we are among the Zulu people. What virile Bantus they are! They possess qualities of leadership in outstanding measure.

I have been in Africa since I landed from India at Beira in Portuguese East Africa on Good Friday, April 19th.

Africa is a big slice of our planet—how big, the traveller soon discovers. Distances are immense. I will have traveled within Africa 10,000 miles in order to visit our three mission areas in Portuguese East Africa and Southern Rhodesia, in Angola, which is Portuguese West Africa, and in Natal and Zululand, which are parts of the Union of South Africa.

Africa is also a big section of the life of our planet. Roughly speaking, 130,000,000 blacks live in Africa—Negro and Bantu peoples.

Africa is a great giant who is just beginning to wake up.

Africa is a great treasure-house the value of which the industrial nations have just begun to uncover.

Africa is a laboratory in which human experiments on a vast scale are being carried on. I have visited the copper mines of Northern Rhodesia and the Belgian Congo, I have seen the gold mines along the Johannesburg Reef. These do not impress me as much as the great human resources of this continent and the great human problem which is Africa.

In Africa governments, municipalities, churches, mission boards, industrial companies, chambers of commerce, labor unions, and many other forms of associations are all inevitably concerned with the black man. His future is the great interrogation point. In the long run the white man and his world of ideas and enterprises will be damned or blest by the way in which he treats the black man during the next century. Grave issues hang on the trend of events. What shall it be? Friendliness or struggle to the death?

Portuguese East Africa and Southern Rhodesia.

I have had an excellent opportunity to see our missionaries in action. A missionary often feels uncomfortable when trying to tell an American audience about his work, but he is thoroughly at home on his field.

Here is Mr. Loze, of Beira, for instance. After long years of effort, earlier by others, more recently by himself, he has secured permission from Portuguese authorities in Mozambique Territory for evangelical Bantu Christians to organize an association for worship, education and mutual assistance. This means that a measure of religious liberty has been granted them. Branches of their Association have been formed in six places. Evangelical Christians in Portugal are helping this new movement.

Mr. Orner, of Chikore, among other duties, is responsible for seventeen "kraal"—that is, village—schools. He helps their teachers maintain and develop standards of conduct and achievement. I inspected three of these schools one day, and the next observed an exhibition at a spot on a woded hillside where five schools participated. The raw product is the primitive native child. But hear them sing! See them march! Watch them go through their dumb-bell drill! Listen to their declamations in their own language and in English! Chuckle over their picturesque dramatics! Inspect their exhibits of garden produce and handwork! You will get a fresh vision of what education sustained by the Christian motive can do for primitive people.

Angola or Portuguese West Africa.

Angola was full of surprises for me. Here are more missionaries in action! Angola is four times the size of the State of California. Our work is among the Ovimbundu, a virile tribe numbering about 300,000, one-tenth of the black population of Angola. It would be true to speak of "the rebirth of a nation" in the sense that in large numbers the Ovimbundu are "finding themselves" by their conversion to Christ. Great parish churches, some numbering several thousand, are coming into existence.

Mr. Neipp, of Chilesso, remarked to me that the Christian movement in Angola was growing too fast. It had gotten away from the leaders. Village folk were taking the initiative in establishing schools and branches of the parish church —so much so that adequate nurture is impossible without more missionary and native Christian personnel as leaders. Bantu pastors, trained for careful pastoral work, are urgently needed. I visited many villages and found people most friendly and eager. They welcomed me because they know our missionaries and love them. How they can sing! I hear them even now!

I found the Portuguese officials on whom I called uniformly friendly. They recognize the strength and the value of what our missionaries are doing.

I spent parts of three days at Galangue, where Mr. and Mrs. Henry McDowell and Dr. and Mrs. MacMillan, Negro American Board missionaries from our Southern States, are working. Mr. McDowell believes in crowding his Ovimbundu Christian friends with responsibility. He suggested that the church committee should write the annual report for the whole station. That was an innovation! The report is noteworthy. It is a project in re-thinking the Christian Church among primitive people and in responsible self-government and self-support. Here are three sentences from it:

> "We are discovering those that are genuinely interested in the advance of the Good News, and not merely advantage-takers of a great movement, and afterwards excuse-makers when called upon to make some sacrifice. . .
> "One certainty we are beginning to appreciate: we must not become slaves to money in the prosecution of the Lord's work, so that we always talk about money when face to face with great opportunity for service to ourselves and to our fellow-men. . .
> "Those of us who are in positions of leadership or advantage must also realise that if we are ahead of the group because some funds or powers outside ourselves made us thus, and not because of our deeper consecration, harder work and better use of learning, we can never become the understanding leaders who will inspire the people to conquer their difficulties."

Transvaal, Natal and Zululand.

The climax of my visits in Africa has been in the Union of South Africa. A long week-end with our missionaries in Johannesburg on the gold Reef gave me a glimpse of mining operations on a colossal scale. Ever since gold was discovered there, fifty years ago, native labor has been drawn to the mines as iron filings to a magnet. Three hundred thousand is approximately the level of the shifting Bantu population on the Reef.

Talk about missionaries in action! I will match Dr. J. D. Taylor, Mrs. Clara Bridgman, and Mr. Ray Phillips, all of Johannesburg, with any three people I know anywhere for sheer achievement in the realm of constructive social and religious service. Johannesburg is a city with a conscience in spite of its sprawling, greedy, grasping search for gold. Our missionaries are set to appeal to that conscience on behalf of the Bantu population, as well as to guide Bantu leaders themselves in seeking something more than gold. A whole battery of Christian institutions and welfare committees are at work, almost entirely with local support, as is right.

In helping to furnish and to train Christian leadership on the Reef, the American Board is rendering well-recognized service of the highest order.

It is an overnight railway journey from Johannesburg to Durban by the sea, and an hour from Durban to Amanzimtoti Institute along the southern shore. Here among the sugar-cane covered, rolling hills is the center of one of the finest missions of the American Board. One hundred years ago American Board missionary pioneers began Christian work among the Zulus.

A Notable Centenary.

Centenary exercises were held June 22nd in a beautiful, natural amphitheatre on the campus. The present paramount Zulu Chief, Mysheni, a Christian, was one of those on the platform. After his brief remarks late in the program, he presented a beautiful leather loin-cloth to His Excellency, Lord Clarendon, the Governor-General of the Union of South Africa. Zulus agreed with a comment made by a later Zulu speaker to the effect that had it not been for the missionaries, the Chief and his friends would have been roaming about the country in a loin-cloth or less, armed with knob-berry, shield and assegai, instead of presenting a loin-cloth to the Governor-General.

If the loin-cloth is a symbol of the past, the Agricultural and Industrial Show held in connection with the Centenary furnished many suitable symbols of the future. Over two thousand exhibits proved its popularity among the natives (only natives were allowed to exhibit), and several thousand visitors in one afternoon and evening registered marked approval. The Zulu is learning to live! Amanzimtoti Institute, Inanda Seminary for Girls, the McCord Zulu Hospital, the Umkandhlu or Church Council, and many related institutions and organizations in which Zulu Christians take a significant part, witness to the vitality of the Christian faith among these people.

One most significant occasion during the week of meetings was the graduation exercises of a class of nine young men who were ready to enter the Christian ministry. How the older pastors welcomed them! Every one of them has already been called to a pasterate. At their graduation service, Sunday afternoon, an interested Western visitor caught a new vision of the transforming power of Christ. Christ belongs neither to the East nor the West, neither to the North nor to the South. He belongs to every nation. He can transform any nation.

I turn my face northward next week. After spending August in the Near East, September will find me back in Boston.

Yours sincerely,
FRED FIELD GOODSELL,
Executive Vice-President.

THE PARADE PASSES.

Tears come to my eys when I see a parade,
The people about me laugh and shout,
But there is something about it that makes me afraid
And chills my heart with a fear and a doubt.

What can it be in the thud and the throb
Of the beating feet as they pass on their way
That fills my throat with a choking dry sob
While the other people are laughing and gay?

Is it I see them marching again
Down the long road that all men abhor,
The boys of today grown into men
Led like cattle to the butcher we call war?

Is it I think of the boys that we know
Murdered before our very eyes
As was the youth of two decades ago
In useless, futile sacrifice?

Is it I think of a long parade
Back from a chaos where souls are lost
And lives are broken and tossed away,
Back from another holocaust?

And all the music for the young and the brave
Will be a lone bugle, taps over a grave?

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

"GIVE US OUR DAILY BREAD."

Jesus liked bread. And so do most of us. But he liked some that we do not choose. He ate unleavened wafers of wheat, or rye, or barley in the home of his friends and liked it so well that he prayed for more.

Jesus fed it to the hungry. Once all that he had for the big crowd was the lunch of a little lad who had only barley cakes and fish. But there was plenty for all, and they seemed to like it.

But one time the Master refused bread. He would not use His divine power to turn stones into bread. He would not use all His powers just to feed his body. He knew that he needed more than bread. His soul must have a chance to grow. But we too often forget that. Parents feed the child so the body will grow, but all too often they leave the soul to starve. They are careful that the blight of the sun gets to the body, but seem not to know that it is more important for the Sun of Righteousness to shine in the soul. And one wonders sometimes if young people are as eager for a soul tan as they are for a body tan. Do they expose the soul to the light of God as much as they do the body to old Sol? Do they feed the soul as often as the body? In the stress and strain of living I fancy that the soul needs refreshment as often as the body.

Bread is a symbol of spiritual food. When the lad's lunch had fed five thousand, Jesus preached to the people about feeding the soul. He said that they were to eat His body. They did not understand, but there came a time when His body was broken for them, and for us. Now when we eat the communion bread, we remember Jesus and feed the soul on thoughts of him, try to make our lives like His. Then we feed on Him.

Jesus wants us to pray for daily bread for worrying about where tomorrow's food is to come from, and our spirits will get a chance to feed on the Spirit of Jesus. It is no wonder that we are so little in spirit for we feed on Him so little.

A WHISPERING CAMPAIGN.

A big business man has recently admitted to a Senate investigation committee that he suggested some months ago that his company start a "whispering campaign" against the president of the United States, and that part of the whisper would be to the effect that the President is crazy. He seemed to be ashamed of the idea when questioned about it, and his associates denied approving it or having anything to do with it, but the whisper got started. This man in whom people had placed confidence should be ashamed of suggesting such a thing.

So should everyone else who starts a whispering campaign. If there is not enough truth to bring the thing out into the open, then there is not enough truth to justify the repetition of the story. To pass along stories that will injure the credit, reputation, good name of another is despicable. It is unworthy of a human being, one who was made just a little lower than the angels. This is the kind of thing that cuts the heart out of people and benefits no one.

And yet how often it is done even among church people. Recently a visitor sat near where I work and seemed to get keen delight in telling gossipy stories that had no interest to those who listened and could not possibly help anyone. Often there come to me tales about people, and myself, that I know are not so, and if they were it would be very unfriendly to tell the world about them. Many a preacher has had his soul dwarfed by the suspicions of those whose minds were none too clean. Thousands of church members have been lost to the Church because of the "whispering campaign" of those who should have welcomed them to higher ideals and life.

I want to suggest a campaign to stop crushing the life of people by unholy gossip. My suggestion is that we form a "shut-mouth-club" and all become charter and faithful members. When you haven't anything to talk about but gossip concerning your neighbors, then in the name of all that is holy and reasonable, don't talk.

WORDS.

Keep a watch on your words, my darling,
For words are wonderful things;
They are sweet like the bee's fresh honey—
Like the bees they have terrible stings.
They can bless like the warm glad sunshine,
And brighten a lonely life;
They can cut in the strife of anger,
Like an open two-edged knife.

Let them pass through your lips unchallenged
If their errand is true and kind—
If they come to support the weary,
To comfort and help the blind;
If a bitter, revengeful spirit
Prompts the words, let them be unsaid;
They may flash through the brain like lightning,
Or fall on a heart like lead.

Keep them back, if they are cold and cruel,
Under bar, lock and seal;
The wounds they make, my darling,
Are always slow to heal.
May peace ever guard your life, and ever
From the time of your early youth,
May the words that you daily utter
Be words of beautiful truth.

ANCIENT WISDOM FOR PRESENT-DAY PROBLEMS.

Christian Endeavor Topic for Aug. 18, 1935.

Daily Bible Readings.

Monday—Honesty in Business. Prov. 11:1.
Tuesday—Who is rich? Prov. 13:7.
Wednesday—Windness in Speech. Prov. 15:1, 2.
Thursday—Avoid Strong Drink. Prov. 23:29-32.
Friday—Self-control. Prov. 25:28.
Saturday—Love Is Best. Prov. 15:16, 17.

The topic for today lends itself to interesting discussion. The worship service may well be brief to give more time for the consideration of the different ideas which should be developed. Suitable songs will include, "Faith of Our Fathers," "Yield Not to Temptation," "In Heavenly Love Abiding," "I Would Be True," and "If I Have Wounded Any Soul Today."

Our modern problems seem to be about the same as those in the day of the writer of Proverbs. In fact it seems that our problems are just human problems. Study the daily Bible readings, and then think through the things that are suggested in the Scripture for the day. Get different people to discuss the various problems in the light of the teachings of the Bible. Be frank, but stick to facts. For instance, if it is better to tell lies than the truth, let those who think so give facts to prove their belief.

Most people today, if my guess is correct, do not believe the statements found in our Scripture lesson. Do you believe this one? "Better is little with righteousness, than great revenues without right." Suppose you could get a million dollars for telling one lie, would you take the million or tell the truth? If you were pretty sure of winning a bet, would you gamble or stay poor? If you were selecting school books for a state and a certain publisher would pay you well for selecting his book although it was inferior, would you select the best book and stay poor or the poorer book and get rich? Do law makers always vote for that which they believe to be the best for the most people, or do they sometimes vote for the thing that brings them the biggest income? When we read of little "black bags" and other parcels being passed from representatives of bug business to men in high governmental positions, it is difficult to still cling to the idea that Americans agree with the ancient idea of Scripture that it is better to be right than rich.

Try this one. "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city." Who believes that controlling one's temper is more important than becoming head of the firm, the society leader, or the President? Not many. Ever hear Christian young people say, "That made me so mad. . .. " "I am so mad I don't know what to do." "I got so mad that I blessed her out." Had you rather be able to rule your own spirit or be governor of your state? Can you remain quite in spirit while all about you are losing control of theirs? Read again what the sacred writer said, and see if you believe he was right.

Things God Hates.

Hate is a pretty strong word, and one that we should use sparingly. I do not like to think that God hates, and I am sure that he does not hate people. We usually hate people rather than attitudes. God feels the other way. He loves the people, but is greatly displeased with things they do.

"These six things doth the Lord hate; yea, seven are an abomination unto Him:

"A proud look, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood, a heart that deviseth wicked imaginations, feet that be swift in running to mischief, a false witness that speaketh lies, and he that soweth discord among his brethren." Or translated into modern language, God hates snobs, liars, gangsters (or soldiers), sellers of goldbricks, demagogues, gossips and gun salesmen."

"A proud look . . . snobs. Do you know any? What have we to be proud of? The family tree? Most trees are crooked, have broken limbs, or bad spots, and some are even rotten at heart. The kind of boat that brought our ancestors across the Atlantic tells nothing of the kind of person who came. And we may be entirely different from our ancestors. "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." Money and education have their place, but these are nothing to boast about. "The only thing we have a right to be proud of is character and integrity . . . and if we have those we wouldn't be snobs anyway."

Go through the list of these seven things and discuss each in the meeting they are modern problems all right. Try to discover what the Christian religion will do to correct human faults that God hates. Then close with a moment of consecration when all are challenged to live the Christian way in a very unchristian world.

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

JOSIAH (A Religious Reformer).

Lesson VI—August 11, 1935.

Golden Text: "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve."—Matthew 4:10.

Lesson: II Kings 22:—23:30.

Josiah began to reign when he was only eight years old. Althought he had to depend in large measure upon the advice and counsel of his staff, from the beginning of his reign he showed remarkable ability, and especially devotion to religion. In the eighth year of his reign, when he was only sixteen, he instituted rather sweeping religious reforms, and early served notice to the nation that he stood for religious ideals and practices. He reigned for thirty-one years, and was one of the best kings who ever ruled over Judah. Some significant, indeed one of the most significant events in Judah's history occurred in his reign, namely the finding of the "Book of the Law" to which reference will be made later.

Religious Reforms.

Josiah believed that a nation ought to give its first and only allegiance to God. From the beginning he waged an uncompromising warfare against the idolatrous practices which had gotten such a hold on the people under Nanasseh and Ammon. He broke down the altars of Baal, destroyed the high places, burned the images, and even burnt the bones of the priests of these false religions on their own altars. What a profound influence a leader exerts on national life. The attitude of rulers toward religion does not necessarily dominate a nation, or guarantee that all the people will follow the leader. But it does exert a profound influence upon the life of the nation. One wishes that our President and men in high authority, both in state and nation, would give a little more time and support to the church and to the religious phases of our national and state life. To a degree which perhaps they do not suspect, people are influenced by their attitude toward the moral and spiritual values of life. One thing is certain—mere economic changes will not save America. Unless our national life is undergirded and transformed by religious ideals and sanctities we shall go the way of the other nations of the past who forgot God.

Repairing the House of God.

Josiah was concerned about the condition of the house of God. He saw to it that it was put in repair and kept in good condition. He felt a point of honor as touching this matter. Would that we had some of Josiah's pride in this matter. How often churches and church buildings are allowed to fall into disrepair, how often they are a reflection upon religion. This does not mean that churches have to be imposing edifices—a great many congregations have learned to their sorrow that it is easy to over-build—but it does not mean that every church, no matter how small, or how limited its resources, can be made and kept attractive. A coat of paint, a few shrubs, a few repairs, a touch here and a touch there, will often work wonders in the appearance of a church, and give new dignity and value to it. It is sometimes difficult to believe that religion means much to some congregations, when one sees the places in which they worship. Why not have a Church Beautification Day and put your church in first class order.

By the way there is one significant statement in connection with the repairing of the temple which must not be left out of this discussion. The account says "Howbeit there was no reckoning made with them of the money that was delivered into their hand, because they dealt faithfully." The men of that far-off day can tell many business men of today something about downright honesty and integrity. How generally could one practice that method today, not only in government life, but in business life?

The Book of the Law.

Repairing the temple led to a monstrous discovery. A book of the law was found. By whom it had been written, how it came to be in the temple, how long it had been there, nobody knows. But it was a most important document, and it was immediately presented to the king. He immediately saw that it had tremendous consequences. Indeed, as he read it, he felt as if he was reading a pronouncement of doom upon his nation, for they had violated the demands of this astounding book. He immediately called a solemn assembly, read to them the contents of the book, and consecrated them in a solemn covenant to keep its laws. Scholars are pretty well agreed that this "book of the law" was our book of Deuteronomy.

It makes a difference when people discover, or recover the Bible. For many, in our modern life it is a lost Book. We need a revival of reading the Bible. There is a power about it that cannot be denied when it has a chance in our lives.

Making a Covenant.

Josiah called upon the people publicly to make a covenant with the Lord, to walk after Him, and to keep his commandments and his statutes. There are those who say that they do not make vows or resolutions because they are afraid they will break them. Well, what of it? Unless one makes vows, unless one has some great heart covenant with his God he will not get very far in his religious life. To have made a great vow—if it was made in sincerity—and to have broken it, is far better than to be content to drift along, without any great purpose undergirding one's life.

Keeping the Passover.

For some reason the Passover had been neglected for years. Josiah re-instituted it. He knew the value of religious feasts, of great religious observances. Alas for that people or that nation which forsakes the assembling of themselves together for purposes distinctively religious. Josiah's method was sound. He was not content simply with destroying idolatrous practices; he directed the minds of his people into constructive religious activities.

JESUS.

Dost Thou not hallow heaven?
Thou art the Christ—
Wherefore Thy feet are shod
Even to traverse
Uttermost summits of God:
Thou art the Christ—
The Anointed One—to be Both Via Crucis
And immortality.

Thou are the Christ—
Yea! But we know Thee best
Wearing the garment
All of our lips have prest!
Jesus—dear Name
Whereby sins are forgiven!
What memory threshold
Dost Thou not hallow heaven?

"GET OUT AND GET UNDER."

"Wherefore do you spend money for that which is not bread? and your labour for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness."—Isaiah 55:2.

One can shut himself up within the walls of his own room with his own thoughts and ways until he fancies that activities elsewhere are foreign to him. On the other hand, he can get out of this self of his and actually engage in activities about him and change his whole prospectives of them, of folks, and of the world.

It is believed that many a person gets nothing out of the church and religious activities merely because he has separated himself from them and will not give them nor himself a chance. Once he gets out of himself, actually participates in religious thoughts and activities he becomes another person. He now enjoys what once he thought had no joy in it.

The advertising slogan for Wrigley's chewing gum is "Buy a package and try it." That's the secret of it.

Prayer—Our heavenly Father come thou into our hearts and bless us. Create within us clean hearts and fill us with desire and enthusiasm for thee. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"MEGALOMANIA."

"Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes, and prudent in their own sight!"—Isa. 5:21.

It was a great prayer of Robert Burns' when he said:

"Would to God the gift to gie us
To see ourselves as others see us."

A story comes to us of one who, more highly esteemed for intellectual activity than modesty, was asked to speak into a phonograph. A little later he was asked to listen to his own voice. He did so in silence, then turned to the company and said, in a tone of resentment, "It is very strange! I can't understand it. Through this machine I am made to speak in a peculiar bumptious and affected manner!"

Many of us would be surprised, one wonders, did we see ourselves as we appear to others. We would probably dislike ourselves like we dislike others sometimes.

Prayer—Dear heavenly Father, so fill our hearts with Thy spirit that there may be no room and no chance for us to make the fatal mistake of making ourselves the center of things. We would cease from our own wisdom and trust in Thee. We would be so full of Thy light that when others see us they may see a Christian. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"LIFE'S FUNERAL PROCESSION."

"And when the Lord saw her he had compassion on her, and said unto her, weep not."—Luke 7:13.

Life is a funeral procession. We carry death and decay in ourselves. There is that that destroys and there is that that builds up. Were it not for the renewing and rebuilding powers of life we would soon decay physically, morally and spiritually.

When Christ met the funeral procession at the gate of Nain, He epitomized the new birth and the new life of heaven which he so succinctly revealed to Nicodemus. Jesus met death there, rebuked it and there was life, and they all glorified God. Jesus met death during all his ministry, touched it and life sprang therefrom. Jesus met death on Golgotha, and it was not death, it was life everlasting. Jesus makes life not a dying thing, but a living thing triumphant unto life eternal, so that we say "there is no death." Death is the beginning, not the end of life.

"They are not gone who pass
Beyond the clasp of hand,
They have put off their shoes
Softly to walk by day
Within our thoughts, to tread
At night our dream-led paths of sleep.

"They are not dead who live
In hearts they leave behind.
To those whom they have blessed
They live in life again,
And shall live through the years
Eternal life, and grow
Each day more beautiful
As time declares their good,
Forgets the rest and proves
Their immortality."

—Hugh Robert Arr.

Prayer—O Lord, our Father, thanks be to Thee who givest us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. May that victory be ours today—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"COMING BACK HOME."

"If thou return to the Almighty, thou shalt be built up, thou shalt put away iniquity far from thy tabernacles."—Job 22:23.

A story of the English scientist, George Romanes, comes to us, in which it is stid that he lost his faith in his science, (as many scientists do). One day he said, "When I think of the hallowed glory of the creed which once was mine, and then of the loneliness and barrenness of life as I now find it, I feel the sharpest pang of which my nature is susceptible."

Romanes came back to his faith through his own suffering.

Will you give up the faith which greater men than we have found satisfying? If so, you are worse off than a ship without a rudder, for the master of the ship does know where he wants to go and you do not.

Prayer—O Lord, Thy power is in love. May we have that love in all our ways and so love faithfully unto the end. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"DON'T QUIT."

"Hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown."—Rev. 3:11.

"Hold fast the form of sound words—in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus."—II Timothy 1:13.

"Seeing then that we have a great high priest—Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our Profession."—Heb. 4:14.

All the world hates a quitter, unless he is quitting for something better. Juras quit but he did nothing better; money would not save him, and he hanged himself in remorse. John Mark quit Paul and the cause of the Kingdom. He found nothing else better, so he came back later and died in the service.

Once upon a time everybody quit Jesus, even the disciples assayed to give up. Peter stuck (though for expediency's sake he denied Him later) and became the saving influence of the others. He cried, "to whom shall we go. Thou hast the words of eternal life, and we are sure of it."

The moment one thinks of giving up Christianity he is face to face with two questions: What can possibly take the place of my faith? and do I understand fully how perfectly this faith in God answers every human need? No one should quit until he can answer these satisfactorily.

As we follow Jesus in the fields, midst the hills, by the pools, in the cities, in the home, and implant His teachings in our hearts, His truth seeps into our consciousness, slowly transforming our vision and revealing the knowledge of His glory, which answers every human need. We see, even as the multitudes said in his day that "here is a man who gives a new meaning to life, and who makes us feel that he is our friend.

Prayer—Say the Lord's Prayer.

SATURDAY.

"GOD'S HAND."

"The hand of our God is upon all them that seek him, for good."—Ezra 8:15:23.

Ezra, leading back his band of exiles to their fatherland, was ashamed to ask an escort from the heathen king, because he had boasted to the king of the divine guidance and protection, that the hand of God was upon all them that seek Him, and that He would lead them into all good.

Would that all Christians had Ezra's reluctance to rely, or even seem to rely, on material aid! Would that all Christians would rest their confidence plainly upon the unseen Power!

For there is no power but of God. Progress in any worldly undertaking is His affair alone. He is the God of success, and there is no accomplishment elsewhere. What seems to be achievement, without Him falls speedily into nothingness.

Prayer—Lay Thy good hand upon us, O our God, for our good! It is the hand of guidance. —Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

"CHASE PEACE."

"Follow after peace with all men."—Hebrews 12:12-17.

The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews realized that peace is not something that comes unsought. Peace is not the easy and ordinary human condition. Strife seeks us and is upon us before we are aware of it, but if we would have peace we must seeks it, and seek it ardently; we must pursue it, follow it, chase it, with all our might.

That is why Christ said, "Blessed are the peace makers." Peace must be made, it will not make itself. And that is why war so persists in the world: men are constantly manufacturing facilities and material for war; they are not spending a ten-thousandth as much time and money on getting ready for peace. We have secretaries of the army and navy, but we have no secretary of the peace.

So if we would be at peace with all men, we must cultivate the spirit of peace. It must be our constant aim. It must be uppermost in our thought.

Prayer—Thou Prince of Peace, enlist us in Thy beautiful endeavor; and plant, we pray Thee, the seeds of peace in the hearts of men.—Amen.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D., Pastor.

THE VALUE OF SONG.

By JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

"Sing unto the Lord."—Psa. 96:1.

The nation which gave the world Jesus Christ was a singing nation. One of their most illustrious citizens wrote the following admonition: "Be filled with the Spirit; speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs." (Eph. 5:19.) And nearly two thousand years later when the best books of worship music are made they include: Psalms, hymns, and gospel songs. Mark tells us that at the conclusion of the Lord's Supper, when it was first established, "when they had sung an hymn they went out into the Mount of Olives." (Mark 14:26.) And one of the most often given commandments in the whole Bible is the one commanding us to sing unto the Lord.

We think it is a very great sin to fail of the keeping of a commandment of the Lord, and yet forget that one of the commandments of the Book is to "sing unto the Lord." If a man kill, steal, bear false witness, or hate his brother he is a sinner. If he fail to "sing unto the Lord" it is assumed he is only exercising his own choice in the matter. But not so the Bible. In it over and often he is commanded to sing. If you take a concordance of the Bible and notice how many times we are commanded to sing you will be startled. Why should it be overlooked so lightly? Why should we feel that we have no part to do in the matter? Why should it be neglected in our homes, half done in our churches, and commercialized in our country?

How greatly one of God's sweetest commandments has been overlooked. Or on the other hand it has been so desecrated as to make silence often desirable. When we sing we join with the very universe itself, from the time "when the morning stars sang together" (Job 38:7.) until now we have had a singing universe. "Sing, O ye heavens," exults Isaiah; "the ships of Tarshish did sing of Thee" cries Ezekiel; "then shall the trees and the woods sing out" says the writer of the Chronicles. Byron says:

> "There's music in the sighing of a reed;
> There's music in the gushing of a rill;
> There's music in all things, if men had ears:
> Their earth is but an echo of the spheres."

Longfellow says:

> "Yea, music is the prophet's art
> Among the gifts that God has sent,
> One of the most magnificent."

John Milton has so cleverly expressed the power and glory of music in the phrase:

> "Such sweet compulsions doth in music lie."

Then, my friends, if "such sweet compulsions doth in music lie" is it not right and proper that we make the very most of it in church? Is it not right and proper that our children be taught it, that our folks all use it as the very instrument of God to bring Him praise and glory, and to bless our own lives?

> 'The man that hath no music in himself,
> Nor is not moved with concord of sweet sounds,
> Is fit for treasons, strategems and spoils."

As I said in the outset, the nation which gave the world Jesus Christ was a singing nation. And their singing was religious. It was connected with their worship. David, Israel's singing-king, desired to build the temple. And although he was not permitted to do so, he prepared materials therefor. And, also, he prepared their musical program as well. We read of his choir and orchestra of four thousand persons. This large number was divided into twenty-four sections, and there were twelve highly-trained and talented soloists in each section. That was music on a national scale. The nations thus praised the Lord. And out of that nation the best of what we know about religions came. We dare not neglect God's command to sing in connection with our modern worship lest we lose our religious faith.

Israel was beaten at almost every turn of history, but they could never erase music and song from their soul. And when the nations who trod upon Judah are forever forgotten her contribution to humanity will be only coming into its own. She was commanded to sing, and she sang. God will see to it that she is not forgotten.

One of the most touching of all incidents of song is that recorded by John Mark in his account of the Lord's Supper: "When they had sung an hymn they went out into the mount of Olives." It is a clear case of Jesus singing. For who can believe that that group of awed, heart-broken disciples could have themselves struck up a hymn? Jesus, as he had led them in other things, now led them in song. Standing upder the shadow of the cross we see the singing Saviour of the world. He gave thanks in song at the close of the service. The angels sang at his birth. He sang his own song at his death. His heart was right. Song could be on his lips. His motives were holy, and high as heaven itself. There would be melody in his soul.

Some years ago I was principal of a High School in Virginia, and at the same time pastor of a large country church, and another church that was a child of the former. Jest before I started for school one inclement March morning I received a message from one of the finest Christian gentlemen it has ever been my privilege to know. He wanted his pastor to come to see him. He was dying. As his family stood about his bedside he told them that he was ready to meet his Lord, and that he was happy in his soul, and requested them to sing softly some of the old hymns of the church. Sing! Song had been a blessing to him all his life. It had served to help him in rearing a fine family of children. It had helped him to rear them in the church, and to educate them in his church's college. It would be a blessing to him now. It was. And those who with a true heart keep God's command to sing will ever have his blessings.

Yes, Jesus sang with his disciples. What a feast that must have been, and what a memory for them in all the years which followed. What a blessed memory for all of us who had singing fathers and mothers! We should cherish song, and pass it on to our children. That is why your church seeks the high standard in music it does. And that it why we always insist on congregational singing. That is why our department superintendents insist on it in the worship service programs in their departments. A singing church is a living church.

Thomas Carlyle says, "A song will outlive all sermons in the memory." And how true he is! We can all testify to that. The sweet songs of church, and of childhood, they remain with us.

> "Such songs have power to quiet
> The restless pulse of care,
> And come like the benediction
> That follows after prayer."
> —Longfellow.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Christian Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

We have had more applications to take children in the last two months than we have had in the same length of time in several years. Many of them are worthy applications and the children should come here or go to a like institution somewhere. If anything touches my heart it is to see a little boy or girl transferred from place to place to get a place to stay—not a home.

A lady brought a little boy to see me a few days ago that has been treated that way. He is sometimes in North Carolina other times in South Carolina and maybe next winter in Pennsylvania. He is a nice looking little boy and wears a smile. But he did look hungry for a home. He lost his mother some years ago—a great loss to him or to any child. His father works for a corporation and his work takes him from place to place, and the little boy—you can guess the rest. It is the little fellow that suffers.

When I am faced with a situation like this I just feel like putting my arm around the little fellow and say to him, "Come and live at the Christian Orphanage. You deserve a chance in life."

But however worthy the case or how great the need we have to be governed by the income we have to work with. Some of our churches take it for granted that the orphanage can take and care for children on fresh air, or at least they never send us an offering to help. We are doing our best with the funds that are given us to work with. If every church would help it would make the work so much easier. The writer was elected Superintendent of a Sunday School years ago. That church did nothing for anything and the pastor's salary was a long way in arrears. We asked the school if they would make a monthly offering to help support the orphanage. They thought it out of the question, but they, nevertheless, did and paid up the pastor's salary too. A live church will grow.

INJURED, BUT NOT ABANDONED.

Injured people need help—and usually no one knows this better than themselves. A thrilling story of help for an injured man occurred last year as vast numbers of sympathetic listeners heard the details by radio. One of Admiral Byrd's men in the Antarctic Expedition injured his back, and there were no doctors at hand. But radio communication was one of the news events and safeguards of this heroic adventure, and a ship from New Zealand was soon on its way, carrying a doctor to the patient. Meantime, those who listened in over their radios in their warm and comfortable homes on a winter Saturday evening heard a medical student who was with the expedition describe in accurate pathological detail the exact symptoms and conditions of the sufferer, while a group of four physicians some 10,000 miles away, in a New York Columbia studio, listened intently and made notes on the patient's condition, in order that they might reply by radio and prescribe the exact treatment pending the arrival of the physician from New Zealand. What a modern parable in action was this! An injured and suffering man; a friend to note and report his exact need; sympathetic and competent listening ears to receive the report; then skilled counsel telling how the injured man should be cared for. So the Great Physician listens to every case of need flashed to him by the radio of prayer, and instantly he answers in unerring knowledge and skill; indeed, he takes immediate and full charge of the case, and heals in whatever way he knows is needed and best. We have a Physician who is "touched with the feeling of our infirmities . . . Let us, therefore, come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need."—In Sunday School Times.

YOU NEVER CAN TELL.

You never can tell when you send a word—
  Like an arrow shot from a bow
By an archer blind—be it cruel or kind,
  Just where it will chance to go.
It may pierce the breast of your dearest friend,
  Tipped with its poison or balm;
To a stranger's heart in life's great mart
  It may carry its pain or its calm.
You can never tell when you do an act
  Just what the result will be;
But with every deed you are sowing a seed,
  Though its harvest you may not see.
Each kindly act is an acorn dropped
  In God's productive soil;
Though you may not know, yet the trees will grow
  And shelter the brows that toil.

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

How Christian music is. It is, like Christ, most unselfish of all arts. The painter when he has done his painting for his praise. The sculptor has his work in stone. The architect has his towering building as his monument. But not so with a song. When the singer has finished her song it is finished. But is it finished? You remember some poet has placed a line in the psalms after David was gone as follows:

"The songs of David, son of Jesse, are ended."

But are they ended? No, a thousand times no, for they still live on with their beauty unimpaired. So while the song is sung and is thus completely given it still abides:

'Long, long afterward, in an oak,
I found the arrow still unbroke;
And the song, from beginning to the end,
I found again in the heart of a friend."

Let us sing our praise to our God, and in the meantime lodge in the hearts of others the saving gospel of our Lord.

LIFE EVERLASTING.

By I. A. BARNES.

The intelligent student of psychology learns that there are powers and possibilities of the human mind and spirit that never have had an opportunity for their fullest expression and application. One of two things is inevitable; either there has been a vast over-supply and waste of spiritual potentialities in this world, or there must be a continuation of life after what we call death, so that these potentialities and possibilities may have ample opportunity for development and self-expression.

The fact that about one-third of the human race die in childhood, and before the mind and spirit have developed, raises the question of whether they will have opportunity for development in another life, or that their deaths were just so much loss to the race. Think this over for a few minutes. No doubt among the thousands of children who died there were many Shakespeares, Addisons, Websters, Franklins, Washingtons, not to say Edisons, Burbanks, Marconis, Wesleys, Luthers and hundreds of others that could be named. Will the race never know its losses in these deaths, or will there be another life in which all of these potentialities shall come to full flower? You may not believe in a "hereafter," but you cannot dismiss this problem without a little serious reflection. It won't hurt you to think.

And another point to consider is that, physical death cannot possibly stop, or retard mental and spiritual development, so that these child spirits must go forward until they reach the fullest perfection of spiritual life. And in order to do this they must have moral responsibility, for there can be no spiritual development without moral responsibility, by which to test spiritual growth. It is a mistake to conclude that there will be no service to perform or responsibilities to assume in the life that is to come. If men are to be men in the hereafter, they must have all of the elements that characterized them as men here. These things, perhaps, will constitute "personal identity." For "we shall know, even as we are also known." It is moral responsibility that is the badge of intelligent manhood and womanhood, and we do not want to be less in the next life than we have been in this. Think of it!

The foreign missionary task has happily been redefined of late in terms less patronizing toward non-Christian peoples than were once employed. . . . Today the greatest force at work all over the world to offset suspicions, antagonisms and war trends is the force of Christian friendship, represented in backward lands by missionaries living close to the hearts of the peoples in the land of their voluntary adoption.—Russell Henry Stafford.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Representing the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches.

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY. IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY. IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY.

VOLUME LXXXVII. RICHMOND. VA., THURSDAY, AUGUST 15, 1935. NUMBER 33.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Should Get a Good One.—

A recent press dispatch announced that there were "forty-eight Republican and Democratic candidates in the race for the Mayorality of Philadelphia."

Benevolence Budget Increased.—

The Methodist Episcopal Church reports an increase of $46,633 in contributions for benevolences for the fiscal year ending on May 31st, over those of the previous year. This increase, amounting to 1.47 per cent, is the first shown since the year 1929. While the amount of increase is small, it is hopeful in that the downward drop has been stopped and an upturn started.

World Convention of Disciples.—

The Disciples of Christ, in 1930, inaugurated what is known as the World Convention of Disciples of Christ. The first convention was held at Washington, D. C., in that year. The second world convention was held the past week, August 7th to 12th, in Leicester, England. Not less than 42 countries were represented, there being over five hundred delegates there from the United States and Canada. At the present time this denomination, which is one of the youngest, has approximately 2,000,000 adherents throughout the world, divided among possibly 9,000 churches.

" . . . of Glory Lead but to the Grave.—

It is just another version of Grey's famous "Elegy Written in a Country Church Yard." This time it was written by a New London, Connecticut, junk dealer. He paid $5,000 for some eighty tons of lead, thirty tons of brass and a similar amount of steel. Just five years ago this same lead, bronze and steel was valued at between $4,000 and a half million dollars. It was a yacht—then in its prime—today a yacht still, but outmoded and unwanted. Only five years ago this junk dealer's new acquisition sailed under the name of Enterprise, and successfully defended the American Yacht Cup by outsailing Shamrock V. With yachts as with men "the paths of glory" often are the same.

A Longer Life Span Possible.—

The Journal of the American Medical Association thinks a longer life span for the human species not only possible but normal. Says this journal: "Comparative anatomists have established that the natural life expectancy of an animal is usually five times the period needed for full skeletal development. Since twenty-one years is required for full skeletal growth in man, the age of 105 must be set as the approximate normal human limit." Yet under present conditions, only 33 persons out of 100,000 may expect to reach 100 years, while most people fall by the wayside between the ages of sixty and eighty. Longevity is now thought to be as much an inherited characteristic as is height or the color of the hair.

Loyalty Oaths.—

We believe the movement to demand loyalty oaths of teachers is foreign to true American principles and inimical to the very constitutions they are designed to protect. These oaths so stridently advocated by Mr. Hearst and his powerful press are in reality built on the hope that teachers will be browbeaten into avoiding discussion of all current controversial issues. The desire to make "yes" men of our teachers and through their subservience to make our students accept things as they are instead of inspiring them to overthrow the evils that now threaten to plunge us all into the barbarism from which humanity has so painfully emerged. Youth should be taught to think, not blindly accept. Americanism demands the former; it is Nazism that asks for the latter.—The Presbyterian Tribune.

All Things in Common—Certainly Salaries.—

Rather a radical departure from the commonplace was a plan adopted by the Detroit Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. This "plan" provides for "the pooling of ministerial salaries on the part of such of its members as shall agree to share and share alike." Ministers who approve of the program are to be organized as "The Ministers' Salary Cooperative of the Detroit Conference," and "shall file with the secretary of the conference their written promise to share and share alike in their total receipts as salaries." Of course, money received for marriages or for officiating at funerals, or income from such investments as a minister might have would not be put in the common chest. It is recognized that there must be a fairly representative group, if the plan is to meet with any success, so it has been further provided that the plan is not to become operative "until the secretary shall have formally announced their willingness and determination to share." This modern adaptation of primitive Christian socialism, if it becomes operative, should prove an interesting experiment.

Warns Against Unconstitutional Laws.—

A judge of one of our Western District Courts, in granting an injunction against collection of processing taxes, said: "Every statute enacted by the Congress and approved by the President is presumed to be constitutional. The chief reason for the presumption that a statute regularly enacted and approved is constitutional is the assumption that members of Congress before they voted for it and the chief executive before he gave it his approval carefully considered whether it was within the powers conferred on Congress by the Constitution. Members of Congress have sworn that they will support the Constitution and the President solemnly has sworn that he will preserve, protect and defend the Constitution. The courts have rejected as unthinkable the suggestion sometimes made that the President and Congressmen might disregard their oaths, that they might seek to shift from their shoulders to the shoulders of the judges the responsibility imposed thereby. Any such course is not only unthinkable, it would be quite as indefensible as that of a witness, sworn to tell the truth, who should commit perjury on the theory that the jury would perceive it and disregard it." A rather sharp warning is this, but a timely warning withal, coming as it does just after a demand upon Congress that it enact bills now pending and leave it to the courts to pass upon their legality.

Riding on Cotton.—

There is today no blacker cloud on the agricultural horizon than that overhanging the king crop of the South. The artificial boost in cotton prices by the Federal Government undeniably gave a much needed temporary relief, but it practically wrote the death sentence of the South's supremacy in the cotton growing world. As has been stated before, last year the South, for the first time since the War between the States, produced less cotton than did the other cotton-growing countries of the world. The native cotton crop this year will be larger, but so will the foreign crop, and other countries have discovered that they can raise cotton—some of them better cotton—for less than we can produce it. But maybe the cloud has a silver lining for the South. In the near future motorists may find themselves riding on cotton. Clinton T. Revere, said to be a cotton expert who knows whereof he speaks, thinks that the use of cotton fabric in road construction is not only possible, but that it is admirably adapted to use for secondary road-systems throughout the nation. These roads, as at present maintained, cost from $250 to $400 per mile per year, which could be almost eliminated for a number of years through cotton-fabric treatment and proper surfacing. The process, which has already been tried on a small scale, consists of applying an open mesh fabric to a road bed which has been impregnated with an emulsion of asphalt or hot tar. Mr. Revere says that "it would seem that America, now so vitally concerned in its cotton problem, could not leave unexplored an avenue which holds forth such promise of solution."

NOTES-PERSONALS

News from the Churches.

Rev. W. J. Andes preached yesterday at the historic church, Old Providence, located in Alamance County near Graham. Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, pastor, was away on his vacation.

Dr. C. H. Rowland, pastor of our Greensboro Church, preached Sunday, at 11:00 o'clock, on the topic, "The Love of God"—a very timely and inspirational message. There was a good attendance at the service.

Rev. A. L. Granger, assistant pastor of our Greensboro Church and a member of the Senior Class, Elon College, 1935-36, is also pastor of Auburn Christian Church. Mr. Granger is conducting a series of meetings in the Auburn Church this week.

Mr. C. D. Johnston, Rev. W. J. Andes and Dr. S. C. Harrell attended the annual session of the Valley of Virginia Central Conference held last week at Leaksville Christian Church. They report a very enthusiastic and successful session of the Conference.

Mr. A. L. Hook, of the College faculty, is in the Valley of Virginia this week interviewing prospective students for the College. Mr. Hook was born and reared in the valley and is personally acquainted with a number of our people there. His reports are very encouraging.

It has been reported at the College that Miss Sue Preston, daughter of Mr. Talmadge Preston of Belew Creek, N. C., is seriously ill at St. Leo's Hospital, Greensboro. Miss Preston and her family have the sympathy and prayers of the members of the church who know them. Miss Preston was planning to enter Elon College in September.

Rev. W. M. Jay, D. D., for a number of years pastor of the Holland Church, has resigned and is open for work elsewhere. Dr. Jay is a faithful and conscientious pastor. He is a good preacher. It is hoped that some church worthy of his services may offer to him a field of labor. Mrs. Jay is of real assistance wherever Dr. Jay serves.

Rev. O. D. Poythress, South Norfolk, assisted Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, pastor, in a series of meetings at Apple's Chapel, Guilford County, N. C., the past week. Large audiences attended and the meetings were of deep interest. This church has called Brother Crutchfield to be its pastor the coming year. The church has enjoyed real growth and progress under his consecrated leadership.

It comes as a surprise (and regret) that Advance is to be a monthly instead of a weekly, beginning October 1st. The remainder of August and two weeks of September, will bring the weekly as now—after that once per month. As is known, Advance is successor to The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty. Here is wishing for the monthly's great success and good service.

Traffic fatalities—traction lines and automobiles—in the nation the past week end were 92. Comparative figures recently issued show that people are killed far more rapidly by automobiles than in the world war. And the strange thing is that instead of taking warning and giving heed we drive more and more recklessly, and killings from fast and careless driving are rapidly on the increase.

Dr. C. H. Rowland, of our Greensboro Church, has resigned on account of ill health. The church, however retained him as pastor emeritus. His son-in-law, W. E. Wisseman of Schulenberg, Texas, has been elected to succeed Dr. Rowland and will enter upon his pastorate in Greensboro, October 13th. Mr. Wisseman married Miss Mary Graham Rowland. We are glad to welcome them into the active work of the Christian Church.

The jail population of Virginia for the year ending June 30th, was 75,599, according to figures recently issued, an increase of 13,626 over the previous year, the cost to the State being $410,007, an increase of about $61,000 over that of the previous year—a new high record in both number jailed and cost to the Commonwealth. The first year of repeal and "control" in Virginia seems to be quite a success—for the jailors, liquor store and bootleggers.

Rev. Carl R. Key has been called to our Holland Church and has accepted the call. He is to begin his work with the Holland Church September first. Holland is one of our better churches and offers an excellent field for service. Mr. Key is well prepared for his work. He is a graduate of Elon College and an honor graduate of Vanderbilt University and is at present assisting at the Raleigh Christian Church. Both pastor and people are fortunate in this field. The Sun family wishes for them a rich and successful experience together.

The managing editor of The Sun, together with Rev. J. E. McCauley, pastor of the Richmond Church, and his wife and his children, attended the first day of the Virginia Valley Conference, the past week. We enjoyed the sessions and seeing many old acquaintances as well. The conference this year was held at Leaksville Christian Church, just a few miles beyond Luray. It was with regret that we had to return to Richmond before the conference adjourned. We hope next week to have a full account of the conference from the pen of its efficient secretary, Rev. A. W. Andes.

FROM BEREA AND BETHLEHEM.

July was a very busy month for this scribe. The month was started the first Sunday with two sermons, a funeral and a birthday dinner, and it was in this fashion, after the morning service, that our old friend Luther Isley informed us that we had a very urgent call to come home as quickly as possible. The congregation had gone much more quickly that morning than usual, and, for the first time in the seven years we have been serving this church, no one gave us an invitation to go home with them for dinner. Anyhow, we hurried on home with Mr. Isley in the car with us and still without knowledge of any plans that had been made, but when we rounded into the yard it broke upon us just what was on! Lo and behold! there were many of the congregations of both Bethlehem and Berea congregated all about the place with a large table made ready out under the spreading oaks that grace our yard. This table was some thirty-six feet in length and laden with chicken and other good thinsg to eat. When the ladies finished making ready the table, our good friend, Brother A. C. Madren, called the crowd together and with a few well-chosen words, expressed their purpose in coming and wished for us many more such occasions. He then called upon us to grace the table, after which we were presented with a shower of presents too numerous to mention for all of which we were truly grateful.

These are sure fine folks to serve, just as appreciative, kind, sympathetic and generous as one can find anywhere. May God continue to bless them and may there ever remain such a warm spirit of love and appreciation for both pastor and people.

It was on the third Sunday that our revival meeting at Bethlehem began, with three services well attended, but not so largely as in former years, due to the present precaution to keep the children out of crowds. The spirit of the meet- was exceedingly good; the church was greatly revived and strengthened. Hundreds reconsecrated their lives and many new professions in Christ were made and several additions to the church. Rev. J. S. Carden of Durham, N. C., was with us and did most of the preaching. He is a deeply consecrated man who preaches out of a deep and abiding experience with his Lord. We appreciated having him with us for these few days. May God bless him, his work and his family.

G. C. Crutchfield.

A MURDERED SOUL.

By Richard Roberts, Moderator of the United Church of Canada.

"At college I had a friend—a lean, ascetic youth he was, with fire in his eyes," writes Dr. Richard Roberts in The New Outlook (Toronto). "We became friends, because we shared a dream, a dream of a new social order in which all men would be free and healthy, happy and wise. We called ourselves socialists: and in my eyes he was something of a hero, too, because he had already organized the farm laborers of an English county and had got into trouble over it. We were, no doubt, ridiculous young prigs, but we did have our dream: and my friend a better dream than mine, for which he had already suffered."

"On leaving college, my friend became a journalist: and for a time he was foreign correspondent of a British newspaper. I used to hear of him from time to time, in Paris, St. Petersburg, Constantinople, Berlin and elsewhere. The years passed; and one day I discovered that he was back in England at the head of an important journalistic enterprise. I took early occasion to visit him. When I saw him, I did not at first recognize him. The lean, austere youth had become a sleek, well-groomed man of the world. The ascetic, wistful face was fleshy and hard; the eyes were dead. And when I recalled our young enthusiasm, he sneered—I am not sitting in judgment on him. I do not know what temptation overtook him. I cannot tell by what strategism his soul had been taken. But as I left I knew that I had seen a murdered soul. Some time, somewhere, he had said to himself, 'I'll take the cash and let the credit go,' and what he sold for the cash was his very soul. Don't suppose I am pluming myself that I am better off than he. I do not know, as I said, to what fierce temptation he had succumbed. And if I have my dream still—even though it be very faded and thin,—it is by the grace of God and no merit of mine."

DRIVERS, DON'T DRINK! DRINKERS, DON'T DRIVE.

An Argument for Safety Rather Than for Sobriety.

By Curtis Billings.
Associate Editor, "National Safety News."

It is easy to argue the simple proposition that driving after drinking is dangerous. If one has acquaintances who drink and has observed them in their cups, then conviction is added to logic as one points out the psychological and physiological facts that alcohol hinders the physical functions, deadens the nerves, and unseats the judgment.

While it is easy to make such argument, few people, unfortunately, will be persuaded by it. And if you argue with many, it will not be long before somebody will look you in the eye and affirm in all sincerity that while he agrees that the cut-and-out drunken man is decidedly a menace at the wheel of an automobile, a few drinks do no harm. He may add that he himself is a better driver after a couple of drinks than he is cold sober.

People Want Proof.

This a "show me" age. People want proof. They not only want it but demand it when they are defending a practice that they do not want to give up. And there are tens of thousands of motorists in the United States whose regular practice it is to drink and then drive. If this were not so, the taverns and combination restaurants and bars which line our highways would pass out of existence over night.

Since proof must be had, it might be illuminating to examine the findings of two eminent Danish scientists who were interested in ascertaining how a few drinks affect the average man in so far as his ability to operate a motor vehicle is concerned. Since most of us are average, we can assume that our ability would be altered correspondingly.

The two scientists, by the way, were Poul Bahnsen and K. Vedel-Petersen, of the psychotechnical Institute, Copenhagen. Their experiments were reported in the September, 1934, issue of the Journal of Industrial Hygiene. They selected four experiments contrived to test functions which had a close similarity to those which play an important part in driving and which at the same time permitted an accurate measure of performance.

The dose was fixed at 0.6 cubic centimeters of alcohol for each kilogram of body weight so that a man weighing 150 pounds received an ounce and a half of alcohol or the equivalent of three highballs. Two groups of young men served as subjects, one group to take the tests with alcohol and the other without, so that the reactions of the second or control group, could be used to check the efforts of the alcohol on the first group. Briefly, the results of the experiment were as follows:

The first was a test of selective reaction to a stimulant. This is a reaction which requires the person to pause and think before acting. If one is driving and sights danger ahead, one may jam on the brakes, or step on the accelerator, or swerve to avoid the danger. Making the choice is a selective reaction. The three highballs slowed the speed of selective reaction of the first group of subjects 9.7 per cent.

The second test was of speed of muscular reaction. If one must apply his brakes quickly, how soon will his muscles act for him? A tire blows out. How quickly can one redouble the force of his grasp on the wheel? The "moderate" dose of alcohol slowed up muscular reaction by no less than 17.4 per cent.

The third test was of the ability to concentrate the attention. The importance of this attribute needs no comment. A driver must be able to give his undivided attention to his driving in fast, dense traffic. But three highballs reduces his vital ability by the terrific percentage of 35.3.

The fourth and last test was of co-ordination between the eye and the hand, a mastery of the muscles of the hand and arm, concentrated attention, and dexterity. Again, these attributes are so obviously important to the driver that examples of their use are not needed. If a few drinks decrease efficiency in these respects alcohol must be deadly stuff under the belt of the motorist. Well, in this test the alcohol group of subjects made a record of 59.7 per cent more errors than the non-alcohol group.

The conclusion to be drawn from these facts would seem to be apparent. Drinkers of even small quantities of liquor should not drive. Drivers should not drink. When a man or woman asserts that he can drive as well with a few drinks as without, feel free to set him down as either knave or fool.—The Allied Youth.

TRIUMPH IN THE MIDST OF SUFFERING.

Suffering leads to comforting. We do not know God as He is until we know Him as a Comforter. For it is in the act of comforting that He fully reveals His faithfulness, love, and tenderness, which experiences we do not have until we pass through suffering. So it is a serious thing to turn away from suffering, for it will leave us with an undiscovered and unknown God. Moreover, we cannot know what we ourselves may be in the world until we have suffered! for it is only the one who has been divinely comforted in the midst of suffering who can comfort others. Paul had touched the deepest experiences in human living and this is what he had to say in respect to this aspect of suffering: "Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort; who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God." (2 Cor. 1:3-6.) Evidently then, it is better to suffer than not, both for ourselves and others.

Miss Maggis Scott of Martintown, Ontario, suffered in 1886 an injury to her spine and was bedridden for two years. At the end of that time, she was healed of the Lord and became entirely well. She offered herself to the China Inland Mission in 1889, and in the following year, went out to China. She served there for a number of years under the pronounced blessing of God. Then she fell sick from tuberculosis and had to retire from her much loved service. In passing through Toronto, on her way to her home, she stayed in the Mission Home there. One day at dinner she asked permission to say something which was readily granted to her. Thereupon, our friend spoke as follows:

"You can imagine that it has been a bitter disappointment to me, having been healed by the Lord of my spinal trouble, not to be healed by Him of my tubercular affliction. I have waited long and earnestly upon Him for such a healing and have expected to receive it. But it has not come. It looks, therefore, as if I have left China for good and am on my way home to die. This has been a great mystery to me, and I have hardly known what to make of it. But I want to say that I have finally come to the conclusion that God's way is perfect, and also, that I have got something better than healing, namely, love. I have never before known so much about the love of God and that of His children. It was love out there in China, and it has been love here at home, and I am sure that it will be love until the end. So now, I am not dissatisfied. God has kept back a good thing that He may give to me a better one, and I am well content with His will and way."

Our sister went home to die. But the light of glory which had fallen upon her face never left it, even after she had passed away. In other words, she had been comforted by God. And we may add that, through her comforting, she became an infinite comfort to us.

Suffering's Ending. It is a well known fact that, for some centuries, men at large, including Christians, have been largely exempt from suffering, especially that which results from persecution and divine judgment. Aside from suffering of a general kind and that which has been occasioned by war, most peoples, particularly in the homelands, have been permitted to live out their lives in quietness and peace.

But it looks now as if a change had taken place. The world, inclusive of the Church, seems to have entered into troublous times, wherein men's animosities and God's punishments are being expressed in new forms and measures. And possibly, such tides of suffering will soon break over the earth as it has never know and as will be overwhelming in their effect.

But, after all, what matters it? Time is short and eternity is long, and one moment in the presence of God will make us forget whatever suffering we have passed through. A little more enduring and we shall be at rest. Then we shall know, as we do not now, the meaning of those precious words: "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away." (Rev. 21:4.) And thus, at last —oh, wonder of wonders!—all of earth's mysteries will be forever gone.—Dr. H. M. Frost in S. S. Times.

NEXT STEPS FOR BETTER FILMS.

The Federal Council's Committee on Motion Pictures recently expressed the opinion that the decency movement has effected a clean-up of pictures, at least for the time being, and that stronger and more interesting pictures have also been coming from the studios. The Committee appreciates what has been done by the industry, but feels that permanent improvement is not assured and that pressure on the studios must be continued.

The following program of Next Steps is suggested:

First, Churches should continue to agitate for abolition of enforced block-booking and blind selling of motion pictures. The bill is in committee but notice will be given when communications in support should be sent to Congress.

Second, Denominational authorities, councils of churches, and pastors are urged to begin the creation of motion picture committees in local churches, and to relate such committees to community Better Films Councils where such Councils are properly organized. These committees are needed in churches to organize study groups of parents and young people, to get film reviews to members of the congregation, and to investigate the use of religious pictures in the church.

Third, The International Council of Religious Education is asked to prepare an introductory study course on the motion picture; and groups of parents, young people, and adult Bible classes are urged to use this when it is published and

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

WITHOUT BEING DESIRED.

The writer has a friend whose hobby is collecting curious epitaphs. For a good half hour this friend's album will entertain and amuse the most casual reader. Many people in this curious and interesting world of ours are never so humorous as when trying to be logical and conclusive.

However it is foreign to our present purpose to copy or repeat here any of these curious epitaphs. Another one, to us the most terrible and dramatic we have ever seen, comes up now—and that is worth repeating, worth it because so dreadfully and tragically true. For all the epitaphs ever written over any man's dead body, and past career we put foremost for sorrowful and tragic consideration that in II Chronicles, chapter 21, verse 20. It was written of a king who ascended the throne at 32, reigned eight years, and died. Read his terrible epitaph, a volume in a line, "He departed without being desired."

Reader, can you think of anything worse that could be said of you, now or hereafter, than that? —to depart without being desired.

We just have to manage, or imagine, so as to be desired. Being desired is all there is to life, and when no longer desired one just naturally and normally wants to die—or should do so. One recalls an incident in the life of that famous adopted son of America, Jacob A. Riis, (President Theodore Roosevelt said at the time he was the most useful private citizen in the U. S.). A few months after young Riis came as an immigrant to our shores, he decided, in his poverty, want, hunger and neglect that he was not wanted —and so would one night end it all. He was alone, save for a lean hungry dog that had taken up with him, at a deserted spot on a river front in New York. While adjusting weights that would hold his body down after taking the purposed fatal plunge, the friendly cur licked the man's hand and otherwise displayed in the way of a dog, marks of interest and attachment. "Do you really care, Fido? And if I leave will you miss and desire me?" And Fido gave answer with a longing look and a low bark. Riis decided even if Fido wanted him, he would live. And he did. And what a life. How much poorer our American life, and literature would be without the blessed memory of Jacob A. Riis. with his "Waking of An American, "How the Other Half Live," etc., etc.

The value of the dollar in our pocket depends entirely upon how much other people want it, and what they are willing to do or give for it, economists tell us. Well, we may go further than the economists and say that our life depends for its worth to us, or to any one, upon the measure in which, or by which, we are desired. "He departed without being desired" is the most awful epitaph of which we can conceive, and can only equal in dread and terror, that which may in any truth be said of us while we are yet alive. I was reading the other day a good book, "Adventures in Friendship," in which these fine lines occur: "It is the feeling of being necessary, being desired, flowing into a man that produces the satisfaction of contentment. Often I think to myself: These fields have need of me; my horse whinnies when he hears my step; my dog barks a welcome. These, my neighbors, are glad of me. The corn comes up fresh and green to my planting: my buckwheat bears richly. I am indispensable in this place. What is more satisfactory to the human heart than to be needed and to know we are needed?" Yes, indeed, what? And what more disconcerting than to feel we are not desired? And what so awful to be said of anyone as that "He departed without being desired?"

DANIEL DENIES, DEFENDS AND DELIVERS.

That was indeed a refreshing and thrilling lesson we had last Sunday. It was a story of denial that led to delivery. It was a story of adventure, of hazard, of thrills, beside which your modern "detective" escapade fades into nothingness. For a real adventurer, one who seemingly made again and again, and kept his rendezvous with death, commend me to this man Daniel. It was not his equals, or associates, or their knavery he defied; it was the law of kings and monarchs and entrenched power that he dealt with—and conquered! And what modesty! Never his wisdom, but the wisdom of the God he worshipped; never his strength, but the strength of Jehovah in Whom he trusted, was ever his stay and sufficient alibi. Through self-denial he first conquered self—his own appetite, desires, wants—and through such discipline he became strong and won a king's favor and applause. Through study, close application of his mental faculties, he learned the literature, science and philosophy of his day; and through prayer, prayer, prayer, he got wisdom that gave his knowledge and understanding, his cultural power. And in this way of worship he saved his life, as well as the scholarship and learning of his day. Nor once ever did he attribute his learning and wisdom to any power or superiority of his own, but all to the God he loved, served and worshipped. Daniel was indeed a defender of the faith, an able and capable expounder of the word and worship of the true and loving God in a heathen land and amongst a pagan people.

In brief, Daniel was a missionary, a real, true, genuine foreign missionary—if there ever lived one. He did all his preaching, teaching, writing, laboring, to, with and amongst a foreign race, a pagan people. One who does not believe in foreign missions should never read Daniel. Daniel's adventures were adventures for his God, amongst a people who denied his God and worshipped other gods—save as Daniel taught them otherwise.

MY NEW TESTAMENT.

Just before leaving for a visit to the Holy Land I had my Moffatt's Bible bound in two volumes, so that the New Testament became a book by itself. It is printed on India paper so I had a number of blank pages inserted. It made a delightful volume easy to carry. I read many of the passages on the historic spots to which the writings referred. On the ship I read the "Acts of the Apostles," Paul's letters and the Gospels. Every chapter seemed more interesting than ever because I had developed a new sense of reality. Here is one illustration. At St. Paul's Bay on the Island of Malta, I read aloud to the people in the car the 27th and 28th chapters of "Acts" and I wrote the following on the fly-leaf—"We drove to St. Paul's Bay in Malta, July 17, 1933. I read the 27th and 28th chapters of "The Acts" to all in the car. The sun was shining and the sea was calm and beautiful." Those in the car with me were Bishop E. G. Richardson of Philadelphia, Prof. A. A. Trever of Appleton, Wis., and Mrs. Mary Comer of Louisville, Ky. These names are written in my book. The driver of the car, a native of Malta, heard me read, "There was an estate in the neighborhood which belonged to a man called Publius, the governor of the Island: he welcomed us and entertained us hospitably for three days." He spoke up immediately and told us he would drive us to Publius' Church which he did. In this way I made my New Testament live again!

But that is not the main thought I have in mind in writing this article. I read the New Testament many times on that cruise and marked many passages in blue and red. Since my return I have continued to read it with increasing interest. It is not easy for me to remember the exact location of special passages though, of course. I do know a great many of them. Nevertheless, I have written down on the title page a number of passage references that seem to suggest to me some of the vital messages of St. Paul. The mention of these passages is the purpose of this article.

The passages as they are marked in my book are as follows: Heb. 13:8; II Tim. 2:8; I Cor. 1:18; Rom. 15:1; Eph. 2:8; II Tim. 4:5; Heb. 12:1-5; Phil. 3:12-16; Col. 3:12-15; 4:56; II Cor. 5:17-21; I Peter 1:13. I fear that the busy reader will not take time to look up these passages, so for that reason I will take the "trouble" to reproduce them here because I believe emphatically that every Christian should have them marked in some special manner in his own New Testament. There is no special meaning in the order in which they are given. They were set down at various times as they impressed me. Anyone so inclined can re-arrange them in some other way.

"Jesus Christ is always the same, yesterday, today and forever." (Heb. 13:8). "Never forget Jesus Christ, risen from the dead, (descended from David)—that is my gospel for which I have suffered imprisonment as if I were a criminal."

(St. Paul. II Timothy 2:8.) "Christ did not send me to baptize but to preach the Gospel. And to preach it with no fine rhetoric, lest the cross of Christ should lose it spower! Those who are doomed to perish find the story of the cross 'sheer folly,' but it means the power of God for those whom He saves." (I Cor. 1:18.) "We who are strong ought to bear the burdens that the weak make for themselves and us. We are not to please ourselves." (Rom. 15:1.) "For it is by grace you have been saved, as you had faith. It it not your doing but God's gift, not the outcome of what you have done—lest anyone should pride himself on that." (Eph. 2:8-9.) "Whatever happens, be self-possessed, flinch from no suffering, do your work as an evangelist, and discharge all your duties as a minister." (II Tim. 4:5.) "Therefore, with all this host of witnesses encircling us, we must strip off every handicap, strip off sin with its clinging folds, to run our appointed course steadily, our eyes fixed upon Jesus as the pioneer and the perfection of faith—upon Jesus who, in order to reach His own appointed joy, steadily endured the cross, thinking nothing of its shame, and is now seated at the right hand of the throne of God. Compare Him who steadily endured all that hostility from sinful men, so as to keep your own hearts from fainting and falling. You have not had to shed blood yet in the struggle against sin." (Heb. 12:1-5.) "Not that I have already attained this or am already perfect, but I press forward to appropriate it, because I have been appropriated myself by Christ Jesus. Brothers, I for one do not consider myself to have appropriated this: my one thought is, by forgetting what lies behind me and straining to what lies before me, to press on to the goal for the prize of God's high call in Christ Jesus." (Phil. 3:12-15).

It would be well to read the third chapter from the first to the twelfth verses to see what it is that he has not attained to as yet. "As God's own chosen, then, as consecrated and beloved, be clothed with compassion, kindness, humility, gentleness. and good temper—forbear and forgive each other in any case of complaint; as Christ forgave you, so must you forgive. And above all you must be loving, for love is the link of the perfect life. Also let the peace of Christ be supreme within your hearts, that is why you have been called as members of One Body." (Col. 3:12-15.) "Let Christian wisdom rule your behaviour to the outside world: make the very most of your time; let your talk always have a saving salt of grace about it, and learn how to answer any question put to you." (Col. 4:56.) "There is a new creation whenever a man comes to be in Christ; what is old is gone, the new has come. It is all the doing of the God who has reconciled me to himself through Christ and has permitted me to be a minister of His reconciliation. For in Christ God reconciled the world to himself instead of counting men's trespasses against them; and He entrusted me with the message of His reconciliation. So I am an envoy for Christ, God appealing by me, as it were—be reconciled to God, I entreat you on behalf of Christ." (II Cor. 5:17-20.) "Brace up your minds then, keep cool, and put your hope for good and all in the grace that is coming to you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." (I Peter 1:13.)

The passage from Hebrews was in all probability not written by Paul, but I think wonderfully illuminating. All the other passages are from his writings. There are many more, of course, that the reader may add as he reads. And I have included nothing from the Gospels. Any interested person may mark such impressive passages in the Gospels and I hope he will and report his experiences. Perhaps I should also say that some of these quotations were made because I am a minister of the Gospel and they make a special appeal to me. However, they apply to Church officials, to Sunday school teachers and all religious workers as well.

CRUISING IN THE LAND OF THE SUNNY NIGHT.

By Chaplain H. E. Rountree.

[No better introduction to this series of sketches can be given than the following quoted from a letter written by their author to Dr. J. O. Atkinson, the editor, and passed on to the managing editor: "I am handing you a series of six articles on Alaska. They are written en route while on vacation in Alaskan waters. They are submitted believing that the readers of The Sun might like to have the information they are intended to carry." Mrs. Rountree accompanied Chaplain Rountree on this wonderful trip, and one believes that there would be pardon for just a spark of envy of such a glorious vacation.]

Introduction.

Being in Puget Sound area for a month, Mrs. Rountree and I are taking a little trip up the Alaskan coast for rest and a little sight-seeing to the Yukon and Klondike regions. The inland passage is our route and the sailing is as smooth as a lake. From the beginning at Seattle, it is beauty everywhere. Surely, God has made all things beautiful. The clouds, the mountains, the clear blue waters, the golden lights of the sunset sky, the silver moon in brilliant charm, and the stars beyond stand out in velvet glory.

We cannot count all of God's blessings—all things are lovely things. One day and night out and we realize that we are going to enjoy three thousand miles midst lands of mystery and romance. With a steamer for our home and with a companionship of passengers most delightful.

As fortune would have it, there is aboard the Christian Fellowship party making the same cruise. This is the party arranged by the Sunday School Times. They were all Christian people with a common interest and among them are some who are vitally interested in the Presbyterian Missions of Alaska.

This party is ably guided by Rev. F. R. Falconer who has 37 years experience in Alaska. That we are a part of this party is an accident, for we had no intimation that such a party would be aboard, but accidents will happen, and often accidents are God-sent, but we have been adopted and made songleader and singer for the group. The first night out your writer was called upon to bring them the daily message from the Bible.

The dazzling panoramic scenery is magnificent, the fellowship is congenial and refreshing, and God is present on the waters renewing and refreshing the soul we hope for the arduous tasks of duty.

As I write steaming along through narrow passes over smooth and mirror-like waters, reflecting the rich rays of the lingering sunshine, the spirit leaps with admiration of the world God has made for his people to look upon, use and enjoy. Here and there quaint villages are perched on rocky cliffs, midst the deep verdure of snow-capped mountains, bespeaking the life that is and becoming toward the life which may be.

God forbid that we should witness such grandeur of His and not be aware of Him. God give us understanding that divines its meaning. Flood our souls with knowledge and light and keep us eager to see his hand and to do our share in the little places where we fit in the picture.

THE MODERN BABY.

(It has been attributed to Bishop Doane.)

The hand that rocks the cradle—but there is no such hand.
It is bad to rock the baby, they would have us understand;
So the cradle's but a relic of the former foolish days
When mothers raised their children in unscientific ways;
When they bounced them and they bounced them—those poor dwarfs of long ago—
The Washingtons and Jeffersons and Adamses, you know.

They warn us that the baby will possess a muddled brain
If we dandle him or rock him—we must carefully refrain;
He must lie in one position, never swayed and never swung,
Or his chance to grow to greatness will be blasted while he's young.
Ah! to think how they were ruined by their mothers long ago—
The Franklins and the Putnams and the Hamiltons, you know.

Then we must feed the baby by the schedule that is made,
And the food that he is given must be measured out or weighed:
He may bellow to inform us that he isn't satisfied,
But he couldn't grow to greatness if his wants were all supplied.
Think how foolish nursing mothers stunted those poor weaklings long ago—
The Shakespeares, and the Luthers, and the Bonapartes, you know.

We are given a great mission, we are here today on earth
To bring forth a race of giants, and to guard them from their birth.
To insist upon their freedom from the rocking that was bad
For our parents and their parents, scrambling all the brains they had.
Ah! if they'd been fed by schedule would they have been stunted so—
The Websters and the Lincolns and the Wilsons, you know?

—Anonymous.

WE MUST NOT DOUBT.

Let us not doubt God's care today,
Because so many clouds arise,
Because His hand though leading still
Is hidden from our misty eyes.

He can bring blessings out of mist,
And lead us forth by paths unknown,
But we must trust and pray and hope,
Then He'll not fail to guide us home.

What hope is there anywhere for us except in a government by honest men whose only concern is for the country, the whole country, and especially for the struggling, oppressed and disinherited in it, a government that will not blow radiant soap bubbles on the air, but do things honestly, justly, fearlessly, as between man and man and mass and class. Who would not welcome such a government?—Dr. D. L. Ritchie.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

What will life be tomorrow? That is an important question. The Bible answers this question and Christianity interprets this answer in understandalbe terms. On the basis of Bible doctrine the Christian church believes that "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." This philosophy of life seems too rigid and severe for many minds, but it is benevolent and inspiring to people who seek to follow the tenets of the Christian faith.

In the face of this law of God one needs to have an understanding of the forces at work in human society. What are the young people of this age thinking? What the their fundamental attitudes towards the things which are related to character? What are the plans for the future? What are the motivating ideals in the social and economic life of the present time?

It is Saturday night. The clock has struck nine times. The streets of the city are crowded with young and old. Some are buying groceries for tomorrow; others are buying a supply of liquor from the A. B. C. store; some are standing in groups talking the gossip of the hour—politics, crops, markets; others are busy with their plans for spending the Sabbath at the seashore, the golf course, the fishing boats or the pleasure parks. As one passed through this crowd, the question arose: "What are these people doing, and what will tomorrow hold for them?" Will there be any difference tomorrow, between the people who are pleasure bent and the people who are studying their Sunday School lesson, and planning to attend Sunday School and Church?

There is a great difference, tonight, and the difference will be greater tomorrow. For the seed sowing is not the same; the paths are divergent; the standards are different; and life grows and multiplies under the influence of every passing motive. The preacher and teacher and the foresighted advocates of a spiritual living will be criticised for interfering with the projected plans of a leisure and pleasant seeking age. But the question cannot be evaded, the issue cannot be cast aside. Saturday night touches Sunday in more ways than can be enumerated. The work and the issues of the six days will be summarized in the emotions and motives of this night. Tomorrow, Sunday, will receive this mighty multitude of people in our land with open arms; and many high and holy privileges will be offered to all who will have the vision to receive the better things of life. Yes, and the sobering thought is this: life will be richer or poorer according to the moral and spiritual standards of this week, and this Saturday night.

The Congress of the United States has passed a Social Security Bill. This Act is too intricate and extensive to be reviewed here. But in a general way it seeks to provide a compensation for old age and assure every one of subsistence in the declining years. An assured income in old age is not social security. The money for this purpose, as outlined in the Security Act, must be raised by taxation. The thrifty people of the country will be required to provide for the people who are not willing to be assured of an income regardless of personal habits of work and economy. This Act of Congress may furnish good material for political campaigns; it has an appeal for certain classes. But in a sense such a law cannot obtain in the moral and spiritual life of the nation. It may operate, with some satisfaction as a financial and political measure. In the moral and spiritual realm, where character is formed, where life is moulded for the future, every person must become responsible for his own spiritual welfare, and will be called to give a personal account of his stewardship. No Act of any legislative group can repeal the personal responsibility of every human life.

What will life be tomorrow? What will be the harvest in old age? What can be done to make the future safe and secure against the corroding and corrupting influences of selfishness and greed and lack of religious devotion.

GREENSBORO FIRST CHURCH.

Dr. C. H. Rowland, pastor of the Greensboro First Church for fifteen years, has resigned on account of failing health. Dr. Rowland has served the Greensboro Church most efficiently and most acceptably. He has endeared himself to the heart of the church. In appreciation of the services that Dr. Rowland has rendered, the church, after accepting his resignation, called him as pastor emeritus at a salary of $50 a month. This is most generous on the part of the church, and is greatly appreciated by Dr. Rowland and family.

Reverend W. E. Wisseman, of Shulenburg, Texas, was extended a call to become pastor of the church. The writer was in the congregation yesterday when official announcement was made of Mr, Wisseman's acceptance of the call. The Greensboro church is most fortunate in securing the services of this consecrated and efficient young man. He has as good preparation as could well be had, and is fitted for the position by temperament and talents.

Mr. Wisseman is thirty-three years of age, a native of Texas. After graduation from Southern Methodist University, he spent three years in Boston University, from which he received his M. A. and S. T. B. degrees. After graduation he spent several months traveling in Europe and the Holy Land. On returning to the United States, he was called to the pastorate of a Methodist church in Schulenburg, Texas, where he has served continuously, and from which he is resigning to come to Greensboro. Mr. Wisseman is a member of the Methodist church, but will transfer his membership to the North Carolina and Virginia Conference of the Congregational and Christian Church.

Several years ago Mr. Wisseman married Miss Mary Graham Rowland, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. C. H. Rowland, who transferred her membership from the Christian church to the Methodist church. It is entirely fitting that these two efficient and consecrated young people should transfer their efforts to the Christian church. It is also fortunate that they are able to take up the work of Mrs. Wisseman's parents, when it becomes necessary on account of failing strength, for Dr. Rowland to lay it down. The Christian church will gladly welcome Miss Mary Graham back to its fold, and will rejoice that her husband is coming with her.

I do not have the exact date of the organization of the Christian Church in Greensboro. It was organized, however, by the Reverend L. I. Cox, deceased. Brother Cox did a good work in Greensboro, and laid the foundation well for a progressive church. He left the mark of his influence visibly in many localities in North Carolina. Pastors succeeding Brother Cox are as follows: Reverend L. F. Johnson, deceased; Reverend J. W. Bolton, deceased; Reverend L. E. Smith, now president of Elon College, and pastor of Elon Church; Reverend H. E. Rountree, now chaplain in the United States Navy; Dr. P. H. Fleming, director of welfare work of Alamance County, and pastor of Union and Long's Chapel churches; Reverend J. F. Knight, member of the Methodist Episcopal conference; Reverend H. R. Clemm, Fall River, Massachusetts; and Dr. C. H. Rowland, pastor emeritus.

On October 15th, Reverend W. E. Wisseman, a young man of thirty-three, becomes the active pastor of the Greensboro church. Mr. Wisseman will find a congregation loyal and consecrated, following to the best of its ability the leadership of the spirit in all matters. Some months ago members of the church covenanted together to give one-tenth of their earnings to the church. At the time of entering into this covenant, the church was heavily in debt, and running behind in current expenses weekly. The membership was manifestly discouraged. The leaders of the church were seeking for guidance, trying to find a way out of their dilemma. It seemed clear to them that as members of the church of Christ, they were not doing what they should with their earnings. In a most inspirational service, more than fifty per cent of the active membership marched down to the altar in personal and individual consecration and gave their vow to place on the altar one-tenth of their total earnings. The blessings of the Lord came upon them. Other members of the church joined in the consecrated program. Today the church is clear of debt. They are paying the salaries of two pastors. Rev. A. L. Granger, a member of the senior class of 1935-36 is assisting Dr. Rowland. After October 15th, they will continue to support two pastors.

They are now planning on a program of expansion which will include the purchase of additional property to make room for their growing Sunday school.

I wish to commend the act of the leaders of this Christian church to every church of our convention. If our churches could only adopt a program of tithing, bring all the tithes into the storehouse, the blessings of God would be upon us as a church and as a people. Not only would all the financial needs of the church with her institutions be met promptly and adequately but the spiritual life of the church would become dominant and imperative. How long will we deny ourselves the favor of God simply for the sake of adding to our material holdings? We have ears, but we do not hear; we have eyes but we do not see; we have hearts, but we do not understand. If we could only exchange that which is perishable for that which endureth forever, how rich and how happy we would be!

Elon College congratulates the Greensboro First Church and wishes for their continued growth in the real things of the Kingdom under the leadership of their new pastor, Reverend Mr. Wisseman, and also wishes to extend to Mr. Wisseman a most cordial welcome to North Carolina, and into the Christian Church.

Existing courses which can be recommended are: one for young people entitled How Shall We Choose Movies?, prepared by Mrs. Pollard for the Methodist Board of Education, Professor Dale's How to Appreciate Motion Pictures, and an interim introductory course by Dr. Tippy based upon his booklet How to Select and Judge Motion Pictures.

Fourth, Pastors and churches are urged to take an active interest in Better Films Councils and assume the initiative in their organization in communities where they are needed but do not exist. These councils should be independent of the motion picture industry, and should be composed of officially appointed representatives of the character-building agencies of the community. Their main tasks are to confer with theatre managers on their programs, to educate public taste, to get photoplay reviews to the people of the community, and to secure the showing of the more inportant pictures, domestic and foreign, in local theatres.

DOING TO BE SEEN OF MEN.

What do we get from the words of Christ; "But when thou doest alms, let not thy right hand know what thy left hand doeth." What class of people was Jesus here condemning? Surely those whose glory is in their accomplishments. It is not well for each one of us to desire to be successful in our undertakings in life, whatever they may be that are worthy and commendable? It is well for the farmer to desire to be the most successful farmer in the country; and for the doctor to climb to as great heights as possible in his profession. The same might be said about the lawyer, the minister, the mechanic, the teacher, or of any profession or trade; but for what purpose should people desire to gain these exalted positions? Should it be that their fame and power may be noised abroad? The true man or woman does not desire to attain to these prominent positions for vain glory.

Do you suppose that it ever entered the heart of the apostle Paul that one day he would be considered the greatest man the world has ever produced except Christ himself. The one ambition that the greatest men of the world sought was that they might be the greatest servants of mankind. Do you think it ever entered the mind of D. L. Moody that one day he would be counted the greatest evangelist of modern times? No, a thousand times, no! Those whose deeds of mercy and love are done that they may be called great are far from being great. Humility is the badge of the Christian, and the individual who says, "See what I have accomplished" is like the Pharisee who prayed and thanked God that he was not like other men, "even this poor publican."

As we see it, doing things in a boastful, bragging way even though the deed be a commendable one, is letting your left hand know what your right hand doeth. There are those who delight in doing acts of charity perhaps to discredit what others have done. They belittle the acts of others who have done deeds of mercy and love, setting themselves up so as to say, "We have done a wonderful work that no one else but our crowd could have done. You fellows in your section are so shabby; just look at us." Such are like King Agrippa whom the people called a god; and his fate was that he was made a leper and the worms devoured his body.—E. T. Phillips in The Free Will Baptist.

THE SURGE OF A THOUSAND LOOMS.

Out in the yard forty or fifty feet from the main mill there is a building with runways going into it from every department of the mill. On the second floor is the waste house, and around the walls there are pens built with bars, something like the old cross bars we used to see instead of a gate. These pens are something like four or five feet wide, and eight or ten feet long, and the bars can go up as high as they reach.

In these pens the waste is deposited from each part of the mill according to what it is. The dirty, matted cotton that cannot be worked goes to one; the long cut filling or the ends of the warp that have to be cut off goes to another when the warp runs out. The short cut filling or the filling that gets a spot of oil or dirt on it cannot go in the cloth and must be cut off and sent to the waste house. Small pieces of cloth that have to be torn off, the lent and cotton that is blown off the machines, the sweeping from the floor all go to their respective pens. In the middle of the floor is a hole about four feet wide and six feet long with a big bailer under it on the first floor. If one goes to the waste house he will see the clean white filling, the partly soiled filling, and the dirty waste which gives a gruesome and dirty appearance.

It all makes me think of the refuse of mankind from all walks of life who fail to meet the standard of the Kingdom of God.

Just across from the waste house is the shipping room, where the cloth is brought when finished and bleached, ready to be shipped out on the orders all white and clean. The other day there was a carload or two of this cloth in the shipping room all sewed up in burlap ready to be shipped out, when a water pipe bursted in the shipping room and was about to flood all of it before it could be removed. About ten thousand yards of it did get flooded and had to be taken to the waste house.

I hope when Gabriel sets one foot on the sea and the other on land to blow the trumpet at the end of time we may not be found in the awful waste house or the shipping room.—By J. W. Boyle in The Free Will Baptist.

THE SACRED TRAIL.

I have watched the stream of missionaries wind their way over this rugged mountain trail that leads to our mountain mission 'till the old trail itself has become sacred to me. As I think of the unselfish hearts and untiring efforts of those lovers of humanity and brave souls who have come this way to blaze the trail and bring the light of the Gospel into our hills, I think of the path over which they have come as a path of love. The way of the Cross. And I feel, as I mix with our Christian people who have backed this work, that they, too, have come to love this mountain trail. They have had a part in making this trail. They have given their money, their love, their prayers, to blaze this trail that leads through these mist-wreathed mountains to this mission field.

I was impressed with the interest I found in the hearts of our people near Elon. I had the pleasure of being in the homes of some of our Christian people this spring. I recall the home of the Pitts' near Shallow Ford. Mrs. Pitts told me with tear-filled eyes that she wanted to come to our hills and to the church here. The sincerity of her words told me that she didn't feel the same way about this old trail that she does of other roads. It would be an inspiration to her to come over this path of love. She would be drawn closer to God if she could come this way. This, to her, is a sacred trail. I truly hope she may come.

And now our revivals have just closed in our hilly churches. Once more those who have hearts burdened for lost souls, have come over this old trail to hold meetings here. Our Hilly Grissoms young brother came this year to hold our meeting at Elk Spur, and Rev. Blackmond of Bine's Creek, N. C. preached at Rocky Ford. I know the meetings were good though I was not able to attend. I heard of what was done and I felt the power of God among the hills. It is always an inspiration to have Blackmond shake your hand. I was real sick when Bro. Blackmond came, and he came to see me one rainy day. The clouds rolled away, and if one single cloud hung over my hills after he came I failed to see it. God comes with the coming of young Blackmond.

Still others have come over our old rugged trails this summer. Our Hilly Grissoms' father and mother came again. A powerful father and mother they are. The sincere smile and earnest words of the Grissoms places them among the Christians who are the most interested in human souls here and elsewhere. Father Grissom is now in the hospital and may God help to bring back his health and strength and send him out to continue in our Master's service. This is the man of God. One feels the power, and the depth of his faith. I can easily look beyond Father Grissom and see the light of the Cross. A life like his inspires one to look beyond the clouds and get a higher vision.

Brother Meadlen of Liberty-Vance Christian Church came to our hills. I found in him another friend of mankind and a sincere Christian. It is great indeed to have such people come over our mountain trail. "By their fruits ye shall know them," and these fruit-bearing Christians let their light shine among our hills. The Gospel lived is worth more than the Gospel preached. Come to our hills and live your religion. No one can say just how much your visit can mean here. You can bring a light over the sacred trail, and you can bring God to our hills.

Soon now we hope to have two young ladies to help a Bible School at our Churches here. I thank you who have made it possible for our children here to have this opportunity. It means a great deal here.

We look forward with great pleasure to one more important event. We hope to have another revival later in the season, and Brother Sorrell of Danville, who once served us here, is to be with us then.

Lend your prayers to help those who labor here to hold the Cross of Christ among these hills. And we hope that more of our people may come over our sacred trail this year. The road is open and the hills are waiting for you.

MULTIPLICATION AND DIVISION.

"My Church is a place where I may take all my consecration, all my talents, all my enthusiasms—my ability to do good, and multiply them by the number of our members possessing the same will to be and to do.

"Likewise, I may take my problems there and divide them by the number of my Christian comrades.

"And since my Church is a part of that Universal Church of Jesus Christ, my Church in the same way multiplies its power for good to the ends of the earth and into eternity, and divides its problems through mutual burden-bearing with fellow Christians everywhere."

A little more giving,
A little less greed,
A little more smile,
A little less frown,
A little less kicking,

A little more "we",

A little more laugh,
A little less cry,
A little more flowers

ALL BUNDLES MUST BE LEFT AT THE DOOR.

What bundles? Why, the bundles of worry, care, moral guilt, and anxiety. If you will leave them at the door of the church as you enter, go into the service with a spirit of reverence, devotion, and communion, when you come out again those bundles will be gone. Try it!

"Come unto me . . . . , and I will give you rest."

THE HUMAN TOUCH.

There are born solitary souls who find solace in seclusion, but these are rare. The millions want human fellowship and every-day living calls for a commingling of small and large groups playing together, working together, studying together and achieving together in perfect unison. Such living would be society at its highest level. The world has not yet learned to live in such a way, neither have individuals learned to think of themselves as a part of humanity as a whole. Here is where barriers have arisen to separate men and women, communities, clans and countries. Individuals gather their resources about them to satisfy personal ambitions, to feed personal tolerance and become intolerant of their neighbors. Soon there are no dealings among them and the same barrier exists as between the Jews and Samaritans.

Difference in financial rating is the commonest social barrier. Frequently people develop a sense of responsibility only for those within a certain social strata. Those without are unsought and unknown. Many come into the cruel and bitter experiences of life, watching others with apparently everything to use and enjoy and yet there is no sharing; many hearts break for the sympathetic touch. Oftentimes one of small means feels that there is no contribution he can make to the rich and distinguished, and yet riches often go with heart-hunger and often bring a sense of aloofness to create loneliness that longs for the touch of a friendly hand.

The human heart cries out for the touch of a brother's hand as they walk in the same way of joys and sorrows, inescapable longings, continuous strivings and anxieties.

The Master was never more beautifully portrayed than when he was pictured in the midst of the crowd that thronged about Him, putting his arms about little children to bless them.

The invalid who had been sick twelve years felt that if she could but touch his she would be made whole.

And so it is when the heart is crushed and the spirit weary, the gentle, loving touch of a friend's hand will bring strength and courage and hope for a better day. The potency of the personal touch becomes evident again and again in the life of Jesus as he went about doing good. Would that we might follow him in all things at all times.—*N. C. "WHY NOT TRY GOD?"

By Willis L. Goldsmith.

One of the world's most famous movie stars has written a religious tract, entitled, Why Not Try God? It is an argument for making use of God, through the power of right thinking, to get everything one needs—health, a job, money to pay rent, happiness. God is a bank with ample resources—why don't you learn to draw a check? It will be honored, if properly drawn, and this is how it is drawn—by the power of right thinking. Try it and see. For your encouragement in so doing, here is a remarkably successful woman, who offers her experience as proof of the theory. She has tried it, and behold, it works. She thinks it will work for you. Why not try—God?

A brief statement like that does not do justice to Mary Pickford's argument nor to her experience. There is much in her little book (now selling for one dollar) that does not conform to this simple outline, much that is above criticism and deserves applause. It is so refreshing to find a woman of her profession making a plea for God that it seems ungracious to examine what is offered in any critical spirit whatsoever. Frankly, however, we have to consider the merit of her religious ideas. She writes: "God is a great power, which we can use whenever and wherever we choose by our own right thinking." Notice the emphasis falls on right thinking. The book is a challenge to try this power, which she calls, "right" thinking.

Let us look into this power. We must agree that right thinking is very important. She says it is the key that unlocks the garage, where the highpowered car is kept. Yes, and it must also be the firm hand that guides the car. Wrong thinking makes such cars a menace. Right thinking might lead many to forego ownership and operation entirely. The Safety Commission recently reported heroic action on the part of a right-thinking aged person. He had been driving a car for many years, but of late he found his eyesight had failed. Voluntarily he went to a traffic officer and asked for an examination; as a result he turned in his operator's license which had not expired—a noble example of right thinking and acting.

Right thinking is very important in religion. It makes religion good, and keeps it from being superstition. Every religion claims to have the power of right thinking. How else are we to interpret the persistent effort to teach mankind?

What is right thinking? Mary Pickford says it is thinking hopefully, expecting good. But is it unabashed wishful thinking? She says it is thinking anything you like. But may one ask to what extent it must be thinking according to facts? It is thinking good, kind, and unselfish thoughts, says she. But must it not take account of ways and means, and if so, what ways and means is it proper to make use of? She cites the example of a boy with ear trouble, who had been told by a doctor that he must have an operation. This was not a case of right thinking on the part of the doctor, as was shown by the boy's quick recovery without it. However, the case is supposed to prove that the boy's right thinking produced recovery, and this is what his thinking, done out loud to his mother, consisted of: "Mama, God made my ear; it must have been quite a job, and if he was able to make it in the first place, it would be awfully funny, if he couldn't attend to its upkeep!" Right thinking! Result: his ear got well, as if by magic, and without any help from the doctor. Question: Does right thinking about God's upkeep of human ears exclude the help of doctors, or are they, at least in some cases, God's indispensable mechanics?

There are many persons whose hearing is much impaired. Why does not God attend to the upkeep to these ears? Is it because these persons do not think rightly?

Right thinking teaches us how to use the world and all its marvelous material resources. It makes a man a good mechanic, a good doctor, a good practitioner of any art. It makes the difference between a quack and a specialist. It distinguishes sound economics from all sorts of fake ideas. It also marks the difference between innumerable cults and true religion. It calls for discarding mistaken ideas, however ancient and venerable, however novel and original. Mary Pickford recalls how as a child she hated God, because she had a wrong concept. She has done well to give up her childhood idea, which made God out to be an "old meany." But we have to inquire whether or not her present conception is entirely correct.

She writes: "Wouldn't it be awfully funny, when you stop to think of it, if the power which fashioned us, which brought us into being . . . couldn't attend to our upkeep . . . the Mind which created everything, which guides everything and which sustains everything, will move for you, work for you, bring your purposes to pass and your prayers to fulfillment, if you will but do your part." And what is your part? It is thinking "whatever you choose." Is there any weak spot in such teaching? When I am puzzled about any religious doctrine, I find it is a good rule to consider it in the light of Jesus' teaching and example. He seems to be the one religious thinker who is always right. Reading the New Testament it strikes me very forcibly that Jesus was tempted to adopt the way of thinking that Mary Pickford describes. He was standing on a pinnacle of the temple, when the idea came to him: "Why not try God?—He will give his angels orders about you and they will lift you up again with their hands so that you may never strike your foot against a stone—Jump!" To this temptation Jesus the Right Thinker replied: "Thou shalt not make trial of the Lord thy God."

Mary Pickford says God can attend to our upkeep. But how does this idea apply to national situations? That's where right thinking has to be done. A broad generalization like the providential care of the Heavenly Father has to be interpreted and applied to actual conditions, in which we find ourselves. How does the idea of "God's upkeep" apply to getting from a pinnacle of the temple to the ground? Right thinking says, "Don't be foolish! The Divine Upkeep does not imply that one escapes the consequences of missteps and dare-devil acts. Regardless of what we may choose to think, there are, for example, laws of gravitation to be overcome in a material way. There's no magic about God's providential care over us. Jesus rejected the idea, not only when he stood on the pinnacle of the temple but also when he was hungry. His eyes lighted upon stones resembling loaves of bread in outward appearance. What does a right-thinking man do when he is hungry? Does he wait upon some form of magic like turning stones into bread? Jesus rejected the idea.

"What's the good of God," writes Mary Pickford, "if He won't help us to meet the rent, to get a job, to be happy?" Yes, but how does she think God helps in these matters? There are thousands of people who are eager to know how God helps. We have all heard about money coming mysteriously, just as needed, but for the most part God's way of helping is not so mysterious. In these last few years the government has been helping to meet rent and get jobs. Does the movie star think it is necessary? God's way of helping? Or has he some magical way of doing it, so that, for example, there is no need of taxing the rich? How does God help an unemployed man to get a job? Unemployment is one of the biggest problems of this modern industrial era, and surely God will help us to solve it. But is it a matter of helping men one by one to find a job in response to their right thinking?

Suppose I were preaching in a church filled with the unemployed and I should say to them: "Why not try God? Strike him for a job! What's the good of him, if he won't help you to get a job? He has got all the jobs there are in a card catalog and at his disposal—more than enough for all right thinkers. Think that you are going to have one!" And suppore many of these people came back next week and said: "It did not work!" What should I say then? Should I say: "It must be that you did not think what I told you was true? There are plenty of jobs and God knows where they are, and if you had only believed what I told you, he would have helped you to find one!" Nonsense! The problem of unemployment will never be solved by wishful thinking on the part of its victims. God will help us to solve it only when those who have jobs and those who have none put their heads together and do some honest thinking about why we have unemployment and what we must do to get rid of it. Don't tell me God's no good, because good men and true are out of work or that good men are out of work because they individually have not tried God through the power of right thinking. That's too simple! We shall find God in this whole matter of unemployment in the midst of the process that is making for economic recovery, and that includes a variety of factors. As individuals we are helpless. God alone by himself is helpless too, but humanity has yet to see what God will help us to do when we cooperate along the whole front of human endeavor.

Consider the matter of health. "What's the good of God, if he won't help us to be well?" He will. But how does he help? Everybody ought to know that what we call Nature is our greatest ally in matters of health. Good physicians all know very well that all they can do is to assist the recuperative powers that normally reside in our bodies. Everything must be done with a view to that; nothing should be done contrary to that. Of late we have also come to understand the importance of mental states, for example, a cheerful, hopeful outlook on life. A sound mind helps to keep the body sound. We all worry too much. We worry about what Mary Pickford calls our "upkeep," including such matters as health. It doesn't do any good; it is a bad, futile state of mind. Worry consists of not knowing what to do and being afraid to do anything for fear you will have done the wrong thing. How shall you get deliverance? By making up your mind what is the right thing to do and doing it fearlessly. Perhaps there is nothing you can do. Make up your mind to that, and let events take their course. Nothing is left but courage. That's the state of mind that everyone should seek to attain.

But we have got to go a little deeper into the mystery and meaning of life, before we glimpse the whole truth about trying God. There are a hundred problems that we can fling up into the face of God without getting any immediate solution that is to our liking or present satisfaction.

What's the good of God, if he won't let this or that cup pass from us? That's a question we all

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA YOUTH FELLOWSHIP TO MEET.

The Eastern North Carolina Youth Fellowship is called to meet at Catawba Springs Christian Church, August 30th, 1935. The meeting will open at ten o'clock in the morning and close at five in the afternoon. Rev. Robert Kimball is the president, and will preside. All young people in Congregational and Christian churches in this section should plan to be present. It is expected, also, that all pastors will be present. Superintendents of Sunday schools and pastors, and others interested in young people should help the young people to get to the meeting. The tentative program is as follows:

The Program.

Worship service conducted by the president, Mr. Kimball.
Get Acquainted Period, led by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill.
Address and discussion: "The Work of Youth Fellowship," Rev. F. C. Lester.
Business session.
Hymn and benediction.
Picnic Lunch, furnished by all who attend (bring your own).
Worship Service.
Discussion groups (1) Worship, led by Rev. Carl R. Key, and (2) World Friendship, led by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill.

Election of officers for the new year.
Installation of officers, conducted by Rev. F. C. Lester.
Hymn and benediction.

SECURITY.

Recently in the nation's capitol, not far from where the congress contracts for more and bigger battleships, armies and navies, a minister talked to a scattering congregation on "Security." It was a topic worthy of the consideration of congress as well as the worshippers who heard the minister preach. And it was a sermon that did one's soul good.

The minister read impressively from Matthew 27, where Pilate told the frightened politicians of his day to make the tomb of Jesus as secure as they could. Then he told how they had sought security by killing Jesus, but were then frightened lest some believe in the resurrection of the one they had killed. Interestingly he detailed how these politicians dealt treachery, hoped for their security, and were in constant fear. Like Macbeth, they thought one murder would make them secure, but instantly found that they were less secure than before.

Yes, we all want security, said the minister. We want financial, social, national security. Thousands who thought five or ten years ago that they were financially secure, are now working for daily wages or accepting the charity of a benevolent government. Those who have jobs live in constant fear lest they lose them. Nations build armies and navies, sign treaties, develop poison gases, and train soldiers in order to be secure.

And yet, said the preacher, we live in a time of insecurity. Once he climbed in the Canadian Rockies in search of a hidden lake. On horseback and then on foot he followed the trail. Finally, by walking over slippery pebbles while clinging to the limbs of dense forest growth on the very edge of a great precipice, he reached the beautiful lake far up in the Rockies. So we today seek security and find it not.

Because, said the preacher, security is of the spirit and not of physical things. The criminal never feels secure because his soul is never safe. The financier who trusts in banks may find them robbed by burglars from without or thieves within. No nation has ever been made secure by arms. Preparation for war leads to war, not from it. It is friendship, understanding, goodwill that guarantees peace. Security lies in the realm of spirit. When people learn brotherhood, then they will be secure from their fellows; and when they know God as Father they will be secure from all the powers of evil.

The preacher said that Pilate must have laughed when those who wanted Jesus killed came back to have his body guarded. He knew that what they wanted was a quiet mind and heart though they asked for a guard of soldiers. Pilate knew that security lay not in stones and armaments. And so do we, but we don't always act like it.

It does one's soul good to sit quietly in a beautiful church and hear the man of God speak with assurance concerning human and divine relationships. One wonders why more people do not sit and listen even in the hot summer time or in the cold of the winter. "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord." "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help."

TODAY'S PIONEERS.

The old feet falter and old arms fail,
The Youth must take the burdens up, and tread
A rough and tangled way to clear a trail
That lies within the wilderness ahead.

No less adventure than our fathers knew,
Who staunch of heart with strong and willing hands,
Set out to blaze a pathway, straight and true,
Across dark seas and strange uncharted lands.

So, Youth, fact forward, has as hard a fight
Today as any pioneer has known;
Entangled, grappled by foes of Right
And forced to clear unbroken paths alone.

Yet not alone, for still our fathers' God
Will walk with those who choose the better way.
Oh Youth, strike your footprints in the sod;
You are the pioneers of earth today.

AM I A QUITTER?

Christian Endeavor Topic for Aug. 25, 1935.

Another way to state the topic is, "Finish what you start." But I like the question, "Am I A Quitter?" Now that is a question! We don't like to think that we are. But really, are we? Am I? Let each one answer for himself after thinking the matter over carefully. Do you who are in school quit studying when the lesson is learned or when you get a bit sleepy? If you work, do you work by the clock and leave things for others to do, or do you stay until the finish? I like to see games played courageously to the very end even if one side is losing badly.

Did you ever start to study the Bible and because you found some of it a bit difficult to understand just quit studying it? Did you start to keep fifteen minutes daily for devotions and then just quit for no good reason? Have you a friend that lost your help when he was in need? Would you walk out on a fellow when he gets in trouble? Or would you stick by and still have confidence and lend a hand? What became of the office to which you were elected? Have you performed your duties well, or have you just quit? How about that pledge of yours to the Church and the Christ when you promised to support the Church and the kingdom to the best of your ability? Have you made good on that pledge by giving your time, talents, and money, or have you just quit?

Jesus said that a man can't plough when he is looking backwards, and he was right (Luke 9: 62). Neither is a soldier any good who walks backwards. And neither is a Christian worker. The body was made to face forwards. So was the soul.

Nobody likes a quitter. He doesn't like himself. He can't be trusted. He is very little good. Fair-weather Christians aren't Christians at all. They just think they are. The Master never turned back. He saw the cross ahead but kept walking that way until it fell on him. He struggled with it until it killed him, but he never turned back. And then he triumphed over more than a cross. He gave new life to the earth. But he couldn't if he had been a quitter. Neither can we. If you have hold of the handles, follow the plough. If you are a leader, keep on leading. If you are a Christian, follow the Christ.

Of course you are not perfect. You are short on wisdom. James tells what to do in a case like that (James 1:5-8). Read that passage until it sticks in your mind. It will do more good than the latest song hit of the movies. It will show you why people are "forever blowing bubbles." They are like the waves of the sea, only they are smaller,—much smaller. They are here today and gone tomorrow. With one crowd they are moderately good and with another crowd they are equally bad. They have no mind of their own. Such a girl is afraid to say "Don't," and such a boy can't quite say "No" and mean it. To such a person it is well to say, "Make up your mind." But, honestly, have I a mind to make up that will stick?

You can easily see that this topic may be embarrassing to some of us. But it may be immensely valuable. If we do not finish what we start, there is little chance of success in any form. Honors will not come because we are unworthy of the confidence of the people. Christian Endeavor cannot afford to elect such a person to office lest the society die for lack of leadership. The church cannot use them, because they will not be used for any length of time. Think the matter through before starting on the program for the meeting. Then make plans to get something helpful to grow out of the meeting.

A panel discussion (in which a few sit at the front and speak for the group) can easily display the truth of this discussion. There could be a meeting of the Endeavor officers with no reports from several officers, and an expressed desire on the part of others to quit. Follow this with a peppy meeting with all reports, plans for the

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

MARTHA (A Home-maker).

Lesson VII—August 18, 1935.

Golden Text: "Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus."—John 11:5.

Lesson: Luke 10:38:42; John 11:1-44.

How would you like to have Jesus drop in unexpectedly to your home? Would you feel free and at ease if he spent some time as your guest? Are there any closets that you would have to lock up, any books that you would want to hide, any habits that you would have to give up, any attitudes that you would have to change? Judged by his standards of home life, how high would your home rate as a Christian home? These questions deal with a basic principle or factor in the strategy of the Kingdom. Christ desires above all else to be enthroned in the home. The Christian home is the primary unit of the Kingdom.

Jesus had no home of His own during His public ministry. But he was a great home lover. And whenever opportunity came, he turned to the home of his friends. There was a particular home in which he found congenial friendship, and a wholesome atmosphere, and there developed between the Master and the members of the family a strong, wholesome love. Jesus loved Martha, and Mary, and Lazarus, and in their home he found that which satisfied his social nature, and his love of home life.

Busy Martha.

Martha was one of those active types of women, bustling and hustling about, always on the go, always doing something, careful of details, the embodiment of activity and energy. When Jesus came into her home she wanted everything to be right and ready. She wanted to be sure that the table was correctly set, the meal properly served, the house in spick and span order. Martha was a great housekeeper. There is some doubt as to whether she would have been a great homemaker. She was probably better at the former than she was at the latter. In any event she was so absorbed in her activities—good as they were—that she had no time for fellowship with her guest.

Activity is good. The world needs the Marthas of life. Heaven be praised for those women who have the knack of doing things and of doing them well. Perhaps every housewife can sympathize with Martha, and would defend her as against Mary. It needs to be said, however, that the Marthas are in danger of putting too much emphasis upon doing things, upon activity. This is true of individuals and church life. Many people do not have much to give to the world because they do not take time to renew their inner lives so that they will have something to give. Many churches are so desperately trying to keep the wheels turning, and especially in trying to keep folks always doing something that there is little spiritual vitality about what they do. Our American life is characterized by the spirit of Martha. Our patron saint is St. Vitus.

We must not forget the Marthas of life. Most of the good things we enjoy are made possible by the Marthas who are doing the world's work.

Meditative Mary.

Mary went to the other extreme. She sat quietly at the Master's feet and listened to his words. In her joy she perhaps overlooked her duties near at hand. What she was doing was important. But it was not the only thing that needed to be done. The world needs the contemplative type, the quiet meditative souls. But one can go to the extreme here as in the case of Martha. There are tasks to be done, there are burdens to be shared. Those who withdraw from active life are in danger of losing their perspective unless they come from the place of quiet into the world of activity again. This needs to be said however; many a life is shallow and fruitless because it does not take time for "dwelling deep," for renewing life from within.

Getting the Other's Viewpoint.

In spite of the fact that the Master was there, a tense situation developed. Martha lost patience with her sister, and with an unmistakable show of irritability she almost created a scene right then and there. With flushed face and sharp tone she suggested to Jesus that He ought to do something about it—"Lord dost thou not care that my sister did leave me to serve alone? Bid her therefore that she help me." It must have been embarrassing both to Jesus and to Mary. And in the light of Jesus' gentle rebuke it must have been embarrassing to Martha also.

But here is illustrated the difficulty of getting the other person's viewpoint. Martha thought that Mary was indifferent and lazy and selfish. Mary thought that Martha was putting too much emphasis on things that were not of supreme importance. How much we need to learn that it takes all kinds of people to make up a world—different types of temperament to blend their gifts into a stronger and richer unity, and this should make us broad and fair in judging one another.

Jesus As A Peacemaker.

Blessed are the peacemakers. With a gentle rebuke Jesus answered the fussy and fussing Martha. He did not take sides in an unfair way. He did not censure Martha for her zeal in preparing the dinner, for such work is necessary and good. But He did want her to know that her activity was too one-sided and lacked a vital part. Like so many of us today, Martha was putting the emphasis on the wrong place and overlooking something immeasureably more important.

future, and an eagerness to get at the tasks that lie ahead. (This sort of thing might help a church.) But whatever you do, try to get across the idea that it is worth the effort to stick to the finish, if the thing is worth the beginning.

Sing such songs as "Lead On, O King Eternal," "Sail On," "God Give Us Men," "I Will Follow Thee, My Saviour," "I Can Hear My Saviour Calling," and "I Would Be True." Always make the music part of the service.

"BE CAREFUL."

"A false witness shall not be unpunished."—Prov. 19:5.

What is a false witness? Is it swearing to a falsehood on a witness stand, or lying about someone? Yes, and more; it is giving utterance, expression or impression intended to deceive.

All that is against truth, all that is against justice and honesty, all that is insincere, all that speaks fair to one's face and ill to his back when he cannot hear, all that makes a show of friendliness merely for one's own gains, is bearing false witness and God hates it. And surely there must be nothing that grieves His heart more than to see His children this way—so hollow-hearted.

"Ill is that angel which erst fell from heaven,
But more ill than he, nor in worse case,
Who hides a traitorous mind with a smiling face,
And with a dove's white feather mask a raven."
—Wm. Drummond.

"Each sin some colour hath it to adorn; Hypocrisy, almighty God doth scorn."
—Wm. Drummond.

Prayer—Our Father, we know we need all of the Christ we can contain all along the way, lest we be a hypocrite and a liar. Grant unto us humbleness of heart and a simple walk with Thee.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"THE SPIRIT OF GOD."

"As many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the Sons of God."—Rom. 8:14.

What is the spirit of God? In answer, turn to the other spirits.

There is a spirit of bondage and a spirit of freedom; there is a spirit of love and a spirit of hate; there is a spirit of joy and a spirit of sorrow; there is a spirit of good and a spirit of evil; there is a spirit of peace and a spirit of unrest; there is a spirit that is generous and there is a spirit that is parsimonious. So also, there is a spirit of God and there is a spirit of the devil.

We often speak and act as though we expected the presence of God's spirit to be shown in some miraculous manner. It is not. The spirit of God is the truth of God possessing us, and it is manifested in our interest and action in it, just as the spirit of anything else is manifested by our interest and action in that thing. "He that doeth His will shall know," saith the Lord.

Now to remember that "God is Love, God is Righteousness, God is Honesty, God is Justice, God is Joy, God is Peace, God is Longsuffering, God is Gentleness, God is Meekness, and God is Everything that is good, it is not hard to understand what His spirit is and neither is it hard for us to believe that any of us may possess all these traits. If so, we are the Sons of God, and we are that much like Him. To be guided by these traits in our thinking actions is to be led by God.

Prayer—Our Father, we thank Thee that Thou hast given us the ability to be all the things that Thou art. We thank Thee for that image of Thine in us. Forgive us of our sins and sanctify our souls that Thine image in us may be more and more manifest in our every-day living.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"THE MEASURE OF A MAN."

"Keep thy heart with all diligence for out of it are the issues of life."—Prov. 4:23.

F. W. Robertson once said, "You must measure the strength of a man by the power of the feelings he subdues, and not by the power of those which subdue him." Composure is very often the highest result of a right heart. We have seeen men grow pale under insult but turn away in disdain. It was a mighty spirit of Christ in his heart. We have seen souls in great anguish endure stolidly as if carved out of rock. That is mastery over self. We have seen one bearing a hopeless trial never telling a soul of the canker that was eating his life out. That is a stoicism born of an eternal hope in the heart. Keep thy heart right and all thy life's actions will be right in the sight of God. "Be steadfast, unmovable," said Paul.

Prayer—Our Father, search us this day and know us. Dwell Thou within our hearts and we shall be right. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"STEADFAST FAITHFULNESS."

"Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life."—Rev. 2:10.

We are told that Gen, Howard of the Northern Army of the Civil War set an example for all his men and for all who ever knew him, of faithfulness in heart-life, until death.

General Howard never ate without giving God thanks, whether it was on a stump in the woods or in his own hut. After eating, his little pocket testament came out of his pocket and he read a few verses and bowed his head in prayer.

Midst all the confusions of war, the upset of everything with the army, and the great privations he suffered, yea, even when an arm was shot away and learning the use of the other midst it all, God was remembered and honored.

What a crown this is to his memory, and then to be able to stand before his Maker a clean soul, and say, "I have fought a good fight. I have kept the faith." Amen, O come Lord Jesus and bless us in steadfast faithfulness. Amen and Amen.

FRIDAY.

"THE RAILING OF IGNORANCE."

"These rail at whatsoever things they know not."—Jude 5:11.

Jude, the brother of James, the earthly brother of our Lord, was bold to condemn the evil-minded men who had crept into the church, and to declare of them that their brawling criticisms were simply born of their dense ignorance.

Most, if not all of such contentions have their origin in ignorance. And if it is so with men, it is often so with institutions and with systems of thought. We objurgate where we do not understand. Men are better than we realize or attempt to realize. It is very easy to rail at things we know not.

Prayer—Teach us, dear Lord, out of Thy heart of love. Give us more faith in our brothers—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SATURDAY.

"NOTHING ELSE COUNTS."

"To do justice and judgment is more acceptable to the Lord than sacrifice."—Prov. 21:3.

Religion divorced from the heart is nothing. Divine worship and Christian service without the heart is mockery.

We have been told of the death-bed scene when the light of a good mother was flickering out and her soul was taking its flight. As her children gathered by her bedside dreading both speech and silence, a son bent low and whispered, "Don't worry, Mother, we'll all be good." In reply, those wan lips lisped feebly: "Yes, my son, just be good; be good; nothing else counts."

Prayer—Our Father, Thou knowest our frame and that we are but dust. When we would do good evil is present with us. Do Thou forgive us and bless us with Thy spirit that we may be strong when we are weak and that we may always be good. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

"LIFE-GIVING FAITH."

"The righteous shall live by faith."—Gal. 3:7-14.

What is there in faith that is so vitalizing? Why does faith stimulate us, cause our blood to beat more exultantly, put new force into all our being? How is it that the righteous live by faith and die without it?

Because faith unites us with the unseen, and because in the unseen alone is life. What we see, what we hear and handle, these things of sense, are perishing as the senses that perceive them. What is of the unseen world, the non-sensuous and spiritual world—in that alone dwells life, for from that alone did life proceed.

Prayer—Thou art the only source of faith, O Christ, and so we turn to Thee.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

"WHY NOT TRY GOD?"

face in one form or another. Our Master, right thinker that he was, faced it in Gethsemane. He saw death, real, horrible, impending; he shrank from it, but he did not say, "God, you are no good, if you don't help me to escape!" No, he cried unto God, saying, "Father, I wish to live, but I am not afraid to die. I'll die if it's really necessary!" Some of his enemies next day said: "He claimed to be God's Son—if he were, he would be coming down from the cross; he would not be dying like a criminal!" And when he cried out in his physical suffering, they said, "He is calling for help; let's see whether any help comes!" Their idea was, "What's the good of God if he won't help a right thinking man to come down from a painful cross!" But Jesus never accepted that way of thinking. There are some disagreeable things in life that God helps us to endure, not to escape. Good comes of it at last—meanwhile evil! Why not try God to that extent, to the uttermost extremity, without seting any limit to what can happen? I am expecting good things, but I will not close my eyes to what happens to some of the best right thinking men and women.

Right thinking is thinking realistically—it is not thinking anything you like—it is thinking honestly. It is thinking health, but it also takes account of death. The popular motion picture is made to order with short cuts to happy endings. Such is not life. Don't try to think it is! Life is God's trial of us, not our trial of him.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D., Pastor.

HOW THE BATTLE WAS WON.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"Joshua did as Moses had said . . . and Moses, Aaron, and Hur went up to the top of the hill."—Ex. 17:10.

Life is a battle. In it some win, and some lose. The other day I looked in on a real struggle. A mother old. Husband dead long since. Daughter married, and her husband dead. Now the daughter permanently sick, and in a state institution. And three boys left on a poor, widowed grandmother's hands. She was fighting her battle bravely. And so far as I could see, she was winning. If you should ask me how, I should have to answer: A little garden, and a great God!

"The greatest battle that was ever fought,—
Shall I tell you where and when?
On the maps of the world you will find it not;
It was fought by the mothers of men."

Israel's conflicts were not over when Pharoah finally permitted them to leave the land of Egypt. They were not over when the armies of Egypt were drowned in the Red Sea. Sometimes we become too satisfied that the battle is won. We think it is over when it has hardly started.

"But, oh these battles, they last so long,—
From babyhood to the grave."

And if Israel ever thought the victory won and the Land of Promise gained as soon as they were beyond the borders of Egypt they soon learned better. For, "Then came Amalek, and fought with Israel in Rephidim. And Moses said unto Joshua Choose us out men, and go out, fight."

Israel was not prepared for war. She was fleeing from persecution. On the march were her women-folk, children, property, and cattle. A goal was in view,—a goodly land, flowing with milk and honey. Several hurdles had been passed, but now behold Amalek was arrayed against them in battle.

Too long the world has mistaken its proper instruments of warfare. They have read this story and seen the shining spears and flying arrows, and other instruments of death. But thrown into the forefront of this picture is a hill, and a man of God in earnest prayer. No wonder the world waits in constant fear of war. It too much overlooks the hill, and earnest prayer. It has prayed to God as though he were Mars. We have changed the "King of Glory" to a "god of war." But the ancient song of Israel does not run:

"Who is this 'god of war'? The Lord strong and mighty,
The Lord mighty in battle";

but it reads instead:

"Who is this King of Glory? The Lord strong and mighty,
The Lord mighty in battle."

We have wrested the divine charm and beauty from the very word 'glory' itself and made its meaning inglorious, rather than glorious. We speak of the 'pomp and glory of war' whereas we should get our meaning of the word 'glory' from such a sentence as this: "And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." If you would see 'glory' see Jesus! Behold his glory, full of grace and truth!

That is the God who fought with Joshua against Amalek in the valley of Rephidem,—a God prevailed upon not by powder but by prayer. You have the beautiful picture in mind: First, Moses, the man of God, on the hill in prayer. He is holding aloft his hand. Holding it up to God. Holding it as for God in protecting, blessing, attitude over a needy people. Since that day men have lifted their hands to God in prayer. The benediction is spoken while uplifted is the hand. But Moses' hand grew weary. It fell limp by his side, although he struggled to lift it up again. It could be seen that the battle in the valley below went against Joshua when Moses' hand went down. When his hand went aloft, the men of Joshua prevailed. So in the second place the picture shows Joshua "doing as Moses commanded," and confidently expecting Moses to keep his promise by standing "on the top of the hill with the rod of God in my hand." But when the hand could no longer stay up for weariness, the picture shows us that Aaron and Hur "hold up his hands, the one on the one side and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady until the going down of the sun," and until the victory came!

My friends, carry away with you today this lesson: Spiritual forces are mightier than the material. Goodness is mightier than gold. The battle was won with spiritual power. As long as Joshua could look to the hills for his help his weapons prevailed, but whenever for any reason the spiritual significance of the hills was frustrated his fight was a losing one. You may think in some hour of success that you can do without keeping your vows with God, that you can neglect your spiritual welfare, that you can cross the channel of life on water-wings of silver, but just remember that the battle was a losing one when the spiritual connection with the hill top was broken.

The other day I attended the funeral of a negro minister and I was struck with one phrase in a song they sang. I wish I could bring it to mind now in full, but the phrase was:

"Oh! Thou who never lost a battle, Stand by me."

So it is when we read, "The Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle" it is to one who "never lost a battle" we refer. In life's fight if we have Him to stand by us we shall not lose.

Another lesson we may learn from his story, or rather it is a phase of just what I have been saying, but I put it this way for emphasis, the power of prayer. Prayer brought victory. The grandmother to whom I referred a moment ago prayed much and often. She lived in the spirit of prayer. A light shone on her face, and even with her troubles there was a joy in her heart which could not be explained but by daily prayer to God.

"More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of. Wherefore let thy voice
Rise like a fountain for me night and day.
For what are men better than sheep or goats
That nourish a blind life within the brain,
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer
Both for themselves and those that call them friend?
For so the whole round earth is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God."

And the third lesson to which I wish to call your attention is cooperation. It was there. Moses, Joshua, Aaron and Hur, and the men chosen to fight. Each at his post. Each doing his duty. Joshua could not win without the uplifted hand of Moses. Moses could not win without the work of Joshua. Moses could not have held his hands aloft without the helpers,—Aaron and Hur. All would have been in vain without

Dear Friends:

You will notice that our new barn fund keeps climbing up. We trust that offerings and individual gifts will keep coming in till the grand total will be sufficient to pay every bill when the carpenter drives the last nail.

We are building this new barn on the foundation of the one burned and we are going to paint it white. We may not have a better barn than we had before but we will have a whiter barn.

In looking over our income book we find that our income so far this year and up to the same time last year is $80.00 less than last year. Then, too, we are paying much higher prices for lots of the things we have to buy. Some things one hundred per cent higher. Can you tell us how to balance the income and expense account.

The writer had a very pleasant visit to the Valley Virginia Central Conference last week. The people in that Conference are always so kind to you that it just makes one a better person to mingle with them. Then, too, the mountain scenery is so beautiful that you are so close to nature that it makes you feel that you are a little nearer Heaven than before. We are always delighted to attend this Conference.

A Story for the Children

KITTENS IN THE CRADLE.

One of the sweetest stories I have read for a long time is about a wise old cat who managed to find a safe place for her kittens. Poor old Tabby had had hard luck. She had started in to raise two or three families of baby pussies and every time somebody would slip them away out of the nest when she happened to be out, and she never found out what became of them. So Tabby determined to find a safe place, and went up into the attic under the roof and found a little old-fashioned cradle which she thought was just the place to keep her babies safe.

There had not been any babies in that cradle for a long time. A dear old grandmother lived there, but the children and grandchildren had gone far away, and the grandmother and her old bachelor brother lived a very quiet life. One day the old lady went up into the attic to look after some herbs, when, happening to look across the room, she saw that the cradle under the eaves was rocking! It would swing to and fro very fast for a little while, and then almost stop, when, as if some fairy were rocking it, it would begin to rock furiously.

The little old grandmother was a brave woman, but it gave her such a turn that it was quite a while before she could muster up courage to cross the attic and find out what made the cradle rock. When she looked down into the cradle she was astonished. There were three pretty, plump little kittens.

They were having a great frolic; and as they rolled over each other and jumped up on the sides of the cradle they kept it rocking quite as it used to do when it had a sure-enough baby in it and grandpa sat beside it.

Just then old Tabby came up and rubbed herself against grandmother's dress, and jumped, purring, in among the kittens, who gave her a joyous welcome.

Grandmother's eyes had tears in them as she looked down into the old cradle, and she stroked old Tabby on the back and said: "Your babies are safe, Tabby."

I think this is a good story for us all. Think of that manger cradle in Bethlehem where the baby Christ lay so long ago. All the cradles are safer and all the babies happier because of Him who cradled in the manger.—Banks in Free Will Baptist.

the unnumbered and unsung multitude that did their part in the valley below.

Are you a member of the Suffolk Christian Church? Yes. What is your job? What do you do down there? Oh I do not do anything! I only attend the services every Sunday morning. Sometimes I go at night. My brother, if we did not fill these pews with faithful men, women, and children who simply "stand by," and faithfully hold up the hands of others we could finish the history of this church today. You are important in this church,—valuable, and necessary, whatever place you have or pew you fill. What you are doing in whatever place you are for the cause of Christ and the church is work. If you are filling your niche honorably and well do not feel that your hands are empty. If Moses failed, all failed, if Joshua failed, all failed, if Aaron failed all failed, if the men in the lines failed all failed. Contact could be broken by either person or group; but with faithfulness on the part of the leadership, and with faithfulness on the part of the helpers there is no suggestion in this story that the men in the line would fail to do their duty. So if you have been given a place of leadership fill it humbly, nobly, and the battle is won.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Lutheran World Convention to Meet.—

According to announcement by Rev. Dr. John A. Moorehead, president, the Third Lutheran World Convention will be held in Paris, October 13-20. "Lutheranism and the Present World Crisis," will be the theme of the convention and vital matters including political crises, youth movements, social welfare problems and home and foreign missions will be dealt with.

Jews in Palestine Increase.—

The Jewish population of Palestine has increased from a pre-World War population of 55,000 to 350,000. The Holy Land has become a refuge for exiled Jews from all parts of the world. Is the God of Israel seeking again to bring up his people from the flesh-pots of Egypt into the Promised Land? Is it possible that the Jews may again become a nation as well as a people?

America Mourns.—

The death of Rogers with that of Wiley Post, world-famous air pilot, with whom he was traveling by airplane in Alaska, has brought sorrow to the whole American nation. Since the first news of the disaster was brought to Point Barrow by a native who is said to have run fifteen miles to tell the story, and from there broadcast to the world, there has been a veil of sadness spread over the entire country. The daily press has told the story in far greater detail than would be possible here. May God give peace to their souls.

"The United Methodist Church."—

Meeting last week in Evanston, Ill., the joint commission from the northern and southern branches of the Methodist Episcopal Church and from the Methodist Protestant Church, voted to temporarily, at least, adopt the above name for the united bodies. The decision was reached after the committee of fifteen had debated the question for approximately three hours. It was understood that there would be opportunity given for objection to the present designation when the full constitution was presented for adoption to the three church groups.

Number of Government Employees Increased.—

According to reports of June 30th, government employees had reached a number totaling 717,712, an increase of 154,000 since the advent of the present administration. The monthly payroll of these employees amounts to approximately $109,000,000. In the city of Washington there have been 36,600 names added to the government payroll in the past 29 months, bringing the Washington total up to 103,453. The wartime peak of civilian government employees in Washington was 117,000, and the total for the country was something over 900,000.

Pedestrian Fatalities Increase.—

Not only has there been an increased death rate among motorists in the past few years, but pedestrians are, too, paying toll. Pedestrian accidents due to automobiles are estimated to have increased 16 per cent above 1933 and 30 per cent above 1927. It is interesting as well as strange to note that the safest group in the streets seems to be little children. There is another enlightening fact that might be noted: automobiles deaths per ten thousand automobiles in various countries almost parallel the rate of consumption of absolute alcohol. The rate is highest in Italy, being 54.5, and lowest in New Zealand with a rate of only 6.6. The United States is fourth, New Zealand, Canada and Norway having better records, while our own country is followed by Austria, Irish Free State, England and Wales, the Netherlands, Scotland, Belgium, Germany, Switzerland and Italy, in the order named.

Paris Peace Parley Collapses.—

The three-power peace conference, which was seeking to prevent war between Italy and Abyssinia, collapsed Sunday when Premier Laval announced that it had "adjourned." It was stated by the commission that they had "not yet been able to find a basis for discussion which would permit solution of the conflict. . . (but that further efforts to preserve peace would be) pursued through diplomatic channels." It was stated that the agreement offered was one "affording Italy wide economic opportunities, safeguarding the frontiers to Italy's colonies and assuring the possessions of Italians in Ethiopia. The offer was subject, first, to maintenance of the principle of Ethiopia's integrity and independence; second to agreement by the Ethiopian government and third, to League of Nations' consent." The answer of Mussolini to this proposal "unfortunately wasn't the kind which would enable further progress to be made." It is still hoped that a solution may be reached when the League meets on September 4th.

Trade in Narcotics.—

Dr. John R. Mott, president of the World's Committee of the Y. M. C. A. and chairman of the Institute of Social and Religious Research, returned recently from the annual meeting of the committee at Geneva. He said that after hearing League of Nations experts report on the fight against the traffic in narcotics he felt "for the first time that the drug situation is well in hand." He said further: "The facts in relation to drug traffic are now well known. The league experts' report was very encouraging. Of course, there is a long fight ahead; when drug traffic is stamped out in one country, it breaks out in another. For example, Turkey was one of the worst spots two years ago. Now it is one of the best controlled. But there is trouble with the traffic in Bulgaria. China, one of the worst places, is not under control, but General Chiang Kaishek has determined to stamp out the narcotic traffic there." Dr. Mott said Americans could be proud of the part the United States had played in the struggle. Missionaries, in supplying data, had been of great service, he said.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

Will Congress Adjourn This Week?—

"It looks now as if it will." But before our Senators go home, the President has not less than ten "must" bills which he insists be passed. Heading this list is, of course, the wealth tax bill. Another one is the deadlocked utilities bill, and several plans will no doubt be tried to pry it from the Senate-House conference. A compromise may be reached, but there seems little likelihood that the House will recede from its overwhelming action against the "death sentence" which the Administration bill contained. Utility companies will probably be pleased if an agreement cannot be reached. Then there is the Guffey coal stabilization bill, which may be good for the miners, but will make the user pay and pay, if it passes. Then there are the others almost as important to the President, and possibly of no importance to the average citizen—if they don't pass. But they must all be considered. And now we repeat: "Will Congress adjourn this week?" It looks now as if it won't.

"Not Run for Profit."—

Auditor L. McCarthy Downs, made his report the past week for the fiscal year ending June 30th, in regard to the Virginia ABC Board. This report shows that the liquor board had made a total net profit of $3,540,250 for the year. During the same period it is evident that there was still quite an extensive profit in the bootlegging business, though quite a few in that trade were penalized heavily, reports show. There were reported siezed 297 stills and 44,738 gallons of illicit whiskey. Trucks and automobiles to the number of forty were taken. 3,197 raids were conducted which resulted in 1,952 convictions for illicit use of liquor. One would like, if the bootleggers were kind enough to furnish the information, to know the total amount of illicit liquor which was not seized but was otherwise disposed of. A simple calculation from the above, with allowances for discrepancies, would show that the average family in Virginia spends around $25 a year for its liquor. Can anyone give us the figures as to the average Virginia benevolence budget?

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. J. E. McCauley, pastor of the Richmond church, is spending the week with his mother, near Chapel Hill, N. C.

It has been the custom for many of our churches to hold evangelistic meetings during the months of July and August. THE SUN's editor will greatly appreciate any information from the various churches regarding such efforts.

SUN readers generally are rejoiced at the prospective largely increased student body at the opening of Elon College September 3rd. President Smith has worked with tireless and well directed energy for this happy consumation.

Dr. James H. Lightbourne, pastor of our Burlington Church, preached at the union services at Chapel Hill, Sunday, August 18th, at 11:00 o'clock. Dr. Lightbourne spoke as a representative of the Christian Church, on the union program of the churches of Chapel Hill for the Summer.

Dr. L. E. Smith and Floyd Hurst of Norfolk, Va., were in Richmond last week in the interest of Elon College. Extensive conferences were held with different creditors of the College. It is hoped that the financial affairs of the College may be adjusted satisfactorily to all. Significant progress has already been made along this line.

According to the public press, Rev. Jesse H. Dollar has resigned as pastor of our LaGrange Church. This news is received with regrets, but with faith and hope for both pastor and church. The LaGrange Church affords an opportunity for an aggressive pastor and Brother Dollar is capable of rendering significant service to any church in our brotherhood.

We learn with hegret that Dr. W. R. Kedzie is withdrawing from his position as Secretary of Educational Institutions of the Congregational Education Society. Dr. Kedzie is a hard worker, an impressive speaker, and one in whom, on only short acquaintance, we have found much to admire. Our best wishes go with him in whatever undertakings he is expecting to engage.

It is reported at THE SUN'S office that the State Board of Health of North Carolina has lifted the ban so that children of primary and junior ages may return to Sunday school. Children of the above ages have been barred from all gatherings on account of infantile paralysis. It is a source of genuine gratification that this dreaded and dreadful disease is decidedly on the wane in our State.

A commission, composed of commissioners from the three communions involved, has been in session in Chicago the past week, seeking diligently to work out and effect a merger of the Methodist Episcopal Church, The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Methodist Protestant Church. Agreement seems to be reached by the commission, but their agreement will have to be ratified by the several conferences of the constituent bodies. This will require at best about three years. If the merger is effected, as now seems promising, it will create by far the largest denomination of Protestantism in the U. S.—more than 9,000,000.

Rev. Milo J. Sweet, Elon College, N. C., pastor-at-large for the Carolinas and Georgia, is working assiduously, and we think effectively, to complete the merger of our Congregational and Christian Churches within the bounds of the Southern Convention, not only in name, but in fact. He is visiting the churches of our Congregational constituency in the Carolinas acquainting them with the methods of work in the several conferences and hoping to have these churches united with these conferences in annual session this fall. It is a matter of adjustment and allocation which now should be worked out harmoniously and with helpfulness to all and hurt to none. Brother Sweet is certainly doing his part faithfully.

The distinguished and everywhere esteemed Dr. James I Vance certainly told his brethren and the world a great truth according to the Associated Press: "Montreat, Aug. 11.—(AP)—Dr. James I Vance, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Nashville, Tenn., today told the Southern Presbyterian conference on foreign missions that before recovery would come to this nation 'God's people must humble themselves in prayer and come back to him. Some think the nation can get along on the dole and other things to close the mouths of complaining people,' he continued, 'but America needs nothing so much as to get down on its knees and return to God. We as a church can never make America and other nations better until we get better ourselves. Sin makes the world sick and turns it from God. What the church and this nation needs more than creeds and codes, more than armies and navies, is humility in prayer.'"

Rev. B. H. Watkins, pastor United Church, Lynchburg, Va., is rejoicing and with good reason, that by planning his work and working the plan, his church has already raised his benevolence budget for the year. He says: "I am writing these lines to tell you that the greatest pleasure I now have is the fact that through the first nine months of our church year, due to our program of work which was outlined in the very beginning of the year and the task continually held before my people, we have been able to raise our apportionments for the year and I am sending you a check for $15.00 which you will note, added to that previously sent, is a little more than was allotted to our church. This has given me a great deal of pleasure as well as considerable amount of work and thought. I am very proud of the achievement of our church this year, for I believe that we will be one of the first to raise our apportionments in full."

Dr. Russell J. Clinchy, writing "From a Capital Window" for a recent issue of Advance, says: "Congregationalists and Christians in the Southeastern area are rejoicing over the great steps which have been taken by Elon College, in North Carolina, in reducing its debt of $600,000 to less than $175,000 at the present writing. The erection of the beautiful new buildings at Elon was undertaken before the depression, and so the college was hard hit when that occurred in 1929. Through the almost miraculous efforts of President Leon E. Smith, who has worked without limit, this debt has been refunded upon a realistic basis, and many gifts have been received, to reduce the debt to its present size. This has recreated the whole life of the college, and the past year was one of the best in its history. The college looks forward to the new year with great hope, as the student body will be over 400; new members of the faculty have been secured; and some of the older buildings are being re-conditioned."

AT MASSANETTA SPRINGS.

On Monday, August 12th, 1935, at 8:55 A. M., my wife and I left Suffolk for Massanetta Springs to attend the Bible Conference. We drove our V8 Ford over the mountains along the Spottswood Trail through Gordonsville, reaching here at 3:10 P. M., a distance of 195.5 miles.

The Bible Conference will be in session until August 25th. We have had the privilege of attending this Conference for eight years. All told, this is a total of nearly sixteen weeks spent in Conferences here.

The Conference this year has a great program. During the first week the principal speakers have been Drs. A. W. Blackwood of Princeton, S. D. Gordon, W. E. Blackburn of Liverpool, Robt. E. Speer. Next week (Aug. 19th-25th) another group of distinguished speakers will be heard. Courses of Bible Study are given in addition to these addresses.

The Bible Conference is a great help to a busy pastor. I have been greatly uplifted by these conferences in the past. The present conference offers inspiring and instructive information.

My churches are entitled to the best I can give them. Its costs money to stay here. All culture and progress is expensive. If I can become more useful I am willing to pay the price and make the sacrifice for the glory of God and the growth of the Church.

We appreciate this privilege, and we hope to be better fitted for work when we return to our field of labor.

I. W. JOHNSON.

VIRGILINA LETTER.

Three of the churches of this charge have held their annual series of meetings this summer.

Lebanon, Liberty and Union. Hebron has a series of meetings every other year, alternating with Averitt Baptist Church in the same community.

Rev. Stanley C. Harrell assisted at Lebanon, Rev. J. L. Neese at Liberty and Rev. J. G. Morgan at Union. No pastor ever had more faithful and congenial helpers.

Summing up the visible results of the three meetings there were some fifty professions, a large number of reclamations and fifty-two received into the churches.

The work of this field doesn't progress rapidly. Yet, with the aid of the Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, Missionary and Ladies' Aid Society, I feel encouraged that some contributions are being made to the kingdom's advancement.

C. E. NEWMAN.

A HARVEST PROGRAM.

A "harvest" program was recently presented by the Young People's Choir of the First Congregational-Christian Church of Newport News. It included instrumental music, vocal selections and dramatized hymns.

Miss Louise Baker played the prelude, and following the choir processional and a hymn, Miss Lorraine Holland and Henry Wise sang a duet, "Must I Go Empty-Handed?" A hymn story, "What Shall the Harvest Be?" was told by Miss Emma Wooldridge, and dramatized by Morris Dobson, the solo part being sung by Miss Irene Edwards. A dramatized hymn, "Where Hast Thou Gleaned Today?" was sung by Miss Hazel Harris, with Ralph Cole, Mr. Wise and Miss Holland the gleaners.

The Rev. Robert Lee House, pastor, spoke on "The Harvest of Life."—Norfolk-Virginian Pilot.

GREENSBORO FIRST CHURCH.

The Daily News of Greensboro, August 12th, carried the fine and friendly face of our congenial and beloved Dr. C. H. Rowland and his worthy successor, with the following comment which will be of interest throughout the Church:

"At the morning service at the First Christian church yesterday a letter from Rev. W. E. Wisseman, of Schulenburg, Tex., communicating his acceptance of a call to the pastorate of the church, effective October 13th, was read.

"Decision to extend a call to Mr. Wisseman was reached at a congregational meeting at the church July 7th. At that time the resignation of Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., as pastor was accepted, to take effect as soon as his successor could take charge, and Dr. Rowland, resigning because of ill health, was elected pastor emeritus.

"Mr. Wisseman, who is 33, is a native of Texas. After graduation from Southern Methodist university, he spent three years at Boston university, from which he received his M. A. and S. T. B. degrees. After traveling for several months in Europe and the Holy Land, he became pastor of the Methodist church in Schulenburg, Tex., from which he is resigning to come to Greensboro. He will transfer his ministerial credentials and his membership from the Methodist church to the North Carolina and Virginia Conference of the Congregational and Christian church.

"In 1931, Mr. Wisseman married Miss Graham Rowland, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Rowland. Mrs. Wisseman, a graduate of Elon college, received her Master's degree in religious education at Boston university. She then worked as a missionary among the Apache Indians in Arizona and for a year before her marriage was director of religious education at the First Christian church, Burlington.

"Mr. and Mrs. Wisseman, their son, Wm. Rowland, and daughter, Mary Graham will move to Greensboro early in October. They will make their residence at the parsonage, 315 North Edgeworth street.

Dr. Rowland, the pastor emeritus, a native of North Carolina, came to Greensboro in 1923 and he actively served the pastorate of the First Christian church continuously until his health failed about a year ago. Following his graduation at Elon college in 1900 he accepted a call to the pastorate of the Christian church in Franklin, Va., which he served continuously 23 years, prior to his removal to Greensboro.

" 'The church congregation feels fortunate in being able to retain Dr. Rowland as pastor emeritus,' William B. Truitt, a leading layman of the church, remarked yesterday. 'During his 11 years' residence here he has won the love of the membership through his patience and loyalty and he has a host of friends in Greensboro who rejoice because of his continued connection with the church and continued residence here.'

"Leaders of the church are anticipating a great period of sound development under the pastorate of Mr. Wisseman."

DESTINY.

By ROBERT WHITAKER.

Through all the madnesses of man,
Follies of war and greed,
In vain he stars and seas we scan
To mark that they give heed.

The stars pursue their ways on high
As man had never been.
The seas roll in their majesty.
Careless of human sin.

Yet stars and seas alike may pass,
New systems breed and burst,
While man, though seeming as the grass,
Sates his immortal thirst.

And he, perchance, himself will note
New universes rise,
Their transciency, to him, remote
As now, to us, the skies.

Is it to dream, that so may be
The orbit of mankind?
Man, more than ever star or sea,
One with Eternal Mind.

MY PERSONAL COMMITMENT.

I will be Christian.
Like a crimson line running through our movement's life let this covenant bind us to the will and way of Jesus.

I will be Christian.
My witness to the experience which is the most revolutionary and profound man may know; my personal testimony to its reality.

I will be Christian.
My body, mind, and spirit Christ centered, that I may learn His will; that I may walk His way; that I may win my associates; and that "in all things He might have the preeminence."

I will be Christian.
My voice of passion in an age grown cold and cynical because of faltering faith and shrinking deeds, my answer to the Macedonian call of spiritual continents unpossessed and unexplored.

I will be Christian.
In my heart, in my home, in my group, in my country—now; to help America that America may serve the world.

I will be Christian.
Through my church, and through Christian Endeavor, these not two, but one with one purpose and goal: agency, at once human and divine, weak as man, but strong as God, through which He at last "shall reign whereever the sun does his successive journeys run."

I will be Christian.
Across all lines of color and class, into every human relationship, without respect for temporal circumstances, in spite of threat and with no thought of reward.

I will be Christian.
Thinking peace; studying to find and helping to perfect its machinery; recognizing no sea as a division and no language as a barrier; enrolling in a fellowship of peace; loving my own country first, but all who love another, and knowing that patriotism which begins at home ends only in the unity of mankind.

I will be Christian.
That Christianity may become as militant as Fascism, as terrible toward wrong as God's hatred of sin, as tender with the weak as His love for little children, as powerful as the prayer of the righteous, and as sacrificial as Calvary's cross.

God helping me, in my whole life, everywhere, I will be Christian! At whatever cost, I choose Christ!

(The words of decision signed by thousand of Christian Endeavors in the Thirty-fifth International Convention.)

EVENING.

Soft o'er the earth the shadows falling;
A robin to his mate is calling;
Homeward his weary way he's winging,
To rest his tired throat from singing;
But pauses once again to call—
"Come home."

So o'er my life the shadows lengthen;
But through the days there comes to strengthen
And send my gladsome spirit winging,
While joyfully my heart is singing:
The thought that God will call to me—
"Come home."

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

WILL ROGERS.

This man of the movies, the stage and the lecture platform, proved, if proof had been necessary, that one does not have to be vulgar, immoral or unclean, to win popularity and applause from all kinds and conditions of people. This writer had fallen into the habit of reading whatever Will Rogers wrote, and of listening whenever he spoke. Not one vulgar word or allusion, not one oath or immoral line do we recall as coming from his tongue or pen. Will Rogers was clean, and the world, certainly we of the United States, had learned to laugh with him and to love him. His sudden death, with his flying companion, the indomitable Wiley Post, through the crash of their plane in a remote region of Alaska on the night of August 15th, carried a sense of loss, deep regret and genuine sorrow to more homes and hearts than could have been caused by the death of any other citizen of our time. Beyond question he had carried cheer, laughter and good old home-spun philosophy into more lives and homes than any man or woman of our day. This is explained in a measure by the epitaph which in 1930 in a Boston speech he said he wished placed on his grave stone when he was gone: "I joked about every prominent man of my time but I never met a man I didn't like." There you have it! Will Rogers made fun and created laughter, but he loved people and said no word or wrote no line to wound the feelings, shock the modesty, or injure the virtue or good name of any living person.

He was one of the world's rare geniuses and we shall not see his kind again. Again we surmise that one does not have to be vulgar to be funny, nor impure to win applause, nor unchaste to win universal acclaim and applause.

THE WORLD CONVENTION.

"The Church of Christ" ("Disciples," and by some called "The Christian Church") has just held a "World Convention" at Leicester, England. The largest delegation was from the United States where the numerical strength of this communion is greatest. In delivering the Convention address, the president, Dr. John Wycliffe Black said:

> "Fifteen nationalities were represented at the first Pentecost, when the Church of Christ was established upon the earth, and when 3,000 convicted Jews were immersed into Christ upon the one day. In Leicester today, in this convention, 42 nationalities are united together, in the common service of the same Lord; loyally to maintain the faith which, by the inspired Apostles, was 'once for all delivered to the Saints.' "

Some of us, not members of this communion, might raise a question about "3,000 convicted Jews being immersed upon the one day, all late in the afternoon we suppose, as Peter was quite sometime in preaching that marvellous sermon that brought conviction to so many. But Dr. Black enlarges upon his statement with this illuminating exposition:

> "The ordinance of Christian immersion as a part of the plan of salvation according to the Scriptures, administered to penitent believers upon confession of their faith and with a consequent repudiation both of sprinkling and pouring as being outside the scope of, as well as being contrary to, the plain teaching of Scripture.
> "The weekly breaking of bread as an ordinance within the church for the perpetual remembrance of the death of our Lord, and as being a spiritual means of grace and a proclamation of his gospel to the world.
> "Some measure of the mutual ministry of the members of the body of Christ for her edification, as well as for the development of their spiritual abilities.
> "The name 'Churches of Christ' as having New Testament authority, and as tending to promote unity, as against the divisive tendencies of unauthorized appellations which are not found in the Scripture.
> "Thus, whilst being prepared to recognize and to rejoice in whatever measure of truth is to be found amongst all professing Christians, and to associate with all confessors of the faith, in so far as they will act in hormony with the written word, thereby carrying out the principle laid down by the Master: 'He that is not against us is on our part'; there remains the obligation to witness to the truth as it is revealed in the divine oracles, and to continue in the matters specified to contend earnestly for the faith."

At any rate President Black was telling his convention, and the world, what "The Churches of Christ" believe and teach, whether others agree or disagree. It was good of President Black, we opine, to admite that his Church was prepared "to recognize whatever measure of truth is to be found" and taught by other churches and the rest of us. Verily, there is in this world a diversity of beliefs and doctrines and dogmas, but the love and the faith of our blessed Lord are broad enough and deep enough to embrace all who trust Him and seek diligently to follow in His way.

ISOLATION UNREAL AND IMPOSSIBLE.

It has been a long time, and the world has moved a long way, since Paul wrote in his letter to the Romans: "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth unto himself." What Paul said of individuals then is true of nations now. The whole world is watching with bated breath the war cloud that seems to be lowering over far-off Ethiopia. And well we may for a match struck now may set ablaze any one or all of endless powder houses throughout the world. Look at this for example and illustration. The Christian Evangelist relates it:

> "When the giant German liner 'Bremen' was preparing to leave New York harbor on her return transatlantic voyage recently, a mob formed at the pier and succeeded in tearing down the German flag. The mob was accused of having communistic leadings, perhaps to mitigate the tension created by this violent reaction to Nazi Jew baiting. The German government made a strong representation to our state department over the incident. The state department has expressed regret and referred the matter of punishment to the Governor of New York, who will turn it over to the Mayor of New York City. It would seem by his action that Secretary Hull is content to give the Hitler government only mild satisfaction. No apology was offered.
> "The fiery New York Mayor had already created much comment by his refusal to license a German citizen as a masseur, giving as his reason, 'It is well known that American citizens of Jewish faith have been discriminated against in Germany.' The official German press took notice of the episode by declaring the act of the New York Mayor a breach of the German-American commercial treaty of 1923.
> "While these reactions of violence are to be deplored, it is interesting to note that they have had some influence in modifying the severity of the Jewish persecution in Germany. They also indicate the world-wide solidarity of interests that men have in all political and social conflict and the impossibility of localizing racial and national issues. Isolation is unreal fiction in our modern world."

PROOF OF PROGRESS.

A news item from Calcutta dated July 19th, stated that two men had been punished for amazing sacrificial murders; one at Nagpur for throwing an aged man into a "Holy" fire to propitiate the gods, the other at Patna for cutting the neck of a shepherd girl and taking the severed head home to worship. This item reminds one of two things, viz., superstition still exists in its crass form in some parts of the world, and the growth of public opinion against such horrible deeds.

There was a time when such deeds were common. Among the Aztecs in Mexico hundreds of thousands of such deaths were performed as a part of the state religion. The Spaniards, through the influence of the Catholic Church put a stop to that. The British government put a stop to such sacrifices in India, but, of course, has not been able to restrain each individual as in this case. However, the custom has been put under ban and the guilty ones have been punished.

There are many evidences that missionaries and their teachings have enhanced the value of human life among savage peoples. I can never forget a story I once read about an atheist who visited a South Sea Islander Chief and found a copy of a Bible on his table. The atheist pointed to it and smirked, saying: "Of course we don't take stock any more in that book." The chief took him out of the back of the house and showed him a big iron pot and then said, "We were cannibals. If it had not been for that book you would have been in that pot and eaten long ago! Do not speak disrespectfully of the Bible."

In Professor Bennett's book "Social Salvation" he gives several proofs of human progress and among them cites the fact that human sacrifice is practically unknown in the world today. All nations recognize the value of human life as they have never done before. This, of course, must be qualified somewhat in view of the "sacrifice" of human beings in war. Also something must be said about sacrifice of human life in industry. And yet, let us notice the growing sentiment against war and the increasing care for life in industry. These, however, are problems by themselves. Progress has been made and is being made in the value of personality and the sacredness of human life. Let us take courage.

DR. KIRBYE'S APPOINTMENT.

Dr. J. Edward Kirbye, pastor of the United Church, Raleigh, has been given a year's leave of absence and has accepted an appointment as head of the division of projects of the Rural Resettlement Program. He has already gone to Washington to take up this work. Dr. Kirbye was largely responsible for the homestead project near Raleigh. An editorial in the News and Observer says: "In furthering that project he made probably the most complete and thoughtful study of housing conditions in Raleigh which has yet been made. Beyond Raleigh in recent months he has given his wisdom and his help to the debt-loaded farmers of this section."

Dr. Kirbye's pulpit will be supplied by Rev. Carl R. Key during August. Rev. Geo. L. Day in September and Dr. Russell of Duke on the second Sunday in October. Dr. Kirbye himself will preach on the first Sundays in September and October. Dr. Kirbye's friends will all congratulate him on this fine opportunity to render a larger service to the country.

VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL CONFERENCE.

The Virginia Valley Central Conference met in regular session at Leaksville, August 7th and 8th. The opening devotional service was conducted by the President, Rev. R. L. Williamson. The enrollment showed the following ministers of the conference present: A. W. Andes, R. L. Williamson, Ivan R. Smith, Wm. J. Andes. The following churches were represented by one or more delegates: Antioch, Bethel, Bethlehem, Dry Run, Joppa, Leaksville, Linville, Mayland, Mt. Lebanon, Mt. Olivet (G), Mt. Olivet (R), Newport, St. Peter's, Timber Ridge, Whistler's Chapel, Winchester, Woods' Chapel—seventeen out of twenty-six.

The welcome address was given by R. O. Rothgeb, an active member of the entertaining church. Roy Hosaflook of Linville responded.

The Executive Committee had recommended some time ago that the conference take steps toward selling the East Liberty Church property. The conference thought best not to be in a hurry about this, and to make further investigation before making the sale.

By an oversight last year no one was elected to deliver the annual address at this session. The conference voted to ask Rev. R. L. Williamson to deliver an impromptu address which he did, with credit to the cause and to himself.

The following visitors were in attendance at some time during the session, and were invited to seats as deliberative members: Rev. J. E. McCauley, pastor of the First Christian Church of Richmond, Va., Mrs. J. E. McCauley, John T. Kernodle, Managing Editor of The Christian Sun, Richmond, Va., Dean A. L. Hook and wife of Elon College, Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, President of the Southern Christian Convention, C. D. Johnston, Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage.

The new budget system as adopted by the last session of the S. C. C. came up for a prolonged discussion, but in the end was not adopted by the conference.

Bro. Johnston, in his usual quiet, but effective way told about the orphanage, its needs and possibilities. Bro. Johnston never fails to interest our people in this great institution. He did not ask for an offering, but an offering was taken amounting to $15.98.

Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, President of the S. C. C., gave an inspiring address at the Wednesday night session on the subject: "The Limitations of Christian Education." Dr. Harrell also gave a fine address on foreign missions at the Thursday's session.

Rev. Wm. J. Andes, who was licensed last year, asked for ordination this year, which request was granted. The ordaining Presbytery was composed of Revs. R. L. Williamson, chairman, S. C. Harrell, who delivered the charge, Ivan R. Smith, who offered the prayer, and A. W. Andes, who presented the Bible. This service was a very impressive one.

An address was delivered by Dean A. L. Hook on the subject of Education.

The Committee on Apportionments recommended that the same amounts be raised by the various church this year as last.

Rev. Wm. J. Andes was elected to deliver the annual address next year, with Rev. Ivan R. Smith as alternate.

Antioch was selected as the place for meeting next year.

The following were elected officers of the conference for the ensuing year. President, Rev. R. L. Williamson; Vice President, J. C. Bradford; Secretary, Rev. A. W. Andes; Assistant Secretary, Roy Andes; Treasurer, Samuel Earman; Director of Religious Education, K. B. Hook; Mission Secretary, R. O. Rothgeb; Stewardship Secretary, Minnie Dofflemyre.

Officers for the Women's Mission Board are: President, Mrs. K. H. Sale; Vice President, Mrs. A. W. Andes; Secretary, Mrs. B. F. Frank; Treasurer, Verdie Showalter; Cradle Roll Superintendent, E. Lena Rothgeb; Women's Superintendent, Ora Dofflemyre; Spiritual Life Superintendent, Mrs. A. F. Kite.

Chairmen of Standing Committees are as follows: Executive, A. W. Andes; Education, A. W. Andes; Home Missions, R. O. Rothgeb; Foreign Missions, W. C. Wampler; Evangelism, Wm. J. Andes; Religious Literature, Irene Hensley; Christian Union, Alfred Dofflemyre; S. S. and C. E., R. A. Larrick; Social Service, E. W. Cather; Apportionments, W. C. Wampler; Woman's Board, Mrs. A. W. Andes.

The conference was well attended and a good spirit prevailed throughout. I think all will agree that we can say we had a good session.

A. W. Andes.

CRUISING IN THE LAND OF THE SUNNY NIGHT.

By Rev. H. E. Rountree.

"Ketchikan."

We are in the land where the Indians live in streams of green and blue waters midst towering mountains rising sharp often from the water's edge, rich with verdure of juniper and fir and capped with glistening snow. Everybody aboard is happy and seem to be friends. What a world it would be if everybody were friends! Is not that the goal of Christianity?

We are now crossing the international boundary which separates Canada from Alaska. This line begins at latitude 54 degrees and 40 minutes north and runs through the center of the Portland Canal—according to traditions, once this was the line where law and order ceased.

At Ketchikan, our first port of call, we have two hours and all go ashore to see this thriving new town. Most of the towns in Alaska are old, Ketchikan, however, is an exception, having been built within the last thirty-five years. The fishing industry is the basis of the prosperity of the town, Ketchikan being headquarters for all of Southern Alaska. There are nine salmon canneries located around the city and it is the distributing center for approximately thirty others in this district. Just thirty miles away is the famous Salt Creek Mine, the largest producer of platinum and Pelledium in the United States.

Ketchikan is a very modern city boasting of a radio broadcasting station and a number of very fine stores. It is a land of totem poles and totem pole lore. Close by are the falls of Ketchikan Creek. We are told that salmon leap these falls on their way to the spawning grounds.

What can make life better? Days of fun plus the hospitality of experienced service by experts in the art of cruising, promenades, deck sports, parties, orchestra, singing, relaxation, sleep, and not the least, the excellent cuisine with delicious creations of master chefs, served in congenial surroundings with an orchestra providing inspiring music during meals, followed by the social hour under the twilight of a sun that loathes to set, all make gracious living in cruising style.

Our guide, Dr. Falconer presents a stereopticon lecture on Alaska every night with special emphasis on the development of Christian Missions here. Many of the group are interested in this and are giving study to this far away branch of His Kingdom.

Isn't it fine that we cannot get away from God! We left our duty thinking that we were incognito, that we would be on a cruise midst strangers having nothing in common but the objective of seeing Alaska. To our surprise we find not only the Christian Fellowship cruise, but members of the Christian Church in the midwest and have acquaintances and interest in common.

Christian environment, Christian singing, and Christian prayers, furnish an enriching of soul that is strongly lacking in an everyday life on a battleship. Here we stand together and help one another spiritually—on a battleship we stand alone. But thanks be to God for Him who is within and gives strength and courage to stand alone.

Let all think kindly of others; never criticize them, never condemn, never judge; on the contrary, let all condone, excuse, justify, seek to comprehend, seek to put themselves in the place of others. This mental attitude has to be perseveringly cultivated. It cannot be adopted by mere good resolution.—Arnold Bennett.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Mrs. Doris Eure Baker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs Claude Eure, of Nansemond County, Virginia, was born near Scotland Neck, N. C., March 4, 1910, and died at Blue Ridge Sanitarium in Charlottesville, Va., August 8, 1935, after a lingering illness, at the age of 25 years, 5 months and 4 days. She was married to Mr. Ernest P. Baker of Nansemond County, Va., December 20, 1933. Several months ago she went to the sanitarium in quest of health, but no improvement was made by this change. She is survived by her husband, her parents, a sister, Miss Frances Eure, and two brothers, Oscar and Lucien Eure, all of Nansemond County, Va.

Mrs. Baker united with Bethlehem Christian Church when a child. She became deeply interested in the church, and became an efficient leader in the work of the young people. The Young People's Missionary Conference and Youth Fellowship of the Eastern Virginia Conference have been greatly enriched by her deep devotion, her far-sighted vision, and her efficient leadership. After her marriage she transferred her membership to Liberty Spring Christian Church, where she, at once, became active in the promotion of the Sunday School and missionary interests of that church.

Her funeral was conducted by the pastor and her former pastor, Rev. R. E. Brittle, at Liberty Spring Church, on Sunday, August 11, 1935, at 3:30 P. M. The largest congregation ever assembled at this church for a funeral came to pay tribute to the character and life of this splendid young woman. Many beautiful floral offerings attested the high esteem in which she was held.

She was a young woman of unusual gifts of personality. She was kind, friendly and enthusiastic in her approach to any task assigned her in the church. Her smile was encouraging and her faith was inspiring. She was deeply religious and found her greatest joy in spiritual things. She endured her illness with a spirit of good cheer and her resignation to the will of God was beautiful to the end.

She had a large circle of friends and acquaintances among the young people of the Eastern Virginia Conference who mourn her departure when her life offered so much promise for the future.

As we listened to the music and watched the hundreds of people quietly and reverently pay tribute of respect to her life, the thought came to us: "This is a beautiful tribute to character and religious living." A pastor wishes, with hundreds of others, that such a beautiful Christian life might have been continued in our midst. But God knows best and His will and His way may enrich and help in the midst of great bereavement. Life must be measured by eternal issues and not personal wishes. Such a life makes a greater impression for God than volumes of cold theology. God give us more people who are willing to live for Him and will be ready to die for Him when He calls them up higher.

THE CHURCH PAPER.

The gospel is good news; good news that should be published widely. It is the news that the World needs and for which humanity hungers. There are those among us who feel impelled and compelled to bear this news, to witness as widely as they can for Christ and his gospel. This good news proclaimed by consecrated spirits has borne fruit; this fruit has ripened and is represented in organized units that we know, and the world knows, as churches. These local churches, bound together by love and a common purpose constitute the Church. The Church Universal is represented by organizations known as denominations. These various units are naturally bound together by common faith and practice.

The Congregational and Christian churches in a very definite way form an organization. Inclusive though it be, our churches are intimately related in certain sections; in other sections they are situated widely apart, and differ somewhat in practice and belief. There is, as I see it, danger of further disintegration, unless we can somehow beget a better understanding and a more brotherly attitude.

Surely we are a great people and we represent a great cause, but how can we be of help and inspiration to each other without some knowledge at least of each other's successes and failures, of each other's burdens and liberties. We not only need to know of each other's condition, but we need to know how we do things. If one minister and congregation happen upon a plan which means inspiration and success, perhaps the same plan would bear fruit in another congregation; or if one church makes a mistake, others might profit by the same.

Our only medium of communication, as widely scattered as we are, is the printed page. The church paper came into being in answer to conscious demand for information concerning the whole brotherhood. The church paper has the opportunity of becoming teacher, minister, evangelist. It came into being to meet the need of the local church from the standpoint of the entire denominational organization. Its function is to keep the brotherhood informed as to the progress of the church and her institutions, and to point the way to better understanding and to more aggressive undertakings. Strictly speaking, it is not the purpose of a church paper to cater to literary tastes, but rather to spiritual development and religious culture.

It is with regret that I read that the Advance, the national organ of the United Church, is to cease its weekly visits and to continue to appear monthly. We have a constituency of a million souls. If the Advance would gather items of interest to churchmen and local congregations, and also provide prophetic suggestions for individual and congregational advance in matters spiritual, would there not be a sufficient number in our great church who would subscribe to the paper to make its weekly visits imperative? I can easily see how a religious magazine of the first magnitude would fail to elicit sufficient patronage to guarantee its life, but I cannot see how a paper devoted to the personal interest and the religious development of its constituency could perish.

The daily newspaper thrives. Its list of subscribers multiply to the extent that it gathers the news from the ends of the earth in which the public is keenly interested, and puts that news attractively and concisely before the public. The church and church people are interested in themselves and in what they are doing. They want the news of the church, they want to know what the organization of which they are a part is doing here, there, and everywhere, and the periodical that satisfies this want will have their patronage. The history of the papers of cur own great church seems to be a process of combinations and eliminations, until finally we are about to eliminate the last one.

There are two things aside from the spiritual essential to the development and progress of the church; viz., a college, a campus, where young people are trained and fired with wholesome ambitions, and a church paper which by its columns of interest, creates a sense of voluntary solidarity in its constituency, widely scattered though they be. This is not a condemnation of any program or policy, but a plea and an appeal to the church of which I am a part, to create for itself a spiritual organ, by which and through which the heart and the purpose of the church may become intelligently conversant with its entire membership.

I regret to see the Advance step out of the weekly column and takes its position with the monthly periodicals. I hope sincerely that THE CHRISTIAN SUN, our church paper, seeking to administer to the churches of the southeast, may not become discouraged, but may become more determined to prove its worth and value and to secure the support of the entire church in our section that it may live and live more brilliantly and more helpfully than ever before. Let the leaders of our church paper be warned that unless we give it more complete and enthusiastic support, that it, too, may find it necessary to close its columns. In the fear that such a calamity may befall our church, let us, one and all, not only pay our subscriptions, but speak to our neighbor and our neighbor's children, and urge them to give their support. The best support that a minister can give his church paper is to pay his own subscription and then to take it upon himself to personally interview the members of his congregation and persuade them to follow his example.

Let us strengthen THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and offer its services to the whole church.

L. E. SMITH; President.

JUST FOR TODAY.

Just for today, my Saviour,—
Tomorrow is not mine;
Just for today, I ask Thee,
For light and help divine;
Tomorrow's care I must not bear
The future is all Thine.

Today I bring my measure
To Thee, that Thou might'st fill
And bless it, Lord, and teach me
To trust and to be still.
Today I'd be, my God, for Thee,
And do Thy holy will.

Just for today, my Saviour,
For e'er the morrow break
Thy voice may call me unto Thee
And I shall no more walk
The desert path with need of faith,
But face to face shall talk.

And if I have enough, Lord,
Today, why should I grieve
Because of what I have not,
And may not need to have.
Each day, I pray Thee, have Thy way,
And I will trust Thy love.

—H. McD.

The test as to whether Christianity is operative in industry must surely be the reaction on the lives of those engaged in it. If the final result is the creation of fear, anxiety or uncertainty, whatever the immediate material results may be, the motive power is un-Christian.—Angus Watson.

Christian Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

I thought perhaps it would be interesting to you to know which conference comes the nearest being a 100 per cent conference on our monthly contributing list up to July 31, 1935. It is very interesting to me. It is always interesting to me to watch a group of boys at work or play and see the difference in the attitudes. Some will put all they have in the work or game. Others will drift with the general crowd and some will lag behind and some will do their work almost perfectly. Some will "get by" as they term it. But you may notice it when you will that the boy or girl who puts their best in what they do, especially here in the orphanage, always get through High School and in some cases get through college.

The church that is interested in its church enterprises is always a working church—a live church. It wants to see the college, missions, the orphanage and the other departments of our church grow and glow and go and they want to help make it so. A working church is a happy church.

It is always happy over things accomplished.

I try to attend all our conferences and I have always noted with much interest the delegates who bring up all the conference apportionments wear a smile when the report from his church is read. He has something to be proud of. He represented a church that is alive with interest in doing things. Interested in the welfare of the whole church.

We have tried year after year to get all our churches and Sunday Schools interested in supporting the Christian Orphanage. This year is no exception. Our report this week shows that our Valley Virginia Central Conference stands at the head of our list with every church on our list but one—20 churches in the conference, 19 making offerings, or 95 per cent. North Carolina and Virginia comes up with 80 per cent; Eastern North Carolina, 80 per cent; Eastern Virginia, 76 per cent; Western North Carolina, 70 per cent; Alabama , 40 per cent; Georgia and Alabama, 27 per cent.

If you want to get your conference nearer the head of the class get more of your Sunday School congregations making regular monthly offerings.

CERTAINTIES AND UNCERTAINTIES.

By Brewer Eddy.

The people of America have never before faced more complex uncertainties than they face today. Radical policies have been proposed which will eventually produce vital changes in the economic and political life of America. As we talk with friends on the streets or trains, or meet with casual groups, it is amazing to note the absence of all appreciations of where present tendencies will lead. Amid the experiments that are flowing from Washington, varied in form and immense in magnitude, our population lives on, bemused, almost dazed by conflicting policies in economic principles, combined with what seem to many to be mere political expediencies.

To this strange state of affairs must be added greater world uncertainties. Mussolini's ruthless purpose in Ethiopia, Germany's rash rearming, and the steady drift toward increasing armaments throughout Europe, leave us with a sense of the futility of every solemn pledge made by the nations for international righteousness or justice; while the aggressive attack of Japanese militarism upon helpless China in defiance of the Washington pact is apparently succeeding without rebuke from the eight other nations signing the Pact.

Without taking into consideration the industrial and economic complications existing by the score in our homes, our churches and our communities, we may well admit that no other age has presented greater uncertainties in basic principles of government, and of morals.

In contrast, many of us find a refreshing certainty in thinking of the continuing convictions we hold concerning Christ. We believe His was the message and His was the example needed by every nation on earth; that His spirit, lived by dictators, political leaders, cabinets, and business executives would solve every question, international, national and local, if given a fair chance to challenge and to conquer the spirits of men. Out of this certainty comes the conviction that Christian people everywhere should maintain their steady loyalty to the lines of work and the basic sense of duty that have guided their lives.

Certainties like these inspire confidence:

Of the college graduates listed in China's "Who's Who," thus occupying positions of leadership in the country, 51 per cent are graduates of our Christian institutions.

In one district especially in India, the government authorities gratefuly acknowledge that their best teachers come from our higher schools. 90 per cent of all women teachers and 30 per cent of all men teachers among 3,000,000 people are from our institutions.

Dr. Goodsell reports that he finds our missionaries the most cooperative of any he has seen, east or west. At Bangalore, the United Theological College is jointly sponsored by five missions—the Scotch, Wesleyan, Dutch Reformed, British Congregationalist and the American Board—and other missions are about to join the group. As the cooperative spirit reaches higher levels, anything that resembles rivalry or competition is eliminated.

Our local constituencies in all mission fields gave, in 1934, 50 per cent more than the total gifts from Congregational-Christian churches through the American Board.

We believe that the needs of many nations can best be met by selecting and training their leaders in the qualities of Christian character. We believe that our present missionary schools, colleges, hospitals, churches, are accomplishing exactly this result. We believe that our missionaries reveal both devotion and ability in their appointed tasks, and that the national Christian churches that are spreading in our mission fields have shown successful growth and give promise of permeating the life of their nations with the spirit of Jesus. We believe that our gifts toward the support of such work are definite contributions to the advancement of God's Kingdom of Righteousness on earth. Many hundreds of the Board's friends are expressing such beliefs in their gifts this summer.

We stand by these certainties and beliefs despite all the confusing uncertainties that perplex the world today, at home and abroad.—In Missionary Herald.

THE EPISCOPAL FORWARD MOVEMENT.

Men and organizations which inspired by religious ideals are a unity. They face a common task and are beset by common enemies. It is significant, therefore, to all who are interested in the same cause, that a church numbering about two million members should be taking stock of itself, and pausing to ask itself with the deepest seriousness: What are we doing to forward the Kingdom of God among men?

The leaders of the Episcopal church were conscious of the fact that the church has not enlisted in any adequate way the idealism and the energy of youth in the program to build a better world. Nor is the church exerting any very great influence on the social, economic, national and international life of our day. Worse than that, it has compromised with the world and often accepts its standards. The chaos in the world is due not so much to the activities of foes of the Christian religion as it is to the inconsistency, the indifference and the worldliness of Christian people.

Facing these conditions, and believing that the Episcopal church, as well as the other great communions in Christendom, should exert a new power in the life of the world, the General Convention decided to set its own house in order. It issued a rallying call to the church to stop its retreat and begin an advance. A Joint Commission of five bishops, five Presbyters, and ten laymen was created and instructed "to prepare and carry out definite plans in collaboration with the National Council for an organized effort to reinvigorate the life of the church and to rehabilitate its general, diocesan, and parochial work."

The commission began its efforts for revival where any great religious awakening must begin, with the individual. It was recognized that the root of all the difficulties and weakness in the church was a failure on the part of the majority of our membership to live up to the demands of discipleship.

A Lenten booklet of daily Bible readings was issued in which the seven marks of a disciple were the themes for weekly meditation. Discipleship must begin with penitence; the first theme, therefore, was The Disciple Turns. Then came The Disciple Follows, Learns, Prays, Serves, Worships and Shares.

Another daily guide to Bible readings and prayer with suggestions for acts of Christian service was prepared for the 50 days between Easter and Pentecost. In this the disciple's relationship to the home circle, to the parish, to society and to the wider world have been the topics followed. More than 600,000 of these were purchased and distributed—more than enough for every family in the church.

From time to time other guides to the Christian's life of devotion and service will be issued—as well as other literature which will fit into the educational program.

It will be seen that the commission is effectively leading us back to the Scriptures as the central and indispensable doctrine of our faith. This is a basic part of its program. It is convinced that if we can have a worshiping church, a Bible-reading church, a church made aware of the needs of the world, obedient to its invisible Head and filled with his Spirit, it will be a witnessing church with its members ready and able to change the lives of men and women around them, and also the un-Christian social background against which the lives of so many in all lands are lived.

The program of the Forward Movement, therefore, does not stop with the renewal of the individual Christian life. While this is of fundamental importance, it is a means to a larger end, which is the forwarding of the Kingdom of God on earth. There must be formed new men and women in order that there may be a new social order.—Henry Wise Hobson in Christian-Evangelist.

If founding the church is the only aim of missions, then the time of missionary activity is at an end. But Christian missions is a world enterprise. It is an exchange of life, a sharing of cultures, a giving of background and inculcating qualities necessary in preparation for the new type of world we must build. We must pour our personalities, our lives, our particular gifts into the world situation, and carry forward the mission of sharing on a world-wide scale.—A Japanese Christian.

The church, suffering from an easy complacency, is content to patch up social wounds instead of stopping the slaughter which causes them. In the social service field, the church has been too ready to render "ambulance service" instead of undertaking a genuine campaign of prevention of social ills.—Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, secretary of the social service department of the National Council of the Episcopal Church.

A Story for the Children

A'NAWFUL QUARREL.

"Hi there, Bob, what's the matter, you look all fussed up like you were mad about something," said grandpa, as Bob came in from the garden with some blackberries in a little pail.

"Well I am mad, and I just had a'nawful quarrel, too."

"That's too bad, now whoever could have made you so mad that you had to quarrel with him?"

"It was that old Mr. Robin that built his nest on grandma's front porch."

"Well, well, I didn't know that boys and birds quarreled, I thought that only dogs and cats, and wolves and wildcats quarreled and fought. Now tell me about it," said grandpa.

"Well, I went out to the garden to pick some blackberries, and there was old Mr. Robin helping himself to the nicest berries there were in the patch. And when I told him to get out of there and quit stealing our berries, he just cocked his head to one side and said 'I'm not stealing your berries. These berries are just as much mine as they are yours, and I am only eating the fine dinner that my Father has provided for me!" Then I got mad and told him that my grandpa planted these berry bushes, and that his old daddy had nothing to do with it. Then he said, 'Boy, you are awful dumb. You don't know who my Father is, or you would not talk that way.' 'Well' I said, "who is your daddy anyhow?' And he said, 'I didn't say my daddy. I said my Father, for I have better manners than you boys have, I said my Father.' 'Well, who is your father then?' I asked.

Then he looked at me kind of queer like, and said, 'Boy, I knew that you were awful dumb, but I thought you knew that my Father lives up in the sky, and he planted all kinds of seeds and berries to make food for all of his children and I have as much right to live off of them as you and all of your family have.' 'Do you mean that God is your father?' I said, 'Why he is Our Father which art in heaven,' and then we sing 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow,' and we mean that God is our father in heaven.' 'Well, isn't God my heavenly father, just the same as he is yours, and don't I sing praises to him every morning before you get your eyes open?' 'And don't he provide my food every day, and give me nice, new warm feather clothes every year?"

"Grandpa, what did he mean by all of that kind of talk about God being his Father in heaven, same as ours? I couldn't make him leave the berries alone, and so I just came away and left him there."

"He seems to be a wise old bird," said grandpa, "and maybe he knows more about God than we think he does. He seems to know God has provided for his needs just the same as He has for ours, for he finds everything that he needs to build his home, and feed his children; and he always has nice clothes. And when the weather gets cold he can go South much cheaper than we can, and can live there just as fine as he does here in the summer. And maybe he does pray as well as sing in the mornings before we are up. Anyway, he doesn't seem to think that it is stealing for him to help himself to any kind of fruit or berries that he finds; and he don't call it murder to kill all of the worms and bugs that he can find, to feed his children.'"

"Well, grandpa, maybe God put all of the worms and bugs here just for him to eat, and all of the other birds too. Do all of the other birds know about God like old Mr. Robin does?"

"The Bible tells a good many things about birds, how God cares for them, and knows every one that boys kill. And he sometimes uses His birds to do his work for him. You remember when an old prophet was hiding in a cave because a bad woman was going to have him killed, that God sent birds to carry him food until he was ready to send him into another place to find a young man to be a prophet after he was gone, and to make two kings for people who needed better ones than they had."

"I didn't know all of this before," said Bob, "and I'm not mad at old Mr. Robin any more, and I won't quarrel with him any more. And when I get up early some morning and hear him singing in the maple trees, I'll thing, maybe he is singing, 'Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow.' And maybe he knows as much about God and religion as we do. Anyway, I'm his friend now."—by Grandpa in M.-P. Recorder.

MARS AND MERCY.

Millions of Japanese devotees of Kwannon, the goddess or god of mercy—the one who looks down upon suffering, needy humanity with infinite compassion—are today supporting a militaristic government in the task of making the Chinese people serves its nationalistic purpose, while millions of Italian worshippers of the "Mother of God" are enthusiastically backing Mussolini in his purpose to subjugate the Abyssinians. German millions, though bred upon Luther's great hymn, are paying tribute to Kultur with unpublished ends in mind, and even democrat America, with all its boasted love of freedom and peace, is "getting ready for something" by adding vast sums to its military and naval expenditures.

"Of what use is Religion," we cry, "when Nationalism dominates? What chance has the God of Mercy when Mars is in the ascendant? Is Christianity proven futile as a saving force in society, and must it sit sadly by, like the League of Nations, helpless and despised by those who are working their will upon the weak? Can cynics get away with the statement that the Church of Christ is done?"

Of course we do not have to become alarmists as we watch the development of national selfishness and the will to war. Yet we cannot help becoming very serious, and each can search his own soul to see if he is as really concerned over this matter as he should be.

If the Christians of the world cannot prove Religion dominant in national as well as personal life, who can? If the Church—as individuals or as a fellowship—cannot prevent wars and produce world peace, what concern can? Surely, if there are any humans capable of controlling the destinies of man, it is those who experience in their own lives the compassion of a merciful Father and are ready to go the "Way of the Cross," if necessary, in order to shock peoples into a realization of the menace that threatens them, to help in molding public opinion the world over against war, and to secure enlightened, effective action for peace everywhere.

We need not feel helpless. Each of us, no matter how humble or circumscribed, can do something. We can keep on asserting that wars must cease because they waste human life and produce economic chaos; because they unleash demoralizing instincts and interfere with the normal growth of civilization; because they brood other wars and will eventually destroy us altogether. We have courage enough for that. We can also begin talking up that Plebiscite on Peace which our Fellowship is to conduct in November, and doing our part in seeing to it that everybody knows what he is doing when he votes. We can surely go on supporting the missionary enterprise at home and abroad, a movement that has demonstrated again and again its potency as a will-to-peace agency. We can keep steadily at this fundamentally religious and social work of ours, knowing that as individuals and society are led to contemplate Him who is the "Face of God," they will be quietly but truly transformed into His image of compassion and love. For where the true missionary goes there Mercy is bound to win over Mars in the mind of man.

And we all can pray. After all, "except the Lord build the house they labor in vain that build it." Miracles have been performed by prayer in the past. Equally wonderful and unexpected things can now be done. It is as true today as it has been all down through the ages that "more things are wrought by prayer than the world dreams of," and that the surest way of advancing is when we are on our knees. Anybody who likes to say that he is a man of action rather than a man of prayer knows next to nothing personally of this great power at his disposal. It is mainly through prayer that he can grow into the compassionate likeness of Christ. It is principally through prayer that we learn to suffer with those that are exploited the world over and express in heart and life a real redemptive love. It is only through "fasting and prayer" that the impossible is done. Peace will never come on earth so long as there is a prayerless Church. On the other hand ,it will come if, when and as we truly pray.

"Youth at Work in the Church."

WILL ROGERS, THE MAN.

People everywhere were shocked and grieved last week when word was flashed around the world that Will Rogers and Wiley Post had "cracked up" while on a trip through northern Alaska. Government officials, world leaders, and the man in the street all felt a personal loss because of this tragedy. Why? How can a country cowboy become such a personal friend to people all around the globe?

Will Rogers did it by just being a friendly man. Of course he had special talents. He could throw a rope and tell jokes. They are not considered the greatest talents, but they brought him fame and fortune. He could say in a kindly way what others thought with a vengeance. He always found something funny, and something intensely human in life. He was a man like the rest of us wanted to be. That's why the world loved him so.

Back of his jokes was a very fine philosophy by which he lived. It was a simple philosophy. That's why we liked it. His fortune of two and a half millions never changed Will Rogers. He was the same loyal friend, the same genial person, the same cowboy. His pictures were worth the time it took to see them, and none of them brought to the company less than a million dollars. And he didn't memorize his part written by another, he lived the part and people paid to see and hear.

Will Rogers was world-famous because of his personal worth. It will be fine if the rest of us can remember that and live accordingly.

A CORRECTION.

The program for the Eastern North Carolina Youth Fellowship carried on this page last week failed to say that the afternoon worship service is to be led by the young people of Liberty Christian church. That was the fault of the typist, the present writer. It is very difficult for me to get the typewriter to tell the truth at all times, and it is especially bad on spelling. The managing editor or typesetter one or both do a very good job of making corrections, but they cannot put in the facts that I leave out.

I am sorry to have made the mistake, but it really gives me another chance to say that all pastors, young people and their leaders are expected at Catawba Springs Christian Church on August 30th from ten o'clock in the morning until five in the afternoon. This is an important meeting of the Youth Fellowship, or at least it should be, and will be if those who live in the Conference are present for the meeting.

Catawba Springs church is about twelve miles south of Raleigh, four miles west of Buffalo Service Station, which is on route 21 of North Carolina's good roads. Be sure to find the way to the church in time for the opening program.

WILL YOU HELP?

The Board of Christian Education wants to serve the churches in the realm of religious education. There is no doubt but that we need a higher grade of religious education in our country today. Our churches need the help the Board wants to give.

But the Board is only the servant of the churches. It has no funds of its own. It has no work for itself. It is dependent upon the good will and the contributions of the churches. Every Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society should make an annual contribution to the Board other than that sent to the Convention or Conference, says the Southern Convention. This may not be as it should be, and I do not think that it is, but it is the way the Convention says work. The Board has no other choice.

We now appeal to the Sunday Schools and the Christian Endeavor Societies to follow the guidance of the Southern Convention and make some contribution to the Board of Christian Education. Many schools will make the offering on Rally Day in October, but some may want to get at it earlier. Suit your own convenience as to time, but please make the offering so the work can be continued.

CHRIST OR CHAOS.

This was the topic of the sermon for the union services in my church last night. The speaker came from Cleveland, Ohio. He was enthusiastic as he spoke to an audience of adults. The young people didn't seem to be in the services of the church at the evening hour yesterday. They didn't know the speaker, so it was not his fault that they were absent. Where they were I do not know but they were not in the churches of Berkley.

Perhaps they were down by the beach. Or perchance they were at the movies. Or maybe they were out on the highways somewhere in the moonlight. Wherever they were, they were not in the churches. Only a few, a very few.

Christ and the Church are closely related. They seem to fit together. Christ is the head of the Church, and the Church is the body of Christ. Does leaving the Church mean leaving the Christ? Some of you who are younger and wiser answer that one. And this one. If the children and the young people learn to stay away from church services, when will they over learn to follow the Christ whose custom it was to enter into the church on the Sabbath?

The speaker said we either choose Christ or chaos. Was he right?

THE COURAGE OF JESUS.

Christian Endeavor Topic for Sept. 1, 1935.

Daily Bible Readings.

Monday—Jesus Faces His Townsmen. Luke 4:16-31.

Tuesday—He Cleanses the Temple. Jno. 2:13-17.

Wednesday—Plain Truth. Luke 11:37-54.

Thursday—Starts Towards Jerusalem. Lk. 9:51-53.

Friday—When Silence Meant Conviction. Isa. 53:7; Matt. 27:12-14.

Saturday—Faces Ignominous Death. Jno. 12:23; 27-33.

Sunday—Topic: "The Courage of Jesus." Matt. 23:16-24; 26:36-3.

This is a consecration meeting, and the beginning of the fall program. The leader should make special effort to make this an interesting and challenging program. The courage of Jesus is the kind of thing that will stab one awake. Few, if any, have ever had such courage as he.

The daily Bible readings should be studied and their message brought to the meeting. Imagine the young preacher as he tells his home people that the prophecy is being fulfilled in their midst. Go with the reformer to the temple and see him drive out the cattle—both human and dumb. Like the people of his day, slip into the dining room in the home of a Pharisee where Jesus is a guest who eats without the ceremonial washing of hands and hear what that young fellow has to say about those who were careful for the ceremonial and cared nothing for the real. Catch step with Him as he walks face forward towards Jerusalem and death with the disciples following afraid. Stand with him in Pilate's hall and listen to the lies they tell about him and notice with what calm unconcern he disdains their falsehoods about him. Listen to him as he says, "My hour is come." Do your best to live through these scenes with a young man who seemed to fear no danger although he had decided years before not to ask the Father for special protection (Matt. 4:6, 7).

We like to think of the meek Master, but let's not forget that he was the Master. He spoke with authority, but only the authority of truth and not what people believed. His words cut across the teachings of his time. He would not conform to the ideas of his day. He thought for himself and taught as he lived. His courtesy ended where right and wrong diverged. Men and money could not draw him from the path he chose to travel. Death itself could not keep him from his course.

Others might fear and falter. Others might forsake and flee. But Jesus kept right on going ahead. While others slept he prayed, and when they feared and ran he was calm and composed. It is perfectly marvelous the way He faced facts, fancies, powers, suffering, death, and never showed signs of a fear.

There was a secret somewhere. Could it have been those hours on the mountains alone when he talked with the Father? Was it his absolute consciousness that he was right? Could it have been his undaunted faith in the eternal goodness of the God who rules the earth? Surely there was a secret source of fearlessness somewhere. Long years later we hear a friend of his saying, "Perfect love casts out fear." Ah, that was it. He loved the Father and the Father loved him perfectly. That love would not let him be afraid.

It is doubt that chills the blood and sends us cringing from the battle. It is love that buoys the heart, raises the head, lifts the shoulders, and sends us forward towards the goal that we are sure we are to reach.

This lies in the realm of the spirit. It is more than physical courage. It is easier to fight like a bully than to suffer as a saint. It takes real courage to stand for the right when all around are out for the wrong. Many young people commit sin rather than to be laughed at by the crowd.

Make something of this topic and meeting. Sing songs of courage. Get testimonials and a pledge to stand the tests. Finish with singing, "I'll Go Where You Want Me To Go," or some similar song of consecration.

The liberty of the other man is the front-line trench of our own liberty. However much one is inclined to play favorites in this matter of defense, such a temptation must be resolutely resisted because in the endit is a dangerous policy. Let the Jew be discriminated against and it will be easier to introduce discrimination among Gentiles. Let the Negro's rights before the law be ignored, and it will be easier to lynch white folks. Let the communist agitator and political insurgent be deprived of just consideration, and it will be harder to obtain the just treatment of even respectable minorities. Let us throw "the sincere conscientious objector to war" in jail in time of war and turn "the sincere conscientious objector to military training" out of state-owned colleges in time of peace, and we have cast the first votes for a military Reich-bishop to preside over our religious destiny.—David Rhys Williams.

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

BARNABUS (A Consecrated Man of Means).

Lesson VIII—August 25, 1935.

Golden Text: "He was a good man, and full of the Holy Spirit, and of faith."—Acts 11:24.

Lesson—Acts 4:36, 37; 9:26-30; 11:19-30; 12: 25; 13:1-15:41; Galatians 2:13.

Barnabus was a native of Cyprus, a small island in the Mediterranean Sea, but when he appears in the biblical record he has been living in Jerusalem and had acquired a great deal of property, at least he seems to have been well-to-do. Whatever material riches Barnabus may have had, he had great riches in his good name, for wherever he appears in the story of the New Testament he is represented as a good man, of unquestioned integrity, large-heartedness, dependability, sound judgment, and sympathetic spirit. Indeed Barnabus gives new meaning to the term "a good man." He is one of the truly great men of the New Testament, not the kind of man who would get his name on the front pages of the newspapers, but a man whose name was written high up in the list of those whose names are in the Lamb's book of life.

His name was significant. Barnabus, the "son of exhortation," or the "son of consolation." He was eloquent in speech, and he was also sympathetic in spirit. He was eloquent in speech because he was sympathetic in spirit. There was something about the man's life that gave power to his words. Let us look at the man through the fragmentary records of his life and works as given to us in Luke's story of the Acts of the Apostles.

He was generous-hearted, generous-hearted to an unusual degree. When he became a Christian he became a Christian in his pocketbook. He sold his possessions and gave the money to the apostles that it might be used for the common good of the members of the early church. Barnabus was a layman who consecrated his means to the Lord. Barnabus was, of course, also an apostle, or at least he is so designated by Luke in Acts 14:14.

Barnabus was interested in folks. When the young man Paul came to Jerusalem after his conversion and tried to join the Christian community, he was left out in the cold. But Barnabus believed in the young man, and he "vouched for him." It was through his good graces that Paul was allowed to enter the Christian circle, and one may be sure that Barnabus' wise counsel and friendly spirit did much to shape Paul's life during the formative years of his early Christian experience. The same thing is true of Barnabus' attitude toward John Mark. He was instrumental in taking him on the first missionary journey, and when Paul refused to take him on the second journey because Mark had deserted the party on the first, Barnabus took Mark and became his missionary companion to his native land. Here was a man who was a friend to folks who were having a hard time, and who was willing to give the personal touch to such men.

Barnabus was trustworthy. Whenever there was an important mission to be undertaken, his fellow-Christians selected him to represent them. Whether it was to carry relief funds to Jerusalem or to visit the fast-growing Christian community in Antioch, or to get a decision on the matter of the status of Gentiles in the Christian Church, or the launching of the missionary enterprise to the Gentile world, his fellow-men turned to him, for they knew he would not let them down. Barnabus was dependable.

Barnabus was willing to take second place gracefully. He was sent to Antioch to take charge of the work there, but he soon saw that it was too big for him, and he immediately went for Paul. As Paul increased, Barnabus was willing to decrease. He took second place gracefully—something that many of us have not learned to do. It took a good man and a great man to do what Barnabus did. When he and Paul started out on their first missionary journey it was "Barnabus and Paul." Before they returned it was "Paul and Barnabus." Would that there was more of the spirit of Barnabus in the world today, especially among church workers and religious leaders.

Barnabus was heroic in moral courage. We read so much about Paul's moral heroism. We must remember, however, that Barnabus also "hazarded" his life for the Lord Jesus Christ. He suffered many of the same persecutions that Paul suffered, but he did not turn back. Barnabus was willing to pay the price of his convictions, something that some of us are not always willing to do.

Barnabus had the missionary passion. He was always trying to share the "good news" with others. When the call of the Spirit came, challenging him to the Gentiles he quickly said in act if not in word, "Here I am, send me." And when later he and Paul disagreed about taking John Mark with them, Barnabus, nothing daunted, set out on his own missionary journey.

Barnabus had the spirit of forgiveness. He and Paul had a disagreement, a disagreement so sharp that they parted company. But there are evidences in Paul's letters that he and Barnabus did not harbor their grudge, but that they were reconciled to each other again. The willingness to forgive and forget—that is the sign of a good and a great man.

This good man Barnabus, was a man of spiritual insight and power. "Full of the Holy Spirit is the way Luke characterizes him. There was something about him that reminded folks of Christ. There was something about him that won folks to Christ, for Luke adds, "and much people was added unto the Lord." There are some folks who are religious who are not particularly likeable. There are some folks who are pious, who are not winsome. But Barnabus was a good man whose goodness made him winsome. There was a sweetness about his goodness that spoke eloquently of a life hid with Christ.

The Christian Church owes much to Barnabus, much more than it realizes. In those early formative days, this quiet, unassuming, unselfish man, in countless ways with his money, with his speech, with his service, and with his life, gave meaning and stability and power to the Christian movement. Barnabus ought to be the inspiration of every layman who names the name of Christ.

Some of the greatest thinking has been done by those who cared little for riches—Pasteur, Edison, Jane Addams—and who shall say that theirs was not the richer life? Today, the world knows the poetry of Shakespeare, the music of Wagner, the art of Rembrandt; but who knows even the names of the money barons of their day—or cares to know? If you want your name to live after you, you'll not give all your thought to money. But, whether you want to make money, or write a book, or run a streetcar—or do anything else successfully—you'll do well to remember that in all the world there is no word more important than—"Think."—Edwin Baird.

"SUBSTANTIAL PROOFS."

"Make full proof of thy ministry."—II Tim. 4:5.

Beloved, every day we must give substantial proof of our religion and devotion. It is not enough to be clever, we must be true. We may have unsurmountable problems and difficulties, but we must still fight them with unselfish devotion.

The one who would do most to illuminate human darkness, mitigate human distress, alleviate human suffering, and comfort human sorrows, is one who bears the stamp of God in his heart and "none of his steps shall slide."

Prayer—Our Father, who are able to do so, grant that we may hold in contempt all things that take us away from Thee. Help us to turn away from every vain appeal, to turn to Thee and find Thee waiting with the blessing we need.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"OUT IN GOD'S WORLD."

"Thou wilt show me the path of life."—Ps. 16:11.

It's a grand thing to live—to open the eyes in the morning and look out upon the wide spanse of the ocean, to drink in the pure air of God's cosmic glory and enjoy the sweet sunshine, to feel the throb of the ship and to listen to the music of the waves as they rise and fall and splash their spray against this moving city of the sea out in the great silent Pacific, 4,000 miles away from home, tho' is be; to feel the pulse of my own veins bound, and the being thrill with the consciousness of strength and power in every nerve; to live with young men and think thoughts with them and have them think thoughts with me; to wonder about the God of the universe and how He holds all these things in His hands; to know that even so far away men with me are receiving messages—some of joy and some of sorrow and in like manner they talk back to their loved ones; in spirit joining them in their joys and sharing with them in their sorrows. Whoever can comprehend all this and fall down and worship God?

It is a grand thing simply to live, and it is a good world to live in, in spite of the sin that is in it and in spite of the abuse we are fond of giving it.

Prayer—Our Father, give us the eye of Thy spirit that we may see Thee in all things and suffer no sin to separate us from Thee. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"PULL A GRIN."

Strength or weakness of character is manifest most in the crisis of life.

"There's a sayin' I've been hearing,
(read it when I'm blue):
It's kinder like what follows:
'If you smile, the world smiles too.'
I've tried to smile just all the while,
And find it hard as sin,
But when I can't smile broad and big,
I can always pull a grin.

"When the way is rough and treach'rous,
And your burden is a load,
Just grit your teeth and watch ahead,
For the turn that's in the road,
When pain is gnawin' out your heart,
And death's your nearest kin,
Why, brace up proud, don't laugh out loud,
But try to pull a grin.

"Each desert has an oasis,
And every night an end,
And every mountain has a top,
And every road a bend;
And you'll find the bend heap quicker,
And your world will easy spin
If you clench your two fists tightly,
And try to pull a grin.

"If there ain't no flowers bloomin'
And 'the best is like the worst,'
And you seem to hear slow music
A'playin' roun' your hearse;
Why, 'tinkle' up your fiddle,
And make a 'rag' begin,
Or brace up strong, and be a man;
Just try to pull a grin.

"Just pull a grin and bear it,
Our lives can't all be rhymes,
Cowbells can't always jingle,
Like Trinity's sweet chimes;
If smilin' makes the whole world smile
And lightens every sin,
Why, brace up, see what it will do,
If you try to pull a grin!"

"CHRIST THE GREAT HEALER."

"And great multitudes came unto Him, having with them those that were lame, blind, maimed, and many others, and cast them down at Jesus' feet; and He healed them."—Matt. 15:30.

At this moment we are looking at a print of Dietrich's portrayal of the Christ healing afflicted people.

The author says that if there is one characteristic which Christ manifested more often than another it was sympathy. Man's misfortunes depressed His spirit and made an instant appeal to His soul. Notwithstanding, we are reminded that He never let His sympathies run away with Him and abase His power. He must have been tempted often to relieve suffering in a wholesale fashion, but he never went beyond the requirements of the occasion.

We wonder why Jesus did not relieve suffering in a wholesale fashion? Did it ever occur to you that gratuitous service is but little appreciated? If not, turn to Luke 17:17, read the story of the healing of the ten lepers. Only one returned to give Him thanks. What became of the nine? We don't know, and never will. They represent the great host of the ungrateful for gratuitous service.

One cannot believe that God withholds His helping hand because of the lack of gratitude, but it is understood that the kingdom of God is "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost," and therefore it is something that is in the character, everything else is beyond the pale of that existence. The nine had a place for the Lord, as any one, in their physical condition, but they must not have had any place in their souls for Him nor any desire for His reign in their lives. Hast thou?

Prayer—Our dear Heavenly Father, it is in Thee that we live and move and have our being. Forbid that we shall forget this. Make us humble, appreciative and grateful of Thy soul life as it is in Jesus, and when our days are numbered we pray for the "Well done" benediction. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"GOD'S WILL BE DONE."

"You may work and worry and strive
In your puny human might,
With the Devil's aid
And the dark night's shade—
And your soul shall find no light.

"You may work with a will of iron,
'Till the nerves shall quiver and snap,
Tho' your back may ache
And your heart may break—
And there's no one to care a rap.

"But when you have reached your limit,
And your human strength is gone,
As you stand alone
In the soul's last zone—
Will you say, 'God's will be done?'

"There is no neutral ground as you turn to God,
The Devil must know his loss,
You must go God's way,
Through night or day—
If you'd reach the foot of the cross.

" 'Tis a peaceful way as you journey on,
No matter what life shall bring,
For we know God's right,
And ahead there's light—
As we travel to meet our King.

"This lesson I've learned thro' a mother's love,
As I strove for my youngest one:
'God alone can save.'
Says my baby's grave—
Thus I learned, 'God's will be done.' "

SATURDAY.

"FOOD OF FELICITY."

"They took their food with gladness."—Acts 2:41-47.

We are not surprised when we read in the account of the early Church that it grew rapidly, that it was faithful to divine services, that it was filled with gratitude and awe, that it was most charitable and highly honored; but we are surprised at this note about happy eating.

What have meals to do with piety? Very much. At the household table we have more opportunity perhaps than anywhere else to show our Christianity. Here we can praise and encourage one another. Here we can manifest our cheer in the Lord. Here we can exercise good-will toward all men.

If at our food we are churlish, gloomy, and harsh, we may be sure that we have not partaken of the true bread.

Prayer—May every repast in our household be a eucharist, Lord of the Upper Room! Preside Thou over the feast, however plain it may be, and then we shall take all our food with gladness.—Amen.

IMPORTANCE OF READING.

By John G. Truitt, D. D.

"Give heed to reading."—I Tim. 4:13.

Here is a personal letter from a great man to one of his very best young friends. It is an important letter, therefore. For it will point out some things that this great man thinks essential for the success of his young, beloved friend. Advice that comes out of love, interest, and anxiety for a friend's success will show what the giver of the advice thinks important. Paul says to Timothy: "Give heed to reading."

Imagine a father giving advice to his son. He loves his son. He wishes him to have happiness, joy, success. Wishing for him these blessings the father looks back over his own experiences. He sees his own mistakes and his own achievements. In the light of all he knows, and understands, he speaks. It would certainly be worth consideration, would it not? Out of an abundant experience Paul speaks to one who is to be in a sense his successor. To one who is his own son in things spiritual. He desires him to be all he would want him to be, all God wants him to be, and all the great Cause to which he is giving his life would need him to be. He will give him the wisest counsel in his mind. He tells him to: "Give heed to reading!"

It does not seem like it would take so great a man to say that. A man who is himself author of at least thirteen of the world's most read books. A man who had read until he was familiar with the three prevailing tongues of his times; acquainted with three philosophies of life; accustomed to three cultures which have stood the tests of the centuries. And not only that but they are the words of a man who had found a great cause for living,—a cause so great that for it he was willing to lay aside everything, even his own life in time. And not only that but he had the wisdom to select the cause which the ages has honored, and he influenced that cause as much as any living man since the days of its founder,—Jesus Christ. He had a very dear young friend whom he wished to see succeed with all the interest and anxiety of his soul, and as I have said, him he advised: "Give heed to reading."

Paul was himself a reader. Talking to other cultures he could tell them what their own poets had said. Talking to other courts he could speak in their own tongue. Talking to his own race he could tell them of its birth-pangs as well as its history up to his very day. He read. We think the advice about which we are thinking was given Timothy just after Paul had been released from his first imprisonment. But here is a very interesting incident in the light of what we have been saying, in his second letter to Timothy written while a prisoner the second time. He is telling Timothy to come to him. Come before winter. The dampness and coldness of this dungeon is already numbing my fingers and cramping my bones. When you come bring my old cloak which I left in Troas. I need it even now. But maybe you will not be able to come with many things for me, so I had rather you bring my books. Bring the books. There is a secret of Paul. Bring the books. He was familiar with them everyone. But now he needed them. He needed the cloak so much, but he was willing to go almost naked in that old dungeon if he could only have the books! No wonder the world has heard from him! And then this very touching word. . . "but especially the parchments." The blessed Scriptures. They would tell of great men in touch with God. Their courage would comfort him. Their faith would feed him. Their God would he his God, and would sustain, keep, comfort him. Timothy, if you can bring only a tiny parcel, bring the parchments.

If reading was important then how much more so it is now. Life was lived then by a slow, manual process. Now we live in a rapid electric age. Then time was used for toil, travel, and the slow processes of the day. Now time hangs heavily on the hands of youth, age, all. What shall we do with leisure which the electric machine has given us?

The other day,—only yesterday, in fact,—there was in my study to see me a youth eighteen years of age. He had no job. No money. His parents were poor. He said, "All I can do is walk the streets, and wish for something." It may seem trite to say so, but many of the world's most loved heroes have been in well-nigh the same position. Only they had a book. They read!

> "A book of verses underneath the bough,
> A jug of water, a loaf of bread,—and Thou
> Beside me singing in the wilderness,—
> Oh, wilderness were paradise enow!"

Will the leisure of our youth make a "paradise" or a hell! Some may reply that they lack the "loaf of bread,"—and for some it is true, all too true,—God have mercy upon us! But bread can be had. And there are so many youths that have the loaf of bread and with it unlimited leisure. A good book, an interesting, helpful story, an inspiring poem, a great biography, a remarkable history, a scientific article, or a page from the sacred Scriptures may guard from some ugly pitfall, and place a motive and a courage within that will help to make a noble and useful life. It will help you to wish to be somebody. Paul wishing Timothy to be somebody said to him: "Give heed to reading."

One day Jesus stood in the temple. Among those who loved him came others filled with malice, selfishness, and bigotry. As a certain one tested him with his own worldly wisdom, Jesus looked him gently over, and asked one of his very disconcerting questions: "How readest thou?" "Give heed how you read." What are you reading for? What are you going to gain by your reading. What food will it be? Food for the soul, or food for the lusts of the flesh? Will you catch the sunlight of the wisdom and goodness of the centuries and bring it into your thinking to heal, and bless, and feed your soul; or will you sow deadly germs of destruction and reap sorrow, and sickness, and death? "How readest thou? There is trash before you, young people. Trash on our newsstands, trash on our bookshelves, trash coming daily off our presses. "Give heed to reading." Have a care how you read, and what you read. On those same newsstands is good food for thought, and on those same bookshelves good books, and much of the news from our daily presses is very important. But you will be very foolish to take the poison and leave the wholesome things unread.

What sort of respect can you have for yourself if you keep the worst possible reading company? What need is there to take so much care with the outward appearance, and all the while submerge the soul in the rotten filth bound in bright paper covers and displayed for money? Your thinking is going to control your destiny,—your happiness, your usefulness, and your own self-respect is bound up in your thinking. Reading is a road to thinking. "Give heed to reading." "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he."

What is your reading? If one knew that he could tell much about you. Shallow! Deep! Happy, wholesome or morose! Aspiring or indolent. Steady, or flippant. Much or little, or nothing!

How the heart of any sensible person yearns for you. I yearn to see the young people to whom I minister come to life's best. How I wish I could know that I have a reading congregation, and that the things read were beautiful, worthy, ennobling! You would be the better able to detect the mistakes in my poor messages, but on the other hand you would the more appreciate the great privileges of worship, and the inspiring passages from the Scriptures which out of a heart of love I seek to bring to you.

I do not wish to 'preach at you.' But I do wish to help you with your leisure, and with your reading. Use some of your leisure for reading good books, good magazines and papers, and most surely in some quiet place at some proper moment and in a friendly way as conversing with a friend read the Bible itself. "Blessed is the man . . . whose delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night."

A CRY.

By VIOLA ROSE SKILLIN.

You must rise again, O Son of God!
Not from your tomb of stone and sod,
Not for disciples' eyes to see
But in a grander way,—to be
The Spirit which rights the cruel wrongs
And makes our world a place of songs.

Rise from haunts of vice and crime
Where ribald laughter flows with wine,
From slums' repellent corners, turn
And shout the words that scorch and burn
The last bare trace of purple hate
From people's hearts, before too late.

Rise from the empty dinner plate,
From children's claw-like hands which take
The moldy crusts from street and ditch,
Where youthful lads are taught to snitch
Their way through life and then to sell
Their very souls to get a prison cell.

You must rise again, O Godlike One,
Wherever a rank injustice's done,
Through fog of chimney's belching smoke,
From hearts' despair, from souls which broke
Beneath the crushing weight of things;
O rise, with healing on your wings!

Hear, O God, Thy children's cry for aid
And send Thy truth to make them unafraid!

MARRIAGES

MONGER—ALGER.

Mr. Floyd Weaver Monger and Miss Virginia Vivian Alger came to my home on the evening of August 10, 1935, and were quietly married. They are popular young people of the Bethel community, the bride being an active and useful member of our church there. They will likely live in Pennsylvania where the groom has employment. Their friends at Bethel regret to see them leave the old home community.

OBITUARIES

KING.

Another beloved friend and co-worker, Mrs. Dora Riddick King, has left us and passed into the great beyond, and in her passing our hearts have been saddeued, yet, at the same time, we are made to feel that Heaven is a little uearer and dearer, and that she is waiting, to welcome us when our labors here are ended.

"Miss Dora," as she was affectionately called, peacefully passed away May 4, 1935, leaving to mourn their loss two sons, John Walter King and Edward R. King; one brother, Dr. C. J. Riddick and a large number of other relatives and friends.

Devoted to her family and her church, she walked in humble dignity with the Master and thus grew in grace and fellowship with Him. Her gentle manner, her sweet Christ-like spirit, her courage and strong faith were a source of great strength and a beautiful, refreshing inspiration to all who knew her. Diligent in all things, broad in her vision, sincere in her sympathy, firm in her stand for the things that are good, that are pure and holy, she emulated the mind and heart of Jesus Christ and exerted an influence endless in its wholesomeness and benedictions. Contact with such a Christian personality was an enriching experience and in this age of confusion, may we, as a body of women doing the Lord's work, uphold and emulate the principles for which she stood, and go forward more actively in the course she loved.

Calm and dignified iu every difficulty, we shall miss her wise counsel, her clear judgment, her geuerous support of every department of the church. Up to the eud her interest never weakened. It is not ours to weep with those who weep but to rejoice with those who rejoice, because she was ready when the summons came.

Because of these lovable traits which she possessed, her active interest in every improvement of church and community life, and her ready respouse iu time of need, we, the members of the Ladies' Aid Society of Cypress Chapel Christian Church wish to express our appreciation of her life of service and loyalty by adopting the following resolutions:

First: That we thank our Heavenly Father for her faithfulness, for a heart so tender, loving, sympathetic; for a devotion so true and loyal to her church and its institutions; for the inspiration and influence emanating from that life, and for her precepts and examples as she daily lived and taught them.

Second: That while we sorely miss the sunshine of her presence, the cheerfulness of her nature, the helpfulness so freely given, we submit to the Divine will, looking forward to that day when we shall be united in Him.

Third: That we extend to the bereaved family our most heartfelt sympathy and assure them of our continued love and of our prayers that the Holy Comforter wh ois able to sustain and comfort in every sorrow, may be very near and dear to them.

Fourth: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication and a copy placed on the records of our society.

HILL.

Mr. G. W. Hill departed this life at his home at Pleasant Grove, Chambers County, Alabama, August 4th, 1935. He leaves to mourn his death a faithful wife, two sons, one daughter, a number of grandchildren, one sister and one brother besides a great host of friends.

His long life of 79 years had practically been lived in this community. He was a very familiar character, loved and respected by all. Generous to a fault, he was a good neighbor and a trusted friend.

During the years of my acquaintance with him, which have been more than 40 years, I have never had a better friend. He was a friend to the church and also a friend to the school. Plain and unassuming in his manner, unpretentious in his conduct, he came to his eud in peace, having died suddenly in his home. It was a great surprise to his loved ones to find him dead in his bed.

My prayers and sympathy are hereby expressed for the feeble wife and loving children.

G. D. HUNT.

KITCHENS.

Mrs. Maud Kitchens, who, after a long period of affliction departed this life August 11th, was in the forty-fourth year of her life. She was the faithful wife of Bro. Lee Kitchens who had been very attentive to her in her long affliction. She also leaves of her immediate family eight children, her father and mother. The many relatives and friends as well mourn her departure.

Sister Kitchens was a heroic sufferer always cheerful and kind to all who visited her. Her children loved and honored her and all that human hands and medical skill could do for her relief proved of no avail, so she went away to be with Jesus, free from disease and suffering.

She is waiting for you, dear weeping friends. Dry your tears and take a new hold on life and be faithful. You will meet your wife and mother some sweet day.

G. D. HUNT.

ALGER.

David F. Alger was born September 10, 1869, and died August 7, 1935 at the age of 65 years, 10 months, and 27 days. Surviving are his widow, five sons, and one daughter. Some of the family are members of our church at Newport near which they live. Funeral services were held at the home of the deceased August 9, 1935, and the remains laid to rest in a family cemetery nearby.

A New Dollar Bill.—

For the first time in history, both the face and the reverse of the Great Seal of the United States will be engraved on our currency. The new $1-bill will bear witness to the fact that our Revolutionary fathers actually envisaged a new deal, for on the reverse side of this seal is found the Latin inscription, "Novus Ordo Seclorum"—a new order of the ages.

Industrial Warfare.—

It is not pleasant for us to learn that twenty-two Americans were killed in the first six months of this year in industrial warfare. In Georgia, California, Ohio, Nebraska, and various other states these casualties occurred. Whether we believe in "class war" or not, we seem to have it. The ceaseless struggle of men to better their living conditions goes on. Surely the Christian church must lend its aid to the securing of justice for all men, and it must show a better way of securing that justice than this guerrilla warfare.—The Presbyterian Tribune.

On Unfamiliar Ground.—

Prof. Rexford Tugwell, master mind of the brain trust, in imitation of some eminent statesmen, occasionally tries to draw on the Bible for some of his illustrations. He had an extended article in the Atlantic Monthly recently in which he allegorizes the Ark of the Covenant as "stranded on the Mount Ararat of arid facts." He seems to have gotten his arks and mountains mixed. Some Sunday school pupil might inform the learned professor that there is a difference between the Ark of the Covenant and Noah's Ark. This is the same Tugwell who about a year ago expounded the Abundant Life in terms of "wine, women and song." We have been quite convinced that a little more familiarity with both the letter and spirit of the Scriptures might prove helpful to some of the folks who are trying to direct the policies of our Government.—Religious Telescope.

Prejudice and Sound Business.—

"When government provides credit facilities that business needs, and does so on favorable terms, business ought to take advantage of the opportunity." This opportunity has hecently been provided by the Federal Housing Administration, but we are told that "the response of many business men has been curiously stubborn and shortsighted." Certainly there can be no harm in investigating this government offer of credit. The loan is made by a bank or finance company for a period of not over five years, and is gradually reduced by the monthly payment plan. The FHA never comes in contact with the borrower unless he defaults in his payments, as it accepts the judgment of the lending company, which is guaranteed against loss to the extent of 20 per cent of its loan. "Plainly," continues Business Week, "such an arrangement is good for the bank, the borrower, and the seller of modernization equipment. It deserves investigation, at least. Prejudice should not obstruct it."

1935 Session of Congress.—

Looking backward at the Congress which has just adjourned, one will find many flareups against the Administration, especially in the final two months of its session. Closer analysis, however, will show that there was not much that Mr. Roosevelt asked for that was not accorded him. Probably the most spectacular of the President's defeats was in the elimination of the so-called "death sentence" in the public utility holding company bill. In the question of the World Court, not in the New Deal program at all, he was overridden, but by those who usually supported him. The President insisted upon the elimination of deduction from taxes in case of contributions by corporations to charity, and again he lost. And the decision of Congress was against him in the question of Gold Clause suits; even the most docile Congressmen rebelling. Passage of the St. Lawrence seaway treaty would have pleased the President, but he did not fight for it. Now let's consider the victories: First, Carte blanche to spend $4,000,000,000 for relief—never before has one man been given such authority, in peace or in war. Then we find him triumphant in his Social Security legislation, which Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins describes as "One of the most forward-looking pieces of legislation in the interest of wage earners in the entire history of the United States." His share-the-wealth program passed almost as he had outlined it, notwithstanding the fact that practically every member of both Houses would have rather had no tax bill at this session. The Banking bill greatly strengthened Federal control both of money and of credit, and one commentator aptly remarks that "It is axiomatic that he who controls the credit and money controls all." In agriculture, the AAA was amended to give the Secretary of Agriculture greater power, not only over farmers, but over all who handle farm products. A new Railroad Pension bill was passed—this time one it was hoped the Supreme Court would sustain. Mr. Roosevelt also had his own way with regard to the Guffey coal bill and the TVA amendments. He opposed the Soldier Bonus, and here, too, was sustained by a slim margin. There are other victories that might be mentioned, but these give the picture. There are reports throughout the country that Mr. Roosevelt is losing in popularity, but however that may be, he has retained sufficient strength up to the present to get with few exceptions, what he wanted from Congress.

Virginia's Movietone.—

An advance showing of a moving picture supposed to give the tourist from other states a glimpse of the educational and esthetic value of a tour of the Old Dominion, was presented at Loew's Theatre on Wednesday evening of last week. There was an audience of possibly two thousand present to witness this presentation, they being guests of Governor Peery and of the State Conservation Commission, headed by Hon. Wilbur Hall. The picture was made under the direction of the executive vice-president of the American Automobile Association, not a native Virginian, and this would possibly be a partial reason for the lack of greater judgment than is displayed in the selection of the material photographed. The pictures were quite evidently taken by a cameraman who knew his business, and the selection of the pictures to be taken was naturally limited by the space of time that could be allotted to such a picture. Certainly, though, there is no excuse for taking as much time for showing a dancing scene in a casino as there is allotted to the wonders of Hampton Roads. Dancing scenes have a sameness wherever portrayed, and this one might well be entirely eliminated. A short visit to the shipbuilding yards would prove vastly more interesting to most tourists. The Capital City is given scant recognition. Notwithstanding that it is certainly one of the three most historic cities of America, it is passed up with the presentation of one view of the Capitol and another of the White House of the Confederacy. St. John's Church, St. Paul's, Hollywood Cemetery, the resting place of three presidents, are all ignored—lack of time being the excuse. Yet there is time a plenty to show a party of cocktail-drinkers and to give a minute if uninteresting pictoral description of how cocktails should be made. And in Williamsburg almost equal time is given to picturing the chain stores and business area—rebuilt it is true in colonial style—as there is devoted to the historic restorations. The pictures of the Virginia caverns and those of the mountains of the Valley and of Southwest Virginia are most beautiful and are well taken, but even here the reel might well be cut, as the sameness becomes somewhat monotonous. Virginia is primarily of interest to the tourist from an historical standpoint; the picture should be seriously studied and revised with this in mind. It is the first picture of its kind ever taken, and its possibilities are almost unlimited, and it would be little less than tragic for the State Conservation Commission to miss the wonderful opportunity it will afford to advertise the State, by allowing it to go out in its present lopsided condition.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Dr. L. E. Smith told SUN readers last week something that all ought to read and heed. Strange isn't it that we have to be told again and again the things that we should do—and that which is best for us to do.

We are sending hearty congratulations to our good friends, and former neighbors at Elon College, Rev. and Mrs. A. R. Van Cleave, Roanoke, Ala. Their announcement says: "Our baby is here: Vera Elizabeth arrived August 19th." A glad hand to the happy parents and the newly arrived.

From La Grange (Ga.) Daily News of August 12th: "Completely surprising his congregation and friends, the Rev. Jesse Dollar anounced his resignation from the pastorate of the United Christian Church at the conclusion of his sermon yesterday morning. This was not a departure from the usual procedure, Mr. Dollar stated. A pastor may hand his resignation to the board of deacons or announce it from the pulpit, as he chooses. The resignation is to become effective on November 1st, on which date he will have completed four years as pastor of the La Grange United church. During this time he has made hosts of friends both in and out of his congregation, who will hear of his coming departure with regret. Before coming here, Mr. Dollar was pastor of the First Christian church of Reidsville, N. C., for which position he left a history professorship to Birmingham-Southern College in Birmingham. Prior to this he was a student in the graduate school of Vanderbilt University in Nashville, where he received the Master of Arts degree, following undergraduate work at Elon College of North Carolina, where he received the baccalaureate. Mr. Dollar admitted no plans for the future. 'Let it be understood,' he stated at the close of the sermon yesterday, 'by all concerned that there is no ill will toward any person in or out of the membership of this church which prompts this action. It is impelled only by the earnest endeavor of my heart to act in accordance with that which seems to be wist.' "

DID GOD FORSAKE HIS SON?

Why should one ask this question? Because there are many who believe God forsook His Son at the time he hung on the cross. They reach that conclusion from Christ's utterance: "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?"

A careful study of the Scripture bearing on this subject will reveal the fact that Jesus was not forsaken by his Father and that he was not uttering a plaintive wail of despair. Concerning his Son, God said: "This is my Son in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him."—Matt. 17:5. At the baptism of Jesus, there came a voice out of the heavens, saying, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." We have the statement, that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoeved believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved." John 3:16, 17.

On one occasion when the Jews sought to kill Jesus because Jesus said God was his Father, Jesus said to them: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise. For the Father loveth the Son, and showeth him all things that himself doeth: and he will show him greater works than these, that ye may marvel." John 5: 19, 20. In this discussion with the Jews, Jesus said: "I can of mine own self do nothing: as I hear, I judge: and my judgment is just; because I seek not mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." John 5:30.

Again he said: "And he that sent me is with me: the Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him." John 8:29. Again: "Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? The words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself: but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works.'" John 14:10.

Again Jesus said: "Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it up again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father."

These statements clearly show that when Jesus hung on the cross it was in accordance with the Father's will. How then could God forsake him when he was doing that which the Father sent him to do, namely to give his life a ransom for many? Jaul does not hint at such a thing as God forsaking his Son, but says God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, not inputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God were entreating you by us: we beseech you on behalf of Christ, be ye reconciled to God. II Cor. 5:19, 20. Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, and it pleases God through the simplicity of preaching to save them that believe. So then we see that there was perfect harmony between the Father and the Son in the plan of human redemption. You ask: Why then did Christ cry out while on the cross: "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" When I was in Lewisburg, Pa., last April, I attended a Lenten service in which the seven ministers of the village treated the fourth word, (My God, my God, etc.) and gave such a dark picture of the Father's treatment of his Son as to be a reflection on the Father's character. I felt sad that men who preach the gospel of love do not let Scripture interpret Scripture and thus come to a better understanding of the word. Matthew says that at the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, "Eloi, E-lo-i, lamasabach-tha-ni?" Twice while on the cross Jesus cried with a loud voice. Have you ever asked yourself: Why was this, and then sought to answer the question? If you will turn to John 8:28, you will find the reason of his crying aloud. He told the Jews when they had lifted up the Son of Man, then they should know that he was their Messiah.

When a minister says: "Let us sing, 'Rock of Ages, Cleft for Me,' " he throws on the canvas of the peoples' mind the whole hymn, so when Jesus said: calling out loud and clear, giving the title of the Messianic Psalm, the Jews were given to understand they were crucifying their Messiah, so that it was not a plaintive wail of despair, but the fulfilment of what he had promised, that the Jews should know he was the Messiah, and that his words came true is shown by the fact that under Peter's preaching 3,000 accepted him as Messiah and soon the number was swelled to 5,000 and later to many thousands. It seems to me this explains why Jesus gave the title of the Messianic Psalm in a loud voice so the listening Jews might hear and know they had crucified their Messiah. In Gethsemane the Father sent an angel to strengthen his Son, and no doubt Jesus felt his Father's sustaining presence while on the cross. Twice from the cross Christ called out loud, the last time was when he laid down his life, as he said no man took it from him for he laid it down of himself. He died as he would, when he would, not as a weakling, but as the strong Son of God who said in clear tones that all might hear and know that he did not think God had forsaken him: "Father, into Thy hands I commend my spirit"; and having said this he expired. Tenderly his Father cared for him and declared him to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead Jesus Christ our Lord. Thus did God prove Himself the model Father for all time so that Paul in writing to disciples could say: Be ye imitators of God as dear children. Fathers should find great inspiration for the proper treatment of their sons in the study of the relationship existing between God the Father and his Son Jesus Christ, and in the study of the life of Jesus may we find unspeakable joy in our sonship to our loving heavenly Father and may we maintain that sonship in the spirit of Jesus who said: "I do always those things that please the Father."

YOUNG PEOPLE ENJOY WEEK'S CAMP.

Monday afternoon, July 29, 1935, forty young people from Dale, Henry and Barbour counties gathered for the beginning of the fifth annual session of Camp Sealacon (pronounce it (Se-ala-con.) The name of the camp is adapted from the longer name, Southeast Alabama Conference of Young people.

Camp Sealacon is sponsored by the Midland City Group of Congregational Churches for the purpose of bringing together young people of all denominations for a week of worship, study, and recreation, with the hope that these young people may be strengthened spiritually, mentally, and physically, and that they may use this strength in their own homes, churches and communities for the advancement of God's Kingdom. So far as we have been able to learn, this is the only institution of its kind in southeast Alabama.

Camp Sealacon is situated about ten miles northeast of Ozark, on the farm of Mr. J. W. Snell, and only a short distance from his home. To get to the camp-site, it is necessary to go down a very steep hill. If you are lucky enough to stop at the foot of the hill, you will be able to see the small artificial pool in which two springs unite. But from wherever you stop, you can see the simple beauty of the place. You are in a natural amphitheatre—there are hills on three sides. The "floor" is about one hundred yards long, and half that wide. Almost the whole site is covered with beautiful pines, oaks, gum, and other trees, which provide very welcome shade from the summer sun. The beauty of the place is natural, for the only additions that man has made are a provisions shack, a cabin for the girls and one for the boys, and a swimming pool with a gutter to convey the water from the small pool at the base of the hill.

This year Camp Sealacon was in session from July 29 to August 4. Through the constant efforts of Rev. N. A. Long, its founder, and others the camp has steadily grown in scope and usefulness, and the sessions have been lengthened from three days in 1931 to seven days this year.

A brief summary of the camp schedule will give a general idea of our daily activities.

Miss Eva Casey and Mill Mildred Rister, Student Summer Service workers, had charge of the cooking, but all members of the camp were called upon from time to time to help.

Everybody got up at six o'clock, and those who wished went in swimming for a few minutes. Morning Watch, the early morning worship service, came at six-thirty. Mr. Philip Havener, a student at Andover Newton Theological Seminary, and temporary pastor of Blackwoods Congregational Church, near Headland, had charge of these very inspiring services.

Seven o'clock was breakfast hour. After breakfast was over, everyone helped prepare the vegetables for dinner, or helped with any other work that was at hand.

Classes for the morning began at eight-thirty. During the first period, which ended at nine-twenty, two classes were in session—Youth at Worship, by Dr. F. P. Ensminger, Superintendent of Congregational Churches in Alabama, and Race Relations, by Rev. Carl Dollar, pastor of the United Congregational Church, Phenix City, Alabama. From nine-twenty-five until ten-fifteen, Miss Marguerite Davison, Director of Young People's Activities for Alabama, taught a class on Dramatics in the Church Program, and Mr. Dollar taught a class on The Life of Paul. The two classes during the third period were Christian Youth in Action, by Mr. Havener, and Health, by Miss Davison, Miss Rister, and Mr. Malcolm White. The only class during the final morning period was Missionary Materials and Methods, by Mr. White, who is an instructor in Southern Union College, Wadley, Alabama.

A swimming period which followed classes ended in time for dinner at twelve-thirty. After dinner everyone was supposed to observe Quiet Hour—rest or work quietly.

From two until three o'clock, Miss Rister and Mr. White gave instructions in handcrafts—leatherwork, basketry, etc.

The Recreation period began at three o'clock. The camp was divided into two sides, and for two and one-half hours there was friendly rivalry between the sides, in softball games, volleyball games, and other sports. The recreation period ended with a few minutes for swimming. The recreational activities were climaxed Friday in a track and field meet between the two groups.

Supper came at six o'clock, and afterwards we climbed the hill for a view of the glorious sunset, and for the vesper service conducted by Dr. Ensminger and his worship class.

From dusk until ten o'clock we enjoyed a variety of attractions around the campfire. These included a mock trial one night, stunts by the various groups another night, and games and songs still another. At ten o'clock we ended the day with "taps." Everyone slept outside under the trees—the cabins are for use only in case of rain.

Throughout the session, special effort was made to maintain a proper religious atmosphere, to give useful information to the members, and to maintain the best of fellowship among the members.

"Since repeal, deaths from accidents in automobiles in 86 leading cities of the United States have averaged 110 more each month than in the same months of 1932-33." (From Westways Magazine of the Automobile Club of Southern California.) "In studying the ages of persons killed we find that the greatest increase has been in the group between 5 and 14 years. In other words, we are slaughtering our children in order that men may satisfy their appetites for liquor." TIMES OF REFRESHING.

A Devotional Service.

(For Sunday School or Missionary Society.)

By MRS. ETHELBERT V. GRABILL.

"Times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord."—Acts 3:19.

Perhaps there has never been a larger number of people seeking refreshment of body and spirit than at this moment. Although scientists, through carefully collected data as to health and achievement, have proved that there is no time when a vacation is more needed by both student and worker than at the end of January and throughout February, August still remains for Americans the popularly accepted time for vacation.

The tonic of a change is the most widely sought for refreshment, as well as the healing power of beauty and quiet at the countryside or seashore. A week by a lake or at the mountains not only rests weary body and nerves but revives the spirit and gives a new outlook on life. How often our Master withdrew from his followers to grow strong in the solitude of the mountains or in the quiet waters of the Sea of Galilee.

Into the woods my Master went,
Clean forspent, forspent.
Into the woods my Master came,
Forspent with love and shame.
But the olives they were not blind to Him,
The little gray leaves were kind to Him:
The thorn tree had a mind to Him
When into the woods He came.

Out of the woods my Master went,
And He was well content.
Out of the woods my Master came,
Content with death and shame.
When Death and Shame would woo Him last
From under the trees they drew Him last;
'Twas on a tree they slew Him—last
When out of the woods He came.

Sidney Lanier.

"God of the hills, grant us Thy strength to go back into the cities without faltering, strength to do our daily task without tiring and with enthusiasm, strength to help our neighbors, who have no hills to remember.

"God of the lake, grant us Thy peace and Thy restfulness, peace to bring into a world of hurry and confusion, restfulness to carry to the tired whom we shall meet every day, content to do small things with a freedom from littleness, self-control for the unexpected emergency and patience for the wearisome task, with deep depths within our souls to bear us through the crowded places. Give us the hush of night time when the pine trees are dark against the skyline, the humbleness of the hills who in their mightiness know it not, and the laughter of the sunny waves to brighten the cheerless spots of a long winter.

"God of the wilderness, with Thy pure winds from the northland blow away our pettiness; with the harsher winds of the winter drive away our selfishness and hypocrisy; fill us with the depth and the height and the breadth of Thy wilderness. May we live out the truths which Thou hast taught us, in every thought and word and deed. Amen." (From The New Hymnal for American Youth.)

The vacation change brings precious renewal to many, but others there are who can visit neither mountain nor lake. In their accustomed place, and bound to a routine task, where is refreshment for them? Read Paul's letter, I Cor. 16:18—"I am glad for the coming of Stephanas and Fortunatus and Achaicus for what was lacking on your part they have supplied; for they have refreshed my spirit and yours; acknowledge ye them that are such."

Paul with so much to say in his letter to the people of Corinth, did not fail to record his appreciation of friends who could refresh him. Our friends fulfil for us many offices. Some seem primarily to entertain; others to share responsibility, to advise; but how rare and priceless is the comradeship of those who refresh, those from whose company we go out rested, strengthened, renewed.

Marcus Aurelius began his Meditations by listing his friends, and the contributions they had made to his life. His mother taught him simplicity in his way of living, "far removed from the habits of the rich." From his tutor he learned "to want little and to work with my own hands." And so on through the long list of friends and virtues. In Sextus alone he found the power of "readily accommodating himself to all, so that intercourse with him was more agreeable than flattery." Like Stephanas and Fortunatus with Paul, so through the centuries has record come of Sextus for refreshing the spirit of his friend.

But even the friend is not always accessible. One cannot always be sure of refreshment, essential to even the stoutest heart, gained through withdrawal to a spot of beauty and restfulness, nor can one always reach the friend whose word and glance mean courage and new life.

What then? "Times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord." What a statement to memorize, to repeat to oneself in season, and out of season. Times of refreshing shall come. There is no uncertainey or variation. It is never inaccessible or imopssible. That presence is always imminent, waiting only to be felt, to be recognized, to be used. All that is necessary is a heart at leisure from itself, a heart willing to pause and listen, to renew its strength so that one "shall run and not be weary, shall walk and not faint."

Lord, what a change within us one short hour
Spent in Thy presence will avail to make!
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take!
What parched grounds refresh us with a shower!
We kneel, and all around us seems to lower;
We rise, and all, the distant and the near,
Stands forth in sunny outline, brave and clear;
We kneel, how weak! we rise, how full of power!

OPPORTUNITY.

They do me wrong who say I come no more
When once I knock and fail to find you in;
For every day I stand outside your door,
And bid you wake, and rise to fight and win.

Wail not for precious chances passed away,
Weep not for golden ages on the wane!
Each night I burn the records of the day,
At sunrise every soul is born again!

Laugh like a boy at splendors that have sped,
To vanished joys be blind and deaf and dumb;
My judgments seal the past with the dead
But never bind a moment yet to come.

Tho' deep in mire wring not your hands and weep.
I lend my arm to all who say, "I can!"
No shame-faced outcast ever sank so deep,
But yet might rise and be again a man.

Dost thou behold thy lost youth all aghast?
Dost reel from righteous retribution's blow?
Then turn from blotted archives of the past,
And find the future's pages white as snow.

Art thou a mourner? Rouse thee from thy spell;
Art thou a sinner? Sins may be forgiven;
Each morning gives thee wings to flee from hell,
Each night a star to guide thy feet to heaven.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

FIRST CHRISTIANS.

It was a missionary, and converts to Christianity, won through missionaries, who were first called Christians. The name had long been promised through prophesy "which the mouth of Jehovah shall name." But the name was not given until some Jews, God's chosen people, accepted Jesus Christ as Saviour and in His name went out in the true missionary spirit to win Gentiles as well as Jews, to the way of Righteousness. So through the first missionary endeavor, preaching the Gospel to Gentiles as well as to Jews, the Church found its true name, and displayed its true spirit. And from that day to this the one dynamic of the Church, the one power by and through which it keeps alive and going, is the spirit of missions. The one business of the Church is to give to all who will hear and heed, both Jew and Gentile, the spirit and life of Him who said: "I am come that they might have life and have it more abundantly," and Who again said, "I am the way, the truth and the life." And shall we not bear in mind that it was He who taught us when we pray to say, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth."

When there came into this world those who were willing to build up of all peoples, persuasions, tongues and tribes, the kingdom of righteousness on the one foundation—Jesus the Christ, the Son of the loving God, these were given a new name—Christians. "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." And it seems most appropriate, and quite sufficient, that those who build on this Foundation should be called Christians.

Born into the world through missionary pain and travail, the spirit of all true Christians, of every class, church and communion, is the missionary spirit—that spirit of sharing with others the love, life and light of our Lord. Otherwise we do violence to the Name and Spirit of Christ—and true Christians.

THE CENTER OF A UNIVERSE.

How easy it is for many of us to think that we live on the fringe, or in a corner, and that life, real life, is for others, not for us. The great, good God and Father of us all never intended that any of us should so shelve or sidetrack ourselves. Life is full of interest if we explore, venture, seek to discover. Each individual, however small or great, is the center of a universe around which the planets, and stars in their courses, revolve.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, in a recent number of The Saturday Evening Post writing "in Defense of Curiosity" has this paragraph: "If you look upon your home as the center of a universe, and allow curiosity to carry you into the various fields of contact around you, you will soon find your life brimming over with interests. Perhaps you will tell me that you live in a small place where nothing ever happens, so you can have but few interests. This is not so. The great experiences of life are the same wherever you live and whether you are rich or poor. Birth and death, courage and cowardice, kindness and cruelty, love and hate, are no respecters of persons, and they are the occasions and emotions which bring about most of the experiences of life. You cannot prevent unhappiness or sorrow entering into any life—even the fairy godmother of the legend could not give freedom from these experiences—but curiosity will insure an ever-recurring interest in life and will give you the needed impetus to turn your most baleful experience to some kind of good service."

The reference the writer makes in the above is not to that species of "curiosity" which is idle and selfish and trouble-making, but that healthy curiosity that stimulates imagination, leads to discovery and engenders wholesome activity.

Self-elimination is almost as injurious as self-pity, and leads in the same direction, eventually to a dull, drab, dreary life and world. God invites us to explore His and our beautiful and interesting world—nowhere so beautiful nor so interesting as among and with the people who form the universe of which we, each of us, are the center.

"LUPITA."

This scribe has just read a book. The title is "Lupita." Now, Lupita is the name of a girl in Mexico who, starting life in a convent, in training to be a nun, gets swept into the maelstrom of Mexico's economic and spiritual upheaval and lands in the center of a Communistic group and movement. Lupita spends her inherited fortune, and her physical strength, in the cause of Communism, and there with health and fortune gone, she has a longing not yet satisfied, the insatiate desire of a hungry heart—a spiritual longing that only the Church, and Him upon Whom the Church was built, could satisfy. Lupita returns to her first love only at the end of a forespent life and in her death did what she had not been able to do in health—show, to others what it meant to trust in the God of love and righteousness. But what a life, what a career, what an experience, this Lupita had.

She was the child of that revolution in Mexico that seems to be sweeping our southern neighbor into the vortex of soulless, godless, Communism.

It is the spirit of Lupita, rather than her adventurous daring, but misdirected life, that gives weight and worth to her name and to this book. She gives reality and truth to the Spanish phrase —"Los muertos mandam"—the dead issue orders. Lupita dead, rather than Lupita living, gives orders for righteous living and ultimate victory.

We of the United States little reckon with those tremendous forces now stirring our southern neighbor from center to circumference. Says John A. Mackay in his words of introduction to "Lupita."

"This book is a transcript of the titanic spiritual struggle now going on at the heart of the Mexican nation. It is a tale in which the chief forces that are bidding for the soul of Mexico move in personalized form across the revolutionary stage.

"In Mexico, as in Russia, a revolution has taken place of that vertical, volcanic type in which the social crust of an old order is shattered by Cyclopean forces from beneath. Mexico is now following Russia in launching one of the most anti-religious movements in modern history. The characters in this tale have come up through the revolution and in their actions and their words one can witness the issues involved and the trends that are being followed in the still undecided conflict.

"The value of this picture is greatly enhanced by the fact that the author himself is a distinguished son of Mexico and a child of the revolution."

"Lupita" is indeed worth reading by one who wants to feel the throb and thrill of a life struggling for the right. J. O. A.

A WORTHY MOTIVE.

I read the other day a remark by Mrs. Stanley Baldwin, wife of the British Prime Minister. She said, "We believe that in politics, as in everything else, one must just 'follow the light' as one sees it. The mainspring of my husband's life and mine are the same. We want to do something for others before we pass on, not to leave everything just as we found it."

One might call this taking life seriously. I once heard a woman say, "Deliver me from earnest people!" In the midst of so much selfishness and corruption in public as well as private life it is heartening to know that one great statesman at the head of a great nation desires to improve conditions. And I believe there are many more in high places in every nation, and in this country especially, who are seriously and earnestly seeking to make this country a safer and better place in which to live. There never was a time when upstanding Christian statesmen were needed more than now.

A LEAGUE OF HEARTS.

My friend, George Mathew Adams, who writes such splendid "Morning Talks" for newspapers, said recently that if it were possible to have a League of Hearts wherein each understood the other, there would be no trouble in establishing a League of Nations that would last forever, and through which all war and fear would vanish, so far as national security would be concerned—until the nations of the earth speak a universal language, one by which each nation can understand the other.

That is an ideal to work for, and it is true. The language of an understanding heart is love and good will. Think of it! If the citizens of each nation would cultivate good will toward each other and try to understand each other, peace would come after awhile.

The place to begin is in our own hearts, in our own families, in our own churches and in our own communities. There is no hope of world peace until we all take a hand in practicing peace in every department of life.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL A FORCE FOR GOOD.

It must have been an inspiring sight to have seen one hundred thousand children marching in the streets of Brooklyn representing the Sunday Schools of that city. It was directed by the Brooklyn Protestant Sunday School Union and was the 106th anniversary parade of that organization. The children were divided into twenty-seven divisions, each taking a different line of march. This enabled more citizens to see the children.

One of the best things being done by the church today is the gathering in of children from everywhere into its Sunday Schools. The next best thing is to discover teachers and set them to work teaching and leading the children and youth of the community. What a wonderful opportunity it is to influence young life, furnish it with its ideals and impart something of one's own personality to unfolding and impressionable beings. Every earnest Christian should be glad to be called to teach.

CRUISING IN THE LAND OF THE SUNNY NIGHT.

By H. E. Rountree.

"The Land of the Totem Pole."

Everywhere in Alaska is the well known Totem Pole. This is a native Indian creation, a high pole of grotesque carvings of man and beast.

We art told that "the word 'totem' came into the English language in the form of 'totam' thru a work published in 1791 by J. Long, an interpreter between the whites and the Red Indians of North America. There is no subject pertaining to the natives of Alaska more interesting than totemism, and none about which most people have such vague and unsatisfactory notions. The reticence of the natives, their reluctance to talk to white people on the subject and the absence of any written language, make it very difficult to acquire a true knowledge of it. The average white man can gain no satisfactory knowledge by approaching the natives. The old natives who know will not respond, and the young ones claim to know nothing about it.

"Because totem poles consist of carved images, some declare them to be idols. They were never regarded as such by the natives of Alaska. The totem poles of Alaska, while bearing images of creatures, were never erected to represent any imaginary deity or God. Nor were they ever worshipped. They are highly revered because they carry the tribal emblem. What the coat-of-arms or crest is to the English aristocracy, so are the totemic marks to the native families.

"The native word for totem is 'ko-te-a,' meaning image or likeness.

"The natives are Darwinians to the very letter. Their belief in the origin of man from animals is expressed not only in their verbal legends but also on their totem poles.

"The entire native population of Southeastern Alaska is divided into two great divisions, known as the Eagle or man's totem, and the Crow or woman's totem. The sub-totems of the Eagle are the Bear, Wolf, Whale, Shark, etc., and of the Crow, the Beaver, Frog, Salmon, Seal, etc. Every family must be both of the Eagle and the Crow fraternity, i. e., one of the Bear totem may not marry one of the whale as these belong to the same grand division.

"Totemism is recorded history, genealogy, legent, memorial, commemoration and art. The genealogical pole is usually erected directly in front of its owner's house and, as the name indicates, gives the genealogy of the family within. The wife's totem crowns the top; next the husband's, and so on down. Any native passing by and seeing the pole can tell at a glance the clan of the mother, which is the ruling one of the house. From this he will know whether or not he would be welcome to enter and stay there. If the ruling family of the house is not of his totem he passes on.

"There are two splendid totem poles in Ketchikan, the Johnson totem, and the Kyan, which is now in front of Pioneer's Hall. This pole is surmounted by the Crane; below is the Kyak, a fabled bird of the mountains, and still below is the grizzly bear. The pole then reads: 'I am a member of the Crane clan and am married to a member of the Kyak and the Bear Phratry.'

"Chief Johnson's totem is surmounted by Kajuk, a fabled bird of the mountains. This bird amuses himself by throwing rocks at ground hogs. Those who find one of these are sure to become rich.

"Kajuk is placed high up on the pole to show the dignity of the family.

"Below are the two servants of the raven. These are the ones that obtained fire for mortals, says legend.

"The fire was in the west. These two servants stuck their bills into pitch and flew out to the fire.

"On their return the fire so heated their bills, they say, that under the weight of the burning pitch they bent, and the curve was produced.

"Below is the Raven, and still below is the Frog woman with her children, the Salmon."

Many of the original totems still stand.

"Totems had a double significance, historical and legendary—they indicated the prestige, occupation, marriage relationship and incidents occurring in the life of the owner or his tribe. They also bore a legend so mythical and unintelligible that ancient Grecian mythology would fade into discard in comparison.

"Then again, there is the grave totem, usually only one figure—unless the deceased was in debt to the medicine man, in which case another figure was added: the grotesque statue of the Medic himself, which remained atop his monument until his relations paid the debt. (American physicians take notice.)

But we are told that "with the coming of the White Man's civilization, education and manner of living, these old customs have fallen into disuse. The totem poles are no longer carved. The legends and myths are being forgotten. Already much is lost beyond recovery.

"Realizing this, the Ketchikan Post of the American Legion is making a vigorous campaign to collect and preserve examples of the various types of totem poles.

"Working against the indifference of the younger natives and the cupidity of the older ones, they have gathered and restored a number of totems, erecting them in the City Park in Ketchikan."

The totem pole literally adorns everything and it is said that it has justly earned this recognition for it has become symbolic of southeastern Alaska.

A SHAMELESS DESECRATION.

By Deets Pickett.

The liquor traffic continues to violate every sense of propriety and decency in its greedy fight for profits. Few incidents in recent years have been more shocking than the use of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address in a nation-wide broadcast advertising a certain brand of beer. Representative Francis D. Culkin was fully justified in his denunciation of this incident. In a letter to Mr. Anning S. Prall of the Federal Communications Commission, the representative accuses the man in charge of the broadcast with mutilating the address, paraphrasing it to extol the alleged merits of alcohol and defiling a sacred classic with misplaced and vulgar comedy. "Cannot the power to withhold a license be used some way so that this shameless performance will not be repeated?" he asked.

It might be thought that with the door barely closed upon national prohibition, the liquor traffic would show some restraint. It is showing none. A rising tide of indignation is the direct result of the prevalent advertising intended to increase the use of liquors by women and young people.

It requires no prophet to predict the state of affairs in America within a few short years if this commercialized debauchery of the people is not stopped. Bringing the women of the nation within the sphere of influence of the liquor traffic will alone double the liquor bill, double the incidental cost of the traffic, double drink-caused delinquency and deficiency, double the alcoholism rate, double the police problem, and, once doubled, these social calamities will be supported by a deeply-rooted narcotic appetite throughout the population. Meanwhile, traffic in other vices is daily increasing their menace. The thin crust of civilization has been broken by the underworld, which is surging up to a new influence of power.

There is one alternative, and one only, to prohibition, and that is a liquor traffic stripped of all privileges of trade promotion and of the incentive involved in private profit.—Exchange.

WHAT SALVATION DOES.

When Zaccheus was saved he immediately became honest and liberal. Honesty and liberality do not bring salvation, but salvation brings honesty and liberality. There are many people who seek to be saved by endeavoring to imitate the fruits of the Spirit, but all such efforts are fruitless and will never bring anyone anywhere near to salvation. Good works will never save one but the saved will bring forth good works as a natural consequence. Salvation changes a man's life entirely. Out of his self-seeking extortioner it made an honest and liberal man and a lover of good men. Salvation corrects a man's inner life and puts him in proper relationship with God. It corrects his outward life and corrects his relationship with his fellowmen. It takes him from the company of evil men and makes him a lover of good men.—E. N. C.

If religion leaves out play, it leaves out one of the most important aspects of human life. Nothing beautiful ever came into human experience until people began to play. When primitive man first made pottery he made it as a matter of utilitarian necessity, but when his life eased up a little he began to play with pottery, to mold it, decorate and color it. All art comes from play. It springs from that margin of energy and leisure over and above the stern demands of need. It is life's surplus and overflow.—Harry Emerson Fosdick, D. D.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Revs. H. S. Hardcastle, John G. Truitt, O. D. Poythress, Aubrey C. Todd, J. F. Morgan, Jos. Jrench, J. L. Neese, A. W. Andes, G. C. Crutchfield and the writer were among the ministers of the Christian Church who attended the Bible Conference at Massanetta Springs during the week. A number of laymen and women of our denomination were present. One could wish that every minister in the Conferences of the Southern Convention might have this privilege next year.

After attending a similar Bible Conference at Northfield some years ago, in company with Dr. J. O. Atkinson, this writer has wished that such a Conference, on a smaller scale, might be established at Elon College. That wish has deepened with the intervening years. If a large number of our ministers and laymen could be persuaded to attend such a Conference it would be possible to establish and maintain a similar school for our own people. The Young People's Leadership Training School already established as a Summer School at Elon College should be enlarged and supported. It is doing a great work, and has tremendous possibilities. But is it not intended to meet the needs of the laymen and ministers in the field of Bible study.

Until such a Conference can be established for our own people it would be very helpful to make it possible for our ministers to attend a Bible Conference at least one or two weeks in every year. If a minister is not financially able to pay his expenses it would be easy for several liberal laymen to assist the pastor by paying his expenses. This is not a personal hint to the laymen in this writer's field.

It would be impossible to outline the impressions made by the addresses I have heard at Massanetta during the past eight years. In a general way the Conference offers three things to the ministers who attend: 1. A Broader Vision; 2. A Deeper Spiritual Life; 3. Definite Religious Convictions.

The Christian Church, during its history, has given great emphasis to its broad and liberal doctrinal teaching. It is easy to be broad and shallow. But it requires much study to be broad and deep. A man may be so liberal in his views that he does not emphasize any thing. Jesus was a liberal in His earthly ministry; but He had definite truths which He constantly and consistently brought to the attention of His hearers. It was not His liberalism that gave Him power; it was His ability to bring deep spiritual truth to the attention of the people. He taught and preached the truth to make converts, and to instruct them in the way of life and service unto salvation.

There is a place today for any Christian church which will discover the needs of this age and seek to interpret the Gospel of Jesus Christ for this generation. Every age has its problems. Jesus Christ made a Gospel for every age and condition of humanity. The present age has lost the word sin; the Christian minister should find this lost word and proclaim it. The present age has in a measure lost the Deity of Jesus Christ; the Christian Church should expound this truth with increasing fervor. The present age is losing the holy day of rest and worship; the pulpit has an opportunity to rescue the Lord's Day. The secular greed for gold has brought thousands to serve Mammon instead of God; the Church should give increasing heed to spiritual life. The people are pleasure and profit mad; they should be challenged to enrich their present and future by establishing deep religious convictions as the motivating force in their daily conduct.

So many great challenging truths knock at the door of our churches for distinctive consideration and emphasis. For more than a hundred years our leaders have held up the Bible as "a sufficient rule of faith and practice." Why not seek to give emphasis to the Bible by proclaiming its teaching in a specific and dynamic way concerning: the Cross, the Deity of Christ, Regeneration, Missions, Family Religion and Peace?

I. W. JOHNSON.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF A COLLEGE.

Buildings and grounds do not constitute a college. Buildings, grounds and students do not constitute a college. You cannot have a college without a faculty. The faculty, more than any other force, determines the efficiency or inefficiency of a college; and yet buildings, grounds, students, and faculty do not of themselves constitute a college. In addition to faculty, students and equipment, a college, to be a real institution, must have a principle and a purpose.

A college is built and conducted for the training of the youth of the day in which it exists. Young men and young women are invited to the campus and to the halls of instruction together with all the privileges attached thereto. In response to this invitation, young men and young women from the best homes of the land with alert minds and burning ambitions, come. These young people, the young people on the college campuses of the nation, represent the flower of the land. They come out of the heart of civilization and hold within their grasp the future of culture and refinement. Upon their shoulders will eventually rest the responsibility of government and of society.

In receiving these young men and young women for training the college assumes a fearful responsibility. They are not as stone beneath the sculptor's chisel, but are as clay in the poter's hand. They are to be fashioned for the higher and better things of life, or for the more sordid courses in society. They are ready to be made and ready to be guided. The colleges of this country, more than any other force, humanly speaking, will determine the destiny of state and of church.

The youngster who spends awhile on the college campus should not be the same ever again. He cannot be the same. After having spent four years in college the whole world looks different. Neighbors neither look nor talk the same. Home itself has changed. In reality it is the youngster who is changed, and other things appear to be changed. This is right. If it is not so then the college days have been a failure.

The world is not so much concerned about the gate a youngster enters when he arrives at college, but it is greatly concerned about the gate through which he makes his exit when he leaves college. If he makes his exit through a radical gate, bent on destructive rather than constructive policies, at war with the government rather than fired with a patriotic spirit, then his college experiences have given to him the wrong slant on life, and the college itself has helped to multiply the world's woes. If, on the other hand, the gate through which he makes his exit as he faces the world with its opportunities and responsibilities, be a gate of sane and constructive policy, one that has a progressive vision for his day and a determination to discover and cast aside the ills of politics and society, and to throw the weight of his ability into the fray for the advancement of all, then his experiences in college have been profitable, and his college has added to the success and joy of humanity.

Every year the fruits of our colleges are passing judgment upon the merits of our efforts, and will eventually write the destiny of the college itself. The college must justify its existence by the fruits of its campus, as well as merit its support by the public. I am not contending that a college should curb the natural expressions of its students, nor am I advocating the cessation of free speech on our campuses, but I am contending that it is the business of a college, not only to teach history, science, etc., but that it is also its responsibility to ground a student firmly in the judgment of values, and the work of conducting the affairs of society. Honor and integrity must be instilled as cardinal virtues in every man's life. Our colleges must become the steadying forces in the training of personality and the development of individual character. Unless we can train a youngster how to act and how to live our imparting of facts and training of minds are of little value.

Elon College stands for the highest and best in scholarship, but it also stands for the safest and surest in morals, and for the purest and the truest in religion. We had rather teach a youngster how to think, how to act, and how to live than to teach him how to perform an experiment in a scientific laboratory. When we shall have taught him clearly the high virtues of living, the reality of God and the lordship of Christ, then we will have made a significant contribution to him, and he in turn will make a worthwhile contribution of the world. Elon College accepts the responsibility of training the present day youth for the responsibility of tomorrow, and cheerfully invites ambitious young men and young women to come. Our campus is open to them, and we have stored up our best against the day of their coming.

Our fall term opens September 3rd. Present indications are that we will open with the largest enrollment in the history of the institution.

The Christian family ideal needs to be restated and re-emphasized, the Christian economic ideal needs to be recovered and adapted to our complicated age. This, as nothing else, would restore confidence in Christianity and win a multitude to that transformation of character that the Christian religion is able to make. By creating personal integrity and social ideals the Christian religion can give to this bewildered age the two things most needed for recovery.—Rev. M. Madeline Southard.

No one can explain your misfortunes. No one can tell you why they came on you rather than on someone else. Those questions belong to the larger mystery of life itself, a mystery that no one has ever solved. Suppose you do the natural thing. Suppose you hold a permanent grudge against existence. That inward bitterness will infect your own personality, and finally cast its baneful influence on your home, your children, and everyone who comes in contact with you. That is not the solution of your problem. What is? Jesus found the way to live. Drop your grudges. Forgive everything and everybody. Forgive life itself. As soon as you do that the new days of quietness and power will begin.—James Gordon Gilkey.

A Story for the Children

THE VISITING SHOES.

By LUCY MECHAM THRUSTON.

"Tom," in a long drawn tone of admiration, "you certainly shined 'em."

"Think so myself." Tom leaned out on the rock to see the reflection of his shoes in the mountain pool. A look at that shining image thrilled him even more than one at the shoes themselves. He humped himself ready for a jump back to the shale bank where Joe stood. But the rock was slippery. Tom wavered. Joe, barefoot, plunged into the stream, steadied him and in a second both boys were sitting hunched up on the shale. "Saved me." Tom grinned.

"Maybe. Don't believe anything could ruin shoes good as those. I asked and asked for a pair, but those were the only small ones that came out in that box from Philadelphia."

"And they just fitted me."

"Bet you they'd fit me, too. Tom, could you, would you—"

"Let you put them on?" Tom was slipping the shoes from his feet. "Sure, go ahead. They do fit you for a fact."

"And don't hurt that place on my foot at all. Hadn't been laid up with that cut," he twisted his foot to show the scar, "I might have gotten them, instead of you," he teased.

"Might," Tom's mind flickered back to the picture of the schoolhouse, to that day; the box, dresses, hats, shoes! He had waited breathless. Shoes big, shoes bigger, the very last pair fitted him. He had tied the laces together, swung the shoes about his neck and strutted off home. "It's tough you were laid up with that cut," he stated, "does it still hurt?"

"If it's rocky. I'm going over to see Bill tomorrow," he added.

"Rough road." Tom whistled through his teeth. Suddenly he leaned over and thrust the shoes back into Joe's hand. "You wear 'em," he said.

"TOM! You don't mean it, you can't."

"But I do. So long. Off at daybreak? won't see you then, me? I'm lazy." Tom was lazy next morning, the sun was shining down the hollow and striking back from the gurgling stream when Tom opened his door. He almost stepped into a sort of rough basket woven of green leaves. And through the leaves shone rosy plums. "Joe left 'em here, only plums around back of his house.—Say, they were great," he hailed Joe the minute he saw him coming up the path. "Where're the shoes?" he asked abruptly. Joe stood barefoot.

"I—I—Bill has 'em," Joe stammered. "I got a lift back to the foot of the hollow. Bill wanted to go to the picnic. Tom, I knew you would lend 'em if you'd been there. He—he sent you a basket of raspberries, I left them at home, come on get 'em."

"Raspberries," Tom hefted the basket, "let's leave some at Gramma Rowe's.

"And you gave most of the plums to Aunt Lou. I heard about it. Well, Bill said he'd have the shoes back by Saturday." But Saturday night Bill's uncle handed Tom a knobby bag. Apples. "Asa wanted to go to church, he begged Bill—" Tom grunted as he sat the bag of apples on his floor. " 'Nough to make us a pie, make Ma Sayles one too—hm!" He felt in his blouse pocket for the stub of a pencil. He had a newspaper picture tacked on the wall and on the margin he wrote: Tuesday and Wednesday, Joe. Red Plums. Thursday and Friday, Bill. Raspberries. Sunday, Asa—"and if he sends me anything I'll throw it at him."

"Slow, go slow," Joe stepped in the doorway. "Don't you like plums and things?"

"Of course, but I don't want to be paid every time I—You see some other fellows sent them to me, or I wouldn't have had them at all."

"But you had 'em and you lent 'em and we had—well plums and things, it sort of went all around."

"I see. Hold on, we all had times and good things, sharing. Great. That's the way of it, helping along, sharing, and everybody is happier and better off, don't you forget that. I won't either."—In M. P.-Recorder.

THE MOUSE'S RIDE.

M. A. G.

A little mouse who seldom ventured out except at night,
One morning saw an airplane aloft in wondrous flight.
It sailed above the housetops and above the highest hills,
But such a mighty roar it gave it filled his soul with chills.
Yet, as he watched it gliding—for he had time to spare—
He thought how very fine it was to skim right through the air.
To sail way up so gracefully, like a bright-hued bird with wings,
Then to look down on the housetops and all enormous things.
That frightened him so terribly. Oh, wouldn't it be nice
To see a lot of giant folks appear as small as mice!

Now, while he sat alonging through the upper air to sail,
A monstrous bird swooped down on him and caught him by the tail.
It bore him up, and up, and up! There was a glorious view
Of mountains and of housetops as through the air they flew.
But he was sick with terror, and he dared not look around;
He did not see the giant folks like mice upon the ground.

SAVING THE ORPHANS.

This writer never realized what missions meant to orphan children, real helpless, defenseless, and homeless orphans, until he went to Porto Rico and saw with his own eyes. At the time of our visit we were told that there was no orphanage, or children's home, in all of the island of 3,000,000 inhabitants, and that there were 10,000 orphan children that knew no father or mother or parental care, protection or training. They lived as best they could, like birds or cats or rats. The churches were headed in the direction of parental and community care but had not reached the institutional stage of care and protection. In a land of so many orphans and so few churches, the church was helpless. Only after the Gospel of sympathy and service and salvation has been preached to a people and has taken root in their lives does the institution come to care for the needy and dependent, the fatherless and motherless.

These reflections come now as we read The Bulletin containing the following from Africa, where Christian Missions are at last beginning to save some orphans. We quote:

"Missionaries in Africa are slowly breaking down some of the old customs among the natives. One that is giving way before Christian ideals is that of burying babies alive with their dead mothers. Recently five orphans, one a new-born baby, were brought into the mission station at Minga from a village over a day's journey away. A native woman insisted that instead of burying these babies alive that they be sent to the mission station. They have been given to Christian mothers in the mission village, who have agreed to take care of them, although they know that the mission is not able to furnish a drop of milk for these little ones. Miss Ruth O'Toole, nurse at Minga, says, "Thus the horrible old custom has been broken and our Christian mothers are giving their milk to other mother's children." The natives have held the superstition that if a mother nursed another woman's child, it would mean death to her own children."

Yes, our Gospel of salvation serves and saves the most needy, the most helpless, the most pitiable ones of this earth.

A ZULU WRITES OF THE ZULU MISSION CENTENARY.

Rev. John Dube, editor of the Ilanga lase Natal offered a prize for poems about the American Board Centenary. I send clippings of three poems and a prose article, all appearing in the May 10 copy of the Ilanga.

The article in prose I have put in English, for it seems to me a pretty complete resume of the results of the Board's one hundred years in Natal, and it is so quaint and African in style.

No one can appreciate what the enclosures signify in the advancement of our Zulus who has not a vivid picture in mind of the beginnings of the Board's work among our Zulu people. The fact that the Zulu language had never been written, not even one word of it until the Board's missionaries arrived there in 1835 should be kept clearly in mind when reading these clippings. It is only recently that our Zulus have learned to talk on paper, and the writing of poetry has only been attempted within the last two or three years, as far as I know.

John Dube's Article.

"Father, allow me to place this thought before the Christians, in view of the fact, our Father, that they are soon to celebrate the completion of one hundred years since we were enlightened.

"Christians, I say in view of the fact that this remembrance is about to be made, it is fitting that not one side alone should be chosen, that is the side of those who become Christians alone. Let all the kinds of people, whose eyes were opened by these our missionaries, be called and they also give words of thanksgiving.

"One man bears five sons, but all these people do not do the same thing [do not choose the same occupation]: one becomes a doctor, one becomes a teacher, one becomes a preacher, one becomes an outlaw, one becomes a policeman. All these five have been educated and they also know the Church, but with the exception of the preacher and the teacher, their occupations are at variance with things of the Church.

"It does not happen that when the head of a kraal has work to be done for the kraal that he chooses only those from among his children to help him, who work along his line. He summons them all even though some are scorpions and others are iguanas [monitor lizards]. Nevertheless, all are his children.

My point is this: I know it is Christians only who are expected to be there and to throw words about the Gospel. They forget that the Gospel opened up all the kinds of light. Dress, nice houses, meetings, foot ball, tennis, casting out of grog from the canteens, the helping of a man to come out top in the courts. All these things came with the coming of our missionaries. It is fitting that all the divisions should be summoned for exhibition, that it may be pointed out to our Fathers that now we know this and this.

"Let the memorial occupy the whole of one week. Let those of the football play the ball and let the others look on. The tennis players ditto. Let everything be brought that was made by an American Board person, that which was made by his hands, and that which was made by his brain. Let all this be brought before our Fathers.

"After all this has been exhibited which has been done by our people because of their learning, then let speeches be let loose, and let the scorpions talk to our Fathers and say, 'You see I am like this, I am a scorpion, but I am yours, in this way, and this way.' Then let the iguana stand up, and he also will tell the iguana side of it.

"That then, I would say, would be an exhibition indeed. But if they choose those of the church only, then it will be one-sided.

"The American Board has leaders of meetings who take fish out of the water [those who engage in deep sea fishing and whaling]. It has doctors. It has B. A's. It has agriculturists. It has builders of houses. It has preachers who have but to say, 'Let that mountain blaze up,' and it would blaze up.

"Even if our Fathers should now return to the 'Beyond' America, it is all right, and they also would go happily, because they would know that they are leaving a house which never could fall.

"And the leaders of the meetings should not be pinched in their chance to give thanks for the whole congregation, those who are Christians, and those who are not, and let all that comes out of their mouths be listened to with a Christian spirit, whether what is said should be sour, or whether it shoud be sweet. All are our children."—By Amy B. Cowles in Missionary Herald.

STEWARDSHIP.

Before we take our stewardship seriously we have to come to the realization that we do not own anything in this world. Each of us says "my time," "my money," "my land," when in reality we are like the rich man who died suddenly. A group of his acquaintances were in the bank lobby discussing his unexpected death, and one man asked the question, "How much did he leave?" Another answered briefly, "Everything."

Things aren't given to us for "keeps"—they are entrusted to us for a short while. In the end they will all be taken away; but our care in the exercise of our trust determines our reward in the life to come.

For a moment let us turn our attention to an incident in I Kings 20. One day as Ahab, the king of Israel, was returning from a hard-fought battle, he came upon a man much disheveled and apparently greatly distraught. The man approached the king and quickly poured out the story of his trouble. He had been in the thick of the fight in the recent battle when another soldier came to him bringing a prisoner whom he entrusted to his keeping. He was charged to guard the man well, for if he allowed the prisoner to escape there would be a lot to pay—in fact, his own life would be at stake. The man confidently accepted the charge and I Kings 20:40 contains this account of the result:

"And as thy servant was busy here and there, he was gone. And the king of Israel said unto him, So shalt thy judgment be; thyself hast decided it."

No complicated maneuvers were indicated for the man to execute; he was given one thing to do.

Jesus said, "But one thing is needful"; and St. Paul declared, "This one thing do."

All through the Old Testament God told his chosen people, Israel, "Ye are my witnesses." And Jesus' parting words to his chosen ones were, "Ye shall be witnesses unto me." That is the one thing given us to do, and witnessing doesn't mean just talking—talking is the cheapest thing we do —it means living and providing ourselves good stewards of the trust committed to us.

"As thy servant was busy here and there, he was gone."

Some years ago some of our people had some money, and we were extremely busy here and there trying to find ways to invest it. Some of it was placed in the banks and some of it was invested in the stock markets. Then one morning we awoke, and it was gone—and we had the headache. I think Christ must have had the heartache, for though it was gone, not one penny of it had gone to provide Testaments for those who haven't the gospel; not one dollar had gone to pay a missionary's salary; none of it was carrying the Word of Life to longing souls who send us such messages as these:

"Tell your people how fast we are dying, and ask if they cannot send the gospel a little faster." And "Are we only to hear this once—only once?"

As thy servants were busy here and there, our treasures were gone.

Some seven or eight years ago in our neighborhood we used to hold community prayer meetings at the school house. In our young people's group were some promising boys and girls who took active part in the services, leading the devotions and giving testimony. But thy servants were busy here and there; the prayer meetings were discontinued; and if some of those same young people were asked to take part in a religious service today they would refuse with embarrassment. Their talents, their gift of testimony, through disuse, have gone.

As thy servants were busy here and there, our talents were gone.

Not far from our house lives a middle-aged gentleman, a bachelor. His house was kept by his unmarried sister—just the two of them in the old home. Household duties kept the sister occupied, and her social life was somewhat limited. I used to go to see her, and she was always most cordial, urging me to come again soon. One Sunday afternoon my father and my mother went to see the two, and the sister sent me word by my mother that she wanted me to come over and talk to her about the Bible. I was teaching school then, and thy servant was busy here and there; and the next Sunday afternoon she was gone.

When death closes the door in your face, you realize that there are some judgments that are irrevocable—some decisions from which there is no appeal.

As thy servant was busy here and there, time and opportunity were gone.

As thy servants were busy here and there, our treasures were gone, our talents were gone, and our time was gone. We come to the end of the way with empty hands and despairing hearts. And the King of kings will say unto us, "So shall thy judgment be; thyself hast decided it."

No, no; God forbid! May God help us to be worthy stewards, faithful in the use of our treasures, our talents, our time—in the use of all that is committed to our care.—Clara Elizabeth Morris in N. C. Christian Advocate.

IVY HILL.

Something new and interesting has happened here in our Virginia hills. There is a crying need at a place called Ivy Hill, a few miles from here. Some of the people in that section felt the need for a Sunday school and church and came to get our pastor to go over and get things going for them. But Bro. Grissom has a large field to cover as it is, and could only go when he had time to help these people. God must have seen and wanted to help for Bro. Sorrell of Danville, not knowing of this need among our hills, just sent a young lady here because, he says, she wanted so much to help someone in need. So Miss Bessie Mitchel, came into my room last week and offered a prayer, just a simple prayer, but I knew when she prayed that here was a life filled with the Spirit of God. She told me how she had felt the call and answered it. It was a real inspiration to hear her talk. Here is a young person just like other young people, yet there is a difference from many, for she seems to live her religion and talks God wherever she goes. It is evident that she is not here to seek pleasure except the joy that she gets from telling us of God—a God of love. She is willing to go into the most humble home, the most out of way place to reach the people and tell them of Jesus. She really seems to have a faith that is equaled by few, and surpassed by none.. I had the great pleasure of going with her to her new field, Ivy Hill, Sunday, and I was surprised to find so many people interested in a church there. They told us they could get almost a hundred children for a Sunday school and would give the land for a church; also would do all they could to build one if they had a leader. I told them they could have Miss Mitchel for their leader and what she couldn't do, God could. So I really believe they can have a church. Surely they can have a church. I do not know yet just what these people can do for there is no market for the few crops that can be raised here now. If a farmer in our hills lives and pays his taxes he has done well. However, as I looked on those eager young faces gathered at Ivy Hill school last Sunday, I could not help but have faith enough in the Christian world to feel that these young lives could have a church and Sunday school, and I told them as much. And now it is all up to you who love the Lord and want to help these less fortunate than you. If there is money for shows, for fine clothes, for cars and all pleasures, is there not money to help give young hearts and minds Christ and Christian training?

Search your hearts and find out how you feel. Are you really Christian? Are you willing to do it unto the least of these? I believe you are. And I believe many will hold up Miss Mitchel's hand as she strives to give these people a church. She is going to that section next week and start work and asks that you pray for her. She really believes in prayer like few young people of today. And please remember she is doing all this just as willingly as anyone ever did anything. The Third Avenue Christian Church, Danville, Va., is to pay her expenses and she is getting no more. If this girl can give her life this way can you not give something also? Please write to her and find out what she needs and just what you can do to help. I do not know yet what the needs will be, for I do not know that section so well. But she will soon know, and her address will be Fancy Gap, Va., until she gives you another. And remember, "God has no hands but ours."

These are human beings such as you, and they have a right to the light of the Gospel. Bro. Grissom asked a group of these young people at Ivy Hill who among them had been to Sunday school and only one or two said they had ever seen a Sunday school in all their lives. One little boy asked what they did at Sunday school. Christian friends, do you want these young people to know what you do at Sunday school? Does God mean enough to you that you want to give Him to others? Here is an opportunity for you to share a burden and get a blessing. How much does your religion mean to you and do you have enough to share with others?

Miss Mitchel is helping the workers here to hold a Bible School now. We also have Miss Spain and Miss Williams of South Norfolk, Va., helping. I want to ask again that you lend your earnest prayers for this field. If you have nothing else to give you can have a part through prayer.

And now I want to thank you Christian friends for all you have done among our hills and all you have tried to do. I realize it was the Christian Church that made is possible for me to enjoy the fellowship I now have with this young girl who is filled with the Spirit. Just to hear her pray is worth all I have gone through with in the past twelve years. May God bless her unselfish heart, and may her beautiful faith never grow dim.

FIGHTING DOES NOT BRING FREEDOM.

M. Ashby Jones of Atlanta is both a Southern gentleman "of the old school" and an enlightened Christian. At the last commencement of Hampton Institute he said: "The American tragedy was that Northern people came to look upon the Southern people as slave-drivers, every man with a bloody whip in his hand; and the Southern people were taught to look upon Northern people as industrial tyrants who were seeking to take away their civilization and rob them of their leadership in the country.

"Then they fought. They fought each other with deadly and growing hatred, and every battlefield deepened that hatred, and every campaign inflamed that anger. We come to face the truth that there never has been fought a bloody fight on the battlefield that can free people. The deepening hatreds that grew out of the Civil War have left their marks on both races; and the very fact that war was fought for the freedom of the Negro people inflamed prejudice, lit the flame of racial hatred and hostility.

"Reconstruction days followed, to add to that deepening gulf between the races. Conscienceless politicians organized newly enfranchised Negroes into a mass of resentment and hostility to vote en bloc, and that very challenge made of the Southern white people a solidarity of race and party. The white people robbed the Negro of his franchise. Yes, and in doing so, they robbed themselves of their political freedom, for when the South went solidly Democratic, it lost its democracy. You cannot curtail the freedom of one people without, in the very doing of it, curtailing your own freedom."—In Missionary Herald.

WAS SAM JONES RIGHT?

A man once said to Sam Jones, "Jones, the church is putting my assessment too high." Jones asked, "How much did you pay?" "Five dollars a year," was the reply. "Well," said Jones, "how long have you been converted?" "About four years," was the answer. "Well, what did you do before you were converted?" "I was a drunkard." "How much did you spend for drink?" "About $250 a year." "How much were you worth?" "I rented land and plowed a steer." "What have you got now?" "I have a good plantation and a pair of horses." "Well," said Sam Jones, "you paid the devil $250 a year for the privilege of plowing a steer on rented land, and now you don't want to give the Lord who saved you, $5.00 a year for the privilege of plowing horses on your own plantation? You are a rascal from the crown of your head to the sole of your feet?"—C. H. B.

Of my classmates in college, so far as I know, none of those who drank steadily is now living, and of those who were addicts to even a very mild degree, from the time the addiction became manifest none progressed or maintained his position. —Dr. Wm. J. Mayo.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

SUMMER SALES.

Progressive merchants are now finishing their summer sales in which they have endeavored to reach new customers and increase their sales. They have done much advertising and some price cutting. They needed business, and went after it. Statistics indicate that they got the business. They have made money. Advertising pays. And so do plans and work. Without these the business world would always be in a slump.

This is equally true of the Church and its various organizations. It is marvelous how well some churches get along without advertising, definite plans, or very serious effort. But those churches do most who specialize in all three. That does not leave religion out. It is religion that is advertised, planned and worked. With a bit more thought, planning, and work, churches could increase their business just like progressive merchants do.

THE FALL OPENING.

Merchants will soon be advertising their fall opening. They now have fall and winter clothing on display. They will let the public know what they have to sell, and will do it so skillfully that the people will feel that they really need the things that are advertised. Hence more sales in the fall.

But what of the churches? When summer is over and vacations are completed, will we just struggle back and take what comes, or will we definitely begin on the fall and winter work? Why not have a big opening on a definite Sunday? Next Sunday is September. That is the time we should begin. The past Sunday I urged those present to aid in getting others present next Sunday. This week letters will go out to all members of church and Sunday school. Some special invitations will be given in person. Next Sunday will be Opening Day for us, and I hope that it will be for many others.

LEADERS AND PLANS.

Leaders and plans are needed by all institutions. Without them nothing can be accomplished. Now is the time for the leaders to get together and make definite plans for the fall church work, if they have not already done so. If the pastor has been away, he will probably some home with some new ideas. Why not call a council meeting of all leaders of the church and its organizations and talk over just what is to be undertaken and how best to get it done?

First decide on what you want to accomplish. Set goals. These should include money, but should not stop with that. How many do you expect to reach with the Christian message this fall? What will be the message? How will you get the message across to those prospects? Will you expect to win any to Christ and the Church by the time of Jesus' birthday, Christmas? Are you going to have a Rally Day? What will you do for Thanksgiving? Will the Christmas program be planned, or will it have to be rushed at the last minute? Are there to be any socials for fellowship? How much better do you expect to be, and how much better do you expect others to be, when Christmas comes? Will your church pay all of its Conference Apportionment, or will you just let it slide by? Answer some of these questions, and many others, by setting definite goals for accomplishment.

Then make definite plans to accomplish the goals. Make someone responsible for every phase of the work? A committee on Special Programs could arrange this matter for the rest of the year. A visiting committee could be responsible for getting delinquent members back on the job and for getting new members. A finance committee should see that all are sharing in the financial part of the program, and that they know where the money goes and for what. Teachers and program leaders should set standards for their work, and plan definitely to teach in a better way. The preacher who always talks about whatever happens to come into his mind the week before he is to preach will never develop a very intelligent congregation. The real pastor looks ahead and plans to bring constructive messages that will feed the flock the things that will make them grow in grace and in the knowledge of Jesus. So do real teachers, Christian Endeavor and missionary leaders. Of course something may change the plans, but the plans are there and for definite reasons.

COOPERATION.

When goals are set and plans are laid, then comes cooperation. Without it nothing is accomplished. A poor plan well worked will do good, but a good plan just fussed about isn't worth anything. If you are part of a group, work with the group. In this way lies success. Some people call it organization, but it is a little more than organization. This old story tells what I mean.

The old darkey cab drived kept killing flies on his horse. With the long lash of his whip he would pick them off without hurting the horse. The man in the cab suggested that he pick off a hornets' nest by the roadside in the same way, but the darky said, "No Sah, dey is organized."

Yes, they are organized, and they cooperate. And they accomplish. It takes organization and cooperation for any group to succeed. If you are a leader, seek to cooperate with other leaders and to secure the hearty cooperation of others. If you are just a member, your cooperation will make a real contribution. It may be only a little thing like sitting up near the front and listening to what is being said. But whatever it is that will show that you are in harmony with the big aim of the religious program of your church, do it heartily.

DEFEATING DISCOURAGEMENT.

Christian Endeavor Topic for Sept. 8, 1935.

Scripture: Psalm 42.

Daily Bible Readings.

Monday—Elijah did not perish. I Kings 19:1-21.
Tuesday—Remember the past. Heb. 11:32-40.
Wednesday—God provides. Matt. 6:27-34.
Thursday—Jesus was tempted. Heb. 4:15.
Friday—There is a Comforter. John 14:26-28.
Saturday—A better day. Jas. 1:12.

"Wringing Success Out of Failure" is another way to state the theme for this meeting. Those who know discouragement or failure should find real help in the study of this topic, and that includes most people. How can we really defeat discouragement, or turn failure into success? This is important; very important. This ought to be more than just another Christian Endeavor meeting. It should mean real help to those who really want to make life worth living.

The music will help or hinder your program. This is the time for music that is strong, courageous. Sing with Martin Luther, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God." "O God, Our Help in Ages Past." "What a Friend We Have in Jesus." "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," and hymns of this type will do much to strengthen the moral fiber of life. Sing them, and love them. Get the best your song book has to offer. And if it does not offer the best, seek the best elsewhere. Great poetry and great music have grown out of great hearts, and they speak a message of courage and cheer to hearts that want to be great. Don't put trashy, weak, flippant poetry or music into a program of worship. It will hinder rather than help. The pianist, the leader, and the music committee should be constantly on the look-out for good music to use in the society. For this meeting, think of Luther defying the Pope, of John Knox standing against the Queen of Scots, of the Crusaders marching to Palestine, and of all those who must suffer. Then select the music that will bring courage to face life at its worst. This will go far towards making the meetings a success.

Now turn to the Bible to see what helps can be found there. The Daily Readings give some of the best, but not all. Study these, and then seek for others. I certainly would want to read Ps. 27, Ps. 46, all of John 14, and Joshua 1. In all of these passages there is to be found that which renews faith and courage. In Psalm 27 the writer spoke my sentiments exactly when he said: "I had fainted unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living." "When my father and my mother forsake me," well, they won't do it right away, but when they do, "then the Lord will take me up." If that be so, and it is, then why should I get discouraged?

Notes on the Scriptures.

Elijah got scared when the queen threatened his life. The preacher ran away and wanted to die. He thought everybody had forsaken God. But he was wrong, dreadfully wrong. But God's messengers, they called them angels, fed the old preacher. After the storm, earthquake and fire, while the preacher covered his face for shame, the Lord spoke to him and sent him out to anoint kings for Syria and Israel and a prophet to take his place. God never forsakes us, even though we sometimes think so.

The writer of Hebrews tells of a long list of those who lived by faith and did great things. Then he says time would fail to tell of all who have wrought wonders by walking in the dark, walking by faith. "And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise: God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." Can our faith and courage, the little that we have, add anything to them? Read the chapter and think of that.

Jesus says that the lillies grow and the birds live without worry. God takes care of them. And he cares for us. Seek first for right and gooddness and all the other necessary things will be added.

Jesus was tempted in every way that we are. He did not yield. But He knows the strain. He can help us.

It is a weary world when one travels alone. Jesus did not want his friends to get lonesome. He said a Comforter would come to walk with them. This Comforter is the spirit of God, and may be the companion of each of us. It is God's plan to give us cheer and companionship.

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

PAUL (Worker with Hand and Brain).

Lesson IX—September 1, 1935.

Golden Text: "In all things I gave you an example, that so laboring ye ought to help the weak."—Acts 20:35.

Lesson: Acts 20:33-35; Philippians 4:4-13.

Paul was such a big man, his character was so many-sided, that the Lesson Committee has not made any effort to give an estimate of his life or his work. Instead it has presented him in this lesson as a worker with Hand and Brain. Even from this standpoint Paul has something to say that shames and inspires those who profess to be followers of Jesus.

Not Given to Covetousness.

"I coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel." Here was a man whose wants were simple, whose desires were few, who was not concerned about whether others had more than he had or better things than he had, one who did not unlawfully desire that which was another's, one who kept material things secondary to the things of the spirit. What a rebuke he is to so many who are covetous, who love gold more than they love God, who are dissatisfied because they do not have as much as the "Joneses" have, who unlawfully desire "silver, or gold, or apparel."

Doing One's Share of the World's Work.

As a minister of the gospel Paul could have looked to the churches to support him—it would have been a legitimate thing for him to do in that day, as it is in this day. But Paul did not want to handicap his gospel. He did not want to be under obligation to others. Hence he made his own living, and also helped to support some of his fellow-workers. This does not mean that a minister should not have a salary and an adequate salary. It does mean that a minister ought not to be under obligation which might embarrass his ministry. It also means that every man ought to do his share of the world's work. One wonders if the worst part of the present unemployment and relief situation is what is happening to men and women who expect others to provide for them.

I Gave You An Example.

It is a fine thing when a minister or a Christian worker can say that he has given others an example. There are few of us who would tell others to do as we do, for we realize our limitations. But we would tell others to be like Christ. It might be said here that although people expect more of a minister than of others, there is no reason why a minister should be any better Christian than others. Being a Christian means being a Christian. If it is wrong for a minister to do a thing, it is wrong for others to do it.

To Give or to Get.

Paul quotes some unrecorded words of Jesus: "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, that He himself said, It is more blessed to give than to receive." Jesus himself ought to know for no man ever gave more lavishly than He and no man had more deep or abiding joy. And Paul shared the Maser's secret, for his life was a life that was concerned with what he could give and not what he could get. In the final analysis every man lives either to get or to give. And the secret of joy is with those who look upon life as a great adventure in giving. Jesus loved us and gave Himself for us. There is only one way to demonstrate the truth of Paul's words—to try it out in actual experience.

Rejoicing.

"Rejoice in the Lord always; again I will say rejoice." The man who wrote these words was in prison, chained to a soldier, and facing probably execution. He had little of this world's goods, but he had abundant and abounding inner resources. He had found the secret of the joy which Jesus said the world could not give and could not take away.

The Peace of God Which Passeth Understanding.

"Let your requests be made known unto God, with thanksgiving, and the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall guard your hearts and minds (or thoughts) in Christ Jesus. Paul had his problems and his burdens. But he did not worry. Because he believed in the promises of God he had found the secret of peace, as well as the secret of joy.

Think on These Things.

What do you think about? What you think about not only affects your health but it shapes your character. Think mean thoughts and you will be mean. Think clean thoughts and you will be clean. And you can direct and master your thinking. Think of the things that are true, lovely, honest, pure, just, virtuous, worthy and worth-while—think persistently on these things and you will progressively develop beauty and strength of character. In another place Paul says, "And be ye renewed by the transforming of your mind." How important it is that we think right!

One of Life's Most Difficult Lessons.

Paul had learned both to abound and to be abased. There are those who have learned the latter who have never learned the former. Many a person has been helped by poverty while many another man has been ruined by riches. It is not everybody who knows how to abound, how to use material things to high purposes. Alas how few there are who, like Paul, have learned in whatsoever state they are in therein to be content. Paul was not satisfied with his present Christian experience, he was not satisfied with the progress of the gospel. But he was not discontented, whining, complaining, so far as his personal comfort and his personal fortune were concerned. Godliness with contentment is great gain.

Adequate Resources for Daily Living.

"I can do all things in Him that strengtheneth me." Paul knew that Christ was adequate. For any duty that must be performed, for any burden that must be borne, Christ could and would give grace. Thus he faced life courageously, joyously, expectedly, triumphantly.

DON'T TRIFLE WITH GOD'S MERCY .

A young girl one day ventured to grasp a live wire that was hanging from a post. She did it in playful fun. Instantly a fearful scream proclaimed the fact that her hand was fastened to that burning current and she was helplessly in its grasp. The other hand was quickly raised to loosen her stiffened fingers, and it too, was caught, and there she hung in agony and helplessness. Her mother rushed to the scene to pull her down but she was flung far off by a shock communicated from the body of the girl. She seemed lost, indeed. At the last moment a young man who understood, took an axe and severed the wire by striking it against the post. The current was broken and the girl fell swooning on the ground. Her life was saved, but her hands were cinders for the rest of her days. Beloved, don't play with live wires. There is mercy, boundless mercy. You can have God's love, you can all have it, but you can't trifle with it.—H. B. M.

"OUT IN THE UNKNOWN."

"My God shall supply all your needs according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus."—Phil. 4:19.

There is a spirit today which limits faith in God to the material. It refuses to go further than the mind can know and the eye can see. It ascends the peaks of human achievement, looks off into the space of the unknown and cries "there is nothing further."

Faith in God takes us into that unknown. How well we are told by the Hebrews that "faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Paul said "the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead." We need this faith that takes us out into the realm of trust in this invisible God who supplies all our needs according to His riches, "His riches," of course, being estimated not in our own desires and estimate of values, but in eternal values.

Faith begins where our resources end. To illustrate: we have seen a bird holding himself on his pinions, motionless, thousands of feet above the surface of the earth. He would have dropped like lead if he could not have trusted his wings. Likewise we may say that faith is not a longing feeling hanging out in vacancy; it is a definite grasp upon that which can float us, where otherwise we would be helpless; and there must be that definite something which faith can grasp. God is just that. So then, that God is, that the Bible is His word, that He is all-loving, that He cares for us, and that "He doeth all things well to them that love and serve Him," is a definite something which has never failed. It is far more trustworthy than the changeable sea, and we trust that. We trust the sea by committing ourselves to its bosom. Why not God?

Prayer—Our Father, help us to know Thee better, to love Thee, to trust Thee, to rest in Thee, to believe Thy word, and accept Thy gifts forever.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"GOD'S ESTIMATE OF VALUES."

"Man shall not live by bread alone but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."—Matt. 4:3.

This is as if Jesus had said, "Let me go hungry, but let me not disobey Him."

Intense longings for physical comforts is one of the great temptations of man, which, when it overpowers him, robs him of his true life. To choose a profitable business that is hurtful to the soul; to abandon Christianity in order to get richer; to hide honest convictions in order to win favor; to refuse to acknowledge Christ because of a foolish fear; is to seek the things which the Gentiles sought, referred to by Jesus when He said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." And to seek as they sought means to lose what they lost.

Prayer—O Lord, our heavenly Father, our sins are great when we consider how far we have failed in seeking Thee and Thy kingdom as first in our lives. Forgive us, and by Thy help we set ourselves on the right track this day. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"CHRISTIANITY'S PARADOX."

"He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."—Matt. 10:39.

Jesus reveals the essence of Christianity to the disciples. In Matt. 19:30, he revealed the same truth in saying, "many that are first shall be last; and the last shall be first." In other words, there are two elements in the future reward, eternal life, which is common to all, and "the heavenly treasure," awarded individually proportionate to the sacrifices made (read the 29th verse for this, also Mark 10:34-45).

The essence of Christianity is (according to Mark 10:45) righteousness and service. To illustrate, we read from the reports of the League of Nations council that "because of jealousies of great powers agreements are prevented," each afraid the other will get credit of accomplishing something instead of himself. How jealous we are to be first! Could we be as jealous to render service and forget our own importance, Christ says, we would come nearer getting the first place.

Prayer—Our Father, be Thou our guide in thinking and give us Jesus for our life's service. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"GUILTY."

"It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, because His compassions fail not."—Lam. 3:22.

This chapter of the Lamentations of Jeremiah is devoted to an acknowledgement of a faithful soul, who bewails the weakness and frailty of men; at the same time affirming his hope in God's mercies and justice.

The weakness, frailty and imperfection, of men, yea, his uncleanness, is ever present. To enumerate, or to estimate, or in any way to evaluate one's own worthiness is but to bring condemnation on his own head. In the words of the Episcopal ritual, "There is no good in us."

But, we thank Thee, our Father, that "when the wicked turn away from his wickedness, and doeth that which is lawful and right, thou dost, by Thy mercy, save his soul." We thank Thee, that even as an angel touched the lips of Isaiah and cleansed his soul from the power of sin, so there is an heavenly angel to touch our defiled natures, as a free act of God, and take away all our sins, and all that is within us opposed to Him.

Prayer—Grant that cleansing to us, we pray Thee. Take us through the refiner's fire and efface every stain from our souls, though it be at the price of patient toil and tears. We would stand still and see Thy work fulfilled.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"WHATSOEVER IS NOT SACRIFICED IS SATANIC."

"If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me."—Matt. 16:24.

Again we are reminded of the essential principle of Christian living, self-denial and sacrifice. So strongly is this principle felt by men of deep piety and close acquaintance with God, that they say "whatsoever is not sacrificial is satanic."

It is well to consider what it was that invoked these words from our Saviour. Peter had just been highly complimented and he was given the "keys of heaven." This gave him the "big head," so that when Christ spoke of his betrayal, Peter assumed the role of protector of his Lord. Whereupon Christ called him a devil, and, for the time being, Peter lost his keys. He who was given the leadership, in one hour later was ordered behing like a dog. Then Christ gave utterance to the text.

One cannot live today upon the bread of yesterday: neither can he live today upon the inspiration of yesterday. Every morning brings its own dew, and every day must bring its own inspiration, and God deposes us when we lose that inspiration. His prayer says, "Give us this day our daily bread."

We all, like Peter, when we rise to the highest touches of Divine glory, the human asserts itself and we fall beneath a benediction. The heights of glory are obtained only by taking up the cross, and not by standing upon it.

This lesson, however, cannot be learned in lectures, sermons, churches or Bibles. It is learned only through the school of Christ in the heart; and to experience Him may mean utter forsakenness and nights in Gethsemane. When out of such depths the soul cries, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?", that will be the day of jubilee and a morning of coronation.

Prayer—Our Father, we confess that we love ourselves. We like soothing thoughts and we cherish fond desires. But if it is necessary that we shall crucify these for the glory of God, we pray for the willingness to do it, and even then we know we shall have not tasted the bitterness of the cup the Master drank. The world, indeed, cannot understand nor contemplate such a sacrifice. But we would not be of the world. Make us Thine Lord, for Jesus' sake.—Amen

SATURDAY.

"IMITATING IMITATORS."

"Be ye imitators of me, even as I also am of Christ."—I Cor. 10:23; 11:1.

Paul was bold to set himself up as an example, because he was conscious that thereby he was setting up Christ as an example. He knew that his following of Christ was imperfect, but so is any man's following of Christ; and he knew that his desire to do the will of Christ was flawless. In that desire lay the essence of his Christianity.

In this way only, and to this extend only, do we dare to set up any mere mortal for our imitation. We can be imitators of imitators. We can follow those that follow the Great Example.

In doing this we do not place any intermediary between ourselves and Christ, nor cease to go direct to him for leading and instruction. Our human examples are of value only as pointing us to the One Example. We follow Paul and John and Peter, Luther and Calvin and Wesley, Spurgeon and Phillips Brooks, Carey and Livingstone and Moody, because these men teach us how to follow Christ.

Prayer—All is of Thee, Lord Jesus, and all shall lead to Thee. Be Thou ours and may we be Thine forever.—Amen.

"THE MEASURE OF THE HARVEST."

"Reap according to kindness."—Hos. 10:12-15.

We might have thought that Hosea would have said, "Reap according to your zeal in plowing and in seed-sowing," or "Reap according to your care in watering and tending the grain," or even "Reap according to your faith in the Lord of the harvest." But the prophet says nothing of the sort. He promises us a life-harvest in the measure of our kindness to our fellow men.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D., Pastor.

OVERCOMING EVIL WITH GOOD.

By JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

"Overcome evil with good."—Rom. 12:21.

There is evil. There is good. We can be sure of the one. Thankful for the other. And sure that there is enough good to overcome the evil. We like a good fight, a friendly, good, sporting game. It sharpens the joy of living. It is something to feel that you are in the game somewhere, and that your licks are counting for something. Every youth here this morning likes to feel the thrill of the contest. Others of us may stay young by deciding not to be licked.

Within us good and bad are: "There is so much bad in the best of us, and so much good in the worst of us."

And the battle is on. "When I would do good, evil is present." (Rom. 7:21). You and I can decide to be in the battle of life to win, and to win we must be on the side of good. Good and evil have been at variance with each other since the world began.

Evil is its own enemy. If we join with evil nothing can result but death. "The wages of sin is death." (Rom. 6:23.) But the gift on the side of goodness from God is eternal life. Life for the good. We want life, and life abundant. That is what Jesus himself came to give. An eminent physician told me the other day that typhoid fever germs had a tendency to kill themselves. The treatment for typhoid is just to wear it out. "Good has but one enemy, evil; but evil has two enemies, good and itself."

Evil is a great fighter. Its powers are great. It can reach right into the choicest gifts and bear them away: Manhood, happiness, work, health, beauty, honor all fail easily its victims if there is not the spirit of overcoming. We are told that an artist in painting the Lord's Supper chose for Christ a very fine looking man, innocent, strong, kindly. Years later while he was still working on the painting he had sitting for him a man who was to be the likeness of Judas, and one day as he worked away the man told him that he had sat for him years before as the Christ. I do not know that the story is true, but it does illustrate how completely evil can mar our manhood, and break our life.

Evil is a sly fighter. It will hold out ugly things before us in such a way as to make them appear beautiful, and wrong things in such a way as to make them seem right. It will challenge us to chase bubbles, and butterflies, telling us that we are finding the real joys and happinesses of life. He is a sly fighter. He knows that one day we will be "winded," and stranded, and that he will be victorious. Let us rise up in our righteous indignation, and see to it that we fight like men. That we are not overcome of evil, but that we overcome evil.

Evil does not hesitate. The other day a very, very talented young man had a wonderful position. Along with a fine salary went respect and honor from a large clientele. Evil and good battled within him. He drank while evil fought. Good was whipped. He is without a job. His family must suffer, too. Who wants to let such a slick fighter as that overtake him, and whip him?

Evil will tell you many tales. Since the days of the Garden of Eden he has been a fast talker. This is the real thrill says he. Just this once. But a bad habit is formed. A good habit is broken. Good suffers defeat, and eventually one wakes to find that something has snapped within worth more than all the thrill gained from without along the road of evil.

Good offers health, happiness, strength of character, and the lasting joys of life. I looked at a fine young father the other day. He has denied himself the ugly, cheap, low and base things of life. He has had the courage to stick to the nobler and higher ideals at any cost. Is he happy? Well, I should say he is. Friends, home, family, work, and opportunity well exercised to do good to others all along the way.

Yes, you say, I see the contending foes. I know the battle is joined. How am I to overcome evil. Let the Christian philosophy of life written in our text reply: "Overcome evil with good." Have you the bad habit of sleeping too late, break it by putting the good habit of getting up early. Overcome the bad habit with a good habit. Do not think you can fight evil with evil. You will never overcome evil that way. You only multiply it.

He got up and said mean things about men and I gave him back just as good as he sent. What he sent was not good at all. It was evil, and in evil he was repaid. Result: All evil. No one a winner but evil itself. But evil must be overcome with good. Seems a hard saying, and it seemed harder still when Jesus first taught it in his sermon on the mount saying, "Love your enemies," but it will work where all else fails. Happy the persons who learn the art of it. He is cleverer than evil, and a winner in the fight.

Overcome negative evil then by filling the life with positive goodness. It seems a very trite saying, but I have been thinking there is a great deal of truth in it, namely: "We can do more good by being good than in any other way." Being good, I mean, for something. There are, for instance, many people who believe in the power and blessing of church attendance, public worship, and Christian association together on Sunday. They have been taught it, they have observed its value, they readily assent to its worth. But they simply do not attend church regularly. They say they have gotten out of the habit, and they find it hard to live up to the life of private prayer, scrupulous honesty in word and deed, and hence the highest thrill from real nobility of life they lose. They find evil winning. They fight a losing battle because they do not fight with the strength of the whole armor of God. They should break the habit of neglecting church, and find there a new strength, a real inspiration in worship and prayer, that would help them overcome evil with good.

"Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." Jesus Christ is good. Take him as a friend, and counsel. Prayer is good. Use it as a daily tool. Church is good. Find it an instrument of comfort and blessing. Kindness is good. Make it the manner of your life. Love is good. Use love even to your enemies. Be not overcome of evil, when there is so much good. Overcome evil with good. And the joy of winning is yours,—it's commonly called eternal life.

War is a world-wide, very ancient, very persistent, scourge; so ancient, so persistent, that its roots are likely to be very deep. For man to shake off that scourge will be difficult in any case. But it will be quite impossible if he does not know even whether he wants to shake it off or not, is in two minds about it, at one moment declaring it to be the greatest of all crimes, and the next that we cannot do without it, and that it is time we had a dose.—Sir Norman Angell.

Christian Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

One of the inspiring things about orphanage work is the fact that we realize we always have friends who are interested in little children—friends who are always glad to help when there is a need to be supplied—often times we do not realize the number of friends we have until misfortune, sickness or death comes to one's door.

The writer did not realize this until a few years ago when he was in the hospital very ill. Friends visited him from a distance when he did not even know that they were at all interested in his welfare, but he learned through severe illness that they were.

Since the loss of our barn by fire, friends have been so generous and kind and have been so liberal to help us that we rejoice that the orphanage has such warm friends and so many of them.

Our good friend, J. M. Darden, who has a heart large enough to take in the entire orphanage, (and if you could be here when he comes around and see those little children rush to him and put their little arms around his neck and love him, you would realize why his heart is so large) offered to have all the rough lumber cut and supplied to us from his farm in North Carolina, and we pay the freight, to build the barn, which has been quite a help to us.

Then, too, we had two other friends who live in Virginia, who have hearts full of love for the orphanage. They made is possible this week for us to buy two acres of valuable land right on our front just across the street which we needed very badly to carry out our plan of beautifying our grounds, which will add much to the appearance of our orphanage plant as well as making a fine place to raise vegetables. They, too, always come to our rescue when we have a need. We are grateful for our friends.

We earnestly pray that God will spare them many years to be a blessing to humanity.

Wars do not usually start by design. They start with tensions during which "incidents" occur unexpectedly. The grave danger in the present situation on the Pacific lies in the tension which our Government's policy of pressure is creating.—Frederick J. Libby.

CHILDREN'S STORY.

At last the big bird dropped him right by his cellar hole;
That he had landed there alive, he thanked his frightened soul.
And afterwards, where'er he heard an airship overhead,
He never stopped once to look up, but to his cellar fled.

—Zion's Herald.

THE YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

"Blessed is the man who endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him." This is the message of James. But we seldom think that it is good to be tempted. We hate it. We yield to it, and lose its blessing. There never is a day so dark but what there will be sunshine again. God waits just beyond the cloud to give his radiance in due season. If we do not look up and smile we cannot see the radiance.

David knew what it meant to face conflicts and to wipe his eyes when he should have been sleeping. He knew the meaning of despondency and tears. With a burning heart he cried to God, and then worked while he wept. People made fun of him and said: "Where is thy God?" But he said to his soul; "Hope thou in God: for I shall yet praise Him, Who is the health of my countenance and my God." So may we all, if we really trust God in the midst of our conflicts and upset emotions.

Additional Helps.

Poetry is a source of inspiration. There are many poems that give courage and strength. Search out some of them, and use them in the program.

Get someone to tell why people get "blue." Try really to discover what the things are that cause loss of spirit. Then seek to find a method of overcoming the difficulties.

Christian Endeavor presidents and program leaders have a real chance to serve the members by making this program practical and helpful. Don't get discouraged, but wring success out of every seeming failure.

THE FAMILY ALTAR.

Not only is this precisely like Hosea, but it is precisely like our Lord Jesus. He says to the ambitious, toiling, eager throngs of human workers, "Look to your loam, but look even more to your love."

It was thus that Christ built His church. He laid down no creed but the creed of kindness. His terms of admission were almsgiving. His throne is built on lowly service, and the thrones of all His followers are likewise founded.

Prayer—We rejoice, O Lord, in Thy love for us and for all men. May we be true to Thee by being kind to all men.—Amen.

Amos R. Wells.

THE DEVIL'S SERVANTS.

The Devil has a great many servants. They are busy and in all places. Some are so vile-looking that one instantly turns away from them in disgust; but some are so sociable, insinuating, and plausible, that they almost deceive at times the very elect. Among the latter class are to be found the Devil's four chief servants. Here are their names:

1. "There's No Danger."
2. "Only This Once."
3. "Everybody Does It."
4. "By and By."

All four are cheats and liars. They mean to cheat you out of heaven, and they will do it, if you listen to them.—Missles.

OBITUARIES

HOLLAND.

On May 2nd, 1935, God saw fit to remove from our midst, Mrs. Addie Holland.

Be it resolved by the Ellen Grimes Bible Class of the First Christian Church,

First—That in the death of Mrs. Holland, we have lost a faithful member and loyal friend,

Second—That we extend to her family our sincere sympathy and pray that God will bless and comfort them.

Third—That these resolutions be entered on the records of our class, a copy sent to the Christian Sun for publication and to the family of the deceased.

Respectfully submitted,

MRS. J. F. BROTHERS,
MRS. W. O. DAUGHTERIDGE,
MRS. ROSA G. CURLING.

McGHEE.

Sister Emma McGhee came to the end of life's way August 14th, at her home in South Ga. She had been afflicted for several years and had been a great sufferer, industrious and energetic.

Diligent in service, she loved her home and gave her life as a living sacrifice for those she loved. She loved her Lord and was faithful to him and died in the triumph of a living faith.

Her body was brought back to LaGrange, Ga., and interred.

May the God of all grace sustain the bereaved. The funeral was held at St. Johns Methodist Church by Rev. C. W. Hanson with this writer assisting.

God rest her soul in peace.

G. D. HUNT.

All the gold we leave behind us
When we turn to dust again
(Though our avarice may blind us),
We have gathered quite in vain;
Since we neither can direct it,
By the winds of fortune tossed,
Nor in other worlds expect it;
What we hoarded, we have lost.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Overreaching.—

Owen D. Young reminds us that "Capital which overreaches for profits; labor which overreaches for wages, or a public which overreaches for bargains, will destroy each other."

Texas Joins Wets.—

Experience, after all, seems to be the only teacher that really teaches. Looking around her, Texas might have learned of the results of repeal, but she would not. So Texas joins the wet parade. Yet even here the vagaries of politics is seen, for the home county of Senator Sheppard, one of the authors of the national prohibition amendment, voted wet. But Uvalde, home county of Vice-President Garner, an advocate of national repeal, voted dry.

Its First Victim.—

College days have hardly started, yet college football has taken its first victim. An Associated Press news item reads: "A sophomore collapsed on the football field during the first day's practice today and was pronounced dead when taken to the hospital." The boy, only a fifteen-year-old, had been a star member of his school's football, basketball and track teams. Death was pronounced due to exhaustion and a weak heart. A doctor's advice should be secured by students before entering upon the more exhaustive sports.

Hurricane Sweeps West Coast Florida.—

The hurricane which earlier in the week swept the Florida Keys, turned northward along the western coast past St. Petersburg and Tampa, and then veered to the northeast, carrying death and destruction in its wake. Unofficial estimates are that as many as 500 lives have been lost, mostly in the keys, and as yet no accurate estimate of property damage has been made. Crops have, however, suffered a heavy loss, especially the orange and grapefruit crops. Red Cross and other relief workers have been rushed to the scenes of disaster, and are doing all possible to alleviate suffering and distress.

Brain Food.—

The Federal government's report on municipal finances, just issued, contains some thought-provoking comparisons. In 1933 (the latest year for which government figures are available), the cost of government for cities with populations of more than 100,000 was $2,464,319,000. Revenue was $2,506,724,000, which leaves a tidy surplus. But operation, maintenance and interest costs (the great bulk of municipal expenses) rose from $26.41 per capita in 1917 to $60.58 in 1932, and declined only slightly to $58.62 in 1933. New York City led the list in spending, with a total of $684,800,000; Chicago, number two, was far behind with $191,840,000. Boston, however, was the unchallenged first in per-capita expenditures with $91.19.—Forbes Magazine.

Does Sunday School Attendance Pay?—

Judge J. L. L. Fawcett, of the Supreme Court of New York answers this question in unmistakable language. As reported by the North Western Christian Advocate, he says: "More than 4,000 of the 8,000 prisoners sentenced by me were under the age of twenty-one years, and only three were members of the Sunday school at the time of committing their crimes . . . In 1,092 cases of suspended sentence, in each of which a minister, rabbi, or priest became interested, at my request, with the hope of saving the boy to a future life of usefulness and good citizenship, only sixty-two of the boys were brought back for violation of the conditions of their parole. I believe the reform in the other cases, over 1,000, was prompt and permanent. I regard our Sunday schools and churches as the only effective means to stem the rising tide of vice and crime among youth."

A Joint Reunion.—

Will Dixie's Stars and Bars fly again at Gettysburg in 1938? At the Confederate Reunion now in session at Amarillo, Texas, it was unanimously voted by that body to join forces with the "Yanks" in celebrating the seventy-fifth anniversary of that momentous battle which decided the fate of the War Between the States. The vote was not taken until the veterans were assured that "they would be free to carry the Southern flag whenever and wherever they pleased." The vote was approved by Commander-in-Chief Rice A. Pierce, who had on a former occasion opposed such a reunion when informed that it would be possible only if the Southern flags were furled. Paul Roy, representative of Governor Earle of Pennsylvania, said that he would carry the invitation to the G. A. R. meeting which is to be held in Grand Rapids, Michigan, next week. The action taken by that body will, of course, determine whether the joint reunion is held.

A Student's Prank.—

Thoughtless pranks may have far-reaching results. Of this fact there is no better example, possibly, than the one related by T. T. Brumbaugh in a recent issue of Zion's Herald. Doshisha University is the oldest and largest Christian school in Japan, and, incidentally, it was founded by Congregationalists. The story told by Mr. Brumbaugh follows: "In the fencing hall just completed on the campus of the commercial department of the institution, it was planned to place a memorial likeness of Joseph Neesima, founder of Doshisha and one of Japan's earliest and mightiest Christians. Before the founder's likeness was installed, however, a student thinking to have some fun put a Shinto god-shrine in the place of honor reserved for the Neesima memorial. It was just a joke of course, but when removal was attempted, and in spite of apologies on the part of the offending student and petitions signed by the entire student body, it was found by the military authorities to be an indignity to the Japanese nation to replace its deities. Threats were made that the War Department would withdraw all recognition from Doshisha if the school authorities dared to defy the military's interpretation of the incident, and at last report the shrine still holds the place of honor reserved for Neesima. Education leaders in this country see in this no interference with the guarantee of religious freedom contained in the Japanese Constitution, inasmuch as they insist that national Shinto is not a religion; but many are perturbed at the spectacle of education so completely under the control of Japan's military clique."

The New Banking Act.—

The Eccles banking act which was recently passed by Congress, thanks primarily to the efforts of Senator Glass of Virginia, was so greatly modified that the good in it possibly outweighs the bad. Its effect will hardly be felt in 1936, except that there may result the purchase by the Reserve Banks of long-term government securities to replace some of their short term paper. Rediscount rates may also be still further reduced, but the small borrower will likely not note the difference. Under the new banking act, the Reserve Board will have more power and be more independent. Heretofore it has consisted of six members, while the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency have been members ex-officio, representing the White House. Under the new act, these two are excluded, while the number of regular members is increased to seven. The pay of members is increased from $12,000 to $15,000 per year, and the term of office is increased from twelve to fourteen years, but members are not eligible for reappointment. This should eventually make of the body a thoroughly non-partisan board—a Supreme Court in the financial realm of our country. Heretofore the board has acted in a more or less advisory capacity regarding the purchase of government securities. Now the seven members may, together with five representatives of the regional banks, fix a policy which all banks must follow. This means more power for the government, yet it is not likely that seven board members, when unreappointable, will assume a partisan or harmful political policy against the undivided opposition of the banks. The seven-to-five division of power is likely, in practice, to operate for the good of American banking and American business.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. and Mrs. E. C. Gillette, who have been spending several weeks at the Bannockburn in Asheville, N. C., have returned to their home in Jacksonville.

Rev. Wm. Redd Turner, of Portsmouth, formerly supply pastor of the Burlington Church, and a graduate of Elon College was a visitor at the college on August 27th.

The Brannock family will hold its annual reunion at the old home place, fourteen miles north of the college. "Uncle Ned" of the Elon faculty, is a member of this large family and expects to attend the reunion.

THE SUN's editor and Mrs. Atkinson are expected back at the College Wednesday. The College and community will be delighted to welcome them home. We trust that the doctor's stay at the beach has been of great help to him.

Most of our pastors have been away on vacation during the month of August. Last Sunday found most of them back at their post, and we trust that under their ministry our local churches may be blessed and prosper.

Services at the Elon Community Church will be resumed, Sunday, September 8th. Dr. Smith, President of the College and pastor of the church, will speak. This will be a service for everyone, but of particular interest to students entering Elon Missionary Societies will please take notice of the fact that Mrs. W. M. Jay has moved to Suffolk, Va., Linden Apt. No. 3, Smith St. All societies will please mail their news articles to this address in the future.

Dr. E. A. King and family of Miami Beach, Fla., and Dr. Rexford Raymond and family of Southern Pines, who have been spending vacations at Fairview Inn, Fairview, N. C., have returned to their respective homes.

Suggestion comes that we have in THE SUN an "Open Forum," a column in which our readers may express their views. Fine! "What Our Readers Are Thinking" ought to make not only interesting, but very helpful and wholesome reading. Come along readers, and, in as few words as possible tell us and the world what you are thinking about—as and when you read THE SUN.

Rev. F. Ervin Hyde, minister of Monticello Christian Church, assisted Rev. S. M. Penn of the Flint Hill Congregational Church in an Evangelistic meeting during the week of August 18th-25th. The services were well attended and profitable to the church. Mr. Hyde begins another series of services with Mr. Penn at Sophia Community Church September 1st.

Our Holland (Va.), Sanford and Shallow Well (N. C.) churches are without pastors (unless acceptances have been secured very recently). Here is hoping that both of these important pastorates (the two last named being in one pastorate) will soon be supplied, as no church, however strong or weak can long go pastorless without serious inroads into its spiritual strength and resources.

Rev. J. Howard Smith, an alumnus of Elon College, now of Hartford, Vermont, is visiting his home in Newport News, Va. His friends at home appreciate his work and are glad to have him bring them messages. He has preached at the Tabernacle Baptist Church and also at the First Congregational-Christian Church in Newport News.

The forty-sixth annual session of Elon College opened Tuesday, September 3rd, at 12:00 o'clock. One of the great needs of the college is to bring its dormitories up to date and to provide additional ones. The student body is growing rapidly. There will be five new members on the faculty this year, every one thoroughly prepared for his particular field. Dr. Morton French is to assist Dr. J. U. Newman in the biblical department.

The Newport News Church has taken a commendable and advanced step. Mrs. R. L. Baker and Mrs. T. G. Hyatte have been appointed by the church as a committee for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Rev. Robert Lee House reports that this committee has already raised $44.00 in new subscriptions and renewals. Brother Pastor this is a good lead to follow. Our church paper needs your support, but most of all your church needs the support of your church paper.

It would be difficult to express in few words a better estimate and a finer analysis of Will Rogers than this from the N. C. Christian Advocate:—"'Will Rogers cared little for finery' is a big headline in a daily paper. Is that news? How could such a great soul be taken up with tinsel? Will Rogers did not drink or smoke or play the market or divorce his wife. To many these facts would be news. He kept above the dirt, had a tender concern for the love affairs of youth and had faith in God and man. The incidentals of life were not first with Will Rogers."

Did ministers, interested laymen and other SUN readers note what Dr. I. W. Johnson said in his Suffolk Letter last week about us Congregational-Christians having a real Summer Bible Conference at Elon College? Our constituency in the Southeast now can well afford, and with proper cooperation can and should have such a Conference—one that would be of untold worth and blessings to our pulpits and our pews. May Dr. Johnson and those who agree with him in the matter keep up the good work of agitation 'till realization comes.

Dr. Elisha A. King, Mrs. King, and Miss Jennie H. Leach of Miami Beach, Florida, have been spending a two months' vacation at Feirview Inn, Fairview, N. C. This is the fourth summer that Dr. King and his family have spent in the North Carolina mountains at Fairview. Dr. King is pastor of the Miami Beach Community Church and has been in charge of that important field since the church began its corporate life, a period of fourteen years. He returns to his labors refreshed and ready for the usual strenuous program of a winter season. During his vacation he has preached twice for two sick pastors, once at the Baptist Church in Fairview and once at the Congregational Church, Asheville.

Rev. and Mrs. John Rae Chapman of Asheville have returned from a month's trip to New England, especially visiting Mr. Chapman's old home in Massachusetts. This has been a happy "honeymoon" trip. Mr. Chapman and Deano Jo McCurry were married in the Asheville Church on August 3rd. The ceremony was performed by Dr. Edwin C. Gillette in place of Dr. Thrall who was ill. The wedding was a beautiful affair and the young people received the congratulations of many friends and they are now being welcomed back to the church. During the absence of the Chapmans, the pulpit has been supplied by his brother, Eben Chapman, a student at Union Theological Seminary in New York City.

Dr. John Brittan Clark has resigned the pastorate of the Erskine Memorial Church at Tryon, N. C. The resignation is due to ill health following a serious illness last spring. Dr. Clark not only resigns the pastorate of this church but definitely retires from the active ministry, though he hopes to be able to preach occasionally and we are certain that he will have the opportunity. Dr. Clark came to the Tryon Church from an important Presbyterian Church in Washington, D. C. He has entered heartily into the fellowship of the churches in the Carolinas and has contributed not only wise leadership but his richly spiritual messages to the Conference and Convention life. He has been greatly beloved by his church, all the members of which deeply regret his necessary retirement. Dr. Clark's resignation has already taken effect but he will be in Tryon until November, after which he will go to Florida for the winter.

A brother minister and much beloved (Rev. J. E. Franks) sorely afflicted, with throat paralysis and so unable to preach now for several months past, and just recently indulging an operation and hospital treatment pens us this line of revelation and refreshing: "Oh! how I long to see you that I might try to tell of the glorious time I have had during these thirty-two days—yes, every one of them—as Jesus my blessed Saviour, as He alone can do, made my sick bed one of unmolested and unspeakable joy. All think that I have come through a most trying and very critical illness of the body, and maybe I have and do not care to have the affliction repeated, but the sweet peace and heavenly joy that have been mine are not to be compared with the light affliction of body. If I was near to death it was only a foretaste of Heaven to me. While I could not talk above a whisper what a joy to my soul it was to whisper the Gospel message of Him who verified His promise: 'And, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end. What a wonderful Saviour we have, and how He can make a sick bed blessed." One year ago, September 12th, Bro. Franks lost his voice, but it is returning now and he anticipates preaching again soon.

A PRAYER.

The Spirit that I find in Thee.
God, take the blindness
From my soul
And give me kindness;
Let me see
The pain of other's misery
God take unrest
From my heart,
Let faith be manifest
Even in me;
I would the good in others see.
God, take from me all
That I have;
Hear my earnest call
And give to me
The Spirit that I find in Thee.

If the men who are preparing for the Christian ministry can be fired with the gospel of peace within half a generation, the churches everywhere will renounce war as a sin against both God and man.—Rev. Leyton Richards.

General Council News

By Herbert D. Rugg, Editorial Secretary.

A new forward program for the Congregational and Christian churches will be presented by the executive committee of the General Council to the coming biennial meeting of the Council, June 16th to 24th, 1936, at Mt. Holyoke College, South Hadley, Mass.

An advance movement for all phases of Christian life is proposed. The new program, it is planned, shall be well-rounded and balanced and bring into the movement every church activity,—local, state and national. The advance will be undertaken with the coordinated resources of the denomination.

It is not contemplated that the program will require the establishment of new organizational machinery. Instead the aim is the more effective use of the organized forces which now exist by providing a unified program to whose objectives churches throughout the country may devote themselves with definiteness and determination.

The idea of the program was suggested to the executive committee by the Council's general secretary, Dr. Charles Emerson Burton. As outlined by Dr. Burton the program will have at least five main divisions:

The Enrichment of the Life of the Membership of the Churches.

Here there should be a careful study of what it means to be a disciple of Jesus Christ. There should be a clarification of the meaning and significance of genuine religious experience. There should be developed processes and technique for the actualizing and promoting of such experience. In this connection more general attendance upon the services of the churches should be secured for what the churches have to give to their members will not reach them if they are not these to receive it. Growing absentee lists should receive attention, preventing the necessary revising of rolls in such large proportions.

"Here also attention should be given to preaching. The foundations of the minister's thought should be strengthened. There should be a clarifying in his mind of the things that are essential and a kindling of the fires of passion. So also adult learning which is being extended in so many fields should be effectively promoted by the church especially in the realm of religion. Then, too, every member of the church should have exercise in Christian living. He should be given a job to do in the church or on behalf of the church in the community at large.

The Enlistment of New Members.

"A church should not be content with its own family. The unchurched should be sought. The Christians should go out into the highways and hedges as exhorted by Jesus Christ. There is a call also in our day for preaching missions to be conducted denominationally and interdenominationally for the enlightenment of the people generally on the subject of religion. Here also there is opportunity for religious lectureships. More attention should be given also to the gathering of children into our church schools which have shown a serious falling off in numbers in recent years.

In the Field of Applied Religion.

"Intense interest is now evident on questions of social responsibility of the churches. Here the program being developed by the Council for Social Action, appointed at the last meeting of the General Council, should be promoted and in connection with its promotion the motive for social action should be magnified. Here there should be a connection between the enrichment of the life of the members, the enrollment of new members and the actual expression of the religious life in the world in which we live. Particularly should each church be active in carrying out community service in its own parish.

In the Field of Finances.

"It is to be remembered that in giving is to be found an avenue for the expression of spiritual passion. Here the depression has made necessary active attention to the recovery of resources for the expenses of the churches and in no less measure for the benevolent enterprises of the churches on the mission fields at home and abroad. Here the teaching of and the securing of the practice of Christian Stewardship is of fundamental importance.

In the Field of Missions, Home and Foreign.

"There is need for the development or at least perfection of the present-day theory of missions, that is, the cultivation of concepts under which our missionary programs are seen to be justified. Much work has been done in this field but it needs to be brought home to the individual church."

The formulation and presentation of the proposed new denominational program has been assigned by the executive committee of the General Council to its special program committee for the Mt. Holyoke meeting. This committee is: Dr. Fred B. Smith, New York, N. Y., chairman of the executive committee (convener); Dr. Jay T. Stocking, Newton Centre, Mass., moderator of the General Council; Dr. Burton; Dr. Robert E. Brown, Oberlin, O.; Dr. Allan Knight Chalmers, New York, N. Y.; Mrs. C. J. Chandler, Detroit, Mich.; Dr. Frank G. Coffin, Columbus, O.; Rev. William W. Patton, Glen Ridge, N. J.; Rev. Phillip S. Sailer, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Judge John V. Sees, Huntington, Ind.; Mr. Frank C. Van Cleef, Montclair, N. J.

Heretofore the Council has always been entertained by a "host." Next year at Mt. Holyoke, a women's college, it will have a "hostess."

Invitations for the 1936 meeting were also received from Springfield, Mass.; Wellesley, Mass.; and Grand Rapids, Mass., and an invitation to return was extended by the College and First Church, Oberlin, O., which were the joint hosts last year.

Judge John V. Sees of Huntington, Ind., moderator of the Indiana Conference of Congregational and Christian Churches 1934-35, has been elected to the executive committee of the General Council. He fills the vacancy left in January by the death of Mr. Hermon Eldredge, editor of the Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, O.

The denominational Year Book off the press of the Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, O., in August, shows the membership of young people's organizations up 944 from last year to 189,330. This is the tenth successive year of gains in the membership of young people's organizations for the Congregational churches and since the merger for the united churches. In no other statistical category has a similar series of uninterrupted gains been reported. Dr. Harry Thomas Stock, Boston, Mass., and Miss Lucy M. Eldredge of Dayton, O., are the national student and young people's work secretaries of the Education Society.

The idea of a more just social order has arrived. It is a leaven of unrest. Old ways of thinking are insufficient to meet the problems of the present. Social ideals adequate to the old situation will not fully meet the new conditions. But the obstacles are primarily mental attitudes —hate, fear, greed and ignorance.—Dr. Raymond C. Brooks.

KNOWLEDGE AND A BETTER CONSCIENCE.

It is said that when Oliver Cromwell asked his Parliament for more worthy soldiers to replace the decadent serving-men and the topers who filled the ranks of his army, he asked that they be men who were alert in knowledge and deeply conscientious in what they did. From this class of men was organized his historiaclly famous regiment of Ironsides. Out of their individual and collective conscience came the mighty spirit which actuated them in their extraordinary achievements.

Such is the great need of the present age in the choice of men for the progressive undertakings of state and national affairs. It is good philosophy in all problems affecting human betterment to "let our better self (conscience) be our guide." Conscience is not a guide only, but it prompts us in our activities and inspires us as we advance in the higher motivations of a Christian discipleship. Somebody has said that "conscience is a sense of God's intimate presence, and when heeded always assures us that 'Tabernacle of God' is with men." Another says that "conscience is the turning point in the road of life where, if we contemplate intently, we catch our first glimpse of hope." Howsoever much we may have lost in our standards of living, both individually and collectively, it is but the meager nurturing of our conscience into an effective inner response to the righteous mental presentations of every-day happenings.

SCIENCE AND FAITH.

I stand amazed at the great record of the astronomers. They began with mist imperfect instruments. I mean their own eyes, which are by no means so perfect an optical machine as a modern telescope, regarded merely as an instrument of precision. They put their observations at the service of mankind. What debts do not our sailors owe to them! They have kept in view the needs of men and have been ever serving them. I know few better witnesses to the worth of our humanity than their long record shows.

I have said that astronomy and Christian faith are one in effort and desire. This seeks to make us more at home in our environment, to use its resources for our practical human purposes. The other has a like aim on a more far-reaching plan, recognizing that we are both citizens of this world and that which is to come.

What is the purpose of all science? Is it not the service of mankind? The passion for knowing, the passion for doing—these are its spheres of service. What is the purpose of our Christian faith? Is it not our individual relation to Christ, in whom we meet the image of the ruler and the maker of the world? Both serve, each in its own degree, in the making of men. And both are witnesses that men are of value in the scheme of things, and worth all the effort it requires to make them what they were intended to become. And every life of faith, growing more and more into the image of our Leader, tells us more and more of what men may become in character under the influence of his companionship.—Exchange.

We Americans are accused of having a disease which has been called "'spectatortis." We go as spectators to see other people have experiences. But there are realms where experience cannot be borrowed. Especially is it a tragedy to live in a world where such spiritual life is possible as Christ represents, and not to know it for ourselves—its strong faiths, its inner powers, its saving virtues—so that we can say, at least about some of it, that it is our very own.—Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

"MODERNISM" RUN TO SEED.

One wonders how far "modernism" will go before it breaks down of its own folly. It has given us humanism, bolshevism, communism and heaven only knows how many other isms, and yet it is not satiated. Comes a writer now in the dear old cultured, dignified Atlantic with this outburst: "Hundreds and hundreds of people throughout the country today want to be more religious and would be more religious if they could have for themselves a God as modern as their furniture, their automobiles, their advertising, a God that fits in with present-day needs and manners of living. I believe it is human nature to be good, but I believe that the pattern set up for goodness is two antiquated and preposterous. . . . I think the public's mind is ahead of its religious teachings." With that last sentence one can fully agree if one will look at the gangsters, racketeers, kidnapping, hold-ups, bank robberies and cold-blooded murders! The public mind that permits and contemplates and devises these and an ever increasing tide of crime around us will agree that this indeed is far ahead, or woefully behind "its religious teaching." The least and last thing on this earth we do need is a "God as modern as our automobiles," with which we seem destined to race ourselves to death, and kill or be killed by all who get in our way; and the first and greatest thing we need now is to find and follow the true and living God "with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."

Another writer in the same magazine (September Atlantic) tells his readers and this modern world that "The Ten commandments are a little out of date, and the relations of morals to law are obscure." We should say, yes, very obscure, so obscure in fact, that morals are abandoned, and law disregarded, by those so modern as to ignore the Ten Commandments, as being too ancient and so out-of-date.

If readers want to know what is the matter with our times the answer is found in the writings, the teachings and the effusions of such thinkers (?) as those from whom we have quoted. We simply can't rule God out, or change Him to suit our convenience, without disaster to ourselves, and chaos in our lives. No improvement can be made, none need be made, on the opening sentence of our Holy Scriptures, "In the beginning God."

WHERE THEY DON'T SMILE.

To this writer's mind no sadder comment can be made of a person, or a people, than this: "They don't smile anymore." Our divine Creator and Father was so wise and good in making His world and they that dwell therein that He caused an inspired writer to pen these lines for us, "Ye shall eat, before Jehovah your God, and ye shall rejoice in all that ye put your hand unto, ye and your households, wherein Jehovah thy God hath blessed thee."

Our neighbor, Dr. Plyler of the N. C. Christian Advocate is just returned from a tour that took him into Russia. In an interview with a newspaper correspondent he says of that country and people: "Of course I know that one doesn't find out everything about a country by staying only a few days in it. But I do know this, that during the time I spent in Leningrad, a former capital of Russia, I never saw a native of that country smile. People were wandering about in miserable condition. I walked a few blocks in Leningrad and reached my room positively sick at the sight of the misery of the people on the street. Not a man, woman or child owns a single thing worthy of mention and their wages are distressingly small. There is no distinction between men and women from the work they do. They work together on equal terms, loading trucks, handling freight and doing other heavy, hard work."

This is the people who some five years ago nationally and legally decreed that "There is no God." Their children are being taught in all their schools that there is no such a being as God, and that all teaching of and about such a Being is fiction and false. It has been a long time since these imperishable words came from the lips of Job, "Can the flag grow without water? Whilst it is yet in its greenness, and not cut down, it withereth before any other herb. So are the paths of all that forget God: and the hope of the godless shall perish."

Poor, smilingless Russians are beginning to reap what they have sown—and the end is not yet.

J. O. A.

A COMMON LANGUAGE.

The language of the spirit is universal. When the soul speaks other souls hear and understand. The reason for a confusion of tongues, and a babel of voices, when men were building the Tower of Babel was because each was going in his own way and all were going contrary to the will and way of God. And the reason why all "Parthians and Medes and Elamites, strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes, Cretans and Arabians" and all spake a language that each could understand on the day of Pentecost, was because "they were all with one accord in one place." Such an experience startled even the Apostles who in their amazement declared "We do hear them speak in our own tongues the wonderful works of God." (Acts 2:11.)

And, how hard indeed it has been through the centuries even for disciples of our Lord to see and learn that when we are of one accord in one place we understand the language, the voice, the speech and the experience of each other. In such experiences, creeds and climes and classes and colors and differences fade away, the soul sounds its message and the real inner, deeper life is laid bare. In the kingdom of righteousness—righteous deeds, righteous living—God rules and reigns, in and with infinite love—and the world is yet counfounded "because that every man hears them speak in his own language." The language of the spirit is one, love knows when love speaks, and when the soul gives voice other souls hear, heed and understand.

THOUGHTS ON WAR AND PEACE.

I have been deeply impressed by two articles that I have read recently and feel convinced that every Christian should read them. The first one is "Men Like War" by Leo C. Rosten. It was first published in Harper's Magazine and then in condensed form in The Readers' Digest for August, 1935. The second article is entitled "Six Million Little Brown Shirts" by P. T. Ybarra in Collier's magazine for August 31, 1935.

These two articles deal with unusual frankness with war psychology and very likely they strike at the very heart of war's attractiveness. Every minister of the Gospel should read these articles and all who have charge of boys' societies, clubs, or other organizations where boys and young men are trained. These articles are especially pertinent to the present strained conditions among the nations. If we are to avoid war we must seek to understand what is going on in the minds of the unemployed, the uneasy and the troubled in this and every other nation. And one should seek to know the mind of certain leaders who perhaps know and understand human traits better than we do. What can the Church do about it? Much, I think, and that is just the reason for the reading of those articles.

GOD GIVE US WORK.

As we approach the annual national holiday on which the nation pays homage and respect to Labor we can already begin to visualize the marching legions of the various units which will form the Labor Day parades throughout the country, and we can see the sidewalks lined with cheering crowds as the hosts of labor sweep by in martial array, carrying banners proclaiming their affiliation with some particular branch of the great labor army of the nation.

The bright and varied colors in which the marchers will be dressed, and the stirring music of the bands fitted into the parade at proper intervals, will all go to make up an imposing spectacle wherever it is staged, and when it is remembered that such a parade will be held simultaneously in practically every city and hamlet of the nation, it is impossible to keep from feeling a thrill creep over you, even in advance of the actual occurrence of the events that take place each year in celebration of one of the most solemn and awe-inspiring of all our national holidays.

As a matter of fact, we are All Laborers of some kind and the most satisfying of the mortal things of life is Work. In fact right now the silent prayer of millions of the citizens of America is God give us work. It matters not how deep the ache in the heart or how terrific the mental strain, regardless of the cause therefor, man finds relief from most all of his human harassments through the uplifting and enobling activity designated Work.

I came upon a group of men one day who were excitedly arguing about something and some of them seemed ready to throw the group into confusion by staging personal combats when one of their number shouted "All right men—it's time to go to work—you can finish this argument after we have finished the work in hand."

I can think of no slogan or battle-cry more fitting to the present moment in America than for the entire nation to cry in stentorian tone "God, give us work." It is "work—work—work" that the people of America need probably more than anything else at the present time to relieve them of heartaches, of empty pocketbooks and to free them from the insidious poisons being spread by the "spieler" and the "ballyhoo" artists who prey upon those who are idle and without work.

The truest of all axioms of the sages is that "an idle mind is the devil's workshop," and idle hands as well as idle minds is the one major thing that produces social unrest, religious indifference and political chaos.

I sometimes wonder if we appreciate and are duly thankful for work. In a place like this the one thing that helps most to enable the inmate to "make his time" in the easiest possible manner is work. If I have heard it once I have heard it 500 times since I arrived inside these walls—the cry from an aching heart—"If I did not have my work I would surely go crazy." It is one of the things for which to be duly grateful in connection with this institution—the fact that there is work here of varied kind and character for practically every inmate.

The sound of the hammer and the saw and the heavy and steady "whack" of the axe in the forest, and the "whirr" or the "chug" of the engines which are a part of the "work of the world" is the most thrilling of all sounds to the brain of man. The reason that America today is in such a "dull and listless" attitude is because of the "lack of work" from Maine to California and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf. We should be shouting in a voice that cannot be denied "God give us work."

I remember one day going into a Western city that was having quite a boom and when I stepped off the train it seemed that the whole town was in an uproar as whistles were blowing, men were shouting and hammers, hand and steam, were "working away" enlarging this city of the plains to accommodate its ever-increasing population. As I walked from one end of the town to the other the same thing greeted me—noise—noise—noise everywhere—the noise created by work. The atmosphere of the place was contagious—the sluggishness of my body and mind left and I was soon engaged actively myself in a piece of work for this hustling and bustling and growing city of the West.

In the boom days of Florida some ten years ago I stopped off at Miami. Automobiles were rushing at terrific speed through the streets and crowds on the sidewalks were bumping into you, and "begging pardon" as that city feverishly worked day and night to keep up with the activity that was then part of its life. You could not stay gloomy or mad very long in Miami in those days—and why? All because there was work—work—work for everybody—and more work than people to take care of it.

I stopped a traveling salesman friend of mine on the street one day, and, noting his dejected attitude, I said, "Well, Jim, how are you?" To which salutation he replied, "Not much, Jake; you know it's pretty tough having nothing to do." His shoulders were drooped and his eyes were dull and his voice had a tremble in it.

"Listen here, Jim," said I to him. "How would you like to be rushing right now to the office and slamming things about your desk, and writing out orders and handing them to the secretary, and shouting to the shipping clerk, 'Don't fail to get that order off to Smith today,' and then grabbing your hat and rushing madly to the train station, or bus depot, and riding to the next town for orders and not only going after them but getting them, and then rushing back to get them filled?"

I stopped talking as I heard a gasp from Jim, and looking at him I saw his breath was coming hard and fast, and his eyes were flashing like meteors in the sky, and his fingers were twitching. Seeing me looking at him he laughed, rather apologetically, and said, "Excuse me, Jake. Your conversation has set me afire. My God, I wish what you were talking about was true?"

After a moment's hesitation I said to him, "All right, Jim—then go home and get down on your knees and start praying to Almighty God—and let this be your prayer:

"God give us work!"—By Edward Y. Clarke, Editor "Good Words," publication of United States Penitentary at Atlanta, Ga.

CRUSADE FOR CHRIST.

A Letter to Virginia Christian Endeavorers

During 1935-36 the Virginia Christian Endeavor Union and its member societies and unions in reality should see accomplished "Greater things than these."

At the Arlington County Convention the officers of the Virginia Union went on record authorizing the launching of a "Youth Revival" campaign during the present year which should literally "Set the State on Fire." The "Youth Revival" is a Crusade for Christ. It is a campaign to bring the youth of Virginia into fellowship with Christ and His people; to enrich the worship and religious experiences of professing Christians and to help others enter into the experience of Christian fellowship. It is a campaign to increase the size of existing organizations and to form new societies, unions and Christian Youth organizations. It is a campaign to improve the whole program of existing C. E. societies and other Christian Youth groups. It is a campaign with unlimited possibilities. It is a Crusade for Christ!

The Crusade can be worked in different ways for different communities, churches and Young People's organizations. One plan would be to get every Christian organization in every community in the State to set aside a definite, coinciding period of time covering from four to six weeks in which they will join together and each group endeavor to bring Young People and others into closer touch with their own organizations and with the Church. Sunday Schools would work with their own organizations and with other Sunday Schools in an effort to improve their program and increase their attendance. Christian Endeavor Societies, the B. Y. P. U., the M. Y. P. U., the P. Y. P. L. and other organizations would work together in their communities and endeavor to improve their program and increase their strength. Church members who do not belong to auxiliary branches of the Church could work together to improve the main program and the attendance and membership of those bodies. Or, other plans could be worked out. The idea is: "A Crusade for Christ" throughout the State of Virginia.

All organizations in a community may be urged to work as individual units or they may want to set up a central committee in the community and work together. Many organizations may cooperate and others may not. City-wide or county-wide worship and religious services, discussion groups, dinners, suppers, etc., may be planned. There is much that can be done. There is much that will be done.

Where there are societies that do not have the benefit of belonging to a union they are urged to conduct individual Crusades on whatever basis their knowledge tells them is best. Where there are C. E. unions that cannot secure the cooperation of other organizations they are urged to conduct their own work.

Christian Endeavor societies and unions are earnestly requested to adopt the plan, to appoint committees, to solicit the aid of other organizations and to work out the necessary details for their particular section.

The time suggested for the "Crusade" is from Sunday, September 29th through Sunday, November 10th. Start off with a proper beginning. Plan the "Crusade" well in advance. Wind up with a big city-wide or county-wide rally or meeting, with a well-planned, well-conducted worship service and fellowship features, followed by an outstanding youth speaker with a challenging message.

Give the plan plenty of publicity. Use the newspapers, mimeograph, printing press, postal cards, flying squadrons, etc. Let the Churches and the community know what each unit is doing.

And, don't stop when the "Crusade" is over. That is the beginning. Continue in the work. Make the effort worthwhile. Give your old and the new members something real for which to work.

Let's set the State of Virginia on fire with the enthusiasm of Christian Youth! And, let's keep the fire burning!

THE MASTER SCULPTOR.

By Vivien M. Ogden.

A master sculptor hews a rugged stone
That he may in it beauty see,
So Christ the Master Sculptor of our souls
Would shape us for eternity.

When he in his great love would chisel off
The ugly knots of hate and pride,
Let us be patient in his loving hand
For nothing good will be denied.

O what a glorious heritage is ours
To grow into a temple fair
To have the Master Sculptor shape our lives
And make each stone his image bear.

Then let us not rebellious be
When in his loving hand we lie;
But let him chisel, hew and hammer us
Until all pride and self love die.

That we in him together fitly framed
May grow into a temple fair
To be an habitation of our God
And his great love declare.
Kansas City, Kan.

One great value of religion in today's world, after allowing for all the hypocrisies, inconsistencies, and follies of religious people, is that it has vastly more to offer than irreligion; which, by the way, has plenty of hypocrisy and folly of its own. To put it another way, the case for religion grows stronger, not weaker, when you think of what are offered as substitute for it.—Julius Timberlake.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

In response to the request of the Board of Health the churches of Isle of Wight County have postponed their revival meetings. Among the Christian Churches, Antioch, Isle of Wight Court House and Mt. Carmel are affected by this action. These churches expect to hold their meetings at an early date.

A gracious meeting was conducted by the pastor, Rev. R. E. Brittle, at Cypress Chapel Church during the week after the Third Sunday in August. There were scores of reconsecrations and confessions, and twenty-seven were added to the membership of the church.

Meetings were held last week at Bethlehem, Holy Neck and Liberty Spring. At Bethlehem the pastor, Rev. R. E. Brittle conducted the meeting. The congregations were large, there were many consecrations and twenty-three new members were added to the church. Rev. Robert Lee House assisted Dr. N. G. Newman at Holy Neck. Mr. W. H. Baker of Newport News conducted the singing. Twelve or fourteen new members were added to the church. At Liberty Spring Dr. Jno. G. Truitt assisted the writer. There was a gracious revival among the members. Six new members have been added to the church.

Other meetings have been held throughout the Conference, but the writer has not received definite information as to the results. A meeting is to be conducted at Oakland beginning Sunday, September 1st, with Rev. Robert Lee House assisting the pastor.

The revival season is still regarded as the harvest time for the churches in the Eastern Virginia Conference. Until some better plan is discovered and introduced this season should be regarded and observed with much prayer and preparation. The minister cannot do all the work necessary for a successful revival campaign. The members of the church should be enlisted in personal work. People who do not attend the meetings can be won for Christ and the church by personal visitation. It requires preparation, consecration and work to do this successfully.

The harvest is plenteous but the laborers are few. Only a few people in the local church are deeply interested in winning others to Christ. Sometimes it is difficult to awaken an interest in the salvation of our neighbors. There are many ways of approach to this work, and many methods are used. Personal workers must have a definite religious experience and a deep desire to win converts to be successful. It should be the aim, and it is the high privilege of every Christian to be a soul winner.

A recent survey made by members of Oakland Church in preparation for the revival, revealed the fact that more than seventy people living in that community, are not members of any church. This church has a membership of about three hundred. If these three hundred members would take this opportunity to heart, prayerfully and seriously, these people could be won for Jesus Christ. Think of an opportunity like that at the very door of the church. Yet many people will pass by on the other side and never utter a real prayer for the salvation of their neighbors.

The Christian church needs money to pay off debts on church buildings, institutions, and carry forward the work of the church. But it needs the vision and the efforts to win converts and church members. God expects His Church to grow. It is a shame to be indifferent concerning the evangelization of the unsaved. This is the season for adding new members to many of our churches. May God help us to do our duty towards our unsaved friends and neighbors.

WHAT TO BRING TO COLLEGE.

It is a highly important date in a youngster's life when he decides to go to college. It is a more important date in his life when he arrives at college. But it is most important what he gives and what he receives while in college.

Elon opened Tuesday, September 3rd, at noon. All freshmen arrived for a two-day orientation period in which to get acquainted with each other, with the college environment, curriculum, and the nature of our courses. During the past week I had a number of inquiries from these freshmen as to what to bring with them when they came. They were inquiring, of course, about personal effects to be used for their comfort, such as bed linen, blankets, towels, etc. These are necessary but I am thinking about some other things that every freshmen and every upper classman should bring when he comes to Elon.

Certainly he should bring a good character; a character above reproach is essential to success anywhere. but it is more essential on a college campus than anywhere else. There may be some radicals and rowdies among the student body, but you will always find that there is a majority who know what is right, who believe in it, and who seek to do it. It is only a question of time when those who are not of good character will be weeded out. Either they will improve themselves, or they will be eliminated from the student body. Character tells wherever you find it.

Not only is it necessary to come with a good character, but it is also essential to bring a clean mind, a mind that feeds on wholesome thoughts, contemplating the best in life, not suspicious of college, faculty, or fellow-student, but believing in the sincerity of purpose and in the integrity of conduct. As a student thinks, so he will be guided in his pursuit of information and development.

A youngster with a good character and a clean mind will necessarily have high ideals. High ideals for himself and for his institution. He will see at once that his success is tied up largely with the success of his college, and that as he or his fellow students succeed they contribute largely to the success of their college.

It is possible, I think, for a youngster of good character and clean mind and high ideals to fall by the wayside. There is another equipment that he should bring with him when he comes to college, and that is a great ambition. Determining not only to be and do his best in college, but to use these days with their opportunities as a means of fitting himself for something really worthwhile in life. He knows the perils of the world and the needs of society, and that the opportunity has been given him to get ready to help turn these perils into wholesome possibilities and to meet adequately the needs of his day and generation. Surely God has not created him in vain, nor has He brought him to this day without a high purpose.

Young people do not just happen to come to college. It is a part of the plans laid out for their lives. To fail to fit into such a plan means that the ultimate goal of his life and living will not be attained, and that tragedy must inevitably be the result. Few things are more disturbing than for an ambitious spirit to be conscious of lost opportunities, and of the penalty it is then paying for such losses. God can only provide; the individual must of his own volition take advantage of the provisions which such provisions occur.

Thursday of last week a father and son came into my office. The father said, "This is my boy. I want to enter him in college. I had the opportunity when I was a youngster to go to college, but no one encouraged me particularly, and I did not go. I have an older son I urged him to finish high school. He refused. Now he regrets that he did not take advantage of the opportunities that were his. This is my second boy. He wants to go to college and I am going to send him. I have nine children. I would like to see them all have an education. I am going to start with this one."

It frequently happens that a father has the opportunity to correct his own mistakes in the lives of his children. And usually he does it.

My young friend, with the right kind of character, and the right kind of thinking and the right kind of living, and a great ambition, you can amount to something if you will only avail yourself of opportunities as they come.

There is one other equipment that you should bring with you when you come to college, and that is a grim determination—a determination to make good. Let the past be what it may, it may be favorable or unfavorable, if you have God-given ability and a grim determination you can rise above the wrong. take hold of the right, and get ready for opportunities when they come on the waves of the future.

Elon College constitutes an opportunity for the youth of the church and of this day. Hundreds and thousands have taken advantage of the opportunities that Elon offers, and have gone out in the world to succeed. The opportunities at Elon are as great, if not greater, than they have ever been. If you are coming, be sure to bring with you a good character, a clean mind, a cooperative spirit, high ideals, a great ambition, and a grim determination, and nothing can prevent you from succeeding.

The college is ready, and we will have welcomed a host of young people to our campus by the time this article goes to press.

NEW LEBANON CHURCH.

Tuesday night, a few weeks ago, your writer and wife were visited by a few of the New Lebanon Church members and then came a real surprise. There was unloaded on our porch the largest pounding we have ever received. It took a car and a trailer to bring the foodstuff to our home. It consisted of 6 bushels of wheat, 5 bushels potatoes, a large quantity of vegetables and fruits both fresh and canned. May God's richest blessings be upon them for their thoughtfulness of their pastor and wife. We have thoroughly enjoyed working with the New Lebanon people for the past four years and have found them to be a fine cooperative group.

Our New Lebanon meeting closed a few weeks ago. We had a real spiritual awakening. There were 52 saved and 14 additions to the church. Brother A. E. Elmoe, our helper, a licentiate coming into our conference and a member of the First Christian Church, Greensboro, is an able preacher and worker. The New Lebanon people surely enjoyed his Gospel messages.

SURGERY AND BUTCHERY.

It is so easy to criticize and find fault that it is hard not to do it most of the time. It is much easier to see the bad in folks and in what they do than it is to see the good. Perhaps that is because the bad sticks out so big; or is it because there is so much bad in us? It is much easier to debate in the negative than in the affirmative. When I was a boy, doing practice debates in the literary society, I tried to get the negative side of the question. The negative had an easy time generally. All the negative had to do was tear down. The affirmative had a much harder job. The affirmative had to build something up. He had to build up his contention, logical and strong. So far as just the ease of the debate was concerned, I had rather have the negative on the wrong side than the affirmative on the right side.

When our children were babies, we used to sit on the floor and build block houses for their amusement. It would take two or three minutes to build the blocks up complete, but the baby could knock the thing down in one sweep of his hand or one kick of his foot. And he did not have near as much ability or reasoning power as we had. He had the easy side of the proposition. We were building the thing up; he was tearing it down. A few years ago a contractor with a group of skilled workmen took some plans made by an efficient architect and built a splendid building. One careless laborer caused that building to be wrecked in a few minutes just a day or two before it was complete. He could not have built it if he had worked a lifetime, but he tore it down in a few minutes and without thinking what he was doing.

It is easy to call attention to error. Anybody can cut out an appendix from the human abdomen if somebody will show him where it is. But cutting the thing out, necessary as it sometimes may be, is not the only thing to be considered. What kind of a hole is going to be left? What about the patient to whom the offending member belonged? We owe him some consideration. We should be careful not to cut out too much. The surgeon who would cut out half the intestinal tract in getting the appendix, or maybe cut out the stomach and liver in the operation—that surgeon would certainly make a bigger show than the surgeon who made a small incision and skillfully removed the offending member only. The surgeon must and does have in mind the remains after the cutting is done. If the patient is so badly crippled by the operation that he can never be useful any more, then it was a bungling job. If the surgeon cuts out so much that there are not enough organs left to carry on body functions, then he has not helped matters. It would do no good to have a parade and hold the offending member up to the gaze of the applauding crowd if the patient has to be turned over to a home for invalids or to the undertaker.

What about the body of Christ? Sometimes there are offending members. We are commanded to mark them and to cut them out of the body when they get to the point that they are a menace to the body. Offending members in conduct need to be gotten out of the body when they get to the status of the rotten apple in the barrel. But it is not best to turn over the whole barrel and bruise half the apples in it in the process of getting out one rotten one. It ought to be done with more skill than that.

So in the matter of false doctrine. It is impossible perhaps to calculate the harm that false teaching can do to the body of Christ. Some false teaching is so harmful that it digs the very foundation out from under our faith. Such is the denial of the deity of Christ. The man who denies that Jesus was God in the flesh ought not to be allowed to teach in any church. There are other false ideas that in themselves will never damn the fellow who believes them, if he keeps them to himself.

It is possible to be mistaken in some matters of Bible teaching and still go to heaven. Some people believe that Matthias was an apostle; some believe he was not. Able preachers differ on that. One side is surely wrong! Both sides can go to heaven, even though one side is wrong. But if one fellow gets so full of his idea that he presses it on everybody else and causes division in the church, then he is on dangerous ground. His idea may be harmless in the hands of a sensible man, but in the hands of an extremist and a bigot it becomes a menace to the church. After a while he has to be cut out of the body. This is done for the good of the body. But there is a way to do it. Far more skill and tact are needed in doing this surgery on the body of Christ than in cutting some member out of a human body. Why so? Just because the body of Christ is so far more important than any human body. The injury or death of a human body has some consequences and entails some losses, but the injury of the body of Christ is a far more serious thing. Many of us can recall surgical operations on the body or church that have been done with such an unchristian flourish and such butchery that the church in the community died of the shock or was crippled for that generation. Some braggart may have waved the bloody knife and exhibited the butchered heart and lungs and liver that he gashed out in the operation. But he butchered the body there is no getting around that. What if he did give himself the reputation that he was sound in faith? What if he did proclaim from the housetops and command every satellite in his dominions to catch up the strain? He butchered the body. There is no betting around that. The bleeding, prostrate body of the Lord drags painfully out its days of an impotent life. Shall we let wicked men stay in the body and bring reproach upon it by their ungodly living? Not at all. God condemns the cowardice or indifference that allows such festering rottenness in the body of the Lord.

KAGAWA, THE GREAT MAN OF JAPAN.

The story of Kagawa is the record of a great man driven by a divine purpose, a simple man filled with a love and devotion strong enough to overcome the handicap of physical frailness and the hate of enemies. Kagawa is one of the outstanding Christians of today, probably the greatest Christian in the Orient. He is an example of a Christian who has taken Jesus Christ in earnest, and by "going the limit," or as he says, making of himself "Christ's fool," he has, like Francis of Assisi, shaken half the world.

He has combined in one life the two often-contrasted emphases of social work and evangelism, so that in his career they are but one and the same. Today Kagawa lives and moves before us as a vital and worth Christian disciple. For him every moment and every move is an adventure with God, "every bush a cathedral, every stone an altar, every task a sermon, every act a prayer, and every breath incense rising to God who waits to be worshipped everywhere."

Through his influence the slums of six great cities in Japan have been wiped away. "The six-by-six cell homes of Shinkawa are no more. The foul disease-breeding, criminal-producing slums of these six major cities are no more. The cell-like homes have been destroyed and modern municipal apartments have been erected in their stead. The narrow, filthy alleys have given place to streets, paved and properly sewered. The way has been cleared for the sunshine, the light and the air to do their healing and redeeming work." (From Kagawa, by William Axling). In 1921 Kagawa organized the first labor union in Japan made up of 35,000 men. His action aroused bitter feeling among the wealthy landlords and capitalists of Japan, and he was inprisoned as a dangerous and radical labor leader. But a prison could not put an end to his purpose to bring justice to his people; he used his pen to fight the greedy forces of capital, demanding that the laboring man should be paid a living wage, and that the peasant farmers be given an opportunity to rid themselves of thieving landlords.

He knew that his people of Japan would be able to avoid poverty and its awful companions of ignorance, prostitution, crime and disease, if they were given a chance to live and to earn a living.

But the greatest accomplishment of Kagawa's life is the testimony of his earnest Christian faith, and his attempts to be more like Christ.

His heart and life are filled with a passion to spread Christianity, his soul is filled with a yearning love for all people. In 1929 he inaugurated a Christian crusade called the Kingdom of God Movement, an evangelistic effort to carry the Christian message to every city and village of Japan in three years.

He is still criticized and opposed, and the wisdom of his plans doubted, but his sincerity and Christ-likeness are beyond question.—From the Church School Magazine.

NEWS ITEMS OF SOCIETIES.

As you will see by the following group of news items, the societies are beginning to check up on their standard of excellence. The items bear testimony of much good work being accomplished and it is encouraging to read them. This type of thing is just what this department is for and we crave your loyal support by sending us a report of your year's work. This applies to the whole Southern Convention, so we would be glad to hear from the North Carolina Conferences, the Valley of Virginia Conference and the Alabama and Georgia women too. So let's fill the page with something good and helpful. In your reading, if you find a good missionary selection or will write a missionary article, that will be helpful also. Note the change of my address from Holland, Va., to Linden Apartments, No. 3, Suffolk, Va., Smith St.

The Wakefield Woman's Society reports a splendid year in every respect. The attendance, interest and offerings have been good and the society in general has taken on renewed life. A splendid public program was presented in March and both the Home and Foreign Mission study books have been studied, the Pastor, Rev. J. A. Pierce, teaching the lessons. Two new members have been enrolled during the year. Mrs. R.. L. Murphy is the secretary of this society.

Mrs. H. E. Savage, Jr., president of the Young People's Missionary Society of Liberty Springs Christian Church sends us the following news. They held their membership campaign during the quarter, gaining the 5 per cent and have had the required 50 per cent attendance monthly. At Easter time they gave their public program to a large and appreciative audience. A lovely lawn party was held on the church lawn recently and enough was cleared to finish up their apportionment in full.

On Wednesday night after the third Sunday in August they held their mission study class with Mrs. W. V. Leathers, Mrs. Upton Savage and Mrs. E. F. O'Berry, the superintendent as teachers. They used the book, "'Suzuki Looks at Japan." Surely this society has done a splendid work from the report sent in and we hope these young people will push on to greater achievement in the Master's work.

The Barrett Missionary Society of the Holland Christian Church with Mrs. J. P. Darden, Supt., and Miss Sue Overman, Secretary, is pushing every point to be a standard society. They presented their annual public program at the regular morning service hour, August 11th. The program was divided in two parts, with Miss Rachael Lewis having charge of the devotional period, using the theme "Christ Our Companion." The play "Something Big" told the interesting story of a young girl who longed to do something really worth while with her life and found that something to which she was willing to give her all, a life of service to the American Indians.

The Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Franklin Church has been doing a splendid piece of work this year. Their Thanksgiving program was given by the young people of the church under the leadership of Mrs. E. L. Beale using the pageant, "A Thanksgiving of Praise." This proved to be a very fine drama and the audience was well repaid to witness it.

At Christmas time a party was held in the home of Mrs. E. P. Jones, president of the society. A splendid program was presented and the attendance and offering was very good.

In January they observed the week of prayer and in March the World Day of Prayer. A union service was held in their church with a large crowd.

The two missionary organizations attended the all-day mission school in Suffolk when Dr. A. W. Palmer, author of the mission book "Orientals in American Life" lectured on his work in a very acceptable and helpful way.

A chicken salad supper was sponsored by the society to which a large crowd gathered and the offering was excellent.

In April a good number of the members, with their pastor, Dr. Elwood W. Jones, attended the district missionary meeting held at Berea Nansemond Church.

Their mission study class closed in May with a good attendance and interest. In June the society met with the cradle roll society, Mrs. Hayes Holland, superintendent, when a good program and a nice party was enjoyed. Mrs. W. J. M. Holland is secretary of this society.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Liberty Spring Church has been striving to meet all the requirements for the year of 1935. They began their work this year by having a membership contest. They divided their members into two groups, each side working to bring in the most new members. At the end of the first quarter the losing side served the winners with refreshments.

The Society visits the sick and carries trays or fruit or flowers. The Society had the pleasure of hearing Dr. Palmer explain his book "Orientals in America" at Suffolk Christian Church. They observed the World Day of Prayer at their regular meeting in March.

A Story for the Children

THE STORY OF THE BIRTH AND DEATH OF OUR LORD.

The Father had told the wise men if there appeared a star in the sky, and it was not like other stars, that a boy would be born to be King of the Jews. So one night when the shepherds were watching their sheep, a star came in the sky. It was lower than the other stars. It was morning, they followed the star and it led them to Jerusalem. They asked the King where was the boy born to be King of the Jews. He said for them to go and find the baby and then come back and tell him so he might worship him. But he didn't want to worship Him, he wanted to have Him killed. They went out of Jerusalem and followed the star and soon it came to Bethlehem. They went on until they came to the place where Jesus was born and it stopped over the door. The wise men went in and laid their precious gifts at His feet.

That night when they went to bed an angel appeared and told the men to go back another way; that the king wanted to kill the baby Jesus, so they went home by another route. Not long after the king found out the wise men had gone home another way, he became very angry and had all the little boy babies under two years put to death.

The Lord told Joseph in a dream to take the baby and its mother and go to Egypt, he obeyed. When the king had all the baby boys killed, the Lord told Joseph, he would have the baby Jesus put to death also. The Lord told Joseph in another dream to take the baby and its mother and go to Bethlehem for the king was dead. On his way he heard that the older son was king, and he was afraid. The Lord told him to go on and he would see that no harm came to him.

When he was twelve years old they went to a passover feast at Jerusalem, and had started back home. They had traveled three days when they missed him, so they turned around and went back to look for him. They found him in the temple asking and answering questions. They asked him what he was doing there and he said that he was about his Father's business. They took him and went home.

He began to preach at thirty years old, and he was baptized by John the Baptist. There were some men who hated Jesus and wanted him crucified. One day they accused Jesus of stealing, and carried Him to Pilate for trial. Pilate said "let him go, I don't see any harm he has done," but they cried crucify him, crucify him and Pilate said, "You may do as you wish." They led him away, put a robe on him and a crown of thorns on his head. They spat upon him, and hit him with reeds and nailed his hands and feet to the cross and crucified him. He asked for some water but they gave him vinegar. He tasted of it and then gave it back to them, and darkness came over all the world and stayed until the ninth hour.

A very kind man came and asked for Jesus' body. He wrapped it in linen and laid it in a sepulchre. The first day of the week two women came to the sepulchre and they asked each other who would roll away the stone, but when they got to the sepulchre, to their surprise, the stone was rolled away, and there stood an angel in white. He told them to tell the people that he had risen from the dead.

One night when they were having a passover feast he appeared to the disciples, but one of them said "I will not believe it is Jesus until I have seen the print of the nails in his hands and feet and where they stuck the spear in his side." Jesus asked for bread; he took it and blessed it and gave it to them. One day when he was walking along the road the Father took him up to heaven to live with Him, and that is where he is now.—By eleven-year-old Audrey Pearls in Free Will Baptist.

CRUISING IN THE LAND OF THE SUNNY NIGHT.

By Rev. H. E. Rountree.

"Sadness."

A pall of sadness befell our ship Saturday morning at Juneau. The body of our leader, Dr. Falconer, was found dead in bed at 8 o'clock. He had retired about midnight the night before and said, "I shall sleep in tomorrow morning." He fell asleep and never to awake again. When found it was estimated that he had been dead five hourse. Rev. Dr. Waggoner, a life companion of Dr. Falconer's in Alaska, of Juneau, joined the party and became our guide.

"Up to the Yukon."

Saturday and Sunday we visited Juneau and Skagway. These towns suggest the Bonanza days the great Yukon gold rush of '98. It was at Juneau that Joe Juneau and his partner, Dick Harris first discovered yellow gold in Gold Creek. Little did they think then that this discovery heralded the coming of the largest quartz gold mine in the world, and that it meant the location of the Capitol of Alaska. The gold mine is still in operation, the biggest in the world and it is the big thing one sees as the city is approached, an outstanding attraction.

We awoke Sunday morning the 21st at the famous town of Skagway. We went ashore and worshipped at the Presbyterian Mission, a lovely little church presided over by a young Princeton minister from New Jersey, and his charming young wife. We then took a train (with the party) to Lake Bennet the head of the Yukon river, over the route of the "Iron Trail" of '98 when thousands struggled and perished for gold.

Those exciting days with their Bonanzas and sideplay on life were amongst the most amazing in the history of man. The names Klondyke and Yukon were on millions of lips throughout the world. In those days men begged and borrowed the wherewithal to reach these places and they struggled and strove, gambled and fought, suffered and died to push their way to wealth. The spell of the land gripped their souls. The mystery, beauty and charm of the country intrigued them, the gamble lured them, and the race was to the swift and the strong and a survival of the fittest. Only two persons now remain in Skagway to tell the tourist of the harrowing and hazardous days of '98. There is a Mrs. Pullen who then operated eating places for the people. She now operates a comfortable and the only inn in the town, and the other is Martin Stjen, who operates the only sight-seeing bus company in the town. This company consists of himself and his sons.

I must tell you about this bus. First, Martin is a unique character himself, a natural-born showman. In the days of '98 he was a gambler in the city, but now he is an honest and well respected citizen. His bus seats about 25 persons and is built on the chassis of a 1929 Ford car. The front is equipped with a bear (mounted), his eyes are electric lights and his mouth is the Klaxon and in his forepaws is the cord that rings the bell. The rear is equipped with the rails of "Soapy" Smith's saloon of the days of long ago, and on the platform stands an effigy of "Soapy" Smith, waving one arm motioning the passersby into the car. Martin himself wears a mustasche that stretches the full width of his face and it is almost as big as a foxtail. He wears a chain of gold nuggets weighing altogether about two pounds, and his story is worth the fifty cents in entertainment saying nothing about the ride on such a unique bus and the facts of the days of '98.

In the days of '98 Skagway was a city of 16,000, there being more than 30,000 over all in the area. Today it is a town of only about 400 and of interest mainly to tourists. The little town of Dsei was over 10,000, and now has a population of just one man who is mayor, chamber of commerce, police department and everything in that town. The scars of the old days are everywhere. All along the line to the Yukon we are told of deserted villages and are pointed out untravelled trails strewn with the bones of those daring souls who perished on the way.

The history of '98 is the most exciting chapter in the history of man. The scars of trails, bridges and huts are stray evidences of the price paid to turn "America's Ice Box" into America's greatest wealth. The gold of the Yukon and the Klondyke ran out, but at Juneau it is still abundant. While Skagway is reduced to nothing Juneau thrives and is the epitome of progress.

The trip from Skagway to the Yukon is one of the most scenic and awe-inspiring of the world. It beggars description and it is unbelievable to those who have not seen it, high, rugged and precipitous, snow-capped mountains, waterfalls, glaciers, overhanging rocks, narrow passes, deep gorges, inspirational views from thousands of feet of elevation; lakes, plains of the moose country, the green of the grass and the fir tree, all in one brief trip, mingle to make the most alluring panorama ever witnessed.

At "Inspiration Point" a monument has been erected to the faithful pack-horses that gave up their lives in these valleys to further the interest and sometimes to save the lives of their masters. The monument bears this inscription:

"The dead are speaking. In memory of us three thousand pack animals that laid our bones on these awful hills during the gold rush of 1897-98. We now thank those listening souls that heard our groans across the stretch of years. We waited but not in vain!"

The fury of those 1898 days is displaced now by the lure of 1935. The past is a dream and law reigns in the land. The white man and the Indian work together. The spell of old times has given place to the spell of modern life,—religion, machinery, railroad and products.

Believe it or not rhubarb grows here six feet high, stalk two inches in diameter ,and one stalk makes one quart of rhubarb for the table. Pansies are two and three inches across the face and dahlias will measure nine inches. Other products likewise.

Alaska is still a vast unknown, a country as big as one-fifth of the United States, and it is said "rapidly becoming not 'America's Ice Box,' but America's Greatest Wealth!"

Speaking recently before the Montreal and Ottawa Conference of the United Church of Canada, in Montreal, James Simpson, Toronto's socialist Mayor, a life-long churchman and active Christian worker, said: "The greatest tragedy today is the inability of the young to find a place which gives them the opportunity to make the most of their abilities. . . We have spent our millions of dollars on our system of education, yet we find that our young people are not privileged to find any medium for the exercise of their faculties or the development of fuller lives."

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

GOD'S CALL TO US.

The story of Jesus calling His disciples is familiar to all who study the Scriptures. So is the call of Abraham, Moses, Isaiah and Paul.

But God's call to us is often not so familiar although much more important to us. I believe He is calling in very tender but urgent tones to young people today as He has done through the centuries.

A Call to Explore.

God called Abraham to explore a new country. He may not expect us to find new territory which can be made into a new nation, but there is plenty of room for youth to explore in the realm of thought, ideals, and life. Every dew drop, ocean wave, sun ray, disease, and human emotion is God's challenge to thought. He wants us to understand. Every person we meet offers an opportunity to explore in human experience.

We have much to learn about the operation of the human mind, emotion, and spirit. Human relations are far from peaceful and until we understand how they are supposed to blend we will be unable to make society as cooperative as it should be.

A Call to Deliverance.

Moses was sent to Egypt to lead Israel out of bondage. Young people today are called to deliver other young people from the bondage of customs, clans, and conflicting emotions. Too many of us are too often discouraged, despondent, and unable to do what God intends us to do. We need to be delivered from littleness, selfishness, and the sins that take away joy and keep us from being our best.

A Call to Holiness.

When Isaiah "say the Lord high and lifted up," he immediately became interested in cleansing his own life and the lives of the people about him. There is a doctrine of holiness that runs all through the Scriptures. It does not teach that people shall do funny stunts or boast of their goodness. It simply tells how the grace of God can cleanse and purify human life and make it divine. God is calling young people today to clean speaking and living. It is a call to consecration of person and purpose.

A Call to Sacrificial Service.

Saint Paul says he was not disobedient to the Heavenly vision, that he counted all things but lost for Christ, and that he rejoiced in being able to suffer for Jesus' sake. He counted life not dear unto himself. It was in this way that he became the world's greatest evangelist and the writer of half of the New Testament.

God is calling us to do service that sacrifices self. New programs of worship and education need to be planned and developed. New financial efforts should be started at once. The kingdom tarries while we spend our time and money selfishly, but God is calling us into service with Him and for Him, which will make it necessary for us to sacrifice our personal desires.

A Call to Fellowship.

Jesus called his disciples to be with him. He wanted their friendship, and they needed his. He commissioned them to heal the sick, to teach righteousness, and to develop Christian personality. They went to minister to the bodies, minds, and spirits of the people. He sent them into the villages and cities then followed them himself. He wanted to be with them.

The Christ is calling young people today to enter into fellowship with him. This is a personal matter and it takes place in the inner consciousness of the individual, but it works out into Christian service. Those who seek his fellowship must labor for the spread of his kingdom, for he is going to the ends of the earth to make disciples of all the nations.

God's call is clear, definite, and impelling. By answering it we come to our best. By refusing it we lose ourselves.

GOD CALLING YET! SHALL I NOT HEAR?

God calling yet! Shall I not hear?
Earth's pleasures shall I still hold dear?
Shall life's swift passing years all fly,
And still my soul in slumber lie?

God calling yet! Shall I not rise?
Can I His loving voice despise,
And basely His kind care repay?
He calls me still; can I delay?

God calling yet! and shall He knock,
And I my heart the closer lock?
He still is waiting to receive,
And shall I dare His spirit grieve?

God calling yet! I cannot stay;
My heart I yield without delay;
Vain world, farewell! from thee I part;
The voice of God hath reached my heart.

Officers for the coming year were elected as follows: President, Thelma Morris, Dyke, Va.; Vice-President, Arthur W. Spaid, 916 Amherst St., Winchester, Va.; Secretary-Treasurer, Irene Hensley, Route 2, Elkton, Va.; Superintendent of Service, Anna Lou Showalter, Route 4, Harrisonburg, Va.; Superintendent of Leadership Training, K. B. Hook, 1002 Amherst St., Winchester, Va.; Superintendent of Devotional Life, William J. Andes, Elon College, N. C.; Superintendent of Publications and Reporter, Norma Showalter, Route 4, Harrisonburg, Va.; Pastor-Counselor, Rev. A. W. Andes, Route 4, Harrisonburg, Va.; Pastor-Counselor, Rev. Ivan R. Smith, 12 W. Clifford St., Winchester, Va.

Following the evening session, the Youth Fellowship held a watermelon social on the lawn, to which all attending Conference were invited. Wm. Andes and Alfred Dofflemyre were in charge of the recreation.

The young people in the Valley of Virginia Central Conference seem to be eager to carry forward the work of the Fellowship of Youth. Plans are already being made by the newly elected officers for district rallies to be held in the fall.

INTERRACIAL ANIMOSITIES.

Christian Endeavor Topic for Sept. 15, 1935.
Acts 10:28-35.

Daily Bible Readings.

Sept. 9.—God is not partial. Acts 10:34.
Sept. 10.—Cain's question. Gen. 4:9.
Sept. 11.—Jesus overcame prejudice. John 4:9.
Sept. 12.—Pentecost did wonders. Acts 2:1-11.
Sept. 13.—Should Gentiles be Christians? Acts 14:27; 15:3-19.
Sept. 14.—Christ is all. Col. 3:11.

Animosity: Active hatred. Is it true that there is inter-racial hatred today? Would you like to tell God that there is hatred in your heart for anyone? Who are God's chosen people? Does the majority race have rightful rule over the minority race? Suppose you were a member of the minority race, would you think it fair for the larger group to make decisions for you?

Dr. H. T. Stock says: "Most of us exaggerate the unpleasant things we see in a despised race, and overlook the good things. One rule for people who actually want to be Christian is this: look for the good things, when you see anything disagreeable try to understand the reason for it. Often we shall find that the disagreeable thing is due to some mistreatment which the white race has given."

Maybe we think of people in terms of race and not as individuals. Have you ever heard anyone say, "That's just like a Jew?" Is that statement fair? A church member who often uses that expression wonders why Jesus was a Jew. What do you think of his attitude?

Pearl Buck, the noted author, spoke recently before a group of negro men and women on the subject of race relations. She knows what is means to live among people of different skin and mental outlook, for all her life has been spent in China. So she spoke as one who knows.

"I consider race feeling in any country, in any individual of any race, to be a deadly poisonous emotion . . . Every man and woman of intelligence must fight it in himself, herself, everywhere.

" But what shall we use as weapons in such a fight?

"Not guns and swords. They are the most futile weapons in any cause. Race feeling thrives on wars.

"But you know your weapons. You are using them already. They are the weapons of solid achievement, which prove your equality with all races and your special superiorities, those special gifts which each race has to bring to others. When one of you writes a matchless poem, creates a piece of music, translates into words some portion of life, discovers a new truth in science. . . . or, lacking these special creative gifts, simply is a dignified, noble personality, here is your weapon that must vanquish race feeling . . achievement is your proof, the sign of your greatness." January, 1933.)

Help can be found in Christian Herald for May, 1935—"If We Want Peace." This article tells how to refute that old argument, "What would you do if a man was threatening your sister?" Beverly Nichols, the brilliant author of "Cry Havoc," is the author. You will also find helpful material in the booklet "So this is Missions" by Stock.

MAKE WAY FOR BROTHERHOOD.

Of all things beautiful and good,
The kingliest is brotherhood;
For it will bring again to earth
Her long lost poesy and mirth;
And till it comes these men are slaves,
And travel downward to the dust of graves.
Clear the way, then, clear the way.

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

LYDIA AND PRISCILLA.

(Christian Women in Industrial Life.)

Lesson X—September 8, 1935.

Lesson: Acts 16:11-15; 18:1-3; Rom. 16:1-6.

Golden Text: "Give her of the fruit of her hands. And let her works praise her in the gates."—Prov. 31:31.

Paul was being true to the heavenly vision. In the night there appeared to him the vision of a man imploring him to come over to Macedonia to help him. It seemed like the call of a new continent—the call of Europe, the challenge of Europe to the claims of Christ. And Paul obeyed the vision. He went to Philippi, one of the chief cities of that region, and a Roman colony. And when he got there he found only a small group of women at a prayer-meeting along the river! A man with less courage, and less spiritual insight than Paul would have felt chagrined and duped. But not Paul. Here at least was an opportunity to "speak a good word for Jesus Christ." The spirit of God moved on the heart of at least one woman, and she believed, and became the first convert in Europe. Lydia, a woman, a business woman, a devout woman, a hospitable woman, a courageous woman, a well-to-do woman—she was the first fruits of Paul's first mission to Europe. She was a symbol of that long line of women of the West who have been touched by Christ, and who have gone out to serve him in many forms of service, or who have remained at home to serve Him just as effectively as home-makers and Christian mothers.

Several suggestive thoughts are embodied in this story of Lydia. There is, for instance, the lesson on the right use of the Sabbath Day. Paul and his companions did not spend the day in pleasure or sight-seeing, or in loafing, but they sought the most likely place of worship. They used the Sabbath day for the high purpose for which it was ordained. How America needs to learn how to use the Christian Sunday.

Then there is the lesson of the importance of the inner furnishings of life. Paul and his companions found what they were looking for, because of what they were within. Turn two young men loose in a big city and they will find what they want. One will find that which lifts and exalts and ennobles; the other will find that which debases and defiles. One who wants to do right will find that which will help him to do right.

Of course there is the lesson not to despise the day of small beginnings. Paul did not find a great multitude clamoring for the gospel. He did not find any men at all at the prayer meeting. (That sounds rather modern.) But he was faithful to his opportunity and obedient to his vision. It would be interesting to know just how far-reaching was Paul's ministry that day because through his word God had opened Lydia's heart. God does not ask that we succeed; He asks that we be faithful. His word shall not return unto Him void. We are not to be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not.

Priscilla.

Priscilla was another early Christian woman in the industrial life of her time. She and her husband were tent-makers, and because this was Paul's means of a livelihood, he worked with them and formed a warm friendship for them. Indeed it is quite likely that he led them into a personal experience of discipleship to Christ. And as he worked with them he instructed them in the things concerning Christ. They were apt pupils, and they learned not only about Christ, but they came to know Christ. Thus it was that when Apollos, a learned and eloquent Christian Jew met them later, they were able to instruct him in the deeper secrets and meanings of the Christian way of life. There are humble workers with their hands who can tell many educated and presumably wise people much about the deeper realities of the Christian life. They can speak with a note of authority and finality because they speak out of a first-hand experience of Christ.

Aquila was perhaps one of those good men who is best known because he was the husband of some outstanding woman. Priscilla was undoubtedly the more able of the two. Both of them became fast and true friends of Paul and he held them in high esteem. He says that they had "laid down their necks for his life." Furthermore they used their home as the meeting-place of the church in Corinth. They too are typical of that great host of working people who use such as they have for the service of their Lord.

Here again the lesson has some simple truths. For instance it tells us that some of the most vital opportunities for witnessing for Christ are among those with whom we work. One need not look far afield for opportunities to win others to Christ. Those with whom we work are a constant challenge to us to share Christ.

Again there is the lesson of sharing with others what we have been taught. Paul and Aquila and Priscilla and they became teachers of others. They were willing to use what they had for God.

These humble workers put their home at the disposal of Christ. It was the center of worship for the time being. We are not called upon to turn our homes into churches. But we are called on to place them at his disposal. They ought to be places in which His spirit sweetens every family relationship, and in which His ideals and spirit motivate family life, and from which the members of the family go forth in His spirit to serve others.

Christian Women in Industrial Life—this is the title of the lesson. It is a far cry from that far-off day and its simple industrial life, to our modern complex industrial life, in which women have such a large and important part. But the problem remains essentially the same. Some way must be found to apply the spirit and principles of Jesus to the industrial problems of our modern life. Christian women must play their part in this difficult but necessary program. In their personal service, and by their personal influence and efforts, they must help to bring in the new social order which is involved in the progressive coming of the Kingdom of God.

THE YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

Blind kings and creeds have had their day.
Break the dead branches from the path;
Our hope is in the aftermath.
To this even the ages ran:
Make way for brotherhood . . . make way for man.

"HUMANITY'S ACHING VOID."

"As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee."—Ps. 42:1.

Herrick Johnson has said "The Bible is the most thought-suggesting book in the world. No other book deals with such grand themes." In the text we have the grand theme of a high degree of a hunger and a thirst for God. The figure of a deer panting with thirst for water is a strong one, and yet it was not beyond the experience of David, nor has it ever been beyond the experience of thousands of His children through the ages, nor is it beyond the possibility of any one in this age.

Indeed, there are, everywhere without doubt, those who hunger and thirst for God. But apparently the great masses do not hunger and thirst for Him. Every Sunday one may count noses in his congregation, and on the outside, the hosts of the world that go by, without the semblance of a thirst for God, is legions.

Folks thirst for home, for loved ones, for a living, yet, even for the hording of gains, they thirst for honor and esteem, for the praise in the job they have given their best to, for recreation and pleasure, but are woefully lacking in the thirst for the blessed gifts that supercede them all.

The great cry of God's children, "Why the empty pews?" "Why so much sin and wrong-doing?" is an aching void of human experience. When will this void be filled? It will never be filled by the masses, but it will be filled by individuals, one by one, as each shall turn from their sins and love in obedience to His laws. Keep on, beloved, and lead souls to Christ, and as thou shall lead one to Him, send that one out also to do likewise. That is the clarion call of today..

Prayer—O Lord, spare us from Thy wrath. Warm our souls to the glow of thine own fervor, and quicken us in Thy spirit. —Amen.

TUESDAY.

"GOD'S GREAT GIFT."

"Ho, everyone that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat; yea, come buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do you spend your money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is food, and let your soul delight itself in fatness."—Isa. 55:1, 2.)

It was Dryden who said,

"More liberty begets desire for more
The hunger still increases with the store."

Some people do not want God, and yet they are restless till they find Him. When they find Him, they find that the truth expressed by Dryden is true,—the thirst is no sooner slaked than it is again revived. In other words, the more one receives of God, the more he feels his deficiencies, and the more he desires to fill that chasm with His knowledge and truth.

There are so many people who want heaven when they are dead, but not while they are living. Until the earthly life is like the life of Jesus Christ, there will be no satisfaction and no rest.

Prayer—

"Thy power lies there—unfolded power—
A bud that never blooms a flower;
Thou seekest, true, a clime not far
The "might be" in the things that are:
Though brave and true and calm austere,
Thou laborest in a narrow sphere,
'Tis Christ, right now, thy spirit needs—
And this is the best of all the creeds."

—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"LIKE JESUS."

"When he shall appear, we shall be like him."
—I John 3:2.

The song of Ackley says:

"Earthly pleasures vainly call me;
I would be like Jesus;
Nothing worldly shall enthrall me;
I would be like Jesus."

Just how much can we be like Jesus in this life?

One of the most serious views of life is that we are constantly being tested and proved,—proved to ourselves that we are far from being like Jesus, and proved to Him (if He finds us faithful) that we are fit and willing to be prepared for the eternal abode with Him, where, if found faithful, we can hope to be like Him, and, if not faithful, fit to be cast out.

We return to our question. In our deficiencies, then, how much can we be like Him in this life?

To be like him is in the realm of the Spirit. The realm of the spirit is in our thinking, our feelings, our will, our emotions, our love and devotions, in faith in ourselves and faith in Him, in goodness and kindness, in grace and truth, and certainly in desire. It is in these that we may be like Him in this life.

Let us find instances. It is said of David Hill, the missionary to China, that they called him "the little Jesus." They who knew him at home said that he looked like Jesus. When the sainted memory of one is "He dwelt among us with grace and truth," that's to be like Jesus.

Prayer—We thank Thee, Father, that Thou hast made it possible for us to live in Christ and that, so living, He may be seen of us. O God, help us so to live.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"ONLY A LETTER AND A MARK.

"Thou has made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor."—Ps. 8:5; Heb. 2:7-9.

The soul that comes to Jesus is received by Him into a relationship of honor, nearness and privilege that is analygous to the relationship between Him and the Father. "The spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ . . . that we may be glorified together." Rom. 8:16, 17.

"Here are we dark and weak, yet are we not
Excluded from thy glorious family;
Pain to thy children is a transient lot;
We suffer that from sin we may be free.

"If but a letter of the All-perfect name,
If but a mark of the celestial pen,
Distinguishes us, we will, despising shame,
Abjuring self, live boldly among men.

"Named after God, a little like to Him,
In whom the entireness of the name divine
Brightly involved was once by woes made dim,
But now unfolded shines,—Lord let me shine."

—T. T. Lynch.

Prayer—Dear Father:

"How sweet the name of Jesus sounds
In a believer's ear!
It soothes his sorrows, heals his wounds,
And drives away his fears.

"Jesus, my shepherd, husband, friend,
My phophet, priest and king;
My Lord, my life, my way, my end;
Accept the praise I bring."

—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"THE MAGIC MAGNET."

"If I be lifted up, I will draw all men to me."
—I John 12:32.

A. Maclaren, speaking of the mysterious drawing power of Christ illustrates it thus:

"Astronomers tell us that dead, cold matter falls from all corners of the solar system into the sun, drawn by its magic magnetism from farthest space, and, plunging into that great reservoir of fire, the deadest and coldest matter, glows with fervid heat and dazzling light.

"So you and I, dead, cold, dull, opaque, heavy fragments drawn into the mysterious oneness with Christ, the Sun of our Souls, shall be transformed into His own image, and, like Him, be light and heat which shall radiate through the universe."

Prayer—Our Father, so transform our poor earthly souls till we shall be luminous, and known as saints of the Lord.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"THE GLORY OF THE CHURCH."

"The glory of Jehovah filled the House of Jehovah."—I Kings 8:1-11.

This was the climax of the making of Solomon's temple, when the ark of the divine covenant was brought into it, and the awful Presence of the Most High rested above it, and the glory of Jehovah filled therefrom all the house of our Lord. No wonder the priests could not stand to minister in that majestic splendor, but were driven by it into the courts of the sanctuary.

Let it be thus in our lives. When we have erected the enclosures, and hung the curtains, and put in their places all the instruments of worship, then may we not rest content until the glory of Jehovah has entered to consecrate it all.

For an unglorified religion is only the husk and outer shell of a religion. The heart of it is the whole of it, and that heart is the shining presence of the Father.

Prayer—May we realize Thee, O God. May we know what it means to have Thee with us. And may we seek Thy presence with all our souls.—Amen.

SEANCES WITH THOSE WHO SLEEP.

By James David Kitchin, Jr.

"The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground."—Gen. 4:10.

Our text commences, "The voice of thy brother's blood." What an indictment! A rebuke to Cain, the murderer of Abel—his mortal brother. This fratricide was the inception of an inglorious train. All men are sons of God in the great sense that no blood can be shed from human veins which is not our brother's or our sister's. Yes, still answers the quiz, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

Our thought continues, "crieth unto me from the ground." A ghostly interlude! Blood from a vital tract soon dies and returns to its kindred dust. But all blood, they say, tells. And questions too, by mute omens. That iniquitous sentinel halts us. Imputing guilt by virtue, he queries, "What hast thou done?" "Murder will out," hence we trow, "Seances With Those Who Sleep," may make dramatic disclosures. Four of these whispers with the recumbent and their messages might follow.

Foremost, The Voice of Soldiers' Blood, arrests us. In life they spoke a thousand tongues, but now only one. Isaiah essays to describe the hideous throes of the world, before the coming of the Redeemer, with consummate austerity. "Garments rolled in blood," was the motif of his words. A pall of despair hung over the redoubts of mankind. War had drenched the creation in crimson horror and bequeathed hate and fear to ensue with the unborn. Shame on us to broach this truth, but the world has had absolute recess from war only about 300 years of known history.

Our hiking ditty, "It's not the pack"—"But the last long mile," recurs. In serious and wider scopes to say that, no generation ever negotiates the last long mile of war. In the wake of march the burden falls on innocent shoulders. Animus and expense in crushing heaps descend upon our progeny. That our federal government now pensions nigh a hundred widows of soldiers of the War of 1812, is sad copy to read.

From the din of clarion tumult there issues this behest, "Put up again thy sword"—Jesus is speaking. Sensing the futility of the world's vaunted weapons, none would he tolerate. What Jesus found impracticable, the world will find impossible. Another way is open, it remains to be used. The way up is the way out and, "The Road Back."

A trite old statute of cause and effect is, by another inspired writer, affirmed. "Ye fight and war, yet ye have not," says the irenic prelate, James. Moreover, objective losses in duration of combat are nothing beside subjective losses in any recourse to carnage. Too many rare gems of genius have been dissipated and buried in abortive tombs.

If, as promised, we bring some profound word from the slain of every battle, here would likely be the hint:

> Thou shalt not press down upon the brow of society
> A crown of arms,
> Thou shalt not crucify humanity on
> A cross of war.

Further, The Voice of Slaves' Blood, engages us. We are not thinking about one familiar bondage, but every kind extant.

This is a day of colors in the social and other fields. A tri-color emblem which dazzles the eyes of the world today is composed of red, black and yellow. They typify Russia, Africa, Italy and Japan. Birth or death may be betokened. No longer in smug lethargy can we sing, "Let the rest of the world go by." Their predicament is premonitory.

Capital has been fencing with labor while both are seemingly oblivious to God. It has been the manifest aim of each group to lord it over the other. Onus and initiative alternate here. It has appeared to matter too little that half the people are hungry while polemics flourish. There has been too much shouting about rights when duties were being sorely neglected.

Every drop of blood spilled through avarice stains the escutcheon that our retiring hands deliver to posterity. Most people have ere now ceased to eat their fellows; ours is the task to stop killing them; if peradventure the coming race shall full-orb their lives. Sepulchers from every clime join the chorus that now is saying:

> Man's inhumanity to man
> Makes countless thousands mourn.

Forlorn, The Voices of Childrens' Blood appeals. This like a Shekinah hovers about us and quickens the pulse beat. A most pathetic era of ancient history is thus depicted in Holy Writ,

> The sacred gems are scattered over every street, the priceless sons of Zion, worth their weight in gold, count no more than crockery, mere pots of clay.

Lamentation! A correct guess, and capital grief to be sure. A graphic delineation of a nation's remissness concerning its offspring.

The present company of juveniles is beset with more vices than any before chronicled. Awake fair America! To your task! Danger crouches at the door. The number of miscreants and misfits is staggering. They are begetting their ilk to our dismay. Children deserve a more worthy heritage and a chance to burgeon our their excellencies. Inverting our perspective, too many young can sing, "Where are my wandering parents tonight?"

That which inhibits personality from reaching fruition or starves the altar fires of the breast is ally to death. Infamy not quite so mild, lurks ever, for the hot red blood of babies is fresh upon us. "Herod slew all the children in Bethlehem," we are told. He was called a fox for the good reason that he was less than human. But, his species like a colossus disputes the sanctity of laws both huma nand divine.

Of all the crusades of line, or lore, the most romantic was the Children's Crusade. Little ones in a holy zeal went looking for the vessels and vistas known of Jesus. Led by babes we can yet escape the foul underworld and enter the fair upperworld of life. "A little child shall lead them" quoth He. Sacred ashes from a little urn speak:

> List the ominous stern whisper
> From the Delphic cave within—
> They enslave their children's children
> Who make compromise with sin.

Finally, The Voice of Christ's Blood, enjoins. It speaks never a word on behalf of self, but of others always. "Led like a lamb to slaughter," is not a very auspicious inaugural procession for a king. But, this was the way of Jesus and he is the paragon of potentates. His was the fine art of giving self royally, for friends and enemies, too. At once is placed upon the recipients of this atonement an obligation to perpetuate it.

None too pleasing a prospect hedges our horizons. The "Melting Pot," is boiling over. We

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON. Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

The writer heard a preacher say on one occasion that he preached sermons on how to rear children when he was a young man; but after he had experience in rearing a family of children of his own he came to the conclusion that other people knew as much about the art as he did and he laid that sermon aside.

Rearing a family is no easy job for any parent but a happy and interesting one. The writer has often heard his mother say that no child ever paid for its rearing until it reared a family of its own. Theer is more truth in that statement than poetry. The writer has been working with children for more than thirty years and nineteen years as Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage and in all his work with children has has never come in contact with one yet, however bad it might be, but that it had some good traits and some kind spot in its heart.

If we could always discover the good traits in the problem child and cultivate it and gradually overcome the bad in many cases you will succeed.

In handling children for all these years the writer has learned at least three things:

First: All children are pretty much alike—have many of the same traits and inclinations and characteristics;

Second: We have learned that kindness shown gets nearer a child's heart than anything else;

Third: We have learned that praise for their best efforts and few criticisms for their shortcomings will inspire them to better efforts and brings out the best.

"THE SOUL OF A CHILD."

"The soul of a child is the loveliest flower
That grows in the garden of God.
Its climb is from weakness to knowledge and power,
To the sky from the clay and the clod.
To beauty and sweetness it grows under care,
Neglected, 'tis ragged and wild.
'Tis a plant that is tender, but wonderously rare,
The sweet, wistful soul of a child.

"Be tender, O gardener and give it its share
Of moisture, of warmth, and of light.
And let it not lack for thy pains—taking care
To protect it from frost and from blight.
A glad day will come when its bloom shall unfold,
It will seem that an angel has smiled,
Reflecting it from beauty and sweetness untold
In the sensitive soul of a child."

hope we are not pessimist, nor platitudinarian, but prophet. Everything is not wrong, but something is wrong. There is not more dearth of prosperity than of piety. Jesus says, "They have rejected me,"—He's right. Folks are not singing, "Give me the old-time religion"; some tolerate the new; many ignore all. We need a comeback to the foundation and fountains of Christianity. To a grave that could not retain its deposit let us go, for the ablutiosn of our spirits. Silence and absence eloquently speak:

Father forgive them, for they know not what they do!
Into thy hands I commend my spirit.

SURGERY AND BUTCHERY.

Shall we allow men to ride hobbies right thru the church and kick over the furniture? No, never. When any man through living or teaching becomes dangerous to the body of Christ, the duty of Christians is too plain to be misunderstood. But let us never forget that we owe an obligation to the body. The operation is for the purpose of saving and helping and strengthening the body and not to cripple or kill it. There is a difference between surgeons and butchers.

ligion calls upon us for all our body and mind, our time and strength, our ideals and longings, our heart and soul.

What is more precious in our bodies than our eyes? And yet if they get in the way of holiness, Christ bids us pluck them out. The counsel, of course, is Oriental symbolism, but we must not on that account spare the use of it. It means that we must spurn our dearest idols, if they keep us from worshipping God alone.

This resolution is indeed hard and strenuous, but it is of the very essence of religion, the climax of faith, the pathway to eternal life.

Prayer—Give us strength for all needed sacrifices, O Christ; and make us joyful in them all, knowing that they bind us to Thee.—Amen.

THANK GOD FOR FRIENDS.

Thank God for friends, the friends who do not fail
When bleak skies chill the marrow of the mind
With piercing icy needles, Fortune's hail.
With friends like these, unkindest skies are kind.

Thank God for friends, the friends whose steady eyes,
Serene and true, hold ours to firm uplift.
When fain they are to droop. For he who tries
To outstare Fate for long may lose—and drift.

Thank God for friends, the friends whose loving hearts
Make ours to glow. What did but now annoy
And numb is gone. From friends like these one parts
With courage strong. Life flows again with joy.

So I decided to join them; but alas! as I was proceeding to the penitent form, my father, unaware of my intention, stopped me and said it was my bedtime and I had better go home. What would have happened if I had succeeded in my purpose I don't know. I might have become a Wesleyan minister, possibly a president of conference. OBITUARIES

McDONALD.

William McDonald departed this life August 24, 1935 at his home in West Point, Georgia, at the age of 81 years.

He leaves to mourn his departure a wife and nine children; one child preceded him in death some years ago. The nine living children, eight girls and one boy, were all at the funeral. All are grown and have homes of their own except two girls.

Brother McDonald was a very kind and sweet-spirited man. He loved his family with a devotion rarely seen.

I had known him for many years and he was one of my best friends.

Peace to his soul and comfort be to the bereaved. His body was laid to rest in Lauett Cemetery, the funeral being conducted by the writer.

G. D. HUNT.

BAKER.

Whereas God in His infinite wisdom, has called to eternal reward, our beloved sister, Mrs. Doris Eure Baker, whose death occurred August 19, 1935, at Charlottesville, Va., therefore be it resolved:

First: That in the death of Mrs. Baker the Ladies' Missionary Society of Liberty Springs Church has lost a zealous member, an efficient and loyal worker and a consecrated Christian who daily lived the Gospel she professed.

Second: That we emulate her many noble virtues, gratefully cherish her beloved memory and with increased faith, seek to carry forth the work of Christ which was so dear to her heart.

Third: That while we cannot understand why such a useful life should be so short, we bow in humble submission to our Heavenly Father's divine will.

Fourth: That we extend to her bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy and commend them to the Comforter whose grace is sufficient for every need.

Fifth: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, one sent to The Christian Sun for publication and another placed on the records of the missionary society.

Respectfully submitted,
MRS. S. H. RAWLES,
MRS. L. F. BRADSHAW,
MRS. ELIOTT PARKER,
Committee.

VOLUME LXXXVII. RICHMOND. VA., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1935. NUMBER 37.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

The Irony of Fate.—

"The Permanent Palace for Impermanent Peace," a current weekly calls it. By the irony of fate this five-million-dollar building which is to house the Leagus of Nations in Geneva, draws near its completion at a time when the League itself confronts the gravest problem in its history. Will the Ethiopian question result in another European war that will eliminate the league and render useless, as such, the building?

A Recovery Note.—

Symptomatic of better times, Great Britain's knick-knack industry is booming. Birmingham, capital of jew's-harp manufacturing, embarrassed by a flood or orders from all over the world—but particularly from America—is unable to cope with the demand because of the scarcity of skilled tongue-setters needed to adjust the metal strip to insure correct tone. One firm alone produces 100,000 harps a week and has more than three months' orders on hand . . . Lucky charms are another flourishing Birmingham industry, pixies, gnomes, hobgoblins, being most in demand.—Selected.

Fewer Strikes This Year.—

Either because NRA was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, or in spite of that fact, the year 1935 is producing fewer strikes than did 1934, and fewer workers are involved. Business Week gives the following figures based upon Department of Labor statistics for the first five months of this year and estimates for June. "In the first half of last year 938 strikes began; in the first half of this year, 902—a reduction of 3.8 per cent. The 1934 strikes involved 587,437 workers; the 1935 strikes 395,583—a reduction of 32.6. Idle man-days during the six months of last year were 9,452,797; of this year, 7,299,518—down 22.8 per cent."

By Storm or Crash.—

Only the past week was the nation appalled by the storm which wrecked the Florida Keys and then spread death and destruction in its northward path. The horror of it all was oppressive. Yet is was estimated the week before that "the probable death toll from automobile accidents would be between 350 and 400 persons during the Labor Day week-end," and that an additional 10,000 would be injured. Because these cases are scattered over a large area they attract very little attention, yet the victim of the storm is no deader than the victim of the crash. The heart-strings of loved ones are rended as well by one as by the other. Indeed, "the steady deluge of motor car fatalities is nothing less than a ghastly social tragedy of truly national dimensions."

Less Use for the Staff of Life.—

Bread has been known as the Staff of Life, but during the past thirty-five years Americans have been leaning less and less upon it. In 1900 the per capita consumption of flour in the United States was 1.14 bbl. During the 1917-18 season it dropped below one bbl. This year, to the dismay of the milling industry, it dropped to three-fourths of a barrel. And the millers say that something must be done about it. The wheat farmer, too, is vitally concerned, for had the per capita consumption of bread last year and the year before been equal to that of 1900, there would have been needed not less than 175,000,000 additional bushels of wheat, and the problem of surplus wheat carried over from 1933 would have been non-existent.

Churches Gain Over One Million Members.—

George Linn Kieffer, statistician of the National Lutheran Council and head of the American Association of Religious Statisticians, reports that church membership is increasing in the United States, and that the gain last year was the greatest since 1930. There were 207 religious bodies in the United States in 1934, with a total adult membership of 62,035,688. These bodies added 1,222,064 members. The Methodist Episcopal Church, with an increase of 210,475, headed the list of Protestant denominations. The Baptist Church, which had previously been first, came second with a gain of 161,720. The Lutherans were third with 101,118. The Baptists continued to be the largest Protestant denomination, with 10,027,929 members. The Methodists were second, with 8,976,492. The largest religious body in the country was still the Roman Catholic Church with 20,398,509 communicants. Contributions made by church members for all purposes in 1934 amounted to $299,416,781, or $12.07 per capita.

An Assassin's Bullet.—

Whether or not one looked with disapproval upon the manner in which Huey Long attempted to reach the end he desired, there must be regret that his career was cut short by an assassin's bullet. A demagogue he was, there is no denying, but, with the Richmond News Leader, we agree that he "was better furnished mentally than are most demagogues. He possessed magnetism of a sort . . . He had a daring self-confidence that an army commander might have coveted. Opposition he met without flinching and beat down with hard blows." He did not hesitate to practice intimidation, but his followers counted unhesitatingly upon his promises; they served him well whether through love or fear. Again quoting, "Huey Long was not one of those rare leaders whose assassination deflects the course of history." This is an editorial opinion—it may be right, but there is the question there. Huey Long stood small show of ever entering the White House, but it would be foolish to deny that his influence might have placed a taboo on another's chances. His death bids fair to precipitate a political civil war in Louisiana. Long was born of poor but honest parents in the hill country of Louisiana, forty-two years ago, and it is related of him that farm labor was never to his liking, and even at an early age he shifted it as much as possible to others. He first held office in 1918, becoming Louisiana railroad commissioner at that time.

What States Are Buying Most?—

Quite an interesting summary of the buying done in various states during the first six months of 1935, appears in one of the leading business magazines the past week. The ranking of states in the order of their buying in the following fields is given: Passenger automobiles, household refrigerators, ordinary life insurance, electric power, heavy construction contracts issued, and the income of farms. The first five states bought 36.7 per cent of the passenger cars. These states were: New York, Pennsylvania, California and Michigan tying for third place and Ohio. With a percentage of 41.8 of the total sales of refrigerators, were New York, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Ohio and California. Five states accounted for one-half of the ordinary life insurance sales. New York alone accounted for $658,500,000 out of a total for the United States of $3,255,500,000. Pennsylvania is again second, followed by Illinois, California and Ohio. New York also leads in electrical power output and in heavy construction contracts, followed in each instance by California. In power output, pennsylvania, Ohio and Illinois are second, third and fourth; while in heavy construction, it is Illinois, Ohio and Michigan. Iowa leads in farm income, followed by California, Illinois, Texas and Minnesota. The total value of farm income for the country is $2,956,000,000 against $657,300,000 for heavy construction. It will be noted that California is the only state to appear among the first five on each count. New York and Ohio and Illinois are there five times: while Pennsylvania is recorded in four instances. Michigan shows twice in the first five, and Minnesota, Iowa and Texas, once each. Texas is thus the only Southern State to be listed among the first five in these important classifications. She takes her place four times in the first ten states, while Tennessee appears among the first ten under the head of heavy construction contracts, due probably to Government operations. We wish we could give, but do not have, the figures giving the combined buying power of the Southern States.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

It is recorded with deep regret that Rev. J. E. Franks, whose improvement from the illness of a year was recorded in last week's SUN, had a relapse and was carried to the hospital for an operation on September 5th. His condition since the operation is reported as favorable as can be expected. Many SUN readers will join in prayer for the restoration of health to this good man.

Rev. T. E. White, Sanford, N. C., under date of September 6th, writes: "Plans have been completed for the dedication of our church at Biscoe the fifth Sunday in this month. Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, is to preach the dedicatory sermon. There is no indebtedness on the church and no money to be raised for the building. We are hoping for a good day."

Rev. F. Ervin Hyde, who has been pastor of our Monticello Church the past three years and who graduated from Elon College a year ago and who did post-graduate work at Duke School of Religion, Duke University, the past year, has accepted the pastorate of our Sanford and Shallow Well Churches. We congratulate this pastorate upon securing the services of Brother Hyde and bespeak a happy relationship between pastor and people.

Rev. G. D. Hunt, pastor of our Lanett, Ala., Church, under date of September 5th, writes: "Next Sunday is our Home-Coming Day and revival services will follow. Rev. A. C. Nelson will have charge of the revival. We are expecting a good meeting. We need it. Pray for us. Our church is now out of debt." We congratulate Pastor Hunt and his good people of Lanett in clearing this indebtedness of long standing and rejoice with him in this splendid achievement.

A devoted member of one of our churches pens: "Our church here has not prospered very much for the last three years. There are never any evangelistic sermons and never any opportunity for receiving members." The last sentence of that quotation made the first one superfluous. Whenever a church ceases to be evangelistic and to invite and urge those who are non-church-members to accept their Lord as Saviour and Redeemer and become members, that church just cannot grow.

All readers of THE SUN and friends of Elon College will rejoice at the great opening of the College; more college students having enrolled to date than at any previous opening during the forty-five years' history of the institution. Dormitory spaces are crowded and more room has to be provided, though the Publishing House has been re-conditioned and fitted and now gives room for twenty-four students. We congratulate Dr. Smith and his co-workers over this achievement and the fine prospect for a successful college year.

After our notes had gone in for last week's SUN, we were advised that our Holland, Va., Church had called Rev. Carl R. Key to become its pastor and that he had accepted. Carl graduated with distinction from Elon two years ago and has taken his degree with high honor in the Vanderbilt School of Religion, Nashville, Tenn. He comes to his pastorate well equipped, and we predict for him and our Holland Church a happy and eventful relationship. He is a member of our Western North Carolina Conference.

The following from The Gospel Herald, Rush, New York, is a message of a beloved brother from our Eastern Virginia Conference and will be read with interest: "We recently received a nice long letter from Brother M. W. Butler of Conshohocken, Pa. Brother Butler is just finishing his eighth year as pastor of our Gulph Mills Church. This, with a previous pastorate there of seven years makes fifteen years in all on this one field. Brother Butler's letters are always so cheery and helpful."

While so much agitation and propaganda for Communism is going on in the United States, we should take to heart the fruits of Communism in Russia where it holds full sway under the power of the Soviet Government. In this connection it is difficult to find the situation better summed up than in the words of Hon. Alfred E. Smith, former candidate for President of the United States, who says: "In Russia a man exists only to amass wealth for the state. His identity is lost as completely as a drop of water in a glass of wine. In Russia there is no great difference between an animal and a man."

It has just come to our attention that our dearly beloved and universally esteemed brother, Dr. Martyn Summerbell, has resigned the presidency of Starkey Seminary. After thirty-seven years of distinguished service in this capacity and as preacher and lecturer to colleges and universities throughout the country, our beloved friend has certainly earned his retirement from active service. In spite of his eighty-eight years, we cannot think of Dr. Summerbell other than as a man of vigor, activity and alive to every cause of progress and righteousness. The whole CHRISTIAN SUN family will join the editor in sending this faithful man of God this token of lasting gratitude and love for his contribution to the church and the kingdom of God. Long may he remain on the earth a benediction and a blessing to the hundreds and thousands who hold him in affectionate regard.

Our felicitations to Rosemont Church, Norfolk, Va., and heartiest congratulations to its beloved pastor in rounding out ten years of a pastorate seemingly crowned with successful achievement in every undertaking. That is some record for ten years of service revealed from the personal records of the pastor as printed under the heading, "Rosemont Church," in this week's SUN. Every interest of our fellowship, both of Conference and Convention, as well as the local church, is accorded interest and cooperation by Pastor Morgan, and this, in a measure, counts for the happy relationship that exists between him and his people. Just mark it when and where you will, the pastor that looks after the enterprises and claims of the church comes to be held in loving esteem, and the pastor who neglects or is indifferent to the enterprises of the church loses out sooner or later. That may be taken as an invariable rule.

We make our manners to the editor of The Gospel Herald, Rush, New York. Its July number very graciously carries the following comment: "To our Christian Church people I am happy to say that we still have a publication which carries the same spirit and intimacy which we used to know in our old Herald. That paper is THE CHRISTIAN SUN, published each week at Richmond, Va. Under its title it says, 'Representing the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches.' This noted Christian Church paper is now in its 87th year. The beloved Dr. J. O. Atkinson is the editor. THE CHRISTIAN SUN continually contains news items concerning our brethren in the north and west as well as the south. The subscription price is $1 for six months or $2 for one year. Send your subscription to the Managing Editor, J. T. Kernodle, 1536 E. Broad St., Richmond, Va., or write him for sample copies. This paper is so good that we refrain from trying to describe it so just send for a copy and be convinced for yourself."

RECEIVED ON SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Several weeks ago we sent out a circular letter to a number of delinquent subscribers. Some of these responded almost immediately, but the greater number have ignored the letter entirely. It is hard to believe that there are so many members of our church that are indifferent to its activities. Certainly there must be some other reason. If you are one of those who received one of these letters and have not answered it, will you not do so at once. I am not asking this as a favor to me or to Dr. Atkinson, or the others that are giving of their lives to make your paper possible, but because you owe it to your church and to yourself, and because your support is absolutely necessary if your paper is to survive. Your church paper is your responsibility. What are you going to do about it?

To those who have made remittances, I and the rest of the SUN organization are grateful. They are given below.

Very truly yours,

A CORRECTION.

The managing editor is sorry that the item in "Notes and Personals" last week, stating that our Holland, Va., Church was without a pastor escaped his attention till after the issue was off the press. Our Holland Church is decidedly not without a pastor, our young friend and brother, Rev. Carl R. Key having recently accepted a call there. We wish for church and pastor a most successful year of service.

General Council News

By Herbert D. Rugg.

175,000 "WINDOWS."

"Windows," a beautifully illustrated twenty-four page publication of the Commission on Missions, will be available this fall for distribution to every family affiliated with the Congregational and Christian churches. A hundred and seventy-five thousand copies are being printed.

"Christian Action" or "Windows Looking Out Upon the Gospel in Action" would be a descriptive title. The publication presents major fields in which the churches through their missionary agencies are at work.

"Windows" is an interesting magazine without ads. It is not a "folder," "booklet" nor a "pamphlet." The size is eight and a half by eleven and a half inches. It is printed throughout by the rotogravure process used for the brown pictoral art sections of newspapers and many magazines. This relatively recent process whereby the ink on the printing surface is distributed into minute cup-like depressions instead of being spread over raised dots as on ordinary "cuts" or engravings is greatly superior for printing illustrations. Many of the illustrations in "Windows" are from specially taken photographs. The use of rotogravure in "Windows" is justified by its unusual pictoral values.

The many-sided comprehensiveness of Christian or gospel "action" is to be seen through "Windows." The little rural home-mission church is revealed to be struggling against diverse although equally pressing problems in different sections. In the Rosebud country of south-central South Dakota (where many a summer rose does not bud) it is disclosed that seven years of drought with grass-hoppers and black blizzards of dust and sand have been endured by the Indian, the German-speaking and English-speaking churches. In North Carolina, thirty miles from the palatial resorts of Pinehurst and Southern Pines, is shown Providence chapel near Spies. Here many of the houses are built of logs, oxen are often used as draft animals and children welcome Bible School although some have to "chop cotton" from dawn till nine in order to come. While at Otis, Mass., in the Berkshire Hille, is to be seen the township church built in 1813 when the population was over 1,200. It is now 415. "The church at Otis seeks to fulfill its historic role as the servant of the community by welcoming all faiths beneath its roof. For a year mass was held in its vestry for the Roman Catholic boys in a nearby C. C. C. camp." A summer camp for Jewish boys provides the occasion for at least one inter-faith service each year.

Attractive vistas are opened upon other fields in which the churches are serving,—abroad in medicine, in social service, in agricultural development, in education and in promotion of Christian unity; at home in religious education and the church school in higher education, in social security for the ministry, in peace crusading and other social actions. "Windows" shows beautifully as well as truthfully.

"Windows" is in succession to the "Guest Books of 1929, 1930 and 1931"; to "A Journey of Discovery" 1932; to "The Pioneers" 1933 and to the expanded 1934 October number of "The Missionary Herald." Like its predecessors, it may be used for daily reading in the home or as the basis for group discussions. It lends itself to dramatization and provides material for posters.

The office of the Southern Convention, Elon College, N. C.. the offices of the State Conferences and of the Commission on Missions will fill orders from churches for "Windows." There will be no charge. The copies for states west of the Rockies will be shipped to their Conference offices by boat through the Panama Canal in order to lower transportation costs.

The committee which prepared "Windows" comprised the Rev. John R. Scotford, New York, N. Y., representing the Commission on Missions, chairman; Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Dayton, O., representing the Home Boards; the Rev. Leonard M. Outerbridge, Boston, Mass., representing the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; the Rev. Dr. Stephen A. Lloyd, Lansing, Mich., representing the State Conferences.

The symbolism of the cover picture selected by the committee should be none the less effective if it is known that the apparently happily married couple looking out of a casement window are Mr. Scotford's son and daughter, John R., Jr., and Ruth. John Jr. is a student at Dartmouth; Ruth has graduated from the University of Chicago and will teach this coming year in the John C. Campbell Folk School, Brasstown, N. C.

A LEADER PASSES ON.

Dr. William H. Hainer, forty-six years pastor of the First Christian Church, Irvington, N. J., and since 1934 pastor emeritus, died in the Presbyterian Hospital, Newark, N. J., Tuesday, September 10th.

Dr. Hainer had just completed fifty years in the ministry. He was ordained in 1885 and had a pastorate at New Bedford, Mass., before coming to Irvington. He was born May 2, 1863 in Newmarket, Ont., his father serving in the ministry of the Ontario Christian Churhes for fifty years. He was one of six brothers to be ordained and he had two half-brothers who also studied for the ministry. At Irvington he succeeded one of his brothers, the late Rev. L. W. Hainer.

At the celebration of the forty-fifth anniversary of his pastorate, Dr. Hainer reported he had preached 4,300 sermons in Irvington, had married 1,300 couples, had officiated at about the same number of funerals and had christened children and grand-children of those he had married. At the anniversary he recalled the text of his first sermon: "For I determined not to know anything among you, save Christ, and Him crucified," and he said it had continued to always be his favorite Scripture passage.

Dr. Hainer for thirty-five years was president of the New Jersey Christian Conference until 1931 when it united to form the Middle Atlantic Congregational and Christian Conference. In 1933 he was elected honorary moderator of the united conference. He was an organizer and for many years president of the interdenominational Ministerial Association of Irvington.

When he came to Irvington, it was a village of 1,800 and the church numbered eighty members who worshipped in a small frame building. Today Irvington has 57,000 while in addition to the stone edifice of the First Christian Church and its Lyons Avenue Mission, there are two daughter churches, Second of Irvington and Hilton of Maplewood, with a total membership of 1,050.

Dr Hainer was educated at the Christian Biblical seminary when it was at Stanfordville, N. Y., later becoming a trustee. He had part in arranging for its removal in 1907 to become the Divinity School of Defiance College, Ohio. In 1887 he married Miss Elizabeth A. Rowen, of Newmarket, Ontario, by whom he is survived. He is also survived by his daughter, Mrs. C. B. Snitzer, of Pasadena, Calif., and an eighteen-year-old grandson, William. His funeral service was in charge of the Rev. Edward H. Koster who succeeded him last year as pastor in Irvington and the Rev. Calvin J. Felton, pastor of the Second Christian Church, Irvington.

COUNTING THE COST.

Some members of the church apparently attach little importance to gospel matters. They react indifferently to what the Bible demands of a Christian. They put religion on the siding and leave the main line open for business, pleasure or lust. It may be that they have invested so little in the kingdom of heaven that the whole affair seems cheap. They have taken out an accident policy they hope they will never need. They use the church about like some people in Western Oklahoma use a storm cellar—they get in when they see a cyclone coming.

In Ephesus some men who practiced magical arts came under the influence of Paul's preaching. These were about the hardest, crokedest prospects the gospel ever operated on. They had too much to give up to normally become Christians. They were highly and expensively educated in chicanery. Their books were rare and valuable. The profits of their deception were heavy. Some of them became Christians. They did not sell their books. They burned thousands of dollars worth of them. Large incomes suddenly ceased. It was an investment in gospel blessings. They put a high price on the gospel. They would not be expected to be less diligent as Christians than they had been as magicians. They had too much invested. It may be that a lot of us do not have enough invested. We gave up too little when we accepted the gospel. Repentance is designed to take care of this situation.—Exchange.

THE BIBLE NEEDS NO WITNESS.

In a letter to the New York Times, Dr. John Haynes Holmes recently offered a protest at the representation of the discovery of porcelain archives, almost 3,000 years old, as "of vast importance in corroboration of Bible stories." "Are we never to learn," asks Dr. Holmes, "that the Bible is itself a first-class historical document, or collection of documents, which no more needs confirmation than Thucydides or Tacitus? . . . Instead of saying that these archaeological deposits in Palestine confirm the Bible, why not say that the Bible confirms these deposits? It is the 'porcelain archives' just unearthed that need authentication, not the Biblical text. I count it high time that we drop our subconscious suspicion of the Bible and accept it without reserve for what it is—one of the most precious and trustworthy records of human history now in possession of the race."

I confess that I am always aware of a little annoyance when I hear Jesus described as an optimist, in the sense we commonly give to the word. It would be quite as true to say that he was a pessimist. The kind of optimism in which we deal—which always sees prosperity around the corner and insists that the clouds are rolling by even though the barometer is falling, that optimism is hope in spite of the facts; just as pessimism is always despair in spite of the facts. And in both cases we are fooling ourselves. If we must label Jesus, then call him a realist, one who looks at all the facts without being afraid of them—and that is what we should all be.—Ex.

I am persuaded that every time a man smiles—but much more so when he laughs—it adds something to this fragment of life.—Lawrence Sterne.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

WHY THE CHURCH?

What difference does the church make? What distinction is there between the church and a fraternal order or a benevolent society? In what particular do church members differ from non-church members? In brief, why the church?

An old question, it is true, but needed to be asked and answered now and again. For unless the church is making a difference, why should it be supported, sustained and attended? And if church members are not different from non-church members, why be a member? In brief, then, the Founder of the church differs from the founder of any other institution, fraternal, benevolent or otherwise on the earth. "I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." These are the words of the Lord. The why and the wherefore were evidently in His mind, and thus, through the Spirit, He said: "Go, preach my Gospel; and, lo, I am with you unto the end." And again He said: "Ye shall be witnesses unto me." There, dear reader, you have the why of the church. It is the body of Christ crying with His voice, working with His hands, walking on His feet, longing with His strength, that His gospel shall be preached and the testimony of His saving power shall be given to the world.

Unless, therefore, the church is a witness-bearer of our Lord, it has no good reason for being, and only as it serves as a witness-bearer of our Lord is it a real church. There is a very significant declaration in the Book of Revelation by John. There was war in heaven and they drove Satan and his imps out of heaven "by the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony." There you have it. As Satan and the host of evil were driven out of heaven, so must they be driven out of this earth "by the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony." There is no other saving message for this world and for the souls of men—"The blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony." When one has accepted as his very own the efficacy of the blood and believes with his whole heart unto righteousness and accepts Jesus Christ as Saviour and Redeemer, then one is prepared to give the word of testimony. Only as that word of testimony is given through sound of voice and attitude of life is the Church of the Living God built up, and only through that will the church live and do its distinctive work in the world. A church member differs from the non-church member in that he testifies, or should testify, that Jesus Christ is an All-Sufficient Savious and in Him is life, even the more abundant life.

A TRIBUTE WELL DESERVED.

The United Presbyterian prints the following that certainly makes good reading, because it seems a deserved compliment to the merit and worth of a great woman, Mrs. Anne Morrow Lindbergh:

> "In bestowing an honorary degree on her, the president of Smith College said, 'Anne Morrow Lindbergh, B. A., Smith, 1928, Hubbard gold medalist of the National Geographic Society, poet, pilot, navigator, radio operator, co-explorer with her husband of the unflown air routes of five continents and two oceans, who has proved to an admiring world the compatibility of imagination and practical dexterity of sensitiveness and fortitude, of modesty and daring—the pride of her college, the glory of her country,' The Philadelphia Inquirer speaking of this tribute says, 'For these exthaordinary achievements Mrs. Lindbergh received well-deserved honor, but far transcending them in the minds of millions the world over is the intangible contribution of her spiritual nobility as displayed in the darkest hour a mother can be called to suffer."

ITS SPIRITUAL POWER.

As long as any Christian brotherhood or any individual depends on a spiritual power and uses it in living, that brotherhood or that individual is certain to succeed; and usually is marvelously so. With a new conception of spiritual power and a complete surrender to the dictates of the Holy Spirit, the early Christians set out to win the world for Christian service. They had no magnificent churches nor any up-to-date church machinery or organizations. They had no social or political prestige, no high-class music, but they did have spiritual power. Certainly the church needs money, and much more than it gets; and it needs comfortable buildings, along with other helpful agencies; but how often am I, here and there, forced to the conclusion that too many brotherhoods and too many individuals have already placed too much emphasis on these human instrumentalities and much too little on spiritual power. I am not at all surprised that a great percentage of our modern American youth are not thinking on these things. They have grown into young manhood and young womanhood with little conception of anything much beyond a social gospel and a social service. How these young people are going to look at God and accept God as a supreme intelligence and a helper in times of need when they are expected to assume the responsibilities of life is a momentous question to me. How are we to get this generation above the mere forms of worship and back into a real consciousness of God and the joy of Christian service is a question that is calling for the very best that is within us.

DR. SUMMERBELL RESIGNS.

At the annual meeting of the Starkey Seminary Board of Trustees held on June 22nd, Dr. Martyn Summerbell resigned the Presidency of Starkey Seminary after having faithfully served in that capacity for 37 years.

Dr. Summerbell has been in poor health for most of the past year and this together with his advancing years brought his decision to resign. In regretfully accepting the resignation the Board created and bestowed upon Dr. Summerbell the honorary office of President Emeritus for the remainder of his natural life.

Dr. Summerbell will be 88 in December and Mrs. Summerbell is 81. He is unquestionably the most noted living personality of our old Christian Church. The lives of Dr. and Mrs. Summerbell have been filled with many unknown burdens and we hope that they will now be permitted to have many restful and happy years yet together.

Professor James A. Long of the Starkey Seminary faculty was appointed Acting President for the coming year and Mr. Long is now continually engaged in planning for the next year's work.

Starkey Seminary was founded in 1839 by pioneer Christian Church leaders of the New York state section. Its total influence for good is beyond estimation. The present tuition charge is $500 for the year. This amount includes board and room. The great number of present-day public High Schols has cut into the natural enrollment of a private boarding school such as Starkey Seminary. Nevertheless a private school will always retain certain distinct advantages over the public school. It fosters the college environment and atmosphere with emphasis upon individual student attention and supervised study.—From The Gospel Herald.

HE WAS WILL ROGERS' PASTOR.

In 1894, at twenty, I took a backwoods circuit in the Indian territory. The seven regular preaching points that first year "estimated" that they could pay a salary of seventy-five dollars for the year, and believe it or not, they actually paid it—all but forty dollars. The $100 from the missionary scciety enabled us to carry on.

In 1898 we married on the promise of a salary of $300 plus $100 missionary money. In those days the missionary society never failed us. But that first year of our married life we received, after giving credit for everything from jack rabbits to pumpkins, about $150 from the charge, but we didn't starve—"the ravens" were right on the job. That year we had on our list Mr. and Mrs. Clem Rogers and family, all Cherokee Indian citizens.

And one of the boys was the now-famous Will Rogers, writer and comedian." We found while on the Ollagah charge that a visit to that humble Cherokee home always meant a sack of apples, potatoes, horse feed, or perhaps a dollar or two in money. Our predecessor on the Oolagah charge was out one day trying to raise the money to pay the insurance on the little church and he was having a hard time of it, as twenty-five cents was about the largest contribution he had received. When he met Will Rogers' father and presented the cause, Mr. Rogers said, "How much is the insurance? How much you got?" "Well, here is the rest of it." That is the kind of a home from which Will Rogers came.—Reprinted from The Christian Advocate (N. Y.), Dec. 28, 1933.

CRUISING IN THE LAND OF THE SUNNY NIGHT.

By H. E. Rountree.

"Alaska and Progress."

Alaska is known as the "land of gold." However, her yearly output of fish is many times the value of gold it produces. Millions of dollars have been invested in the salmon canneries that line the coast from the southeast to Bering Sea. Other fish besides salmon also play an important part in Alaska's canneries. Its cod, halibut, crab, shrimp, and herring are also canned and destined for the markets of the world.

All canneries are operated on essentially the same principle. The fish are caught in traps, and hauled to the canneries in scows where they are cut up, cleaned and packed in cans, all of which work is done by automatic machinery. The output of a single cannery runs from fifty to two hundred and fifty cases a day, depending upon the run of fish. A case contains 48 cans. The fishing season is from July to September.

A strange thing we have learned about these salmon (red); they come into these inlets and streams in July and August to spawn. When they spawn they die, leaving only the spawn to develop and resupply the waters. Also during this period they do not feed at all. They will not be attracted by bait or food of any kind. Seining and trapping is the only method by which they can be caught. We are told that those that escape the traps and play around a lot are apt to grow very lean during the season. The government, of course, regulates the trapping so as to allow enough fish to escape the fishers that the supply may not be depleted.

In addition to the fisheries and gold, Alaska is the land of fur; fox, mink, otter, deer, sheep, goat and polar bear. In the early days these were all trapped or hunted. In these days the fox and the mink have become quite a business. There are farms of these everywhere and at every place of stop furriers offer a most attractive display of the finest furs in the world at the lowest prices.

The white people in Alaska are engaged largely in stores, shops, etc., in the towns and in the conduct of the larger industries such as mining, lumbering, etc.

At present there are only 60,000 people within her boundaries of 590,000 square miles, but by these people it is making advances very rapidly, whereas their transportation was by boat or dog-trail, requiring weeks and lives to go from one place to another, now the chief method of transportation is by boat, train, and airplanes that wing their way across the territory in increasing numbers,—carrying prospectors over the same trails in a few hours that once took weeks to do.

Fine new accredited schools are in every town. The welfare of the young people is especially cared for and some of them are going out into the great colleges in the states for higher education. The Alaskan boasts of these things. They are proud of her people and that they are moving forward and upward to the glory of a better man and a better country is a source of credit and praise.

A PRAYER.

Teach us, Our Father, so to bear ourselves toward others that they may think of us in kind and grateful ways and including us in their prayers, thank God for some light and gladness we have shared with them as they have shared their friendship with us. In His Name, Whom remembering we thank God to the uttermost.—Amen. —G. G. Atkins.

GOD LOVES THE HILLS.

August 26th, Brother Sorrell and some of his good people of Third Avenue Christian Church, Danville, Va., came to our hills for a service at the new field—Ivy Hill. A group of our people from Elk Spur went over for the service at Ivy Hill. There, Miss Mitchell who has charge of that field, had some of her people gathered for the service. All were glad indeed to see Brother Sorrell and his family once more among the hills. It was a glad reunion, and a sweet service. Brother Sorrell brought a simple and soul-stirring message and promised those people who are shut in at Ivy Hill a church if it be God's will.

About 90 are on roll now and they think that a few hundred can be reached by a church at Ivy Hill. But they have almost a hundred under fifteen years of age. As we looked upon these bright young faces as they looked up to those who claimed to have Christ, we saw a question in their eyes. Had that question been put into words it undoubtedly would have been this—"Will you give us your Christ?" Our Christian friends of Danville felt this too. They felt the pressure of God's hand as He touched their hearts and said once more—"Feed my sheep." They testified of God's love and found it hard to do under the questioning look of those young people who have no church and know not God. Those Christian mothers thought of their dear children back in Danville with a good church and Sunday school to attend, with all city advantages and looked upon these mountain children with deep feeling. It was a heart-warming service. I wonder how God feels about these young lives?

Miss Mitchel wept as she saw the task that God had given into her hands. She begged for the prayers of God's people everywhere. The path that lies before her is rugged and steep, but she believes—"All things are possible to him that believeth," and that—"He knoweth the way that I take." May God bless and guide her.

One of our Christian friends from Danville asked me how far Ivy Hill was from the nearest church. I looked over to where the laurel-clad peak rose majestically against the sky, and told her the nearest church was beyond that mountain. To that she replied, "Someone will be held responsible for these souls." Ah, if we believe the Bible we must also believe the statement of this dear lady.

And now I want to thank those who came to help and encourage Miss Mitchel at her new post and I also want to ask your continued prayers for the mountain work. It was an inspiration to be with such sincere Christian people as those of Danville. I feel now that God really loves our hills. He has a way of letting us go just as far as we can get alone, and then sending us help. And once more I have lived to see a girl filled with a desire to help human lives, come into our hills. I recall the day long ago when the first girl came to pave the way for all this work. Iola Hedgepeth came, saying she wanted to teach those who were not being taught. I wanted to see once more the coming of the first Christian missionary to our hills. I wanted the picture to be perfect, so I said, "Miss Mitchel needs a horse." Dear friends said, "And she shall have one."

So now, as the maple leaves turn red and gold, a girl will ride again these lonely mountain trails that silently wind their way from one humble home to another—and hungry souls will be fed.

The new field is shut in as much as this place was, I think. Miss Mitchel has a place to board away back among the hills, and is now walking a mile to the mail box each day to get her mail. Remember that when you have time to write and drop her a letter lest she walk that mile some day to find no mail. Victoria of the Hills.

ROSEMONT CHURCH.

Rosemont Christian Church celebrated the tenth anniversary of their pastor, Rev. J. F. Morgan at a special service on Wednesday night, September 4, 1935, when a number of the members spoke on the subject, "Good Things Rosemont Has Done the Last Ten Years."

The private records of Pastor Morgan show that during the ten years he has served as pastor of the Rosemont Church, he has preached 1224 times, received 300 members, witnessed 255 professions of faith in Christ, baptized 173 persons, conducted 292 prayer meetings, delivered 126 special addresses, conducted 116 funerals, performed 129 marriage ceremonies, made 12,733 pastoral calls, and has conducted in his own and other churches 28 special revival meetings.

Correspondent.

Some of the Good Things That Have Come to Rosemont Within the Last Ten Years.

With our hearts filled with gratitude and love, we come to celebrate this happy occasion. For Mr. and Mrs. Morgan, we give praise to our heavenly Father for bringing to us such a team as our leaders. In fact we do not believe there could be another such leadership anywhere.

We come to express our appreciation of the past ten years in our church and civic history with pride, for the Morgans have indeed helped make Rosemont Christian Church a lighthouse, not only to our own membership, but to "the stranger within our gates" as well.

"Where there is no vision the people perish." Truly Mr. Morgan has ever had that message burned into our hearts. He has a smile, a hearty handshake, and an address so inspiring that our young people feel an urge to attend the worship services of our church, as well as the meetings of the Christian Endeavor Society. The Morgans live in such peace and harmony that everywhere people notice, "How beautiful to dwell in the presence of the Lord."

Mr. Morgan gives to every needy cause, ever helpful, ever ready at all times. Our beautiful church is surely a lovely edifice, but without a pastor whose life is in keeping with God, it would be a failure. With hearts of joy we come here to worship, knowing that at each service our souls will be fed, our minds enlightened, and noble thoughts inspired within us.

In the Woman's Circle, Mrs. Morgan is our guiding hand. She is a lovely neighbor, a wonderful personality, a splendid speaker, a true Christian, and a tireless worker for her church, school, neighbors and community. Without Mrs. Morgan our church would not seem complete. Even their children, Charlotte and Nelson, give their talents to the Lord, thus helping other children to see the need of doing the same thing.

Our hearts are sad because of loved ones who have crossed the vale of shadows within the last ten years, and other things have saddened us along the journey, and yet during these depressing days and financial worries, Mr. Morgan has kept shining brightly within our hearts the vision of Jesus and His love. This knowledge is more to us than all the silver and gold in the world.

Mrs. D. D. Johnston.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Conference year is rapidly coming to a close. Within two months the Eastern Virginia Conference will be in session at Franklin Christian Church. In view of the proximity of this date, it is important that the churches of the Conference bestir themselves to meet the Conference Apportionments. Copies of the CHRISTIAN ANNUAL have been distributed among the churches, and the table of apportionments appears in the minutes of the Conference. If the pastors and other church leaders will take the time to study this table and bring the various apportionments to the attention of the churches, it is not too late to make a rally and substantially increase the amount raised for the various enterprises.

Attention has been called to the changes in the methods of distributions of the funds raised by the churches. Heretofore the money has been sent to Conference in a lump sum and the Committee on Finance made recommendation as to the division. The money for Convention purposes was sent to the Convention Treasurer and divided by the Convention officials. Under the present plan the money raised is designated for certain funds by the local church. Therefore it is important for each church to be guided by the apportionment table printed in the Conference minutes.

Many churches have already sent in money for Missions, Elon College, Superannuation and possibly other funds. All such money should be credited on the report blank or church letter sent to Conference. The Treasurer of each church should report to the Secretary of the local church the amounts sent in to these various enterprises. This information can then be accurately recorded in the Report sent to Conference.

Every Fund represented in the Conference Apportionments is important. The apportionments should be raised in full and should be distributed according to the printed table. However, if a church should fail to raise the full apportionment, special care should be taken to see that two of the funds are paid in full, namely, the Conference Fund and the Convention Fund. In the Eastern Virginia Conference these two funds, if raised in full, will barely meet the requirements of the Conference Expenses and the Conference pro rata of the Convention Expenses. If the churches fail to send up these amounts in full, the Conference will not be able to pay for the ANNUALS and the other necessary expenses, and the Convention will be handicapped in meeting the necessary obligations of that body. There is no other provision made for the payment of these necessary expenses.

One might ask: Why should these two funds be regarded as preferred? If one takes the second thought one must agree that the Conference must meet the actual expenses of holding a Conference session and printing the minutes. The same is true of the Convention. No special offerings are made for this purpose. Therefore the churches should make a special effort to meet the Apportionments in full and provide the funds for carrying on the general work of the church.

The local church is the unit of support of all the general enterprises of the kingdom. Upon the development of the local church, in spiritual life and constructive program of service, depends the ultimate growth of denominational consciousness and power. The local churches in the bounds of the Southern Convention are facing a crisis. Many of the stronger churches are discouraged by their inability to pay off their indebtedness and make liberal contributions to the general enterprises of the denomination. Urgent calls are being made for increased support. The local church must be encouraged to exercise great faith and undertake a progressive program for the future. The world needs a great church as well as great institutions. The church and the institutions grow in the same field. They are mutually dependent. Help them live.

ELON OPENS.

The 1935-36 session of Elon College opened formally Tuesday, September 3rd with registration of freshmen. The registration began at 10 A. M. The freshman period closed Thursday, September 5th. Registration for upper classmen began at 10 A. M. As a part of the orientation for freshment there was an informal reception in the Y. W. C. A. Tuesday night at 8 o'clock. Wednesday night at 8 o'clock there was a general meeting for all in the Whitley Memorial Auditorium. Music was furnished by the Music Department of the college. Dean Messick, Dean Haynes, and President Smith delivered addresses. The regular class work began Friday morning for all students.

The regular Sunday program started with the Sunday School Sunday morning at 10 o'clock. The school is conducted for townspeople and college alike. Professor W. B. Terrel, Principal of the local high school, is superintendent, and Professor D. J. Bowden of the Department of Religious Education of the college is directly responsible for the college part of the Sunday School. The members of the faculty take an active part in the affairs of the Sunday School. Many of them are teachers. At 11 o'clock our first worship service for the college year was held in the chapel. President Smith spoke on "The Adventures of Faith" in particular interest and for the encouragement of first year students. Music was furnished by the community church choir under the direction of Professor Dwight Steere. Miss Chamblee, Head of the Voice Department, sang.

For one time Elon is practically filled with students. Every available space for boys is occupied. Several of the students have been cooperative in permitting three in a room. One large room has four in it. This cooperation is greatly appreciated until we can arrange additional rooms to take care of the overflow. To date 401 have registered. These are practically all regular college students. Special students in art, music, and dramatics have not yet been reported. There are enough students on the hill who have not registered to run the registration beyond the four-hundred mark.

There are no clubs run in connection with the college providing board accommodations for students. All boarding students eat in the college dining rooms. This, of course, has taxed our dining room facilities beyond capacity. The students are eating in shifts. Breakfast is served from seven to eight o'clock; lunch is served from 12:30 to 1:45; dinner is served from 6 to 7:30. The students are cooperating finely, and the situation is being handled unusually well by Miss Cowan, our dietitian, and her assistants, and strange to say, we have had no complaints about food yet. Of course, we will have for it would hardly be college if the students could not complain about food.

Every department of the college is filled with students but well provided for from the standpoint of instruction. Of this student body, practically 200 are freshmen. The freshmen class will in all probability go beyond the two-hundred mark by the time enrollment is completed. We have the largest enrollment in the history of the institution on record at this date. I think it is safe to say by the time enrollment this Fall with all specials in is completed there will be a total of at least 450.

Elon College is a Christian church institution and the church is proud of it. Yet it is open to any who may wish to take advantage of the opportunities that we offer. However, I am anxious that the members of our own church come here for their college training. We are prepared to meet their needs. If we are not you may rest assured that we will be. I wish that all the readers of this article would take time to sit down and write out a list of all the members of the church or Sunday school who will be seniors in high school this year and mail this list to me. Be sure to give the correct addresses. I want to introduce Elon College to them and acquaint them with the special values to be had at Elon in training for teaching all grades, music, law, medicine, and special religious work.

This is to invite the members of the church to visit the college, make a survey of the institution, and decide as to its merits. This invitation is earnest and cordial.

TENTH ANNIVERSARY AT ROSEMONT.

Rosemont Christian Church celebrated the tenth anniversary of their pastor, Rev. J. F. Morgan, on the first Sunday in September and at a special service on Wednesday night, September 4th. This special service was led by Mr. W. H. Farrow, who had as his subject, "Good things that have come to Rosemont within the last ten years." A number of the members spoke on the theme, expressing not only the good things that have come to the church, but their sincere appreciation of their pastor, Mrs. Morgan, and the children as well. At the close of this special service, the treasurer, H. L. Bondurant, presented the pastor with a very nice purse of money, for which the pastor tried to give thanks, but was so filled with gratitude and surprise that he could hardly express himself. The purse and the many expressions of appreciation were a complete surprise to him, having been planned without his knowledge.

The records of the church showed that about $70,000 had been given to the cause of Christ during the ten years, that 300 new members had been added to the church roll, a new church has been erected and paid for at a cost of $25,000, and that a new pipe organ had been given to the church by two of her members.

The treasurer also reported that the pastor's salary had been paid every week during the entire ten years, which we think is quite a record.

The church looks forward to a splendid work this fall, and hopes to better its record in the coming years.

A Story for the Children

THE BLACK KETTLE.

Bun and Bretta had walked a long way without seeing any one when they came to the black kettle. It had stopped being winter and begun being spring such a short time before that snow still lay in gray patches at the roots of the trees and some of the leaves underfoot were silvery and glistening with ice. The woods were very quiet, and Bun and Bretta were beginning to be lonesome. So they were glad when they found the black kettle. They walked round it and Bun asked:

"Why is it upside down?"

They both lay down on their stomachs and tried to look under the kettle, but they could see nothing but blackness.

"It's a magic kettle," said Bun.

"What's a magic kettle? Can you sit in it and have it carry you off like the magic carpet in my book?"

"Let's see," Bun cried, and they both pushed as hard as they could, but the kettle would not turn over.

"It isn't magic a bit," Bretta complained. "It only made our hands black."

"It is so magic. I know it is," Bun declared earnestly. "You wish and your wish comes true."

"Do it then."

Bun put his hand on the kettle, stood on one foot, and shut his eyes. "I wish—I wish—I wish I had a lump of sugar. Aunt Anne never lets me have any."

"You shouldn't wish out loud," Bretta said. "Anyway it didn't come true."

Bun went carefully through his pockets, but there was no lump of sugar in any of them. His face grew long with disappointment when he had lain down again to look under the kettle and found no sugar there either. Then he brightened.

"Magic works slow," he said. "Come on. Beat you to the house."

Two or three days later Uncle Bob called to them as he came from the woodshed. "Want to come along? I've got some work to do in the woods."

They had never seen Uncle Bob work in the woods. He worked with an auger drilling holes in the trees. Bun and Bretta thought this a very strange thing to do. And he made holes in some of the trees, not in others, and always on the south side of each one. They asked him ever so many questions but he would not answer any of them.

"Wait and see," was all he would say.

So they went back to the wagon on which he had driven them into the woods. In it there was a box full of funny little iron things and piles and piles of small deep tin pails without any handles. They set the pails out in rows and played store with them. Then they went back to Uncle Bob. "After I get through drilling a hole you can put your fingers in and pull out the chips," he said.

The chips they pulled out were moist and something like water began to trickle from the holes. After a while Uncle Bob began to drive one of the little iron spouts into each hole with a hammer. They were called spiles, he said, and Bun and Bretta brought them from the wagon for him. Then they brought the little tin pails and hung one on each spile by a hole in its edge.

"Now what?" Bretta asked, and Uncle Bob would only answer, "We'll come out again on Saturday and then you'll see."

On Saturday they saw something very strange. Bun looked into several of the pails he had hung and cried:

"Look, the pails are full of water. But it has not rained. How did they get full of water, Uncle Bob?"

"I know," Bretta exclaimed, jumping up and down. "It isn't rain, it's sap. It comes out of the trees. I heard Aunt Anne talking about it. Taste it Bun."

Bun touched his tongue cautiously to a drop that was just spilling over the top of one of the pails.

"It tastes like water," he said slowly, "only kind of sweet. I didn't know the trees were full of sweet water."

"Only some of them. Only some of the maples, Aunt Anne said. Oh, look what they're doing! They've got our black kettle."

Uncle Bob and the hired man had hoisted the kettle up and hung it on a pole which rested on two posts set upright in the ground a little way apart.

"Now you children will have plenty of work," Uncle Bob said. "We want all the wood you can find to keep the fire going. See which of you can find the most."

The fire began to crackle and glow. The hired man heaped on wood while Uncle Bob emptied pails of sap into the big barrel that stood ready.

There was a great deal for the children to do now. They brought wood and helped to poke the fire, they emptied half-full sap pails into the big pails that Uncle Bob carried to the farther trees and hung them up again, and every little while they ran to look into the black kettle. For now the sap that had been poured into it grew hotter and hotter and begun to boil.

Aunt Anne brought out a basket of lunch with a teakettle and some tin cups.

"Where are you going to get the water to make tea, Aunt Anne?" Bretta asked.

"You'll see, dear," she said. "I'm going to make tea the way the Indians did sometimes when they were boiling sap."

She filled the kettle with cold sap and propped it over the fire. When it boiled she filled the teapot and then poured cups of maple-syrup tea for the men. The children tasted it—hot and delicately sweet—but mostly they drank the sap cold.

"The sap from each tree has its own special

KATHARINE MIX.

By Miss D. P. Cushing, News Editor.

No movies for six years—and she never even missed them! That is the testimony of an American nurse, Miss Katharine Mix, R. N., graduate of the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, who is back in the U. S. A. for furlough after service in Wai, India, under the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

Miss Mix, whose home is in Worcester, is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. C. H. Mix, Kensington Heights, that city. She returned to her homeland via China and Japan, leaving March 7th and reaching San Francisco April 30th, hence with stop-overs to Worcester and Boston, arriving here Friday, May 17th.

It isn't quite true that there are no movies at all in Wai, which is an orthodox Hindu city of 10,000 population and 150 miles from Bombay, for there are Indian talkies in the Marathi tongue. But they begin at ten o'clock in the evening and run until two in the morning! Admission is two annas for an ordinary place or something around two cents in U. S. A. currency. The subjects are usually historical dramas and a band which weaves a few strains from occidental songs into Indian airs, plays over and over the same tune before the show begins and between the reels.

No radio at Wai, either, at least not at the hospital or the nurses' quarters, but Miss Mix would like to take one back with her even though programs from Bombay are not 100 per cent and you need to sit up all night to get music out of the air from England, Germany or America.

As for food—the thing that is scarce is meat. You can only eat mutton or chicken in Wai, for cows are never killed because they are sacred. Miss Mix hinted that some of the staff feel a definite distaste at the mere sight of a chicken! They are able to raise quite a number of fresh vegetables, fruit is plentiful, and they are supplied with buffalo milk which isn't bad when you get used to it. One of the delicacies in fruit, foreign to America, is the "sita purl" or custard apple, a soft, delicate juicy fruit. Fortunately the hospital has its own well so water does not have to be boiled as in most places in the Orient.

When any serious epidemic, such as cholera, breaks out in the district everyone at the hospital is inoculated and hundreds of villagers come flocking into the clinic for inoculations. The doctors from the American Hospital go out to relieve the suffering and help check the plague, but none of the victims are brought into the institution for obvious reasons. Great care is taken at these times as to what fruit or vegetables are eaten for no one knows where the plague started.

All the diseases man is heir to seem to come to Wai Hospital, with a predominance, possibly, of gastric ulcers. Victims gored by bullocks might be termed the substitute for automobile accident patients in the United States although they have the last named even in Wai.

To Wai Hospital come Hindus, Christians, and Mohammedans with occasionally a sprinkling of other races. Untouchability or caste cannot enter this house of healing, for there all men are brothers and treated alike. Brahmin patients are the strictest about not eating anything touched by out-caste hands (such as Miss Mix's) but even that is fast changing and they are breaking away from stiff adherence to religious taboos in the interests of getting well.

You will find no imposing edifice at Wai, no gleaming white walls, and no sound-proof floors. You may even find patients under the bed for certain old timers are more used to sleeping on the floor than a la West, points out Miss Mix. Cooking pots, pans, and even rolls of bedding or wood may be parked on the floor.

"Sickness is a family affair," explains Miss Mix. "All the relatives come with the patient and they do the cooking for him. Of course, we try to guide the diet but, unlike hospitals in America, we do not feed the patients ourselves at Wai. This would be perhaps one of the strangest parts of our life to a nurse here in America."

The first meal in the day that Miss Mix has is "choti hazri" before seven, what we would call breakfast, consisting of possibly orange juice, egg, toast and tea. Then comes "breakfast" at 11 o'clock in the forenoon. Inevitable comes a "bit of tea" in late afternoon and dinner at night. There is little leisure time in the hospital for the staff and their duties many, but Miss Mix seems not to have missed the social whirl of Worcester or Boston probably because she loves her work and gets satisfaction from seeing suffering relieved.

For over a year Miss Mix has been the only American, indeed the only foreign nurse, at Wai, and the the hospital is fully staffed, there are only two foreign families, both American, Drs. Rose and Lester Beals, and Dr. and Mrs. Walter F. Hume; and three foreign single women, one American nurse, Miss Mix; one English nurse, Miss Florence M. Ridley, graduate of Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, and one Canadian educator, Miss Jean P. Gordon. These are the only foreigners in the entire city of Wai.

Although 42 degrees above may not seem unduly cold in New England it feels like sub-zero weather in tropical India, where there is no means of heating the buildings even by fireplaces, at least at Wai Hospital. Mornings are chilly, noons hot and evenings chilly again. At the Wai Hospital are five graduate Indian nurses, three girls and two young men, as well as eight student nurses who, although there is no training school there, are learning much from practical experience.

"Human nature is the same the world around it seems to me," said Mis Mix with a smile, when asked about the people among whom she works. Some girls take quickly and effectively to nursing, others are slow and hard to train. Some have even dispositions, some are temperamental even as you and I.

An interesting development at the hospital is the training of illiterate mid-wives from the villages. These women though unbelievably ignorant, are always the ones who care for the mothers and babies at birth. Health officers under the government teach them the most elementary ideas of anatomy and they are brought to Wai hospital to witness at least 20 deliveries. What are they taught? "If we do no more than to get them to wash their hands, we will be doing something," declares Dr. Rose Beals. The women are cautioned to boil the few simple instruments they use and above all to let the patient alone if things are not coming along normally and to get her immediately to the hospital or into the hands of a physician.

Miss Mix was born in Cliftondale, Mass., and educated at Middlebury College, as well as the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital. She has two brothers, Donald and Robert Mix, living in Worcester and a sister, Mrs. H. A. Haehnel of Westford Circle, Springfield.

LYNCHBURG SOCIETY.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Congregational-Christian Church, Lynchburg, met in regular session on the evening of July 9th, with Mrs. W. T. Dunn.

Our entertainment committee, Mrs. Floyd H. Dunn, chairman, assisted by the hostess fairly transplanted us into the Land of the Rising Sun.

On arriving, we found that most of the furniture had been removed from the living room and that grass rugs and many pillows had been placed on the floor. At intervals jars and vases of flowers had been placed. In the center of the room stood a low table on which were lighted candles and burning incense. Suspended from the chandelier were clever streamers and pennants in fish and kite designs. A few real Japanese articles were included in the appointments of the room such as pictures, trays, and chop sticks.

Several of the ladies came in Japanese costume and Japanese head-dress.

Upon being greeted by the hostess, herself in yellow and black Japanese costume, with cap on head, each guest bowed low three times, saying, "Konbanwa," meaning good evening, also removing your shoes.

When all had assembled and were seated upon the floor, our president, Mrs. Gay, conducted a short devotional program after which we talked in neighborly fashion of the news, customs, habits, pertaining to Japan.

Then we played Japanese games, such as the Feather Contest, Game of words, and Japanese Tag, each one creating much merriment.

Before bidding our hostess goodnight (in Japanese fashion) we were served Japanese tea and rice cookies by pretty "Japanese Maids."

We decided the meeting had been a very helpful one as well as a very joyful one. We shall probably attempt a similar party while studying another country and wish to pass this one on as it may be a suggestion to other societies.

THE SPIRITUAL CONDITION OF THE HEATHEN.

By Rev. H. W. Frost, D. D., Princeton, N. J. Home Director Emeritus of the China Inland Mission.

If the heathen—those who have never heard the Gospel or received life through Christ—are not "lost," one would feel almost warrented in openly disobeying the command of Christ and making no effort to carry the Gospel to them. For what use would it be simply to civilize them and give them our western culture? To be sure they need some things which go with our civilization, such as teachers, schools and colleges, and, particularly, doctors, nurses, and hospitals. But it would cost too much to give them these at the sacrifice of separation from loved ones, living in far-away lands, consorting with alien and uncouth peoples, enduring deep and long-drawn loneliness, exposing the body to serious climatic diseases, facing possible attacks by lawless mobs, and finally, it may be, passing through sudden and terrible death. Life is too precious to trifle with it and to throw it away by spending its strength in the pursuit of secondary objectives. It requires a strong inducement to warrant our giving up homeland advantages when the alternate is to be, not gain, but large and perpetual loss. For this reason we should be tempted to say, in spite of the arrant disloyalty of it, Let us disobey Christ and stay at home, unless the heathen need the Gospel for the saving of their souls. In such a case, we should come to the conclusion that the Master had dealth ruthlessly with us when He commanded us to go to peoples, not lost, but having sufficiently good religions of their own to save them.

Suppose, however, the heathen are lost; what then? Supose their religions are false, their idol worship is vain, their long pilgrimages are wasted time, their sacrifices are destructive of everything good; what then? Suppose they are worshipping not God, but demons, and suppose, when they pass through the portal of death, they go out into an unillumined darkness and into an eternal separation from God and Christ and all that is pure and beautiful and holy; what then? If these are the facts, then indeed it would be worthwhile to leave homeland, kin and kindred, ease, comfort, physical and educational advantages, all that goes to make the home life alluring and profitable, for the sake of delivering souls from perdition and bringing them to Christ and, at last, to an eternal and beatific Heaven. In such a case, we should understand why Jesus said to go and asked us to sacrifice our all. And in such an event, we should not think Him ruthless, but, on the contrary, very compassionate, not only to the heathen, but also, to ourselves, in spite of our heavy loss. And in such a happening, there would be those who would desire to go abroad instead of staying at home and would consider it a high privilege, honor and joy to obey the commandment of Christ to preach the Gospel to every creature.

Missionaries of old felt this to be the case; and they went. This was true of Judson, Carey, Livingstone, Morrison, Burns and Taylor. It has been true of a countless number of others who have followed in their train. And it was true of all things to all men that he might save some.

Now it must be conceded that God is the only One, in heaven above or on earth beneath, who really knows whether or not the heathen are lost. For it is only His eye that sees the true condition of souls and their eternal state and destiny. This implies that there is not a man living, however educated, intelligent and spiritual, who, of himself, has the slightest conception of the heathens' spiritual condition. So far as the natural man is concerned, therefore, the subject is beyond understanding and had best be left unconsidered. But, in spite of this conclusion, a question may be asked: Has the All-knowing One made any revelation to man concerning the spiritual condition of the heathen? If He has not, we must remain in ignorance. If He has, we may rightfully seek to know what is revealtd. This then, is our present attitude of mind. Feeling that we must know, if possible, the truth of God concerning the heathen, in order that we may understand what to do in reference to the command of Jesus to preach the Gospel to them, we turn to the Scriptures to discover what their testimony is.

The question of the spiritual condition of the heathen is discussed even in the Old Testament David said, "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God" (Ps. 9:17); and again, "Confounded be all they that serve graven images, that boast themselves of idols" (Ps. 97:7). Isaiah wrote, "The idols he shall utterly abolish" (Isa. 2.18-21). Joel declared, "Let the heathen be wakened and come up to the valley of Jehosaphat; for there will I sit to judge the heathen round about . . . for their wickedness is great" (Joel 3:11-13). Micah affirmed, "I will execute vengeance in anger and fury upon the heathen" (Mic. 5:15).

New Testament Declarations.

When we come to the New Testament we find that it is replete with statements in reference to the heathen and their spiritual condition. We would review some of these declarations, as follows:

If we should be asked what verse in the New Testament most reveals the love and grace of God we should probably reply in these words, "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3:16). But there are things about this verse of compassion and mercy which we do not usually recognize. They are these: It says that God loved "the world"; then we must conclude that all the world had need of that love and the gift that followed. Also, it says that God gave His Son to the world that it might "not perish"; then it follows that the world was perishing and that the only way in which it could be kept from perishing ultimately and utterly was be believing on the Son whom God has given. In other words the verse declares that the reason why God manifested His love and grace was because the whole wide world was lost.

Jesus put at the very heart of the Great Commission—according to Mark's Gospel—these solemn and startling words: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned" (Mark 16:16 R. V.). The Master here implied that the preaching of the Gospel was a mater of life and death; that the man who did not believe it would remain in his lost condition and would be divinely condemned, and that it was only the man who heart and received it who would be saved.

Christ, when He spoke from heaven and commissioned Paul to be a missionary to the Gentiles lifted the veil which hung over the heathen and discovered to the apostle and thus to us their spiritual state. He spoke as follows: "To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins" (Acts 26:17, 18). Here then, is the revelation of the All-seeing One. He affirmed that the heathen are spiritually blind and do not see; that they walk in darkness and need the light; that they are in the possession and under the dominion of Satan and require to be delivered from him and brought to God; and that their sins are so many and great as to call for divine forgiveness.—The Missionary Review of the World.

MISSIONARY EDUCATION AND MONEY.

Whatever arouses an intelligent, zealous interest in Missions naturally receives the support of this magazine.

Particularly do we favor personal visitation; for those who can actually see the work themselves come back zealous supporters of it.

Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Warner of Claremont, Calif., immediately come to mind as exponents of this method of missionary education. How many times they have visited some home or foreign field and have returned to place at the disposal of the Fellowship their pictures, observations and inspiring experience! Now, just back from Africa, they wish to tell their story whenever and wherever time and strength permit.

And one of their most urgent desires is that others may visit some field and secure for themselves the blessings that come to those who travel. Mrs. Warner writes: "It has always been one of our hopes that we might give the thought to other laymen of the great pleasure and profit to themselves that they might have by visiting our mission work and becoming so full of enthusiasm about it as to tell those who cannot go what they have seen."

Others have recently returned from trips abroad, like Mrs. and Mrs. Theodore Richards of Honolulu, and Dr. Stearns and family of Concord N. H. Several have visited Mexico with Hubert Herring, and not a few have been guests of our homeland representatives—the Editor himself being among those who have lately been impressed by Thorsby Institute and by Southern Union College in Alabama, not to speak of other inspiring centers in the South. We unite with all such in the prayer that the privilege of personal visitation may be granted scores and even hundreds within the next few years and that our churches, men's clubs and women's associations may have the benefit of their observations and enthusiasm!

Howbeit, few, at the most, can afford to travel in person to "fields" in America. For hundreds of our young people, therefore, the summer conference must suffice. Here many can and do expose their minds and lives to some real missionary, or to some other inspiring leader in national and international work.

The men and women, young and old, are legion whose vision has been broadened and imagination kindled, and who have founded a veritable life mission as world-Christians at the summer conference. Within the past decade thousands have returned to their families and home churches to work for the Kingdom at home and abroad. Missionary Education is justified of her children.

"But of what practical use is it?" asks the Man of Affairs. And the "Disillusioned Divine" echoes, "I wonder." And the Old Timer recalls how his interest in Missions did not begin until in Sunday school he actually bought a ten-cent share in the missionary ship, "The Morning Star." And the fellow responsible for raising the money smiles and says "Amen" to that; for he has long held to the theory that when you can persuade a person to give to some project you win his interest—which is fairly sound missionary education, if our professional friend did but know it.

Surely education must prove its power to develop a missionary mind within the Church. But such proof is impossible except in terms of life; and life has to be judged by its practical tangible output; and what is more practical and tangible than giving to the support of the outreaching work of the Kingdom?

Education helps the youth to learn how to live; it must also train him to give—give himself And

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA YOUTH FELLOWSHIP MEETING.

A group of young people, representing eight churches of the Eastern North Carolina Conference, met at Catawba Springs on August 30th to reorganize and to adopt a constitution and by-laws for the Youth Fellowship of this conference.

The meeting was called to order by the president Rev. Robert Kimball.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill conducted a get-acquainted period.

The principle address of the morning session was "The Work of the Youth Fellowship" by Rev. F. C. Lester. His message was a challenge to the youth of Eastern North Carolina.

At the business session a constitution and by-laws, drawn up by Robert Kimball, was adopted.

The afternoon worship service was conducted by a group of young people from the Liberty (Vance) Christian Endeavor Society led by Mrs. Murdock Newman.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill led a discussion on "World Friendship." It was found through this discussion that young people are interested in missions because of the fact that they give to missions and young people are the ones who go as missionaries. It was also decided that the reason some are not interested is because they do not know about missions; they are selfish, and they are afraid of what somebody might say about them. Some young people have an idea that if you are interested in missions you are a one-sided person. But there are evidences quite to the contrary.

Miss Rose Kimball conducted a recreational period which was thoroughly enjoyed.

The following officers were elected for 1935-36—President, Miss Rose Kimball, Manson, N. C.; Vice President, Alfonzo Grissom, Elon College, N. C.; Secretary, Miss Katherine Macon, Route 1, Henderson, N. C.; Treasurer, Miss Maydelle Sorrell, Route 1, Apex N. C.; Reporter, Mrs. Murdock Newman, Route 1, Henderson, N. C.; Superintendent of Devotional Life, Miss Elizabeth Southall, Louisburg, N. C.; Superintendent of Service, Marvin McCauley, Chapel Hill, N. C.; Superintendent of Publications, Miss Katherine Newman, Henderson, N. C.; Superintendent of Moral Standards, Miss Martha Carter, Youngsville, N. C.; Pastor-Counselor, Rev. E. M. Carter, Youngsville, N. C.; Lay-Counselors, Mr. F. M. Harward, Henderson, N. C. and Miss Ruth Johnson, Fuquay Springs, N. C.

A number of goals which we hope to attain were set up as standards for next year.

In the installation service for the new officers, the Rev. F. C. Lester impressed upon the group the duties of each officer.

Mrs. Murdock Newman, Reporter.

WILL YOU HELP?

Plans are now under way for several leadership training schools and classes under the direction of the Board of Christian Education. Youth Fellowships are now at work in all of the conferences of the Southern Convention. New Testaments are constantly being sent to Sunday schools for ten-year-old children. Materials of various kinds go out from this office almost daily to aid young people in their Christian Endeavor societies, missionary societies, and Sunday school classes. Books are being loaned to teachers, superintendents, and leaders. The Board has as good an opportunity to serve now as it has had during the past five years that I have been chairman of it.

But it takes money to do this work, and we have none. The Southern Convention voted for the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor societies to give an annual offering to the Board. This offering is supposed to be made in September or October. Rally day is the time suggested, but any other convenient season will be satisfactory to the Board. I do sincerely hope that every church will take the matter seriously and will make the offering.

A small percentage of conference apportionment is supposed to come to the Board, also. Will you kindly see that your church pays this fund so the work of the Board can be continued? The future of the work depends upon the size of the offering which our people make. If you want this kind of work to continue, then give us a liberal offering. If you want it to discontinue, simply do nothing about it. But surely you are eager for the work to make progress, and for that reason I am hoping that within the near future Mr. C. H. Stephenson, 121 Fayetville Street, Raleigh, North Carolina, will receive a check from your Sunday school, Christian Endeavor society, and from your conference apportionment.

WHEN YOU CAN'T SEE.

Some two years ago I wrote about Pilot Mountain, a round-top peak in the Blue Ridge mountains of North Carolina. I told how it had stood there through the centuries as a guide post for the people many miles amout. Indians used it to give them their direction. Standing on the old church ground, near my home, I could see it clearly that day two years ago, although it was forty miles away.

Recently I stood on the same church ground and looked in the same direction in search of Pilot but could not see it. Clouds and mists had shrouded it, and my vision was cut off, for I was hemmed in by clouds. I could not see it, but the mountain was there, and I knew it was there. It had been there for centuries as a pilot to travelers. I could have taken the winding ways that lead to its summit and found it standing stalwart, high above the other hills. The Pilot had not changed. I simply could not see it.

Sometimes I cannot see God. I walk in the dark. Clouds overshadow me, and my Pilot is invisible, but I need not doubt His reality nor His eternal presence. He is always there, and I can take the winding paths that lead upward with absolute assurance that God has not changed. The biblical writers have called this working by faith. To me it is working in the dark with the assurance that we are on the right way.

In Christ there is no East or West,
In Him no South or North;
But one great fellowship of love
Throughout the whole wide earth.

In Him shall true hearts everywhere
Their high communion find;
His service is the golden cord
Close-binding all mankind.

Join hands, then, brothers of the faith,
Whate'er your race may be;
Who serves my Father as a son
Is surely kin to me.

In Christ now meet both East and West,
In Him meet South and North;
All Christly souls are one in Him
Throughout the whole wide earth.

The American Board, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass., will help you with plans for this meeting, which will, of course, be plans for the year, and with some individuals this meeting may be the beginning of joy which will last for many years. Send to the American Board, too, for suggestions and for available list of curios, costumes, movies, posters, etc., to aid you in carrying out the plans for the year which you make at this meeting.

Or maybe the people in your church ought to become more missionary-minded. It will bring real happiness to your pastor, Sunday school superintendent and the missionary committees if the young people of your society will meet with them for the purpose of carrying out an extensive missionary program in your church. One pastor of a rural church in Vermont, which has a membership of forty-six, planned the following missionary education program for his church. Some of his plans have been carried out in other years, while some are new experiments. It will probably be a starter for you, giving ideas of things which can be done.

1. A world friendship reading campaign.
2. A church school of missions.
3. A missionary stereopticon lecture one Sunday a month.
4. An appropriate observance of Christmas.
5. Two missionary books studied during the year in the women's society.
6. A missionary worship service in the Sunday school each month.
7. At least three sermons along missionary lines.
8. A new missionary poster on display every third Sunday.
9. The young people representatives on the missionary committee of the church made responsible for the Christian Endeavor missionary programs.
10. A world friendship bulletin board.
11. The necessary material for the world friendship projects in the Sunday school made available when needed.
12. Two missionary project dinners a year.

One of the finest things our denomination is doing for missions is the use of the Cent-a-Meal Boxes. Does every family in your church have one? If not, why not make it your job to see that the families who have not been sharing in this effort receive a box.

Whether you write to the American Board for plans or talk with your pastor and others, or if you do both, you might profitably use short stories giving facts concerning our mission work.

Topic for next Sunday: "The Power of United Action." Neh. 4:1-6.

Topics for October.

October 6—"Our Goals and Ways to Reach Them." Eph. 4:11-16. (Consecration Meeting.)

October 13—"The World Vision of Jesus." John 10:16; 12:32.

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

TIMOTHY. (A Christian Worker in Training.)

Lesson XI—September 15, 1935.

Golden Text: "Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth."—II Timothy 2:15.

We often refer to the friendship of Jonathan and David, and we do well, for it is an example of human friendship at its best. But there is perhaps no finer example of friendship, warm and tender, tried and true, than the friendship between Paul and Timothy. When the intimacy and the strength of that friendship is known it is an inspiration. Next to Luke, or perhaps along with Luke, Timothy was Paul's dearest companion and fellow-laborer.

A Young Man From a Good Home.

"Back of the life of every good and great man there is some good woman," said a great man. It was true in the case of Timothy. His grandmother and his mother were fine women, women of "unfeigned" faith. His mother was converted to Christianity, perhaps on Paul's first visit to Lystra, and that experience deepened and enriched her life of faith. If we knew all the forces that entered into Timothy's life and service, we would certainly find that the influence and the teaching and the life of these good women had a vital part. The one supreme contribution which parents can give to children is a wholesome, sincere Christian home life and influence.

A Young Man Who Knew the Scriptures.

In one of his letters to Timothy, Paul refers to the fact that from a child Timothy has known the Scriptures. He had probably been told the stories of the Hebrew race as a boy and he had undoubtedly read them himself when he became older. He was thoroughly grounded in the Word of God. And they became a vital factor in his life. Would that our young people today were being instructed in the Scriptures, not simply by rote memory or in a mechanical way, but to know the content and the spirit of the Word of God. And alas, even the Church School is not doing this vital work in our day.

A Young Man Who Had a Religious Experience.

Timothy was converted. He was more than a good moral young man. He had been born again. We do not know the circumstances, but it was probably on Paul's first missionary journey. That conversion was the flower or the fruitage of Timothy's inheritance and training. Parents and teachers had planted, but God gave the increase. We cannot convert, but we can prepare for conversion. It is not enough to be bright and cultured; we must be born again to be most useful.

A Young Man With a Good Reputation.

Timothy had a good reputation in his community. When Paul returned to Lystra he found that Timothy was "well reported of by the brethren." He was well thought of. He bore a good name. He had the confidence of the people of the community, not only as to ability but as to integrity. "A good name is more to be desired than great riches." Take heed unto your name. Be careful of your reputation.

A Young Man Ordained to the Ministry.

Paul and the presbyter laid hands on Timothy, they set him apart for the work of the ministry. Then as now, the ministry demands and deserves the best that one has. It is no place for second bests or second-rate men. God does not put any premium on ignorance in the ministry or out of it. Of course there is a need for heart as well as head in the ministry. Timothy had both.

A Young Man With Great Theological Training.

Timothy did not go to a theological seminary, but he had the best of theological training—he had intimate association with Paul, and that great man, great in mind and heart, shared his experiences with his young friend. Never did anyone except the disciples have a greater teacher. How much Timothy owed to Paul. Happy indeed is that young Christian, especially that young Christian worker who can have fellowship in service with a faithful and fruitful older man. The writer remembers with thanksgiving and delight his years in college and seminary, but perhaps the most vital influence in his ministerial life was his intimate association with that saint and friend, Dr. W. W. Staley, who shared so freely and in such a friendly way of his experiences and his advice.

A Young Man Who Was Faithful.

In the closing days of his life, when Paul desperately needed friends, and when only Luke was with him, he sent for Timothy. It was because Timothy had always proved himself to be faithful. He had had many tests. He had had many temptations to desert. But he was faithful unto death. "Faithful unto death"—that was what Jesus said was the secret of the crown of life. Jesus never said "Be good" or "Be bright" or "Be rich," but He did say "Be faithful." The world needs many things today, but it needs nothing more than to find men and women, young men and maidens, who will be faithful, who will be true to their trusts.

A Young Man Who Lived for Others.

Paul once wrote that he was sending Timothy to a certain city and church, because unlike so many others, he was not looking out for No. 1. Timothy's first concern was for others. He was not concerned primarily with "getting ahead." He was interested first of all in the Kingdom. Timothy is a striking example of how one really finds his life by losing it.

SPLIT SECONDS COUNT.

If there ever was a time when you need perfect judgment and quick presence of mind, it is when you are driving an automobile. That is why sobriety is the first law of safe driving.

Most traffic accidents happen because drivers do not react quickly to what they see or hear and decide to take a chance. Alcohol dulls the memory, slows the reaction time, and weakens the judgment.

Ordinarily we react in about one-fifth of a second to what we see or hear—that is our reaction time. With alcohol in control of our minds, the reaction time is slowed to two-fifths of a second.

Suppose you are going 60 miles an hour, which is much too fast. You are traveling 88 feet a second.

If you lost two-fifths of a second in deciding what to do, you will go 35 feet before you do anything. A lot of things can happen in that distance. In an emergency, one-fifth of a second means the difference between crippling or death, and safety.

The motorist who is usually careful will, after he has had a little alcohol, do things that otherwise he would never attempt. He will try to race a train, turn a corner at high speed, or pass another car going up a hill.

A man is not sober because he can walk and talk. Scientific experiments show a measurable loss of efficiency and judgment even when small amounts of alcohol are accululated in the body.—Dr. Morris Fishbein in "Clean Life Educator."

"PERFECT REALITY BEYOND."

"For now We see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known."—I Cor. 13:12.

The highest reaches we can attain portray only faintly the beauty of the Lord in us.

We are told that the great painter, Albert Durer was painting a portrait showing the Christ on the Cross. He had completed all except the face, when he himself was taken by death and he passed on into his Saviour's presence leaving the portrayal of the face of the Christ never to be completed.

The holiest and the longest life shall have time for only but a part of Christ's life wrought in his soul. The best that one can do will leave only fragments of His likeness, His goodness and His matchless beauty. The full glory of the blessed face will never be produced. But when we go away from this fragment that we live and work for, we shall look upon the real divine features, and seeing Him as He is, we shall be like Him.

Prayer—Our Father, we thank Thee that death is but one leap from the unreal to the real, from the feeble and imperfect struggles to reality and perfection in God. May we so live in Christ's name.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"KNOWLEDGE NECESSITATES LIKENESS."

"This is life . . . to know Jesus Christ."—Jno. 7:3.

Quoting from Hastings' Great Texts of the Bible, Hastings says "Knowledge implies likeness." Two persons morally unlike one another cannot possibly know one another, that is, one cannot know the content of the other's life. He reminds us that a person who has never had pain cannot know what pain is, neither can you describe it to him. He cannot even imagine it.

To know we must be. To know music one has to be musical. To know art one must be artistic. To know Christ one must be Christlike, share his life, and to so share Him means eternal life in the life that now is. "This is life eternal, to have life like Christ, to know Him in spirit and in truth."

Prayer—Our Father, our souls cry unto Thee out of the depths of the world, craving the endless love, the calm and peace of holiness, the hope that makes men resolute, the joy of achieving that which is highest and best.

Teach us to work and to love; feed us with the sunlight of Thy spirit; make our common days eternal, and help us to fearlessly meet death as a friend ushering us on to perfection.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"THE SAVING LOOK."

"Looking unto Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our faith."—Heb. 12:2.

The song says:

"Keep your hand upon the throttle
And your eye upon the rail."

It is the look in life that determines largely our way. The navigator of a ship keeps his eyes upon the fixed stars in calculating his course. The safe autoist keeps his eye upon the white line of the road. The artist keeps his eye upon his model, and so on. It is the look at Jesus that reveals Him.

When God gave his only begotten Son to the world, his life was at once a model and a motive for men to see and follow and the world has known nothing outside of him that was greater. As the light of the world He passeth knowledge, and well has it been said, that "The whole Gospel message is conveyed to us sinners in those three words, 'Looking unto Jesus,' " it matters not what we need.

Do we need pardon? We get it from looking to Jesus. Do we need power to resist sin? We get it by looking to Jesus. Do we need strength and courage to witness for Him? We get it by looking to Jesus. Do we need to know rules and laws that cannot be put in words or on paper but which are embraced in the feelings and inner consciousness in an urge to the right and the holy? Look to Jesus.

In that one grand steadfast look, we find what we need, we receive it and we yield up to it till the spirit moulds us in His likeness body, soul and spirit.

Prayer—

"O Jesus Christ, grow Thou in me,
And all things else recede;
My heart be daily nearer Thee,
From sin be daily freed.

"More of Thy glory let me see,
Thou Holy, Wise, and True;
I would Thy living image be
In joy and sorrow too."

—J. C. Laveter.
(German Poet.)

THURSDAY.

"FOLLOWING THE GUIDING STAR."

"I was obedient to the heavenly vision."—Acts 26:19.

Paul had a vision in which he saw the Divine Son of God, and in which he heard his voice. After that Paul never let that vision go, and he never ceased to hear that voice.

The vision we have of Christ is His Divine excellence which He would impart to our hearts and show faith in our lives. Now, whatever aspects of life we may be related to, or that are vital to us, the supreme need in that aspect, or that relation, may become Christlike, and Christlikeness cannot present itself except in the image of Christ, and that image is not visible except to him who looks with his inward eyes. It is then that obedience is possible, and God forbid that we be disobedient.

Prayer—Our Father, we are told that prayer is the highest function of the soul, and that to see Jesus is the greatest achievement known to man. Give us both of these in our lives this day, and all else shall be thine.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"THE SPIRIT AND THE LIFE."

"If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his."—Rom. 8:9.

The spirit of Christ signifies every bearing of the soul in all the necessitudes of life. To possess the spirit of Christ is a test of belonging to Him, and just as Christ was enabled to live His life of perfect obedience and true holiness, so in the measure that we possess the spirit of Christ will we bring forth the fruits of His spirit.

And how may we know that we possess the spirit of Christ? By the tone, the temper, the pleasures, the sincerity, the business, and the faithfulness of Jesus Christ, or we are none of His.

Prayer—Dear Lord, we pray Thee to correct wrongs in our lives from the center of our being. Fill our souls with Thy spirit. Grant unto us the power to render our whole beings in true, wholehearted, unquestioned abandonment to Thy spirit. In Christ's name.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"AN EFFERVESCENT SOUL."

"Fervent in spirit."—Rom. 12:11.

"To be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace."—Rom. 8:6.

Paul enjoins all Christians to be "Fervent in spirit." Fervency carries with it the idea of heat, ardor and eagerness, fizzing, as it were, like a glass of Alka-Seltzer. A fervent soul must be one aglow, if not to say boiling over, with strong purpose.

The devil dreads this kind of enthusiasm and the world denounces it, yet it is indispensable to the fulness of Divine inspiration. It is the cold and lukewarm soul that Christ says "makes Him sick,"—"I will spew thee out of my mouth."

But why should it be necessary to plead thus? Doesn't it seem impossible not to become an enthusiast when God flashes into the conscience the conviction of right, truth, and eternal glory? And, is it left to man to wax fervent in business, politics, and government, and to feel that without enthusiasm these causes will perish, and yet he must not wax fervent in Christ? Nay, indeed, for in proportion to the fire of his enthusiasm in Him is the grandeur of his life. Maeterlinck reminds us that a sailing vessel does not strow its sails in the hold, but they are unfurled midst the tall masts where they collect the winds of space and become the power that takes her on to her mission. So is the fervor of spirit in a Christ-born soul.

Prayer—Dear Father, we seek the love that goes out unto Thee, and for the privilege to share Thy service, and the Sonship with our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Dismiss us not, we pray Thee.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

"OUR HAND-HOLDER."

"I, Jehovah thy God, will hold thy right hand." —Isaiah 41:8-16.

Isaiah saw in God the Hand-holder of His people. A hand may be held to comfort, or to direct, or to encourage and support. God holds His people's hand for all these reasons.

When we feel lonely in the world, it is because we have lost hold of the hand of God. When we are disconsolate and dreary, it is because we have let go of God's hand. If we wander from the safe way, amid the perils of the wilderness, it is because our hand is no longer in the hand of our heavenly Father.

It is easy to release our hold on God's hand. He will not force His hands upon us, or clasp our hand a minute longer than we wish. But, ah, with what a passion of longing should we hold on to His hand, knowing what it means to us, and what the foolish relinquishment of it means.

Prayer—So we dare to pray Thee to hold us our God, even when we do not care to hold to Thee. Through Thy Son, our Saviour.—Amen

THE CHURCH AND LABOR.

By ELISHA A. KING, D. D.

Minister Miami Beach Community Church.

For many years now Christian Churches have taken note of Labor Day with some special form of service or program. The subjects usually discussed have to do with labor and industry from the Christian point of view. The reason for doing so is that the churches are interested in the problems of labor from the moral and humanitarian sides. The Church as a whole is interested in all things that pertain to the welfare of workers and the betterment of general conditions of labor. For example, one of my predecessors in the church at Sandusky, Ohio, Dr. Josiah Strong, undertook a reform in industry that he thought would benefit all workers in factories and elsewhere where dangerous machinery was unduly exposed. He emphasized the need of protection against accidents by placing various types of guards about wheels, belts, saws, etc. He organized a society for the purpose of education and the securing of proper laws to make his movement practical. In time he saw his plans maturing. I suppose there are very few people living today who know that "safety first" and protected machinery owe their existence partly, at least, to the socially-minded brain and heart of a Congregational minister. He believed that Christianity functions when it is doing something for the physical well-being as well as the moral and spiritual well-being of men and women.

In studying the teachings of Jesus one is compelled to believe that when He told the story of the Good Samaritan He meant it to be an example to His followers. If that be true then we are to minister as best we can to the physical needs of men, women and children regardless of their race, language or color. It is this conviction that has given rise to the hospital, orphan home, homes for the aged, social clinics, and many other similar agencies too numerous to mention. At first, and perhaps now, in some cases, there is behind the movements of this kind an evangelistic motive, but the broad and general motive is to benefit human beings, to enrich their lives and conserve them.

The Bible is primarily interested in the moral and spiritual development of mankind. But the Old Testament is really the story of a nation that knew little but hard work all their days. Labor and industry make up the very bone and sinew of that story. If the curse of the ground for Adam's sake be taken literally we have a condition from which it is impossible to escape. "Cursed is the ground on your account, you shall win food from it with suffering all your life; in the sweat of your brow you must earn your food (until you die)." On the other hand if this narrative is taken as an explanation of why man has to work so hard to reduce the earth to profitable cultivation it just amounts to about the same thing. The fact is that ever since mankind has been on the earth he has had to labor for his food and shelter. Based on this universal experience St. Paul told the Thessalonians (II T. 3:10), "If a man will not work, he shall not eat." He had been told that some of the Church members were loafing, being "busybodies instead of busy." "Now," he said, "in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ we charge and exhort such persons to keep quiet, to do their work and earn their own living."

Mankind has done everything possible to make labor interesting and ennobling. Someone has written:

> "For labor, the common lot of man, is part of a kind Creator's plan, and he is a king whose brow is wet, with the pearl-gemmed crown of honest sweat. Some glorious day, this understood, All toilers will be a brotherhood. With brain or hand the purpose is one, And the master workman, God's own Son."

The highest conception is that we are all fellow-workers with God. It is true enough that labor through the ages or at the present time has not always been such. And yet creative labor is akin to the creative activities of God Himself. Blessed is the man or woman who is engaged in such work as offers opportunity for self-expression, be it physical or mental.

II.

Industrial conditions are entirely different today from what they were in the early days of Hebrew life. One cannot read the Old Testament without noting how hard was the lot of the laboring man. Think of the great building era in Egypt when the Hebrew slaves were compelled to make bricks without straw? Think of the lot of the working man in Babylonia. Try to recall the lot of slaves as they built the pyramids. In those days when monarchs sat on thrones of absolute power paborers did their bidding under the lash and also fought all their battles, and try to recall the fact that wars were frequent. The devasting story of man's age long struggle in war and peace has been told by Winwood Reade in a book entitled "The Martyrdom of Man."

When the steam engine was introduced into industry it caused an industrial revolution in England. The home industries were concentrated in factories and workers were crowded into unhealthy lodgings about the big factories. Then developed the problem of women and children in industry. All kinds of social problems have now grown out of that experience and as the industrial world has expanded the problems have increased. A new kind of employer and employee were developed. Profits and wages and working conditions became subjects of perpetual contention. The story is long and full of interest and it is not concluded. All through the struggle for the rights of man, for higher wages, for better working conditions, better housing conditions, better protection from accidents and compensation in case of accident there has been only one instrument the worker could use and that was organization which is known today as the Labor Union. Unfortunately the struggle between Capital and Labor has often taken on all the aspects of civil war.

Within recent years the one great problem that has worried governments is that of unemployment. Every nation is affected. In thinking of unemployment one should remember that even in normal times there are millions of people out of employment for one reason or another, but our present situation is unparalleled in history. Gradually the introduction of machines into industry has thrown vast numbers of workers out of employment. And, of course, the depression has closed many factories. A news item from Washington says that 16,000,000 men, women, and children, one-eighth of the nation's population, depend upon the federal government for food and clothing. They include 3,500,000 mature, able-bodied workers capable of earning a living wage and 4,000,000 persons whose physical or mental deficiencies preclude work. Unemployment is ac-

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON. Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

We are happy to say that we are making fine progress now on re-building our dairy barn. We have finished the cow shed where we handle the cows—have also finished the mule stables and now we are working on the barn proper. The frame is already in place and the floor laid. The carpenters are working on the rafters and hope to get them in place in a few days so the roof can be put on. If the weather keeps open so the carpenters can work we hope within the next three weeks to have it finished and ready for our feed to be stored.

Mr. L. A. Sharpe, a real builder, has it in charge and is doing a splendid job. Strange to say that this is the third barn Mr. Sharpe has built for the orphanage.

When the writer came to the orphanage it had no barn worth anything. We cut lumber from our own land and got Mr. Sharpe to build us a barn.

It burned in 1929. Mr. Sharpe built the one that was burned in July. Now he is building our new barn. It is our wish that we will never have to build another one. We are grateful that friends have been thoughtful and kind to us. We will soon have to turn our thoughts from barn building to "Thanksgiving."

We trust all of our churches will begin to get thanksgiving in their hearts and plan for a real offering this year.

Lawrence Fields, a boy who was reared in the Christian Orphanage from a little tot and who has been working for the Golden Belt Mfg. Co., Durham, N. C., married Miss Minnie Gladys Wagoner, one of our neighborhood girls on August 31st. We wish for them a happy journey through life.

taste," Uncle Bob said. "I used to be able to tell which tree a pail of sap came from by tasting it."

It was a fascinating game. Sometimes Uncle Bob was wrong, but very often he was right.

The sap boiled more slowly and thickly now with a deeper, solider sound. In fact it was no longer sap, it was syrup.

"It's dirty, though," Bretta said. "I see sticks and things in it and yellow foam like soapsuds."

"We'll get all that out at the house," said Aunt Anne. "I'll put some milk in it and that will make it clean and clear."

When the syrup was done there was so little of it compared with the full kettle of sap there had been at first that Bun and Bretta were disappointed.

"Where did it go?" Bun asked. "I bet the kettle has a leak in it."

"Oh, no," laughed Aunt Anne. "Didn't you see that white steam floating off all the time? That was the water boiling away and leaving the sweetness behind. There's plenty of sap to make more. The pails will be full again tomorrow."

They took the syrup home when evening came and Aunt Anne boiled it again on the kitchen stove. Some of it was boiled a very long time and poured into a pan to stand overnight. When Bun came to look at it the next morning he found that it was not brown and clear any longer but yellow and solid.

"Why, it looks like brown sugar," he cried.

"Taste it," Aunt Anne said, giving him a piece broken from the edge.

"It tastes like brown sugar but ever so much better. What is it, Aunt Anne?"

"Sugar. Maple sugar. Here's another piece for you and one for Bretta."

"Sugar," Bun repeated to himself thoughtfully, as he went off with the crunchy yellow pieces to find Bretta. "A lump of sugar. Why, that's what I wished the kettle to send me. It is a magic kettle after all."—Mary Quayle Innis in The New Outlook.

companied by a mental depression that develops into a bitter spirit. It is not difficult to realize that in a land that is measurably prosperous with vast crops that have been destroyed by order of the government while thousands starve, many of the unemployed turn against the present order of society. It is in this depressed and bitter soil that Communism flourishes.

What has the Christian Church to do with this situation? The Church does not engage in political activity, for it is made up of people of many political opinions. But the Church is among other things an educational agency. Through its leaders it undertakes to study social problems and suggest ways to improve the social conditions of mankind. This is done through the printed page, the public forum and study classes. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has drawn up a Social Creed giving the chief objectives of Christianity in its relation to both the employer and the employee. The British Conference on Politics, Economics and Citizenship, an organization representing the Churches, has a similar statement. The Congregational and Christian Churches of America have adopted a similar Social Creed. This Community Church specifically states in its platform or confession of Faith these words, "We hold it to be the mission of the Church to proclaim the gospel to all mankind, exalting the worship of the one true God, and to labor for the progress of knowledge, the promotion of justice, the reign of peace and the realization of human brotherhood throughout the world." These are broad, general statements, but they express a deep concern for human relations. The Church is interested in every phase of man's experience and this is largely because of its conviction that Jesus had in mind the development of the Kingdom of God upon the earth.

Churches that are situated in industrial centers have a situation to face that a church not so situated knows nothing about. But no matter where the church may be, it is vitally interested in helping humanity to achieve a freer and richer life. Probably the best contribution the churches can make to the solution of the problems of labor is to go right on preaching salvation by faith and the duty of every Christian to live by the principles of the "Sermon on the Mount," the "Golden Rule" which means, of course, the practice of brotherhood. In the ideal society there should be work for everyone, with food, shelter and compensations sufficient to care for a family in a full and satisfying way. More than this there should be leisure to enjoy life with opportunities for the culture of the mind and soul. If it be true that man is born to labor and a certain amount of sorrow, it is equally true that he is born to joy. Always Jesus stands saying, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." The solutions of labor's problems will come through the way of understanding and of brotherhood.

MISSIONARY EDUCATION AND MONEY.

his money. Otherwise the critic of missionary education has a right to claim that the "educated" one has little mind for the Master and His redemptive service.

But our leaders in missionary education are alive to the need. Hardly a pamphlet is issued that does not give a place of importance to Giving. Every effort possible is made to develop a sense of stewardship, to cultivate a spirit of giving, and to present projects through which missionary interest may be expressed in most practical form. And we believe that careful research would show that there are more people in our churches today who are giving than was the case a generation ago and that this was because of quiet, steady educational processes—Missionary Herald.

OBITUARIES

EDGE.

Mrs. Emma Edge departed this life August 22, 1935 at her home near Penton, Alabama. Sister Edge had reached the age of 60 years. She was a faithful member of Pleasant Grove Christian Church until her health failed. She was a very pious and consecrated woman, who was loved by all and especially so by her husband and children. I have rarely seen a more devoted family.

She, with her husband, attended church regularly when their children were growing up, always taking an active part in the worship of the church. She found as all others find that it pays to serve the Lord. She leaves to mourn her loss a devoted husband and four noble sons, Willie, Harvey, Herman and Clyde; also three living daughters, Orrie, Minnie and Lala. These are all fine young women, all doing a great service in the world.

Her brothers, three of whom are Gospel ministers, all honor her with their profound respect; her sister, father and step-mother were devoted to her and it was such a shock to them when they received news of her death. Her husband awakened on the morning of the twenty-second to find that she had passed quietly away in her sleep.

In the midst of a large circle of relatives and friends her body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Penton, Ala.

Services were conducted by the writer with Rev. E. M. Carter assisting.

May God's richest blessings be upon the ones who mourn.

ALLRED.

Mrs. Mary C. Allred was born March 2, 1857 and died at her home in Caswell Co., N. C., July 24th, at the age of 78 years, 4 months and 22 days.

She is survived by her husband, David F. Allred; seven sons, one sister, three brothers, seven grandchildren and a number of other relatives and friends.

Mrs. Allred spent her entire life in this community professing faith at the age of 12 years and joining Concord Church where she remained loyal and true. Funeral conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. J. F. Apple and interment in the church cemetery.

VOLUME LXXXVII. RICHMOND. VA., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1935. NUMBER 38.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Virginia Checks Forged.—

During the past week four forged State warrants, or checks, two for $50 and two for $40, were sent in for collection to a Richmond bank. The forgeries were detected by officials of the bank and substantiated by the State Treasurer, A. B. Gathright, who immediately sent warnings throughout the State against cashing paper purporting to be State warrants unless identification was positive.

Dieset Engines to the Front Again.—

Only recently two American railroads have again placed in operation under observation Electro-Motive Diesel engines. Each of these units are powered with 3,600 horsepower motors, and are the first of their type in America. The B. & O. Railroad expects to pit its locomotive against its newest steam locomotives plying the passenger trade. The Santa Fe will also use its diesel for passenger trains and expects to reduce the schedule of its finest coast train by not less than fifteen hours.

Gas Tax Gouge.—

Gasoline price wars come and go, company earnings show black or red, but taxes (like Mr. Tennyson's brook) go on forever. A recent mobilization of statistics indicates that in the 14 years since 1921 the petroleum industry's earnings were $2,462 millions, while taxes paid on oil operations and products totaled $6,903 millions. Last year's tax bill was over $1,000 millions; net earnings were only $264 millions. Our statesmen are not likely to weep over the figures. The ideal tax is one which the voter pays without screaming. "Gasoline at any price" is the cheerful motto of the motorized millions.—Business Week.

The Guffey Coal Law.—

In its battle for the Guffey Coal Stabilization bill, the administration won the first round, when the District of Columbia Supreme Court refused, this week, to issue a temporary injunction against the enforcement of that act. In refusing the plea of the coal company asking for the temporary injunction it was noted that there would probably be full consideration given the merits of the case before the six provisions of the law become effective on November 1st. The judge did not think this temporary injunction necessary. Mine operators claim that the enforcement of the Guffey bill will make necessary large advances in the price of coal to the consumer. Action has also been started in an attempt to invalidate the Utility Holding Company law enacted by the recent Congress. It is claimed that the law is "arbltrary, unreasonable and capricious."

Quezon Elected President.—

As has been predicted, Manuel Quezon was elected first president of the new Philippine Commonwealth by a decided majority. Quezon, who has been president of the Philippine senate for many years was a staunch advocate of Philippine independence. He will take office of November 15th, when the commonwealth government will be inaugurated as a ten-year prelude to complete independence. Quezon was opposed by General Emilio Aguinaldo, who led a revolt against the United States in 1899-1901, and Bishop Gregorio Aglipay, head of the Philippine Independent Catholic Church. Both of these condidates were opposed to the ten-year plan, and demanded immediate independence.

Germany Off Favored List.—

Germany was this week ordered stricken from the lisct of nations enjoying trade favors under the reciprocal tariff program. The President notified the Treasury Department that on October 15, "the United States will cease to be bound by the provisions of Article VII of the Treaty of Friendship . . . signed December 8, 1923." It is said that the treaty is being abrogated at Germany's request. Its immediate effect will be to increase tariff rates on approximately a hundred articles imported from Germany. She will also be denied any concessions granted under trade agreements with France, Italy, Canada, The Netherlands, Switzerland and other countries, unless a new agreement is entered into between Germany and the United States before these trade agreements become effective.

Florida's New Canal.—

Coming on the heels of the hurricane is the announcement that President Roosevelt has approved the allotment of a $5,000,000 appropriation for the building of a canal across the Florida peninsula. This project has been the center of a controversy ever since it was proposed two years ago. It has been looked upon with general favor by the northern part of the State, but the southern portion has feared an economic decline if the traffic route should be changed. The proposed canal would extend from Port Inglie on the Gulf Coast by a circuitous route some 200 miles in length, to Jacksonville on the Atlantic seaboard. While the canal is designed to provide a safer and shorter route for ocean-going vessels between New York and the gulf ports, the Tampa Tribune looks upon the whole thing with disfavor, thinking that to save a distance of around 360 miles "few steamship captains would want the delay and danger of steaming slowly through a narrow, crooked canal nearly 200 miles in length."

Live Dangerously.—

In an appeal to the business men of the country, the editor of Forbes calls attention to that noble tradition of the sea which "demands that in the hour of peril everything be sacrificed to rescue those in jeopardy." Says he: "Americans recently were thrilled to learn how no fewer than fifteen ships, disregarding their own interests and destination rushed to the succor of the liner Dixie hurricaned onto a rock on Florida's Keys." America is likened to this ship, and his plea is that business men, even at a risk of their own fortunes, come to her rescue. The natural temptation is to hug close to the shore and avoid risks, but such a time as this, he thinks, is one when the strongest men of affairs should launch out upon the industriay seas and save the economic ship of the nation. "It is the bounden duty of every responsible citizen to do his utmost to prevent the Ship of State from going on the rocks. This cannot be achieved by each skipper adhering to his own prescribed course, deaf to the dangerous plight of others. . . Foresightedness and farsightedness suggest that ultimate safety is far more likely to be attained by courageous rather than by cowardly action at this critical time. . . For the sake of ultimate and permanent safety, live dangerously now!"

Another Use for Movies.—

For some time past movies have been used for showing the amateur how Bobby Jones strokes his golf ball, or how the lily blooms or the rose unfolds its petals. In the various problems of industrial production they have more than once proved their usefulness. Now comes another use. The Ohio State Highway Department has called upon the movies to help solve its traffic problems. The complicated patterns woven by traffic change too swiftly to be studied by the human eye, but the movie camera has little trouble in recording them for future reference. By studying these film reports, this highway department has unearthed such facts as these: A two-lane hard-surfaced road is efficient where less than 400 vehicles an hour use the road. As the users mount upward to 600 congestion begins and speed must necessarily be reduced. It is found that at 1,500 vehicles per hour the average speed has declined from the normal of 42 miles to 34 miles per hour. The maximum carrying capacity, a decidedly undesirable condition, is said to be 2,200. By means of these movie recordings, it is possible for the department to determine which roads need to be widened and what other changes must be made for the sake of safety as well as the expeditious handling of traffic. Other highway departments will probably follow the lead of Ohio.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Give, if thou canst, an alms; if not, afford, instead of that, a sweet, and gentle word.

—Herrick.

Rev. Carl Dollar, Phenix City, Ala., writes that he will be open for pastoral engagement after October first. Brother Dollar is an Elon graduate and, after some experience as teacher and minister, has given his entire time the past year to the pastorate of United Congregational Churchr, Phenix City. Any church or pastorate desiring the services of this well-prepared and very promising young minister will do well to communicate with him at once—P. O. Box 23, Phenix City, Ala.

Many SUN readers will learn with deep regret and solicitude that Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Burlington, N. C., is very ill and her physicians and family have the deepest anxiety as to her condition. Mrs. Carroll was for years the very efficient president of our Woman's Board and for the last few years has been Superintendent of the Spiritual Life Department for our Missionary Societies. Through this office she has helped to establish a Spiritual Life Department in hundreds of societies and has inspired our Missionary Conferences with her pleas for the observance of the spiritual factor in all missionary activities.

The North Carolina Christian Advocate rejoices in these words: "With the faithful aid of every pastor, the church paper is coming to its own in North Carolina Methodism. Few can estimate the value of the printing press in our church work. Some are coming to understand that a better informed membership is a first essential." Hear! hear! dear brother pastors, throughout the Southern Convention, and take to heart these words of wisdom and rejoicing. If THE CHRISTIAN SUN could go into twice as many homes and be read weekly by four times as many readers as at present all our church interests would have much easier going and far better results.

In the passing of Dr. William H. Hainer, pastor-emeritus, First Christian Church, Irvington, N. J., on September 10th, as noted in last week's SUN, the editor feels a personal loss, as many others of our readers do. We could never think of Dr. Hainer without thinking of our beloved and lamented Dr. W. W. Staley, the two being good friends and strong yoke-fellows in our Church Councils, both having served a pastorate each of nearly half a century, which pastorates built up into strongholds of righteousness and towers of strength for good. Out of the richness and abundance of their experience W. H. Hainer and W. W. Staley always gave wise and safe counsel in the assemblies of our fellowship, and we now have their memory to guide us and their great achievements as our rare and rich legacies.

CHRISTIAN SUN readers are now having the finest opportunity yet made available to them of intimately acquainting themselves with the work and interests of our Congregational-Christian constituency throughout the whole country. Two weeks ago, as many readers observed, we began on page three a department,—"General Council News, By Herbert D. Rugg." Mr. Rugg is the editorial secretary of our National Council and from headquarters, 287 Fourth Avenue, N. Y., has agreed to send us each week a column or more of matter, giving to our readers items and news of interest not only of the doings of the Council but of the church in general. This department we prophesy will prove one of the most helpful features THE SUN has added in a long time. What the whole church is doing throughout the nation should certainly interest and inspire every local church and pastor to renewed energy and activity in kingdom building.

Rev. F. C. Lester, Secretary of the Board of Christian Education of our Convention, called attention in last week's SUN to the fact that September and October are Christian Education months, during which period every church is urged by the Convention to take an offering for Christian Education and send it to C. H. Stephenson, Treasurer, Raleigh, N. C. The Department of Christian Education has proven its worth and merit in its work, especially with our young people in Sunday School and Christian Endeavor as well as in the church at large, and the department certainly deserves the support it so much needs. It is even more necessary than usual that the offerings be taken this year, since, on account of infantile paralysis warning, the Sunday School Conventions were either cancelled or poorly attended and a large part of the support of this department comes through these Conventions. We trust our pastors and people generally will give good heed to the plea of our faithful Brother Lester.

The Burlington Daily Times-News of September 14th carried the handsome face and generous countenance of our good friend, William Weldon Kimball, Jr., and with the picture was this meritorious comment: "William Weldon Kimball, Jr., of Manson, N. C., and a member of the senior class this year, will lead the student body of Elon college during the 1935-36 academic year. With Kimball as president of the student body the list for campus officers at Elon this year presents a strong set-up of student leaders. The complete number of major campus offices are held by men and women students from either the junior or senior classes this year." The Times-News continuing its commen carries this of interest about other officers of the student body: "In addition to the office of president of the student body, held by Kimball, the other major offices are held by the following: Lawrence Tuck, Hazel Martin, Rebecca Smith, and Bill Cooper. Lawrence Tuck, of Virgilina, Va., who is a member of the junior class this year, will take up his office as president of the student senate, men's student government organization. Hazel Martin, from Elon, is president of the student council, student government organization for women at Elon. Miss Martin is a member of the senior class. Rebecca Smith of Elon College, is editor of the Phipsicli, official college annual. Miss Smith is also a member of the 1935-36 senior class. Bill Cooper, a member of the senior class, is to edit the Maroon and Gold, the college weekly newspaper, for the year. Cooper's home is in Norfolk, Va."

ANTIOCH HOME-COMING.

Home-coming day will be held at Antioch Church, Isle of Wight County, Virginia, Sunday, September 29th. With two services, all former pastors and relatives of former pastors of the Christian Church, former members and friends are invited to attend. Each one is asked to bring basket lunch. Tables will be prepared on the grounds. A hearty welcome awaits you from your mother church. Come!

C. E. GERRINGER, Pastor.

AMERICAN PREACHER'S PLEA FOR PEACE.

Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, of Dover, Delaware, U. S. A., speaking at the Old Meeting House, Norwich, on Sunday, under the auspices of the Council on Interchange of Speakers and Preachers Between the Churches of Great Britain and America, declared by way of preface to his address on "The Churches of Christ Facing the Future," that, if all the nations of the world were today as friendly with each other as are America and Great Britain, the armaments of the world could be safely scrapped tomorrow.

"'America loves England because of the close ties of kinship and because of the love and worth of the Mother Country," said Dr. Helfenstein. "In adolescence, America naturally enough rebelled against parental supervision, and asserted its right of independence, but the relationship of mother and child remains, and will forever be. America loves Mother England with a love that grows with the passing of the years."

"The world today," he continued, "needs more than promises, pledges and treaties of peace—it must have definite expressions of peace. The people of every nation are today recognizing as never before in all history the barbarity, the stupidity, and the absolute futility of war. They are demanding that friendships shall henceforth take the place of battleships; that the peace of the world shall no longer rest with the militaristic class who want war and not peace; that the wealth of the few must no longer jeopardize the peace of the many; that conditions which provoke war shall be obliterated, and every constructive measure taken for the effecting of a regime of peace which shall be secure and permanent and which shall make, for all future time, war to be impossible and unthinkable. The people of every nation are thus calling for peace. Every nation, however, has been and now is cursed with a militaristic group who blindly follow the war gods of destruction."

"But the vicious propaganda of the militaristic class, which has damned the world in the past, can no longer deceive the people," concluded Dr. Helfenstein, "they now see the absolute inhumanity and insanity of war. The designs, purposes and tactics of militarism are now apparent to all. Only peace will satisfy the heart cry of humanity today. The English speaking nations are here for a task like this, to lead the way under God in building His Kingdom of Peace."

Dr. Helfenstein took for his evening subject, the words: "How far are we willing to follow Jesus?"

Large and appreciative congregations attended both services, and Dr. Helfenstein's eloquent and forceful addresses should bring a large attendance again on September 1st, when he will pay a farewell visit to Old Meeting House.

In our larger cities disgraceful scenes are being enacted—far worse than in the old days. Men and women—young women—drinking together, losing their sense of poise together, becoming a nuisance together. I believe that in time this state of affairs will swing public opinion and we shall have a real temperance reform. But is not this a terrible price to pay before a dormant mind can be aroused?—*Rev. General Council News

By Herbert D. Rugg.

OUR DECREASING MEMBERSHIP.

The first business of the Church is evangelism, —"to Christianize the men and women of the community." With this conviction in mind the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional is sending a message to the pastors throughout the country urging that the most serious attention be given this fall to make sure that the year will not end with a continuation of the slump which the Year-Book indicates has prevailed during the last three years in the denomination's paramount duty.

The "spiritual depression" of the last three years as statistically reported has resulted in a decrease in the average number of annual accessions to church membership upon confession of faith to 34,370. During the decade ending 1930, the average accessions upon confession in the Congregational churches alone was 40,480 and the average total for both the Congregational and Christian was around 44,800. With the decrease in accessions upon confession has been a net loss in membership during each of the three years. The total net loss over the three-year period has been 18,837.

In the message written by Dr. Frederick L. Fagley, associate secretary of the General Council and the executive of the Commission, it is said:

"We do not belong in the group of churches reporting net losses in membership. We are a broad church and that is what the times require. We must also have a depth of life which will be creative in influence and in effect.

"We can turn the tide. Let each church set a definite goal and enlist its members in a forward program. It is a worthy purpose, worth planning for, worth praying for, worth achieving."

Four new pieces of literature have been issued by the Commission for this fall.

1. "A Daily Devotional for Three Months" arranged in the style of the widely inter-denominationally used Lenten manual, "The Fellowship of Prayer," has been written by Dr. Jay T. Stocking, moderator of the General Council and pastor of The First Church in Newton, Newton Centre, Mass. Dr. Stocking prepared the "Fellowship of Prayer" manual in 1928 and again in 1930.

2. "A Technique of Private Prayer," is a leaflet written by Dr. George A. Buttrick, successor in the pastorate at the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City, to President Henry Sloane Coffin of Union Theological Seminary at Columbia University. Dr. Buttrick was formerly pastor of the First Union Congregational Church, Quincy, Ill.

3. "Some Questions Answered" is a leaflet based on the book, "What It Means to Be a Christian," by the late Dean Edward Increase Bosworth of the Oberlin Graduate School of Theology.

4. "Church Membership," is a leaflet which is a complete revision of one with the same title written by Dr. Fagley in 1926. The first was reprinted repeatedly and was the most largely used leaflet among the publications of the denomination.

REPRESENTING NATIONAL AGENCIES.

Twenty or more persons under the direction of state conference superintendents will represent the national denominational agencies this fall in speaking at churches, to association meetings, to state pastors' convocations and to annual conference meetings and in consultations of the "church officers' visitation." Among these representatives and the state where they will serve are:

Rev. Henry J. Bennett, Tottori, Japan, missionary of the American Board;—in the Southeast;

GREENWOOD, SOUTH CAROLINA RECEIVES A SCHOOL.

Continuing the policy of withdrawing from secondary education for Negroes in order to be able to strengthen its colleges, the administrative committee of the American Missionary Association last week voted the property of the Brewer Normal School to the public school board of trustees of Greenwood, S. C., who will maintain a first-class high school. The public school board began its responsibility for Brewer ten years ago under an arrangement whereby the Association annually decreased its subsidy until last year it was entirely discontinued. By now giving the property to the public school board, federal aid for repairs will become available.

Brewer Normal School was founded sixty years ago and named for Mr. Justice David Josiah Brewer of the United States Supreme Court, who was born in Turkey a son of the missionary, Rev. Josiah Brewer; the latter after his return to America became of of the organizers of the American Missionary Association in 1846 and served on its executive committee seventeen years. The school property includes four main buildings and nineteen acres.

The administration committee of the Association also voted that the local corporation formed three years ago to operate the Brewer hospital at Greenwood should have free use of the hospital plant for another three years with the expectation that the property should then be given to it. The hospital was built ten years ago as the result of a movement headed by Principal H. A. Beadle of the Normal school. The community raised $15,000, the Association contributed $15,000 and an additional $7,000 for equipment. For six years the hospital was wholly supported by the Association. Following the local incorporation, the association gradually decreased its support until it was discontinued entirely this year. The hospital corporation is inter-racial and it shares with other hospitals of North and South Carolina in aid from the Duke Endowment Fund for its charity work.

A DOUBLE FUNERAL.

The tragic suddenness of the deaths of Rev. and Mrs. Herbert J. Hinman brought deep grief last week to the Mapleton Park Congregational church at Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. Hinman died of heart failure in a Brooklyn hospital just as the funeral of his wife was to begin on Thursday night. She had died Wednesday in a Manhattan hospital. Mrs. Hinman's funeral was postponed an hour and then a double funeral was held. Mr. Hinman was a prime mover in the organization of the Congregational and Christian Ministers' Federation of the Meropolitan Area of New York whose meetings have had an attendance up to 125. He was the first president, serving from 1931 to 1934.

MID-WEST REGIONAL MEETING.

By Miss D. P. Cushing, News Editor.

The scope and balance of the big Joint American Board and Mid-West Regional Meeting to be held in Grand Rapids, Michigan, October 22nd to 24th, with the First Congregational Church, Dr. Edward H. Thompson, minister, acting as host, makes it an event of unparalleled interest to the Congregational and Christian churches of the country at large and particularly to the nineteen mid-western states. The program brings together leaders in religious thought both inside and outside the denomination. It presents a picture of work at home and abroad painted by several workers fresh from the field and it emphasizes the many-sided program of a progressive Christian fellowship.

The list of speakers includes: Rev. M. Russell Boynton, D. D., of Chicago, Ill.; Dr. Fred Field Goodsell of Boston, just home from an intensive tour of work in India, Africa, and the Near East; Dr. Ivan Lee Holt of St. Louis, Mo., President

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

FUNDAMENTAL DIFFICULTIES.

Through an invitation of the California International Exposition at San Diega and later at the Young People's Assemblies of the Pacific Conference, Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of the M. E. Church, South, delivered a sermon which has claimed more than ordinary attention and publicity, in that by resolution a copy of the sermon was requested to be furnished to the church press and to the General Board of Christian Education for circulation as a pamphlet. The text of the sermon was John 18:37: "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth." The subject chosen from this text was, "Why the Church of Christ?", the Bishop declaring that it was for the same purpose for which Christ came into the world, viz: To bear witness unto the truth. This is the primary purpose of the church and everything else is secondary. Beautiful church buildings, well trained choirs, eloquent preachers and such may be and are desirable, but they are helpful and desirable only as they aid in the fundamental purpose for which Christ was born and for which cause He came into the world, viz: "To bear witness unto the truth."

How silly and senseless it is to suppose or surmise that science and philosophy are the only sponsors or seekers after the truth. The Church of our Living God is and has ever been the torch-bearer and diligent seeker after truth. The fundamental difficulty of our time is not that the church is without a message or without the true light, but it is failing in many places to declare the message or to bear aloft the torch placed in its hands by its Founder. The heart of Bishop Cannon's sermon is found in these paragraphs:

"The fundamental difficulties of men are not so much doubts about God and judgment and eternity; they are about wine and women and greed of gold and pride of power—the awful trinity of St. John's epistle—'the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, the pride of life.' These are the difficulties and the besetting sins of life. Our Master and his apostles did not speculate or philosophize but, knowing the heart of man, he brought his message directly to man's heart and declared that he came to save men from their sins.

"The Church must proclaim the truth concerning the need of personal salvation. It must warn men of their danger. It must show that the world by wisdom cannot know God. They vainly think that the great material things can save them. But it must be proclaimed with emphasis that civilization can never be a substitute for salvation. The inventions of our age have changed the forms and methods of living, have multiplied conveniences, comforts, pleasures; have even lengthened the average span of life. But all these things are material. They perish with the using. They do not affect spiritual values or reach out into eternity. Civilization has not eradicated selfishness, covetousness, pride, ingratitude, cruelty, and lust from the hearts of men. Men still break all God's laws. They lie, they steal, they commit adultery, they kill.

"The Church must proclaim the truth that sin separates from God, destroys all hope of eternal life. And yet in some pulpits today sin is rarely discussed, never emphasized. Such preachers need to study once more the preaching of the apostles, and find out why Jesus Christ really came into the world. Men and women must be made to face the fact that the tragedy of life is sin, and that the glory of life is full and free salvation through Jesus Christ our Lord. What other message is of any importance, of any value to lost, sinful men, until they have repented, have confessed their sins, have been forgiven, and are living at peace with God."

Attention has often been called to the fact that the subject and power of sin are revealed in all their hideous mien and told of in all their sad consequences from Genesis to Revelation. The theme, "Sin," is writ large on the pages of our inspired Book, and because this book deals in a matchless and unparalleled way with sin and all its aspects, and points to the way out of sin and to the Power through which sin is overcome, makes it the most valuable book ever penned by man. If the pulpit is losing its power today, it is because it is neglecting the fundamentals that man is having to grapple with, and omitting from its pulpits warnings about sin and the way that leads to salvation and to God.

THEY THAT TAKE THE SWORD.

Neither friend nor foe can excuse or condone the assassin whose fatal bullet ended the earthly life of Senator Huey P. Long of Louisiana. However desirable such a tragedy might have been in the minds of his enemies, the end did not justify the means, and murdering Senator Long was a crime of the first magnitude. No one can blink that fact. When this has been said, and whatever graces and virtues may be ascribed to the poor boy, who rose from obscurity in a log cabin to the dictatorship of a great commonwealth, when all this is taken into account, one can but reflect again and again on the words that Jesus said unto him who would have used the sword in his Master's defense: "Put up again thy sword into its place, for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Verily, these words of the Nazarene are verified in the tragic death of Senator Long. He took up the sword. Even in a time when calmness and deliberation and wise counsel were so sorely needed, Senator Long carried about him a bodyguard armed to the teeth with weapons of death and destruction. It was not enough with him to lash with his tongue; he dared the assassin's bullet and the sword of his foes by flashing constantly in their faces the weapons of warfare and of death. He who carries weapons of destruction on his person or about him defies and invites others to do the same. He has taken up the sword and invites his antagonists to do likewise. His antagonists in this instance did likewise, and his fatal weapons were brought into play and did their deadly work, and thus there were two deaths, two murders instead of one, for neither one of which was there excuse, had peace been pursued and the arts of peace employed in a constructive program of statecraft and leadership. Verily, they that take the sword shall perish with the sword.

In the light of such words, one wonders what Hitler of Germany expects when he takes the sword and ruthlessly drives out or destroys the Jews and others of his country, whom he has challenged with his ferocity. And what may Mussolini expect when he summons the whole nation of Italy against the counsel and advice of neighboring nations and states and sets out with no other aim or purpose in mind than that of exploiting and possibly murdering thousands of weak, helpless, and innocent people? War is inexcusable and is a crime, and either civilization must abolish war or war will abolish civilization. There is no other alternative. "They that take up the sword shall perish with the sword." It takes mankind a long, long time to learn that grim truth, but truth it is and one that will not perish.

A POPULAR CHURCH PERIODICAL.

In the published report of the Strategy Committee of the Congregational and Christian Churches, it is noted that the publication of "a popular periodical" is recommended and that the Executive Committee "invite the cooperation of the Missionary Societies, the Council of Social Action, the State Conferences, the Commission on Evangelism and such other commissions and agencies as may be concerned to join it in the effort to develop such a periodical, and secure its wide circulation throughout the denomination."

With the spirit of this recommendation, we find curselves in most hearty accord except in one particular, namely, "Why in the world did not the Strategy Committee invite the cooperation of the Missionary Societies and the other various committees and commissions to unite in making our present publications 'more popular' and more universally supported?" We are told, for instance, in the recommendation that Advance, our general organ, has a circulation of less than 10,000, and the Missionary Herald one of 13,000, "with not more than 50,000 readers out of a church membership of more than a million; in other words they are reaching not more than 5 per cent of our constituency." If by the best efforts of those in charge of these church publications, their subscription is so limited and the deficit for their publication piles up frightfully, on what grounds can we hope that a new publication will fare better or achieve any more successfully in the field of church periodicals? We agree with the committee when it further says: "Genuine interest on the part of the constituency as a whole in the total work of the church, including the field of personal religion, applied Christianity and world-wide Missions, cannot be expected unless information and inspiration are furnished them." Our church papers need wider circulation and deserve it, and it is doubted sincerely if any medium is so essential and stimulating to church life as its church paper. The history of Advance in its various changes, absorptions and eliminations to meet new conditions confronts us with the necessity of caution and makes us wonder whether a change in the periodical is as necessary as a change in the mind and attitude of the constituent members of the churches, and those who have at heart the welfare of the church and the growth of the kingdom of righteousness. We could wish with all our hearts that our "Strategy Committee" could have given suggestions how the periodicals that we now have could be put upon a living basis rather than bring forward suggestions that new periodicals be initiated and that new ventures be made in this field of difficult and doubtful financial support.

NIETZSCHE AND CHRIST—TWO GOSPELS.

"Ye have heard it said of old, blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth; but I say unto you, blessed are the valiant, for they shall make the earth their throne! and ye have heard men say, blessed are the poor in spirit; but I say to you, blessed are the mighty and free in spirit, for they shall enter Valhalla. And ye have heard men say, blessed are the peacemakers, but I say unto you, blessed are they who make war, for they shall be called not the children of Jahve, but the children of Odin, which is greater than Jahve."

Thus spake Friedrich Nietzsche, the great German philosopher, as he pronounced his curse on the Christian religion. "I condemn Christianity . . . It is to me the greatest of all imaginable corruptions. . . I call it the one immortal blemish of mankind."

Nietzsche is dead, the victim of marching years and a social disease. But the gospel of strength and might and force and the Superman which he preached lives yet in the world, revived in the rebirth of paganism in his native Germany and in Italy, in Great Britain as well as in the nations of the continent, in this country as well as in Japan.

Alfred Rosenberg and Julius Streicher proclaim in Germany a gospel of nationalism, of devotion to Race and Blood and to the divinely appointed German state, which is the logical end of the philosophy of Friedrich Nietzsche's moral integrity and hatred of sham and intellectual discipline.

Benito Mussolini has achieved in Italy a nationalistic jingoism which asserts the claims of the state far above the claims of truth or justice or honesty or mercy or tenderness or brotherhood or lovingkindness, or any such abstraction of the Christian religion—and imposes the will of the state regardless of other cost.

In Japan the army still proclaims the doctrine of the heaven-born emperor and fights for the possession of the Japanese soul, that under this gospel the military chiefs may inspire the whole people to lay down their lives for the advancement of the emperor-god's realm.

In this country there is a great group of men who insist that the business of the churches is to "preach the gospel"—by which they mean, not to preach those parts of the gospel which might interfere with their own selfish interests. There is a chain of newspapers under the ownership of one self-willed and vicious patrioteer which continually flays and ridicules those who wish to build brotherhood among men and among nations. There is a racial persecution and hatred between white and black which is in some ways no less vicious than the most dreadful German persecution of the Jews. And yet there are thousands, tens of thousands of honest, sincere Christians who see in these things no cause for disturbance or any challenge to their own basic Christian ideals.

Is it not true that race hatred, economic injustice, class struggles, nationalistic vain-glory and ambition, militarism and all its works, are utterly un-Christian? Is it not true that the Christianity which cherishes such words of its Master as are given in the Sermon on the Mount is betrayed and made meaningless by the existence of such qualities in the human status quo?

Nietzsche said, "Blessed are they who make war, for they shall be called . . . the children of Odin." "Blessed are the valiant . . . blessed are the mighty and free in spirit."

But the professed Master and Lord of Christians said:

"Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy. Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God. Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called the children of God. . . Thou shalt love the Lord thy God. . . Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Which gospel do the children of the church practice? Which messiah do they follow—Nietzsche of Germany or Jesus of Nazareth and Calvary?

If they are Christian they must practice Christ's gospel and apply it in all their relationships. Otherwise, in the name of truth and honor, let them profess the gospel which they prove by their works they really believe—the gospel of paganism, force and the Superman.—Editorial in Christian Evangelist.

THE CHURCH'S OPPORTUNITY.

This is the fifth year of the depression, but as everyone around Reidsville is aware, churches remain alive and continue to grow. No institutions in this country have done better, and few have done as well. In 1926 church membership in the United States was set at 43,500,000 by the federal census. Today this membership is slightly in excess of 50,000,000 persons. This does not include children under 13 or baptized infants. Thus it is evident that in times of stress the men and women of this nation are willing to turn to religion and the church for moral and spiritual aid and guidance. Herein lies opportunity for the church and its ministers. Both are entrusted with obligations of tremendous importance. How is it being discharged? This is for the church and its ministers to answer.—Reidsville Review.

It may be well to be careful about the hitch-hikers and the "thumbers" along the roadside since the Gastonia Gazette gives the following information: "The police at Wichita, Kan., got curious recently and took all the hitch-hikers they could find down to headquarters to be fingerprinted. They found that two of every five had criminal records. Murders of motorists by hitch-hikers have been recorded recently in Oregon, Virginia, Nebraska, New Mexico and Oklahoma. Oklahoma, as a matter of fact, ascribes more than half a dozen recent killings to hitch-hikers, while Oregon has had three."

"The Church in Alaska."

(Conclusion.)

The Protestant Church in Alaska dates back about forty years when the Presbyterian, the Methodist and the Episcopal Churches entered and undertook to take the Gospel of Christ to the native Indians. Of course, the Greek Orthodox Church (Catholic) was there before that during the Russian Possession and it still is.

The work of the Protestant Church has been to transform the family life from the original communal existence in which forty or fifty people lived together in one big house of one room, to a "home" in which husband and wife live together with their children as Americans do. It has been a transformation from tribal marriage, in which the contracting parties had no say and were thus badly matched to the way of love and the Christian marriage. It has been a transformation from the custom of of the tribal group of all eating from the same tribal or community pot to the family way of a home, a table, and the family sitting around as Americans do, eating from dishes with knives and forks, etc., on through the American customs and styles; simple, to be sure, but nevertheless in the same manner.

This, together with projects of sanitation and health, has been the task of the Protestant Church and through such mediums to bring Jesus to their lives. The task, while a very arduous and tedious one, has not been as hard as one might think, for the natives are very imitative and they look up to the white man. This is true to such an extent that it is said that the best thing a missionary can do is to bring up a large family of children whose lives are exemplary.

The Church has kept pace with the progressing situation in the territory. The Presbyterians were the pioneers from its inception as an American possession. These have the Southeastern allocation with twenty-one churches constituting their largest territory. The Methodist have the Northwestern section. The greater part of the churches and their membership are Indians and in the Yukon section Eskimo.

We learn that the religious ministry of the Church has been along the lines of evangelism, religious instruction and training, the development of leadership, t of hospitals, schoolhedevcch9 of leadership, hospitals, schools and children's homes. Their schools are on a par with schools in the states.

Since so many of the people are engaged in the fishing industry and are absent from their homes and at the canneries during the season, the Church follows them there and owns mission boats with a preacher as captain visiting these people during the summer and continuing their work with them. This has proven, they say, a most valuable service.

We are told that the native people are earnest and eager for Christ. They are a fine simple people unacquainted with white ways and very susceptible to their habits, customs and diseases, and one of their worst enemies is the temptations and sins of white society thrown in their midst. However, they are making great progress. Within the past two years splendid new churches have been erected in the towns of Ketchikan, Fairbanks and Wrangell. New generations are rising educated and consecrated to win Alaska to the best sort of living—home, health and happiness, and to the task of winning it to Jesus Christ that in the days to come His, Spirit may dominate the civilization that gives promise of being America's greatest possibility.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Why does a banker dislike to make a loan to a church, or a church institution? Why does the public generally regard the church as a poorly managed institution?

The answers to these questions will vary with the shifting viewpoint and emphasis. It is true that banks do not look with favor upon making loans to churches. It is not always easy to find a person who will lend money to a church, except upon personal endorsement, although churches usually pay their obligation after a long time. Churches do not go into bankruptcy or make assignments to settle their obligations.

What is the reason for this general condition and criticism of the church? For the most part the individual church members are to blame for this attitude. Only about one-half of the church members pay anything for the financial support of the church, according to church statisticians. No one can compel the inactive members to support the church. If they are expelled from the church that course does not increase the contributions. Usually the church must depend upon the voluntary contributions of the members for all funds needed to carry on the work. A few churches have invested funds for emergencies. But such cases are rare.

The majority of church members are careless about making contributions systematically and regularly. The church treasurer cannot pay out money unless he receives it. He is dependent upon the individual members for funds, while the individual members often put their personal wishes and needs above the needs of the church. When the prophet says: "Make me a little cake first," the church member is inclined to reply: "I will give you some cake, if there is any left." Sometimes there is nothing left when the family gets through with the bank account or the pay check.

Every member of every church should have a certain amount of church pride. They should attend the business meetings of the church, and support a business meeting of a church with hundreds of members on the roll. Plans are adopted for meeting the church budget of expenses and benevolences. The absent members are not informed, and many of them do not care to be told of their duty. When the Pastor on the next Sunday morning announces the plans and makes an appeal for united support it is interesting to study the reaction of the congregation. Have you ever tried this experiment? Some members look out the windows, if they are open, or study the art glass decorations if they are closed; others look down to the floor, or stare at the ceiling. A few are interested and many are bored by the appeal.

After the appeal the ushers pass the plates, and when they place the meagre offering upon the altar one would think the congregation is, for the most part, on some relief roll. Such a congregation expects someone to pay the coal bill and keep up the other expenses while they enjoy a free Gospel sermon. Now such a condition justly deserves to be criticised. But it is a cross section of those same people in every other relation of life. Very few people pay their own bills promptly. People who are able to pay cash for their purchases at the stores, defer payment, sometimes, as long as possible. Why does anyone run a charge account if able to pay cash?

This is a time when many honest people cannot pay as they go. And, in many cases, there are people who are thus handicapped because of the dishonest people who have defrauded them out of their hard earned money. During the past decade there has been a lowering of moral standards in relation to financial obligations. People who owe money expect their creditors to release them for a pittance. The air is full of demands and requests for compromising or wiping all debts off the ledger. People want to use the earnings of others and live in luxury and leisure. This spirit has crept into the church and the church will suffer until it sets its own house in order. The church should be honest and punctual and liberal.

ADVENTUROUS FAITH.

[Opening address before the church and student body at Elon College on Sunday, September 8, 1935.]

The last Sunday in May of this year we had our baccalaureate services and on the following Wednesday we had our graduation exercises in this auditorium, then we—faculty, students, and the townspeople—began to separate. A few of us remained for the summer months. We came for our worship service on Sunday until the month of August. Since then we have had no service.

Today we are back and are here for worship. I am glad to see you—everyone—faculty, students and townspeople, but we are particularly glad to welcome the ones who are here for the first time. We are glad you are here. Something has brought you. You may know what it is or you may not. It may be a long cherished idea, a hope whose vision has not yet been realized, or it may be an answer to the surge of an irresistible ambition. Even so I personally hope that your being here is the result of a living spirit within, a conscious response on your part to the call to the higher and better things of life which, if you are to possess, careful and thorough preparation must be made.

Your presence here constitutes an adventure—an adventure toward the field of learning and the graces of culture—an adventure that is made on faith and that will require faith to reach its goal.

I am speaking today about faith, about adventurous faith. There are two passages of Scripture to which I want to call attention as I speak. The one you will find in Genesis 12:1 where the Lord God said unto Abraham: "Get thee out from thy country, from thy kindred, and from thy father's house unto a land that I will show thee;" and the other you will find in Hebrews 11:8 where the apostle in speaking of Abram said: "And he went out not knowing whither he went." The first passage constitutes a call from the familiar to the unfamiliar, from the known to the unknown, from the certain to the uncertain. It is response from within to the call from without to the higher and better things of life. This response and the beginning of this journey by Abram from the land of his father to the land of the unknown required faith, faith in God from whom the call had come and faith in himself and in his ability to answer the call. Your presence at Elon constitutes faith, adventurous faith, faith in the school to which you have come and faith in yourself, in your ability to measure up to the requirements of the college that you have chosen.

There is something personal about faith. Many definitions have been given and yet as you read or listen to these definitions they do not quite express that something that is hidden away in your heart that is and has always been such a living factor in your life.

I. Faith is Progressive.

Faith is not stationary, it is not static, it cannot be. It is always on the march and it keeps the individual who possesses it on the march. By faith sacrifices have been made, blessings have been received, devils have been cast out, mountains have been removed, the dead have been raised to life. By faith man has discovered the world and the laws of the world, and today by faith you take up the march, join that innumerable throng in search after truth, righteousness, and God, and so long as the fires of faith burn on the altar of your heart you will be on the march. It was faith that sent Abram in search of the land of promise; it was faith that sent Columbus in search of a new world. It is faith that is sending us in search of a new kingdom—even the kingdom of truth, righteousness, and of God.

II. Faith is Extravagant.

It makes demands of us sometimes the price of which seems impossible of payment. It is extravagant with sentiment and affection. Think of a faith that will lay hold of a man, that will say to him—Get up and get out from your own country, from your own kin people and from your own father's house. You cannot remain longer with your own people, not even with your own father. You must tear away from all these things to a strange land. In effect faith has laid hands on you and said—If you are ever to amount to anything in life you must get up and get out of your neighborhood, away from your friends and acquaintances, away from your father's house into a place where there will be opportunities for training, for development, and for advancement.

A father and mother came into my office Tuesday, with their boy. They said: "Well, we have brought our boy up here. We want you to take care of him. You know he has never spent a night away from us, yet we know if he is ever to amount to anything he has got to get away from home and us." That boy is here. Faith laid hold of his parents and him and in response to the demands of faith he tore away from home and is here in search of truth.

Think of a faith that demands sacrifice, costly sacrifice, and will be satisfied with nothing less; a faith that will demand the sacrifice of a son. Abram said to Isaac on that tragic march up Mt. Moriah as the son murmured where is the lamb, "The Lord God will provide the lamb." Isaac himself was the lamb to be slain. It was faith in God that moved Abram to offer up Isaac as a living sacrifice unto the Almighty.

You are here in college at the cost of someone and it may be at great sacrifice. Parent after parent has either written or come to me in these last few days with the affirmation, "I am willing to sacrifice any and everything if my child may have the advantage of an education." One mother in speaking of her son whom she had already seen through college, said, 'You know I have sacrificed everything for my boy and when I say everything I mean everything—income, home and everything—so that today I do not have a penny." The very fact that those whom you love and who love you are sacrificing for you should inspire and make you determined to succeed in every effort.

III. Faith is Certain.

It is not driven and tossed by doubt nor is it handicapped with all kinds of questions. It knows its course, it is determined on its ends. It has never traveled the way necessary to go, yet it knows the destiny to which it leads. Abram knew Ur of the Chaldees; his father lived there; his grandfather before his father had lived there; it was the land of his childhood. He was familiar with it, but he did not know Canaan. He had never been there. He did not know the paths or highways leading to Canaan yet when faith spoke he launched out on the journey not knowing whither he went.

Thursday a lady came to my office. She had traveled miles to get here. She explained, "I am here but I do not know why or how I am to stay here, but I know I am here and I know something must happen that will permit me to stay. About her there seemed to be a note of certainty, an air of determination. Could these be the evidences of faith? If they are, conditions will adjust themselves to the demands of faith and the dream and passion of her life will become a reality, enriching her individual and personal experience.

Without faith the night is dark and the morrow is uncertain and we stand about in groups and exchange convictions that these are terrible days in which we are living and that no mortal knows what the morrow will bring forth. We stand on platforms and proclaim that the clouds of the future are dark and lowering, that the destructive storms are apt to break upon us at any moment. We live in dread and fear all the days of our lives. This is not the voice of faith. Faith cries out—"I know, I know in whom I have believed and I am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day."

MINISTERAL MARRIAGES.

The writer has had the unusual pleasure of performing the marriage ceremony for two of the young ministers in the southeast in recent weeks. On August 3rd he performed the ceremony for Rev. John Rae Chapman, pastor of the Asheville Church, and Miss Deana Jo McCurry; and on September 7th performed the ceremony for Rev. David W. Shepherd of the Meansville Larger Parish in Georgia, and Miss Jean Fullington of New Port Richey, Florida, the ceremony being performed at the bride's home. Both of these young ministers are pastors of churches that have been fostered by the Congregational Extension Boards. Mr. Chapman, a graduate of Williams' College and of Union Theological Seminary, has been for two years pastor of the church at Asheville and is making an enviable record with that church. Miss McCurry, a member of the church, has been a devoted worker in the church and is greatly beloved, not only by members of the congregation, but by a large circle of friends in Asheville. The Asheville church was founded in 1914 by Dr. J. Brainerd Thrall, who was then sixty-five years of age. For nineteen years he served that church and retired when Mr. Chapman became pastor. The plan for the marriage service was for Dr. Thrall to perform the ceremony, assisted by the writer, but at the time Dr. Thrall was ill; a venerable pastor who dearly loves his successor.

David W. Shepherd is a graduate of Elon College and Vanderbilt School of Religion (Southern Seminary Foundation). After graduating from the Seminary he served a short pastorate in Phenix, Alabama, and became pastor of the Meansville group of churches in Georgia last year. Miss Fullington is a graduate of Rollins College, where she was awarded the Algernon Sidney Sullivan Medallion, which is awarded not only on the basis of scholarship but for leadership, for high ideals of character and service. Miss Fullington has been known and loved in the groups attending the Immokalee Conferences in Florida and Blue Ridge and Elon Conferences and has spent two summers in Student Summer Service work in the mountains of Kentucky and in Georgia.

All the many friends of these young people, who have come to know them through these conferences and other gatherings, are happy in these marriages and feel sure that the home life of each will add to the sacredness of the home and that through their homes and their churches they will express their fine lives and their idealism in Christian service.

HAMLET CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

On August 15th, Rev. T. E. White, Rev. T. J. Green and the writer went to Hamlet, N. C., and organized the Hamlet Christian Church with thirteen charter members, ordaining three mighty fine men as deacons, whose hearts are filled with the spirit of God and who carry a burden for the Cause of Christ in East Hamlet.

On September 1st, the writer went back and held a week's meeting which resulted in 28 professions of faith, and the spiritual life of the little organization greatly deepened, and the prospect is good for them to come to our Conference with a membership of from 30 to 40 members.

This has been a much neglected field that needs your prayers and help. May God's richest blessings be upon them as they endeavor to fight sin in East Hamlet and labor for the Cause of Righteousness, is the prayer of the writer.

FROM HOLY NECK.

Revival services were held at Holy Neck Christian Church August 26th-30th, inclusive. Rev. Robert Lee House, pastor of the First Congregational-Christian Church of Newport News, Va., was the preacher and Mr. Wilbur H. Baker, of the same city and church was song leader. The services were well attended, despite rainy weather for three days. There were a large number of reconsecrations, twelve professions, and fourteen united with the church. Thirteen were baptized in Norfleet's Pond Sunday afternoon, September 1st.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., Secretary.

GREETINGS FROM THE NEAR EAST.

Sofia, Bulgaria, August 27, 1935.

Dear Prayer-Partners:

After South Africa the Near East!

As I skirted the borders of Abyssinia in July en route to Egypt I felt the force of the rising tide of hate and hateful war preparations. At present writing war seems inevitable.

What a tragedy and a travesty!

What have peace lovers to throw against rampant militarism? Half measures seem futile. Is anything adequate short of lives and nations transformed by the spirit and power of Christ? Peace and goodwill amongst nations are a part of the world mission of Christianity. I have been freshly impressed with the direct bearing of missions on a world peace program but that program must be matched by an adequate creative will to peace among western governments. Missions and missionaries too often become the plaything of perverse political adventurers.

Speaking of peace, have you realized the substantial contribution to peace which Kamal Ataturk (the new name of the president of the Turkish Republic, formerly called Gazi Mustapha Kemal Pasha) is making? He is the moving spirit in the Balkan Conference which has already created a new tradition of friendliness and international cooperation among Albania, Bulgaria, Greece, Roumania, Turkey and Yugoslavia. Let us pray that this shrewd, powerful master of men may find THE MASTER.

Syria.

In Syria, enroute to Turkey, my time was well taken up with two pastors' conferences—one at Beirut and one at Aleppo. The Armenian Evangelical churches of Syria are reaching new levels of self-reliant churchmanship.

One missionary asked me a significant question, "When will the Congregational and Christian churches of America recognize churches in Asia, Africa and elsewhere as sister churches?" Think what lies behind this question. Christianity has become a world movement. There is scarcely any nation in which evangelical Christianity has not put down its roots. New churches have come into existence. These indigenous churches are in various stages of development, to be sure, but they all are beginning to sense their responsibilities under Christ as they face their total environment. That marks a great advance. But they need fellowship. They want to be recognized as sister churches. If we honestly gave them that status, that would revolutionize our conception of missions. It would lift missions from philanthropy to churchmanship!

Turkey.

I feared that August would not be a rewarding month to spend in the Near East but I could not arrange my schedule otherwise. I was very happily surprised. Most thoughtfully my missionary friends made their vacation plans so that by visiting five points: Gaziantep, Adana, Talas, Uludgah Hountain Camp near Brusa, and Istanbul, I had the opportunity to meet 49 of our 59 missionaries at present at work in Turkey. At one of these points, Talas, I had the deep personal pleasure of being the first guest in my daughter Caroline's new home! She and Richard Bonsall Smith, a missionary of the Board, were married at Merzifon, June 16th. I was a little late for the wedding but enjoyed my week in their home immensely. That week was well filled too with conferences with the group of twelve or fifteen missionaries who had gathered for the purpose at Talas.

A second week spent in rustic mountain camp on Uludgah—the Bithynian Olympus—found me living with Dr. Lorrin Shepard, the Fowles, Lyman MacCallum and others. Here's hoping that there was an Olympian touch to our thoughts!

A third week at Istanbul was unusually full with a schedule of visits in which contacts with Turkish friends of other days predominated. I was delighted to tread the streets of old Istanbul again! The very cobblestones seemed to welcome me and to tell me of the marvelous changes that are going on in Turkey. Do you recall the verse from Isaiah: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, Make straight in the desert a highway for our God." I cannot escape the feeling that in a real measure that is what is happening in Turkey today, with emphasis upon the "preparation."

One of our most thoughtful missionaries in Turkey gave me a statement concerning the rationale of our work in Turkey which I would like to pass on to each one of you. If you have read Editor Morrison's series of letters about Turkey in the Christian Century you should also thoughtfully read this. It is in no sense an "official" statement and it refers particularly to schools, but it implies something of the value of the other forms of work that are going on in Turkey. I would be very glad to have from any one who has head the statement thoughtfully a letter giving sincere reactions.

Bulgaria.

The American Board has closed its Bulgaria Mission. That does not mean that we are no longer interested in Bulgaria. I was especially glad to be able to confer in Sofia with some of the leaders of the evangelical churches who in large part are the successors of our missionaries. They crave an even greater degree of fellowship than we are able to afford. They are facing very difficult conditions but they are full of courage and and faith.

My special errand in Bulgaria however was to visit the Pordim Folk School founded in 1928 by our missionaries, Dr. and Mrs. Haskell. On the retirement of the Haskells in 1934 the School was transferred by the Near East Foundation to the Ministry of Agriculture of the Bulgarian Government. Dr. Haskell's sudden death in California last January shocked us all. Mrs. Haskell and many other friends will be glad to know that the school is continuing to serve a great purpose. The value of its educational method and aim is increasingly recognized throughout Bulgaria. It is being widely imitated. The chief inspector of the Ministry of Agriculture accompanied me on my visit to Pordim (about 125 miles from Sofia). He gave me much substantial evidence of the good work that the school has already done. He assures me that it will be carried on in loyalty to the creative ideas and spirit of its founders.

I was very sorry that I was unable to revisit our missionaries in Greece. I had to content myself with one afternoon and evening spent with them in Athens on my way out to India in February.

L'Envoi.

I turn my face homeward—Bostonward—after seven months of constant travel—35,000 miles in all—11,000 by air, 10,000 by sea, 9,000 by railway, 5,000 by auto, motorcycle, horseback, bicycle and on foot! I have had close and rewarding contact with more than 200 of our missionaries in seven of our fields and with many of their associates. I feel deeply repaid for the effort to understand conditions and to encourage our missionaries in their tasks. I am persuaded more deeply than ever of the spiritual significance on a world scale of the work of the American Board. Let us not fail to accept our part in God's unfolding plans.

Yours sincerely,
Fred Field Goodsell,
Executive Vice-President.

NEWS ITEMS OF SOCIETIES.

The Young People's Missionary Society of Bethlehem Christian Church near Suffolk, Va., is composed of an interesting group of boys and girls who are always ready to work in their various church organizations. They meet at the church every Thursday night after third Sunday for their regular monthly meetings with good attendance and enthusiasm. On Easter Sunday night they presented the pageant, "The Call of Spring" before a large and appreciative audience. The study book "Orientals in American Life" was studied in a joint meeting with the Cypress Chapel Young People's Society and proved to be a very helpful and ideal way. This method of mission study has many possibilities and the social study as well as the study side can be realized.

Mrs. John T. Savedge, president of the New Lebanon Young People's Society sends the following report. They have made the five per cent increase in membership. They hold their regular meetings on the third Sunday of each month and are planning a joint meeting with the Dendron society for the study class. Mrs. Garland Spratley and Mrs. E. G. Atkinson visited the society in July and brought very helpful messages.

The Willing Workers' Society of the Windsor Christian Church has enjoyed a most profitable year under the leadership of Miss Margaret Anna Harigerty and Mrs. C. E. Fulgham, Supt. The mission study book has been read and discussed in their regular meetings. This society has a membership of nineteen and each pays two cents per month and a penny for each year of their ages on birthdays. A cake sale was held during the year to finish up their apportionment which has been sent in full. They gave a public program at the regular prayer service recently which proved to be very helpful. The program follows:

Scripture—Mrs. Winnie Beale.
Prayer—Mrs. J. S. Cobb.
Children's Ritual—Four children.
Reading—"Willing Workers", Leona Bracey.
Bible verses—Five children.
Duet—"Jesus Loves Me"—Evelyn Bracey and Elsie Kay Roberts.
Recitation—"Good Advice"—Harry Roberts.
Avoiding Shams and Pretenses—Mrs. Eldon Fulgram.
Benediction—Mrs. J. S. Cobb.

This program was interspersed with songs and music. Mary Frances Roberts is secretary of this interesting group.

CLOSING WITHOUT A DEFICIT.

By MISS D. P. CUSHING, News Editor.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions announced today, September 16th, through its Treasurer Harold B. Belcher, the closing, without deficit, of its fiscal year, ending August 31, 1935. This outcome was made possible by the drastic reduction in expenditures that has been carried on through the last few years. These reductions were secured by cutting from an effective force of 694 workers in 1931 to 460 workers in 1935, involving the closing of 419 schools, ranging from kindergarten through high schools, seven hospitals and dispensaries, two social centers and two pieces of student work. The missionaries remaining on the field have of necessity been working under great tension.

The total expenditures for the year were $1,098,836.43, about 43 per cent under the budget and about 40 per cent below the expenditures of five years ago. While gross receipts were less than last year the amount received was within 2 per cent of the budget anticipation. The gifts from the Congregational and Christian churches in the last months of the fiscal year showed improvement over those of the previous year.

"It is hoped that this is indicative of a stop in the steady reduction of giving which has marked the last seven years and has necessitated the serious curtailment in work," says Mr. Belcher. "The personal gifts received largely during the last two months of the fiscal year exceeded in number those

THE SURPRISE CELLAR.

"I never heard of a party in a cellar," said nine-year-old Vera Drake.

"Mother says it is the only place in the house where we can have ten boys and girls all at once," said her older sister Margaret, with a big sigh. "Let's ask Granpa Ware what he thinks about it."

"Hum! Hum! Certainly. Of Course," said Grandpa Ware as he looked around the sunny cellar.

"We have a cellar clean and neat
We want a party gay and sweet;
With two bright girls and grandpa too,
You'd be surprised what we can do!"

"What shall we do?" asked Vera quickly.

"We can make a couple of tables and use boxes for seats," said grandpa. "How about newspapers and paper bags for decorations?"

"Big paper bags decorated with pictures and colored with crayons would make funny hats for everybody," said Margaret.

"I can make a square newspaper doily for each plate at the table," said Vera eagerly. "If I use the joke pages, each doily can be read aloud to make more fun at the party."

"I will find different colored wrapping paper for the napkins," planned Margaret. "They can be cut about ten inches square and folded into triangles. Each napkin might have a verse written on it. Dear me, I shall have to make up ten verses! How would this one do for a start:

We wish you all a jolly time
And hope you'll come again
You're welcome to our cellar
In sunshine or in rain.

"That's good," said Vera admiringly. "Perhaps I can think of a verse too." After a moment she said:

"A party in the cellar
Is nice and new you see,
And at this cellar party
We hope you'll happy be."

"Fine!" said Grandpa Ware, who had been feeling of the smooth cement walls of the cellar. "Here is another verse:

Surprises are the spice of life
And here is one today,
This cellar is a magic place
Where you may come and play."

"This is going to be fun!" cried Vera. "Which would you rather have," suddenly asked her grandfather, "an apple orchard, an ocean full of sailboats, a big snowy mountain or an an enchanted castle?"

"Where? How? What do you mean?" asked Vera.

"Oh, he is only teasing us," said Margaret, laughing. "Yes, thank you, grandpa, we will have them all."

"This is a surprise cellar and you are going to be surprised," said Grandpa Ware, his eyes twinkling. "Now run along, and get your party things done, but if either of you show even the tip of your nose in this cellar until I say so, you might get a surprise spanking!" He tried to look very stern, but the girls only laughed.

It was three whole days before Grandpa Ware would let anyone see what he was doing in the cellar. Then one afternoon he came marching into the kitchen and said to Vera and Margaret, "It is about time you girls were getting the cellar ready for your party."

"Hurrah! At last!" cried Vera, and both girls started on a run for the cellar.

"Why Grandpa Ware!" gasped Margaret, who got there first, "I never imagined anything like this!"

"Oh, what a surprise! It's wonderful," exclaimed Vera.

The girls ran from side to side of the cellar, trying to decide which wall they liked best. All around the cellar were beautiful pictures painted on the cement walls. On one wall were big white sailboats floating on blue waves. Another wall showed red apples hanging from the branches of green trees near a white cottage surrounded with yellow flowers. In a third scene children on sleds were sliding down the snowy sides of a mountain that rose to meet a deep blue sky. The fourth wall of the cellar showed a great brown castle standing near a river, with sheep grazing in wide meadows.

"The cellar has turned into fairyland," said Vera. "You have often painted small pictures for us, grandpa, but I didn't know you could paint big ones like this."

"I didn't know it myself until I started in," chuckled grandpa. "Now you girls clear up the rest of the cellar, and perhaps you can paint the boxes for seats while I make the tables. If we all work hard I think we can make the surprise cellar a real playroom for any time and always."

It took almost the rest of two weeks to get the cellar ready for the party and the party ready for the cellar but at last it was done.

When the children arrived, Margaret and Vera led them out to the yard and around to the cellar door. As they swung it open they sang:

"Come in and see the surprises
The cellar has today,
We hope you'll like our playroom
And often come to play."

Such a chorus of "Oh's" and "Ah's" and laughs and shouts and exclamations went up when the children trooped into the cellar, that no one could tell what anyone was saying, but no one cared because everyone was smiling and happy.

The sunlight lay across the yellow tables and touched the green box seats, the waves on the wall seemed to dance, the castle looked as if it were full of delightful secrets, the red apples shone and glistened on the bright trees and the children on the sleds smiled like the real children.

The two tables were gay with fancy napkins, and colored baggy hats at each place. Plump round paper bags, painted in all the colors of the rainbows and bulging with sandwiches and cookies, were lined up in a row down the center of the tables. A big bag filled and brimming over with apples, oranges and bananas stood at each end of the four corners.

The afternoon was not half long enough to hold all the fun. There were games and a peanut hunt, and a jolly time reading the verses and jokes at the tables. Before the party was over, Grandpa Ware was brought in and crowned King of the Surprise Cellar.

"I never thought much of cellars before this," said one of the girls, "but I want to come here again."

"I liked this party because everything about it has been so different," said one of the boys.

And after the children had gone, Vera turned to her sister with a laugh and said, "Remember how we fussed when mother said we had to use the cellar?"

"And now everyone on the streets is going to have a good time in it," said Margaret happily.—Lydia Lyon Roberts in Zion's Herald.

PLEASE NOTE.

By vote of the Southern Convention, at its last session, all churches in the Southern Convention are supposed to make a contribution to the Board of Christian Education. Most of the conferences have adopted this financial program, and now the time has come for the local churches to cooperate in carrying out this plan. Some conferences have passed on to the local churches a definite amount to be raised for the Board.

I sincerely hope that every church will see that the small amount for the Board of Christian Education is sent either to C. H. Stephenson, 121 Fayetville Street, Raleigh, North Carolina, or to the conference treasurer with the statement that it is to go to the Board of Christian Education. If apportionments are paid in full the Board will be able to carry on its work, but unless our churches do respond the work will be greatly handicapped.

We are trying to do an honest piece of work to aid the churches with their educational program. You will note from the articles on this page this week that the young people of the southeast are learning to work together. Five years ago we had no young people's work in most of our conferences and no convention program for them other than the missionary work. If the Board had done nothing else other than aid the young people in their own organization, I believe it would be worthy of the support which the Convention says the churches should give it.

May I also call your attention to the fact that when the expense account for August was turned in to the treasurer we lacked more than $70.00 of having enough money to pay this account. Since then we have received a check from the North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, but we do not have enough in hand to pay the expenses for this month. If pastors, Sunday school superintendents, church treasurers, young people, and all who are interested in religious education will take this matter to heart and give us a lift the Board will do its best to be worthy of your confidence and will render the best service possible in the field of Christian education.

THE POWER OF UNITED ACTION.

Christian Endeavor Topic for Sept. 29, 1935.

Nehemiah 4:1-6.

Daily Bible Readings:

Disciples working together. Mark 3:13-19.
With one accord. Acts 2:1-4.
Divisions in Corinth. I Cor. 3:3-9.
The church a unit. I Cor. 12:12-27.
Unity of the building. Eph. 2:19-22.
Strife makes confusion. Jas. 3:16-18.

"United we stand, divided we fall." "In unity there is strength."

Have you ever tried doing a task alone? For instance, did you attempt to build up a fallen Christian Endeavor society? Did you yourself really do it (even though it was your leadership and hard work which started the society and kept it going), or was it necessary to enlist the help of others? Do you let your president struggle now trying to keep things going, or do you carry a part of the responsibility? Think of a society where a few do all the work; then think of the society where the officers and committees share alike. Which society does the best work?

In your community, are there things which can be accomplished by several groups which are impossible for one group?

The Peace Plebiscite which will be taken November 10th can be successful only if all church people vote. It is sincerely hoped that your church is diligently making preparations for this event, but if they have not begun such preparation, by all means, see that they write at once to the Department of World Friendship, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass., for the free leaflet, "Prepare for the Peace Plebiscite." Your group is just as important part of this movement as any other. The following suggestion comes from the September "Pilgrim Highroad"; "Offer yourselves as a 'flying squadron' to help make a house-to-house canvass of those who are not at the church service when the ballots are marked."

Suppose there was no united action concerning our mission work? Some mission work would receive all our help while other stations would receive none. Several schools would exist in one community and in hundreds of other places there would be no school.

"Many critics say, 'Young people's societies begin and end in talk. They don't see anything through.' Has that been true of us? For example, in one meeting the young people agreed that they ought to patronize refreshment places which did not sell liquor. But, it was argued, 'Every place sells it.' And most of the members were ready to drop the matter. One boy investigated during the following week, and found twenty-eight places where liquor was not sold. Are we enough interested in action to make such an investigation and then to support dry stores?"—Dr. H. T. Stock.

"Onward, Christian Soldiers! Marching as to war,
With the cross of Jesus going on before.
Christ the royal Master, leads against the foe;
Forward into battle, see His banners go!

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

JAMES (A Great Christian Leader).

Lesson XII—September 22, 1935. . .

Golden Text: "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he hath been approved he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord promised to them that love him."—Jas. 1:12.

Lesson: Acts 15:1-21; James 1:1-17.

James a Great Christian Leader.

James, who is the central character in today's lesson was a brother of Jesus, our Lord. During the early part of the ministry of Jesus, James, with his other brethren did not believe on Jesus, but later, and undoubtedly due in large part to the closing events of the life of Jesus, James did believe in Jesus, and became one of the group which met in the upper room where Pentecost came, and upon which the Holy Spirit came. James was undoubtedly a man of ability for he soon gained the confidence of the disciples, and was elevated to a place of leadership among them. In fact he became the head or the leader of the mother church at Jerusalem, and he exercised an unusual influence on the life of the early church. It is significant that when Paul later came to Jerusalem to confer with the apostles, he conferred only with James. And it is significant that in the councils of the church, even when the apostles themselves were present, James seemed to be the leader. He was not a usurper. He was not exercising special privilege just because he was a brother of Jesus. He was a man of native ability, of deep piety, of sound faith, and of practical religion.

James a Liberal-Minded Christian.

An acute problem soon arose in the early Christian Church. The group known as the Judaizers insisted that a man could not became a Christian—even if he were a Gentile—unless he was first circumcised. A great principle was at stake. It made salvation a matter of law and not of grace. It made Christianity a form of Judaism instead of a new religion. It made religion a matter of literalism instead of a matter of liberty. So acute did the problem become, and so tremendous were the issues at stake, that the church at Antioch sent Paul and Barnabus to Jerusalem to get a decision in the matter. A council was called and the case was heard. A great deal of heat was generated in the discussion. But after hearing the argument on both sides, and especially after hearing Peter tell about how the Holy Spirit had come upon Gentiles who had not been circumcised, James took command of the situation and gave what must have been accepted as an official ruling or judgment, a decision that had far-reaching significance even to this day.

James was a religious liberal of his day. He knew the place of law in religion—he insisted that there were some things that were not in harmony with the ideals of the religion of Jesus. But he asserted that religion was not a matter of law, not another form of Judaism, not a matter of works, but a matter of grace and of spirit. In stating the fact that a Gentile did not have to be circumcised to become a Christian, James proclaimed the larger view of Christianity. Forms, rites, ceremonies, had a place, but they were secondary. The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, through faith, was primary. James declared in words, what Jesus had declared in spirit, the declaration of spiritual independence. Christianity owes much to this broad-minded, large-hearted, spiritually-regenerated man.

James a Great Christian Writer.

James could not only deal with large principles; he could talk about practical things. In his letter which he wrote to the Christians scattered abroad, he gives some of the most practical and helpful suggestions to be found in the Bible. He brings religion out of the abstract and makes it walk in the ordinary realms of life. A striking illustration of his power to do this is to be seen in the first chapter of his letter which is the basis for today's lesson.

Temptation.

James says that temptation is not only an inevitable factor of life, but a useful one. It is not sent by God—a man is tempted when he is drawn away by his own lusts. It is not to be trifled with —it germinates quickly into sin, and sin bringeth forth death. But by facing it and fighting it, we develop character, and win the crown of life which the Lord has promised to them that love Him. Furthermore we do not have to fight temptation alone. God is our helper, our strength, and our victory. Thus it is that one can face life and temptation "with all joy"—there is zest in living, in being men and women, in fighting the good fight of faith and character.

Wisdom.

James also writes about a wisdom which is more than mere knowledge. Its source is in God, who gives insight to those who ask in sincerity and with the purpose of doing his will. One is not to ask for the sake of asking, but for the sake of doing. God does not upbraid those who ask—he does chide us for our lack of wisdom. And He gives liberally to all men, rich and poor alike, if they ask in sincerity and in truth. There are many who are sadly deficient in "book learning" who are wise in the true wisdom, for they have been and are being taught of God. The secrets of the Lord is with those who want to understand his will to do it.

True Democracy.

A man's a man for a' that. Men are not to be judged by whether they are rich or poor. Christianity is a true democracy. A man may be high up in the estimate of the world and yet low down in the divine scale of values. Again a man may be of low estate in the world and yet be exalted in the sight of God.

The Insecurity of Things.

Life is uncertain, says James. The world passes away, but character remains. The rich man fades away in his goings just as much as the poor man. Let every man give heed to the things of the inner man, which passes not away.

The Giver of Every Good Gift.

God is the Giver of every good gift and every perfect gift. Man has only that which he receives. Let him be a thankful and a good steward.

OUR CHURCH IDEAL.

A sanctuary of the Spirit
A friendly household
A training school for Christian character
A center of helpful service
A force for civic righteousness
A power for God throughout the world
An unfailing spring of inner refreshment and strength, free to all who come.

"MY PRAYER."

"It is easy in the world to live after the world's opinions; it is easy in solitude to live after our own; but the Great Man is he who in the midst of the crowd keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude."—Emerson.

I kneel to pray,
But know not what to say;
I cannot tell
What may be ill or well:
But as I look
Into Thy face or Book
I see a love
From which I cannot move:
And learn to rest
In this—Thy will is best:

Therefore I pray
Only have Thine own way
In everything
My all-wise God and King.
Grant me the grace
In all to give Thee place:
This liberty
Alone I ask of Thee:
This only gift,
Have Thy way perfectly.

—Mark Guy Pearse.

TUESDAY.

"FRONT AND CENTER."

"We all with open face (unveiled face) beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory."—II Cor. 3:18.

The following is set forth from the commentary because of its pertinence. In order to see yourself rightly in a mirror you must stand squarely in front of it. Even as in a mirror, unless we set ourselves squarely before him, we cannot reflect Him properly. In point of fact, here is our difficulty. We pay some attention to Christ, but lots of attention to other things. We are divided and the greater portion of ourselves is reflected sidewise. The image we thus reflect cannot conform wholly to His image.

Is it worth while being religious unless we can be genuinely so? The actuating motive of our lives should be first the Kingdom of God, second the Kingdom of God, third and always the Kingdom of God. The moment the Kingdom of God and His righteousness actuates us through and through, all things are right.

Prayer—Our Father, Thou art our God. To whom else shall we go? Forbid that we shall so far forget the value of Thy Kingdom that we have no time for Thee.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"THE STRETCH OF GOD."

"Though your sins be as scarlet . . . "—Isa. 1:18.

Dr. Lymon Abbot is quoted as once saying, "Of all Scripture promises, the one that stretches my faith most is this: to think that a poor sinful, fallen man can become like Christ; that we who are unholy, impure, and selfish, can become like Him, holy, pure and unselfish, is beyond comprehension. The mystery of it I cannot fathom, the fact of it I accept as one of the blessed promises connected with Christ's coming."

Prayer—

Lord, purge our eyes to see
Within the seed of a tree,
Within the glowing egg a bird,
Within the shroud a butterfly.

Till taught by such, we see
Beyond all creatures, Thee,
And hearken for Thy tender word,
And hear it, "Fear not, it is I."

—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"PRIDE'S SURE SUCCESSOR."

"When pride cometh, then cometh shame."—Prov. 11:1-6.

We are not sufficiently afraid of pride. We do not recognize it as the enemy it is. If we knew it as a deadly disease, we should flee from it to a physician; but it is a most deadly and loathsome disease. If we perceived it as a poisonous serpent, we should dart against it our heaviest weapons. If we realized it as an eating fire, we should fling upon it a torrent of water. It is all these, and yet we cherish it and augment it.

Solomon was certain that shame would follow pride, and we may be as certain. Shame is the shadow of pride. Shame is the continuation of self-deceit. When pride mounts the throne, its reign is not long; despair and obloquy soon drive it from its seat.

Prayer—Therefore we will not hold our heads high, but our souls shall be bowed before Thee, O Thou Most High. Thou alone art great, and our pride in Thee is the only pride whose succession is not shame.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

FRIDAY.

"THE FOUNTAIN OF THE SPIRIT."

"Create within me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me."—Ps. 51:10.

What a prayer! It is the same prayer made by the Proverbs when it is said, "Keep thy heart with all diligence for out of it are the issues of life." It is the same prayer James uttered when he asked "Doth a fountain send forth sweet and bitter water?" It is the same principle Jesus taught when He said "No man can serve two Masters'.' Nothing is right unless the heart is right.

Prayer—

"Lord, for the erring thought
Not into evil wrought;
Lord, for the wicked well,
Betrayed and baffled still;
For the heart from itself kept,
Our thanksgiving accept!
For ignorant hopes that were Broken at our blind prayer;
For pain, death, sorrow sent,
Unto our chastisement;
For all loss of seeming good,
Quicken our gratitude."

—Wm. Dean Howells.

SATURDAY.

"HEAVEN'S TEST."

"It is required in stewards that a man be found faithful."—I Cor. 4:2.

So important is faithfulness in Christian character that Christ had made it the one supreme test of acceptance within the portals of heaven. In the parable of the talents, faithfulness was the lone merit of reward; it is the call of the scriptures; it is the plea "unto death;" it is the fruit of the Spirit; it carries with it the making of its reward; on it God bases His judgments! and its victory is complete.

When the world kills off a faithful man because it cannot bend his will, and takes him away from his loyalty, it is not the man that is defeated; it is the world. Such is the world's last cowardly act, and therein it makes its last confession of impotency.

The martyrs captured the world for God as they sang at the stake. The truly strong life is the life that can defy circumstances, and can make every failure a stepping stone to nobler resolves, that can maintain its integrity when all the world is against it. The thing that is of value is not achievement, but fidelity. It is not what we accomplish but how we accomplish it.

Prayer—Our Father, we come to Thee that we may see the value of endurance and faithfulness. Give us the power to hold on to Thee. Give us the strength we need. In Christ's name.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

"SUPPLANTERS."

"Is he not rightly named Jacob? For he hath supplanted me these two times."—Gen. 27:32-36.

"Jacob" means supplanter, and he was fittingly named, as he supplanted his twin brother Esau, both in the matter of the birthright and of his father's blessing conferred upon the first-born. That Jacob valued the birthright and the blessing while Esau did not value them at all, except as he lost them, does not change the despicable character of Jacob.

And if we crowd our brothers out of any of their rights, we share Jacob's shame, whether those rights are scorned by our brothers or not. If we trust in God and wait upon His providence, all that is best for us will reach us in His good time. Every supplanter arraigns the justice of the Infinite Judge and seeks to anticipate it.

Let us be as careful of Esau's rights as of our own. Thus we may even teach him to value them and use them rightly.

Prayer—For we are our brother's keepers, our Father, the keepers of our Esau brothers. Thus shall we spare ourselves the long exile of Mesopotamia.—Amen.

of previous years and totalled $113,737.82. These gifts evidenced the deep place that the work of the Board has in the hearts of over 2500 individual friends."

The reductions of the last three years have been made in accordance with a carefully planned schedule, based on a study of policy in the light of recent surveys and so worked out as to produce the least possible injury to morale. In order to make this possible some capital assets have been liquidated each year to provide help in caring for missionaries withdrawn until they can find work, and in order to give time to the work on the field to make the wisest adjustments in its program. For the past year this amount was smaller than anticipated in the budget. From these assets, largely proceeds of the sale of unused property, there was also applied $25,000 to the reduction of the debt which now stands at $111,713.03.

The Prudential Committee is meeting October 25th in Grand Rapids, Michigan, to adopt the budget for the new Fiscal year. This budget will be relieved by further reductions already decided upon and it is hoped that it will be met wholly by current receipts without further use of capital assets.

THE EXPEDIENCY OF THE MASTER'S DEPARTURE.

By Joseph E. McCauley.

"Nevertheless I tell you the truth, it is expedient for you that I go away, for If I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you, but if I depart I will send Him unto you."—John 16:7.

It is the tendency of the human race to want to keep intact those things which now exist. We dread to see the old home broken up. We grieve at the separation of loved ones whether that separation comes for a short period of time or as a result of death. It is often the case where feuds occur as a result of trying to change conditions about the Church; even though that change is for the better. Human nature wants things to stay as they are.

The disciples were obsessed with this same spirit. They were much disturbed when Jesus told them that he was going into Jerusalem to die and be buried. They could not understand. The Master felt for them and spoke the words of the text for their comfort. Then he reminded them of the need of his going. It was expedient for the disciples and also for all believers. For if he went not away the Comforter would not come. But there were other reason for his going.

I. Entering a Fuller Life.

Christ knew that he was to enter the fuller life. But there was the dread of the transition. The physical agony was a tax on the body. The period of readjustment for his followers was to be a crucial moment in their lives. Jesus knew this and felt tenderly for them. But as to his future he had no dread. He knew that he came from the Father and went to the Father.

Jesus also knew that as long as he was in the flesh there were limitations to his actions without a miracle to release himself from that limitation. Now that he has entered that fuller life, by being crucified and rising from the dead; he is both invisible and visible. At one time he walks with two of the disciples on the highway; again he enters a room where eight of the disciples are gathered behind closed doors. His approach or appearance was not recognized until he stood in their midst. No mention is made in the four gospels as to where Jesus made his abode from the time he arose from the grave until he ascended The only conclusion for us ta arrive at in this matter is that he was in the spiritual body; though often at the place where he was most needed to convince humanity that he had entered into that larger, fuller life. Time and time again he was seen by his friends. They knew that he was liberated from earthly ties; which made him free for a larger service.

II. The Comforter.

Christ was very frank in telling his disciples that if he did not go away to his Father the Holy Spirit, who is the Comforter, could not come. As long as he stayed upon the earth with the physical limitations he could not be everywhere to comfort at all times. But if he went away he would send Him, The Holy Spirit in his stead whose duty it was to abide with all those who would accept him. Since Christ went away, he can be with us at all times and under all circumstances.

Those of us who have experienced a poignant sorrow know the power of his presence. He comforts when all other friends have forsaken us. He abides with us, to guide, to teach, and to comfort when human knowledge fails. Every devout Christian has felt his presence thus in the crucial moments of their lives.

III. It Was Expedient for Him to Depart that Pentecost Might Come.

It was not until the day of pentecost that the disciples accepted their places and responsibility of a spiritual kingdom. It was on that day that they saw for the first time the mission of their Lord on earth. Not before this day had they conceived his kingdom to be of the spirit. Before his death Jesus had told the disciples that he was not to rule over the nations. But they still looked for him to set up an earthly kingdom at Jerusalem. They expected him to be King and they would be rulers over the twelve tribes. After he arose from the dead one of the disciples came to him and said, "Wilt Thou at this time restore again the kingdom of Israel?" How heart-rending this must have been to Jesus.

The day of Pentecost was the undoing of the idea of an earthly kingdom. On that day they were freed from its bonds and entered into a larger sphere of living and service. They now saw the world about them in a new light. They had to suffer hardships; but the Holy Spirit comforted them. They undertook and accomplished tasks beyond the powers of human beings; in these tasks the Holy Spirit guided and sustained them. It was under his leadership that the Spiritual Kingdom grew by leaps and bounds.

IV. A New Place Prepared.

It was necessary for Christ to depart in order that he might prepare a place for them. "I go to prepare a place for you." This should have been a consolation to the disciples and should be a challenge to us to know that the place Christ is preparing is both here and hereafter. The spiritual preparation that Christ has made here could not have been as long as he was in the flesh. He taught us that he is our spiritual forerunner. Since he prepared the spiritual Kingdom for his Church, we have been made free. The individual who has entered that realm can be happy and free even though difficulties overshadow him. The battle may be hard and material possessions few, but the man who has learned that Christ has prepared a place for him, where he can live above the clouds of life, and learns to live in that sphere, that man has truly tasted of his glories.

But the place he has gone to prepare means more than that. The babe in his innocence, the child with his simple faith, the battle-scarred soldier of the Cross, the aged who have passed many winters; all these have a promise; For Christ said: "I go to prepare a place for you." What that is to be we do not know, neither should we worry about that. Jesus' word is sufficient. Whatever and wherever that place is should not worry us. If Jesus prepares it, it will be well. This we know that he will be there, for he said, "Where I am, there ye shall be also."

An English gardener left his garden one afternoon. While he was out the owner walked from his mansion into the garden to see the flowers. He saw one of unusual beauty. He plucked it and returned to the house. In a short while the gardener came back. He looked over his garden and saw that the flower was gone. He asked one of his servants what became of it. He replied that the master came into the garden and plucked it. "Well," said the gardener, "If the master did it; it is all right." Yes, the Master's going was expedient. So it is all right. What he has prepared for us is all right.

Dear Friends:

The cool chilly mornings are here and school has opened. All our little children are in school except two. They are calling for wraps and things to keep them warm. We always put off buying coats and other clothing as long as we can hoping some will be sent in that will save our little bank account as long as possible. I want to appeal to all who have good second-hand dresses, coats, suits that you have outgrown or want something new to take its place, to send them to us. We appreciate garments in good condition. It will help us a lot if you will Parcel Post them to the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, N. C.

Laubach of the Philippine Islands, vigorous promoter of world literacy; Dr. Arthur E. Holt, Professor of Social Ethics, Chicago Theological Seminary and Divinity School of the University of Chicago, and Chairman of the Council for Social Action; Mrs. Franklin D. Warner of Claremont, California, recently returned from a world tour; Rev. Clarence F. McCall of Japan, and Dr. Aaron M. McMillan of Galangue, West Africa.

Remarkable moving pictures on native life in Africa, including several sound films, will be shown by Mr. Phillips and films on the life of the American Indians by Rev. Phillip S. Frazier of Fort Pierre, South Dakota, Pastor at large of the Indian field. The fellowship side of the meeting will be emphasized in the Travellers' dinner, the Young People's dinner and the Laymen's dinner. A specially prepared musical program will thread the sessions. The Chaplain for the meeting will be Rev. T. K. Vogler of the Pilgrim Congregational Church, Duluth, Minn.

Every feature of the close-knit conference, including seminars, business sessions and pre-session retreats of leaders, is planned to give spiritual refreshment, intellectual stimulus and invaluable information about the work of the Kingdom at home and abroad as carried on by the Congregational and Christian churches.

NEW CHURCHES ORGANIZED.

From Rev. George H. Dierlamm, minister of the North Louisiana Larger Parish, comes news of the oragnization of two new churches, in connection with the parish program. Regarding these churches, he writes: "One of these churches is in the Homesville community and is now known as the Christian Congregational Church at Mt. Nebo. This organization was completed August 18th with twenty members. Another organization was completed on July 28th with twenty-one members at Linville, Louisiana. In both of these communities, there were Christian families who had migrated from Alabama. These two new churches are now yoked with the North Louisiana Larger Parish which is ministering to the churches of Drew, Union, Equality and Pleasant Hill in addition to these two new churches. The pastor carries on a full program of Evangelism, Religious Education, Christian Social Service, Youth Leadership Training and Rural Cooperative movement, offering a very helpful service to the entire countryside. This work is spread over part of five parishes. It is about forty miles in width and over sixty miles in length. During the last five years, the North Louisiana Larger Parish program has contributed a great deal to the development of the whole countryside; in addition to its religious work it has sponsored an annual fair which is now growing into a County Fair covering several counties. Daily Vacation Bible Schools are run each year and the young people are organized into a society called the Christian Life Conference, and meet weekly for study and fellowship."

PAUL'S MACEDONIAN CALL.

We have found a clipping from a copy of the New York Christian Advocate of long ago. There is a tinge of sacrilege in it that will shock the sensibilities of the refined old-fashioned folks, but there is such a digging truth in it for these modern times, that we follow the advice of a preacher brother who offers it for publication as the Conference comes apace.

It claims to be a letter attributed to the Apostle Paul concerning the Macedonian Call, and is as follows:

"Dear Sir and Brother: Doubtless you will recall the invitation you extended to me to come over into Macedonia and help the people of that section. You will pardon me for saying that I am somewhat surprised that you should expect a man of my standing in the Church to even consider a call on such meagre information. There are a number of things I would like to learn before giving my decision, and I would appreciate your dropping me a line addressing me at Troas. First of all, I would like to know if Macedonia is a circuit or a station? There is another item you overlooked in your brief and somewhat sudden invitation. No mention was made of the salary I am to receive. I have been through a long and expensive course of training. In fact, I can state with reasonable pride that I am the only Sanhedrin man in the ministry today. Kindly get the Macedonian brethren together and see what can be done as to my support. You have told me nothing about Macedonia beyond the implication that the place needs help. What are the social advantages? Is the church well-organized? I recently had a fine offer to return to Damascus at an increase in salary, and was told I made a very favorable impression on the church at Jerusalem. I will say that I am a first-class mixer and especially strong on argumentative preaching. If I accept the call I must stipulate for a two months' vacation and the privilege of taking an occasional lecture tour. My lecture on 'Over the Wall in a Basket' is worth two drachma of any man's money. For further recommendations write Rev. Simon Peter, D. D.

Sincerely yours,
PAUL.

HE KEEPETH ME.

He keepeth me, O thought sublime!
His light on me doth ever shine;
I cannot lose my heavenly way,
For Jesus keeps me day by day.

He fills my soul with holy joy;
He gives me peace without alloy:
I triumph in redeeming grace
Since Jesus showed His smiling face.

He keepeth me through storm and stress
As onward still my way I press;
And He will keep me evermore,
And land me safe on Canaan's shore.

There I shall give Him endless praise,
Who kept me in life's devious ways;
His keeping power I shall extol
While the eternal ages roll.

THE YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

"Like a mighty army moves the Church of God;
Brothers, we are treading where the saints have trod;
We are not divided, all one body we,
One in hope and doctrine, one in charity.

"Crowns and thrones may perish, kingdoms rise and wane
But the Church of Jesus constant will remain;
Gates of hell can never 'gainst that Church prevail;
We have Christ's own promise, which can never fail.

"Onward, then, ye people! Join our happy throng,
Blend with ours your voices in the triumph song;
Glory, laud, and honor, unto Christ the King,
This thro' countless ages men and angels sing.

"Onward Christian soldiers!
Marching as to war,
With the cross of Jesus
Going on before."

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

No Provisions for Stewardship.—

In a recent debate between the University of Pennsylvania and Penn State College, the question was argued as to what constituted an adequate income for marriage. Budgets were proposed for an income of $2,000 and one of $1,500. The $2,000 income team won the debate. One significant, or sinister fact is noted as one considers the items of these budgets, i. e., no provision for, nor suggestion of religious stewardship is provided.

Lazy Man's Golf.—

We are told that there has recently been perfected a putting cup for golf greens that will enable the player "to retrieve the 'pill' without reaching for it." It is recommended to "golfers who enjoy the thrill of sinking their putts, but not the strain of stooping to get the ball out of the cup." Why not get a ball driver and thus save the energy consumed in stroking the ball. That would indeed be lazy man's golf.

Needed Longer Hours.—

David Lawrence raises the question, "When will the working man get back to the $32.59 weekly pay envelope?" This amount, he says, is the average earning capacity of the skilled and semi-skilled worker in the years just preceding the depression. This amount dropped to $19.50 in 1932, but had risen to $24.58 in January, 1935. In some cases the 1935 hour rate was even higher than that of 1929, but the contention is that a man cannot pay his food bills or other rising costs with a certificate that says his hour wage rate is higher. He says that the answer to this problem is more work. "Not only are the working men in need of more hours, but more days in the week."

The Garden of Eden.—

It is usually agreed that the Garden of Eden was located in what is now Irak, in Asia, between the Euphrates and Tigris rivers, and not far from the ancient city of Babylon. The Detroit News, however, has discovered a tradition that the Garden of Eden was located on Praslin, an island almost in the center of the Indian Ocean, a thousand miles due east of Mombasa, Africa. The island, we are told, is one of the loveliest places in the world, and there are numerous "ready-to-eat foods to appeal to the appetite." The forbidden fruit of the Bible was the nut of the coco de mer which grows to the height of 150 feet and bears nuts weighing as much as twenty pounds.

Literate Protestantism.—

"It is significant," says a recent issue of the Christian Observer, "that while 70 per cent of the population of Brazil can neither read nor write, among the Protestants there are no illiterates. The influence of Protestantism has been greatly strengthened in Brazil owing to the World Sunday School Congress at Rio de Jeneiro in 1932, attended by delegates of 33 nations. The president of the Republic and other high authorities testified on that occasion to the importance of the work of the Protestant population, and since then the position of Protestantism in Brazil has been considerably improved." At the present time statistics show that there is a Protestant population of about 1,000,000 among the 42,000,000 inhabitants of Brazil.

Life Insurance Sales Lower.—

The sales of ordinary life insurance have declined quite a bit during the present year, and in August reached the lowest point during the year. Not only was August the low month for the year, but in August sales reached the lowest totals for any month since 1922. This decline in life insurance sales would on first thought seem to be an unfavorable condition, but study will probably reveal that the insurance business has been oversold. Many have bought insurance to cover estate losses caused by the decline of value in securities etc. Others, who have been afraid to make the usual investments have turned to insurance as an investment. Thus the drop in insurance sales may be caused by the gradual return of estate values, or it may mean that people are recovering somewhat from their depression scare, and are investing in probably less safe but more remunerative projects. If the loss in the amount of sales is caused by a returning confidence, there is no cause for alarm.

Farm Lands Worth More.—

Statistics show that farm land is now worth an average of 90 per cent of its pre-war value. For example, land which before the war sold for $100, rose to $170 in 1920 and dropped back to $116 during 1929. It reached a low of $73 in 1933, but at the present time has risen to $90. Increased farm incomes are considered responsible for this rapid increase in land values since last March. It is estimated that the cash incomes of farmers, including of course benefit payments, will reach over $6,500 millions during 1935. Another thing which has tended to make farm lands more valuable, is the fact that while there has been a decided increase in the commodities which the farmer has for sale, those which he must buy have not materially changed. Federal Land Banks, which took over 33,647 farms during the depression, sold 6,905 during the twelve months ended July 31, 1935. This was the largest number of sales made in any 12-month period since these banks have been in operation.

The Lord's Acre.—

The Religious Digest, Volume I, No. 1, of which has just come to our desk, carries the following: "The Lord's Acre plan is spreading rapidly, especially in the southern part of the nation. The idea suggests that a farmer or land owner shall dedicate an acre or a fraction thereof specifically to the Lord, the fruits of the acre to be sold, and the money given to the church and the cause of religion. In lower South Carolina there are to date twenty churches using the plan. A Baptist minister tells of 60,000 acres so dedicated in Georgia. In Western North Carolina, the Farmers' Federation has a religious department led by a Presbyterian minister. Under his leadership, the number of churches using the plan has grown from six to two hundred, nine denominations entering into the work. Many churches which were receiving annual subsidies from their Home Mission Boards have become entirely self-supporting not only, but have been able to lend a hand to the whole work of the church." This is possibly the most comprehensive adoption of the Lord's Acre plan to date. Congregational and Christian churches might profit by its use.

Are We Over-Churched?—

Statistics show that the ratio of population to church organizations in the United States has steadily declined since the founding of the nation. In the year 1775 there is said to have been only one church for each 1376 persons. Ninety-five years later the ratio was less than half of that, being one organization to each 612 of the population, and in 1933, sixty-three years later, the ratio stood one to 586. This does not mean that the churches of the country have an average size of 576, but that there would be that many if every man, woman and child in the country were members of some church. The actual average membership is woefully below this figure. This raises the question as to whether or not the country is over-churched. Supposing that seventy per cent of the population were of church-going age, and that half of this number were members, the membership would then average about 200 active and non-active members. If these attended 100 per cent one service each Sunday, but did not attend but one service, the average congregation at both morning and evening service would be 100—this almost ideal attendance does not exist. However, our church edifices will seat possibly two to three times this number. It would seem under these conditions that there is decidedly too much duplication of effort and expense. On the other hand this effort and expense could be advantageously used for better prepared ministers, better church edifices, and to bring into the churches of America those who are still on the outside.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. James H. Lightbourne, D. D., pastor of our Burlington Church, conducted the devotional service at Elon one day the past week and was a welcome visitor in the editorial office of THE SUN. Pastor Lightbourne expressed great anxiety over the extreme illness of two heretofore active and well-known members of his church—Mrs. J. H. Brooks and Mrs. W. H. Carroll. For several days the lives of the two good women have seemed to hang on a bare thread and little hope is expressed for their recovery. We join with the pastor in expressing our deep interest and sympathy for the households thus afflicted.

Rev. F. Ervin Hyde, till recently pastor of our Monticello Church, was formally installed as pastor of our Sanford and Shallow Well pastorate on Sunday, September 22nd. Rev. T. E. White, a former pastor, presided at the services and Deacon A. H. McIver extended the welcome to the new pastor in behalf of the congregation. Rev. E. J. Sanderson began his pastorate with our Monticello church, Sunday, September 22nd, as Brother Hyde's successor. Brother Sanderson comes to Monticello from Keswick, Ont. Both Mr. and Mrs. Sanderson are taking studies in religious education at Elon College. We bespeak for them the cordial cooperation of our Monticello Crurch and community.

John T. Kernodle, managing editor, and his good mother, Mrs. P. J. Kernodle, of Richmond, were very welcome visitors at Elon College, Sunday, September 22nd. Carrying on his shoulders the burden of issuing THE CHRISTIAN SUN every week, John T. is naturally and necessarily interested in all the enterprises and interests of the church. One cannot even read proof or copy read THE CHRISTIAN SUN from week to week without getting a keen and comprehensive insight into all the needs, demands and achievements of the. church. Publishing THE SUN from week to week is a real burden, though an absolutely essential one and it certainly behooves every pastor and interested layman of the church to help bear that burden certainly to the extend of increasing the circulation of the church paper.

This week our Palm Street Church (Greensboro) joins with Grace Methodist Church in a union evangelistic campaign. Of this united effore, the Greensboro Daily News says: "Palm Streen Congregational-Christian church and Grace M. E. Church, South, which are entering upon a union revival campaign Sunday, will celebrate the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper together at Palm Street church Sunday evening. Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, Rev. B. J. Earp, pastor of Palm Street will preach at Grace church.. At 7:30 Sunday evening, Rev. Reid Wall, pastor of Grace church will preach at Palm Street. Monday evening at 7:30, Rev. A. B. Wall of Arlington, Ga., will preach. He will bring messages daily thereafter at 10 A. M. and 7:30 P. M. The directors and the united choirs of the two churches will lead the music. Services will be held at Palm St. church during the first week September 22nd to the 29th, and at Grace church the following week."

Rev. W. A. Grissom, licentiate of the Eastern North Carolina Conference and pastor of our Amelia and Clayton Christian Churches, is now a student at Elon College where he begins work in the Junior year. Brother Grissom reports fine meetings recently held in both of his churches, Amelia receiving thirteen members at the close of the meeting and Clayton five members. Both churches were greatly strengthened spiritually by the meetings, and there is an awakening of interest among the members. The church at Clayton decided to re-cover its Sunday school rooms, and money and pledges were contributed at the close of the meeting to cover the entire cost of this needed work. W. A. is brother to Rev. R. T. Grissom in charge of our mountain work, and the Grissom home in our Liberty (Vance) Church community must be an exceedingly happy one, having given to the church these two excellent and promising young ministers. How fortunate is that home, indeed, in which such an atmosphere of reverence and devotion to duty and to God prevails, that the voice of God, even the "still small voice" may be heard as He speaks, "Go, preach my Gospel."

Rev. J. L. Neese, pastor of our Reidsville and New Lebanon churches, reports a very happy summer's work and inviting prospects for renewed activity in his charge. Our Reidsville Church is beginning the work of making the necessary additions to its plant, the foundation having been dug and preparations made for the building to begin. The estimated cost of the addition is to be $4,000, $1,800 of which is necessary to enclose the structure. It is proposed to begin building as soon as this amount is in hand, $900 of which has been paid in and additional sums pledged. Pastor Neese feels that if friends of the church, other than those at Reidsville, would make some contribution to the work at this time, it would be most timely, encouraging and very helpful. It certainly would be money well invester for the kingdom. Since Brother Neese went to Reidsville—November 1st, 1934—there have been some 200 professions of faith and reclamations and some over 80 additions to the church roll. The prospects are that Bro. Neese and his church will go to Annual Conference with all apportionments and obligations paid in full. One of the features of our good Reidsville congregation is the midweek prayer meeting, whose attendance runs around 150 weekly. The Sunday school attendance is 300 and the prospect is for a goal of 400 to be reached shortly since the beginning of fall work and the disappearing of infantile paralysis.

FINANCING WOMEN'S WORK.

The support furnished for women's work in the state Conferences throughout the country amounts to a total of approximately $20,000.00 or to three and a third cents per capita for the women in the membership of the Congregational and Christian churches.

This estimated total is based upon questionnaires which have been returned from twenty of the forty-nine Conferences to Mrs. David E. Brown, associate secretary of the Commission on Missions. In these Conferences are 58 per cent of the women of the denomination.

The questionnaires were prepared in the endeavor to ascertain how it is faring with women's work under the new arrangements which were begun in the Congregational churches with the reorganization of the missionary work in 1926. The reorganization re-placed the separate women's national home and foreign mission boards and the Conferences' women's home missionary unions and foreign mission branches with the plan that the women's work should become integrated in the whole program of the Church.

The data secured from the questionnaires will be considered at the annual meeting of the presidents of the state Conference women's organizations to take place in January at Evanston, Ill., as part of the annual national executive conference of the denomination, popularly called the "Mid-Winter Meetings." A consensus of opinion will be sought upon what financial support is needed to enable the women's state Conference organizations carry on the work for which they are responsible. The questionnaires show that the per capita support provided varies greatly in amount.

The work for which the women's organizations of the Conferences are now responsible, as set forth in the constitution of the New York society, is:

"To enlist by means of intensive education the interest and systematic support of our Congregational women, young people and children, in the entire program of our denomination both at home and abroad; to promote through active affiliation with the state Conference the special work of the Conference; to help promote the entire work of the local church, and to further in every way possible the cause of Christ throughout the world."

The New York state society carries on its work with the assistance of auxiliaries in the Associations. It has a field secretary, a children and young people's secretary and assistant secretary, a thank-offering secretary; it has committees on prayer, on field work, on box work, on distribution of literature, on citizenship, on international relationships. The last two committees are new this year. The citizenship committee is to represent the interests of the Council for Social Action.

The financial support for women's work in the Conferences reporting is:

BENEVOLENCE CONTRIBUTIONS THIS YEAR.

A decrease of 2.17 per cent is reported by the Commission on Missions in the combined apportionment receipts of the state Conferences, the Home Boards and the American Board for the first eight months of this year, January through August, compared with the similar period last year. The total this year is $612,031; it was $625,588 in 1934.

Regionally there were gains in the Middle Atlantic and the Mid-West; losses were in New England, the Southeast, and the Pacific Slope. Middle Atlantic, $90,572, gain of 2.13 per cent; Mid West, $173,688, gain of .25 per cent; New England, $287,623, loss of 3.92 per cent; Southeast, $9,580, loss of 11.03 per cent; Pacific Slope, $43,631, loss of 5.16 per cent.

SPEAKERS FOR THE NATIONAL AGENCIES.

Speakers representing the national agencies on itineraries planned by the state Conferences this fall include, in addition to those mentioned in THE CHRISTIAN SUN last week:

Dr. George L. Cady, New York City, executive secretary of the American Missionary Association; in Michigan.

Dr. Harry Thomas Stock, Boston, Secretary, student and young people's work, Education Society; in California.

Mrs. Franklin H. Warner, Claremont, Calif., first vice-president, American Board; in northern California.

A LOSS TO INTERNATIONAL AMITY.

Sir Robert Murray Hyslop, 77, iron and steel industrialist and treasurer of the Congregational Union of England and Wales many years died September 11th in London. Sir Murray attended the International Council meeting at Boston in 1920 and was a leader in the British Congregational Goodwill Pilgrimage which brought 1,250 Britons in the chartered liner Celtic to America in 1928. At the farewell dinner of the Pilgrimage in Hotel Astor, New York City, he said:

"It is sentiment that builds the home, that makes real patriots, and some of us have come to see that sentiment introduced into international affairs will solve problems that have baffled the shrewdest of the old diplomats. Surely the day and the hour has arrived when there is need that the people of our churches on both sides of the Atlantic be bound together to promote the sentiment of brotherhood among nations and especially to cultivate a good fellowship between English speaking peoples."

ANTIOCH HOME-COMING.

There is to be a "Home-Coming Day" at Antioch Christian Church on Sunday, September 29th.

Former pastors, any relatives of former pastors, (now deceased) members of the church, former members, and friends are cordially invited.

Come, bring your basket lunch, be with your friends and enjoy the speaking, music, etc.

A Story for the Children

THE PUPPY WHO NAMED HIMSELF.

The puppy had lived with the Baxter children for two months and still he had no real name. Arthur called him "Pup." Beatrice called him "Wag" because he wagged his tail so hard whenever he was pleased and he was pleased so often. Bruce called him "Bumps" because he raced around the house so fast that he bumped into things, and litle Mary called him "Brownie" because he was a brown dog.

"I think it's a shame
Our dog has no name,"
said Arthur one afternoon.

"Of names he has four—
What could you ask more?"
promptly replied Beatrice.

Arthur shook his head and said,

"Nice little dog can race and jump,
But has to bear the name of Bump.
To call him Pup is not so mad,
But Wag and Brownie make me sad."

"Really, we must agree on a name for him," said Beatrice, laughing at her brother's mournful tones.

"He has a tail, two eyes, a nose,
But no name to carry where he goes,"
said Bruce.

"Whether he has a name or not,
I like my dog an awful lot," added Mary.

"I have an idea. The puppy shall name himself," said Arthur with a pleased expression. He began to recite loudly:

" Come one, come all, and hear me say
What shall befall this very day.
Now gather round and to me hark
While Pup and I do talk and bark."

The puppy, who had been playing in the corner with an old shoe looked up at the sound of the laughter and began to bark.

"There! He says he is much obliged for my thought of him," said Arthur.

"Do be sensible and tell us about your idea," said Bruce.

"Let's each get three pieces of paper," said Arthur, leading the way to the playroom. "On each piece we'll write a different name for a puppy. I'll choose 'Prince,' 'Peter,' and 'Pickles.' "

"I don't like those names for a dog," said Beatrice, making a face. "Mine shall be much nicer. I'll write down 'Waggles,' 'Fido,' and 'Tiny.' "

"Those are terrible," groaned Bruce. "This puppy will be a big dog some day. Think of calling him Fido or Tiny when he's big enough to knock us over. I shall put down 'Lion' because he's going to be big, 'Baxter' because he is one of the family, and 'Bump' because he bumps into things now and will be more bumpy when he is bigger."

"O dear! I don't know what to write," said little Mary. "I'd like to write 'Brownie' on all three slips, but I suppose I mustn't. Well, I'll write 'Barker' because Brownie has such a cute bark, and 'Breeze' because mother says he goes through the house like a gale of wind."

"Now we'll put all these slips of paper on the floor in a big circle," said Arthur, "and then we'll call in Pup."

"Come, Wag," called Beatrice when the circle was ready.

"Here, Bump," said Bruce, and whistled.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE DEMAND FOR EVANGELISM.

There can be no mistaking the fact that on all sides there is an insistent demand for personal evangelism. The church realizes desperately the need of recovering the passion which once characterized the church. Again and again we recur to the indisputable fact that the early church, as revealed in the New Testament, was primarily an evangelistic movement, and that the rehabilitation of the church through many periods since that day has always been through evangelism; a passion within the church, whether from pulpit or pew, for the winning of lost souls to Christ. We may talk about a "social gospel" all we want, but unless it is based on and is a part of the gospel for personal salvation, it does not carry us anywhere. The fact is there are not two gospels but one gospel—that of saving the individual through society and that of saving society through the individual. After all, society is just made up of each and all of us.

However, essential as evangelism is in the church, it should ever be borne in mind that the evangelistic effort is the beginning, and not the end, in view. For the church to be revived and for a soul to be redeemed are not enough. They are the beginnings which give prospect and promise of great things to come. Evangelism is a basic truth but not the whole process. We find ourselves in most hearty accord with what the editor of the Christian Evangelist has to say in this connection:

"One of these basic truths—perhaps the most important of all—is that evangelism is, after all, not an end but purely a means. It is not something—whether expressed through revival meetings or through the church school—which is good of itself. It is good only if it effects the end desired by the imperialistic Christian religion: the conversion of men and women to the gospel of Christ and the Christian way of life.

"Another basic truth is that evangelism must go beyond mere nominal conversion if it accomplishes anything genuinely worth while in the building of the Kingdom of God. There is a great question here which our churches, in common with all other Christian congregations, must study and solve: the question of how we shall persuade people so thoroughly of the truth and practicality of Christ's teachings that the "converts" will truly be people "born again," "turned about" people, people who re-examine all their lives, not in any morbid way but searchingly as the result of their deep convictions, to see that they are living in accordance with the Christian gospel.

"Still another basic truth is that we must eliminate from our thinking the false idea that "educational" evangelism is one thing and revival meetings are another thing, something which is not "educational." We must understand that a revival meeting may be an educational influence on people just as surely as a church school class may be—for anything which alters men and women, touches them, gives them ideas and idealisms, is "educational." A revival meeting is one technique of education, a classroom lecture is another, and a class conducted along experience-centered discussion lines is simply another technique."

The church has wide scope and must adopt many methods and carry much baggage in its work and pilgrimage of building up the kingdom of heaven on earth. There is room within its fold for the efforts and consecrated service of all heroic souls.

GOVERNMENT RELIEF.

We are told in what is regarded as authentic figures, that we now have twenty-two million souls on public relief—18 per cent of our nation's population. We have been spending about $50,000,000 a month for two years to give relief to these "unemployed." However, the number does not seem to decrease perceptibly. The fact is that once a person gets on relief, it is no easy matter for him or her to relinquish the claim and desire for relief. Only by strength of character and individual courage and determination can relief rolls be curtailed. Social workers and many who are engaged by Uncle Sam to carry relief are now beginning to point out that the churches have a duty and an obligation in this matter which they are not discharging to any great extent. President Roosevelt said, as he advocated giving relief to the unemployed: "We appreciate that the things of the body are important, but we appreciate also that the things of the soul are immeasurably more important. The foundation stone of our national life is and ever must be the high individual character of the individual citizen."

As the moral and spiritual agency dealing with the souls and salvation of individuals and society, the church has a monumental task,—that of carrying the gospel of hope and courage and strength, so that "the high individual character of the individual citizen" shall be strengthened, made independent, made secure, made courageous. The most adventurous thing in this life and the most courageous is that of adventure in righteousness, since it gives strength to character and invincible strength and courage to the soul.

A SUGGESTION TO PASTORS.

It is not difficult to make suggestions to pastors. They are always coming up and crowding in—these suggestions are. In fact there are so many that as a rule little heed is given them.

However, we are reminded to pass on to any and sundry, who may care to take note, the experience of a good Methodist pastor which turned out to be a very happy one, not only for the pastor, but for his congregation and church at large. Rev. C. T. Thrift, writing in last week's North Carolina Christian Advocate, tells how and when he took charge of his present pastorate in a rural district of North Carolina. He found but two copies of his church paper coming into his entire pastorate and not a single one of his church stewards was taking it. And then he began where so many leave off and lose out:

"I called attention to the Advocate from the pulpit and discussed the matter with the stewards but did not seem to get anywhere." Now note this pastor's procedure and the amazing results:

"The thought occurred to me to get a bundle of Advocates and sell them each week at a nickel a copy at the various churches and in the homes of the people as I went around visiting. I found that it worked. People who did not have two dollars to spare for a year's subscription or would not invest that much would buy a copy for five cents.

"The results are amazing. Now every steward is subscribing to the Advocate, several others have subscribed, and every week there are nearly one hundred copies being circulated on this charge. People are eager to get it. The children almost cry for it.

"The method of handling the Advocate is simple. I order the Advocate in bulk each week, remitting for it at the time. That saves any bookkeeping in the Advocate office. (I was surprised to find that the cost in bulk was three cents a copy. The retail price was five cents as per their instructions. This enabled me to give away many Advocates each week.) Every family that wants an Advocate gets one. If they have the money they pay for it. If they don't have the money with them they get the paper and pay for it later. I keep no books. Sometimes a person will hand me as much as a quarter for papers previously bought. They keep the account. Where people are not able to pay for the paper I give it to them without any idea of collecting then or any other time. But I am satisfied that it finances itself. But if it didn't I would still think it a splendid investment. If it cost me $50 a year I think it would do the Methodist Church and the kingdom of God more good than to pay $50 on the benevolences or $500 on my salary."

There is not a pastorate in North Carolina or in Virginia in our Congregational-Christian constituency that cannot with similar effort show like results. And what a boost, indeed, this would be not merely for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, which needs the boost, but for every movement and enterprise that the pastor himself stands for, represents and preaches. Busy pastors try it. Verbum Sap.

Today is your day and mine, the only day that we have, the day in which we play our part. What our part may signify in the great whole, we may not understand, but we are here to play it, and now is our time. This we know: It is a part of action, not of whining. It is a part of love, not cynicism. It is for us to express love in terms of human helpfulness. This we know, for we have learned from sad experience that any other course of life leads toward decay and waste.

JOHN WESLEY.

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

(A paper which was read before the Eastern Virginia Ministerial Union, and which, by popular vote, is to be published in The Christian Sun in several installments. The first installment follows.)

There was a man sent from God whose name was John—John Wesley.

It was Emerson, I think, who once said that if you want to train a child, you must begin with his grandfather. It was, of course, that wise man's way of saying that heredity was tremendously important. And although there are many exceptions to the rule, it is certainly true of John Wesley that he inherited from his ancestry many of the qualities that made him the remarkable man that he was.

Wesley's great grandfather, Bartholomew, and his grandfather, John, were Oxford men and clergymen, although it seems probable that his grandfather John never received Episcopal ordination. Both men were in sympathy with the Puritan cause, and with independence characteristic of the Wesley strain, they were willing to pay the price of their convictions. Both were ejected from the established church for their views and for their sympathies. Bartholomew turned to the practice of physic after the church was closed to him, and lived to a ripe old age. But John who was subjected to repeated imprisonment for his religious views, broke under the hardships of his lot and died at the early age of thirty-four. From both grandfather and father, Samuel Wesley, John Wesley's father, inherited the sturdy personal independent character of the Wesley stock. Wesley's grandmother came from splendid Puritan stock. She was the daughter of the scholorly John White, a member of the Westminster Assembly and one of the original patentees of the Massachusetts colony. She was also a niece of that witty divine, Samuel Fuller, and it was perhaps from this strain that Samuel Wesley inherited that quaint humor which was so characteristic of him.

Samuel Wesley, the father of John Wesley, was a man of no mean ability. His mother had hoped that he would be a dissenting minister and sent him to an academy with that end in mind. But with characteristic independence of mind her son examined for himself the grounds of nonconformity, and decided that he was going to prepare himself for orders in the Established Church. Knowing that his decision would probably grieve his mother, he kept his own counsel, and after praying long over the matter, rose up early one morning, took his clothing in a bundle, and with only a small sum in his pocket, walked to Oxford and enrolled himself as a servitor in Exeter College. He thus earned the greatest part of his college expenses by waiting on the table. Soon after he graduated with a Bachelor's degree in 1688 he was ordained or received orders, and after being assigned in London for a year as an assistant pastor or rector, and as a chaplain on a man-of-war for another year, he was recommended to a little parish in Lincolnshire, where he served at a salary of fifty pounds per year, "and one child additional per annum," until he was called to Epworth. He brought with him his wife and four children, the youngest an infant in arms. It was at Epworth that Samuel Wesley spent the remainder of his life—forty years—and so faithfully did he labor, and so wisely did he build, and so patiently and sacrificially did he endure, that under his ministry he saw the little village, and the surrounding community transformed in a remarkable way.

Epworth was far from being a promising field. The region itself had been but recently reclaimed from the fens, and much of the land was little better than a swamp. The people were much below the average of English rural people, illiterate, boorish, vulgar, profane, and morally corrupt. They had no interest in religion,even in its merely outward and conventional aspects and they did not welcome their new minister with any degree of relish. Indeed they vexed and harassed him, burned his crops, hocked his cattle, and finally even burned down the rectory. But Samuel Wesley refused to be either intimidated or to be soured. He stuck stoutly to his task and he preserved in a remarkable way his sweetness of spirit and his spirit of service. He manifested the spirit of Christ in such a remarkable way that at last he broke down the prejudice of the people and won at least a surly confidence. He had many interests—he was interested in public affairs and in politics, he was a student, he wrote a commentary on the book of Job, and he even wrote poetry, but first and foremost in his life was his work as a parish priest. He had a real passion for the spiritual welfare of his people and for forty years he labored, instructing, reproving, exhorting, visiting from house to house, knowing every soul in his charge by name, till he lived to see the number of his communicants increased by ten-fold, and the moral tone of the entire community cleansed and elevated. Samuel Wesley gave John Wesley a great heritage both of faith and practice.

Someone has said that back of the life of every great man, there is a great woman. Whether this has always been true, it was true of John Wesley. For the dominant influence in the Epworth rectory was not that of the rector Samuel Wesley, but of his wife Susanna Wesley. She was the daughter of the great Dr. Annesley, the St. Paul of conformity—by the way, she was his twenty-fifth child—and at the early age of thirteen she had gone over for herself all the arguments for dissent and had deliberately decided to enter the Church of England. She was a woman of remarkable dignity and poise of character, of independent thinking, and force of intellect. She had sound practical judgment and an amazing steadiness of purpose. She seems to have lacked a sense of humor, and was perhaps somewhat deficient in the softer and more distinctively feminine graces, but she was every inch a real woman in character, and a great mother. She and her husband were seldom in accord on political matters, and often not in harmony in their views on religious questions, but the happiness of their married life was not disturbed by these variances of opinion so frequent and so prononced, which is proof of the mutual respect and the deep affection which each had for the other. Their union was one of singular beauty and loyalty over a long period of years, and it exercised a far-reaching influence on the lives of all the children.

The education of the children was almost entirely intrusted to Mrs. Wesley. She began it in the cradle. As the children emerged from infancy their hours of work and play, their habits of dress, manners, speech were all regulated by strict rule, and instant obedience was always required. "The first thing to be done with children," said Mrs. Wesley, "is to conquer their will." In spite of what would be looked upon as tco rigid a discipline in the days of lax parental authority, Mrs. Wesley won and held the respect and the esteem of her children. Her patience was so exhaustless and all her requirements so evidently dictated by love that her children never rebelled, but retained a grateful recollection of the rectory all their days.

At the age of five came the solemn day when every child was taught his letters in one day of six hours, and the next morning he began his reading lessons, beginning with the first verse of the first chapter of Genesis. She was the most tireless and patient of teachers. And she gave due place to religious training. She prepared a clear explanation of the Catechism and the Creed, and was accustomed to meet her children separately once a week, at a specified time, for an hour of religious conversation and instruction. Long afterward, when John Wesley was a Fellow in Lincoln College he wrote to his mother begging her to give him an hour of her thought and prayer every Thursday morning, as she used to do when he was a boy at home.

It was from parents of this type, and into a home of this strict, but cheerful discipline that John Wesley was born on June 28, 1703. He was the fifteenth of nineteen children, of whom however, only ten survived from the period of infancy. There were three sons and seven daughters in the family, and although the daughters received a better education than most young women of the time could boast, it is evident that the plans and the efforts of the rector were given mostly to the boys. Samuel, an older brother, was educated at Westminster and Christ Church, Oxford, and Charles, a younger brother, also received a college education. The members of the large family cheerfully bore the privations involved in helping the boys to secure an education.

Little is know of the early life of Wesley. But one incident made a profound impression on him. When he was but six years old the rectory was burned, and the family, hurrying out to escape, left John sleeping in the attic. He was rescued through a window only an instant before the blazing roof fell in upon his bed. Wesley always retained a vivid recollection of the scene, and more than half a century later, when thinking himself near death, he composed his own epitaph describing himself as "a brand plucked from the burning."

Another factor which entered into Wesley's life was what is known as the "Epworth Noises." In December, 1716, and January, 1717, the rectory was disturbed by strange noises, which were attributed to supernatural agencies. These sounds were generally those of knocking upon doors or upon the floors or ceiling of the rooms where the family was sitting, the noise as of a heavy chain clanking, the breaking of crockery, the jangling of money upon the floor, a heavy tread upon the stairs, or the sweep of a garment as someone walked along. Repeatedly the latch of a door would be lifted as one of the family was about to enter. The matter has never been satisfactorily explained. Wesley was not at home at this time, but through the letters of his family and in his conversations with them when he returned home, he became firmly convinced that these disturbances could have been no other than a supernatural cause. They fixed in his mind a belief in some realities beyond our positive knowledge, and go far to account for the credulity in the man which even his most partial admirers must admit.

In January, 1714, Wesley entered Charterhouse School in London. We know little about him during his school life here. He evidently was a boy of quiet temper, studious, and one who made good use of his time. Samuel, his older brother, wrote thus to his father: "Jackie is a brave boy, learning Hebrew as fast as he can." He soon gained a reputation by virtue of his wholesome sense of personal independence. One of his biographers asserts that Wesley lost his religion at the Charterhouse School. He says "John Wesley entered the Charterhouse a saint and left it a sinner," which seems to be nonsense. If, as Wesley

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Bible contains many precious promises. God invites believers to approach the throne of grace in the spirit of prayer. The prayer of faith and humility prevails with God. Our Father in heaven hears and answers prayer. Why do so many Christians fail to receive the things for which they have prayed? Why do so many good people fail to reach the spiritual attainments for which they have labored so earnestly and faithfully?

Unanswered prayers are a great problem to many Christians. Trusting in the promises found in the Bible, and believing implicitly in the word of God, they have for years presented their petitions in humble prayer, and they have not received a positive answer. "Ask and ye shall receive," seems meaningless in such an experience. But the background of all faith should rest upon the teachings of the Bible as well as upon the promises of God. God sometimes has something better than the requests expressed in prayer.

Consider the experience of Moses. At the age of eighty years he obeyed God's call to lead the Israelites out of Egypt and begin their journey towards the promised land. For generations these people had dreamed of a time when they might be free and dwell in the land of promise. For this they prayed with an expectant faith. Moses surrendered to the call of God and undertook this great work with an abiding faith that he would be permitted to enter Canaan. But one day he disobeyed the instruction of God and smote the rock twice instead of waiting upon God to bring forth the water. "Therefore ye shall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them." (Num. 20:12.) Moses was impatient. God wanted a man to wait for the Divine Voice and power.

Moses wanted to enter Canaan with the chosen people. He had prayed and labored to that end. God forgave him for his impatience and disobedience, but did not permit him to reach his cherished ideal and succeed in his plan. One might regard this as a great disappointment to his faith. But was it a disappointment? When this great spiritual leader was directed to go upon Mount Nebo and view the promised land, God was with him. One can imagine God standing by the side of his servant pointing out to him the beauty of the land in the distance and saying: "Moses, you have been on this journey for forty years. The way has been long, and the task has been a burden to you. You have done a great work. Your eye is undimmed and your strength is sufficient for many more days of toil. I cannot grant you the privilege of going into the land. But these people shall go. And I will be with them. I have something better than Canaan for you. I will give you rest with Me, which is far better."

If one is willing to leave the answer with the Father and trust Him to give what He thinks is best; if we are true to Him, we will seek to conform to His will, and prayer will be unselfish. God does not promise to give His children everything they want. But He will hear their prayer and give them something better, sometimes, and such spiritual blessings are waiting for many people with broken hearts and disappointed hopes.

Have your prayers been unanswered? Is there some great plan for which you have been living? Does it seem to you that you have failed to accomplish success? Have you been denied many blessings which you believed God would bestow in answer to your prayer and as a reward for your work? If you have met all the requirements of God by consecration and faith, do not be discouraged. God will, in His own good time and way, show you something better than you have asked for, and reward your petitions and labor by giving you more than your heart has desired. Stay with God and wait for His supreme revelation of love.

ELON COLLEGE REPORT.

This does not mean a report to a convention or conference, but it is a report that will be of interest to local churches and all individuals who are interested in Elon College. No report of the College at this particular time could afford to pass the matter of enrollment and general improvement by. The enrollment, spirit, and optimism are just about all that could be wished for under present conditions. According to the records in the office, 441 different individuals have registered for this term. This includes all who are enrolled in music, commercial, dramatic, and business departments, but no one student is counted more than once. We are having some difficulty in providing comfortable rooming places for boys, notwithstanding the fact that the old publishing house has been rebuilt into a modern dormitory for young men. After renovating and opening Ladies' Hall we have been able to take care of the young ladies of our student body without difficulty.

The spirit of the school is good. Classroom and department work is beginning profitably. The whole outlook for the year 1935-36 is not only satisfactory, but most encouraging. These improved conditions on the campus call for a new loyalty and a new cooperation on the part of the church as a whole and the alumni wherever the members of the association may be found.

The student body has practically doubled what it was in 1933, only two years ago. With such rapid growth, expansion on all lines has been necessary. When you have to provide additional rooms you have to provide furnishings for those rooms. We have been compelled to purchase all new furniture for the 48 rooms in the old publishing house in addition to the rebuilding necessary to make it a comfortable rooming house. These improvements, including the furnishings, cost between four and five thousand dollars. Reconditioning of Ladies' Hall and new furniture cost about $600. A new pump for the college well cost $1,150.80. A new mower for the campus cost $342. You will readily observe that these items have run beyond the six-thousand-dollar mark. This amount, together with accumulations through the summer has drawn heavily on our school resources. With an increased student body, of course, we will have an increased income but not sufficient to take care of this additional expense of repairs without seriously impairing our treasury when we start to draw checks for salaries. In a proposed settlement of the debts of the college, all income from endowment is assigned to the Virginia Trust Company, not one dollar of which will be available for the current expenses of the college. Necessarily, we are compelled to turn to the churches and to our friends with a hope that the amount allotted the college by convention action may be available. This letter is an open letter to the members and officials of our local churches to please see that their convention apportionments are paid in full and further to see that the amount allotted to the college is designated for the college in their reports to the annual conference.

The writer feels that the college not only deserves considration but congratulations on being able to make as good showing as it is making today. The odds have been against us, but we have steadily gone forward. Now we need your help. If there was ever a day in the history of the college in which it needed the encouragement and help of the church and its friends that day is this one. I want to express to every one who has spoken a kind word or given a penny the college's great appreciation of your help. In our next week's communication we will publish a list of the churches, together with the amounts contributed to the college and the balance due, according to the convention apportionment. If your church should have an amount on hand for the college either from the Dollar-A-Month Club, Fifth Sunday offering, or church collection, please send the same in. A few of our churches have raised their amounts in full. If the entire college apportionment could be raised we would be in good shape; and with individual donations made by friends, we would be able to close the year without a deficit. We are depending on our friends and on the churches. I know that you will not disappoint us.

A SUMMER'S WORK.

In the brief history of my ministry, I have not found more pleasure in preaching the Gospel than during this summer which has just passed. Half of the three months' summer vacation was spent in revival meetings. The latter part of May I went to Biscoe to assist Rev. T. E. White in a week's meeting there. I thoroughly enjoyed my stay with his people, and I feel that there is no finer man in the Southern Christian Convention than Bro. White. We had several professions and three additions to the church.

The first week in July was spent among my own Martha's Chapel folks. I did the preaching there. We had sixteen professions and seven additions to the church. The work there is going fine; the people are sincere and cooperative.

The second and fourth weeks in July were spent at Shiloh and Bethel churches, respectively. These Methodist churches are located northwest of Burlington and are in charge of Brother Lance, pastor. I enjoyed my stay with his people and feel that I have made new friends.

The second and third weeks in August I was with Rev. Carl E. Brady at Brown's Chapel and Needham's Grove, respectively. There was a full house every night. We had two services each day and even the afternoon services were well attended. There were five or six additions at each church and many professions. Brother Brady has the interest of his people at heart and I feel that the churches which he now serves are fortunate in having the services of such a fine, Christian, conscientious pastor.

Pray for us in our work.

J. EVERETTE NEESE.

If we are ever to put together our broken world our broken nation, we shall do it around personality. It will be because we discover the supreme worth of personality; and most of all, it will be because we discover that Person who was broken for us that through Him we might be made whole. —Rufus M. Jones.

JOHN WESLEY.

says, he read his Bible regularly, said his prayers, took the Sacrament, and kept up a constant and absolutely frank correspondence with his parents, it is not likely that he grew from a saint to a sinner. On the other hand, it would seem that his experiences at Charterhouse were preparing him for his experiences at Oxford and his later life.

When he was seventeen, Wesley entered Christ Church, Oxford. At that time Oxford was not the best place for scholars or saints. Students looked lightly, for the most part, both upon their studies and upon their moral obligations. But we may be sure that this was not true of Wesley. Indeed, it was at Oxford that he formed those habits of study and developed that scholarly taste which characterized his long and amazingly fruitful life. One of his Christ Church friends describes him as a "very sensible, active collegian, baffling every man by the subtleties of his logic, and laughing at them for being so easily routed; a young fellow of the finest classical tastes, of the most liberal and manly sentiments, gay and sprightly, with a turn for wit and humor." There is evidence that although he was faithful in the observance of religious duties, he gave but little thought to his personal religious condition.

In 1725, however, a new chapter in Wesley's religious life opened. He read two books, "Imitation of Christ" by Thomas a Kempis, and "Holy Living and Dying" by Jeremy Taylor, and although he did not agree with them in a blanket way, he was profoundly impressed by them, and began to give more attention to his personal religious life, as he says, "to set out in earnest upon a new life." Furthermore, he began to consider taking up holy orders, and finally in September, 1725, was ordained as a deacon by Bishop Potter.

In 1726 Wesley was elected as a Fellow in Lincoln College. He began his work there with characteristic vigor and method. Writing to his mother he said, "Leisure and I have parted company," and he might have added, "never to meet again." He planned his work and worked his plan, and soon gained recognition among his fellow-students. He was made Moderator of the Class, and as such he presided at the debates which were held regularly. He thus developed that logical mind which was an original gift, and which was so characteristic of the man thruout his life. Indeed, when he was yet a lad in his teens his father had said to his mother, "Sweetheart, I profess I think our boy Jack wouldn't attend to the most pressing necessities of nature unless he could give a reason for it." Wesley himself, said that he had found abundant reason to praise God for giving him this honest art.

Wesley adopted a strange policy at Lincoln in his relations with his fellow students. He determined to shut himself away from everybody, except those who could help him in his religious life. Fellow students called upon him, but he did not return their calls, and he was soon left pretty much alone. In his own words "I resolved to have only such acquaintances as would help me on my way to heaven." He was not of sour temperament, and he was not a recluse, but he did not enter very actively into campus activities or into student fellowship.

In 1727, at the insistent invitation of his father, Wesley settled in the parish of Wroote, next to his father's parish, and originally a part of it. He remained here for two and a quarter years, but he was not a success in the work, and when he received a call back to Lincoln, he accepted the call, and spent the next six years as a Fellow in that College.

It was during this period that the original "Oxford Group" was formed, and that the world "Methodists" was coined. A small group of four young men, Robert Morgan who had been converted by Charles Wesley, Robert Kirkham, Chas. Wesley and John Wesley, formed the habit of meeting together for fellowship and worship. At first they met on Sunday evenings, usually in Wesley's room. Later they met twice a week, and then every night in the week. Their association was not exclusively for religious purposes, for on week-day evenings they read the classics as well as the Greek Testament. But the real bond of fellowship was their religious sympathies. Because they followed such an exact schedule, both of their secular and religious duties, a Christ Church undergraduate dubbed them "Methodists." The group was always small in number—once it rose as high as twenty-nine—and when Wesley left college it numbered fourteen, but it was a tremendously influential group and it numbered among its membership some men who later became famous, among them the immortal George Whitfield.

This little band of "Methodists" engaged not only in private religious practices; they were soon engaged in what could be called social service. They visited prisons and held services regularly there; they visited the sick throughout the city, they gathered poor children and taught them the Catechism, they deprived themselves of all but the bare necessities in order to save money to buy food and medicine for the destitute and to relieve worthy persons imprisoned for small debts. It was thus that Wesley began his life-long practice of saving all that he could to give away. When his income was thirty pounds a year he lived on twenty-eight pounds and gave away two pounds. When his income the fourth year rose to one hundren and twenty pounds, he still lived on twenty-eight pounds and gave away ninety-two pounds. And strange as it may seem, this social work of these self-sacrificing young men, brought not only derision from the students, but actual opposition from the university authorities. Indeed, Wesley had to draw up a defense on behalf of his companions and himself, so frequent and so persistent were the attacks upon this little group.

A TRIP AROUND THE WORLD.

(On board "President Hoover" en route Honolulu to Yokohama, August 17, 1935.)

Dear Friends:

This is the first letter I am writing as a part of a running account of our trip around the world. Since these letters will go to relatives, friends and those officially connected with the American Board and the Congregational-Christian churches, let me say at the outset that "we" are Mrs. White (hereinafter to be referred to as Mrs. White, Mrs. W. or Mabel) and myself. It is a good time to start the letter writing for we are now on the longest sea voyage that we have so far experienced. From Honolulu to Yokohama is 3394 miles; it isn't as long in days' travel as it looks on the calendar because we skip Monday when we cross the international date line. Today we inspected the ship from the luxurious First Class accommodations to the pilot house and then down among the turbine electric engines. We walked along the great propellor shafts which drive the twin screws and, just to have a hand in the operation of the ship, I poured some oil into the cups that lubricate one of the bearings. We are making 18 knots through a smooth blue sea.

Our six weeks in California went by all too rapidly. It was the first time since Mrs. White and Nina Jeanne had been "home" since 1931 and visiting with home folks and old friends filled the days. I ran around most of the time at the usual appointments. First, I preached in Loomis for my old friend H. J. Loken, and Mr. English brought his congregation down from Auburn to join us. In the afternoon we went with the Lokens up into the Sierras. At Grass Valley we visited the birthplace of Josiah Royce on the site of which is now the city library with a tablet in his honor on the wall. There is still gold in "them thar hills" and Grass Valley is booming for a lot of it is coming out now. Then I went to Tacoma to the Pacific Slopes Congress; then a week in Los Angeles where I preached two Sundays in the magnificent new First Church. Incidentally I got there the best press notice I have had in the light of all circumstances. The first Sunday morning before the service I was interviewed by a reporter of the Los Angeles Examiner.. Mr. Hearst's paper. A photographer came along and took my picture. The reporter, apparently, was after material for the Hearst anti-communist campaign. For twenty minutes we talked and I tried to tell him I was not a communist and did not believe in the communist doctrine but that I was more interested in finding out what is wrong with civilization and how to remedy it than I was in "combatting communism." The next day I got an Examiner to see the result. No picture, and only the following in an obscure part of the paper "Preparing for a round-the-world cruise, primarily to study the influence of Christian work in the Orient, Dr. Hugh Vernon White, Congregational Church leader and educational secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, arrived in Los Angeles from Boston yesterday."

After the week in Los Angeles I preached for my friend Tom Giffen in Plymouth Church, Oakland, and then went to Asilomar for a week with the Northern California Congregational Young People's Conference. Asilomar and California young people, to say nothing of many friends who are not so young made the last week in the homeland pleasant and restful. I had to lose the last day to get the boat in San Francisco August 2nd. Those young people gave me a letter of Christian greeting to the youth of Hawaii and the Orient.

Then six days in Honolulu! After an absence of twelve years it was a great experience to be there as travelers. There was just the right combination of familiarity and newness to make the maximum of enjoyment. We had a ride around the island with Dr. and Mrs. Cooper. Our host and hostess, Rev. and Mrs. Galen R. Weaver, not only saw that we became acquainted with the new things to be seen in the city, but brought us into touch with their own Church of the Cross Roads young people and in other ways enabled us to catch the currents of life and thought in the Hawaii of today. We had papaya, pineapple and cocoanut, to say nothing of bananas with the real banana taste, and poi.

Honolulu has grown fifty per cent in population since 1923, the year we left it. It is now a city of 150,000. The list of new buildings, parks, streets, piers and other improvements would fill a page. As a city it is really more colorful and beautiful than we remembered it to be. We had our first sight of the new Central Union Church and I preached in it on Sunday morning. Aloha tower, the art museum, the new Kamehamehe Girls' School, banks, business buildings, a modernistic fire station, a city hall with a roofless inner court, etc., were all new and each in its own way a thing of beauty and strength.

Some things cause one to rejoice in Hawaii and others create a sense of uneasiness. To mention the latter first, there is the great increase of the naval and military establishment, especially the remarkable development of naval aviation. We saw the new Wheeler field with its large facilities and the neat and attractive homes of the officers. Air service every day between the main islands is now commonplace. In fact, aviation is so much an accepted thing that after the first two flights from the mainland of the Clipper Ship people ceased to pay any attention to its arrival or departure. But it was not so reassuring to realize that most of the aviation based in Hawaii is not for commercial purposes but for war. We saw more than once a plane trailing a target for other fighting airships to practice on. Scholfield Barracks, where most of the soldiers are, has grown and promises to grow further. And yet, no one with whom we talked seemed to think that America had any real enemy in the Pacific and that Japan was not likely to become one. The fear that Japan will descend upon the Hawaiian Islands and that the Hawaian citizens of Japanese descent will spurn the American citizenship of which they are so proud, may be in the hearts of some on the mainland but it does not trouble the people who know Hawaii.

But there is one trend that is distinctly encouraging, and that has to do with the labor situation on the plantations. Those great sugar plantations were developed by cheap labor, first Chinese, then Japanese and more recently, Filipino. The older planters have contended that sugar growing depends upon such a labor supply, continuously renewed by importation since the second generation of Chinese, Japanese or others would not live and work under the conditions thought necessary for plantation labor. I can remember the effort made by planters, through the territorial government, in 1921, to get congress to modify the Chinese Exclusion Act so that 50,000 Chinese coolies could be brought as contract laborers to the islands. The Japanese workers had struck and this was the answer to their protest against the old order. At that time it seemed as though the whole industry was committed to the coolie policy. "Hapai ko," the loading of flat cars by men carrying heavy loads of cane up an inclined plank was the hardest labor on the plantation and only the strongest could do it. But although cane loading machinery had been devised to life the burden, it was not developed and used. Machinery of any kind calls for a higher type of laborer and is a threat to the coolie system.

But in our tour of the island this time we saw such cane loaders at work, and better still, we heard of definite new policies on some of the more progressive plantations. The reason for this is not alone a change of heart, although that has come for some; it is also the ending of immigration. Thousands of Filipinos are going back to their own island home, and some of the plantations are definitely making a bid for the educated second generation oriental. The housing for workers is vastly improved and a new type of management calculated to hold intelligent and self-respecting American citizens on the plantation is being developed. There is only a beginning it is true, but a beginning that will doubtless prove the worth of the new idea and lead to a constructive sclution of Hawaii's labor problem, which, in Hawaii, as elsewhere, is at least fifty per cent the problem of the employer.

I talked with a keen student of racial and social conditions in the islands. He presented statistical studies to show that the process of racial amalgamation is going forward at an accelerated pace. Already 25 per cent of the births in the territory are of mixed blood. Beyond that he finds a subtle and pervasive change in the spiritual and cultural life of the people. Even the strict regulations of the Catholic Church regarding divorce and birth restriction are being tacitly relaxed. As a Catholic priest said, "This is a time when people take sacred things lightly." Not all of this is to the good, of course, but old standards must be questioned before new ones can be established, and in spite of the inevitable loss during the time of change, the new are likely to embody more truly the real spiritual outlook and ideals of the people. In this Hawaii is not different from the rest of the world. It is a time, however, when those who have an authentic insight into the ways that make for the deepest human happiness and well being should give their testimony as effectively as they can.

And finally, I attended a Board meeting in Honolulu; and that within three hours of our landing! It seemed natural to "meet" again. The setting was not 14 Beacon Street., to be sure, but what a setting! Out of the open windows were quiet streets, tropical trees and flowers, and further away the green hillside. It was too lovely a place to feel like work. I was introduced and asked to "say a few words." All I could say was platitudinous things about how beautiful Honolulu is.

This is probably the longest letter you will get. I know more about Hawaii than I do about Japan, or China. I shall probably be so busy trying to clarify my impressions in those countries that I shall not have much of profit to write. But I'll try.

To finish in Hawaian style, we say "aloha" to all who have the patience to read through to the end.

Hugh Vernon White.

DR. AARON M. McMILLAN.

By Miss D. P. Cushing, News Editor.

To Dr. Aaron M. McMillan, of Galangue, Portuguese, West Africa, belongs the distinction of being the first Negro to successfully complete work at the Medical University of Lisbon, Portugal, and receive from that institution his doctorate as a bona fide Portuguese physician.

When Dr. McMillan went to Africa in 1929, he filled a deep and appealing need, for he was the first medical missionary sent to Galangue, which is manned entirely by American Negroes. During his term of service he has enlarged the medical work to such an extent that last year over 50,000 treatments were given and many operations of all kinds performed. Through his skill last year he prevented the usual epidemic of pneumonia. When he returns he hopes to erect a new hospital building.

Sick folks at Galangue are asked to bring a companion with them who can work in a nearby field cutting wood as part payment for service and medicine. If a patient cannot bring any such helper he is asked to pay a small sum, or after he regains his health, remain on for a time and work out part of this obligation.

Dr. McMillan was born in Cotton Plant, Arkansas, and educated at Bishop College and Meharry Medical College. Before going to Africa he had a good practice in Omaha, Nebraska and served a term in the State Legislature. During his period of study in Portugal he also had to learn Portuguese and after reaching Galangue, Umbundu, the native tongue of the Ovimbundu.

NEWS ITEMS OF SOCIETIES.

By Mrs. W. M. Jay, Editor.

The Windsor Missionary Society has been accomplishing many good things this year under the leadership of Mrs. A. P. Beale.

The World Day of Prayer for missions was observed with a splendid attendance, the other church societies being invited. This society does a very special service in the church when they conduct the mid-week service at various times.

A very creditable representation attended the lecture on the mission study book by Dr. Palmer when it was held in Suffolk in the early Spring.

Both the Home and Foreign books were studied this year in the society and they subscribed to the Missionary Herald for help in their program building. They report that they are much pleased with it.

The District meeting in April was well attended by members of this society and they are planning a goodly number to go to the Woman's Conference October 4th at Christian Temple.

The secretary, Mrs. Shirley T. Holland, reports that their apportionment has been raised.

The Woman's Council of Christian Temple held its final meeting of the year September 10th, at 1 P. M., with a luncheon, thirty-eight members being present. The devotionals were led by Mrs. R. B. Wood, reading the chapter on "Giving," from Kahlil Gibran's "The Prophet" followed with prayer by Rev. H. E. Hardcastle.

The Council consists of six groups. Our work the past year has been very encouraging and there has been a splendid spirit of cooperation. Our programs have been informational and educational. We have our apportionment in full and have one Life Membership to Dr. M. J. White, two memorials, Mrs. J. E. Harville and Mrs. James A. Eley.

Mrs. A. B. Jarvis is president for the next year and with her loving service and capable leadership, we are looking forward to a profitable year for the work of the kingdom.

The Bethlehem Woman's Missionary Society is very happy to report what seems a good year's work. They observed the Day of Prayer with a specially planned program and had a good attendance.

The mission study book, "Pappanuu Women Speak" was studied and taught by having a class at Bethlehem with three ladies from Cypress Chapel and three from Bethlehem, each teaching a chapter. The societies enjoyed the day and have planned to meet next year for their study class at Cypress Chapel. They have raised their apportionment and hope to be an Honor Roll society.

Mrs. C. W. King is the president of this fine group which is ever busy in the Master's service.

The Young People's Missionary Society of Burton's Grove has ended a successful year under the leadership of Mrs. P. N. Gay. They held regular meetings each month with an interesting program, and good attendance. They also gave a missionary pageant during the year and added five new members to their roll. This society is very active, has met all requirements except one, which was the study book, but plan to do bigger and better things the coming year. Miss Gussie Carroll is the secretary of this faithful group of people.

The Junior Missionary Society of Burton's Grove Church has had a most active and helpful year under the leadership of Miss Bertha Denson. By the help and cooperation of the parents they met all the requirements of the conference except one—the study book. This is a loyal group of children to accomplish so much and they hope to start off the new year with a greater determination than ever to make their society the best.

The Junior Missionary Society of the Franklin Church has just completed a successful year under the leadership of Mrs. A. Hargrave, Superintendent. They have held regular monthly meetings and had public programs at Christmas and Easter.

The topic for the year's study being "Japan," many original and varied forms were used to make the meetings interesting.

The Young People's Society of the Dendron Christian Church has had a very successful year. Two mission study classes have been conducted; a public missionary program was held; new members have been added to the roll and the books in the travel library were read. Their meetings have been held each month with good attendance and interest and they had representatives at the District meeting. They have met the requirements of the Standard of Excellence in every point and therefore have a record of which to be proud.

Mrs. Garland Spratley is the Superintendent of this fine society.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

FLORIDA PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

Under the leadership of fine leaders, Florida young people are making rapid strides upward. From their occasional paper "Pilgrim Progress," of which Dora Byrons is editor, comes the following:

The Pilgrim Fellowship.

Pilgrim Fellowship is the name given to young people in all Congregational-Christian churches, and thesefore represents the youth action of our Church. "Pilgrim" is used because of its meaning to us through the years. "Fellowship" indicates that it is not primarily an organization but an alliance of all young people working through many different types of organizations. The Florida Pilgrim Fellowship was started at DeLeon Springs Summer Conference last June. It is made up of the "entire company" of young people in Florida Congregational churches, and is affiliated with the national Pilgrim Fellowship. Earle G. Ward and Pattie Lee Coghill are the Florida representatives on the council of the national association. A key-worker will be appointed in each of the thirty-two churches in the state, and they will reveive materials and report activities of their local groups. Our purpose will be twofold: (1) To work through various meetings, and (2) To help young people in the local churches enrich their own programs.

Officers: President, Earle G. Ward, Winter Park; Secretary, Emily Carleton, Winter Park; Vice-Presidents, Harold Herbst, Sanford; Carol Cushman, St. Petersburg; Richard Foerster, No. Miami; Treasurer, Elizabeth Newton, Jupiter; Editor "Pilgrim Progress," Dora Byrons, Pomona; College Representative, Margaret Holway, Tallahassee; Counselors, Pattie Lee Coghill, Jacksonville, Rev. Victor B. Chicoine, Winter Park, Rev. L. A. Gedke, St. Petersburg.

National Statement of Purpose.

"The Pilgrim Fellowship unites the young people of Congregational and Christian Churches in the purpose:

To achieve Christian Personality after the pattern of Jesus.

To seek a fuller understanding, one of another, in the interest of happy relations in home and community.

To work for a united church, practicing Christian freedom and definitely promoting the program of Jesus.

To secure equal rights and opportunities for all classes and races as equally the children of God.

To practice a Christian Patriotism which recognizes the authority of God in conscience as supreme.

To strive for justice in the social order which will afford an abundant life for all.

To work for such international organization of the nations as will preserve peace and security."

The Peace Plebiscite.

The next important thing before us in the next few weeks will be the Peace Plebiscite which will be held on the Sunday before Armistice Day, November 10th. The Florida Pilgrim Fellowship is eager to have young people over the state take an active part in this. Find out what your minister plans to do about it and do your best to promote interest. The leaflet "Prepare for the Peace Plebiscite" has been sent to a represntativ in each society in the state. The suggestions in it are very definite and worthwhile. The ballots—upon which five questions are printed—can be secured free of charge by writing a card to Miss Katherine Terrell, Council of Social Action, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City. Sample ballots have been sent with the leaflets.

We suggest that you use the leaflet "Is War the Way?" by J. L. Lobinger as a basis of study in preparation for the Plebiscite from October 6th to November 10th. This costs 25 cents and can be ordered from the Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass. Each person should vote intelligently, therefore there should be real study ahead of time. Order the booklet immediately. The play, "I Pledge Allegiance" in the July issue of the "Pilgrim Highroad" is excellent. "The Unknown Soldier speaks" is being used in some places in Florida. Copies of the play (two are necessary) price 15 cents, may be ordered from Pattie Lee Coghill, 117 W. Forsyth Street, Jacksonville, Florida.

A Few of the Most Important New Materials.

1. "General Guide to Youth Action," H. T. Stock. Suggestions for projects in the local church.
2. For teachers of Young People's classes: "Discovering Jesus" and "Social and Religious Problems of Young People."
3. For teachers of Intermediates: "The Way to God."—$.25.

EASTERN VIRGINIA YOUNG PEOPLE.

Friday afternoon, September 27th, at 3:30 o'clock, young people from the churches in Eastern Virginia will meet in the Suffolk Christian Church for their Annual Youth Fellowship meeting. At 6:00 o'clock there will be a fellowship supper.

At 8:00 o'clock that evening the Young People's Missionary Conference of Eastern Virginia will be in session. Their program was printed on this page last week, and we are now giving the names of the people who will appear on the program. Miss Frances Everette of Holland, Va., is president. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle will lecture and show slides about the Mexicans; Miss Alice Yates will talk on "How We May Be True Neighbors to the Mexicans"; Miss Mildred Varner will render the special music; Mrs. H. T. Jones will have charge of the devotional period; and Rev. Carl R. Key will conduct the joint installation service for the new officers.

Has your society set goals for the year? Have you secured the goal chart from the International Society of Christian Endeavor, 41 Mt. Vernon St., Boston, Mass.? Your State Christian Enreavor Union has set goals from which your society might choose. Did your Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, which met during the summer, give you some help along this line? Your Youth Fellowship organizations are working now to strengthen your efforts in following certain goals. Your pastor and other interested people in your local church have aims which they should like very much to see you strive to accomplish. Your society members have definite ideas which ought to be followed up. All these leaders, co-workers, and others are eager to help you make plans for the year. Unless you know where you are going, you might find yourselves at a standpoint within a short time and wondering what to do next. It is always well to know at the beginning of the year where you expect to be at the end. It might be best for your society to attempt a few things rather than a great many things, although some Christian Endeavorers will do much good work along many lines. Your executive committee should get together and do some real thinking and hard work before anything definite is decided. You might find the following suggestions helpful as a starter.

You will want to strengthen the devotional life of your members. Maybe some have not yet set aside at least fifteen minutes each day for Bible meditation and prayer. The pastor is eager that you stand by your church. Young people find a warm welcome in the regular choir or in a special young people's choir. Fine service can be rendered by young people acting as church ushers. Church services led by Christian Endeavorers are most effective.

The purpose of your Christian Endeavor society as stated by the founder, Dr. Francis E. Clark, is to train young people for leaders in the church. Your society is doing that, but just the Sunday evening service does not give enough time for training in leadership. Leadership training classes sponsored by your church or a community school afford big opportunities. Correspondence courses can be taken, and people often learn a great deal through individual reading and study. The Board of Christian Education, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va., can give you suggestions and help along this line and will gladly lend books.

Moral standards ought to be frankly faced and real action taken.

Stewardship is an important phase of our Christian work. How many tithers are there in your society? In your church?

If your society is to be among the best societies, missions will play a large part. You probably have a wide-awake young people's missionary society in your church to which most of your C. E. members belong. If this is not true of your church, however, why not make your C. E. society a missionary society too. One Sunday evening each month devoted to a missionary worship program and one evening during the month devoted to a mission study class would enroll you as a missionary society. It ought to work splendidly since there is so much available material of a most interesting type, which can be easily secured, some free and some at a very low cost.

How much time is given to recreation for the church young people, their friends and those other young people who ought to be in the church? Leisure time is a problem today as is unemployment. Can we as Christian young people help clear this situation?

A charge to keep I have,
A God to glorify;
A never-dying soul to save,
And fit it for the sky.

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

JOHN (The Minister and His People.)

Golden Text: "Beloved, imitate not that which is evil, but that which is good. He that doeth good is of God; he that doeth evil hath not seen God."—III John 11.

Lesson: III John.

The General Epistle of III John was written by John the Beloved Disciple, one of the original Twelve, late in his life. It was written unto Gaius, a leader in some church in Asia, Minor, a large-hearted, fine-spirited, courageous Christian. It seems that a band of itinerant preachers had been sent out by John to visit the churches in that section. They were to look to the local churches for their entertainment. But for some reason, either from jealousy, or some personal pique, Diotrephes, a prominent man in the church, not only refused to entertain these preachers himself, but threatened to excommunicate anybody who did entertain them. Gaius courteously and courageously entertained them. When another group was sent out, John wrote a letter to Gaius commending him for his fine spirit of hospitality and for his faithful service, and sending it by Demetrius whom he also commends highly. The letter is characterized by the spirit of praise and of intimate friendship. It sounds a high spiritual note.

As Thy Soul Prospereth.

John affirms his true love for Gaius and tells him that he is praying that he may prosper and be in health, even as his soul prospers. That undoubtedly meant much to Gaius, but it would not mean much to many Christians today. If they did not prosper any more in material things, or be any stronger in physical health, than their souls prospered, they would be on the relief rolls and in the hospitals. For there are many people today whose souls are not prospering. And in most cases it is because they are not giving any heed to the things by which the soul prospers. Man cannot live by bread alone. Alas for the man who gives so much time and energy to material wealth and physical health, and so little to the things of the soul. He who spake as never man spake once said, "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"

The Christian Worker's Joy.

"Greater joy have I none than this—to hear of my children walking in the truth." Every true minister and Christian worker can say that. The joy of the Christian worker is to see in the lives and labors of those whom he has taught the fruitage of the Spirit of Christ.

Doing A Faithful Work.

"Beloved thou doest a faithful work in whatsoever thou doest toward them that are brethren and strangers withal." It was not much—just giving those young men a place to sleep and something to eat. Gaius might have waited for something big to do. But Gaius belonged to that long line of humble Christians who have tried to be faithful in that which had been committed to them. He that is faithful—that is where Jesus put the emphasis.

For the Sake of the Name.

They were men who were hazarding their lives for the sake of the Lord Jesus Christ. What a difference it makes in what we do if we do it for His sake! Even the simplest, and what is better, even the most difficult and unpleasant tasks take on new significance, if we do them for His sake. He loved us and gave himself for us. For our sakes He sanctified Himself. Let us give our all and do our best for the sake of that Name which is above every name, for the sake of Christ and His gospel.

Diotrephes, Who Loved the Preeminence.

Diotrephes must have had a large family, and his children and his children's children must have had large families, for his kind is still abroad in the world today. Those who love to have the preeminence—and who are going to have it whether or no—they are a source of trouble in business, in politics, in religion. There are in many churches those who are going to rule or ruin. The self-seeker who wants to run things in his own autocratic hand—his name is Diotrephes. And sometimes it is a woman, and then matters are no better and usually worse.

John was the apostle of love but he was also a "son of thunder." There was something that ought to be said to Diotrephes and John was the one to say it, for he could speak the truth in love. "Therefore, if I come, I will bring to remembrance his works which he doeth." John was fearless as well as loving. He was fearless because he was loving.

"Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory," said Paul, "but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than himself." We need the Spirit of Christ to make us humble and lowly in mind.

Imitate the Good, Imitate Nat that Which is Evil.

We are by nature imitators. But we are not discerning imitators. This is true of adults as well as of children. Too often we imitate the evil rather than the good. One of the dangers of the movies is the fact that there are so many things shown on the screen, which by the power of suggestion, prompt unthinking persons to imitate them. We need to understand what the good is, and we need to imitate the good. "Be ye imitators of God," said Paul in one of his letters. Behold I have given you an example, said Jesus. We shall always be safe if we imitate Him.

He that Doeth Good—He that Doeth Evil.

By their fruits ye shall know them. This does not mean that a good man will never do anything wrong, or that an evil man will never do anything good. But in the long run, character is revealed in conduct. God is the source of goodness. He that does good has some measure of the spirit of God in him. He that doeth evil—who continues in evil, hath not seen God. John knew that out of the heart are the issues of life.

Speaking Face to Face.

It is easy sometimes to write things in a letter. It is not so easy to say them face to face, even good things. Happy is the man who can speak words of praise as well as words of censure face to face.

THE YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

To serve the present age,
My calling to fulfill;
O may it all my powers engage.
To do my Master's will!

Arm me with jealous care,
As in Thy sight to live,
And O, Thy servant, Lord, prepare,
A strict account to give!

Help me to watch and pray,
And on Thyself rely,
Assured, if I my trust betray,
I shall forever die.

MONDAY.

"A PRAYER."

"Lord, give me faith—to live from day to day,
With tranquil heart to do my simple part,
And, with my hand in Thine, just go Thy way!

"Lord, give me faith—to trust, if not to know,
With quiet mind in all things Thee to find,
And child-like, go where Thou wouldst have me go!

"Lord, give me faith—to leave it all to Thee!
The future is Thy gift, I would not lift
The veil Thy love has hung 'twixt it and me!"
—John Oxenham.

TUESDAY.

"A SPIRITUAL THERMOMETER."

"Were there not ten cleansed? But where are the nine?"—Luke 17:17. Read vv. 11-19.

The spiritual significance of healing the ten lepers is faith, obedience, humility and thanksgiving. All ten lepers had lifted up their voices and cried, "Jesus Master! have mercy on us." This prayer was an act of faith. Jesus bade them go show themselves to the priest. This was to be an act proving their faith. Jesus could have said, "I will, be thou clean," and they would have been clean, but if so done it would have been without the exercise of faith. Faith is proven by works, James says. Besides, lepers could not go to the priest in their condition; that would only mean a recommittal to the leper colony. Thus to actually go to the priest in their condition meant that they believed in Jesus, that, whether they understood or not, everything would come out all right if they obeyed Him, and so they took Him at His word and started. Jesus put them to the test and they made good. In this act they found themselves clean, as they went, fit to be presented to the priest. They rejoiced indeed. They had assumed that the Lord could not fail and they found Him faithful.

One of these lepers felt that something was due the author of this blessing, and so, forgetting himself, he left the others, while they went on to obtain their civil and religious rights, and returned to Jesus. His own civil rights were of secondary importance to him. He fell at Jesus' feet, thanked Him and glorified God for such an act of mercy and power. Then our Lord blessed him in another and a higher way.

The faith he had exercised had not only made him whole physically, but the circle was complete, he was every whit whole spiritually. His experience in the Lord was complete. It is a great faith that includes both body and soul in God.

Our Lord then asked a very human question. Why did not the others do as this one had done?

It has been said that the tenth represents the usual percentage of humanity who receives God's blessings and pause long enough to give Him thanks and glorify God. It has also been said that thanksgiving is a greater mark of holiness than any other characteristic of a Christian. It represents the completed circle of religious experience. Testimony to prayers being remembered and it bespeaks a loving and unselfish spirit.

The nine who did not return, and a warning to us, and the one who did return is an encouragement for us. It calls for more faith, stricter obedience, and humble praise.

Prayer—Dear Father, we are slow still to own Thy mighty will. We receive so much of Thee and leave the praise to others whom God endowed with less.

O God, forbid, lest we forget and be numbered with the nine.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"STICK-TO-IT-IVE-NESS."

"And Jesus said unto him, no man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the Kingdom of God."—Luke 9:62.

For scriptural light on the meaning of this text read John 13:38, calling attention to the reward for stick-to-it-iveness in the faith.

Read Matt. 6:8, calling attention to the reward of Christian character.

Read Matt. 25, the parable of the ten virgins, calling attention to the folly and the utter hopelessness of turning away from the objective.

Read Matt. 8:19-22, reminding us that Christian character requires absolute renunciation of self and the natural ties of life that prevent religious experience, or the achieving the goal. To undertake to do anything half-heartedly spells failure, and so is it in following Christ.

However free from positive sin one may be, one cannot play, or indulge himself, or sit and sing himself into everlasting bliss. The way to heaven is up grade and the way of a cross. Christ is very frank about this; he allures no one to follow Him by false pretenses. He warned them that the way was the way of a yoke, a yoke of service, of self-denial and submission, "For whosoever would save his life, shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake shall find it."

Prayer—Our Father, we cherish the ambition of being Thy followers; we would have the joy and the crown with which life is to be rewarded; we would follow in the footsteps of the Master. Make us willing to the sacrifice, and content to serve, continually guiding ourselves about every day in an unreserved offering of ourselves. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"A DAILY PRAYER."

"Study to show thyself approved of God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."—II Timothy 2:15.

"I pray that I may be made sufficient to mine own occasions; that I may know and observe the rules of the game; that I may mind my own business and lose no opportunity to hold my tongue.

"Grant that I may not either proffer or welcome cheap praise and let me ever distinguish between sentiment and sentimentality.

"When it is appointed for me to suffer, let me take example from the well-bred beasts and bear my suffering by myself.

"Give me always to be a good comrade,—viewing the passing show with an eye growing keener and a charity deepening day by day.

"Help me to win, if I may, but if I may not win, grant that I may be a good loser."
—Author Unknown..

FRIDAY.

"A PRAYER FOR SIMPLE LIVING."

"And when ye pray, use not vain repitition, as the heathens do; for they think they shall be heard for their much speaking."—Matt. 6:7.

"Do not pray for easy lives!
Pray to be stronger men.
Do not pray for tasks equal to your powers,
Pray for powers equal to your tasks.
Then the doing of your work shall be no miracle.
But you shall be a miracle.
Every day you shall wonder at yourself,
At the fullness of life which has come to you by the grace of God."
—Phillips Brooks.

"These are the gifts I ask of Thee,
Spirit Serene—
Strength for the daily task,
Courage to face the road,
Good cheer to help me bear the traveller's load,
And for the hours of rest that come between
An inward joy in all things heard and seen.

"These are the sins I fain would have
Thee take away—
Malice and cold disdain,
Hot anger, sullen hate,
Scorn of the lowly, envy of the great
And discontent that casts a shadow gray,
On all the brightness of a common day."

SATURDAY.

"WITHOUT HANDS."

..."A stone was cut out without hands."—Daniel 2:31-35.

The cutting of stone is one of the most arduous of human occupations. So hard is it that work of a stonebreaker is reserved for criminals and has become synonymous with difficulty. Hands are needed for the task, strong hands, armed with the stoutest tools.

But Nebuchadnezzar, in the great vision which Daniel interpreted, saw a stone cut out without hands, a stone so vast that it fell on and crushed all the kingdoms of men. It was a true and most striking symbol of the divine power, which does so readily what man could never do; which works so easily upon the most obdurate materials, and accomplishes in a few days what man could never do in centuries.

Let us rest our confidence upon this Almightiness.. Let us not struggle weariedly with our feeble hands and our inefficient tools.

Prayer—For thou, O God, art ever glad to work for us. Our least petition will set Thy conquering forces in motion. Whatever flinty stone we have to cut. Thou wilt carve it out for us.—Amen.

SUNDAY

"INTERLOCKING PROVIDENCES."

"Behold, three men seek thee."—Acts 10:17-23.

God does not send His guiding providences by ones, but by twos or even by threes or fours or more. If we receive one clear intimation of His will, as Peter did, we may be sure that another will come after it, as Peter's vision of the strange sheet dropped from heaven was immediately followed by the knocking of the centurion's messengers on the street door below.

Sometimes the confirmatory providence comes slowly, sometimes swiftly, but it always comes and we may expect it with the calm certainty of faith.

How firm are the interlockings of the divine will! How surely does the Holy Spirit prove Himself! We never need doubt, for He will furnish the evidence of His truth before any reasonable doubt can arise in our minds. We have only to walk out along the path He points out to us.

Prayer—We bless Thee, our divine Leader, for Thy heavenly leadership. Among all the tangled ways of life, ye are so glad that we need never go astray.—Amen.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D., Pastor.

A GOOD NAME.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"I beseech you, brethren, by the name of the Lord Jesus."—I Cor. 1:10.

Can you be proud of your name? Go to the treasury vaults of heaven and earth and take your choice. Choose whatsoever you will. There the caskets are all arranged in a row: Gold, silver, diamonds, other precious stones, riches, fame, and fortune. Step up with eternity out before you and take your choice. Lay the hand on the casket you want. My young friends, you stand in a very important place. Destiny invites you to choose. What will be your choice? If you take the counsel of the Holy Scriptures you will not choose gold and silver, nor fame and fortune, but you will choose very modestly, and humbly, a good name! "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches." Some of you may be proud of your possessions. Are you also proud of your name? And is the pride in your name a selfish vanity, or is it an humble, yet glorious blessing?

Our text speaks of the name of Jesus. How Paul loved that name! Of Jesus he says, "God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name that is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in the earth, and things under the earth: and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." To the Colossians he said: "Whatsoever ye do in word, or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." To the Romans that great message: "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved."

"God hath given him a name." Before he was born he was named Jesus. And he was named Jesus because of what he was to do. Doing makes the name. "He shall be called Jesus bcause he shall save his people." You will get a good name or a bad name according as to how you do! Are you proud of your name?

Allow me to speak paradoxically, and to observe in the first place that you are given your name. God gave Jesus his name. You are given your name. Have you thought of that? Before you were born your name was waiting for you. Johnson, or Jones, it was there. Good or bad it was yours. Is not that a word and a warning to the young parent in this great congregation. You are making the name for your precious son to bear. Will it be weights, or wings? Will it be help, or handicap? Will it be good or bad? It must be his. Will it help to drag him down to a merciless mediocrity, or will it waft him on wings of good success? That little girl so precious today; what is the worth of the name she bears? Yours to answer, my friends. You are making the names of your tomorrow's children. What shall it be? Is yours a name you can be proud of? It was given to you.

Did you have goodly, God-fearing parents who loved righteousness, and refrained from evil? God gave Jesus his name. God gave you your name if it is good, noble, Christian. For God helped your dear parents make it good, and great, God helped them. And thus in a measure your good name is from God. His kindly mercies, his blessed providences, his upholding power brought to you a noble name. Take it. Fight with it for God and for good! And power to you. May God adorn and grace it as the years go by!

But as I said, I must be paradoxical. For now I am going to say: You choose your own name! "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches." Yes, do walk right up to the bar of time and eternity and choose. Choose the name for yourself, and for your sons and daughters. Much of the power to do that lies right in your own hands. What will you do with it? Are you proud of your name? If not, choose a nobler one! Who ever heard the name of Edison until Thomas A. found it in the attics of an old family. Who ever knew the name of Will Rogers' father until Will himself laid the lasso of laughter and loving-kindness about it to lift it to the stars! You know the father of the twelve tribes in the Chosen Race had the ugly name Jacob, and for his efforts God gave him the beautiful name Israel! It was as though the "Supplanter" went to God in prayer, and said, "I choose a beautiful name, a name that shows strength, righteousness, and allegiance and love for God." He chose his name, and God gave it to him. Israel,—"Ruling with God"; Israel,—a "governing prince with God." Are you proud of your name? Israel was proud of his! And untold millions have looked upon it with honor since.

Again let me observe, you can do something with a good name. It is one of the mighty weapons of earth—a good name. Paul found his great Corinthian church divided, and disputing. He felt that he could bring them all together with the name of Jesus. Around that name we become one. About that name we may lay down our grievances. Before it we may all humbly bow. Paul says to the Corinthians: "For it hath been declared unto me, my brethren . . . that there are contentions among you . . . Everyone of you saith I am of Paul; and I am of Apollos; and I am of Cephas; and I of Christ. Is Christ divided? . . . I beseech you, brethren, by the name of the Lord Jesus, that ye all speak the same thing, and there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same spirit." They were being won with the name of Jesus.

"How sweet the name of Jesus sounds
In a believer's ear!
It soothes his sorrows, heals his wounds,
And drives away his fear."

And Paul did do something with the name of Jesus. "I beseech you by the name of the Lord Jesus." And by that same precious name he has beseeched the whole world. "Who art thou, Lord?" "I am Jesus of Nazareth whom thou persecutest"—and from that day forward, Jesus of Nazareth whom he preached! That name changed Paul, or at least the Person bearing that name. Once I was walking to Greensboro, and before the days of thumbing rides. A man came along in a carriage, and asked: "Young man, whose son are you?" I proudly replied, "I am Mr. Lee Truitt's son." "Jump in," he said. It was a name to work with. Poor but honest, and honorable. Can you be proud of your name? Will your sons and daughters be proud of it? You have the name of Christ to share with him, for you may be a Christian, a brother of Jesus Christ, saith the Scriptures, and a joint heir with him!

Take that name and mean it with all your soul, and your own name will shine with a richer luster. Take that name with you. It is a name to work with. "He leadeth me through the paths of righteousness for his name's sake." He will not let me down. And you and I must not let it down either.

"Take the name of Jesus with you,
Child of sorrow and of woe;
It will joy and comfort give you,
Take it then, where'er you go."

Christian Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

For some time we have not taken in any new children. We have had so many cases of infantile paralysis in the state that we had to be careful for fear we might inport it into our large family. We have used every precaution to keep it out and so far we have escaped—in fact we have had no sickness for nearly a year.

Since schcol closed in May quite a number of cur children have gone out to make their own way. By their going it has made vacancies for others to fill. We have had two applications for each vacancy. We have taken in several children during the last two weeks. Of all the home-sick children we have ever taken in we had two of of the worst last week. They cried and begged to go home for two days and nights. They would not listen to reason but they finally became reconciled and now they are as happy as the rest. In fact they say now they like to stay all right. The writer has lots of sympathy for a child that is home-sick. He well remembers the first time he left home to go to school and how home-sick he got about the second day. Since that time we have always had a very sympathetic feeling for a child that is home-sick. Generally it only lasts for a few hours. But we sometimes have an exception as in the case above mentioned.

The carpenters are making splendid headway in building our barn. It will soon be completed. All friends and churches that want to have a part are requested to mail in their offering at once as we want to pay every dollar by the first of the month. We find that the Christian Orphanage is not the only Orphanage that has misfortunes. One of the large orphanages in this state lost its barn a few weeks before we lost ours. It lost one six years ago. We noticed in the paper Saturday that another large orphanage lost its large barn last Saturday in which a hundred tons of hay was stored. A heavy loss at this season of the year. We know how to sympathize.

A STORY FOR THE CHILDREN.

"Brownie dear, we want you here," called Mary.

"Come, Pup, Pup, Pup, Pup," shouted Arthur.

"You sound like a steam engine," remarked Beatrice.

The puppy came down the hall with a rush, bumped into a chair, wagged his tail violently, rolled over on the floor, and then shook his brown coat vigorously to show that he was ready for anything.

Arthur carefully placed the puppy in the middle of the circle of papers. "Now, go and choose your new name," he commanded.

The puppy looked inquiringly at the boy and sniffed the nearest paper.

"Go ahead, Bump. Pick one up and bring it to me," said Bruce catching his brother's idea.

The puppy sniffed quickly at all the papers, pushed them into a heap, rolled over and over in the middle of them, and then shook himself again.

"Pup! Bring it here. Good doggie, bring me a paper," said Arthur, snapping his fingers. The puppy cocked one brown ear, looked at the four children a moment, and then raced to the other side of the playroom. Before any one could say a word he had chewed off one part of a newspaper that had fallen on the floor, and dropped it at Arthur's feet.

"O dear! let's fix the slips of paper and begin again," said Mary.

"No, wait a minute. He's done it! Here it is!" Arthur excitedly waved the piece of newspaper.

"Don't what? Where's which?" asked Bruce, getting confused in his eagerness.

"Is there a name on the paper? asked Beatrice.

"The puppy chewed off the top of the Sports page," said Arthur. "See, here it is in big letters, 'Sport.' "

"Of course. Why didn't we think of that one before? Sport is a fine name for a dog," said Beatrice.

"He is a good sport, too," said Bruce, patting the puppy's head.

"Now, let's name him," said Arthur. "Mary, you hold him while we all sit down on the floor. I'll make up a verse."

In a minute Arthur was ready, and as he said each line, the others slowly repeated it after him.

"Your name is Sport,
And Sport you'll stay,
A good old sport
In every way."

"I think he is pretty smart to name himself," said Mary, and Sport barked loudly as if he agreed with them.—Lydia Lyon Roberts in Zion's Herald.

JOHN WESLEY.

Needless to say this little group of Methodists stood out in sharp contrast to other Oxford men. They did not parade their benevolence or their righteousness. They refused to be drawn into any acrimonious debate. But it was noticed that these young men who were teaching the felons in the local jails, who were carrying help to the slums of Oxford, and teaching children in the outlying villages, were living lives of cheerful abstemiousness, and of punctilious observance. They rose at five in the morning, fasted twice in the week, partook of Communion every Sunday, repeated a Collect at nine, twelve and three every day, and were understood to use brief silent prayers or ejaculations hourly. Whatever else might be said about them, there was no question about their sincerity and their fine spirit.

As an evidence of the fact that Wesley was not a recluse or a hermit, however, it is recorded that he sought often the company of Betty Kirkham, a sister of Robert Kirkham, one of the little group of Methodists. She was a splendid girl and there soon developed an attitude of more than mere friendship. But after more than four years, the acquaintance seems to have been broken off, for reasons that nobody knows. Wesley may have been slow to marry in view of the fact that to marry meant to surrender his fellowship at Oxford and give up his work. And Betty may have become tired of waiting. In any event, in 1732 she married a Mr. Wilson. As we shall see, Wesley was not the most successful lover in history.

The years at Lincoln College were probably among the happiest of Wesley's life. He was loath to leave the university, so loath that when his aging father, feeling the necessity of giving up his parish in Epworth, urgently requested John to take up this work nearest his heart, Wesley refused. With characteristic methodical way, he drew up twenty-six reasons why he could not accept his father's urgent invitation, and twenty-five of them were essentially selfish. In fact, Wesley was bent on saving his own soul, and he felt that he could be holier in Oxford than anywhere else. His father answered very much to the point, so much to the point that Wesley had no satisfactory answer. But he still refused to give up his work at Oxford. The following year, he did give his reluctant consent, but it was then too late, for his father died in a few weeks and the parish went to another young parish priest, who it seems never to have resided in the parish. It was probably providential that Wesley did not go to Epworth, but it must be admitted that his reasons for not going were not of a very noble sort.

Would that the nations of the world knew and loved that name today! With all my heart I wish they might get together about that name, and wait at the feet of the Lord. How he would change our hate into love, or fear into fellowship, and cause us to beat our swords into plowshares and pruning-hooks.

"I know a soul that is steeped in sin,
That no man's art can cure;
But I know a Name, a Name, a Name,
That can make that soul all pure.

"I know a life that is lost to God,
Bound down by things of earth;
But I know a Name, a Name, a Name,
That can bring that soul new birth.

"I know of lands that are sunk in shame,
Of hearts that faint and tire;
But I know a Name, a Name, a Name,
That can set those lands on fire!
I know a Name, a Name, a Name,
That will set those lands on fire!"

Prayer is the golden key which should open the morning and lock up the evening.—Bishop Hopkins in Biblical Recorder.

OBITUARIES

MILES.

Miss Martha A. Miles was born in Caswell County, N. C., May 24, 1867 and departed this life August 18, 1935 at the home of her niece, Mrs. W. B. Allred. Deceased was 68 years, 2 months and 24 days old.

She leaves to mourn their loss two brothers, W. L. Miles, Altamahaw, N. C., J. P. Miles, Burlington, N. C., several nieces and nephews, hosts of friends and neighbors.

Miss Martha professed Christ as her personal Saviour in early life and lived consistently to that profession through all her life. She was a regular attendant at church.

Her ambition was to minister to the afflicted among her relatives, neighbors and friends. She always had a deep concern for the sick.

She was able to attend memorial exercises at Concord and Bethel churches the past Spring and seemed to enjoy the services more than usual. She will be greatly missed.

May the Lord comfort the relatives.

Funeral services were conducted in her memory at Concord Church by the writer assisted by Rev. J. F. Apple and Elder Curry King. Interment in the local cemetery.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Wheat and Cotton Prices Rise.—

Italio-Ethiopian war talk has become serious enough to affect prices of wheat and cotton. Recent trading on the Chicago market has pushed the price of wheat well over the dollar level. Wheat held for delivery reached a new high on October 1st of $1.02 7-8. Reports from New Orleans are that on the same day prices of cotton took an advance of $1.00 a bale.

Gain in Virginia Auto Fatalities—

Fatal automobile accidents increased 23 per cent during the first six months of 1935, compared to the same period in 1934, the numbers being 302 and 246 respectively. The total number of accidents for the two six-month periods were 4,862 this year compared with 4,406 last year, and the number of injured were 3,121 and 2,845. Property damages decreased for the 1935 period being $399,929, against $478,767 for the first six months of last year.

F. D. R. and Industry.—

"Every newspaper that has reached us today has featured that sentence of President Roosevelt's speech in which he told his audience at Boulder Dam that 'we have come to the point where private industry must bear the principle responsibility of keeping the processes of greater employment moving forward with accelerated speed." Perhaps that was the shaft the chief executive wished to send home. If it was not, he has only his secretaries to blame. Some of us, incidentally, have never liked these selective nuances. They are often trial baloons and they smack too much of a desire to say something that can subsequently be repudiated should it prove unpopular. We can see no good reason why the president, if he thinks the time proper, should not boldly say that business must take up the load government is preparing to drop. Candor is of much an obligation of public men as of private individuals. Assuming, however, that the emphasis has been placed in the speech at Boulder Dam where Mr. Roosevelt desired it, every thoughtful man is apt to tell himself that the president would have today a better chance of enlisting industry as the active, enthusiastic ally of his plans had he not so persistently alienated business during the past eighteen months. He had many honeyed words for business when he wished to initiate NIRA, but no sooner had he committed merchants and manufacturers to codes than he began to impose restrictions that irritated and embarrassed them without materially aiding the general program of re-employment. . . . The sum of it all is that industry, the country over, is alienated from the president. He himself is primarily responsible for a situation that, for the last year, has constituted one of the principal obstacles to recovery." Notwithstanding this, "Responsibility for the future of America must rest more on employer and employee than on politicians, vast though the powers may be that congress sometimes vests in the executive. Business may feel that Mr. Roosevelt should not have hobbled it if he expects it to run a race; but however it may feel, business must run that race. Government has done, well or ill, about all it can do for direct re-employment. Industry must absorb as many workers as can possibly be given employment."—Excerpts from an editorial in the Richmond News Leader of October 1st.

An Unfinished Lamb Stew.—

"Sixty centuries ago," says The Literary Digest, "a housewife, name and race unknown, set a lot of lamb stew cooking in her clay oven in the midst of a little city near the Tigris River. A few minutes lated she fled for her life and never returned. The debris of centuries covered the pot of stew, safe in its oven. Eleven successive cities were built over it . . . a monument of the centuries." Eight years ago archaeologists began digging, and last year they brought to light the long-buried pot of stew and its mute story of tragedy. It was Charles Bache, field director of an expedition backed by the University Museum of Philadelphia and the American School of Oriental Research, who made the find. The archaeologist himself tells that there is evidence that twelve different cities were built upon each other at this place. He says: "Each level was carefully studied as to architectural detail. All its features were photographed inside and out, and the pottery, ornaments, tools, and other relics carefully removed and preserved . . . . and the ground cleared for the unearthing of the next layer. In this way we have progressed through twelve layers—twelve successive cities—twelve superimposed civilizations . . . . " At the sixth level were found copperware, and other articles similar to those found at Ur, 3000 to 2600 B. C., which would make it not less than forty-five centuries old. The levels below that must be even older, and it was concluded that the twelfth layer must be not less than 6,000 years in age. The twelfth level architecture is said to surpass that of the later cities, and painted pottery was also found, leading to the belief that there had been reached relics of what are archaeologically known as the "painted pottery" people, who are thought, according to Scientific American, to have been a migrating horde swept from the East over India, Persia, and Mesopotamia." These people had no metal, but did possess well-made stone tools. They were also evidently acquainted with the art of spinning and weaving. The idea of private property seems to have been well established, owners stamping their property with seals. Kohl, a cosmetic still used by women to darken their eyelids, was found in one slender vase and had evidently served some beauty of long ago. And the story of Adam and Eve may have been known to them, for on one of the painted pots was found the images of a man, a woman and a serpent.

Scrambled Politics.—

The United States holds no patent on scrambled politics. As proof of this one may look toward Canada, where the general elections are less than two weeks away. Four political parties will present their pleas to the people of the Dominion on the fourteenth of this month. They are the so-called Conservative party, headed by Richard Bedford Bennett, present Prime Minister; the Liberals, headed by William L. Meckenzie King; the Reconstructionists, a split-off from Bennett's organization, led by a former Bennett lieutenant, Henry Herbert Stevens, and the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation which is joining forces with the Socialist group and backing the veteran leader, James S. Woodworth. The Conservative Prime Minister is running for re-election on a platform of "new deal" accomplishments which were rushed through the legislature the past spring and promise of an attempt to get constitutional authority for more changes. It demands compulsory retirement of workers at fixed ages on pension, conversion of the public debt; compulsory adjustment of private mortgage debt, and more direct taxes. It calls for the maintenance of a Central Bank, but under private ownership. In this and its declaration for tariff protection are its only noted claims to its party name. The Liberal Party stands out in this election as the real conservative leader, being more conservative in its pension program, calling for lower taxation, opposing regimentation of the compulsory features of the marketing act and price control. It questions the constitutionality of new deal measures and naturally would oppose further such legislation. It is liberal in that it would lower tariffs, modify Empire pacts, seek trade treaties, and socialistic in that it would have the Central Bank government owned. Stevens might be most briefly described as playing Huey Long to Bennett. The fourth party is truly socialistic, and it has thrown a sop to the farmers of the western provinces by demanding a minimum income for farmers. The fight will probably be between Bennett and King. Bennett is said to have a strong personality, and if he wins, this will have been a determining factor. King's attitude is more appealing to business men so far as the new deal is concerned, but they are mostly opposed to a State-owned Central Bank, or lower tariffs. Thus no party finds itself in full favor with Canadian business. Politics seems to be pretty well scrambled in the Dominion on our north.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Our Spring Hill Church at Waverly, Virginia, T. Fred Wright, Pastor, has just closed a week's revival with highly gratifying results. A good spirit of cooperation prevailed and the preaching by Rev. J. E. McCauley of our Richmond Church, was of the highest order.

The Woman's North Carolina Missionary Conference meets with the Church of Wide Fellowship in Southern Pines, October 17th. The Societies throughout the state have no doubt elected or certainly will elect delegates and secure representatives for this annual event.

In the absence of the pastor, Dr. L. E. Smith, from the Elon College pulpit, Sunday, September 29th, Dean J. D. Messick, of the College faculty, took charge of the service, giving a very helpful talk, appropriately using for his topic, "Concentration to a Purpose." This was the first opportunity the community had had of hearing Dean Messick in a public address, and general appreciation was expressed for his helpful and refreshing talk.

The following item is from the Greensboro Daily News, September 29th: "Ramseur, Sept. 28.—The Christian Missionary Society met at the church Wednesday afternoon with 14 members present. Delegates elected to the missionary conference in Southern Pines in October were Mrs. J. O. King, Mrs. G. E. York and Mrs. E. A. Cox. Officers for the new year were: Mrs. E. A. Cox, president; Mrs. E. H. Bray, vice-president; Mrs. C. W. Craven, secretary-treasurer, and Mrs. T. A. Moffitt, corresponding secretary."

This is the time when many of our churches are preparing their reports, electing their delegates and making their plans for the Annual Conferences, whose dates and places of meeting are given in another column this week. With proper effort on the part of pastor and people, every church can report to Conference with all apportionments paid and all obligations discharged. It will be deplorable, indeed, if any church or pastor neglects the challenge and the opportunity afforded within the next few weeks of finishing up the work of the year happily and successfully.

A communication dated September 21st, from Rev. Carl R. Key, pastor of our Holland Church, reads, in part, as follows: "Last evening marked the close of a series of revival services at the Holland Christian Church. The results of these meetings were very gratifying and fruitful, both in fellowship and newly created interest and members received. Seven young people came in on confession of faith and one by letter. Tomorrow Dr. John G. Truitt and I are exchanging pulpits. Dr. Truitt will conduct the service here and The Lord's Supper at the close. I am enjoying a very wholesome fellowship in the Church and in the Conference."

THE SUN'S editor expresses his sympathy to Mrs. Oma U. Johnson, librarian of Elon College, in the bereavement sustained last week in the passing away of her father, Bro. R. H. Utley, from his home in Raleigh, N. C., on Wednesday A. M., September 25th. The interment was in the Wentworth Christian Church cemetery, the funeral being conducted by his pastor, Rev. J. Lee Johnson. The deceased was a life acquaintance and an esteemed friend of the editor, who knew him as a quiet, peaceable and honorable citizen and church member. His life of seventy-seven years was a blessing and a benediction to his good family and a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

The Mission Board of the Southern Convention was in session at Suffolk, Va., Wednesday, September 25th, and spent a most exacting day in discussion of plans for carrying on our missionary work and sustaining points being helped by the Board which are undergoing trying experiences. The Board reduced its indebtedness and obligations the past year by some over $9,000, and with outstanding obligations and pledges for the future of some over $5,000, it is still hindered in enlarging its territory and scope of service for the church. The total income to the Board the past year was an increase over that of the year before, and this increase gave hope that the drop had stopped and that further curtailment in missionary work would not be necessary. The church grows in prestige and in membership only as it goes forward through its missionary endeavor, contributions and activity.

The Rev. James M. Gray, D. D., LL. D., whose name for forty years has been linked with the expanding work of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, was at midafternoon on Saturday, September 21st, released from earthly life. Though in his eighty-fifth year, he had shown remarkable vigor to the last, having addressed a large audience in the Institute auditorium on Friday of the previous week. He was seized with a heart attack early on Sunday morning, the 15th, in his home, and was later removed to Passavant Hospital, where his death occurred. As an author he leaves some twenty-five volumes and booklets on doctrinal themes to continue his ministry. Next in importance to "Synthetic Bible Studies" is his great one-volume work, "Christian Workers' Commentary on the Old and New Testaments." The gleaning of his tireless pen can but prove an enriching treasure through many years to come.

HOLLAND CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

Rev. Carl R. Key was ordained to the office of an Elder, and formally installed as pastor at Holland Christian Church Sunday night, September 29th. Dr. Wm. J. Campbell, President of Atlanta Seminary Foundation, Nashville, Tenn., conducted the service and preached the sermon. Dr. Elwood W. Jones, pastor of Franklin Christian Church delivered the charge to the congregation and the writer delivered the charge to the candidate. This ordination service was performed under the direction of the Executive Committee of the Eastern Virginia Conference at the request of the Executive Committee of the Western North Carolina Conference, of which the candidate is a member.

Rev. Mr. Key is a native of North Carolina, a graduate of Elon College and of the Atlanta Seminary Foundation, Nashville, Tenn. He was called to Holland Christian Church September 1st. N. G. NEWMAN.

FROM PALM STREET.

A college girl does enjoy a trip home. My visit this past Friday gave me an opportunity to attend one of the revival services being held at Palm Street Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C.

The Grace Methodist Church has united with the Christian Church in a joint revival. The two churches are cooperating beautifully. Rev. Reed Wall, pastor of Grace Church, has his father with him, who is doing the preaching.

The service Friday night opened with devotional songs. The choir was well filled and the singing was good. As Friday was to be known as "Dollar Day," the offering taken by Rev. B. J. Earp, pastor of Palm Street, gave each member present a chance to give his dollar.

The visiting minister spoke on "What Has Been Spoken, Is Spoken."

There was a splendid crowd and much interest is being shown. Services are being held each morning and each evening. Much good is expected of the revival from both churches.

MARGARET J. EARP.

LONG'S CHAPEL.

On the third Sunday in September, we began revival services at Long's Chapel. The services opened Sunday morning with a good attendance. The pastor preached at the morning hour and Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D., preached a very helpful sermon in the afternoon.

At four o'clock the pastor conducted the funeral services of Franklin P. Rogers. Bro. Rogers was a loyal member of Long's Chapel and he will be missed in the home, the church and the community.

Rev. Olive Daniel Poythress, pastor of the South Norfolk Christian Church reached us Monday afternoon and remained with us till the close of the meeting Friday evening.

Brother Poythress preached earnest, forceful sermons. The evangelistic note was sounded in all of his sermons. The congregation was pleased with him and the earnest gospel messages that he brought.

There were a number of reconsecrations, three or four public professions and the church was much revived. P. H. FLEMING.

OCEAN VIEW.

The Rev. Robert Lee House of Newport News preached for us in our evangelistic services September 16th to September 27th. The Berea people appreciated and enjoyed his saxophone and the good preaching. The attendance for the services was much better than usual. Many people were in attendance who have not been to church in years. There was a fine spirit manifested thruout the services; the people were very responsive to the Call of Christ, and there was really a spiritual awakening in the church. Nineteen persons were received into church membership on Friday night. Others will be received during October.

The Berea Missionary Society has done good work this year. Palmer's "Orientals in American Life" and Kagawa's "Japanese Women Speak" were studied during the year. The pastor led the discussion of these books at the meetings. The apportionment for the society was raised in full.

Under the leadership of Mr. Ernest Waterfield the Sunday School has done a good year's work. Needed materials and supplies have been purchased which has increased the interest in and the efficiency of the school.

The Vacation Church School was well attended this summer and the local teachers did fine work in their groups. During the school the pastor had in his group twenty-three (23) boys and girls in the teen age for a Pastor's Class. The pastor has received every one of these young people into church membership. Our course of study was "The Meaning of the Church Service."

Prospects are encouraging for a great program at Berea this year. JOE FRENCH.

General Council News

By Herbert D. Rugg.

The elimination of interdenominational competition as proposed in the National Comity Agreement signed in May by representatives of six home mission boards is proceeding in accordance with the approved provisions, Dr. Ernest M. Halliday, General Secretary, reported to the administrative committee of the Congregational and Christian Church Extension Boards at its meeting September 18th. Dr. Carl A. Voss, pastor of the Smithfield Evangelical Protestant Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., and chairman of the committee, presided.

The denominations whose Boards have participated in the Agreement are the Northern Baptist, Congregational and Christian, Disciples, Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian in U. S. A., Reformed and Evangelical.

The spirit manifested in adopting the Agreement and since continued in carrying out its plan promises a strong united movement within American Protestantism. The six denominations report 59,100 churches and 11,050,000 communicant members. As generally computed this indicates a total affiliated constituency of approximately 33,000,000, comprising half of Protestantism in United States.

Dr. Halliday accompanied Dr. William R. King, executive secretary of the Home Missions Council, this summer on a tour to state comity conferences in North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana and Idaho. At other state conferences, Dr. King is being accompanied by home mission executives of other denominations.

"The state executives," Dr. Halliday said, "are working heartily together in the effort to make the necessary adjustments. In some cases this will require more time than was originally anticipated. It is recommended that where negotiations are actually in progress a reasonable extension of time to specific fields be granted. In many cases prima facie competition turns out upon investigation not to be real. In certain other instances it may be that the state executives will feel that they are unable, because of local difficulties, to suggest any solution. In such instances the rule of the Boards will undoubtedly need to be applied and further aid refused."

In the west as in the TVA area, the new federal dams are bringing developments that call for special home mission action which is being undertaken by the Home Missions Council. At Boulder Dam in Nevada was the first united project of the Home Mission Council. Now projects have been undertaken at the Fort Peck Dam, Montana; the Bonneville Dam, Oregon, and the Grand Coulee Dam, Washington. Speaking of the Grand Coulee Dam, which he visited, Dr. Halliday said:

"Along the river are the hybrid towns of Grand Coulee and Coulee Center. There are no pavements. Houses and business places are of every sort and description, largely unpainted. The residents are the lowly paid workers on the dam together with others who have been attracted here by the hope of earning or otherwise acquiring a livelihood. These are the communities to which the minister who has been employed by the Home Missions for its Grand Coulee Dam project has been assigned. A building is in process of erection and it is hoped that the religious influence radiating from it may do much to ameliorate the moral conditions and encourage and strengthen those who are disposed toward Christian living. The work while financially sponsored by the Boards connected with the national Home Mission Council, is under the administrative care of the Washington and Northern Idaho Council of Churches and Religious Education through its comity of which Dr. Claton S. Rice of Seattle, superintendent of our conference, is chairman.

Seventy-eight college and theological seminary students served this summer under the Extension Boards. Their reports are filled with expressions of interest and enthusiasm showing that placing students in difficult home mission fields and giving them responsibilities of leadership arouses in them an increased sense of the worthwhileness of life and the validity of the Christian religion. Affection for the people and concern for their welfare grows strong as the students face situations where poverty, disease and lack of sanitation made living scarcely bearable.

Upon the recommendation of its church building committee of which Dr. M. Russell Boynton, pastor of the Byrn Mawr Community Church, Chicago, Ill., is chairman, the administrative committee of the Extension Boards on September 18th approved grants and loans to nineteen church, the grants amounting to $11,100 and the loans to $30,650. The appropriations were mostly to assist churches to re-finance indebtedness. Central Church, Atlanta, Ga., was voted a grant of $2,300. Plymouth Church, Binghamton, N. Y., badly damaged by the recent flood was voted a grant of $1,500 and a loan of $3,500. A grant of $3,000 was voted the First Church, Verona, N. J.; this was in fulfilment of a request in a will giving the Extension Boards a bequest of over $20,000.

Some of the grants and loans were in response to dire need. A loan of $300 was made the church in Lenora, Kan., to buy materials for a new room and other repairs, the men of the church to donate the labor. Concerning the church, Dr. John B. Gonzales, Superintendent of the Kansas Conference, wrote: "The people once prosperous, have been brought to poverty by the past few years of drought, high winds and dust storms. They find it difficult to pay my salary of $50 a month. Some of the repair work must be done at once and the loan will help both to repair the building and to strengthen the morale."

The administrative committee was asked to concur in the sale of three small churches which had received grants in past years and whose organizations had died. There were at Caledonia, N. Dakota; Kennewick, Wash.; and Shelvin, Minn.

The climax of the Connecticut tercentenary celebration, begun in April, comes Sunday, October 6th, when the 1,500 churches of all creeds in the state will observe a "Connecticut Sabbath" in commemoration of the Puritan faith of the founders. In the Jewish synagogue the commemoration will be on Saturday.

The founding of the state is dated from the settlement of Hartford which was made by the members of the First Church who came overland in 1635 and 1636 from Cambridge, Mass., where the church had been organized in 1633.

Sabbath and Meeting House are true symbols of early Connecticut. Church and town were a unity in the settlements when Hartford, Weatherfield and Windsor joined to form the original Connecticut colony. The Hartford Meeting House served as the State House also for nearly two centuries.

The Sabbath was held in great reverence. In England the Puritan regard for the Sabbath had been a point of special attack by King Charles I and by Archbishop Laud, head of the established Church. Rankling fresh with the first settlers in Connecticut was King Charles' edict of 1632 concerning lawful sports on Sunday. Archbishop

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE HOUSE OF UNDERSTANDING.

The source of true wisdom, and the house of real understanding, is not the school, or a laboratory or Executive Mansion, but the Church of the Living God. The Church has given to mankind its greatest teachers, its ablest scholars, its clearest thinkers. There has never been a teacher or a scholar that approaches in intellectual acumen, mental grasp and moral insight the Carpenter of Nazareth. And there was a long line of those who clave unto the Lord, who sought their knowledge from the source of true wisdom, viz: in the tabernacle and at the altar of Jehovah. Of such were Abraham, father and founder of the faithful; Moses, maker of national and international law; David, immortal poet, prophet and king; Solomon, the wisest, of the wise; Isaiah, who penetrated the future with a vision clear as the light of day—veritably intellectual giants, these, whose minds were made bright and whose intellects were made keen because they sought knowledge at its true source. The words of the wise one still obtain: "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom; and the knowledge of the Holy One is understanding." (Prov. 9:10.) And then as successors to the Carpenter of Nazareth in the realm of intellectual achievement and ability; Peter, the flaming orator and master of assemblies; John, the mystic, the marvellous painter and persuasive artist; Paul of Tarsus, to whose name and memory have been erected more monuments, cathedrals and memorials than to any other man who ever lived. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and a knowledge of Him is understanding." It is not sufficient to have knowledge; to be practical, persuasive and powerful, with man and measures, one must have understanding. For knowledge of itself is vain and useless unless there is understanding with it.

Thus, while students of science, philosophy and literature pursue their courses for intellectual achievement, if they would have understanding, they must have knowledge of the Holy One; a spirit of reverence and worship and devotion which the House of God can give as no house of man, whether of university or parliament, can give.

Thus when one begins to leave out of one's life the hour of worship in the house of God, something begins to slip from that life, something begins to snap. Nothing under heaven and amongst men can take the place of worship in the house of the true and living God. There is no alternative and no substitute. Picnics, golf links, Sunday excursions, house parties, afford their passing pleasures and give entertainment for the day, but if pursued to the neglect of worship and absence from the House of God is repeated, then something begins to take place in that life, something begins to slip in that experience, something begins to tell on him, her or them, who seek such substitutes.

This is not saying that the church can supplant all other sources of wisdom, of knowledge, of enjoyment, but it is saying that there is no substitute for the Church and for worship in the church at appointed times and season, and the one who leaves this source of wisdom and understanding out of one's reckoning leaves out that which is absolutely essential to a true, happy, well-rounded life.

THE FELLOWSHIP OF MYSTERY.

Science has never solved the mysteries with which we are surrounded. The mystery of electricity is as deep, obscure and subtle today as it was in curious Ben Franklin's day, when he climbed a high tree to see if he could discover the secret source and the mystery of lightning. One can no more define electricity now than Franklin could and science has not explained the mystery of this hidden power. It has only deepened and made more majestic the mystery. This, however, science has done: It has brought us into fellowship with the mystery. This is the work of science and of philosophy, not to explain or abolish mysteries, but to bring mankind into intimate and helpful fellowship with mysteries. As we talk over the telephone or sit by the radio, we marvel at the power of the electric wave, and instead of regarding electricity with superstitious fear and dread, we use it and enjoy its presence and cultivate its fellowship. So instead of trying to exclude electricity from the home, we now introduce it in many helpful forms and enjoy its comforts and share its presence and power.

Steam, and the power of steam, are as marvellous today as when the boy watched with amazement and curiosity the dancing of the kettle lid as he sat by the fire and watched his mother make tea for the family. The great Mogul steam engine is a giant mystery of majesty and of power, and instead of regarding it with superstition and fear, we harness it to our cargoes of freight and commerce and thus enjoy its fellowship and enrich ourselves with its service. Through the ages, science has not solved the riddle of the universe; nay, verily, not even the riddle of life. How foolish, indeed, then is the student who, as he pursues his studies in laboratory or library, and finds some explanation of things that were dark and doubtful to him, decides that science has explained all and philosophy understands all. It was the agnostic, Herbert Spence, who declared that if we pursued science far enough, it would carry us like religion, back to the mysterious we connot penetrate.

This is what Paul was talking about in the Book of Ephesians, which book (said by many to be the sublimest and most comprehensive of all his writings) has as its key-word "Mystery." In this book Paul declares that secrets of God had been revealed which had been kept hidden thru all the ages, but that now we should know the fellowship of this "mystery," and understand the power and sacredness of the mystery of God. This mystery was with Paul that the gospel was not for a single nation or a single people, but that the heart of God yearned equally for all nations and all peoples, and that the power of God was able to uplife and to save the most needy, the most destitute, the most hopeless. Thus the world has been brought into the fellowship of that mystery, even the mystery of God's infinite capacity to love all nations, tongues and peoples, and that He is able through His Son to reach and redeem the most wayward, backward and needy. The riches of God's grace is thus beyond comprehension, but the lowliest of us may share the fellowship of divine mysteries we cannot explain or understand.

CHRISTIAN DEMOCRACY.

"Share our wealth" was one of the alluring slogans which the late Huey Long used to gain followers. It sounds like a Christian ideal. Christ said "One is your teacher and all ye are brethren"; and the Church in its best moments has always proclaimed brotherhood as its goal. But there is this difference: The communism of Huey Long and those like him who propose to secure equality would reach its goal by taking from the richer and giving to the poorer by force. "Soak the rich"; penalize wealth by taxation, take from those who have and give to those who have not,—this is not sharing our wealth, it is taking your wealth!

It is a Christian ideal to share our wealth. Christian democracy is the goal of a truly Christian church. We have made very slow progress. There were Christians who owned other Christians as their slaves until the last century. The communism of Russia today is largely a result of the bitter oppression of the poor by so-called Christian nobles in the past. Our so-called "overproduction" in the midst of widespread want will seem in future centuries a sad commentary upon our Christianity.

Political communism and all our share-the-wealth programs of the type of Huey Long have this in common. They involve red tape bureaucracy and the denial of real liberty. Control from the top by a dictator or a majority released from control by a constitution is essential for the proposed revolution. Denial of free speech and a free press for the oppressed minority of wealth-holders is always the program of those who propose to produce equality by legislation. A constitution like ours is the only safeguard for minorities. If the minority has no rights that the majority must respect, then the rapacity of an inflamed majority has no bounds. Ruthless violence in Russia is the natural fruit of the tyranny of an uncontrolled majority. A calm dispassionate observer estimates that "over a million perished in the mad-made famine of 1922-23" in the Ukraine and the Caucasus (Sherwood Eddy). A planned economy in production and distribution may easily become absolute tyranny.

How shall Christian democracy emerge if not by control from the top through dictator or despot?

We shall share our wealth if we are Christians, not by taking from those who have but by giving by those who have. The progress of social justice must go forward by the orderly processes of good will. An enlightened Christian public opinion which made a philanthropist of the last century say that it was a disgrace to die possessed of great wealth and which in our own times has seen the world-wide benevolence of the Rockefeller family is our best hope for the future. Under constitutional safeguards we can legislate for social security just as fast as we become aware of the divine reasons for such brotherhood. It is the teaching of Christ that those who have ought to share with those who have not. When Christianity becomes thoroughly Christian we shall get brotherhood into human society. Just as slavery has vanished and free schools for all have come into being, so child labor will be abolished, a living and a saving wage will be established, and the perils of unemployment and old age will be averted. Above and beyond all, the folly of war will be abolished, not by legislation which runs ahead of intelligent conviction but by the discovery of the truth of the teachings of Jesus that we are all brethren. If one nation suffers, all nations suffer. If one class suffers, all classes suffer. Christianity is not a mere sentiment, it is really only intelligent good will applied to human society.

FLORIDA MINISTERS' CONVOCATION.

One of the outstanding events in the church life of our denomination in Florida has been the annual Ministers' Convocation, which was begun about ten years ago. In recent years the Convocation has been held at the Ponce DeLeon Hotel at DeLeon Springs, a beautiful setting greatly enjoyed by the ministers and their wives, who attend. The principal speaker for the Convocation this year will be Dr. H. Shelton Smith of Duke University. His general subject will be "New Movements in Religious Life and Thought." Dr. Smith explains that under this theme he will discuss among other subjects "The Barthian Theology," "The Oxford Group Movement," and "Liberal Christianity and Its Critics." Other subjects and those who will present them will be: "The Peace Plebiscite," Dr. Arthur Lincoln; "Proposed Denominational Reorganization," Rev. Frank Atkinson; "Major Emphasis for the Home Missionary Message for Such a Time as This," Rev. Walter Metcalf; "Ethical Problems in the Light of Christian Teaching," Rev. Victor B. Chicoine; book review "Mixed Pastors," Rev. O. T. Anderson; with a closing address on the final evening by Dr. Trevor Mordecai.

A cordial invitation is extended to any ministers in the southeast to attend. In fact, the Convocation Committee would greatly appreciate the presence of pastors from other states in the southeast and consider that it would add greatly to the fellowship.

ETHIOPIA—OLDEST CHRISTIAN NATION.

Away up in the mountains of Northeastern Africa is a country with these unique distinctions: its dynasty is traditionally descended from Solomon; it is the oldest Christian country in the world; it is the only ancient kingdom in existence which has never been conquered; it is the only African country ever decisively to defeat a European army; it was the only neutral African territory in the World War.

Today you doubtless know its names, both of them: Abyssinia, Ethiopia. But could you have identified it by either name as short a time ago, let us say, as last November? If not, why not?

Here is the answer for millions of Americans: Because it wasn't involved in threatened war.

In all modern history the only times the world has taken cognizance of this historic, proud and unique nation have been when she was forced to fight or to prepare to fight to preserve her life.

Those occasions have been two: in 1896 when she routed an invading Italian army, and in 1935 when again she is forced to defy Italian aggression. Thus must the oldest Christian nation be placed to attract attention of the Christian West!

She has had a stirring history. Even dilute or delete half of it because of doubtful valleys in past knowledge and she still is a fascinating story. Partly biblical, partly historical and partly legendary, her shortened chronicle is as follows:

Cush, son of Ham, father of Nimrod, from the tenth chapter of Genesis, migrated to the lands of the Red Sea. His descendants were darker than their brethren, and so were called "burnt faces," which in Hebrew is Cuchites. "Burnt faces" in Greek is Aithops. The land was called Ethiopia, which is its official name. "Abyssinia" is a word from a Portuguese corrupaion of the Arabic habeshi, meaning mixed, applied in derision to the area because of its amazing population mixture. The name "Abyssinia" has no official standing.

About 1,000 B. C., Tamarin, a rich merchant of Ethiopia, by his wealth and his caravan of 520 camels and 370 ships, riveted Solomon's attention and was invited to visit the wise king. We was amazed at what he saw and the wisdom he heard. On his return, marveling, to Ethiopia, the queen, Makeda, was intrigued. With 800 camels and numberless mules she set out to see for herself, and passed six months in Jerusalem, enraptured. Solomon fell in love with her but only at the end of her visit, by strategy, did he gain her consent to a union. He invited her to a banquet, but, to her surprise, exacted a promise that she would not take by force anything in his palace. Did she break the promise, she was to consent to his love. His servants plied her with rich viands highly seasoned, and with hotly spiced wines. After retiring to bed she was seized of a great thirst, and, taking a goblet of water, drank it, only to be startled by the voice of Solomon from the shadows accusing her of breaking her oath. He overbore her in argument, and the union followed.

With 6,000 camels from Solomon, a desert coach, an ocean ship, and, if we believe Ethiopian tradition, a machine "wherein one could traverse the air," Queen Makeda returned to Ethiopia. Out of Judah and into Ethiopia, therefore, the first airplane. Immediately after her arrival home their son was born, and from her is traditionally descended the King of Kings of Ethiopia.

In A. D. 40, Kandake VI reigned as queen of Ethiopia. This was the Candace to whom the Ethiopian eunuch reported his conversion and baptism, and thus brought Christianity into this highland kingdom. The middle of the fourth century A. D., Frumentius came to Ethiopia's capital city, Axum. Welcomed and encouraged, he returned later to Alexandria and by Athanasius was consecrated Bishop of Ethiopia, whose church has ever since remained a branch of Alexandria's coptic faith.—By Emory Ross in Christian Evangelist.

BUSY HERE AND THERE.

We may lose our souls through the delusion of the afterwhile. We are too busy here and there just now to attend to our spiritual needs. They will wait without loss; by and by they shall have attention; faith shall have its food, the spirit its communion, love its fellowship; "he will soothe and reconcile his own conscience—afterwhile." Meantime public worship and "the charities that soothe and heal and bless," family devotions, Bible reading, and religious meditation are crowded out or deliberately laid aside—temporarily. They will certainly be taken up again soon. Then duties multiply, the urgency of business increases, the taste for spiritual things grows dull, and the need of God is no longer felt. Then comes the awakening to the fact that, while busy here and there, the religious life has gone.

The greatest treasures of life cannot be laid away in a mummy case or shut up like securities in a vault to await our leisure. The fire that is not tended goes out; the life that is not fed and exercised dies; the love that is not cherished vanishes. Many a young man has won the heart of a woman by assiduous wooing, by personal devotion, by gifts and favors, by praises and caresses; and then imagines that, locked in marriage bonds, her love will keep unchanged, while he busies himself making a fortune; and then loses her love by neglecting to supply the fuel of devotion by which he first kindled her love into flame. Nor can the soul live and grow that does not daily feed on God.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

For several years the writer has desired to visit two places of national interest; the battlefield at Gettysburg, Pa., and the Natural Bridge in Virginia. This wish was realized during last week. The impressions made by this visit were so overwhelming it seems fitting to share them with the readers of THE SUN.

For three days during the first week in July, 1863, the Union Army and the Confederate Army were engaged in one of the bloodiest battles of the War of 1861-1865. This is not the place to discuss that conflict in detail or to give a sketch of the three days of conflict. More than 800 monuments of varying types have been erected upon that historic battlefield. And credit has been given to both sides of the conflict. All signs of the devastation have been removed by the intervening years, and the forests and fields show no marks to indicate the destruction of those terrible three days. The rows of graves in the cemetery bear evidence of the terrible slaughter of human life.

As one views the battlefield from the various points on the twenty-two miles of road, one thinks of the sacrifice of human life and property. The young men who sleep in the cemetery were robbed of years of precious life. Their families suffered by the terrible loss of life. These men were entitled to the enjoyment of all the blessings of building their own homes and sitting by their fireside with their children. It is contrary to the laws of nature to declare that civilization can be advanced by merciless war. War is destructive in purpose and deadly in its execution. The soldiers who fought should be given due credit for their valor and bravery. But the underlying principles of war cannot be lifted to a high plane of spiritual justification. The background of war is darkness and despair. Glistening swords, keen bayonets, spotless uniforms, marching armies and waving flags stir the enthusiasm and command the admiration of the reviewing multitude. But the clash of arms, the roar of cannon and charge of the soldiers have stained the soil with the blood of patriots. And their sacrifice should not be forgotten. Such an experience should not be required of the youth of this generation. A battlefield is a sacred shrine when it makes a silent plea for peace and a protest against war.

As one turns from this field where young men from many states fought bitterly and valiantly for what they considered a righteous and worthy cause, and goes to Natural Bridge of Virginia, the scene is changed and the impressions are different. It was our privilege to visit this wonderful handiwork of God at 9:00 o'clock P. M. The owners have done a fine piece of work in illuminating the bridge. A program, consisting of Bible readings from Genesis, and several vocal and organ selections, all given by electrical transcription, requires about three-quarters of an hour. Several seats are arranged along the edge of the trickling water which flows beneath the bridge. The walls of the bridge are a natural sounding board. Under the changing lights and the inspiring program, planned to portray the seven days of the creation, a deep impression is made upon the spectators and audience. The management should be congratulated upon presenting a religious program under such circumstances. A man sitting near said: "I must remove my hat; this is church." And it seemed like a great cathedral where God speaks to man and calls the people to worship in a spirit of reverence.

Gettysburg and Natural Bridge—what a difference! One speaks of bloody conflict and dying agonies; the other of rippling waters and the wonders of God's creative power. One speaks of the silent dead and the epitaphs upon blocks of granite; the other of peace and goodwill of nature and God. If a man would let religion speak its eternal message of God to all people, upon every mountain and in every valley, there would be no more war.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

In advance of the last biennial session of the Southern Christian Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches held at Suffolk, Virginia, May 1, to 4, 1934, a special committee on finance was appointed. The personnel of this committee was L. E. Holland, I. W. Johnson, C. H. Rowland, W. C. Wicker, and J. A. Williams.. This committee reported to the convention that for each year for the next biennial the convention will need $31,500 to be apportioned as follows:

Convention Fund	$ 5,000.00
Convention Home Missions	5,000.00
Foreign Missions	5,000.00
Elon College Fund	12,500.00
Superannuated Fund	2,500.00
Christian Education	1,500.00

The convention adopted this budget and the amount was apportioned to the conferences constituting the convention. The conferences in turn were requested to apportion the same to the local church constituting the conference. The resolution provided that all money raised for the several purposes of the convention be reported to the conference to which the church belonged and should be counted as money raised on the local church's apportionment.

I trust that all interests of the convention have received generour consideration from the local churches of the convention. I am interested in every phase of our work, but, because of the position in which the church has placed me and the nature of the responsibility entailed as the chief executor of the college, of necessity I am held responsible for securing funds necessary for operation of the college. Naturally, I am particularly interested in the churches' providing for the pro rata share in the support of the college. This communication is a reminder and an appeal. I trust that the churches will be reminded of the convention's asking for the college and that they will respond to the will of the convention by raising their apportionments in full. The following churches have made, according to our records, contributions to the college as follows:

From the above table showing contributions and apportionments, you will observe that the following churches have raised in full the amount due the college:

Dendron	Holland
Mt. Auburn	Liberty Springs
Elon College	Ingram

It is certainly generous of these churches and the fact that they have raised their full amount deserves hearty congratulations. We also appreciate greatly every effort put forth by any individual or any church and the college wants to assure them that their efforts and gifts have helped greatly. It is sincerely hoped that every local church will put forth special effort to raise the entire apportionment. The Virginia Valley Conference and the Western North Carolina did not adopt the convention budget. Antioch Church of the Virginia Valley Conference raised its quota under the previous plan.

Elon College is not desirous of receiving its full apportiomnent at the expense of any other interest of the church, but is greatly concerned that every church do its full share and that the college be permitted to share on a prorata basis with other interests of the convention. It is possible that some churches have failed to receive proper credit. If so, if that church will call our attention to any error in the above statements, we will be happy to correct same. L.E.SMITH.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE FOR OUR NEGRO CHRISTIAN CHURCHES?

I am wondering, from the point of origin, who is responsible for the negro Christian Churches. The answer to this question will, I think, throw some light on present responsibility..

Evidently, members of our church took the initiative in organizing churches among the colored people. It is natural to suppose that for some time at least there was some form of fraternal oversight or supervision. My supposition is that the Afro-Christian Church is a child of the white Christian Church. If that is true, our responsibility did not cease with the founding of these churches. We are responsible for them in the same sense that we are responsible for the other "children" of our church: the Elon Orphanage, Elon College, Missions, etc.

Simply because a child becomes "free, white and twenty-one" the father does not thereby sever all relationships and interest in him. Some used to think of God as a man who made a watch, wound it up and left is running. We are thinking of God today as imminent, continuously working in and never forsaking His own creation. Now it seems that we wound up some Christian Churches among the colored people and have not been back to re-wind them or to see if they were still running. Do we plant churches in China and Porto Rico and then tell them "good bye"?

Some day our Church must give an account of its stewardship. These negro Christian Churches especially in North Carolina and Virginia, need our counsel and advice, our literature, our encouragement, the cooperation and assistance of cur boards and field-workers. We think Christ can and should raise up missionaries to go to the black man of Africa, but it does not occur to send a fraternal delegate to counsel with our colored conferences here. Cooperation would not interfere with their independence nor damage our self-respect. Yet we are so busy saving our own life that we are in danger of losing it.

FRUITS OF THE GOSPEL MANIFEST IN A CHINESE CHRISTIAN'S LIFE.

While riding with a Chinese Christian brother yesterday who had waited two days at a railway station to accompany me over some dangerous country to one of our out-stations here in North Manchuria, where ten earnest believers were baptized, I was told of how the older brother of this man had recently become a Christian. The day was hot and the roads rough. We rode in a two-wheel vehicle (an "Amerikanka"), which the Russians call an "American cart," but I never saw such in the United States.

The younger brother is agent for a well-known American concern which does business in many foreign countries. A representative of the firm came to Lonsi to examine the accounts of their agent. The older brother explained that his younger brother, head of the agency was out of town. After waiting awhile the representative returned and said "I have found that your family are Christians. Since Christians do not lie and can be trusted, you need only to send in a report and it will be accepted."

The older brother thanked the visitor, but felt rebuked, saying to himself: Had the man known that I am not a Christian he probably would have wanted to examine our books. He trusts my brother because he is a Christian, but would he have trusted me?

This incident impressed the older brother and caused him to think. Instead of abusing his brother as formerly, because a Christian, he also has now turned to the Lord and has been baptized. His parents have likewise accepted the Lord. By the end of the year the family will all have become baptized believers.

REV. RICHARD S. WEBB.

By MISS D. P. CUSHING, News Editor.

Rev. Richard S. Webb for the past six years has been doing industrial work in Bailundo, West Africa, helping build in the Mission and teaching trades in the school. His activities have been varied and often he has had to be dentist as well as builder and preacher. Because of this he has carried along with him on his trips into the villages not only his Bible and communion service but simple medical supplies and a tooth puller.

Mrs. Webb is a trained nurse with an R. N. from Louisville City Hospital, Kentucky. Mr. Webb is a graduate of Georgia School of Technology (B. S. Engineering), and the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary. He was known in Atlanta, Georgia circles as "Beve" Webb, where he played on the local baseball nine. During the war he served in the 318th Aero Squadron.

The varieties of contacts and activities which Mr. and Mrs. Webb have made in Africa have supplied them with much colorful and interesting material on the people among whom they have been working. Before reaching Africa the Webbs had to learn Portuguese in Portugal, the official language of West Africa and later acquired Umbundu, the native tongue of the Ovimbundus.

NEWS ITEMS OF SOCIETIES.

MRS. W. M. JAY, Editor.

Mrs. J. C. Ellis sends the following report:

"The woman's Missionary Society of The First Christian Church of Portsmouth, Va., reports excellent work for the past year. Present indications are that they will meet their apportionment for the year, and that all points in the Standard of Excellence will be met. They have presented several public meetings during the year, having charge of the midweek prayer services for three meetings. Two study books have been used during the year, and representatives attended the spring rally and the conference of last fall."

The Junior Missionary Society of Mt. Carmel Christian Church has had a very interesting year under the leadership of Miss Doris V. Joyner, Superintendent. The attendance was especially good, having had nearly a hundred per cent at each meeting. They used the study book "Japanese Here and There, and have met all the points on the standard of excellence. Just recently this society presented the pageant "The Honorable Guest" to a large and appreciative audience. Plans are being made for a larger and better year.

The Holy Neck Junior Missionary Society has been busy workers and faithful to the cause this year. Miss Allie Lee Norfleet is Superintendent, assisted by Miss Selma Jones. They enjoyed the book "Japanese Here and There" and presented the playlet "Do What You Can." They raised their apportionment by free will giving, dime cards, little aprons and Sunday eggs. It is a pleasure to them to report that they have met all the points on the standard of excellence. A large representation is planning to attend the Youth Fellowship and Young People's Missionary Conference at Suffolk, September 27th.

The W. W. Staley Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian Church held their regular meetings during the church year, October, 1934 thru September, 1935. The president, Miss Gladys Yates, presided at each meeting.

During the year two new members were enrolled. In March the society celebrated its twenty-second birthday anniversary with a large attendance and a birthday offering of $15.25.

The home mission book, "Orientals in American Life," was used as a study course, and Mrs. W. V. Leathers reviewed "Suzuki Looks at Japan."

The programs for the year were arranged by Mrs Claude Eley, vice-president of the society, and were most interesting and instructive. Thus closes a most successful year.

Mrs. W. H. Scott, Superintendent and president of the Franklin Young People's Society reports a very successful year. They have a lovely group of young people and each one is always interested in the work and outlook of the society.

Christmas is pageant time for them and this year they put on a very colorful and interesting one which required the work of forty or fifty young people. Many were the words of praise for the excellent way in which this pageant was rendered.

This society advocates out-door meetings and the one recently held was twilight meeting at the country club after which they enjoyed a delightful supper.

These young people are already laying plans for a bigger and better Young People's Missionary Society in 1936.

The Young People's Missionary Society of Cypress Chapel Christian Church started the year with new officers and a new and determined desire to make this year the best in the history of the organization. They chose as their superintendent one whom they knew was a good leader and an influential worker for all worthy causes, Mrs. W. L. Harrell. They attribute much of their success to her untiring efforts. At the beginning of the year they put on a membership campaign in the form of a contest, gaining a number of new members and creating a new interest in missionary work. Good programs, plenty of work and a social once a quarter are the methods used to hold their new members and create enthusiasm.

The apportionment has been raised in full by free will giving and one lawn party at the church. Mrs James Lewter has been president of this group and she will be succeeded by Mrs. Norfleet Brinkley. Plans have already been made for a bigger and better year ahead and with the cooperation of all, it will surely be accomplished.

The Dendron Woman's Missionary Society took inventory of their year's work recently and through Mrs. B. J. Ingram, the secretary, we get the following: They held twelve monthly meetings with an attendance of 75 per cent except twice when they fell below the 50 per cent standard. They observed all special prayer and public services with inspirational programs. One outstanding meeting was the "Rally Echo" meeting when instead of having a delegate to give the report of the District meeting just held, they tried to get the rally spirit into their meeting. The president gave an introductory talk on the meeting, then Mrs. O. M. Cockes, spiritual Life Superintendent of the Conference, conducted the devotionals. One of the ladies spoke of the addresses of Mr. Cooper and Rev. Lester, others gave their impressions from the addresses and display of Dr. and Mrs. White. In this way those who could not attend had some of the real spirit of the day brought to them.

During the study of the two mission study books, they were fortunate in having two splendid teachers. The Methodist society joined with them and went to Suffolk to hear Dr. A. W. Palmer and then they joined with the Methodists at Dendron and heard Dr. Boggs teach the other book.

This society attributes its success to the Spiritual Life department. All phases of the department have been used and a public program closed the year's work. Many plans are being made for a better year next year.

Mrs. J. O. Davidson, writes that at the beginning of the year the Holy Neck Missionary Society elected Mrs. B. D. Jones as president; chose as their theme, "co-workers together with God," and chose "Jesus Calls Us" as the society song. Interesting programs and devotionals have characterized each meeting and the executive committee did most of the planning. Thus, more time was left for real missionary education as the plans were presented, as outlined, at the conclusion of the program for approval or disapproval. This plan eliminated lengthy discussions in the meetings and they like the plan very much.

A social is held at the end of each quarter. In December a dime shower was held in connection with the regular social and many dimes were realized which were used to replenish the society's collection of dishes.

The annual birthday celebration in January is a high spot in the history of the society when they invite their husbands and friends and enjoy a delicious supper and delightful social time together. A goodly sum is always realized from the birthday offerings.

In December each member was asked to give fifty cents talent money and then use it in as many ways as possible to increase it. This money was to be turned in at the March social and each was to tell how she used her money. This proved to be a very interesting feature for varied and many were the courses pursued. The result was most gratifying, for when the money was all counted they found they had $46.00.

The Society appreciated the opportunity of hearing Dr. Palmer review his book at Suffolk and many of the members availed themselves by attending.

This society being a Missionary—Aid Society, or both societies in one, has a two-fold motive, that of missions and the local church needs. They served several suppers the past year and they get a real thrill out of working together or as one member put it, 'Sharing what we have in material gifts, to help in the missionary cause.'

Three new members were added to the roll this year and one member was lost. Mrs. J. T. Rawles, one of the oldest members was called to her reward in June and the members feel her loss very keenly. In that quiet, modest manner she was ever faithful and true to her church and friends in every way. Truly, this society has lost a good member but her memory will be an inspiration to those remaining.

At the August meeting they decided to send our Conference President, Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, a "Sunshine Bag" to brighten her days while she is convalescing at Muncey Valley Hospital, Muncey, Pa.

Under the leadership of Mrs. H. B. Everett, the Woman's Missionary Society of the Holland Christian Church has had a most successful year. It has met all the requirements of the Standard of Excellence and has added several new members as a result of two membership campaigns—one in the fall and a second in the spring.

The World Day of Prayer was observed jointly with the Holy Neck Society, this service being a most helpful and inspiring one led by Mrs. B. D. Jones.

The Missionary Study courses of both Home and Foreign books were also held with the Holy Neck society.

A new feature of the year is a social, held after the meeting, at the close of each quarter, at which time refreshments are served and a most pleasant time enjoyed by all.

A program under the direction of the Spiritual Life superintendent was presented on Friday evening preceding Christmas. This was in the form of a pageant entitled: "White Gifts of the King" and conveyed a great missionary message.

It is with deep regret that we are losing one of our most loyal and devoted members, our Spiritual Life Superintendent, Mrs. W. M. Jay. Her very presence has been a help and inspiration in every meeting. We shall miss her wise counsel and her great works among us.

MRS. A. J. HOLLAND,
Secretary.

A Story for the Children

A FLYING GRIST MILL.

Wendell Paxton and his dad tramped five miles on the side of a wooded hill and listed forty different kinds of birds. They thought it possible to increase their list by taking to the banks of the Chickamauga Creek. They had walked scarcely a half mile farther when they ran onto an old stone mill. The roar of water pouring over the dam, green with mosses, and the rumbling of the mill-stones inside suddenly halted them. Before they left home that morning, the clouds threatened a snowstorm, but the sun came out and the air became warm and balmy.

When they walked to the rocky bank of the creek below the mill-dam, even though it was winter, Wendell spied a dozen mellow bugs or whirligig beetles dancing about over the water as they do in the summertime. There were also a half dozen of those remarkable creatures that look like spiders but are not spiders, but water-striders, skipping about over the water as gracefully as if they were walking about on a glass floor.

"What on earth are those little scamps doing out on the water in wintertime?" Wendell asked in great surprise.

He knew that many kinds of insects and spiders hibernate in winter as snakes, bears and groundhogs do. As Mr. Paxton was not prompt in replying to his son's question, Wendell put the problem to his father.

"Can you explain it?"

"I might. You see these little whirligig beetles and the water-striders crawl up into the crevices among the stones to hibernate until spring comes. But when the weather turns warm, as it has today, it awakens them and they come out and skip about over the surface to limber up their stiffened legs and bodies. But rest assured, as soon as the weather turns cold again, they will slip back into their dens for the rest of the winter."

Mr. Paxton satisfied Wendell's curiosity.

Wendell turned and looked at the old mill as if it were a huge beast of some kind. The rumbling noise from the inside excited his curiosity as much as the water insects had done. "Will the miller let us go inside and watch him grind the corn?"

"Come on; you are always welcomed at one of these old grist mills in the country."

They had scarcely gotten well inside the building when Wendell's sharp eyes espied the hopper full of bright grains of corn. The loose grains were pouring into the center of a large millstone turning round and round, while another rough stone on which it was resting was turning around in a different direction.

"Gee, I'd like to stay here all day; I'd never get tired of watching these big rocks turning round." Wendell declared as the miller picked up a half-bushel of meal and poured it into a white bag. And then he added, "Dad, I believe I would like to be a miller."

"It is a quiet, peaceful and noble occupation," his father answered.

Before they left the building, Wendell thought of something, and he hesitated mentioning it. Finally he breathed with a half chuckle, "Dad, didn't you tell me once that men have copied most everything they do from animals or plants?"

"I may have said something like that," his father admitted.

"Well, can you show me some plant or animal grinding up corn or other grain with hard stones?" He would not let his dad escape anything.

"Yes; I can show you a flying grist mill, one with wings, before we get home," Mr. Paxton assured Wendell as they were leaving the old mill behind.

Wendell screamed from the thrill of a chance to see such a sight. "A flying grist mill? Do you mean it?"

"Of course."

"You don't mean it; you are joking."

"All right. Just wait a few minutes and I'll let you see one of them for yourself," Mr. Paxton convinced him.

They started across an old field where dead weeds were standing waist high. There were ragweeds, evening primroses, asters, horse-weeds and other kinds of dry weeds. Soon they ran across some sparrows hammering out the seeds. There were a half dozen mourning doves walking around eating seeds. The ground was littered up where the birds had been feeding..

"I am still crazy to see a flying grist mill," Wendell said somewhat complainingly. "You were not trying to have some fun with me, were you dad?"

"Not a bit of it. The fact is you have seen hundreds of flying grist mills when on your hikes about old fields, but you could not get inside the mills and see the millstones at work grinding the grain," Mr. Paxton explained.

"Go on and tell me, or, better still, point out one to me just as soon as you can," the boy implored.

"You saw the sparrows gathering their crop of grain. When they were swallowing it, they were putting it into a hopper. The grain kept on going until it went into a gizzard. The birds then swallowed rough, sharp mill-stones which they picked up on the ground. These rocks lodged inside the gizzard and when the grain got inside with the stones, the muscles of the gizzard squeezed them together, and as the birds walked or flew about the millstones turned round and round and ground the seed into meal."

"That seems like the truth, but who on earth would have thought of such a thing?" Wendell exclaimed. "I know I never would have if you had not told me."

"I remember now," Wendell said. "I have seen many a chicken gizzard opened at home and noticed the whole grains of corn with sharp stones inside that had been grinding away. Think how stupid I have been all these years not to see that these were Nature's small grist mills," Wendell scolded himself as he challenged his dad to a race through the field of dead weeds.—By Robert Sparks Walker.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St.. Norfolk, Va.

YOUTH FELLOWSHIP RALLY.

The Youth Fellowship of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference held a rally at Durham Christian Church on September 8, 1935. This is the first of a series of rallies which will cover the entire conference.

The program was presided over by Miss Dorothy Truitt, president of the conference fellowship. The worship service was led by Miss Mary Armfield of First Church, Greensboro. The executive committee had made plans which were presented to the group, discussed, and adopted.

The entertaining church welcomed the group cordially and furnished special music. Lanson Granger, president of the Southeast Fellowship, gave an inspiring message on "Finging the Better Way." His speech is summarized in this little poem:

"Where are you going youth—
To lift the day above the past,
To make tomorrow sure and fast,
To nail Christ's colors to the mast.
Then Christ go with you, youth?"

The service closed with singing "Oh, For a Closer Walk," a benediction by the Rev. F. E. Hyde and the Mizpah.

It appears from reports that the North Carolina and Virginia Conference are seriously undertaking to go forward in Christian activity. May the Lord bless them as they work.

EASTERN VIRGINIA YOUTH FELLOWSHIP AND YOUNG PEOPLE'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The Eastern Virginia Youth Fellowship postponed its meeting last summer on account of Infantile Paralysis, but held a session on last Friday afternoon and evening previous to the annual Young People's Missionary Conference which met in Suffolk Christian Church. The afternoon session of the Fellowship was taken up mostly with business in which 19 reports were made by key-workers, goals were set for the coming year, and plans made for carrying out the objects of the Fellowship.

About 125 young people, pastors and youth leaders sat down to a fellowship supper and enjoyed an excellent program as well as good eats which were furnished by the Suffolk Christian Church. Officers were elected at this meeting and were installed at the 8 o'clock Missionary Conference. Announcement was made by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle concerning the Peace Plebiscite which is to be conducted in the Eastern Virginia Conference by the young people during the first of November. This Plebiscite is sponsored by the Council on Social Action of the denomination.

The main feature of the fellowship supper program was an enlightening and inspiring address by Mrs. Henry S. Eley, a nationally-known speaker, of Suffolk, Virginia. She spoke graphically of the horrors of war and pointed out paths to peace which young people can travel.

At 8 o'clock the Young People's Missionary Conference held its annual session with some 300 people present. After a brief business session officers for the Youth Fellowship and the Young People's Missionary Conference were installed by Rev. Carl R. Key, the new pastor of Holland Christian Church.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle presented pictures of mission work in Mexico, and Miss Alice Yates talked on "How We May Be True Neighbors to the Mexicans."

A fine feature of this meeting was a closing worship service conducted by Mrs. Hendrix Jones of Holland. This is a service which Mrs. Jones has prepared in which the attractiveness and value of the Sacred Scriptures is shown in human experience. It is a very beautiful and inspiring service because it shows how youth turns away from worldly pleasures to follow the way of the cross when inspired by the Sacred Scriptures.

The young people of Eastern Virginia had great sessions in their Youth Fellowship and Missionary Conference, and out of this meeting will evidently grow Christian activity which will mean much through the years.

HOSPITAL FLOWERS.

The editor of this page is beginning to appreciate in a real way hospital flowers. They speak a language and bring inspiration and courage to those who gaze at them from the bed. Their beauty and fragrance give one something to think about while resting quietly and the thoughtfulness of those who presented them makes life a bit sweeter for those who receive.

On Friday of last week it appeared to be necessary for this writer to take a little time at Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Virginia, so the doctors could check up and see what needed to be done to rebuild sufficient physical energy so this human machine can function again. There is probably nothing serious wrong and a bit of rest and tonic will put me back on my feet and eager to aid in religious education and young people's work. Thanks to everyone who has made the stay a bit happier.

THE WORLD VISION OF CHRIST.

Christian Endeavor Topic for Oct. 13, 1935.

John 10:16; 12:32.

Daily Bible Readings:

Mon.—Universal salvation. John 3:15, 16.
Tues.—In all nations. Matthew 24:14.
Wed.—Every tongue. Phil. 2:5-11.
Thurs.—A wide field. Matt. 13:38.
Fri.—In Jesus' Name. Luke 24:47.
Sat.—The great commission. Matt. 28:19.

Is the vision of Jesus far-reaching? How many nations and countries does it include? Is He as interested in the problems that confront the Chinese nation as He is in the situations in which American young people find themselves today? Alcohol, Peace, Race Relations, the Economic Order, Leisure Time, Building a New Home, a New Person, a New Church, a New Community, a New Nation, a New World are causing concern among the youth of America. Are other nations of the world interested in these subjects and others similar to these? Do they have problems which we can help them solve? Is our vision as broad as the vision of Jesus. If not, are we educating ourselves to reach that point?

Walt Whitman has given us the following bit of verse for meditation:

"This moment yearning and thoughtful sitting alone,
It seems to me there are other men in other lands yearning and thoughtful,
It seems to me I can look over and behold them in Germany, Italy, France, Spain,
Or far, far away, in China, or in Russia, or Japan, talking other dialects,
And it seems to me if I could know these men I should become attached to them as I do men in my own lands,
Oh, I know we should be brethren and lovers,
I know I should be happy with them."

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

ISAIAH PORTRAYS THE SUFFERING SERVANT.

Lesson I—October 6, 1935.

Golden Text: "With his stripes are we healed." —Isaiah 19:17-37.

Lesson: Isaiah 52:13—53:12; John 19:17-37.

Isaiah sets forth in beautiful and in pictoral language the character and the work of the Suffering Servant. There is much division of opinion as to what or whom the Suffering Servant is. Some say it was Israel as a nation. Others say that it was an inner circle, a select group within the nation. Others say it was Christ. There is a sense in which every one of these interpretations is true, but it is significant that in the story of Philip and the Ethiopian, Philip "begins at this very Scripture and preaches to the Ethiopian that it was fulfilled in Christ. (Acts 8:26-40.) We shall so consider it in these notes. And I shall follow the outline suggested by Dr. Snowden in presenting four aspects of the Servant's person and work.

The Despised Servant.

"He came unto his own, and his own received him not"—thus does John in the beginning of his gospel bear out the truth of the prophecy of Isaiah. Even his own brethren and his own townsmen did not receive him. And his nation, as a nation rejected—and still rejected him. By many Christ was despised, regarded as unlovely, unappreciated, rejected, and as far as possible, ignored. It is true today. There are many who do not see in him any beauty, who despise him, who reject him, who do not appreciate him, and who, as far as it is possible, ignore Him. Let no one think that if Christ were to come in the flesh today he would be universally acclaimed and honored. In a real sense he is still the Despised Servant.

The Suffering Servant.

"He was a 'man of sorrows' "—not for his own sins, not in the sense that he was gloomy, but a man of sorrows because he bore on his heart the sorrows and the sins of humanity. "Our griefs" "our sorrows," "our transgressions," "our iniquities," "our peace," and "with his stripes we are healed,"—thus reads the prophecy which became a record. There is a great mystery about the Cross of Christ, but through the centuries, Christians have felt that Christ suffered for us, the just for the unjust, and that that suffering had vicarious power. Through suffering, the Captain of our salvation was made perfect. The Cross was a revelation of what is always going on in the heart of God and in Christ because of the sins and the sorrows of the world. His enemies taunted him on the cross with the cruel taunt: "He saved others, himself He cannot save." It was one of God's eternal truths, uttered blasphemously. It was just because he suffered and could not save himself, or rather would not save himself, that he saved us. By his suffering he atoned for our sins and opened the way for divine forgiveness and peace.

The Humble Servant.

"Let this mind be in you which was in Christ Jesus . . . who humbled himself"—thus writes Paul. As he wrote it he must have thought of this immortal prophecy from Isaiah and of its literal fulfilment in the life of Jesus. How humble, self-effacing, patient, gentle, self-restrained he was. His silence before Pilate and his enemies was majestic, magnificent. "He opened not his mouth," not because there was no provocation —one wonders how he did keep silent—but because of strength of soul and bigness of heart.

The world needs people who know how to keep silent. There are so many loud-mouthed, blatant folks. And there are so many complainers. How we need great souls who are quiet and humble and are strong in the Lord and in the power of His might.

The Victorious Servant.

"He shall see the travail of his soul and be satisfied; Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong,"—these are poetic words expressing the solid truth that this Suffering Servant of Jehovah would be victorious. It was because he humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross that God highly exalted him and gave him a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow and every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God. The seeming tragedy of the cross was really a triumph. Jesus Christ is even now reigning with a depth and sweep of power that no sword or pen or human wisdom or greatness could ever attain, and He shall yet be crowned Lord of all.

THE YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

How do you suppose Jesus would vote in the Peace Plebiscite which will be taken next month? Will your vote be in keeping with His teachings, or do you think there is a better way for our nation and for the world? Is war the way to peace and prosperity when the youth—the future of the nations—is sent out for targets.

How about our American movies? Have they helped strengthen the efforts of our missionaries to other lands, or have they helped tear down some things which these missionaries have given their lives to see established? If you can do so, have a missionary, a Japanese or Chinese student tell your group about the harm done in the Orient by American movies. Are you supporting high type movies?

Jesus would not like seeing the young men and women of America lose the real joy of life by drinking alcohol. Neither would he like this condition in any other land. He is anxious that the young people of the world live an abundant life. Do young people in every land drink?

The above Bible readings will give interesting light on the topic for this evening's discussion.

You will, of course, do quite a bit of studying in preparation for this meeting, and you ought to be led to interesting discoveries.

watching late with Thee,
Or dreaming in the dawnlight, or storming heaven's gates,
Make me a saint by getting meals, and washing clean the plates.
Although I must have Martha's hands,
I have a Mary mind,
And when I black the boots and shoes,
Thy sandals, Lord, I find;
I think of how they trod the earth
what time I scrub the floor;
Accept this meditation, Lord—I haven't time for more:
Warm all the kitchen with Thy love,
and light it with Thy peace,
Forgive me all my worrying, and make all grumbling cease;
Thou who didst love to give men food,
in room or by the sea,
Accept this service that I do—I do it unto Thee!"

TUESDAY.

"NIGHT AND LIGHT."

"The light of the body is the eye; if therefore thing eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light.

"But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness."—Matt. 6:22, 23.

LIGHT.

"The night has a thousand eyes
The day but one;
Yet the light of the bright world dies
With the dying sun.

"The mind has a thousand eyes
And the heart has but one;
Yet the light of a whole life dies
When its love is done."
—Francis William Bourdillon.

Prayer—Dear Lord, darkness and light reigns over us, and we could not see nor survive but for Thee. We look to Thee for that light that saves and perfects midst all that is dark—Jesus—only. In His name we ask it.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"THE JUNK BOX."

"I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day."—II Tim. 1:12.

"My father often used to say:
'My boy don't throw a thing away,
You'll find a use for it some day.'

"So in a box he stored up things,
Bent nails, old washers, pipes and rings,
And bolts and nuts and rusty springs.

"Despite each blemish and each flaw,
Some use for everything he saw;
With things material, this was law.

"And often when he'd work to do,
He searched the junk box thru and thru
And found old stuff as good as new.

"And I have often thought since then
That father did the same with men;
He knew he'd need their help again.

"It seems to me he understood
That men as well as iron and wood
May broken be and still be good.

"Despite the vices he'd display
He never threw a man away,
But kept him for another day.

"A human junk box is this earth
And into it we're tossed at birth
To wait the day we'll be of worth..

"Though bent and twisted, weak of will
And full of flaws and lacking skill
Some service each can render still."
—Edgar A. Guest.

Prayer—Dear Lord, preserve our going out and our coming in day by day. As little as we may be worth, we seek Thy precious promises with which to challenge the day. Make then our daily purpose in accordance with Thy will, and help us to walk in the consciousness of doing our Father's business. In His name we ask it.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"INNER BEAUTY."

"Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone while he talked with Him."—Ex. 34:29.

As a man thinks so is he. Prayer, communion with God, humility, love, result in an inner beauty that shines unconsciously.

"Man knows a beauty he cannot express,—
Words to fit it he will never find;
It stands alone in its sheer loveliness—
The still sad beauty of the soul and mind;
Deep in most hearts this lovely thing takes root,
One can know its magic without fear;
Sometimes it's heard in notes from out a flute—
Some see its wondrous image in a tear.
It's fashioned of a strange and flimsy stuff,
Like starlight, and the world's plaintive
call;
That we should even sense it is enough,—
To understand would surely blind us all."
—C. W. B. Lane.

Prayer—Dear Lord today we seek the lesson of spiritual loveliness. Forbid that we shall grow self-conscious in virtue and lose its glow.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"LEISURE."

"Consider the lillies of the field how they grow, they toil not neither do they spin; and yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."—Matt. 6:28, 29.

All through life God gives us a secret ministry through leisure and rest. Living under the pressure that most of us do, quiet and rest is both necessary and welcomed. And it is a pity for anyone to have his deserved leisure and rest and not reap the God-given benefit of it. It is believed that man shall give an account of his leisure as well as his work.

"What is this life if, full of care,
We have no time to stand and stare.
No time to stand beneath the boughs
And stare as long as sheep or cows.
No time to see, when woods we pass,
Where squirrels hide their nuts in grass.
No time to see, in broad daylight,
Streams full of stars, like skies at night.
No time to turn at beauty's glance,
And watch her feet, how they can dance.
No time to wait till her mouth can
Enrich that smile her eyes began.
A poor life this if, full of care,
We have not time to stand and stare."
—William Henry Davies.

Prayer—Our Father, help us to check our lives over each day and ask how we stand with Thee in the use of our time, and to mend our ways to Thy will.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"THE LORD'S CHALLENGE."

"Testify against me."—Micah 6:1-5.

The Lord through Micah bids His people bear witness against Him, if He has wronged them in any way. The challenge still holds good, and may well be repeated to all the children of men.

Who can rightly find fault with the All-Good? What wrong can be traced to Infinite Beneficence? How could the earth and the universe be better framed?

And when, above all, we remember the blessed sacrifice of God's Son on the cross, His death for our salvation, what critic's tongue does not fail him for shame, what fault-finding does not die away in gratitude?

Prayer—For Thou, O God, are endlessly good. Thy mercies began with the beginning of time and Thy love has no failure. May our love respond to it ceaselessly.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

"WHEN IT STORMS, SLEEP."

"The boat was covered with the waves; but He was asleep."—Matt. 8:23-27.

What mattered the waves to the Creator of the sea? What harm could the storm do to Him whose hand governed the tempest? The frail craft might be whelmed in the waters, but Jesus slept on.

His is an example for us who are no creators, who have no control over the vast forces of the universe. For we are in league with the Controller of these forces, of all force. Our arm can move the arm that moves the worlds.

How pitiful are our fears, having vital touch with this vast power! Every worry is a proof of our disbelief. Every anxiety denies the reality of our Christianity.

Prayer—We fear because we have so little faith. Lord, give us a great faith!—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

"No man can truly say
That Jesus is the Lord,
Unless Thou take the veil away
And breathe the living word;
Then, only then, we feel
Our interest in his blood,
And cry with joy unspeakable,
'Thou art my Lord, my God.' "

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D., Pastor

JAMES, A SERVANT OF GOD.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"James, a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ."—James 1:1.

We are inviting your attention to the study of the book of James. But before we take up the actual study of it let us study its author. Also let us bear in mind that we believe the Word of God, accept it as our rule of faith, and believe God will bless those who devoutly and carefully study it. Therefore let us carefully read and study together that we may have His blessings both in our personal lives, and in our mutual service. "Thy word have I hid in mine heart that I might not sin against Thee." Yes, let us hide the word of God in our hearts that we may not sin against Him. Paul enjoined Timothy to "Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." We live in as stirring times, when it is just as necessary, and just as noble to keep this self-same counsel for ourselves.

There are at least four James in the New Testament. Some of them are very familiar to us. Two of them are disciples, namely, James, the son of Zebedee, and James, the son of Alphaeus. One of them is a brother of the apostle Judas (not Iscariot). And then there is James, the Lord's brother. It is that James who is the author of the book we are to study. Let us become well acquainted with him.

In that passage which tells of Jesus' preaching in Nazareth (Matt. 13:55) we find the name of James: "Is not this the carpenter's son? Is not his mother called Mary? and his brethren, James, and Joses, and Simon, and Judas? And his sisters are they not all with us?" There you look on the world's most famous family circle: Mary and Joseph, Jesus, and his brothers and sisters. How human, and how near it all seems. How beautiful the glimpses we have of that family! How gracious of our heavenly Father to permit His Son to be one of us, and through Him to redeem us into a fellowship with Himself and with His own people everywhere. Jesus and James were boys together. James, who writes our epistle for us had memories beautiful about his elder brother. Into his little crib the boy Jesus had peeped, his little feet the boy Jesus had helped to start to walk, his little hands the boy Jesus had lifted up. He had learned to say the words Jesus said, to go the places Jesus went, and to hear the lessons which were taught by Mary to Jesus. Together they had listened many an hour to the stories of Israel's sons, together they had helped to take care of still younger brother and sisters, together they had gone to the carpenter's shop. And together as boys they had often talked together. Probably Jesus had spoken of the urges within his soul, and they had peeped forth as dreams too beautiful, or too awful to ever come true. Jesus and James, they loved each other. And in later years James was going to try to keep Jesus out of danger. "While he yet talked with the people, behold, his mother and his brethren stood without, desiring to speak with him." Matt. 12:46. "Then came to him his mother and his brethren, and could not come at him for the press." Luke 8:19. "They went out to lay hold of him for they said, He is beside himself." Mark 3:21-31.

But Jesus was too close, too human for the brother James to believe it possible that his own brother was the Messiah. He did believe in Jesus, and loved him as a blood brother, but he did not believe on him and worship him as Lord and Saviour. His time had not come. Mary pondered the messages of the Holy Spirit in her own heart, but James' eyes had not been opened as yet to the tremendous truth of his Messiahship. "Neither did his brethren believe on him." John 7:5. They could not realize how rare were their privileges, nor how great were their blessings. And what a parable of life that is! We look far away for blessings which are right at our own hands. We look off yonder for God, when behold, he is very near,—"nearer than hands and feet." We think tomorrow's blessings may be adequate, not realizing that "today is the day of salvation," and present blessings are too great and good for description! "We look before, and after, and pine for what is not."

And so while James had many and exceeding great privileges and blessings yet on account of the dimness of his apprehension he missed many wonderful moments he might have had with Jesus. And a touch of inner pain there may be in the words of Jesus: "A prophet is not without honor, but in his own country, and among his own kin, and in his own house." Mark 6:4. James left it for Andrew to say: "We have found the Messiah!" He left it for Peter to say: "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God!" He left it for Thomas to say: "Let us also go that we may die with him." He left it to John to lay his head upon his bosom, and to be termed his beloved disciple. He missed the opportunity of being with him on the mount of Transfiguration, or in the upper room at the establishment of the Lord's supper, or at the gate of Gethsemane. He did not hear him say to the waves: "Be still," nor "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." You and I miss many blessings by our unbelief, and by not being where we ought to be with Jesus.

However, Jesus had a great work for his brother James to do. Therefore, after his resurrection he made an especial appearance to him. "After that he was seen of James; and then of all the apostles." I Cor.. 15:7. What a conversation they must have had together! Jesus, the resurrected, and James his brother. At any rate after that we find the "brethren of the Lord" companying with those that believed on Jesus. "These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the women, and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren." Acts 1:14. And from the very first organization of the church in Jerusalem James appears as its head. Acts 12:17. How natural that was, for the disciples, now apostles, were sent abroad with the Lord's last command: "Go ye into all the world and make disciples of every creature." James, the brother of the Lord, was left in Jerusalem, a fine, judicious, able anchor of the faith to keep the new Church on an even keel. Back to him came the complaints, the councils, and the courts for his final decisions. He filled a mighty place, and did honor to the unique opportunities of birth, rearing and family relationship which had been his.

What a pleasure it is to see one who has had such enobling opportunities making good with them. If God has given you opportunities he will require returns on them. Has he given you a good home, loving parents, and blessings of life richly to enjoy? Then He will expect you to make good with them. One of the most discour-

Christian Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON. Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

The cool October mornings are here with a chill in the air, and as the mornings come and go one by one the air will doubtless become colder and the little children here will be pleading for shoes and sweaters to keep them comfortable.

This season of the year is our most expensive season. The winter shoes, clothing of all kinds to buy to keep them comfortable. Fertilizer to buy for our fall crops of oats, wheat and vetch. Seed to buy for these crops. It all calls for money. Nearly one hundred children to call for books and pencil tablets and other school supplies. Don't you want to have our task for the next three months? This year has been hard on us as the prices of many things we have to buy have been high and our income has been small. The two will not balance. That is the reason the silver color has gathered so fast on the side of the writer's head (not age). Then, too, we have been flooded with applications to take children. Many of them very worthy and needy and I only wish the orphanage had friends to answer the call and bid them come.

By a vote of the Southern Convention, October, November and December are set apart for special activities in behalf of the orphanage and all the churches and Sunday schools are expected to rally to its support. We are not half way to our goal. Only three months to reach it. Let every Sunday school take on a renewed interest and put a little more pep in your offerings and see if the offerings cannot be increased. If every pastor, Sunday school superintendent, every teacher and every scholar will be a booster for the orphanage for the next three months, we will reach our goal. Be a booster for the Orphanage.

aging things at all is to see boys and girls, and men and women, with great opportunities remain perfectly blind to their obligations, and unaware of the joy of using their talents. But what an inspiration to see folks who do have real opportunities like James, or Paul, or Lydia, or Timothy, use them, and bless the world with their lives. What a joy it must have been to Mary, the mother of Jesus and James, to see James heading up the church which Jesus gave his life to found, and to redeem.

While thus serving James found it his duty to write a general epistle to the fellow-Christians throughout Jerusalem, and Judea, and the whole Gentile world to comfort, strengthen, and help them bear the burdens imposed upon the growing church. How interesting to see just what James, the brother of the Lord, will say! How eagerly we shall turn to the study of it in subsequent hours.

His is the first book of the New Testament chronologically speaking. No Mark, no Matthew, nor epistles of Paul as examples to go by. James is setting the pace. How free of James it is! How full of religion, practical, pure, and undefiled! There is no fan-fare of family life, no boast of his relationship to the human Jesus. No holier-than-thou preachments. It is an epistle designed to strengthen tempted, persecuted, and untested Christian, and to that purpose he persistently sticks. May we thank God for James, and may we turn to his writings with eagerness to feed upon his counsels. And may we learn to serve in our place even as he served in his.

A false sense of national honor causes war. Theodore Roosevelt said that damage to our cities would be nothing compared to the humiliation every American should feel if America had to submit to an injury without avenging it. That doctrine leads to war—L. Albertson.

GENERAL COUNCIL NEWS.

Laud had directed all the clergy in England to read it in their churches; many of the Puritan ministers refused, incurring thereby his ill will and harsh treatment.

Eight churches were founded in Connecticut by Puritans who migrated before November, 1640, when in London assembled the Long Parliament which eventually sent Archbishop Laud and King Charles to the execution block.

But the strict Sabbath traditions of quiet, rest and worship would not have persisted in Connecticut history if they had merely been instituted by persecuted ministers in reaction to King Charles' sporting interests. The early Connecticut Sabbath as a social institution served the welfare of the community and the individual. New settlements in a wilderness cannot be made permanent with ease. Enemies lurked in the Indians, the Dutch and the French. The basic needs of food, shelter and warmth could only be secured by the hardest manual labor. Twelve, fourteen and sixteen hours or more was demanded in sever daily toil. For two centuries idlers, vagrants, wastrels and wantons were a perilous social danger. Neither could children be suffered to have such examples. It is a mistake to consider that the clergy were mainly responsible for the enforcement of Sabbath observance. Settlers who were working arduously to lay the foundations for a new commonwealth wanted Sabbath peace, quiet and rest and a decorous weekly gathering at the Meeting House for worship and visiting.

In the last century there have been many great changes. Leisure, new home comforts, auto travel have brought a revision of many social customs. Sunday no longer follows six days crowded with hours of unremitting labor. People now do not demand first of all quiet and rest. The change is reflected in the present programs of the churches. Today it is customary to speak of Sunday "activities" and many people are happy because their church makes it possible for Sunday to become for them the busiest day of the week. Formal religious education, forums, young people's clubs, discussion groups and committee meetings, Sunday teas and suppers, parish visitations have been introduced. But the change has not brought irreverance. In the architecture of the edifices, the beauty of the music, the completeness of the liturgy, the services have been enriched. With a diversity of creeds, the churches today are leading people in worship as sincere and as aspiring as that of the Puritan founders.

OUR NATIONAL GOLF CHAMPION.

Dr. William W. Leete who will be 81 on October 11th, won this month for the sixth successive year the championship in Class A of the United States senior golf tournament at Rye, N. Y. The "seniors" are 55 and over and Class A is for those 75 and over. Dr. Leete's total score for the 36 holes played was 189.

Dr. Leete has three daughters and three sons, one the Rev. William R. Leete, American Board missionary at Kuling, China. His first five championship cups were given to his three daughters and to two daughters-in-law. Now his last daughter-in-law has received her cup. Dr. Leete retired in 1930 and lives in New Haven, Conn. He served in pastorates thirty-one years, was New England field secretary of the Church Building Society twelve years and editorial and field secretary of the Extension Boards five years. He is a high authority on church architecture.

Not to impart a ready-made religion, solidified into an institution or a creed, but to share in a quest for the good life, whose personal experience is enriched, whose social adjustments are set right, whose appreciation of values is deepened—that is the high privilege of the leader in religious education. What folly to run about seeking fields for leadership, when the most rewarding of all fields is just at hand!—A. Gertrude Earle, in "The Christian Leader."

OBITUARIES

DANIEL.

Addie Ruth Daniel, daughter of Bro. and Sister Alfred Daniel of our Hebron Church, was born September 24, 1934 and died Sept. 8, 1935, aged eleven months and sixteen days. Seldom have I seen parents more deeply grieved over the death of a member of the family, yet they expressed themselves as confident that she was awaiting them in the home of the Father.

Moy God bless, comfort and keep the sorrowing faithful to life's duties and at last crown them with heavenly righteousness.

C. E. NEWMAN.

WEST.

On September 13, 1935, Brother Roland M. West was called by God and left us for the great beyond and we shall not again have him with us in person but we shall not forget him.

He was a Christian gentleman of high character. He gave to his Church and Sunday School generously of his means and of his time. He worked to help build his Church and Sunday School into better and more efficient organizations. For many years he served in various capacities of the Church, Sunday School and Men's United Bible Class. We, the present officers and members of the Church, Sunday School and Men's Bible Class have lost a friend and faithful coworker and we wish to have recorded in the records of the Men's United Bible Class, given to the Christian Sun for publication and sent to his family an expression of our esteem for him and of our sincere sympathy for them.

Therefore, be it resolved:

That in the passing of brother Roland M. West, this Church, Sunday School and Bible Class have lost a valuable member, a loyal friend, and a good man. To his friends and fellow-workers we pledge our support in carrying on those things for which he worked while with us and to his family we extend our heartfelt sympathy and our desire to be of any service to them which they may feel we can be.

The foregoing resolution adopted by the United Mens Bible Class of the First Christian Church, Norfolk, this 21st day of September, 1935.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

"In Disregard of Obligations."—

Such is the unanimous opinion of the League Council respecting the offensive launched by Mussolini against Ethiopia. Meantime fighting goes on and the numbers of dead continue to increase. The question now is, "Can Italy defy the League." The attitude taken by the American government will have much to do with the answer.

The Coal Strike.—

Possibly the shortest coal mine strike on record ended last week, when on Tuesday digging was resumed in the coal fields. The agreement reached is scheduled to continue to April 1, 1937. However there is yet quite a bit of red tape to be ironed out in the different coal fields. Says Business Week, "As usual, the miners struck for a lot and got something—probably about what they expected. The operators wore the wage demand down from 15c to 9c and dodged the shorter day. So everybody is pleased—if you forget the ultimate consumer who must begin to pass out a little more for his coal."

What About German Protestantism?—

Two years ago—in September, 1933—Dr. Ludwig Mueller was consecrated as Reichsbishop of the Nazi German Christian Church, with millions of followers and sympathizers backing him. Today there is almost complete collapse of the Nazi Christian movement, "and his Reich Church Administration," according to the New York Times, is "wholly without supporters and devoid of authority." Even the bishop himself has "become the subject of hundreds of quips and jokes that the Nazis themselves appear to relish as much as anyone." German Protestantism is rapidly nearing a crisis, and only recently has the Third Synod of the Prussian Confessional Church rejected the olive branch tardily offered by the Nazi Government. Protest was made against the exclusion of Christian children of Jewish blood from Christian schools, it was demanded that exiled Protestant pastors be allowed to return to their pulpits, complaint was made against persecution of laymen for membership in the Confessional Church, and opposition to turning church funds over to the Government Church Administration was voiced. Evidently independent Protestantism is not entirely dead in Germany.

The Death Ray Is Really Here!—

One wonders what the insects will do about it, for the "death ray" has come to the insect world. In the fog-shrouded artichoke fields of central California, strange blue lights may be seen, but few of the puzzled passersby realize that these lights mark the beginning of a revolution in the methods of fighting insect pests. The government has become increasingly strict, and rightly so, regarding the use of poison sprays on fruits and vegetables and this has forced experiments in other fields of endeavor. The result is that Prof. W. B. Herms, with his assistant, J. K. Ellsworth, of the Department of Entomology of the University of California, has found by experimentation that each kind of pest has a favorite color—each flying insect likes best one peculiar shade and intensity of light. The device which is now being used in the try-out of actual service consists of a wire cage some eight inches in diameter, the alternate wires of which are connected to an electric transformer with sufficient voltage to electrocut the insects. A lumnescent tube of the proper color for that particular pest is suspended within the cage, and insects coming in contact with the wires as they attempt to reach the light pay the supreme penalty. One light to an acre is said to reduce the destruction caused by insects from 25 per cent of the crop to 3 per cent. The cost of installation is approximately $30, and the life of the device is estimated as ten years. Grape growers estimate the cost of spraying to run anywhere from $3 to $35 an acre, and chemicals have often impaired the quality of their fruit. They are expecting to use the lights during the coming season.

Four Hundredth Anniversary of English Bible.—

Four hundred years ago this month—to be exact, on October 4th—there was finished the printing of the first complete English Bible. "I begyne to taste of Holy Scrypyures," wrote Miles Coverdale to a friend in about the year 1527, and eight years later witnessed the completion of the Bible which he had translated "out of Douche (or German) and Latyn into Englishe." The story of the translation of the early English Bible is written in blood. Caedman and the Venerable Bede were among the first to attempt to give their people the Bible in their own language. Later Wyclif and then Tyndale gave their lives to the cause. After his death Wyclif's bones were exhumed and burned, while Tyndale was strangled and his body burned for the offense of attempting to make it possible that the lowliest layman might know the Scriptures as well as the priest. Tyndale gave the English the New Testament in 1525, but it remained for Coverdale to produce the first complete English Bible. This translator is said to have had an excellent knowledge of Latin and German, but he acknowledged that he knew little French and was less equipped in Greek and Hebrew than was William Tyndale. Commenting in "The evolution of the English Bible" on Coverdale and his Bible, H. W. Hoare says: "Diffident and retiring in disposition, of delicate susceptibility, literary dexterity and resource, with a wonderful ear for cadence and rhythm, it is to Coverdale we owe so much of the beautiful music which seems to well up out of the perennial springs of our Authorized Version." Coverdale's translation was probably done in Antwerp, and he tells us that he made full use of the five versions then extant, none of which copies are known to exist in complete form. Of Coverdale's life we know but little. He was born about 1488 and died in 1569, in peace, after many adventures, including exile.

The President's Letter to the Clergy.—

Just before starting on his trip westward, a letter was sent out from Washington purporting to be a personal letter from the President to the clergy of the United States. This letter has evoked much criticism as well as praise, both from clergymen and the press. Those who received copies are asked to let the President know how, in their opinion, the "Government can better serve our people." Replies and comments are interesting. Some consider the letter only an invitation to jump on the 1936 band wagon. Others, like the Rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Eastchester, New York, Rev. W. H. Weigle, Jr., think there is "something very sincere behind the letter —something we don't find in public office," and says that it "breathes the spirit of the Galilean hills." Another New York minister, Dr. William Koepchen, Evangelical Lutheran, hopes to "see the day in the far distant future when this program of our President will be carried out." The Secretary of the Philadelphia Federation of Churches, Dr. E. E. Palmquist, on the other hand, is quoted as saying: "If you had half the understanding of the people generally . . . I have, you would hang your head in shame at what you have done to them. You and your Administration have utterly ruined them . . . with relief, and doles, and pensions. . . ." From our own constituency, speaks Rev. A. Z. Conrad of Boston: "We are paying the price of . . . folly in the increased cost of everything we need. . . ." The press is somewhat divided, but there is the general consensus of opinion that it was an attempt to "sound out the feeling of those who, by virtue of their calling, are supposed to represent best the disinterested opinion of their communities." Another paper thinks it is "his first admission weakness." Another says: "He does well to seek the aid and counsel of these men . . . (who are naturally) anxious that national legislation should be shaped in the spirit of justice and righteousness." From a contemporary of the religious press comes the question as to why the ministers were not consulted "about the repeal of prohibition." And on top of all this it is revealed that the letter was not original with the President, but is an almost word for word copy of the letter sent out by Governor LaFollette, of Wisconsin, last March. If the object of sending this letter to the clergy was to flatter them, much of its effect will be lost because of its lack of originality.

NOTES-PERSONALS

News from the Churches.

Brother J. Edward Branch, secretary, Mt. Hermon Church, Garner, N. C., under recent date, writes: "We have had a wonderful revival under the preaching and leadership of our dear, good pastor, Rev. J. S. Carden."

Rev. C. Carl Dollar of Phoenix, Ala., whose readiness to accept a pastorate was recently noted in The Sun, writes under date of October 5th that an opportunity for another year's study has opened, and he is now at Vanderbilt studying for his Master of Arts degree. His address is now 458 Kissam Hall, Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn.

Rev. M. T. Sorrell, Pastor, Danville, Va., under recent date, writes: "We had our high record Sunday, September 29th, for our Sunday School. Present in the school, 507; 121 in Adult Department; Young People's Department, 124; Junior and Intermediate, 106; Beginners, 128; Sunday school staff, 28." Congratulations to Pastor Sorrell and to his wide-awake Sunday school.

Rev. John G. Truitt, Pastor, Christian Church, Suffolk, Va., begins Wednesday of the present week a ten days' series of evangelistic meetings with First Christian Church, Burlington, N. C., Dr. Jas. H. Lightbourne, Pastor. Many Elon College people, as well as Burlington people, will enjoy these meetings, since Dr. Truitt is so well known and esteemed as one of our boys coming back home.

There has recently fallen into the hands of The Sun's editor the printed proceedings of the 67th Annual Session of the North Carolina Christian Conference (Colored). These Minutes reveal the fact that when the Conference met at Sudan, Va., October 16, 1934, thirty-nine churches reported with a total membership of 3,107, which churches had raised for all purposes the past year, $5,960.-09. The 68th Annual Session of the Conference is to be held with Roanoke Chapel Christian Church, Wise, N. C., Tuesday, after the second Sunday in October, 1935. Rev. J. A. Henderson, former president of our Franklinton Christian College, is president of the Conference. This is only one of the several conferences of our colored constituency in North Carolina and Virginia.

Sunday, October 6th, ended the active pastorate of Dr. C. H. Rowland with our First Christian Church, Greensboro, after a happy, devoted and fruitful pastorate of more than eleven years. Of the event the Greensboro Daily News, Saturday, the 5th, had this to say: "Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., will close his active pastorate of the First Christian Church after many years of service Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, and the following Sunday, Rev. W. E. Wisseman, the new pastor elected a few weeks ago, will take up his work with the church. Dr. Rowland will be pastor emeritus. Sunday evening at 7:30 o'clock Rev. A. L. Granger, student of Elon College who has been relieving Dr. Rowland at the Sunday evening services during the summer months, will preach again. The Sunday school is observing Rally day Sunday morning. Rev. Mr. Wisseman, who has been pastor of a Methodist church at Schulenberg, Texas, will arrive here during the coming week with Mrs. Wisseman and their two children. Mrs. Wisseman was before marriage Miss Graham Rowland. She is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Rowland."

HAW RIVER.

Sunday, September 15th, marked the closing night of our revival at Haw River. The meetings were well attended and a fine spirit of co-operation between the various denominations of the village prevailed. We had helping us, Evangelist Carl E. Gaddy, Greensboro, N. C. Brother Gaddy preached a straight gospel message and his efforts were rewarded by several conversions and many rededications. We had one addition to the church and a real spiritual awakening among the church members. J. E. Neese.

UNION CHURCH.

On the Fourth Sunday in September, we began a revival meeting at Union which continued during the week through Friday. There was good attendance, marked attention and interest during the entire meeting.

Two services were held on Sunday—morning and afternoon, with dinner on the ground and at 7:30 in the evening during the week.

Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, D. D., pastor of the Durham Christian Church was with us and did the preaching. His sermons were earnest, practical, forceful messages. The church was pleased with him and his helpful messages and we believe the church was strengthened in its faith, hope and love. We hope the good seed sown will bear much good in the deepening of spiritual life in the winning of souls to Jesus Christ.

MEETING OF MINISTERS AND LAYMEN.

The Fifth Sunday Conference of the ministers and laymen of the East Alabama Association was held in the Roanoke Church on September 29th.

Although many of the churches were not represented and some of the ministers could not attend, a day of helpful activities was enjoyed by quite a congregation.

Some of the delegates arrived in time to attend the regular Sunday school classes. After Sunday school and a brief recess the group re-assembled to hear three very helpful and inspiring messages.

Prof. L. L. James, Superintendent of the Roanoke schools, discussed the topic, "Loyalty to the Local Church and Community and to the Larger Program." The fact was brought out in his speech that the churches of Roanoke enjoy an unusually sincere fellowship one with another. His talk, as well as the others of the day, were especially appropriate for the day, since the churches of Roanoke were just launching Church Loyalty Month.

Mr. J. J. Carter, of the Wadley church, made some remarks on the subject of encouraging people —especially children and youth—in Christian living. Bro. Carter always adds greatly to our conferences and associations by his suggestions.

Rev. G. H. Veazey gave the main message of the morning, on the subject: "The Challenge of the World to the Church."

Lunch was served in the basement of the church by the ladies of the church.

In the afternoon devotionals were conducted by Rev. H. M. Graw. Then came the discussion of the topic "Responsibility of the Church to the Local Community, Spiritually, Socially, Educationally, and Financially." The respective divisions of the topic were discussed by Rev. G. D. Hunt, Rev. A. R. Van Cleave, Mr. Eugene Causey, and Mr. Willie Stevens.

No meeting place for the December conference was decided upon. The place will be announced in The Christian Sun in ample time. It is very important that the people of the different churches of our Association watch for this announcement and be ready to send delegates to our next meeting. More of us should enjoy and profit by thees Fifth Sunday meetings.

FLORIDA CHURCHES.

Rev. W. J. Drew, of Marysville, Ohio, has begun his ministry at the Pilgrim Congregational Church, Pomona, Florida. Dr. Day was formerly pastor at Daytona Beach and his return to the state is welcomed.

* * *

Rev. A. Craig Bowdish, formerly of Babson Park Community Church in Florida, has begun his work as pastor of the church at North Miami. Mr. Bowdish at one time served this church as interim pastor and he and Mrs. Bowdish are being cordially welcomed back among old friends.

* * *

Mr. E. S. Burleigh of Tavares, Florida, died at his home there on September 19th. Mr. Burleigh had been a life-long member of the church and was for twenty-five years secretary of the South Florida Association, rendering an inestimable service to the Association and also to the Conference. For several years he was one of the trustees of Rollins College. He was highly honored and greatly beloved by those who knew him and his work in our fellowship was deeply appreciated. His funeral was conducted by Dr. Fred R. March, pastor of the Tavares church.

Has your church ordered copies of "Windows?" This is the Guest Book, so-called, for this year. Order cards were sent to all pastors and should be filled out at once and mailed either to the Conference or Convention office, or to the Commission on Missions, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York. This is one of the very best issues we have had,—full of interesting pictures and effective missionary information, and should be widely distributed in all our churches and widely used in missionary study groups.

There is steadily developing interest in the churches with regard to the Peace Plebiscite and it is hoped that it will be taken in every Congregational-Christian church in the country. The pastors of the churches have received full information about the Plebiscite and it is hoped that all are cultivating an interest in their churches and making plans for careful and thorough balloting some time about Armistice Day. Lay-members of the churches are urged to cooperate with the pastors in building up interest in the Peace Plebiscite and planning for it. Ballots and the necessary paraphernalia can be secured from the Mission Secretary, Elon College, N. C. This Plebiscite is being taken as a result of a vote passed at the General Council at Oberlin. England recently had such a Plebiscite in their whole country with a most remarkable result. May we as Christians and church members not make this an effective expression? What are our attitudes in the matter of war? E. C. G.

CORRECTION.

A clerical error caused the listing last week in Dr. L. E. Smith's article of the United Church, Lynchburg, Va., in two places thus dividing the total amount raised for the College. The Lynchburg Church is one of those which has raised its College Quota in full.

RECORD ATTENDANCE EXPECTED.

The Providence meeting is expected to be the largest Rally ever held in New England in the interests of home missions. It will mark the progress of 137 years of continuous organized home missionary activity beginning with the formation of the Connecticut Missionary Society, 1798.

In the present Congregational and Christian Boards are continued the first national educational and home missionary societies in America,—the American Education Society, founded 1816, and the American Home Missionary Society, founded 1826. Included also is the American Missionary Association, founded 1846, which pioneered in Negro education. In their early years these societies had interdenominational support and for a time were the recognized agencies of many Presbyterian and Reformed churches. For decades their annual meetings together with the annual meetings or conventions of the American Bible Society, the American Tract Society, the American Sunday School Union and the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions were all held the same week in May in New York City and were called the "May Anniversaries." Those were days before the later flood of immigration had changed New York from a Protestant to a Roman Catholic and Jewish city and the Anniversaries commanded great popular attention.

The Baptists were the first to have their own denominational agencies, organizing first the American Baptist Missionary Union and afterwards other American Baptist Societies. Many of the Baptist and other denominational societies or boards formed held their annual meetings with the May Anniversaries.

The first strictly Congregational national missionary agency was the American Congregational Union, formed at Albany, N. Y., 1853. The following year at Cincinnati, Ohio, the quadrennial gathering of the Christian churches took for its name, American Christian Convention. The Congregational union, to a considerable extent, prepared the way for the organization of the National Council at Oberlin, Ohio, in 1871 and the Union is now continued under a changed name as the Church Building Society and is a member of the Church Extension Boards division in the National Boards.

The youngest division in the National Boards is the Pension Boards which were begun as a committee of the National Council in 1886.

MODERATOR OF GENERAL COUNCIL SPEAKS.

Dr. William Horace Day, pastor of the United Church, Bridgeport, Conn., and president of the National Boards, and the Rev. James F. English, pastor of First Church, Manchester, N. H., and chairman of the New England Regional Committee, will be the joint presiding officers at Providence.

The opening address will be given Saturday morning by Dr. Jay T. Stocking, pastor of the First Church in Newton, Mass., and moderator of the General Council. He will speak on "Enduring Motives for Christian Missions."

Foreign Missions will be discussed in an address at the fellowship banquet Saturday evening by Dr. Fred Field Goodsell of Boston, Mass., executive vice-president of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

Social action will be the theme for addresses and open forum Sunday afternoon. Dr. Arthur E. Holt of Chicago Theological Seminary and chairman of the Council for Social Action will speak on "The Christian Religion and the New Social Order," and the Rev. Ray E. Phillips, American Board missionary at Johannesburg, S. Africa, will speak on "Social Action and Foreign Missions."

The historical setting of the meeting involving the banishment of Roger Williams from Salem, Mass., 1636, to Rhode Island where he founded Providence, will be recalled Sunday night when greetings from the "Providence Plantations" will be brought by President Clarence A Barbour of Brown University, Providence, the oldest Baptist educational institution in America.

GROWTH OF REGIONAL ORGANIZATION.

With the annual meeting of the American Board being held with the Mid-West Meeting at Grand Rapids, Michigan, October 22nd to 24th, the Regional Meeting there will be a foreign mission twin to the home mission rally at Providence. The main features of the Grand Rapids program were published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, September 19th.

The Mid-West Meeting will be the fourth and last of the regional gatherings in this "odd" year between the General Council meetings of 1934 and 1936. The Southeast Regional Meeting at Raleigh, N. C., April 30th to May 2nd, was the first and the Pacific Slope Meeting at Tacoma, June 26th to 28th, was the second.

These meetings in their autonomy are entirely regional and they have come into existence in a way that has been largely spontaneous since the Congregational missionary reorganization of 1926. In a systematic arrangement they take the place

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE SECRET OF CHURCH POWER.

Archbishop McNicholas of Cincinnati, speaking at the Eucharistic Congress in Cleveland, September 24th, as reported in the Baltimore Catholic Review, gave to his hearers and to the world, what he regarded as the real power of the Catholic Church. We quote:

"What is the secret power of the Catholic Church? What is the explanation of its extraordinary growth? Why are its churches crowded many times every Sunday, and why are Catholics so earnest, so willing, to make every possible sacrifice to be present at Mass? What power has drawn thousands from every section of our country to be present at Mass? What power has drawn thousands from every section of our country to this Congress? What is the inspiration of Catholic action?" Thus asked the Archbishop. He was putting to his people questions that are asked again and again not only of Catholic priests but of Protestant clergy as well. How often has this writer, as well as other ministers of the gospel, put to himself and to his congregation the question, "What is the secret power of the Church?" THE SUN's editor, in keeping with other pastors, has said again and again from the pulpit that people gather at the churches on Sunday not primarily to hear the preacher or enjoy the music, or to see one another, but in their hearts they were seeking to find, and to hear the voice of, Jesus Christ. It is related of the revered and the late lamented Dr. Hutton of Scotland and England that he had inscribed in plain letters on his pulpit, where he could see it always as he arose to preach: "Sir, we would see Jesus." Was not this the secret of this great preacher's life, viz: That he realized the people had come to church not to see or hear him, the preacher, but to see and hear Him, the blessed Redeemer and Saviour? Now hear Archbishop McNicholas' answer to his questions propounded above, as he declares, that for his church "the answer is to be found, not in the beauty of the church's architecture, not in the solemnity of its liturgy, not in the eloquence of its preachers, not in the authority of its prelates, not in the perfection of its organization, but in the simple fact that Christ dwells in the humblest chapel as well as in the most majestic cathedral, that He is offered in every Sacrifice of the Mass, wherever celebrated, that He is really consumed by those who approach His table. Catholics go to church because Christ is there. Catholics have come to this Congress because Christ is here."

And so this ardent and devout Catholic reveals to his audience just why both Catholics and Protestants really go to church, viz: They go because Christ is there.

The heart of the world is hungry today and the soul of man is athirst. How emphatically does the Church need today to declare again, with renewed emphasis and conviction, the words of our Saviour and Redeemer recorded in John 4:14: "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." Power, the secret power of the Church of the Living God today is in giving to a weary and uptorn world the Water of Life, even the very life of Him who said, "He that believeth on me shall never thirst."

OUR POSTMASTER-GENERAL PREACHES.

No doubt most CHRISTIAN SUN readers think of Hon. James A. Farley (whom they call "Big Jim") as a hilarious and rollicking politician, who, in addition to being a jolly official in President Roosevelt's cabinet, looks after his party's fences, and dispenses patronage to secure votes for his chief. Well, be that as it may, this man, like many others in public life, has a sane and sober trend in his mental make-up. Without holding any brief for the political set-up of his mental assets, we can say without reservation that he knows how to preach. Possibly his position as the widest distributor of patronage in the Government has given him the opportunity to feel the pulse of the nation and find the weaknesses of genus homo as few other men in public life. In these two paragraphs, reported from an address before the Eucharistic Congress in Cleveland recently, our Postmaster-General says something that is well worth our reading and thinking over. We quote:

"The world today is filled with unrest. The rulers of nations are seemingly wholly concerned with material things, the spread of imperialistic power, the acquisition of wealth and material property, and in some nations where they feel that religion is an obstacle to the fulfillment of this materialistic program, they are occupied with the very destruction of belief in God. With such a philosophy there is no peace, there can be no peace.

"Fortunately, the Founding Fathers of our great nation built here a city of God. From the beginning and throughout our history we have acknowledged the sovereignty of God, and with an abiding faith in Him, have adopted as our motto "In God is our trust." From this faith and trust in the Almighty there has flowed a proper realization and appreciation of the vital principles of religious freedom so necessary for the tranquility of the social order. Throughout our history as a nation we have given to the world a notable example of the meaning of religious freedom. We shall continue to do so.

"As our patriotic citizens, as Catholics who love our country as we love our very lives, we shall pray to God during this Congress for the peace that surpasseth all understanding, the peace of God. Most humbly, therefore, do we pray for peace, peace between neighbor and neighbor, peace between employer and employee, world peace between nation and nation."

With that conclusion and that spirit all good citizens of every religious and political persuasion may well join in this perturbed and chaotic time. Especially timely and needful is such preachment now that the world beholds with horror the beginning of another war that no man living can tell or foresee the end of.

KILLED.

North Carolina did its corporate killing Friday of last week. "An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth," and three lives for one, obtain in this commonwealth. When all was ready and the machinery in order, the grim, gruesome business was attended to in a few passing moments, and the state corporately had sent to their death three youths. Their combined ages hardly reached sixty, the youngest being "about eighteen," another twenty, the oldest twenty-two. So the state and this world of ours is through with them, and the expenses of their keep, execution and burial is possibly paid.

Guilty? Yes, the three unitedly had mauled to death an old man of seventy, an uncle of one of the boys and still a bootlegger, in order to rob him of $77.00. They had not seen the world ten miles from their remote mountain home, and they wanted to go places. The easiest and quickest way to their sordid minds was to kill a kinsman, regarded generally worthless, take the loot and clear out. So the old man is dead and the three boys also. They were ignorant, one of them admitting that he could not count the fingers on his own hand, and the others were unschooled, and so they killed their man and then their state killed them.

Somewhere in the good Book, and we are inclined to think also in the eternal verities, the undying words are written: "Thou shalt not kill." It is nowhere stated that this applies any more to an individual than to three million individuals living under the corporate name of a state. If the three poor, untutored, ignorant youths were guilty of killing one, then by the same token the state is guilty of killing three.

Nobody ever claimed that these boys had had a chance to grow up and be capable, competent, enlightened moralists and citizens. Madison County has remote areas, high mountains and deep valleys that divide and set apart. In one of these areas these boys spent their few brief years till the state had enough of them after feeding them awhile in the death cell and then got clear of them through the electric chair. It may be a happy riddance, but it is certainly not a happy line of thought to indulge in, and somehow one feels that the state, an enlightened, civilized, Christian state, hardly did for these boys the fair and fatherly part. No wonder our neighbor, the Greensboro Daily News, had this paragraph, as it reflected over the scene at the Capital last Friday:

"Somehow that disturbance along our spine which accompanied the reading of the story was more like the creep of horror than the tingle of pride."

Hardly can any of us contemplate this story with any sort of pride or pleasure. How long before the state will hear and heed the voice of eternity: "Thou shalt not kill?"

J. O. A.

WAR.

Once more the world is set on ear with the call of the bugle, the beat of drum and the roar of cannon, in battle. Italy, armed to the teeth and equipped with death engines, is stronger than Ethiopia in far-away Africa, and Italy wants Abyssinia. Hence Italy goes out to get what her greed desires. So far no nation on earth, outside these two warring nations, has declared that Italy is justified in this high-handed procedure. Without regard to right or privilege, justice or mercy, Italy has gone to take that which Italy wants, because Italy feels like she can do so. It is recalled that the late Will Rogers, world traveller and humorist, some years ago visited Ethiopia, and coming back gave to the world his wise-crack that some day soon Italy would be at war with Ethiopia, because it desired something that Ethiopia had. Instead of buying this something, it would get a pretext of fighting in war and, at a cost ten times the purchase price, would go and get what it wanted. The prophecy of Rogers is coming true earlier than was anticipated. And no living mortal can tell how soon the world will be plunged into another war. There are writers and close observers who are declaring that within a year the nations will be involved, being dragged or cajoled into taking sides in this unpardonable conflict. War must always be made plausible, and the sorry business of destruction must be made to seem patriotic before the nations plunge in, but this is often an easy and quick business, for the war spirit in the nations is always bristling for activity, battles, the roar and crash of death.

This is, indeed, a sorry spectacle, and one that should be viewed with such horror and loathsomeness that even the present belligerents should be stayed in their work of death. How long! Oh, how long! Before the Prince of Peace shall have His way in the world so that the nations shall learn war no more.

J. O. A.

IMPOSSIBLE ISOLATION.

"What concern is it of ours that Italy threatens Ethiopia?" No wise man can ask so foolish a question. Every student of world affairs knows that war anywhere is a threat to peace everywhere. War is like a pestilence and ignores national boundaries. Commerce is the life-blood of nations and war is the fever that inflames every artery of trade. It is practically true that isolation for any first-rate power is impossible.

And isolation is impossible in all the affairs of civilization. The church that says it will live its life apart and alone, ignoring the needs beyond its parish is as blind as the political isolationist. It is a central teaching of Jesus that His followers must have a world-wide vision. The Christian who opposes missions is no follower of Christ.

Take the world vision out of the New Testament and what is left? The church started as a group of palestinian Jews. If it had been a religion content to stay at home, all of Acts after chapter eight would disappear. All the missionary journeys of Paul would be omitted. The nine books which contain letters to the Romans, the Corinthians, the Galatians, the Ephesians, the Philippians, the Colossians, and the Thessalonians would be wiped out of the Bible. The final commission of our Lord to "Go into all the world and preach the Gospel to all the nations" would disappear. How little there would be left of the New Testament if foreign missions should be removed!

The whole history of the Church is a mistake if foreign missions is wrong. All that we Anglo-Saxons know about Christianity comes from foreign missionaries. We read the Bible in English, not in its original Hebrew and Greek, because of missionary translators. If Christianity had waited until Palestine was wholly Christian, as scoffers at missions suggest we should wait until America is Christian before going to the Orient, then the spread of Christianity into the Roman Empire and to the Germanic nations would never have happened.

But there is no valid distinction between missions at home and abroad. America must be made Christian, hence we have home missions. The world must be made Christian or no nation can survive. We live in a world which is one neighborhood. Christ or chaos is the only alternative. The only safety for humanity is a humanism that is Christian. The common enemies of the race are disease, race hatred, war, ignorance, poverty, and the selfishness which leads some to promote these evils for the sake of profit. A smug provincialism is no defense against these enemies of the race. The home and foreign missionary program of the Church is only intelligent, organized good will. The gospel of the kingdom is simply the good news that God is the Father of all mankind and that all men are therefore brothers.

THE PLEBISCITE ON ARMISTICE SUNDAY.

Each Congregational-Christian Church in the United States, under instruction of the General Council given at Oberlin in 1934, is invited to participate in a referendum upon the issues of war and peace.

Instruction as to methods of procedure will be sent each church by the Conference Committee on Social Action or the Mission Secretary, Elon College, N. C. It is to be hoped that Washington will not lag behind in its willingness to face these issues of war and peace and to express individual opinions on these most important matters.

REV. WILLIAM H. HAINER, D. D.

In the course of human experience, the call has come to Dr. Hainer to pass from activity here to the reward of a life well spent and a service faithfully rendered. He has gone on to meet his Master in the greater life beyond.

It has been my privilege, profit and pleasure to be associated with Dr. Hainer in the work of Irvington for more than nine years. Now that he has passed on, I shall miss his hearty hand clasp, his ready smile, the cheerful ring of his voice and the encouragement and sympathy which he was always so willing to give.

He walked among men, shared their life and gave unstintingly of his friendship. Like his Master, he lived, ate and drank among his fellowmen. People in all walks of life were glad to be counted among his friends.

The fact that he spent about forty-five years in the pastorate of one church, is evidence of the value of his work. He was never too tired to share the problems of his people nor too busy to pray at the bedside of the sick and suffering.

Out of his work as pastor of the First Christian Church of Irvington has sprung three other organizations, all of which are still living and rendering effective service to their communities. Over one of these I have the honor to serve as minister.

As a preacher, his eloquence and passion were the result of earnest and thorough preparation, a sincere and simple faith, and a genuine love for the gospel which he preached.

He has gone but his work lives on and will be of real help and inspiration to us who seek to follow in the way he has led.

RESURRECTION.

Pausing a moment ere the day was done,
While yet the world was scintillant with light,
I backward glanced. From valley, plain and height,
At intervals where my life path had run,
Rose cross on cross; and nailed upon each one
Was my dead self. And yet that gruesome sight
Lent sudden splendor to the falling night;
Showing the conquests that my soul had won.
Up to the rising stars I looked and cried,
"There is no death." For, year on year, re-born,
I wake to larger life, to poy more great.
So many times have I been crucified,
So often seen the resurrection morn,
I go triumphant, though new calvaries wait.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

TEMPTATION.

They taunt me with riches, dear Father,
They say that the world gives much,
But I count Thy blessings, dear Father,
And their gold I cannot touch.
They promise me fame, dear Jesus,
Great fame and all worldly hearts,
But I think of Thy needs, dear Jesus,
Of the sin in the city marts,
And I think of Thy love unfailing,
Of the plan Thou hast for me,
The plan for united brotherhood
That reaches from sea to sea;
And my eyes lose sight of their pleadings,
Riches and fame cost so much,
And I dream Thy dream after Thee,
The brotherhood sin cannot touch.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Christian Conference met in the Twenty-Third Annual Session, Friday, October 4, 1935, at Christian Temple, Norfolk, Virginia. Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, President, was unable to be present on account of illness, and the Conference was called to order by Vice-President, Mrs. John G. Truitt of Suffolk, Virginia. Mrs. Truitt presided with grace and dignity and added much to the program by a very thoughtful message of the topic: "Every Woman a Witness." Her address is to appear in THE SUN, hence it would be a repitition to give a review in this column.

The Conference was well attended—probably more than three hundred delegates and visitors being present. There are three District Superintendents in the Conference: Norfolk, Mrs. J. F. Morgan; Isle of Wight, Franklin, Gates, Mrs. B. D. Jones; Waverly, Mrs. E. T. Atkinson. These Superintendents gave interesting and comprehensive reports of the work by Districts for the year.

Reports of the departments were made as follows: Young People, Mrs. Garland Spratley; Cradle Roll, Mrs. F. M. Nelson; Life Memberships and Memorials, Mrs. J. A. Williams; Convention Editor, Mrs. W. M. Jay; Spiritual Life, Mrs. O. M. Cockes; Literature, Mrs. W. M. Jay.

The report of Mrs. J. M. Raby, Treasurer, Windsor, Virginia, gave the following information: Women's Societies, members, 867; offerings $3,314.24; Young People's Societies, members, 499; offerings, $934.15. Juniors, members, 337; offerings, $381.65. Cradle Roll Societies, offerings, $89.22. Offerings in the District meetings: Norfolk, 14.61; Nansemond-Gates, $17.47; Waverly, $5.48; offering from Young People's Conference, $10.02. Grand Total for year, $4,816.-84.

Miss Ruth Hillhouse, a trained worker with young people, of the Presbyterian Church of Greenville, N. C., delivered an excellent address on missions.

In the absence of Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, Rev. A. L. Granger, Jr., memorized and delivered the address of the Mission Secretary, in a very effective manner, which greatly pleased the congregation.

Mrs. D. E. Brown of New York City was present and added much to the Conference by her addresses on literature.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Mrs. Elizabeth Pierce Harris, President; Mrs. R. T. Bradford, First Vice-President; Mrs. John G. Truitt, Second Vice-President; Mrs. H. P. Harrell, Secretary; Mrs. J. M. Raby, Treasurer. Superintendent of Young People, Mrs. Garland Spratley; Cradle Roll Superintendent, Mrs. F. M. Nelson; Iife Memberships and Memorials, Mrs. J. C. Ellis; Conference Editor, Mrs. W. M. Jay; Spiritual Life, Mrs. B. G. Harrell; Literature, Mrs. E. L. Beale.

The Woman's Missionary Conference has had a great influence upon the work of all the churches of the conference. The number of women and young people who are members of the missionary societies is not as large as it should be, and the amount of money raised is less than some of the more enthusiastic leaders have set as a goal. But the work cannot be measured entirely by numbers and dollar marks. A quiet process of education is making a spiritual impression upon the lives of the people who come in contact with such a movement. One noticeable feature of the recent Conference was the emphasis of raising the apportionment of the local societies by systematic giving. If all the members of the various societies will give to missions as the Lord has prospered them, it will not be necessary to resort to money-raising schemes to meet the apportionment. Personal giving, in a systematic way, should be the plan used in all the work of the church.

ELON COLLEGE 1935 ENROLLMENT.

Elon College is a church school, founded by the Christian Church in the South forty-six years ago. The college has been supported largely by the Christian church through the years. The homes of the Christian church have looked to Elon as the training ground for their sons and daughters. Elon has accepted the trust gladly and has performed her task to the best of her ability. A large percentage of the church pulpits in the South are occupied by Elon college graduates. Many teachers in the Sunday schools have received a part or all of their training at Elon. Many of the church's progressive and efficient laymen are alumni of the college. In a very definite way the college has built herself into the very heart of the church. Not only has the church supported the college from the standpoint of attendance, but it has given of its money that the college might continue its program of instruction. For a number of years every church in the Southern Convention was asked for a definite amount for the college. At the last session of the Convention this plan was virtually restored and it is hoped that the results may prove the wisdom of the plan.

Though the college was founded by the Christian Church for the training of its young people, it is open just as freely to the young people of other denominations or of no denomination. In appealing for students, Elon does not appeal on denominational lines. Members of other churches are just as welcome and are given the same consideration. No one is ever embarrassed because of his church affiliation regardless of what that may be. Because of this freedom on our campus, young people from all denominations and all walks of life are attracted here. When they arrive they find a cordial welcome, a wholesome atmosprehe, an excellent teaching staff, and a positive religious note.

Perhaps CHRISTIAN SUN readers would be interested in the segregation of our present student body along denominational and geographical lines. Our students this year come from denominations as follows:

Methodist Episcopal	117
Congregational-Christian	103
Baptist	69
Presbyterian	34
Catholics	26
Methodist Protestant	20
Lutheran	14
Hebrew	7
Episcopalian	5
Quaker	3
Reformed	3
Advent Christian	2
Pentecostal Holiness	2
Disciples of Christ	2
Church of the Nazarene	1
Church affiliation not specified	17
Member of no church	34
	459

According to geographical location, they are distributed as follows:

Foreign Country	3
North	51
South	405
	459

According to our records this is the largest college enrollment that the institution has yet enjoyed. The above tabulations include all regular college students and all departments, including music, art, dramatics, but in no instance is there a duplication. There are 459 different students enrolled at Elon College this year. This gives us a very full school. We have found it difficult to provide comfortable quarters for all the young men. Last week we made temporary improvements in the old bank building and eight young men are rooming there. We are able to provide for the young ladies comfortably. From all present indications we will face an embarrassing situation next year. We will be compelled to either provide additional dormitory space or turn from our campus young people who would like to come here. I wish that all who are interested in the college and its future would face this situation frankly, together with the college administration. In counsel and faith we must go forward.

L. E. SMITH.

WINCHESTER, VA.

On Sunday night September 8th, the fall and winter program of the Congregational-Christian Church of Winchester, Virginia, Rev. Ivan R. Smith, Pastor, was officially opened by a special program entitled, "The Russells Listen In." The scene was the home of the Russell family who were listening in to a radio broadcast from the Congregational-Christian Church, of their fall opening program. The radio announcer was hidden behind a screen which was behind the radio. The pastor and the choir were seated in the choir loft. The "mike" was also in the choir loft in front of the choir and as the different people took part on the radio program, they took their places before the "mike." The program included special readings and special music with a short talk by the pastor on the life of Sir Cyril Arthur Pearson. "Invictue," which was Sir Cyril Pearson's favorite poem, was sung as a bass solo.

On Sunday night, September 20th, a special "Olde Tyme Hymne Singe" was presented. The scene was the parlor of Grandmother Mathews, whose pastor and neighbors, attired in old-fashioned clothes, called on her for an evening of old time hymn singing. Among the special features was a solo by a little girl of six, also attired in old-fashioned clothes, a duet by her sister and brother of nine and ten, several other solos and a quartet. The pastor gave a short talk on several favorite hymns and their authors. Several times during the program, the opportunity was given the congregation to choose their own favorite hymns to be sung. This program proved to be so much enjoyed that, by special request, it is to be repeated, with several changes, on Sunday night, October 27th.

On Sunday night, September 27th, a most interesting program was given with "Italy-Ethiopia as its theme. The scene was the pastor's study, with eight young boys and girls of high school age calling on the pastor for help in their history lesson for Monday, which was on Ethiopia. As the boys and girls asked questions, Mr. Smith gave most interesting and instructive answers concerning the situation in Italy and Ethiopia today. The program closed with a male quartet singing, "Let the Lower Lights Be Burning." As they sang, all the lights in the church went out, the only illumination being a little red and green light in the top of a small lighthouse which was built on a miniature hill over to the right of the pulpit.

Mr. Smith has announced that for Sunday night, October 13th, the theme of the program is to be "There's A Reason," while on the night of October 27th, there is to be another "Olde Tyme Hymne Singe." (We only have night services on the second, fourth and fifth Sundays, as Mr. Smith preaches at Timber Ridge Church on the other two Sundays.) Sunday, October 27th is also to be "Home Coming Day" and Mr. Smith has several surprises for that day that he has not announced as yet. During the months of November and December we are to have a special series of evening services, the general theme being "Bible Scenes and Bible Themes."

The ladies of our church have been divided into four groups with good workers as the captains, and each division is sponsoring some special phase of the church work. Two divisions are raising money for different things; one division is sponsoring a seven-cent festival during the month of October, while the fourth division sponsored a fellowship supper which was held at the church on Wednesday evening, September 25th.

All of us at the Congregational-Christian Church in Winchester, are looking forward to our fall and winter work for the advancement of our church in the work of the Lord.

Our evening services are proving exceedingly popular and are largely attended.

ELSIE MATTHEWS.

EURE AND DAMASCUS.

We held a week of evangelistic meetings with the Eure Church in Gates County, N. C. the week following September 1st. The weather was rather unfavorable, because of the daily rains, but still the congregations increased in size with each afternoon and night service until the house was filled to capacity. The pastor did the preaching; the folks were attentive, appreciative and worshipful. Their kind words of cheer and encouragement all through the service were an inspiration for the pastor to do his best. On Saturday morning at Tuscarova Beach we baptized eight young people and six of them were received into church membership at our next appointment on the third Sunday of September.

We began our meeting at Damascus on Sunday night of September 15th. The weather was very favorable and again we had the pleasure of speaking to a splendid audience at each service.

The people of Damascus Church are a very reverent people in their worship. They know when the worship service begins and do not mar it by socializing and whispering. There was a fine spirit all through the meeting. While there were no accessions to the church at this time we all are informed that there are those who will unite with the church at some regular service in the near future.

At the conclusion of the meetings at Damascus, besides a nice purse the people loaded our car with many good things to eat. For this kindness they have our grateful thanks and remembrance.

We have enjoyed our pastoral relations with Eure and Damascus during the past year. There is much latent power in these churches which if it could be developed would make them a power to be felt in this community.

As we write this letter a phone message comes to us from Rev. Bro. Edwards, pastor of the Methodist Church at Sunbury, inviting us to speak in his absence on Thursday night. Their revival meeting is in progress. It will be a pleasure to render this service for Brother Edwards, whose church in Gatesville was consumed by fire this week.

HIGHER IDEALS NEEDED.

As I heard a minister say a few months ago, "We are so much accustomed to measure life in terms of get and spend, gain and loss, that the main issue of life is lost in the deal." It appears to me that there are too many people who are more interested in estopping others, in some way, than they are in living a genuinely useful life in the service of humanity. If those people would spend more time trying to amend their own ways, which have little ethical value; and discipline their daily practices to commendable standards, we would all soon be living about as God intended we should. Too many people have either forgotten or have never known, that they are their brother's keeper and just what they are, their brother must be little or much. Why, it is quite common, these days, to hear a person complaining because he has been outwitted in a deal by somebody whom he was trying to deceive himself; and he really feels humiliated when he finds that he is a victim of his own aggressions. Our young people should be impressed with higher ideals and pure motives before they assume the positions of trust and the responsibilities of life. They should know that, "It is wealth beyond words, to honestly earn a small competence and know how to use it." They should know that life will end in a sort of chaotic hit-or-miss procedure unless it is wisely planned from the very outset.

Often I meet young people having graduated from our colleges and universities whose future horizon, to me, is besmirched with the probability of failure. They seem to be inescapable within themselves of applied fruitful thinking. Things of real worth have meant too little to them, in their only cherished hope, perhaps, of just being able "to get by." They, no doubt, entered college in littleness and they are coming into life likewise. How are they to end? Go back to the homes from which this type of youth are coming and you will find, in most cases, the cause for their barren zeal and aimless disposition.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., Secretary.

DR. PAUL R. REYNOLDS.

(One of Our Missionaries.)

By Miss D. P. Cushing, News Editor.

"An increased and broadened respect for the Chinese and Chinese culture, but an even deeper certainty that all men everywhere need the dynamic of religion in their lives and that the Christian way of life brings more power both for personal living and for service than any other religion or ethical teachings," is the firm conviction of Dr. Paul R. Reynolds of Foochow, North China, after 14 years spent in that country working shoulder to shoulder with the Chinese.

Born with a Quaker heritage, Dr. Reynolds from early childhood was surrounded by a religious atmosphere and during his college days served student pastorates in Western Iowa. The Great War saw him in service with the Y. M. C. A. and then as a regular army chaplain. He was one of the pioneers in launching young people's summer conferences in the middle West and answered the logic of his own call to service by volunteering for work in China in 1921. For the first few years he was associated with the late Watts O. Pye in his work in the northwestern part of China.

"I went with Mr. Pye on his last long swing around the circuit of those country churches in Shansi and North Shensi and into inner Mongolia, travelling 1600 miles by pack mule," recalls Dr. Reynolds. Later he took up his particular task of religious education and young people's work, starting a boys' camp in Shansi, fostering Boy Scout troops, working with the community house and the Y. M. C. A., teaching Sunday School classes and directing boys' clubs.

He served as acting principal for a time of two different schools and is business manager at present of the Memorial High School in Fenchow. Dr. Reynolds is chairman of the Committee on Religious Education for the whole North China Mission, and during his furlough hopes to study the work being done along this line in America as well as the programs of academic and manual work in schools following the same policies as that of the high school in Fenchow, which is making itself into an experimental and training center for rural life.

"We plan to include teacher training, practical work in village public health, training in village handicrafts, and work in the fundamentals of agriculture," explains Dr. Reynolds, adding that he has built up a small herd of Swiss milk goats and is teaching dairy business on a small scale to several students who have thus been able to work their way through the high school.

"Chinese hill-billies," is what Dr. Reynolds calls some of the boys who are working their way through Ming I Middle School at Fenchow. "More than one-half of our students come from poor families living on five or ten acres of dry land with a total income of about $100 mex. annually," he says. "One of the ideas back of our work-study plan is to help break age-old traditions in China that gentleman never stooped to common toil. It makes no difference to Ming I Middle boys whether they wash windows, sweep sidewalks or dig ditches so long as they earn their way through school."

It is the hope of the Fenchow Ming I Middle School that they can develop their institution along the lines followed in Berea, Kentucky, and Dr. Reynolds sums up the policy of the Fenchow School in one line, saying, "In our program we put the development of Christian character—for service—first."

THANKS BE TO GOD.

Slowly, in single file, men and boys carrying wooden measures filled to the brim with millet and rice walked up the aisle of the Tehchow, China, church, while the congregation sang "Bringing In the Sheaves." It was "Thanks For the Wheat Sunday" but there had not been much to be thankful for because of the drought. This did not lessen the dignity or the sincerity of the occasion. Placing their measures at the feet of the Pastor Li the men bowed their heads while he offered a prayer of thanksgiving. "They were mostly farmers and the leader had worked hard to put his children through school," says Miss Helen Dizney, R. N. One of his daughters is in the new class of nurses who started training in August at the Tehchow Hospital.

THE TEST.

An elderly Mohammedan came to the home of Rev. Joseph L. Moulton, Rahuri, India, and gave him five rupees for Christian work in the villages. Mr. Moulton, who had given a helping hand to a son of the donor some time past was astonished at the gift. "How is this? Aren't you a Mohammedan?" he exclaimed. The old man smiled. "Don't say Mohammedan," he replied, "say, 'friend'," and pressed the money into Mr. Moulton's hand.

JOHN WESLEY.

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

Wesley's Experience in Georgia.

Up to this time Wesley had hardly found himself. And the next period of his life did not help him to find himself. In fact it rather unsettled him, and to a very marked degree discouraged him. And yet, as we shall see, Wesley's Georgia experience did make a significant contribution to his life, especially to his religious life.

It is not necessary to go into the story of the founding and early years of Georgia. General James Oglethorpe, scandalized by the fate of those who had been thrown into prison for debts and moved by genuine compassion for these luckless men and their families, had secured a grant of land in the New World and had brought over several shiploads of these people and had settled them in what is now known as Georgia. General Oglethorpe returned to England in the summer of 1735 soliciting aid for his new colony. He also sought some young Englishman who could serve as Chaplain to the English community and as a missionary to the Indians. Wesley was recommended by one of his former professors, and Oglethorpe urged him to accept. Wesley at first declined, but after consulting others, and especially after going to see his mother and getting her approval he accepted the invitation. Mrs. Wesley's words were characteristic of the woman: "If I had twenty sons," said the brave old lady, "I should rejoice that they were all so employed, though I never saw them any more."

Wesley, with his brother Charles, and two of his "Oxford Group" friends set sail for the New World. In a letter written four days before he sailed Wesley says, "My chief motive is the hope of saving my own soul . . . I cannot hope to attain the same degree of holiness here that I may there." This is illuminating to say the least.

On the ship on which Wesley and his companions sailed there was a group of twenty-six Moravians, who with their bishop, a David Nitschmann, were going out to Georgia. They impressed Wesley by their deep devotional life, by their willingness to do the humblest tasks uncomplainingly, by their deep piety and especially by their serenity of spirit and their uniform joy and poise. He spent much time with them during the three month's voyage, and when the party reached Savannah, Wesley sought out the Moravian pastor to ask his advice about the work he was about to undertake. To his surprise Spangenberg asked him about his inner religious experience in such pointed questions as "Have you the witness within? Does the Spirit of God bear witness with your spirit that you are a child of God? Do you know Jesus Christ?" Unaccustomed as he was to being thus frankly questioned, Wesley answered evasively, but finally stated that he "knew." But in his account of the interview Wesley adds "I fear they were vain words." In any event the example and the teaching of the Moravians unquestionably convinced Wesley of the possibility of an assured personal religious experience to which he was as yet a stranger.

Wesley's work in Georgia can hardly be called a success. His work among the Indians came to nothing. As a matter of fact it was not considered safe for him to venture outside the settlements. He was disappointed to say the least. Just before he left for England he wrote that he had not "found or heard of any Indian on the continent of America who had the least desire of being instructed."

Wesley's work as pastor of the English people in the settlement was not satisfactory either. He gave himself with zeal to his work, and tried to make his ministry effective. He gathered children and taught them, visiting his parishoners in person, usually choosing the heated hour of noon so that he would be sure to find them at home, fasted thrice a week, and lived habitually on bread and fruit. But the people were as a group shiftless and disorderly, restive under discipline, careless of all proprieties, and generally not interested in religion, especially a religion that made any demands on them in the realm of conduct. And perhaps not the least factor in the situation, was Wesley's own spiritual restlessness. Judged from the human standpoint, Wesley's work in Georgia was not a success. And it did not help either his influence in the community, or his peace of mind, to become involved in an unfortunate love affair with a Miss Sophia Hopkey, a niece of the magistrate of the colony. She was a sprightly and intelligent girl of attractive manners and person, and she was not only willing, but perhaps eager to foster Wesley's acquaintance. Wesley, with that lack of commonsense which seemed to characterize all his love affairs, seemed to encourage the young lady and to give her reason to believe that he intended to marry her. But one of Wesley's friends, resenting the part that the young woman was taking in the wooing, cautioned Wesley, and advised him to ask the advice of the Moravian elders. Wesley foolishly did this and agreed to abide by their decision. The decision was adverse. Wesley accepted it with the words, "The will of the Lord be done." Needless to say, Miss Hopkey did not take kindly to this sudden turn of affairs, and as a means of showing her displeasure, she accepted the addresses of another suitor, and five days later married him. The matter probably would have ended here, but Wesley, by virtue of his priestly authority, and perhaps because of personal pique, proceeded to visit ecclesiastical discipline upon the former Miss Hopkey. When she became unruly, Wesley excluded her from the Communion. Aggrieved at this affront, her husband and uncle brought suit against Wesley for defamation of character, and although the case finally was dropped, it was drawn out for nearly four months and it created endless annoyance and scandal. Wesley felt that his influence in Georgia was over, and taking the advice of friends, decided to return to England. He landed in England on the first day of February, 1738, just one day after Whitfield had left for a visit to the colony Wesley had just left. Thus closed an unfortunate and perhaps unhappy chapter in Wesley's life.

Finding Himself and His Work.

Wesley returned from Georgia greatly discouraged. He felt that his work had been a failure. Furthermore he was greatly disappointed. He had gone to Georgia, as he said, to save his own soul, and his soul was not saved. Writing in his Journal under date of January 24th, he says: "I went to America to convert the Indians; but O, who shall convert me?" And such reading as Wesley did in the writings of the mystics, and especially the influence of the Moravians with their insistence on an inner experience, did not help Wesley, but rather increased his dissatisfaction with himself and his religious experience. He was bewildered, and discouraged.

But four days after he landed in England, he met a young man, a Moravian then on his way to the Carolinas in America, Peter Bohler by name, to whom Wesley himself ever afterwards gave the credit for his emergence from doubt and despondency. The two young men spent several weeks together and during that time Wesley came to a new understanding of the deeper, and simpler meanings of religion. Bohler's doctrine was in essence what we now call "justification by faith," a faith that is not an assent of the intellect merely, but an experience, a confident personal reliance upon the divine goodness. This assurance, said Bohler, is not to be gained by obedience and good works, needful and desirable as these may be; it is the gift of God. He insisted that Wesley must give up his philosophical reasoning, and accept the bestowment by faith. And when Wesley, as he thought, honestly said that he did not have such faith, Bohler told him to "preach faith till you have, and then because you have it, you will preach faith."

Wesley evidently accepted Bohler's teaching, for we find him preaching here and there and everywhere during the next few months. His Journal shows the growth of a truly evangelical temper during that time, and as a result of his preaching, Wesley is a missionary as never before. And yet it was not until the evening of May 24, 1738 that Wesley believed himself to have attained the faith for which he had been waiting. In that classic entry in his Journal which is immortal in the annals of Methodism, he writes as follows: "In the evening I went very unwillingly to a society in Aldersgate Street where one was reading Luther's preface to the Epistle to the Romans. About a quarter before nine, while he was describing the change which God works in the heart through faith in Christ, I felt my heart strangely warmed. I felt I did trust in Christ, Christ alone for my salvation; and an assurance was given me that he had taken away my sins, even mine and saved me from the law of sin and death." It would not be fair to minimize the importance of this experience in Wesley's life, for it made a profound impression on him and gave him new assurance and power. But neither would it be fair unduly to magnify the experience for his Journal record during the weeks leading up to this experience a growth of the deep persuasion at once of the divine goodness and of human need.

As was perhaps natural, Wesley at first overemphasized the importance of the experience. Indeed at a religious gathering he asserted to the astonishment of all, that up to Wednesday of the previous week—the night his heart was strangely warmed—he had never been a Christian. To which his good friend, Mrs. Hutton replied, "Well then, you have been a great hypocrite." And stranger still, even after this great experience, Wesley asserted that he was not even then a Christian. "Though I have used all the means of grace for twenty years, he said, I am not a Christian."

Wesley soon learned not to trust too implicitly his vacillations of feeling however, and after 1739 we never find any references to his own emotions, or at best only a few scattered references. When he got out of himself into service for others he found a healthy, growing religious experience and life.

It was in the latter part of 1738 that Wesley formed the Fetter Lane Society, which was the first of the Methodist "Class Meetings" although the idea was not original with Wesley. He had favored the idea of small groups or bands of believers meeting regularly for religious purposes, and his Fetter Lane Society was suggested by Bohler, and its conditions of membership, the plan of dividing its members into small groups or "bands" of not less than five or more than ten, each band meeting by itself twice a week and all together on Wednesday evenings, its monthly lovefeast, its insistence that its members should have no secrets from one another, even in personal matters—all these features were patterned closely after the Moravian usage at Herrnhut. REPORT ON MORAL STANDARDS at Eastern Virginia Youth Fellowship Meeting.

September 27, 1935.

As time and civilization advances, new problems arise. Transformation of environment or man's conquest and control over nature has made his social life more complex. Now if the social teachings of the prophets and Jesus are to be regarded as definite directions which are to be obeyed in modern society, we are impressed at once by the large number of important subjects with which they do not deal. The prophetic mind of Jesus must have looked across the centuries and discovered the distant coming of social conflicts which were in His own time insignificant but which are now universal and profound, and now your superintendent on Moral Standards wishes to make the following recommendations:

1. That all pastors, leaders, and church members make a thorough investigation of social conditions in their respective localities so that the moral standards might be improved.

2. We, as young people, recognize the primary and strategic place in the home in the things that concern the moral and spiritual life of the members of the family, and we call upon each one to make an earnest effort to make homes and their companions Christians in every way possible.

3. We recognize the alarming high rate of divorces in proportion to marriages in our country, a rate that exceeds in many instances the rates in so-called heathen countries, and we re-affirm our belief in the sanctity of the marriages now, and deplore the flippant jests about marriage and the home that come from the printed page and spoken word.

4. We recognize the importance of motion pictures from an educational and moral viewpoint, but we deplore the way in which the science and the art of that great industry have prostituted to low and even immoral ends both at home and abroad. We heartily commend the Roman Catholic clergy in establishing the League of Decency, and we recommend that we join with them or in some similar movement in an effort to bring support to such motion pictures as minister to human values and to destroy those that do not buy the power of public condemnation. We believe that the pastors and leaders of our organizations should seek to enlist the support of our people in such a movement. We also pledge our support to artists and producers as well as to local managers who join us in this worthy venture.

5. We re-affirm our belief that the liquor traffic is a denial of the ideals and principles of Jesus Christ. Age-long experience has taught that the traffic in alcoholic beverages is inimical to human life under whatever conditions and however sold. We believe that the young people should array themselves against it and offer no compromise. We believe that Christ's ideal for the Christian, as to touching liquor, is total abstinence, and we urge our young people to accept this standard in the home and in their social contacts and to muster public opinion against liquor and to arouse hostility toward it, especially in its advertising campaign, and that we seek to bring together and to cooperate with all groups hostile to alcohol in a united effort to seek some common way of practical advance.

7. We believe that the principles and the spirit of the ancient law, "Remember the Sabbath Day to Keep it Holy," can be applied to modern life, and we recommend that our young people seek to spend the day practically as a day of rest and worship and that they resist the efforts of commercial and worldly interests to make the day as any other day.

8. We record our protest against the misrepresentation and deliberate falsehood of much modern advertising, especially cigarette advertisement.

9. We urge our young people to abstain from gambling and games of chance for prizes.

10. We urge our young people to be more faithful in their attendance at services of worship, more loyal in their support of the church, more diligent in their devotional practices, more careful of their manner of life, more responsive to their larger social responsibilities, more alive to their civic privileges, and more obedient to Jesus Christ.

A PRAYER FOR CHRISTIAN UNITY.

O Master of the Galilean Way,
Forgive us for the vows we fail to keep:
Forgive us that we so neglect Thy sheep,
So idly waste this shining harvest day!
Forgive us for the stumbling blocks we lay
Along the paths by which men seek Thee!
Sweep
From our small minds the strife that holds Thee cheap!
Break Thou the bread of life with us, we pray!

What matter if we cannot understand
The mystery of Love that is Divine,
Nor pierce the veil! Dear Lord, our faith increase
To know that, since our hands may reach Thy hand,
Our lives are made all-powerful, through Thine,
To heal a wounded world and bring it peace!

Points for Talks.

Christians are opposed to alcohol in all forms because it destroys mankind instead of helping him—it is a disease the same as any other contagious malady with which humanity must contend.

A state will spend thousands of dollars annually to aid the health of its people—and at the same time sell people whiskey.

Alcohol is a frequent destroyer of health, happiness, and mental stability. It impairs reason, will, self-control, judgment, physical skill and endurance. It decreases the body's resistance to infection. It injures body cells, especially brain and nerve cells, first in their action, later in form.

Because alcohol causes some people to talk fluently and be more lively it has been called a stimulant. This is not true, for alcohol is a narcotic and paralyzes the higher brain centers, removing restraint of good sense which would cause one to hold his tongue and body under control. The capacity to think properly is influenced by even small quantities of alcohol.

Dr. Emil Bogen of Los Angeles County Sanitarium, a national authority on causes of diseases says, "No other poison causes so many deaths or leads to or intensifies so many diseases, both physical and mental, as does alcohol in the various forms in which it is taken."

It has been pointed out that alcohol is the cause of at least twenty-five per cent of insanity, forty per cent of neglected children, fifty per cent of convicts in prisons, and a great number of suicides and accidents.

Open Discussion.

1. Why do people continue to drink even when they know the effects of alcohol on the body and mind?

2. People say they take a drink to get "pepped up" for the party. What would be your attitude toward your friend who got "pepped up" in this manner?

3. Does it make any difference what "they" say when you refuse to take "just one drink"? What difference does it make to your body?

4. One must keep in strict training to be a good athlete. Suppose a young man had been the school hero for a football season, and then on the eve of the most important game took "just one drink" that caused him to make a false play the next day, and lose the game for his school. What would be the reaction of the entire student body? What could be the effect on the young man's life?

5. What action can Christian youth take on the drinking problem in their community?

Period of directed prayer—

1. Ask God to give us the will to have a clean body and a pure heart.

2. Thank God for the power to say "no" to the temptations that face Christian youth.

3. Thank God for His Son, Jesus, the Pattern we may always follow.

Hymn: "Yield Not to Temptation."

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

THE STORY OF JEREMIAH.

Lesson II—October 13, 1935.

Golden Text: "To whomsoever I shall send thee thou shalt go, and whatsoever I shall command thee thou shalt speak."—Jer. 1:7.

Lesson: Jeremiah 1:1-10; 6:10, 11; 8:18; 26: 1-24; chapters 36-38.

Jeremiah was a great person, a great patriot, and a great prophet. For a period of at least fifty years this humble man from humble surroundings was one of the dominant figures in the national and international affairs of his day. He had a great deal to do with politics although he was not a politician. He was a statesman of insight and vision, a preacher of power, a writer of lofty style and beauty of diction, but first of all and last of all a man of God. His messages, delivered and written primarily for the people of his own day are timeless in their ideals and principles, and fresh in their application to our modern individual and national problems.

Jeremiah has been greatly misunderstood. He has been thought of as a weak, sentimental namby-pamby kind of man. On the contrary he was a man of strength and indomitable courage. He has been called the "weeping prophet," but the tears he shed were tears of strength. He loved his country with a passionate love. He saw the doom which that country was steadily bringing upon itself. He tried to save his country. And because of the hardness of heart of the people, and the stupidity and short-sighted policy of the princes, his heart was broken. A gentle, sympathetic, tender man, he had the unpleasant task of pronouncing dire doom on the nation. It was this that broke his heart and made him weep. One of the most majestic figures in history is prophet Jeremiah.

The Prophet's Call.

"The word of the Lord" came to Jeremiah when he was a young man, perhaps twenty years of age. However that word came, the conviction deepened that God had called him to the Prophetic office—he was of the priestly line himself. Indeed as Jeremiah thought over the matter it grew steadily clearer that he had been predestined for that high office. God had called him before he had been born, and set him apart as a prophet to the nations. Happy is the man who has a sense of mission, who feels that he is within God's purpose, who has found the will of God for his life. But let no man think that a great vision is necessary, or that God calls only to high offices. The precious truth of Christianity is that every man's life has a place in God's plan. To find and to do the will of God is life's chief business. And however that call may come, let no man be disobedient to the heavenly vision, even though it might come in the most commonplace way.

Whom God calls, God equips. Jeremiah tried to "back out." He began to make excuses. But God told him that because He had called him He would help him. Because God was with him he was not to fear the face of man. He could not know all that Jehovah had for him to do, but as he set himself to walk in the known will of God, he would know more of the unknown in time. He might not know what to say now but he would be told what to say in due time. We are to walk by faith. He that willeth to do shall know. God can use humble men if they give themselves to him.

The Prophet's Message.

Jeremiah called his people to repentance. He warned them that the fact that they were God's chosen people was not going to save them. He told them that because they had the Temple of God in their midst was no security against the day of the Lord. He told them that doom was coming because of their sins. He called upon them to repent before it was too late.

The Prophet's Appeal to History.

When his message was questioned Jeremiah appealed to history. God had honored his prophet's word in the past; He would fulfil it in the future. History is a great teacher for those who have a mind to learn. Individuals and nations can learn through what has happened to those who obeyed or those who rejected the Lord's word. The wise man learns from the past.

The Prophet's Courage.

The truth of the prophet's message stung the princes and the rulers to the quick. They made dire threats against him and suggested that if he knew what was good for him he would change his message or stop delivering it. They should have known their man better. "Behold I am in your hand; do with me as is good and right in your eyes,—but the word comes to me from Jehovah. I do not care what happens to me but I do care whether I speak the word of Jehovah. Many a modern minister needs this spirit of courage as he denounces sin in high places. Ministers of the church in Germany need Jeremiah's spirit in these trying and testing days.

The Prophet's Anger.

There is such a thing as righteous indignation. Jeremiah's anger was stirred within him. He did not hate people but he hated the sins of the people. "Abhor that which is evil, cleave to that which is good"—how much we need that message in our modern life, when there seems to be no distinction in the minds of many people between what is right and what is wrong.

The Prophet's Vindication.

We need have no concern about the defense of truth. We need only to proclaim and to live the truth. Truth vindicates itself. Those princes of Jeremiah's day thought they could stop the truth by cutting off his head or by otherwise putting him out of the way. This has often been the delusion of people who fear the truth. The word of the Lord had come to Jeremiah; he had been sent to bear witness to the truth. And the God of all truth has vindicated him through the centuries.

GOOD POET OF GALILEE.

Blessed Poet of Galilee,
Mold our hearts in purity,
In grace divine.
Give us something of Thy beauty;
Teach us love and teach us duty;
Make us, Jesus, wholly Thine.

Blessed Poet of Galilee,
Help us to grow to be like Thee;
In deed and word.
Teach us Thy gentle tenderness;
To know Thy kindness and to bless
Mankind in Thy love, O Lord.

Teach us how to live in peace;
Help us all our strivings cease
In brotherhood.
Teach us in sacrifice to give;
Help us learn to really live
In all that's great and good.

Blessed Poet of Galilee,
Teach us how to daily be Children divine.
Teach us Thy patient lowliness
To grow like Thee in holiness,
A wondrous poem sublime.

"THE DESTRUCTION OF THE WICKED."

"The Lord preserveth all them that love him; but all the wicked will He destroy."—Ps. 145:20.

A discussion of this text involves the dogmatics of hell and heaven, eternal punishment and eternal reward. Such a discussion cannot be entered here. If we did, it would be much like Arthur Brisbane says of man's understanding of his wife, "He only understands ten per cent of her, and the other ninety per cent he would not understand if she told him of it."

Ever since the devil entered into the garden of man's life evil has been present, and it has been said (and truly so) that all destructive forces are evil be they material or spiritual. Harboring in mind to do the destructive thing; failure to cooperate with the Divine order; failure to live right with God and man, all represent the eternally destructive forces of life, and so nicely defined is it that, as one puts it, "Whatsoever dims thy sense of truth, or stains thy purity, though light as the breath of the summer air, count it as sin to thee."

This condition of destruction is eternal in this life, to say nothing of the life to come. And the condition of the soul in eternity must depend upon the way it has lived, reaping what is sown, plus the saving grace of God.

Health comes by keeping the laws of health. Happiness comes by doing those things that make happy. The choice of base living results in a base mind. "Punishment is not something that happens to a man but something that happens in him." The only other thing that can be said is that Jesus saves, and, when He does, sin will be no more. "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world." He is Healer and Defender. In Him perfect qualities are achieved, destruction is set at nought and perfect bliss is eternally.

Prayer—Dear Lord, we are saved by thy grace and not by any merit of our own. Thou hast made us for good and not for evil. Grant to us the diligent search for the fine qualities of life, to live in loving hearts and mutual welfare to Thy glory.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"THE SECURITY OF THE GODLY."

Read Psalm 91.

The Psalmist sets forth the state of the godly, their safety, their habitation, their friends, and the effects of them all.

A child feels safe in trusting the wisdom of his father. Where he leads, it follows, though the way be unknown to him and the night dark. He feels safe and is at peace.

The man who trusts his well-tried chauffeur has a sense of relative security.

The Captain of a ship can sleep in peace when the experienced pilot is at the wheel.

This is so with Christians. The knowledge that they are not alone, that the God of the universe, who doeth all things well, is with them and is ever to be with them, is sufficient ground for happiness and peace.

Prayer—O God, Thou art our living God, and Christ is our Saviour. Bless us with Thy presence and Thy salvation today.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation."—Mark 14:38.

Experience teaches that in the Spiritual combat we cannot be too watchful against those sins which we think we have no temptation to commit. It is by these that one too often falls.

Peter knew his weaknesses, that he was impetuous, impulsive and impatient, and guarding himself at these points he was not likely to fall by them. But unfaithfulness he was sure was not a temptation, therefore he swore to the Lord that he would die before betraying Him. With what tragedy Peter fell we well know.

Satan is a very clever person. He does not waste his powers where we have all our sentries stationed, but he attacks where we think we are secure.

"Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." This was spoken in reference to a nation, but it is applicable to one who seeks the freedom of God in his life and soul. We cannot train our spiritual eyes too keenly to see the danger of seemingly unimportant things. The training of spiritual vision should include everything, and everything should be related to safety.

A story is appropo. A young man frequented a bar-room and was used to hitching his horse close by. He was converted and did not visit the bar any more but continued to hitch his horse there. A fatherly friend said to him one day, "George, I am older than you, and you will Pardon me, I know, if I make a suggestion. No matter how strong you think you are, take my advice and at once change your hitching post."

Prayer—

"Lead me, O Lord,
In the still and safe places
Let mine eyes meet sweet earnest faces;
Far from the scenes of worldly fashion Deliver me from faithless care and noisy passion."

—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"STAND FAST."

"Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free."—Gal. 5:1.

Having fortified our souls both in the weak and the strong places, with the sentries of our vigilance, stand upright, stand firm, stand boldly, stand like a man strong and valiant, ready to give an account of whose you are and what you believe; know what it is that you believe, and be prepared to act upon it at any time.

One of the best known stories of Waterloo is this. Wellington's regiment was hard pressed and suffering seriously from the enemies' fire. Wellington rode up and called out to his men, "Stand firm, ninety-fifth! We must not be beaten. What would they say in England?"

Wellington's appeal was to manliness and patriotism. Their country was looking at them. That is the slogan call to Christian men and women. Whether charged by sin or mowed by destructive forces, we must stand firm! We must not be beaten! God is right and He is looking at us, and He will put all enemies under His feet.

Prayer—Our Father, we open our souls to Thee the King of our day. We seek the fellowship of the ever-living Christ. Come Thou and dwell within us, O Holy Spirit and be our Guide, and Buckler and Shield, to stand fast in the faith wherewith Christ hath made us free from sin and death.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"THE POWER OF EXAMPLE."

"By the obedience of one shall many be made righteous."—Rom. 5:19.

In personal example lies the power of saving the world. By the life of one others are won. Therefore train the sensibilities and tenderness of heart which God has given you into the practice of goodness, mercy and helpfulness toward those who stand in need of it. Christ has saved and blessed you. Be ready to give in ungrudging bounty, to others what God has given you. Strive to pay back to Christ His own unspeakable compassion upon you. In loving succour to the needy be a minister of Jesus.

"I gave my life for thee,
What hast thou given to Me?"

Prayer—Our Father, may we be so sensitive to Thy goodneess that whatever comes to us we may pass it on and glorify Jesus. This we ask for His sake.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"BOLDNESS OUT OF SUFFERING."

"Having suffered before, and been shamefully treated . . . we waxed bold in our God."—I Thess. 2:1-6.

Paul had indeed suffered much in Philippi; the city of the horrible scourging, of the inner prison, and of the stocks; but his suffering in Philippi did not prevent his bold testimony in Thessalonica.

Hindrances, opposition, persecution, have that effect on heroic, Pauline souls. It increases their zeal, it fires their spirit, as the growing terrors of a battle only enkindle new ardor in true soldiers.

For what is shame, and what is pain, and what is failure, when we are about the work of our Saviour? Compared with His mighty interests, it is all as nothing, and we can well afford to forget it.

Prayer—Lord, embolden Thy servants. The warfare, that is everything, and Thy victory which is to come.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

"COALS OF KINDNESS."

"If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat; . . . for thou wilt heap coals of fire upon his head."—Prov. 25:21-28.

This is one of the most striking metaphors in the Bible. Coals of fire burn, but kindness heals. Coals of fire are a punishment; but kindness is forgiveness, remission of penalty. However, the writer of this proverb treats them as synonymous: kindness to a foe is coals of fire on his head.

Truly the best and most effective rejoinder for evil is goodness. Bless those that persecute you. Do good to those that injure you. The shame they will suffer will be their sufficient penalty. They will not be harmed, and the breach will be healed.

For there is no lancet like love, to release poison and to promote cure and to bring a foe to his senses.

Prayer—May our hearts, therefore, be full of love, O God of Calvary, Thou who didst heap coals of fire on the head of all mankind.—Amen.

GOD'S LIVING CATHEDRALS.

By John G. Truitt.

"Ye are the temple of God . . . the Spirit of God dwelleth in you."—I Cor. 3:16.

You are more beautiful than Solomon's Temple. David gathered 100,000 talents of gold, and 1,000,000 talents of silver for the temple. From his private fortune he added 3,000 talents of gold and 7,000 talents of silver, and the princes contributed enough to bring the total up to 108,000 talents of gold and 10,000 darics of gold and 1,017,000 talents of silver. This sum is equivalent to $2,450,000,000.00 in American money. David had made many nations subject to him, and much tribute in gold and silver had they paid to their victorious king. Thousands of workmen brought hewn timbers from Lebanon, other thousands cut the massive stones, and skilled Phoenician artificers overlaid the interior with beaten gold. It was beautiful beyond description. It was the perfected dream of the poetic David of what a temple for God should be on earth. But you are more than that! "Ye are the temple of God . . . the Spirit of God dwelleth in you." You are a living temple of God!

And from that day to this men have spent their millions in making great and beautiful cathedrals to house their altars and to be the dwelling place of their God. The world is full of costly cathedrals, but Paul went about Asia Minor and Europe telling the people that had no great cathedrals that they themselves were the dwelling place of God. "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and your spirit, which are God's. The spirit is God's, yes, and the body too: "Glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's."

You are on your honor then to keep yourself in as good condition as possible: physically, mentally, spiritually: "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy." How men and women can abuse their bodies and their minds, impoverish their spiritual natures, and take no care of the stewardship of themselves and still hope for success I cannot see. "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy." God has made you his crowning handiwork, entrusted you with the most delicate and sensitive being, or creation on earth, with infinite possibilities, and to neglect this trust is to destroy yourself and defy God. You are living cathedrals of God. How clean, how pure, how holy we should be! How we should honor our stewardship of health, life, and eternal soul!

Looking again at the material cathedrals and temples: to them men, women and children came to worship. What blessings they found there. There they could pour out their needs to God in prayer, there they could look to him for his forgiveness and grace, there they could count on his comfort and strength. What a blessing a church is. How God has visited his people in his churches, temples and cathedrals. As far as they go their blessing are immeasurable.

As far as they go, I say. For they cannot go all the way. The very best of them have their limitations. The new church in Pittsburgh has every possible equipment and comfort and convenience. Going through it, built by the Mellins' million in honor of their mother, one exclaims, "What more could one wish." It is the ideal of just how a great church should be built. Or our own church here, visited by men and women from all over the country, is called very complete indeed. Every modern equipment and convenience is here. But it has its limitations. The big church in Pittsburgh has its limitations. St. Peter's Cathedral in Rome has its limitations. Even Solomon's temple had its limitations. None of them are living cathedrals! They are as dead as the severed trunk of a giant tree, and as cold as stone! You are living temples of God! If this building were all, there are sick people in this city who cannot come to this building and they would be left out. The church-building is helpless to go to them. It has its limitations. When it comes to that it is no more than steel and stone, and brick and mortar, and the expressed will of the workmen. But you, you are alive, moveable, able to leave your place and walk into the home of sickness, or sin, or want, and bear God's message of love and help to those in need! What a contrast between the walls of this church and the sentiments of your noble souls! They are as far apart as heaven and earth. God chooses you! "Ye are the temple of God." Ye are his living, loving, breathing, serving, saving temples." "Ye are the salt of the earth."

Yes churches of stone and mortar are limited. You are God's unlimited cathedrals. Was it Solomon's Temple, or St. Peter's cathedral, or Mellon's church that the poor, unwanted, outcast sinner of Sychar found God? Neither. Jesus, living, moving, walking the way through Samaria brought the throne of God to the curb of Jacob's well and the woman worshipped right there! The Jerusalem temple was limited, but the message of love which Jesus gave the poor, needy sinner was not limited, and she could see God in Christ Jesus, and she could worship God right where she was. That was a part of the message of the moment. He drank from her humble service, and she in turn was given living water from that living Temple.

So served Jesus. He took the church to the people. To the lame, halt, poor, blind, diseased, He took the church, or what the church has to offer. It is well enough for us to have our church house. We should. We should have some very beautiful ones, and many humble one,—and all of them should be lowly in spirit, but we must not depend too much on the walls of brick and mortar. God is not depending on you! We are to be living temples of his. We are to carry the Christ with us everywhere we go. We are to so serve, live, move that men will see that we have been with Jesus and desire to make a like contact with him! Jesus did not start a campaign to get met to come to the great Temple in the city of Jerusalem. But rather he said to his few followers, Get you, go, preach my Gospel unto the ends of the earth!

Now, again, all I have ever said about this holy place so beautiful and lovely as it is, I wish to re-emphasize right here and now. I believe God meets us here as in no other place, for we are here as in no other way. I believe God is in this, His holy temple,—this very church building. I believe that His will is that we should have this great and lovely church plant. He is blessing us and helping us to pay every cent we owe on it. We are proud of this church. We should be. But, my friends, let us not depend upon it. Let us depend upon God, and our vigilant, vigorous, active serving of him as we go out into the homes, shops, factories, and places of our city and community taking the blessed Saviour of men with

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

The morning of October 7th brought us a big white frost. On October 6th we had a cold chilly day and some hail. It was the forerunner of the big frost. Frost this early in the season is something unusual in this section. It generally comes in late October.

The Orphanage was practically ready for it. All our hay crop was cut and cured and the silo filled. It did get some field corn that we just could not get to before the frost. The Lord has been good to us this fall as he has given us fine, clear weather to mow and cure our hay crop without losing any by being caught in the rain, an unusually clear season at haying time. We are grateful indeed as we lost all our spring hay crop in the fire. The cold, frosty morning made some of our little boys call for shoes. It is quite a job at this season of the year to get shoes fitted to every foot.

We always take time to see that a shoe fits comfortably before we let them go out. I hardly think anything can give one more discomfiture than an ill-fitting shoe, especially when it is a half-size too small. Girls are harder to fit in shoes than boys. They very often try to get their feet in shoes at least a half-size too small—but it would never do to tell them so.

A boy wants comfort even if he wears a number nine—just so it doesn't hurt.

Getting nearly a hundred children ready for winter is no small job. It takes work, patience and money. We don't mind the work. We have the patience. We are looking to you to furnish the money to meet the bills. You have done it for nineteen years. We know this year will be no exception.

GENERAL NEWS.

of many previous unrelated efforts to meet regional interests,—especially they replace the activities of the district offices scattered in six or more cities by the various boards, home and foreign, and the three separate women's foreign mission boards with their headquarters in Boston, Chicago and San Francisco.

Only the Middle Atlantic of the five regions into which the country is now grouped does not have a Regional Committee and a Regional Meeting. What the regional organization may mean is stated by Dr. H. D. Davies of Chicago, Mid-West Regional Secretary:

"The Mid-West Regional Committee consists of sixty-four persons. It meets annually at the time of the Regional Meeting and symbolizes unified promotion and democratic responsibility and also the proprietary interest of the churches in the missionary cause. It expresses the esprit de corps of the region as a natural geographic unit. Each member is an attorney for the missionary cause in home church, Association and Conference. The rotation in membership gradually increases the number of pastors and laymen experienced in educational responsibility for missions. The committee is a clearing house for transmitting the thought of the states and churches to the leadership, and on the other hand for transmitting the objectives of the denomination to the states and churches. The committee works during the year through its officers, executive committee and subcommittees on missionary cultivation, standards of giving, men and world-wide brotherhood, social relations, candidates, missionary creed, lessons from other denominations, and other subcommittees as various matters arise."

The four regional meetings this year will bring together in inter-state fellowship about 3,000 people, supplementing for some the fellowship of the General Council meetings and making possible a broader fellowship for many who do not attend the General Council.

From the point of view of church statesmanship and the part which the Congregational and Christian denomination will have in forging the vehicle for the forward movement of Protestantism in America, the regional meetings and the organization back of them are of great importance. They witness to a truly national church with an influential representation in every section.

JOHN WESLEY.

knows the place and power of these Methodist Class Meetings in the history of the Methodist Church.

The turning point in Wesley's career came during the winter of 1738-39. George Whitfield, upon his return from America, found that the people were just as eager, if not more eager, than ever, to hear the gospel. But he found to his surprise and to his regret that the churches of England were not open to him. Possessed by a passion for preaching and compassion for the unsaved, he resorted to preaching in the open air. The first time he thus preached about a hundred grimy, brawling miners of Kingswood heard him. When three weeks later he preached in the same place, there were at least ten thousand present. Whitfild then and there decided to make his ministry an open air ministry and turned to the unchurched with his impassioned preaching. Knowing full well that it would be impossible for him to carry his message to the unchurched he sent for Wesley, his old friend, and urged him to take up the work. Wesley came down to Bristol on Saturday, heard Whitfield preach in the open air —on a bowling green—on Sunday, and although he was impressed by the general effect he felt he could not bring himself to do such a seemingly disordered and disorganized work. He himself says that he thought it almost a sin to save souls unless it were done in a church. But on Monday afternoon at four o'clock, with much reluctance, and feeling that he was making himself vile by such a breach of all proprieties, he stood on a little hill outside the city of Bristol and spoke to three thousand listeners. What were the results of that sermon we do not know. But we do know that within the next month Wesley had preached again and again in the open air till his audiences had aggregated forty thousand persons. That Monday in April was a fortunate day for Wesley and for the world. A new chapter in his religious life was beginning. John Wesley, the ascetic, the uneasy, the questioning mystic, had passed into John Wesley the evangelist and reformer, his parish the world, and his message to all sorts and conditions of men.

us as we go. Let us not fail to carry the Christ with us. Let us do as he has bidden us: Go, and as we go, preach. If we go out with the Gospel to the folks, the folks will come with their heart-hunger to his church.

The pastor cannot do all the going. You are as much a child of God as he is. You have your duty to perform in going to others with the kindness, and considerateness of a true Christian, winning them to the way of our Lord. "Ye are the temple of God . . . the Spirit of God dwelleth in you." Does he really? Are you really a Christian? Does the light of God's love shine through the cathedral windows of your life so that others may see and know where you stand and how? Are you taking the living temple to "untempleized" territories all about you? "Ye are the temple." May God have a real temple in each of us. May we truly represent him. And may he surely dwell within us. What a prayer, that the Spirit of God may dwell in us. Having that Spirit we shall be forced to move out in loving service for him, which may we gladly do!

A PRAYER.

Forgive me my sins, O Lord, forgive me the sins of my youth and the sins of mine age, the sins of my soul, the sins of my body, my secret and my whispering sins, my presumptuous and my crying sins, the sins that I have done to please myself, and the sins that I have done to please others. Forgive me those sins which I know not; forgive them, O Lord, forgive them all of Thy great goodness.—Amen.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Miss Kay Richert

Sunday School Sesquicentennial.—

In 1785, according to press reports, there was founded on the Eastern Shore of Virginia the first Sunday School in America, the founder being one William Elliott. Appropriate ceremonies marked the observation of this anniversary on October 1st. Oak Grove Methodist Church, at which this school was established, is located near Kellar, Va., and is said still to have an efficient Sunday School.

Navy Plane Sets New Distance Record.—

Lieutenant Commander Knefler McGinnis, flying the Navy's new seaplane ZJ3Y-1, established a new world non-stop record for seaplanes, flying from Panama to Almeda, California, this week. The record-breaking journey covering 3,387 miles was made in 34 hours and 51 minutes. The former long-distance record was held by an Italian pilot, Mario Spoffani, who last July flew from Malfalcone, Italy, to Bervera, in British Somaliland, a distance of 2,963 miles. Besides the plane commander, there were five other members of the crew. The trip was an experimental flight, and it is said that the Navy is expected to purchase sixty such planes in the immediate future.

Boarding at the Jail.—

Several states have laws on their statute books requiring that inmates of asylums, when financially able, be required to pay for their maintenance. Michigan has gone one better. Under a law passed at the last session of the state legislature, convicts who are financially able must pay the cost of being kept under lock and key. Under the new law it is provided that this cost may be assessed against both old and new inmates, and proceedings to collect "may be begun any time after admittance." Whenever a person is admitted to a prison, the Attorney-General may file a claim against the inmate's estate, and upon court order his property becomes subject to levy. The auditor of the state, however, has issued the assurance that: "We will be careful not to levy upon an estate if it would force an inmate's family to seek welfare assistance. Such a situation would not benefit the state."

One Hundred and Fiftieth Anniversary.—

The meeting in Mason's Hall, in Richmond, Virginia, on Tuesday, October 15th, celebrated the sesqui-centennial of the cornerstone laying of that historic old structure. This building is said to be the oldest building built for Masonic use and continuously used by Masons in the United States. While the cornerstone was laid one hundred and fifty years ago, it is probable, says Dr. William Moseley Brown, Past Grand Master of Masons in Virginia and an authority on the history of Masonry, that the building was not completed until two years later. It was at this time that Richmond-Randolph Lodge was organized, and this lodge has continued to hold its meetings in this building since its organization. The building was also used by Richmond Lodge for many years, and is also the home of Richmond Royal Arch Chapter. The anniversary meeting was held on the regular lodge meeting night, and many prominent Masons were present, including Dr. Brown, who was the principle speaker for the occasion.

A War of Civilization.—

"The 'civilizing' of Ethiopia by Italy's reincarnation of Caesar (with sincere apologies to Caesar) has begun," remarks a contemporary of the religious field of literature. And Premier Mussolini goes merrily on with his work of conquest despite the fact that fifty-two nations have voted for the financial isolation of Italy. In this financial blockade, the only funds which will not be cut off are those of the Red Cross and of religious organizations. Italy has not yet withdrawn from the League, but, while not yet predicting a European War, spokesman for the Italian Government, have declared that they will fight such a war if necessary, rather than give up their Ethiopian program. Haile Selassie has announced that there is no thought of yielding. Says he, "There can be no peace while a single Italian soldier stands on the soil of Aduwa or Aksum . . . If I were an Italian, I should blush at the boast of capturing an unarmed, undefended town." Thus it seems to be a fight to the finish, and no one knows what the finish will be.

Labor Votes 30-Hour Week.—

"We're going out of here and fight for this as we have never fought before," shouted William A. Green, A. F. L. President. "If there's anyone who opposes this, let him get out of the way." And the federation voted unanimously to fight for a thirty-hour week throughout American business and industry. Truly Moses who is said to have strenuously advocated one day's rest in seven and Solomon who is credited with dividing the twenty-four day into three equal parts, that man might find time for work, rest and the helping of his brother man, are out of date. One might suggest to Mr. Green that he go a step further. Why not a ten-hour work week, or better still eliminate work entirely? Certainly, in his wisdom, he might devise a better plan than one which requires thirty hours of labor. Most American workmen are willing to give an honest day's labor for an honest day's pay. They complain now of leisure time that cannot be advantageously employed. Such a plan as that advanced by the labor federation leaders can have but one result: the still greater spread between the pay envelope and the cost of living—with a constantly lessening amount of purchasing power for the non-necessities of life.

The "Link" Still Missing.—

And now we are told that the grotesque Pithecanthropus erectus—the tree-climbing ape man of Java, long considered by the majority of anthropologists as the most ancient and primitive branch of the human family tree of which any traces have been found—was not a man at all, but a superior type of gibbon. This is the final admission of Professor Eugene Dubois, of Haarlem, Holland, discoverer and custodian of this remarkable creature, after 44 years of intensive study. This announcement, just received by American anthropologists, completely upsets one of their pet theories of the evolutionary development of man from the brute. For a generation nearly all the students have been taught that Pithecanthropus was the "first man." It was in 1891 that Prof. Dubois, then a Dutch army surgeon in Java, discovered these famous bones near the Trinil River. The Darwinian hypothesis was just being popularized at that time. Biologists were feverishly seeking a "missing link" and the Java bones, unique among all mammalian remains, seems to fill the part of the specifications. But it was only a "superior type of gibbon," which is a form of ape, and the "missing link" is still missing.—M. P.-Recorder.

Government or Go-as-you-please.—

What a hodge-podge the Government of this country is becoming! Congress passes a law—admittedly a ridiculous, un-American law—forbidding any and all of us to raise potatoes without permission from Washington. What does the official responsible for administering this law, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, announce from the housetops? "I am going to do all I can to avoid enforcing the law." General Hugh S. Johnson, one of President Roosevelt's main stand-bys, who was selected for the most important of all positions in hastily transforming "employables" from the dole to "made" work, proclaims that the whole scheme is silly beyond words and that he will stump the country exposing the ridiculousness of the whole scheme. Secretary Wallace talks about taking a referendum to determine whether the people want to abide by or flout the law! Since when did the observance of law become subject to the whim of political appointees? Since when was any officeholder empowered to conduct a referendum to ascertain whether he should enforce the law and whether citizens should obey the law? This is a "new deal" with a vengeance! Also, this is ludicrousness carried to extremes becoming to imbeciles rather than to statesmen—Forbes' Magazine.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. J. E. McCauley, Pastor, First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., is assisting Rev. H. E. Crutchfield in a series of evangelistic meetings at our Ingram Church. Brother McCauley was a former pastor of this church and is welcomed back to this pulpit by those who learned to love him in the days of his pastorate there.

It is learned with regret that Rev. F. C. Lester, of our Berkley Church is in the hospital for operation and treatment, and will likely be incapacitated for preaching and pastoral duties for three or more months. His hosts of friends will join in hope, faith and prayer that this good and useful servant of the Lord may soon be restored.

We print elsewhere this week a very sane and sober as well as a very reasonable and readable article from "Life and Health—the National Health Journal"—by Dr. Arthur E. Hollenbeck. We could wish that all young girls and women readers of THE SUN would take time to read what this eminent and practical physician has to say. It is very interesting, quite reasonable and will be worth anyone's while to read it.

Mrs. Thyra Swint, who had been assistant librarian at Elon College for some years, returned to her home, Wadley, Ala., at the opening of the present term to accept a position there. Writing the editor, Mrs. Swint says: "You will be pleased to hear of the increased enrollment at Southern Union; more than double that of last year." This is good news, indeed, and we congratulate President Ensminger and his co-workers.

The South Wales Methodist Conference in session in London last week decided, after a vote and a sharp debate, to appeal to His Holiness the Pope to summon a conference of all Christian communions in an effort to allay the war threat and now the warfare of Italy and Ethiopia. The resolution as reported under a London date line is as follows: "That we appeal to His Holiness the Pope to summon immediately a conference of all Christian communities for the purpose of definitely denouncing war as an instrument of national policy and of establishing universal and enduring peace." The message was sent by air mail.

The Conference of the Congregational Churches of the Carolinas is to meet with the Circular Congregational Church, Charleston, S. C., October 24th-25th. A very inviting program has been arranged, the present officers of the Conference being Revs. Milo J. Sweet, J. Edward Kirbye, Louis A. Avant, C. Rexford Raymond, Mrs. Geo. N. Edwards and Dr. John Britton Clark. Rev. Milo J. Sweet, Superintendent, advises that this is most likely the last Conference of this body, since the prospect for complete merging of the Congregational and Christian Churches of this area.

All ministers of our Christian Churches of the Southern Convention can secure their ballots for taking the votes in their congregations on the Peace Plebiscite by addressing a card with request for the number desired to J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, Elon College, N. C. The Council for Social Action, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York, has placed in our hands the material for the Peace Plebiscite vote and also the ballots. We have already received requests for nearly 5,000 of these ballots, which we are glad to send and will fill other orders as requested. There are no charges.

Rev. L. L. Wyrick, pastor, assisted by Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, reports a very happy and successful revival last week at Mt. Pleasant Church of the Western N. C. Conference. The church was much revived and the spiritual life of the membership deepened. Five were received into the church on profession of faith, with others to join later. This week Pastor Wyrick, assisted by Rev. J. L. Neese, Reidsville, is in a meeting at Howard's Chapel, North Carolina and Virginia Conference. The prayers of the brotherhood are solicited in behalf of this meeting for a real spiritual revival in the church and community.

We are constantly receiving orders for the "Cent-A-Meal" boxes, having filled orders for quite a few the past week. We have not received an order that was more significant and more thoroughly appreciated than the following which came in sometime ago: "Please send or have sent to me two of the 'Cent-A-Meal' boxes (the price is enclosed). Primarily these boxes are for use by my two little grand-daughters who occupy a seat on either side of me at the table, and I am hopeful that the Mission spirit may find lodgment in their young hearts and minds." Now there is something good for parents and grand-parents to think over.

Rev. T. Fred Wright, Pastor, Waverly, Va., writing October 9th, says: "We had a splendid revival at Centerville Church last week, the pastor preaching and the members helping to do personal work. There were many re-consecrations and five young people joined the church on profession of faith." And then Brother Wright adds that which comes to the mind of many another pastor: "We are trying to interest our people more and more in missions. Sounds strange, doesn't it—having to try to interest people in the very thing that should naturally follow the new birth and uniting with the church. One naturally gets discouraged sometimes, but one can only keep on praying and working."

Rev. B. H. Watkins, pastor of our Lynchburg Church, with three of his good members, Mr. and Mrs. Dunn and Miss Tolley, were very pleasant visitors at Elon and the editorial sanctum last Saturday. Pastor Watkins and his people believe wholeheartedly in budgeting what their church is called upon to raise for the various missionary and benevolent enterprises and in going to work on the same in a methodical and constructive way. The plan works, Pastor Watkins finds, and the askings of his church are in hand for Conference for the various enterprises. The trouble with so many churches is that some members are interested in one enterprise and some in another, and very many are willing to put off the matter of doing anything in particular about the apportionments till the last of the year. By having a budget of all askings and collecting the same at the regular worship periods brings results. Such a plan certainly does away with sporadic effort and high pressure methods, if any methods at all, at or about the close of the church year.

The following is from the Greensboro Daily News of October 12th: "Rev. W. E. Wisseman, new pastor of the First Christian Church, will actively begin his pastorate Sunday morning, it was announced yesterday. He and Mrs. Wisseman and their two children, William Rowland and Mary Graham, arrived here Wednesday night and are now at home at the church parsonage, 315 North Edgeworth Street. Mr. Wisseman's sermon subject Sunday morning is to be "Interpreters of the Word" and at the evening service he will preach on "The Divine Caller." Mr. Wisseman, who has been pastor of the Methodist Church at Schulenberg, Tex., is transferring his ministerial credentials and membership to the North Carolina and Virginia Conference of the Congregational and Christian church. He is a native of Texas and is a graduate of Southern Methodist University, later receiving his M. A. and S. T. B. degrees from Boston University. He traveled for several months in Europe and the Holy Land before becoming pastor of the Schulenberg Methodist church. Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., who for about 12 years has been pastor of the First Christian church, becomes pastor-emeritus of the church. A long period of ill health forced him to give up the active pastorate. Mrs. Wisseman, formerly Miss Mary Graham Rowland, is a daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Rowland, who will continue to make their home at 315 North Edgeworth Street."

HAW RIVER.

Tuesday night, October 8th, the writer and his wife were surprised by a generous pounding of pantry supplies by the Haw River Church S. S., Missionary Society, and friends in and around Haw River. One seldom sees a pounding as large as we received. In addition to a large cake, seasoning supplies, meats, cereals, vegetables (canned and fresh), flour and molasses, there were apples, and both sweet and Irish potatoes. If you desire to know people who are kind, sincere, energetic and cooperative, come to Haw River. May God bless them and keep before them their task in this life.

J. EVERETTE NEESE, Pastor.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Letters have been sent to all the pastors and secretaries of the churches in the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference requesting that the names of all delegates desiring entertainment over-night at the coming session of the conference to be held at Franklin, Va., Oct. 30th—Nov. 1st, be sent in by Oct. 18th to Mr. E. L. Beale, Franklin, Va.

This notice is inserted for the benefit of persons outside the conference territory or those anywhere who may not be reached through the churches who expect to attend the Conference sessions and who wish entertainment.

Please send your names to Mr. Beale as soon as possible. Our Franklin people are looking forward with pleasure to doing their full part in the entertainment of Conference delegates and visitors.

ELWOOD W. JONES, Pastor.

HOPE.

Hope is but a candle, yet its timid, flickering light
Ever burns the brightest through the darkest night,
And if some treacherous shadows hide that feeble ray,
It seems my very soul is hid, 'till the shadows pass away.

Hope is but a candle, yet it will always be
Shining through the harshest storms my life may send to me,
And I shall trust its beacon, as those in darkness can,
For hope is but a candle that God has lit for man.

CONGREGATIONAL AND CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

COOPERATIVE MISSIONS IN EARNEST.

A program for cooperative missions on an increasing scale will be presented for endorsement to the National or Home Boards of the Congregational and Christian Churches at their annual meeting to be held in conjunction with the New England Regional Meeting, October 19th to 21st, 1935, in Providence, R. I.

The cooperative program was formulated by the Home Missions Council of the United States and Canada. The Congregational-Christian Churches will be the first denomination to act upon many of its provisions. It has already been approved in a statement of policy adopted by the administrative committee for Church Extension of the directors of the National Boards and by the directors themselves as a body. The latter recommend it in their report to the annual meeting. Dr. Ernest M. Halliday, general secretary for Congregational and Christian Church Extension is president of the Home Missions Council.

The program looks forward to early adjustments when the following will become cooperative: Alaskan missions; city missions; Indian missions; new community missions; preaching missions; rural missions; Spanish-speaking missions.

Cooperation has already been established under the auspices of the Home Missions Council and the Council of Women for Home Missions in missions for farm and cannery migrant workers, in union religious centers at the great dam projects of the federal government in different parts of the country and in a bureau of church architecture.

* * * *

A THREE-PART PROGRAM.

The establishment of cooperative missions is the third of three main divisions in the cooperative missionary program proposed for the churches of America by the Home Missions Council. The elimination of over-lapping or duplication in work is the first part and the allocation of unchurched areas is the second.

The National Comity Agreement into which the Boards of six denominations have entered this year is a comprehensive plan for eliminating competition, based on principles long accepted in many localities. The allocation of unchurched areas has been gradually winning acceptance. While it has been practiced many years in foreign missions it was first tried in a large way in home missions when Puerto Rico was opened to American influence in 1898. The evangelization of that island has since been proceeding with the principal denominations concentrating their efforts in assigned sections. About twenty years later when large regions in Montana were first being thrown open for homesteading, the principal of allocation was again followed. It is also being generally followed for suburban church planting under the auspices of the federations of churches in large cities.

* * * *

LOGICAL PROGRESS IN THE PROGRAM.

The new program for cooperative home missionary work is only new in a relative sense. It brings into a systematic, national plan the principles or policies which have been already tested and approved here or there, sometimes quite widely, in interdenominational relationships. The special contribution which the new program makes is in the logical organization of its divisions whereby it emphasizes the natural progress from elimination of competition, through allocation of areas to cooperation in missionary undertakings themselves.

Allocation of unchurched areas when first adopted was a great advance. Today it is becoming clear that it is not enough that there should be no fratercide between Christian communions in competing efforts to "church" a town or region. The blessing of the Church universal in definite sponsorship of each communion insofar as it can be obtained should be provided every missionary undertaking.

COOPERATION POSSIBLE WITHOUT ORGANIC PROGRAM.

In their report to the annual meeting the directors of the National Boards state:

"Never before have the Churches been so ready for cooperation as they are today. Every constructive effort in that direction arouses interest and meets with cordial approval. Certain facts stand out. First, the issues which gave rise to most of our present-day evangelical denominations have burned themselves out. Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Congregationalists and many others all preach the same gospel and all refrain from practising it in about equal degrees. Secondly superficial differences in form of worship and vested rights in church property are not sufficient reason for the continuation as separate units of many local congregations founded in the heat of controversy and the promotional enthusiasm of

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE CHURCH MAKES HISTORY.

Italy is making war on Ethiopia. The nations are now so interlocked by the ties of rapid transit, instantaneous communication, economic and social conditions that it is doubtful if two nations can go to war without involving other nations. However, there is one organization, one body of people, who can keep the United States from being drawn into this conflict. That body is the Church. This may seem to be a platitude of doubtful authority. It is, however, an indisputable fact.

The real history maker of time and of the nations is the Church. Legislative and executive authority reduce history to record, but the Church creates history, molds human character and shapes human destiny. It has ever been so. The tides of a nation's or a people's life rises as high as and no higher than, the currents of their religious life. Legislative and executive standards are high only as the moral and spiritual standards of a people will allow them to be made, high or low. Law has been defined and rightly so, as "The organized virtue of the community or state." The creators, the harbingers and the cultivators of virtue are the churches and the assemblies meeting for worship, moral betterment and spiritual uplift. Only as worship is debased, and the Church fails of its true function (in creating and developing moral and spiritual virtues and values) does it lose its prestige and power. So through the service of the sanctuary, does the community lay the foundation of law and order. The State recognizes this function of the Church as its indispensable agent and ally. Hence church property is not taxed, and divine worship is protected by the law and the politics of the municipality or state.

War is wicked and without excuse. How futile indeed, seem the battles of the past in the light of future events and the progress of history. If the Church outlaws war and makes war inconsistent with the virtue of the individual, the community and the state; if war is held up as the hideous monster that it is; as the device of demons that it is; our nation will be kept out of war. What a lesson, indeed, we should learn from the late World War and are learning. We were drawn into that maelstrom and holocaust of hell by, and fooled ourselves with, the slogan, "We have gone to war to end war." It was a vile slander and a libel to begin with. War does not end war. "They that take the sword shall perish by the sword." We took the sword and, heaven knows, we are reaping the death agonies of it now. The backwash of that awful ordeal still beats over us, leaving its slime of chaotic economic conditions, impaired spiritual strength, and lowered moral standards. There are hundreds, yea thousands, today, suffering broken bodies in hospitals, and raving in mad-houses solely as a result of that almost "holy war" that we cajoled ourselves into thinking was to save us from future wars, and establish high standards of international conduct and national behavior. What a delusion and a snare our noble slogans have proven to be.

President Roosevelt and his Cabinet and Congress will not be able, with all their wisdom and authority, to prevent war unless the churches shall do that thing for them. The churches are the makers of history and the people who constantly inquire in the House of the Lord get wisdom, and guidance and grace to prevent war, and to save the nations from bloodshed, fire and sword. The real makers of a country's history are the Sunday Schools, Endeavor Societies, the churches and those who seek by daily living and conduct to make straight the path of our Lord through the wilderness, and who bow down before Him that they may learn His will and go His way. It has been said, and truly, that the history of Abraham, founder ond father of the faithful, could be traced by the altars he built to Jehovah. The same may be said of the nations and the peoples since Abraham's day. Real history is written, the standard and the destiny of peoples are formed and fashioned, by those who seek the face and the favor of Jehovah, or by those who depart therefrom to their own destruction and to the destruction of the nations.

AT PLAY.

It was a sound philosopher, as well as an observant father of a family, who said, "We need not be uneasy about our youths, either for their minds or morals, while at work, provided they are properly directed, restrained and guided when at play." As civilization advances and productive power of machinery increases, mankind, young and old, have more time for play and greater opportunity for leisure. Our Government particularly under the new deal is recognizing this, and the associated press is authority for the statement that our Government now has more thn 140,000 persons employed building places for people to play, and that officials say the figures will run higher when the relief program gets into full swing. Of this number, some 40,000 are at work on over $19,000,000 worth of athletic fields, stadiums, swimming pools, golf courses, armories and tennis courts. The other hundred thousand of workers employed by the Government are engaged for the most part in working on State and National parks and playgrounds.

We have already learned that ball-players and others engaged in amusement and entertainment are paid far bigger and better salaries than those of equal skill and intelligence who are employed in any sort of serious work and gainful occupation. One of the problems confronting the moralists, both parents, teachers and pastors of churches, of the present and future will be that of so directing play and players that strong character may be built up. David, the sweet singer of Israel, was brought into prominence at the king's court because of his ability "to play well." "And Saul said unto his servants, provide me now a man that can play well and bring him to me." And later when David was chided and wrongfully reviled for his playing, said: "I will play before the Lord," and the psalmist enjoins: "Sing unto him a new song; play skillfully with a loud noise." Some of the finest traits of character may be brought out and developed in play; team work; coordination; heroic effort on the part of the individual, not for his sake, but for the sake of the game and his mates. It is the boisterous, reckless, selfish playing that leaves God out, desecrates His name of His holy day, or His holy temple, that results in injury to the mind and the soul. The great problem of the future is how to properly use leisure and play time.

INGRAM CHURCH.

Ingram Church, Halifax County, Virginia, enjoyed a great day, Sunday, October 13th. This church, with Rev. H. E. Crutchfield as pastor, has set a pace and a standard for other churches, rural and urban. Adequate Sunday school rooms and spacious halls for religious and social gatherings have been added to the main auditorium and, seemingly, a perfect system of heating and ventilation has been installed, so that even with the doors and windows closed to prevent drafts, fresh air is constantly introduced and impure air removed, and the temperature in the building is kept the same throughout the service with comfort to all, both to those who are in the rear as well as those in the front of the auditorium. The interior of the church has been beautified and made reverential. Especially is this feature marked by Gothic windows in the rear and about the pulpit, revealing through the hand of the artist in cathedral glass the form and features of the Christ in prayer. The service last Sunday took on more than local or community significance. In addition to the exercises by the children and others of the church and choir, the representatives of the denominational enterprises as well as former pastors of the church were present and took part in the delightful and varied program. Various men and committees who had contributed to the building were recognized and added a happy word to the occasion. Only Rev. F. C. Lester, head of our Religious Education Department, was missing from the official staff of those representing the church enterprises—Missions, the College, the Orphanage, The Christian Sun. It was a great idea for the day and really made history of the church, the community and the denomination.

TREES.

Many a tree is found in the wood,
And every tree for its use is good;
Some for the strength of the gnarled root,
Some for the sweetness of flower and fruit;
Some for shelter against the storm,
And some to keep the hearthstone warm.
Some for the roof, and some for the beam,
And some for a boat to breast the stream;
In the wealth of the wood since the world began
The trees have offered their gifts to man.

A DOCTOR'S WARNING TO THE FAIR SEX.

By Arthur E. Hollenbeck, M. D.

The doctor opened the door of his private office into the reception room to call in the next patient. There sat a young girl puffing away on a cigarette, making the room blue with tobacco smoke. This girl had been under his care for months for extreme nervousness and a chronic cough, paying him good money for advice and treatment. He had talked to her seriously several times about the harmful effects of smoking in her particular case, as well as the harmful effects in general. She had promised her cooperation, and that she would try to quit smoking. Naturally the doctor was disappointed and not a little provoked that after all his efforts in her behalf she should have the audacity to sit in his office and fill the room with tobacco smoke! Her only excuse was, "My nerves are so jumpy and on edge, I had to have a smoke."

In talking to women about the harmful effects of the use of tobacco, they almost always come back with the alibi that men have smoked for generations, so why can't they? That is the phase of tobacco smoking that I wish to discuss in this article. Most men smokers will agree that smoking is harmful to them; therefore for the harmful effects of smoking in general, we will accept that admission. From a moral standpoint, what is wrong for a man is also wrong for a woman, and vice versa. When it comes to health, that is not always true. A man and a woman cannot do the same thing and always expect the same effect upon the health. . Chopping or sawing wood is good exercise for a man, but it would hardly be appropriate exercise for a woman. The reason is self-evident.

A record of the number of cigarettes smoked by patients reveals that the number smoked by women is almost double that smoked by men. A man seldom smokes more than a package of twenty cigarettes a day, and the great majority smoke less than a package. On the other hand, women almost always smoke more than a package a day. We may say then, in general, that women smokers smoke more than do men smokers. If this be true, there must be some cause for it. Tobacco contains nicotine, a powerful habit-forming drug, which soothes the nerves as most other habit-forming drugs do. Before long it takes more cigarettes to gain this effect, and one does not feel comfortable unless he is under that soothing influence. This creates the tendency to smoke more and more to keep the nerves from getting "jumpy." The tobacco advertiser takes advantage of this point when he publishes the saying of a woman smoker, "I can smoke as many as I want because they are mild and don't make my nerves jumpy." Of course they do not make the nerves "jumpy" —until a smoker tries going without, and then see how the nerves jump!

From a nervous standpoint, women are generally much more high-strung than men. Their nerves are more easily upset; a cigarette stops that "jumpy" feeling, and before long, great quantities of cigarettes are consumed in an attempt to soothe the nerves. Since a man's nerves are not so keenly tuned, it is not necessary that he smoke so many to gain this satisfaction.

A girl came into a doctor's office some time ago, and began to cry. She had not even told him her name. The doctor thought some terrible catastrophe must have befallen her, and tried to comfort her, so he could find out what the trouble was. She finally said that her nerves had gone to pieces. He treated her kindly, and finally asked her how many cigarettes she smoked daily. She stared and asked, "How do you know I am a smoker?" He told her he could tell by the appearance of her face, by the condition of her nerves, and the telltale stains on her fingers. When asked how many cigarettes she smoked, she said, "Oh, not very many." A package a day? She said she guessed so. Two packages a day? "Yes." As many as fifty cigarettes in a day? And she said that was about the average. She was smoking from ten to twelve cigarettes from the time she went to bed at night until she got up in the morning. She would wake up every few hours during the night, and smoke a cigarette or two. The doctor tried to explain kindly to her how the cigarettes were affecting her nerves, that he could help her, but that cigarettes were largely to blame for her condition, and that she would have to quit smoking before she could hope to be well. After an hour, she left, saying she would rather die than give up her cigarettes. Her will power was gone, her nerves were wrecked, and she was well on the way to the psychopathic ward of a hospital. Yet she had smoked her first cigarette only two years before, to appear smart and because she wanted "to follow the crowd."

A woman usually has a much harder fight than a man to stop smoking. A man will struggle for a while, but his nerves are not so high-strung; so he soon gets control of himself and the battle is won. But when a woman tries to quit, because her nerves are more keenly tuned and on a higher tension, they will "fly all to pieces" and she just must have a cigarette to quiet them.

Nicotine is a deadly drug . In ordering powerful drugs for a patient, his weight is taken into consideration. For instance, if a patient who weighed 150 pounds were given a normal dose of some powerful drug, his son who weighed 75 pounds would receive about ane half as much. Men, as a general rule, weigh more than women, and for that reason are getting more nicotine per pound weight if they smoke the same number of cigarettes as a man; but when they smoke more they are getting much more nicotine per pound weight than does a man. Taking into consideration their delicately attuned nervous system, is it any wonder it is harder for a woman to quit the cigarette habit than for a man?

A pitiful sight is to see an expectant mother or a nursing mother smoking a cigarette. For nine months before the birth of the child, we are very particular in regard to the diet of the mother, so that she may properly nourish the child and have a strong, healthy baby. Yet she will saturate her body with nicotine and try to believe it will do the baby no harm. Cigarettes do have a definite injurious effect upon the health of the unborn child.

A nursing mother must surely impart nicotine to her baby. There is a difference of opinion as to whether nicotine is present in the milk of a mother who smokes. It is known, however, then when other drugs are given to the mother, they have a definite effect upon the nursing child. Authorities tell us that there is no substitute for mother's milk, and that it is nothing short of a calamity when a mother cannot nurse her baby. Yet many times a baby which was not doing well has had to be taken off the breast of a smoking mother who refused to quit. When it was put on a formula, it would pick up immediately. In view of this fact, some doctors have been tempted to take the baby off the breast of a smoking mother as a matter of routine.

Some time ago a young woman was in bed with "heart trouble," as she called it. There was nothing wrong with her heart except that she was a cigarette fiend, and had a typical "tobacco heart." She was told that she must stop smoking, but she complained that she could not. Finally she was told very emphatically, and perhaps somewhat roughly, that if she did not quit, she would be just another case for the undertaker before long. She finally woke up to the fact that this was the truth and said, "Well, if that is the case, I will quit." And she did. She had a terrible battle, and had to have nerve sedatives and heart stimulants upon several occasions. Some have said that tobacco is not habit forming, that they can quit any time they wish; but one would have a hard time convincing those who have quit of the truth of such a statement.

If tobacco had no other effect than its habit-forming properties, that alone is good reason for leaving it absolutely alone. Man was created upright, with a mind to control the actions of his body. Any drug which has an influence over the brain that renders it incapable of controlling our actions, should be looked upon with abhorrence. Tobacco enslaves its user, and holds him in a grip which leads to ruination of health and self-respect.

My appeal may not have much effect upon those with whom the habit is fixed. But my great appeal is to the young girls who have not started to smoke. All kinds of propaganda are being circulated by the tobacco manufacturers, that smoking is not harmful, that it is smart, it gives you a life, it quiets the nerves. Don't believe a word of it. They know if they can get you to smoke the first cigarette, the next is easy, and the third is easier, and then they have a new cash customer. The girl who smokes falls an easy prey to other vices. Why not resolve now that you are one girl who is not going to pay homage to the tobacco trust by being a victim of deception?—From Life and Health Magazine.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The following letter is being sent to the pastors and church secretaries of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference as a suggestion and plea in making annual report to the conference:

"I am enclosing Report Blanks for your use in making your report to the next session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference which meets at Franklin, Va., Oct. 30th-Nov. 1, 1935. Please fill out your report very carefully and return to me before October 28th. These Reports should be tabulated before October 30th.

I wish to call your attention to the Conference Apportionments. You will find the table of the Apportionments on page 89 of the last year's ANNUAL. There are eight separate and distinct Apportionments in that table. The first two of these items are for the work of this Conference; the other six items are Apportionments for the various agencies of the Convention. Your church should first see that the Apportionments for Home Missions (the first item in the table), Conference Fund and Convention Fund are sent in full to Conference, or the Conference Treasurer. The Conference has definite obligations for all of this fund for Home Missions in the Conference, and the other two funds are for the actual expenses of the Conference and the Convention. Please keep this in mind in making out your Report. Some of the churches have already sent in their full Apportionment for Elon College, Superannuation, Convention Missions and Foreign Missions. In that case these funds are already on the preferred list. No one objects to this and no one who understands the facts should object to the priority payment of the Conference and Convention operating expenses.

Money raised during the year by your Church, Sunday School or Dollar a Month Club and sent direct to Elon College should be credited to the Elon College Fund; money raised by your church, and Sunday School and sent to Dr. J. O. Atkinson for Missions, should be credited one-half to Convention Home Missions and one-half to Foreign Missions; money raised and sent it for Ministerial Relief should be credited to Superannuated Fund; money raised and sent to the Board of Christian Education, under the leadership of Rev. F. C. Lester, should be credited to Christian Education Fund.

Now, how shall the money sent to Conference be divided? This question also applies to money already sent to the Conference Treasurer to be held until Conference for distribution. If your church had raised the different Apportionments in full, including the money already sent to the various agencies, your problem of filling out your Report Blank is simple. If your church has not raised the Apportionments in full, I make this suggestion: If you have enough money in hand, pay the Apportionments for Home Missions (first item), Conference Fund and Convention Fund in full. Divide the remainder among the other Apportionments, on a pro-rata basis, after giving consideration of the amounts, if any, already sent to any of the other agencies or departments above named. Use your best judgment in seeking to support all these departments of the Convention on a fair and equitable basis.

In sending your money to Conference please use check and attach to the enclosed slip, with statement as to the division of your money to the various funds. Do not include other credits on this slip. But include your credits and the cash on the items in church Report Blank."

This letter and Blank will be sent out before this appears in THE SUN. It will be marvelous if this financial plan is understood, and more than wonderful if this explanation is not criticised. After the most careful explanation it will not be understood by some persons. Further explanations will be cheerfully made, if necessary, and unfavorable criticism will be accepted with pleasure. Under the plan, which is not ideal, every church will have a definite record of its support of the various enterprises of the denomination. Under the former plan, this information was not available.

PAYING—BEGGING.

God blessed us with a certain amount of ability and physical energy. He has also blessed us with opportunity for the exercise of our ability and the use of our strength. As a result of our activity and frugality, we accumulate a certain amount of material values. Material values are necessary for our existence and comfort. It costs something today. It is expensive to live as we would like to live. No man who earns money can live the kind of Christian life that he wants to live without sharing that money in the interest of the cause that has endeared itself to him. If a man lives and is truly Christian, he will find added joy in contributing for the support of Christianity in the earth. We are distinctively human—we as a rule do not share our material wealth without being asked to and many of us don't then.

Christian people have compelled solicitation for the support of the church until many think of such solicitation as begging. Thursday of last week I was discussing the affairs of the church with a friend of mine. He said, "We are getting along fairly well in our church but we have just adopted a system that will require a large number of us to go out every month and beg for the church." I said, "You are not begging, you are giving the people an opportunity to pay their debts." We are debtors to God. From him cometh all things that we enjoy. We owe him a part of what he has lent us. If a man does not give for the support of the church without some good brother asking him, the brother who does the asking is not begging, he is reminding the negligent brother of his unfaithfulness as a steward of Christ.

Too many of our churches have gotten in the habit of deferring the payment of pastors' salaries in full, the raising of funds to meet conference requirements to the last month or even to the last week and then those who are most interested are compelled to make a campaign or allow the church to close the year without having met its obligations. When such a campaign is necessary, the one who solicits should not be classed as a beggar, but those who are solicited should repent of their sins of neglect and pay an added portion in the hope of gaining favor with the Lord.

There is a material value, of course, in contributing for the cause of righteousness but there is more decidedly a spiritual value in voluntary contributions. Christ has promised that those who shall receive good measure, pressed down, shaken together, heaping up, and running over. This promise is not fulfilled necessarily with things material but it may be fulfilled with things spiritual. The individual who possesses and practices the grace of giving has great joy in the sharing of his possession for the good of humanity and for the spread of the gospel in the earth. No man has impoverished himself materially by contributing to the support of the church. Many have impoverished themselves spiritually and denied themselves the assurance and the peace of God by withholding their gifts. If we could only realize that voluntary giving of material possessions reacts upon the individual who gives with great spiritual emphasis resulting in increased religious joy. Christ asked on one occasion what did it profit a man if he should gain the whole world and lose his own soul. The question is asked of us today. Spiritual values are eternal. Material values are timely. The one may perish with the day, the other shall last through eternity.

If you have not practiced giving one-tenth of what you earn to the Christ and the kingdom, give tithing a trial and see if your religious experiences are not greatly enriched, if your spiritual vision is not greatly widened, and if your religious power is not materially increased. He will pour you out a blessing to such an extent that there will not be room enough to receive it.

It is the hope of the writer that every church of our convention may realize its responsibility to meet the requirements of the convention and that they may be given grace to perform such responsibilities.

L. E. SMITH.

MRS. CLARA DOCIA ELEY.
An Appreciation.

On Tuesday afternoon of August 27th, in the presence of a large assemblage of relatives and friends that had gathered in the auditorium of the Christian Temple—the church she loved—funeral services were conducted by the pastor, Rev. H. S. Hardcastle assisted by Dr. L. E. Smith of Elon College and a former pastor.

The casket was borne by loving hands to Elmwood Cemetery and there, surrounded by the sorrowing family and a host of intimate friends, we placed it, containing the mortal body, beside that of her husband, Bro. James A. Eley, who had preceded her in death but a few short years.

As I stood there and saw the casket being lowered to its last resting place, I could not keep back the thought that if there is life beyond the grave and if there is recognition there, and we, as Christians, believe that there is, what a happy meeting that was, of two souls permitted to travel the road of life together for more than fifty years, then separated for a little while and now re-united for all eternity.

For several months before the death of Mr. Eley he was a great sufferer and much of that time she too, was sorely afflicted, and for many, many weeks they occupied their beds in the same room, giving such comfort and cheer as they could to each other, as they were gently cared for by loving hands and hearts.

Mrs. Eley was 75 years of age. She was a daughter of the late Jacob and Sarah Morris Beaton. She was a native of Isle of Wight County and had been a resident of Norfolk for 46 years. She is survived by two daughters, Mrs. H. J. Dixon and Mrs. A. B. Jarvis, one grandson, H. J. Dixon, Jr., and two great grandchildren.

Mrs. Eley loved her church with a sincere love and devotion. She gave generously of her time, talent and means. She was a charter member of the old Memorial Christian Temple. When the Third Christian Church was organized. She was one of the charter members in that group of 26. Also when the present Christian Temple was organized, she was in that original body.

When the present building of Christian Temple was to be erected, it was to her that was accorded the privilege of turning the first spade of dirt in the beginning of building activities.

She was the first president of the Ladies' Aid Society, and gave the first money for the building fund that was raised by the ladies' group of the church. For many years she sang in the choir of her church.

Possibly her greatest love in the work for her church was the Sunday School. From the beginning of the Memorial Christian Temple, until she became identified with the Third Christian Church, through that time, and for some years after the completion of the present building of the Christian Temple, she was at the head of the children's department of the Sunday school, of each of these organizations. Many of the leading and active members of our church and others too, can date the beginning of their interest in the church to the time that they were in "Mrs. Eley's Infant Class," as it was called.

She was faithful in her attendance at church, was always present when possible, many times though she did not feel physically able to be there. She was in her usual place in the Temple, the last Sunday of her life. She passed quickly and peacefuly into the beyond at 11:40 o'clock on Saturday night.

She was a loving faithful wife, a model mother, a kind and sympathetic friend, devoted to her home, always hospitable and gracious, and the doer of many good deeds, beloved by a host of friends.

No woman was ever blessed with more devoted and faithful daughters than she was. They ministered devotedly to her every need. Mr. Jarvis, the son-in-law who had spent all of his married life in the home, was loved by her as a son and he has said that she was a true mother to him.

May our Heavenly Father's richest blessings rest on her family and may they all be re-united without a single exception, is the sincere wish of this writer, and I am sure that in this, I voice the sentiment of her host of friends.

"LET GEORGE DO IT."

Some years ago one of the favorite catch-phrases of the day was, "Let George do it." This saying was slang, to be sure, but it summed up in a few words and sparkling metaphor an attitude of careless indifference, a shirking of duty, a shifting of responsibility, a transfer of one's own burden to the shoulders of someone else. What "Let George do it" really meant was just this—that the individual making the remark was conscious of his personal duty and responsibility in the matter, but was content to let someone else do the job for him and accept the responsibility. He was perfectly willing to let "George" assume the task regardless of whether "George" ought to do it, whether "George" could do it as well as he—indeed, whether "George" was capable of doing it at all. It was a debonair way of being a "slacker." And if offered a sort of salve to the conscience since there was conjured up a mythical person, for convenience called "George," to whose non-existent shoulders might be transferred one's own responsibility. "Let George do it."

Though this phrase has long since passed into the linguistic junk pile, its spirit is still very much alive. We see evidence of this in many places and in various social groups. Its ugly head is reared even in the church and among professing Christians. Indeed, when we hear pious persons flatly refusing to serve in the work of the Kingdom, not from lack of ability but from sheer laziness or indifference we almost fancy we can see old Satan himself, horns, hoofs and tail, standing at their elbow with knowing leer as he slyly whispers in their ready ear, "Let George do it." Every pastor and Sabbath school superintendent, every president of a Ladies' Aid Society, Missionary Society, or Young People's Work, knows how often thoroughly capable persons absolutely refuse to accept office or committee work in these various departments of the church. And they refuse not because of modesty or lack of ability, but because they want to be entertained rather than serve; because it is somewhat easier and much more pleasant to sit idly by and visit or gossip while somebody else does the work! And such persons seem always able to call the ghostly "George" to their assistance, evidently having relied upon him so much that he has become real to them.

Now this sort of thing is fraught with deadly menace to the local church and is perhaps the greatest present hindrance to the advancement of the Kingdom of God. Just a few actual instances will show this to be true. Not long ago a group of young people prepared to present a religious drama in their church. Ten persons were required as actors and quickly obtained. But after some two weeks of practice several players dropped out. Only a week was left for new players to learn the parts. A desperate effort was made, new players secured and trained only to have the key player fail to appear the evening the performance was to be given. At a recent annual meeting of a Ladies' Aid Society member after member flatly refused to accept nomination as secretary, the office finally fell to a woman who is not a member of any church. Yet this society has forty-four active members, forty-two of whom are members of the church. In another Aid Society this same refusal to serve developed several years ago. Today that society has thirty-six members, twenty-three of whom are not church members, five of the church members being inactive. Every officer in this Aid Society is not and never has been a church member. Needless to say, this local church has lost its power to interest people and is becoming a mere dry husk. In another local church only one steward was a member of the church. In another local church, the discipline of which expressly provides otherwise, a trustee is serving

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

REV. HARRY S. MARTIN.

(One of our missionaries.)

By MISS D. P. CUSHING, News Editor.

The gospel of the deeper plow is being preached in a highly effective and practical manner by Rev. Harry S. Martin of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in Tunghsien, North China, who speaks.

Mr. Martin through his rural service and agricultural work promotes and supervises county fairs, sponsors 4-H Clubs among the young people and teaches a full program in Jefferson Academy. These fairs are the Red Letter days for the entire community for they bring information about improving crops, exhibits of labor-saving machinery,—simple enough to meet the farmer's pocketbook—instruct as to proper breeding of poultry and stock as well as the control of insect pests through lectures and movies and the spreading of health knowledge by the same media.

This type of work gives Mr. Martin an unusual and sympathetic knowledge of the common folk of China and their problems. Jefferson Academy, which is a high grade school for boys, is doing a great many other things which help the rural people, such as sending out radio programs from their own station, LUHO, and making receiving sets to place in the country districts. The purpose of this station is to arouse public interest in the utilization of radio, not only as a source of good amusement, but of public instruction.

Right along with this type of rural education is the 4-H Club idea which Mr. Martin has been sponsoring among the young folks of China and which has taken hold in splendid fashion. Because the Chinese writing does not have an alphabet, a letter cannot be used as in the case of the 4-H Club in America, so that the character for "progress" or "going forward" has been used, making it more accurate to call them the 4-Progress Clubs.

In 1933, during the Japanese hostilities, 10,000 refugee women and children crowded the American Mission Compound and Jefferson Academy. Mr. Martin, was right in the midst of this, and he brings a thrilling story of what happened and of the bright spots which he found at this time of distress, suspicion and fear. One of these was the way in which the church people worked together and the untiring and cheerful service of the students as they tried to help the people.

When he was on furlough last Mr. Martin was in great demand as a speaker because of his unusual background of knowledge of China's problems and his sympathetic and intelligent understanding of the situations there. On this furlough he has an even greater fund of first-hand knowledge.

Mr. Martin first went to China in 1910. He was born in Spring Valley, Wisconsin, and educated at Carleton College and Bangor and Yale Seminaries.

FIGHTING DEATHLY SWAMP.

A most dramatic public works program new underway in Turkey is the draining of the marshes at the outlet of the Meander river known for years as "Execution Lake." This region has dealt out death for 200 years thru tropical malaria directly traceable to this area. Today the long necks of 17 great excavating machines rise above the marshland and in a few months the name of this land will be "Saglik Ovasi" or "Health Plain".

NEWS ITEMS OF SOCIETIES.

MRS. W. M. JAY, Contributing Editor.

The Cypress Chapel Woman's Society had good attendance and interest the past year and reported their apportionment raised in full. This society ceased the refreshment plan at their meetings this year and feel that their giving was increased. They met with the Bethlehem society for the joint study of the mission book, "Japanese Women Speak" and report a pleasant and helpful time. Mrs. C. W. Rountree is the president and leader of this loyal group.

This conference year has closed with thirty-two societies in the whole Southern Convention sending in news items. We are glad to hear from this many but how fine it would have been to have heard from all. Don't wait until Conference time to write, for maybe your plans and outlines for the new year will be helpful to some other society. Call your officers together and plan your year's work; then tell the "SUN" about it. May this new year be filled with the best yet and may you have a yearning for bigger and better service to your Master.

The Holland Junior Society has done some outstanding work the past year under the leadership of Mrs. L. J. Doughtrey, Superintendent and Miss Mary Nelle Jay, President. They used as their study, "Japan" and carried out the ideo in all their meetings in many ways. They held four public programs during the year. One program was given at Holy Neck Church when all kinds of Japanese prints and curios were displayed. Guests were always invited to each meeting. The society was divided into groups according to ages. Group One gave the Mothers' Day program in the Sunday school devotional hour and the whole society sponsored the Children's Day service. Missionary calendars with rain barrels for mite boxes have been made to be used next year. Last year they had attractive program booklets or year books, used the Elephant poster idea, which was to be built by selling the parts and sold various articles.

Their Home Mission project was collecting clothes for Mildred Hines at the Elon Orphanage and the children were so interested in this that a nice box has been sent to her. This has been a busy group of boys and girls who are always ready to work in the Master's Cause.

The Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference which met at Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., October 4th, was well attended and a strong program had been prepared and was rendered in a helpful and efficient way. The societies showed much improvement over the last year's work and an optimistic spirit seemed to prevail. Many were the inquiries about the study books for this year, program materials, devotionals, etc. This shows interest and a determination to win. The program packets, assembled by the Southern Convention Committee, were distributed and if any society failed to get their copy, they may get same by communicating with Mrs. E. L. Beale, Franklin, Va., who is the new Literature Superintendent of our conference. Also if you will see her at the General Conference which meets with the Franklin Church, October 30th, she will be glad to assist you and help in any way possible. Mrs. Beale is a faithful worker and has her task at heart. She works through Mrs. D. E. Brown, 287 Fourth Ave., New York City, who was our guest at Norfolk and either of these ladies are at your service. Get your extra Leader's Manuals when you go to conference. Every society should send for a copy of the envelope series for June, 1935, for in it you will find four excellent programs besides plenty of helpful reading, all on Mexico.

Thank offering time is nearing and soon our societies will be wondering what to have for a public program. There are several programs for same in the president's exchange which a number of you left your name for at conference but the best plan is to write to Mrs. Brown and ask her to send you samples of Thankoffering Material and to suggest plays and pageants for same. The office has one good devotional program this is fine for this year and others may be made up by assembling what you like best.

Let us all boost our societies, cooperate with our officers and make this year the best in the history of Eastern Virginia Women's work.

MRS. W. M. JAY.

A Story for the Children

SIX PIECES OF CANDY.

Mary Lou had six pieces of candy. They were in a box on the shelf in her room. Each piece was of a different color: one yellow, one pink, one green, one white, one orange, and one brown. The brown one was made of chocolate.

Mary Lou loved to count the candies. She lifted the cover from the box and pointed her finger at the pink candy.

"One," said Mary Lou.

She pointed her finger at the green candy.

"Two," said Mary Lou.

Then she pointed her finger at the yellow candy.

"Three," said Mary Lou—and pointed at the next candy. It was brown.

"Four," said Mary Lou. There were two more candies in the box—the orange and the white.

Mary Lou pointed her finger at the white one.

"Five," she said slowly.

Then she pointed to the orange one.

"Six," said Mary Lou. She put the cover on to the box, and went downstairs. Her mother was sitting on the porch, sewing.

"May I eat some of my candy, Mummy?" asked Mary Lou.

"You may have one piece every day until it is all gone," answered her mother.

Mary Lou went upstairs again. She lifted the cover from the box and looked at her candies. She saw the pink candy, and the yellow candy, and the white candy, and the green candy, and the brown candy. She did not know which one to take. After a little while she put the cover on to the box once more and went very slowly, step, step step downstairs.

"Was the piece of candy good?" asked Mother.

"I didn't eat any," said Mary Lou. "It is very pretty. I think I will save it until tomorrow."

Mary Lou sat down on the porch steps, and smoothed out her dress. It was yellow, like the flowers growing beside the steps. The flowers were the same color as the piece of yellow candy. Mary Lou thought she would eat the yellow candy. She stood up on the steps.

"Patsy and Joan are coming to play with you," said her mother.

Mary Lou looked down the street. She saw two little girls in pink dresses. She ran to meet them.

"Let's play tea-party," said Joan. Mary Lou ran into the house to bring her table and chairs. Patsy and Joan ran in, too. They brought out the dolls and the dishes.

"Why don't you ask the new little girl across the street?" asked Mary Lou's mother.

Mary Lou thought that would be fun. She brought a box for the new little girl to sit on, because there were not chairs enough to go around.

"You have a pretty dress," said Patsy to the new little girl. She had on a white dress with green flowers on it. They began playing tea-party.

"Martha and Janey are out in their yard," said Mary Lou's mother.

Mary Lou looked over at the next yard. Martha and Janey were peeping through the fence. They were wearing pretty blue dresses. Mary Lou went skippety-skip across the lawn.

"Come over to play tea-party," called Mary Lou.

Martha and Janey ran out at their gate and in at Mary Lou's gate. Mary Lou brought a big box for them to sit on. They began to play tea-party again.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

The editor of this page is getting along nicely after an operation in Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Virginia, last week.

STATEWIDE YOUTH CONFERENCE OF NORTH CAROLINA.

On Thanksgiving week-end, in Winston-Salem, North Carolina, a Statewide Youth Conference will be held under the leadership of the National Youth Committee. The Winston-Salem Ministers' Association is cooperating with the national committee in bringing this conference to this city. The theme for the program is "Christian Youth Building a New World," and the speakers and discussion leaders are being carefully chosen from among the outstanding men of every denomination.

The conference begins Friday noon, November 29th, and continues through Sunday, December 1st. Each local church may have as delegate two young people, the pastor and one adult advisor. Registration fee will be one dollar per delegate. Entertainment will be furnished on the Harvard plan.

Information about the program will be announced in the near future. In the meantime, the Youth Fellowship key-worker or some other responsible person is expected to see that their church will be represented by appointing two delegates between the ages of 16 and 25 and urging that one of their adult advisors and their pastor be present for this conference. Correspondence concerning this matter should go to Rev. C. C. Roberts, Winston-Salem, N. C.

The Winston-Salem Ministers' Association is desirous that this conference shall prove a blessing to the young people of North Carolina. Will each of you lend assistance by recruiting your young people and adult leaders?

STRONG MINDS IN WEAK BODIES.

Thomas Edison not only suffered from deafness but was also a sick man during half of his life. He was a diabetic and had a gastric ulcer. He slept poorly and digested his food badly.

In his suffering, Edison was not an exception among geniuses. William McDermott, a newspaper writer, points out that weak and diseased bodies are typical among those who do excellent creative work.

Beethoven, the composer, and Dryden, the poet, were deaf. Milton was blind, Pope was an invalid and had to wear a corset to hold his spine upright. Heine was bedridden when he wrote some of his most exquisite verse. Dr. Johnson was scrofulous and a hypochondriac, blind in one eye and subject to convulsive cramps. Byron was an epileptic.

Robert Burns was frequently seized with spells of suffocation and had to throw himself into a tub of cold water for relief. Scott was a cripple and Keats died a consumptive. Goethe, in old age, confessed to his biographer that in all his life he had not known more than a few weeks' freedom from suffering.

Carlyle was a dyspeptic, and Schopenhauer was melancholic.

James Watt, inventor of the steam engine, and Charles Darwin, the biologist, were chronically ill most of their lives.

Health, of course, is more precious than wealth or fame. But it is inspiring to know that the expression of genius cannot be stifled by physical handicaps. The evidence seems to indicate that great thoughts and masterful conceptions are often the product of minds that function in weak bodies.

Perhaps sad or sick people do more thinking than gay and healthy people.

MYSELF.

I have myself to live with and so
I want to be fit for myself to know;
I want to be able as days go by
Always to look myself straight in the eye,
I don't want to stand with the setting sun
And hate myself for the things I've done.
I want to go out with head erect,
I want to deserve all men's respect.
And here in the struggle for fame and self,
I want to be able to like myself;
I don't want to look at myself and know
That I'm bluff and bluster and empty show.
I never can hide myself from me.
I see what others can never see.
I know what others can never know.
I never can fool myself and so,
Whatever happens I want to be
Self-respecting and conscience free.

C. E. PLEDGE IN SONG.

By Rev. C. De Young.

Tune: "Break Thou the Bread of Life."

Pastoral Counsellor of the Columbia County (N. Y.) C. E. Union.

Trusting in Christ for strength, dear Lord, today,
We gladly consecrate our lives to Thee;
We'll read Thy blessed word and daily pray
That in communion true we'll faithful be.

We will support Thy work and worship true
Of Thy beloved Church and Kingdom, too.
We here will take our part in meetings called,
And all activities of our C. E.

We will seek youth to bring, dear Lord, to Thee,
Give as we can to spread Thy Kingdom free,
Advance our country's good from sea to sea,
Promote true brotherhood, O Lord, in Thee.

These things we'll surely do, dear Lord, for Thee,
Unless prevented by some reason true,
Which we can tell to Thee with conscience free;
And we'll be guided, Lord, in all by Thee.

FROM SUPERINTENDENT OF LEADERSHIP TRAINING.

It has been indeed a pleasure to me to work with the young people of Eastern North Carolina as Superintendent of Leadership Training, because I am young and because I want to help some other young person who hopes to attain to a successful, happy manhood or womanhood. There wasn't a person from the Eastern North Carolina Conference at the Leadership Training School held at Elon College last summer.

We are seeing the need of trained leaders in our churches today. We should want to help train the youth of today for leaders of tomorrow. I am so helpless without your cooperation. Do you want a large number from your conference to go to the Leadership Training School next summer? If you do, now is the time to begin to work to that end.

Will you devote a little of your spare time to the purpose of building God's Kingdom on earth?

I am asking the pastors of this conference to send me the names of two or three persons from each of their churches who would be interested in Leadership Training and willing to devote a little of their spare time to the training of leaders for tomorrow.

Introductory Talk.—

Alcohol presents new problems with the advent of new conditions. Today young people have money, and alcoholic beverages are easily accessible. The appetite of the public is being constantly stimulated by the radio, newspaper, and billboard advertising, and other agencies. An age of speed, in which daily contacts have been multiplied, has made alcohol a more serious menace. Drinking is no longer restricted primarily to men. There are numerous factors which definitely accentuate the age-old need for sobriety.

Three short talks—

I.—Effect of Alcohol on Home-life.

Very often when you speak to a person about drinking, he will answer back, "It is my business if I want to drink." So it is his business—but it is also the business of society. God did not intend that man should live unto himself, and practically everything a person does affects someone else.

Alcohol can only complicate the all too difficult problem of marriage today. Marriage is a peri-

THE MESSAGE OF JEREMIAH.

Lesson III—October 20, 1935.

Golden Text: "Hearken unto my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people."—Jeremiah 7:23.

Lesson: Jeremiah 7:1-11, 21-23.

The Word from Jehovah.

"The word that came to Jeremiah from Jehovah"—the prophet knew that Jehovah had spoken to him. The message was not his own. He knew he was only the mouthpiece of Jehovah. This message undoubtedly came out of meditation and brooding and quiet communion on the part of the prophet. He had been still and he knew that Jehovah was God. And because he knew that his message came from Jehovah, he could fearlessly proclaim it. But he preached the truth in love.

Let every minister spend time in secret that he may understand what God would say to him so that through him God may speak to the people. The modern pulpit needs that note of authority that found expression in Jeremiah's day in the words: "Thus saith the Lord." The truth will take care of itself. We need not to defend it; we need only to proclaim it. Men will recognize, even if they do not heed the truth.

In the Gate of Jehovah's House.

"Hear the word of Jehovah, all ye of Judah, that enter in at these gates to worship Jehovah." When men come to worship they ought to hear the word of God. The church is not a lecture hall or a place of entertainment or a clearing house for book reviews. It is primarily a place of worship. it is the place where the word of God should be proclaimed. Book reviews and movies and forums are all right and they have a place, perhaps a legitimate place even in the program of the church in some instances. But one feels that the reason so many churches are resorting to these things in an effort to get a congregation is because the ministers have no message. Let those who come to worship Jehovah hear his words. Many churches are demonstrating the fact that nothing has a more lasting appeal than a vital gospel message and a vital service of worship.

The Temple of Jehovah.

The people of Jeremiah's time were lulled into a false sense of security because they had the temple of Jehovah in their midst. They felt that they were secure because the house where He dwelt was among them. Their emphasis was upon the outward instead of on the inward. Jeremiah bluntly tells them that the temple of Jehovah was not a good luck charm which would ward off all evil. Jehovah would, and did, allow the temple to be destroyed because the people had forsaken true worship and righteous living. There is always the subtle danger that we shall substitute the symbol for the reality, that we shall substitute ceremony for experience. A city may be full of churches and still be dead morally and spiritually. A man may give diligent heed to form and ceremony and never know Christ.

Unpopular and Unwelcome Truth.

"Amend your ways" and your "doings" was Jeremiah's message to the people. Character and conduct, not ceremony and creed were the important things then and now. "Change your way of living"—that was just what the people of Jeremiah's day did not want to do. It is just the thing that people do not want to do today. We are willing to do almost anything but to give up our sins. We are willing to have the whole world reformed so long as we do not have to be reformed ourselves. Jeremiah insisted that it was only by an inward change that Jehovah's favor could be gained. To obey is better than to sacrifice. Religion must be grounded in ethical conduct. A Christian is to bring forth fruits meet for repentance. Only a change of heart, only conversion and regeneration, makes possible vital religion.

Acceptable Worship.

The people of Jeremiah's day were like the old negro who said that he had drunk corn liquor and stolen chickens and shot craps and beat his wife and run with other women, but thank the Lord he had never lost his religion. They stole, murdered, committed adultery, swore falsely, burnt incense to Baal, walked after other gods, and then they would piously come to Jehovah's house to worship him. Like many other people today they did not seem to see any relation between creed and conduct. They did not think that it made any difference what a man did so long as he observed the customary religious practices.

Jehovah bluntly tells them that they have made his house a "den of robbers." Even as they came to worship they were probably plotting to rob a fellowman, or to indulge themselves. He would have none of it. Burnt offerings and sacrifices meant nothing to him. At best they were but means to an end. He desired that they walk in his ways and listen to his voice to the end that he might bless them and their land.

Worship may be cheap. But true worship is tremendously costly. God is spirit and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and truth and this is not easy to do. But the Father seeketh such to worship Him, and He is to be found of them that seek him in sincerity and truth.

THE YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

lous enough adventure without adding this item to the complex. Alcohol diverts money from the family income. Men "drink up the money" that is needed for food and clothing for the wife and children. A man's working ability is impaired by the use of alcohol and this imperils his position.

Is it only the business of the drunkard when his children's vitality is weakened and they develop more slowly than others in their classes?

II.—Effect of Alcohol on a Community.

Since the repeal of Prohibition, crime has increased at an alarming rate. Alcohol is a cause of crime. It increases public dishonesty. It is always connected with crooked business and crooked politics. No drunkard perishes alone in his iniquity. The evils of poverty, malnutrition, disease, abuse and marred character always follow in the footsteps of alcohol.

III.—Effect of Alcohol on Industry.

The advent of the machine age alone is enough cause for sobriety. A drinking workman endangers the life of his mates. High-powered machines demand a steady hand and a clear brain, one that is not muddled by the use of alcohol. A person would not start on a journey by airplane if he knew the pilot was drinking, neither would he sleep on a pullman train if he knew the engineer was under the influence of alcohol. What would happen if a crane operator had been drinking, his mind became confused, and he did not start the machinery at the proper time? There is no place in the industrial world for alcoholic drinking.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

MONDAY.

"LOOKING UP."

"Seek those things which are above."—Col. 3:1.

"When we look down, our shoulders stoop. When we look down in our thoughts our character stoops. It is only when we look up that the body becomes erect. It is only when our thoughts look up that our life becomes erect. Let us seek those things which are above, the good things, the wholesome things, things which are above repreach, and forbid that we should stoop to anything that is not elevating and then our lives will be pleasing to God.

Prayer—O Lord, "When Jesus comes to reward his servants whether it be noon or night," find Thou in us a child who is truly so by life's upward look. In His name we ask it.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"A TEST AND AN EXAMPLE."

"In all things I gave you an example, that so laboring ye ought to help the weak."—Acts 20:35.

The text is the words of Paul concerning himself. These words express simply and gloriously what may be said regarding the example of our Lord Jesus Christ.

After healing a sick man, Jesus crossed over the sea of Galilee to a place near Bethsaida, a multitude following Him to witness His miracles. He knew that they were hungry so He, true to His form at all times, proceeded to give them their need.

It is thus, that He instructs the disciples to survey the situation and recommend what could be done. This resulted in turning up the fisher-boy with a lunch. Jesus then miraculously fed the whole multitude and much was left over.

Note: Jesus does not act even in supplying our needs until we have exercised faith that is the way of love, any way. Having exercised faith, His power means something to us.

"He that doeth good is of God. He that doeth evil hath not seen God."—3 John 11.

Prayer—Our Father, teach us faith, in Christ, love for Him and obedience to Him. Even as He has offered us an example in all things, teach us how to imitate Him in simplicity and truth. In His name we ask it.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"EVOKING ENDURANCE."

"Blessed is the man that endureth temptation—he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord promised."—Jas. 1:12.

Knowledge of Christ graphically evokes endurance. For instance, Paul suffered all things, but he counted all suffering and all losses his gain in Jesus. The martyrs could never have suffered and died at the stake had they not Christ to do it for, they counted it all glory to do it for Him.

There was a time in the apostle's life when he expected to be able to stand before God in his own righteousness. This all changed. Paul finally discovered the worthlessness of his own righteousness and abandoned the idea of being accepted before God on that ground. He came to know that Christ is the "end of the law of righteousness and nothing less than perfect righteousness can satisfy a perfect God.

Prayer—Our Father, as a bird finds his native element in the air, so may we find Christ our native spirit and have our life inspired by Thy love. In Christ's name.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"WORKING WITH HANDS AND BRAINS."

"The labour of the righteous tendeth to life."—Prov. 10:16.

Read Acts 20:33-35. We understand that when one was converted to discipleship of Jesus Christ, it was Paul's custom to give them something to do. In the appointment of Elders, as was his custom to do, he gave them a vindication of his own conduct and ministry. This vindication went so far as to show them that he himself worked for his own living, and for God, and for them, without bringing to them any burdens and taxation. At the words, "These hands," he doubtless displayed his hands hardened by tent-making. The Epistles show that it was a common taunt that he did not live on the offerings of his converts.

This apostolic custom is cited not to depreciate modern church finance, but to show the spiritual foundations of life. Paul was teaching them to exercise their ministry faithfully; that they owed their salvation and their call to the Holy Spirit, who made his will known through prophets and spiritual guidance, and that salvation included the whole self. How oft he said, "Present your bodies a living sacrifice."

Prayer—Our Father, the work of the day, the work of man and the work of the world is divine. Forbid that we should pass without its ministry. —Amen.

FRIDAY.

"FRUIT OF HANDS."

"Give her the fruit of her hands and let her own works praise her in the gates."—Prov. 31:31.

This thirty-first chapter of Proverbs has been called "the A B C of the perfect wife." It gives us a picture presumably complete, of what was regarded as the ideal wife. From it we learn that a Jewish wife might have much freedom, and complete control of domestic affairs. In fact she is depicted here as engaged in agriculture and commerce while her husband takes part in local politics. Her own interests are bounded by her family duties. Her part in the training of children is hinted at in the twenty-sixth verse, but we are told that the original made no formal mention of religion.

Woman today knows no bound to her duties. Her field has gone far beyond the bounds of domestic affairs and provisions for her household. She fills a large place in the business world and the world of science. Nevertheless, the same gospel may be applied to her, "give her the fruit of her hands, and let her own work praise her in the gates."

Prayer—Dear Father, refresh our souls this day for its tasks. Give us calm of mind and power of spirit, deepen our conscience of Thee that Thou are nearer still and all is well.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"LED BY THE LIGHT."

"Oh send out Thy light, and Thy truth; let them lead me."—Ps. 43:1-5.

David was living in an ungodly nation. He was opposed by a deceitful and unjust man. The oppression of his foe cast him down.

But in God he saw a great light to glorify his darkness. In God's truth he found a firm fortress against all the deceits of his enemies. In his perplexities he knew that God would lead him, and that he would yet praise the God of his salvation.

Blessed the life, however surrounded by earthly darkness, that is led by the light from above! That light is all-conquering. It pierces every mist. It subdues fears. It conducts us to our desired haven. And it shines on all who allow it to shine on them.

Prayer—Forbid, O God, that we should by our sins interpose any barriers between our souls and the clear shining of Thy light. May our days be all sunny, and our nights resplendent with the stars.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

"WHEN WORDS SPOIL DEEDS."

"See thou say nothing to any man."—Mark 1:40-45.

Christ's loving heart could not resist the healing impulse, but He did not wish His great mission to be merged in miracle-working; so that often, as in the case of this leper, after He had healed a man, He bade him say nothing about it. But this leper could not refrain from shouting the wonder everywhere, so that our Lord was driven by the crowds of sick folks out into the wilderness.

There is a time for speaking and there is a time to refrain from speech. When the Spirit of the Lord tells us to speak, it is a sin to hold our tongues; but when He imposes silence upon us, it is a sin to speak.

We are likely to over-rate speech, to think that we must be forever talking about important matters, the highest things. Often we advance them most by letting them speak for themselves.

Prayer—Be with our tongues, Thou Master of Words. Guide our speech, guard also our silence. May we always be still before Thee.—Amen.

A STORY FOR THE CHILDREN.

Mary Lou looked at the little girls in bright-colored dresses. She began to count them. Patsy and Joan—one, two; the new little girl—three; Martha and Janey—four, five; Mary Lou—six.

"Oh!" said Mary Lou.

She ran to whisper to Mother. Then she went into the house. When she came out she carried the box of candies in her hand. She set it in the middle of the table. She lifted the cover.

"Oh!" said all the little girls in bright-colored dresses.

"Now we can have a real party," said Mary Lou. "There are just enough pieces around."

By and by Mary Lou looked at the box in the middle of the table. The six bright-colored candies were all gone. But six little girls in bright-colored dresses had had a very nice tea-party.

—By Verna Hills in Zion's Herald.

Of all the many confusing interpretations of Christ's teaching, this is clear to me: That He meant to bring together the alienated, to harmonize the discordant, to heal the ancient wounds caused by the mere struggle for self; and that into the world's disorder, He intended to bring a new order which He called the Kingdom of Heaven. The most valuable possession which Christianity holds for me is this conviction: that the task is unfinished, that the conflict is still on, and that it is my business to invest my life in such a way as to make true the dream of the Son of Man.—*Edward A. CORPORATE RIGHTEOUSNESS.

"For when thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness."—Isaiah 26:9.

The will against war manifestly is weak. If that were not so it would be possible to stap the Italian-Ethiopian conflict within 30 days. Before this planet is another year older we shall be seeking to convince ourselves that wars are really heroic and purifying and that it may be the salvation of Abyssinia to be swallowed up by Italy.

That is one of the fascinations of the old game. Richard le Gallienne wrote a poem, perhaps the greatest ever written, on his hatred of war. He abhorred it, but it was sweet music to hear the fife and drum, for he forgot broken old mothers "and the whole dark butchering without a soul." For when they turned loose the war songs pretty soon the peace-abiding feet of the poet were dancing to the perfect time and art was performing its perennial miracle of making good men love the things they loathed. That's war. That's why it knows nothing of life, national or corporate righteousness. That's why the men who make a profession of it sneer at the pacifists, many of whom have no fear whatsoever of being killed in war, but fear only that they may have to kill somebody else. And men become righteous, nations attain exaltation as they give up their own lives rather than be unrighteous.

Most of us are moved to thoughts like these now. The fact that a fool war is going on about 6,000 miles from us is no guaranty at all that we shall not have to get into it. It is just barely possible that a war cannot be fought in this world now without getting us into the fighting. Woodrow Wilson tried to keep us out a long time and he was finally kicked into it. And Claude Kitchin who would not vote for the war declaration, and Congresswoman Jeanette Rankin who said weeping: "I wish to support my President, but I can't vote for war," were sneered at in a manner that hurt them far more than if they had been shot at. We asked the states not to send us any more sob sisters to Washington, and that went for Kitchin, too. Now we are not a bit certain that our going to war did a thing for us beyond destroying our national morality. We know now that we should have done as Kitchin and Miss Rankin did. They knew that the evils of war would far outlast the good.

Now the world takes a side view of the conflict far away. There is an Italian megalomaniac who hasn't anything to fight for. But the nations always have sanctioned war for loot. The late Will Rogers five or so years ago came back from a trip in the war zone. He said some day, and that soon, Italy would be at war with Ethiopia. Italy, Rogers said, would desire something Ethiopia has, or did have. Instead of buying it at one-tenth the cost of a war there would be a pretext for fighting and then Italy would get it.

All of us laughed at the crack. It was the morality of war. It seems so much more the approved way to bombard undefended towns, to gas women and children, to terrify non-combatants than to offer a fair price for the advantages sought. The profession of war does not deal that way there must be fighting. There must be capitulation, there must be humiliation and degradation.

When this old prophet was writing about 800 years before the time of Jesus, he was trying to put some righteousness into his nation. It seems to have been about the last attempt. When religious people are asked to say a word in season about the present situation they invariably go back to the Old Testament and the modernists snicker. But the old-timers are talking about something real. They are trying to make us understand what righteousness does for a people. Napoleon had a God of Battles, but Napoleon's Deity was always on the side of the heaviest battalions. The Israelitish God distinctly discredited the spear and the sword. Old Testament stories bristle with the God of Righteousness. When the Big Stiff, Goliath, bellowed at David the first thing the little harp-player could think about was the God who was going to help.

Now, these Old Testament prophets were in dead earnest about it. They passionately sought to be right. Their God may have been more punitive than we like. But are we certain that there are not in all the war maneuvers those seeds of national death of which the prophets were dreaming? Who thinks, for instance, that America has done either a manly or moral part in the position habitually taken by this country since it entered a war to end wars? It doesn't make any difference about that theological character whose name we invoke against our enemies. Certainly, He is no malignant tribal deity peeved at a goodly portion of the earth and determined to blot it out. But is there anybody so godless as to believe that a great nation can batter down a lesser and bend its morale by torture of women and children and get away with it? If the bullet-heads are right about it, if iron and steel and poison are God then the more of them the better.

But a few of us will go on believing that nations must be righteous to last, that sin is not merely a reproach to any people, but is death to them. Americans always have believed that their own country would have died as a power rather than to have invaded Belgium in order to make the short cut to France. And looking back at it we all can see that every German who counseled that dastardly march was a fool. It was the scientific thing to do, but it organized the moral indignation of mankind. And there is moral indignation yet in this land.

That's what these old prophets always were talking about. In the language of modern evangelism, they believed in getting right with God. They believed in national righteousness. They conceived of themselves as a flock of sheep led by the hand of Moses and Aaron and the brothers conducted by the Deity Himself. It seems to be so old and simple this Hebraic faith. But it worked with them. Napoleon found this partisan God of the larger battalions soon arrayed against him, because the Napoleons always stimulated the recruiting on the other side.

The Old Testament dreamers were not simpletons. They were the wisest men who ever lived. They did not see much that they dreamed brought to pass. But the earth is littered with the ruins fool peoples who sought to bend the whole cosmos to the wills of maniacs.—By W. T. Bost in Greensboro Daily News, Sunday, October 6th.

War is a world-wide, very ancient, very persistent, scourge; so ancient, so persistent, that its roots are likely to be very deep. For a man to shake off that scourge will be difficult in any case. But it will be quite impossible if he does not know even whether he wants to shake it off or not, is in two minds about it, at one moment declaring it to be the greatest of all crimes, and at the next that we cannot do without it, and that it is time we had a dose.—Sir Norman Angell.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

All of our little children are in school except two. When they all get off to school at 8:15 in the morning we have a very quiet time. The first month closed last week. They will get their grades this week. The writer always closely checks the grade cards. Our rule is that when a child gets an "E" on his or her card they do not get to go to a movie until they bring up a card with no "E" on it. The manager of the theatre is mighty good to them and lets them in free. They go once a month provided they make good in school. The writer has offered a $5.00 gold coin to the child that will make a general average of 90 on every study during the school term. We feel sure we will have to call on some of our friends to come to our rescue as we know we have a number of boys and girls who will make the grade.

We have some real hard-working children and their report cards look good when they show an "A" clear on down the line.

Every child that makes good grades is always happy over its school work. We always feel sorry for the child that makes a poor showing in school. Sometimes they just can't make the grade. But the child that worries me is the child that makes poor grades and doesn't seem to care and is careless and unconcerned about it. I often think if a child could realize the seriousness of its mistake, and it will realize it when it is grown and school days are over, it would put forth its best efforts every day.

We always feel proud of a child that does its best.

pioneer times. Thirdly, the immensely more complex program of the church in our own day calls for the strength derivable from united effort in the local community.

"In order that the denominations shall cooperate it is not necessary that they adopt a common creed, nor need they wait for national organic union. Both of these approaches are academic and in the present state of the public mind would be sure to lead to nothing but unfruitful discussion and possible ill-will. What is needed is the frank recognition of the actual state of affairs and hearty willingness on the part of all concerned to work together for the highest religious results."

MODERN MITES OR THE MIGHTY CENT.

Sixty-two thousand, five hundred Cent-A-Meal boxes have been taken by churches since their use was recommended last year by the Commission on Missions. It may be assumed that there is a box in approximately ten per cent of the 600,000 families affiliated with the Congregational and Christian churches. Insignificant as is the amount to be placed in a box at a meal, the faithful use of the boxes in one-tenth of our homes will bring a forty per cent increase over the total giving for missions in the denomination last year.

The total given giving last year, including every-member canvass subscriptions, proceeds from suppers, bazaars and all other benefits, if reckoned on the cent-a-meal basis, averaged about one-fifth of a cent for a family. If every family placed a cent each meal in a box, the whole sum at the end of a year would be $6,570,000.00.

who never attends church services and has never been a member of any church. Yet in all these churches there are more than enough active members to fill all the offices! What can professing Christians be thinking of to permit such a situation to exist? Can we expect a man or woman of the world, without experimental evidence of God, to be careful of the things of God? Can we expect them to guard and guide the work and purpose of the Church with that fidelity so necessary, that sympathy so indispensable to the success of any enterprise? Can a non-member hold office in any lodge, fraternity, board or other organization? Should we be less careful in the Church that Christ has purchased with His own blood than in temporal affairs?

In a certain local church the Sabbath school superintendent has but recently been forced to resign after serving seventeen months, during which time the church has become demoralized and Sabbath school attendance has dwindled to less than one-third its former number. The reason is not hard to find. This man was given church membership that he might accept office. During his tenure as superintendent he attended church services once. Many a Sunday morning he was known to go from Sabbath school to the corner saloon which exists, thanks to a government-sponsored liquor traffic. He held office only because other qualified members of the church had refused to serve! Yes, rather than serve the cause of Christ who sacrificed Himself for them, these men turned their Sabbath school over to a man known to have no Christian learning nor principles, a frequenter of the saloon and a gamester. Today their house is left unto them desolate!

What must the Saviour of mankind think as He looks down from the heavenly mansion upon these hypocrites who cry, "Lord, Lord, but do not the things that I say," these slackers who refuse to work, thereby surrendering their heritage and exchanging their birthright for a mess of pottage; these "nominal Christians" who join the church of the living God as they would join a lodge or fraternity; these "materialists" who come unto the "general assembly and church of the Firstborn" not to serve but to be served; these believers who have not yet learned that we have fellowship with God through service to men!

Awake, Christian church members and take the reins of church affairs into your own hands. Do not refuse to manage your own duty and responsibility in the work of the Master. Suppose He had said "No" when the finger of God pointed to the Cross. Suppose He had refused to serve when blind Bartimeus cried from the wayside in helplessness and despair—when Lazarus lay in the tomb and the home in Bethany was broken and desolate. Suppose He had assumed a careless indifference when the repentant thief cried from out the awesome shadows of that dreadful afternoon, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy Kingdom." What if He had refused to serve in the least essential part of His ministry? Where now would our hope be? Could we find any place of repentance, though we seek it carefully and with tears? If we are worthy the name of Christian, if we are loyal to God who has called us, and to Christ who has saved us, and to the Church that is the Divine Instrument of salvation in the world, we cannot refuse even the humblest service in the work of Him who overcame death and the grave for us. When Christians refuse to serve in the church or in any part of its work, the world, drops back like lead to the borders of paganism! "See that ye refuse not Him that speaketh."—By Carl M. Kilmer in M. P.-Recorder.

HARRELL.

Whereas God in His infinite wisdom has called to eternal reward our beloved sister, Mrs. Susie Brinkley Harrell, wife of Jessie E. Harrell, whose death occurred July 31, 1935 at the home of her brother-in-law, Chammie E. Harrell, in Nausemond County, Virginia; Therefore be it resolved,

First: That in the death of Mrs. Harrell, the Ladies' Council of the Christian Temple has lost a loyal worker and a consecrated Christian, who daily lived the Gospel she professed.

Second: That we emulate her many noble virtues and gratefully cherish her beloved memory, and with ever increasing faith seek to carry forth the work of Christ, which was so dear to her heart.

Third: That while we cannot understand why such a useful life should be so short, we bow in humble submission to our Heavenly Father's will.

Fourth: That we extend to her bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy and commend them to the Comforter, whose grace is sufficient for every need.

Fifth: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to The Christian Sun for publication and another placed on the records of our Council.

Banks and Insurance.—

The more than 7,500 state banks not members of the Federal Reserve System, were recently given the right voluntarily to withdraw from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, if they should wish to do so. Latest reports, however, indicate that less than fifty of these institutions took advantage of this opportunity to withdraw.

Catholics Gain in America.—

Catholic converts numbered 63,845 last year, according to News Week. The total increase in numbers, however, reached 200,459, making the total number of Catholics in America now 20,523,053. The largest Catholic parish is the Archdiocese of New York, which numbers 2,301,689. The smallest diocese is that of Raleigh, North Carolina, numbering 9,541.

Federal Prison Population Increases.—

On the basis of an estimate that the Federal prison population would increase by 15 to 20 per cent in the next year, prison authorities have decided to urge the next Congress to appropriate money for six more jails, each with a capacity for 600 inmates. Reports from all Federal prisons show that the prison population last week was only 400 less than the all-time record. There were 15,295 prisoners in Federal institutions, an increase of 2,855 over the same week last year. Blame that on prohibition, if you can.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

Japan Increases Cloth Imports.—

While the American textile industry squabbles, Japan, figuratively speaking, makes hay. Commerce department reports show that for the first nine months of 1935, Japan exported to the United States 27,238,000 square yards of cloth, against a total of 3,582,000 yards for the same period in 1934. September imports from Japan amounted to 2,265,000 yards valued at $105,000 against 683,000 yards valued at $33,000 in September of last year. The total amount of cloth imported, nor its total value, make impressive figures as yet, but the rate of increase, month after month, is so rapid as to give our textile operators and employees food for thought.

Another 150th Anniversary Celebration.—

Last week, at historic Christ Church, in Philadelphia, Episcopalians celebrated the One Hundred and Fiftieth Anniversary of the First General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States. Ten bishops and numbers of clergymen participated in the sesquicentennial program commemorating that first general meeting, at which the American Book of Common Prayer was formulated, and the Colonial churches which had been disrupted by the Revolution were brought together under one authority. It was at this convention that the Book of Prayer was changed by the deleting of the prayer for "the King's majesty," and in its place was substituted a prayer for "all in authority, legislative, executive and judicial, in these United States. In this connection, it is noteworthy that about two-thirds of the signers of the Declaration of Independence were Episcopalians.

Bureau of Standards Snags a Bathing Suit.—

A lot of good work has been done by the Bureau of Standards of the Department of Commerce, but sometimes it runs full force into Dame Fashion, and then it has to back up a long way. In May of 1934, at the request of the National Outwear Association, the bureau issued a recommended commercial standard for worsted rib knitted bathing suits. Many manufacturers accepted it. But popular taste suddenly turned to the next-to-nothing style, and now our Washington office sends us a glum announcement by the bureau. "The type of bathing suits covered by the recommended standard now represents less than 5 per cent of the industry's production," the bureau says and so it withdraws its recommendation and decides it will do nothing till the manufacturers ask it "to establish standards for the more popular types." But by that time the most popular type may be Sally Rand's.—Business Week.

"Everything Flows."—

It was the Greek philosopher Heraclitus, who, more than 2300 years ago, made this assertion. Only in recent times has this truth been rediscovered. We are told that the glass in window panes, the marble in monuments, and even the steel in bridges and railroad rails flows slightly. Today there is a group of scientists known as rheologists, who are specializing with the flowing together of materials now known as "synthetic plastics." Popular Science Monthly tells us that "The magic of modern chemistry has produced these materials, which are unlike any natural substance found on earth or in the sea." And in turn, these substances are helping to revolutionize the conditions under which civilized man is living. Dr. Leo Hendrick Baekeland, it is told, came to America at the age of twenty-six on a post-graduate travelling fellowship awarded by four Belgian universities. He liked the United States so well that he decided to stay. He became interested in photography and soon invented a faster working photographic print paper. Professionals were slow to adopt his material, so he turned to the amateurs. Soon they were making better pictures than the professionals. The late George Eastman became interested and began negotiations for the purchase of Baekeland's process. It is related that the young inventor went to interview Eastman, determined not to part with his invention for less than $25,000. Eastman's first offer was $1,000,000. "Thus at thirty-five," Doctor Baekeland later recounted, "I found myself in comfortable financial circumstances, ready to devote myself to my favorite studies." As a result of those studies, has come the plastic industry of the United States. The success of Bakelite caused further research, with the result that synthetic plastics are made from many materials and by many other processes. Millions of pounds of plastics are manufactured each year and thousands of employees are engaged in their manufacture.
