The CHRISTIAN SUN

REPRESENTING THE SOUTHEAST CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL AND CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials, Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME XC.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JANUARY 13, 1938

Happy New Year

I know there are brook-gladdened meadows ahead,
 And mountains of wearisome height;
 That the road passes on through the long afternoon,
 And stretches away to the night.

PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES

Rev. and Mrs. J. H. Dollar, of Newport News, Virginia, are vacationing among their people in Alabama. Rev. Joe A. French preached for Rev. Mr. Dollar last Sunday.

Rev. and Mrs. R. L. House were at home to the members of First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Virginia, on Tuesday of last week from 4 to 6 o'clock in the afternoon and from 7 to 9 o'clock in the evening.

The picture on the front page is an original drawing by Miss Shirley Powell of Norfolk, Virginia, who works in THE CHRISTIAN SUN office and attends the William and Mary College. It was prepared especially for this issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

It made the editor of THE SUN happy to see Dr. L. E. Smith, President of Elon College, apparently in good health again and ready for the heavy duties of the new year. If our churches will respond to the call of the college as well as they did to the call of the Orphanage, both the college and the churches will be very happy.

Ministers attending the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship Christmas Conference at Greensboro last week were Victor B. Chicoine, of Florida, W. J. Andes, of the Valley Virginia Conference, J. Everette Neese, S. E. Madren and F. Ervin Hyde of the Eastern N. C. Conference, Alan T. Jones, of Georgia, Edwin E. White, of Tennessee, Miss Ruth Sergeant, of Kentucky, W. E. Wiseman, of Greensboro, and F. C. Lester of Eastern Virginia.

Rev. M. T. Sorrell and family had a serious accident near Danville while enroute to the Faith Home, recently completed by the Danville Church. December 13th, at 6 P. M., Mr. Sorrell and family were taking a two and one half year old boy out to the home when the accident occurred, due to slippery roads and was in collision with another car. Mr. Sorrell suffered severe cuts about the head and was rendered unconscious when thrown from the car. Mrs. Sorrell suffered severe bruises. James O'Kelly, the oldest boy, suffered laceration about the head and one of his eyes, a badly torn bladder and broken pelvis. He is expected to recover. Staley, the youngest son, suffered cuts about the face and a broken arm.

Another occupant of the car suffered light cuts about the head and bruises. The little boy being admitted to the home did not have a scratch. The car, driven by Mr. Sorrell, was almost demolished.

HOLLAND CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Holland Christian Church observed the Christmas Season with a number of activities. Christmas Sunday the pastor preached on "The Character of the Time." That evening at the vesper hour a pageant, "The Vision of the Ages—in Song, Story, and Pantomime" was presented by the church choir, assisted by members of the choirs from Holy Neck Christian Church and Holland Baptist Church. Mrs. Sumner Rawles directed the music. Mrs. E. L. Rawles presided at the organ. The Story of the Nativity was read by Mrs. H. V. White. Elaborate decorations and symbolism illustrating the events of the Birth of our Lord were done by Mrs. H. T. Jones.

On Wednesday evening the Pilgrim Fellowship conducted an appropriate worship service and brought White Gifts. A stereoptical lecture, "The Life of Christ," was given. Thursday evening the Junior Missionary Society, under the direction of Mrs. L. J. Daughtrey, Superintendent, presented a play—"Christmas Eve in Fairyland"—with twenty-five characters participating. At the close of this program Mr. and Mrs. Key were surprised with a gift of a lot of good things to eat from the members and a purse from the men of the church as an appreciation for their work during the year.

UPPER ALAMANCE FELLOWSHIP SCHOOL OF LEADERSHIP EDUCATION.

A School of Leadership Education will be in session at the First Christian Church, Burlington, Monday, January 10th, through Friday, 11th. The school will be held each night from 7 until 9 o'clock. The fee will be 50c.

Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, pastor of the church, will serve as dean. The faculty will be composed of Miss Carrie McLean Taylor, of the local church, Rev. Banks J. Peeler, pastor of the First Evangelical Reformed Church of Burlington, Dr. D. J. Bowden and Dr. Merton French of the faculty of Elon College.

The school is a cooperative effort in Christian Education and Teacher Training by the Congregational and Christian Church and the Evangelical Reformed Church and will be participated in and supported by the churches of these two groups in the Alamance and County sections.

The courses offered are:

No. 241-b—Guiding the Religious Growth of Primary Children, by Miss Taylor, teacher.

No. 113-b—Some Social Difficulties of Youth, by Mr. Peeler, teacher.

No. 411-b—Toward Understanding Adults, by Dr. Bowden, teacher.

No. 123-b—The Prophets and Their Messages, by Dr. French, teacher.

Insofar as our Congregational and Christian Churches are concerned this school is being promoted by and for the churches of the Upper Alamance Fellowship, in whose membership are the following churches: Bethlehem, Berea, Elon College, Graham, Graham Providence, Shallow Ford, Union, Burlington, Haw River, Mebane, Concord, Bethel and Mt. Zion.

ATTENTION NORTH CAROLINA CHURCHES AND PASTORS.

The date for THE SUN campaign has been fixed—February 1st-February 15th. February 1st will be with us before we realize it. So we must make preparations for our campaign.

Your Conference president has written and urged to begin promoting the campaign among his churches and pastors. But he can do only so much. Interested laymen in our Churches and the pastors of our churches must carry on. Upon these will depend the success or the failure of the campaign. So inaugurate it at once.

Begin with prayer. Into this campaign humor and fun have been and will be injected. This is good and proper. But the cause is mighty serious and can be called holy. It deserves and merits the interest of, and the presumption of our prayers.

Begin with faith. There is prevalent in our Convention a species of indifference difficult to define. This must be overcome. Our faith must be based upon the assumption, the conviction there is a need for our Congregational and Christian churches in the sections where we serve. Vital in the organization of our Convention, through which our Congregational and Christian churches function, is THE SUN. If we believe this, then there need be no embarrassment or hesitancy in asking and urging our constituency to subscribe for THE SUN.

Begin with enthusiasm. There must be esprit de corps. The cause is challenging. The hour is crucial! success imperative!

And, too, we Carolinians do not want these Virginians to defeat us.

To your tents, O Tar Heelers!

THE CHURCH CALENDAR.

For a number years the Southern Convention has tried to put into effect a church calendar. Certain months are set apart for specific interests. Our conferences constituting the Southern Convention hold their Annual Sessions in late summer and early fall. Our church calendar begins with November.

November and December are set apart as the period in which the Sunday schools and churches throughout the Convention are to think about the orphanage, read about the orphanage, and make contributions for the support of the orphanage. Thanksgiving is the festival around which the interest for the orphanage centers. It is hoped that every church has made a generous offering, for the orphanage needs every dollar that the church can contribute.

January and February have been designated as the college period. The college endeavors to acquaint the church at large with its present condition, its actual needs, and its plans for the future. The college is utterly dependent upon the church for its financial support. Unfortunately we do not have endowment to supplement the natural income sufficiently to balance our budget. The churches of the Convention have been considerate and generous toward the college. With the support and cooperation of the churches and Sunday schools of the Southern Convention, the college has made satisfactory progress for the past five years. It has advanced from an almost hopeless condition to a most encouraging situation. Our debts have been drastically reduced, our student body has increased two and one-half times, and there has been a decided improvement in our faculty. Last year we were able to pay full salaries with the members of the faculty who have been in the employ of the college for three years contributing the twelfth month's salary to the college. We were forced to carry over into this year a little more than $3,000 worth of bills. These bills had to be taken care of out of this year's receipts which, of course, makes it more difficult for us to balance our budget this year. We are now in the college period. Every church in the Southern Convention is asked for a definite amount for the college. If the Convention's askings could be sent to the college by the local churches, we would have no difficulty at all. This is an appeal to pastors and churches to please give the college consideration and receive an offering for the college sometime during January and February. The college will receipt you for the same as payment on your 1937-'38 conference apportionments. It will be much easier for the church and infinitely better if this part of your conference apportionments can be raised during January and February.

March, April and May have been designated as our Mission period, during which time it is hoped that the church will become missionary-minded. Dr. Atkinson and the Mission Board will provide valuable information and helpful suggestions to the church with the hope that the offering may be worthy of us and of the great cause that is ours.

June, July and August are for Christian Education. The Board of Christian Education through Rev. F. C. Lester, Rev. Joe French, and Miss Emily Carleton will inform the church as to the proper program of Christian Education for the Con-

AND THERE WAS LIGHT.

By Mrs. E. D. Midyette.

"Let there be light." The words were spoken. And day-time came, as if a flag unfurled, The sun shone forth in perfectness unbroken, God's great gift of splendor to the world.

Rivers began to run and grass began to grow;

Since then all living, creeping things of earth,

Men, birds, and beasts began to move along In recognition of the world's new birth.

"Let there be light," and until this hour The moon and stars have shone Upon the leaves of every tree and flower, And mortal man has never been alone.

And when at times confusion mars the day, When sorrow wraps us in the shades of night,

Again the Master speaks, and to our souls doth say

"There shall be light! There shall be light!"

tion, summer conferences, Youth Fellowship meetings, and other gatherings in the interest of our young people. They will also acquaint the church with the needs of the department and urge contributions for the interest of the same.

The Board of Ministerial Relief is not assigned a definite period, but all churches are asked to make a contribution at Christmastime for the Board. This offering is known as the Christmas offering for the Board of Ministerial Relief. Also, it is the plan of our Convention that offerings for the Board be received in connection with the observance of the communion service in the local church.

If pastors and church officials will acquaint the membership of the churches with the church calendar and will make a serious effort to put the calendar into effect, I feel that we can greatly improve our record for the support of the enterprises of the Convention.

L. E. SMITH.

Dear Children:—

Happy New Year! My telephone rang on New Year's Day and a sweet-voiced lady said, "Happy New Year!" I wonder if you, like I, have wondered why New Year's Day seems so different when the world looks the same, when we live in the same house, and the trees in our yards look the same. Long ago an angel appeared and told Joseph to take the baby Jesus and Mary down into Egypt where King Herod could not find them and kill the baby Jesus. That was the beginning of a new hope for all those who were guided by the star of Bethlehem to the manger where they found the Christ Child. Ever since then, we, too, have a new beginning each year, beginning each January 1; God gives us a new year to learn how to live more like the baby Jesus learned to live. Certain new stars appear with each season, and new ideas come to us each January 1, and new hopes, and every thing seems to take on a newness that makes us want to shout "Happy New Year!" to everybody.

The Romans worshipped many Gods made of stone. They had one god called Janus, from whom our month January is named. This god had two faces, one looked backward and the other looked forward. Janus was the god of New Years and was supposed to hold the key to the doorway of the new year of happy worthwhile experiences which would always bring a happy ending. That is what I would wish for you, happy worthwhile experiences during the year of 1938, which will make you a happier boy and girl when the key opens up the year of 1939. YOUR FRIEND.

A WAY TO A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

To leave the old with a burst of song,
To recall the right and forgive the wrong;
To forget the thing binds you fast
To the vain regrets of the year that's past;
To have the strength to let go your hold
Of the not worth while of the days grown old;
To dare go forth with a purpose true,
To the unknown task of the year that's new;
To help your brother along the road
To do his work and lift his load;
To add your gift to the world's good cheer,
Is to have and to give a Happy New Year.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

THE YEAR THAT HAS GONE.

Another year has become the property of historians. Its possibilities are gone. We had our chance to use it as we would. Twelve brief months ago we dreamed of fine things we would do during 1937. Whether those dreams came true or failed we cannot change now, for the year is gone never to return. The stars and planets have kept to their courses, and we have had our chance at summer and winter. The gift of the year was God's gift to mankind. And it was a good gift.

But all that we have done with the gift has not been so good. The nations have learned more about war. For fifteen years a weary world has struggled with the last war aftermath, and at least feeble efforts were made to establish peace in the earth. But while we talked about peace we have prepared for war. During the past year we have been in the ever-darkening shadows of war. China has felt its deadly blow. Spain continues its civil strife and self-destruction. Our own nation has lost one of its protecting ships. The nations are faced with another world-conflict more deadly and destructive than anything yet imagined. This unhappy prospect 1937 brought to us in increasing vividness.

The Church has had both gain and loss. Two world conferences were held which brought together leaders of churches from many nations. Ideas were presented and friendships were developed. Both free and liturgical churches met around a common table to commune. This seemed like a step forward towards peace among the denominations. The youth of America has taken a united step, also, which promises good for the future. Many local churches and denominations have recorded gains in membership in 1937. Contributions to churches and benevolences seem to be on the upgrade. But there are other things that are not quite so happy in the realm of the Church. Let's forget them for the present. In later days we may come to them again with an attempt at constructive thinking.

Individual opportunities for the past year were many and varied, but they are locked in the archives of eternity now and there is nothing that we can do to change the record. There are ministers who have remembered their high calling and have spoken boldly and faithfully in the name of the Lord. Some may have sought for selfish gain, but one is inclined to think that not many ministers are among this company. Deacons there are who thought that their job was to minister to the spiritual welfare of the Church, and have worked at the task with all the wisdom and grace they could muster. Others equally as capable have busied themselves during 1937 with lesser things, and their churches have lost by their negligence. Certain musicians have counted it all joy that they could regularly share in the preparation of good music in order that the worshippers in the sanctuary on the Lord's day could be lifted to the heights of spiritual fervency by the beauty of music. They have prepared themselves for a place in the choir and orchestra of the Celestial City. Other faithful officials of our churches have, in 1937, attended to their duties and used their opportunities in such a way that the church of which they are a part has grown in membership and effectiveness.

What we have written we have written. It stands in the record with, or without, the approval of the Grand Master of us all.

WHAT OF THE NEW YEAR?

Will 1938 be any better? Have we learned from the experience of 1937 any lessons that will help us to improve the future as it becomes the present? The answer lies hidden beneath the covering of the days and deep in the wills of those of us who live. The schooling was quite adequate. Lessons were written large on the pages of Time, but there are many faulty minds. It seems to be difficult for us to learn how to live. Sometimes one thinks that we do not want to know how to live, for we want to live just as we please regardless of the consequences.

Internationally this is shown in the fact that nations build armaments and tariff walls rather than friendships and cooperation. They talk of peace and go out to make war. If one could hear but the voice of the leaders, one might believe that peace was the object of the massacre of Ethiopia, the destruction of Spain, and the slaughter of China. It is in the name of peace that we build bigger battleships and play war-games in the front doors of other nations. It is to be hoped that the world may learn the folly of such silly symphonies and will, in 1938, turn to more sensible conduct of international relations. If it is coal and iron that Japan needs we can better afford to send her some than to let her fill Chinese rivers with our battleships and ships of commerce. There are paths of peace that are yet untrod. It just may be, and let us pray God that it may be, that in 1938 the nations will seek such paths and walk in them. At present, so far as this writer can see, there is little prospect of such a happy event. This may not be the year for the universal war, but it appears to be the year for definite preparation for it.

In the realm of the Church there is much to encourage one to hope for the New Year. The merger of Methodism will go far towards being completed, and other mergers of denominations will likely appear on the horizon. Protestantism is learning that in unity there is strength. The prayer of Jesus for the unity of His followers is making church leaders everywhere very uncomfortable, and the reflex of mergers in mission lands is beginning to force the issue in the homelands. The Church moves towards unity. It may be at a snail's pace, but it moves.

Even in this realm not every prospect pleases. While international leaders talk of the unity of Protestantism, and while certain denominations are earnestly striving to break down denominational barriers, there are those who in the name of the Lord sow discord and seek to divide the Church into even more parts and set up new organizations. Without realizing it, they tear apart the body of Christ and cause division in the army of the Lord. If they could see it as others do, they would not for all the world hinder the progress of the united kingdom of God.

Individuals will find the new year about as others. They will face the necessity of choosing the road they will travel. There are still great opportunities for "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," but many will seek for pleasures and profits that bind the spirit, bring unhappiness, and destroy life. Economic and political conditions may make more difficult the attainments to be desired, but individual initiative and perseverance will do much to overcome difficulties and place one in the procession of the successful. It should be remembered that success means much more than gaining of profits, for one may gain the whole world and lose that which is more important—his soul. If those of us who struggle with temper, moods, complexes, etc., can make this the year to overcome some of those that hurt us and our friends, we will find that the New Year is on our side, and that we are on the road to successful living. May it be so with all who read these lines.

THE DEBT OF HONOR CAMPAIGN.

Years ago the Congregational Church set up a fund to aid the ministers when they reached the age of retirement. Part of the income for this good work comes from endowment, and part from the ministers and churches. In recent years the income from invested funds has not been adequate to meet the promise of the Church for the aged ministers. It has been necessary to take part of the Apportionment funds to supplement this income. It is now proposed to raise a million and a half dollars, the income from which will take the place of the present income from Apportionments.

When the merger of Congregational and Christian Churches took place, it was agreed that Christian Church ministers, ordained before 1931, the date of the merger, should not share in the Pilgrim Memorial Funds. Those ordained after that date share like other members of the United Church. This has raised the question as to the share of Christian Churches in the Debt of Honor Campaign which is now being launched.

Representative ministers from the Southern Convention met in Greensboro last Thursday with a representative of the campaign committee to discuss the matter. It was agreed there that the Christian Churches have no responsibility in the matter, unless their ministers can share in the income. It was suggested that this may be the opportune time for Christian Churches to raise $50,000 so their ministers can be on the same basis as Congregational ministers now are. President Stanley C. Harrell was asked to write to Dr. F. G. Coffin, President of the General Convention of the Christian Church, asking that such a campaign be sponsored. It was felt by the group present that all Congregational and Christian Church ministers should have the same protection in the days of retirement.

Since the meeting in Greensboro, a member of the Board of Ministerial Relief of the denomination has told the writer that there is good reason to believe that within a very short time all restrictions will be removed, and that all our ministers will share alike in Pilgrim Memorial and other funds of the United Church. To undertake a separate drive among former Christian churches would be a decisive and difficult task. It, therefore, seems to be the part of wisdom for former Christian churches to enter into the Debt of Honor Campaign as heartily and generously as they are able to do. Our plans in the Southern Convention make it very difficult for us to cooperate very effectively with the denominational program, but as rapidly as possible we should make the necessary adjustments so we can feel the strength of being part of the national fellowship. This Debt of Honor Campaign may be just the needed impetus to get us going. There is no question but what more adequate care should be taken of our aged ministers. The church that preaches social justice should not be content to see its ministers die in poverty. The plan of our Congregational and Christian churches, if adequately financed, will meet the needs of the ministers when they can no longer earn a living. After considerable thought, your editor commends the Debt of Honor Campaign to the former Christian Churches, and hopes that we shall be able to render real service in this united program.

A MESSAGE TO MINISTERS.

Having been a pastor for more than a score of years, I know something of how difficult it is for pastors to respond to all the calls that come to them. But when we stood at the altar of a church for licensure and ordination, we pledged before God that we would be subject to the will of the brethren of the Church which gave us the chance to preach. That makes me bold to call on you for cooperation. I believe you meant that pledge when you made it.

Our people need to know what is going on in the Church of which they are a part. Children and young people need the knowledge of the Church as well as the knowledge of Hollywood. "The Christian Sun" undertakes to give them this knowledge. But many of the families, most of them, in our churches do not read about religion and the Church as it is presented to them in their own Church Paper.

The Publications Committee of the Southern Convention says that it is important for us to put the paper into 700 homes during January and February. Your editor joins with the committee in believing that it can be done, and that it should be done. We believe that it should be done for the benefit of those who need to know what is happening; it needs to be done for the sake of the Church we love; it needs to be done for the benefit of the paper itself. But let's forget about the paper. Both the editor and the printer could manage some way to live without the little bit of income from this source. But where is a Church that can grow without some means of communication between its members? And where is a church family that can be productive in Christian service that does not read of religion and religious work as given in a Church Paper?

All pastors are asked to take some time to collect a list of those who do not take the paper who are members, and especially the leaders, (Continued on page 9.)

SUFFOLK LETTER.

"Happy New Year." That greeting is upon the lips of millions of people on this New Year's Day. Health, happiness and prosperity—these three—and the greatest of these is prosperity, in the opinion of many people. Men and women often sacrifice health and happiness for the sake of making money. Money is a powerful factor in human life, but it not the foundation of health and happiness. The possession of great wealth may endanger human health and undermine the happiness of mankind.

In the business world the first of the year is the time for taking an inventory. In taking stock of the operations of the past year and seeking to determine the profit and loss account, moral and spiritual significance of business methods should not be over-looked. In the general lowering of moral standards during the past decade financial standards have been seriously affected. There are thousands of business men who have high ideals and rigidly seek to live by the "Golden Rule." But there are many others who do not hesitate to take short cuts and use dishonest means to make money.

It is not the function of the church to dictate to any group of people. But the church has a message from God for every field of human endeavor. Man cannot separate himself from God and he cannot escape the moral significance of his own conduct. Every man writes his own record. From that record there is no escape. Man may defy the church and mock the message of the pulpit. But if the church, through the pulpit, faithfully presents the living message of God, man should remember that "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."

Business is unsettled today. Industrial leaders are trying to find a way to permanent prosperity. The great agricultural leaders and workers are suffering from the effects of strife and bitterness. Clubs, Labor Unions, Chambers of Commerce, State Legislatures and the Congress of the United States are wrestling with the problems with a determination to bring industrial peace and financial prosperity. Labor wants more money than it earns, capital desires more profits than it deserves, industry seeks more than its share of prosperity.

In the midst of this struggle it is evident "That the love of money is the root of all evil"—(I Tim. 6:10). Truth is cast aside, in many instances, if a falsehood will be conducive to greater profit. Deception is often introduced to defraud another in a trade. Dishonesty is openly used to avoid the payment of just debts. Get rich. That is the passion of this age. Individuals and nations are money-minded.

Be still on this New Year's Day and listen for the voice of God. He has a message for labor, business and industry. That message rests upon very simple principles. Among those principles are these: Be honest. Tell the truth. Do not seek to deceive any person. Keep your promise. Be sin-

A THOUGHT FOR THE OPENING YEAR.

To be glad of life, because it gives you the chance to love and to work and to play and to look up at the stars; to be satisfied with your possessions, but not contented with yourself until you have made the best of them; to despise nothing in the world except falsehood and meanness, and to fear nothing except cowardice; to be governed by your admirations rather than by your disgusts; to covet nothing that is your neighbor's except his kindness of heart and gentleness of manners; to think seldom of your enemies, often of your friends and every day of Christ; and to spend as much time as you can with body and with spirit in God's out-of-doors—these are little guide-posts on the foot-path of peace.—Henry Van Dyke.

cere. Live right. Love your neighbors and your enemies. Be fair. Be generous. Give liberally. Do not take advantage of any person in any business transaction. Seek the will of God in every adventure of your life. Personal integrity of character and personal righteousness will do much to bring peace and prosperity to the nations of the earth. People must return to God and recognize His way of life, if they wish to dwell together in unity and safety. Nothing is more disturbing than the lack of confidence in the word of mankind. The man whose word is as good as gold is precious in the sight of God, and is a safe-guard to his fellowman. By the grace of God make 1938 a year of spiritual power through personal righteousness and business integrity.

I. W. JOHNSON.

THE CONVENTION HONOR ROLL.

I believe that an action was taken by either the Convention or the Conference to give special recognition to all churches of the Convention raising the Conference apportionments in full. These churches were to constitute an honor roll. If such action was not taken, it ought to be taken. Our present Conference apportionments, when looked at as a whole, are considered rather large by the local church, but when we consider the needs of the Convention and its institutions, we find that we have far from enough money to meet these needs. However, if all churches would raise their apportionments, the Convention and its institutions would be in infinitely better condition.

According to information submitted to the Eastern Virginia Conference by I. W. Johnson, the following churches of the Conference raised their entire apportionments: Berea (Nans.), Berea (Norfolk), Christian Temple, Dendron, First Church, Norfolk, Franklin, Holy Neck, Holland, Liberty Spring, Oakland, Rosemont, Sarem, Suffolk. If there are other churches that raised the entire Conference apportionments, will you please let me have the information and I will be glad to make the correction.

Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, Secretary, reporting for the North Carolina and Virginia Conference lists the following churches as having raised Conference apportionments in full: Apple's Chapel, Belew Creek, Bethlehem, Danville, Elon Community Church, Greensboro First, Happy Home, Hine's Chapel, Ingram, Lynchburg, Mt. Bethel, Mt. Zion, New Lebanon, Shallow Ford, Union (N. C., and Union (Va.). If other churches should be added to this list, will those having the information please convey the same to me, and I shall be glad to make the correction.

I have not received report from the secretaries of the other three conferences stating that a single church in these conferences raised the entire apportionment. We have a total of approximately two hundred churches in the Convention. According to records available, only twenty-seven of the churches have complied with conference apportionments. Think of what our record would be and what rejoicing there would be throughout the church if all churches would raise their apportionments in full. We can do it if we will. If every pastor and every church would set itself to this task, it would be done and would mean much to our church in every particular.

May the Lord widen our vision, deepen our consecration, and increase our generosity.

WHAT THE HISTORY OF WILLIAMSBURG SHOULD MEAN TO US.

By ROGER W. BABSON.

[An address delivered in Bruton Parish Church, Williamsburg, Virginia, Sunday, December 12, 1937.]

Friends, I am glad to be here this morning though it is a great disappointment not to be here with Dr. Goodwin. Perhaps he has or has not told you that he was the first man who ever invited me to speak in a Church pulpit. That was in St. Paul's, in Rochester, New York, during the winter of 1921-22, and I shall always feel grateful to him for his courage in doing so. Dr. Goodwin has not heard me speak since that time, although we have often written one another.

Thinking that he would be here this morning, I was planning to deliver a carefully prepared address which I delivered in England about a month ago. But since I have been in Williamsburg, I have been so impressed with what I have seen, that I have discarded the address and have made a few notes along an entirely different line. I want to give you an offhand talk upon what the history of Williamsburg should mean to us.

Williamsburg was at its height from 1700 to 1800. In those days each family had its own dependent water supply, presumably a well in the yard. Today you are absolutely dependent on the water supply of your municipality which could instantly be put out of commission by a bomb or by poison. Each family then, for light, made its own candles. Today you are dependent upon an electric power station, some thirty miles from here. The cutting of the connecting wires would immediately make you helpless as to light and power.

Each family then had its own woodpile (and I was pleased yesterday to see a nice woodpile by Dr. Goodwin's yard), which insured fuel for the winter. Today you are dependent on oil, which could be cut off by a railroad strike or by a strike of the tank drivers who bring it from the coast. Each family then had its own horse and wagon which could readily get them to Richmond or Newport News. Today you are absolutely dependent upon the railroad or an automobile which in turn is dependent on gasoline.

The community then was self-contained. It raised its own food, made its own clothing and provided its own shelter. Today you are dependent on the chain store, the factories and the labor unions. It is true that people are more comfortable today—but correspondingly softer. Were the inhabitants of those good old days not as happy as we are today? Are you any happier today in Williamsburg with all your comforts than they were two hundred years ago? Certainly you are far less safe today than they were then.

Now, let us take another point of view. Note the tremendous changes which have taken place here in Williamsburg during the past fifty years. Your political power has been increased 100% through giving a franchise to the women. Your power to travel has been increased 500% through the automobile and airplane. Your power to see has been increased 1000% through the newsreels and movies, while your power to hear has been increased 5000% through the radio.

During this time has the judgment of your people increased correspondingly? Has the courage of your people increased correspondingly? Has the righteousness of your people increased correspondingly? If Williamsburg is like the other communities of this country, the answer is No—plain No. Yet, education is of value only as it is accompanied by judgment; courage is still the only security; and only by righteousness is a nation exalted.

One more thought. Two hundred years ago your people had time to think and to pray. They read their Bibles. They attended Church. They kept the Sabbath. They even had family prayers. These were the things that made America. I repeat, these were the things that made America. Are these customs still observed in Williamsburg today? People are too busy to think and to pray. The reading of the Bible is being neglected. Church attendance has fallen off, while keeping of the Sabbath and family prayers have almost wholly been thrown aside. Children are no longer today educated at their mother's knee, but by pulp magazines, cheap radio chatter, silly movies and the comic strips.

What is the reason for this change in only fifty years? There is a definite reason. It is not the fault of our young people or of our churches. The reason is that, during these last fifty years, the brains, the laboratories, the fortunes and the merchants of the country have concentrated on giving us more things to do, making all things more attractive, but providing no more time in the day for us to do them. It is a question of simple mathematics. The nation has concentrated on making more things—more to wear, more to see, more to do, but has not increased the length of the day by one-millionth of a second.

Now what does all this mean?

To the trained mathematician this means that civilization, as now developing, is sure to blow up some day. We can not continue to wind a watch indefinitely without breaking a spring. The brains and wealth of America can not continue to concentrate on making more material things to buy, to see, and to do, without corresponding spiritual growth. Simple arithmetic shows you that sooner or later civilization is going to pieces. Unless we voluntarily give more time to divine worship and service, the ship will tip over from being out of balance. Or God will check our material growth in some drastic way until we catch up spiritually.

What I have suggested about Williamsburg applies to all cities of the United States. Our centralization of light, heat, power, food and transportation into a few units is some day likely to make us absolutely slaves either to a few rich men or to a few irresponsible labor leaders, whichever group pulls the string first!

I spent yesterday morning at the White House, where we were talking over the gold situation. Do you realize that ten years ago the billions of gold which are in this country were distributed all over the United States? The Government then had only a few billions; the rest was distributed among the banks, insurance companies and all the people. These billions of gold then was held by millions of families. Today 95% of this gold is in three vaults, and the majority is in one vault in Fort Knox, Tennessee. Figuratively speaking, the key to that vault hangs on the wall of the room where I was sitting yesterday. Not only have we concentrated our light and heat and transportation to make ourselves slaves of Mammon; but we have taken our gold and given it into the control of one man. Certainly this is a temptation for dictators.

In addition, the increased use of bombing planes is going to make us slaves to a few officers and their fliers. These men could sack our own cities as well as the cities of Europe. An increased air-force may be necessary for protecting us from foreign enemies; but the stronger we make our air-force, the more subject we are to revolution at home and the more helpless we will be when it comes. This is accompanied by the fact that we are losing our spiritual faith, becoming softer and less courageous.

Remember the Chinese wall? China spent a hundred years building that wall to keep out the hordes from the north. The wall was sixteen hundred miles long, sixty feet wide and forty

AMERICAN YOUTH SEEKING.

Young men and women in American Churches today are demonstrating a broadening and deepening interest in religion. Distinct evidence is the fact that they are turning in ever-increasing numbers to the Church, swelling the membership rolls of the various youth organizations in a most remarkable fashion. National leaders of a few of the Church youth organizations report that membership and interest has fallen off to an alarming degree during the past few years, and attribute that decline to an over-strong emphasis on the social aspect of their groups. Already, however, they announce plans to effect a complete reorganization with a renewed emphasis on the Gospel of Jesus Christ as the essential element of all Christian activity. They express confidence that this return to the fundamental purpose of the religious youth movement will create a thorough revitalization. Various youth groups have sought constantly to give primary emphasis to Christ and His Gospel. One organization reports a membership increase of more than 300 per cent during the past twenty years, and a youth leader of another Church states that "during the year 1936-'37 we have grown faster than during any year since 1922. This is exceedingly encouraging since we have a definite program built on spiritual values."

Stress the fundamentals of Christian faith; teach the regenerating Gospel of Christ; emphasize the challenge to decide on a life for Christ; instruct young people regarding the work of the Church and the extension of Christ's Kingdom; encourage Bible study; these elements are basic in the programs of the successful, vital youth organizations and are offered as the only rules for success in appealing to the profoundest interest of young men and women.

Evidence of the growing appeal of religion to American youth is the fact that attendance at their conventions—district, state, and national—is increasing rapidly. Bible camps, too, are gaining attention, and reports of activities during the past two summers indicate that it was impossible to accommodate the thousands eager to attend. Pocket Testament movements, Bible study groups, and various young peoples' service organizations have also developed and increased in significance during the past few years. Countless indications point to a renewed interest in the fundamental Christianity taught by Jesus Christ. There is a more vital interest in religion and the Church than we have had for some time.

"THE WAR TO END WAR."

There probably never was a period in the history of mankind when so much thought and money was being spent on warfare, past present and future, as there is today—nineteen hundred years after the coming of the Prince of Peace. Instead of peace and goodwill among men, there are murderous conflicts going on in Spain and China and more are threatened in Europe, Asia, Africa and in the Americas. There were many who believed that the great World War was such a deadly and decisive conflict that "civilized" nations in the future would be persuaded to settle their disputes without arms. But a "war to end war" is an idle dream. It is no homeopathic remedy; no inoculation that prevents taking the disease in worse form. Warfare unleashes human passions; it stimulates greed, hatred and a desire for revenge. This has been proved by the course of events in Germany, Turkey and Latin America. It will continue to prove true in Spain, in Russia, in Ethiopia and in China. The only way to end war by murderous warfare is to exterminate all opponents; even then new antagonists will arise and attempt to put down the victor who depends on physical force to maintain his supremacy.

A "war to end war" is rightly ridiculed today. It is as futile as is Japan's campaign to cure unfriendliness by a murderous invasion of Chinese territory. You cannot cure hatred by hatred, or overcome evil with evil. It is nineteen years since "peace" was declared in Europe; the Treaty of Versailles was signed by conflicting nations; the World War was supposedly brought to an end; the victors thought that they had been able to make it unprofitable, if not impossible, for Germany, Austria and Turkey ever again to consider renewing the conflict. They were believed to be too weak to take revenge.

Jesus Christ came with a message of peace to the world and showed the way to establish and maintain goodwill among men. He gave His life to make peace between men and God and to establish the rule of love, and yet how little we have shown our desire for peace and goodwill. There are still conflicts not only between men of different nations, but also between those of different races, social and economic stratâ and ideas!

We hate war and yet there are things worse than war—even worse than armed conflict and death. Dishonor, disobedience to the laws of God, and cruel disregard of human rights are worse than war. A truly righteous and strong government must endeavor to put down lawlessness, even by the use of force. "The powers that be are ordained by God." As long as thugs and thieves ply their trades, armed police are necessary—locally, nationally or internationally. Such a condition is not ideal and does not make for lasting peace, but lawlessness should be made unprofitable.

There is only one way to end war and that is to establish the rule of love, to disarm the mind and heart by taking away men's desire to fight one another. There is only one way truly to conquer an enemy and that is to make him a friend. We are "more than conquerors" when we overcome evil with good. This can be brought to pass when men give their full allegiance to Him who loved us.

HISTORY OF WILLIAMSBURG.

feet high. Did it keep out the hordes from the north? No! They came in four or five times. They merely bribed the gatekeepers and walked through the gates. My point is that we have not only failed to increase in righteousness, but we have put so much more power into the hands of a few "gatekeepers" that, when, as and if trouble does come, we will be in a very dangerous position. We are liable to suffer far more than did your people one hundred or two hundred years ago.

Friends, and I speak now as a statistician, not as a preacher, only one thing will save America from revolution. That is, the adoption seriously of the teachings of Jesus. The churches hold the key. I am much interested in the words on the first page of the leaflet distributed in this Church this morning—"Be Ye Doers of the Word, not Hearers Only." How carelessly we take our religion. How we must be looked on as hypocrites by people outside of the Church! As God looks down on us and hears what we read from the Bible this morning and hears us sing the hymns and repeat the words which we do each Sunday, and then entirely forget them and absolutely ignore them.

I tell you, my friends, that to save this country from destruction we must get back to the Church and the principles of our fathers. What is one hundred and fifty or three hundred years in the light of history? Nothing! Democracy has not proved to be a success. It is still in the test tube. Whether it will be a success or whether the world will return again into the dark ages depends upon the Christians of the world, especially upon the Christians of America. Because in the World War to which we are heading, America will have a deciding voice. We should develop a desire to give, instead of to get; to serve, instead of secure; we should entirely reverse our ideas of "success."

We Christians should seek to avoid having this trouble come to us. Our Churches must take for their motto and advertise—"We want those in trouble to come to us." Only by preaching and teaching that God is Love and that we Christians are willing to sacrifice for one another, will we head off disaster of the most major kind.

This brings me to my text. In my hand is a complete Bible made by some monks about 1250—seven hundred years ago. I did not want you folks down here in Williamsburg to get too delighted with yourselves in talking about these buildings "three hundred years old." I want you to realize that we in New England are still in possession of some real old things. So I just slipped this old Bible in my grip and brought it down. I am going to read my text from it. It is from the fourth chapter of First John. The book I hold in my hand is the Vulgate. The verse reads when translated into English—God Is Love.

I want to say to you young people in the balcony that God is not any old man with long whiskers, sitting on a throne. He is not even what many of you were taught that he is. God is a Spirit and that Spirit is the Spirit of Love. It is only as we have more of that Spirit throughout this world we will enjoy peace and prosperity. We will not be saved by Capitalism, Socialism, Communism, or Fascism. Neither Republicans nor Democrats have the solution. If saved it will be by the Churches and their ministers. The only thing that will save this world is the constant preaching and practising that God Is Love; that material progress must be counter balanced by spiritual progress and that we all grow only as we learn, worship and serve.

in the local churches. Then it is sincerely hoped that the ministers will see those members and secure subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Just take a few days or a week to do this task, and then it will be over. Do not let it drag.

If there is help that you want, please write to the editor, whose name and address you will find at the top of page four. Please make your requests at once so they may be met in time for you to render the needed service.

It has been said by some who have observed our activity that we start many good things, but seldom bring them to a successful conclusion. Will you join me in helping to make this effort 100% in cooperation and in the number of subscriptions? My own church was pretty thoroughly canvassed last year, and has a longer list of subscribers than the average church of its size, but we accept the quota given by the Publications Committee, and shall do our best to secure the number.

There are to be no commissions during this campaign. This is to be a service of love on the part of pastors. Can the Church that ordained us depend upon us to render this service? Let the answer be unanimous: "It Can!"

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church"

MISS EMILY CARLETON, Editor, 541 Osceola Ave., Winter Park, Fla.

THE NEW YEAR.

At Christmas time each of us is concerned about doing something for others, often for those who are less fortunate than we are—why not determine to continue this each day throughout the New Year?

At Christmas time each of us stops long enough to remember old friends by sending them cards—why not do this at other times during the year?

At Christmas time each of us is especially thoughtful of children in our neighborhood and community—why not be thoughtful enough of them during the rest of the year to set the right kind of example for them?

At Christmas time the spirit of peace pervades all the world—why not try to do our part in making this idea permeate throughout the nations of the earth during the coming year?

At Christmas time some of us go to church for the first time in months—why not decide now to make our church-going an every Sunday affair, rather than a "Christmas and Easter" one?

At Christmas time each of us becomes vitally "Christ-conscious" with the emphasis put upon His birthday—why not endeavor to carry with us each day of the New Year a conscious desire to be more like Him in all that we do?

It seems that our New Year's Resolutions would be the most effective ones possible, if we would simply determine to carry the true Christmas spirit into our lives during the coming twelve months. Let each of us make a conscious effort to do so. And in endeavoring to do this, may I wish for each of you not only a Happy New Year, but a purposeful, Christ-like one, as well.

THE HOLIDAY CONFERENCE.

The Southeast Holiday Conference, which was held in Greensboro last week, brought together young people and their counselors from all sections of the Southeast. There were sixty-five present at the banquet on Thursday night, although some of that number were unable to be present for all the sessions.

On Tuesday night, following a period of informal introductions led by Rev. F. C. Lester, Lanson Granger spoke to us about the National Pilgrim Fellowship—how it came into being, the work it is carrying out at the present time, and our relation to it. He also gave some interesting phases of Pilgrim Fellowship work in other sections of the country. Rev. F. Ervin Hyde brought the first meeting to a close with just the right tone, as he led the evening worship period. The young people of the Greensboro Church invited the delegates to share a recreational period with them, so by the time the evening was over everyone knew everyone else.

Wednesday morning Rev. S. E. Madren led the morning worship period. Earle Ward, president of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship, told of the purpose of that organization and of the things we were trying to accomplish. Following this there was a panel discussion led by Emily Carleton, Florida, showing the activities of the Pilgrim Fellowship groups in the different sections of the Southeast. Those participating were: Elberta Murray, North Carolina and Virginia Conference; Edna Fulcher, Eastern Virginia; Rev. W. J. Andes, Valley of Virginia; Marvin McCauley, Eastern North Carolina; Charles Dunaphant, Georgia; and Warren Schiek, Kentucky. Lanson Granger added a great deal to the discussion, and so did others who participated from the "Audience." The worship service on Thursday morning was led by Rev. Ruth Sergeant, of Stearns, Kentucky.

Three of the highlights of the Holiday Conference were the three addresses: "Religious Convictions Underlying the Social Action Movement," by Rev. Alan Jones, of Demorest, Georgia; "Highland Heritage," by Rev. Edwin E. White, of Pleasant Hill, Tennessee, and "Your Accent Betrays You," by Rev. Victor B. Chicoine, of Winter Park, Florida. Each of these men contributed much to the Conference by their presence at all of the meetings, and we take this opportunity to thank them for all of their contributions.

On Wednesday afternoon and on Thursday morning the delegates worked on plans for definite work during the coming year in these fields: Social Action, Missions, Publications, Devotional Life, and Leadership Education. The reports from these groups were excellent and will be given in a later issue of THE SUN.

There were several important business matters which were taken up at the Conference. Miss Mary Moncrief had resigned as Superintendent of Devotional Life, and Miss Dorothy French, of Chattanooga, Tennessee, was elected to fill that vacancy. The group working on Publications proposed that once a quarter four pages of THE CHRISTIAN SUN be devoted to the Pilgrim Fellowship, the first such issue to appear the latter part of January. There would be reports from each Conference, suggested plans and projects, and news items of interest to all. Rev. F. C. Lester offered to furnish 100 copies of such an issue for $2.00. The delegates voted to accept the proposal and plans were made for the first issue.

The finest thing that could be said of any such meeting was heard on every side about the Holiday Conference—"I never saw such an interested, hard-working, eager-to-learn group of young people."

OUR MEETINGS.

Some of our New Year's Resolutions will not be personal ones, but will be made with the desire to improve our young people's societies during the coming year. In a recent bulletin published by our Young People's Department on "How to Use the Pilgrim Highroad Discussion Topics" we find some good ideas for improving our discussion meetings. To quote—

1. Start early in preparing for the meeting. Certainly a week before the meeting; two weeks would be much better, for then you can make assignments to others the Sunday before the meeting.

2. Make notes. If you keep the topic in mind for a week or two, many good ideas will occur to you—jot them down.

3. State the topic interestingly. Often you can improve on the one listed, though you keep the same subject. Some groups prefer to have most of their topics in question form.

4. Decide on a definite purpose for the meeting. It is not just to get people talking. State the reason very definitely as you prepare; it is best to write it down.

5. Begin to outline your program. It is well to organize your notes under three or four main headings; if you attempt too many, you will not treat any of them adequately.

6. Read the material in the Pilgrim Highroad (or whatever bulletin you

PREPARING FOR A LIFE OF SERVICE.

LESSON II—JANUARY 9, 1938.

LESSON: Mark 1:1-13.

INTRODUCTION.

We are beginning a series of lessons from the Gospel of Mark. It will be well to get a little background, something of the author, of the content, of the characteristics, of the purpose, of the destination of the gospel. In brief here it is.

The Gospel of Mark or According to Mark.

1. Who? The author, although not named in the gospel itself, is generally agreed to be Mark, or John Mark. He was a nephew of Barnabas of New Testament fame, and a son of a woman who was probably well-to-do, and a widow. It was probably in her home that the disciples met for the Last Supper, and in which they were gathered when the Spirit came. This same John Mark accompanied Paul and Barnabas on their first missionary journey but got "cold feet" and turned back. He acted as secretary or interpreter for Simon Peter on Peter's preaching tours, and thus got first hand accounts of the works of Jesus which he embodied in his gospel. He was with Peter in Rome, and interpreted for Peter there.

2. Where? It was probably written in Rome, where Mark was a companion of Simon Peter.

3. Why? It was written to preserve the words and works of Jesus as the original eye-witnesses began to pass off the scene. Mark felt that some permanent record of what Jesus said and did should be made and preserved as a means of instructing and evangelizing others. It was written to show Jesus as the Son of God, a man of power, a doer, a worker of mighty deeds, a man of action.

4. To Whom? Mark's purpose was related to those to whom he wrote. Rome symbolized power. Mark wrote his gospel with the Roman particularly in mind. He shows Jesus as a man of power, as has been stated above.

5. When? It is not known definitely just when it was written, but probably between sixty and seventy A. D. It is the first gospel written, but it depends upon, and made use of other previously written records.

6. What? It is a record of what Jesus did, rather than of what He said. There is very little narrative, comparatively speaking, in it. Jesus goes places and does things. Recurring words are "straightway" and "immediately." The style is simple, terse, rapid. Jesus is a Doer of Mighty works. Jesus appears as the Son of God.

The Beginning of the Gospel.

"The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God"—thus, does Mark begin his gospel. Unlike Luke and Matthew, who begin the gospel with the stories of the Nativity, Mark begins his gospel when Jesus was about thirty years of age. The introduction states several significant facts: It is the beginning, and only the beginning of the story of that Life—the end is not yet and will not be until eternity itself. It is the good news, the word gospel means just that, the best news that has ever come to earth is the good news of Jesus Christ. Mark accepts Jesus as the Messiah, the One-Who-Should-Come, the word Christ means that. And Mark also wrote of Jesus as a historical person, the word Jesus refers to a person who actually lived. Furthermore the word in its essential meaning means a Saviour, the angel told Joseph that he was to be called Jesus for He should save His people from their sins. And finally Mark believed that Jesus Christ was the Son of God. He was, of course, simply reaffirming what Peter and the other disciples knew from first-hand experience, that Jesus was in a unique sense the Son of God.

The Forerunner.

John the Baptist, John the one who baptizes, the words mean, was sent to prepare the way for Jesus. The nation was not ready yet for the message and ministry of Jesus. John's preaching quickened interest, caused concern, and in large areas wrought a great reformation in the hearts of the people. He was a man of simple life, and of strong convictions and stern moral demands. In simple dress and of simple fare, he appeared on the edge of civilization and preached his uncompromising message. The Messiah was coming, but the people were not ready for Him. There must be a thorough-going repentance, a preparation of the heart. As a token or evidence of that repentance or change of heart, John administered the rite of baptism, hence his name. The water he applied was simply a symbol of an inner change of heart, an outward token of an inner change. And John demanded that that change be thorough-going and real. "Bring forth works, meet for repentance" he said in connection with his preaching.

John knew his office and his limitations. He knew that he was simply the forerunner of Jesus, his cousin, and the coming Messiah. With forthright humility and sincerity he disclaimed any merit and magnified Jesus. Furthermore he said that whereas he had baptized with water, the One Who Should Come would baptize with the Holy Spirit. John knew, too, as that as Christ's work should wax, his would wane. He was one of the truly great characters of history, and Jesus recognized him as such.

The Beginning of the Ministry of Jesus.

"And it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in the Jordan." The last we heard of Him he was a boy of twelve, going back from the feast at Jerusalem with His parents to the Nazareth home, and being subject unto them. He was now thirty years of age. Eighteen years of silence! How we would like to know more about those eighteen years! We may be sure that they were days of growth in body, mind, and soul, days of wholesome play, and also wholesome work as he became older. There was a maturing of mind and a ripening of soul and spirit. Back of the public ministry of Jesus, as back of the successful life of any great man or woman, there were the days and years of discipline and devotion, of progress and growth, of obedience and dedication. When His hour struck, He was ready for He had been getting ready all through those years.

The Baptism of Jesus.

"And was baptized of John in the Jordan." Not because He Himself needed baptism for remission of sins, but because as a good Jew He was amenable to the ordinance of John who was representing the divine will, and because He wanted to identify Himself with needy and sinful humanity. Jesus recognized the office of John as of divine appointment, and He wanted publicity to give his approval of that movement. And it is quite probable that in submitting to Baptism, Jesus was thus publicly committing himself to his ministry in more or less of an official way as it were. In any event it signified his whole-hearted commitment in public to that to which He had already given himself whole-heartedly in private.

A Voice Out of the Heavens.

A strange phenomenon, or rather strange phenomena, accompanied the baptism of Jesus. The Holy Spirit, as a dove, came down upon Him, and a voice out of the heaven said, "Thou

SCRAPPING THE BIBLE.

"Search the scriptures."—John 5: 39-47.

We rub our eyes in amazement at much we read to-day of "liberal" views of life. Books, magazines, college professors freely assume that the old-fashioned moralities, which the race has learned from life and from the Bible, are no longer to be accepted as binding. Marriage, the home, chastity, patriotism, are challenged by a generation which calls itself "modern."

One disturbing factor is the tacit assumption that the Bible and its teachings need not be considered. Most of this "modern" stuff is at direct variance with Scripture. If one is accepted, the other must be rejected. In effect, these "progressive thinkers" have chucked the Bible onto the scrap-heap.

All of which means, for us, a closer study of God's word; and a stiffened resolution to make it the man of our counsels.

Prayer—In a time of confused counsel, we would cling to Thy Word, O God; and make it, in devotion, our daily guide of life. Amen.

1. Approach a task with a happy countenance.
2. Give serious devotion to duty.
3. Invest your talent in something extra.
4. Join the cheering section or sit in the bleachers.

History has a habit of writing in her records the names of those who live for a single great and unselfish purpose.

The New Testament summons us to live by one law, for one object under the impulse of one power, and that power is Christ. Through this power let us seek out, in addition to our regular work, some God-like objective.

Prayer—Our Father, in little ways or in large ones, we would live only for Thee. Help us to do this for Thee. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

CONCRETE AND PRACTICAL.

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is to visit the fatherless and the widows in their affliction and to keep thyself unspotted from the world."—Jas. 1: 27.

We read from the morning paper of a widow woman and five children in a starving condition in New York City. The oldest boy committed suicide rather than suffer the pangs of hunger and death.

One of the most familiar scriptures makes the test of the Christian living that of caring for widows and orphans in their afflictions. Here is something concrete and practical and within the reach of all of us. No doubt there are opportunities close to the door of everyone. When we contemplate the neglect and the suffering we can understand the reason for the summary.

When in the spiritual dumps and perhaps concerned over our religious state, let us try the remedy of James.

Prayer—Our Father, in the name of Jesus Christ, the Lover and Blessor of widows and children, teach us the secret of Thy ministry, to all the needy. Amen.

THURSDAY.

YOUTH AT FORTY.

"Reaching forth unto those things which are before."—Phil. 3: 13.

Dr. Ellis of the Christian Herald invites our attention to the lack of vision in our young people today. He says, "they lack imagination." He says that they live largely for today and give not enough thought to consequences of their actions of to-day in the years to come.

Youth, indeed, should be itself and with the proper guidance should have expressions, and yet today's actions should be with a view of preparation for future years. One question should always be before them; what kind of maturity is likely to result from what I am doing now?

Every girl should have imagination to envisage herself as a woman of forty and what sort of forty-year-old woman is she building. Every boy should be able to envisage himself as a business man or a professional at forty. Knowing that success does not spring suddenly out of a life of frivolity. The fact is that nothing comes out of any man except that which has been pumped in.

Prayer—Our Father, help us not only to keep before us the ideals of what life should be but to envisage the picture of the endless life of eternity.

FRIDAY.

"OUT OF THE MUD."

"Consider the lilies."—Matt. 6: 28.

One of the prettiest flower gardens we ever saw was a gorgeous water-lily pond—sheer beauty, fragrance and perfection that charmed our greatest admiration.

Yet they grew out of mud beneath shallow waters. The lilies teach us that the most beautiful life may be lived in the lowliest circumstances. He, whose heart is right with God, who speaketh the truth with his neighbor and who worketh righteousness and finds himself living the life of beauty and possessing the confidence and esteem of others. Wherever a human life is placed, it may grow into this character and God's grace is sufficient to make it so.

Prayer—O, our Father, in this wondrous world about us, we would do Thy will and strive to be as pure as the lilies.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D., Pastor.

"NOT OUT OF THE WORLD."

By REV. VICTOR B. CHICOINE.

"I do not pray that Thou shouldst take them out of the world."—John 17:15.

Somehow stories have gone about that if one fellow follows Christ he or she will be obliged to depart from this thrilling and exciting world of adventure and joy. It is easily understood how some people, calling themselves Christians could, by their speech and dress and actions, cause such a tale to be started. But it is almost incredible that thinking people, willing to go to the source, which is Christ, should keep alive such a sentiment. For if our Lord desired one thing above many others it was that His followers would stay in the world and wrestle with its problems.

Jesus did not want His disciples to depart from the world either in their thinking or to actually withdraw to desert places. He might have done that for no one ever had better reasons for withdrawing. There were many occasions when in deep and bitter disappointment He might, as others have, turned His back upon the world.

Withdraw from the world? Why that is just what the forces of evil want us to do. They want us to tread softly. They want us to have no part in the conflicts of life. Recently in the Criminal Court of Florida I heard a lawyer for the defense, who was fighting for permission to be granted for the sale of salacious magazines, desire a certain juror to remain on the panel because this man said that his church took no interest in affairs outside of the worship of the church.

There is also a deep fear in many of us that we will be considered a peculiar people if we do not follow all the prevailing customs and styles of the hour. And because of that we are played upon by forces that would mould us according to their wills and who have cheap, ulterior, and vicious motives.

Now being peculiar does not necessarily mean being eccentric, fantastic, or laughable. The definition of the word is: "Having a character exclusively its own." This being true Christ was a peculiar person! For He had a character all His own—and He was trying to impart it to the world.

But a peculiar person may appear to be a strange sort of individual even though eternally right! Then what? And further what is considered peculiar according to many in one generation may become the accepted fact in another only to again be considered peculiar in still another generation! And this seems to be the case concerning Christianity. For once more they who follow Christ in the world are being thought of as peculiar!

Consider the history of Christianity in broad lines. Its beginnings were meager. Then it grew in numbers but not in favor—but hated, spurned, persecuted. Then after a time gaining royal favor—then dominating the world. Then a part of the world—and now once again being spurned, hated and persecuted!

Now, I want to bring to your attention two other words—"pioneer" and "conservative"—and connect them with the word peculiar. Pioneers have always been a peculiar people. And why not? Who else but a peculiar people would break away from the accustomed and safe—leave the trodden way for the sake of a belief or ideals? But also conservatives who do not break from well beaten paths are sometimes known as peculiar people!

And that confusing statement can be cleared up in this way. There are, for example, those who call themselves pioneers who break away from the Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount. Now, of course, it may be that the Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount are outmoded—and that they who depart from them are pioneers in the highest sense of the word, and that they have been conserving the useless. But right there the line of battle is drawn. And one can well ask the searching question: "Who are the pioneers—and are conservatives peculiar, or are they heroic and see far deeper into life than these others?"

For the life of me I do not see why one cannot be both a pioneer and a conservative. That is perfectly clear in the field of science. Men and women interested in science do not forsake their traditions and teachings every twenty years. They do not smash their instruments; abandon their laboratories; burn their old text books every generation and say that they will begin anew! That is utterly absurd. Yet in the realm of morals and religion that is just what certain writers of a type of novel and certain leaders would have the world do!

Our Lord was both a pioneer and a conservator in one. He said that He did not come to destroy but that He came to fulfill—and that there could be a newness of life through Him. We, too, can be in the world even as He was. We need not go tearing along with the unthinking and uncritical minds of the world!

One can become a part of the world, that same world that slew our Saviour. It is a very simple matter. All one needs to do is to follow the crowds; applaud Hollywood; agree with those in power; take the line of least resistance; laugh and smile pityingly at those who are morally vigorous; and wait until the unpopular but necessary programs of life have been made popular after much suffering and struggle by the few and then swing in with the crowd!

Or one can become a part of the world for which Christ died and stay with it until beckoned elsewhere. I regret that so many of the so-called Christians are not willing to do that. And because they will not, the color of the Church of Jesus Christ is very much like the color of the world. This lack of a decided hue for the Church on crucial questions will keep it safe and fairly prosperous until an hour strikes when the real forces of evil are in power and they unveil themselves, even as in Germany today, and disclose their innermost thoughts in all their hideousness!

Being in the world as Jesus was in it is still dangerous. But this, too, must be said, being in the world following the easy going crowd is also dangerous! Our Lord said that a long while ago. For one must battle for character, personality, honor, truth, justice, or else revert to barbarism. The good things of life do not drift in upon us! They are achieved! They come only after conquest—inner and outer conquest!

In all this struggle with the world I am not discounting prayer. It has meant too much to me. But I am discounting prayer and nothing but prayer when a man can do nothing else with his hands, and brain, and pocketbook. And I am not discounting meditation and religious retreats, so-called. But I am discounting such when that and nothing but that is offered to save the world! I say again that that is what the world wants you and me to do—to pray and meditate! Well—let's do that and do it again and again—and then follow Christ into the market place; the school room; home life; business; the highways and the byways!

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:—

The children at the Christian Orphanage had a very happy Christmas. The Franklin Church, Virginia, gave each child a present. The First Church, Norfolk, gave each one a present, and then many presents were sent in by individual friends. A friend in Greensboro sent us three boxes of mixed candy, and one box of oranges. Mr. J. D. Howard, Jr., of Norfolk, shipped us a 150-lb. case of candy.

The friends who sent us chickens, made it possible for us to give them a good Christmas dinner. Every child was happy and delighted.

We close our Financial Report next week and will write our final letter for the year 1938.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

art my beloved Son, in Thee I am well pleased." Twice later, at the Transfiguration, and just before His passion, the voice from heaven spake approval of Jesus. God would thus fulfill the double purpose of setting His seal upon Jesus, and of encouraging Jesus as He went on with His work. Here was One who had lived through all those thirty years in such a way that God was well pleased with Him. What a life indeed! Surely, this man was the Son of God!

A Trial of Fire.

Immediately after the baptism, Jesus felt impelled to go into the wilderness, where for forty days He was tempted by the devil. Mark dismisses this significant event with one verse, whereas, Matthew and Luke give a rather detailed account of it. Basically they are the same—they illustrate the profound truth that hard on spiritual privilege comes temptation. It was the time of testing new-found strength. It was the time for determining the principles which should guide Him in His ministry. It was the experience through which He found new resources for living in fellowship with God. The words "and the angels, i. e. the messengers of God, ministered unto Him," tell in poetic form the eternal fact that God is able to give us the victory in the hour of temptation if we trust Him and respond to Him.

The title of the lesson is "Preparation for a Life of Service." It is clear that such preparation is essentially spiritual. And it is equally as clear that faithful performance of duty in commonplace days, quiet discipline of spirit in uneventful days is the best preparation for the great issues and crises of life. The Master knew whereof He spake when He told us to be ready.

In Memoriam

RAWLES.

On October 7, 1937, our Heavenly Father in His divine love and wisdom saw fit to take from this earth to her heavenly reward the soul of our beloved sister, Mrs. Ava T. Rawles.

First, we, the members of Liberty Spring Church bow in humble submission to His will. Although she was an invalid for several years, she was always bright and cheerful, always glad to see friends. Medical science rendered all possible aid, while tender hands ministered to every need with untiring devotion, "but to no avail."

Second, that Liberty Spring Church has lost a devoted member and her family a loving wife and mother, and we extend to them our deepest sympathy.

Third, that her life and influence has been a blessing to all who knew her, and the Christian courage and patience with which she bore her illness will ever be an inspiration to us.

Fourth, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, a copy entered upon the records of the church, and a copy sent for publication in "The Christian Sun."

Respectfully submitted,
Mrs. O. L. BAKER,
Mrs. E. R. RAWLES,
Mrs. I. T. BYRD,
Mrs. F. F. BRINKLEY,
R. E. ROGERS,

use for material). Make yourself produce some ideas first; otherwise you will simply be a parrot or phonograph record.

7. Read other material. Ask your pastor or librarian for books or magazines to help you on your particular subject.

8. Adapt the material in the Pilgrim Highroad. It is not written to be followed slavishly. Re-arrange the order of the material if this seems wise.

9. Confer with your adult counselor. Not to have your mind filled with new ideas but to talk over ideals which you have developed.

10. Assign parts to other members of the group. Usually best to have them written out, and to indicate the definite contributions to the main purpose which you expect them to make.

11. Make a finished outline. Be sure the main points follow each other in logical order; be prepared to change if necessary.

12. Plan how to begin and close the meeting. The first sentence is important. Start with something definite, something that will awaken the drowsy mind and that will still the busy tongue.

13. Have some spare ideas up your sleeve. Things do not always happen just as you hope they will. Think ahead to that possibility.

14. Plan carefully for your worship. This should usually be related to the theme of discussion; sometimes it precedes, sometimes follows.

15. Follow the discussion with action. In many cases, committees should be set to work to undertake some of the definite activities agreed upon in the meeting.

16. Shortly before the meeting, go over the whole outline carefully. Seclude yourself. Spend at least half an hour in prayerful thought. Concentrate on the plans that you have made. And then—don't worry!

MAKING GOOD BUSINESS.

"I do always those things that please Him."—John. 8: 29.

A world traveler once told us of a guide which he had when traveling to Bagdad. This guide was described as a grizzled Chaldean. He was employed as a guide, cook, interpreter and servant. He said, that as this man was seeking for the job, he showed him his greasy packet of letters of recommendation and said, "I make good business for my master." And "what good business he did make." He was a man of undaunting courage, and of self-forgetting devotion. He was constantly on the alert that nobody should defraud him and in hundreds of little ways endeared himself to the traveler. He lived and labored only to make good business for his master.

Am I that true to Christ?

Prayer—Our Father, in the name of Jesus, Thy Son, we humble ourselves before Thee, pleading Thy mercy and forgiveness and implore Thee to make us Thy good servants, whatever the cost or care may be to us.
Amen.

SUNDAY.

ECHOING THROUGH THE AGES.

"Sing unto the Lord a new song."
Psalm 33: 3.

Hymnals are treasure-houses of spiritual truth and of perpetual inspiration.

One of the interesting points about every hymn is the date of its writing. Some of the most precious ones are hundreds of years old. Others, like those of Bernard of Cluny, and Bernard of Clairvaux, are nearly a thousand years old.

How we all love the old hymns! Some day we shall sing the "new song," and until that joyful day, may our hearts keep singing.

Prayer—Before time was, the morning stars sang together; to announce the Saviour's birth, the heavenly host sang. Jesus Himself sang. Lord, fill our lips with song! Amen.

SUN'S PULPIT.

Come with me a little further. There is not a single great personality in the history of the Christian Church that would have been great had he or she pulled out of the struggles of the world. John the Baptist would have been a nobody. But he came out of the desert place with a message and a conviction concerning that message. Paul the thinker, staying in the waste places of Arabia would have shuffled from the stage of life quietly. And our Lord, if He remained the gentle mystic, going about and healing sores, would have satisfied the malignant powers of His day perfectly!

We need to understand fully that it will be facing the world, battling the world in the world, that will give us eventually the right to hear the words—"Well done, good and faithful servants" as it was only in the world, facing the world, and finally the cross that brought our Lord and Saviour gloriously into the presence of God! I do not believe that there is any other alternative!

Happy New Year

I do not know, I cannot see,
What God's kind hand prepares for me,
Nor can my glance pierce through the haze
Which covers all my future ways;
But yet I know that o'er it all
Rules He who notes the sparrow's fall.

I know the hand that hath me fed,
And through the year my feet hath led;
I know the everlasting arm
That hath upheld and kept from harm.
I trust Him as my God and Guide,
And know that He will still provide.

So at the opening of the year
I banish care and doubt and fear,
And, clasping his kind hand, essay
To walk with God from day to day,
Trusting in Him who hath me fed,
Walking with Him who hath me led.

I know not where His hand shall lead,
Through desert wastes, o'er flowery mead;
Mid tangled thicket set with thorn,
Mid gloom of night or glow of morn;
But still I know my Father's hand
Will bring me to His goodly land.

Farewell, Old Year, with goodness crowned,
A hand divine hath set thy bound.
Welcome the New Year, which shall bring Fresh blessings from my God and King.
The Old we leave without a tear,
The New we hail without a fear.

LET THERE BE LIGHT

PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES

President and Mrs. L. E. Smith stopped in Richmond, on their way to Washington this week.

Dr. I. W. Johnson, Secretary of the Southern Convention, was a caller at the office of publication this week.

Our churches were good to the Orphanage last year. Let's be equally as considerate of the other institutions this year.

After forty years in the ministry, Dr. N. G. Newman has retired to his old home near Chuckatuck, Virginia. His friends can write him at Route 2, Windsor, Virginia.

Mr. Roger W. Babson, Moderator of the General Council, visited THE SUN office, in Richmond, recently when on his way to his winter home at Babson Park, Florida.

Rev. A. R. Van Cleave, of Demorest, Georgia, preached at Burlington, North Carolina, on December 26th, to the delight of the church, says the pastor, Dr. J. H. Lightbourne.

Rev. Robert Lee House, pastor of First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Virginia, is helping in a training school at Franklinton Christian College.

Mrs. J. E. McCauley, wife of our pastor in Richmond, Virginia, underwent a very serious operation last Friday. At the time of publication she was apparently improving.

January and February are the months in which the churches of the Southern Convention think of their College at Elon, and make their annual contributions to that institution.

Dr. C. Rexford Raymond of Southern Pines, North Carolina, is helping in the training school for ministers at Franklinton College. The school runs four days each week during January.

The next issue of this paper will be different from any previous issue. You will want to see it. So may your neighbors who are members of our churches. Why not get them to subscribe right now while you think of it?

A recent issue of an Orlando, Florida, paper carried the picture of Dr. Edwin C. Gillette and an account of his dedication of Florida's first tuberculosis sanatorium. The paper says that Dr. Gillette has been very active as a director of the Florida Tuberculosis and Health Association.

AN ULTIMATUM,

Peaceable negotiations and diplomacy have failed. Lieutenant Light-horse Lightbourne, master strategist of the Carolina Sore Heels, is irreconcilable. His imperial decree has had violent repercussions throughout the Old Dominion. Our people are thoroughly intimidated. Therefore, I, Corporal Cabin House, issue this ultimatum: Beginning the first day of February, next, there will exist a state of undeclared war, animosity and anxiety between the two aforesaid states.

Now, hear ye, loyal Virginians, this is the time for every good man to come to the aid of his Church Paper. We must launch a stupendous offensive against our formidable adversary. Mere filibustering will not bring in the subscriptions. The contest must be waged on land and on sea. Our theme song is "Fight the Good Fight," our motto, "The Nemesis of the North State." They threaten to secure a large number of subscriptions. Now it remains to be seen whether they be Courageous Carolinians or Timid Tar Heels.

THE SUN Campaign will be conducted without overhead expense. The contest is for new subscriptions. No commissions are offered. THE SUN needs all the cash. We must lay siege to our carefully selected clientele. Each and every minister is urged to forward his prospect list to THE SUN Headquarters at once. Each prospect will receive a sample copy of THE SUN. The penalty for non-cooperation will be seven years in the Dungeon of Regret. One should prefer martyrdom to carelessness or laziness. Ours is not the prayer of Joshua that THE SUN may stand still, but that THE SUN may its successive journeys run. Masterly coordination will multiply strength and guarantee results.

To your prospects, O Virginians.

R. L. HOUSE.

AN IMPORTANT MEETING.

At Windsor, Virginia, Christian Church, next Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock leaders of the Eastern Virginia Conference will meet to consider "Evangelism." Dr. L. E. Smith and Rev. R. L. House will make addresses. Revs. Carl R. Key, H. E. Crutchfield and J. E. McCauley will present materials, books, and the Conference program for Evangelism. All pastors and leaders are expected to share in this service next Sunday.

FIRST CHURCH, BURLINGTON.

The family of and the minister of the First Church, Burlington, spent a very grateful, appreciative, and Merry Christmas in a parsonage which had just been gone over in a very thorough manner. On Thursday noon before Christmas Day, the last of many workmen—plumbers, steam-fitters, carpenters, roofers, paper hangers, tilers, painters—packed up their tools, and wishing us a Merry Christmas, left us with a house, the interior of which shone with freshly painted woodwork, and floors either newly treated or new, glowing with shellac. Every wall and ceiling the house over was resplendent, either with new and beautiful paper or paint. In a newly concreted basement sat a new heating plant, steam-vapor, stoker fed and thermostat controlled, capable of supplying an abundance of soft warmth for every room and hot water for every purpose. Besides all this, certain remodelling which was done, but which cannot be well described in detail, the closing of doors, the creation of openings, the placing of a built-in bookcase and a china closet give the parsonage an altogether different and new appearance, and provide for the family an atmosphere and setting of pleasant comfort. An open back porch which had been latticed and screened was enclosed with sliding glass windows and much of the wiring of the house was gone over and new additional fixtures placed. In the spring it is planned to give the exterior of the parsonage a coat of paint.

A LAYMAN TALKS ABOUT THE PAPER.

I have noticed with much interest the recent discussions about the problem of publishing THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and have wondered why the circulation has not been multiplied at least by three.

Since it does not have the support that it should have, there must be a reason, and it would seem strange indeed if it could not be found. Of course I could not do it, but I do know that there has been a gradual falling off in subscriptions in our Conference for several years. I wonder why?

For many years THE SUN had a prominent place in our Conference program, and representatives would visit our local churches. The claims of THE CHRISTIAN SUN were presented so earnestly that a person's loyalty was questioned if he did not take the paper. Today in our Conference there are only a very few who take it, and unless the tide changes the ministers will be the subscribers of tomorrow.

Since I have been a member of THE SUN family for forty years I wonder if I could be allowed to talk about our family? If so, I hope to come again and try in my feeble way to discuss some of the very vital problems from a layman's view that we are facing today.

Note: Members of a family are always welcome to talk about themselves. The columns of THE SUN are open to the members of the Church to discuss the problems that face us. Send on your contributions, Brother Carter. The same invitation is extended to others who have constructive ideas about our Church problems.

A BIRTHDAY SUPPER.

January 1st at his home in Lynchburg, Va., Mr. A. S. Dunn entertained several of his friends and relatives at a Birthday Supper, his 71st birthday being January 2nd. Mr. Dunn has recently retired from active service in the Maintenance Department of the Southern Railway Company, after forty-eight and a half years' service. He was one of the members of the second generation of the family that has had four generations in the service of this company; his father had been employed by them, as were three of Mr. Dunn's brothers, three nephews, four sons, one son-in-law, and at present his grandson is also in the employ of the Southern.

Mr. Dunn has been employed as section foreman at Liberty, Ruffin, and Chapel Hill, North Carolina; and at Durmid, Lawyers, Gretna, and Lynchburg, Virginia, having made his home on Fort Avenue for the last nineteen years. Mr. Dunn was married to Miss Ella Pribble of New London, on December 24, 1895. Mrs. Dunn died last May and their son, George, lived with Mr. Dunn at his home on Fort Avenue.

Mr. Dunn is a member of the Congregational-Christian Church on Fort Avenue and was one of the charter members of the church. The pastor, Rev. J. The dining room was decorated with yellow flowers and candles. The host table held a large bowl of Mrs. Carter Glass Roses. The menu consisted of ham, turkey, peas, potato salad, candied yams, with desert of fruit salad and cake and coffee.

The guest list included the following from out of town, most of whom spent the night in the city and were guests at luncheon on Sunday:

MT. OLIVET (R) PREACHING MISSION.

A preaching mission was held at Mt. Olivet (R) Christian Church, beginning on December 6th and lasting two weeks. The pastor, Rev. Roy D. Coulter, did all the preaching and also led the song services. Each evening he expounded to us some great truths straight from the Bible, so straight and plain that one cannot pass them by. We believe that kind of preaching is what one needs, and not the kind that rounds the corners and smooths out things so that one thinks he is a saint, when he is only a sinner continuing in the same old sins. The final sermon was based on stewardship, the text taken from Malachi 3:8, saying: "Will a man rob God?" This was one of the most heart-stirring messages I have ever heard. In spite of the cold wintry weather the first week of services, there was good attendance throughout the entire revival. The Bethel choir came over one evening and rendered some good singing. A Boy's Club was organized by the pastor, and with fifteen charter members. They meet each week in the church basement. We believe that much good will be accomplished through this organization and that their interest will be renewed in church service. At the close of the revival there were seven young people who united with the church. These boys and girls are already active in Sunday school and Christian Endeavor. After the closing service the pastor's ear was filled with packages of good things to eat, showing the spirit of cooperation from the people and their love and appreciation of their pastor. We believe that this meeting has been a success and much good was done, although there remains much to be done. May God's guidance rest upon pastor and people and the good work kept going.

NEWS OF LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA.

From October 31st to November 5th a special preaching mission was conducted in our church by Dr. James R. Clinton, of the Home Boards of the Congregational-Christian Church. Preparatory for the Mission, cottage prayer services were held and a total of 166 attended five meetings. Dr. Clinton's presence was inspiring and his preaching of the highest order. The church was revitalized and stimulated and greatly blessed by his ministry. Dr. Clinton spoke over the radio station WLVA four mornings extending his ministry to thousands of unseen people. The local church received city-wide publicity and added prestige because of the fine programs presented by Dr. Clinton "over the air."

On December 19th, Dr. Clinton returned and preached for us twice, and on Monday evening he gave a lecture entitled "Fun—Faith—Fury," setting forth his early life experiences in Ireland, which proved to be stimulating and helpful. Our work has been greatly blessed through the consecrated efforts of this splendid servant of the Church and God.

For our mid-week services we have been studying the course in the Old Testament accredited by the Congregational Education Society. Ten Wednesday evenings of two hour sessions have been very profitably spent

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

MORE ABOUT THE CAMPAIGN.

A letter from the Valley of Virginia this week inclosing pay for a new subscriber reminded this writer that the campaign for new subscriptions is now under way. Virginia has begun. The first volley has been fired. Through the years Virginia has led in many things, and in this "Christian Sun" campaign they start off with the expectation of being a winner again.

It happens that this writer lives in Virginia, but was born in North Carolina. Unless he is greatly mistaken there is initiative and enthusiasm among the Carolinians that will send them forward with rapid pace when once they get started. In fact, this writer heard while in Carolina during Christmas that one big church had a committee already in the making and that prospective subscribers are being lined up so that at a given signal that church can storm the woods, drive back the enemy, and bring in the subscriptions.

These tar heelers are accustomed to build good roads and schools. Nice churches are to be found in almost every community. They read farm papers, magazines and daily newspapers. The electric lights dot the country side. Our church people go to town and church in automobiles. They are progressive, and there is no reason in the world why they shouldn't get 300, or even 500 subscriptions for their Church Paper within a week after they get started to work.

It is to be hoped that pastors and people will visualize families that need to know of religion, that need a tie to bind them closer to their church, that need devotional material which they can use in the home, that need inspiration to help them in the daily experiences, and that need aid for the duties they have in the church work. "The Christian Sun" undertakes to be this needed servant of the people in our churches. It is a light that shines from the minds of those who lead in the church work into the lives of those who may read its pages. Out of the best of the thinking of our people come the articles for publication. It is our paper. We make it ourselves, and our people need to read it in order that they may be an effective part of the church which they joined. We have thousands of people now lost to the church who might have been useful workers if they had been taught to read their church paper when they first became a member of the church. Boys and girls are reading. They get most of their ideas from reading. The Church can not be content to let them read whatever may come along without a serious effort to furnish them good reading at a minimum cost. This "The Christian Sun" undertakes to do.

This campaign for new subscriptions to "The Christian Sun" may have in it, then, a bit of humor and play, but underneath is a very serious current of human need. It is the Church becoming vocal. It is the cry of the heart of the members who need the help that others can give them. The reason for putting the paper in the homes of the people is to make those homes intelligently and devoutly Christian. The paper has a glorious history but its glory is limited by the amount of service which it has been able to render. The time is upon us when we need to really busy ourselves and get our members to reading about our own Church, its plans and programs, its ideals and dreams, its work at home and abroad. We must not let this phase of our service lag. Every minister, every church official, every reader of "The Christian Sun," and every person who believes in the printed page and the Church represented by "The Christian Sun" should now feel the thrill and the challenge, and the desire to put the Church Paper into the homes of our church people so that we may have growing and progressive churches and good homes in which children are being reared.

ELON COLLEGE AS AN ASSET.

Assets and liabilities are two words that this writer knew but little about when he lived on a farm, but they are words being used quite freely and frequently now by people everywhere in our country. Most of us know what it is to have bills to pay, and some know the fun of having money with which to pay the bills. We are, therefore, familiar with liabilities and assets.

In recent years some of our Church people have thought of Elon College as a liability. In truth it has cost us money, much money, hard earned money. So has everything else that we did not inherit or steal. The automobile in which we ride, the home in which we live, the farm which we cultivate, and the account at the bank which we delight in—all of these have cost us much money, hard earned money, but we like them because they are among our assets.

Most of the ministers now serving our Southern churches have been educated at Elon College. They inherited a brain capable of development. The state gave them some opportunity at education. The Church opened college doors and at a minimum cost developed their minds so that they are able to be leaders among men. These minds of theirs are their greatest asset. Elon College helped to develop that. Without Elon the asset of the mind for many of us would be much less than it is today. Of course, it cost us money to go to college, but who would exchange his mental development, his culture of soul, for the bit of money that it cost him?

When Elon College was founded in 1889 not many country boys in the Carolinas or Virginia had an opportunity at college education. Rich people did, but poor people didn't. Our churches were made up of people who had never gone to high school, and most of the preachers had not gone to college. Today that situation is changed. Our churches are pretty well filled with high school graduates and there is a considerable sprinkling of college graduates in almost any rural church. The preacher today who undertakes to lead a congregation known as Congregational or Christian finds in the pew well educated people, and faces the necessity of scholarship in order that he may lead. These churches of ours are better prepared to serve the community in which they are than they were half a century ago because Elon College has been training the membership of our churches.

It is true that it costs money to run Elon College, but Elon is not a liability; it is an asset. We have money invested there and could get money by selling the property we have, but the asset is not property; it is in possibility. It is entirely possible for every church in the Southern Convention to have two students in Elon College every year. The equipment is there and the program is adequate to take care of them. If the churches will use this asset we have, within ten years we could have in every church several graduates who are fired with enthusiasm for the Kingdom of God as it is taught by the Church of which we are a part. Elon is a real asset, and some of the churches are drawing on it, but some of them, like a miser with his bank, are allowing the assets to lie idle while they talk of Elon as being a liability.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE MAKE PROGRESS.

About a half hundred young people and their leaders met at the Greensboro Christian Church during the Christmas holidays to develop friendships, consider the possibilities of Christian work, and to make plans for doing the things that need to be done in the world of today. They came from Kentucky, Tennessee, Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Virginia, and North Carolina. Most of them hold office either in the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship or some conference Fellowship. It was a select group. They were interested in the Church and its program as is manifest by the fact that they traveled long distances at Christmas time to be in meetings which opened at 8:30 in the morning and closed at about 10 o'clock at night with a little time out for meals. They were not out sightseeing; they were in committees, prayer meetings, and consulting one with another about the best methods of doing church work today.

Modern youth is rather daring. From the point of view of many older people they are too daring. They dare to question all of the old standards of living and ideals. They dare to believe that the things that are wrong can be changed and made right. They dare to ignore what people say and go on with their living. They dare to undertake what seems to be impossible, and sometimes succeed in doing it. At present these young people in the southeast are in the midst of an effort to make function a coordinated program of young people's work in all of our churches. It is a stupendous task even if there were money available to carry on an effective organizational program. They work without money and expect to accomplish the job. The fact is that they are getting a rather definite idea among the leaders as to what is being done in the various states represented and they are working together in, at least, some things. It is refreshing to see them tackle heavy jobs, wrestle with big ideas and fight through to an honest conclusion on what is the Christian thing to do.

Within a short time "The Christian Sun" readers will be able to discover something of how effectively these young people are promoting their united program. For several years they have had a page in this paper. Plans are now under way to use the paper in a larger way. It is a difficult job, but one is inclined to believe that they will succeed. At least we shall believe it until forced to the opposite opinion.

Years ago our Southern Conference sent fraternal delegates from one conference to another to bear greetings and to bring back ideas. This plan has been discontinued with the increasing rapidity of travel. Our young people are feeling the necessity for this acquaintanceship and are building here in the southeast a united fellowship. They are not content "to dwell apart in a fellowless firmament." They are struggling to change the thinking of the world and they cannot do it alone. They want to get rid of war, poverty, racial conflicts and other forms of bitterness. This calls for a broad outlook and wide contacts. This Southeast Fellowship is only one part of the denominational group, and the denomination is only one part of an interdenominational Fellowship composed of at least seventy other organizations. These young people of ours are not going to be content to live at "a poor, dying rate" but want to see the world have a chance at happiness. "The Christian Sun" joins with them in this high hope and bids them godspeed as they labor to make their dreams come true.

Hoey, Governor of North Carolina, and several others.

This convocation is intended to aid ministers and other church workers, and the program is such that no one can afford to miss it.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

An experiment in Bible studying is being developed in Berea (Nans.), Liberty Spring and Oakland Sunday school classes. At the monthly meeting of the one of the Adult Classes in each of these churches the pastor teaches a lesson, or gives a lecture, on one of the books of the Bible. During this winter the classes are taking a course in Acts. This book is carefully reviewed, and an attempt is being made to bring the outline and the outstanding features of the book clearly before the class.

After three or four years of this type of work it is the opinion of those who attend these classes, that a valuable contribution is being made to the entire church. A background is used, where possible, and this adds interest and efficiency. The pastor has been asked again and again to use this method in preaching. In this course the following books have been studied: Haggai, Habakkuk, Malachi, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Romans, I Corinthians, Galatians, James, I John and Revelation. Those who have attended these classes have had an opportunity to learn something about these books and their importance in the Bible.

This type of work requires a great deal of reading and careful study. That is one reason why it has been so much neglected. But the pastor who undertakes this work will be greatly rewarded in his personal spiritual development, and the classes will be indebted to him for this larger outlook and broader vision. In addition to the actual value of the course, and interesting feature is provided for the program of the monthly meeting of the class. If the lesson is carefully prepared this will be regarded as the outstanding feature of the meeting. People have not lost interest in the Bible. It is a vital, interesting and appealing book. It is the function of the preacher to bring forth rich and stimulating food for the hungry multitudes. "Give ye them to eat."

Another interesting feature in these classes is a Bible reading course devised by the pastor's wife. She conceived the idea of having these classes find the recorded prayers in the Bible, beginning with Genesis, taking one book each month. At the class meeting a review of these recorded prayers is made, and every prayer is read by members of the class in concert. During this winter and spring some of the classes will finish the reading of the Bible in this way. It is worth something to know that every prayer in the Bible has been publicly read in a Sunday School Class. The members who participate in this work are greatly benefited, and report that they have enjoyed the reading.

These activities are mentioned here as a suggestion to other pastors and Sunday school classes who are looking for help. There is a need for this type of work—book study and general reading of the Bible. The pastor and the Sunday school teachers are key persons to the creation of interest in the Bible as a book. It is not an easy task. Any one who undertakes it should be willing to prepare fully and faithfully for every meeting. But the rewards for such work are rich for teachers and students. Many of the pastors of city churches are using similar methods, but it would be interesting to know how many churches of the Southern Convention are undertaking to do this type of work. Try the book-method of Bible study in your Sunday school class—or in some other organization of your church.

OUR SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS.

Rev. B. J. Earp came to our hills as a friend and, like the Master, he is proving to be a Good Shepherd. He is going into the highways and hedges and finding a welcome in unexpected places. If we fail to hear his voice and come at the call, it will surely mean that we are not the right kind of sheep, and that we are not listening for our shepherd's call.

And our shepherd has a wife. She seems to be just the wife he needs too, and all that I say of the shepherd I can say of the good wife; we like her, too.

They came to help us out with our Christmas program and to bring us Christ at Christmas. We have just finished having Christmas up here on top of the world, and I want to offer thanks in my humble way for our Christmas. I can't make a flowery speech that will make a big hit, and reach far and wide, but in my hilly way, I'd like to say that I thank all those who made it possible for us to have a happy Christmas up here in the hills. Our program was not all that I wanted it to be, but it was a church program, at least, and I can say it was my best Christmas in the hills. You have no way of knowing, of course, that I have spent many, many Christmas Days here that did not mean much to me or any one, but this time, as I heard little children tell of the Christ that was born, it meant a great deal to me. I know that, at least, some of those children will remember the Christ of old and it will change a whole life for them. Let us thank you Christian people who made it possible for all these little children to have Christ as their Saviour. We had been having a school program at Christmas here, for the teacher usually handled it. This time we had no day-school in our building and it was a good time to have a real church program. Then our shepherd and his wife just fit into our program that is sacred so we used them. We wonder now how we have made out this long without them. Everyone had a treat at our program and I caught our shepherd giving out two treats to some little ones.

And when Mr. Earp went over the hills to treat Ivy Hill, he found another little school by the wayside and could not pass. He stopped and found thirty children, so he had to go to a store and get some oranges for those children before he could get home. His only excuse for such behavior was, he said, "There were thirty children and it was Christmas." Now, dear reader, do you agree with me that this man is truly our shepherd of the hills? Every child belongs to him. Never yet has he failed to stop with the little ones. There has never been but one man called the father of our whole country and now I wonder if our shepherd is to get that title away from George Washington.

O course, we know that the halo has come off our ministers of today. A minister is only a man among men. We no longer think a preacher has magic power of wings, or that he can save us. But if I know what I think I know, our shepherd has a halo that doesn't come off, for it is the kind that is not put on but comes from within.

When people do well I like to tell them so. We take up a lot of time saying things about people that cannot help them to feel any better; why not tell your pastor if he has done well? No one deserves a good word more than the ministers who have served God and man all down through the years for a small salary and have done all they could to hold the cross of Christ before the world. And this pastor we have now has served this world for years, his hair is white, and his face a well written page, and last, but not least—his faith has been tried and proven. God grant that our hills may always love and cooperate with our shepherd of the hills.

Our people were all treated alike at our program and I have orders from our pastor to place all other gifts such as clothing, where they will fill a real need. Not all of our folks here need help of that kind, and our shepherd has eyes and has been using them. I was glad, however, that we had some gifts for some, because I believe Mr. Earp would probably have left his coat around some baby up here, had he not known there were coats to give out. And now if a man of this type cannot get the best out of these hills, I am just going to fear there is no "Best."

May God bless all who have helped to give us Christ and a happy Christmas. We need your prayers always. And my prayer is that we may be worthy of our friends.

May Christ be near each of you every day of the coming year.

VICTORIA OF THE HILLS.

A COUNTRYMAN SAYS:

Permit me to congratulate you upon the Christmas issue of THE SUN. It was wonderful in its holiday dress, also in its Christmas spirit. May THE SUN ever be an emblem of that light which is the light of the world.

On Christmas Eve it was my duty and privilege to participate in a Christmas Candlelight Service called "The Light of the World." This reminded us of the true light that lights the way through the world and unto eternity.

How wonderful to be able to celebrate the Great Event peacefully and unafraid. Suppose we celebrate only the seasonal change and the beginning of a New Year. It is well to close the business of the year, take stock, and begin the new, but a celebration which does only this, and honors military heroes, past and present, certainly does not begin to compare with ours which commemorates the event that prompted the angel's song, "Peace on Earth, good will toward men." We may be far from that in reality, but we are, at least, going in the right direction, for we have our church and its ceremonies, and thank God these are not dead, and Christ is not dead, but is living in the minds and hearts of consecrated men and women.

Of course, there are those in our own land who see not the significance of Christmas. They would honor the birth of the Saviour by making all the noise possible, as we realized most forcibly as the peace and quiet of the countryside was broken by the discharge of all manner of fireworks.

A certain North Carolina City endeavored to show the Christmas spirit in a big way with a huge star, the

Since the lady who has been writing this page recently did not get an article ready in time for this paper, I have the chance of saying a few things.

When I was a boy I did not have a chance to write things for print, but your editor has asked you to send her some of your own writing to print on this page. I hope that you will do it, for it will make her very happy, will give you a good chance to learn how to write for print, and will be good reading for those who read this page.

THE POT OF GOLD AT THE FOOT OF THE RAINBOW.

The artist wanted that pot terribly. Because he was so poor. "I will paint something wonderful, then I will become rich," he had vowed to himself when he was very young and did not know any better. Although he had painted yards and yards of canvasses he was just as poor as ever. But always he dreamed of that pot of gold. How did one get it anyway?

"By doing something different!" the world suggested. See what nobody else sees! Paint what nobody else paints!

So the artist tramped over the entire globe trying to find something nobody else had ever painted. But no matter what he tried somebody else had tried it first, so that the pot of gold seemed as far away as ever.

And then one day when he was an old man he wandered back to the quaint little town where he had been born. The trees still stood in prim little rows, and the pointed gables of the neat little houses still seemed to have come straight out of a fairy story book. Suddenly he knew that something was going to happen at center of which showed the Three Wise Men in life-size, all of which was very good; but the eight foot letters, "Merry Xmas," left out the true spirit of Christmas, which is Christ. All of which shows that our land is by no means perfect; but let us thank God and take courage.

A COUNTRYMAN.

last; so he walked to the very center of the town and there, in an open square, was still the same beautiful fountain. When he saw it he said "Oh!" That was because the single spray of water rose up and up in a column so slender he could almost count the drops, like beads on a necklace. And they rose because the stone angel that troubles the waters had stooped down to touch the little pool at her feet; and where her finger touched, a tiny jet sprang upward in an arch across her kneeling figure, and the spray fell into a curious bowl she held in her other arm.

"Oh," said the artist, "I had forgotten how lovely you are, good angel."

"Yes?" she chanted softly through the silver spray above her.

And just then the setting sun touched her glistening bowl and turned it to gleaming gold, making rainbows through the spray.

"At last! My pot of gold!" cried the artist, and tried to start painting it at once. But the sun never waits for an artist and behold by the time he was ready there was just the lovely tinkle of the water left.

"Alas! the pot of gold has gone again. And the rainbows are so scarce. Always wherever I go, I try to paint them, but they are gone before I get started."

"Scarce?" queried a voice through the spray. "But there is always a rainbow wherever you look and whenever you look."

"But I can't believe that I have been all over the world looking and looking for rainbows—and a pot of gold at the foot of them. I tell you they are scarce."

"Oh, blind man! Blind man! You don't look in the proper place. I see rainbows every hour of every day; colors no painter has ever painted, beautiful colors."

The artist pulled out his sketch book. "Tell me, tell me!" he cried. "Tell me these colors."

"You will find all the shades of the rainbow in the moods of the people you meet. Some have beautiful rainbow colors while others have less lovely colors because of their ugly moods. You will find the loveliest colors for your rainbows in the moods of boys and girls who are always trying to do something to make some one happy."

And the artist began to smile. This was a new idea—imagine painting the rainbows from the mind of a little child! So, although he is still very poor, you can always find him with a crowd of little children at his knees, and waving his arm with an imaginary brush; and you can simply see his rainbows!

TREES.

(A Correspondence.)

January 8, 1938.

Being confined to one's bed for a week, a month, or a year (as for that matter) has its compensations. There are trees, for instance. One who has not taken the time and the quiet to look out and up at the trees from the window, door or porch, and contemplate their manner, make and meaning has missed much of the royalty and richness with which this good earth is adorned. There is a stability, a strength and a courage in and about the tree that gives one faith and hope in a time of change and chaos like this.

Only during the past week I have heard a U. S. Senator broadcasting an address over the radio from the capitol at Washington, in which he said in effect: "There is nothing certain, steadfast and abiding in our time except change." Looking out at the moment on a stately pine and a sturdy oak that had withstood a hundred storms and strains, and yet remained gracefully, slumping and nodding in a calm breeze, I wanted to cry out to the Washington Solon: "Say, Honorable, how about a tree? Think some on a tree and steady your disturbed, chaotic mind and nervous system." The best company, and counsellor on this earth, out side the cheering words and presence of your loved ones, I have ever found is the company and counsel of trees. One can commune with them for hours, and find some movement or manner in them that is different and delightful, every moment of the time. The winter recalls being sick and separated from friends on the third floor of a hospital in London several summers ago. But just out the window the Creator and Source of all law and beauty had caused a grand and sturdy old maple to grow, and its leaves and branches and stately form gave me good comfort and boundless cheer from day to day until I was able to take ship again and sail the seas back to loved ones and home, as that steadfast, and comforting tree had constantly assured me I would do. We can never thank God enough for the trees, each doing its duty, filling its place and purpose without complaint and in all joy and gladness. How many of my readers are acquainted with the parable of the trees as told in Judges 9: 8-16 — Beginning: "The trees went forth on a time to anoint a king over them." You will recall in that parable how busy and blessed was each tree in its good and glorious work, so that neither would leave its accustomed task and duty to go and be king over the other trees. God had appointed each to its own duty and privilege and these each would perform and not go to lord it over other trees, brothers in the forestry of God. And one cannot forget that the first chapter of Genesis as well as the last chapter of Revelations both refer to the tree of life. Take this from Revelation 22: 1-2—"And he showed me a river of water of life proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb and on this side and on that was the tree of life, leaving twelve manners of fruits, yielding its fruit every month, and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." God has spoken it, and it shall come to pass. The nations are mad today—stark, stone mad with hatred and blood and death—Spain, Italy, Germany, Russia, Japan—all cultivating hatred, engaged in godless death and terror. It is all a dark picture. And our own country is in economic and moral turmoil and upheaval. I cut this "Dark Picture" from the editorial page of a Daily this week:

"John Edgar Hoover tells the American public that 'We, today, face the horrible fact that nearly a million and a half serious crimes which annually are entered upon our law enforcement blotters, more than 17 per cent are committed by youths of less than voting age.

"In America there are parents of 700,000 youths who are bowed down by the stigma of the penitentiaries and of the reformatories, which have claimed their children.'

"Mr. Hoover also tells us that we have an army of 4,300,000 criminals, that the figures show for 1937 a decided increase in the felonies committed this year as against the 1,333,526 major crimes committed in 1936. He further tells us these startling facts:

"During the first nine months of 1937, persons who were little more than boys and girls committed 13 per cent of our murders; 28 per cent of our robberies; 41 per cent of our burglaries; 51 per cent of our automobile thefts.'

"Think of the womanhood of America today; 1,300,000 young women engaged as beer maids and spending their lives in the 20th century saloon.

What can we hope for our country when one-fourth as many girls are employed in the sale of liquor as are in our high schools?

"Old Virginia spent more than $1,-000,000 for Christmas liquor and at a time when millions were hungry for bread!"

So, if we don't or can't look up at the trees, and the good God whose creatures they are we, too, will go mad, or forlorn and hopeless. Remember it was the young soldier whose body rests beneath the soil, and trees of France, who, before a bullet laid his body low, looked up at the trees and wrote these lines:

"I think that I shall never see
A form so lovely as a tree.

A tree whose hungry mouth is prest Against the sweet earth's flowing breast.

A tree that looks at God all day,
And lifts her leafy arms to pray.

Poems are made by fools like me,
But only God can make a tree."

Yes, I love the trees and somehow
I feel that they are not averse to me.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

It is now time to begin planning for the Easter program which will include an offering for Missions. The Mission Board at Elon College and the Board of Christian Education at Norfolk are both eager to help you. Call on them.

THE AMERICAN BOARD AND PRUDENTIAL COMMITTEE.

As Seen by a Visitor.

[The article below is a letter written by Rev. Niel Hansen, of Chicago, to Dr. Fred F. Goodsell, soon after attending the annual meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and the Prudential Committee of the Board. It is such a human document and gives the impressions of a pastor in such fashion that it seemed wise to present it to the readers of "The Christian Sun." Editor.]

The rush of things hinders not only saying the significant thing but also getting the significance of the really great things in life. This rush has delayed getting my personal word of appreciation to you and the American Board of the privilege of being a guest at the One Hundred Twenty-Eighth Annual Meeting and the Plenary Session of the Prudential Committee. It has not interfered with a great realization of the significance of the American Board.

One is still a little boy grown up with little assurance that one is grown. The American Board has been one of those mountain peaks I have looked up to from a far-off valley for years and years. To find myself a guest of the Board and the Prudential Committee was having things you wondered about and thought about become real and true.

The Annual Meeting was a very different meeting than a middle-wester is accustomed to attend. We see and hear excellent samples of the missionaries and meet fine representatives of the Board. But we don't see missionaries in processional, or the Staff in the meeting, or see the Memorial Candles. Necessarily where there are these privileges the program and the nature of the meeting is different. And somehow you need New England Hills and New Englanders around you to really believe you are with the American Board. I wish we could put all the people and all the setting on a special train and have a great meeting in Chicago.

The Plenary Session was, of course, the greater experience for me. The simplicity of the procedure, its unexecutiveness surprised me. I finally realized that this has been meeting for a century and a quarter, and with so much greatness in its train simplicity is the result. The repeated triumphs of faith, the nobility of personalities, the hand of God from the room in which you meet. Millions of all the races on the face of the earth gather in the room with you. Efficiency, parliamentary procedure, and financial reports are important, but the faith of our people, the persuasion of our ministry, and finding the way in modern times, these are the dockets before the members as they meet—Each one is a prayer.

At one moment of the meeting I punched myself and said to myself, "They are talking about China." No one sounded as if he were talking about China. China didn't seem as if it were on the other side of the world. It seemed for the moment that there was no white or yellow race. All that is true and different about China didn't seem to exist except that Christ is in China.

Everyone was so very friendly to me. I felt as if I belonged to the family. It is a family, the Prudential Committee, as one observes it. I wish there were some way to thank each member for the privilege and happiness my visit brought to me.

I returned greatly gratified and with a feeling of increased responsibility. It is not clear to me just how I can be of any valuable service to the American Board. I shall not fail to attempt to find out.

I know the darkness of these days in all these affairs. One, in my generation, becomes almost defeated at times in his attempt to have faith. Along about 1915 as a student he found his gospel in higher criticism. And then the war. Carrying wounded in an ambulance left an inner wound, perhaps a broken heart. It was a long way back from those things to standing in a pulpit preaching Christ. But it was wonderful for a while, the feel of being with the only fellowship of people who could put the world together again. And then the disillusionment of learning the weaknesses of the church, of finding that the forces that had killed something in you had hurt the church and all its mighty enterprises so much that, perhaps, the world could never be put together again. But there is a faith as you know that is born out of a deeper knowledge and experience of reality. One finds himself standing as it were in a place a little nearer to where God is, and from that vantage point he sees two things—how awful are the forces that are arrayed against God and how wonderful God is; and the very forces arrayed against Him can't possibly be wicked enough to overcome the wonderfulness of God. That picture brings a new faith in man and God.

I cherish my friendship with you. It is one of the great gifts, a reward for my ministry. NIEL HANSEN.

NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA CONFERENCE MISSIONS.

The Christian Missionary Association of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference serves the Conference in the field of Conference missions. Funds for this service are provided from two sources. After the legitimate expenses of the Conference administration are met the balance remaining in the Conference fund goes for Conference missions. A second source is through membership in the Association.

Membership in the Association is on the purely financial basis of dues; five dollars for adult organizations and adults, and two dollars and fifty cents for children organizations and children. This last year the C. M. A. had memberships in only a few of the forty-four churches of the Conference. More memberships are needed.

This year by action of the Conference a C. M. A. Sunday will be observed during the Mission period and on this Sunday it will be attempted to hold a service in every church of the Conference, at which service the work of Conference missions will be presented and an invitation given for memberships.

There are those who joined the C. M. A. in past years but who failed to keep in good standing by the payment of annual dues. You are invited to become in in good standing this year by paying this year's dues. These are payable to Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, Financial Secretary, 401 Church St., Burlington, North Carolina.

In sending dues to the financial secretary you are asked kindly to include this information: your address and the church of which you are a member. We wish to have a correct roll and your church deserves to receive credit for your membership.

This last year the Association assisted Winston-Salem, Reidsville and Belew Creek. Grants have been made this year to Reidsville, Winston-Salem and Pastorate No. One. It is the hope of the financial secretary, payments may be made to these fields as they come due. This can be so only as funds are available.

The work of the C. M. A. should be enlarged and its financial resources such that it will be in a position to render some worthy assistance to those groups of churches attempting to organize pastorates.

At its recent sessions with the Palm Street Church, Greensboro, the C. M. A. endorsed the suggestion that each pastor shall serve in his church as the representative of the C. M. A., and as such himself or through some other delegated person enroll members in the C. M. A. and during the year collect their dues.

The C. M. A. officers for the ensuing year—1937-'38—are: Dr. W. M. Jay, president; Rev. W. M. Stevens, secretary; Rev. J. Lightbourne, financial secretary and Mr. E. B. Rascoe, treasurer.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church"

MISS EMILY CARLETON, Editor, 541 Osceola Ave., Winter Park, Fla.

NEW PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP BULLETIN.

A new Pilgrim Fellowship Bulletin, entitled "Young People's Society Meetings for 1938," has recently been issued. Each young people's society is entitled to one of these bulletins free of charge, and additional copies may be secured for 5c. If there are any societies which do not have a copy, and would like to have one, it may be secured by writing the editor of this page or the Board of Christian Education, 514 South Main Street, Norfolk, Virginia.

This Bulletin contains a list of topics suggested for the year, along with comments and sources of additional material. As you plan your work for the year, you should have a copy of this for it contains many worthwhile ideas. The program suggestions given represent a phase of the participation of Congregational and Christian young people in the United Christian Youth Movement.

In addition to the list of specific topics, there is a section on "Choosing and Using Topics," which is very helpful. There is also a list of the Intermediate Christian Endeavor Topics for the year, for use with the younger groups in our churches.

It is too bad when materials are published by our church and then we do not take advantage of them. As young people we should be eager to explore all possible sources of material. If you do not already have a copy of this bulletin, send for yours right away.

SUGGESTIONS FOR JANUARY.

(From Eastern Virginia Program Guide)

1. Make special effort to have young people observe the "Morning Watch" or "Quiet Hour" daily.
 2. Assist in presenting Elon College program and share in your church offering to the College.
 3. Observe Denominational Day, January 30th.
 4. Make church loyalty posters.
 5. Strive to have every young person do some definite church work.
 6. Stress church attendance.
 7. Secure material for Race Relations Sunday, February 6th.
- Discussion pamphlets suggested:
 "Youth and the World Outlook"—40c.
 "Toward Racial Understanding"—15c.

"How Big is Your World"—35c.
 (The Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Massachusetts.)

8. Observe one Sunday as Mission Sunday. Use World Service material on the "Moslem World" In "Christian Youth in Missionary Action, Second Series" for your missionary program. Order additional material listed in the pamphlet.

9. If your church has a stereopticon, secure the slides "Modern Turkey—Land of the Future" from the Missions Council, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y. The only cost is transportation both ways and $1.00 for each slide broken.

10. Contribute to Missions.

11. Hold a Moslem Party. (For suggestions, write to Miss Irene Cotten, Superintendent of Missions of Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship, Dendron, Virginia.)

PLANNING TO MAKE EACH DAY COUNT.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR JANUARY 16, 1938.

SCRIPTURE: Luke 6: 27-31; 35-38.
 Daily Readings—

Monday—Finding Spiritual Treasure—Matt. 6: 19-21.
 Tuesday—Helping the Needy—James 1: 27.
 Wednesday—Planning Our Time—Eph. 5: 16.
 Thursday—Planning Our Giving—I Cor. 16: 1-3.
 Friday—Planning to Win Souls—John 1: 40-51.
 Saturday—Helping to Teach Others—II Tim. 2: 15, 16.

This topic is the last of a series of three dealing with a Christian plan for daily living. The importance of growth should be emphasized, and recommendations made whereby a Christian life can be properly nourished and encouraged.

On our Western plains there are dust strips where crops, trees, and plants cannot grow. Perhaps many Christians live in dust strips where the means of growth are not present, and life is futile and dull.

Someone has stated that there are eight roots for Christian growth. Let us discuss them:

1. Physical Health. How much time each week should we give to physical exercise?
2. Education and Mental Alertness. What are the modern opportunities for continued education after schooling is over?

3. Earning and Using Money. How much time should be spent each week earning money?

4. Vocational Advancement. How much time should be spent each week studying for a vocation.

5. Citizenship Duties. What sort of civic duties should claim the attention of Christian Endeavorers just now in local and national affairs. Think of war, corrupt politics, liquor traffic.

6. Recreation and Leisure Time. What can be done to exalt our homes as social centers for young people?

7. Friendship. When does friendship become a "drag" to the proper development of other phases of life?

8. Church Life and Religious Activities. How much time should we give to church on Sunday? How much time should we set aside for church work through the week?

Suggested Hymns—

"Fairest Lord Jesus."
 "Come, Let Us All Unite to Sing."
 "Jesus, I My Cross Have Taken."

CHRISTMAS IN VIRGINIA MOUNTAINS.

It was my pleasure for the first time to visit our work in Carroll County, Virginia, during the Christmas Season. In fact, I spent my twenty-second Wedding Anniversary there.

The wind never fails to blow in those hills. Each morning upon awakening in the parsonage, I would ask Mr. Earp to go out and see if the wind was still on the job. However, the weather was beautiful while we were there, and only after we had finished our work did the rain begin to fall. The sunshine that so welcomed us to Fancy Gap, after a week, turned to blinding fog and a continuous patter of raindrops.

On Tuesday, December 21st, we had our Christmas program at Rocky Ford. The day being ideal, we had a house full of people. The teacher, Mrs. Parker, prepared the program and trained the children—she did her job well.

Wednesday, December 22nd, we had our program at Elk Spur. There we had no teacher, so Miss Victoria Edwards had trained the children. The Meredith and Strickler boys were kind to get our Christmas tree for us.

At each of these places treats were

BEGINNING A LIFE OF SERVICE.

LESSON III—JANUARY 16, 1938.

GOLDEN TEXT: The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe the gospel.—Mark 1: 15.

LESSON: Mark 1: 14-28.

Beginning to Preach.

"Now after John was delivered up, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of God." Herod thought he could shut up the truth by shutting John the Baptist in prison. But truth crushed to earth rises again, and marches on. After John comes Jesus. It would seem that Jesus, with fine regard for John had not done anything that would detract from John's ministry. But now the hour has struck and Jesus begins His ministry, a brief ministry to be sure, but one that changed the world.

Jesus came preaching the gospel of God. We know Jesus as a Teacher. We need to be reminded that He was also a Preacher. To be sure the one is intimately related to the other. Jesus came to herald, to proclaim the gospel of God, the good news of God, the news that God was a Father, that He had sent His Son to be a Saviour, that man is a child of God, divine in origin and in destiny, of infinite possibilities. Jesus was a Preacher, and every true minister of the gospel belongs to the glorious company of preachers of whom Christ himself was the Prince of preachers as well as the Prince of Peace.

Jesus came preaching that the Kingdom of God was at hand. God was about to inaugurate the new order of things. A new dispensation was about to begin. The King himself was in their midst, setting himself to establish God's kingdom on earth, and starting the program of having God's will done on earth even as it was done in heaven. The central element in the Kingdom of God is that God rules and God shall rule. The kingdom of God is God's sovereignty or rule. It is not here in completeness now, but it shall come to increasing fulfillment.

Jesus came preaching that men should repent, and believe in the gospel. They must change their minds, they must reverse their attitudes, they must turn around. They were not ready for the "new order." Only a complete change of mind and heart would enable them to enter into this kingdom which is essentially a spiritual kingdom. But Jesus went beyond John in that he added the positive note to His message. Men were to do more than repent; they were to believe in the gospel, they were to become active concerning the gospel.

Beginning to Enlist.

As Jesus walked by the sea he saw Simon and Andrew casting their nets into the sea for they were fishers. He summoned them to come after Him, and promised to make them to become fishers of men. Here is an abiding principle. Jesus called men, men of varied talents, men of practical affairs, men who attended well to their own business, men of unsuspected latent possibilities, men whom the world at large generally overlooked. He took these men not for what they were alone, but for what they might become. He found them as fishers, he made them "fishers of men." Thus does Christ call men from every walk of life and ennoble and dignify and glorify their work and their calling. It was not done overnight. It was a process of becoming. But He saw the finer possibilities in those men and patiently He helped them to become their finer selves. It was thus in the beginning, is now, and evermore shall be.

In like manner He called James and John who straightway left their nets and their father as well. Sometimes when one obeys the call of Christ he must give up his occupation and leave his family as well. But to all such Christ promises a hundred fold in this life and in the world to come eternal life.

Beginning to Teach.

"And they go into Capernaum, and straightway on the Sabbath day He entered into the synagogue and taught. And they were astonished at His teaching." Jesus was not content simply with proclaiming His message. He went about teaching, unfolding, interpreting, applying the truth. And He did this in such a fresh, informal, popular, and original, to say nothing of a vital way that the people were astonished at His teaching. "For He taught them as having authority and not as the scribes." He taught at first-hand, not from what someone else had said. The truth came out of His experiences. It had a note of reality and authority about it. It also had power in it—His word was with power. Out of His intimate experience of God Jesus taught, and the words that He spake were spirit and life to those who had open minds and hearts.

Beginning to Heal.

There was a man in the synagogue that day with an unclean spirit—he seemed to be possessed of the devil himself. The very presence of Jesus disturbed the evil spirit in the man. Here at the beginning of His ministry Jesus was faced with a flaunting challenge by the forces of evil, resident in human life. The unholy spirit realized that the issue was drawn. The evil spirit cries out "What have I to do with thee, Jesus thou Nazarene. I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God." Then, as now, the spirit of evil would regard Jesus as intruder, and He would seek to delude men and becloud the real issue.

But Jesus rebuked the unclean spirit, and bade it come out of the man. With a final supreme effort, and with a loud voice crying out in protest the spirit, tearing the man, came out of the man. It is simply a parable of the multitude of those who by the grace of Christ have been freed from the dominion of evil spirits, out of whose lives there have been cast the evil spirit of complexes, fears, guilts, inhibitions, and who have been given a new birth and a fresh start in Christ. Jesus Christ is stronger than the forces of evil. By His grace we can overcome them. By faith in Him they can be cast out.

"And they were all amazed." Of course they were. And we would be amazed, too, if we soberly and seriously thought about Jesus Christ and His transforming ministry. Here is the world's Authoritative Teacher, and the world's Almighty Deliverer. Truly this man is the Son of God.

given. These treats were made possible by the Young Woman's Bible Class and the Loyal Men's Class of the Sunday school of the Burlington Christian Church and Mr. and Mrs. I. E. Carlton.

The conditions of the roads to Ivy Hill were such that no one met us at the Sunday evening appointment, so treats were given to the school there.

The people of the hills gave us a hearty welcome. Their homes were made open to us. Many kindnesses were shown us.

Today finds us back at Ingram. A very colorful pageant, portraying the Christmas Spirit, was presented at the church. Many people have remembered us in a multitude of ways: A great big surprise turkey was only one of the many, many nice things sent to us. People in our churches are so very thoughtful, we sincerely thank God for all.

MONDAY.

A PLACE FOR EVERYONE.

"Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and Godly fear."—Heb. 12: 28.

We visited another church recently where we were altogether a stranger. We felt impelled to contrast it with the one visited a few Sundays before and recently described in these columns.

This church was packed to the doors. Although we arrived in time, no seats were available except the front seats and so we were marched to the front (we like the front). About one half the audience were young people, many of them having a Bible with them. We sang, we prayed, the preacher preached in a straightforward, earnest manner. An occasional outburst of wit, not without its meaning, would throw the congregation into convulsions. They hung on his words. At the close of the service, it seemed that everybody spoke to everybody else and no one seemed to be in a hurry to leave. They lingered about the doors and blockaded part of the street, visiting in the old-fashioned style. At this church, nobody was urging another to have a good time but everyone was having such a good time that they were loathe to give it up.

If I lived in this community and were looking for a church, one where the presence and guidance of Christ are felt, and where a good time is spontaneous, to this church I would go.

Prayer—O Lord, show us the place where we fit and where we can serve Thee and be happy. Amen.

TUESDAY.

LOVE AND LOYALTY.

"Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."—Matt. 6: 21.

Love and loyalty go hand in hand like a bride and groom deeply in love with one another. Where the heart is there is loyalty. If one loves his home, he will be loyal to his home. If one loves his wife, he will be loyal to his wife. It is love that directs the loyalty of our life's efforts. Selfishness cracks up everything.

It is the love and loyalty to Christ that has kept the world alive in Christian thought and that gives promise of the glory of heaven. Religion twines itself around like family affections; it is enthroned in the inner sanctuary of the soul. It is the strength of the soul. Lord Nelson refused to put on a cloak to cover up the stars on his uniform though that made him a mark for the French sharpshooters. So let us refuse to hide our loyalty for Christ at any time, even though it may make us a mark of ridicule.

Prayer—Our Father, we are soldiers of the cross. Christ, our Saviour, forbid that we should keep silent when we should speak or that we should hide our love for Thee. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"X SHARP PEOPLE."

"All things work together for good to them that love God."—Rom. 8: 28.

The apostle declares that all things work together for good. He is thinking of good in God's sense of that word. Happiness is one thing, good is another and a very different thing. Good is not happiness. Good is not freedom from strife, care and pain. Good will not deliver one from trial, trouble, worry and distress nor will it always make him prosperous.

God's meaning of good, as we understand it, is to make the world a moral school, a place for building character, a place where we learn patience, and righteousness, and strength of soul, and Christ-likeness; and as we become Christians, followers of Christ, we are called unto this purpose. In this sense it is not impossible for evil to be turned into good.

But there are "X Sharp" people who make it impossible for all things to work together for good. Suppose you are listening to a choir sing an anthem in a flat, but in that choir there is one singing in "X sharp." The whole anthem is literally ruined. There is a Greek word—koinomia. It means "cooperation"—more freely translated, "harmony." What are you singing?

Prayer—(Say the Lord's Prayer).

THURSDAY.

GO TO CHURCH.

"Upon the first day of the week, let everyone of you lay by him in store as God has prospered him."—I Cor. 16: 2.

For a trivial reason, one will say: "I will not go to church today."

Yes, and perhaps, that is the day that something will be said that would change that person's whole life. The potentialities of Divine worship, Christian song, devout prayer, God's word, are beyond comparison. It is impossible to conceive what one may miss when he decided, for some trivial reason, not to go to church.

One of the finest pictures in the world is that of a man and his wife and his children with Bible in hand, going to church.

Prayer—Our Father, endow our hearts with the Holy Spirit and send us to Thy church with that Spirit and use us for Thy service. Amen.

FRIDAY.

COOPERATION.

"I am the vine, ye are the branches." "Abide in me and I in you."—Jno. 15: 4, 5.

The consolation and mutual love between Christ and His children is the consolation that we look for in one another. We believe that if everyone could "speak the truth and work righteousness," there would be peace everywhere.

There is a story of a construction

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D., Pastor.

IN THE BLUEPRINTS.

By REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

"Then stood up Jeshua the son of Jozadak . . . and builded the altar of Israel . . . but the foundations of the temple of the Lord was not yet laid."—Ezra 3:2-6.

One of the most colorful things in all the world is history. Colorful history is being made today, in almost every part of the world. Some really great history is being made. Much of it is far from what we would like it to be. More of it is unwritten, and unheralded but heroic. Our text for the morning comes from a colorful day in the history of Israel. The Hebrews had been picked up boldly and borne away to Babylon. They had suffered privation, imprisonment, and captivity. Men who owned their homes and loved their families, had been taken into a far country, and all had been lost. Their temple, much loved and greatly revered, had been desecrated, and the golden vessels of the sanctuary had been carried away. They had had real adversity.

A prayer was left in their souls, and a God left in the heavens to hear that prayer. Babylon had captured the Jews, now Cyrus had captured Babylon, and he sent the Jews back home. God still hears and answers prayer. In the long run the person or nation who prays and practices the spirit of true prayer will win. The earth belongs to the humbled-hearted. "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth."

Back in the homeland of Palestine it was their's to rebuild the temple of the Lord, and to reconstruct the walls of Jerusalem. Poor as they were it would seem an impossible task. But they would have the wisdom of God in the rebuilding.

They were led by the priest, son of Jozadak, representing God; and Zerubbabel, a prince in the house of David, representing the people. The two worked hand in hand. The two were separate, as is our church and state, but they were closely bound together. And when they studied the blueprints they found the first thing required was the altar, before any foundation work was done the altar must be builded. "Then stood up Jeshua the son of Jozadak . . . and builded the altar of the God of Israel . . . but the foundation of the temple of the Lord was not yet laid." "In the beginning God . . ." Yea, in the very beginning. If your blueprints are properly marked and faithfully followed you will not begin your temple without God!

The altar first meant God first. The altar first meant prayer first. The altar first meant consecration of life, and time, and talent to God first. The altar first meant a beginning in God, and a completion in God. How can one hope to land in the place of success if he deliberately starts on the road to failure? How can one expect to come to the completion of his finest dreams, and his holiest ideals, if he starts in the direction that leads away from them? What would a temple be worth without a sanctuary? an altar?

THESE WALLS.

These walls can only crowd thy soul

As thou dost let them.

Brave heart, they cannot hide thy goal,

So do not fret, then.

Within these walls what Great Guests rest

And dwell just now;

O Weary Soul, look and attest—

What Help hast thou!

—Louise Ingles Hyde.

What can a life amount to in the end without God?

The building of this altar before the foundation was yet laid was no perfunctory affair with them. Everyday they made use of it. Every morning and evening they made sacrifices on their altar. It bound them to God, and sublimated every service of their hands. They brought their gifts, and sanctified them at their altar. They took God into account in their work. Did their homes share less because of the faithfulness to God? No. Did their progress with the temple, and the city walls suffer because of their faithfulness to their altar? No. Was their contribution to the world's history, and their place of everlasting moral leadership lessened because of their altar-first regulation? No. Turn to the opening chapters of the New Testament, in both Matthew and Luke and you will find the names of the leader of this bit of Hebrew history given as an ancestor of Jesus Christ.

The work of this church was begun before a single foundation stone was laid. The altar of this church was established first, and the walls came afterward. Full many a church has been built because a group of God's children has established its altar in a home, or some vacant room in the community.

Faith and religion are not put into things that are built for the moment only. Anything anybody puts his heart, and soul, and mind into takes on a permanency which is otherwise not known. Great families, great homes, great and good news are built back into God. Back, far back, behind them in the blueprint is written altar-first. He who neglects God, and daily religion, daily devotion, and daily consideration of the Eternal becomes more and more transitory and trivial, and passing.

Broadway Tabernacle, that great old church in the heart of a great city, was looking for a new minister. Charles E. Jefferson had resigned for retirement from the active pastorate. They chose, finally, a young man whose faith in God and fellowmen was warm and radiant, and that young man, Allen Knight Chalmers, says: "We have no distances in our lives. We grasp the moment. That is why some homes are broken." When these Israelites builded their altar first they could keep the vision of the completed temple in their mind. For when the temple was completed the altar would still be its first and last thing. The altar was significant of the whole temple. When it was finished the altar would be what it was finished for. So the altar gave distance to their thinking. "We have no distances in our lives. We grasp the moment." Without God we think only of the moment, with God our thoughts may reach into eternity, certainly across the span of our lives.

Jesus said: "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Jesus believed in altar-first, just as Zerubbabel, another son of David had believed. What place does God hold in the blueprint of the temple of your life?

A minister walked into the pulpit of his charge for the first sermon. On the table before him was a beautiful design of flowers, and facing him wrought out in the very heart of it in crimson roses were the words: "Sir, we would see Jesus." That is what the worshippers wanted. They wanted Jesus in the blueprint of their preacher's life. They demanded it. They had a right to expect it. What place does God hold in your life? Is it secondary? Or is it first place? Paul said: "I bear about in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus." Thomas looking upon the wounded hands of Jesus saw God! What are the signs of God in my life and your?

LIFTING UP JESUS CHRIST.

There is a theory, held by some, that Jesus of Nazareth was only an extraordinary man, a Palestinian Socrates, a Galilean Francis of Assisi, a first century ethical teacher, a Jewish prophet, a lofty spiritual genius, the founder of a new religion to be ranked among the other religions of the world.

In reality Jesus is the Way, the Truth, the Life. He is the door. He is the bread of life, and the water of life. He is the vine. He is the morning star. He is the light of the world. He is the Alpha and Omega. He is the resurrection. He is the eternal Word. He is the only Saviour from sin. He is God manifest in the flesh. He is the image of the invisible God, the effulgence of God's glory, and the very image of His substance. He is the foundation of the Church, and the head of it.

If any pastor, who feels that his ministry is futile and that his church is losing ground, will exalt the living Christ in his life and his preaching, he will be a winner of souls.—The Christian Observer.

A retired minister says that after forty years in the ministry he is not now able to continue his subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. He thinks that he will miss the paper greatly. But the editor thinks that somebody will send in enough money to continue that subscription. Who will it be?

You better live your best and act your best and think your best today; for today is the sure preparation for tomorrow and all the other tomorrows that follow.—Harriet Martineau.

CHRISTMAS PAGEANT SUCCESSFUL.

The Christmas Pageant—"A Gift for the Christ Child"—which was presented at Mt. Olivet (G) Congregational-Christian Church by the young people Christmas Eve was enjoyed by many friends and members of the church.

Along with telling the familiar but yet beautiful Christmas Story or Birth of Christ, it pictured scenes based on Biblical and historical facts of the early Christians' experiences.

The success of the pageant is contributed to many factors. Probably the first and foremost one is that the cast was most cooperative and congenial. Throughout all rehearsals each member in the play showed the finest Christian spirit and everyone could feel that the true spirit of Christmas was present during rehearsals and also the night of the performance.

The cast appreciated the fine attention of the audience that inspired them greatly. Those who took part, in order of appearance, were:

Mr. Richwon, C. H. Knight; Eva Richwon, Daisy Deane; Mrs. Richwon, Carrie Snow; Anna Kneedy, Ruby Shifflett; Mrs. Kneedy, Bernice Shifflett; Spirit of Christmas, Naomi Snow; Spirit of Ages, Eugenia Snow; Wise Men, Elphis, Wilbur, and Fred Morris; Early Christians, Ruby Morris, Alvis Shifflett, Irene Snow, and John Runkle; Lydia, Thelma Morris; The Virgin Mary, Neva Snow; Damien, Norman Morris; His Friend, Louise Dye; A Missionary, Galen Morris; A Native, Lorilla Morris.

The choir consisted of pageant-members who were back stage at different times with Winona Morris at the piano.

A short worship service, held before the pageant, consisted of carol singing, scripture lesson read by Norman Morris, prayer by Rev. Treadwell Davison, and reading by Ruth Snow. It was a great pleasure and inspiration to have the pastor, Rev. W. J. Andes, from Harrisonburg, in the midst for the Christmas celebration. He also had a part in the service.

It is hoped that those who worshipped in this service see more clearly the true significance of Christmas and ways of celebrating it, thus enjoying the holidays more by the enrichment.

company undertaking to transfer a boiler through the jungles of Siam to a tea farm. They were moving this boiler by using elephants to push it along. They came to a creek and in crossing, they were stuck. Every effort failed to move it until, at last, they succeeded in inducing Bocca, an elephant that hitherto would not work, to join the party. Everything went alright then. Bocca cooperated.

Prayer—Our Father, as never before the world needs the strength of all Thy children that Thy kingdom may be carried into the hearts of people, into the reigns of the government, into the lives of humanity, that Thy will may be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Amen.

SATURDAY.

TAPPING ENERGY'S SOURCE.

"Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you."—Acts 1:8-11.

America is now undergoing a call to nation-wide unselfishness and cooperation. Whether it will be answered or not depends upon the amount of Christian spirit that exists in the land.

It needs a power beyond mere self-interest to make this effort prevail. The Divine energy that made the Early Church a world-conquering force, which was nothing less than the sacrificial Spirit of Jesus, is required to overcome the obstacles of selfishness and lead every person in the nation to seek, not his own, but his brother's good.

Prayer—In an hour of crisis and need, we implore Thee, our Father in Heaven, to give us grace to exercise the qualities which we have learned in the school of Christ. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE GRAND PRIZE.

"In your patience ye shall win your souls."—Luke 21:19. (R. V.).

Gambling is unusually rampant in the world. The newspapers make much of the large sums won in Old World "sweepstakes," never mentioning the thousands who lose for every one who wins.

There is no gambling about the prizes offered by the Scripture. They are rewards in which every contestant may be a winner.

In the Revised Version we are told that "In your patience ye shall win your souls." Do your souls then have to be won, as a prize? Yes; lost souls are not only those which are cast away at death. Many persons really do not possess their own spirits.

Patience is the art by which we come into control of our own spirits—patience in the great ordeals of life; patience in the petty cares; patience with the people; and with ourselves. Jesus learned patience, that He might teach it to us.

Prayer—Dominated hourly by a sense of restlessness, we find it hard to learn patience, O Lord. May the patience of Jesus be our cure. Amen.

Rabbi Isadore Franzblau of the local Jewish Synagogue, gave a lecture one evening on "Judaism and Old Testament Literature" and our class also attended services at the Synagogue, after which Rabbi Franzblau exhibited objects of Jewish worship and explained their use in the ceremonials. Ten members of the class will receive credit from the International Council of Religious Education.

A special Christmas Carol service was held in December and the pageant "The Adoration of the Kings and Shepherds" was given before a large congregation on December 26th at the five o'clock vespers.

Rest Him Tonight

Rest him, O Father! Thou didst send him forth
 With great and gracious messages of love;
 But Thy ambassador is weary now,
 Worn with the weight of his high embassy.
 Now care for him as Thou hast cared for us
 In sending him; and cause him to lie down
 In Thy fresh pastures, by Thy streams of peace.
 Let Thy left hand be now beneath his head,
 And Thine upholding right encircle him,
 And, underneath, the Everlasting arms
 Be felt in full support. So let him rest,
 Hushed like a little child, without one care;
 And so give Thy beloved sleep tonight.

Rest him, dear Master! He hath poured for us
 The wine of joy, and we have been refreshed.
 Now fill his chalice, give him sweet new draughts
 Of life and love, with Thine own hand; be Thou
 His ministrant tonight; draw very near
 In all Thy tenderness and all Thy power.
 Oh speak to him! Thou knowest how to speak
 A word in season to Thy weary ones,
 And he is weary now. Thou lovest him—
 Let Thy disciple lean upon Thy breast,
 And, leaning, gain new strength to "rise and shine."

Rest him, O loving Spirit! Let Thy calm Fall on his soul tonight. O holy Dove,
 Spread Thy bright wing above him, let him rest
 Beneath its shadow; let him know afresh
 The infinite truth and might of Thy dear Name—
 "Our Comforter"! As gentlest touch will stay
 The strong vibrations of a jarred chord,
 So lay Thy hand upon his heart, and still
 Each overstraining throb, each pulsing pain.
 Then, in the stillness, breathe upon the strings,
 And let Thy holy music overflow
 With soothing power his listening resting soul.

Elon College Invites You to Meet Its Faculty, View Its Buildings and Share In Its Activities

THE CARLTON LIBRARY PROVIDES EXCELLENT FACILITIES FOR READING AND RESEARCH.

A. B., Elon College; M. A., Princeton University; D. D., Elon College

In previous years it has been the policy of the College to have different ministers and laymen throughout the church write articles setting forth the value and purposes of the school, and espousing its claim for support at the hands of the Church. In this issue we are trying something different. Instead of articles, we are herewith presenting the different members of the faculty, and officers of the College, together with interesting views presenting student activities, buildings and campus scenes. It is hoped that this issue will prove interesting and of value not only to those who are personally acquainted with the College and its surroundings, but to those who have not had the privilege of visiting the school, and have been forced to depend upon the word pictures largely for their impressions of the school.

Those who planned Elon, as it now is, are to be congratulated and the ones of us who have a responsibility of carrying on in the name of the church are to be diligent and faithful. We are now in the midst of the College period. Every church, Sunday school and friend of the College is given the opportunity and earnestly urged to make a generous contribution that the immediate needs of the College may be met, and that her program may be efficiently executed without hindrance or interruption. THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDUCATING OUR YOUTH.

The greatest task of parents is to train their children. The biggest job of the Church is to train young people so they will be able to live happily and successfully. This means more than giving them skill in making money and being leaders in the social life of the day. It means that young people need to know the various philosophies men have believed and have skill in selecting the things that are best; it means that they should know all that science has been able to give for the good of man; it means that religion should take its proper place at the center of human motives. The Church must train its youth to live well, or the Church will end in defeat.

Those who argue against college training do not fail in their desire to educate. The argument is education itself. It is impossible for young people to live in our country and not get an education. They may get it from the bootlegger, the criminal, the barber shop, the drug store, the dance hall, the movies, magazines, or the radio. Or they may get their education from good public schools, churches and Sunday schools, colleges that have Christian teachers. Some of us believe in the latter type of education, and because it seems to make more useful, helpful, and wholesome, Christ-like character.

The Church and the home should cooperate in giving to young people the very best possible education. That is why our Church owns and operates a college. We believe in giving to our young people the very best possible education.

NOW IS THE TIME TO HELP.

Elon College has had quite a struggle in recent years to keep doing its duty by our young people. But Elon is now able to offer the best possible college training to those who want to learn. Elon is our College. It is for our young people. It will aid our churches if our churches will aid the college.

Our churches are asked by the Southern Convention and the Conferences for a definite sum of money each year with which to do our college work. January and February are designated as the time in which our churches think especially about our college. Many churches take an offering at that time for the college. Other churches raise their money through regular weekly contributions. But however we raise the money, it should be thought of as an opportunity to strengthen the Church of today and tomorrow.

Contributions made to Elon now are good investments. The school is training half a thousand people daily. Beautiful and adequate buildings are there. An excellent faculty is at work. Our mites of money help to keep the good work going. Now is the time for the churches, the alumni, and friends of young people and the Church to come to the aid of Elon College.

F. C. L.

ELON COLLEGE.

The readers of "The Christian Sun," as a rule, are members of the Christian Church and are interested in our denominational institutions. Elon College represents our efforts in the field of higher Christian Education. The college exists for the purpose of providing first-class educational facilities in a Christian environment and with the highest possible ideals. The fruits of the college through the years have justified the expenditures of the church. The college has not always measured up to the ideals of the church, but it has been true to the trust committed to it. It has provided leadership for all departments of the church and has been the inspiration of its broadening activities.

As time brings us to 1938, we are reminded that in 1940 we will be celebrating a half century of continuous service rendered by the college. During these years more than a thousand have graduated from Elon College, and approximately nine thousand others have matriculated at the college and are counted as former students. Elon should have a supporting constituency, aside from the church, of practically ten thousand people. What a glorious day if all whom Elon College has befriended and helped would cooperate with the college now in our efforts toward advancement.

Occasionally you find an alumnus of Elon College who feels that he has paid the college all that he owes it. The ledger, financially speaking, may be in balance, but there are other obligations incurred in a college course than that represented by dollars and cents. On a dollars and cents basis, however, very few, if any, pay the entire cost of their education. At Elon College during the college's existence, students who have paid full expenses, including tuition have barely paid half the cost of their education. Those who received free tuition have paid less than half. A sense of appreciation and gratitude should suggest to all alumni the privilege of assisting the institution that assisted them.

The freshman class of 1890 differs vastly from the freshman class of 1937. The first class numbered about fifty, while the class of 1937 exceeds two hundred. The freshman class, as first-year students of 1890, constituted the whole school. The freshman class of 1937 is only a part of the school. In addition we have seniors, juniors, sophomores, and special students. The total enrollment today numbers 540.

On the occasion of our fiftieth anniversary we hope to have at least 600 regularly matriculated students, 100 graduates, and a thousand alumni and friends of the college who will contribute a minimum of $50, either for the cancellation of the debt or for endowment. We are soon to begin planning for the proper observance of our fiftieth anniversary.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Today has brought two extreme types of experiences. Two couples came to be united in the bonds of matrimony. A number of friends were present to extend congratulations. In both cases there was a spirit of happiness radiating the entire group. Two new homes will be established and one wishes for them much happiness and great prosperity. A happy marriage is the hope of our civilization.

The other extreme was met in two homes in the County. In one instance the husband passed away yesterday afternoon at 1:00 o'clock after an illness of a few weeks. He was in his 61st year. His wife and daughters were looking to him as their guide and helper, earnestly hoping that he might be spared for a number of years. In the other home the husband passed away last night about 7:00 o'clock, at the age of 81 years, after an illness of four years, leaving his wife and sons to mourn his departure. These homes have been saddened and broken by the grim reaper, death.

Between these experiences—the joy of making a home and the sorrow of great bereavement—the pendulum of life swings for every one. Life is interwoven with joys and sorrows, hopes and disappointments, successes and failures, sunshine and shadows. And the real test of human character is the ability to be firm and faithful in every hour of trial. Some people forget God in pleasure and prosperity; others forsake Him in the hour of sorrow and adversity. The marriage altar is not complete if God is left out of the home. And a death is a calamity, if the bereaved cannot repose their faith and their future in the hands of a loving Father. Christianity does not remove death; but it does rob the grave of its victory.

The home—the family—is the unit of the church and civilization. When a new home is established the hearts of the husband and the wife are enriched when the voice of a new life rings in that household. Their interest centers in preparing for life. When life is interrupted, in youth or in old age, by the passing of any member of the family, the atmosphere is changed and life takes on a different meaning for all concerned. Preparing for death, or the dead, challenges the faith and hope of the family.

These experiences emphasize the need of personal Christianity. The church in a community may offer its sympathy through pastor and members, but it cannot be a substitute for personal faith in the living God. It is refreshing to visit a home when there is an evidence of faith and submission to the Will of our Heavenly Father. After the storm is over sweet peace will come. And that peace that passeth all understanding will sustain the faithful believer at the marriage altar and also at the casket covered by beautiful flowers. What a glorious heritage for the believer in Jesus Christ. Triumphant living! Triumphant sorrowing! Triumphant dying.

I. W. JOHNSON.

The churches have a right to know how the College is faring financially. Last year, 1936-1937, was the best year that we have had in the past six years. By the help of the churches, the Convention, and friends, and by the practice of the strictest economy, we were able to practically balance our current budget. This is quiet an achievement for Elon. The total contributions from the churches and through Conference for 1936-1937 totally a little more than $6,000, which is the largest amount that the College has received from this source within the past six years. We greatly appreciate this increase in receipts and are now appealing to every minister, every church official, and to every local church to put forth special efforts to make this the best year yet. It can be done, and certainly should be done.

THE COLLEGE CHOIR.

One of the important organizations on the Campus, this group of students furnishes music for the church services and on other occasions.

THE FINANCIAL STATUS OF ELON COLLEGE.

During the months of January and February, the College is earnestly looking to the churches of the Conference for financial support. Every dollar given by the church or in the name of the church will be counted as a part of Conference apportionment for 1937-'38. Contributions from Sunday school, Christian Endeavor Society, or other organizations, are also counted. If every local church would set itself to the task of raising the College's share of its apportionment for Conference, they would find that such a plan would simplify the matter of raising the amounts asked for by Conference.

The Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools is urging upon us that the entire amount pledged by the Convention be raised. The raising of the full $10,000 apportionment for the College would greatly improve our standing with the Association. So long as we do not raise the full amount, the Association will not take the Convention's pledge to the College seriously, and will not give us full credit for the Convention note now held by the Convention. If the writer or anyone connected with the College can be of help to any local church, we will be glad to come on invitation. Please do not disappoint your college in this annual offering.

Elon College is now enjoying one of its best school years in its history. The student body totals 540 with a possibility of enough enrolled for the second semester to make 575. This naturally means a crowded condition in our dormitories. This is especially true in the boys dormitories.

The faculty at Elon has not been increased in number and naturally each professor is carrying a heavy load. It would be impossible for the present faculty to handle the student body if the classes were not so well proportioned. This year the senior class will number about seventy, the junior class about ninety, and the sophomore class will go over the one hundred mark, with the freshman class in excess of two hundred. The remaining students are special students in the department of art, music and the extension courses being offered in Burlington.

President Smith is now in his sixth year as President of Elon College. He has witnessed the student body increase from a low of 232 to the present enrollment of 540. Several teachers holding Ph. D. degrees have been added during President Smith's administration. Donations and compromises have enabled Dr. Smith to lower the indebtedness of Elon College more than a half million dollars.

The old Publishing House owned by the college, which had not been used for many years has been converted into another dormitory for boys and takes care of fifty students. The East Dormitory has been completely renovated. Single beds have been placed in all dormitories as well as many other improvements during President Smith's administration

During the past five years many loyal souls have stood by the College, and the church has been more or less generous in its support. The College wishes to give assurances to the ones who have given money, commendation, prayers or otherwise, that all assistance of whatever type is greatly appreciated and that every equity of the College will be used for its advancement in the most economical way possible. Correct records are kept daily, so that those who contribute may have information regarding their contributions and detailed statements setting forth the uses to which their contributions have been put. During these years the College has experienced a wholesome development. Physical properties have been kept in repair at considerable cost. Additional rooming facilities for students have been provided and maintained. The highest type of faculty possible has been secured. The teaching schedule of the institution has been expanded and heightened. As an expected result, the student body has greatly increased numerically, and the type of student has changed materially. Today, Elon College can boast of a really worthwhile institution, with a wholesome atmosphere, scholastic, moral, and religious in its trends, with a splendid type of instructor and student.

Her achievements in the field of athletics are gratifying, but no more so than are her achievements in scholastic and spiritual fields. The newspapers count athletic achievements news; scholastic and religious achievements are usual happenings, and not particularly worthy of special emphasis.

Elon College appreciates the increased confidence in the institution on the part of the church and prays earnestly for the church's counsel and support.

MINISTERING TO PHYSICAL NEEDS.

LESSON IV—JANUARY 23, 1938.

And He healed many that were sick.—Mark 1: 34.

LESSON: Mark 1: 29-45.

Jesus was concerned with the souls of men, but He knew that souls were not disembodied things, vague, indefinite things dwelling apart from bodies of men. Thus it is that He gave much attention to the physical needs of men when He was here in the flesh, and thus blazed the paths in which His followers were to walk in His service. He fed the hungry multitudes, healed the sick, of body, and ministered to the sick of mind and heart. True social service finds its inspiration in the ministry of Jesus.

From Worship to Service.

“When they were come out of the synagogue, they come into the house of Simon and Andrew . . . and Simon’s wife’s mother lay sick of a fever . . . and he came and took her by the hand and raised her up.” From worship to service, here is the natural order. Worship is an end in itself in one way. We ought to worship for what it does to us. But we ought also to worship for what it inspires us to do. We are to be doers of the Word and not hearers only. The impressions of an hour of worship are to find expression in the hour of work. All too much emotion and enthusiasm dies aborning after the service of worship and never finds expression in practical forms of service.

Some how it is natural to turn to Jesus in the hour of trouble. How true it is that when our loved ones are ill, instinctively we turn to him. And it helps to tell him about our troubles. We may be sure that He is concerned and that He cares.

The Personal Touch.

“And He came and took her by the hand, and raised her up.” Again and again Jesus reveals an amazing concern for individuals. He gave himself unstintedly to individuals. He would have us know that we are never lost in the mass in God’s sight. And He would have us know that the personal touch is the most effective touch. Men cannot be served or saved in the finest sense in the mass; there must be the touch of life upon life, of spirit upon life, of spirit upon spirit, of person upon spirit.

The Fevers of Life.

“And the fever left her.” Here is a parable of life. When we come into an intimate personal touch with Jesus, how the fevers of life leave us. Our cares, our fretfulness, our impatience, our vexations, our tempers, how they are healed when Jesus touches our lives. How much we need to pray Whittier’s prayer:

Dear Lord and Father of mankind,
Forgive our feverish ways.

Or we might better pray: “heal us of our feverish ways.” “And she rose up and ministered unto them.” Her gratitude found expression in loving service. When a man really experiences the love of God in Christ he will want to do something in gratitude.

The Great Physician.

“And even when the sun was set, they brought unto Him all that were sick, and them that were possessed with demons . . . and He healed many that were sick with divers diseases and cast out many demons.”

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING.

The Moony Building of Christian Education is the center of Religious Activities on the Campus. On the first floor is the Y. M. and Y. W., with fraternity and sorority rooms. The second floor has the student chapel and class rooms, while the third floor is devoted to Sunday school for the citizens of the community.

There was healing in His touch, both for body and for mind. Here was manifested the curative powers of the Eternal Spirit in time. What Jesus did in the flesh He still does in the spirit. The physician does not heal. All that he can do is to help Nature. God is as ever the Great Physician, the One who healeth all our diseases.

He Went Out . . . and Prayed.

After one busy day, and before another busy day, the Master, “a great while before day, rose up, and went out, and departed into a desert place (an isolated spot) and there prayed.” Significant words these. Here is a timeless testimony to prayer as a source of inner renewal and secret of power. Here is one sense in which the modern man who believes at all in God may pray. It is significant that Jesus prayed at the beginning of the day. Too many of us pray only at the end of the day. Because of this fact our prayers must of necessity be for forgiveness for sins of omission and commission, rather than of thanks for victory which would be the case if more often we had gone into the day undergirded with prayer. The fact that Jesus prayed is significant. In this case the time and the circumstances under which he prayed are also significant.

“Let us go elsewhere into the next towns, that I may preach there also; for to this end came I forth.” The world was His parish. The needs of the world were on His heart. He must needs work while it was day, for everywhere there were those who needed His message and His ministry.

And He Went Preaching.

By His life and by His words. There was that about His way of life as well as about His word of lip that bore eloquent witness to the good news. There was an urgency about the thing that impelled Him to be ever ready to proclaim the “good news.”

Healing the Leper.

“And there came to Him a leper . . . saying: If Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean.” There was no doubt in the leper’s mind about Jesus’ power, but there was doubt about His willingness. It is thus with so many today. They wonder whether God cares. They believe in His power; they do not know of His love. Jesus emphasized again and again that God was more willing to give good gifts than we were to receive them.

His word was with power. “I will; be thou made clean. And straightway the leprosy departed from him, and he was made clean.” Here was a miracle in the finest sense of the word. And here is an incident in time which represents an eternal principle. As Jesus cleansed the man from leprosy, just so can He cleanse the heart from sin. If we confess our sins He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

ANOTHER CHAMPIONSHIP BASKETBALL TEAM.

Elon's basketball team is making a good record this time. To date they have played 10 games and lost only one. The starting team is composed of Hal Bradley, Ike Fesmire, Lloyd Whitley, Richard Cromlish, and James Abbit. The average height of these boys is 6 ft. 3 ins., and the average weight 195 pounds. This is believed to be one of the tallest and heaviest basketball teams in the entire country. The Elon basketball squad is the top of North Carolina at the present time.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church"

MISS EMILY CARLETON, Editor, 541 Osceola Ave., Winter Park, Fla.

PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP OF "THE CHRISTIAN SUN."

At the Holiday Conference in Greensboro there was much discussion as to the best way of distributing information throughout the Southeast about the things different groups of young people were accomplishing. At first it was suggested that a mimeographed bulletin be prepared, containing a report of the Holiday Conference and news from each of the Fellowships.

However, it was finally decided that, if possible, we would like to enlarge the amount of space devoted to young people's work in THE CHRISTIAN SUN once each quarter. The editor of THE SUN offered to let us do this, and suggested that the first issue appear the latter part of January. Thus, we will have a dignified printed medium of carrying news from one part of the southeast to the others, rather than a mimeographed pamphlet which might be tossed aside without much notice.

Another advantage in having the material appear in THE SUN is that it may reach many people who ordinarily never see our paper, and thus pave the way for new subscriptions. We feel, too, that it is only fair that the older people, who give us so much help, should have an opportunity to see our reports and our plans in THE SUN.

The price of this young people's number is almost impossibly low—if you will send a list of names of the people to whom you wish copies sent, along with their addresses and two cents for each copy, to Rev. F. C. Lester, 514 So. Main St., Norfolk, Virginia, he will see that the copies are mailed out. If you know of any people who do not subscribe to THE SUN, and who would be interested in this particular issue, please help by sending their names and the small amount of money necessary to Mr. Lester.

NOTICE TO OFFICERS.

The officers at Greensboro decided to sponsor and support the above mentioned issue of THE SUN. The only way in which such an issue can be of any value to the young people of the southeast is for you to do your part in making it a success.

This first quarterly issue will contain a report of the recent Holiday Conference—but we want it to contain more than that. We would like to have some news from each one of the Fellowships—and it is up to the officers of each one to see that such material is sent in. A report of the things you have been doing, plans for the things you are hoping to accomplish soon, interesting news about young people in your section, local meetings which have been a success—any or all of such items will be very welcome.

If any of you have any ideas about things which you think should be included in this first issue, please write us about them. We are eager to have this as helpful as possible, and that can be so only if it contains the things you really think are vital to the young people in our church in the southeast.

This material must be sent immediately to Emily Carleton, 541 Osceola Avenue, Winter Park, Florida, as this special issue is to appear on February 3rd. We are hoping that you will not fail us, but will send in this necessary material right away.

After the material is in and published the paper still will not be helpful if it does not reach the right people. Each fellowship should see that copies are sent to each of the Key Workers in their section. As stated above, copies will be mailed to the people whose names you send in for the very nominal charge of two cents a copy—which must accompany the list you send to Mr. Lester.

WE NEED THE CHURCH!

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR
JANUARY 23, 1938.

SCRIPTURE: Isa. 2: 3; Eph. 3: 8-12.

Daily Readings—

Monday—Because Christ Works Through It—Matt. 28: 19, 20.

Tuesday—It Embodies Christ's Spirit—Phil. 2: 1-11.

Wednesday—It Stands for High Ideals—Eph. 4: 17-24.

Thursday—It is Light in Moral Darkness—Matt. 5: 13-16.

Friday—Without It Man Becomes Degraded—Rom. 1: 18-32.

Saturday—To Hold Us True to Our God—I Peter 1: 1-9.

The Church was established by our Lord upon a faith. This faith was discovered first in the life of Simon Peter, who had a revelation from God. Jesus had so intimately touched the spiritual fibre of Peter's life that he declared, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." This is the foundation of the Church for all Christian believers.

Here are a few reasons why we need the Church:

1. The Church is the only institution which seeks to make men Christian.

2. The Church stands for truth as revealed through Jesus.

3. Her worship helps to keep us in touch with God and sends us out in the Master's service.

4. The Church offers the best fellowship and creates a permanent brotherhood.

Use these and the topics for daily readings as basis for short talks. Somewhere in the program have directed prayer as follows:

Thank God (1) for the willingness of Christ to die that the Church might have life and power; (2) for all the sacrifices made by Godly men and women for the Church; (3) for all good institutions and impulses prompted by the Church.

Ask God (1) for a new sense of loyalty to the Church; (2) for courage to put Christ first; (3) to bless the work of the Church everywhere in the world in these troubled times.

Suggested Hymns—

"Come Thou Fount of Every Blessing."

"I Love Thy Kingdom, Lord."

"My Hope is Built." S. E. M.

A PERSONAL WORD.

This special issue for Elon College has crowded out quite a bit of other material that should have gone into the paper this week. The paper may be a bit late also. The editor and printer are eager to serve all the enterprises of the Church to the best of their ability. Next week we will try to give you more of the regular materials and news that should have come this week. We ask your patience, kind reader.

To the young people who are responsible for the special issue of two weeks hence goes a very earnest request that all materials for print be sent to Norfolk, Virginia, at once. You will help us, and yourselves, by doing this. Thank you very much, for we want to do our best with the materials that you send.

Please send lists of those who should receive the paper also. Printed matter has value only as it is read. Give us a long list of names and correct addresses so the paper can be sent to those who should read it. The price is very low for this service.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The Christian Orphanage is starting off at the beginning of the New Year with new resolutions and with a determination to do greater things for little children in the Master's name than we were able to do during the year 1937.

A much greater work can be done if all the churches and friends will kindly cooperate with us in this work. Indeed, the field is ripe unto harvest and the opportunity to help is great. We hope and trust every church and Sunday school will lend a helping hand.

We have quite a number of applications on file pleading to come and if friends were ample we could take more children who need a home.

One denomination in North Carolina contributed more than one hundred and thirty thousand dollars during 1937, to support its orphanage. That denomination considers its orphanage a big asset to the denomination.

The Congregational-Christian denominations should do a much larger work in this line of endeavor. Let everybody lend a helping hand this year—1938—and make it a Banner year for the Christian Orphanage. Begin now!

Our goal for the year 1938 is set at twenty-two thousand dollars. Twenty-two rungs in our financial ladder for 1938. Be a good pusher and see us climb them one by one.

 Superintendent.

"FORWARD—DAY BY DAY."

While Japanese and Chinese soldiers are killing each other, Japanese and Chinese Christians are uniting in strengthening the witness of the Church. Plans for publication of Forward—Day by Day, the Forward Movement manual of Bible readings and meditations, in Chinese are under way. Two students at Central China College are helping in the task of translating the manuals from English to Chinese. The Chinese are finding Japanese translations of Forward Movement literature helpful in the work, as many of the Japanese characters are pure Chinese characters.

The Rev. Charles F. Wiston, of Central China College, is in communication with Prof. Paul Rusch of St. Paul's University, Tokyo, who is aiding with the Japanese publications. More than 55,000 copies of the Japanese Forward—Day by Day have been placed in the hands of Japanese families. Forward Movement efforts to reach the millions of rural inhabitants in Japan are meeting with success.—The Churchman.

A Campaign for Subscriptions

The time has come for THE CHRISTIAN SUN to increase its usefulness by going into more homes of our Church people. The Board of Publications of the Southern Convention has designated February 1 to 15, 1938, as the time for the churches of the Convention to secure these needed subscriptions. The Board suggests 350 from Virginia and the same number from the Carolinas. Elon College offers a scholarship for one year to the state getting the most subscriptions. Watch these columns for the returns as they come in the next few weeks.

Carolínians, Attention!

If Carolina is to achieve the goal of three hundred and fifty new SUN subscriptions between February 1st and 15th, each Church will have to secure its quota of new subscriptions. And each Church will have to begin at once.

The SUN office will be happy to co-operate in every reasonable way. Send for sample issues of THE SUN and secure mailing lists to the post-offices through which your membership receives its mail, for this is the nearest information you can secure of the present subscribers in your Church.

Below are listed the quotas for the various conferences. If each Church will secure its quota the goal of three hundred fifty will be reached; but to win from Virginia, each Church will have to secure one or more above the quota. We want to do both. When we Carolínians go to the Convention at Portsmouth next spring, we want to be able to say to any and all Virginians who are there, "Ah! Ha!"

So come on Carolínians! Put on your tar and go places! Right over the top with you, up hill 350 and then on. On to victory over the proud and haughty Virginians. Let us make F. F. V. mean "Fast Failing Virginians"!

IT'S YOU

If you want to work in the kind of a church
Like the kind of a church you like,
You needn't slip your clothes in a grip
And start on a long, long hike.
You'll only find what you left behind,
For there's nothing that's really new;
It's a knock at yourself when you knock your church;
It isn't your church—it's YOU.

Real churches aren't made by men afraid
Lest somebody else takes the lead;
When everyone works and nobody shirks,
They can make any church succeed.
If you do your part
And appreciate what others do, too,
Your church will be what you want to see—
It isn't your church—it's YOU.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES

Dr. James R. Clinton held a Preaching Mission at Holland Christian Church last week and spent this weekend at First Church, Norfolk.

Mr. A. M. House, father of Rev. Robert Lee House, has recently been in Duke Hospital, Durham, North Carolina, very ill. At the last report he was much improved.

Mrs. F. E. Bullock has been ill at her home in Westboro, Ohio, since the 29th of December. Here is a hope, and a prayer, that she will soon be well again. And thanks for the renewal to, and the kind words about the paper.

Dr. Brewer Eddy of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, was a recent guest at Christian Temple, Norfolk. He gave a thrilling account of recent developments around the world, and particularly in Russia and China.

February 2nd will be the Fifty-seventh Anniversary of Christian Endeavor which began in one of our Congregational Churches. Christian Endeavorers around the world will celebrate this Birthday. "For Christ and the Church" is a slogan each of us may use and happy are those who share in this world-wide fellowship of those who care.

At Evanston, Illinois, next week, the various boards of our Church will hold their Mid-Winter meetings for the transaction of business for the denomination. The editor of THE SUN will be there as a member of the Prudential Committee. Dr. L. E. Smith, and others from the South, will help to carry forward the work of our beloved Church.

The retired minister who thought that he would not continue reading THE SUN because he could not pay for it will get it for another year. Thanks to a lady who sent a check immediately after reading about it. And another good friend sent in another two dollars to pay the subscription for another retired minister. Thanks, kind friends. This is the way to make life a bit happier for all of us.

Pastor's wives seem to respond to calls for service readily. Mrs. R. L. House, a student in the College of William and Mary, Norfolk, Division, has been conducting the mid-week prayer service at the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Virginia, in recent weeks while her husband teaches in the minister's school at Franklin College. Mrs. House has used as text materials the mission study book, "Mecca and Beyond."

Race Relations Sunday is set for February 13th next. Material for the proper observance of this day can be secured from the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, 297 Fourth Avenue, New York City, or our own American Missionary Association, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City. There are pamphlets for Children's programs, Young People, Women's Societies, and for the church service, as well as material for speakers. Write for your supply, and make the day useful in developing friendships among peoples of different races. This is one way to get rid of war.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

The first semester, 1937-1938, closes January 26th. Examinations are now in progress and the students are having a good time—maybe.

The Elon basketball team, that returned to the campus a few days ago with victories over every Virginia team played on the recent trip, chalked up a 55-28 victory over Catawba College, Thursday, January 20th, at Elon College. January 22nd, Elon won over High Point, 35-33.

Dr. W. C. Wicker, Head of the Mathematics Department, who has been out during the present semester, on account of illness, will on the advice of his physician assume full responsibility of the Math Department at the beginning of the second semester. Dr. Wicker has taught in the College for many years, and we are delighted to have him return.

The enrollment for the first semester is 540, including the extension course for teachers in service at Burlington. Indications are that there will be between 30 and 50 new students to enter the second semester, which begins January 27th.

A HELPFUL LETTER.

Dear Fellow-Pastor:

If your ears have been burning lately it is because we talked about you at the last meeting of our Commission. Our hard working Secretary, Fred Fagley, who knows ministers about as well as anybody else, told us of the way in which you are grappling with your church problems. More power to you! After all (and this isn't rhetoric) the success of our whole Congregational-Christian enterprise depends in large measure upon you. Yes, and the burden of the world's woe also rests on your broad shoulders. The ministry certainly is a man's job!

Let's think a moment about Lenten plans. Of course, you will use "The Fellowship of Prayer," organize training classes for church membership, set up a mid-week program, announce a special sermon series, and throw in a lot of pastoral calling for good measure. I often wonder how you do all these things and still keep radiant and serene. Yet, we ministers know Who keeps us going.

I wish I knew why the gospel does not seem to make more headway. It is the same power of God unto salvation that it was in Paul's day. Perhaps we don't yet fully understand this strange thing we call human nature. Perhaps we are too impatient. Perhaps we are making better progress than we think. Perhaps, well, perhaps we, ourselves, don't preach as if we meant it. We haven't enough force and fire. We don't "ache for souls."

The other day I ran across a paragraph that sticks like a burr. In commenting on the oft recurring line in John Wesley's Journal, Joseph Fort Newton made this observation, "Wesley did not offer Christ to the people as an attractive option; he gave Christ to them in a sacrament of contact and communication, by virtue of a heart 'strangely warmed,' nay, conquered, commandeered and consecrated—by utter identification with the passion and purpose of his Master."

My brother, us keep on preaching the good news. And let us preach it like the early apostles, with hearts "strangely warmed" with fire from above. Let us give the people Christ. And may it please God to save men by the foolishness of our preaching.

Faithfully yours,

VAUGHAN DABNEY.

ELON COLLEGE ALUMNI BANQUET.

At a recent meeting of the executive committee of the Elon College Alumni Club of Eastern Virginia, it was decided to hold the annual banquet at Hotel Elliott, Suffolk, Virginia, on Friday night, February 18th, at 7 o'clock. Those desiring to attend, please notify the secretary, Mrs. Annie Staley Calhoun, Suffolk, Virginia, not later than February 14th.

Rev. H. S. Hardecastle, D. D., is president and will preside as toastmaster.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

When sending in subscriptions, please give the name of church.

A GRATEFUL PASTOR.

The Valley of Virginia, although chilled by the cool air of winter, is still a good place in which to live. Living is composed of many things, one of which is work. As a minister, there is much work to be done. But after having come through another year one's work does not stand out so brilliantly as the blessings which have come to one. It is because of these noble blessings and gifts that the past year has been a most happy year for this minister and his mother and family. The Valley Congregational-Christian Church people and other denominational friends have certainly done their part to make us happy.

Last March at the Mid-Year Session of our Conference a movement, led by Mr. C. W. Louderback, of the Newport Church, was started. This movement was for the purpose of giving the many friends of my father, the late Rev. A. W. Andes, a chance to render a free-will offering, which offering was to be applied on the buying of his monument. Accordingly, from the following churches came: $154.98 — Antioch, $14.50; Bethel, $6.48; Dry Run, $10.00; Leakesville, $18.00; Linville, $2.50; Mayland, $10; Newport, $12.50; St. Peter's, $3.00; Timber Mountain, $5.00; Timber Ridge, $36.00; Winchester, $7.00. Words cannot express the appreciation of the Andes' family for this lovely material expression of the regard which these people had for our father and husband. May God express to them through his blessings which we cannot express.

Throughout the year the parishoners and friends of this pastor have given to him, not only the salary, but many fine material gifts such as vegetables, fruit, meat, groceries and other things which each person needs for a subsistence.

At the conclusion of the revival at Timber Ridge in which the writer assisted Bro. R. A. Whitten, the good people gave generously of their finance and of their living. It was a most happy and glorious privilege of mine to be with those kind people on the Ridge and work with Bro. Whitten.

From Mt. Olivet (G), Newport, Leakesville, came large and generous poundings. They reminded me of the old time poundings, everything which a family needs in the way of food was given me. Also a hat and other dry goods material were given me. Antioch and Bethel have not come up lacking either. From time to time they have given many fine things. Concord, of which church I was pastor until last August, must not be forgotten because of their fine gifts.

Christmas Day was observed by all of the family being at home and a nice turkey from a good friend at Bethel was enjoyed at dinner.

It is not hard to find a way to express your appreciation for all of these fine gifts. These friends have given very cheerfully and may God be kind unto all of them during the years that are to come.

A Grateful Pastor,
W. J. ANDES.

GROUPED CHURCHES MAKING PROGRESS.

Group No. 1 in North Carolina and Virginia Conference is composed of Pleasant Ridge, Salem and Belew Creek. Each church has on a building program. Pleasant Ridge people moved their building farther from the road and turned it to face the road. They have brick on the ground to underpin it as soon as the weather will permit. They plan to refloor the old building and add three Sunday school rooms, which will make a nice plant for a small rural church. They have recently installed electric lights.

Salem Chapel is just completing a department for Sunday school consisting of three fine rooms. The interior of the main auditorium is also being reworked. Electric lights will be installed as soon as the power company builds the line by the church, which will be done in just a short while. All of this will add greatly to the beauty and convenience of this old church that has been a blessing to the community for almost a century.

Belew Creek is completing a new brick-veneer building 34 x 50 feet with modern heating equipment and six small rooms in the basement. They will get new furniture, and also a new piano as soon as possible. The work could have been finished some time ago had the people been willing to make debts. Their motto is, "Pay as you go," which, I guess, is not bad. The minister of this group lives in the Belew Creek community, which is a very fine neighborhood. The work here is handicapped, however, because of bad roads in wet weather.

After having been on the field for two months, I realize it is a very challenging field and one which will require the very best efforts of a man led by the Holy Spirit if the results are what they should be.

G. H. VEAZEY.

A COUNTRYMAN SAYS:

Rather late, you say, to talk about Christmas trees. Yes, we'll admit, but there are many things about the session that we cannot easily forget. We hail the new year with gladness, but we differ from most of the world when we are a bit sorry to see the old year go. We feel a trace of sadness as the gay decorations, and even the greenery we have chosen with care, have to be taken down and destroyed.

We may be expressing a childish wish when we say that we wish that this gladness and good cheer could last throughout the whole year. Just suppose that only a small portion of the good wishes, the gladness, and the good will toward men could be extended throughout the whole year, what a different world this would be.

But speaking of trees, reminds us that it has been our duty to select several from the countryside for the past Christmas season, and we have developed a sort of "professional" attitude in their selection. We hasten to say that we are sorry to fell a tree, as it stands, symmetrical, beautiful, a perfect specimen, pointing heavenward. No Christmas tree is more beautiful than a little cedar as it grows and develops year by year, and displays its wonderful greenery among the somber colors of our woodlands.

We are blessed here with an abundance of these little trees, and one of our chief delights, as we journey along the way, is to admire the beauty of this particular gift of nature.

BETHEL CHURCH, ELKTON.

The Missionary Society of Bethel Church mourned the death of one of our faithful members, Mrs. A. J. Stepp. She will be missed greatly in this community.

In the month of November the revival meeting of Bethel was held with great success. Professor J. O. Long was in charge of the song services which were enjoyed by all. The splendid sermons were delivered by our pastor, Rev. W. J. Andes. A great spiritual blessing was received which resulted with eleven converts added to the church roll.

On Sunday night, December 26th, the Christmas program of the Bethel Church was held which was attended by four hundred people, one hundred of those remaining on the outside, being the largest crowd ever present at a Bethel Christmas Program. The program consisted of a pageant given by the Junior Department and a play: "The Message of Song," by the Senior Department.

A Christmas gift was presented to the dining room of the church by each member of the Sunday school. The members felt that this would be a better plan than to receive a gift from the Sunday school, as had been the usual custom.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

WHAT A MIX-UP.

It is a beautiful Sunday in January. The sun now hangs low over the hills of Old Virginia. Yesterday rain and fog blanketed our city by the sea. Morning worship finished, and dinner done, a train awaited to take an insignificant preacher to a far away city where he is supposed to aid in some (mysterious) practical way the growth of a great church and the cause of Christ around the earth. A poor preacher going to the aid of missionaries rides in a palatial pullman and views the beauties of the receding earth as a powerful train runs an unsuccessful race with the sinking sun. The sandy shores of the sea are left behind and mountains challenge the power of our iron horse while the valleys smile back at our success. Daylight is followed by darkness, and the darkness reveals millions of twinkling stars that had been shining in their places all the time but were hidden by the light of the day.

Poverty and luxury, ignorance and world influence, commerce and Sunday, ugliness and beauty, darkness and daylight, mountains and seas—such contrasts! and all in a day!

Millions of years ago God piled up the mountains and spread out the sea. Deep in the hills he piled up the coal and made streaks of iron, and rivers ran down to the sea to guide those who wished to climb to the heights. God flung the stars into space and let the earth spin about the sun so we may have day and night, and winter and summer.

A hundred years ago (1838) men formed a company, used God's iron and coal, and started trains from the mountains to the sea. For a hundred years the Norfolk and Western Railway has been getting ready to give an editor a luxurious ride today. For a hundred years these hundreds of men have been building tracks, and cars, and engines, and have served humanity. Today when their help is needed, they are ready.

Mixed up as it is, it is still a good earth. Poverty and prosperity join hands in this country of ours. Even the ignorant have a chance to do their best. War may disturb our minds while peace is in the soul. There is still gold in "them thar hills" where mountaineers come out of the mines to find love in their little homes. In the midst of darkness there is light. Both God and man have worked long and diligently to give to us a good earth. We may not understand all the lights and shadows, at times it may seem to be a grand mix-up, but we accept it with gratitude and believe with the author of Genesis that when God saw (or sees) this creation He can correctly say: "It is good."

RUSTY RAILS.

A certain railway company put down two lines of tracks so trains could go in opposite directions without danger. Here and there in between they laid another track on which idle cars may stand. Over the main lines fast trains travel with their cargo of human beings and long freights lumber with their heavy loads. The main line rails that bear the heavy burdens and are often crushed by flying wheels glisten in the sunlight like shining silver. Bearing the burdens has made them bright. Absorbing the warmth caused by friction has given them life. But the idle rails are rusty and dull. Their ease and protection has meant their death.

Which is a parable of life. Those who go through the "valley of the shadow of death" with the Lord are those who glow with life. Those who bear in their bodies the "marks of the Lord Jesus" (the cross) are those who are radiant with joy. Those who take upon themselves the heart-aches of the world are those who live the most. But those who show the heat and the burden of the day find themselves dull, dusty, and dead. Rust on the rails—no glow, no joy, no life. Why? No work, no responsibility, no heat from bearing the burdens of others.

There are church members like rusty rails. But you are not one, let us hope.

WILL OUR LEADERS LEAD US?

The Bishops Crusade and the Aldersgate Celebration of the Methodist Church is producing the strangely warm heart like that of John Wesley, founder of Methodism, from which the Christian Church came. Baptists are boosting their work and are rapidly getting out of debt. Other churches about us are under marching orders for a forward move. The world is ready for the Church to advance. It may not be easy success that awaits the Church, but it can be success.

One of the beauties of our Congregational and Christian Churches in that we do not have to take orders. But it may also be our weakness. Our type of democracy elects leaders. It expects leadership from its leaders. If they fail, the Church fails. If they lead, the Church may succeed.

Our Southern Church, like the polished world, is desperately in need of wise, consecrated, and concerted leaderships. Local churches, conference, and conventions need it. Our institutions, boards, and all working groups need it. One divided allegiance may destroy us. "This one thing we do" was not only a good personal motto for St. Paul, but it is making Methodists by the hundreds and is adding members to many other church rolls. We need fearless leadership that will challenge our churches to rise up in the name of the Lord to work cooperatively to put the Church Paper in the homes of our people, train our children in our church schools and colleges, pay the disabling debts of our churches, boards, and institutions, care for our orphan children, aged ministers and all who must depend upon the church for aid, place pastors in dying churches and neglected areas, and send a dozen missionaries to as many countries around the world. When we do these things we can forget the "dead heads" on our church rolls for there will be added to our churches, daily, such as are being saved.

Will our leaders lead us? The church is ready to follow.

What Should the Missionary Do?

By DR. WILLARD L. BEARD.

This is one of the serious questions that every missionary in China faces today. There are times when every missionary, in most countries to which the readers of this paper in union with Christians in all western nations have sent men and women with the Gospel of Jesus, faces the same question. Most missionaries who go to the foreign field must at some time decide whether they will obey the sign "Safety First," or risk their lives. It is a question about which they do not talk much outside of their own ranks.

For several months now the missionaries of all denominations in China have been wrestling with this question, "Shall we go home and be safe, or stay and risk a bomb falling on us?" Before the situation was considered serious Dr. Rawlinson was struck by a fragment of a bomb and instantly killed. This was in a part of Shanghai where every one was thought to be safe.

The missionary from America must look at this question from at least six angles, and some of them conflicting:

1. He knows that the authorities in Washington, the American Minister in China, the American Consuls in China, the Chinese who represents his nation in Washington and the Chinese officials in China, are in constant communication. When the situation is considered dangerous, the Mission secretary in Foochow, for instance, receives a communication from his Consul quoting a letter from the American Minister in China, to the effect that the United States Government wishes missionaries to withdraw from the danger zone. (I have never known the United States Government to "order" citizens to leave.) A United States gunboat will be in the harbor on a fixed date to take away Americans. The missionary secretary must reply. What shall he say?

2. The missionary sees his fellow citizens in business in the same danger as himself. They do not consider leaving. They are staying to protect and keep up their business. Their's is a dollar and cent proposition. They appeal to their government to protect their business and their lives. They also ask for reimbursements for losses that may occur. This is their right. The missionaries refuse to use this privilege. While in China I have personally refused to ask for either protection or indemnity. In general the Mission Boards at home approve of this attitude of the missionaries. The urge to stay and do all possible to protect property—church, school, hospital—is very strong with the missionary.

3. When the missionary turns to his home board he hears something like this: "You on the ground know better the conditions than we. We will stand back of you in any decision you deem wise. If you decide to vacate draw on us for expenses incurred." Through the Committee of Reference and Council, the home boards in America are working as a unit. The policy of one board is the policy of all. This is of great help to the missionary in times like the present.

4. Letters come from relatives and friends at home. Some of these are frantic: "Get out while the getting is good. If you stay and are injured or killed it will involve the government." Others are like the parents and relatives of both Mrs. Beard and myself. They have written us in times of danger and when others were leaving: "You are on the ground. You know best what to do. We trust your judgment. We commit you to God. We will not worry."

5. The missionary talks with his co-workers in the Christian Movement—the Chinese pastors, preachers, teachers, doctors, laymen in the church and other Chinese friends not church members, but thoroughly sympathetic with the work the church is doing. He finds them very careful and guarded in the words they use, but senses that deep down in their hearts there is a hope that he will stay. They tell him he is perfectly free to go. That is the safe way. They, the Chinese, have no option. They must stay. If the missionary remains, a bond of friendship is cemented that is untold value to the cause for which he has left his native land, home, and relatives. Practically all except mothers with children, the aged, and those whose furloughs are due are in China today and on the job. Some of my personal friends were in Nanking yesterday, December 9th, with threats of bombardment at almost any moment.

6. He now looks at the problem from another angle. Shall we call it conscience, or moral judgment, or sense of values? The missionary talks with himself. Only he and God are present. How will his decision affect his Chinese friends? the whole Christian Movement in China? this church? that school? the hospital? this project in rural rehabilitation? If he goes home, how will he enjoy living with himself—in safety? How will his decision affect the church at home, especially in its attitude toward the church's work in other lands? This work of the church in China is the work of the church in the United States. They expect their agents in China to stand by the work—they do not demand or even urge it, but they respect the man or woman who sticks to the job, and that re- (Continued on page 14.)

A PRAYER FOR MERCY, FOR GRACE AND FOR PEACE.

Almighty God, our Father, from whom every family in heaven and earth is named, hear our prayer for Thy children in other lands who live in the midst of conflict and death, who are wounded in spirit or in body by man's inhumanity to man. Have mercy upon them and sustain them in their dark hour of trial and temptation. Forgive us our indolence and faithlessness in not teaching nations a better way than strife. Purge our own hearts of racial and national antagonisms.

O God of love, draw us all so close unto Thyself that we may be enabled by Thy Grace to pray for our enemies as did Christ himself, to put away all malice, and to subdue the hateful promptings of evil. So may our fellowship within Thy Church Universal endure in spite of distance, falsehood and bloodshed.

Gather us together with all our Christian brothers of every tongue and nation beneath the Cross of Christ that in humility we may learn of Him how to serve Thee in healing the wounds of a stricken world. Enlarge our hearts to respond to suffering and need that we may give and not count the cost.

May Thy wisdom guide us. May Thy power sustain us. And may Thy love keep us ever. Amen.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Social security is a popular topic today. From small groups in a local church to the Congress of the United States many leaders are wrestling with the problem of providing an income for needy people in their old age. The financial phase is a predominant one in the minds of those who are deeply interested. This is important. But there is another type of Social Security that should claim our attention. People need money in their old age; but they should also be reminded that health and habits should be guarded as closely as financial income.

Social life has been passing through rapid changes during the past twenty years. Rapid transit, the daily press, the radio and the moving pictures have been used to create a change in public sentiment concerning the habits and social customs of our generation. Social drinking, smoking, card playing and dancing—the four cardinal things in many areas of social life—have been greatly impressed upon the minds of this generation, by insistent propaganda. Young people who do not enter into one or more of these forms of entertainment are often embarrassed by the criticism of their companions. Why are these things making such inviting appeal today? Because they are well advertised. The forms of advertising used are challenging the traditions of the past, and creating a desire to follow the example of other social leaders. The real objective, which is concealed, is commercial profit. The money spent in this way is enormous.

In addition to this there has been a chance in the trend of public sentiment concerning the liberties permissible between the sexes. Public petting, especially in automobiles parked along the highways and side roads, has increased. This is not confined to unmarried young people. The day of the real chaperone has passed in many places. Midnight, or later, is not too late to return from a gay party or a "pleasant" automobile ride. There is no insinuation that people are immoral because they go out at night and return late without a chaperone. That is not the point in this paper. But here is the great question: Are the present social customs and tendencies conducive to the security of social life in the light of past experience and the weakness of human nature? Under the best environment some people will go astray. In spite of all temptations some will be true to their highest ideals and keep their innocence and self-respect.

People who walk along the edge of a great precipice take more risk than those who pass along on the other side of the road. What is the best course to suggest to those who are to teach others by their precept and example? No one can give a full and final answer, in detail, suitable for every person and satisfactory to every type of personality. But, in principle, one may be permitted to say, in such an hour as this, choose and walk in a way of life, socially, which, if followed by others, will be safe for health of the body, inspiring and cultivating the mind and uplifting the moral character of all concerned. Under such a test, careful persons will be compelled to face the alternative of making a personal choice between the edge of a dangerous precipice and the safer way on the other side, in spite of social criticism.

The church cannot control society. But it offers a regenerating power, through the Gospel, under the power of the Holy Spirit. Law cannot save. Police force is not adequate. The church should present a program and reveal a life, so much superior to the way of the world, that humanity will be drawn unto Jesus Christ as steel is drawn to a magnet. This is the task of the Church—not to punish or criticize, but relieve and save; not to condemn but to uplift and transform. The social life of this age needs the leadership of a consecrated Christian society, saved by grace, but saved to serve.

ELON COLLEGE.

Elon College is the property of the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches. It did not come into being of itself. It was conceived and organized by the leaders of the church and for the church. The church has always felt the responsibility of the College, has gladly assumed the direction and support of the institution. It was born out of a sense of need of a trained leadership, particularly a trained ministry. It is a church school, in the truest sense of the word. The Trustees of the institution are elected indirectly by the Convention and directly by the Trustees themselves. They are charged with the responsibility of conducting the affairs of the College, and are answerable to the Convention. The fruits of the College, through the years, have more than justified the Convention in its founding. While a church institution, it has evolved an inclusive curriculum affording wide latitude to ambitious students seeking adequate preparation for life. In the majority of the pulpits of the Southern Convention, and in many pulpits elsewhere in various denominations, the graduates of Elon College serve efficiently and continuously. Ninety per cent of the active pastors of the Southern Convention are graduates of Elon College. There is scarcely a church in the Convention that does not have within its membership one or more Elon College graduates.

The unusual growth of the College in recent years has attracted wide attention. Her achievements in intercollegiate athletic sports have been most unusual. The public press may refer to the College as "Little Elon;" however, the Colleges themselves do not look upon Elon as little, when it comes to athletic contests. The present student enrollment is the largest in its history.

When you begin to count the assets of the College, in addition to buildings and grounds and endowment, you must count faith, friendship, good will, cooperation and confidence. These intangible assets are more valuable, if possible, than financial securities.

When the writer graduated from Elon College, he was invited to a seminary with several million dollars' worth of property and securities, but with a student enrollment of seven. Without faith, friends, and confidence, we could not go forward. Of course, the College needs and must have money with which to pay its bills, and may we remind ourselves that we are now in the midst of the College Period, when every friend of the College is asked to express his faith and confidence in the institution by a generous contribution. Every church in the Convention has its apportionment, determined by the Conference to which it belongs. This amount to be raised for the College is a part of that church's regular Conference apportionment. The College is getting along finely. It is gaining every day. These accomplishments have been made possible by the cooperation and help of the membership of our church. In all experiences of the College, now is the time for everyone to come to its rescue.

“Tick - tock, tick - tock!” says the clock as it pushes the days and the weeks on into the year of 1938. I hope all those good New Year’s resolutions are still remembered! If we keep our good resolutions we will be growing bigger and finer along with the days and the weeks of this year.

There is a story told of a visitor who once visited in a bronze factory. In the bronze factory he watched the workmen as they cleaned the panels, trimmed the edges, touched and re-touched the outlines, shaped, smoothed, and polished one part after another and then went back over it all and did the same things over and over again. The visitor asked the workmen how they knew when their job was finished. Then the workmen replied that they never really finished a piece as they would like, but that they just quit working on it when it was taken from the factory. One of the lessons our Heavenly Father would have us learn is that we never grow perfect in one year but that we must continually trim and smooth out the rough places and form better habits and make and keep good resolutions day after day and year after year. In order to help us check up on ourselves God has given each of us a clock to carry around with us. It does not say, “Tick-tock,” but it does say, “Yes - No - Right - Wrong” because it is a conscience clock. If we treat it well, it will always keep good time and we can depend upon it.

The Greeks believed that away in the Mediterranean Sea there was an island on which lived some beings they called sirens. These sirens had very beautiful voices, and they sang such wonderful songs that every one who heard them wanted to leave everything and go to the singers. When the sailors on ships that were passing the Island heard this singing nothing could prevent them from flinging themselves into the sea and trying to swim to the island. All around the islands were cruel, sharp rocks. The swimmers were flung upon these rocks and killed. Sometimes the captain of a passing boat would be so attracted by the singing that he would order the boat to sail in the direction of the island until it struck on the rocks and the crew was all drowned in the rough waters.

There were two famous men who got past this terrible island. One of them was a great warrior called Ulysses. He was a very brave, strong, and wise man. He had heard about the sirens so when he got near the island, he had his ears filled with wax so that he could not hear and he had himself fastened to the mast of the ship, and then he ordered the men to row on. Soon Ulysses heard the sweet songs and tried his best to get loose but he could not. The rowers never heard the music, so they passed safely by.

Another famous man came by in a different way. He was called Orpheus, the most wonderful singer in the world. When the boat in which he sailed got within hearing of the siren island, Orpheus began to sing and he sang so beautifully that the rowers in the boat could hear nothing of the siren’s songs because they were listening to the singing of their leader. So they, too, passed safely by the siren island.

There may be voices you, too, will hear which, if listened to, would make you forget those good resolutions, but if you keep your conscience clock running you will be able to drown them out and stick to your good resolutions.

I am profoundly grateful to the churches and to all who had a part in this most worthy and needed offering. If there are churches that took the Christmas offering and have not sent in, please do so at once.

It was a wise provision our Convention passed at its last session “That churches be requested to take an offering for Superannuation on Communion Sunday.” Some churches are doing this and we sincerely hope all the churches will adopt and use the suggestion. It is a debt of honor we owe our retired and worn out ministers and the widows of ministers.

The funds are needed for this year’s appropriations and here is hoping we will not fail these needy and deserving ones.

“THE CHRISTIAN SUN.”

I love THE CHRISTIAN SUN. I love that for which it stands, but I am saying that it does not measure up to my ideals. After receiving my December 2nd number, I read every line except the advertisements and found one word that encouraged me, and that word was “Evangelism.” Well, fine, at least we are thinking in terms of evangelism. But I must confess that I do not understand its full meaning.

However, if I should attempt to say just what I think we need I would quote the Wall Street Journal of several months past when it said that what America needs more than bank deposits, bonds, and securities is an old time revival such as our fathers and mothers had. But you say that the time of such revivals are past, and you are about right, for I am sure this is largely responsible for the cold, formal, sinful religious dry-rot today. Why not our leaders call for repentance and prayer for a great sweeping, spiritual revival!

SEEKING.

(A Correspondence.)

Florida Sanitarium,
Orlando, Florida,
January 15, 1937.

Came last week, one evening, a lady to talk an hour, in the parlor here, on the early history of Florida: that a hundred years before Jamestown and Plymouth Rock the Spaniards were already subjugating the Indians, exploring and "settling" Florida. Exploiting would have been the better word for it is rather a notorious, as well as tragic part of history, that in the sixteenth, as well as in the centuries since, the Spaniards sent out ships and seamen to explore, to discover and to bring home gold. Unless the riches came back with her explorers those bold adventurers were rewarded with disgrace and death in a dungeon; as, for instance, Columbus who discovered America. Columbus could have discovered all the new worlds there were to discover, but since he did not bring home the gold the reward from his countrymen should only be imprisonment and death. So what mattered it if the Spaniards were in Florida a century before the English were at Jamestown, or the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock? What did they do in and for Florida not only during the hundred years of their priority of possession, but in the centuries since—until, indeed, the sturdy descendents of Jamestown and Plymouth came here and began not to exploit and subdue, but to plant and cultivate and build? Some one has well said that the Spaniards came seeking gold and got bounty and defeat; the English came seeking God and got wealth and health, and the greatest democracy on earth.

It is all in what we seek, and the means we use in our search. Spain has paid a dear price for her ruthless seeking and exploitation, and at long last, retribution seems to have come home ("Vengeance is mine, I will repay saith the Lord"). Her colonies and continents gone from her, poor, pitiable Spain is now fighting it out with herself, seemingly a sort of suicidal pact, her own rendezvous with death. What is that Spanish war all about?

But from the beginning till now, and one presumes forevermore, Florida is, and will be a land of contests and contradictions. Here it seems that God has done His best, and man his worst. Is ever so in this world? That when God has shown and showed His best there Satan seeks to do his worst? Here a good and glorious sun banishes the blight and frosts of winter. So thousands flock here, to seek the healing balm of a friendly sun, and the life-giving fresh air of "the broad open." And others came to seek rest, relaxation and their Eden of rich color and ripening fruits. These, in large part, fill the many churches on the Sabbath and hear great sermons from able ministers and worship God in the "beauty of holiness." One can find what one seeks. If one wishes, and seeks to get close to God, and all that is good, glorious, and wholesome, one can find it all here. On the other hand: Ah! me. On the other hand!! The State legalizes pari-mutual betting, gambling in its most seductive and "popular form. For instance, near many of the cities and towns are "Kennel Clubs." These are operated by a man, or a few men, who have grey hounds for racing. The "Club" near Orlando opened for a season of ninety days—more properly nights—a little while ago. The papers next morning reported about two thousand people present with receipts on the races of $15,000.00 This was popularized by the advertisement that "a liberal per cent of the first night's profits would go to charity—to the support of an orphanage." Save the mark. Then another "Club" to advertise its opening night, filled a wheel barrow full of nickels and dimes and rolled it down the main street of the town and dumped the contents as a "gift to the city" at the door of the Chamber of Commerce. When counted it was a gift of $710.00. That night thousands flocked out to "hit on the dogs."

One day, the past week, Florida's most popular "park" for horse racing opened for a season of 46 days. The papers report that all previous records were broken in attendance and in the betting, for a first day—about 20,000 people present and considerably over three hundred thousand dollars passed over the stiles in the betting. I asked a Floridian why the State legalized gambling. His reply was: "Thousands come here in the winter who want to gamble and will gamble in some way. By making their gambling 'legal,' and levying heavy taxes on the same as we do, our tax rates on land, houses and holdings in Florida are very low, among the lowest, if not the very lowest, of any State in the Union."

Well, we find what we seek. God has done His best for us, but the waywardness, the sin of man's heart, has turned many of His best blessings into most cruel and killing scenes. But there it stands to all eternity, "Seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you."

Maybe, some day, man will learn, but many are a long, long way from it yet. "Seek and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." By what seek ye?

J. O. ATKINSON.

RECIPE FOR A CHURCH DESIRING TO DIE.

Take of the Herb of Hypocrisy and the roots of Spiritual Pride with a Pinch of Custom, two large handfuls of Complacency and Self-Satisfaction. Boil them over the fires of Prejudice and Ill-Will, till you can perceive the ingredients floating on the top, then ferment them with the Sugar of Deceit and one quart of Emotional Tears, put them into a bottle of Envy and stop them up with the Cork of Malice; when all subsides make them into Pills of Conspiracy. Take them night and morning with the tongue of Slander. Attend house parties and enjoy a plate of Criticism. Go to meetings, sing hymns, say prayers with Pharasaic Spice, until they are heard all around the Neighborhood. This will produce the effect that you will cheat everybody; revile the church, rail against the regular ministry and, as opportunity comes, cut the Throats of all who do not agree with you.

If these ingredients be well prepared and the instructions consistently followed it is an Infallible Recipe for a dying church.

JAMES R. CLINTON.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church"

MISS EMILY CARLETON, Editor, 541 Osceola Ave., Winter Park, Fla.

PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP WEEK.

Next week, January 30th to February 6th, will be Pilgrim Fellowship Week for the young people of our church. Sunday, January 30th, is observed all over the United States as "Denominational Day" in Christian Endeavor groups. We should make this week stand out in the minds of the older members of our churches as "Youth Week" or "Young People's Week."

The purposes of having this youth emphasis in our churches for a week are: To have the young people realize their responsibility to their church as a whole, and not just to their young people's society; to have the older people in the church gain a greater knowledge about the abilities of their young people and the importance of young people's work in their church; and to have young people of our denomination share with other young people all over the country this observance of "Youth Week."

PROGRAM SUGGESTIONS.

There are many things which can be done at this time to promote a feeling of friendliness on the part of all members of the church, both young and old. Even though this special week is past before you can put them into practice, we recommend them to you as possibilities sometime in the future:

1. The young people assist or have complete charge of the Sunday morning or Sunday evening church service.
2. The young people conduct the mid-week service, perhaps using as their subject the Statement of Purpose of the Pilgrim Fellowship.
3. The young people give a social for the older people of the church some evening during the week. Fellowship like this is often the way to closer understandings.
4. Have an "all church" supper, with the young people assisting the women in serving and the young people presenting the program of the evening.
5. Have a "parents' night" at your regular young people's meeting. Perhaps the program could consist of a Panel Discussion, composed of both young and older people, on "What Young People have a right to expect from their Parents," and "What Parents have a right to expect from their Children."

6. Assist the world friendship committee in your church by giving a play on some Mission topic, and thus show how interested you are in that phase of the church's work.

If any group takes advantage of this opportunity to put an especial emphasis on Pilgrim Fellowship during this coming week, please write the Young People's Department, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Massachusetts, about it. They are anxious to have this information in order that they can offer suggestions to other young people's groups in the future.

PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP WEEK OF "THE SUN."

Next week, as announced in a previous issue, a great part of the regular issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN will be turned over to young people. This seems especially fitting because it will appear as we are celebrating "Pilgrim Fellowship Week" throughout our churches.

We would like to have your opinion of and your contributions for these newly inaugurated Pilgrim Fellowship editions. Look over the first one critically and write us what you think should be done to improve the next such issue, which will come out in April. If your group is not reported in this issue, see that the omission does not occur again.

We hope that you will feel it is worthwhile for the editor to give us so much space once a quarter. Help us to make the wisest possible use of this great opportunity of sharing with each other the various phases of young people's work in the Southeast.

THE CHURCH NEEDS US.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR
JANUARY 30, 1938.

SCRIPTURE: I Cor. 12: 28-31;
I Tim. 3: 12-16.

To Discuss—

1. How may we discover our fitness for a place in the church?
2. What kind of spirit should one possess in regard to giving himself for the church?
3. Give evidences of the fact that Christ has called young people into His service.
4. When are young people more responsive to the call of Christ?
5. Does the Church have a challenge and message which call for our best?

MANY; YET ONE.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR
FEBRUARY 6, 1938.

SCRIPTURE: I Cor. 12: 12-27.

Monday—One in Faith—Gal. 2: 19, 20.
Tuesday—One in Loyalty—Phil. 3: 7-21.
Wednesday—One in Brotherhood—Eph. 1: 1-12.
Thursday—One Vine, Many Branches—John 15: 1-10.
Friday—Many Races, But All One in Christ—Col. 3: 9-14.
Saturday—Many Races, One Destiny—Rev. 7: 9-17.

Christian Endeavor was organized in February 1881, in Portland, Maine, by Rev. Francis E. Clark. Since that time it spread so rapidly that it became a national and international movement. Christian Endeavor creates activity among youth through a spiritual and church-centered program; works in many denominations around the world; stands for temperance; works for peace; and believes a "new world comes only through new world builders."

Dr. Poling says: "The supreme business of Christian Endeavor is leading young people to Jesus Christ, bringing them into the life of the Church, training them there for the service of Christ and His cause through all human relationships. Evangelism, the Quiet Hour, the Tenth Legion, the study of the whole missionary enterprise, and the entire program of Christian education should receive from us a fresh evaluation."

Discuss these points—

1. To what extent is our Christian Endeavor reflecting the many interests and phases of Christian Endeavor?
2. At what point does our society seem to be strong? How can we use this strength more effectively?
3. Where does our society seem to be weak? How can we gain strength at this point?
4. What can our society do to win more people to Jesus and His way of life?

We should use this meeting as a means for expressing gratitude for past achievements, as a time to "take inventory" of our present, and as a time of prayer and wise planning for future activities.

MINISTERING TO SPIRITUAL NEEDS.

LESSON V—JANUARY 30, 1938.

LESSON: Mark 2:1-12.

Soon after Jesus came back to Capernaum, people found it out. "It was noised that He was in the house." Jesus cannot be hid. Individual and home life are different when Christ is around. His spirit has a way of expressing itself, his life transforms the life of others. If we really have the spirit of Christ in our lives or in our homes, sooner or later it will be "noised" and noticed. People will take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus. The ultimate test is not what we profess, but how much of the spirit of Jesus we express.

Speaking the Word.

"And many were gathered together, so that there was no longer room for them, no, not even about the door; and he spake the word unto them." Christ seemed to be a great magnet, drawing all men unto Himself. To be sure some people came from sheer curiosity, and some in the hope that they might be healed, but many came because here was a man who spake as never spake before. There was winsomness in his words, but more; there was reality and vitality. He spoke with authority, with power, with conviction. He put old truths in new forms, or proclaimed new truth with strange appeal. He was the Word, and when He spake the word it became luminous with beauty and power and meaning. People liked to hear Jesus preach and teach. And people like to hear a minister or teacher today who has the spirit of Jesus and an expression of Christ.

Bearing One Another's Burdens.

"And they came, bringing unto Him a man sick of the palsy, borne of four." This man was grievously afflicted. He apparently was suffering the penalty of his sins; in any event he was sick in soul as well as in body. He could not help himself. But he had friends, who believed that if only Jesus could deal with him in a personal way, something could be done for their friend. Because they cared for him, cared enough to do something to help him, a glorious chapter was written in his life and in the gospel record. We are to bear one another's burdens. We are to bring others to Christ.

When these men got their friend to the house where Jesus was they could not get anywhere near Jesus. Nothing daunted they went up on the roof, opened a hole through the earthen slabs, or the covering of the roof, and grabbing hold of the four corners of the man's bed or pallet, they lowered him down directly in front of Jesus. These men showed an earnestness and a perseverance and a faith that all too many of us lack today. One reason why the Sunday school classes and the churches do not grow faster and larger is because we are not putting enough thought and energy and personal service into our work.

Forgiving Sin.

"Son, thy sins are forgiven." With spiritual insight, Jesus saw the man's spiritual needs. Far more important than mere healing of body, was the make the man whole, to help him to come into an experience of God's forgiveness, the renewal of a right spirit within him. It must have startled the man, as well as disappointed him, perhaps embarrasses him, to hear Jesus speak these words. Like so many of us, the man wanted health of body when he needed health of soul. How many there are who consult physicians in an effort to be rid of aches and pains, and to be healed of diseases, and yet do not consult the Great Physician for the thing that they need most. There are folks who are scared to death when they get a little pain or ache or some disturbing symptom, but who are not much troubled about their sins, or about a vigorous and healthy spiritual life.

"Thy sins are forgiven thee"—these are momentous words. They are words that cannot be lightly spoken by the Son of God. Forgiveness costs. The Cross is some evidence to what it costs God to forgive us in Christ. Happy is the man who, because of genuine penitence and sincere and thorough-going repentance can hear God say, "Thy sins are forgiven." This is one of the gospel's most precious words. Jesus probably never spake words that have more significance for us than these.

Carping Critics.

There is always somebody to find fault. Instead of rejoicing that a man had found forgiveness and had been restored to a new relationship with God these scribes began to "reason in their hearts" and to conjure up some theological hocus pocus. "Who can forgive sins but one, even God?" To be sure they were right, for who could? But the One who was the image of the invisible God was in their midst and they knew him not. He had power on earth to forgive sins, but he could not forgive them for their hearts were not right in the sight of God.

Meeting the Issue.

"But that ye may know that the Son of Man hath authority on earth to forgive sins, I say unto you, Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thy house." Forgiveness of sins is an inner thing, something that cannot be seen with the physical eye. The Master knew that his critics could easily dismiss his seemingly glib words about forgiveness. There was an issue here which must not be evaded. He, therefore, commanded the man to rise up, walk, and go into his house. In this case, at least, he would show the reality of the experience which men could not see by a sign which they could see. This miracle was a token of his power over the bodies as well as the spirits of men. Jesus is always willing to meet an issue honestly. And He even yet can verify inner experiences by outward signs.

The Final and Unanswerable Argument.

"And he arose, and straightway took up the bed, and went forth before them all." The final test in this case was the healed man. Jesus was willing for His case to rest upon the man. That paralytic walking and carrying his bed was the final, unanswerable argument which Jesus presented. A Christian man today is Christ's final and unanswerable argument. There is no answer to a Christ-like life. Christ's cause stands or falls on the witness which our lives give to His power and His grace.

A COUNTRYMAN SAYS:

Yesterday we met at the little church for the first business meeting of the year. Only about five per cent of the membership was present. No division or difficulty of any kind in the church, just too busy with other affairs to spare one hour of the Lord's time on Saturday afternoon to attend to this business—the work of the church. We wonder if other churches have any trouble along this line. About what per cent usually attend? We would be interested in hearing from other churches, and suggestions for increasing attendance at these business meetings.

Our pastor advanced a forward program, one that if practiced, will certainly put us in better condition financially and otherwise. Oh, that men would apply the same intelligence, business methods and enthusiasm to their church work as they do to their private affairs. Then we would grow, and glow, and go forward in a righteous cause.

MONDAY.

CHRISTIAN HILL-TOPS.

"And seeing the multitudes, He went up into a mountain."—Matt. 5:1.

It was from mountain tops and high places that Jesus revealed to the disciples God's plan for life. In this revelation He helped them see that real happiness comes not from trifling things, not from doubtful pleasures, nor from wealth, but from the workings of the Holy Spirit in and through the life.

We may not be able often to go up into the mountains but we do not have to. In the plains where we are, we can still have a vision of Christ and His way, and that makes us dissatisfied with any less than the realization of His promise: "Ye shall be perfect even as your Father which is in Heaven is perfect."

Prayer—O God, give unto us Thy peace and enable us to make known that peace unto the world. Amen.

TUESDAY.

HE DID NOT SEE ENOUGH.

"And his servants said unto him, Alas! my Master, how shall we do? And He answered, fear not, for they that be with us are more than they that be with them."

"And Elisha prayed and said, Lord I pray Thee open his eyes, that he may see."—II Kings 6: 15-17.

It was spiritual blindness with this young man that he did not see the Hosts of Heaven. Had he seen, he would have known and had no fear.

It is not that we see too much; we see too little. For instance, Caleb and Joshua had been sent out as spies to spy out the promised land. Like those who had gone previous to them, they, too, saw the threatening dangers. But they saw more than that. They saw God and His presence and this assured them of victory. It is never the presence of difficulties which forecast our defeat. It is always the absence of God.

Prayer—Our Father, we believe; help Thou our unbelief? Thou art closer than our breathing. Help us always to realize that fact. Open our eyes that we may see Thee and fight the good fight of the courageous and of faith. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

OH, WHAT A CHANGE!"

"He laid His hands on her and immediately she was made straight and glorified God."—Luke 13: 13.

We marvel endlessly at the wonderful changes Christ wrought with those He came in contact with and of those upon whom He bestowed His blessing of healing. We marvel today at the changes wrought in human character, in dirty lives made clean, weak lives made strong, selfish lives made loving, wrong lives made right, pagan lives made Christian. There certainly must be some power, some authority, some abiding Spirit far beyond the preacher's ministry, far beyond education's wisdom, far beyond civilization's methods of changing human hearts.

This power is Christ, the hope of everyone.

Prayer—Our Father, help us to be so humble and contrite that we may draw upon Thy limitless power for the good of the world. Amen.

THURSDAY.

EVEN THE DOG KNOWS.

"Let us go into the house of the Lord."—Psalm 122: 1.

A story comes to us of an airdale dog that walked quietly into church one Sunday and went from pew to pew sniffing in search of his master and mistress. It appears that his master and mistress were such steady church-goers that even the dog knew where to look for them.

Thank God for the many persons whose habits of worship are so established that everybody may know where to find them. They are the pillars of the church and out of their lives flow blessings that make people happy and bring the Kingdom of God to men.

Prayer—Our Father, we confess that we do not love the house of the Lord enough; that we do not worship Thee enough; that our lives do not witness for Thee enough. Forgive us for this, and may the habit increase into freshness and vital experience. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"THE MAN WITHOUT EARS."

"Having ears, hear ye not?"—Mark 8: 18.

Years of experience have brought to us the knowledge that there are myriads of people without an ear for the finer sounds of life. They do not hear the beauty in music, they cannot even appreciate the song of a bird; they are deaf to sentiments of nobility, of wisdom, and God-like affection.

They, whose ears are dull to the voice of God, are worse off than they who merely are deaf to worldly sounds. It has been said, "they are marble statues." God forbid this for you and me.

Prayer—Our Father, grant unto us spiritual ears that we may miss no message of Thine, whether it comes through nature, through music or through the Holy Spirit. And whatever Thou dost give us to do, help us to do it with all our might. Amen.

SATURDAY.

TODAY AND TOMORROW.

"Take no thought for the tomorrow; for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself."—Matt. 6: 34.

"I must work the works of Him that sent me while it is day."—John 9: 4.

FAITH, A PERSONAL TREASURE.

By REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

"And Jesus answering said unto them, Have faith in God."—
Mark 11: 22.

"A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth good tidings." And one of the very best treasures any man can bring forth is faith. "Verily I say unto you," says Jesus, "If ye have faith . . . nothing shall be impossible unto you." Faith moves mountains. Among the outstanding blessings of my childhood days was a mother with faith. She had faith in God, faith in her children, and faith in her neighbors. She believed in folks. She thought the teachers at public schools would be good and true to her children, and they were. She thought the minister and the Sunday school teachers were fine, faithful folks and they were. She believed her neighbors would do her any good turn they could, and they did. One of the things I can safely say about my mother, she had a simple faith in the other fellow, and she had an unswerving faith in God.

She was a great blessing in our home, and I suspect that there are many who would rise up now in that old community and say that she was a blessing to the neighborhood. Faith is a great asset. One man with faith in boys, for instance, and who will take an interest in them, taking their part, sharing their likes and dislikes, being their friend and counsellor, is worth far more than a whole system of policemen, and a whole row of jails, in making better boys. It is a pleasure to meet a man with faith. I do not mean a foolhardy man, but one that knows human nature, and still believes that it has its everlasting, dependable, heroic qualities. The man of faith is good company, good fellowship, and a worthwhile man in the church, city countryside, anywhere a good man is needed. He is a mountain-moving man.

I hope I may never lose faith in my fellow travellers along life's pathway. I believe in them. I am not suspecting them. I am expecting them to make reasonably good, and some of them to make extra good. I like the prayer of the disciples when they said to Jesus, "Increase our faith." Jesus had been giving them an example of a man that was a real faith-tester. A man who would ask forgiveness then go do the same thing over again; and then ask forgiveness and go do the same over again. That sort of a man is indeed a tester of one's faith. Jesus said to His disciples, "And if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee saying, I repent; thou shalt forgive him." Jesus was not advising forgiveness in such a case, he was commanding it! So His disciples said, "Increase our faith." Jesus believed in men. He believed the faith would be eventually vindicated! Let us thank God for the faith of Jesus Christ. And let us humbly bow in His presence and ask Him to increase our faith.

It took real faith to say to Jairus' dead daughter Arise; it took great faith to say to ten lepers Be ye clean; it took great faith to stand before the sealed tomb of Lazarus and say Come forth; it took great faith to say to the sinner-woman Thy sins be forgiven thee; but it seems to me it took greater faith still to entrust to the disciples the gospel of the Kingdom of God. That was faith, indeed. But the faith of Jesus was vindicated. To the death they went to make good his faith in them. And they so conducted themselves before they were called to martyrdom that the gospel of love was off to a good start across the wide world. They did their job well. Have you ever heard anybody say the disciples bungled the task God gave them through Jesus Christ? I never have. Their loyalty, and faithful carrying out of His instructions has been the marvel of the ages! He was so good to them, and so complete in His trust of them, they simply could not fail. Faith, says Jesus, will remove mountains.

"I have faith in you," has saved the day for me at many turns of the road of life. What greater blessing can one give another than faith in that person. The other day a friend of mine, my mother-in-law of whom I am very proud, said to me in reference to an address that she knew I was soon to deliver: Remember, we are counting on you. It helps. It brings out the best in one to know that others believe in one. "A good man out of the good treasure of his heart brings forth good things," and I tell you faith is one of the best treasures he can possibly bring forth.

Your mother has faith in you. Mark that, young man. Your mother has faith in you. She may not be able to give you wealth, education, prominence, position, or place in the world; but more than all those things if you know how to be a worthy son is the faith she places in you. And mother, that is a lesson to you, too; remember to have faith in your son and daughter. It is one of the best treasures. Jesus trusted Peter, and James, and John, and the rest. He believed in them. And those disciples, eleven of them at least, vindicated that trust.

Jesus not only trusted his fellowmen, but He had faith in God. And I believe that that is one of the primary needs of the hour: Faith in God. Plain, simple, mountain-moving for its sheer simplicity, faith in God is what we can pause right here to think about. Has God really ever failed you? We have failed him at times; miserably failed him. But we must confess that he has never failed us. "God is faithful." "But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him."

Jesus had faith in the Scriptures as they existed in His day. He looked upon them as sacred writings, bearing unbreakable promises. "Till heaven and earth pass," says Jesus, "one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled." He did not empty the Old Testament Scriptures, He filled them; He did not belie them, He believed them; and He did not tell what was wrong with them, He showed what was right with them. He believed in the Scriptures. He had faith. John, the beloved disciple, says: "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." And he goes on to say that "he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God" is the one who has the faith. Fill the treasure of your heart with faith in folks, faith in God, faith in the Bible, and faith in Jesus Christ. There are no better treasures than these.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The Christian Orphanage group are very much interested in basketball this season. The high school team is made up of orphanage boys.

The team is very much interested in their games. They have won all the home games except one and they let that team know that they were on the court in that game.

I am always glad to see the boys and girls take an active interest in games and all kinds of athletics. It teaches them to think quick and act quick. They have played nine high school games and won six. Clyde Brady seems to be the star player. In the nine games he has played he has scored 117 points. His brother, George runs him a close second, and in one game scored twenty-one points.

If they keep on winning they may be tempted to challenge the college team before the season closes.

The health of the children has been good except a few light colds and a few cases of whooping cough.

ELON COLLEGE.

Confidence in the College has been established. It has been forward along all lines. We cannot afford to allow the College to be interrupted in its progress or be compelled to retreat in the least, but we must help it go forward, and with your help and the help of every other member of the church and in the providence of God, we will go forward.

Please, our good friends of the local church, don't forget us; don't pass us by, but lend us a helping hand and in turn the College will bear fruit for the church to which we belong, and society of which we are a part. Don't forget the College Period closes the last day of February. It would be fine if we could hear from every member through his church before that date.

WHAT SHOULD THE MISSIONARY DO?

spect deepens when they see him value the cause of the Christ above dollars, above property, yes, above life.

Some years ago I was to return to China from furlough. A friend of some years standing and I were riding on the rear platform of the train as it pulled out of the station. He had on several occasions urged me not to go again to the far-away land. He pressed his point again as we talked for the last time before my return. I looked at him kindly and firmly, and said: "Mr. E., if I did not return to China as a missionary I would greatly lower myself in your esteem." He accepted the challenge and with candor replied, "Yes, you are right."

Why are two thousand missionaries remaining in China at their own risk? The only answer I know is, Jesus Christ.

[Note: Dr. Beard will be remembered as the guest speaker at our Southern Conferences last fall. Ed.]

FAMILY ALTAR.

The great Christian principles emphasize a control of self and a direction of our activities in order to produce a tomorrow that ought to be. All of God's plans are long plans. We must work accordingly.

Prayer—Our Father, like Paul, we see through a glass darkly. Give us the faith to see the things that ought to be and give us the patience to work for them loyally. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

SUNDAY.

CLOSE TO THE BORDER.

"If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable."—I Cor. 15: 19.

William T. Ellis in The Christian Herald, 1933, said:

"After a thousand miles of automobile travel, I recently was nearing home, when a fragment of steel from a swiftly passing car crashed into the windshield, striking me and covering me with shattered glass. Only a few inconsequential scratches resulted.

"But the accident was one more needed reminder of the obvious truth that all of us are forever living on the border of the other world. No man may know when he will be summoned across. 'In the midst of life there is death.' Nobody is fully prepared to live who is not also ready to die. Without fear or morbidness, eternity should be reckoned with as a sure consequence of time. For death is surer than life."

Prayer—Our Father, some of us live in terror of death. We pray Thee to give us such a far vision of things eternal that death shall be only a stepping stone into Glory. Make our spirits serene till Thou dost call for us. Amen.

In Memoriam

EURE.

Mrs. Mollie Kate Eure was born September 19, 1862, in Isle of Wight County, Virginia. She lived the greater part of her time in Gates County, North Carolina, where she was a faithful member of Eure's Christian Church for a number of years and an active member of the Missionary Society.

She married Mr. Dempsey L. Eure of Gates County in early womanhood. To this union there are only two living children, namely, Henry L. Eure and Mrs. Thomas Howell, both of Gates County.

Mrs. Eure was called home to heaven in the morning of December 1, 1937, at her old homestead.

Her remains were carried to Eure's Christian Church for funeral services and burial.

A FRIEND.

SLAUGHTER.

Donie Priscilla Slaughter, daughter of the late Solomon and Betty Tuck of Virgilina, Virginia, was born January 19, 1900, and died at her home, Nelson, Virginia, December 22, 1937, at the age of thirty-seven years, eleven months, and three days. On December 30, 1916, she married Yeary Slaughter. She leaves her husband and five children. The children are: Roger, Jimmy, William, Richard, and Virginia. There are also surviving seven sisters and one brother.

Sister Slaughter joined Union Christian Church when about twelve years of age and was a member till her death. She died in the faith. The funeral was conducted at Nelson Baptist Church by the writer and burial was in the church cemetery. A large number of sorrowing relatives and sympathetic friends were present.

C. E. NEWMAN.

GARRISON.

On January 1, 1938, the death angel visited the Ladies Aid Society of Bethlehem Christian Church and claimed one of our oldest and most faithful members, Mrs. I. N. W. Garrison. Therefore be it resolved:

1. That in the death of Mr. Garrison we have lost a faithful and loyal friend.

2. That we extend to his relatives our sincere sympathy, and pray that God will bless and comfort them.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be placed on the records of our Society, a copy sent to "The Christian Sun," for publication, and one to the relatives of the deceased.

Respectfully submitted,

Mrs. C. L. SIMPSON,
 Mrs. B. M. FAUCETTE,
 Mrs. ROY KERNODLE, Committee.

McSHERRY.

George Eddie McSherry, son of Phillip and Evelyn McSherry, was born June 24, 1874, and departed this life on December 28, 1937. When a young man, he married Miss Anna Hamlet, who survives him, together with the following children: Clyde, Lois, Evelyn, and George; and four grandchildren. There are four sisters: Mrs. J. A. Soloman, Mrs. J. W. Pulliam, Mrs. Cora Weeler, and Mrs. Aurelia Hudson. Brother McSherry had been a member of Lebanon Christian Church since a young man. The high regard in which he was held was evidenced by the vast crowd of people attending his funeral at his church, conducted by the writer. The floral designs were many and beautiful. Burial was in the church cemetery. There is sadness in the home; but loved ones weep with hope of meeting again.

C. E. NEWMAN.

MURRAY.

Cabell F. Murray was born June 15, 1888, and died December 16, 1937. When in boy, he joined Union Christian Church and was a good member until death. On December 27, 1908, he married Miss Emily Bell Tuck, who survives him, together with the following children: Mrs. Alpie Rice, Mrs. Drewry Tuck, Solomon, Fraser, Ada, and Herman Murray. One brother, Ocie Murray, and two sisters, Mrs. Mollie Rehew and Mrs. Nannie Glasscock are living. The funeral was conducted by the writer at this church and burial was in the town cemetery. One of the largest crowds attended the funeral ever seen here on a like occasion. Brother Murray was an honest man, a good citizen, and a kind neighbor. By industry and good management he became independent. He was a good financial supporter of his church and charitable to those in need.

C. E. NEWMAN.

COBB.

In the passing of Mrs. Margaret T. Cobb, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. W. J. Stephenson, in Richmond, Virginia, on October 9, 1937, the Franklin Congregational-Christian Church lost one of its oldest members. The church wishes to express its appreciation of the life and services of the deceased in the following resolutions:

1. That in her death we have lost a fine Christian character although confined to her home for many years she was ever faithful to her church and her Lord.

2. That we hold in loving remembrance her years of faithful living and devotion.

3. That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to her family and commend them to God, whose grace is sufficient to us all.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be placed on our church records, a copy sent to the family, and a copy sent to "The Christian Sun," our Church Paper, for publication.

Mrs. C. O. BYRD,
 L. R. JONES,
 Mrs. E. L. BEALE, Committee.

WRIGHT.

On November 2nd, God, in His infinite wisdom, saw fit to remove from our midst one of our faithful members, Mrs. Jessie M. Wright.

She was a loyal member of the First Christian Church of Portsmouth, Virginia, a devoted wife and mother, and a faithful worker in both the Ladies Aid and Missionary Societies.

She was at all time interested in the church and its works, and it was her earnest desire to be of help. Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we humbly bow in submission to God's will, knowing that He doeth all things well, and that his loving arms are ever beneath us.

2. That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to her family in their bereavement, and point them to our loving Father, who was her constant source of comfort.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family, one to "The Christian Sun," for publication, and one recorded in our minutes.

Mrs. J. F. BROTHERS,
 Mrs. C. F. RUDD,
 Mrs. O. C. HORTUNG,
 Committee.

SUTTON.

Mrs. Rachel Cornelius Cable Sutton was born April 27, 1850, in Alamance County, North Carolina, and departed this life December 11, 1937. She made her home with her daughter, Mrs. Ingram Wheeley. Her husband preceded her to the spirit land 18 years ago.

Those who lament her going are: two daughters, Mrs. Wheeley, and Miss Mary Sutton; one brother, P. M. Cable; one grandchild, three great-grand children, other relatives and many friends.

In early life Mrs. Sutton professed Christ as her personal Saviour and lived consistently to that profession until the end came peacefully. She united with Shallow Ford Church and was, in recent years, the oldest member. She loved and was loyal to her church in attendance and support as long as physically able.

Mrs. Sutton spent her entire life in the locality of Elon College. She was a kind friend to all, a good neighbor and a useful citizen to her community. She will be greatly missed.

Funeral services were held at her home church, by her pastor, assisted by Rev. J. W. Patton, a former pastor. Interment was made in the church cemetery.

May the Lord comfort all who mourn.

A Campaign for Subscriptions

The time has come for THE CHRISTIAN SUN to increase its usefulness by going into more homes of our Church people. The Board of Publications of the Southern Convention has designated February 1 to 15, 1938, as the time for the churches of the Convention to secure these needed subscriptions. The Board suggests 350 from Virginia and the same number from the Carolinas. Elon College offers a scholarship for one year to the state getting the most subscriptions. Watch these columns for the returns as they come in the next few weeks.

Congratulations to Youth

With this issue "The Christian Sun" greets American youth, and especially our own young people in the Southeast, by making this A SPECIAL NUMBER FOR PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

We congratulate you because:

1. You Are Young. Life lies ahead to be made what you want it to be. No habits of long-standing bind you. New ideas find welcome in your mind. Vitality still runs strong. You look to a rising sun. You are becoming, growing. Life is new, vigorous, inviting, thrilling.

2. The World Awaits You. Radio and aeroplanes have made all nations neighbors. Printing and electricity let you see the world and the world see you. Your prayer in a closet may be heard instantly around the world, if it is worth hearing in Heaven. A multitude of voices has confused the minds of men everywhere. Selfishness has caused conflicts. The neighborhood awaits the spirit of brotherhood. Love needs to cast our fear. Movies, magazines, radio, and dailies are scanned for the face, voice, and message of those who can lead the way to coordinated and happy living. If you have faith, hope, and love, the world will welcome you, for it needs you.

3. God is Ready to Help You. For more years than man can measure God has been making the earth and mankind. Out of the dust He made man to be with Him, and into man He breathed life that is eternal. From the savage to the civilized (and, some of us think, back again) God has struggled to develop His creation by giving him personal aid in natural law and spiritual grace. In life's shadows you will always find the Divine Father ready to help you.

4. The Church is Giving You a Chance. Youth is having its day in the Church. You are encouraged to organize. Your way is paid to conferences and training schools. At your disposal is much property of the Church. Counsel, advice, and money, but not dictation are given you. Older people are your friends; not your enemies. They may not always understand or agree, but they love you and bid you follow your high vision wherever it may lead. Your Church is giving you a chance and hopes desperately that you will be worthy.

Christian Youth Will Build a New World wherein dwells the righteousness that comes from the Holiness of God, or Destructive Youth Will Destroy Civilization by its lust and greed and thoughtless selfishness. Congratulations to you who seek to build. The universe is on your side even though the winds of public opinion may blow to the contrary.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Economic Security is one of the major objectives of humanity. Social Security is related to human character. Economic Security is rooted in human conduct. Both of these are inter-dependent. But in a specific way the economic structure is sensitive to the personal habits of every individual. "No man liveth unto himself" in the realm of finance. Every person who is industrious, thifty and altruistic is an asset to society. People who are lazy, careless and reckless become a liability in the economic life of a community.

There is a wide difference between the person who takes the attitude—"The world owes me a living," and the person who lives under the conviction that—"I owe the world a life." The one is concerned about what he may get; the other about what he may be and do. Everything depends upon the personal attitude and objective.

Money may be regarded in three ways: to be wrapped in a napkin and laid away; to be spent for personal needs or pleasure; or to be invested for future returns and use. The person who is dominated by the first idea may become a miser; the second type may be a spendthrift; the third type is the builder of industry and business. Real giving is an investment. People who tithed their income and give unto the Lord, as He hath prospered them, are laying up for the future, by investing in the kingdom of God.

The method of business and the standards of living enter into the consideration of economic security. It is fundamental that honesty and integrity are indispensable qualifications of any successful business man. A man who is dishonest can make money—but he cannot build good character—and he cannot develop a permanent reputation as a good business man. Moral law is inexorable in business. It cannot be broken in the marts of trade without penalty. What a man sows in business that shall he also reap. Tricks in trade and deliberate default in the payment of just debts have their inescapable penalty.

Personal habits of living should have more careful attention in this restless age. "Live within your income," is a good motto. This standard should be set before boys and girls in their teens. In times of sickness, or other seasons of unemployment, it will be difficult to live up to this standard. But that is an argument in behalf of making this the standard. In the beginning this may call for self-denial and very plain living. Young married people should be interested in safe financial plans for the future. They should not expect to begin housekeeping with more comforts, luxuries and entertainments than their parents ever had. Plan to own a home. Pay as you go. Provide for the future. Work hard. Give liberally. Life is a stewardship. Prosperity is a sacred trust. You have a great responsibility in making, spending, using or investing money. At the judgment bar of God an accounting will be made.

People who spend money for drinking alcoholic liquors, riotous living, questionable entertainments and many other useless things to that extent, are not living on a safe and sound basis financially. When the moral issue is not involved, the question of the wise use of one's money is always present. That question should have careful consideration. If it could be more carefully, in youth, and all through middle life, the relief rolls would be greatly reduced, and the tax upon the institutions dispensing charity would not be so great. This responsibility rests upon the individual.

DIFFICULTIES OF COLLEGE ADMINISTRATION.

There are many things about a college campus that are fascinating. The institution is filled with young life, young people who come from the better homes of the country, and whose presence on the campus is a result of worthy ambitions. They have at least had a vision of better things, and the more exacting requirements, if one is to achieve along that are worthwhile. The majority of the student body today is there for business, and does not intend to fail in his mission.

To have the privilege of assisting such a group of young people in an effort to realize their ambitions is inspirational and joyous. Every day is filled with new experiences and new emphasis. From a casual consideration, the administrative position of an institution of higher learning is alluring and delightful. However, there is another side to such a position, a side that few other than the administrator himself ever see. Every institution has its rules, scholastic, social, material, and otherwise. A small minority of the average student body prefers to make its own rules, set its own standards, and do about as it pleases. Student government uses its influence and powers. The faculty also takes a hand, but eventually it lands in the administrator's office, and he is supposed to sit in judgment and pass sentence that is final. Here he is face to face with difficulties that exact a heavy toll.

It has been my privilege on different occasions to say to students guilty of serious offenses, "The school is closed to you. If you will leave the campus quickly, it will be appreciated by every one here." Drastic measures have been taken against only the more serious offenders and in most instances they are given the third trial, but even so, it is difficult to turn a youngster unprepared for life from the one opportunity that has come to him to fit himself for successful living.

On other occasions, at the beginning of the second semester, as is now the case, there are always some who have whiled their time away, instead of applying themselves to their studies, whose marks fall below the passing grade. To say to them, "The College has certain standards. You have fallen below these standards; therefore, you have automatically eliminated yourself from the campus," is no easy job, particularly when they say, "I see now my mistake. I do not want to go home. I want to remain in college. This is my only hope of success in life. Won't you permit me to have another chance?"

But when another type of student comes and says, "May I please remain in school?" This particular student has given no trouble; in fact he has been a very helpful influence on the campus. He does not waste his time; he has applied himself diligently; his marks are among the best. But he is unable to pay his bills. He comes and says, "I know it costs money to go to school, but I am compelled to go. There is nothing else for me to do. I want to make a man of myself. I can't do it without an education. If the College will just bear with me, I will pay every cent as soon as I am out of school." He means every word he says, and will do what he promises, but unfortunately the College does not have the money with which to provide for the current financial requirements, unless the students pay their bills. To say to such an ambitious youngster, "I am sorry, but you cannot remain in school," is a most difficult task, the most difficult of all.

We have a few loan funds. Individuals have made available money to be lent to such worthy students, allowing them to graduate and repay after graduation. Such funds at Elon College are pitifully small, too much so. What a great service those who have been blessed with funds could render the present and succeeding generations by making available money to be lent to students on good endorsement, to be paid back after three to five years. This would be the type of investment that would bear dividends in human life, as well as in material investments. There are ten to fifteen additional students who would be in Elon College today, if the loan funds were available. Endorsements on such notes agreeable to the lender can be secured. The money should be turned over to Elon College for such worthy purposes. The College would be glad to safeguard the funds, according to the requirements of the ones providing the funds.

My dear reader, and good friend of the youth of today, if you are interested, please drop me a line, and I shall be glad to confer with you further. We need many things at the College. We need new dormitories; every available space is taken, but most of all we need good students, and we are prepared to give them first class advantages.

RUTH SEABURY TO SPEAK IN NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA.

The young people in our North Carolina and Virginia churches are to be congratulated upon the privilege they have in being able to hear Miss Ruth Seabury of our Boston office speak this month. Those who have heard Miss Seabury know just what a distinct pleasure it is to be in one of her audiences—you learn the facts in such an interesting manner that you enjoy every minute of your "study."

Miss Seabury will speak on "The Moslem World," thus making more real our mission study topic in the foreign field this year. Although the talk will not be confined to any study book, the missionary societies having an attendance of 50 per cent of their membership at any one meeting will be granted credit on Standard of Excellence for having studied one book.

The plans for Miss Seabury's trip have just been announced by Miss Irene Cotten, Superintendent of Missions for the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship. On February 21st, Miss Seabury will speak to North Carolina young people at Elon College at 7:30 P. M. Mrs. W. E. Wisseman is in charge of this meeting.

On February 25th, Miss Seabury will speak to the Eastern Virginia young people in the Suffolk Christian Church. Frances Everett, Superintendent of Missions for Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship will preside. The worship service will be conducted by Lowriner Halstead. The meeting will begin at 7:30 P. M.

It is hoped that arrangements can be made for the young people of the Valley of Virginia Conference to hear Miss Seabury. A definite announcement will be made about this later.

We are sure that all the young people, who possibly can, will take advantage of this opportunity to hear Miss Seabury, and to become informed about "The Moslem World."

NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA OFFICERS.

President—Walter Cooper, 214 Ruffin St., Burlington.

Vice-President—Elberta Murray, 801 N. Eugene St., Greensboro.

Secretary—Helen Lashley, Union Ave., Burlington.

Treasurer—Roberta Murray, 801 N. Eugene St., Greensboro.

Supt., Devotional Life—Jack May, Ardmore, Winston-Salem.

According to Walter Cooper, president, the North Carolina-Virginia Fellowship is enthusiastically making plans for a district meeting which will probably take place at Burlington, North Carolina, in April. The officers hope very much that this will be a record conference from the standpoint of local group representation. The definite date will be announced soon.

IN THE SPRING.

Here's the hope that in the spring the Southeast's fancy will definitely turn to Caravans!

At the Holiday Conference in the city of Greensboro, a Caravan Committee was formed to help develop our Southeast into a more intelligent and a more unified district of Pilgrim Fellowship, and also to plan some grand times together! This committee is made up of the State Fellowship Presidents.

Many of us have some vivid visions of spring nights when various groups throughout the Southeast will be going, perhaps in cars—maybe there will be a hay ride!—to worship, to talk about Pilgrim Fellowship, and to have lots of fun with heretofore unknown young people who share their own convictions and ideals.

If you think that sounds good, and you'd like to become acquainted with other members of Pilgrim Fellowship in your state, why don't you send the committee a penny postal saying that you think so? Our guess is that there is nothing like a word of encouragement to make a committee work—and work hard! So send your card of approval, suggestion, or comment, to Miss Frances Foster, 614 Arlington Street, Greensboro, N. C.

And this time we really mean it when we say—"We'll be seein' you."

THE CARAVAN COMMITTEE.

GREENSBORO.

A note from Louise Gourley, the Christian Endeavor Secretary of the Mount Bethel Congregational-Christian Church, was the beginning point of a grand time for the young people of Greensboro, N. C., First Church. Miss Gourley's note requested that we come out and give a program at one of their meetings. So on Sunday evening, January 23, three cars full of "Fellowship" drove from Greensboro to the Mount Bethel Church, where we found about 25 of their young people gathered together.

Our subject for the evening was "Pilgrim Fellowship," and we particularly stressed Pilgrim Fellowship Week, January 30-February 6. The program was divided into three parts, Fellowship in Worship and Consecration, Fellowship in Thinking, and Fellowship.

Each of these parts made us realize more thoroughly the possibilities and also the magnitude of our task as set forth by Pilgrim Fellowship. It was with pride that we viewed the set-up of the national organization of Congregational-Christian young people, and with determination that we renewed our vow to its Statement of Purpose.

And there was still a little time to "just talk." And of course there was lots of fun—one of our group admitted she was hoarse when she got home that night, not from talking, but from singing all the way there and back.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

PARTIAL VISION.

Here in the mountains of West Virginia the train travels by the riverside as it plays hide and seek among the peaks that rise abruptly towards the sky. Snow thinly veils the ragged hillsides that are bereft of forests and gutted by miners. The sun flashes once and again through gorges made by hands more powerful than man. A beautiful highway trails by the railway to bring visitors to this land of rugged beauty. There stand four log huts hugged between the highway and the river. These four small rooms are probably called home by four human families who claim no better place to dwell. These little houses planked up and down bear still beneath the grime of train smoke and dust from nearby coal mines the ancient heritage of paint of red and green and yellow. Clinging here and there on the mountains are many more less spacious and more ancient homes propped up on one side by posts at the corners while the other rests on the native rocks. Those holes in the hillside are the trails through which the toilers bring from inside the earth coal, with which to warm and light the homes of those who are able to buy.

Those with partial vision might say: This is America—rough and rugged, dirty and deserted, beaten and broken America. They might say that the railroads steal away the warmth and power of the hills and leave the natives cold and forsaken; that the flashing beauty of the passing auto is but a mockery of those who must stay here in their poverty. Exploitation of lumber and coal is the vision of some who pass this way. But no artist has painted a prettier picture than the Master Artist has spread for all to see, and no poet has put into print the haunting beauty, magnificent power, and restful quiet surrounding those who tarry here; and no musician has hymned a greater symphony than the harmony of these hills.

But this is only a partial vision. No individual sees all that is here, and those who see this only know not America. Great forests still stand in this country of ours. Wide plains and fertile fields produce harvests that cannot be imagined by those who see only these broken mountains and narrow valleys. Other houses are the homes of rich and poor crowded in large cities and scattered across the plains. These winding roads may seem silly to those who go straight for mile after mile in the lowlands. Those who live on the sea know nothing of this rugged America.

It is not right to think that what we see is all of life. There are always visions beyond that lure us on.

When we climb higher we can see farther. When we travel more we will know better. When we think clearly we may change our minds. Partial vision leads to inaccurate ideas, and often to dogmatism. Never be too sure; you may not know it all.

THERE IS A CHANCE.

Who said that young people have no chance today? Who? Those who know that 200,000 of them travel the highways hoping for work and a home but find it not; those who want to learn but find it increasingly difficult to attend college without money; those who know that the Church in America is giving no clarion call for volunteers for life service in Christian vocations; those who know that since 1929 the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions has reduced its force of missionaries from 649 to 429 and that the younger people were withdrawn first—these are among those who say there is no chance. But not all of them say so.

Many believe youth has a greater chance than any other age today, or any previous generation. We recognize the difficulties but think of them only as stepping stones to success for those who care. Man does not live by bread alone and the world's work is not yet done. Life is more than making a living. We may yet learn that it takes but little to live while we live much. Learning is not all locked behind iron doors of rich colleges. Every day people with pioneer spirit are pushing past the barriers and coming out in the fields of culture. An inner Voice still speaks to the heart of the prophet and calls him to correct the faults of nations near and far. Although the average age of our missionaries is now almost fifty years the time is almost here when many younger men and women must take up the work in the far places of the earth to cement international friendships.

Yes, there are opportunities galore for young people of today who have the courage of the Pilgrims and the desire for fellowship.

THE PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP AND OUR CHURCH PAPER.

The delegates to the Southeast Holiday Conference, recently held in Greensboro, North Carolina, were unanimous on one point. They all agreed that we need some means of exchanging ideas here in the Southeast, some way of knowing what other young people are doing so that we may be encouraged in our own efforts. Several methods of providing this exchange of information were suggested. The most logical one, however, seemed to be a quarterly issue of "The Christian Sun" devoted mainly to Pilgrim Fellowship work. This is our first attempt.

One of the objects of this particular issue was to present the reports and the recommendations of the Holiday Conference study groups. We hope that you will look over these carefully and try to incorporate their ideas into the program of your own local group. Another object was to present a "Who's Who" of the officers of the different Fellowships, so that leaders could have this information when (Continued on page 15.)

Conference . . . And any personal reactions you may have had to various parts of the program.

DO YOU REMEMBER—

How hard it was to get to the 8:30 A. M. meetings on time?

The very clever manner in which Pattie Lee Coghill "introduced" the whole organization of the Pilgrim Fellowship—especially Edwin White as Dr. Stock (sans mustache) and Mrs. Chicoine as Lucy Eldredge?

Those famous committee meetings, which were held often and lasted interminably?

That Lucy Eldredge, Harry Thomas Stock, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Williams, and Dr. E. C. Gillette sent their greetings to the Conference?

Rev. Ruth Sergeant's clever interpretations at the banquet?

When Edna Fulcher whispered (?) that Mr. Lester was getting "crazier" every day?

That Greensboro did not produce snow for the edification of the "Florida Crackers"?

The headline in the Greensboro paper, "President Addresses Church Group."

The sudden appearance of Dr. L. E. Smith at the banquet, when there was no more food but time for a speech?

The drama (?) presented at the banquet, with Charles Dunaphant as the Page, Betty Chicoine as the King, Alan Jones the Queen, Ervin Hyde as the blushing Princess, and diminutive Frances Foster as the Villain?

The boxes and boxes of material which Dorothy French carried around (and which she left behind and had to send for after the Conference!)?

When Frances Foster's predictions as to Earle Ward's strength failed during the games on the opening night?

The "Murray Twins," who should dress differently, so we could tell them apart?

Warren Schick, the razor magnate from Kentucky?

Lanson Granger's tense manner and clenched fists when he told how he relaxed! and rested?

The "Head Table" at the banquet, situated up on the platform?

Alan Jones' "Unaccustomed as I am to public speaking," just as Lanson Granger rose as Toastmaster?

The grand and glorious manner in which we were entertained by the members of the Greensboro Church?

That you are going to buy a copy of Edwin White's "Highland Heritage" to use in your Mission Study Group?

That we are all hoping to see each other at the next Conference?

IMPORTANT ITEMS OF BUSINESS.

At the business meeting held during the Holiday Conference several items of business were acted upon which will be of interest to you all.

The resignation of Miss Mary Moncrief, Demorest, Georgia, as Superintendent of Devotional Life was presented to the group and accepted. Miss Dorothy French, Chattanooga, Tennessee, was unanimously elected to fill this vacancy. Miss French had been asked by the president to act as chairman of the Devotional Life group at the Conference, and she did fine work in that capacity.

Rev. J. E. Neese, leader of the Publications group, presented a plan for a Pilgrim Fellowship Edition of THE CHRISTIAN SUN once every quarter, it being possible to have this mailed out at the rate of one hundred copies for $2.00. Each Conference group would be responsible for sending in news from their section, and seeing that a copy was sent to each Key Worker and leader. This suggestion was unanimously adopted.

As a result of interested discussion concerning the relation of Christian Endeavor and Pilgrim Fellowship, the president was authorized to appoint a committee to consider the matter carefully and submit a report. This committee was composed of Dorothy Truitt, chairman; Lanson Granger, Emmanuel Hedgebeth, Mildred Trammell, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Rev. E. E. White, Rev. V. B. Chicoine, Rev. F. C. Lester. The committee reported that the consensus of opinion of the group was that we should emphasize the development of the Pilgrim Fellowship whenever possible, since only by developing a denominational solidarity could we effectively cooperate with other denominations, but that there should be no effort to discourage the Christian Endeavor affiliations of any local groups.

As a result of a discussion concerning the best methods of "putting across" the idea of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship, and of encouraging the exchanging of ideas among the different groups, a committee was appointed to investigate and work out the idea of Caravans. The chairman of this committee is Frances Foster, Greensboro, and it is composed of the presidents of each of the Fellowships or—in the "unorganized" sections—the National Representatives.

The Treasurer of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship was authorized to reimburse the secretary for postage expenses amounting to $3.13.

The following resolutions, presented by Charles Dunaphant of Atlanta, Georgia, were unanimously adopted:

"Be it resolved that we, the delegates, extend our thanks to the members of the Greensboro Church for their hospitality; to the pastor of the Greensboro Church, Rev. W. E. Wisseman, for his cordiality and friendly spirit; to Mr. Simpson for his attitude of helpfulness and solicitude for our welfare; to the young people of the Greensboro Church for their invitation and for securing accommodations; to the committee from the Greensboro Church who prepared and served the banquet to us; and to the committee who made possible this opportunity to meet together in another Holiday Conference."

Following the report of the Missions group, it was decided to recommend that the young people have their own projects in both Home and Foreign Missions and that the Missions Superintendent be asked to work out the necessary plans.

GEORGIA AND FLORIDA SUGGEST—

That you follow the plan they did this fall, which worked most successfully in their Fellowships. That is, hold an executive meeting of your Pilgrim Fellowship officers at some secluded spot and really work out definite plans for things you want to carry out during the coming year. Correspondence can never take the place of actually coming into contact with the other officers and working out ideas together.

We also would like to have you know about our plan for missionary giving. Each young people's society is expected to contribute something to missions, which will be sent through the Pilgrim Fellowship Treasurer to Dr. Gillette, and for which our churches will get credit on their apportionments. Thus, while we do not yet feel capable of carrying on a definite missionary project, still we can find out at the end of the year just how much the young people have contributed to missions.

Since the churches are so scattered in Florida, as they are in some other parts of the Southeast, we found it impossible to have one great rally of our young people this fall. Instead, our state president, Henry Witte, Jr., of Sanford, attended five meetings in different parts of the state. He endeavored to make our young people "Pilgrim Fellowship conscious" and to have them thoroughly understand our plans for work in the churches this year.

EASTERN VIRGINIA PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

Since the last Southeast Holiday Conference the Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship has held one Conference (Feb. 13), and the Annual Meeting (July 13).

The expenses of our meetings are taken care of through a registration fee of ten cents. At our Conference in February we had ninety-six registered delegates, and one hundred and fourteen attended the fellowship supper. There were one hundred and fifteen registered delegates at the Annual Meeting in July.

One thing that creates much interest and adds to the attendance at our meetings is the publicity method which we use. For about five consecutive weeks before each meeting advertising is mailed to each church in our Conference, and the week before the meeting we use the direct-mailing system—sending advertising to the delegates who attended the last meeting. In this way we build up a large mailing list and keep it up-to-date.

At our February meeting we presented a Handbook, containing a statement of purpose, copy of goals, list of materials, and other items of interest and information for the members of the Fellowship. In this booklet each departmental superintendent was responsible for one page—in which they gave an outline of plans to aid the various groups in reaching the goals listed under their department (moral standards, devotional life, service, publications, reporter, and leadership training).

This Handbook, issued in February, met with such success that the executive committee voted to issue a similar booklet at the July meeting—making this in the form of a "Program Guide," endeavoring to put into compact form such suggestions as would be helpful to Sunday school classes, Christian Endeavor and Missionary societies, and all young people's work regardless of organization.

An attempt was made to have the committee and officers work on various parts of the program at home and then come together to compile the booklet—but this method of procedure did not prove satisfactory. So, on July 4th, the committee met for an all-day session. At this time the committee really worked—at the end of the day the definite suggestions for the entire twelve-months period had been compiled and the program was ready to be mimeographed.

This Program Guide was presented at the Annual Meeting in July and was received by the various groups with a great deal of interest and enthusiasm. We believe the booklets are being used to advantage by the various groups. (We will check-up on this at our February meeting.)

Taken as a whole, we believe the work among the Eastern Virginia Young People is progressing—since we see signs of it in the interest shown by our Congregational - Christian young people in the various conferences and conventions such as, Elon Summer School of Leadership Training, Pilgrim Fellowship meetings, State Christian Endeavor Convention, Missionary Conference, and Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention.

KENTUCKY PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

The officers of the Kentucky Pilgrim Fellowship are as follows:

President — Katherine Heth, Stearns.

Vice-President — Marjory Wheelon, Stearns.

Secretary and Treasurer—June McKnight, Evarts.

Two representatives, Miss Mildred Trammell, Pine Knot, and Warren Schick, Stearns, with their pastor, Rev. Ruth Sergeant, attended the Conference at Greensboro, N. C.

A suggestion from Kentucky for a panel discussion for a series of Sunday evening meetings is Dale Carnegie's "How to Win Friends and Influence People." One member gives the contents of three chapters for one meeting. After each chapter the "discussion promoter" starts the machinery of thought and it soon goes on its own power. The members are encouraged not only to talk about the book, but also to apply the principles and report on the success of their undertakings. We recommend this topic to the other Pilgrim Fellowship groups.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

ONE OF ISAIAH'S MISSIONARY MESSAGES.

The Book of the Prophet Isaiah is full of missionary messages, which fill zeal, faith and courage.

Isaiah 49 starts with "Listen O Isles!" and "Hearken ye people from afar!" It is His voice sending forth the news of the Gospel to all the nations, to the uttermost parts of the earth. Read the promise to the servant of the Lord. "I will also give Thee for a light to the Gentiles, that Thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth." After enumerating many blessings of the Gospel, the prophet predicts that people from all parts of the earth, from all points of the compass, will come to Him—"Behold, these shall come from far: and lo, these from the north and from the west and these from the land of Sinim" (an ancient name for China).

This great and wonderful work of salvation which is going on before our eyes in the uttermost parts of the world, brings forth from the heavens and the earth, and the very mountains, a loud song of praise. It is all the result of the great love of Him whose love is beyond that of a mother's love for her babe. To assure us that He will not forget or forsake us, He says, "Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands." The word "graven" indicates the use of a sharp instrument, which carves deeply and permanently our names in His very flesh, as the sharp, Roman nails pierced the palms of our Lord's hands on the Cross. How can He forget or forsake us? The sacred work of engraving is done by God himself: "I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands." The death of the Cross was entirely voluntary. Can we wonder that such a message attracts the millions of the ends of the earth, even to the jungle people, who sometimes do not seem to have the intelligence of human beings? Many fall down, love and trust, and worship Him. Those from the interior of the remotest isles and from the land of Sinim are "coming, coming from afar!"—The Pioneer (Celebes Islands).

During the year Bulletins are sent out to the Key Workers in all the churches. One is now being prepared.

On February 23rd, we are going to be very fortunate, for Miss Ruth Seabury, of our Boston office, is to be with us for our meeting.

We are planning to have Leader-of discussion in the Social Action group. It was believed that the three steps given below would carry us a long way toward peace:

1. Personal loyalty to Christ, transcending all other loyalties.

2. Economic opportunity for all peoples to earn the physical necessities of life.

3. International organization whereby each nation surrenders a part of its sovereignty to achieve greater liberty and security under law.

What our young people could do to build a more Christian world was a problem which arose continuously. And above all it was felt that we needed to know more about the problems of Social Action, especially those closest to us. To this end the group ardently recommends that every young people's society in the Southeast subscribe and study the Social Action literature of our Church, setting aside definite times for the purpose of this study and discussion. It was further recommended that our young people of the Southeast be represented at the International Relations Institute held each summer at Duke University.

YOUNG PEOPLE PRESENT PROGRAM.

At the meeting of the Eastern North Carolina Conference last November, one evening was given over to a program in charge of the Youth Fellowship. We had an excellent response from the older people, though the young people were not many. However, we were glad that we had the opportunity of presenting some of our ideas, our purposes and plans and objectives to the group. We hope that we were able to help them to better understand the thoughts of youth.

The program was as follows:

Call to Order—President.

Hymn—"A Charge to Keep I Have."

Greetings—Rev. F. C. Lester.

Offering—Eastern N. C. Youth Fellowship.

Worship Service—Rev. J. E. Neese.

Echoes from Young People's Conference at Sanford.

Address—Rev. Millard Stevens.

Hymn—"Abide with Me."

Benediction.

The address—"A Challenge to Youth Today," by Rev. Millard Stevens, was the backbone of the evening program. His inspirational talk was the result of profound thinking on the challenges facing present day young people. He pointed out in his enthusiastic appeal to his listeners that the greatest challenge of all was that of Christianity. The significance of preparing oneself to face these vital challenges through spiritual guidance was brought to mind. The message was frankly delivered and exceedingly dynamic in its scope.

CHALLENGING THE SOCIAL ORDER.

LESSON VI—FEBRUARY 6, 1938.

GOLDEN TEXT: I came not to call the righteous, but sinners.—Mark 2: 17.

LESSON: Mark 2: 13-22.

A Way-Side Pulpit and Out-Door Class Room.

"And he went forth again by the sea side; and all the multitude resorted to him, and he taught them." Occasionally one will see what is called "a way-side pulpit" or "bulletin board" on which there is posted from week to week some religious gem or moral precept. Such "pulpits" or "boards" do some effective out-door preaching. Perhaps they draw their inspiration from Jesus, for the out-of-doors was his pulpit and the sea-side and the country-side, his classroom. Very little of Jesus' preaching and teaching was done in a formal way, or in a stated place of worship. With delightful informality, and with an eagerness to use every opportunity to tell men the "good news" he preached by the sea-side and taught on the mountain-side. Majestic architecture and modern equipment are great helps in worship and teaching, but they are not essential. Garfield once said: "Mark Hopkins at one end of a log and myself at the other would be college enough for me." Consecration and an experience of Christ come first. Let no one despair because he does not have elaborate or even adequate facilities. Let him like the Master avail himself of his opportunities and use them to the best advantage.

Three Men in One.

"And as he passed by, he saw Levi the son of Alphaeus sitting at the place of toll, and he saith unto him: Follow me. And he arose and followed him." Here were three men in one. The general public saw only a publican, a tax-collector, a renegade and a traitor, a hard-headed, hard-hearted business man. Matthew undoubtedly saw more to himself than just this, but he certainly never saw himself as Jesus saw him. But Jesus saw Matthew not only as he was but in terms of what he could become. It is an eloquent witness to the spiritual insight of Jesus that this apparently commonplace publican became the author of the Gospel according to Matthew (at least to the work is essentially Matthew's) one of the finest pieces of literature ever written. Here is to be sure a parable of Jesus and the unsuspected possibilities of men. And no man ever comes to his highest possibilities apart from Jesus Christ. Christ discovers, develops, and utilizes capacities and talents.

Finding by Losing.

When Matthew gave up his place at the receipt of custom he gave up his means of a livelihood. It cost him a plenty to follow Jesus. Without doubt the people thought him foolish, or "nuts" as a high school student would say. But in losing Matthew found. He found a new life, life on a higher plane, life with wider horizons, life with deeper sympathies, life more abundant. He who is willing to lose his life for Christ's sake and the gospel will find life indeed.

A Friend of Publicans and Sinners.

This fellow Matthew did not do things by halves. He had a feast, or a dinner party in honor of Jesus. And he had many friends at the feast. Perhaps it did not occur to him that there was anything unusual about it. Jesus had seemed so friendly toward him, and he had been a publican. Then, too, Matthew undoubtedly wanted his friends to meet Jesus. Without any condescension, or false excuses as to why he could not come on his part, Jesus spontaneously responded. It was natural and sincere with him. He not only went with publicans and sinners, but he ate with them. And that was "not the nice thing to do" according to the ideas of the scribes and Pharisees. Indeed they openly criticized Jesus and took him to task about his "scandalous conduct." "How is it that he eateth and drinketh with publicans and sinners?" they asked. The Master's reply was to the point: "They that are whole have no need of a physician, but they that are sick: I came not to call the righteous, but sinners." Granted, Jesus would say that these people are not all that they ought to be, that is no reason why they should be treated with disdain or contempt or disgust. Indeed that is all the more reason why one should lavish love upon them. Just as a physician does not spend his time with folks that are well, but with the sick, just so do those who are spiritually sick claim the healing ministry of Him Who is the Great Physician. Many a minister would do well to call on "sinners" instead of coddling "saints."

A Religion of Joy.

"And John's disciples and the Pharisees were fasting; and they come and say unto him, "Why do John's disciples and the disciples of the Pharisees fast, but thy disciples fast not?" Jesus' reply was immediate and suggestive. He stated that there was no value on fasting simply to be fasting. Fasting should be an expression of an inner attitude and spirit. For his disciples to fast as an expression of sorrow when in actuality they were glad in his presence would be mockery and almost blasphemy, certainly rank hypocrisy. There would be a time when they would have the spirit in which they could sincerely fast—when the bridegroom was taken away they would fast. But while the bridegroom was with them—well, in his presence there was a fullness of joy. Why do so many Christians think that religion takes the joy out of life? Why are so many Christians of somber countenance and of gloomy outlook? The Master spoke about his joy, and of the joy which he would give to his disciples which the world could not take away.

A Religion with Life and Vitality.

In two striking parables or illustrations Jesus shows the futility of expecting results from out-moded forms or ceremonies. Speaking in terms which his hearers readily understood, he talks about patching an old worn-out garment with strong new cloth, or of putting new wine which was undergoing a process of fermentation, into old skins which did not have any powers of adaptation—both instances of folly and futility. The allusion is perhaps directly to the old forms of Judaism. But the principle applies in a much more broad way. Fruits of righteousness do not come by reformation but by transformation. A new social order is not built by adding things on externally, but by an inner transformation. The life energy of the religion of Jesus must not, indeed, it cannot be, confined in rigid, and hard-and-fast forms or doctrines. The words of Jesus and the religion of Jesus are spirit and life. They will find ever new forms of expression. The old time religion must be reinterpreted in terms of modern day needs.

MONDAY.

ADEQUATE AND SATISFACTORY.

"They testify of me."—John 5:39.

Regarding his research in the history and geographical background of the Bible, William T. Ellis says: "Of all the large tasks of journalism that have engaged my life, the greatest was the year I spent in traveling over the entire background of the Bible."

"As geography, as history, as a record of human life, the Bible has no peer. But all these aspects of the Bible are only secondary." And then he goes on to say the uniqueness of the book in its adequate and satisfactory revelation of God, in its completeness as a light for persons, in its guidance of them unto perfection, there is nothing in the world comparable to the words and work of Jesus Christ. Thus, a daily study of the Bible, expectantly and intelligently, is the greatest thing any one can do for his happiness, his contentment and his success.

Prayer—Our Father, reveal to us the Living Word. Open Thou its pages to us with the light of the Holy Spirit and open Thou our eyes to behold its truth and beauty. Amen.

TUESDAY.

IN HIS IMAGE.

"Now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face." I Cor. 13:12.

"We all, with open face behold as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image, from glory to glory."—II Cor. 3:18.

The true Christian is expected to contemplate daily and reflect always, as far as possible, the image of the Master, and they who must truly reproduce the image of Christ, we would say, have achieved the most in the Christian spirit, thereby making it possible for them to be the best Christians.

The goal of our faith, then, is that we may achieve his likeness, that we may arrive at the longed-for day when, "we shall be like Him for we shall see Him as He is."

Prayer—Our Father, as we look into a mirror and see ourselves, help us to look unto Jesus daily to see Him and reflect Him in His likeness, not only in our conduct but in all our thinking. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

MEMORABLE MINISTRY.

"Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt."—Col. 4:26.

So often we hear just rabble noise or the so-called "hot air," and so seldom do we hear in every day conversation, wholesome, uplifting, savory speech, that we are almost inclined to believe that the latter is rare.

A young lady was heard to say regarding her date friend of the night before, "he was very intellectual and talked about books and his studies and big things; but I wanted him to talk about something else."

"And what did you want him to talk about?" asked her questioner.

"Oh, just be himself and talk about the moon and—about me."

So after all it isn't the intellectual who make the best impression. This young man was intellectual but he was not intelligent. In his intellectuality, he had missed knowing a lovely girl, and an invitation to come back.

Good conversation rarely deals with learned themes. Good conversation consists in the exchange of personal interests and tastes, and through that channel may rise to higher things; and when it does, it becomes memorable ministry.

Prayer—Our Father, endow our hearts with sympathies for living experience and conditions of men and bring us all to Thee through Jesus Christ. Amen.

THURSDAY.

TO THE FAITHFUL THE CROWN.

"Be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."—I Cor. 15:58.

"Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life."—Rev. 2:10.

"Let us not be weary and well-doing."—Gal. 6:9.

An unspoken tribute to Christian men and women who have become the pillars of the church is due. We have known a great many who have appeared on the field of Christian usefulness like a shooting meteor. There is a flash for awhile and then they are gone. We have known and do now know others who have appeared like a shooting star and their usefulness goes on and on. To these we owe our thanksgiving for they have been the pillars, and still are, of God's church in the world. It is these last, who are promised the crown. Are you among them?

Prayer—Our Father, we thank Thee for the uncounted host of faithful men and women who service forbid scepticism or doubt. May we follow in their train. Amen.

FRIDAY.

ALL ELSE INCIDENTAL.

"Lo, I am with you always, even to the ends of the world."—Matt. 28:20.

The realization of the presence of God the Father, in our every day life is the greatest reality the world has ever known. And yet it is so hard, it seems, for people to have this consciousness every day. We wonder why. We have our everpresent cares, pains, poverty, perplexities, and maybe hundreds of other "thorns in the flesh" which are a part of our life. Why is it so hard to grasp, also, the greater reality that Christ is with us in every possible condition ready to be the Master of all these conditions

THE STRENGTH OF NEIGHBORS.

"Better is a neighbor that is near than a brother far off."— Prov. 27:10.

We are prone to overlook the common, everyday things of life. We have life's greatest blessing with us: air, water, food, home, family, friends, neighbors; and forget to thank God for them. We take them for granted. One of the things I can thank God for is the kind of neighbors I have always had the privilege of living next door to. They have been good neighbors.

Holy Scripture has some things to say about neighbors. "Devise not evil against thy neighbor; seeing he dwelleth securely by thee." He is there, learn to love him, if you do not already. You can make a friend out of him, and some day you may be glad he is a friend. "He that is void of wisdom despiseth his neighbor—(Prov. 11:12). "He that despiseth his neighbor sinneth" (Prov. 14:21). "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth thy bottle to him, and maketh him drunken"—(Hab. 2:15). And in Zech. 8:10, we read, "These are the things that ye shall do: speak ye every man the truth to his neighbor; execute the judgement of truth and peace in your gates; and let none of you imagine evil in your hearts against his neighbor; and love no false oath, for all these things that I hate saith the Lord."

Ponder this beautiful picture thrown into one of the parables of Jesus. "And when he cometh home he calleth together his friends, and neighbors, saying unto them: Rejoice with me, for I have found my sheep which was lost"—(Luke 15:6). Or again, "And when she had found it, she calleth her friends, and neighbors together saying: Rejoice with me, for I have found the piece which I had lost"—(Luke 15:9).

In these beautiful pictures of neighborliness, and friendliness, Jesus pictures the neighbors being called in to rejoice, not waiting until there is distress, or great need, before one takes notice of one's neighbors.

It was the rich young man who came asking Jesus the price of eternal life that heard these words: "Honor thy father, and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself"—(Matt. 19:19). You would probably be surprised at how many times you could find in the Scriptures that command: Love thy neighbor as thyself. It is like a binder in a cement bridge running the whole way through the Bible. Love thy neighbor as thyself."

In Rom. 13:10, we read: "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore, love is the fulfilling of the law." In Gal. 5:13: "For, brethren, ye have been called into liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another; for all the law is fulfilled in one word, even this, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

We cannot escape it, whatever your interpretation of the word 'neighbor,' we have a special duty toward the man next door. The man that "dwells securely by thee." "Better is a neighbor that is near, than a brother far off," because there is a strength, and a comfort in the very sight of a human face that is not found elsewhere. Just plain, common comradeship is a blessing inestimable. The face of a neighbor, thank God, for the face of a neighbor!

In a backyard only two doors way, in Dayton, Ohio, I heard the cries and screams of an old lady. Prayers mingled with her frightened groans. It stopped me like a flash, and started me as quickly on an errand of investigation. I found her down flat of her back with a great Dane dog standing over her. Her son's Dane had accidentally tripped the old lady as he played about her, and he was as frightened as she, but he did not know what to do. The old neighbor was so thankful for the face of a neighbor bringing order and help out of chaos and need. She hardly knew who lived in the house two doors away, but she saw her neighbor—in a sense I was not an acquaintance, nor even a friend, but I was a neighbor! There is the point. "Better is a neighbor that is near, than a brother far off."

One of the things that stands out most vividly in my mind about my mother's evening prayers about the family altar in my childhood was these words: "And all for whom it is our duty to pray." I learned whom she meant: Neighbors and friends that might otherwise be overlooked in her prayers. God has given us those next to us. In his wise providence he has set us next together. Are our neighbors saying of us: Well, he picked a lemon for me! Do children love you? Do your neighbors honor, and respect you? Tell me that and I shall know a great deal that God knows about the inner part of your self! To a certain extent you are reflected in your neighbors.

We are told that Henry W. Grady, who subdued more enemies with a single speech, "The New South," than were subdued otherwise by a thousand cannon, gave up a great position in New York, and hied back home to Georgia, because a neighbor did not know the little girl that was dead next door. He could not live in that sort of a neighborhood. His soul was too great for that. He would be a neighbor or not at all.

Jesus, the finest of neighbors, once felt the hunger for what he had so often given others. "And he cometh unto the disciples and findeth them asleep, and saith unto Peter: What! could ye not watch with me one hour?" How his heart hungered for the face of a neighbor! There he was in the garden of Gethsemane, praying with an agony beyond description, with the thought that three friends and neighbors waited with him at the gate. He was not through praying, but he wanted to see the face of his friends! He prayed three times, and in between times he sought the human face! "Better is a neighbor that is near, than a brother far off." His brethren were elsewhere, but these were near, he would seek the comfort of their comradeship.

Are you a good neighbor? "There is a Friend who sticketh closer than a brother." A brother, or relative, may be far away; but there is One that will be always near. Let me say it with all reverence, and worship, and faith: Our Neighbor, Jesus!

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Three of our good friends from Cary, North Carolina, Mr. J. F. Hilliard and his good wife and Mr. Hilliard's father spent Sunday, January 23rd, at the Christian Orphanage. They brought us several cases of canned beans and tomatoes. We were delighted to have these good friends visit the orphanage and see what the orphanage really means to the children here.

We find when visitors come and visit the orphanage that they are more interested after they see at first-hand what is being done for the little children who need this home.

Some of the largest contributions we have received have come from people who became interested in the orphanage by visiting it and seeing our need of friends to carry on the work in behalf of the little children here. I well remember fifteen years ago a man of means was out riding and his chauffeur drove in our grounds and around the orphanage building (the only one we had at that time). He called me on the phone that night and invited me to come to his home the next day. I went and we talked about orphanage work and its possibilities in taking care of and training the children into good citizens. When I was ready to leave he bade me good-bye and slipped a check for $500.00 in my hand and said he was glad to assist me. On another occasion he gave me a $750.00 dollar office suit.

When we built the building known as "The Baby Home," he mailed me a check for three thousand dollars and when he set aside an endowment for education and charity he gave us an income from it amounting to nine hundred dollars per year. The orphanage has already received from that endowment more than ten thousand dollars.

It was his visit that interested him. He passed away a year ago, but he left a monument that will keep his memory alive as long as this institution remains an institution of charity.

Visit the orphanage and see for yourself.

tivities. Reports were given the following Sunday and they all felt the experience a helpful one.

The West Palm Beach young people are working on plans for making the Lenten period and Easter more meaningful this year. Each member will be given a copy of "The Fellowship of Prayer," (which contains a reading, comment and prayer for each day during Lent). Their special meetings will include one on the Communion Services; the events of Holy Week, each day of Jesus' last week on earth discussed by some young person on Palm Sunday; a play reading; and an early morning service at the church on Easter morning, followed by a breakfast.

The Winter Park young people are beginning work on a Worship Project which will last for several weeks. First, they are taking up the meaning of Worship, and the elements of a good worship service; then they will work out various types of worship programs for use in their meetings later.

New Port Richey young people have "gone Moslem" for several Sundays in January, dividing their group into two sections and each group putting on a program about the Moslem World. They will study the religion and the people and countries where Mohammedanism prevails.

We are very proud of the two new young people's societies in the State—

Cocoanut Grove and Daytona Beach. Both are having good meetings and making a fine start.

Pattie Lee Coghill, our state worker, is busy visiting as many societies as possible to meet with program committees and speak to societies. She is getting results now from her efforts to have our groups plan their programs several months ahead. It is largely due to her work that our young people's societies are progressing so rapidly throughout the state.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Friday—Bribery Common—Isa. 1: 1-6.
Saturday—What God Might See—
Gen. 6: 12.

Christian Endeavorers have a great opportunity in this discussion to learn much about conditions as they exist in the nation. Some think that the right way to look at our nation is to boast of it and not to admit that there is anything wrong. Others are constantly criticising its leaders and people; they seldom praise our country. How should a Christian look at our country? What should be his attitude toward what he finds in our national life?

The evils which threaten the entire nation are: Political corruption, crime disease, poverty, child labor, race relations, liquor, gambling, divorce, juvenile delinquency, etc. Many of these exist in our communities.

On the other hand we see the following major forces fighting for righteousness and justice in our land. The Church is striving to keep down evil and sin. Our schools have as their purpose the building of good character. Cultural agencies as art museums, libraries, civic orchestras, women's clubs, men's forums, etc., help to stay the oncoming destructive forces.

For Discussion—

1. What is the greatest threat in this neighborhood to a Christian community? What is the cause? How can the church begin its attack?

2. To what extent does the Church affect the ideals and practices in this community?

3. How do sinful practices in our community affect the Church? Is it possible for the Church to ignore community conditions?

4. What kind of citizens does America need?

Suggested Hymns—

"My Country, 'Tis of Thee."
"O Beautiful for Spacious Skies."
"Rise Up, O Men (Youth) of God."

BOWEN - RICE.

At my home, Virgilina, Virginia, on December 27, 1937, Mr. Jordan Bowen of Virgilina and Miss Hattie Rice of Nelson, Virginia, were united in marriage. The ring ceremony of the Christian Church was used. The groom is the son of Mr. Luther Bowen and is engaged with his father in farming. The bride is the daughter of Mr. Robert Rice, a deacon in Hebron Christian Church. Mrs. Bowen has been one of the most active Christian workers in Sunday school and Christian Endeavor of her church.

A host of friends wish for this excellent young couple a happy and useful life.

needed—we advise you to save the lists for future reference. Still another object was to share with each other the things being accomplished in each Conference. Each Fellowship group was urged to send in material for this purpose, and if some groups have been given more space than others it is because those "others" failed to send in the requested material. If your group is one of these, please take it upon yourself to see that information comes to us in the future.

Since the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is making it possible for extra copies of this edition to be secured and sent to Key Workers and leaders throughout the Southeast, you may be reading our church paper for the first time. We hope that you will look over the whole paper carefully and then consider subscribing to it. Do you realize that you can secure this paper for a whole year—an issue every week—for the very small sum of two dollars? It will be two dollars invested in your church paper, which you ought to support, and which will bring a year of enjoyment to you and to your family. The paper is always this size, and the pages devoted this time to the Pilgrim Fellowship are given over to very worthwhile materials in other fields.

Please remember that there is one page devoted to young people's work in each week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. We need and want information about your local group and its activities; about special projects which you are promoting in your Fellowship; about plans for and reports of your meetings. Do not hesitate to send in any information about young people's activities—we need to have it to share with others.

and to make us happy. He is with us in our joys as well as in our troubles and His strength enables us to "do all things."

It has been said (and we believe truly) that it is more important to know the presence of the Lord than it is to serve Him, the latter being an inevitable effect and the former the cause. He is our life. All else is but incidental.

Prayer—Our Father, through Jesus Thy Son, help us to realize His living presence, and to know Him, His power, and His love. Amen.

PEBBLES ON THE BEACH.

"Our light affliction . . . worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."—II Cor. 4:14-21.

There are no sharp stones on the sands of the seashore. Even broken bits of glass and shell lose their cutting edge on the beach. Pebbles are round.

And why? Attrition does it. Ceaselessly, the waves roll one edge against the another, till all are worn smooth. A rough experience for the stones, but it grinds off their sharp corners.

That is what the strong waves of adversity and experience do to human lives. They round out characters and remove rough edges. Trouble teaches. Persons who have lived long and know adversity are the easiest to live with. Their obtrusive cutting edges are gone.

It takes the rough and tumble of life and adversity to smooth and polish human spirits until they are fit to use in God's great building of life.

Prayer—We would welcome, O Lord, whatever qualifies us to live better with other persons and to be useful in Thy plans. Give us grace to accept the use of adversity. Amen.

A TASK FOR THE ANGELS.

"One soweth and another reapeth."—John 4:37.

"He that reapeth receiveth wages and gathereth fruit unto life eternal that both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together."—John 4:36.

These are marvelous texts. Countless influences enter into our life's brief work which prevent us from achieving our ambitions. If that were all, we would say that life is not worth living. But that is not all, as we quite well know. Each generation reaps the fruit of the previous one long after the latter has passed off the scene. Therefore, if the contribution of the present generation contributes glory to the succeeding one and to the kingdom of God, it is great work. That is the supreme hope of a Christian, for full fruitage of his efforts is seldom seen.

When we listen to reports and contemplate figures which have been rendered in an effort to express results of Christian service, we imagine it is amusing to the recording angel. For as Dr. Ellis puts it, "the untraceable spirit of God," is not always evident and no doubt we have to look down from the after world to appreciate the glory of service.

Prayer—Our Father, make us enthusiastic in our present service, knowing that our work shall not be in vain in the Lord. Amen.

A Campaign for Subscriptions

Dear Brother Lester:

Your letters containing facts concerning "The Christian Sun" and salient ideas pertaining to campaign were very much appreciated. I am sure that I speak the sentiment of the ministry and of the membership generally of the Western North Carolina Conference when I say that we feel the need of "The Sun." In the past it has not gone to such a large number of homes but I think that each of us will be only too glad to do our part. Ours is a small conference but our people are interested in the work of the Church, and they feel they are far too wealthy to pass this opportunity of helping the Church.

My own field consists of Pleasant Cross, with a membership of 89; Brown's Chapel, with a membership of 223; Ether, with a membership of 98; and Needham's Grove, with a membership of 95. There is a total of 505 members in my field. I have challenged some of our ministers here in the Western North Carolina Conference to get more subscriptions than are sent in from the churches of my field. None of my brethren have told me that I'd have to take off my coat or roll up my sleeves and go to work, but you know that I am expecting to have to work because my brethren go quietly and unassumingly at the task and in the end somebody will be surprised.

And with your kind permission, Brother Editor, the churches of my field are extending that challenge to include the field of any minister in the Southern Convention. Perhaps we should state very definitely that we are not in the race with the churches having a larger membership than our field unless they work on a proportional basis.

And, too, Brother Editor, being a Carolinian as you are by birth (and by that we know that you are still a Carolinian) doesn't it gall you to read all those things Brigadier General House has to say about Virginia beating Carolina in this "Sun" contest? We would like for Mr. House to know that we have the feeling that at the end of this campaign when the smoke has cleared away and when order has come from the chaos and the din that we honestly believe that the referee will hold up the tired hands of the ministry of Tar Hellia and award us the victory. Then those who have gone into the Old Dominion for whatever reason will have cause to rejoice because their homogenesis will in various ways take them back to the haunts of their childhood. Yes, Mr. House lives in Virginia, Mr. House married in Virginia, but first of all he is a Carolinian. And I certainly hope that Mr. House has not been so radically affected by all this metamorphosis that he cannot rejoice when Carolina wins. No! Mr. House, that's alright, we don't hold your going to Virginia against you, but when we win this contest please try to get your good wife to understand that Carolina is still great and grand and glorious, and even modest when victorious. If your better half perchance finds you either in tears of joy or sorrow you could easily explain by showing her this toast:

"Here's to the land of the long-leaf pine,
The summer land where the sun doth shine,
Where the weak grow strong and strong grow great;
Here's to down home, the Old North State."

And what shall I say more? Just this. Whether of Virginia or Carolina, or whether in Virginia or Carolina, the task is both superb and momentous. All too long have we already neglected putting "The Sun" on a sound financial basis. So let's to the task stay until it's done.

Very cordially yours,
E. CARL BRADY, President,

REPRESENTING THE SOUTHEAST CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL AND CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials, Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME XC.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY

NUMBER 6.

Mrs B F Frank

12-1-38

WHY ATTEND CHURCH?

A COUNTRYMAN SAYS:

Many people attend church; many do not. More people should attend, and perhaps more of the ills of the world would be relieved. This prompts the question: Why do I attend church?

(1) Because I was brought up in a church-going family. Although of moderate means, we always put on our Sunday best, hitched up our horses and buggies and drove from two to six miles every Sunday morning to Sunday school and church services. We remember the pride we took in our equipment and the eagerness with which we made ready and arrived on time.

(2) I attend church because I believe in God. If I did not believe in Him and His word, I do not think I would care to attend. I doubt if I would even care to go to regain my faith. Many do not share my belief, but personally I still believe in God.

(3) I attend church because the church provides a place for worship. One can worship anywhere: in the place of business, the field or the forest, but the church is the one place set apart where man can best get himself in right relationship with his Maker. The newspapers, the radio, religious literature, and other things all have their appeal and their place, but only the church has the reverent atmosphere of the true sanctuary.

(4) I attend church because it has become a habit. A few years ago I lost for awhile the habit because of a change in circumstances, but when the opportunity came again the habit became stronger. Now I look forward to church attendance as I do the week's work. I might attend to business and make money on Sunday, but that is not going to break my habit now.

(5) I attend church because I work hard all the week. I need the rest and everything the church can give me to lift me up above the ordinary things of every day life and prepare for the work of the week.

(6) I attend church because it brings me into contact with my fellow-man. Here I see the needs, share in the joys and sorrows of man, and have a share in the building of the right relationship between God and man.

PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES

January was the most lucrative month THE CHRISTIAN SUN has had since the present editor took office. Thank you, folks, both for the renewals and for the new subscriptions.

Dr. H. S. Hardeastle, of Norfolk, is teaching this week in a cooperative training school at Newport News, Virginia, in which our church is sharing with the other churches of the community.

If your church has not made its offering for Elon College, please remember that the college needs your help and we need the college. February is a college month in our church calendar.

Deacon J. L. Edwards of Smithfield, Virginia, sends in a six-months' subscription for a member of the Baptist Church there and says that other of his colored brethren are going to subscribe to THE CHRISTIAN SUN because they like the paper.

President L. E. Smith and Supt. C. D. Johnston, of Elon College, N. C., and F. C. Lester, of Norfolk, Va., were among those who attended the fifth Sunday fellowship meeting at Zion Church near Sanford.

Dr. James R. Clinton served First Church, Norfolk, from Wednesday through Sunday, the last week of January to the delight of the members and friends of the church. He is this week at Sanford, N. C.

Mrs. W. B. Williams of Newport News was toastmaster at the Norfolk Christian Endeavor Banquet on Thursday night of last week. Quite a large percentage of the 150 present were members of Congregational and Christian Churches, and among the Christian church pastors were Morgan, Poythress, and Lester.

Requests for sample copies of THE SUN will be met as rapidly as possible. We print very few extras but will fill all orders with this issue. The office force is delighted to be rushed in trying to keep up with the subscription list. If mistakes are made, please do not hesitate to call our attention to them. We want to have everything accurate.

Definite plans for the Easter services should be well under way in all our churches. Easter comes the 17th of April. Much helpful material can be secured by writing to the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life at 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City, or to the Board of Christian Education at 514 S. Main St., Norfolk, Virginia.

The Southern Convention is scheduled to meet April 26 to 29, and will probably meet in Portsmouth, Virginia. At that time definite plans must be made for the continuation of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and all the other enterprises of our Convention. THE CHRISTIAN SUN invites discussion concerning the problems which confront us and particularly as to methods of procedure.

A Sanford (N. C.) paper recently carried the following announcement concerning the pastor of our Sanford Church: "Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Hobson of Toronto, Canada, announce the engagement of their only daughter, Marguerite, to the Rev. F. Ervin Hyde. The wedding will take place in the early summer." THE CHRISTIAN SUN extends congratulations and good wishes to the prospective bride and groom.

LANETT, ALABAMA.

We have begun the new year with more interest and greater attendance for both church and Sunday school.

Our pastor, Rev. Geo. W. Penn, is doing fine work and is having splendid cooperation from a number of the members.

The missionary society has the programs planned for the year and is doing great work. At present we are studying "Highland Heritage." We enjoy it very much.

Christian Endeavor is doing well under the leadership of Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Murphy and Mrs. Renda Fuller.

We trust that we may continue to grow and that we may be worthy of the name we profess.

L. S.

QUILTED.

My wife and I are very much indebted to the Women's Missionary Society of Antioch Christian Church for a nice quilt presented to us by the society. Mrs. Brand (Granny Brand, as she is so familiarly known) was the leader in this movement. She is very old and feeble but a willing soul. She enlisted about 30 women of the church and community in her project and yesterday, the fifth Sunday, she delivered the quilt. God bless her heart and all who in any way contributed to the success of the adventure.

I shall try to be a better pastor and a more humble preacher, and I trust that while our physical bodies shall be kept warm by this beautiful quilt that the spirits of those who shall hear me preach shall be strangely warmed by the Holy Spirit.

TO THE MINISTERS AND LAYMEN OF THE NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

What are you doing about your SUN subscriptions? Remember February 1st is now here and the 15th is not far off, and we must have our subscriptions, every one of them. I have great faith in each minister, as well as each church, that you will send in no less, but, let us hope, more than you have been asked to do. You must not wait until the last minute. Get them now and forward them in. If you do not have a deep desire for this cause, ask the Lord to give you one and then get out and go after them.

I am sure that every minister knows the value of THE CHRISTIAN SUN to the life of the Church and its cause. It is the best friend and helper he has. I have noticed that those who have been receiving THE SUN are those whose love and interest abound for the Church and its program. Not many days ago one good brother said: "I would give $5.00 per year if it would keep THE SUN going." He found food for thought, spiritual inspiration and valuable information that every church member ought to have.

One of my good Bethlehem men who has been a subscriber and reader of THE SUN for many years said to me the other day, "THE SUN means enough to me that I would like to cause its warm rays to fall into some home of an aged person who does not receive it. Give me the name of such a person." I did and her name goes on the mailing list. I am sure that in each congregation there are some shut-ins who would deeply appreciate the message that THE SUN does bring. Won't you, my dear reader, think of some person like this and send their name along with two dollars. You will be doing a fine service all year around. Each week you will be bringing light and love to that home and heart.

Now come on all you men and women in the "Old North State." Let's put this campaign over the top.

THE EAST AND THE WEST ARE ONE.

Being an account of the Observance of the World Day of Prayer, 1937.

By FLORENCE G. TYLER.

"February 12, 1937 was an exceedingly wet and cold day in Shanghai. It was no surprise to find only a little group of women in the Cathedral where the meeting was to be held. Even a few on such a day was a genuine manifestation of the significance of the occasion. As I sat quietly, enjoying the beauty and stillness of the place a group of Japanese women came into the pew immediately in front of me. I turned to see whether others had come in, and lo, the great auditorium was filled with women whose faces proclaimed that they were of many nations. The cold and rain had not prevailed against their devotion. Beside the women of China were women of Korea, Japan, India, Russia, Holland, Sweden, America, Great Britain, and the Philippines—sixteen nationalities in all. We sang the hymns together each in her own tongue, and this unique experience in this city set in the midst of nations fired our spirits with a new purpose, and filled us with new strength."

So writes a participant in the meeting of the World Day of Prayer in Shanghai. As the women of the world come together on March 4, 1938 to witness to the reality of a world Christian community may our prayers be with the Christian women of China and Japan that they may feel themselves, even as never before, an integral part of that prayer cycle binding together in unity the Christian women of the world. And in other areas where there is strife and misunderstanding between races and classes may the women there be drawn into this magic circle.

In recounting the experiences of 1937 we find that far north in the outskirts of British Columbia the snow was deep and the transportation was next to impossible as British Columbia had a terrible winter of ice and snow while from far to the south we hear that "February was a hot month in Johannesburg and especially in Natal Providence," and in Capetown many people were not back from summer vacation. At the same time the little town of Cloverport, Kentucky, entirely surrounded by water on February 12th with many other towns caught by the terrible floods along 980 miles of the Ohio River, with no water, lights and little fuel, were obliged to postpone the observance of the day for a week or two, but observed it nevertheless and sent their offerings. Thus, neither snow nor rain nor hail nor gloom of night stays the faithful from the attendance at these appointed meetings.

In Bottineau, North Dakota, the W. C. T. U. took the initiative in planning for the observance of the day, while from many parts of the world we hear of the active cooperation of that organization and of the Y. W. C. C., which in many centers took the lead. The Salvation Army arranged meetings in forty places in the Argentine and McAll Mission observed the day in all its centers in France.

In the village of Herrnhut, Germany, the women met to pray in the little room which has witnessed the consecration of so many of the early Moravian missionaries, including the Count Zinzendorf and David Ziesburger.

The women of Copenhagen have been included in the circle for many years and their enthusiasm has been carried to the farthest boundaries of their mission fields.

A small band of women greeted the day with a sunrise session of prayer at Wellington, New Zealand, which was the first meeting of the day, but it was followed closely by the Boys' School at Tangoa, South Santo, New Hebrides, and the Girls' Fellowship at Woodend, Victoria, Australia. The twenty women and girls in that fellowship will not soon forget the calm and inspiration of that early morning hour with the sun streaming in through the open door and the magpies and kwaburras (laughing jackasses) joining their voices outside with the hymns of praise within the church.

The Alice Hyson School at Taos, New Mexico, had a prayer service for the community which is largely Catholic. One hundred and seventy-five people attended the meeting in this little plaza town.

In Germantown, Ohio, a goodly group gathered, augmented by the rural women of the neighborhood whose meeting was supplanted by the Farmers Institute.

And how colorful the meeting of the women in Johannesburg where the Methodists wore red blouses, the Presbyterians white tunics with black collars and belts, the Anglicans long, white tunics with leather belts and small crosses pendant from a chain of beads. Another sect with fur caps and still another with tight, white knitted caps, some in ordinary garb but all so neat and quiet and reverent. Some hymns were sung in Zulu and some in Sesuto, but oh the perfect rhythm and the strong, full voices!

The America Church in Athens was filled to the doors when the program was distributed in three languages, English, Greek and Armenian.

There is a sense of unity in these World Day of Prayer services which the women receive nowhere else. In many places in Egypt the Greek Orthodox and Coptic churches joined in the meetings, and in Johannesburg special services were held in the Jewish synagogues.

The broadcasts from Capetown for the shut-ins in hospitals, the services in public schools and in factories made the impress of the day far-reaching. One senses the preparation for the day when one reads of the finding in the collection plate of a screw of paper containing a small sum of money and these words, "I am worshipping with you on a lonely farm." Evidently sent in through a friend. There is no end to the interesting stories of the observance of the day from Saskatoon and Alaska to Brisbane and Papua. The radio from north, east, south, and west—the National and Columbia Broadcasting Systems in the United States, the British and the African Broadcasting Companies and many others have made the world one, but the place where none of these reaches and where the day ends in ice and snow and zero is Gambell, on St. Lawrence Island, where Ann Bannon was frozen in October and where even the mail will not penetrate until next May. There the posters will tell of the World Day of Prayer on March 4th, and there Ann Bannon is planning for the closing service.

WINCHESTER, VIRGINIA.

Quite an interesting and pleasing report was made by the treasurer of the Ladies Aid Society of the Congregational-Christian Church of Winchester, Virginia, at the December meeting. For the period from August 6 to December 10, 1937, the members of the society raised the sum of $614.77. Some of the ways in which this amount was realized were through the collection of dues and extras, sale of soup, ice-cream, candy, skidoo, waxed paper, metal sponges, Christmas cards, a rummage sale and a pre-Christmas notion sale.

In addition to these and other activities, the ladies of the Aid Society sent candy to the children at the Orphanage when the apples were sent from the Winchester and Timber Ridge Churches.

At the first meeting of the new year, held January 7, 1938, much enthusiasm was also evident, and plans are being made for a busy and profitable year.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP.

Religious leaders the world around are feeling the necessity for uniting all those forces that make for righteousness in the earth. There is so much evil to be driven out that it seems a sin for the churches to use their energy in fighting among themselves. In a day when rank atheism that denies even the reality of spirit threatens the very foundation of civilization, it seems to be absurd for Protestants to divide their forces into warring camps, or to line up against Catholics, or to extend their energy against any other religious group that is striving for the glory of God here in the earth.

Spiritual unity does not depend upon intellectual belief. Spiritual unity grows out of allegiance to a leader and loyalty to a cause. It is utterly impossible for Fundamentalists to agree in their thinking with Modernists or for Modernists to accept the exclusiveness of those who claim to be Fundamentalists, but beyond the intellectual concepts of both groups there is an allegiance to Jesus Christ and a loyalty to right which unites these Christian forces in one army for righteousness under the leadership of Jesus.

The beauty of Congregational and Christian Churches through the years has been that we unite in essentials—allegiance and loyalty, that in non essentials there is liberty, and in all things love prevails. Anything other than this is not a Congregational or Christian Church. We believe in the unity of spirit, definite allegiance to a personality known as Jesus, the Christ, and a loyalty to the cause of righteousness which lives through suffering and sacrifice. You need not agree intellectually with your brother in order for him to be your brother and recognized as such. There are churches that exclude on basis of intellectual belief, but they are neither Congregational nor Christian. These churches have always stood for the liberty of conscience of the humblest member. Nobody can dictate to any of us. Christian character is all that is asked in order for church fellowship. Those who would set up other standards are breaking away from the fundamental plans of our united church and should so recognize it. They need not set up a new denomination for there are already people of like faith who exclude their fellows from the fellowship which they enjoy.

Those who accept the Bible as their rule of faith and practice, Jesus as the head of the Church, and Christian character as a test for church membership will doubtless continue to give to every individual the liberty to interpret for himself and will find a rich heritage in this democratic Congregational-Christian fellowship.

MY NEIGHBOR—THE BOOK AGENT.

I remember quite a good many years ago having some compunctions about the way I had treated, or mistreated a book agent. I had told him I had no time to talk to him. I had no money to spend for books. I had no use for the kind of books the agents brought around anyhow, and he might as well leave at once before he wasted any time trying to talk to me. And that was that, and the door was shut. I felt relieved at first over the neat way I had gotten rid of him; then I began to think of him and wondered if I had not been rather harsh. Then I remembered that I had once suffered the pangs of a book agent and how one felt when he was treated with such curt decisiveness. Shouldn't a man be a gentleman to every man? Wasn't there a more Christian way of treating a stranger than that?

After all a decent salesman deserves fair treatment. Is it not possible to hold to our adamant decision against the things and yet give the man ten minutes to state his business, and then send him away disappointed, but not insulted and sore? Why not dispense a little kindness even to a book agent? Why give another man ground to rail on the lack of manners in ministers? There surely is a way to be "frosty but kindly." Tell him you are glad to see good books introduced into the community, that you regret that your circumstances prevent your making a purchase at present. I remember yet the thoughtful way an older man spoke to me, a student canvasser, one day. He said it was a good thing to try to earn money in this way but it was much better to take a book of more real and permanent value instead of the rather ephemeral book I was endeavoring to sell. He did not buy one, but I felt no bitterness towards him.

One can be courteous without lying; one can be firm in refusal without injuring the self-respect of the seller. One ought to be a neighbor even to the book agent, considering thyself lest thou also should be tempted to take the road.

A CALL TO AID CHINA.

At last there has opened, a channel, through which Americans may aid their friends in far away China which is being over-run by an alien army. The American Red Cross has issued a call for a million dollars with which to feed the hungry and care for the wounded in China. Our own denominational leaders helped to get this decision and it is certainly to be hoped that our church people will respond liberally, for the needs are terrific, if one can believe the reports that come from China.

It is difficult for us to be non-partisan, but as Christians it is our business "to think soberly and righteously" to the best of our ability. Many of the Japanese people agree with us in America that the armies of Japan should not be in China. Their Christian hearts are in grief because of the violence of their government, but they are as helpless to control their government as we are to control ours. Are We Living in the Last Days?

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN.

At the morning service on the last Sunday of the Old Year, the pastor spoke on the subject: "Are We Living in the Last Days?"—taking for his text II Peter 3:13, "According to his promise, we look for a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."

Many people who are deeply concerned about the present world situation are asking the question: "Are we living in the last days?" The apostle Peter and other New Testament writers were influenced by the philosophy of their day. People today who accept the eschatology presented in the third chapter of Peter's second letter believe that the world is coming to a catastrophic end, which end is not far distant—that God is going to destroy the earth because of his displeasure with mankind. Such a view would make God to be a destroyer after being a creator. It would make God not only a destroyer but also a murderer, for in destroying the world, all the people living in it at the time would be killed in the destruction. It would make God to be worse than the man who recently destroyed his factory because the workmen were not producing as he thought they should; worse than the man who ruthlessly murdered his wife and children because things were not going in the home to please him, and after killing his own offspring set fire to the house in which they lived. Such a view fails to realize that God is the Author of life and of creation instead of being the Author of death and destruction. The old order does not have to be destroyed to effect a new order. Thinking Christians of today look for a new heaven and a new earth—a new world order not by the destroying of the present order but by changing it—by mankind cooperating with God in changing things that are wrong and making them what God wishes them to be—"A world wherein dwelleth righteousness."

Hence, we are living in the last days of the old regime of rank individualism when society will permit individuals to thwart social justice for individual advantage—the last days when the philosophy will be tolerated which is expressed in the old saying: "Every man for himself and the devil take the hind-most."

We are living in the last days of selfish nationalism when each nation can seek its own security without regard for the welfare of other nations, for there is no such thing as national isolation or national independence among the nations at hand. "God has made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell upon the earth" not as enemies but as friends. We are living in the last days of war between nations.

We are living in the last days of rank denominationalism when any denomination will pretend to hold a corner on divine truth, or when any denomination will profess to offer a short-cut to heaven, or to offer the only bonafide passport to eternal life. We are living in the last days when any intelligent Christian leader will contend that his denomination is the chosen people of God, for every denomination is God's chosen people in so far as it chooses to honor God by winning disciples for Jesus Christ. The contention that any one denomination offers the only true hope of salvation is an insult to intelligent people. There are just as good people in one denomination as in another, and each denomination has its full quota of the other kind of people. When we meet God in judgment, no question will be asked as to which denomination we were affiliated with upon the earth, but we will face the questions as to how we fraternized with people of all denominations—how much did we act like Jesus. We are living in the last of denominational rivalry. The day of inter-denominational cooperation and Christian Unity is at hand.

We are living in the last days of an aristocracy of wealth, when people will be rated by their possessions.

We are living in the last days of exploitation by those who employ or by those who are employed, the last days when any group can exploit another group at the expense of society.

We are living in the last days of an aristocracy of intellectuality. The importance of education cannot be overstressed, but a man's rating in the new day will not be based upon what he has or upon what he knows, but it will be based upon what use he makes of what he has and of what he knows. The only aristocracy, the only superiority that the New Day will recognize will be the aristocracy of character—not what a person has or what he knows but What He Is as expressed by what he does for God and for humanity.

We are living in the last days of any kind of inherited aristocracy or any kind of inherited advantage and power. Each individual should stand on his own merit.

We are living in the last days of class distinction. The caste system in India is a disgrace to humanity and a dishonor to God. And class distinction in America as well as in Europe is an abomination in the sight of both God and man.

A CALL TO AID CHINA.

Japan are asking for a fellowship of prayer around the world in order that the hand of God may direct in the affairs of men. We will doubtless join with them in a very sincere desire that out of the tumult and conflict of the present there may come a permanent peace based on righteousness rather than greed and power.

In the meantime it is important that those who care strengthen the hand of the Red Cross, the missionaries, and those who work among the suffering of China. Send your contribution to the local Red Cross marked for Chinese relief and join in a humanitarian work that will help to build friendships and make unnecessary the use of battleships.

HAPPY RACE RELATIONS.

Race Relations Sunday, February 13th, reminds us of the fact that America is composed of many nationalities. In these days of increasing hatreds between races and nations it seems to be important for the Church to meditate a moment on what the Christian attitude toward other nations and races should be. This is the purpose of designating the second Sunday in February for the consideration of race relations.

It is very easy for us Southerners to think only of the Negro who is our servant, or who lives around the corner, or down the alley. This thought is often mixed with prejudice which comes out of a long lost cause, much heartache and bloodshed. It is quite difficult for anyone to rise above his prejudice but it is certainly worthwhile to make an attempt. We may well consider our own family pride and ask ourselves what indicates that we are so superior. There are many things in our present and past that might take away our pride if properly considered.

If God made of one blood all nations to dwell upon the face of the earth and set bounds beyond which they are not to go, then it may be that we of the white race have certain limitations and bounds beyond which

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Religious Security is more important than Social or Economic Security. It should have greater emphasis because of its fundamental significance. Christianity has not won a place of first importance in the thought of the pagan philosophers and mammon worshippers of this world. But Jesus gave it a place of first importance when He said: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness." And it is entirely proper to say that the Christian religion is entitled to this recognition and in the fulness of time this dream will be realized.

An abstract Christianity will not perpetuate itself. It must abide in regenerated personality and find its expression in humble service and loving loyalty to Jesus Christ. Jesus did not write any books on theology. His supreme teaching was centered in love. When He said: "Love your enemies," He established a new basis and laid a new foundation for conduct and character. The commission, "Go ye into all the world," reflects the personal element in establishing the kingdom of God. If the church ceases to win converts, and fails in its missionary effort, Christianity would pass into oblivion in the next generation.

Faith in the permanence of the Church rests upon the promise of Jesus: "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it." That is a precious promise, but it is contingent upon the faithfulness of the followers of Jesus Christ. Through the persecution and vicissitudes of false teaching and outrageous hypocrisy the church still abides. But it is passing through a great crisis. When one reflects upon what has happened in Russia and Germany the outlook is discouraging. The cynical attitude and heart-breaking indifference of many people in so-called Christian nations should be alarming. Empty church pews and the discontinuance of Sunday evening services reveal a decline of personal interest in preaching the Gospel. The attitude of many writers, as revealed through the daily paper, current magazines and books, suggests hostility to the ministers and churches of this generation.

These references are not made in a spirit of permission. This writer has an abiding faith in Christianity. The Church is not dying a miserable death. It is being planted in the fertile fields that may burst forth in some great-time with a new life and a more transcendent glory. In the meantime, it is the privilege of every church member to seek a closer walk with God in order to keep step with the onward march of the followers of Jesus Christ. The Church should have the personal support of every member. This support should include attendance upon the regular services of the Church, and financial contributions to current expenses and every benevolent enterprise represented in the Church budget. The Sabbath Day should be sacred to every church member. All unnecessary work should cease with the dawn of Sunday. No stores should be open for business; all business offices should be idle. Places of amusement should close their doors. No games should be played. People should rest and worship God.

Christianity must claim the Sabbath, or Sunday, as the Lord's Day. Christians should set an example to others by properly observing this Holy Day. The emphasis should not be negative but positive, and the program should appeal to the unsaved because of its simplicity and power. Religious Security is assured for all who are faithful to the teachings of the Bible and loyal to the Lord Jesus Christ.

ELON CONTINUES TO GROW.

The steady growth of Elon is encouraging to all who are interested in Christian higher education and the improvement of the general welfare of the denomination in the Southeast. With every semester there is an expanded curriculum for the artistic and intellectual development of the students. The fine equipment of Elon is an inspiring incentive to every faculty member to do his best in dealing with students.

The combined efforts of the faculty and students, coupled with the untiring services of Mr. George D. Colclough, Field Secretary for the college, have resulted in the largest enrollment ever recorded at Elon. To date we have in excess of five hundred enrolled in the regular school. Including the Extension Class for public school teachers conducted in Burlington by Mr. George Beecher of the college faculty, we have an enrollment of approximately five hundred and seventy-five. This gives us an excellent student body. We have now reached the limit of enrollment for boys. There is room for additional girls, and we would like very much to increase this enrollment at Elon. Every available space for boys, however, is taken. If we are ever to have a larger enrollment of young men at Elon, we must provide additional rooming space or increase the number of day students. Shall we continue to grow, or shall we call a halt?

If some of our friends would give us a gymnasium, the present gym located on the first floor of the Alumni Building could be converted into rooms which would provide for from twenty-five to thirty additional students. This would be of great help to us. A few thousand dollars would provide a temporary gym if we could not now get sufficient funds for a permanent one. The way is open and the time is opportune for someone who wants to do something worthwhile for the college that will live and cause him to live on indefinitely.

There is danger in rapid growth. I do not feel, however, that Elon's growth in the past few years has been of that character. True, over a term of five years the student body has considerably more than doubled itself, but the growth has been somewhat gradual from year to year. With every new school year, we have been able since 1932 to surpass the records of the previous year. This cannot be the case, however, in 1939-40 unless additional accommodations are provided. It is dangerous to halt the upward swing of any organization. The church, alumni, and friends of Elon should consider seriously possible consequences in the event we do not provide for the continued growth and development of the institution. Of course, there are things to be considered other than enrollment and curriculum. Real work in a college must be done with a breadth of vision, a thoroughness of instruction, a sincerity of spirit, and a wholesomeness of purpose. We must never forget the real purposes of a Christian College. It came into being for mental training and intellectual development, but its highest mission is to administer to the moral and religious life of its students. Young people are encouraged in these more vital aspects of college training far more than the average individual off the campus imagines. Today young people are not nearly so much interested in the critical aspects of religion as they are in the practical appeal of the principles of Christianity to their own lives. Theological questions hold but little interest, but questions that have to do with Christian living and spiritual enrichment are of great concern. The atmosphere of the Christian College must be practical instead of critical, helpful instead of harmful. Young people who want to know for what they were meant in life are looking for and need encouragement in those things that make life worthwhile.

As Elon College grows, may interest in the college increase in the minds of all whom we serve or who need to be served by her.

HAS THE FIRE GROWN COLD?

A few days ago I stopped in at a blacksmith shop. It was rather early and no one was in the shop. There on a large block of wood was the anvil with a hammer lying across its face. Near the anvil was the forge with its bellows; but the ashes in its "hopper" were cold. There on a nail in the wall hung the smith's apron. All was still. All was cold. Fire out. Nothing done today.

You have heard it said, and so have I, that the "Love of God" has grown cold in the hearts of men; that no one really cares what happens to his neighbor; that we are sure now that we are not "our brother's keeper." Let every man look out for himself. And yet —

The other day I heard of a lady who was talking with a minister who was on his vacation in the country. What the minister had told her had stirred her heart deeply, but what interested her most of all was the worn, tired look in the face of the minister.

"Why," she said earnestly, "he looked as if he were giving his very life for the people of his parish."

Looking at this same man, or any other doing a similar work, it may be that you and I would not have noticed that worn, sad look. It might have seemed to us that the fire in his heart was cold, the ashes on the forge dead, the tools of his trade lying useless. And it might be that we would have passed him by as we would any other stranger. But all the while his heart was fairly burning out for the poor and the sick and the sinful in his parish.

That day in the blacksmith shop I waited until the man who wore the apron came. His face was cheery. It seemed not to worry him that the ashes on the top of his forge lay there still and cold. He knew what was in the heart of the forge. With a slender iron rod he thrust deep into the bed of ashes with one hand and with the other he gave the bellows a couple of turns. In a few moments, behold, a tiny puff of smoke came from the hidden recess of the ashes. The bellows was turned a few more times and then a tongue of fire shot up through the smoke. While still working at the bellows and stirring the coal, the smith whistled a familiar hymn tune. Soon he was ready for work. The fire was there. He did not see it, but he, who knew the heart of the forge better than I, knew that the fire was alive and he was not afraid that it would fail him.

Now, I am persuaded that if you and I knew what is in the hearts of men, we would see that the world's love for God is not dead. At times it does flare up and it is then that we take courage. I know of two men who, one cold night, went far down a lonely road that they might find a certain man who had strayed off in that direction. They found him. They took him to their room and spent the remainder of the night praying for and with him. Did they win? Do you think God would let such work go unrewarded?

But let it be remembered that those men had prayer before. They were often on their knees when others did not know it. All the time they were burning themselves out for God and no one knew it but God. But He knew it; and He has not lost faith in humanity. So why should you and I?

This one thing is sure. When we doubt that prayer and hope and the love of God still live in the hearts of our fellowmen, we need to look well to it and see whether these graces be not lying cold on the forge of our own hearts; and if we find they are, there is nothing better that we can do than to stir them until they flame up again and until we, too, are burning out for God and the world.

WHY NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS?

Successful issue of the drive to secure new subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN will produce results far-reaching and beneficial. Of first importance, the paper will be given financial aid that will assure its continuance. The institutions and enterprises of the Church will be assured of the continuance of a medium of contact with our people. Without this the college and other institutions would be crippled; in fact, it is doubtful if they could continue without this medium.

The pastor will be greatly aided in making his work more effective. Then the individual reader will benefit. If one cannot be well informed and so a more loyal citizen of his country without reading the secular paper, how much less can one be informed concerning the kingdom interests without reading his church paper. As information begets interest, and interest action, if the church is to move forward as it should, it is imperative that our people take and read THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

The pastors of the Conference are urged to join hand and heart with the interested laymen to help make this drive succeed in a big way.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

THE CHRISTMAS OFFERING.

As chairman of the Committee for Superannuation of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, I wrote to the ministers of the conference calling attention to the special Christmas offering. As reported to me six ministers and sixteen churches took the offering which amounted to a total of $114.02. This is an average of $7.12 per church. I wish to thank these ministers and churches for complying with the request of conference and say that several churches reported that they had provided other plans to raise this fund in full which is also in keeping the request of conference.

I wish to call special attention of both ministers and churches to the request that at each communion service an offering be taken for superannuation, unless the apportionment has been otherwise provided for.

C. E. NEWMAN,
Chairman.

We surely do not want THE CHRISTIAN SUN to stop. We thoroughly enjoy reading it, and we do not want to miss a single copy.

THE AWAKENING.

(A CORRESPONDENCE.)

Florida Sanitarium,
Orlando Florida.

If one looks long today at the folly, stupidity and sins of our times one will despair. It depends upon which sin and folly that one looks at most as to which for him is the most outstanding. Communism, Fascism, Paganism, War, Interference, Sexual Immorality—which will engulf and sink us first? The Seventh Day Adventists who own and operate this Sanitarium, and a string of them around the world, declare that our Good Christ is coming back to earth very soon now, will have to do so to save even a remnant of the human race, or this sinful race will wreck itself. We have gone nearly to the end of our wits in contriving weapons of war and crimes and follies of government, they tell us, and unless the Messiah does come soon our crimes, folly and madness will wreck civilization and the race. So they are serving with all diligence and zeal to help relieve and cure the physical and spiritual ailments of man so that they may be found ready, and of the remnant saved, when He comes. One may disagree, as one will, with the theology, and yet applaud their deeds, zeal and faithfulness in well-doing. They do not build Sanatoriums such as individuals, counties or states build, but Sanatoriums, and there is a vast difference. (Consult your Webster's dictionary.)

Well, the awakening will come. How, when, and by whom, who can tell? Again and again through history it has come. The tide was running at low ebb with the Hebrews, bond-servants, all in Egypt when Moses, the great awakener and deliverer came on the scene. It was a trying, a wilderness struggle with a weak and rebellious race, with which the world's greatest law-giver had to deal. And then in the time of Ahab and Jezebel and the prophets of Baal, a time of the falling away sure enough. Then Elijah, the prophet of God, the man who matched fire with fire and won out—a whole nation in apostasy. No wonder he went up in a chariot of fire, drawn by horses of fire. He had set his day and generation on fire with zeal for God.

And then centuries later when, God's fire seemed to have burned out in neglected altars, came that Voice in the Wilderness: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord. Make His path straight. Repent, repent for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand. Then the King came unto His own—and His own received Him not. Morality, spirituality, even among the elect, was running low in that. Centuries elapse and the Church itself becomes corrupt. The high and the low walk not according to the law and love of God, but according to their own lusts, passions and desires. Then Luther, with his Ninety Theses and his voice declaring: "By grace have ye been saved through faith; and that not of ourselves, it is the gift of God"

Then came John Wesley, that man who experiencing "a strange warning of his heart," went forth to preach the gospel of "free grace and never dying love" to all who would believe; that man who was denied the privilege of preaching in his own church and the churches throughout England because he preached that the poor as well as the rich, the low as well as the high could be saved by accepting Jesus the Christ as Saviour and Redeemer. "Christianity" Wesley saw and began to declare "was not what he did for God, but what God did in him." In this discovery, as a noted historian has well said, was released the energy which was to transform England, America and the English speaking world and produce its repercussions in the uttermost parts of the earth. But who shall awaken us now from an easy complacency or an indifferent paganism? Again the world is in jeopardy. Present world tendencies cannot go on without a clash or a catastrophe that will either change or destroy our present civilization. We do not have to look to Communism, Fascism, or Nazism of other nations to discover the tendency. Who will discover for us and awaken us with the stentorian voice of one crying in the wilderness: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make His paths straight."

Last year donors to benevolence and philanthropy were several million dollars, the Associated Press tells us, in advance of what they were in 1936, but "there was a precipitous drop in gifts and bequests to religion." It is the tendency of the times: A complacent, easy going benevolent spirit of "what I have done for God," but not what God has done in me and with me in His plan and program of saving this world from sin and wreck and ruins. The wakening must come. Present tendencies cannot continue. There are earnest churchmen, able ministers, devout laymen, who are anxious and are seeking. A way, the way will be found, but whose will be the voice, whose the message of fire and soul and zeal to snatch us and our threatened civilization "as brands from the burning?" Will it be another Wesley, Luther, Calhoun, John the Baptist, Elijah, Moses, or must the Lord Himself come again to establish His Kingdom on the earth and to reign, as some day He will, King of kings, and Lord of lords?"

HILLY MYSTERIES.

It puzzles some people because our churches of these rugged peaks of old Virginia can't get on their feet and find more money to pay their dues, and so on. My dear friends, if you will look with me into the past and glimpse the background or what our hills have been, you will begin to understand where we stand now and why. It is true that you may be more mystified than ever when you hear some of our history, but it is well, at least, clear the point that now puzzles you.

This generation now living here has lived through a period of time in which the customs and methods of living were somewhat different from what you of the outside are used to. My father relates many stories of mountain life that will reveal to you facts and truths of our past. One story interests me a lot, and to give you a glimpse of days gone by I'll pass it on.

Some forty years ago a man came into these hills who called himself a doctor. Whether or not he was a real doctor I do not know. I rather think he was a man with a past. But he roamed these hills and never seemed to care where he went or which way and never told where he came from. The hilly people just could not live with such mystery. One must, even now, tell his business and where he is from if he wants to stay healthy and stay long among these hills. This old doctor made one call too many, when one day he took the winding trail which led into a dark, deep valley to see someone who had sent for him. My father learned to like the doctor and warned him not to go into the dark places. He smiled and went on, but he never came out of that valley again. In those days the law didn't bother much with that dark valley that widens out to the east below the Elk Spur church. So my father and a neighbor man went in the search for a new-made grave. They had a report that a grave was made in the valley below and that it was filled with old chimney rocks and an old mule had been killed and placed on the grave to cover up the sign.

The day was dark and foggy as they made their way into the valley of death, and they hoped they would not be seen going in. They found the grave by a mountain stream in a low place, deep in the black forest. The dead mule was there, and when they dug down, the chimney rocks were there, also. The darkness began to make itself felt as they took out one rock after another and began to feel sure that the stranger who called himself a doctor was sleeping cold and still in this lonely grave. The rhododendrons and mountain laurels shut out all the light of day and fog hung above the tree tops. The two men realized that they had no protection against the eyes that might be watching them out of the darkness of that dreary valley; and they realized that whoever put one man in a grave like that would not care for adding a couple more to the lot. Twigs began to break down in the darkness by the stream, and these men either heard, or imagined they heard footsteps among the dry leaves, so they did the only thing that men have been ever known to do when they have no gun in the hills, took up their pick and shovel and silently made their way up the valley listening every step for the crack of a mountain rifle, and feeling thankful, indeed, when no rifle cracked. It was sometime before they got an officer to go into the valley and when they did the grave had been changed and was not like they had left it, and nothing was found except the place in the ground. But my father will never be satisfied about the mysterious disappearance of the doctor and that lonely grave he found.

This is a glimpse of our hills before the church came. Those who killed the doctor must have thought he had money and that, added to the mystery of the man, was reason enough here for a man being killed. This is only one of the mystery murder cases of our hills.

I cannot expect our hills to change completely in a few years and shoulder the responsibility like older churches. People here have done well since the church came, if we stop to consider. There may not be any gold discovered here for years to come, but our hills are changing and I see a new day for these laurel-clad peaks of old Virginia.

Lend your prayers for the next workers who take this field.

SEND REPORTS.

The first quarter of our missionary societies is past and news items of the work accomplished should be coming in. It will stimulate your society to read of its doings in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and the next quarter will produce better results. Try it. Then it will be helpful to other societies in many ways, too. Your plan tried and proven successful may help some one who is wracking her brain for something new to try. Yes, and it may create a friendly rivalry which will spur the members to more interest efficiency.

Reports of an organization's meetings and work and plans, through the papers, always help, and may I urge all societies to elect a reporter whose business it is to write up the activities of the group and send it to your editor at the end of each quarter. Do this as a service to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, a request from your convention and conference officers and a stimulus to your society and not only as a point to get on the standard of excellence.

Wishing all of you the best in your work, I will be looking for many reports soon to swell our page which has been so graciously allowed to us in our beloved CHRISTIAN SUN.

we may not go in subjecting others to humiliation. It is much more Christian to reach out a helping hand than it is to cause one to stumble. This writer is a firm believer that the southern white is, as a rule, a real friend to the southern Negro. There are many injustices yet to be overcome, but there are also many indications that Christians are striving to overcome those difficulties and to build friendly relations between all races.

The recent lengthy and costly discussions in Washington concerning a federal law against lynching has done nothing to build up the friendship between the races in the south. It has rather accentuated the difficulties and increased bitterness. The way to friendship is not by national legislation but through personal friendships and proper adjustments of human relations so that everyone may have his just desert. Law should direct in the affairs of men but no law can make one race appreciate another.

NOW IS THE TIME TO WORK.

For a long time we have talked about getting more subscribers for this paper. We have said that we need the paper, that we must have it. It is our one remaining publication of the old Christian Church, and is blessed by the union with Congregationalists. It is our tie that binds our southern churches together.

The time for talk is over. This is the time to get the new subscriptions. Every pastor in the Southern Convention has been asked to do his best during the first of February. Report will be made in the paper of what each minister sends in. It is a worthy undertaking for worthy men.

MAKING MY COUNTRY MORE CHRISTIAN.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR
FEBRUARY 20, 1938.

SCRIPTURE: Psalm 33:12.
Isaiah 11:1-5.

Daily Readings—

Monday—By Abolishing War—Isaiah 11:1-9.

Tuesday—Abolishing Corrupt Politics—Exodus 23:8; Prov. 17:23.

Wednesday—Subduing Crime—Isaiah 59:1-9.

Thursday—Putting Down Business Dishonesty—Prov. 21:6.

Friday—Honesty in Paying Debts—Ps. 37:21.

Saturday—Imitating Jesus—Ephesians 5:1, 2.

We very often hear a remark like this: "The Church should keep out of politics." Do these quotations prove differently.

I have lived a long time, and the longer I live the more convincing proofs I see of this truth, that God governs in the affairs of men, and if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without His notice, is it possible that an empire can rise without His aid?—(Benjamin Franklin.)

People educated in intellect and not educated in morals and religion will become a menace to our nation.—(Theodore Roosevelt.)

Our civilization cannot survive materially unless it be redeemed spiritually.—(Woodrow Wilson.)

As we strive to make America a more Christian nation, we discover that a certain procedure is essential. We must do something about the good and bad things which we see.

1. Develop our own lives as citizens. What kind of citizens does America most need? Describe "right kind of citizens."

2. Face the economic order. What do we know about Capitalism, Fascism, Communism, Socialism, and Cooperatives? What are the good and bad points in each? Which more nearly incorporates the principles of Jesus?

3. Face the social wrongs apart from economics: Crime, poverty, political corruption, disease, etc. Are Christians outspoken against the sale of liquor? Does gambling flourish? Will the society speak frankly through the newspapers against political corruption?

In the December issue of Harper's a writer insists that most of the people in our churches do not try to follow Jesus. Is it true? What are some of the things we need to do to make ourselves Christian?

ALABAMA ORGANIZES CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR UNION.

The Christian Endeavor societies of Roanoke (Alabama) First Church, Lowell Christian Church and Antioch Christian Church have organized a District Christian Endeavor Union. The first meeting was held at Roanoke First Church, with Antioch society presenting the program which was very much enjoyed and highly appreciated. The second meeting was held with Lowell Church, with Roanoke society presenting the program. This was a very impressive service and one of much interest to our whole church. The pageant given by Mrs. Harper and Mrs. Gilbert impressed the idea of Christian literature.

The following officers were elected: Adult advisor, G. D. Hunt; President, Howard Johnson of the Lowell Society; Vice-President, Joe Thomas Stevens of the Roanoke Society; Secretary-Treasurer, Miss Lemerl Brand of the Antioch Society. It is the purpose of the Union to meet every fifth Sunday night, and the next meeting will be at Antioch Church the fifth Sunday night in May.

Our purpose is to enlist every society and every church in the territory surrounding Roanoke in this union. Our young people need to be more closely united. They need to be more thoroughly organized. They need to undertake greater things for the Church and for God. By a combination of effort and a closer fellowship with each other greater things will be accomplished for the whole church this year. I trust all the churches which have not already done so will join in and give us hearty cooperation.

This was a very fine meeting and quite well attended, with excellent music and a prayerful spirit. At the close this writer made a few remarks regarding THE CHRISTIAN SUN which, I hope, will encourage the people to subscribe for our Church paper.

God bless THE CHRISTIAN SUN for unto it we owe our success and intelligence for all our Church enterprises.

A PASTOR TALKS OF YOUNG PEOPLE.

There are several churches in Eastern North Carolina that have active young peoples' classes, Christian Endeavor societies, Pilgrim Fellowship societies, or young peoples' missionary societies. Many of these organizations are doing fine work. They assist the pastor in his duties. They solicit new church members. They are constantly doing something for the good of the local church, the community and the Kingdom of God.

Every pastor having such a young people's organization in his church may well be proud of it and he may rest assured that he will have real Christian men and women in his church tomorrow.

If a new religious world is ever to become a reality the organized youth in the Church today must assume that responsibility.

May our New Year's effort be to advance the cause of Christ in our local church and thus bring more young people into a living fellowship with Him.

MISS SEABURY TO SPEAK.

On Friday, February 25th, at 7:30 P. M., at the Suffolk Christian Church Miss Ruth Seabury, the Secretary of the Home Department of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, will speak to the Eastern Virginia Young People on "The Moslem World." Miss Seabury is a charming person and a most interesting speaker. She is vitally interested in the Moslem World and is well acquainted with its problems, and possibilities.

Young People of Eastern Virginia, begin now to plan to hear Miss Seabury. You will thrill to her presentation of the Moslems, their culture, their religion, and their needs.

CONSERVING THE SABBATH FOR MAN.

LESSON VII—FEBRUARY 13, 1938.

GOLDEN TEXT: And He said unto them, the Sabbath was made for man.—Mark 2:27.

LESSON: Mark 2:23; Mark 3:6.

Straining at Gnats and Swallowing Camels.

Folks can sometimes be so petty, even so-called religious folks! Here were the Pharisees criticising the disciples because as they walked along the paths through the wheat fields they plucked a few heads of grain and rubbed them out between their hands, a perfectly natural and perfectly harmless thing to do. But these sticklers for the letter of the law magnified what the disciples did into a flagrant infringement of the law which forbade reaping or thrashing on the Sabbath Day. They made a mountain out of a mole-hill. They had never learned as many people today have never learned that the letter killeth but the spirit maketh alive. They did not know that a right spirit was more important than rigid observance of every jot and tittle of the law. How easy it is to see the mote in another's eye but how difficult to see the beam in our own eye! How prone we are to forget that God desireth mercy and not formal sacrifice. One has to look at things in the light of principles.

Answering a Question with a Question.

The Pharisees asked Jesus why His disciples did that which was not lawful on the Sabbath Day. He asked them if they had ever read—and out of their sacred book, too—what David did on one occasion. When he and his men became hungry they ate the showbread, the bread that was placed in the holy place of the tabernacle and which was reserved for the priests only. Strictly speaking, it was unlawful to do this. But here was the record of how their great king had violated the ceremonial law, and with impunity, indeed with the consent of the priests. It sometimes helps to know history. One ought to be sure of the facts when he starts an argument. One ought to be able to see principles underlying details.

The Sabbath for Man—An Abiding Principle.

“And He said unto them, The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath.” Here is a revolutionary saying. The Sabbath was a divine institution, legislation concerning it was included in the original commandments given to Moses, the accredited spokesman for God and their acknowledged law-giver. But Jesus said that there was something above and beyond the ceremonial law; there was the common man. Men were more important than institutions, even the institution of the Sabbath Day. Indeed, the Sabbath had been ordained for the sake of man. It was a means to an end, man was an end in himself. Thus Jesus announced once and for all the guiding principle in regard to the Sabbath Day. It is to be subservient to man in that it is to minister to the whole man. It is not a stern duty imposed upon man by an arbitrary law, but a gracious privilege extended to man by a Fatherly love. Any institution is to be judged by its contribution to man.

The Lord of the Sabbath Day.

“So that the Son of Man is lord even of the Sabbath Day.” As the Representative Man, Jesus is lord of the Sabbath Day, not in the sense that He could disregard the Sabbath Day, but in the sense that His will and His spirit were to be the determining factors in its use and observance. His words are an indication both of His Lordship and of the high uses of the Sabbath Day. The Sabbath Day is to be used in ways that will advance as well as acknowledge His lordship.

Worship on the Sabbath Day.

“And He entered again into the synagogue.” In another place Luke says: “and as his custom was He entered into the synagogue on the Sabbath Day.” Jesus went to the place of worship and instruction on the Sabbath. After making all allowance for any other reasons why He may have gone, here still remains the fact that He went to worship God in common with those who worshipped God. He knew full well the value of social worship. If Jesus were here in the flesh today He would go to church on Sunday. No amount of private devotions, or radio services can take the place of the public worship of God. One forgets all too easily that one is to be a witness for Christ. And it is not very good witnessing when one never enters the church and thus never gives this public testimony that one is a confessed follower of Him who is the Head of the Church. Our modern life demands not less of church-going, but more. Indeed the demands of modern life make all the more desirable and urgent the habit of church-going.

Negative or Positive Religion?

“Is it lawful to do good on the Sabbath Day, or to do harm? to save life, or to kill?” What is the ultimate purpose of the Sabbath Day, if not to be used as a means of doing good, and of giving life? Not to do good in Jesus' way of thinking was to do harm. Those people who are always talking about what they do not do on Sunday do not necessarily keep the Sabbath Day holy. Sabbath observance finds its highest expression in positive, constructive ministries, not necessarily in abstentions. To be sure one cannot do as he pleases on the Sabbath and keep it holy. But we need more emphasis on doing something rather than on doing nothing.

A Man with a Withered Hand and Some Men with With- ered Souls.

“There was a man there who had his hand withered and they watched him, whether he would heal on the Sabbath Day, that they might accuse him.” Here was a man with a withered hand, perhaps on that account unable to work and make a livelihood for himself and his family. And here was a group of pious sour-pusses concerned only in finding some basis of charge against the One who could restore the man to health and useful activity again. Small wonder that Jesus looked around with anger—here were men with souls so withered that they were well-nigh dead. But there are other suggestive words in the section. Mark says Jesus “was grieved at the hardening of their hearts.” There is such a thing as righteous indignation. God does have holy anger. But his heart is grieved at our hardness of hearts, even in his holy anger.

Words with Power.

“Stretch forth thy hand. And he stretched it forth; and his hand was restored.” His word was with power. When we obey the divine word the power is released. Through repentance and faith our crippled powers can be made useful again by the Master.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

There will be a meeting of the Executive Committee and Departmental Superintendents of the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention at the Suffolk Christian Church, Friday, February 11th, at 7:30 P. M., for questions, discussion, curriculum, plans and recommendations. Each of these officers are urged to be present. Visitors are welcome.

MONDAY.

O LORD, AMEND US!

"He that is unjust in the least, is unjust also in much."—Luke 16:10.

To be pious on Sunday and impious during the week has never succeeded. We are always either "pig or puppy." We cannot be both at the same time, therefore, religiously, we are what we are all the time and no amount of prayer at any one particular time merely to appear religious, will change us. This is what Jesus is saying in our text.

We may thank God, however, that in the same breath, Christ affirmed that this law is as true in faithfulness and loyalty as it is in unfaithfulness and disloyalty. What a simple gospel.

Prayer—Our Father, in the clear white light of Thy holiness, we see our hypocrisy and meanness and we see how self-seeking we are and how far our selfishness leads us astray. O Lord, forgive us and amend us. Amen.

TUESDAY.

IN LEAGUE WITH LIFE.

"Thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field."—Job. 5:23.

It is wonderful to realize the unity of all things and that this unity is for the good of ourselves. As we travel the roads and by-ways, climb the hills and the mountains and gaze upon the beauty and glory of the landscape and stand in awe of the grandeur of the mighty Rockies, stretched out for hundreds of miles, and realize that these are ours and that we are a part of the whole, we are caused to feel that the one who said, "In Tune with the Infinite," felt man's league with life.

The New Testament expressed this truth in that precious passage, "all things work together for good to them that love God." Neither the universe nor mortals are things of chance but altogether make the Divine plan and operate by the same Divine will.

Prayer—Our Father, we and this world are Thine. Help us to yield ourselves to Thy will and help us to know our fellowship that Thou hast planned that we should have with all Thy life. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"WELL WITH MY SOUL."

"I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me."—Phil. 4:13.

Paul was the proud possessor of an understanding of God and of His relation to the universe and he knew that Christ imparted power to do what seemed to be the impossible things. Whether he could always see this with his undertaking or not, he believed, he trusted in it, and however unfavorable the circumstances, he still held to this. The result is the life of St. Paul which, from the time of his conversion till his tragic end, was a chain of evidences that Christ would do all things through him.

Prayer—Our Father, we turn to Thee through Jesus, our Saviour, for divine enabling through all the tasks and possibilities that Thou hast given us. Amen.

THURSDAY.

WHY WORRY?

"Hope (trust) thou in God."—Ps. 42:11.

Due to some dire personal problems, we had the experience not long ago to spend the whole night in sleeplessness and torture. Our mood was desperate.

Then suddenly, as by inspiration, there came the thought, "God is able to give you the thought that will settle this. Trust Him." We did not ask God for a settlement. We merely asked Him to give us the thought and direct our thinking so that the problem would be settled in the right way.

Immediately we had ceased our restlessness and tossing and had fallen asleep.

There is no medicine nor physician that compares with the assurances of God's will. It may be that we are not always able to do this but instances are numerous enough to make us ashamed of ourselves that we do not trust Him more.

Prayer—Our Father, in every hour of stress and trial, may we turn to Thee without fail. Amen.

FRIDAY.

ARMIES WITHOUT BANNERS.

"He that is not against us is on our part."—Mark 9:40.

Dr. Ellis uses the above subject as a heading to enumerate the allies and agencies of God at work among us. In his comment he says that if we will count the humble and wholesome things, things of life that cooperate with righteousness, tides that tend to justice and truth, the art of healing and the ripening wisdom of man, we will be forced to conclude that these things are the servants of God and they are myriads more than we ordinarily think.

A local newspaper carried a long article the other day discussing flagrant motor driving, the carelessness and viciousness there is on the highways. The latter half of this article however, was devoted to an account of instances of good driving and a discussion of the genuineness of purpose and carefulness of thousands of people who are never involved. There are so many of these that the few who are at fault should be ashamed of themselves.

This same sort of thing is expressed in our recent Thanksgiving. It is pointed out that Thanksgiving has become a holiday only, a day of turkey and cranberry sauce, of ball games and all sorts of sports, but it is also pointed out that this kind of celebra-

TODAY'S FAMILY.

By REV. HERBERT G. COUNCIL, JR.,
Yale Divinity School.

The day in which we are living is a period of great transition. I suppose that thought has been given expression by almost every generation of people who have lived on the face of the earth. I am reminded just now of a statement made by one of my professors back at college. He said, "The only thing that doesn't change in this world is change." That is all true enough, but nevertheless, it is a fact that this generation has witnessed more changes in a shorter period of time than has any previous generation. Look at the many modern inventions, the radio, the wireless, the automobile, the airplane, and numerous scientific discoveries. Under the pressure of all the newness in the world, we are undergoing a tremendous transition in human experience and human knowledge.

I was reading just the other day an article by Professor MacIntosh, published in the book, Humanism Another Battle Line, in which he says, "The way to meet the situation created by the rising tide of the new humanism is the way of sympathetic understanding, not only of the difficulties of religious thought in a day of transition from a prescientific world view to one which makes room for the results of scientific investigation, but also it must include sympathetic understanding of positive experimental religion of what its basis is and what its discoveries are. "Yes, a day of transition from a prescientific world view to one which makes room for the results of scientific investigation." That's the kind of a world in which we are living today.

I have recently finished a course under Professor Latourette The Work of the Church Abroad, in which we discussed the work which missionaries are doing all over the world at the present time. Now, I am sure all of you are familiar with the situation in which missions are finding themselves today. Titles of recent books in the field tell the story. Some good examples are: Rethinking Missions; A Theology for Christian Missions; and Are Foreign Missions Done-For. Professor Latourette's view with regard to the present conditions of the country and its people is very interesting. Seeing them from the perspective of a learned historical background, he finds that the Old Day is rapidly fading out of the picture. In its place is a New Day slowly emerging with it a new world culture which is mechanical throughout. Seeking to find a reason for this great change, he finds that "Man's increased mastery of his physical environment made possible by his growing knowledge of it through the scientific approach has ushered in the New Day." One of Professor Latourette's very convincing reasons for the continuation of missions is his belief in the fact that they will give this new mechanized World Culture a spiritual and moral basis. Here, again, we see the effects of change, and of transition from a prescientific age to an age of scientific and mechanized life.

Doubtless, I could go on citing one example after another in every field of human endeavor. But I think these two illustrations, which came under my observation recently, are sufficient to point out the kind of a day in which we live.

Any changes which take place in the realm of human thought and activity must surely affect the realm of human living. There is no escape from it. So we find the home, the heart of the nation, in the midst of transition the consequences of which are not yet realized.

One writer says, "The old family trades in which the home included the workshop are disappearing. One by one, the household industries are passing from the home to the factory: clothes, baking, tanning, shoemaking, meat-dressing, illumination and even laundry. When woman's place was in the home this was a very happy home indeed; but one by one her tasks have been taken out of the family circle to gain a livelihood. At the same time the family is less self-sufficient, more dependent on outside economic forces, and thus at the mercy of more external conditions. The new woman has helped to fashion a new sex-morality, and the old foundations of family life seem to be dissolved in a confusing bewilderment which besets the young people of today. Amusements have passed largely out of the home group into the hands of commercial agencies, and leisure hours finds the family scattered more often than united."

spirit is slowly fading out of the picture. Rural people are moving into the cities where they find life much more interesting under the bright lights. Because of man's increased knowledge of diseases and medicines, the death rate is declining. Children are no longer an asset but a liability for the average husband and wife who have made their home in the city. Economic conditions in many homes are so bad that the wife has to earn money along with the husband in order to support the family. Along with all these changes a new attitude toward sex has come into existence, and with it the idea of birth control.

Recent case studies on the family have revealed some very interesting facts. According to them successful family life is exceedingly rare at the present time. The latest divorce figures point out the fact that about one in every six marriages ends in overt disruption. But divorce, by no means, tells the whole story. Many persons live together a life-time, yet are most unhappy in their marriage. One report reveals the fact that fifty per cent of the better educated people in urban communities were presumably happy in their marriages. One thousand college women were asked the question, "Is your married life a happy one?" To which eighty-seven per cent answered "Yes" and twelve per cent "No." Another study concludes that only thirteen per cent of the married couples of the country are totally happy.

A real estate agent was recently trying to sell a home to a young lady. After the agent had explained all the values of having a home, the young lady replied: "I don't need a home. I was born in a hospital, educated in a college, courted in an automobile, married in a church, live out of a delicatessen store and paper bag. I spend my mornings on a golf course, my afternoons at a bridge table, my evenings at the movies, and when I die I'll be buried from the undertakers. All I need is a garage."

That portrays adequately the modern temper of the time. And when we consider that the moral life of America depends on the home, our problem becomes all the more serious. There seems to be a new family emerging which is mechanistic throughout, and existing more for convenience than anything else. The day of speed, efficiency, mechanized industry, and capitalism, has left a very small place for the moral and spiritual values of life. So much stress has been laid on the tangible things that we have lost sight of the intangibles.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

At this writing the day is clear and the sun is shining. It is warm enough for the children to get out on the lawn and play. I notice the swings are occupied and busy most of the time.

Saturdays are generally cold and rainy and too chilly to work on the outside. I sometimes tease the boys and tell them that I believe they pray all week for it to rain on Saturday.

Anyway this Saturday, February 5th is a beautiful day and the little folks are having a good time.

The birds have been visiting the shrubbery on the outside of my office window and eating the berries that are still on the bushes.

Then, too, the little flowery bushes are beginning to show signs of life and the early blooms will soon be in full bloom. God has made many things and placed them here for man's enjoyment and happiness and among them is the beautiful flowers, the blooming shrubbery that blooms so beautiful in the spring season.

The mocking birds, and many other birds to come, nest and live with us during the spring season.

God is good to mankind but how prone we are to be unappreciative and forgetful of His many blessings.

The children at the orphanage are in good health except we have a few cases of whooping cough. We cared for 102 children in 1937. I notice our annual report shows we had seventy children who had been in the orphanage more than a year gained in weight. Only two showed a loss in weight. The boys showed an average gain of 9.77 lbs. The girls showed a gain of 7.67 lbs. The average gain was 8.72 lbs.

THE FINISHED PRODUCT.

The bites by poisonous snakes will never be reduced by putting numbers on rattlesnakes and turning them loose promiscuously over the State. The way to reduce snake bites is to kill the snakes.

You will not reduce liquor drinking by making it easier and legal for every one to procure liquor whenever and wherever he feels the urge to take a drink.

I am in favor of any program, commodity, or article which will make it easier for girls and boys to make women and men of the right kind, and I am against everything, regardless of expediency or its popular appeal, which will make it harder for the youth of our State to go in the right direction and to develop into useful, upright, sober, public-spirited, patriotic citizens. I cannot understand the logic, if it be logic, that you will promote temperance by making liquor more accessible.

I am for any product or institution whose finished product is better than the raw product. You may ask me: "Are you for sawmills?" My answer is, "Yes;" because the raw product is the tree standing in the forest and the finished product is the beautiful home sheltering the father, mother, and the children. You may ask me: "Are you for legalized liquor?" I will say, "No;" because the raw product is an innocent son or daughter, but the finished product of liquor is the red-nosed toper, often-times lying in the gutter, ragged and hungry.—M. D. Collins, State Supt. of Schools of Georgia, in Christian Index.

tion is superficial; that there is an undertow of thankfulness in the hearts of the people which we are inclined to overlook.

Prayer—Our Father, Thou art so great and we are so small. Open

SATURDAY.

PERSIA'S SEEKERS.

"Wise-men from the East came to Jerusalem, saying where is He that is born King of the Jews?—Matt. 2:1-12.

Too few of us give thought to Persia, the nation that has outlived all other great nations, because its rulers long ago dealt kindly with God's people. And it was from Persia that the Wise Men came, seeking the King. These seekers made a long, hard and dangerous journey across the great desert; the same road that Abraham had taken to Canaan; and the one that the Hebrew exiles had marked by blood and tears. Christmastide honors the Wise Men, because they put into effect their spiritual concern.

Only that quest is real which sets one to journeying. The practical message of the Magi is "Follow your gleam!" It may lead to the Christ Himself.

Prayer—"We would see Jesus amidst this celebration of His birth. Like the Wise Men of old, we would seek Him at all costs; for He is King and Redeemer. Amen.

SUNDAY.

A HILLSIDE MEMORY.

"And there were Shepherds . . . abiding in the fields, and keeping watch by night over their flock.—Luke 2:8-12.

Whenever I am in Jerusalem I try to go at least once to the Field of the Shepherds, lying just east of Bethlehem. Professional piety has not overlaid this scene with the gaudy trumpery which marks the cave of the Nativity, and other religious shrines. Here, in the open air, with the natural scene unchanged by the centuries, one may muse upon the marvel which befell, when the heavens were rent by the hosts of glory, and simple out-of-doors men first heard the world's Good News.

That night, on the Field of the Shepherds, began the identity of the Carpenter-Messiah with the plain people; an identity which continued throughout His ministry, and abides to this day.

Prayer—We lift up the common man's prayer of gratitude for the birth of his best Friend, at Christmas. He came unto His own; may we never go back on Him. Amen.

Surviving are his wife and the following children: Mrs. Etta Ward, Mrs. Alberta Lynch, Mrs. Erma Pickett, Miss Minnie Truitt, Floyd and Walter; and six grandchildren.

He was a faithful member of Shallow Ford Christian Church. He was a charter member of the Elon Council of the Junior Order. He could be depended upon to do his full duty at all times.

May the Lord comfort all who sustain a loss.

HOUSE.

Whereas, it has pleased an all-wise and loving Heavenly Father to remove from our midst our beloved brother, senior deacon, and Sunday school teacher, Brother A. M. House, be it resolved:

1. That we, the undersigned committee, in behalf of the members of Pope's Chapel Christian Church, do express our sincere regrets at his passing, feeling keenly a personal and brotherly loss of one who has been so faithful and loyal to friends and church.

2. We ask that a copy of this resolution be placed on our church record, copies sent to "The Christian Sun" and to the "Franklin Times" for publication, and a copy sent to the family.

COLE.

We, the members of the First Congregational-Christian Church, of Newport News, Virginia, wish to pay tribute to the memory of Brother William Ruben Cole who passed away on January 9, 1938.

He was a faithful deacon and charter member of the church, a liberal supporter of all the interests of the Kingdom.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we pause to refresh our memories that death will come to all of us; that we emulate his noble life, and submit to the will of our Heavenly Father, who doeth all things well;

2. That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to his family and commend them to God whose grace is sufficient for them;

3. That a copy of these resolutions be placed in the permanent records of our church, a copy sent to the family, and to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Mrs. R. T. DUKE,
 Mrs. R. C. JARRETT,

WALKER.

Whereas, Almighty God, in His wise providence has called from our midst to the life beyond, Brother W. D. Walker, on January 4, 1938, who was a member of Shallow Ford Church and Superintendent of the Sunday school for a number of years and in whose going the church has lost a faithful and beloved member, be it resolved:

1. That we hold in loving remembrance his faithfulness as a friend to all. (He was a deacon of this church, loved and respected by all who knew him.)

2. That we extend our deepest sympathy to the bereaved family.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to "The Christian Sun," and a copy spread upon our records.

WILKINS.

James Robert Wilkins, son of James and Betty Wilkins, died at the South Boston Hospital on January 18, 1938, at the age of sixty-six. He is survived by his wife, mother, five sisters, three brothers, and a number of nieces and nephews.

Brother Wilkins began life with limited means but by industry, economy and good business foresight became independent. No man in his community had a finer name for high integrity than he. He was a friend to all. For about thirty-five years he was a member of Union Christian Church.

While he was a man of considerable means, he requested that his funeral be very plain with no flowers. His wishes were carried out at the funeral which was from the home on January 19, 1938, conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. E. R. Harris. Burial was in the town cemetery. Before his passing he gave testimony that he was ready to meet his Saviour.

C. E. NEWMAN.

DOVEL.

On January 12, 1938, Brother Peter S. Dovel of the Leakesville Christian Church, near Luray, Virginia, passed to his reward, at the age of 87 years. He left a widow and 7 children to mourn his going.

Brother Dovel had been a member of the Leakesville Church for 58 years being a charter member when the church was reorganized by Elder W. A. Dofflemyer in 1880. He served for a number of years as deacon of the church and was a trustee at the time of his death.

His many friends and relatives paid their last respects to the deceased at the church service conducted by the writer and Elder John Jenkins.

W. J. ANDES.

SUTTON.

On December 11, 1937, God, in His infinite wisdom saw fit to remove from our midst one of our oldest members, Mrs. Rachel Cornelia Cable Sutton. Sister Sutton is survived by two children, Mrs. Ingram Wheeley and Miss Mary L. Sutton, also one brother, Peter M. Cable. The deceased had been in declining health for the past two years.

1. We, the members of Shallow Ford Church, desire to express our appreciation of her life and our grief of the loss at her departure.

2. We extend our deepest sympathy to the bereaved family and commend them to God who is 'a very pleasant help in time of trouble.'

3. We wish a copy of these resolutions sent to the family, a copy to "The Christian Sun," and a copy spread upon our records.

MORRIS.

Mrs. Eliza Josephine Morris, a member of the Mt. Olivet (G) Church, near Standardville, Virginia, passed to her reward on January 16, 1938, at the age of 74 years. Mrs. Morris leaves two children.

She had been a member of the Mt. Olivet (G) Church for about 40 years and she was at nearly every preaching service which found her able to attend.

Funeral services were held at her church by the writer, and many friends and relatives gathered in her memory.

W. J. ANDES.

MORRIS.

Charlie E. Morris was born in Buckingham County, Virginia, on January 4, 1858, and died near Buffalo Junction, Virginia, December 4, 1937. He is survived by one daughter, two grandchildren, and one brother. His daughter is Mrs. Nannie R. Neese of Greensboro, N. C., and his brother, J. L. Morris, of New York. He first married a daughter of the late Sandy Yancey of Clarksville, Virginia. After the death of his first wife he married, in the year 1900, Miss Laura D. Yancey.

He first united with Pleasant Grove Church, News Ferry, Virginia, but later transferred his membership to Hebron Christian Church where he was a faithful member till death. His second wife died in April, 1930. After her death he sold his home and spent the remainder of his life in the home of his sister-in-law, Mrs. Graham Chandler, where he was taken care of by Mrs. Chaudler and her husband as kindly as if he had been their father. The funeral and burial were at Hebron Cemetery on December 15, 1937.

It can be said of him that he was faithful in all things. A servant of God has gone to his reward.

The Contest for Subscriptions Is On

The office at 514 S. Main Street, Norfolk, Virginia, is humming with activity, and smiles light up the faces of the workers as returns from the churches bring both new and renewal subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN on every mail. Most of the pastors in the Southern Convention are busy presenting the church paper to the church people, and the people are responding in a fine way. This week is the time that really makes the difference. The preliminary figures (below) as of Monday night show the Carolinians in the lead. They expect to stay that way and win the Elon College scholarship for one of their young people. But Virginians are busy, and determined. It looks like great fun lies ahead. At present Mr. T. J. Holland, of Ambrose, Georgia, is far in the lead as an individual with 22 new subscriptions to his credit, and three renewals for good measure (and his state is not even in the contest). All right, preachers, let's see what you can do! Your paper will gladly report your success.

In making reports, be sure to give the name of the church to which credit should be given. Don't make us guess. Write plainly, both name and address of subscriber, and send all reports to Norfolk. No name can be put on the list until the money arrives. We send receipts to all subscribers. Give us a big list for next week.

GRACE'S CHAPEL CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

On U. S. Highway No. 1, about six miles south of Sanford, N. C., is the beautiful new country church pictured above. In October, 1885, thirty charter members organized Grace's Chapel Christian Church, named in honor of the daughter of the pastor. Rev. J. A. Denton, the present pastor, is the fifteenth pastor of the congregation. At Thanksgiving, 1936, the church decided to rebuild. On May 23, 1937, they opened the new edifice, and on September 26, 1937, the new building, which cost $4,217.42, was dedicated to the service of the Lord, the entire amount of money having been paid.

This church is in a fine farming section and a community that seems to be interested in religion and church work. The building will seat 350 people, and approximately 500 were present for the dedication service. Among those sharing in the dedication service besides the pastor, Rev. J. A. Denton, were R. B. Coggins, J. L. Register, J. A. Maddox, Ira Bullard, Miss Rachel Fields, and Miss Polly Register of Asheboro, and Billy Baldwin of near Greensboro.

The church and community are to be congratulated on building such a lovely church and paying cash for it. Out of such a community should come Christian leaders.

PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES

Rev. and Mrs. W. D. Harward have moved from Wakefield to Dendron, Virginia. They express gratitude for the contribution of a year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN from an unnamed friend.

Another outstanding speaker was presented to the Elon College community church Sunday, when Dr. J. N. Rowland, editor of the Christian Advocate, of Virginia, filled the pulpit. Dr. Rowland is an outstanding man in the Methodist Church.

Rev. W. J. Andes says that since he reported the contributions on the memorial for his late father, Rev. A. W. Andes, the church at Concord has made a contribution of $5.85. Members of the Andes family are very grateful for the contributions of the churches.

Elon alumni will gather in the Society Hall Saturday, February 19th, for their mid-year meeting. Dr. J. E. Rawls, of Suffolk, Virginia, who is president, will have charge of the meeting. An interesting program has been planned, part of which will include a talk by Laurence Leonard, sports editor of the Greensboro Daily News.

Dr. S. E. Burton, secretary of the Central Council of Congregational and Christian Churches, says that "Wild horses stand in a circle with their heads together and the colts in the middle. They use their heels for defense against intruders, but" says Dr. Burton, "church people turn their heels against each other and kick one another."

The Elon College Alumni Club of Eastern Virginia will meet Friday night of this week for its annual banquet in the Elliott Hotel at Suffolk, Virginia. All former students of Elon are invited to share the good fellowship and hear Dr. Wm. T. Sanger, President of the Medical College of Virginia, and former President of Bridgewater College, speak.

Rev. and Mrs. D. W. Shepherd have sent out a news flash for the Barnesville Parish (Georgia) which carries a road map of the parish, giving the location of the churches and several interesting items of news regarding the work of the parish. This four-page news sheet promises to continue provided the churches like it. It is a fine way to build up solidarity among the five churches of this greater parish. The minister reports having attended 20 meetings during the month, made 51 calls and traveled 650 miles in his ministry to the 282 members of the parish. The churches included are Meansville, Fredonia, Liberty Chapel, Bethany and Pleasant Hill.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Mrs. John G. Truitt, president of the Woman's Mission Board of the Southern Convention, is calling a meeting of that board to be held in Dr. Atkinson's office at Elon College, beginning at 10 o'clock, Saturday morning, March 5, 1938. All members of the board and others having business with the board will please take note and govern themselves accordingly.

MID-YEAR MEETING OF ELON ALUMNI.

The Alumni Association of Elon College is called to meet in mid-year session Saturday, February 19th, at 2:30 P. M. The meeting will be held in the Society Hall, Alamance Building, Elon College.

It is hoped that the attendance may be large. In 1940, the College will observe its 50th anniversary. It will be opportune for the Alumni at its approaching session to express its wishes as to the semi-centennial celebration of the College, and to suggest plans for the same. There are many other matters that will claim the Association's attention at this meeting. We hope for a good representation from all sections of the country. An interesting program has been arranged and will be executed. This is an earnest and cordial invitation for all who are interested, to attend the meeting.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF ELON COLLEGE TO MEET.

The mid-year of the Board of Trustees of Elon College will be held at the College, Tuesday, February 22nd, at 10 A. M. Replies from the members of the Board show that there will be a very good attendance. This is really the business session of the Board, when plans for the ensuing year are made. Should there be others wishing to make suggestions to the Board, they are invited to reduce such to writing, and mail to W. H. Boone, President, or Dr. Stanley C. Harrel, Secretary, both of Durham, North Carolina. Or if preferable, address the writer.

The College is improving rapidly, and we are anxious for suggestions from the church, that its growth may be increased and its gains made permanent.

President.

PREACHING MISSION AT HOLLAND.

Dr. James R. Clinton, who is Pastor-at-Large of the Southeast Convention, conducted a Preaching Mission in the Holland Christian Church from January 16-23 inclusive.

The messages Dr. Clinton brought to the community were deeply spiritual, searching and uplifting. The following themes were used: "The Ministry that Costs;" "The Incredible Church;" "The Church Triumphant—Here;" "All is Right with the World;" "Private Interviews with the Man of Galilee;" "The Trust that God Cannot Trust;" "Unafraid in a World of Danger," and "The Master's Face." The people are enthusiastically appreciative and expressed the desire that he return for special services some time in the future.

The last Sunday here Dr. Clinton gave the Dramatic Recital "His Mother's Sermon" from Ian MacLaren's "Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush" with vocal interpretations—"The Beautiful Land on High," "Beyond the Door," "I Heard the Voice" and "Sunset and Evening Star"—to a large audience. The closing service that evening was a Union service at the Baptist Church. All the churches in the community, Christian, Baptist and Friends, were well represented and a good delegation from Franklin Christian Church came.

After our association and work together it is my conviction that Dr. Clinton has a message for both large and small churches in town and country, the conservation and the liberal, the erudite and unlearned. His deep, spiritual insight, vision, interpretation of Scripture and life will attract all classes and races. It is my hope that he can do more work for some time to come in the churches of the Southern Convention. It is my belief that such as he has to offer will challenge both saints and sinners to follow the Better Way more tenaciously and for the first time. His is the simple but dignified Christian Gospel and that will stand anywhere, any time.

"Fun, Faith and Fury"—The Romance of Irish Evangelism in the Land of Mirth and Melody—will be given by Dr. Clinton here on April 20th, at 7:30 P. M.

HE WENT A LITTLE FURTHER.

Over the rugged winding trail among the hills of Virginia a lone traveler winds his way from home to home. January 1st, a fog, known only to the hills, hung over our mountains, and our shepherd, Rev. B. J. Earp, drove as far as the car would go then took a foot path on farther. He found a place where a great gash across the face of nature opens up and makes a deep hole in the earth, and a path went on down to a cabin, and so did our preacher. He came out with wet feet, and cold. I became uneasy for we need this man of God among our hills. And I recall how one missionary, Miss Money, used up her strength here and had to leave us. Thus we lost the worker we needed so much, for she was one of the best Christians these hills have ever known. I don't want to lose another like her. Our shepherd is putting his best into this work here and is getting very little for it. This man is not in the pulpit for money and I only wish our hills could do something for him, but it is not possible for us to do very much here. If someone who is able out in the Christian world will be sure that our shepherd has heavy, warm clothes for this work he has to do here it will surely relieve my mind and help a good cause. I don't see why it is not alright to tell people this, for I am sure there are good people out there somewhere who will not call this a burden but will consider it a privilege to give him a warm topcoat. He doesn't expect me to ask for it, but I don't see why I shouldn't. I would be glad to give him something if I could, but I have no income. I am sure there are those who will be glad of the opportunity. A minister should not be forced to ask for what he needs.

January 2nd we had a lovely communion service. Some Christian friends at the churches Rev. Earp serves near Danville, Carltons, gave us a beautiful Communion set. It added so much to our service. I thank God for all the friends like these who are making it possible for us to enjoy the blessings of Christ here in these hills. We enjoy the soul-stirring messages our pastor brings at each service. Brother Earp has proven that he will go a little farther than God expects him to go.

Most of us want to sit in an easy chair and read of our Master when he went a little farther, but not many of us really want to go where He wants us to go. And I am not exaggerating when I say Mr. Earp will go where God says. I thank God for his faith and love, for this is God's love with us.

Our hills are cold and white now. These majestic peaks are capped with snow. But the cold of winter makes us appreciate springtime and flowers. When the soft petals of the rhododendron drop on a hillside and grass makes a carpet of green, one feels then that spring in the mountains is worth all it costs to live through a winter here—to see our hills in all their glory.

The Skyline Drive is coming slowly, but surely, through this part of the hills. We can't imagine yet what changes this new road will bring to us here. But, of course, it will open up our hills to all the world. I hope to live long enough to see the people from all parts of the world pass this way. We have been hidden away here for all these years, except when a big tragedy put us on the map back about 1913; then the government looked on the map and called some boys from here for the World War. Other than that, we have not been noticed much here until the Christian Church came to our hills. So I thank God today for friends, life, and love.

May God bless you.

VICTORIA OF THE HILLS.

A NEW FELLOWSHIP GROUP.

Since the merger of Congregational and Christian Churches some of our people have felt a little at ease. They have not known people of the opposite group well enough to appreciate their worth. In the Carolinas and Virginia there are very few Congregationalists and the larger group of Christians have had little chance to become acquainted with our Congregational friends.

In the Eastern and Western North Carolina Conferences some of the ministers and churches have been so uneasy about the merger that they have thought it necessary to establish a fellowship of their own. Four churches have voted to withdraw from the conferences and on two occasions representatives from these churches and members of other churches interested, together with some of the pastors, have met to discuss the situation and to find fellowship among themselves.

On the fifth Sunday in January they met at Zion Christian Church, one of the four which has withdrawn from the conference, near Sanford, N. C., with the purpose of effecting an organization for fellowship. Rev. J. L. Mann, recently ordained as a Baptist minister, was elected president; Mr. Ralph Riddle, secretary; and Rev. J. E. Franks, treasurer. The name of the organization is to be the "Fundamental Believers Fellowship." Membership will be based on acceptance of articles of faith which were voted upon but referred back to the committee for further study.

The next meeting is to be held at Merry Oaks Baptist Church on Saturday, March 26th, Rev. J. Lee Johnson, Rev. J. A. Denton and the pastor of the entertaining church, a Rev. Mr. Wheeler, compose the program committee. At that time members are to be enrolled and these members may be either individuals or churches.

It was stated in the meeting that this fellowship has nothing to do with denominations, that members may be from Christian, Baptist, Methodist, or any other church. The articles of faith are to be circulated so that those who wish to enter into the fellowship may know the basis on which they can unite.

It is devoutly to be hoped that churches that did not take the Christmas offering for this very worthy cause will adopt the plan of taking an offering for this purpose on Communion Sunday. This is most appropriate and unless churches adopt this or some method of supplying this need, the Board will not have in hand by July 1st sufficient funds to appropriate to the beneficiaries even as much as was appropriated at Christmas. We should not fail our worthy ministers now disabled, or the widows of ministers, who shared burdens of their husbands while they gave their life to the church on meager salaries.

I don't know just what position you are taking in the "subscription battle" since you are a native born Carolinian and living and editing in Virginia. You will just have to sit on the fence and look both ways. Wishing you a great success in your undertaking.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

IT HAPPENED THIS WAY.

This story was told to the editor recently by a minister in the Southern Convention whose name is known to all readers of this paper. It is too good to keep, and is passed along for the benefit of those who read.

The minister called in a home where there were several boys. In one corner of the house the boys had to set up a sort of reading room. A very popular Republican paper was much in evidence. The father could read but little, but he subscribed for the boys. Conversation between the minister and the father was about like this:

"Your boys are going to be Republicans," said the minister.

"I hope so," said the father. "But what makes you think so?"

"They are reading a Republican paper, and the reading makes the man. Are your boys allied with the Church?" inquired the minister.

"No, they are not. I wish they were," said the plaintive voice of the kindly father.

"Subscribe to 'The Christian Sun' and they will be," replied the wise minister.

"How much does that paper cost?" inquired the father, anxiously.

"Two dollars for a year," was the minister's reply.

"Here is the money. Send me the paper," said the father.

The paper was promptly added to the supply of reading matter for the growing boys of that good country home. What happened? One of those boys is a pastor, and president of his Conference.

MORAL: Ancient readers in public schools stated the moral so all could see, but that is not now permissible. Maybe it is not necessary. But wouldn't it be fine if some more families with growing children could have the benefit of reading the Church paper.

COOPERATION COUNTS.

Another story too good to keep comes from the public schools of Norfolk, and is right up to date. It was told to this writer by one of the teachers who had the information first-hand.

A certain lad who was about to finish the grades and go to Junior High told his people that he wanted to be an industrialist and make money like a friend of the family had done. Then one day the teacher in the daily conduct of school read from the Good Book the story of a rich man and a poor man who lived very differently in this world and were divided in the next world. The boy told his mother that he did not understand. The wise mother counseled with the boy about the story, but still he did not seem to get the full force of the story told by Jesus. On Sunday it happened that the minister of the church attended by the boy and his mother used the same story. Being a wise man, the minister spoke in a language that the boy could understand and explained that the poverty did not send the poor man to heaven nor did riches send the rich man to hell, both found their place in the world to come because of the riches and poverty of soul. After church the boy told his mother that he thought he understood it better, and added:

"I think I will be a missionary. I cannot talk well enough to be a preacher in this country, but I believe I can do some real work in some other country."

The school, the home, and the church cooperated to give a boy the right slant of life. Teachers and preachers and parents seldom know just what is happening in the hearts of those with whom they work, but when they follow the divine impulse, "all things work together for good." There is an unseen hand that guides in the destinies of men—when we seek to do the right. The message of Scripture has a redeeming influence when it has a chance. The school, the home, and the church are all needed to develop the right attitudes on the part of the growing generation. Neither can do its best without the cooperation of the other.

DO NOT FORGET OUR COLLEGE.

Readers of this paper were doubtless delighted to see the pictures of our servants, the teachers of Elon College, in this paper recently. To those who have attended the institution there were familiar faces. Among them was Dr. J. U. Newman, the only man who has served from the beginning of the college, and a man who has been the heart of the institution through the years. There are new and young faces among the faculty. This is as it should be. Much of the best lives on through the years, but growth demands change.

Some of us will soon be going back for reunions. The years have made great changes in the institution and in us. But we love our Alma Mater. She was our mother in youth; we will love her till death. But love without works is worthless. It will be a real joy to mingle again with those who were young twenty years ago. We will need time to rehearse ancient campus lore, and to tell of what has happened since. But what value will our visit be to the college that gave us training beyond our worth or the money that we paid? A thought that will down in the mind of this writer is that if each class would have a reunion every five or ten years, and if each member would give to the college at each reunion one dollar for each year since graduation, the college could balance its budget and do a much more successful work. This is a thought for alumni to consider. We must not forget our college.

Emphasis for Lent

By FREDERICK L. FAGLEY.

I believe that this 1938 Lenten Season should be made significant by our authentic proclamation that it is God who gives to human life its meaning and value, for the life of man has little meaning apart from God. This has always been true; it needs special emphasis now! This may be mysticism, but if so—so let it be!

It is especially hard for the multitudes who have for several generations mastered so much of the world or have been spectators or victims of forces often too great for man to control, to realize this truth. Man has set so many forces to work for him, discovered so much truth, that consciously or unconsciously the great mass of people have come to believe that given time enough all truth will be known to man and all forces of the universe harnessed; and that these forces will become unthinking, faithful, ever-obedient servants of man. To the common mind, when this is accomplished, man rather than God will be the master of the universe.

Now, we believe that it is God's will that his truth shall be discovered, and that the resources of God's power shall be made available to men, but is this all of life? Are we always to be like a child who pries open the back of a watch to see the wheels go 'round? The mission of the church is to proclaim, in season and out of season, Why this truth! Why this force! Why this rich resource!

In some far-off, primitive day seers proclaimed that man could not live by bread alone. Today we say that man cannot live merely by electricity or radio or economic system—essential as these are for human welfare.

The Christian Church is the interpreter as well as the revealer of God, and its message must be that life—full life—cannot be had without God.

Today the church with its imperative message is in our keeping. We are its ministers, its spokesmen and more. We are the very blood and bone of its structure. The church gave us our spiritual birth. It nurtured us. It has sustained us. We can stand off and criticize; we can tear down, or join the crowd, or even like Peter say, "I neither know nor understand." But when we do so we are false to our best self, to our own true inner life.

The church may deserve all that is being said of it by the thoughtless and also by the thoughtful, but it is not made vital nor is our message made effective by criticisms and negations.

God may have become distant, it is our duty to bring him near. He may have become unreal, it is our duty to reveal him—"closer than hands and feet." His will for our lives may have become dim; it is our duty to make this Will crystal clear by word and deed. We are called upon to "heal the wounds" made either by friend or critic, that the church may carry on the work Christ began.

No man is worthy of the high calling of pastor who is satisfied with the church as it is. But the tearing down process has its limitations and there comes a time for rebuilding. We are at that exact moment now, and our task is first of all to make God the center and the foundation.

The world needs to be set at rights. Injustice must be corrected and life, both individual and social, freed for growth; but today the challenge of the world to the church is, "Can you make God real?"

There is no other enduring foundation for political, social or individual integrity, and without integrity all fails.

Let us not depend on arguments, or "I heard it said," or "I have read," but begin with what knowledge of God we possess, each one where he is, and put that knowledge to work in the world. Knowledge will grow and men will be healed.

From the knowledge of God comes wisdom and courage, strength and victory; and without God life fails, however rich it may become in material things.

God is made known by those who know Him. Christ shows the way to God. May we follow more closely in His way. May God be very real and very near to each and every one of you this Lenten Season.

DO NOT FORGET OUR COLLEGE.

who are well schooled and whose hearts are strangely warmed by the fellowship and teachings of those who are Christian. The churches need an ever-increasing number of members who have studied in a college that is allied with the Church. Our Church should plan to give to its growing youth the best possible training. This they can do in a school that is directed by the churches. The minds of youth should be directed towards the college of the Church.

But the churches cannot hope to direct the affairs of a college unless they have a share in supporting that college. In the midst of other duties let us not forget that this is the time for an offering for Elon College. Even subscriptions to "The Christian Sun" will not take the place of aid for the college.

FAILURES.

There are certain kinds of trees that keep their leaves all the year round. There are many others that lose all their leaves in the autumn and stand gaunt and dead-looking throughout the winter.

Perhaps trees can't feel, but suppose they could! Every year they put on their gorgeous dresses of leaves and blossoms, wear them proudly for a few months and then lose them. Every year they face this same thing—beautiful and successful for a time, and then failing. How discouraging that must be!

But the trees know, somehow, that another spring will come, and that they will be beautiful again. We ought to think of that when we suffer failure and disappointment. If a tree can be "down and out" every year, and still stage a "comeback," we certainly should be able to fight through to success after being defeated.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

On Monday, January 31st, Mrs. Johnson and I went with Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Ellis of Liberty Spring on a ten day trip to Florida. This is our third visit to the far South. We spent one night in Orlando, Florida, and had a very pleasant visit with Dr. and Mrs. J. O. Atkinson. They are improving under the guidance of their physician and the inspiration of that delightful climate. Florida is a land of glorious sunshine, delicious fruit and beautiful flowers. There are vast acres of undeveloped land in that state. Mr. Ellis is a farmer and he thinks the land should be brought under cultivation. He missed the fields of corn and the hogs in the pasture. Mrs. Ellis wanted to bring home a palm tree for her garden. Mrs. Johnson wanted to stay long enough to eat a portion of all the menus found in the restaurants and hotels. I wanted to go fishing.

One of the most interesting places was the Air Port of the Pan-American Airways, at Miami, Florida. We visited that Airdome and saw the great air liners that are taken out across the Atlantic to Cuba and other points south every day. When a ship is brought in scores of men skilled in the technical care of these giants of the air go about their task of checking over the ship. Every square foot of the ship is carefully examined and tested by these experts. Any defects are carefully corrected, and the ship must be in first-class condition before it may go out for another trip. Some of these ships carry 36 passengers. We had the pleasure of going on board, with the distinct understanding, on my part, that the ship would not start before we could get off. No, this writer has not yet decided to fly. He may try his luck after he gets to heaven, but he does not want to start to heaven on an air ship. He prefers to start by land.

But that work of the mechanics was interesting. The owners and operators of these Airways are trying to make flying safe. Every known precaution is taken to make these ships safe. I thought of the teachers in our schools working away at their task trying to teach young people how to make life safe. The ministers in their pulpits are working at the same kind of a task. In homes and schools and churches, throughout the land, thousands of people are interested in the safety of human life. Why not try to make our highways safe? Every menace to human life should be removed. How careful we are with our airships! How careless with our boys and girls! People who would not think of tampering with an air-liner will vote to put a saloon, or a den of vice on the most prominent street in the city, and encourage the young people to patronize these dangerous institutions.

In early childhood the training should begin for this voyage of life. In youth it should be intensely cultivated. Then, when youth makes its first adventure, the dangers will be reduced to a minimum. There should be no dangers lurking in the mind and heart of youth. Jesus sought to give people a new heart that the dangers of inner evil might be removed. Youth cannot destroy all the evils in the world. But the grace of God and the power of Jesus Christ can regenerate human life and make a new creature out of an old sinner. When the ship is in the harbor, or the plane is in the hanger, it may be examined and fitted for a successful voyage. It is too late after they put out to sea. Christianity is the only safe way for humanity.

RELIGIOUS EMPHASIS WEEK.

For the past three years the Elon College Community Church, in cooperation with the faculty and students, has sponsored a series of special meetings. An outstanding speaker is brought to the campus, who speaks twice daily, and holds conferences with all who are interested. Usually there are periods for questions and answers.

Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, of Dover, Delaware, conducted one series for us, with abundant success. His visit and messages accomplished much for the church on the campus. Dr. James R. Clinton, now with the Home Boards of the United Church, spent a week with us last year. Dr. Clinton's messages were greatly enjoyed. His singing brought a new interest to the services. Much good resulted from the meetings.

Beginning Monday, February 14th, Miss Ruth Seabury, of the Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions of the United Church, will speak twice daily to the students. The Department of Christian Education, in cooperation with the Ministerial Association, student religious activities, and the membership of the church, has planned for this week's special services, in the hope of realizing the greatest possible benefit from Miss Seabury's visit. Miss Seabury is one of the most earnest and forceful speakers of the entire denomination. We are fortunate in having her for an entire week.

The series of services will close with both services on Sunday, February 20th, at which time opportunity will be given for church membership.

Miss Seabury will conduct a one-day mission study class for the Missionary Societies of the Congregational-Christian Churches of the Carolinas, and other Missionary Societies that may wish to cooperate, in Whitley Memorial Auditorium, Elon College, Monday, February 21st. All who are interested in the forward march of the church are invited to this special Missionary Day.

A LEADER IN ALABAMA CALLS TO THE CHURCH.

Dear Brother Editor:

Will you give me space for a few feeble remarks relative to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, especially as it relates to the Alabama Christian brotherhood?

My dear brethren, and beloved of the Lord, it is a lamentable fact that we have lost in our interest for THE CHRISTIAN SUN in the last few years. This loss in the interest of the Church paper indicates loss along all other lines. We are not as much interested in Missions, the Christian Orphanage, Christian Education, or any other enterprises of the Christian Church as we were some years ago.

I am very much concerned about our own interest in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, for if we can get the people of our Church to take and read the Church paper they will support and cooperate with every other enterprise of the Church. The dear old CHRISTIAN SUN is the only medium we have of communication with our brethren. It is the medium of instruction concerning the great work of the church. We would be in darkness and ignorance of our Church, its principles and practices, if it were not for the Church paper.

We have a membership in the Christian Church in Alabama of between 2,000 and 2,500 members. We have twenty-five churches and thirty-four subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. This, according to my way of seeing things, brethren, is alarming. Will not each pastor join with us in trying to increase our subscription list to our Church paper? We ought easily to have 100 men and women taking THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Brethren, let's get busy and see that it is done. Send in a list of prospective subscribers to the editor, get him to send them sample copies of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and let us follow up this work by personal solicitation and get this work revived in our churches. It will mean a revival in every interest of the Christian Church.

Please don't neglect this matter, brethren, for the sake of our own dear old Church. Get busy and let us with faith in God, faith in the Church and with faith in ourselves get into this great work. We ought to be able to get from two to six members in each church to resolve to become subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Will you pastors join with me in this undertaking? The pastor is the "key" man in this, as in all other important movements of the Church. If the pastors will encourage the movement it will succeed. If the Church paper fails, our Church is doomed. Come on now, brethren, and let's do our part to save our Church and all its enterprises.

What would our Church look like if we had no Church paper? How would we know about our educational institutions—our Orphanage, our Missionary work, or any other phase of our church work unless we have a medium of information. Only 34 families of the Christians in Alabama know of the great success Charles D. Johnston had with the Orphanage work last year. Only 34 families in the Alabama Christian Church know any thing about the great burden that Dr. Smith is carrying for Elon College. Only 34 families know how much care and worry and anxiety Dr. Atkinson has experienced in making our Church missionary in principle and in practice, and practically none of our people know anything of the struggles and hardships which have come to our Southern Union College, and to those suffering for it. Pitiful, isn't it?

Brethren, I feel like one of old who exclaimed, "My heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God." My soul yearns for the welfare of the dear old Christian Church. Brethren and sisters in Alabama, help me to save it.

I love thy Kingdom, Lord,
The house of thine abode,
The Church our blest Redeemer saved
With His own precious blood.

I love thy Church, oh God!
Her walls before Thee stand,
Dear as the apple of Thine eye,
And graven on Thy hand.

Beyond my highest joys
I prize her heavenly ways,
Her sweet communion, solemn vows,
Her hymns of love and praise.

God's blessings be upon THE CHRISTIAN SUN and all its readers. And may this be a year when we shall all be more like the Master and do more for Him, and be a blessing to one another.

Pray for me that my life may be blessed and be a blessing.

G. D. HUNT.

FROM PASTOR SANDERSON.

The Monticello Church is having a new covering over the entire exterior this week. We have a new set of hymn books and the ladies have enough money for a carpet for the aisles. We are going to be proud of our church when it is all finished.

Baby Sanderson made his first visit to the Haw River Church field last week. Many of the church people passed so many fine remarks that Daddy is going to have to buy a new bonnet. We wish we could work up as much interest in the Southern Convention "baby," THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

The Board of Trustees of Elon College will hold its mid-year meeting here Tuesday, February 22nd. This is an important session since most of the business is transacted at this meeting. Dr. W. H. Boone, of Durham, chairman, will preside.

Rev. J. D. Dollar moved last fall from Roanoke, Alabama, to West Point, Georgia. He reports that the new field of work is promising.

BLOSSOM TIME.

(A CORRESPONDENCE.)

Florida Sanatorium,
Orlando Florida,
February 5, 1938.

I went out under my old plum tree today—Dr. Rowland's and mine. Not that we, Dr. Rowland and myself, have a deed in fee simple for it, or the ground on which it grows; but it is ours by right of discovery and devotion. (And by what better right or title could one own a tree, or own anything else in this world than that—discovery and devotion.) Not that we were the first to find it, but there it stands right by the squatty two-room cottage in which our good physician, to help and heal us, put us to bed for twenty-four hours of the day for weeks, three years ago. We discovered, and discussed, congenial Dr. Rowland and I did, every cranny and crevice, event and issue in and about that cottage, and lived over again every ridiculous escapade and adventure of our boy-hood days. But here stood now by our cottage door and window this double-jointed, twisted-limbed, hunch-backed plum tree—seemingly an insane, ungainly thing, whose only function seemed to be encumber the earth that bore it. We wondered, and debated, as to why it should be allowed to stand there, when there were tall and stately pine and palm, as well as graceful eucalyptus and orange trees to adorn the landscape and please the eye. But presto! Wait a minute. One day in February, when other trees were in winter robes, our plum tree literally "shot the works." (Apologies to Little Orphan Annie.) That old unsightly plum tree! Perish the thought. It had robed itself in perfect bridal array. In fact, any beautiful, blushing bride could well envy now our plum tree. It has veiled itself in faint green, bedecked with a thousand fragrant white and spotless blossoms, and has put to shame every tree within sight, for sheer glory and beauty, and makes everybody regret ever having spoken a word to its disparagement. Our plum tree has come into blossom, leading the procession to rapidly approaching spring, and rejoicing every eye that looks upon it. Such a tree and scene just makes the heart sing. "Oh! wait and murmur not." Or even more to the point "Wait thou upon the Lord and He will bring it to pass."

Yea, blossom time is coming! Let the heart rejoice and be glad. Winter does not last always. Neither does the night, nor sickness, nor disease, nor worry, nor war. And God has made each and every one of us for some good purpose each to serve or suffer, according as He wills, if only we are willing to trust and obey Him. Our day may not be today, or tomorrow, but in God's good way and time, if we but humbly seek to do His will—our day will come and the adornment from His hand shall be more glorious and beautiful than we could ever hope or expect. Our plum tree teaches that much and more. Which reminds me to say that this dark picture that now clouds the horizon especially in the Far-East will not stay dark always. Every one who has ever helped send out a missionary to China or Japan must rejoice deep down in his heart today as he sees those missionaries proving true and faithful, even unto death. Our American Board has given our own missionaries in war-torn China, where a bomb may bring to them instant death at any hour, to come out and come home—if they will. But at this writing, so far is known, not a one has left his post, or forsaken the helpless now when suffering and danger are most intense, and when the need for their ministry in Christ is most urgent. The present attitude of Christian missionaries in the Orient is a challenge to our interest, courage and support such as we have not witnessed in our day.

One missionary writes: "All feel that if it was worth while for us to come to China in time of peace, it is even more important for us to remain here in time of suffering and warfare—to heal the sick, feed the hungry and to preach the Gospel of Christ. Today is the day of challenge to missionaries. Woe betide us if we sound a retreat."

The China Inland Mission reports on several places where God is working; among them there is a revival at Salowu, Yunnan.

"The work began in the Bible School. The work spread among church leaders and church members. I have not seen such a deep work among so many people since coming to China. We felt led to form a revival band, planning a visit of several months to various tribes and stations. The revival blessing is still spreading. Considerably more than one hundred church members have come out confessing sins, while fully one hundred unbelievers have come out and made profession of conversion."

And war does not last always. The Prince of Peace will come into His own, is coming, even through the horrors of war, into a brighter, better and more glorious day—and victory.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

A BRIEF HISTORY.

As far back as 1887, Presbyterian women in the U. S. A. came together at the suggestion of Mrs. Darwin R. James, President of the Women's Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church, to pray for Home Missions. Interest in this Day of Prayer increased and through the efforts of Mrs. Henry W. Peabody and Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, the Foreign Mission forces chose a day for united prayer in the early nineties, and in 1920, both in Canada and the United States, church women of all denominations united in prayer, the first Friday in Lent being selected as the "Day of Prayer for Missions"—Home and Foreign.

In numberless places around the world, from missionaries returning from the homeland, the thought of a day of prayer spread until at the request of many far-away friends, a World Day of Prayer was first observed in 1927. In 1936 Christians of more than fifty countries kept the day together.

The program as presented by the author is mimeographed and sent out with the "Call to Prayer" to all parts of the world, to National Christian Councils, to Christian Literature Societies, to National Day of Prayer Committees, and through mission boards to missions and missionaries the world around. Such changes are then made in the World Program as will better fit it to the needs of each country, and the program is printed and distributed, or passed on from hand to hand. In America more than one-half million "Calls" are printed and nearly as many programs.

The Day begins in New Zealand and the Fiji Islands, and as the Day progresses, new groups in city, town, countryside, and hamlet, join in praise and prayer until after some forty hours the Day ends at Gambell on St. Lawrence Island off the coast of Alaska thirty miles from the date line and about the same distance from the Arctic Circle. All these groups are praying that we may be one in our service for Jesus Christ—that barriers of race and class may be broken down—that we may truly learn to follow Him whose way is the way of life for all men—that we may be faithful witnesses of His love and His life-giving power—and that men may find the way by which individuals and nations can live together in peace and understanding.

HOME MISSIONS.

ABOUT MISS SEABURY.

When the North American Missionary Conference selected its forty-five representatives from Canada and the United States to attend the World Missionary Conference at Madras, India, next fall, this interdenominational body selected as one of the representatives Miss Ruth Isabel Seabury, the secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Miss Seabury was selected because of her ability to make a contribution to that international gathering and because of her ability to represent that body when she returns to America.

The women and young people of the Southern Convention are very fortunate in having Miss Seabury as their guest speaker for their mid-year meetings this year. Men will find it profitable to hear her. Out of a long experience in missionary work, and having traveled around the world, she is capable of bringing direct and thrilling information from our many friends on the other side of the earth. Miss Seabury will review the missionary study book, "The Moslem World," but her talks will be much more than simply a review of a book. She is vibrant with life, devoutly Christian, and a fluent speaker whose knowledge seems to be almost limitless.

Everyone who can reasonably do so should hear her at Elon College on the 21st; in the Valley on the 23rd, speaking at Winchester in the morning at 11 o'clock, at Linville at 3 o'clock and at Bethel at 7:30 that evening; and at Suffolk on the 25th of February. During the day she will speak to adults, and in the evening she will speak especially to young people.

We are fortunate to have her come for these missionary conferences, and the meeting places will probably be filled with anxious hearers every time she speaks. F. C. L.

NOTICE.

Dear Presidents and Co-Workers of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies of Nansemond, Gates and Franklin.—

On Friday February 25th, Miss Ruth Seabury of Boston will speak in the Suffolk Christian Church, at 10 A. M. and 1 P. M. for women and at 8 P. M. to the young people.

Women will bring box lunches, and coffee will be served in Fellowship Hall. All societies with 50 per cent attendance will be given a credit on Standard of Excellence.

Please observe the World Day of Prayer, March 4th. Programs can be secured from the Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.

District Presidents, President, Vice-President and Secretary will please be present at the Presidents luncheon, March 15th, at Hotel Elliott, Suffolk, Va. For the benefit of those who were not present at our last meeting, the Presidents luncheon meeting voted in favor of it unanimously.

Come in full force on February 25th to hear Miss Seabury, and get the Young People out for the evening at 8 o'clock.

At your service,
MRS. JOHN KING,
Superintendent.

A NEWSPAPER MAN'S TESTIMONY TO MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.

The most significant job done by Americans in China is neither the buying nor the selling of goods. It is so great a work that it is altogether misunderstood by small minds and even smaller hearts. That is the tremendously important and valuable services of the American missionary.

These men and women have gone to town and village, bringing with them not only the many varieties of Christianity, but a new cultural pattern; in my opinion, a nobler cultural pattern than the Chinese retained amid the disintegration of China's indigent social and intellectual establishments during the last century.

Take as an example, St. John's University in Shanghai, or the Shanghai College (which used to be the Shanghai Baptist College) or Lingnan University (which used to be called the Canton Christian College), or Yenching in Peking or Soochow University, or Yale-in-China—these and many more have kept the light of modern learning aflame in China during the dark days of civil war and revolution and change of government.

* * *

These missionaries brought medicine and hospital and nursing and child welfare to China. They brought a new conception of social relationships—not man-for-his-family, but man-for-society—a broadening of viewpoint.

They planted the seeds of a social revolution, which, if it did not quickly make China strong, at any rate produced in China a forward-looking, progressive, non-opium smoking monogamous leadership.

Chiang Kai-shek and the Soongs are Christians. In fact, the Soong family is particularly notable for its Christian affiliations, for on the mother's side they trace themselves back to a famous figure at the end of the Ming dynasty who came under the influence of Ricci and whose daughter, Candida, was the first nun in China, while Charles Soong, the father, actually came to China from the United States to teach English and the Bible.

The present Chinese Ambassador to the United States, Dr. C. T. Wang, was the first Chinese secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in China, while Dr. H. H. Kung, who was in this country recently and is now Premier of whatever remains of government in China, was secretary of the Chinese Y. M. C. A. in Japan at one time.

It is impossible to overemphasize the great value to China of the American missionary, of the American school and hospital situated in that country. And it is something to note in these days of collectivist materialism that there has been no return to the United States for this service. It has cost us more, over a century, than we ever earned out of our trade with China. It was the contribution of a well-off people to those who needed our help and assistance.

And it is to be noted here, that in a measure, we did as well by Japan. It is true that the Japanese, sooner than the Chinese, were ready to take over many schools and hospitals which American good will had established in their country. But for years our missionaries labored there, as in China—not forcing anything down unwilling throats, but offering help and service to those who were willing and eager to receive.

MAGIC CARPETS, ETC.

Are you one of those people who remembers those fairy land days of the "Arabian Nights?" If so, you know the wonders of the Far East. Now—if you are not one of those who have enjoyed flights on Magic Carpets, and visited with Princesses and camel herders in distant Bagdad, you will want to know about these things.

In either case you will be interested in seeing and hearing Miss Ruth Seabury, who is a secretary in the Home Boards of the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions, at Suffolk, on Friday, February 25th, at 7:30 P. M. The subject: "The Moslem World."

Think of it, all the allure and mysticism brought to us, all the way across the world; so catch a flying carpet, or thumb a ride, or walk, but get there!

PLANNING FOR LENT.

In so many cases, our local young people's societies do not plan their meetings sufficiently ahead of time in order to send for materials appropriate for the special meetings they would like to have. This year Easter comes on April 17th, which means that the Lenten Period will begin on March 2nd. Therefore, if you expect your group to use any kind of personal devotional material during Lent, or plan for any special meetings, this must be done before February 27th, when the materials should be given out. Below is the suggestion which Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, director of young people's work for our churches in Georgia and Florida, is making to her groups for the observance of the Lent this year.

NOTICE TO OFFICERS.

The special issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, which was devoted mainly to Pilgrim Fellowship work throughout the Southeast, appeared on February 3rd. Copies were sent to Key Workers in many of our states. If your group sent in no mailing list, do so now and copies will be sent out at the rate of 2c per copy. If your Fellowship sent in a mailing list, but did not send in the money to pay for these copies, please see that the latter is done at once. It was most generous to have the pages in THE CHRISTIAN SUN offered to us, and we certainly must not expect extra copies to be sent out at an expense to someone else. At the Holiday Conference the delegates—either you or your representatives—voted unanimously to support these special issues, and it is up to you to see that lists are sent in and payment made for the copies sent to your members.

LENTEN DEVOTIONS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Key Workers.)*

I have asked Dr. F. L. Fagley to send you a sample copy of one of the finest publications for young people I think out at the present time: 'Lenten Devotions for Young People.' I hope that in as many churches as possible you may be able to give a copy to each young person in your group. They should be in the hands of the young people by Sunday, February 27th, so that they can begin using them on March 2nd.

"I should think they would mean a great deal to the young people if someone would make a statement about the meaning of the Lenten Period and make some suggestions for using the booklet. Many of the young people do not know that it includes the forty days before Easter, omitting the Sundays. These booklets cost five cents each and may be ordered from Dr. F. L. Fagley, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City. In most cases I am suggesting that the young people be asked to pay five cents for them in order to save the treasury of the society and because I think they will appreciate them more if they pay for them.

"Another publication I have recommended many times this year is 'The Story of Holy Week.' I think this would make a fine program on Palm Sunday because it gives something about each day of the last week of Jesus' life on earth. This also costs five cents and may be ordered from Dr. Fagley."

WHY DOES OUR CHURCH MAINTAIN COLLEGES?

Saturday—A College for Teachers—
II Chron. 34:15-22.

The Church has made a great sacrifice to establish and maintain its colleges, and due consideration should be given to the study of this topic:

All the leading denominations have their own colleges. They support these colleges because character is as important as knowledge. Many of our large universities ignore religion, and make little effort to maintain a religious atmosphere on the campus. In the denominational college the teachers are interested in teaching the students how to be Christian. Should a teacher in a Christian college be as much interested in teaching his students to be Christian as he is in helping them to understand geology or literature?

Many of our denominational colleges were founded to train men for the ministry. Today there are but few men in any of these colleges preparing for the ministry. Not many of our young men in the Christian Endeavor societies are giving the ministry a serious thought as a life work. Why is this?

Our forefathers thought education should have a distinctly religious flavor. Should we think differently?

Should the state university take the place of the Christian college by providing specialized vocational training?

In what ways does the Christian Endeavor society help to promote a Christian college and turn students toward their church college?

Write to Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College, for publicity material that those of college age may know more about our Church college.

CHOOSING COMPANIONS IN SERVICE.

LESSON VIII—FEBRUARY 20, 1938.

GOLDEN TEXT: For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother.—Mark 3: 35.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 3: 7-19, 31-35.

These were the days of growing popularity and growing opposition. By His words and his works Jesus was becoming known far and wide. People came from far and near to hear Him and to be healed by Him. A great multitude from Galilee, Judea, Jerusalem, Idumaea, and even beyond the Jordan, "a great multitude, hearing what great things he did, came unto him." It was natural and inevitable that it should be thus. If it were noised abroad in our day that there was a man who was speaking as never a man spake before, and who was healing by a touch and sometimes even by a word, those who had various and sundry diseases, great crowds would flock to see and hear him. And those who went would take their loved ones and friends to be healed of this man.

In self-protection, Jesus had to get into a boat and push off a little way from the shore, for in their eagerness to get to Him to touch Him, the crowds threatened to crush Him. From this informal vantage point, He taught the people and healed them. Here was a unique pulpit and clinic deed. The people "had never seen it in this fashion before."

But Jesus did not want to be known as a wonder-worker, or a "miracle man" or simply as a healer. He knew full well the danger of such a situation. He saw all too clearly how it would obscure the essential nature of His ministry, how it would divert attention from His message, and from His spiritual mission. Thus it was that he "charged them much that they should not make Him known." These words may apply either to the "unclean spirits" or to those whom Jesus had healed, or to both. In either case the principle is the same. The kingdom of God is not to come with the blazoned headlines of newspapers, or the blare of trumpets. "He shall not cry nor lift up his voice." The kingdom of God is like leaven.

This was a time of opposition, too. As the reputation and influence of Jesus grew, the opposition of the scribes and Pharisees grew. Very early in His ministry Jesus saw and felt this growing opposition. The forces of privilege and power fight back when Jesus cuts across their interests.

Choosing Companions in Service.

"And He goeth up into a mountain and calleth unto Him whom He Himself would; and they went unto Him. And He appointed twelve, that they might be with Him, and that He might send them forth to preach and to have authority to cast out demons." (Luke records that he might have spent the night before this incident in prayer, which is significant.) Several suggestive truths are embodied in this passage.

It reveals the fact that Jesus craved companionship—He appointed them that they might be with Him. To be sure He wanted them to be with Him so that He could train them, and impart to them His secret and His spirit. But it is doing no violence to the text or to the Master Himself to say that Jesus wanted the companionship and comradeship of these men. He was the Son of Man as well as the Son of God, and He knew the value of friends and friendship.

He chose them, too, that He might teach them and train them. He would not commit His program to writing, but rather put it into personality. He would give them Himself and send them out to share His spirit with others. He knew that the only way to change the world was through changed men. He chose them that they should go forth and bear much fruit.

One of the most significant things in the story is the personnel of the Twelve. Here are men of various abilities, some of them were potentially big men, while others apparently were not especially gifted. Here were men of various temperaments and dispositions, some of them were quick of word and deed, others were quiet and reserved, some were optimistic, others were somewhat somber and inclined to look on the dark side of things, some were fluent speakers, others had nothing much to say, some had poise and self-control, others, especially Simon Peter and James and John "flew off the handle" at times, some were able writers, others so far as we know never wrote anything, some were business men, some were fishermen, at least one was a political revolutionist, and wonder of wonders one of them turned out to be a scoundrel and worse, a traitor. A study of the Twelve is an interesting study. It teaches us that in Christ's program and kingdom there is a place for all and room for all. No matter what one's talents, his temperament, his disposition, his tastes, his philosophy, his position, his means, his ca-capacity—Christ welcomes, Christ needs, Christ can use all. He uses high and low, rich and poor, learned and ignorant, great and small, strong and weak, bond and free, old and young, male and female, white and what-not one and all He loves and calls and uses.

There was undoubtedly significance in the fact that Jesus called "twelve" to be with Him. Under the Old Dispensation there were the twelve tribes of Israel. Under the New Dispensation there was to be a complete spiritual family or kingdom. The old wineskins of Judaism were to be filled with the new wine of a universal brotherhood or family embraced in the spiritual kingdom of love and cooperation.

He chose them that they might be with Him, and that He might send them forth. They were to learn of Him, receive from Him, and then go forth to share with others. He did not will that they should stay apart from the world, but that they should keep themselves unspotted from the world.

The Family of God.

"For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother and sister and mother." The members of Jesus' family evidently thought that He was overdoing a good thing and they came seeking Him. When informed that they sought Him, He answered in the words quoted at the beginning of this paragraph. Jesus would have us know that there is a tie above and beyond the ties of flesh, beyond mere earthly human relationships. Those who through faith in Him come into fellowship with Him, and who do His will, are united in a great spiritual family and unity that transcends all earthly ties and claims. Here is the essential basis of true brotherhood. In Christ there is no distinction of class or color or creed—we are all one in Him.

You are giving us a good paper and we appreciate it . . . We earnestly pray that you may have physical strength, as well as other blessings, for the heavy load that you are carrying.

"A DISHWASHER'S PROBLEM."

"Whatsoever things are true . . . pure . . . lovely . . . think on these things."—Phil. 4:8.

God be praised forever that there are still in the world those whose Christian life and Bible studies have developed them into the finest spirits known.

We heard a minister repeat a story some time ago in which a dear lady was asked, "Did you ever wonder when it was that Abraham saw Christ's day? Well, one day when I was washing dishes, it came to me. It was when Abraham offered up his only son that he saw Christ's day, entered into his spirit and understood his redemptive work."

If we obey our text the best we can everyday, our common tasks will reflect the greatness of God.

Prayer—Our Father, however lowly our lot, we would think high thoughts and follow our Saviour. Grant this gift to us today. Amen.

TUESDAY.

OLD? HOW HAPPY?

"Thine age shall be greater than the noon day."—(Read Job 5:26; 11:17; 32:7-9; Psalm 71:9, 18.)

The streets of San Diego (and other places for that matter) furnish a continuous picture of old age; men and women retired from business in this spot called "Heaven on Earth." Some of these represent the finest figures of the past but who have become most pathetic. In these days of theirs they have no engrossing interests in life.

These streets also furnish us with another picture; fine figures of life who have reached the age of seventy and more, still running their own business and are prominent figures in community interests. These have kept themselves ably busy in the community's activities and their old age is useful beyond words.

Everybody should prepare for old age by linking up with interesting things in life, especially the church, which will carry them along nobly until God calls them.

Prayer—Our Father, help us to grow more useful as we go along. Give our hearts love, give our hands work and forbid that we shall ever walk alone. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE PERFECT GENTLEMAN.

"Study to show thyself approved unto God."—II Tim. 2:1-5, 15.

I know a young man whose charm takes hold of every one he meets. He is a university graduate—an athlete in college—and a successful business man, with a large salary, and an exceptionally beautiful home and delightful family. Like many others, I have often pondered the secret of his attractiveness.

I think I have found it—and it roots in the simple virtues which he learned in a Christian home and in the Sunday school and church. He sincerely cares for others. Without professionalism or pose, he is really interested in every person he meets.

Prayer—We thank Thee, Lord, for the imparted graces of Christ, which give His winsomeness to all who live by His law. Amen.

THURSDAY.

HEROIC AND HAPPY.

"I will make him a helpmeet for him."—Gen. 2:18; Prov. 31:10-12.

For long years I have known well a great preacher, a famous man. Now, past seventy, his fine mind has given away, and he is a little child again.

His wife, a woman of exceptional charm and social sophistication, is dedicating her life to care of him.

"I am very happy," she said. "I can keep my husband free from any realization of his condition; and he is well and contented, and I ask nothing more." Her radiant face confirmed her words.

I left her with a feeling of exaltation, instead of pity. Here is a triumph of love and of Christian faith. That wife is practicing all that her eloquent husband long preached. In so doing, she is finding unexpected wellsprings of joy released to her.

Prayer—Our hearts rejoice, O our Father, that Thou dost not only impart strength for the bearing of burdens, but also givest joy in the bearings of them. Forbid that we should ever whimper or whine under any of Thy dispensations. Amen.

W. T. Ellis, in Christian Herald.

FRIDAY.

A DAILY DRAMA.

"O King Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the Heavenly vision . . . I am not mad, most noble Festus, but speak forth the words of truth and soberness."—Acts 26:19, 25.

Shakespeare said, "all the world's a stage and all the men and women merely players." He also said, "Learn to live well . . . before a sprightlier age shoves you from the stage."

The policeman is often heard to say to his victim, "Tell it to the judge," and then we see him telling it to the judge. Some are pushed off as bad actors, others are able to make good with the judge just as Paul did in this instance. We are able to hold a stage or we are pushed off the stage just to the extent we are able to stand upon the ground of truth and righteousness or to be pushed off as we have no ground to stand upon. We must build that ground diligently and see that we stand for righteousness even in the smallest things. Christian living consists in espousing God and his righteousness and sometime this may mean "telling a skunk that he is a skunk."

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D., Pastor.

TODAY'S FAMILY.

By REV. HERBERT G. COUNCIL, JR.,
Yale Divinity School.

(Concluded from Last Week.)

Leland Foster Wood, Secretary of the Committee on Marriage and the Home of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America says, "It is a distinct loss to American life that the old homestead idea, with all the values which clustered it, has passed so largely out of the common experience of American families. If the nation can plan to have a large proportion of our people living in the homes of their own, enriched by memories and traditions, and serving as centers of social fellowship, the whole matter of home-making will be on a more secure foundation."

What will put the home on a more secure foundation? What will undergird the home with spiritual and moral ideals. Many people have lost their vision and some way must be found by which to restore it. E. Stanley Jones once made the statement: "If we lose our sky, we soon lose our earth." Many people today have lost their sky and are on the verge of losing their earth. How can they regain a view of the sky? How can they establish their home in such a way that it will be a fellowship of continuous happiness. How can the basic moral and spiritual ideals be restored to the home today?

In the first place, there must be in the basic principle of love and companionship. If husbands and wives would continue that spirit of love which they had for each other during their days of courtship, if they would strive to keep that spirit alive through many little acts of tenderness, sympathy, understanding, unselfishness, forgiveness, then they would find life much happier. Love and companionship are somewhat similar to a flower which starts from a little seed that falls into the ground. The flower will grow to be more beautiful provided it gets the proper care and cultivation. Or we might compare love and companionship to a great cathedral. Many different materials and skills are used in putting it together. Much time is spent in building it. But when the task is finished, we are proud of our structure because it is "a thing of beauty and a joy forever." Its beauty and awe increases with age. So it is with the family which is based on love and companionship.

In the second place, another principle which must be provided for in the modern family is self-expression for man, woman and child. The patriarchal family is a thing of the past. Woman has been given complete freedom and placed on the level with man. People are coming to realize that it's much better for the child to be given the opportunity to develop his own personality rather than have it shaped for him. All of these changes have come within recent years, and the family must take them into account.

In the third place, there must be a fusion of interest in the family without the feeling of suppression. Mother and father must have a common interest in the work which is done outside the family. And when children come along, there should be an earnest effort to introduce them to the realities of life as soon as their abilities to understand will permit. Isn't it much better to teach them the truth about sex and religion, and other matters which might develop into problems later because of ignorance? Regardless of what kind of an attitude parents take on this matter, children are going to grow not only in stature but also in mind. If they don't acquire their knowledge from home, they will acquire it somewhere else. Then, nine times out of ten, the child becomes the victim of incorrect knowledge. My conviction is that parents must not suppress anything in the family today. They must stand ready to explain all questions raised by their children when they are asked. In this way, parents may guide their children's development in the channels of truth, helping them adjust themselves to the realities of life in the very beginning.

I am thinking just now of a storm which struck the little town in which I was spending the summer. It came one afternoon when all was calm and everyone was going about his daily duties. All of a sudden, a terrible wind came rolling over the hill bringing rain, thunder, and lightening. It went almost as quickly as it came, but left behind it several trees blown down. The roots were not strong enough to hold the trees erect in the midst of the storm. A growing child is somewhat like a growing tree. As he grows he acquires new branches, but while he is acquiring those new branches he must eat, at the same time, acquiring roots which run deep into the ground. If that child has acquired roots which run deep into the ground of truth, the parent need not fear.

Finally, the modern family must have religion within its walls. It must have a common body of ideals which put meaning and purpose into life for mother, father and children. The best place to find the moral and spiritual ideals which are needed is in the church. Neither one can get along very well without the other. The family needs the church, and the church needs the family. Both working together can undergird the whole of life with, "love, joy, peace, long suffering, kindness, faithfulness, meekness, and self-control."

Just a few months ago Dr. George Buttrick told a group of students at the Henry Wright Cottage that several psychiatrists in the City of New York have been turning over to him some of their worst cases. The technically trained psychiatrists, after rendering all the help that they possibly can to their patients without success, turn them over to a minister of the Gospel, feeling that he has something further to offer which they don't have. He does have something more to offer.—Religion. That is one of the greatest needs of the modern family today. It needs a new vision, a new glimpse of the sky, a spiritual basis of life which will lift it out of the materialistic world in which it exists.

"Finally, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

A NEWSPAPER MAN'S TESTIMONY.

I have known the American missionary in China well. He has been my friend. I have lived at his house. He has dined at my table. I know of no human beings who are more self-sacrificing, more loyal to the people among whom they live, more generous and less materially rewarded for an arduous life than most American missionaries. No matter what happens to China, most of them will remain at their posts valiantly laboring for the simple people who love them.—George E. Sokolsky, in "The New York Herald-Tribune."

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The orphanage had a large car of coal to come in a few days ago. About 74 tons. When a car of coal comes in that means a hard days work for six or eight boys. They took our two mule teams and truck and borrowed a truck and they went at it with a will. I happened to pass by the station and the agent was standing, looking at the boys work. He said to me: "Your boys certainly know how to work." I said to him: "They are looking for the last load as soon as they begin to unload the car." In eight hours' time the car was empty and the coal was on the orphanage grounds.

That is the way your Superintendent feels about our financial end of the orphanage work. We set a goal at the beginning of the year. This year it is twenty-two thousand dollars. We began as soon as the goal was set to look for that twenty-two thousand.

Not a boy who was unloading coal shirked his duty. He stood by the other boys till the job was finished. They gave their best and were happy when the task was finished.

The writer has often thought what if every member of the Congregational-Christian denomination would stand by him as the boys stood by each other what a fine piece of work could be done here—for the dependent child.

We reached and passed our first rung in our financial ladder in our report this week and we are striving to reach the next one—twenty-one more to reach. What part will you play?

The orphanage well has failed till our water supply is inadequate and we will be faced to drill another well and a deeper well in order to get water sufficient to run us. That means quite an item of expense this year. When you start drilling a well in this section it is uncertain as to the depth we will have to go and the amount of water we will find.

Superintendent.

BIG OAK TO BUILD.

The Big Oak Christian Church in the Western North Carolina Conference decided at its quarterly conference in January to build a new church. A committee to solicit subscriptions was appointed, composed of Cecil Thomas, Sam Cole, Alton Richardson, Thomas Brewer, Misses Carnel Stephens, Velma Thomas, Mary Freeman and Coy Linden. The building committee is composed of Rev. George M. Tally, pastor and chairman, D. E. Cole, S. A. Stevens, E. K. Freeman and C. R. Cole.

This is one of our good country churches with a large number of fine young people who are active in church work. Any contribution which anyone may wish to give will be greatly appreciated and will serve a much needed purpose. Any money may be sent to the pastor, Rev. George M. Tally, Route 3, Sanford, North Carolina.

FAMILY ALTAR.

Prayer—Our Father, give us the gentle spirit of Jesus and make us as strong as Paul to stand before whited sepulchres and witness for Jesus against all wrong. Amen.

SATURDAY.

WORK SET TO MUSIC.

"I will sing praises to Thy name, O most High."—Psalm 9:2.

It was in the days of coal-burning ships. A lighter loaded with tons and tons of coal was along side and this coal must be transferred to the bunkers before night, in baskets. All hands were on the job and the band of eighteen pieces sat on deck and played concert. The men thrilled with the music and with rhythmic action, the job was done before night and they were happy again. This job would have been exceedingly irksome had it not been for the music.

Much of life is lonely and tedious but when it is accompanied by music, the singing heart keeps time to the laboring hand. When we sing praises to God's name, we are expressing somewhat of the melody of Heaven to the tune of worldly toil.

Prayer—Our Father, we pray for the great principles of harmony in Thy kingdom—love, joy, peace. Amen.

SUNDAY.

MUSIC AND SONG.

"And David spake to the chief of the Levites to appoint their brethren to be the singers with instruments of music, psalteries and harps and cymbals, sounding by lifting up the voice with joy."—I Cor. 15:16.

Speaking of setting melody to labor also suggests the part which music plays in a discordant world. We have fallen upon a generation of fusses and bustle, trumpet-blowing, drum-beating, advertising, and ballyhoo. It would almost seem as if many of us believed that we ought to take the world by storm. We club together, get up excitements, hold mass meetings, pass resolutions, and listen to a lot of eloquent balony, as if these alone will still the problems of the world. We have more faith in the whirlwind than we do in the still small voice; and we are mistaking flash and enthusiasm for the celebration of triumph.

It were well that we had less faith in noise and more in that God-like thing of bringing up our children in Christ-likeness and in sustaining the efficiency of the Holy Spirit in every day life.

We are glad always when there is emphasis placed upon high class music in our cities and on our radios because it spells harmony in life. Such harmony is more important than words. A good character is more influential than sensational.

Prayer—Our Father, there are two musics, the loud and coarse and the over-powering sweet, soft and low. Grant unto us the listening ear for the melodies of life in all of our actions. Amen.

In Memoriam

KITE.

Mrs. Lavinia Huffman Kite, one of the oldest members of the Leakesville Christian Church, near Luray, Va., passed to her reward on January 29, 1938. Her age was 85 years and she had been a member of the Leakesville Church for 49 years having united with the church under the pastorate of Rev. D. A. Barney. In 1896 Sister Kite was elected sexton and served in that capacity until her death. Her passing from our midst will create a vacancy which cannot be easily filled. Not only the immediate family but also the entire community will greatly miss her.

She leaves 4 daughters, 1 son, 10 grandchildren, and 8 great-grandchildren to mourn after her. May the eternal God comfort each of them.

W. J. ANDES.

OSBOURNE.

William Benton Osbourne was born November 14, 1876, at Belew Creek, N. C., and died there January 29 1938. He leaves his wife three daughters, Mrs. Clarence Hester, Kernersville; Mrs. Walter Preston, Mrs. Willard Martin, Belew Creek; three brothers, all of this state, and a great host of other relatives and friends. To know him was to love him.

He professed faith in Christ and joined Belew Creek Christian Church at the age of 21, remaining a true and faithful member to the end. He was greatly interested in the erection of a new house of worship, and worked on the building until noon the day before he died.

Funeral services were held at Belew Creek by this writer, assisted by a former pastor, Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, Sunday afternoon with interment in adjoining cemetery.

May the giver of every good and perfect gift comfort the bereaved is the prayer of his humble pastor.

G. H. VEAZEY.

SHILLINGBURG.

On January 24, 1938, Mr. John T. Shillingburg, a faithful member of the Dry Run Christian Church, Seven Fountains, Va., followed the beckon of the Death Angel. Mr. Shillingburg had lived 72 years in this world and had striven to lead the Christ-like life.

Services were conducted at the home of the deceased by the writer in the absence of the pastor Rev. R. D. Coulter. Mourning the passing of the father and husband are his beloved wife and their several grown children.

W. J. ANDES.

EATON.

Joseph Edward Eaton died at his home, Capon Bridge, West Va., January 12, 1938, in his 75th year. He was married twice. His first marriage was to the late Mrs. Hattie Sine Eaton who died several years ago. His last wife who survives him, was Mrs. Minnie Oates of Capon Bridge. Bro. Eaton was the father of four children by his first wife. His widow, three daughters, two sisters and one brother survive.

He professed faith in Christ and united with the Timber Ridge Church more than sixty years ago, while the late Rev. John H. Barney was pastor. Brother Eaton has, perhaps, the distinction of being one of, if not the longest office holder, in continuous service in our denomination. He was, according to information given by the family, choir director, or in charge of the music of the church for more than fifty years. He was a musician of note and organized several bands and wrote band music. He was much in demand as a penman and was called upon frequently to write legal documents and other papers for his friends. He was a trustee at the time of his death, serving the church also in this capacity for many years.

Funeral services were held in the church, Sunday morning, January 16th, after which his body was interred in the church cemetery. An exceedingly large host of friends assembled in and about the church which he had so long and so faithfully served to pay a last tribute to his memory. The church suffers a great loss in his passing, and we pray that some one may step into the place made vacant who will prove as loyal and faithful as he. May God comfort the hearts of his loved ones and friends.

His pastor,
ROBERT A. WHITTEN.

WALKER.

Mr. W. D. Walker was born March 24, 1861, and departed this life January 4, 1938. He was a native of Alamance County, N. C. Mr. Walker is survived by his wife, one son, W. E. Walker, and several neices and nephew.

Brother Walker professed Christ as his personal Saviour in early life and lived consistently to the end. He was admitted to Shallow Ford Christian Church in 1885 and was elected deacon in May, 1887. At the time of his death he was the oldest living officer of his church. He served as secretary from 1892 to 1923, acted as superintendent of the Sunday school for several years, served on various committees, represented his congregation at many conferences and conventions. He was a strong advocate of temperance.

Funeral services were conducted by his pastor assisted by Revs. C. E. Gerringer, J. L. Foster and T. J. Green. Interment was in the church cemetery.

May the Lord comfort the loved ones.

L. L. WYRICK.

NORTON.

The passing of Mrs. S. E. Norton of Thorsby, Alabama, early Friday, January 14, 1938 came as a shock to the whole community as she seemed to be getting better from a three weeks' illness. She became worse Thursday night but seemed to be relieved of her suffering—went to sleep, from which she did not awaken.

Mr and Mrs. Norton came to Thorsby in the early days of its history. With them came two sons, Sereno and Edwin. Edwin died at the age of twelve. Sereno was one of the first graduates of Thorsby Institute, which school was started in 1906, largely through the efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Norton. When it was started, there was no high school in the country. Through the years their interest in Thorsby Institute has continued, Mrs. Norton taking Mr. Norton's place as a trustee after his death.

They were charter members of the Thorsby Congregational Church. Mrs. Norton had recently resigned as superintendent of the primary department of the Congregational Church. She had been superintendent for 22 years. She was a deaconess at the Congregational Church for several years, until her death, and was secretary of the Ladies Guild. She was interested in anything promoting worth while things in Thorsby.

Last May she celebrated her 80th birthday, and many friends called. Very recently she gave the church a beautiful pulpit Bible.

Instead of sending flowers, the Ladies Aid and friends plan to give the church some memorial in her honor. We know that a life of good works means an abundant entrance into the life hereafter.

Funeral services were held at the Congregational Church on Sunday at 11 o'clock. The Rev. L. L. Stanley and Rev. E. W. Butler officiated. Burial was in the town cemetery.

SMITH.

Page County of Virginia mourns the loss of Herman Casper Smith, who was born November 27, 1894, and died January 30, 1938. From wounds which he received in the war, Brother Smith's days were shortened. Nevertheless war does not care for human life.

Brother Smith was a faithful member of the Newport Christian Church near Shenandoah, Virginia, attending whenever his health permitted. Bad health however did not lessen his religious health but he lived a Christian life through it all.

His wife, two children, aged father and mother, one sister and two brothers survive the deceased.

The writer, assisted by the Odd Fellow's Lodge and the Veterans of Foreign Wars, conducted the funeral at his church, Newport.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES

Don't forget that offering for Elon College! This is our institution. Its success or failure is ours.

The value of THE CHRISTIAN SUN depends upon what is printed and the people who read it. The more readers, the more valuable the paper.

Thank you, friends, for the fine response to THE CHRISTIAN SUN Campaign. We are still far from the goal set but many of you have done excellent service.

The four hundred families that have just started taking THE CHRISTIAN SUN are cordially welcomed into the family of those who have been reading it before. We hope you will like us.

Enrollment at Elon College for the year has reached 671. The winter session enrollment stands at 570, while the summer session was 101. This is a new high for the Elon student body.

A layman has requested that reports be given so laymen can tell whether or not their pastor has worked at the task of getting new subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. This request will be granted about the close of the campaign.

Rev. B. J. Earp says that he knows an elderly lady in the hills of Carroll County, Virginia, who would like to have THE CHRISTIAN SUN but is unable to subscribe for it. If some reader wishes to make this kind of contribution, it will be greatly appreciated.

At the North Carolina ministers' meeting at Elon recently, Rev. Carl Voss discussed: "Are We Overemphasizing the Social Gospel?" A distinguished visitor was Dr. Charles E. Burton, secretary of the General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches.

Rev. Arnold Slater, pastor of Albenarle Congregational Church in North Carolina, has accepted a call to the Holy Neek Christian Church, near Holland, Virginia, and will begin his work there the first week of March. Holy Neek has not had an active pastor since Dr. N. G. Newman retired last fall.

Rev. E. J. Sanderson, pastor, says that our church at Monticello (N. C.) will have a dedication service on next Sunday, the 27th. They have recently painted and papered the inside, varnished all wood fixtures and floor, bought a new carpet and a set of hymn books. Congratulations to this fine country church which works in the shadow of one of North Carolina's good high schools.

Dr. C. H. Rowland, pastor emeritus of First Church, Greensboro, has sufficiently recovered from Angina to be able to go to church almost every Sunday. His eyes are so bad that he cannot do much reading but he enjoys his radio and having his friends visit him. He would like those who write him to know that he appreciates their messages even though he is unable to answer all of them.

The mid-year rushing season of fraternities and sororities at Elon College ended Saturday night when the groups sent out bids to new members. In order to be eligible for membership, a student was required to average 80 on his subjects. The fraternities on the campus are Alpha Pi Delta, Kappa Psi Nu, Sigma Phi Beta, and Iota Tau Kappa. The sororities are Delta Upsilon Kappa, Beta Omicron Beta, and Tau Zeta Phi.

Our church at Newport News, Virginia, celebrated its Eighth Anniversary of the new building on February 13th, with a fine program in which the former pastor, Rev. Robert Lee House, and Dr. M. S. Poulson of Portsmouth took part. At that time they dedicated the new organ and the hearing-aid set. The pastor, Rev. Jesse H. Dollar and the people of the church are to be congratulated on their attainments. A nice printed bulletin for the day carried the picture of the church and the complete ceremony which was used.

HENDERSON YOUNG PEOPLE.

The members of the Young People's Christian Endeavor Society of the Henderson Congregational Christian Church had a "covered dish supper" at the church, Tuesday evening, January 11, at 6:30 o'clock. Each person brought a "covered dish" of something eatable. Rolls and coffee were furnished out of the funds in the hands of the treasurer. There were about twenty young people there who entered into the fellowship of the evening. The pastor, Rev. J. Everette Neese, was toastmaster.

The Methodist Protestant-Recorder graciously loaned us the cut for our front page this week, and the Messenger Corporation of Auburn, Indiana, kindly gave us their copyright permission to use it. For both of these courtesies we are deeply grateful. The picture is by W. E. Sallman. Dr. R. L. Shipley, editor, described the picture so well that this editor simply says a loud "amen" and passes on the article to readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

"The picture, which we are privileged to present on our cover page, is by an artist of whose life and other work we know nothing and of the circumstances attending the creation of this portrait we are in ignorance. A calendar by the Messenger Corporation to be hung in our office first brought this portrait of our Lord to our attention. It won our heart. The work is done in pastel with an economy of touch and a handling of color that shows supreme skill in this difficult medium. The halo has the full colors of the rainbow shading from high white to deep blue in the shadows done with rare taste and tone in composition. The brow of our Lord and teacher is majestic. Behind that noble forehead is the mind of Christ in which is the truth of God. The eyes are lifted leading our thoughts to the higher things which ever held his mind. The mouth has nobility and strength, for compassion and righteousness were in the words spoken by his lips.

"In every way this is to us a satisfying and inspiring conception of Jesus. We will live with it this year as it hangs on our walls in the calendar and then include it in our ever growing collection of the representations of Christ in Art. We are grateful to the artist for a splendid creation and we are appreciative of the courtesy of the publishers for the privilege of reprinting it in our paper. The Messenger Corporation of Auburn, Indiana, is making a definite contribution to the religious life of the nation in producing sacred calendars by which the beauty of Jesus and the words of His truth are placed in thousands of homes."

ELON SUMMER CONFERENCE.

Rev. W. E. Wisseman, dean of the Elon Summer School (conference) announces that the school will be in session June 27th to July 2nd, next. Let every pastor, Sunday school superintendent, teacher and young person interested in Christian living and service remember the date and begin to plan to attend this fine training school.

A WORTHWHILE MEETING.

Great interest was shown in a meeting of the Executive Committee and Departmental Superintendents of Eastern Virginia last Friday evening when sixteen out of twenty officers were present for discussion of problems and plans. This group really worked. The value of leadership training and literature was discussed. The use of books available from the Board of Christian Education was emphasized. The group urged the Executive Committee to recommend the purchase of books helpful to departmental superintendents in their work and the publication of a classified list of books and materials that the Board of Christian Education may have to be placed in the hands of pastors and church school superintendents. The departments were divided into four groups and four committees were named to study objectives, organization, methods and materials and report their findings to the next executive meeting at Suffolk Christian Church, May 6th, 7:30 P. M. The departmental superintendents will write local superintendents and teachers soon for your problems and suggestions to be used in this work. Please give a hearty response. We hope to publish complete curricula to be used of all church schools in the Convention which will be distributed at the July meeting. Your help is urgent.

CARL R. KEY,
Executive Secretary.

THE VALUE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The last issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN came to my desk yesterday. As usual I read it from cover to cover. There were many interesting and inspiring articles, sermon topics, illustrations, reports from denominational organizations and groups well worth the time and effort it took to read them. There are features for every member of the family.

The individual church member needs THE CHRISTIAN SUN to keep well informed as to the activities of the various boards, institutions and local churches. These need THE CHRISTIAN SUN as a medium through which to publish valuable factual data and inspirational material that each progressive layman and leader should know. As a forward looking communion located in the section of our country now called the frontier of America we must keep this organ functioning.

My success as a pastor in THE CHRISTIAN SUN campaign thus far has been nil but I am still working and my people will rally behind this cause. Whether we succeed or whether we fail in this work it seems to me that not an unwise step to take would be to include THE CHRISTIAN SUN in the regular apportionment of conferences and local churches. This is a suggestion that should not be laughed off but given serious consideration. It is worth the consideration of the Publications Committee, every official and individual in the Southern Convention. Leading laymen in this church feel that this would be a forward step. This discussion should not stop here. Who will be the next to comment? Why not discuss it at the Southern Convention in April?

A BIRTHDAY OBSERVANCE.

Dr. N. G. Newman is 70 years old. There is nothing in his appearance to indicate that he has reached three-score and ten years on his pilgrimage. He is grateful and does not hesitate to reveal the exact date of his birth. On Sunday, February 13th, the anniversary of his birth, a number of his neighbors and friends, members of Oakland and other churches of the community, decided to give him a surprise party. So nearly seventy people visited the Newman home, near Everetts, Virginia, and extended their congratulations and "pounded" the preacher. Suitable hymns were sung, prayer was offered and refreshments were served. The occasion was a very pleasant surprise to the family and was very much enjoyed by the entire group.

Dr. Newman and his faithful wife are happily located on the farm where he resided when he decided to enter the ministry. He has accepted his retirement gracefully and cheerfully and finds much joy in attending the church of his boyhood days. It is a benediction to the church to have these faithful workers in the congregation. He is able to preach as opportunity may be offered to him. Other ministers who need an occasional supply will find him available for such service. His Post Office address is, Windsor, Virginia, Route No. 2.

Congratulations to Dr. Newman! Congratulations to the friends who so thoughtfully remembered him on his birthday! Retired ministers should be remembered. Dr. and Mrs. Newman deserve all the kindness and consideration that the church can offer. They have given their best years to the people whom they have served. They have labored faithfully and have been loyal to every institution of our church. Such occasions brighten their evening hours, and substantially help to reduce the grocery bill for several weeks.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK AT LAGRANGE.

Although she is too modest to allow her name to be mentioned in the foregoing report, much of the credit for the splendid accomplishments of the United Church Christian Endeavor for the year 1937 should go to the Director of Young People's Work, Miss Mary Florence Moore.

In these days when real church workers are all to scarce and many seem to be serving Christ with ulterior motives and half-heartedness, it is a real joy to the pastor to find one who gives herself unstintedly and with genuine enthusiasm to her part of the church's work.

The young people's work is the strongest arm of the United Church, and this is so because of the consecration and spiritual vision of this young lady.

May God raise up throughout all His church, men and women who are willing to Put Christ First and serve Him with integrity and absolute devotion. This alone will advance the cause of Christ in a world of darkness and delusion.

Young people, the cause of Christ is Supreme! Do you believe it?

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

WELCOME.

This week four hundred families will receive copies of "The Christian Sun" who did not get it last Christmas. We give you a hearty welcome into the circle of those who read about their Church and the progress of the kingdom of God here on earth. This is a large group of people who are members of Congregational and Christian Churches (with a few other friends included). We are delighted to have you join us.

You are not expected to agree with all the opinions expressed in this paper. We believe in freedom of thought and expression. There are wide varieties of opinion among our people. No two of us would describe God exactly alike; neither would we agree absolutely on the processes of salvation. We do agree, however, that into human experiences can come the fellowship and the redeeming grace of God which make us able to live happier one with the other here in this present world and look forward to life in the world to come. If you find some briars among the gospel hay, please use the judgment of cattle and eat the hay while you discard the part that you cannot digest. If you look carefully from week to week through the paper you will probably find some sweet morsel that will give you strength. If you have an opinion concerning how the paper may be more useful or how the churches can do a better service, you are invited to share that opinion with your friends.

Your editor does not claim to know the solution to our problems nor the answer to all our questions. He is an ordinary man who is struggling to live the Christian life in a turbulent world. His opinions may be right or wrong. He can express only those he has, and must do so to be honest with himself and his readers. Bouquets and corrections are received gladly. Your comments are invited.

If some week there is nothing in the paper that exactly fits your case, kindly wait with patience and read the next issue. It may be that the message for you will come then. We are zealously striving to present the needed information and inspirational help so members of Congregational and Christian Churches may live happily and successfully. In this spirit we welcome you to the fellowship of those who since 1844 have read "The Christian Sun." Many of our readers have gone to the great beyond where others will soon join them. You have come to fill the ranks and to strengthen the church. Welcome, and God bless you.

PROBLEMS OF THE COMING CONVENTION.

Both laymen and ministers here and there say that the coming Southern Convention will mean a crisis in our Southern Church. They say that it doesn't seem sensible for one person to be pastor of a church, secretary of the Board of Christian Education, and editor of "The Christian Sun." They say that leadership training needs an emphasis that it does not now have in our local churches. They say that evangelism ought to have somebody to promote it. They say that too many calls come to the churches for money, and that there is not enough guidance on the part of the Convention for local churches. They say that the Convention owes the churches some obligation to aid them in their attempt to gain new members, train those they have and work cooperatively for the building of the kingdom of God on earth.

These ministers and laymen are saying that there should be someone to visit churches that become ill at ease and out of harmony with what they think is the program of the church and that this someone should be a friend who would give the needed information and kindly direction so that the churches can understand, and therefore cooperate with the denomination.

Whether we like it or not, ministers and laymen believe that there should be a decided change in our methods of doing things. Many of them think we should be sharing in the home missionary work of our Church throughout the country, and not merely in our own states. They are not willing to continue as a part of a denomination whose denominational program they do not support. Some of them feel that we must either do a better job in cooperating with the denomination or simply back out and set up a sect of our own. Apparently they are not convinced, many of them, that all of our boards are a necessity and that so many calls for money should be given to the churches.

All of which means that when the Convention meets the last of April, there are definite problems which should be solved. In order that our people may begin to think concerning these problems, your editor dares state some of them boldly and invite discussion through the pages of this paper concerning them.

The following must be considered:

1. How can "The Christian Sun" be edited and financed? Should there be a full-time editor, a pastor editor, or an editor who is secretary of some board, or boards?

2. Can the Board of Christian Education be combined with the Board of Education or the Mission Board, and a field worker sent out for promotional work?

3. Should the Mission Board continue with a mission secretary, independent of other boards?

4. Should the Convention elect a convention secretary who will promote all phases of convention work? If so, how could the Mission Board, the Board of Christian Education, the Board of Superannuation, Elon College, and the Christian Orphanage be sure that their programs will continue effectively? Should editing "The Christian Sun" be a part of this secretary's work?

5. Can the promotional work of the Convention be done for less money and more effectively than at present? Is there any way (Please turn to next page.)

Thoughts On Approaching Lent

(An Editorial in "The Southern Churchman.")

NOTE: This thoughtful editorial from our contemporary publication of the Protestant Episcopal Church has real value to those of us who are members of non-liturgical churches. EDITOR.

It's a queer world in which we live. Anyone who had experienced a Rip Van Winkle sleep twenty years ago would have a very rude awakening in 1938, and indeed those of us who have been alive and supposedly awake must often rub our eyes in astonishment at the different world we find ourselves in.

Politically twenty years ago we were ending a "war to end wars." Today we find the world in a bustle of preparation for the next war, and serious news letters are sent out every week warning the subscribers that two years more of peace is all this country can look forward to with safety. Twenty years ago democracy was the ideal form of government, and Germany was swapping a monarchy for a democracy. Today there are few nations left with the democratic principles of government taken seriously, and a vague doubt of democracy ever being a successful form of government is heard on every side—even in France, England and America. The world that was to be made safe for democracy has become the renaissance of dictatorship.

Theologically, twenty years ago the liberals seemed to be in the ascendancy. The great preachers and prophets were of that school of thought and the controversies which were engaged in theologically at least found the liberals with the sympathy of the multitudes. Today the liberal is the butt of all jokes and the bete noir of all other schools of thought. On one hand the extreme conservatives, fewer in number than twenty years ago, but still active, fire at him the accusation of a weak faith undermining the individual religious experience. On the other hand the radical, whose very existence has been allowed because there were liberals, accuses the liberal of being weak, wishy-washy, sentimental and unqualified to lead in a very realistic world.

Twenty years ago the automobile was still somewhat of a novelty. Most country roads were of mud, or at best, of gravel. The rural missionary who owned a car was a rarity and considered somewhat of a luxurious person. The suburbs were still suburbs, and the great missionary gifts had to come from the great city parishes. Today the automobile is a necessity. The suburbs are rapidly threatening the city, and some even predict that in another twenty years factories and slums will be the only city activities. The city church is wondering whether it has another twenty years of life, and at least one church which formerly raised four hundred thousand a year is worried because of the eighty thousand asked only forty is subscribed. Twenty years ago the final plans for the "Nation Wide" were about to be put into effect and the Church giving was about to be brought to its highest peak. Today many are wondering whether such methods are of any use.

Twenty years ago it was still the "thing" to go to church, and hard boiled bankers testified that loans were sometimes made because they knew certain individuals went to church. Today it is not "the thing" to go to church. Those who come want to come, but respectability is not dependent upon church membership.

All of this seems gloomy, but behind the changes we find a questioning and a wondering on the part of people as to whether life is worthwhile, and when men start questioning their conduct there is always hope for religion.

The country club has not proved spiritually helpful. The automobile has not made restless souls restless. The clergy are wondering whether a professional ministry is at all a necessity. The time is ripe for either disaster or revival.

As the Church approaches Lent, we come to the Sundays of the "funny names," as one little girl said. The gospels, epistles and collects remind us of bravery. The note is courage and the appeal is to trust in God and try His ways instead of ours for a needed change.

The temptation comes to all to be discouraged. Confirmed pacifists are urging bigger and better armies and navies, but some still believe God has a better way out of our troubles. The note of courage is needed for those who have come to believe that direct revolutionary action is necessary to cure our troubles. Direct action generally means we have run out of ideas. There is always, untried, the way of education and cooperation, but it takes a brave soul to believe that this is true.

The signs point to a better Church than the one of twenty years ago. Clergy today are more humble in their approach to humanity's needs. Those who do worship are more aware of their needs. Young people are not so cock sure of their own ideas and are ready to be converted to better spiritual living and thinking.

If all of us will find courage in our hearts and make a strong resolution to seriously try and practice our religion during the forty days of Lent, we will have made our first strong steps of discipleship in the right direction. The modern habit of seeing evil and feeling that nothing can be done about it is our most besetting sin. We know that our problems are bigger problems and we are not interested in small things, but it takes Christians of deep conviction and courage to accomplish what is needed. Twenty years has changed us, but God can change us to meet the world in which we live.

PROBLEMS OF THE COMING CONVENTION.

to make fewer calls on the churches and still have more money for our enterprises?

6. In what ways can we co-operate more effectively with the denomination, especially in support of the General Council and the Home Boards, which include home missions, young people's work, and leadership training?

7. Has the time come for a definite expansion of our Church by discontinuing our support to present churches and organizing new churches?

8. How can our weaker churches be undergirded and given new strength without using all the home mission money that it is possible to raise? What about grouping churches in pastorates?

9. Can some plan be formulated by which we can greatly increase our church membership? If so, what is the plan, and how can it be promoted?

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The merger of the Congregational and Christian Churches has caused a number of Christian Churches to drop the emphasis of the distinctive doctrines of that group. A number of Christian ministers accept this situation as an evidence of good fellowship. This is one of the losses sustained by the merger. These churches are frequently referred to as, "former Christian Churches." So far the expression, "former Congregational Churches" has not been called to the attention of this writer. The Congregational Churches retain their identity and name and announce their distinctive doctrines, when opportunity is offered. This should be the policy of both groups of churches. Both have a mission to fill and their similarity should be an incentive to intensive teaching in the United Fellowship.

Other denominations in Virginia, contiguous to the Christian Churches, are teaching their members the tenets of their faith and creed. Their young people are being taught the great doctrines of the church to which they have dedicated their lives. Are the Christian churches doing this to any great extent? Is there any institution of higher learning that offers an adequate course of instruction in the History and Doctrines of the Christian Churches? Are the young ministers who graduate from our colleges thoroughly trained to teach the doctrines of the church to which they are called? Is there a Seminary available for graduates to study such a course?

Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian Churches provide for the training of their ministers and require such a course before ordination. They use their Church forms of worship. The colleges and seminaries which offer courses of study for the prospective ministers of the Christian Churches do not provide a curriculum of a distinctive denominational type comparable to other denominations. One may expect to find any form of worship from the High Episcopal to the Public Forum in Christian Churches. And the types of theological definition have at least fifty-seven varieties, more or less, according to the numbers studied. That depends upon the personal bias of the minister. Some of our ministers do not subscribe for the church paper. They do not use the book, Principles and Government of the Christian Church, as a guide for funerals, communion service or marriages. They use any book, or form, that suits their personal taste. There is nothing in the service to indicate the denominational affiliation of the minister or the church.

One who attends a Methodist or an Episcopal Church does not ask: "What church is this?" The service speaks for itself and for the Church. Some of our churches should be labeled both on the outside and in flaming letters across the pulpit. No one would discover the name by the message of the minister, or the program of worship.

Some reader may accept this as a harsh and unjust criticism. It is not the function of this writer to indicate what the distinctive message of the Christian Churches should be. That would be presumption beyond measure. Certainly it should not be far afield with Racial, Economic, or Political Prejudice. It should be a distinctly Biblical message. Evil should be challenged. Sin should be rebuked. Sinners should be convicted. Great Biblical doctrines should be defined and interpreted reverently and with great care. The Church should be magnified and exalted. The Fatherhood of God, the Sonship of Jesus Christ and the Personality of the Holy Spirit will have a place in such a message. The Bible is our creed, Jesus Christ is the Head of the Church and the Holy Spirit is our guide. Christian liberty and Christian living will have a new emphasis. And the kingdom of God should be extended to the uttermost parts of the earth, and intensified in the inner recesses of our lives.

COLLEGE ACTIVITIES.

The first semester of 1937-38 closed several weeks ago. We have gone a considerable way into the second semester. Our total enrollment for this scholastic year is 570. The Senior Class that will graduate in May numbers 70, which is the largest graduating class in the history of the college. Already we are beginning enrollment for the 1938-39 sessions. We have quite a list of prospective students who are planning definitely to enter Elon in the fall. Mr. Colclough, our Field Secretary, is alert and on the go constantly endeavoring to help high school seniors with their college problems. Every high school graduate who anticipates college wants to know something about what goes on at the college to which he will go other than regular routine requirements.

The college campus of today is teeming with young life. Young men and young women are ambitious and full of energy, ready for achievements. College assignments should, perhaps, consume most of their time, but they do not. There must be extra curricular activities providing opportunities for expending energies along wholesome lines and with profitable purposes.

At Elon College we go in for athletics, realizing that a wholesome athletic program not only helps to keep young people physically fit but to make them mentally alert and morally safe. We have a complete intramural program and varsity teams for all major intercollegiate sports. A series of student entertainments is sponsored by the students themselves. The faculty in cooperation with the students provides a lyceum course of merit. Prominent artists come to our campus at regular intervals for evening entertainments. Literary societies and debating clubs provide opportunity for the exercise of oratorical abilities. Student and faculty recitals demonstrate in a practical way achievements along cultural lines. Dramatic presentations and May Day exercises provide a certain fantastic flare that appeals to the esthetic side of student life. Through Sunday services, Sunday school classes, and the religious activities program which includes early morning watch, the spiritual life of the student is encouraged and nurtured.

All campus activities at Elon College exist for the training and the development of the whole of life that the individual student after leaving Elon College as a graduate may not feel embarrassed in usual situations at home or abroad.

L. E. SMITH.

LOVE IN THE HILLS.

Here where majestic peaks kiss the sky, love is doing a great work. Only a few years ago a muddy trail, wide enough for one wagon at a time, was the only road across these hills to connect us with the outside world. That was the same trail Daniel Boone traveled across the Blue Ridge Mountains, and when I first remember it must not have been so far different from the wilderness trail as Boone saw it. Up until the church came to our hills the Fancy Gap road was the same wilderness trail winding up through a gap in the mountains. Sharp peaks rising like saw teeth on the left and the trail hugging the mountain on the right side of a deep valley. Life in our hills in those days was as rugged and unpleasant as the trail across the hills. At that time young people knew they couldn't hope for very much from life. A girl here knew she need not dream of anything higher than a husband who would leave her any hour of the night if he heard his hound dog bay, and her home might be simply a mountain cabin with a chimney that smoked. She would certainly be expected to work in the field, to milk the cows, feed the cattle, cut wood, get water and do her house work. I see now the old life passing from our hills. No longer is the man lord and master here. Along the same trail, which is now hard surfaced, nice little modern homes are being put up. These little love nests here and there tell me our hills are changing. I see nicely-kept lawns with flowers in summer, and often one sees a young husband milking the cow. That used to be "gal's work" in the hills. The mountaineer is making up his mind that he had rather be a "man" than to be lord and master of his home; and rather have a wife and companion than merely a servant, in the old days called "his woman."

Oh, if I had been a boy, of course, I never would have told this on our hills, but I was one of "them thar gals" and I have waited and hoped for these changes I now see taking place here. It seems to me that pretty soon now these hills will turn out some husbands good enough for most anybody. But wait a while, girls, don't rush up here yet. Our preacher said Sunday that there was room for improvement in every man's life. And no old maid looks as lonely to me as a married woman who doesn't know where her husband is when the sun drops over the hills. No, don't offer me any sympathy yet; for I do have a flower garden, and I know where to find it when the sun goes down. That's better than what I might have had if the light of Christianity had never reached these hills.

In all sincerity, I thank you Christian friends for the light of love, for it has brought a new day—a new life to our hills. The church is here to stay and life will never be what it used to be again. We thank God for that. The outside world may feel that this place is slow moving on, that little good has been done here; but I can safely speak for our hills and tell you that you are doing one of the finest pieces of work right here in Old Virginia that the Church has ever done. I ought to know, when I am one of those who owes what little I am, and all I ever expect to be, to the Christian Church. Many a young person here owes all that is worthwhile about him, or her, to the Church. And many people all over our land owe all they are to the Church. May each of us now search our hearts and realize how much we owe to the Church of the living God.

Brother Earp says, "God wants men, He doesn't want their money." God doesn't need money. Christians can use money to help people and run things, but when we support a church we are only helping ourselves. We don't go to school to help the teacher, or go to church to help the preacher; and certainly God gets no profit from either no matter how much money we put into it. God wants souls. God wants men and women, boys and girls, to do a work of love. No servant of God has ever made it more clear in these hills that it is souls God wants. Of course Mr. Earp puts down some money and explains that it is tithe money and that he believes a Christian will give a tenth—not to God, but to help in some way to give the love of God to some lonely heart. And Mr. Earp carries his religion with him as he travels. He goes into the little schools by the waysides and preaches to the children, and the children like it. This man has come to bring the love of God to our hills, and he is giving every man, woman and child a chance to reach for the prize that is worth more than all the world. Please lend your prayers, dear friends, that this man of God may never be disappointed in our hills. I don't want to see his dreams and hopes fade and die. I hope that we can always be what he expects us to be. And I want to say here to our folks who read THE CHRISTIAN SUN here in the hills, God is giving us a wonderful chance by giving us a leader who is truly great. May we realize this and make the most of this opportunity.

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A PRAYER.

(A Correspondence.)

Florida Sanitarium,
Orlando, Florida,
February 19, 1938.

It is noted that March 5th is appointed the World's Day of Prayer. How sorely, indeed, does this world of ours need a day, many days, of prayer. It is but a platitude to say we are living in a distraught, and divided world. It is not only nation against nation, creed against creed; but at the very time when denominations and churches are planning and praying for a union of their forces we see division, contention, strife within the church such as has not been witnessed in generations. Some ministers in their pulpits are declaring that what the world needs and must have is the "Social Gospel." Others with equal vehemence are declaring that the world's one hope is the "Individual Gosepl." Likewise, there are ministers declaring with all zeal and fervor that Fundamentalists are certainly preaching the only gospel that can save us. Then with equal zeal and fervor there are those who declare that the world's only hope and salvation is a "Liberal Gospel!" Some are declaring that only our educated ministry can lead us out of the wilderness. Others aver that all the minister needs is a call from God, and a conviction that "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel," education or no education. And so on and so on till the heart grows sick and the anxious soul cries out: "Who shall deliver me from this body of death?"

I have just glanced over the Saturday paper which carries the church announcements for the city of some 35,000 inhabitants. It is, one presumes, typical of other cities of similar size in our country. Just reading the list with the announcements, is enough to make us weep. Take the following of those who claim to be absolutely fundamental, to teach only what the Bible teaches, and preach only what is found and known to be proven by the very letter of the "blessed Book." In this number who rest their claim solely on what is proven beyond all question in the Bible, hundreds of texts, come the "Seventh Day Adventist;" then note the following who by their name declare and aver that their church is the one church "The Church of the Open Bible"; "Pentecostal Assembly of God"; "Orlando's Company of Jehovah's Witnesses"; "Community Church of God"; "Church of Christ"; "First Church of Christ Scientist"; "Christian and Missionary Alliance"; "Salvation Army." Then those claiming to be more liberal, but nevertheless based on the Book: six Baptist churches, two Catholic churches; several Presbyterian, Methodists (M. E. South and Protestant); two Christian churches; two Episcopal, two Lutheran, and one Unitarian. All these and more are persuading men and women, young and old to come their way—they each, in their own teaching at last, being on the right track—"they know they are for they have abundance of Scripture, an unlimited number of texts, to prove that they are right."

Is it any wonder that the Christian world is bewildered, and the very heart of our Lord cries out from the Cross: "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." One can but agree with the greatest preacher of our day, Rev. E. Stanley Jones, who in his recent book, Victorious Living, says: "We have so exhausted our resources in putting up ecclesiastical walls between ourselves and others, that we have little left to use in helping redeem a world. If the time, intelligence and soul—force which we have expended in proving that we were right as against our brethren had been expended in united action against the problems of sin and evil they would not now be far from solution." "These diversions have brought a cloud over our religious life—dark, rainless clouds, clouds that presage storms of revolt. God is today speaking out of that cloud. 'This is my Son, hear Him.' And that Son is saying: 'Father, I will that they may be one.' When we become one, the clouds will lift."

What the world needs on March 5th is to pray fervently the agonizing prayer of our Lord recorded in the 17th Chapter of John.

REPORT OF GREENSBORO WOMAN'S SOCIETY.

During the first quarter of our new year, our Woman's Missionary and Aid Society has gotten off at a good gait. In October we installed our new officers and reorganized our six groups. In November we gave our annual Thanksgiving Sunday evening program, and in our inspirational monthly meeting had a splendid peace program which carried a great message. Also, we had a Mission Study Day with the women from Palm Street and Hine's Chaple Churches as guests of our society. In December we had our annual Christmas party with more than fifty women present. Too, during this month, we put on our drive to secure subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and thus endeth the first quarter.

MRS. C. H. ROWLAND,
President.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Mrs. John G. Truitt, president of the Woman's Mission Board of the Southern Convention, is calling a meeting of that board to be held in Dr. Atkinson's office at Elon College, beginning at 10 o'clock, Saturday morning, March 5, 1938. All members of the board and others having business with the board will please take note and govern themselves accordingly.

A little girl named Alice, who has two sisters, Mary and Martha, went to church with them some Sundays ago, only to return home wrathful and tearful. "What's the mater darling?" her mother asked.

"Oh, Mummy," she burst out, "our minister's just horrid. He preached a whole sermon about Mary and Martha, and never mentioned me."—Methodist Recorder.

VISIT OUR MISSIONARIES IN MICRONESIA.

By DOROTHY P. CUSHING.

About two thousand miles southwest of Hawaii and the same distance southeast of Japan lies the Micronesian Islands, some two thousand pin pricks on the great Southern Pacific, many of them hardly more than atolls. Formerly held by the Germans, they are now under the mandate of Japan.

Micronesia.

To look at these islands on the map is not at all impressive, but there is a school on one island, a member of the Caroline group, which is doing a unique piece of work under the direction of Rev. and Mrs. Clarence F. McCall of the American Board and Miss Eleanor Wilson, a Massachusetts woman. This school has two very definite aims: first, the building of character by terms of religious influence and instruction and a school curriculum suitable to the needs and ability of the students; second, the improvement of the school premises and the development of a large plantation which furnishes work necessary for creating habits of industry, cleanliness, and responsibility in the boys and girls.

Large numbers of papayas, bananas, pineapples, and other fruits and vegetables have been planted in order to increase the school food supply. The boys are also taught how to care for rabbits, chickens, pigs, and cows in the hope that they will put this to good use later on in providing for their own families.

Nature has been very prodigal in her gifts to these island peoples and living has not been a very complicated affair up to the present. Time is of little consequence, and there are few clocks on the island. People have been somewhat in the habit of doing things when it was convenient.

Now, however, there is a new regime and the Japanese officials insist upon enough work being done in the villages to keep them reasonably clean, and they have made a number of improvements. The island people, however, have little idea of business, and since these islands will be expected to support several times the present population—for undoubtedly the Japanese are there to stay—the Micronesians must learn to keep up with the pace or be completely submerged.

In character the people are generally quiet and peaceable. The boys and girls are for the most part bright and learn quickly. Their chief shortcomings seem to be a lack of the power and initiative, concentration, and persistence—a combination of liabilities which are the natural outcome of their geographical and historical background.

Believing that these young future leaders of their people should be trained in heart, head, and hand, the McCalls have worked out a day in which part of the time is spent in school at their desks and the other part in actual work. To develop leadership the students are given responsibilities and asked to conduct Christian Endeavor meetings and other gatherings. Every group has its boss and every canoe crew its captain.

The loose morality of the South Seas which is depicted in so many novels and movies is unfortunately not much overdrawn; so there is a very real problem on the hands of the Christian Church in the Islands. There is, on the other hand, a very real desire on the part of the boys and girls to build strong character and Mr. McCall tells of one lad who wrote when asked what he would like a chance to do:

"I want a chance to know the whole meaning of the Bible from Genesis to Revelation; to know everything I ought to know; to make this school the best in the South Seas, if I can; to know how to live in the right way; to know how to be a leader; and many more."

Mr. McCall adds: "There is a big work to be done if the Micronesian Training School is to give this earnest boy all the chances he wants and to inspire others with as great ambitions."

A COUNTRYMAN SAYS:

The holidays are past, the old year is gone, the new year 1938 is a reality. The going of the old and the coming of the new sets one to thinking of the past, with its successes and failures, its joys and sorrows, the future with its opportunities and possibilities.

As we look toward the future, we, of the open spaces can be thankful for a job, for work that needs to be done, and even though we do not always succeed just as we wish, and the compensation is not so great, yet may we be thankful for the opportunity that lies in honest endeavor, and try to find more happiness in our daily work, and altogether a more joyous existence in 1938.

Like the Apostle Paul long ago, "approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed," we can have pride in our daily work, whether it be the farm, the factory, the market place, the schoolroom, or behind the sacred desk; and endeavor to do our work better than anyone else, or better than we have done it before.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

ELON.

Come! Come! Come! Save your pennies and save your dimes. Elon! Yep! Elon! "It seems as if I've heard of that place before." You bet you have, and you'd better start thinking about it right now.

Even though June is four months away, let us turn our thoughts toward it for awhile. Our church's "Training School" will be held again this year at Elon College in the latter part of June. It is not too early to plan to attend.

This Conference is probably the biggest asset to our church. It is quite obvious that young people of today, as a whole, are not turning their eyes toward the church. Thus, it is quite evident that we need something to keep the young people interested in the church.

This is where Elon and our Conference comes in. The faculty is composed of some of the most efficient and capable leaders of our denomination. This conference is not all work. There are recreational leaders for directing the students in outdoor activities.

Thus, all that attend these conferences are eager to return to their own churches and build up their own young people's societies. We can readily see that our young people are more anxious to work in their churches after attending several of these conferences.

We are expecting a large crowd at Elon this year, and we are asking you to give it some consideration and to bring it up in your societies. Come. We want you. We need you.

Don't forget it. We'll see you this June at Elon.

OUR SHARE IN THE "PILGRIM HIGHROAD."

Each month in Pilgrim Highroad Miss Lucy Eldredge reports "What's Going On" in young people's societies all over the United States. As the heading indicates, the page is a place "where young people exchange their best plans" and it is certainly a place where readers can gain many good ideas. This is just one of the many reasons why each young people's society should subscribe for at least one copy of The Pilgrim High- road. It contains stories and articles by well known authors; plans for worship programs; a discussion of the International Sunday School Lessons, the Christian Endeavor Topics and the Christian Life Topics; poetry; plays; and many other features. If your group does not receive a copy you may secure a sample copy by writing to the editor of this page.

Below we quote one of the articles from the February issue, which tells of plans in one young people's society in the Southeast.

THE PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP IN HOLLAND, VIRGINIA.

An interesting and significant youth program is developing as a result of the merging of the young people's missionary society and Christian Endeavor Society into the Holland Pilgrim Fellowship. As a special assignment in a leadership education course Frances Everett of this church prepared "A Suggested Program of Study and Activities for the Pilgrim Fellowship" which outlines the basis of their program for the coming year. This is worth the study of any program committee and so some of the high-lights are reported. The outline begins with October 27th when a series of meetings on peace is introduced. A Thanksgiving Worship Service and a world friendship series of two programs centering about the study of Christmas in other lands follow. In January and February four meetings are devoted to the study of the Moslem world. Plans include an attitude and knowledge test, study of Turkey, sharing in a conference youth meeting when Miss Ruth Seabury is scheduled to introduce the book The Young Moslem Looks at Life, a stereopticon lecture, and observance of Race Relations Sunday. A special program on Ash Wednesday will interpret the meaning of Lent, and two March meetings will center about stewardship. Other activities include an Easter sunrise service, an evening with the poets, a service honoring parents, and four programs on "The Southern Mountains" based on the book Highland Heritage. Summer meetings include a vesper service, a program on the meaning of the Pilgrim Fellowship, and a program of a character-building nature. This group schedules meetings every two weeks and evidently makes careful preparation so that each meeting is worth sharing.

Henry Van Dyke states that four things are essentially the same now as they were in the days of Jesus. The mountains, stars, flowers, and the human heart. The needs of the soul are the same today. Externally the world has changed. Sixty generations have come and gone. But as Jesus met these needs in His day to bring about adjustments in life, He is still doing the same.

In your discussion bring out some of the customs of "Jesus' Day as Compared to Ours." Has the Christian Message become outworn because of changing conditions? Has the discovery of scientific truth in any way destroyed our faith in Jesus as our Christ?

As our daily readings suggest, in Jesus' Day such evils as war, paganism, cruelty, oppression, tyranny, immorality and disease were common. Christianity had to make its way in the face of ignorance, poverty, illiteracy and superstition.

To what extent does the world of our day reproduce the difficulties Christianity faced in the days of Jesus?

Only a few million people existed then. Now hundreds of millions exist. Is a knowledge of the Christ reaching a greater percentage of the people today? Is the Missionary passion for the world growing cold?

Are the physical improvements over "Jesus' Day" the vital things of life?

What was the attitude of the early church toward Jesus?

MEASURING A MAN'S WORTH.

LESSON IX—FEBRUARY 27, 1938.

GOLDEN TEXT: How much then is a man of more value than a sheep!—Matthew 12:12.

LESSON: Mark 5:1-17.

The story of the man of Gadara possessed by the unclean spirit, and completely under its power, being delivered by Jesus and restored to his right mind, is amazing and in some aspects a mysterious story. Here was a man completely possessed by a veritable demon, absolutely beyond human help, living in rocky caves, crying aloud night and day, cutting himself with stones, making himself a menace to others, as well as a tragedy to himself. And then one day Jesus came to his country. The demons—there was a legion of them—recognized Jesus and desired to be let alone by him. But with authoritative voice Jesus commanded them to come out of the man, and lo! he was restored to his right mind again, and became again a normal, human being. Many people have been somewhat scandalized over the fact that when the demons left the man they went into a herd of swine which thereupon plunged headlong down the steep side of the mountain and were drowned in the sea—they point to this as a distinct blemish in the character of Jesus, a petulant and unwarranted act on his part. But even more than whatever mystery is involved in that phase of the incident, there is even more mystery involved in the setting free of the man from the thralldom of the dominion of the demons or the unclean spirit. And commentators and commentaries leave so much unexplained, or resort to such fantastic explanations that they are no explanations at all.

But I heard only last Sunday an illuminating interpretation of this lesson, although the woman who gave it had no particular reference to this story at the time. She is a missionary who has spent over thirty years in China, for the most part not supported formally by a Board, but depending upon faith, and the ability of God himself to support the work by outright gifts. It was an amazing and inspiring story which she told, and one that shamed and sobered many of us who heard her tell in her simple but very sincere and impressive way what God had done for and through her and her husband. She said frankly, however, that the secret and the basis of her faith was in large measure due to an experience which she had almost as soon as she had reached China many years ago. The thing sounded almost incredible, unbelievable, but no one could doubt it for a minute for it bore the earmarks of reality and genuineness.

As soon as she learned a smattering of the Chinese language, she went one day to a hall or room or little chapel of some kind and started to speak to a group of women who had gathered to hear her. In the midst of her remarks there suddenly appeared in the doorway, as she says, one of the most terrible-looking human beings that she had ever seen. With disheveled hair, and ragged clothes she stood there, with a wild look upon her face, screaming in high pitched notes and with venom in her words "Where is the foreign devil woman? Where is the foreign devil woman? I have come here to kill her." Suiting the action to the word she came striding down the aisle straight for the missionary whom she had recognized as the one she sought. She was a woman a description of whom would read almost word for word, the description of the demoniac of Gadara in today's lesson. She was absolutely demon-possessed; again and again she had been bound with ropes and even chains, and again and again under the impulse of the demon strength, she had broken the chains and ropes. She lived for the most part apart from men, sleeping on rubbish heaps, crying aloud by day and raving by day and by night, cutting herself, and injuring others. Here came this woman marching straight toward that small missionary woman, taken unawares and absolutely unprotected so far as any one could see.

The missionary said she did not have time to pray. Indeed she was so taken by surprise and by fear that she could not pray. But just before the demoniac woman reached her to tear her to pieces, she said in a clear voice "In the name of Jesus you shall not touch me, in the name of Jesus you shall not touch me." Startled and surprised the demoniac woman stopped for an instant, and then started forward again. But as if by a superhuman power she did not touch the missionary. For ten minutes the two women faced each other, the little missionary repeating over and over again her hastily concocted formula: "In the name of Jesus, you shall not touch me." At length the demoniac woman fell at her feet, weeping with great sobs. The missionary and her companion knelt with her and began to pray. In a few minutes that degraded, demoniac-possessed woman looked up with a new and a strange light on her face, and began to praise the name of Jesus. Right there Christ again had asserted his power over demons, right there the miracle of Gadara had been enacted again in modern life. Christ had driven the demon out, the woman again clothed in her right mind, renewed, transformed. People did not have to be told that she had been changed—her very countenance and appearance showed it unmistakably.

The missionary took the converted woman to her home, gave her clean clothing, provided a home for her, taught her, and put her to work later as a Bible woman. For years that former demoniac woman was a faithful and fruitful witness for Christ as a Bible woman or teacher.

What is one going to say about a thing like this? What can one say? There is nothing to say against it. Here is living testimony to the truth of what happened in Palestine, because it has been written out in human life in our own day. Christ still has power to release men from the bondage of demons of every kind. He still can and does break the fetters and bonds of sin. He can still set men free. There are many kinds of demons that still possess men and women, drink, passion, appetite, pride, gambling, impurity, avarice, infidelity, and so on. Christ is able. Christ can save. He needs only the consent of the individual to work his miracle of grace, and to save men from their sins.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

As the Lenten season approaches I would like to urge all key-workers and young people to devote some time to Spiritual and Devotional Life. There is no better time to think about the life of Christ, and it is certainly an excellent way to celebrate the Eastertide.

"The Fellowship of Prayer" is splendid and is available. Look in your Pilgrim Fellowship Guide for details in securing them. If I can, I shall be glad to help in any way.

JUNE JOY HOUSE,
Supt., Devotional Life,

Religious Emphasis week at Elon has just been concluded. The week was given over to religion. Miss Ruth Seabury, of the foreign missions department of the Christian Church, spoke twice each day on religious subjects in which college students are interested.

MONDAY.

THE COMPANY INVISIBLE.

"Seeing we are compassed about by so great a cloud of witnesses"—Heb. 12:1, 2; 4:32.

Persons whose interests are wholly confined to a small locality easily fall into cliques and feuds. To avoid this danger the wise person interests himself in a wide variety of other men and women.

Deliberately, he gives thought to those whom he may have met personally, or whose names he has learned through print, whose activities are far removed from his own. Anybody who so will, no matter how circumscribed his own lot, may live also in other lives.

Prayer—For all the saints who are still busy in Thy service, we thank Thee, O Lord. We would in our thought and prayers be partakers of their ministry, share in their service. Amen.

W. T. Ellis, in Christian Herald.

TUESDAY.

WHAT SORT PEOPLE?

"I have compassion on the multitude."—Mark 8:2.

We are told that the "multitude" consisted of but few ideal people. As it ever has been in all ages, so it was then even as now, they were rough, noisy, jostling, selfish, bad-mannered. We would not wonder if there were not some riff-raff. This was the multitude.

The picture we get from the Bible story, however, is one of compassion and helpfulness. Jesus stands there looking upon them all. This sensitive, delicate-fibered man loved them and longed to help them.

This picture is not unlike the world picture today. When we think of the multitudes, unemployed and down and out, and when we think of what is being done to help them, drafts upon the spirit of compassion is incomprehensible. Never was there a greater opportunity for Christ-like people to emulate Christ in compassion and in lending helping hand.

Prayer—Our Father, Thou has set us in the midst of the multitudes. Their needs cry unto us from the ground. Make us like Christ toward them. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THAT SUB-CONSCIOUS SELF.

"As he thinketh in his heart, so is he."—Prov. 23:7; Phil. 4:8, 9.

Recently, in a telephone booth in the National Press Club, in Washington, I noticed that the memorandum pad was written over with the Greek word, Xpistos and its English equivalent and derivatives. Some one, while listening to a 'phone call, had perhaps, unconsciously scribbled on the paper.

I wonder if you and I would write "Christ" if our pencil were revealing our innermost thought.

Prayer—As the thoughts of a lover turn to his beloved, so would our hearts turn to Thee, O Christ. For all our springs are in Thee. Amen.

W. T. Ellis, in Christian Herald.

THURSDAY.

WAVERING CHRISTIANS.

"He that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind and tossed."—James 1:6 (read 1-7).

Every day, almost, brings to us afresh the knowledge of some who formerly were great Christians and whose service was a moving spirit among others.

Now, something has happened. One slumped into public life and in that life found himself condoning infamous deeds. Another due to some dislike shifted his Christian activities and found himself cold and luke-warm and engaging in unwholesome doings.

The moral is that pious persons becoming engrossed in other affairs are imperiled when it comes to prac-ticating the stern realities of Christian living.

Prayer—Our Heavenly Father, giver of all gifts, give unto us unabating devotion and ardor and steadfast loyalty to righteousness. Amen.

FRIDAY.

STRATEGY IN SERVICE.

"Be ye therefore wise as serpents and harmless as doves."—Matt. 10:16.

Dr. William T. Ellis tells a story of a young college graduate who invited her mother to a house party of her classmates. "Mother, you won't mind if some of the girls smoke, will you, and if I smoke, too?" she asked.

"You know daughter, that mother wants to go right along with you and your friends in all your interests. So I'll not only not object, but I'll smoke, too. Of course, I can't smoke cigarettes; but between now and the house-party I'll learn to smoke a pipe; so you can count on my being one of you."

We are told that this was a sharp rebuke to a girl. Naturally there was no smoking. That mother was a shrewd strategist. It is true that sometimes the ridiculous is better than the conventional.

Prayer—Our Father, make us wise as serpents in all our relations. Make us harmless, indeed, in all our doings and give us the patience of the Master. Amen.

SATURDAY.

SORROW'S JOYS.

"My strength is made perfect in weakness . . . therefore I take pleasure in infirmities."—II Cor. 9:10.

We read from the mornings paper the story of a physician in the city of San Diego who ten years ago lost his sight and during this ten years never lost his humor. The second marvel is that by an operation, recently made, his eyesight was restored. He now stands upon the

FOR COMMUNITY RIGHTEOUSNESS.

By REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

"For He loveth our nation, and He hath built us a synagogue."—Luke 7:5.

Here is a man's love for his community tested by that which he hath built in it. Here is a man who intended to build a blessing for those amongst whom he lived, and incidentally built a monument for himself. Here is a man with ability to recognize the best about him, and measure up to it by fostering it, and building it bigger and better into his community. Here is a man catching hold of the faith of the folks about him, and making it a blessing to all concerned. Here is a man coming into a neighborhood, and finding the good in it likes it, and lines himself, with all his power and strength and might with it. Here is a man whose name is not forgiven, but whose worth to his community, and his day, is never forgotten. He is a professional man, so to speak, who finds love a practical reality. He is a man whose ways are worth considering.

His recommendation, given unsought by his contemporaries, and who by the way might naturally have held him in contempt because he was an outsider and lined up with the nation which was overlooking the entire land—his recommendation, I say, was "he loveth our nation, and hath built us a synagogue." He loves us, and has shown it by giving us help along the very line that makes us lovable. He is unselfish in his love, for he need not for his own account, have built us a synagogue. He was a man in whom there lay deep in his nature the sense of appreciation, sympathy, and unselfishness. He is a man worth meeting. May his kind increase!

His name was not on the cornerstone of the building he built, but his nature was expressed in the lives of the men whom he met. He was a benefactor of the first rank, a man of fine faith, and good fruits. It is but natural that it should be recorded of him that his servant was "dear unto him" for this kind of man would love the lowliest man whom might be retained in his service. His life and character is a good illustration of the solution of one of the greatest problems of our modern day, namely, the problem of labor and capital. As an employer he loved his employee, and in sickness sought the health and happiness of that employee. He practiced the golden rule, rather than the rulership of gold, and he found a large place in the immortal pages of Holy Writ.

His servant was sick, and being very dear to him, he sought for his cure. The community chest of the Eternal was in his own humble soul. He had heard of the great Physician, and being of another race and nationality he sought the aid of friends of that noble race to help him secure the aid of the great Physician. See how readily the elders of the people came to his help, and how diligently they sought to be of some value to the man who had so well exemplified their best traditions in his own life! Ordinarily they would have despised the request of a centurion, but here was one who found favor in their eyes. Why? Because there was love in his heart for his fellowman whether he be of another race, or of another class of society. That sort of man towers and triumphs at last in the hearts of his fellowmen.

The elders hastened to find Jesus for this friend, although they probably would have hesitated for themselves. And when they found him they did not take no for an answer, even if the great Physician had been want, as he never was, to give it. But they quickly informed him of his benefactions and his love. With these gifts of love in their hands they approached the throne of grace and mercy. They said: "He was worthy for whom he should do this: for he loveth our nation, and hath built us a synagogue."

The story continues: "Jesus went with them." Here is a plea that could not be denied, and here is the opportunity that Jesus sought ever, namely, to do good. You remember it is written of Jesus, "He went about doing good." Jesus, too, was building a monument in the heart of humanity on the basis of love. Not love for his own people only, but love for those of other nations, classes, and conditions—love for every man. He, too, was building a monument higher, than Calvary, and that would reach into heaven itself.

A man like this centurion would be an humble-minded man. When it became known to him that Jesus was coming to his house, "the centurion sent friends to him saying, Lord, trouble not thyself; for I am not worthy that thou shouldst enter under my roof; wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to come unto thee." He recognized that Jesus was noble, divine, holy, and great. He felt his own weaknesses and faults. He was a great somebody that one who could heal the sick, and raise the dead should come unto him. He sent him word to "But say the word, and my servant shall be healed."

What it has taken the ages a long time to learn this good-hearted man saw at a glance. He learned life at the footstool of love, and such men always have been far ahead of their fellows in spiritual discernment. "Say the word, and my servant shall be healed." When Jesus heard that "he marvelled at him and turned about, and said unto the men that followed him, I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel." And when the centurion's messengers got back to his house they found the servant healed!

That story warms my soul, even as it warmed the heart of Jesus that day to find so great humility and faith. The two go hand in hand. Now let me suggest to you that that man received a blessing for his efforts toward community betterment. "He loveth our nation, and hath built us a synagogue." Have you had a little part in helping to build this great church? Have you had some share in making this city a better one? Have you given of your time, forethought, and means toward the community uplift so much needed by us all? Have you shown the goodness of your heart by the gifts of your hand? Have you shown that you recognize your responsibility to your God by sharing some responsibility toward your fellowmen? Then you, too, are in the line of the man whose faith was so very greatly commended by Jesus Christ. Show your life by your love. Show your love by the way in which you help to lift the burdens of your community.

There is a blessing in it for you, if you do it unselfishly, and without thought of the way in which it may be returned to you. This centurion did not realize that the spokesman in the band who followed Jesus, namely, Simon Peter, would be one of the boys raised up under the tutelage of that very synagogue! He did realize that in the band of followers would be Matthew who had probably attended that selfsame synagogue, whenever he went to worship. Yes, Simon Peter and Matthew were fellow townsmen of this centurion, and might have added their own person-

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

This letter is especially to the good women of our churches—Women's Missionary societies, Ladies' Aid societies, etc.

We appreciate the loyalty and splendid cooperation we have always had from the good women of our churches. They have always come to our rescue when we had a real need.

We are now very much in need of Easter dresses for girls and little suits for little boys. The good women have been good to us and have from year to year sent us dresses around Easter so all the children might be dressed up for Sunday school and church on Easter Sunday. We hope this Easter season will be no exception to the rule.

It is an opportunity to help supply a real need at the orphanage.

If the good women will get busy I feel sure every child will be happy on Easter Sunday morning. The children will not only be happy but if you had a part in making them happy you will be happy because you had a part. The greatest joys people get is by doing something for others.

If you could be here on Easter morning and see the children's happy faces as they march down the sidewalk going to Sunday school and church your heart would overflow with a real joy.

Then we have another real need at the orphanage. That is sheets. It takes lots of sheets for one hundred beds. The wear and tear on sheets is heavy. Children are not careful as older people and running them through the laundry so much soon gets the best of them.

We had two happy children last month. Billy Fisher in the second grade and Martha Lee Whitten in the eighth grade made the honor roll and received as a prize 50 cents each. A prize of 50 cents is offered to every child that makes the honor roll.

With the passing of basketball from the schedule, the attention of sport fans of Elon is focused on the coming baseball campaign. Practice will start soon and prospects are that Elon will have another good season.

"That's right," exclaimed the photographer enthusiastically. "Just hold that pleasant benevolent expression a moment."

"All right," groaned his customer, "but hurry up. It's hurting my face."—Biblical Recorder.

Marriages

HOLLAND-BRADSHAW.

The marriage of Miss Alice Bradshaw, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Elisha Bradshaw of Walters, Virginia, to Guy C. Holland of Baltimore, son of Mrs. Alice Holland and the late Mr. Claude Holland of Walters, Virginia, took place Thursday afternoon at four o'clock at the home of the bride's parents.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, pastor of Mount Carmel Christian Church, before an improvised altar of pines, running cedar, cut flowers, and cathedral candles.

The bride wore a dress of royal blue velvet with matching turban and black accessories. Her flowers were a shoulder corsage of gardenias and lillies-of-the-valley. The ring ceremony was used.

Only members of the immediate families attended the wedding.

After a short wedding trip, Mr. and Mrs. Holland will make their home in Baltimore.

In Memoriam

MORRIS.

The sudden passing of James Herbert Morris from the Mt. Olivet (Green) Church and its neighborhood makes one realize the uncertainty of life. Brother Morris, one of the leading church members and leading citizens of the community, was stricken suddenly and died within an hour. His immediate family and nearby neighbors and friends will greatly feel their loss, for his presence had been there for 64 years. His death occurred February 1, 1938.

The funeral was conducted by the writer from Mt. Olivet (G) Church near Standardsville, Va. May the Lord be the Shepherd of the bereaved ones he has been to the departed one.

W. J. ANDES.

ISLEY.

In the passing of Mrs. Sallie Isley at the home of her son, Clyde Isley, on January 6, 1938, the Ladies Aid Society of Bethlehem Christian Church lost one of its oldest members. The society wishes to express its appreciation of her life and service. Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That in her death we have lost a Christian character. Although confined to her home for several years, she was ever faithful to her church and society;
2. That we hold in loving remembrance her years of faithful service;
3. That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to her family and pray that God will bless them;
4. That a copy of these resolutions be placed on the records of our society, a copy sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication, and one to the family.

A COUNTRYMAN SAYS:

Then we can have some happy goal or objective to look forward to. This will make the burden lighter, and the joy of accomplishment greater.

Finally, we can do something to improve our business, our home, our school, our church and our community. Dr. Clarence Poe in The Progressive Farmer speaks of Six Crusades for 1938, in which each and every one of us may do something for the betterment of the world, and at the same time acquire a more happy existence in our journey along the pathway of life in the new year. His Crusades are:

1. The crime and folly of war.
 2. Ignorance.
 3. Poverty.
 4. Intemperance.
 5. Disease.
 6. Crime.
- These are all worthy causes and dangerous foes, and while, we, as individuals may think we can do little, yet through our schools, Sunday schools, churches, and other organizations, we can do much to help bring God's kingdom here upon earth as well as proclaim its glories in the after life.

street corner for hours enjoying the world as it goes by.

We know others who treat afflictions lightly. "What's a bum leg?" snorted a great editor to one of his associates who was on crutches. If I had a wife and family such as yours I would not care if I had two broken legs and a busted rib besides. Man, you have everything worth while."

Let us not take our afflictions and woes to market. Let us not wear our discontent on our shoulders but let us see the big things of life and do a big man's work. In this way, afflictions are of lesser importance.

Prayer—Our Father, help us to be less self-conscious. Make us more useful in the big things of life. Amen.

SUNDAY.

REVERENCE AND PRAYER.

"Hear Thou in Heaven, Thy dwelling place."—I King 8:30 (read 27-30)

The reverent soul meets a scene every Sunday that stuns him. This scene is the scene of prayer at church. When the preacher is leading in prayer nearly every one present bolt upright, looking at one or another or gazing at the preacher, we cannot say that they are irreverent for we cannot judge the heart. But are they?

To our delight, the prayer is a summons to praise, to confession, to petition, and it is said with enough deliberation for the silent formulation of individual prayer and devotion. But many of them seem bored. They acted as if they expected prayer to be short and snappy. Then they call the preacher a good actor.

We urge our worshippers to enter into prayers of the sanctuary with contrite hearts. We urge everyone to listen to the sermon thoughtfully and helpfully and bow down and worship God. It should be the pleasure of every worshiping soul to learn the art of prayer as well as should the preacher.

Prayer—Our Father, we come to the fellowship of Thy house today and we thank Thee that Thou art a prayer-answering God. We pray Thee to move upon us to worship in attitude of soul, mind and body as well as in mere faith. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

al testimony to the sincerity of his life and works in the community.

Do not wait until some deed of greatness you may do, but just join right in where you are to be an asset to your community; to help build its better homes, better schools, better churches, better newspapers, better places of recreation and amusement for the boys and girls; and better type of citizenship in general, and your love for your community will be recognized by those about you, and your faith will be commended for you by the Master of Men.

Next Monday the Contest Closes

The time for the contest between Carolina and Virginia in getting new subscriptions for "The Christian Sun" indefinitely closes next Monday at midnight. We have far to go yet, but we must not go into March. Be sure your report is postmarked in February.

A glance at the figures below will show who has been busy. At this writing (Monday night) Carolina is in the lead. Some churches have gone far over their quotas. But there are some open spaces. If the other pastors will rush along their lists, the tide may turn back to Virginia, or it may sweep through Eastern Carolina.

Better watch out, brethren. People are reading these reports to see who takes seriously the call of the Church. Let's do our very best; even if we do not reach the quota. But it looks like we will go over the top.

Give us a big lift for the next report. Let's reach the goal. It will do us good.

Who Gathered and Pressed

By VICTOR B. CHICOINE.

I wonder who gathered the grapes
That made the wine for the cup?
Were they gathered with scurvy jest
And lecherous hand?
I wonder who pressed them out
And filled the jar?
Were they pressed by feet
Which soon would beat
A road to shame?
And the jar was it carried far
By one who bore only for pay?
I wonder, O God, did some men,
By brothers, called swine
Carry the wine, to the upper room?
I wonder did Jesus care or think of this,
And of toil, and sweat, and shame,
Or only of choice disciples
And his own good name?
Did He, Mystic, break the bread,
And for the few pour out the wine?
A cross gives answer from Calvary's crest
And speaks for those who gathered and pressed,
And carried with honor or maybe with shame.
And time takes care of His own good name!

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES

The Woman's Mission Board of the Southern Convention is to meet at Elon College on Saturday of this week.

It can be done—THE CHRISTIAN SUN can live and grow as the final report for February of next week will show.

Begin planning for the missionary offering at Easter. The world's need for the message of peace was never greater.

Mrs. Joe E. Holland, director of music at the Holland Christian Church, is improving after a serious operation at Lakeview Hospital.

Rev. O. D. Ullom of Southern Pines, North Carolina, is a fine young minister of our church and is available for pastoral service in that area.

"If we are on one end of the yoke and God is on the other, there is no limit to the amount of work that can be done."—DR. JOHN G. TRUITT.

"We have made God a sort of Lazarus lying at our gate begging us for the crumbs that fall from our table."
—J. H. DOLLAR.

The program committee of the Southern Convention was in session at Norlina, North Carolina, on Thursday of this week to plan for the convention which is to meet in Portsmouth, the last of April.

Dates to remember: Southern Convention, April 26-29; General Council and National Pilgrim Fellowship, June 15-23; Elon Summer School, June 27-July 2; Franklinton Summer School, July 4-8.

Miss Ruth Seabury says this about her trip to Elon College: "I have never enjoyed a college group more than the one at Elon, nor found on any campus a finer spirit—good evidence of the ideals and faith behind it."

Rev. W. J. Andes of Harrisonburg, Virginia, spent last week-end in North Carolina. He has recently held training schools in some of his churches, and is hoping to enter Duke University next fall to finish his seminary work.

The Stewardship meeting at Shelton Church (Congregational), Portsmouth, Virginia, on last Sunday was poorly attended but the program was of a higher order. Dr. John G. Truitt gave an excellent address and others added much to the program.

Mr. W. S. Hanbury, senior deacon of First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Virginia, was seriously injured in an automobile accident last Sunday and is in Parrish Memorial Hospital, Portsmouth. He is a member of THE CHRISTIAN SUN family. Other members of the family will wish and pray for his speedy recovery.

A COUNTRYMAN SAYS:

Sunday, as we gathered around the table and heard the pastor speak, "For as often as ye eat of this bread and drink of this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come," the word "till" lingers still. Till—a small word tucked away among others of seeming greater importance. Yet this little word is a measure of the time prior to our Lord's return. When will His coming be, and what will happen before he come? Shall we have so used this time as to be prepared for His coming? Will our conduct after we go out from His table be such as to be a memorial of His broken body and spilt blood "till" He comes again?

Here, indeed, is a commission and a responsibility for the Christian; a challenge to the highest and best in man, an example of unity between the human and the Divine. If we are children of God, we accept the challenge and endeavor to live up to it. We shoulder the responsibility gladly as a true servant of God and come in our unworthiness, and with all our imperfections, and offer ourselves to the One who in His divine wisdom has seen fit to use sinful men in the furtherance of his kingdom on earth. A great privilege, a great opportunity, witnessing "till" He comes again.

LYNCHBURG, VIRGINIA.

On Sunday morning, February 13, Mr. Charles P. Culver, Superintendent of The Christian Herald Industrial Mission, Foochow, China, preached on "The Crisis in China" at the Congregational-Christian Church, Lynchburg, Virginia. Mr. Culver brought an enlightening and stirring message of present conditions in China. Having spent twenty-one years with the Industrial Mission, he was well qualified to bring an impartial interpretation of what is happening in the Far Eastern Crisis.

In the evening, at a union service with the Second Methodist Protestant Church, Mr. Culver showed motion pictures of The Christian Herald work to a church filled and overflowing with interested listeners. Dr. Stanley H. Martin, medical missionary in Korea, accompanied Mr. Culver and assisted in the services. In the evening Mr. Culver spoke briefly on the political situation and gave a glowing tribute to General Chiang Kai-Shek.

J. HOWARD SMITH.

An interesting sidelight on the Jewish attitude toward Christ is provided by a recent sermon preached in Temple Israel, New York City, by Rabbi William F. Rosenblum. Admitting that "Jesus had a place in ancient Israel," the Rabbi said: "There seems to be no reason why his (Christ's) resumes of Jewish teaching and the absorbing account of his life and work among the lowly should not be made part of the synagogue literature today. . . . There should be a place for Jesus in the synagogue comparable to that which Moses and the prophets occupy in the church. Christianity does not deify them, but it recognizes the strength and truth of their doctrine. Judaism, in a world that may be reactionary for the moment but is destined to regain its sense of progress in the future, need not place Christ on its altar of worship, but can find place for his teachings and wisdom in its literature and perhaps in its liturgy."—From the Jewish standpoint this is doubtless a very liberal position, but for the Christian it only confirms the Scriptural statement that "blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in." And that "fulness" may be nearer than we think.

NOTICE.

The approaching session of the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches is scheduled to meet with the First Christian Church of Portsmouth, Virginia, April 26-29, 1938. All boards and committees of the Convention are requested to begin sufficiently early to allow ample time for thorough consideration of all reports which are to be submitted.

STANLEY C. HARRELL,
President.

COMPARISON OF GIFTS OF MEN AND WOMEN.

A study by an alumnae committee of seven colleges—Barnard, Bryn Mawr, Mt. Holyoke, Radcliffe, Smith, Vassar and Wellesley—shows the interest of larger donations and bequests in 1936 and 1937.

In the six cities studied—Baltimore, Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, New York and Washington—the figures are as follows:

	Men	Women
Education	$82,300,453	$ 7,805,657
Relief	22,373,450	5,997,079
Health	6,923,394	7,788,825
Religion	2,742,090	9,018,842
Fine Arts		4,831,491

Religion is the chief interest of American women in distributing gifts and bequests, it was stated in the report of the alumnae committee of these seven colleges, made public recently.

Education, health and organized relief followed in that order. For men, on the other hand, the report showed that education was a top-heavy favorite, with organized relief and health following.

In Chicago the picture was reversed, with fine arts receiving the largest amount of money—$2,052,000—from women during the year, largely as the result of bequests of the late Kate Buckingham, who gave $2,000,000.

In 1936 and 1937 in Chicago the figures were:

	Men	Women
Education	$7,661,000	$ 550,000
Relief	143,386	132,000
Health	1,172,600	87,000
Reform		60,000
Fine Arts	35,000	2,052,900
Foreign Relief	45,000
Religion	175,000	2,000

How does your giving and that of your church compare with these cities? Where will giving in this proportion lead us in American life?

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT."

(An Elon Story.)

Elon is the fourth of four succeeding schools—schools succeeding each other—Holy Neck Female Academy, Suffolk Collegiate Institute, Graham College, and Elon. There is a student now in Elon whose grand-mother was a graduate of the first school; his mother a graduate of the second; his father a student of the third; and four brothers and sisters graduates of the fourth.

This is the way it was told to me: "My mother was a graduate of Holy Neck Female Academy, which was founded by Dr. W. B. Wellons in 1853; which gave way to Suffolk Collegiate Institute, which was founded in 1872; and of which institution

OBLIGATIONS OF MINISTERS

The call to be a minister comes from God, but the commission is given by His Church. In our fellowship the Church grants a license to preach, and later, if the candidate proves worthy, ordains to the office of elder with the privilege of administering the sacraments. Very solemn pledges are taken when licensed, and again when ordained. To refresh the mind of the ministers, to inform the laymen, and to inspire those who may be thinking of entering the ministry, the pledge taken at licensure in our churches is given below.

Government and Principles of the Christian Church.

1. Do you believe the Holy Scriptures to be the word of inspiration, and a sufficient rule of faith and practice?

2. Will you faithfully adhere to the Principles and Government of the Christian Church?

3. Will you labor zealously, through the grace given you, to promote the peace and unity of the church?

4. Do you promise to submit to the decisions of the Conference to which you may belong, and to subject yourself to the brethren in the Lord?

NOTE: The Southern Convention has long used as its guide book of ceremonies the Government and Principles of the Christian Church. This book is now out of print and has not been rewritten since the merger. The Manual formerly used by Congregational churches has been rewritten and is available at $1.00 per copy, at the Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio, or Pilgrim Press, Boston, Massachusetts.

I am graduate; the Suffolk Collegiate was succeeded by Graham College, to which my husband went as a student, and which institution gave way to Elon, to which we have sent six of our children."

If Elon has a successor it will probably be attended by some of her great-grandchildren.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

Pope Pius observed the sixteenth anniversary of his coronation on Manual of the Congregational and Christian Churches.

1. Do you confess your reverent faith in God and love for Jesus Christ, and promise to preach His gospel in its simplicity and its purity, wherever He shall call you?

2. Do you receive the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as containing a revelation of God to man, revealing to us the character and will of God, and the way of salvation through Jesus Christ; and do you accept them as your guide in faith and in the practice of your profession as ministers of the gospel of the Son of God?

3. Do you accept the government and doctrine of the Congregational and Christian Churches, and promise to be loyal to these churches, and to promote the edification, purity and peace of the Church of Christ?

4. Do you promise to keep your heart with all diligence, to give yourselves diligently to study and prayer, and to make full proof of your ministry?

5. Do you promise to submit yourselves unto the Lord, and to the churches of this association, or of any other association to which you may be transferred, and faithfully to perform the obligations which this relationship involves?

After the mass Cardinal Granito Pignatelli di Belmonte conveyed the congratulations of the College of Cardinals to the Pope, who was crowned the 26st Pontiff on February 12, 1922.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

OUR DISTINCTIVE DOCTRINES.

The contributor of the "Suffolk Letter" made some very important statements in his article last week. The first one is to the effect that Christian Churches have dropped the emphasis of our distinctive doctrine. Just what Dr. Johnson had in mind is not entirely clear to this writer, but his subject has brought to the surface some things that seem to be important.

In the first place, the merger was not intended to take away any of the enthusiasm of members of either Congregational or Christian churches. It was definitely understood from the first that every individual and every church should be as free in its thought and activity, as devout in spirit and as loyal to its ideals as it has ever been. For those in this group to fail in this particular would be a loss rather than a gain.

Secondly, it is doubtful whether the Christian Church as a rule has been very clear concerning its doctrines. Apparently, most of us have gone along fairly easily believing that one church is about as good as another and that it makes little difference concerning what one believes. This is not true of all our people, but there is truth in the idea which applies to many of our members. Both the strength and weakness of Christian churches has been this lack of definite ideas concerning God, Jesus, the Holy Ghost, good and evil, and all human relations. Few definite tests along this line have to be made by ministers in order to be ordained. No individual has ever had to meet doctrinal standards in order to become a member of our churches. The questions asked of candidates for membership in the church are very broad and inclusive rather than definite and doctrinal. We have thought of this as a distinctive feature which tends to Christian brotherhood rather than narrow sectarianism. It has been our boast that we accept members on the basis of loyalty to Jesus Christ with the privilege of interpreting the Bible as the individual may be able. To lose this would be to lose the genius of the Christian Church.

If members of the Christian Church can add nothing more than a soft sentimental "hail-fellow-well-met" attitude, then we are certainly not worthy of the confidence and friendship which the hard-working, devout and sacrificial Congregationalists have offered us. To be sure not all Congregationalists are of this type, but many of them are and they are the ones who are the salt of the church and give it its saving influence. This writer is not willing to believe that members of Christian churches, pastors and laymen, want to enter into a cooperative work with people of another denomination without making a distinct contribution of their own. We, therefore, would call upon the people of the Christian churches, and especially the leaders, to consider well the contribution which we have to make to the United Church and to the Kingdom of God. If we are becoming soft in a day of testing, that is pathetic. The age in which we live calls for all of the strength of character, intellectual sincerity and courageous service which it is possible for the Church of God to give.

Perhaps the problem presented in Dr. Johnson's article is one of those which should be considered at the coming session of the Southern Convention. What, definitely, do we, of the Southeast, have to contribute to the on-going program of the United Church and to the Christian world at large? Is there anything that we can give? If so, what is it? and how can we best give it? This writer is not willing that the Church of which he is a part shall simply be a sponge to absorb whatever may be given by generous-hearted Christian people. We have a contribution to make. The Congregationalists best known to this writer are eager that we make it in our own right. They do not want us to soft-pedal, to dodge the issue, and to do less. They want us to express our own personality, our own idealism, our own genius. They want to work with us in every possible way. Unquestionably we want to measure up to the high standards of Christian fellowship, nobility of character, definiteness of purpose and successful accomplishment which will be an honor to our Church and more especially to the Christ whose name we wear.

THE MISSION RALLIES.

Our good women in the Southern Convention are developing the habit of bringing an outstanding person into the conferences to speak in connection with the mission study books. So far they have been very successful in this. This year Miss Ruth Isabel Seabury of Boston, did an excellent job in presenting information concerning the Moslem World.

Miss Seabury volunteered for service in Turkey but was not able to take assignment there. Her interest there has increased through the years, and as she told the intimate stories of things that are happening in Turkey and in the Moslem world one could feel that personal interest of her own heart which made the subject live as she discussed it. At Winchester, Linville, and Bethel, in the Valley of Virginia, adults and young people came to hear her speak and went away delighted with what they had heard. In the evening (Thursday) at Bethel the young people gave a banquet which was well done. Representative young people came from all over the conference on a rainy, foggy night, and went away feeling more eager to share in the work of building the Kingdom of God around the earth. At Suffolk the women almost filled the large auditorium of the Christian Church both morning and afternoon, and at the evening hour the young people practically filled the same auditorium. Turkey has become an interesting topic, and the Moslem world seems nearer to those who are Christian in this section than ever before. Those who attended at Elon were probably as equally delighted and have (Continued on page 9.)

Another Heart "Strangely Warmed"

I am just completing my third visit to the Southern Convention within the last two years. To say that I had a good time would be putting it mildly. The nicest part about it is that on this third visit I have a real sense of the life and spirit within the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches and most helpful acquaintances with many of its finest personalities. For all of this I "give thanks daily," but I welcome this chance which the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN has given me to express my gratitude not only for the warm hospitality and the friendships of our church leaders and members here in the south but more particularly for the "special gifts" which the two years have made me understand, evaluate and appreciate.

In the first place I am grateful for the vigorous fellowship within the Christian Church, and for that growing company of young members with a deep strong religious life making so definite a contribution to our whole national Congregational - Christian life. Until we became one fellowship I had little contact with Southern churches, for indeed there were very few in our fellowship. So the mere chance to meet with this larger number in which the warmth and feeling of the south combine with a real love for Christ and a real interest in His church means a great deal, and I know that it will mean more year by year for the work and fellowship of our Church body.

I have found my heart warming, too, at the evidences of a real and genuine interest in missions. The merger has complicated the difficulties of cultivation in the last few years, but the love for missions is strong and definite and expressive. The future will, I think, show us ways and means by which that interest may make itself more definitely felt in the work at home and abroad. The world needs Christ today, perhaps more than ever before. It needs from the Church a strong evidence of his life in the world. We have a mission in a unique sense today. All the vigorous interest of the churches of the Southern Convention will increasingly reinforce the historic connection of our churches north and south and find pioneer fields, not necessarily of geography but of world need in which to testify to Christ's love and express his spirit in the life of men. I myself have seen this interest evidenced by the perfectly splendid meetings gathered to consider our responsibility for presenting Christ to the Moslems today. The all-day conferences at Elon College where the women of North Carolina gathered some 300 strong, in Suffolk where the Eastern Virginia women came in equal numbers during the day and young people at night, and the three sectional meetings in the Valley of Virginia each so well attended for that rural area on a stormy day, warmed my heart and demonstrated in a unique way the vigor on which the work of Christ can draw for the future.

In the third place I should like to testify to the leadership which the Southern Convention is giving to our whole national church life. No one speaks of that without mentioning the long and loving service of Dr. J. O. Atkinson for which we are all grateful, north and south alike. But it is perhaps fitting that the new leadership points to a future as long and as useful as Dr. Atkinson's many years of service. You have given from this area Lanson Granger as president of the National Pilgrim Fellowship, Dr. L. E. Smith to the arduous task of the executive committee of the General Council, Rev. F. C. Lester to the administration of our missionary work abroad through the Prudential Committee of our American Board, and others no doubt whose splendid connection I do not see quite so closely.

We women are all particularly gratified at your newest contribution. It is no doubt already known to the women of the Southern Convention that after many years of experiment we have in our church today a strong fellowship (we do not call it an organization) of Congregational-Christian women. Feeling the need of "strengthening each other for good works" and sharing our vital experiences in church work and life, these women from all kinds of groups and all states have set up a loose type of organization at a minimum of red tape, a minimum of expense and a maximum of fellowship. It is thrilling to go about as I do among the states and see their merging, strong state conferences of women under many names. The simple bond that unites us in cooperative work is the Council of State presidents of women's organizations which meets ordinarily once a year but with an additional meeting at the time of the General Council every two years.

These meetings have come to mean more and more of inspiration. But the real work of cooperation in fellowship is done through the executive committee elected at the annual meeting. It is our strong desire that this should be truly a national fellowship not headed up exclusively in the areas of our greatest numerical strength around New York and Boston. This year at the mid-winter meetings the women elected as president Mrs. Brown of Southern California. It was a fitting tribute to Southern California's leadership and strength, for it is among the four strongest women's organizations in our country. As vice-president of the organization for this year, the women unanimously elected Mrs. John G. Truitt of Suffolk, whose presence on the body of state presidents has been as the representative of the Woman's Board of the Southern Convention. Mrs. Truitt has made a real place for herself in our national life and this appointment is not that of the usual vice-president. One of the greatest tasks of the women's executive committee is that of uniting in our joint missionary program of promotion and education under the missionary council. The president serves on the Joint Staff in New York, meeting three or four times a year. Naturally, it was out of the question for a California woman to attend meetings with any regularity, and for this reason the vice-presidency demanded no mere honorary official, but a woman able to represent the president and even more the far-flung fellowship of our women's work. This we know Mrs. Truitt can do as evidenced by her splendid service in the Southern Convention, and I should like at this time to pay tribute to her cooperative spirit and able leadership and to thank the Woman's Board of the Southern Convention for giving her to us.

So, as I turn to the cold, frozen north after watching the buds come out on your southern trees, I most affectionately express my appreciation and loyalty to those of our Southern membership whose work and spirit I so much admire. I feel quite like the little old Chinese woman who received me on a Chinese mountain top one day. She had waited ten days for me to come, for I was journeying by mule back and she could not prophesy the miles per hour of a mule. When I came she took my hands eagerly in hers and sat me down in her home. "Now, you tell me," she said, about the Jesus people across the

SUFFOLK LETTER.

On Friday, February 25th, Miss Ruth Seabury gave a series of addresses in the Suffolk Christian Church, on, "The Moslem World." Two addresses were delivered to the women. The first began at 10:30 A. M. and closed at the noon hour for lunch. In the afternoon she gave her second address, beginning at 2 o'clock and closing at 3:30.

Nearly three hundred women from the various Missionary Societies of the Eastern Virginia Conference were present. And the personal experiences and interpretations of the speaker were heard with deep interest and great appreciation. Miss Seabury knows her subject and she has the ability to present information in an impressive manner. Those who heard her learned more about the Moslem world than they could possibly have gained from the reading of several books, especially is this true concerning Turkey and its relation to the Mohammedan religion.

At 7:30 P. M. she spoke to a large group of young people upon the same topic, and presented new information of deep interest. The young people were deeply interested in this address and a number remained to ask personal questions at the close of the meeting.

Such conferences awaken a new interest in foreign missionary work. At the present time the people of the Congregational and Christian Churches are responsible for the missionary work in Turkey. A few years ago it was not unusual to read about "the unspeakable atrocities of the Turks." Because of the persecution of the Armenians and their expulsion from that country, Turkey had a bad reputation among many of the nations. But a new day has dawned for Turkey, and with that has come a new opportunity for Christianity. In this period of transition to a new type of civil government it is evident that the time is ripe for a real constructive missionary program which will make a deep impression upon this nation. It remains to be seen whether the Christian Church can meet this situation in a satisfactory way.

Much depends upon the type of work done in the home field. It behooves the church to be much in prayer for the church in America. A shallow, half-hearted form of religion will not make a deep impression upon Turkey or any other pagan land. There must be a deepening of our own spiritual life, if we are to reach others in a convincing way. Is the church in America prepared to present to Turkey a model of what mankind should be as representatives of Jesus Christ? The church in America will speak louder than the missionaries in Turkey or China. The missionaries make their own impression, but inevitably, the church in America also speaks to these people who need the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The American Church is at the bar of judgment today. It can survive persecution, but it cannot endure hypocrisy. Life speaks louder than words. Jesus Christ is more powerful than the New Testament.

THE ELON COLLEGE LIBRARY CLUB.

Elon College has an excellent library for a small college. The library is housed in the Carlton Memorial Building. It is modern in very particular. The first floor of the building is given over to reading room, librarian's office, catalogue room, and stacks for books. The stacks are within the fireproof vault, and have a capacity of 200,000 volumes. At present we have a little more than 26,000 volumes in the library. These volumes have all been added since 1923, the year of the fire. This means, of course, that our collection is lacking in many of the older volumes, classical and otherwise. Since 1935, very few books have been added. In 1929, to 1935, the Carnegie Corporation put Elon College on its list for a library fund of $10,000, $2,000 annually for five years. This, together with what the college was able to put in, gave us an unusually good supply of books. Since 1935, we have been unable to supply the library with adequate current publications.

The Board of Trustees, in its recent session, voted authorizing the organization of the Elon College Library Book Club. The annual membership dues in the Club are one book a year per person. The individual member is supposed to buy a book, read the same, put his name and date on the fly-leaf of the book, and forward the same to the college. Or, if the individual member prefers, he may forward to the library the price of one book, and the library Committee will make the purchase. The Elon College Librarian will be glad to furnish to all members and prospective members annually a list of books needed in the library, from which the individual may make his selection. An organization will be formed for the purpose of soliciting memberships in the Library Book Club. Miss Ruth Seabury, of Boston, Massachusetts, who was visiting the college at the time this suggestion was made to the Board of Trustees, was first to join. Miss Seabury generously donated four volumes to the library: "China Through a College Window," by William G. Sewell, "Christianity in the Eastern Conflicts," by William Paton, and "Religious Living, and God," by Georgia Harkness. These volumes are greatly appreciated. Who will be next to enroll?

Of course, you will not be confined to the donation of one book. It may be that in scores of homes there are books that would be of great value to the college that the owners would be glad to spare for this purpose. Address all communications to Mrs. Oma Johnson, College Librarian, Elon College, North Carolina.

THRILLS AMONG THE HILLS.

Since the middle of last November the writer has been given an opportunity as supply pastor for our churches in Carrol County, Virginia.

We go for the week-ends on the first and third Sundays. We have been trying to make contacts in the homes, getting acquainted, and conducting devotional services in connection with each call. We have visited the schools close to our work, the teachers of which have been exceedingly kind. We have not had large congregations at our preaching services, but the ones who have come appear interested in our work. New deacons have been elected in addition to the ones who were serving and communion has been observed.

Through the kindness of friends many were made happy at Christmas time. We find opportunities to serve Christ in many ways as we visit in homes of those who are sick, afflicted, needy, and in some cases, suffering. What a thrill to offer the compassion and love of a wonderful Saviour who loved us and gave himself for us. Some of the greatest thrills since leaving High Point in Green County have been ours as we follow the trails in the Blue Ridge of Carroll County. We trust that many a prayer will ascend to Him who said: "Go ye" by our friends of THE CHRISTIAN SUN family.

Should any one who reads these lines feel impressed to help in this work through Sunday school classes, missionary societies, or individuals they might note our needs: A few friends who will provide a subscription, or half a subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, window lights for our windows that are broken out, and clothing for those who are poor.

Thanks to every one for every prayer and any interest shown in our mountain work.

HOURS OF DISCONTENT.

Human beings do not escape their fate and avoid error even after God has revealed His truth to them. And for a minister to fool himself into believing the truth is never lost for him, or that he is more capable than another, is but to court disaster—not only for himself but for all those who look to him for guidance.

In a rapidly expanding culture new discoveries and inventions continually unsettle the good old ways, the sense of progress may still keep men self-sufficient.

Sometimes a minister's pride—when he has too much—is hurt by the thought he is not being well recognized by the church he heads. He resents this. He broods over it. This will, invariably, lead to invectives against brother so and so, who is either older or younger and who has less experience and ability than he, or else he is a Congregationalist and we should think of our own men in the Christian Church.

But it is not the place of a man of God to spread fear in times of defeat. When one does, it is with the hope that some may rush to his sheltering arms as a last resort for freedom from restraint. But only the dissatisfied spread confusion in the ranks.

It is a fact, not to be denied, that men who are continually busy doing things for their church and people, find no time for discontent. Seeking prestige and position rather than a place to serve will always bring discontent. And this, in turn, will lead one's people to become discontent with their minister.

ESKI AND YENI—THE OLD AND NEW—TURKEY.

PRESENTED BY MISS RUTH SEABURY.

An eager and appreciative group of Eastern Virginia Young People gathered at Suffolk Christian Church on Friday night, February 25th. The meeting was sponsored by the Missions Department of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship whose superintendent is Miss Irene Cotton.

An impressive worship service was conducted by Miss Lowrine Halstead, President of the Eastern Virginia

Young People's Missionary Conference. The theme of the worship was "The Touch of the Master's Hand." Frances Everett presided and presented Dr. John G. Truitt who introduced Miss Ruth Seabury.

Miss Seabury had as her general subject: "The Moslem World." She gave clear explanations of the meaning and derivation of the words: "Moslem" and "Islam" and presented a picture of Mohammed, the man and the prophet. Since Turkey is the part of the Moslem World in which the Congregational-Christian Church concentrates its work, and since Miss Seabury is most familiar with that country, she centered her address around Turkey and its people. In a vivid way she pictured ESKI (old style) TURKEY with its veiled women behind the lattice and its picturesquely costumed men. In startling contrast to old Turkey, Miss Seabury told of the New Turkey in which everything must be strictly YENI (new style). She noted the great progress that has been made in education and health, the complete change of social standards, and the outlawing of the Moslem faith as a state religion. She called attention to the dangers that had arisen as a result of the new freedom and stressed the need of Christian understanding and guidance for the youth of Turkey.

Miss Seabury's address was both interesting and inspiring. She spoke in her own vital way out of her personal knowledge of the Moslem World and out of her deep understanding and love for the Moslem people.

GOD STILL REMAINS.

(A Correspondence.)

Florida Sanitarium,
Orlando, Florida,
February 27, 1938.

Rather forlorn pictures were thrown on the canvas of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for us last week. This writer, among others, helped to paint them there. If one looks long and closely at the plight of the Church, our nation, and conditions in other countries today, one will become forlorn. It simply will not suffice to pick out the sore spots today, either in the family, the Church, or the nation, and look too long at them. The writer recalls hearing the late lamented Dr. Fred B. Smith in a masterful sermon at our Elon College commencement years ago. The great preacher told the graduating class they would now and then see preachers of the gospel, deacons in the church, Sunday school superintendents and teachers go to pieces some times before their very eyes and they would be ready to cry out: "Ah! the church is slipping, Christianity is perishing and all are heretics or hypocrites." In such an hour and experience Dr. Smith advised the young men before him to hold on to what held and saved patient Job when all friends and even his family had failed him, namely, "I know that my redeemer liveth." There is all of it for the individual when the world about seems crashing and falling, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." God still remains, and He does not fail nor can He be defeated.

One recalls that the prophet Elijah had gained a great and bloody victory over the 450 prophets of Baal: how he had tried God and God had not failed him. Then the wicked Queen Jezebel declared she would kill Elijah like he had killed the prophets in less than twenty-four hours—and Elijah fled for his life a day's journey into the wilderness and sat down all forlorn and in despair and "requested for himself that he might die: Oh, Jehovah, take away my life."—(I Kings 19:4.)

This rugged, courageous old faithful prophet felt that all his plans for reform and redemption of his people had gone to pieces and "he alone was left of those who had not bowed the knee to Baal. But to his amazement God reveals that there were yet 7,000 other faithfuls who had not bowed down to Baal and that God still lived even in Israel and was not defeated. Yea, in and above all the confusion and darkness and chaos of our times, God still abides. Jesus the Christ is building the Church and all the powers of darkness shall not prevail against it.

If one will go back in history a few years one will find even darker times than these, even times in which men thought they were doing God's will and service to murder those who differed from their creed and religious beliefs. The Religious Digest for February, tells us that a letter dated August 28, 1572, from Lord Martigny to the Presidents and Chancellors of the King of Lille, has just come to life and contains the following about the "hated" Huguenots:

"My Lords: Having heard very good news this morning I have felt bound to communicate it to you by the present letter . . . In the evening the King of France in person, accompanied by Messieurs de Guise and burgesses of Paris, attacked the Admiral and other Huguenot lords in such wise that he put them all to death. The Admiral's head was cut off and his body dragged through the city on a hurdle. His head stuck on the end of the sword was likewise carried through the city. The King at once ordered the general massacre of all who held with the Huguenots and in less than an hour 10,000 men were found killed in the streets and more than 1,500 Huguenot women. Word was sent to all the country towns to do the same. It seems to me that such news cannot but bring good times. God be praised for it.—Charles de Martigny."

Well, our times are chaotic, and the Church may be slipping, but at any rate we do not butcher in cold blood those whose religious belief differs from our own and then praise God for the wholesale butchery even of women and children. Possibly some in the Church feel that those who do not agree with them should be slain, and go about in one way or another—but at least not openly and in wholesale fashion and praise God for their act.

God still abides. And when our petty whims, fancies and cherished "beliefs" are dead and done for, God will still abide and the worlds of our Saviour, and the world's one hope and Redeemer will still go ringing down the ages "For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have eternal life." And our Lord's prayer in the seventeenth Chapter of John will yet be answered "That they all be one: even as Thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee, that they also may be in us."

The Church is paying a terrible price for its division and strife—but God abides and will win out.

Our Missionary In Chinese War Zone

Who Recently Shared in the Famous Face-Slapping Incident.

By DOROTHY P. CUSHING.

A crippled plane filling the sky with smoke and flames as it fell to its doom—Chinese food with left-overs for supper—air raids and first aid and the day's job.

So tragic and homely events mingle in the letters of Rev. Charles H. Riggs, of Scotia, New York, American Board missionary at work in Nanking, China, to his wife, Grace Frederick Riggs, now with their four children in Scotia.

Flames and smoke in a training streak followed a plane shot down by anti-craft guns. As he wrote, other planes were approaching to bomb the city. "A raid is on," he writes, "and everyone is taking to cover; so I will write a few lines . . . when they get too close, I'll stop."

The young engineering and agricultural instructor tells how a war-plane dropped a gasoline tank on the farm where he was working on a cotton gin. The pilot had been shot. "We thought at first it was going to drop on us. But the wind blew it over so it landed about 200 yards away."

"Well, here they come—I can hear the motors . . . There go the anti-craft guns . . . No lights yet and I am too sluggish to do much by this feeble little lamp . . . One of the head workmen in the shop sends over a couple of bowls of Chinese food at noon and I use left-overs for supper, with sweet potatoes, foreign style . . . Life is as dreary as ever . . ."

" . . . The air raid is over and I must get back to work. Did I write you about the new ambulance? The Nanking Rotary Club gave the hospital (the Nanking University Hospital) a thousand dollars and asked me to find them an old car to build an ambulance on. I got hold of an old Ford truck . . . I have to look the work over frequently, but I think we are going to have a first-class job. It is much needed for bringing in the wounded."

Mr. Riggs, who among other things has specialized in making farm machinery sufficiently simple and inexpensive to meet the pocket book of the Chinese farmer, has recently been converting silk looms into the manufacture of gauze for bandages. He was a member of the Safety Zone Committee in that war-stricken city mentioned in press dispatches as "occupying a unique role of great humanitarian and political importance" and living in jeopardy from the shelling and bombing as they sought to save lives.

Charles Riggs is the son and grandson of Christian missionaries. He was born in Aintab, Turkey, and the University of Ohio is his Alma Mater. Before going to China as an agricultural missionary under the American Board of Foreign Missions, he had practical experience on a plantation in the West Indies.

The danger and suspense were great in Nanking following the departure of the foreign gun boats up the river, reported Mr. Riggs. News from the outside world was suspended and foreigners in Nanking knew nothing of the bombing of the Panay until two days after the event.

During the siege of Nanking the foreign relief workers, of whom Mr.

REV. CHAS. H. RIGGS.

Riggs was one, concentrated on picking up wounded in the few available trucks converted into a form of ambulance. The University of Nanking Hospital performed an outstanding piece of humanitarian service in treating the injured. It was reserved as far as possible for civilian wounded. Working day and night a group of less than a dozen foreigners cared for more than 150 patients. He has been acting as Housing Commissioner and has directed the location of more than 100,000 people.

When Mr. Riggs first went to China he worked in Shaowu among the farmer folk; so he came close to the hearts of the villagers' problems. He started experimental farms and introduced crop rotation, new seeds, methods of destroying vicious insect life. Lent by the American Board to Nanking University, he has done a unique job along lines of agricultural extension, designing machinery to meet the need of the Chinese farmer.

gone back to their churches with eagerness to serve in a finer way.

None will forget that it is love which sends the missionary out from his native land to minister in the name of the Lord. We may be more able to remember that it is love that can build fine friendships, happy homes and good churches in America. As the woman said in Turkey concerning the doctor who ministered for the first time to the sick in a certain village, "Love is in his eyes, his smile, his hands. Love sticks out all over him, and it makes him just like God."

"Be ye also perfect as your Father which is in heaven is also perfect."

LENT.

In the March issue of The Pilgrim Highroad there appears an arresting question: "Are you 'living up' rather than 'giving up' during Lent?" To many of us this thought may not have occurred before. Some of us have gained the impression that Lent is just a period in the church calendar when some churches insist that their members "give up" something for forty days.

If we will look at this other phase, "living up," rededicating our lives to Christ and His way of life, we will be able to get much more out of the Lenten season. All of us need this emphasis in our daily lives, this re-awakening which will come as we study Jesus' life and earnestly attempt to follow Him.

One thing which most young people neglect is a period of quiet meditation each day. This is something which must be developed slowly—we cannot simply start out and say: "Today I will meditate and commune with God," and expect something wonderful to happen in our lives. It is a matter of gradual growth in the knowledge and understanding of God. When one first begins this devotional period each day, it is well to have some guide for his thinking. The Lenten season this year will be a good time to start—and "Lenten Devotions for Young People" is a fine booklet to use as you carry out this period. You can order it from the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y. It costs five cents a copy. Even though Lent has started, it is not too late to order these booklets, for you will have a month in which to use them before Easter.

We urge that you take time during Lent to think seriously about "living up" to the things Jesus has set as our standards and ideals.

Included among these expenditures were: A tea for the Middle Georgia Association which met in LaGrange in July, 1937; gave groceries for four families Thanksgiving; provided winter clothing for a child; gave two quilts to a needy family; sent four delegates to the summer conference at Mountville, Georgia; gave four socials for the society; bought literature; and made contributions to a local charity and to missions.

In addition to this the young people presented two community plays in August and a candle-light vesper service during the Christmas season.

The money was secured by rummage sales, sale of candy, sale of household cleaner, box suppers, and by personal contributions. There is a balance of $6.48 in the treasury.

WHAT CHRIST DOES FOR INDIVIDUALS.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR MARCH 13, 1938.

SCRIPTURE: Luke 19:10; Matt. 11:28-30; Luke 7:41-48.

Daily Readings—

Monday—Christ Saves from Spiritual Death—John 3:16-21.

Tuesday—Christ Changes Our Thinking—Rom. 12:1, 2.

Wednesday—Christ Transforms Our Life—Titus 2:1-14.

Thursday—Christ Gives Us Spiritual Strength—Phil. 4:13.

Friday—Christ Cleanses Us from Sin—I John 1:1-10.

Saturday—Christ Promises a High Destiny—John 17:24.

Jesus did not overlook individuals. He was always ready and willing to help them. This was His mission in the world. The same power which influenced men and attracted their lives to Christ then, operates through the soul today and permeates all of life. Endeavors should discover in this meeting something which helps them to know and appreciate the power of Jesus' personality upon the mind and heart.

Every individual in the society should have a part on this program. The topic should not be left to open discussion alone, but by personal testimonies. The best type of meeting would be for all who are present to testify as to what Christ has done for them individually through the acceptance of Christ as Saviour.

We need a greater sense of personal commitment to Christ. Dr. R. G. Lee says: "The early Christians were so earnest, outsiders thought them drunk. The world does not think we are drunk now; it thinks we are frozen to death." What is the difference between earnestness and fanaticism? Were the early Christians fanatics?

From the Christian point of view, why are we here? What is the purpose of a life?

Does Christ ever lead you to do difficult, necessary, seemingly impossible things?

When those about us turn us down because we hold to high ideals, what can Christ do for us?

Suggested Hymns—

"My Faith Looks Up to Thee."

"He keeps Me Singing."

"What a Friend We Have in Jesus."

SERVING WITH WHAT WE HAVE.

LESSON X—MARCH 6, 1938.

GOLDEN TEXT: What I have, that give I thee.—Acts 3: 6.

LESSON: Mark 6: 1-13.

The young Galilean teacher had come back to his own country, and among his own folks. And he created a sensation thereby. Going as His custom into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, He began to teach, and His teaching was so fresh and vital and especially so authoritative, that the people were astonished beyond measure. They could hardly believe that it really was He. "Whence hath this man these things and 'What is the wisdom that is given unto this man, and what mean such mighty works wrought by his hands? Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary, and brother of James and Joses, and Judas, and Simon? and are not his sisters here with us? Like so many other hometown folks, they had been so close to greatness, that they could not see it. It is often too true that folks have to go away from home to be appreciated. What if this were the carpenter, the son of Mary? That was no reason why he should not speak as never man spake before. They just could not account for him on those seemingly simple grounds, however, and they became offended in him. Familiarity in this case had blinded their eyes. There are many people who go about from church to church to hear other preachers when they have just as good a preacher in their own church. Parents often do not discern the inherent greatness of their children. People go to other cities to consult doctors when the doctors in their own towns are often just as good as the ones they go miles to see. Many a young man has made a remarkable record elsewhere when it would have been impossible for him to do near so well right at home, not because he did not have what it takes, but because as Jesus Himself said, 'A prophet is not without honor save in his own country, and among his own kin, and in his own house.'" Let us beware lest we fail to see greatness in our midst, even among our own folks.

"And there He could do no mighty work, save that He laid His hands upon a few sick folk, and healed them." There was no limit to His power, but there was a limit to the faith of the people, and without their cooperation, Jesus could do nothing.

Here was a tragedy reenacted again and again in the lives of individuals and communities. God can do great things through us, but if there is no expectancy, if there is no cooperation from the human side, if there is no response to his overtures He can do no mighty works. Men can limit God. Men can, as it were tie God's hands. Men can thwart for the time being the divine purpose. And churches can do the same.

"And He marvelled because of their unbelief." Jesus could hardly believe that men could be so blind to spiritual facts as these men were. There was an utter unreasonableness in their attitude toward Him. Because they knew He was a carpenter they felt that He could not be a prophet. And they refused to act on any other assumption. There are none so blind as those who will not see.

"And He calleth unto Him the twelve, and began to send them forth two and two; and He gave them authority over unclean spirits." The smoking flax He would not quench. They had not developed to the point where they could do their best work alone. He was willing that they should crawl until they learned to walk, and to walk until they had learned to run. There was infinite tenderness as well as infinite wisdom in the method of Jesus at this point. He knew full well the value of having them learn by doing. And He gave them authority or power to do the thing which He had sent them to do. God always gives grace and gumption to do what he asks us to do. He will always help us to do what he tells us to do if we will try to do it.

They were to go in faith, trusting in simple faith in God's providence. On a previous occasion He had told them that if they sought first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, God would supply their needs and now they were to find that by actual test he was able to do above and beyond what they thought. He who moves out into the unknown at what he knows is God's command will find that God is there to undergird him and to provide for him.

They were not to waste time with those who were not responsive. There was an urgency about this assignment that made it unwise to waste time with those who did not care. Those who refused to receive them were thereby bringing their own condemnation on their heads.

"And they went out and preached that men should repent." This meant more than being sorry. It meant being so sorry that men would stop their sinning. They had to change their names, which really meant that they were to undergo a complete transformation within. And they were to show that they had repented by doing the things that gave proof of its genuineness.

"And they cast out many demons, and anointed with oil many that were sick, and healed them." There was power in these men. When they came in contact with those who had evil spirits there was healing in their presence. And there was healing of body in their touch. There was not much efficacy in the oil itself—that was primarily an aid in inducing faith in the patients. It was a physical factor in a spiritual process. And through the answering response of faith many were made whole again. This is no far-fetched story. God today ministers health through his servants. Many a physician has the power to quicken and utilize the spirit and expediency in the patient, and through stimulating faith, make operative the healing powers of God. Today as then, the Great Physician can heal His children.

THE WELLS OF MAN AND THE SPRINGS OF GOD.

"Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life."—Jno. 4:14. (Read the whole story.)

Jesus and the woman at the well is the story of man in his limited and finite capacities, and of God in his unlimited and infinite and eternal blessings.

Man's wells often run dry and he thirsts for drink. But in Christ the life nor the soul ever runs dry. His blessings flow like springs, day and night, century after century, and on forever, whether man uses them or not. It takes the two together to make a perfect man. When we link our lives with God's through Jesus Christ, His spirit is ever constant, ever available, and ever refreshing.

Prayer—Our Father, it is so easy to drift away from Thee. We thirst and we grow barren and wonder why. Dear Father, forbid that we shall neglect the ever-present fountains of life through Jesus Christ. Amen.

THE SUMMER RESORT AND RELIGION.

"I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth."—Isa. 58:13, 14.

For today's comment let us read Dr. Wm. T. Ellis: He says, "When first I spent a vacation at Ocean City, N. J., I was as much bewildered as delighted by the overwhelming American type of persons on the boardwalks. They were manifestly happy, home-loving families of Christian character.

"How do you manage to keep Ocean City so true to the American domestic type, and so full of families?" I asked a real estate friend.

"It is our closed Sunday that does it," he replied. "Foreigners will not patronize a place where American Sabbath is observed. They, with their European ideas—and the same holds true for the fast crowd, also—must have an open Sunday."

Prayer—We thank Thee, Lord, that Thou hast set the Christian Sabbath as a citadel of defense for the well-being of the people; and that Thou dost honor those who keep holy Thy day. Amen.

SINGING IN THE NIGHT.

"But none sayeth, where is God thy Maker, who giveth songs in the night?"—Job 35:10.

Night is the symbol of the dark side of all things. No one can deny that if we look upon ourselves, or upon the earth merely as it is, the darkness of that one's soul is scarcely possible to exaggerate. On the other hand, if one considers the good that there is in the world, the soul rises above it and praises Him who has provided amply for man's happiness.

If we live in this reality there is always something to sing about whether things be bright or dark. Sufferings have been made unavoidable, indeed, but in the midst of it all divine dealings with man are, in the largest sense, those of tenderness and love.

Prayer—Our Father, save us from being wretched. May we see that enough has been done to make us happy. Make us willing to do Thy will that we may sing in tune with Thy universe. Amen.

A SAINT AND SIN.

"God be merciful to me a sinner." Luke 18:13.

We shall never forget the consternation, and yet with what joy and satisfaction, the thought burst into our cranium that a Christian is a saint. Once we thought that saints were souls of eternity comparable to angels. But according to the scriptures, we have learned that Christianity is saintliness and that a Christian is a saint.

Paul's life teaches us that increasing saintliness deepens the consciousness of sin. It was thus that in his latter days of sainthood he felt the enormity of sin, and sorely repented always of its devastating effects in his life. It was thus also that the publican prayed for mercy.

Prayer—O Christ, help us to draw very close to Thee, this day and every day. Thou art our light and our salvation. We thank Thee that Thou didst come into the world to save us. Amen.

AUTOMATICALLY A CHRISTIAN.

"Because thou hast kept the word . . . I also will keep thee."—Rev. 3:10.

One was called upon to stand a three-day examination. This examination was important. It referred to a certain promotion coming up. He found that he was expected to know a great many things—things which he had read during school days, but which were long since forgotten.

But what adult can remember what he learned during his education? Yet that education did its work for him, merging his life into a personality, into ability for service, and into a high degree (may we not say "winning") efficiency.

What soul can tabulate what he has learned about God in the past? Yet, what he has learned has done its work in the very fibre of his soul, and that has made him a child of God, and as such, fitted him for the Master's use in a world of sin, but a world whose kingdom is God-given, and given to be developed and perfected in His great plan.

Prayer—O Lord, we think too lightly of all that Thou hast done for us, and we are a thankless sort. Forgive us and make us conscious of Thy works in us, and sustain our souls this day. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUIT D. D., Pastor.

MULTIPLIED A THOUSAND TIMES.

By REV. VICTOR B. CHICOINE,
Winter Park, Fla.

"May the Lord, the God of your fathers, make you a thousand times as many as you are."

—Deuteronomy 1:11.

What a strange yet probing statement this text is. Taking it just as given and applying it to ourselves one feels the presence of a searching light reaching into the deep recesses of the soul. For it makes each one of us ask: "What improvement would there be in the community in which I live if there were created a thousand more such persons as I and then let loose in the world? Would there then be more of the spirit of truth liberated or would deceit be on the increase? Would there be more of the spirit of justice and fair play, or would selfishness and covetousness be on the gain? If you and I were duplicated a thousand times would there be two thousand more nonentities; or would there be two thousand more ardent supporters of the things of Christ moving among men?"

Yes, it is a fascinating text. For example can you not imagine a cold-blooded exploiter looking at a group of underprivileged employees who must work for him because they cannot help themselves saying: "May the Lord increase you a thousand times?" He would be saying that not because of love for the men who worked for him but that he might threaten them the more who were already working for him with the loss of their positions unless they would work for still smaller wages! And cannot you imagine Mussolini or Hitler, or Franco looking at some fine specimen of young manhood who has been trained to the highest degree in the practice of war saying with deep feeling: "May God make you a thousand times as many as you are?" And these military-minded men would have one idea in common—the fulfillment of their own bloody selfish dreams. But also cannot you imagine E. Stanley Jones, with his great hopes for the continuing spread of the spirit of Christ, standing at the exit of some college and seeing young men and women marching out with their degrees in art, medicine, science, and ready to plunge into the service of the world saying: "And may God make you a thousand, yea ten thousand times as many as you are?" Demagogues have often multiplied themselves a thousand times in an evil way and made not only thousands but millions of youth as war-minded as they themselves.

Something Wrong.

Now, why cannot the men and women who call themselves Christians multiply the spirit of Christ faster than the other crowd multiply the spirit of evil? And the answer some would make is that they do. But something must be wrong, terribly wrong, or else why the present conditions with grief, sorrow, persecutions, war and rumors of war?

Can it be that through the ages and even now that the men and women who have been known as the exponents of Christ, the teachers and preachers of Christ, have failed to present Him adequately, and given a caricature of Him to the world? To this you may be mentally answering that you have never had any capacity to portray Christ to the world—that you love Him and His way of life—but that you are powerless to project Him into a hard world. And it may be that some of us who are called Christians have been living lives that not only ought not to be multiplied—but are so weak, wishy-washy, colorless, that no one cares to know about the Christ that we adore! But no one need be that way. One can so discipline himself in Christ, so school himself that a score of noble traits will appear that are worth multiplying in the people and youth around about him—a thousand times and more!

Now we must recognize this further fact that by our daily contacts we are continually multiplying ourselves whether we will or no. For example an angry man can, in the home, or with his business associates, by his attitude easily before the day is over create a score and more like unto himself. We have all seen this done—perhaps have been the provoking one ourself! How often a clever, scheming unscrupulous, successful man of the world, as a large part of the world knows success, multiplies himself. Others seeing him fatten themselves by his schemes, and at the same time escaping the law, try the same tactics themselves. Let a man hold a winning ticket in a sweepstakes—let the newspapers of his community publish the fact—and at once many other gamblers are born. The man multiplies himself in an evil way!

Our Lord Saw It.

Our Lord saw just that same kind of procedure going on in His day. He saw evil multiplying itself—and although it eventually slew itself—it would drag down many unsuspecting victims. So he went about winning men and women to Himself and then sending them out to multiply His spirit! Of course, some of them had to be dealt with long and patiently. There was a time when, if Peter had been multiplied there would have been let loose a host of swearing, trouble-making, irresponsible men. But he entered into the school of Christ and became a man worth multiplying. There was a time when, if a man by the name of Zacchaeus had been increased a thousand-fold there would have been let loose a flood of cheats and schemers. But he, too, was won by Christ and became the kind of a man the Christ wanted to multiply! And some of us may be like Nicodemus—one of us, such as we are—is sufficient. But let us be born again, be re-created, be willing to be moulded by the Christ spirit, then, indeed, we, too, would be worth multiplying. But not until we had been born again.

Kindred Minds.

The kind of people who are worth multiplying are those who are kindred minds with Christ. No others will save the world. If they are brilliant, or dramatists, or poets, or scientists so much the better. But Christ must come first. I see little hope in what we call the leadership of the world. For myself I write my letters to Congress and to the President as many others do and will continue this method. But I believe that a stubborn people—stubborn for the right things—refusing to be budged by flattery, cajolery, or threats of any kind—only desiring to live according to the teachings of Jesus Christ at home and abroad, and serving all the while patiently, will do more than all else to redeem us!

But the sad story is that so many feel that they must build and perpetuate their own little kingdoms before they interest themselves in God's kingdom! And that takes their energies; leads them to dabble, deeply sometimes, in questionable occupations; blinds them to eternal truths while they seek after spectacular and momentary gains.

Still we must not lose hope. As has been written many times—did not once a few thousand cast-offs, men and women multiplied by the spirit

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

A friend of the writer said to him last week: "I know of a man who has taken out an insurance policy in favor of the Christian Orphanage."

The writer said in reply: "That is fine." And then the thought came to us that we have so many men and women in the Congregational-Christian Church who could do the same thing and be the richer. If it is not convenient to carry a large amount, carry a small amount. It would be a very fine way to leave a monument, too, that would not be in cold marble, but would live in the lives of others.

Suppose you leave an insurance policy of a few thousand dollars made to the orphanage and the income be used to educate boys and girls and send them out from here and they make good, and render a great service to mankind would it not be you living through them—and continue to live on and on. We have many young men and women as well as older ones who could do this. Why not now before you forget it. Take out a policy and make it payable to the Christian Orphanage. The writer read a story some years ago which told of a fine young woman who offered herself for the Foreign Mission field. She had been accepted and was ready to go when she had a sad misfortune and became a helpless cripple the remainder of her life and confined to her bed. She could not go herself but that did not make her give up. Another young woman went in her stead and she lay in her bed and could and did do fancy work and sold it and by this income supported this girl who went in her place. She worked and carried on through the one who went in her stead.

Then there is another fine way to help in this work and build a living monument to perpetuate your name when you cross over. Remember the orphanage in your will. Have you ever thought of it. If you did not think of it when you write that important document it is not too late yet. Add a clause something like this: I will and bequeath to the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, North Carolina, for its uses and purposes the sum of _____ Dollars.

The orphanage does without things it actually needs because it does not have money to spare. If you want to have real joy in your heart mail us a check to help us now. We will be very grateful.

In Memoriam

SIMPSON.

Jefferson Davis Simpson, a member for many years and a deacon since 1909, a trustee since 1907 of the Bethlehem Congregational-Christian Church, was removed from this life to the great beyond, December 2, 1937.

We shall miss him from among us, but his living was such a fine inspiration, his loyalty to the church was never questioned, these with many other fine things will cause us to remember him with deep appreciation. Therefore be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble recognition and submission to Him who called him to his heavenly reward;
2. That we remember that which was good in him and seek to follow after that, knowing that high ideals will lead us nearer to God;
3. That we commend the grief-stricken ones to God who is able to bear them up and to comfort all broken hearts.
4. That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of the records of the church, a copy sent to the family and a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

GARRISON.

I. N. W. Garrison, known to all who knew him as "Uncle Walter," a life-long member and a deacon of the Bethlehem Congregational-Christian Church, was called from earth to heaven January 1, 1938. His deaconship dates back to 1889, having served the church in this capacity for forty-nine years.

Since his long life and faithful service speaks for itself, we, the Board of Deacons, take this method of recognition.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we humbly submit ourselves to God who is the author and preserver of life, and that we breathe a prayer of thanksgiving to God for having given us such a long and beautiful life to shed its rays of light among us;
2. That we commend the family and all who were near to him, to God;
3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to "The Christian Sun," and a copy be spread on the minutes of the church record.

seven seas of the world. How goes the work with the rest of the family? I hear you've seen them all." And so I talked about the Jesus people in Iowa and Maine, in Massachusetts, in India and Czechoslovakia. "Ai Yah," said she in astonishment after each sentence. "Isn't it wonderful to belong to a family like that?" So in that sentence she gave thanks for country churches, for city churches, and for the leadership of women, and lost her feeling of provincial living, her sense of handicap in the bigness of the fellowship which joined her in thought with other Christians. "Isn't it wonderful to belong to a family like that?" So it is with deep gratitude that I say the same, for I am glad that we are one family, "kinfolk," or as Paul said, "fellow citizens of the saints and belonging to the household of God."

THE CHURCH'S PRICELESS HERITAGE.

"Ye are the salt of the earth."
"Ye are the light of the world."

Matt. 5: 13, 14.

Throughout all the ages the Church has produced men and women whose lives, because of their innermost communion with God, became devoutly beautiful. These souls have been the means of perpetuating the life of the church, and the church is what it is today because of their devotion, their prayers and their sacrificial service.

Beyond this group of devout souls, there are multitudes whose spiritual experience has also enriched the world. Whether in one or the other class, we are blessed with equal blessings. Whatever these have been able to do for God, the outstanding fact of their lives is that they regarded their relationship with God as first and last and always. There is great happiness to be counted among such a host.

Prayer—Our Father, "As the heart panteth after the waterbrook, so pants our souls for Thee." We pray for real fellowship with Thee this day in all that we do and say. Amen.

A SHOCKING PASTOR.

"Provoke not your children to wrath."—Eph. 6: 1-4.

One of my close friends is a wise and sane minister of the Southern Presbyterian Church, who has been notably successful with his young people.

Recently he was called into council over a grave situation in one of his families. The parents were pious, sincerely so; but overmuch given to the use of pious phraseology. The minister turned to the parents and said. "The trouble with you is, you are too religious!"

Shocking? Yes; but awakening. By overmany words and overmuch religiosity, those parents had alienated their children from the faith which must first of all be expressed in character and life.

Prayer—Lord, make us wise as serpents in dealing with perplexed youth. Deliver us from all formalism and self-righteousness. Help us to love our young people into the Kingdom. Amen.

W. T. Ellis, in Christian Herald.

of Christ "conquer the Roman Empire by the sheer moral earnestness of their belief?" And it can be done again.

What I am after is this: If we are not the kind of people that should be multiplied by the thousands then let's determine to find out the reason for it. And then get rid of the hindrances and become the people that ought to be multiplied.

And that kind are they who have the spirit of encouragement that Christ had, the grit to fight sin in high and low places and in themselves when it appears, who have the vision that the best it yet to be and the will to plod after the vision—always in the spirit of Jesus of Nazareth!

We Are Climbing Higher

February has gone and the campaign for subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN has closed. At this writing not all mail had reached the office. Final report will be made next week. This week shows a fine increase. Many of the pastors really got busy and turned in long lists of subscribers. They seem to have been very happy about it, and their letters, lists, and checks have certainly brought joy to those who live daily with the problems of the paper.

Thank you, friends, for your loyalty and your work. You have made it easier for the editor to sit up nights to work for our Church Paper. He promises to finish his term with enthusiasm, and to give to the subscribers the best paper that his wisdom, time and energy can produce.

Next week announcement will be made as to the winner of the contest. It looks now as if Carolina may have the honor of sending a student to Elon College on a free scholarship. But it is hardly safe to rejoice too much until all reports are tabulated. Watch this page next week, for we are still climbing towards the goal of 350 for each state. North Carolina surely will make the grade, and Virginia may.

Let Me Keep Lent

By ELIZABETH BADLEY READ.

Let me keep Lent,
Let me not kneel and pray,
Forego some trifle every day
Fast . . . and take Sacrament
And then
Lend tongue to slander, hold ancient grudge, deny
The very Lord whom I would glorify.

Let me keep Lent,
Let my heart grow in grace,
Let Thy light shine till my illumined face
Will be a testament
Read by all men
That hate is buried, self - crucified—new-born
The Spirit that shall rise on Easter morn.

PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES

The campaign for subscriptions has been real fun. Thanks for helping to make it succeed.

Dr. and Mrs. I. W. Johnson, of Suffolk, Virginia, report a very pleasant trip to Florida recently.

Chaplain H. W. Elder of the U. S. Navy, now stationed at Norfolk, is to speak at Elon College next Sunday.

If you want to know who is the pastor of any particular church, get a copy of The Christian Annual which will come to your church soon.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is eager to get discussion of our Southern Convention problems before the Convention meets the last of April. Both ministers and laymen should make their ideas known.

When Easter comes and we celebrate again the resurrection of our Lord we may honor Him best by presenting to Him a new and worthy member of His Church. Better be looking for a chance to win one for Him.

Mrs. B. F. Gibson, an eighty-four year old Sunday school teacher of Rosemont church, Norfolk, was one of those who sent two dollars with which to pay for a subscription for an old lady in the mountains about whom Rev. B. J. Earp wrote to the editor.

Turkey is a mission field for Congregational and Christian Churches only. If we fail that struggling nation as it emerges into the new world, no other church can correct our failures, for it is agreed among the denominations that this is our task. We must not fail.

Among those attending the Woman's Mission Board meeting at Elon College last Saturday from Eastern Virginia, were Mrs. J. M. Harris and Mrs. H. S. Harcastle, of Norfolk, Mrs. J. M. Raby, of Windsor, Mrs. Herbert Harrell, of Driver, and Mrs. John G. Truitt, of Suffolk.

A Sunday school teacher said that the Sunday school lesson in the first copy was worth a quarter. So say we all, and there are other pages of equal worth. And they would be worth just as much to another thousand homes in the southeast. But who will put the paper in the homes?

Four hundred and forty of the seven hundred and twenty-six members enrolled in the Suffolk Christian

"TO THE VICTORS BELONG THE SPOILS."

North Carolina carried the subscription ball over the goal line to score the winning touchdown. General Lightbourne has won the victor's crown. North Carolina deserves the Elon scholarship. One is the victor, but the other not vanquished. Virginia played a good game, scored rapidly and emerged with her head neither bloody nor bowed.

The campaign has revealed some interesting facts:

First.—Loyalty to our church and church paper is by no means dead. Reports of its death are highly exaggerated.

Second.—It is not necessary to reduce the price or offer commissions in order to secure subscriptions.

Third.—Original Congregational churches are using "The Christian Sun." The Shelton Church, Portsmouth, was not given a quota but secured nineteen subscriptions. What an example!

Fourth.—The minister is the key to the church. Wherever the pastor is earnest and zealous the church comes up with a good record. A large number of our ministers took the campaign seriously and their efforts were not in vain.

Fifth.—Incidentally this high scoring is a vote of confidence in the ability and integrity of our editor.

Sixth.—This is an occasion for gratitude. We may now proceed with optimism on a program of advance along other lines. Thank you, one and all.

R. L. HOUSE, Chairman,
Committee on Publications.

Church Sunday school attended that school the last Sunday of February. Not bad. But wouldn't it have been fine if the other 286 had been present? And what about you, and your school?

Thirty-five young people sang in the new young people's choir at the vesper service last Sunday in the Christian Temple. To use the modern language, Dr. Harcastle, we think you have something there. A singing church can win the world to Christ. Better start while they are young and still have a song in the soul.

An office force that has been handling about $200.00 per month had to handle more than $1,400.00 last month. Of course, we made mistakes even though we tried hard not to do so. We expect to check back and try to catch all of them. But if we miss anything, please let us know for we are eager to have everything right.

After all, isn't it a pretty nice world in which to live? Of course there is trouble, more or less, but we all doubtless get better than we deserve. People are usually kind to us when we are kindly. Five people sent money so an old lady in the mountains whom they had never seen and do not know may read this paper. That was just lovely.

The Board of Christian Education, 514 South Main Street, Norfolk, Virginia, is still able to furnish free Bibles to those who need them. Church people can do real service by getting the books for those who may need them. They may be given to ten-year-old children in the Sunday schools, as was the former plan, but there is now no age limit.

How about that Easter program? Has the material been ordered yet? The time will soon be here. A fine drama, pageant, or musical program will do much to present the message of new life symbolized by Easter. The third Sunday in April is little more than a month away. The Board of Christian Education is glad to help you with program material.

Easter is also the time for that special offering for Missions. No church should depend upon one offering during the year to raise all its money for missions, but a special offering gives a chance for all to give, and some to give more than they would otherwise. Plan ahead, and be sure that everyone has the matter of the world's present need for Christianity brought to mind with a chance to contribute. Envelopes help.

Another who responded with money for a subscription for the lady in the mountains was R. T. West, of Waverly, Va. "Uncle Bobby," as he is called by many, is the father of Alton T. West, business manager of Elon College. He is a member of Spring Hill, a church that in 1877 sent THE CHRISTIAN SUN to every family in its membership. At that time Rev. J. T. Whitley was pastor of the church and editor of the paper. (That editor had a bit better success than the present one.)

MT. OLIVET (R) S. S.

We are very proud to say here at Mt. Olivet that we have started going upward. Since the beginning of the new year attendance and interest have increased, whereas, usually there is a decrease after Christmas. A number of new members started the first of the year with resolution to attend every Sunday and they are keeping it up. One Sunday we had 123 present, only 9 short of the enrollment, and attendance has been three figures most of this year, which is the highest on record of the school.

We have seven classes, four of which are organized. The teachers of each class are very regular and interested in their pupils. The superintendent, secretary, and all officers cooperate in a fine way and all this helps in the success of the school. A young men's Bible class has been recently organized which group before had no class of their own. The married ladies' Bible class has been organized recently, also, and is doing fine work and has kept the banner of attendance for six Sunday's in succession.

The Sunday school has started on a system of giving which I believe has contributed much to its success. We are now giving one Sunday's offering to missions, one to the Orphanage, and the fifth Sunday offering to Elon College. Before we decide on this method I have heard it remarked, and have often thought myself, that "We will never prosper if we try to keep everything in our church." We are being benefitted by this system from a financial point of view and much better from a spiritual point of view.

We have very much to be thankful for, and much to work for in the success of our school. May God be with us in our undertaking.

Reporter.

OBLIGATIONS OF MINISTERS

The call to be a minister comes from God, but the commission is given by His Church. In our fellowship the Church grants a license to preach, and later, if the candidate proves worthy, ordains to the office of elder with the privilege of administering the sacraments. Very solemn pledges are taken when licensed, and again when ordained. To refresh the mind of the ministers, to inform the laymen, and to inspire those who may be thinking of entering the ministry, the pledge taken at licensure in our churches is given below.

Government and Principles of the Christian Church.

1. Do you believe the Holy Scriptures to be the word of inspiration, and a sufficient rule of faith and practice?

2. Will you faithfully adhere to the Principles and Government of the Christian Church?

3. Will you labor zealously, through the grace given you, to promote the peace and unity of the church?

4. Do you promise to submit to the decisions of the Conference to which you may belong, and to subject yourself to the brethren in the Lord?

NOTE: The Southern Convention has long used as its guide book of ceremonies the Government and Principles of the Christian Church. This book is now out of print and has not been rewritten since the merger. The Manual formerly used by Congregational churches has been rewritten and is available at $1.00 per copy, at the Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio, or Pilgrim Press, Boston, Massachusetts.

Manual of the Congregational and Christian Churches.

1. Do you confess your reverent faith in God and love for Jesus Christ, and promise to preach His gospel in its simplicity and its purity, wherever He shall call you?

2. Do you receive the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as containing a revelation of God to man, revealing to us the character and will of God, and the way of salvation through Jesus Christ; and do you accept them as your guide in faith and in the practice of your profession as ministers of the gospel of the Son of God?

3. Do you accept the government and doctrine of the Congregational and Christian Churches, and promise to be loyal to these churches, and to promote the edification, purity and peace of the Church of Christ?

4. Do you promise to keep your heart with all diligence, to give yourselves diligently to study and prayer, and to make full proof of your ministry?

5. Do you promise to submit yourselves unto the Lord, and to the churches of this association, or of any other association to which you may be transferred, and faithfully to perform the obligations which this relationship involves?

It is devoutly to be hoped that churches that did not take the Christmas offering for this very worthy cause will adopt the plan of taking an offering for this purpose on Communion Sunday. This is most appropriate and unless churches adopt this or some method of supplying this need, the Board will not have in hand by July 1st sufficient funds to appropriate to the beneficiaries even as much as was appropriated at Christmas. We should not fail our worthy ministers now disabled, or the widows of ministers, who shared burdens of their husbands while they gave their life to the church on meager salaries.

SOUTHERN CONVENTION PROGRAM.

When the program committee of the Southern Convention met last week to consider what shall be the schedule for the convention when it meets at Portsmouth, Virginia, the last week of April, it seemed to be impossible for the members to be content to list the reports and to schedule addresses without considering the more important matter of what we shall really do. All were conscious that we must face real problems, and none were in the mood to side-step them. They felt that the day in which we live demands a new analysis of our reason for living. They can no longer be content for our Church to take life easy while the world screams with its heart-break.

It is planned, therefore, that on Tuesday afternoon when the Convention meets, President Harrell shall speak with the purpose of clarifying our ideas of organization and progress, and on that evening Dr. L. E. Smith shall go further in stimulating thought concerning the necessity for progress, and that on Wednesday morning an hour shall be set aside for a discussion of our contribution to the world of today. This analysis of our history, present message, and future hope should be heart-searching and stimulating. Our Methodist friends are seeking to reproduce the "strangely warm heart" experienced by John Wesley. We need it no less than they, and Wesley is our heritage, too. Other denominations are definitely striving for progress in making the world more brotherly and loyal to Christ. We have led the way in Christian union. We need to stay in the front ranks of those who see clearly, deal justly, and walk humbly with their God. The Convention should help us to do just that.

Other very important and interesting parts of the program will be announced later. This is written so that all "The Christian Sun" readers may be preparing to attend what is likely to be the most important session of our Convention in our day. All delegates will surely expect to be present, but others should be there. Why not a thousand of us meet in Portsmouth to consider what our Congregational and Christian Churches of the south-east have to give to the world? It would do us more good than we can say. It may be that we can find in such a study the way to successful attainments in local churches. Some of us believe that God has a place for us in His Kingdom, but sometimes we are not so sure that many of us know what that place is. Come to Portsmouth, April 26-29, next, and we will seek the wisdom of God concerning our place in the progress of the Church today.

SINCERE THANKS.

Last fall it was decided that a campaign for new subscriptions to "The Christian Sun" should be conducted in February of this year. The Board of publications decided to ask for 700 new subscriptions, with the Carolinas and Virginia entering into the contest to see which could secure more subscribers. Quotas for the churches were given so that each church might know what would be necessary in order to receive 350 subscriptions from each of the contestants. The pastors were asked to lead off in this special work, and most of them responded in a fine way.

At the end of February when the last reports were counted 704 new names had been added to the subscription list. A few sent their lists a bit early, and a few others were just a little late. But what of it if they were early or late? They are now on the lists, and will receive their papers this week. This campaign has been a success. Virginia did not quite reach its quota, but Georgia and Alabama gave a lift, and people from other sections came in to help, and the goal was reached.

The editor and all others connected with the production of the paper are deeply grateful to all who cooperated in the campaign. We know that it took some work, and some expense. Only two persons made any charge whatever even for the money orders and postage. The campaign cost "The Christian Sun" nothing. All the money received goes into producing the paper. This gives the paper a better chance to live and serve. To everyone who helped in any way "The Christian Sun" offers very sincere thanks.

WHEN TROUBLE COMES.

When trouble comes the Christian has a refuge and strength, a very present help. But most people know nothing of this help. They struggle through the world without a knowledge of God that really sustains.

Preachers see this work out dramatically when death comes to homes. Funerals are sad enough at any time. It is difficult to break human ties and bid farewell to those we love. It is doubly difficult for those who know not the presence of the Comforter, the great and good Spirit that comes into the hearts of those who love the Master. Who has not seen the tears and heard the wail of those who pity themselves and forget the grace of God in the hours of sorrow? And how the heart of a true minister grieves for those who know not how to find the quiet peace of that Friend who comes to meet all our needs! But what joy to see those who must say the final earthly goodbye to a loved one can do it with composure and assurance in soul that shows strength that is divine.

The Christian religion is worth all that it costs just to have its help when trouble comes. It is the devout soul, the student of sacred scripture, the regular attendant at church, and the faithful follower of Jesus who can take up a cross daily with courage and strength. Others cannot find the way of joy in the midst of trouble. Jesus found it, and leads his followers that way. When trouble comes we need his help, but we can have his help only if we are His friends from previous experience.

Visit the Philippine Islands With Miss Frances Thompson

By DOROTHY P. CUSHING.

A full-grown typhoon, colorful sunsets and a little "tickie" on her bedroom ceiling, mingle in the account of her trip to the Philippine Islands just reported by Miss E. Frances Thompson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Thompson, 950 Cahal Avenue, Nashville, Tennessee.

Miss Thompson writes happily from her new post under the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in Silliman University, Dumaguete, P. I. She tells of the natural beauty of Dumaguete, the sunset, the mountains and the bamboo groves, but particularly of the young student life with which she is associated.

"I find my students some of the finest young men and women I have ever known. They are intelligent, alert, eager and consecrated young people, the type of individuals who will indeed leaven the communities into which they go. Each day I feel that it is a genuine privilege to have a part in contributing to their preparation for Christian leadership."

Although part of her time during this first year will be devoted to studying the Visayan language, Miss Thompson also teaches New Testament (the social teachings of Jesus), church history and religious education which last named includes organization and administration. She has already found time to coach a senior student for his oratorical contest in which he won second place, missing first place by one-tenth of a point. Silliman University, where Miss Thompson teaches, is a high-grade Christian institution for the training of Filipino young people.

Former co-workers in the children's division of the New York City Department of Welfare sent a huge basket of fruit and other good things to the steamer for Miss Thompson and she writes gleefully that they lasted her through the entire twenty-five day voyage and made easier the pain of separation. Miss Thompson has worked in the Tennessee mountains and in the Clinton Avenue Congregational Church of Brooklyn, N. Y. She studied at Beloit College and Wooster College and holds a B. D. degree from Union Theological Seminary.

"The peak of our voyage was a full-grown typhoon," she writes. "On each side the sea rose like great walls, a hundred feet or more I should say. The miracle was that this could happen without the ship being completely submerged for the water rose much higher than the ship. But as it ascended in one direction and then the other the ship merely dipped and tossed assuming the angle of the mountain of water and changing quickly as the water changed. This made it possible to stand up without holding tightly to something steady.

"Our lower decks were submerged at times. A freighter not far from us seemed to suffer more frequently having each end completely under the water, or so it seemed to us. Although our engine was going full-speed we covered practically no distance during the typhoon."

Miss Thompson was able to stop over in Yokohama, Tokyo and Kobe, Japan, where she saw some of the beauty of these cities. She tells of there are six on the outside of my screen. It is fortunate that the rooms are screened for the mosquitoes are very thick.

"In my bedroom there are no windows but the entire outside wall is lattice work. This makes it cooler, if not private. The ceilings are made of bamboo strips woven as we weave cane-bottom chairs in the U. S. A. Almost all the houses here have thatched roofs of Nipa grass.

"Many of the houses are made of bamboo and are elevated about six feet from the ground on posts or stilts. Homes of missionaries are not built entirely according to native style. They seem to be a combination of Filipino and American architecture. The windows in my study slide laterally so that the entire win-riding in a ricksha and adds characteristically, "I found it a comfortable means of transportation but the coolie who drew me looked so poor that I was tempted to get out and ask him to ride." She also visited briefly Hongkong where the beauty of its setting and its wealthy sections was offset by the extreme poverty of the fishermen who gathered about the big boat to collect the garbage which was thrown overboard. The children in the little boats, she said, were not fed as well as dogs at home.

At Manila she was met by groups of missionaries and taken into their homes until it came the time for her to go on to Dumaguete where again she found a whole delegation at the boat although it was ten o'clock at night.

"When I entered my two rooms for the first time a little lizard on the ceiling greeted me. The colloquial name for these is 'tickie' and there are many of them here. As I write dow space is free for the air to come through except in the time of storm. The panes of my windows and doors are made of shells and are about three inches square."

Dumaguete has on the west the sea, and in the distance may be seen two of the more than 7,000 islands. To the east are beautiful mountains and outside the windows of her room Miss Thompson sees the feathery growth of bamboo trees. "There are many coconut palms here, also, and they, growing along the shore and silhouetted against the sunset-tinted sky, their reflections clear in the water below, form a scene of rare beauty."

Miss Thompson was born in Buffalo, Kentucky, and is the granddaughter of Mrs. John A. Beauchamp, of Edmenton, Kentucky. She is the sister of Dorothy A. Thompson, 4222 Baltimore Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa., and John B. Thompson, College of the Ozarks, Clarksville, Ala.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Southern Convention will be in session seven weeks from the date appearing on this paper. Reports are to be written, addresses prepared and much data assembled between now and April 26th. Much time will be necessary to review the work done by the various institutions and departments during the past biennium. These records are important and should have due consideration. History should have a larger place and a greater emphasis in the Convention. But a museum does not equal a laboratory in solving the problems of human life. The church should be both historic and prophetic in its outlook.

It was the unanimous opinion of the Program Committee, which met at Norlina, N. C., last Thursday (March 3rd), that a definite emphasis should be laid upon the spiritual contribution of the churches of the Convention during the next biennium. For a number of years the churches have been trying to attack the financial problems of the kingdom. Some advancement has been made. Contributions have increased. But the growth of the denomination has not been comparable to many others. In public and in private, ministers and laymen have been airing their varied opinions as to what is wrong with the church. Education, Christian Education, Organization, Youth Movement, Economic Justice, Racial Equality and Political Efficiency are among the things mentioned as a panacea for our ills and a hope of our progress in winning the world for Jesus Christ. For a generation the churches have been working in these fields. But the results have not been as satisfactory as the leaders have anticipated.

Today there is a definite trend in the direction of the objective of Jesus Christ when He said: "I am come that they might have life, and have it more abundantly." The Abundant Life should be the challenge of the churches of our fellowship. The Southern Convention is in a strategic position to launch such a movement in our churches in the Southeast. Jesus said: "Behold I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him and will sup with him and he with Me." That is a message to the church. And that is a timely message for Congregational-Christian churches. Other denominations have discovered that this is their opportunity to open their doors to the waiting Saviour—the Master of the kingdom.

To approach this great opportunity the Convention should launch a movement—a crusade—to rethink and re-study the church. Our fellowship and our church members need to spend a few months studying our past, our present, and our future. The ministers and members of the churches should turn once more to a diligent study of the History of Christian and Congregational Churches. The History of the Christian Church has been sadly neglected among our people. It is no exaggeration to say that hundreds of our members could recite all the history they know about their church in five minutes. Mr. W. E. MacClenny of Suffolk, Virginia, has written a valuable book on the Life of James O'Kelly and the "Early History of the Christian Church in the South." Other books have been written which should be taught in our colleges and churches. Others should be written and studied.

As to the present there should be an intensive study and emphasis of our denominational principles, doctrines and polity. It has been frequently stated that Christian Churches have no creed. The Bible is our rule of faith and practice—our creed. The Bible is the source of many doctrines. Our people know something definite about these great doctrines as interpreted by great leaders. Paul is the great theologian of the New Testament. The Convention should stimulate a course on teaching which will set forth these great doctrines of the New Testament.

What of the future? Shall our churches be busy with things or the spiritual verities the Abundant Life? Shall we look unto the hills and search for the indwelling of spiritual life, or play in the sand beds of our backyard?

I. W. JOHNSON.

OUR LYNCHBURG OPPORTUNITY.

The Lynchburg (Va.) Congregational-Christian Church, is sponsored by the Mission Board of the Southern Convention. Although the work was started in 1926, not until last year was there a full-time pastor to serve the needs of the parish. The church depended upon part-time supply which necessarily involved an inadequate pastoral relationship. The growth of the church has been hindered because of this fact. In December, 1936, the present pastor was called to serve the field and progress has been noticeable, especially in attendance, and in rallying the support of the church membership.

Our facilities for educational work are limited and quite insufficient for a thorough work. At present we are engaged in making improvements to make our basement more presentable and attractive. New tables and chairs have been secured and the rooms have been painted. New hymnals have been placed in use for the public worship services. The enrollment of our Sunday school is 130 and the superintendent, Mr. J. W. Tolley, reported at the last quarterly business meeting the best attendance and cooperation in the history of the church.

There is a deeply consecrated and loyal nucleus around which to build a strong and enduring church. The emphasis in our work has been on personal religious living with the firm conviction that on the changing of individual lives depends the coming of Christ's Kingdom. Our program is comparable to the program of any city church. During the present Lenten season there is a special series of sermons and a program emphasizing the re-evaluating of our relationship to our church and our Master. There will also be a "Good Friday" service included in the Lenten plans. The first year of our ministry has been spent in trying to awaken latent spiritual convictions, in affirming the positive faith of Christianity, in deepening the sense of Church responsibility among members, and in creating goodwill in the community.

Dr. James R. Clinton was with us last fall for a special preaching mission at which time he preached to splendid congregations, and we contacted practically every family in the community. Dr. Clinton gave four programs over radio station WLVA, and in that way gave our church needed prestige and brought it before the public eye.

The church is located in a residential section and the city is rapidly expanding in our direction. We are located just far enough out that newcomers in the community hold to former church affiliations in downtown sections. However, we have been invited for mid-week services into the homes of people who have not quite relinquished connections with former churches, although they never attend them.

Many of us feel that we can make no deep impression upon the community until we have a house of worship more in harmony with the type of homes being built in the surrounding area. The present building is not adequate and we are looking forward to a program of expansion within the next few years. Our prospects and opportunities are alive and as the community grows and develops we have every right to expect that the church will assume its rightful place. If the Mission Board can stand behind us while we are small, I feel that a patient, wisely-planned, and steady program of activity will result in a self-supporting and thriving field. This should challenge our loyalty and devotion to do a greater work for the service of our Master.

W. W. STALEY MISSIONARY SOCIETY TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY.

One of the most impressive services in several years in the Suffolk Christian Church was the Twenty-Fifth Anniversary banquet of the W. W. Staley Missionary Society. All members except two were present for the occasion. Every detail of the meeting had been carefully planned. The beautiful and worthwhile program was carried through without a single hitch. The celebration was held on the evening of February 14th in the Fellowship Hall, where fifty members and five guests sat down to tables artistically decorated with silver candlesticks with red candles, japonica, and silver baskets of red roses. A large birthday cake with twenty-five red candles made up the centerpiece. The dining-room was beautifully flanked with large ferns on fernstands.

Mrs. J. S. Morgan, president, asked the pastor to return thanks, and later turned the meeting over to Miss Gladys Yates, chairman of the program committee, who acted as toastmistress. Miss Yates introduced each one appearing on the program with choice and fitting quotations from literature instead of the stale jokes sometimes used on such occasions. Miss Julia Brinkley, and Mrs. John G. Truitt sang "Friendship," and "Go, Lovely Rose," accompanied at the piano by Miss Mamie Kelly. The toastmistress presented on behalf of the program committee a beautiful program and anniversary handbook dedicated to the "sainted memory of him whose illustrious name we bear—Dr. W. W. Staley."

The guests included Rev. H. S. Hardeastle, D. D., and Mrs. Hardeastle. Dr. Hardeastle made an interesting and appropriate speech of congratulations and good wishes to the society. Mrs. J. S. Rollings presented the history of the society which she had written. This history was exceptionally well-written, and delightfully presented. Mrs. W. H. An-draws, mother of Mrs. Rollings, was present and brought greetings from the Woman's Missionary Society of the Suffolk Church for Mrs. John King, president of that society, who was unable to be present.

Everyone of the former presidents of the society were present as follows: Mrs. Ethel Shoop Godwin, Mrs. Mary Andrews Rollings, Miss Phoebe Artman, Mrs. Annie Staley Calhoun, Mrs. Gladys Doles Morgan, Miss Jamie Felton, Mrs. Elizabeth Shoop Dixon, Miss Elizabeth Vincent, Mrs. Katherine Williams Brinkley, and Miss Gladys Yates. Officers elected twenty-five years ago are all living, and were all present except two, Mrs. Mamie Holland Leathers, Superintendent; Mrs. Ethel Shoop Godwin, president; Mrs. Virgie Holland McClenny, vice-president; Miss Phoebe Artman, recording secretary; Miss Martha Jones, assistant secretary; Mrs. Mary Andrews Rollings, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Ruth Turner Howell, treasurer; and Mrs. Virginia Phillips, pianist.

The birthday cake was cut by the first president, Mrs. Godwin, and the first superintendent, Mrs. Leathers. An anniversary offering was received in a most beautiful silver bowl which had been presented in former years to Mrs. Leathers by the society as a wedding present.

A feature of the program was the presentation of a beautifully inscribed, by each member of the society, and hand painted by Miss Anna Virginia Britt, memory book to Miss (Continued on page 15.)

A PERTINENT QUESTION.

(A Correspondence.)

Florida Sanitarium,
Orlando, Florida,
March 5, 1938.

On every hand one hears the questions: What is wrong with the Church? Why are so many people seeking all sorts of diversion on the Sabbath, and so few assemble in the house of God for worship at the appointed hour? And the replies are about as numerous as the inquiries. However, there is one reply that seems to be most often given, and that is, that the Church of the present is so little different from the Civic Clubs, Social and Benevolent Orders and Societies, and church members are so little different from members of these clubs, etc., that it does not matter so much as to which one joins, a church or some club. On this account the question of our Lord is very pertinent to our day. "If ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? do not even the Gentiles the same? Ye, therefore, shall be perfect, as your Heavenly Father is perfect." There you have it once for all, "What do ye more than others?" There is something more for us than merely saluting one another. Our Heavenly Father is to be recognized, acknowledged, striven for, worshipped. We have an obligation as church members that is more than worldly. All about us are men and women, young and old, made in our Father's image, and yet they are not like Him because they do nothing to glorify, exalt, or adore Him. The Gospel is not Sociology, not even theology. The Gospel is the good news that selfish men may become unselfish, and the man of sin may become the man of righteousness, and the defeated man may become victorious. One heartily agrees with Ferry L. Platt, Jr., in March Advance, when he writes:

"The church is becoming too much like the world. That is generally admitted. Some radical ministers, we are told, preach socialism, even communism, as if it were Christianity. The radicals put the spirit of Marxian class warfare above Christian forgiveness of enemies. Conservative congregations hear industry, thrift and patriotism extolled, though the Founder of the Church had precious little to say in defense of such virtues. The conservatives will not listen to Jesus' warnings against the accumulation of riches. Thus, the Gospel becomes whatever each congregation wants to hear, and the church becomes worldly."

Reduced to one sentence the church has become much interested in social reform and too little concerned in personal regeneration. Christ did not seek to reform; He sought and still seeks to regenerate. "Sin" may be a word little used in our day, but it still has in it the hiss and sting of the serpent, and it was uppermost in the vocabulary and teaching of our Saviour. "Thy sins are forgiven thee, go and sin no more." The word Devil may be quite impersonal in our day, but with Jesus the Devil was quite personal and had to be dealt with in no uncertain tones and terms.

Dr. E. Stanley Jones says we have swept and garnished our house with science and philosophy and culture and mechanical devices and now we suffer not from the great struggle (with sin) but from the great emptiness. Our modern civilization has swept out old superstitions, doesn't any longer believe in this and that, and is freed from magic, out-worn beliefs and in fact is all dressed up and does not know where to go. And so the Evil Spirit that went from us and left our house empty, swept, garnished, has returned and has seven other Evil Spirits with him.

So "our modern civilization is drawing unto itself the seven devils of (1) Unrest; (2) Jazzy Pleasure; (3) Exploitation; (4) Materialism; (5) Selfishness; (6) War; (7) Crime—all to fill up the Great Emptiness of our garnished house. And then Dr. Jones asks: "Why do I say modern civilization is empty? It comes closer home—perhaps you are empty. You need to be reborn just to know what life is." What do ye, of the church in the church, what do ye more than others? Our Lord still inquires.

Every individual church, and every church institution and enterprise is to be measured by that one inquiry. If an institution of the church is doing only what an institution of the State, or some benevolent society is doing, then it fails of that for which our Lord is building His Church. The church is not a program; it is a Person—Christ is its body and its head, and only as we acknowledge Him as our Lord and Saviour, and build with and for Him, do we answer cordially His inquiry: "What do ye more than others?"

J. O. ATKINSON.

MISSION PERIOD.

No time of the year could be more fitting than March, April, May and June, the months our Southern Convention has designated as mission period. Not that the church is to be missionary in spirit and in emphasis then and not during other months of the year, but with spring and Easter and coming summer, the church, with all nature, may and should put on new life, new activity and new vigor.

Missions are not just another call on the church for money, but a call on the churches to renewed activity and zeal in that for which our Lord founded and is building His Church. The church, let us bear in mind, is not a program, but a Person, One who is seeking with infinite love and longing to share His life with others. He who founded and is building His Church, His very body, into the lives and souls of men and women will never be satisfied as long as there are lost souls to be redeemed, unsaved men and women to be saved. "If any man would come after me let him deny himself, take up his cross daily and follow me." He went to the Cross in love for unregenerate lost souls, and He will never be satisfied until the purpose for which He died shall be fulfilled. So while churches spend much time and strength teaching men and women to be benevolent, kind, just, honest and of good report, there is a time when the church owes it to itself to go further than this and reach out to save the unsaved, and share its Lord and Life with those who have not accepted Him as Lord and Saviour. In these four months especially the churches should emphasize soul-winning, and soul-saving through that name which is above every name and the only name whereby one may be saved. No church is really a church unless it is missionary for only in this way does it live up to the command and promise of its Founder and Builder. Now is the time to put first things first in every local church. To this end may God help and direct us.

NORTH CHINA CARRIES ON.

The reports of what is happening in China might lead some to think that there is little going on in the church and school and hospital. Rather, I should say there is an intensification of the need for religious work, and in many places unusual opportunities for doing it.

The broadcasts that the National Christian Council has been sending out each Sunday night give a picture of religious activities going on in many parts of China. The main emphasis is upon war relief, an imperative and immediate need, but where conditions are more settled it is possible to carry on a program of religious work.

In the Peiping-Tungshien field, for instance, the four middle schools have a total enrollment now (December 14) of 2,350, about 1,000 less than last year. The two middle school evangelists are hard at work with chapels, Bible classes, personal discussions, group meetings. Mr. Wei, the past two months in Tungshien planned with a student committee special Saturday night student services of worship. Two were held in the large Cheng Tao T'ang which was well filled. The gowned choir had a processional. The whole service was very worshipful.

The speaker one Saturday night was Mr. P'eng; and at the other, Mr. Chang Heng-ch'iu, both preaching at the Sunday morning service also. On December 5th there was a reception of members, when twenty took the first step, and twenty-four were baptized, the large majority being men and women students. At the Teng Shih K'ou Church about the same time over twenty joined the church and a number took the first step.

The Rural Service Center is holding one of its most successful winter schools; forty men students from the country area are enrolled. For the last two weeks the entire Women's Bible School in Peiping, the girls of the Normal Training Class at Goodrich School, and others, will attend, making a school of about eighty, the largest in its history.

At the North Chapel in Peiping there is a Sunday morning audience of about sixty adults. On week nights at the street chapel a large group meets for singing and Bible study.

The Frame Memorial has two English classes on weekdays, Bible classes on Sunday, a primary school of over forty boys and girls, most of whom come to Sunday school, too.

Country classes are being held in several places. Mrs. Frame, returning from a trip to the Shun I Hsien district, reported an unusual readiness there to hear the Gospel message. Lewis Gilbert reports from Tientsin a country trip of Pastor Huo and himself as one of the best he ever took. The interdenominational class for volunteer church workers will hold its second session February 15-March 15 in Tungshien.

From Shansi we hear that Ming I Middle School, with a small enrollment of students but a large number of faculty, is holding classes in Chi Shan where a number of our missionaries are refugeeing.

No recent word has come from Fenchow, but we know that the hospital is crowded and that Mr. Leger and probably Miss Meebold are busy in that city. Ming Hsien Middle School has moved away from Taiku, but the missionaries are remaining, and we have no doubt that the hospital is full. Ray Moyer and Elmer Galt are planning to go in with hospital supplies within a week.

In spite of the hardships under which many of our missionaries are laboring, there are unique opportunities for spiritual fellowship, for worthwhile sharing on the higher ranges of living. When one considers these things he can say without hesitancy, "What a privilege to be in China today!"—Rowland Cross, in Missionary Herald.

REPORT OF HENDERSON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

In the beginning of this conference year our Henderson Society was divided into two Circles. During the first month of the division a campaign was launched for new members, using as our slogan "Every woman in the church a member of the Missionary Society." During the campaign and since that time the Society has doubled its membership. The women of our Society took an active part in Social Service Work during the first quarter.

The number of unemployed in our town necessitated help, and some of the ladies have provided for undernourished pre-school and school children. In December we had a well planned and thought provoking program on Peace. We made a survey of the homes into which the "Sun Shines" and solicited for new subscribers. In two monthly meetings we studied our Foreign Mission Study

Book and ended the first quarter feeling grateful for the privilege to serve and for the blessings that come through service.

MISS SEABURY SPEAKS TO VALLEY OF VIRGINIA PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

On February 23rd, the Woman's Missionary Conference joined the Pilgrim Fellowship in hearing Miss Ruth Seabury in her wonderful interpretation of "The Moslem World." Miss Seabury addressed a group in Winchester at 10:30 A. M., and at Linville at 3:00 P. M. A Fellowship banquet was given by the Bethel Church at 6:00 P. M. The following program was prepared by the president, Miss Minnie Dofflemyer:

Toastmaster, Rev. R. A. Whitten, Winchester; Welcome, Miss Hazel Davis, Elkton; Response, Rev. F. C. Lester, Norfolk; Get Acquainted Period; Instrumental Duet, M. A. Dofflemyer, Elkton and Lawrence Gentry, Elkton.

There were a large number of young people present for the banquet, and they all had a lot of fun and fellowship together. Following the banquet, Miss Seabury spoke on the above mentioned subject. Her message was brought out in such a way as to make every listener want to help send life and light to these people whom we know so little about. We hope that the young people of our Fellowship will readily obey the command of Jesus: "Go ye into the all the world," which includes "The Moslem World."

ROCKFORD.

The president of the National Pilgrim Fellowship, Lanson Granger, has written to request that all delegates from the Southeast to the conference at Rockford send their names to Dr. H. T. Stock, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Massachusetts, immediately.

When the National Pilgrim Fellowship was organized two years ago at Lakeside, it was decided to hold meetings every other year at the same time the General Council of Congregational-Christian Churches was meeting. This year the members of the executive committee and the National Council representatives from each state are to meet in Rockford, Illinois, while the General Council meets a few miles away in Beloit, Wisconsin, from June 15-22.

The last bulletin from our Young People's Department has this to say about finances:

"Rockford College has excellent facilities. It is doing us a real favor in being a generous host. It will keep its staff at work especially to accommodate us. The price will be $2.75 per day. We will be there seven days. A word about financing:

(a) In some states, the Pilgrim Fellowship will raise part of the money for the delegates.

(b) In most states, the State Conference will pay part of the cost.

(c) Probably every delegate who possibly can, ought to pay part of the cost himself. The Council will mean more to him if he does.

(d) It is a great honor to be selected as a council member. Perhaps, your home church will pay part of your expenses. Talk to your pastor about it.

If you are troubled about your financial problems please write to us at Young People's Department, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass., frankly just what the situation is. We cannot promise to solve your financial problem, but we shall be glad to try to help find a way of making it possible for you to attend."

There will be cars from the Southeast carrying our ministers to the General Council. It can, no doubt, be arranged so that delegates to Rockford can travel with them and thus reduce the cost of the trip.

If you are a member of the National Council, make every effort to attend. We want the Southeast to have a part in shaping the policies of the National Pilgrim Fellowship. Since the president is from the Southeast we should all feel doubly interested in attending.

SOCIAL ACTION.

Are you aware—that the field of Social Action is a new and interesting subject which has called forth and is attracting more and more attention? That the topics to which we have been asked to give special attention are race relations, peace, cooperatives, and alcohol? That there is a magazine called Social Action (Last issue—"America and the Far East") which can be subscribed to for a small fee and which bears excellent material and up-to-date news? That there is a Council for Social Action at 289 Fourth Avenue, New York City, which is ready and willing to furnish you lists of materials on request and is quick in filling orders for materials? That the Council has an astonishing amount of helpful material on hand on any Social Action subject? That it is our Christian privilege to accept the challenge for a better world and study, plan, and act our share? Are we being aware?

CHRIST MEETING THE WORLD'S NEEDS.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR MARCH 20, 1938.

SCRIPTURE: Acts 8:9-13;

I John 4:7-21.

Daily Readings—

Monday—Need of Salvation—Acts 4:12.

Tuesday—Need of Healing—John 9:1-7.

Wednesday—Need of Spiritual Enlightenment—John 8:12, 32.

Thursday—Need of Encouragement—John 14:1-3.

Friday—Need of Knowing God—John 14:1-12.

Saturday—Need of Spiritual Teaching—Luke 6:20-30.

God—let me be aware!

Christians must give first place to Christ. His Gospel is a message for the world. His truth can satisfy. None are excluded. His salvation can meet the world's needs. What one country does affects other parts of the world. One section of the country cannot be Christian without helping to Christianize all other parts.

For Discussion—

1. Christ meets the world's needs by giving men greater respect for themselves and greater confidence in their own abilities.

2. Christ meets the need of the world by teaching men to have greater consideration for each other.

3. Christ meets the needs of the world by providing a firm foundation on which to build a dependable philosophy of life.

4. Other needs which may be considered are: The World's need of knowledge, for healing, for salvation, for teaching and for worship.

5. People have always needed God. Why? What is it that makes people feel the need of believing in God, and of having fellowship with God? What is it that makes it difficult for people to believe in God? How does Jesus help people believe in God?

Suggested Hymns—

"We've a Story to Tell to the Nations."

"I Love to Tell the Story."

"Jesus Saviour, Pilot Me."

FEEDING THE HUNGRY.

LESSON XI—MARCH 13, 1938.

GOLDEN TEXT: Give ye them to eat.
Mark 6:37.

LESSON: Mark 6:30-44.

Divine Common Sense.

The disciples—Mark calls them apostles for the first time—had been under a strain. They had been out on their first preaching tour, and virtue had gone out of them. When they returned they told Jesus whatsoever things they had done, and whatsoever things they had taught. That, of course, helped to make the experiences more real, and helped to strengthen their faith. It helps tremendously to tell someone about one's experiences. Especially is fire kindled in another's heart when he hears of what God has done for and through another. Let the redeemed of the Lord say so. If one believes, let him speak. Christianity will be more powerful when it becomes more vocal. If men have experiences with God they ought to tell others.

Jesus saw that these men needed rest. He never expects the impossible of His servants. He uses common sense in all His dealings with us. He, therefore, invited them "to come apart into a desert place, and rest a while." The plan had two purposes: it would give them rest; it would give them perspective. It is absolutely necessary for those who would do their best service to get away from the crowd occasionally. Life cannot always be giving out, without taking something in. Many Christian ministers and workers become too busy in the Lord's work to do their best work. One must give the Highest a hearing, one must be still and know that God is God.

It is significant that Jesus went with the disciples on their vacation. Many modern disciples evidently leave Jesus at home when they go on a vacation or holiday. Alas for those of us who leave Jesus behind when we go on a vacation or a holiday.

Divine Compassion.

"And he came forth and saw a great multitude, and he had compassion on them." There was something about that great crowd that tugged at his heart strings. The words means "suffered with" them. To him they were as sheep not having a shepherd. They were bewildered and hungry at heart, but they did not find in the Jewish leaders those who could lead or feed them. One test of our true religion is how we look at people. Unless one sees in people objects of the divine care, unless one has the urge to share with them the blessings of the gospel, one has not completely caught the spirit of the Master. Furthermore, the Master never lost the individual in the crowd.

In compassion he began to teach many things. He tried to tell them about their Heavenly Father, the true Shepherd of the sheep.

The Divine Plan.

The disciples wanted to send the hungry multitude away. Jesus said: "Give ye them to eat." It is the divine plan. God ministers to his children through the ministry of others. To be sure God gives his spirit direct, but in the things of the physical life, and even in the things of the spirit, God provides for, and speaks to, through his children. It is idle for us to pray that God will feed and clothe his children who are in need, unless we are willing to give them food and clothing ourselves. In like manner Christ has no hands or feet or heads or hearts but ours to run His errands or carry the loads of others. He has designed things so that we are workers together with him.

The Divine Order.

When Jesus found out how much resources there were at hand He commanded the multitude to be seated in companies of hundreds and fifties. There was no confusion and chaos in the divine plan. Let everything be done decently and in order, writes Paul to his friends. It is the divine plan. Where there is confusion and chaos and disorder one might well look to see if the divine plan is being carried out.

The Divine Appreciation.

"And looking up to heaven, he blessed, and brake the loaves." He did not have much but He was truly thankful for what He did have. God expects us to appreciate what we do have and to use it for him. Failure to recognize or acknowledge the blessings we do have, often robs us of greater blessings to be had. Jesus was always so grateful to His Heavenly Father for even the so-called little things of life.

The Divine Miracle of Multiplication.

Why quibble about what happened when Jesus fed the multitude? Why resort to involved and incomplete explanations when a simpler explanation is at hand. Jesus simply utilized laws beyond anything that we know, and multiplied the loaves and the fishes—the Greek word means

"continued to break" or "continued to give to the disciples." To be sure there is a mystery here. We may not understand it. But there is always the unpredictable element when Jesus is involved. He goes beyond anything we know or can understand.

The Divine Bounty.

"And they all ate, and were filled." God does not do things crimpingly. He is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think. "He satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness."

The Divine Economy.

"And they took up—at His command—the broken pieces, twelve baskets full, and also of the fishes." There is a divine bounty and even extravagance, but no waste. Waste is sin in God's sight, whether of food or money or time or life itself.

SURE DEATH.

"If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch and is withered."—John 15: 6.

We are informed that once it was impossible to keep penguins alive in our American cities. They say that penguins can not endure the impure air of the city. This has been overcome. A system of pure air has been invented and now penguins can live.

We live in a world of impurity—worldliness. The soul that tries to live in it must die. But God has provided a system of pure atmosphere in Jesus Christ. And he who lives in Him shall live. It is not the ship in the water that sinks it. It is the water in the ship. It is not living in worldliness but worldliness in us that kills us. Christ within makes us sin-proof.

Prayer—O Lord, we turn to Thy presence this day for shelter and strength, and for purity and power of the Holy Spirit. Amen.

THE LIFE OF THE PARTY.

"And behold the word of the Lord came to him, and said unto him, what doest thou here Elijah?"—I Kings 19: 9.

Elijah, dejected of soul, discouraged and about to give up, was sitting under a tree far away from Base. He had fled from Jezebel who had threatened his life. Things had been so bad with him that he now felt that he was the only Christian in the world. God reproved him and taught him better lessons than that.

Sometimes real Christians feel discouraged and feel that the world has gone to the bad. We must learn that we have a different God from that. To give up under discouragement is a misconception of Him. We must learn that "they that be for us are more than they that be against us."

It may be for the very reason of sinful conditions that God has put us where we are. If so, we are representatives of Him and have His work to do. Do it, and He will bless it.

Prayer—O God give us the life of Christ, and make us living examples wherever we are and wherever we go. Amen.

A PHYSICAL DEDICATION.

"Present your bodies a living sacrifice."—Rom. 12: 1.

We know a few preachers and Christian workers whose muscles are as "Hard as iron," so to speak. They possess amazing physique, strength and endurance. This is as it should be. Paul was that kind. He was the marathon type. What a physical power he was for the ministry of Christ.

A good physique is not apt to be morbid, or pessimistic. Our text today enjoins not merely clean living, but a sound body. It makes for greater usefulness.

Prayer—Our Father, give us the wisdom and the care to keep our bodies sound. Dwell in this temple and make us complete and holy. Amen.

A STAR OF BETHLEHEM.

"Thy word giveth light."—Psalm 119: 130. (Read Psalm 119: 89-96.)

When Christ was born, was there a star that appeared to the wise men? We say there was. When they found Jesus they had a star forever. That star still shines in human character for the glory of God. The wise follow Him as the wise men of old followed the light that went before them.

What a star is His word! Nothing else so shines. The newspapers, the magazines, religious literature, may errily reflected glory, but none of it is like the light of His word. It is heartening, however, to see that secular literature is taking note of the tremendously significant fact of life's profound verifications of the Bible, both of the physical universe and moral values in the life of man. Besides, every Christian is a star. Are you?

Prayer—O Lord, "Thy Word is a lamp to my feet and a light to my pathway." Guide Thou me on. Amen.

FAITH AND WORKS.

"What doth it profit, my brethren, if a man say he hath faith, but have not works?"—James 2: 14.

It occasionally comes to our attention that there are Christians who go to church only once a year, or perhaps, to the annual camp meeting, or at funeral time. At such times they may be said to go on a religious spree. Between times they satisfy their own personal pleasures and conduct themselves in a way that shows very little sense of sinning against God and their own soul. Barren fig trees.

"Can faith save?" "Every branch that beareth not fruit, he taketh away."

Prayer—Our Father, we know that Thy glory lies in the fruit of Thy children, "For herein is thy Father glorified." Make us wholly Thine, and fruit-bearing Christians every day. Amen.

KEEPING WATCH.

"Fear ye not, therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows."—Matt. 10: 31.

"Behind the dim unknown standeth God within the shadows keeping watch above His own."—Lowell.

It is true that many have much less to live on than others, yea, more than they themselves may have had previously. But it is certainly true that He who does not suffer a sparrow to fall without His notice, watches over us and doeth all things well to them that love and serve Him. It is also true, that the poor has just as much to live for as the rich, or as they themselves had when they were in

READY REALLY.

By REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

"So, as much as in me is, I am ready."—Rom. 1:15.

There is something fine about the ring of this text. Ready, with all the strength and power there was in him! Ready, to the limit of his ability and his resources. He had lifted the flag of Jesus, "a banner of love," over his life, and all he had, and was, and ever expected to be, was back of it. It turned out well, too. He made a place for himself in the kingdom of God, and he made a place for many others in that kingdom, also. If Paul had gone at life half-heartedly he would not be known today, much less live in the heart of Christian civilization as one of its very greatest leaders. Half-heartedness does not reach Pauline heights.

But I want to tell you that Paul's great power and influence for God was more than Paul's power. Something had happened to him! He had met Jesus! Whenever I feel failure in my life I do not blame Jesus, but rather my failure to follow him. If you feel futility taking all of the zest and enthusiasm out of life turn to Jesus. I would put it this way, early in this message: if you wish to be really ready for life take Jesus as your redeemer and friend. If you are so modern that you cannot understand the word "redeemer," then just take him as your Friend. He will do the rest. It was Jesus that made the difference in Paul's life.

Paul had just been saying in the opening words of this letter to the Romans that he is debtor to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; both to the wise and the unwise. He recognizes all that has gone into the making of the man Paul. He does not claim to be a self-made man. He is not prejudiced against taking a few lessons from those outside his circle, and who are not as learned as he. Even pagan Greeks, or foolish Barbarians, are given the privilege of being his teachers, and his debt to them is gratefully acknowledged.

And, he says, since I am indebted to them all, I am ready to repay with all my powers. He had much to marshal, too. His training as a boy about the wharfs, and docks, of Tarsus; his glimpse early in childhood of the ends of the earth, lifting his horizon for all time to come; his ancestry, as great and good as could be found anywhere, and harking back into the faith of the faithful Abraham; his citizenship in the greatest country on earth, and the protection and prestige which that gave him; his learning in the best philosophies of the Greeks, the Romans, and the Hebrews, a tutelage from the foremost universities of his day; and his high position at so early an age on the bench of the court of the Sanhedrin; his knowledge of the three leading languages of his time; and his trade with which he could make a living with his own hands if necessary—all these he had before he met Jesus, and with them he was making his own life miserable, and playing havoc with the Church.

He lacked one thing, Jesus! The world has enough today, if it but had Jesus. Preparedness? They may fill the air with flying arsels, and plant the seas with the deadliest mines, and set afloat a super-dreadnaught in every harbor beneath the heavens, and be unprepared. What the nations need is Jesus. Oh! we have things enough here, this beautiful church, our lovely city, and the wonderful countryside all about us. What we need is Jesus.

I see young men and women prepared in college and university, good family back of them, and with sufficient materials in their hands to do well in life, lacking only one thing, and that the essential thing, Jesus. No, I am not being facetious, with Jesus Christ as their Friend and Master, the principles of his love and mercy as their guidance, the goals and aims a life thus devoted to him would imply, would make them able to do things really worth while in the world. Paul could have gone on making a wreck of his life with all the advantages he had, if he had not met, and accepted Jesus.

Once a rich young ruler came to Jesus with a question about life's ultimate issues. He was given the alternative of taking the lordship of Jesus, or leaving it off. He left it off, and so far as I know the sorrow which filled his soul that day as he parted with life's greatest promise to him, was never removed. He went away sorrowful, and well he might, for with all of life's advantages one is handicapped without the Lord of life, Jesus Christ, as his Partner and Friend.

One thing the rich young ruler lacked: Jesus; and one thing Saul of Tarsus lacked: Jesus; and if you or I are failing to get the most joy and happiness out of life, for some reason or another, we are not accepting Jesus as we should. We are either doubting him, failing to trust him, or forgetting him. For a Christian to lack courage, and joy, even though he may have deep sorrows, and wide difficulties, is a sign that he needs to take Jesus more simply, and more completely.

So, says Paul, as much as in me is, I am ready. With all my heart I love him, and with all my mind I trust him, and the way Paul would have put it. He determined to know nothing save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. What are you trying to hold on to, rather than give Jesus complete sway in your life? What sin is besetting you? What fear are you unwilling to surrender? What hazard are you unwilling to take?

Can you and I, like Paul, say that "in as much as in me is," we are ready to hear Christ's call to come follow me, and let him make of us fishers of men? Let us individuals launch out into the deep with him; and let us as a church launch out into the deep with him. The world is needing just the kind of consecration and loyalty to Christ as is therein demanded. Each for himself, in quiet honest communion with the Christ will be able to know what it is that he or she lacks. And each according to the size of his desire to do great things for the Lord he loves will renounce that which is holding him back, and causing him to turn away sorrowful. Burning all such bridges behind us we shall be really ready.

NOTICE.

The approaching session of the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches is scheduled to meet with the First Christian Church of Portsmouth, Virginia, April 26-29, 1938. All boards and committees of the Convention are requested to begin sufficiently early to allow ample time for thorough consideration of all reports which are to be submitted.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The basketball team of the Elon High School was made up of Christian Orphanage boys and the writer feels so proud of their record that he cannot resist the temptation to tell you about them.

They played 27 games — won 18, lost 8, and tied one. Clyde Brady, the Captain of the team, scored 208 points; George Brady, 140; Earl Cox, 96; Aubrey Williams, 70; Curtis Curren, 37; George Sloan, 71; Robert Alphin, 26. George Brady won the distinction as All-Tournament Guard. He was also voted one of the three best players in the entire tournament, and was the most popular player in the tournament. Curtis Curren won one of five medals for good sportsmanship.

We feel proud of our boys. If there is any prize offered they start out at the beginning to win it and if they do not win they will be a close second.

These beautiful spring-like days makes one want to get out in the field and begin farm work. Planting Irish potatoes, making plant beds, sowing oats will keep our farmer and his helpers busy for the next ten days, and then the spring work will continue throughout the planting season, out of one job into another will be the order of the day.

Work will begin on our deep well this week. Our water supply has been very short for nearly a year and the Board decided to have a new well drilled in order to get a better water supply. It is always a gamble when we drill a well as to the depth we will have to go to get an ample supply of water and the cost of same. I truly hope the Sunday schools and friends will bear in mind we will need money to make this added improvement.

In Memoriam

DARDEN.

In the death of Mr. J. M. Darden, the Christian Orphanage has lost one of its most loyal friends and supporters.

Mr. Darden first became interested in the orphanage in 1918. That year we had a terrific hail storm the last of July which destroyed all our crops. He heard of our misfortune and visited the orphanage and asked that we take him over the farm so that he might see for himself. After he had seen our farm, he called the children together and had prayer. He made them a beautiful talk and assured them that they would not suffer because God would see that they had something to eat. He went back home and visited a number of churches in his section and made up a carload of food and shipped it to us, freight prepaid.

As the years went by, he became very closely attached to the orphanage and its every interest. When our feed barn burned in 1929, he came to our rescue and greatly assisted in building another and made the largest contribution we received. When our second barn burned in the year 1935, he again came to our rescue and had the lumber for a new barn cut and sawed on his farm near Fayetteville, N. C. In every undertaking at the Christian Orphanage he was interested and he gave of his time and money to help put it across. In sickness or death he was ready and willing to lend a helping hand and a sympathetic heart.

He held a warm place in the hearts of all the orphanage family. It was really touching when he came on the orphanage campus. He would get out of his car and with a cherry smile and open arms he would soon have all the little fellows around him. The children loved him as a tender sympathetic father who had a great big warm heart.

Mr. Darden was elected a member of the Board of Trustees in 1920 and attended all its meetings except when detained by matters that prevented his being present. He was unanimously elected chairman of the Board at a special meeting held October 6, 1928 and remained chairman until his death.

The orphanage Board of Trustees will miss his presence and his sound judgment in solving its problems.

In grateful recognition of the great interest and deep love Mr. Darden had for the Christian Orphanage, the following resolutions were voted by the Board of Trustees:

First—That we recognize with much appreciation the splendid contribution Mr. Darden made to the orphanage as president and chairman of its Board of Trustees and remember that during his entire administration there was never any disagreement or dissension in its meetings.

Second—That we express to his family our deepest sympathy in their great loss and assure them that the Board feels that it has lost a most faithful member as well as its chairman on whose good, sound judgment the board always relied.

Third—That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our minutes as a permanent record, a copy be sent to the family, and a copy be published in "The Christian Sun."

V. R. HOLT,
 Mrs. W. R. SELLARS, Committee.

HINES

Whereas, the God of love and wisdom has seen fit to call from her earthly labors to her heavenly reward, one of our faithful and beloved members, Mrs. S. L. Hines, and whereas, in her going we keenly sense our loss, yet not without hope, knowing our loss is God's gain in glory.

Be it, therefore, resolved:

1. That we, the members of the Ladies' Aid Society of Bethlehem Christian Church humbly bow in a true spirit of resignation to the will of God and say, "Not our will but thine be done."

2. That Bethlehem Christian Church has lost a devoted member and her family a loving wife and mother and we extend to them our deepest sympathy.

3. That we honor her precious memory and consecrated life by carrying on the work that was so dear to her life until that day when we shall know even as we are known.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family, a copy to "The Christian Sun" for publication, and a copy be recorded in the records of the Ladies' Aid Society of Bethlehem Christian Church.

 Mrs. W. D. AUSTIN,
 Mrs. W. C. JOYNER,

Craven.

On February 18th, God in His infinite wisdom, saw fit to remove from our midst, one of our faithful members, Brother Ben F. Craven. He was a loyal member of Park's Cross Roads Christian Church, a devoted husband and father.

The funeral was conducted by the writer at this church, assisted by Revs. T. J. Green and Mr. Phillips. Burial was in the church cemetery. A large crowd attended the funeral, and loud speakers were set up on the yard for the benefit of those who could not get in the church.

There is sadness in the home, but loved ones weep with the hope of meeting again.

Martha Jones in appreciation of her nearly twenty-five years of service as treasurer of the society. The pastor of the church had the honor of presenting this beautiful book, which came in the nature of a surprise to the recipient.

An inspiring group met in an inspiring setting with an inspiring history and executed an inspiring program! Just so long as such talented and cultured women contend so courageously for the Christian faith, there will be Christian homes and in Christian civilization. May God bless them and their kind everywhere!

better circumstances. Poverty cannot rob us of what we are.

Prayer—Our Father, grant that we may cause no tear to Thy eye. Teach us Thy watchcare and to be, for Thee, a friend to man. Amen.

DILIGENT IN SEASON.

"Give diligence to make your calling sure."—II Peter 1:10.

Be "Instant in season."—II Tim. 4:2.

Moffatt says that Paul in this scripture adjures you to live good and keep everlastingly at it.

Abraham Lincoln said: "The leading role for a man of every calling is diligence; never put off till tomorrow what you can do today."

"So my work, it shall succeed
 In thine or in another's day;
 And if denied the victor's mead,
 Thou shalt not lack the toiler's pay."
 —Whittier.

To love life and the work of life, and the folks of life so as to be diligent in this comprehensive sphere, is to be intimate with life's innermost secrets, and to be the very soul of God.

Prayer—Our Father, forbid that we shall forget or be slack in our understanding of life and of Thee. We pray that we may never slacken in our service, but always found a good steward of Thy life. Amen.

The Campaign Closed Successfully

When the February returns were all in, the figures showed that the people out on the firing lines had succeeded in putting to rout the deadly foe of indifference, and that 704 new names had been added to the subscription list of our Church Paper. Some of the conferences did not quite make the grade, and several churches were not heard from, but a few friends in the far south and others scattered here and there across the country came to the rescue and the goal was reached.

Thank you, friends, one and all who shared in the work of getting subscriptions. It was good of you to help your Church Paper and your church people.

A layman writing in said: "You see I became right much interested in that contest for subscriptions and suggested that our church not allow Reidsville to beat them too far. . . I am happy to note that some of the churches that were given small quotas have quadrupled the expectation. I note that others are showing blank. . . One thing has been clearly revealed: We now know where the live wires are." What do you think of that, brother preacher?

Although the contest has closed, it is not too late to send in subscriptions. It will be a pleasure to give the tabulation below again later to show that other churches have reached, or surpassed their quotas. Come on, brethren, let's make it unanimous. Every church and every conference can reach its goal. Why not do it? But thanks for what you have done, and what you will yet do for our Church Paper.

NUMBER 11.

Missions In Battle Array

An endless line of splendor
These troops with heaven for home,
With creeds they go from Scotland,
With incense go from Rome.
These, in the name of Jesus,
Against the dark world stand,
They gird the earth with valor,
They heed their King's command.

Onward the line advances,
Shaking the hills with power,
Slaying the hidden demons,
The lions that devour.
No bloodshed in the wrestling—
But souls new-born arise—
The nations growing kinder,
The child hearts growing wise.

What is the final ending?
The issue, can we know?
Will Christ outlive Mohammed?
Will Kali's altar go?
This is our faith tremendous—
Our wild hope, who shall scorn—
That in the name of Jesus
The world shall be reborn!

PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES

A Father and Son Banquet is being planned by First Church, Greensboro, for March 25th. They are hoping to have one hundred men and boys present for this fine occasion.

A recent bulletin of Union Christian Church, near Burlington, N. C., Rev. W. Millard Stevens, pastor, carried an item comparing the first quarter of this conference year with the same quarter last year, showing a large increase in attendance at Sunday school and church and in contributions.

Dr. W. M. Jay, of our Winston-Salem Church says: Four new members were received on the fourth Sunday in February, three on confession of faith and one by letter of transfer. A pastor's class was started last Sunday with five in attendance. At least two or three more will be added at the next meeting."

On March 10th the following appeared in the San Diego Union, San Diego, California: "Chaplain and Mrs. H. E. Rountree are rejoicing over good news that came the other day. The Chaplain has been assigned to three years' duty on the transport Henderson, which will make continuous trips from the east coast to China and return. This means that the Rountrees will keep their home in San Diego." This transfer will give Chaplain Rountree a couple of visits in the Port of Norfolk each year and an opportunity to visit among his relatives and friends in that section.

UNION REVIVAL AT BURLINGTON.

Under the auspices of the Burlington-Graham Ministerial Association a union revival meeting is planned for March 13-April 10. The George T. Stephens Evangelistic Party has been secured to conduct this revival. The tobacco warehouse on West Trade Street has been converted into a tabernacle accomodating 3,000 people. Through this means I am inviting the residents of those sections to which THE CHRISTIAN SUN goes which are within reach of Burlington to attend these meetings. The morning services will be held at 10 o'clock, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday mornings. The night services will be at 7:30 o'clock with the exception of Monday night, when no services will be held.

All but four of our Protestant churches are cooperating in this campaign and those four churches will fellowship with us in the meetings. In the preparatory work the finest unity of fellowship and service has prevailed. A rather unique feature of the meetings is this: the whole expense for the evangelistic party is being provided for before the meetings begin. At a meeting last Friday night, two nights before the meeting began, five-sixths of the amount needed was in hand. It will all be raised without having to go into the churches or to make appeals at the tabernacle. At the tabernacle the congregations will be asked to give through offerings the funds needed to seat it, place the platform, light and heat for it and the books from which we sing.

J. H. LIGHTBOURNE.

HURRAH, CAROLINA!

So Carolina wins! And handsomely! Ah, ha! says I to all Virginians.

According to Cabin-Boy House it was football we were playing. Well, it doesn't matter to us Carolinians. We Carolinians are good at anything from Tiddle-de-winks to dinosaur hunting. Running down a few Virginians is just-before-breakfast exercise for us. We thought it was going to be a battle and we Carolinians can fight like all get out. But when we discovered it was football you Virginians wanted we just smiled, for if there is anything we are better at than fighting it is football. And when you Virginians lengthened that second half on us we just smiled again, for we were just getting our second wind.

And what an eleven! If Hyde had gotten into his stride it would have been a rout. It was his off-day. You Virginians should see how that boy Hyde can play when he is right. He was not right this time, simply could not get going. But what about Crutehfield and Brady! How they played. What charging, running, side-stepping! They were in on every play and when they got their clutches on the ball it spelled touchdown.

But now that the fun of the contest is over we can all rejoice, and thank heartily those nineteen subscribers from without the bounds of the Convention for really putting us over the "700" goal. THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the Convention are the real winners and for that we are all, Carolinians and Virginians, happy.

May our enthusiasm for THE CHRISTIAN SUN go on to bigger things, and a well deserved prosperity.

In closing I wish to thank all Carolinians for the effort put forth in behalf of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. And I wish to call attention to the splendid record made by the Western Conference. There is the outstanding achievement.

$ 25.00

The balance of $110.34 from 1936-1937 had been appropriated at the C. M. A. sessions of December, 1936. These appropriations were immediately made by treasurer Rascoe. For this year the appropriations voted at the December, 1937 sessions of the C. M. A. have been met promptly by Mr. Rascoe. It is his wish the checks for these appropriations can be mailed at Burlington so as to be received by the first of each month. Last year it was necessary toward the close of the year to borrow in order to meet the appropriations as they were due. It is hoped this will not be necessary this year. A bit of cooperation on the part of pastors and members of the C. M. A. will care for this. There should be at least one C. M. A. membership in almost every church of our conference.

NOTICE.

The Mid-Year Session of the Virginia Valley Central Congregational-Christian Conference will be held with the Bethlehem Church, Thursday, March 24th. All churches are urged to send a full delegation. At least one matter of great importance will be considered. The morning session will begin at 10 o'clock.

MORE ABOUT THE LAST DAYS.

What Did Jesus Say?
Is God a Murderer?

By REV. A. B. KIMBALL, D. D.

It was with mingled feelings of interest and wonder that I read the article entitled: "Are We Living in the Last Days?" in the February 10th issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN; interested because I am interested in the subject and wonder that so thoughtful a person as the writer of the article is, should allow himself to get so tangled in his logic as to prove inferentially the very thing he was declaring untrue. But when Homer nods—

I thoroughly agree with him in his declaration that we are living in the last days; of a certain type of individualism which is very objectionable; of selfish nationalism; of rank denominationalism; aristocracy of wealth; aristocracy of intellect; exploitation by employer or employee; and the last days of class distinction; but scanning the field of life I fail to see any strong evidence of their disappearance by any of the methods now being used. Perhaps in the field of rank denominationalism there may be some evidence of its disappearance through the heading up of the denominations into one great body which will be the church of the Anti-Christ.

And a study of world conditions is quite convincing to this scribe that it takes an ostrich-optimism to detect any evidence of their disappearance.

The Bible seems to teach that only the return of Jesus will bring about the disappearance of these evils which afflict the world.

If the Bible teaches anything it teaches that Jesus is coming back to earth again.

The words of the heavenly messenger to the disciples on the day of Christ's ascension, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven;" also the oft-repeated words of Jesus prove this glorious truth, the truth that he is coming back at the end of this age, which the Bible denominates "the last days," to establish a kingdom of righteousness and justice and remove evil from the earth.

What conditions will Jesus find on the earth at his return? Will all the objectionable features listed by the writer of the article: "Are We Living in the Last Days?" be abolished from the earth? "To the word and the testimony." "What saith the Scripture?" A careful study of the scripture reveals just the opposite. We hear Jesus saying:

"But as the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."—(Matt. 24: 37-39.) What were the conditions on the earth at the time of Noah? The Word of God tells us.

"And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, the whole imagination, with the purposes and desires of the heart was only evil every day."—(Marginal reading.—Gen. 6:5.)

"And God looked upon the earth, and behold, it was corrupt; for all flesh had corrupted His Way upon the earth. And God said unto Noah, The end of all flesh is come before me; for the earth is filled with violence through them; and I will destroy them with the earth."—(Gen. 6: 12-13.) Such was the condition of the world in the days of Noah. So said God. Such will be the condition of the world at his coming, so said Jesus.

When he comes instead of finding a world waiting to receive him, with evil banished from the earth, he said he would find his field, "the world," filled with the tares of the evil one; and the angels will be sent forth by the Son of man to gather out the tares and cast them into a furnace of fire and there will be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth.—(Matt. 13: 39-43.)

These are the Words of Jesus.

Jesus' message to the beloved disciple on the Isle of Patmos corroborates this.

"Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him."—(Rev. 1:7.) These are the Words of Jesus.

His coming will take the world unawares and all who dwell upon the earth will be taken as a wild beast in a snare.—(Luke 21: 34, 35.) So said Jesus.

It will be a world mourning and not a world rejoicing at his coming.

"And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory."—(Matt. 24: 30, 31.)

These are the Words of Jesus.

We learn from the Word of God that at the end of this age the inhabitants of the earth will hide themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountain; and cry to the rocks and the mountains, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand.

Paul tells: "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; when he shall come to be glorified in his saints and to be admired in all them that believe."—(II Thess. 1: 7-10.)

Do these words sound as though his coming were to be a process or a crisis? An evolution or a revolution? A drifting into a millenium of peace and happiness and prosperity or a catastrophe? Every age of God's dealings with the human race has been catastrophic in its ending, because of man striving to bring things about in his own way instead of following God's plan. According to the scripture this age will be no exception thus saith the Word of God, and if God doesn't know, who does?

If this be pessimism I am happy to be a pessimist with Jesus Christ and with God.

The writer referred to said that if this age ended in a catastrophe, "It would make God not only a destroyer but also a murderer." If this statement be true, then God has been a murderer all down through the ages.

Who slew the first-born of Egypt? God. Who slew the Egyptians in the Red Sea? God. Who destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah and their inhabitants? God.

Who destroyed Uzzah when he put his hand upon the ark? God.

Who destroyed Korah and Dathan and Abarim and their houses and all that appertained to them and two hundred and fifty men with them? God.

Who destroyed one-hundred and eighty-five thousand Assyrians, the flower of Sennacherib's army, in one night? God.

Who will destroy the wicked on the earth at the end of this age? God.

Because of these slayings is God a murderer? No! A thousand times No! He is simply an executioner of criminals condemned before the bar of the eternal God.

As a lake without an outlet becomes stagnant, so a life that is self-centered becomes bitter and unattractive.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

THE TIE THAT BINDS.

Sometimes it seems almost hopeless to believe that the Christian world can be united or that even those within one denomination like our own can work together. We are hopelessly divided in our opinions. Some weeks ago Dr. Helfenstein, of Delaware, wrote concerning the return of Jesus to the earth. He believes in the gradual growth process of the kingdom of God. This week Dr. Kendall, of North Girard, Pa., writes from the opposite point of view and quotes scriptures to back up his contention just as Dr. Helfenstein does to sustain his belief. Other responses have come to the editor concerning the first of these articles. Some agreed heartily while others were firmly of the opinion expressed by the article this week.

Since the days of the disciples there have been those who have expected the immediate return of Jesus to the earth to set up His kingdom. Some have prophesied a definite date. Others have been content to anticipate the return at any moment. This has been a great hope for the multitudes of people through nineteen centuries, and still is. No one should deny these good people the joy they get from expecting the immediate return of Jesus to the earth.

There are others who do not so understand the teachings of the Bible. They would emphasize the fact that Jesus said the kingdom of heaven is like leaven which put into meal continues to work unseen until all of the meal is leavened. They also emphasize the fact that Jesus said the Spirit would come to sustain and strengthen and guide people. They believe that Spirit is here today and that this is the spirit of Jesus—invisible but never present and supremely powerful.

There is no need to argue these points of view. They have been argued for 1900 years and seldom, if ever, has anyone changed his mind because of the arguments. "The Christian Sun" has no desire to continue debate concerning this or any other debated point, but it does welcome the constructive presentation of the gospel as people believe it, even though the opinions may be exactly opposite each other.

A fine thing about Christianity is that we are united not in our thinking but in our loyalty to a Person. The Christian world will never agree in its thinking unless it becomes totally stagnant, but it can happily cooperate in working for the advancement of the kingdom of Christ because of the supreme loyalty which individuals have for Jesus. Loyalty to Jesus Christ is the tie that binds the Christian world together. It is not intellectual consent to any particular doctrine but it is a spontaneous love that goes out to Jesus of Nazareth whom we believe to be not only the Son of man but the Son of God. This makes it possible for people of radically different opinions to sit around a common communion table and find fellowship not only with each other but with the God who redeems us despite our little minds. It makes it possible for us to be friends, to love each other and to work with all of our might for the cause of Christ alongside of those whose opinions we could never accept. Incidentally, this is part of the contribution which the Congregational and Christian churches have to give to the world. If we can learn to live happily in one united group and to work together cooperatively despite our radically different notions, then we shall have made a notable contribution to the kingdom of God and Jesus will really be coming into the lives of men, women and children while we live. Then if He shall choose to come according to the hope of those who think themselves to be fundamentalists, all will be ready to welcome Him for we will be loving Him and serving Him, which, after all, is much the most important.

OUR MISSION PERIOD.

March brings to the Southern Convention the beginning of a four-month period in which we are supposed to emphasize missions in our local churches. Young people have learned to call it World Friendship rather than missions. Today it will be well if all of us can think in terms of the world and of friendships. More than ever we are thinking in world terms, but for great masses of people the thought turns not to friendship but to hate and the possibility of war. There are enough Christians in the world today to overcome the phobia of hate and war by the processes of love. We may not do it. We may not even try. We may be content to let greedy business men and petty politicians direct international affairs. If we do, it will cost us more than it would to love and to be friendly.

Missionary societies, ministers and religious education workers may feel lying heavily upon them the responsibility of building world friendships. If we can understand the black, brown, yellow and red men, we may like them and certainly we will want to do them no harm. If we discover from knowing people of other races and nationalities that their religion lacks some fine quality which we find in our own, then we may want to share with them the religion that strengthens our own lives and brings to us joy. If there is nothing vital in our own Christian experience then there is no need for us to try to be missionary. It simply can not be done. If the flame which was in the heart of Jesus glows in our own souls, then our activity will be similar to his, and the records show that he was constantly busy making friends with those who knew not the joy that was in his own heart.

The mission period gives us an opportunity to test the quality of our own religion. If we are big enough in soul to be friendly with those who know not our Christ, then we may be big enough to bring into the treasury of the Lord not only our prayers but our money so that the non-Christian world may have the good news of Jesus Christ.

RELIGION TODAY

By ALBERT C. DIEFFENBACH.

To Hold the World Together.

An example that churches in other cities might follow with inestimable benefit is set by the Greater New York Federation of Churches, which has decided upon an interdenominational conference in that city patterned on the world meetings in Oxford and Edinburgh last summer.

Such a course ought to be undertaken by every considerable community in this country, because those were extraordinary gatherings in the annals of Christendom and their light and leading ought not to be lost. The state of the Christian church-religion is too unsteady and the condition of the world too perilous on the brink of another war, for any neglect of good means to unity and peace. In Oxford and particularly in Edinburgh the evidence of the ecumenical mind was present as it has never been before in modern times.

One agrees with President Albert W. Palmer of Chicago Theological Seminary, who was at both meetings, that now is the time to make a drive for the United Church in the United States.

Working over his notebooks of last summer, Dr. Palmer knows better than he did on the scene of action, how incalculably important the conference in Edinburgh was because it dealt with theology. Theologians from this country, which is nearer to theological illiteracy than any other section of the Christian world, are beginning to say that their subject is in Palmer's words, neither dead nor irrelevant. Upon theology, stated in terms intelligible to the person of ordinary mentality, depends all the practical work in the social order, which was the earlier business in Oxford. And for that matter, human action of every kind everywhere. Laymen are also finding how absolutely essential a basis of theology is. One saw them seeking it last summer.

Seven Major Agreements.

The learned clerical churchmen who came from the mystical cloisters of Eastern Orthodoxy, from the Continental regions of the two-fold Reformation tradition (Lutheran and Reformed), and the British Isles and these States with the all-too-practical strain and stress, all bore witness to the prior importance of theology. Life and work can not proceed without faith and order.

Of course, the reason the churches have for centuries been divided in their programs is this: they have first been scattered in their doctrines. It always comes back to that. It was the determination to set their minds upon thinking as one mind which brought 122 denominations, through their chosen leaders—think of such a number of mental variations—to Edinburgh.

I have gathered up what seemed to me, as I attended the many sessions, the important things done there in the following seven points of agreement:

1. That divisions are a sin.
2. That unity is a fact in the nature of man and God.
3. That supreme allegiance is to Christ, and takes precedence over any other claim.
4. That the church is, in its nature, ecumenical, Una Sancta, and this ecumenicity obligates the churches to heal their divisions and become one.

5. That no conception of orders, either of apostolic succession or any other, as at present understood, can be accepted if it does not include the churches whose prime allegiance is to Christ.
6. That all differences now existing may be reconciled and resolved by the Spirit of Truth, because the Truth is one; and when it is found, unity will be a reality in our actual life.
7. That the churches, sustained by a great faith, and moved by prayer and study through the years, must establish a single church through the corporate visible union of the many existing denominations.

These are fundamentals and ideals at which they definitely aimed, and these have been made the essentials of the World Christian Council which was created in the two conferences. To study them and realize them is a grand opportunity. There are many obstacles, it is true, in the way of realizing the unity which is a fact in nature and in grace, and as yet there is no working model for reunion. But there is a mind for it among multitudes of people, as in Edinburgh and Oxford. That is the great thing which should be brought to all of the churches in the United States.

Already the findings of both conferences have been published, and Dr. J. H. Oldham's complete report of the Oxford conference is announced in a book by Willett, Clark and Co. The printed materials are abundant. The men who went from this country to the conferences were a large number, probably 400 in all. They are widely distributed and would be available for leadership in many regional conferences. One has been carried on in Evanston, Ill.

I have been going over my notes and the findings of the five sections in Oxford and the five in Edinburgh, as they were published then, and I am discovering many things, the full import I did not appreciate at first.

Verily, the resources one may find in world conferences are inexhaustible. Take, to begin, the local congregation, which in one respect, is a spiritual laboratory of unity which transcends all differences and barriers of class, social status, race, nation. It is a fellowship the like of which is found nowhere else in the world. This all-embracing communion is what makes the church the church. The ideas, manners, atmosphere and doctrines of the local church, though it may be only a little flock in a plain meeting-house, are found everywhere and under every denominational name. What occurs in a small gathering is as important and world-changing as the elaborate worship in a cathedral.

One can present the high argument for the generous support of the local congregation movingly, for the greatest work in the world is done there. It is a fact that different churches come together in community services in witness of the ecumenical character of the church. The church is not interdenominational, it is supra-denominational. Again the church of every size and name, by its tender ministry, shows its concern for the outcast, the under-privileged and the despised of the community, for the church is the perennial friend of such. The church engages in social action for making the world, with its cruelty, hatreds and discriminations, a beloved community. (Please turn to page 11.)

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Gospel is a personal message. It is "good news" from the greatest Person who ever lived. Men are commissioned to deliver this to their fellowmen unto the uttermost part of the earth. Those who have the high privilege of receiving this message are charged: "He that hath ears to hear let him hear." Individuals, one by one, are to be won, saved and blest by the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The needs of the individual should not be overlooked in this day of social movements and mass organization.

The pastor of a local church meets his congregation as a group in the regular service on Sunday. He may minister to their individual needs in such a service, but the sermon may miss the heart cry of many in the congregation. That is the fearful responsibility in preaching. Scores of hungry, anxious hearts may be in need of refreshing strength. Does the sermon and the other parts of the service satisfy these individual needs?

Church members need help. Many are discouraged. Some are carrying heavy burdens. Doubts trail upon the heels of others who wish they could see the way out of many difficult situations. Fears chill the ardor and dim the vision. In a veritable slough of despair they cry out for the living God to deliver them. They want the touch of a cordial hand and the glow of a warm heart. Theological definitions and philosophical platitudes have their places but they do not fully satisfy the soul. The Gospel of Jesus is adequate. Jesus in the human heart can kindle new faith and find a way of victory and peace. Christ is all and in all for those who accept Him as personal Saviour and Master. He is something more than a message about Him. He is the message. He is the "good news."

The Church of today must face the responsibility of taking Christ into its own inner life; and when that glorious experience becomes a reality, others may be brought to Him. Intellectual assent to truth is a step in the right direction, but Jesus Christ demands more than that. Our human needs cry out for the presence of a living Christ. Man is not satisfied until he opens the door of his heart and lets Jesus Christ come in. Jesus cannot do His best work on the outside of the church.

The churches of our fellowship have a definite challenge in these crisis days through which we are passing.

James O'Kelly and his fellow laborers saw a vision of a free church unhampered by sectarian definitions and narrow theological dogmas. It was sufficient for them to believe that "Jesus Christ is the Head of the Church. And the Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice." They believed that the humblest believer may open his heart to the fellowship of Jesus Christ. Men differ in their interpretations of truth but they are one in Him. The right of private interpretation and the liberty of conscience is a privilege and duty which should be accorded to all, and exercised by every person in the church of our Lord and Master. The gospel should find its place in every human heart as the great regenerating message for this generation. This will call for a Christian standard for every man and every woman. Personal Christianity is one of the great needs of this world. What contribution have we to make? Is our life pagan or Christian?

I. W. JOHNSON.

"NOTHING SUCCEEDS LIKE SUCCESS."

One snowy day last fall at the call of Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, President of the Convention, a number representing the different Boards of the Convention met at the Henderson Church for the purpose of considering the fate and future of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The Virginia delegation encountered serious difficulties on the highway. The snow was falling fast. Finally they did arrive. The ones present were conscious of what a church paper had meant to our church in the South. They were also conscious that the church of today and tomorrow needed such a periodical. We all knew that the paper could be improved and should be improved, but even so, it had a mission and was fulfilling that mission quite admirably. We also realized that a circulation of 1,400 in a church membership of 30,000 was far too small. We discussed THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the possibility of its continuance from every possible angle. No one present could see any way by which the paper could be financed. The ones who were there were willing to do their part, but we seemed to be uncertain about what the ones who were not there would do. However, together we decided to make a program and present it to the brotherhood and ask our brother ministers to assume the responsibility of putting the paper into 700 new homes. I have a feeling that no one in our midst felt that the goal set would be reached. We all felt that the "effort" would be worthwhile. The writer is deeply gratified with the results announced in last week's CHRISTIAN SUN—704 new names added to the list. This is wonderful, not only for the new subscribers, but for the confidence it gives the constituency. It gives us all a new respect for our ministry as well as our laity.

As is usually the case, some of our ministers did not work, they did not believe in the undertaking, they do not believe in the paper. The genius of the Christian Church permits anyone to have his own opinion regarding these matters, but the great body of the church goes forward, nevertheless. This achievement has much to do with the spirit and temper of our brotherhood. We have succeeded in this one undertaking. Together we can succeed in another, and still another. If we could single out some worthwhile task and unite on the performance of that task, great strength to our church would result therefrom.

Success is one endeavor gives courage for efforts in another. If you do not have a "concern" and a vision for our church, you should make it your business to go from conference to conference and into local churches and talk with the pastors and people. On such a journey you would get an insight into the real conditions of the church. You would find the lack of interest, evidences of curtailment and of decay. Undoubtedly you would be conscious of an inward "urge" to do something that would bring new life and increased power to the church. Often times we fail, not for the lack of purpose or interest, but for the lack of knowledge. We simply do not know. I know of no finer medium by which the church may acquaint herself with herself than a paper circulated widely through the membership. If the paper is not what you think it ought to be, try your hand. Sit down and write. The editor will publish your contribution. In this church of ours we can be frank and courageous as well as blue and pessimistic. The ones who lived before us served and achieved. They gave us our church. We are unworthy of the heritage unless we, like they, serve and achieve. It is our responsibility to pass on to coming generations that which we have received from our fathers, and to pass it on improved and enlarged that our contributions may excel the ones that we received. If not, we are unworthy servants. Below I list some of the things we need as a church:

1. More ministers prepared for the joy of preaching who have the faith and the courage to give their entire time and thought to the preaching of a glorious gospel, who will not put their hands to the plow and turn back. It is practically impossible to "feed the sheep" and at the same time give yourself to farming, teaching, or other kinds of business.

2. More men and women, young and old, who will give a bit more of their time to the local church, realizing fully that their "labor in the Lord" is not in vain but that when one gives God and the church a sufficient place in his life, strangely enough the necessities of life are always in His hands.

3. A greater disposition of mutual helpfulness upon the part of churches and individuals among us who are able to help. Churches that are quite sufficient in their own organization need to have a vision and a responsibility for the churches that are unable to provide for themselves or take advantage of an opportunity for advancement. We are our brothers' keeper, and if we be Christian as we profess, we will share with each other something other than good wishes and sound advice.

4. A greater evidence of unselfishness upon the part of the different departments of our Convention. If we have a single department that exists first for itself, we do not need that department longer. Every department of the Convention should exist first of all for the church and second for the task for which it was created. If the department is to decide its own life and the life of the church, the life of the church should come first, regardless of what that department may be.

5. We need to realize, as our forefathers did, that without Christ men are lost and that the responsibility of taking Christ to those who have Him not is ours, and we cannot evade it.

6. We need a wider vision that our sense of responsibility may be greater. There are numbers of places in cities and open country where Congregational and Christian Churches should be organized. It is time to stop closing churches and begin to open a few.

7. Perhaps this one should have been first. We need a new vision of God and of Christ, of what the church is and of what its mission to our world of today is. A vision of God is not found usually by ascending the mountain peaks but by descending into the valley of humility and of intercession.

What we are unable to do, God is abundantly able. "I can do all things," said the apostle, "through Christ who strengtheneth me."

L. E. SMITH.

STEWARDSHIP PROGRAM FOR 1938.

The Stewardship Commission of the General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches, at its recent meeting adopted a comprehensive program for 1938. Rev. Archie H. Hook is the chairman, and Dr. W. H. Denison is the executive secretary of this commission, which has offered the following recommendations:

That we ask the State Superintendents, also the Women's presidents, and seek their cooperation in intensive stewardship instruction in 1938, this remaining year of the Stewardship Emphasis Biennium; also that they request the conference boards of directors to appoint Stewardship Committees to follow up such instruction and carry it forward.

That we recommend to our people, both ministers and laymen, the practice of setting aside a definite first part (first fruits) of their income for definite Christian work, beginning with the tenth at least, hoping that many shall give a much larger percentage.

That we request the Women's Departments of the conferences and the Women's Associations in the churches to introduce definite stewardship instruction in their programs, specifically as it relates to material possessions, thus helping to secure stewardship practice in both homes and churches.

That we recommend to our people the adoption for their own lives and by their families the principles of Christian Stewardship as revealed in the Scriptures and interpreted in the best stewardship literature of the day; that they seek the mind and teaching of Christ as to the philosophy of property: its acquisition, administration, spending, proportional giving, saving.

That we urge upon all our churches and finance departments or committees that they lift their financial processes from those of mere money raising to those of a stewardship basis where they may become a great spiritual challenge.

That we advise our churches to lift their benevolence item out from the current expense column and place it where it may have proper attention and the dignity it deserves so that the responsibility of determining the proportion of their giving to current expenses and to benevolences shall rest upon the givers where it more properly belongs.

That we urgently request those who prepare Reading Lists for the churches to include some of the splendid present-day books on Christian Stewardship; that we urge the Pilgrim Press and the Christian Publishing Association to display on their tables and promote the sale of stewardship books along with others.

That in answer to the frequent question as to the share of one's giving that should be given through church channels, it be suggested that we believe for the average person the 70 per cent often expressed informally by the United Stewardship Council is very equitable. Of course, it must be remembered some should give more and some less, but for the average person this may be used as a guide.

That it is the opinion of the Commission that the principles of Christian Stewardship condemn gambling, lotteries and the lure for easy money both in and out of the church. We approve as ours, therefore, the following resolutions as adopted by the United Stewardship Council of the United States and Canada:

A. In view of the prevalence of methods of raising money for Christian church purposes, methods which are doubtful and even pagan and substitutes for giving as worship, we urge a study and a facing of the whole range of Christian and individual giving, that which has no expectation of return in kind, the Christian and scriptural method of financing the work of the churches at home and abroad. We urge all churches of the Lord Jesus Christ, in all their financing plans and methods to use only worship-giving and not to depend upon fairs, card parties, sales, or lotteries of any description as methods of raising church finances.

B. It is a matter of Christian principle as well as common sense that no individual can receive something worthwhile for nothing without a crucial danger to character, both moral and spiritual. We, therefore, draw attention to the danger in any "get-something-for-nothing" schemes or proposals which lend themselves to political or economic manipulation. The churches need to become aware of their function to develop fellowship tasks, such as the care of the aged, the needy and those temporarily embarrassed who are victims of an unchristian order or condition. It is our duty to emphasize the fact that to receive or expect to receive money without a proper self-investment in labor is to endanger the nation, the church and the individual.

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

NIGHT AND DAY.

Orlando, Florida,
March 12, 1938.

From the porch of the third floor of this Sanitarium, looking to the west, one gets an unobstructed view of a Florida sunset. And these warm spring evenings, it has been and is a view worth getting. Atmospheric conditions make a mellow, blue sky, plush-like in fact, and the sun, in bidding adieu to the parting day, resolves himself into a huge round ball of smokless fire that illumines the whole western heavens with scarlet and deep red and blusing pink. If there are clouds perched or floating in the West, the silver linings, the golden flushes and fringes make a picture on the dark gray clouds that one cannot forget. As one beholds, as the writer does, this indescribable spectacle one's soul cries out in ecstasy with the Psalmist: "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork, day unto day uttereth speech and night unto night showeth knowledge." Dr. Josiah Royce of Harvard used to quote to his class this Scripture: "The fool hath said in his heart there is no God." And then he would add emphatically, "That's right young men, that's right, for nobody but a fool would say such a thing."

If one will view, meditatively, a glowing sunset, especially such a sunset as one sees in Florida, one will know that only such an Artist as this world has never yet produced could paint such a picture. One does not have to go to Palestine, nor back in history nineteen hundred years to find a miracle. Just look at the last rays and the fiery flashes of the departing sun and then the gathering darkness of night, and consider their might and meaning. Man fills the air with smoke and fumes and poisonous gases. These must, some how, be cleansed, purified, regenerated, or the very atmosphere we breathe would poison all mankind. So the setting sun with gathering night is God's guarantee to man that tomorrow will come and shall be a new day with atmosphere cleansed and purified, a day with the rising sun shall be as sweet and fresh and fragrant as Adam and Eve breathed in the first morning of Creation. The miracle and majesty of night lock in loving embrace the pure rays (of a departed sun), and the impure and poisonous gases (of the departed day), and behold a new heaven and a new earth as the slumber of night gives way to the dawn of day and the rising sun. Verily we live in a world of mystery, wonder and miracles. Only a fool, a very stupid and unthinking fool, can say in his heart there is no God. And science is not explaining the mystery and majesty with which we are surrounded. The world grows more mysterious and wonderful, not less so with advancing science. The world in which we live today, creation itself, steam, energy, electricity, are more wonderful and mysterious, more blessed and beautiful, than they were before the days of Benjamin Franklin, or Charles Darwin or Thomas Edison. The more man discovers the more wonderful, mighty, wise, majestic, and loving does the great God Who created all who become. The folly, the madness, the sin of man desecrates and degenerates: the infinite love and compassion of God through the gift of His dear Son renews, redeems, regenerates.

This writer came to Florida, under instructions of physicians, to lie down, rest strained and wrought vocal chords, and let fresh air and sunshine have the right of way awhile. Verily "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength." So with renewed strength, vigor, a quickened faith, a deeply grateful heart, the writer now turns his face homeward, carrying ten pounds of added weight, and more than that much of added health and happiness. Words fail and the heart is unable to express its gratitude for the friendly letters that have come, and the care of good physicians and nurses, both for the beloved wife who has improved so much and your all unworthy friend.

J. O. ATKINSON.

DEADLY PARALLEL.

The Missionary Review of the World prints this in its March number:

"In North Carolina Baptists divided in 1840 on missions. There were then 1,200 anti-missionary Baptists, and twice as many committed to missions. Fifty years later the anti-missionary group had not increased in number, while the missionary group had in their churches 300,000 members."

The Review might have added that neither had the anti-missionary Baptists ever built for themselves or others an orphanage, a college, or any other benevolent enterprise, while the missionary Baptists were the first church in North Carolina to build an orphanage (and now has the largest in the State), and also a church college—the oldest in the State—and have some of the largest and most impressive houses of worship in the State; whereas, the anti-missionary Baptists have for themselves very few if any imposing houses of worship. It has ever been so, and will be. Those who do most for others, namely, give others, the Gospel of salvation through Christ, will do most for their own congregations and communities. An anti-missionary church is a church of stagnation, insofar as it is a church at all.

When our Lord said: "Go ye and preach my Gospel even unto the uttermost parts," He was giving a command for the enrichment of the home church and for the church everywhere that He was and is building. When a church becomes missionary-minded that church is then ready to help in all benevolences. The same is true of an individual. It has been my experience and observation through twenty years experience as Mission Secretary that when an individual, man or woman, boy or girl, rich or poor, can be induced to become missionary-minded, give heart, hand and means to missions, then that individual is ready to be approached, and is willing to help every other enterprise of the church. It is Christ's way. There is no other way to the heart of the individual than that of obedience to our Lord, "Ye shall be witnesses with me." Witnesses unto Christ—that is the missionary message, power and saving grace of the individual and the church. Shall we witness unto Him during these weeks and months of missionary emphasis in our church? J. O. A.

FIELD NEWS FROM AFRICA.

By DOROTHY P. CUSHING.

Reaching out with an insatiable yearning for knowledge—knowledge that brings light on the perplexing, heart-rending problems facing an Africa forced by circumstances beyond its control into the maelstrom of so-called modern civilization, Africa's younger leaders—especially those near Christian institutions of learning—appeal to the missionaries for help.

In many cases—indeed in an appalling number of cases—these pleas are being denied because there is not sufficient personnel on the missionary staff to meet the demands. Teachers, supervisors, district workers all find time and time again that where counsel and advice are needed and earnestly desired they cannot give them because they are physically unable to handle responsibilities.

So it is that a missionary like Rev. Lauretta A. Dibble, Principal of Means School, Dondi, West Africa, speaks for all the rest of the Africa missionaries when she says, "We are faced on all sides by heart-breaking needs for guidance, for fellowship, but we simply cannot meet them. We are failing these people just when they need us most." The consequences of drastic reductions because of the depression and decreased income are showing up even more painfully now than at the time they were made.

It is interesting to take a glimpse at what the American Board is doing in Africa along educational lines. There is Adams College at Adams, with over 600 bright young native students under the alert leadership of Dr. Edgar H. Brookes, John A. Reuling and an efficient staff. There is Mt. Silinda Institute with over 500 students and the Girls' Boarding School now called the Orlanda Childs Pierce Memorial School. At Bailundu there are 420 students; at Chilisso, 200; at Chikore, 350. In Galangue the school registers 200, and at Sachikela, 285. In Mrs. Merlin W. Ennis' kindergarten, at Sachikela, there are 70 youngsters, and, of course, Inanda is well known to Congregational and Christian churches as the first school for Zulu girls in South Africa with the present enrollment of 260.

Means School where Miss Dibble is principal trains girls to become teachers and home makers. They try out their newly acquired knowledge in a practice cottage on the school grounds, and in the kindergarten 36 little black-faced children are used as models. Being principal of a school like Means includes not only general supervision, but matters of policy, curriculum, tree raising and puddings.

To add to the general pressure of the past years Miss Dibble has lived through several seasons of locust invasions when large sections of Africa were devastated by these hordes of insects and the people brought to starvation.

Many stories come of the splendid work being done by graduates of Means School who are teaching in the WOMAN'S MISSION BOARD MEETS.

The Woman's Mission Board of the Southern Convention of the Congregational-Christian Churches convened at Elon College, N. C., March 5th, with the following members present: Mrs. J. G. Truitt, president; Mrs. S. C. Harrell, vice-president; Mrs. C. M. Cannon, recording secretary; Mrs. Mary A. Rollins, corresponding secretary; Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle, treasurer; Mrs. J. M. Harris, Eastern Virginia president; Mrs. J. H. Lightbourne, North Carolina president; Mrs. K. H. Sale, Valley Virginia president; Mrs. W. R. Sellars, spiritual life superintendent; Mrs. Carl R. Key, literature superintendent; Mrs. W. E. Wissemann, superintendent of Young People; Mrs. M. J. W. White, superintendent of memorials and life memberships; Mrs. W. M. Jay, Convention editor.

Mrs. Semones from the Valley Virginia Conference was a welcome visitor. Mrs. B. D. Jones, Cradle Roll Superintendent, was the only member of the board who was absent.

The meeting was held in the library building and was called to order at 10:30 o'clock by the president, Mrs. John G. Truitt. Reports were made by the various department heads and many items of business were discussed. The board voted to continue the annual mission study day which has been so ably promoted by Mrs.

villages. Some of them are living in far distant kraals entirely surrounded by pagans. One young man who married a Means School girl, wrote: "How can I thank you and all the teachers at the Means School for the splendid training which you have given my wife?" He added later that there were many husbands who blessed Means School as well as himself. One of the government inspectors wrote the following endorsement of this school: "It is the best establishment for all round education for women which I know in all Angola."

L. E. Smith and to meet the expenses through offerings at the meetings in each conference.

Another important item discussed and recommended by the board was the use of the packets of literature and study books which are to be prepared by our literature headquarters in Boston and New York for our missionary societies. Detailed reports will be heard concerning these through our Literature Superintendents at the spring rallies.

ATTENTION! INTERMEDIATE LEADERS.

The Young People's Department of our church has just issued a pamphlet entitled, "Church Work With Young People of the Junior High School Age." Leaders of intermediates (12 to 14 years of age) will welcome such material since help for their field of work has been limited. The pamphlet is a very fine one and can be secured from the Young People's Department, C. P. Building, Dayton, Ohio, for 10c. Send for your copy at once.

The Seminar on the Pastor's Class is scheduled to meet in Washington, D. C., March 29-30. Among the people in this section who are on the committee are Dr. L. E. Smith, Dr. S. C. Harrell and Rev. Carl H. Voss, from North Carolina, and Dr. J. G. Truitt, Dr. H. S. Hardeastle and Rev. F. C. Lester, from Virginia, GREAT TASKS TO BE ACCOMPLISHED IN OUR WORLD.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR MARCH 27, 1938.

SCRIPTURE: Luke 4:18, 19.
Mark 2:17.
Ephesians 2:9-11.

This topic is a challenge to Endeavorers to find a place of Christian service in the world. The discussion should be planned carefully. It should be thoughtful and inspirational. Ever remember that God is willing to do great things through us if we will let Him.

It was not intended that we should all do the same thing. Just as the body has many members and they have not the same function; likewise, we should perform the tasks that is ours, but learn the art of working together. We should not be envious of our brother because his work is greater than ours. God gave each talents according to the ability to use them. When used for His glory, all talents are useful. Those things in our life that hinder the progress of Christian service should be ruled out. A task great or small cannot become its best unless in our life there is a spirit of fitness.

For Discussion—

1. Is the spiritual realm of life unlimited?
2. How important are the motives of men?
3. Should the spirit of prayer be associated with our purposes? Why?
4. Does one's personal contact with sin make one more competent to fight its influence?
5. In the light of present Christianity is God pleased with our social, national and racial distinctions?
6. What can we do to help deliver our brother from his moral corruption?

From Thee all skill and science flow,
All pity, care and love,
All calm and courage, faith and hope;
O pour them from above!

And part them, Lord, to each and all,
As each and all shall need,
To rise like incense each to Thee,
In noble thought and deed.

—Anon.

KEEPING THE BODY STRONG.

A PERSONAL ASPECT OF TEMPERANCE.

LESSON XII—MARCH 20, 1938.

GOLDEN TEXT: Now therefore beware, I pray thee, and drink no wine nor strong drink, and eat not any unclean thing.—Judges 13:4.

LESSON: Mark 6:53-56; Judges 13:12-14; I Cor. 3:16-17; Romans 12:1-2.

The Great Physician.

Jesus gave a great deal of attention to the ministry of healing. Mark writes that "wheresoever he entered, into the villages, or into cities; or into the country, they laid the sick in the market-places, and besought him that they might touch if it were but the tassel of his garment; and as many as touched him were made whole." There are too many references in the gospels to Christ's attention to the bodies of men to be dismissed lightly. Jesus preached and practiced a gospel of health, of a sound mind and a sound spirit in a sound body. Jesus knew the intimate revelation between body and mind and spirit. He knew the importance of keeping the body as an efficient instrument of the spirit. He knew that the care of the body was not unrelated to the cure of souls in many respects. Jesus would give his approval of the institutions and the programs which are seeking to give physical health and well-being to men and women in our modern world. Furthermore he would undoubtedly emphasize the development of health rather than the mere cure of disease. And, of course, he would make health of body a means to an end, rather than an end in itself. Jesus wanted men to be well and strong and vigorous so that they could the better serve God, and be better stewards of what God had given them to do. If a man's religion does not prompt him to take care of his body, to avoid abuses of his body, keep his body at its highest efficiency, he has misinterpreted one of the meanings of religion. Furthermore sincere religion is a very effective factor in wholesome health. This does not mean of course that a Christian will never be sick. It does mean that the spirit of true religion does foster health and physical well-being.

Sound Advice to Expectant Mothers.

Here was a mother who was looking forward to the coming of a baby. With true, and instinctive concern, she and her husband sought advice as to what to do, so as to give the child the best possible heritage and training. The angel of the Lord spoke plainly and frankly. "She may not eat of anything that cometh of the vine, neither let her drink wine or strong drink, nor eat any unclean thing; all that I command her let her observe." These words cannot be lightly dismissed simply because they come from a far away day. Even in that early day, men had learned that a pregnant mother should not use drink of alcoholic content, and that she should be careful of her diet. And modern medical science, on the whole confirms the truth and hence the wisdom of these words. Smoking and drinking mothers are not playing fair with their unborn children, as well as with themselves. There are some rather startling statistics available concerning the effect of drinking and smoking on unborn children. Modern women ought to face the facts in this matter.

Temples of God.

Men have erected some elaborate and beautiful temples, but the most elaborate and loftiest temple of all is man himself, created by God in God's own image, fearfully and wonderfully made, and designed to the dwelling place of the Spirit of God Himself. The human body took on new dignity and meaning when Jesus was born, when the "Word was made flesh and dwelt among us," and Paul gave this thought permanent form when he wrote "Know ye not that ye are a temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" What a difference that makes in our attitude toward our bodies. Nothing about them is common or unclean. They are the dwelling place of the Spirit of God Himself. They are to be kept clean, and strong, and responsive to the things of the Spirit. They are to be vessels, cleansed and meet for the Master's use. They are not to be abused or misused, not to be prostituted to low ends. To be sure they are not to be pampered or petted, to be worshipped. They are to be held in a high sense of stewardship, they should be kept at their best in every way, and with them we are to glorify God.

"If any man defile, or destroy the temple of God, him shall God destroy." One may do this in coarse and brutal ways; he may do it in more refined and respectable ways. But he who abuses his body, and undermines his health by doing things contrary to the will of God, inevitably pays the penalty for his lawless conduct. Bodies are more than things to be fed and stuffed, more than things on which to hang expensive clothes, more than things to be indulged; they are temples and instruments of the Spirit of God Himself.

Living Sacrifices.

"I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your spiritual service." In primitive and undeveloped religions, the worshipper brings a burnt offering, something dead, some material gift. Paul exhorts his fellow-Christians to present their bodies, a living sacrifice to God. Hands and head and heart, eyes and ears, lips and tongue, feet and all that one has and is, are to be offered as a living sacrifice unto God. God desires not burnt offering and sacrifice. God wants living personalities, in whom He can embody himself, and through whom He can express himself.

Changed Men.

"And be not fashioned according to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind. . . ." Only changed men can change the world. And only Christ can transform men. If any man be in Him he becomes a new creature or creation. Christ in us is our hope of glory. Christ can transform life and make it new and strong and beautiful. And the transformed life proves and bears witness to what is "the good and acceptable and perfect will of God." Those who do the truth come to the light. If any man wills to do his doctrine he shall know. The world needs nothing more today than men who have been transformed by the renewing of their minds in Christ Jesus, and through whom Christ can manifest his love and saving grace.

In closer relations the church seeks to correct misunderstandings between old and young, the tension between men and women; improve health, housing, employment and recreation.

You Are the Church.

And the church is ever seeking to lead its people beyond the accepted standards of living in any community, and to raise the general level of the social conscience. Religion in government, both local and national, is a leaven and not a lever, yet it is definite in the matters which it approves and condemns, and always the ideal of the Kingdom of Heaven is before it as it deals with the kingdoms of this world.

Above all, in the common life, the church works for that solidarity of mankind against all the things which

BEAUTIFUL BECAUSE TRUE.

"He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in that which is much."—Luke 10: 10.

"He who doeth small things well will prove to higher trusts most true."—Anon. Beautiful because true.

Christ's teachings from beginning to end, and as taught and inculcated in the church by the apostles, remind us of that living and eternal principle, that "as moments make the year, small things make the great;" and that to give diligence to small things is to give perfection to the greater.

Prayer—Our Father, we would bless Thee in our every-day life. We pray for humility of heart, and consecration of self and service, that today we may do this in all that we do and say. Amen.

THE CHRISTIAN'S SUPREME CALL.

"Whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother hath need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"—I John 3: 17.

Bishop Gore is quoted as saying, "To tolerate misery among men without feeling the call to remedy it is to fall under the reprobation—Inasmuch as ye did it not—ye did it not to me."

Jesus, experience and history, all teach us that no man comes to true greatness who has not felt that his life belonged to other people.

There is a destiny which makes us brothers,
None lives to self alone
All that we send into the lives of others
Comes back to our own.

Prayer—Our Father, we pray for the Holy Spirit to so fill us that Thou canst see thy self in us, and working diligently for Thy kingdom among men. Amen.

THE WORLD AND OURSELVES.

"Quit you like men. Be strong."—I Samuel 4: 9; I Corinthian 16: 13.

The world advances only by the men and the women who in their lives live ahead of their times and produce extra achievements. That opportunity is open to one and all, and the greatest contribution any one can make to the world is the giving himself wholly to things ahead in a way to bless mankind. Promise yourself that you will be strong that nothing will keep you from giving yourself to the life of things about you.

Prayer—

The paths our bravest ones have trod
O make us brave to go,
That we may give our lives to God
In serving man below.
So hence shall flow fresh strength and grace
As from a full-fed spring,
And make the world a better place
And life a worthier thing.
—Wm. D. Howe.

THE CHURCH AND THE WORSHIP.

(To be read Sunday morning.)

"Jesus said unto her—the hour cometh and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth."—Jno. 4: 21, 23,

Go to church today and worship God in song, and prayer, in His Word and in every thought. But do not forget that worship is of the heart, and that we are to keep our worship at the heart of life. In order to do this we must take Christ in that heart and He must actuate our spirit in every day life. Nature may speak a lot. God may be found in every phase of it, but we do not find God there unless it is reflected from His image within our hearts.

Nature is our Father's world,
He shows in all that's fair;
In the rustling grass
I hear Him pass,
He speaks to me everywhere.

—Babcock.

Prayer—Our Father, we pray for the spirit of worship. We pray for that spirit in sanctuary. We pray for that spirit in thy people. We pray that we all may find Thee in Thy fullness. Amen.

TRUE CIVILIZATION.

"Love your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again."—Luke 6: 35.

We are thinking of a civilization that makes us a child of our country to which we look for help and protection. We are thinking of that civilization that affirms the brotherhood of man and lives it, a civilization that has no place for barbarism, a civilization that has no place for war, a civilization that will not allow itself to slip back into losses sustained by war. This applies to individuals as well as to a civilization. In fact, it exists with the individual first. Let that condition exist and the other will take care of itself. Lesson: Let this life live in thee.

Prayer—Our Father, we are poor, weak creatures. We are subject to our passions and emotions, and too prone to follow them. Dear Father, forbid and make us like Christ. Make us subjects of Thine. Amen.

"GOOD MORNING."

"A glad heart maketh a cheerful countenance."—Prov. 15: 13.

"A good word maketh a man glad."—Prov. 12: 25.

"He that is of cheerful heart hath a continual feast."—Prov. 15: 15.

"Blessed by the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who comforteth us in all our afflictions, that we may be able to comfort them that may be in affliction."—II Cor. 1: 3, 4.

"It was only a glad good morning,"
As she passed along the way;
But it spread the morning's glory,
Over the livelong day.

—Charlotta Perry.

THE ADVENTURE OF WORSHIP.

By REV. CARL R. KEY.

"Prove me now, saith the Lord of Hosts."—Malachai 3:10.

Worship is always adventurous. How could it be any thing else?" More than thirty million people are in attendance at church services over this country today. That is no small number to adventure with God. How our hearts burn within us for those who turn away constantly. Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of Hosts." The saints of the Lord should be careful lest they hinder some one in the experience of worship or cause them to turn away from the house of God. And yet we may be doing it and not know it. A county official can not go to church with his family because no provision is made for him to have one day off in seven. That is a social sin. The citizens are responsible.

It is a wonderful thing to be found in the House of the Lord on His Day. "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the House of the Lord." It is His test of us. "Prove me now, saith the Lord of Hosts." Do we dare test God? Do we dare prove Him? There is an abundance of pardon and manifold blessing in it. "See if I will not open for you the windows of heaven, and pour out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." A group of men and women, whether many or few, uniting to open their lives to the spirit of God is the most pleasing sight and the most hopeful thing in all the world. "Could any experience be more pregnant with possibilities?"

"To One May Come a New Understanding of Duty in a Hard Decision."

A corporate body worships here today. But this audience is composed of individuals. Each one responds to the Spirit differently. Each one speaks, understands and acts differently. Yet, each one may enjoy the possibility of finding a way out of some difficult situation. Prayer cleanses the thought processes, the channels of the mind. Often while we "rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him," our hard decisions are made, stormy souls are calmed, quietude comes to the disquieted.

"To Another May Come Consolation for Bitter Grief."

The bitterest grief can be turned into joy by the comfort of God. The story is told of a woman who lived in Turkey before the American purge. She taught music and religion in one of the colleges. Her family was murdered in cold blood before her eyes. She was spared. Apparently God had work for her to do. As village advisor today she fills a unique and valuable place. In the midst of danger she stands by her home, comforts her people, tells her Turkish friends and the officials about Jesus and the Bible when they come for help. That is her joy. That is her mission. It is her consolation.

A very dear friend of mine whose husband has departed this life and whose son has sacrificed his life to Bacchus faces life with a smile, attends all church services, is active in its organizations and never misses a chance to help the needy. That is her consolation while drinking from the cup of bitterness. Here the Lord of Hosts has been and is being proven.

"To Still Another May Come Dedication to a Task of Social Reconstruction."

It was to such a task that the prophet Malachai set himself. The exile to Babylon was over. The return, restoration and rebuilding of the temple had been effected. It was time for the Hebrews to prepare for the coming of the Messiah. It was time to light the altar fires again. It was time to return to the Lord.

Spiritual power is necessary in the social quest. A mere formal worship is devoid of it. This Malachai knew. He sought to bring the people to a profound consciousness of their covenant obligations, to deepen their spiritual life, to arouse the spirit of true worship and render an acceptable service to God. He succeeded in a measure. Society did change considerably before Jesus came.

If the Kingdom of God is ever fully realized here society must change. Our inspiration and pattern for change must come from the study of the Bible. Such blue prints are always found there. The social pattern of Jesus is found in its pages. Worship in the sanctuary and the study of the Blessed Book proved to be valuable aids in the establishment of this nation. Lincoln found light in it for guidance through a desperate struggle. The pattern for social security, prison reform, old age assistance, labor legislation and child welfare is found in the Pages of Power.

O brother man! fold to thy heart thy brother;
Where pity dwells, the peace of God is there;
To worship rightly is to love each other,
Each smile a hymn, each kindly deed a prayer.

"To All May Come a New Vision of the Earnestness of God for a World in Which Shall Dwell Righteousness."

Isaiah saw a vision of God in the temple. He translated it into service as a righteous statesman. It was in the synagogue that Jesus told of his world mission. It was realized in the ranks of men. Teachers and pioneers have been recruited from the people in the pew. It is an established fact that more outstanding statesmen come from the homes of clergymen than any other. Where there is vision the people never perish.

All worshippers are seekers. All are trying to find the paths that lead to God. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness." God seeks a righteous people. He depends upon us to bring it about. Without our help He can do nothing. By helping Him we help ourselves. No help comes from those who lack vision. A lady holding a government and civic position said last week that lack of vision hindered her work in the community. Her cry was for greater vision. She feels that it is a prerequisite to righteousness.

A new understanding of duty in a hard decision, consolation for bitter grief, dedication to a task of social reconstruction and a new vision of the earnestness of God for a world in which shall dwell righteousness are essential to spiritual progress today. "In humility we confess that too often these are extraordinary visitations, but they hover as possibilities whenever we gather to worship. Every meeting of a congregation is a summons and an opportunity for life's most glorious adventure." "Prove me now, saith the Lord of Hosts."

Stab my soul fiercely with another's pain,
Let me walk seeing honor and stain.
Let my hands grasping find other hands,
Give me the hand that divines, understands.
Give me the courage, wounded, to fight,
Flood me with knowledge, drench me with light.
Please keep me eager, just to do my share,
God—let me be aware!

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

I read the final report on THE CHRISTIAN SUN campaign for new subscribers with a great deal of interest. In looking over the reports of the several conferences, it is interesting to note the conferences that put out some work and took an interest in putting the campaign across. I also note that the North Carolina and Virginia Conference and the Western North Carolina Conference are the only two that exceeded their quota. Eastern Virginia Conference only lacked 33 of reaching its quota. I feel sure by now it has reached it.

In the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, we notice that we have 45 churches and all of the churches sent in new subscribers except 12.

We also notice that the Western North Carolina Conference has 38 churches and all the churches sent in new subscribers except 16.

Eastern Virginia Conference has 42 churches and all the churches sent in new subscribers except 10. While Eastern Virginia did not reach its quota it came nearer getting a 100 per cent of its churches to take a part in the campaign.

Some years ago when THE CHRISTIAN SUN was a weekly visitor in nearly three thousand homes in the Southern Convention it was far less trouble to raise money for every enterprize of the church. We could keep their needs before our people and when our people saw a real need they have always been willing and ready to lend a helping hand. But if they do not take the church paper how are they to know. If THE CHRISTIAN SUN could be placed in three thousand homes each week in our churches we would soon see a revival of interest in all lines of our church work. A hard job is made easy by having sufficient help. Every church ought to have reached its quota and more, and would have, if some one had assumed the responsibility and worked it. And think what it would have meant if the churches that did nothing had raised their quota. We would have had THE CHRISTIAN SUN going into 941 new homes where it has not been going instead of 705. I do hope that the churches that have not sent in their quota will get busy and get the new subscribers asked for and send them in and get on the accredited list. This campaign for new subscribers should not stop here. Our slogan should be: "THE CHRISTIAN SUN in every home represented in our churches in the Southern Convention"—and we should tug away at the job till this is done.

In Memoriam

WISE.

Mrs. Phoebe Jane Wise, age 72, widow of John Wise, died at her home at Keezletown, Va., Friday night, after two weeks' illness from complications. She was a native of Mountain Valley and had many friends in that section and in the Keezletown community where she spent her entire life. She was a member of the Christian Church.

May God bless those left to mourn her departure from their presence.

Services were conducted from the Bethel United Brethren Church Monday, at 10:30 A. M. The writer was in charge, assisted by Rev. Wolfe, of Lacey Springs, Va.

R. D. COULTER.

ISLEY.

Mrs. Sarah (Foster) Isley, widow of the late Rev. A. Frank Isley, was born in 1885, and departed this life January 6 1938. A long and useful life was hers both to her home and to the church of her love and pride for she was a member of the Union Ridge Christian Church for more than sixty years.

She leaves to mourn her departure the following children: Jerome, Clyde, and Bertha, of Burlington, N. C.; Mrs. A. C. Green, of Raleigh; and Mrs. A. M. Brinson, of New Bern, N. C.; also nine grand-children, and one great-grandchild; two brothers, A. F. and Rev. J. L. Foster; one sister, Mrs. N. C. Garrison.

Her body was laid to rest beside that of her husband, beneath a beautiful display of flowers in Bethlehem Cemetery. Services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Dr. J. O. Lankford, Rev. W. M. Stevens, and Rev. J. W. Patton. May God comfort the bereaved ones.

RELIGION TODAY.

make for the division and rupture of human relations. As the church embraces the world in its ecumenical mind and heart, it reminds one of what the church is. The church is not something across the street in a building where you may attend as a listener to a preacher. You who read this, if you are a member—you are the church. Your behavior, character, beliefs, sympathies, associations, and the same things in others, are the church in action.

To hold the individual's life together, to hold the local congregation together, and the whole ecumenical church, and through these to hold the world together, is, as the letter to Diognetus said to the scattered churches in the second century, the glorious position of the church.

heart was lighter and you were looking up.

Prayer—Our Father, flood our lives with the joys of Jesus and impart to us His spirit and His personality so that we may be a light along our way every day. Amen.

KNOWLEDGE OF RELIGION.

"Incline thine ears unto wisdom, and apply thy heart to understanding . . . and lift up thy voice for understanding; and if thou seek her as silver, and search for her as for hidden treasures; then thou shalt understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God."—Prov. 2:2-5.

"If a man empties his purse into his hand, no man can take it away from him. An investment in knowledge always pays the best interest."—Franklin.

Aside from knowledge of things, experience is knowledge, and with the fear of the Lord as our motive, we will commit a particular folly but once, and by it we learn to do the common things of life in the noblest and most beneficial way. By it we learn the right way, and as Theodore Roosevelt said: "If it is right, there is no other way."

Prayer—Our Father, we are useless without Christ in our souls. Teach us the fear of the Lord, our trust in Christ and the certainty of eternal life. In that path we would walk this day. Amen.

WOMAN'S MISSION BOARD.

oughly enjoyed the convention year will be glad to know that we are to have this edition again with a few improvements.

The use to be made of the Staley memorial money received at the Silver Anniversary service last May was an outstanding item of discussion. It was decided to give a half hour to this subject on the convention program Thursday morning, April 28th, at Portsmouth, Va., when all may have the opportunity to offer their suggestions as to the use of this fund, the matter to be settled later.

Mrs. Truitt brought us the glad news that Dr. Leonard M. Outerbridge, of Boston, is to be our speaker on the convention program and that we are to have Thursday morning and Thursday night as our share of the convention time.

Many other items of interest were discussed and many plans for the future were made. The day was one of good fellowship, the spirit was fine and was one which will go down in each one's memory as outstanding.

The Board owes a debt of gratitude to Dr. Smith for the splendid hospitality of the college. Lunch was served in the college dining hall to all and the Eastern Virginia ladies were delightfully entertained in the home of Dr. and Mrs. Smith.

Thus ended a most happy and helpful meeting of the Woman's Board.

The Call from the Galilean Hilltop

By C. DARBY FULTON.

I heard it again today—that last clear call from Galilee.

Ofttimes before that voice had called to me, but half heed only did I give and stifled it by my pre-occupation. I did not want to hear it, lest it disturb the composure of my life, or mar some cherished plan. And so with selfish inattention, absorbed in petty schemes, I turned my ear away.

Today I heard it again. Across the centuries it came once more. I do not know just why I found my heart responding, but it seemed that as He stood there on that Galilean mountain, His eyes were turned on me. Time had not served to still that voice or to dull its solemn majesty. With volume unabated it came. It rose above the din of the city around me. It echoed through the hills and the valleys. The vault of heaven rang with its challenge. The majesty of God was in it; and it shook my very soul, till I was lost in forgetfulness of self and all my petty interests. For there before me in all the commanding power of His glorious being stood the Son of God, ruler of heaven and earth, and thundered once more His great command: "Go—teach all nations." And in that moment there came to me a new sense of His majesty and of Heaven's purpose for the redemption of the world.

There was something impelling in that call today. It carried with it a strange compulsion. I could not put it off. It bore in upon my soul until I found myself yielding to the insistence of a sublime authority. For just before His command was spoken, He had proclaimed the right by which He spoke, and in one tremendous word had gathered unto Himself the supreme authority of earth and heaven when He said, "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth." It came to me with sobering realization that when I refused obedience to that command, I was flaunting my defiance into the very face of the combined authority of heaven and earth.

There was urgency in His call today. He gave it the emphasis of a parting charge. There He stood, His blessed feet touching the top of the hill. Soon He would be gone, the days of His flesh would be over. His lips parted. What word would He speak? What charge would He leave? How golden the words that had fallen from His lips on other hillsides while He went in and out among us! But this was to be His last. Surely there would be some deeper baring of His heart, some solemn charge to those who were left behind. Surely He had reserved some tremendous word for this last moment, a message supreme that might forever live in the memories of His followers. Then with majestic tone the call broke from His lips: "Go—teach all nations." It was a call to rise and gird myself. He would have me act at once. It was not only my obedience that He sought, but my help. Men were perishing—men for whom He had died, and He was calling for me; and the great summons that stirred my soul from slumber was not just a command, but a heart-breaking plea—the cry of the Saviour for a lost world. In that call He defined what from that moment must become my dominating aim until the coming of His Kingdom.

I shall never be the same since He called from Galilee. I know Him better now than I ever did before. Today I looked deeper into His heart. Strange that in speaking that great word of authority He should have bared to me more clearly the depth of His love! It was not so much by what He said as by something that I saw. For there in His hands and in His feet I saw fresh wounds, the marks of Calvary. He was not summoning me to some renunciation which He Himself was unwilling to make. But He called me to a service the pledge of His devotion to which He bore in His own body. What mockery if in answering that call I offer Him what is cheap and bears nowhere the deep red mark of Sacrifice.

I shall not fear as I begin my new commitment. Great as is the task I have assurance greater still. For as I hear His voice today, and responding yet faltered at my weakness, back from the hills where still echoed His great command there came His last gentle words of peace, "Lo, I am with you always." In the strength of that promise I am answering the call from Galilee.

EASTER PREVIEW

It is not too early to begin to think of Easter. Although it is several weeks off, it is one of those festivals that we should begin preparing for in advance. If that advance preparation is not made we cannot accept Easter in the proper spirit.

Like many other special dates and occasions in history, Easter is used by many people in ways not becoming its wonderful spiritual values. So often it is used as an occasion of parade. If one looked for the latest styles in regalia of all kinds he would find it on parade at Easter time as upon no other day in the year. It is a time of gayety—and well it should be. Our dress parades are a dissipated expression, for the joy of the day was born of the Resurrection of Christ. It marks victory over sin, death and the grave, and the feeling which comes from being well dressed on Easter Sunday is superficial indeed. We do feel gay in external finery, but it is all a mock unless the feeling goes deeper than the skin of the back. Joy should reach the deepest recesses of the heart, born of a knowledge of Eternal life through Jesus Christ, our Risen Redeemer. Unless there is that inner joy, all our parade is a mock, a sham, and serves but to cover the midnight of a life that is stooped in sin—and for such a person there has never been an Easter, since there is no hope of eternal life through Him who rose that first Easter morning.

Let us begin now to anticipate Easter. Let our daily devotions be a means of bringing it into its real self. Let us endeavor to walk with Christ in these last weeks of His life upon earth. Unless we go about it in such a manner we can but miss its impact upon our lives.

As He went about doing good, let us go about showing forth His goodness by winning the lost ones to Him. I am thinking much of the possibilities of that Holy Week series of services we are to have in our church. Mark that week! Keep it clear of all hindrances! Let's make it count mightily for Christ and His Church. Please take me seriously here, for I am praying for great results. Will you do your part?

LET THERE BE LIGHT

PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES

The Mid-Year Conference in the Valley of Virginia will meet at Bethlehem Christian Church on March 24.

Rev. Arnold Slater is to be installed as pastor of Holy Neck Christian Church, near Holland, Va., next Sunday afternoon.

Dr. I. W. Johnson, writer of the "Suffolk Letter," is ill at Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Va. His many friends will wish for him a speedy recovery.

Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, of Dover, Delaware, continues ill in the Washington Sanitarium and Hospital, of Washington, D. C., where he has been confined for the past eight weeks.

Rev. Jesse H. Dollar and his loyal people at Newport News, Va., are starting on Volume II of "Vista," their local church paper. They are doing a good job. Congratulations!

The Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship will meet at Suffolk, Saturday afternoon and evening of this week. Pilgrim Fellowship is to be put on trial. An interesting and helpful program is in prospect.

The poems and two articles on page ten (10) are copies from The Christian Beacon, a little paper put out by a senior boys' class, called the Progressive Boy's Club, at First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va.

The program committee for the Florida young people's conference met at Winter Park, Tuesday, of last week, to get things in readiness for the young people's conference. Florida young people have some difficulty in finding a place for their summer conference.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, and Mrs. Atkinson returned to their home at Elon College, N. C., last week after spending the winter in Orlando, Florida. The good doctor and his wife are greatly improved in health, which is good news to their many friends.

Miss Victoria Edwards, better known to CHRISTIAN SUN readers as "Victoria of the Hills," is quite ill at her home in Fancy Gap, Va. Those who know her either in person or by writing will doubtless lift a prayer to heaven for her recovery so she may continue to scatter sunshine not only among the hills but out to wherever this paper may go.

Pastor Roy D. Coulter says that his church at Mt. Olivet (R), in the Valley of Virginia, had 93 per cent present for Sunday school recently and that four Sundays previous the attendance was almost as good. He has started a little publication giving the news of his churches. This type of thing helps to promote the work and his first issue gives promise of being a real aid.

A call has been issued by the president of the Southern Convention for a meeting of the chairmen of all boards of the convention to be held at Henderson Christian Church, on Tuesday, April 5th. If any great change is to be made in our working program at the coming session of the convention in Portsmouth these Boards will all be affected. It is a good idea to talk over suggestions before hand.

Rev. R. A. Whitten, of Winchester, Va., promises that ere long he will make a canvass for new subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. At the time others were busy at this and he could not do the work. Some other minister have made similar promises. THE CHRISTIAN SUN is eager that everyone succeed in the task, not merely for the sake of the paper but more especially for the sake of the churches and the church people.

AN APPRECIATION.

We, the members of the Official Board and members of the Congregational-Christian Church of Albemarle, North Carolina, wish to extend our sincere thanks and appreciation to our former pastor, Rev. Arnold Slater, and his good wife for their faithful, efficient and untiring Christian service for the past three and one-half years, inasmuch as they have greatly endeared themselves to us, the church and community at large.

Be it resolved that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to our beloved Brother Slater and wife, also a copy be sent to our denominational paper, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and a copy be recorded in our church record.

THE OFFICIAL BOARD.

NEW LEBANON (N. C.).

We are happy to report our work at New Lebanon moving along nicely. Our pastor, Rev. J. L. Neese, of Reidsville, brings us real gospel messages on the second and fourth Sunday afternoons.

Our Sunday school with W. T. Moore, Superintendent, continues to grow. One new class has been organized recently.

The Woman's Missionary Society Mrs. J. N. McCollum, President, has been steadily growing. Several of our members enjoyed hearing Miss Seabury at Elon.

Our Christian Endeavor Society, Clyde McCollum, President, has been meeting weekly during the winter months in the homes of our community. These meetings have been well attended considering the condition of some of our roads. We hope as the weather gets warmer and our roads better more of our young people will attend these meetings.

We are looking forward to a great year in the service of our Master. Pray for us that we may ever be busy in His vineyard.

MRS. G. C. MOORE,
Reporter.

SUGGESTIONS FOR CONVENTION.

I have just finished reading the March 10 issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Of course, I examined the report of the campaign for subscriptions first, for I have been deeply interested in it from the outset. It proves what I thought, and aren't we all proud we find a previous notion confirmed? Yes, there is a common human weakness there.

The campaign for 700 subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN came out of a meeting of groups from North Carolina and Virginia conferences, assembled in Henderson, N. C., some months ago. The pressure was on. The executive committee of the Southern Convention had warned that unless something could be done to stop the mounting publication deficit THE CHRISTIAN SUN could no longer shine in our churches. Everyone knew that a calamity would result. We would be in the dark indeed. Out of the emergency has come so far 704 subscribers. From these 700 CHRISTIAN SUN homes will come new streams of interest and support for the whole program of the church. Surely Rev. R. L. House is right that we have learned from the campaign that THE CHRISTIAN SUN can be put into the homes of our people, without offering commissions, when the pastors will. It looks like we preachers hadn't tried, doesn't it?

What happened in the campaign for new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN can happen to any and all our church interests. Why not a conference on future policies and program for the whole Convention before the Southern Convention meets? Yes, the time is short, but a lot can be done in a month. In my opinion, if we wait until the convention is in session to try to determine these policies and the program, we will have no end of discussion on a dozen and one plans, with nobody knowing exactly what he believes about them for lack of time to think them through, and many important things will be done.

The editorial on "Southern Convention Program" mentions the need of seeking an experience in our whole church of a "strangely warmed heart." Brethren, this is the key! When the hearts of the people have that strange warming which only the Spirit of Christ can give, we will be ready to undertake "greater things than these." We can stop calling our missionaries home, closing our mission schools and hospitals for lack of money to carry them on; new churches in neglected areas can be built and our church institutions can stop begging—when our hearts are strangely warmed. Dr. Johnson, in his letter this week, tells us that the Program Committee plans some spiritual advances. Dr. Atkinson speaks a truth and sounds a warning that the convention should heed when he offers the suggestion that the churches are not doing a work distinctive enough to lift them above "social clubs," "civic clubs," and the like. "What do ye more than these?" What a text for present-day preaching!

I offer the following as a partial list of things that should be done in the approaching convention:

1. That Elon Celege should be requested to put into its course of study at least one year of study of the History, Principles and Policy of the Congregational and Christian Churches, and make it a required course, at least for all members of the denomination, and perhaps for all students who study there. This to inform people about our Church.
2. There should be a definite move for a spiritual awakening in our whole church life. This will put us on the soul-winning side.
3. We should take seriously the matter of Christian stewardship and plan for its propagation in all our churches. This will put us on sound financial footing, but what is more, it will give us a new conception of what the Christian life is all about.
4. We should have a Promotional Secretary, Pastor-at-Large, or whatever you will, to get behind the whole program of the Church within the bounds of the Southern Convention. This is imperative for many reasons.

5 What has been started in the interest of THE CHRISTIAN SUN should be definitely continued.

JESSE H. DOLLAR.

NEWS FROM EAST ALABAMA.

Dr. James R. Clinton, pastor-at-large under the Church Extension Division of the Board of Home Missions was a guest at the home of President and Mrs. Ross Ensminger, Wadley, Ala., March 5th and 6th. On Friday night he sang and spoke to a group of church people at the Ensminger home. On Saturday he gave after-breakfast and luncheon talks to the student body of the Southern Union College. His brief presence among us was helpful and inspirational.

The members of the official board of the Women's Missionary organization of the Eastern Association met in a day of study and inspiration with the ministers of the Association under the leadership of Dr. Charles E. Burton, at the First Christian Church, in Roanoke, Ala. Dr. Burton is Secretary of the General Council of the Congregational and Christian Churches. It was a privilege to have him conducting discussions in this area.

The young people of Southern Union College are very busy preparing for the entertainment of a Christian Life Conference in Wadley, the week-end of March 25th-27th. Among the leaders whom the young people have invited to come and take part are: Prof. A. R. VanCleave, of Piedmont College; Rev. Alan T. Jones, of Demorest, Ga.; Rev. and Mrs. George Penn, of Lanett, Ala.; Rev. L. L. Stanley, of Thorsby, Ala.; and President Buell Gallagher, of Talladega, Ala.

On January 30 (5th Sunday) the Woman's Missionary Society of the Wadley Christian Church sponsored the morning service at the church. The purpose of the meeting was to create more interest among the people of our churches in missionary work. The meeting proved quite inspirational as well as instructive. The program included several well selected scripture readings by college girls, a chain of prayers, and brief talks by women of the various churches giving glimpses of missionary work in our own and other countries. Practical appreciation of the service was expressed by a generous offering which was sent to the Mission for Lepers, an organization that works with Missionary Societies of all denominations.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

LIVING COURAGEOUSLY.

Out of the mountains comes a note that "Victoria of the Hills" is very sick. This young lady with the artist's vision and the poet's soul has struggled against disease for years. The mountains that have hemmed her in have also lifted her up. Her plaintive pen has made friends for her friends in the hills. From a sick bed she writes of the beauty of the earth, the goodness of mankind, and the love that flows from the heart of God. Many there are who would have given up the struggle long ago, and gone on to land of endless day. The doctors give her no hope, but her hope rests in God, the giver of life. She asks for the prayers of her friends, and many are the prayers that will rise like sweet incense to heaven in her behalf—or will it be for the beauty of Christian friendships that comes from her cabin on the hills and reaches out to the far places of the earth where she would like to go but cannot?

It takes courage for the first grade to live happily in the hills when one wants to wander over the earth, to live in a cabin and desire a mansion, to listen only to the hum-drum of secluded life when the heart yearns for the culture earth can offer, to fight disease when every fiber of the soul and body wants to live, to wait with patience the slow progress of the Church when the heart is eager for rapid change and a growing local church, and to rest at home far beyond from the outside world awaiting the change that all must meet when the heart of youth yearns for the action that will help to build a Christian world. To those of us who know this great-spirited "Victoria of the Hills" there comes an overwhelming desire to live courageously and victoriously wherever duty may call. We are exceedingly anxious that faith may continue to triumph over trouble and that she may continue to radiate sunshine from her beautiful hills and her good heart. The world needs those who can live courageously.

WE MUST LOOK FORWARD.

This Congregational-Christian Church of ours has a history sufficiently grand to tickle the fancy of any member. The high scholarship and Christian culture of Congregationalists blends well with the deep piety and religious fervor of the Christian side of the United Fellowship. We can boast of a ride on the Mayflower and rejoice in the "strangely warmed heart" of John Wesley, founder of the Methodism from which our Christian Church came. A string of colleges across the country, and multitudes of little churches in needy places is the heritage of ours today.

But the heritage is not enough. Progress must be our contribution. If we become content to rejoice in our heritage, we are not worthy of those who gave us our heritage. Forward is the only direction in which we can afford to travel.

The age in which we live demands our best. Secularism is rapidly closing in on the leadership of the world. Only the Church can continue the high vision needed by all mankind. We cherish our democracy of the Church, but unless we move forward in our promotion of that good idea the time is near when there will be no chance to enjoy democracy of any kind. The new Japanese school books being used in China leave no place for Chinese democracy. Rebel bombs supplied by European dictators are blasting out the remnants of democracy in Spain. Long speeches and marching soldiers in Germany cast a shadow over the world and cause democracies to tremble, as if a ghost has suddenly appeared from a cemetery with its laughing jibes at the weak-kneed democratic countries. In Washington sits the shrewdest politician in this country who asks for more and more power for the President, and usually gets it. Democratic processes are passing out of daily use in this world of ours.

If our Church ever expects to make its influence felt, the time has come for it to do so. This is no time to dilly-dally, to squabble over little things, to dicker for the best places of leadership, or to sit quietly in comfortable pews while choirs sing beautiful anthems and preachers make pretty speeches. Crumbling democracies, thriving secular states, marching soldiers and bomb-laden aeroplanes, business based on the opposite of the Golden Rule, pleasure that saps the vitality of youth and age, fear that chills the heart of the world, greed that takes what it wants at the point of the sword even if women and children must be slaughtered in the process, these are some of the reasons why this Church of ours must move forward, and do it now while it is free to do so.

LIFE MORE ABUNDANT.

Christianity is not the religion of sorrow and gloom; it is the religion of the morning, and carries in its heart the happiness of heaven.

Christianity is not a restraint but an inspiration—not a weight but wings; not subtraction but addition.

Christianity brings bloom for faded hearts, rejuvenation for the prematurely old; imagination for the dry, literal mind.

Christianity is not a kill-joy at the feast of life, nor a kind of incarnate "Don't"; it bristles with great affirmatives, fires the soul with permanent enthusiasms and durable loyalties.

Christianity leaves a trail of light wherever it goes; it can keep you cool under any confusion, bring you up smiling from any deeps and utterly banish your fret and worry.

Christianity brings zest and sparkle to life; it is sunshine on the flowers, rather than moonshine on the snow; it is life more abundant; it is leaving the little narrow life behind and leaving it forever.—Hugh Elmer Brown, in "Advance."

Visit Our Friends In India

By DOROTHY P. CUSHING.

Finding India "delightful" and the people "warm and friendly," Miss Miriam D. Brown, "the new Bai-sahib," daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Frederick K. Brown, of Lancaster, Mass., writes of her happiness in her work in India under the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

Miss Brown, who arrived in India in November, was plunged into a festive season with people dressed in their brightest and even the cattle adorned with necklaces and colored horns. At night they celebrated the Divali (festival of lights) when the houses were decorated with oil lamps giving out a soft yellow glow.

"Charmed as I was by the landscape I was very much happier to find that the people I am to work with are warm friendly people," writes Miss Brown, who first went to Ahmednagar. "They made me feel quite at home in an environment new and strange."

Then Miss Brown went down to Shelapur, where she will work in the Criminal Tribes Settlement when she has finished her language study at Poona, her present address. There were more welcomes given and she was garlanded and serenaded by the Scout band. Friendly smiles and salaams came from all the Crims. She reached there at a time when there was a strike which gave a rude introduction to some of the present social, economic and political unrest which seeths beneath the surface.

hadn't already captivated me they would have then. Such shining eyes as they view the treasures spread out before them and such agonies of indecision as each small mind was torn by the necessity of choosing one thing from the tempting array."

MISS MIRIAM D. BROWN.

These "presents" were tiny mirrors, pieces of soap, beads, pocket books, a picture, or a New Testament. Most of them came from friends in America. It was interesting to note that many of the boys chose Testaments and religious pictures.

After the gifts came the long-looked-for Jelly-bi, a very, very sticky sweet, and Miss Brown was initiated

NATIVES OF SHOLAPUR, INDIA.

At Christmas time Miss Brown helped in the settlement, and, as she reports, found that you could "get the feel of Christmas without ice or snow or winter winds." She helped give out presents and sweets to the school children in the settlement and declares, "If the little ragamuffins into Christmas by helping give out this candy. "The children glowed with anticipatory joy as we dropped the sticky handfuls into shirt tails and Sari ends," she writes.

In the afternoon the poorest children had been given clothes collected by the workers. How were these selected? The children who did not have a single whole garment to wear were in this group. Miss Oline Nicholson of Texas, with whom Miss Brown will work, states that the dump heaps of America would clothe these little Crims, and writes of the shining faces of the youngsters as they tore off their rags and put on the new clean things.

A white Christmas service is part of the program at the little Criminal Tribes Church during which the children come forward gripping in small brown hands the gifts of grain or rice taken not out of a surplus but out of a painfully meager daily ration. This year they are asking that their contribution go to the Red Cross for the children in China.

Christmas Day Miss Brown visited the missionaries in Ahmednagar and met fellow-workers from Rahuri and Vadala. She had a chance to see the vocational school at Vadala where the cottage system gives the girls practical training in making good homes in the villages. The hospitals, too, were a source of deep interest with friends and relatives camping out on the floor by the patients.

On New Year's Day Miss Brown went to a picnic with the whole Christian community and the boys and girls from the schools in the settlement were all present. The Indian pastor served pilau and curry on leaf plates as they sat on the ground. This was the last of the welcome before Miss Brown settled down to the grind of language study in Poona.

"Everyone was very cordial to the new bai-sahib and Niekie (Miss Nicholson) carried on violent conversations with them, very evidently about me, although I could not understand any of it. I shall be glad when I can hold my own in such circumstances," concludes Miss Brown.

Miss Brown, who was born in Leicester, Mass., was educated at Boston University, American International College in Springfield and Hartford Theological Seminary. She was commissioned for life service under the American Board last September in her father's church, the First Congregational Church of Lancaster, and sailed October 1st for India.

THE POSTERN GATE.

In the castle of my soul
Is a little postern gate,
Whereat, when I enter,
I am in the presence of God.
In a moment, in the turning of a thought,
I am where God is,
This is a fact.

CONTRIBUTIONS

THE ELON COLLEGE DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM.

In the spring of 1936 under the joint direction of the Board of Trustees of Elon College and the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Church, the Elon College Development Campaign was launched. The goal for the campaign was $250,000 to be used in defraying the expenses of the campaign, paying all debts against the institution, and further supplementing the current funds of the college so as to prevent an annually recurring deficit in current funds. The Williams Company of Lebanon, Pa., a professional money raising agency, was employed to conduct the campaign. A hasty, inefficient, and ineffective campaign was made of the entire church. In fact, the campaign was so lacking in organization and efficiency that it could hardly be called a campaign. $62,000 was received in cash and pledges. The writer took up the campaign and is still endeavoring to conduct the same. A total of $80,000 has been pledged to date, approximately $32,000 of which has been paid in. The greater part of the remaining $48,000 is now due. There may be a feeling on the part of some who pledged that inasmuch as the entire goal has not been reached, they are not under obligation to pay. These pledges were made to relieve the college of its embarrassment. This campaign will be continued until the amount is received. It will perhaps take until 1940 to accomplish the task, but it must be done. The funds received from the campaign so far have helped tremendously. It took about $16,000 to pay the expenses of the campaign. The remainder has been used to reduce the debt and to pay incidental expenses. The debt has been reduced from $162,700 to $145,500. A total of $17,200 has been paid on our debt. Every penny that is paid on a pledge now goes to the payment of debts. We owe on back faculty salaries $1,500. We owe the Virginia Trust Company $144,000. We are anxious to get the faculty paid so that we may begin paying the Virginia Trust Company. We must make payments on these obligations this spring.

The college has gotten along so well last year and this, that it should be an encouragement to everyone who has any real interest in the college to make a contribution. If you have made a pledge, won't you endeavor to pay it as quickly as possible?

We are receiving some very encouraging letters along with remittances. Individuals are paying their pledges in full and expressing joy in being able to help. Others are making their payments as due and expressing appreciation of what the college is accomplishing. This week I received a letter in response to a statement that reads like this:

"You are right. I am due you $5. But I just happen to be fortunate enough that I can spare $10. Please mail receipt in full."

This is a very encouraging note. Another read as follows:

"With pleasure and gratitude do I send this check."

If we would all do what we are able to do, not only the debts of the college but the requirements of all our Convention enterprises would be met in full.

The affairs of the college are in such a favorable condition at present that if the entire brotherhood would do what it could, the condition could be made entirely satisfactory to all who are interested and the college would be in a position to render the greatest service in its history.

CARROLL COUNTY MISSION.

We have three church organizations, two church buildings and a parsonage in Carroll County, Va. The names are well chosen and are characteristic: Elk Spur, Ivy Hill, and Rocky Ford. Our work in the hills of this county was begun at Elk Spur several years ago by a young girl, Iola Hedgpeeth, of the Eastern Virginia Conference. This girl had a missionary passion and a desire to teach boys and girls. On arriving at or near Fancy Gap, she was informed that Elk Spur was one of the worst places in that section of the county. And so this maid of much determination and patience began teaching up on a high spur of the mountain, putting heart, soul and strength into this work.

The Southern Convention Mission Board has sponsored this work from the beginning. Preaching services are being conducted on each first and third Sundays at Elk Spur and Rocky Ford. Beginning the first Sunday in April we are planning for the three Sunday schools to be reorganized and get going. Due to bad roads the services at Ivy Hill had to be discontinued for three months.

Elk Spur and Rocky Ford were admitted to conference on November 12, 1924, during Rev. M. T. Sorrell's stay as pastor, while Ivy Hill was just organized by Rev. O. A. Elmore and admitted in 1936. Quite a number attend these churches who do not belong or hold membership with any church. There are numerous children in the Ivy Hill section who have never been in a Sunday school.

The field offers a real opportunity. Christ and the influence of His Church is surely needed in these three places. It will take years and years to see great results. A great deal of good has been done, but an even greater work needs to be done, a work that only God can do. The field is white, the laborers few, trained leadership in the local organizations lacking. The Bible teaches us to pray that the Lord of the harvest will send forth laborers. Will THE SUN family remember us in prayer?

We are grateful to those who helped send THE CHRISTIAN SUN to the hills, and each piece of clothing provided, also for the blanket and quilt for the parsonage.

B. J. EARP.

A COUNTRYMAN SAYS:

Awaking one morning from a none too restful, yet rather peaceful sleep, we fancied ourselves doing our level best with a wonderful tenor voice, to which we do not lay any claim of possession, in the refrain, "Lead me, lest I stray; Saviour, lead me all the way."

It was wonderful; it seemed so real. But as soon as we realized it was only a dream, then came a sense of our inability to contribute so much to song in real life, but a desire to make this happy experience a part of our life. So as we entered upon the work of the day, we thought of the wonderful experience we had enjoyed, and why this should not be our prayer for the beginning of the day and for all other days as well.

No matter what our ancestry, our education, our association, and our situations in life, we are all prone to stray, to stray from the good intentions, the high resolutions, and the noble aspirations expressed by our better selves. We wander some times afar, yet we invariably return, even though it be near the end of the journey, and expect to find pardon, forgiveness, a welcome, and rest for our weary souls.

So, as we go forth into the work of the day, as we face the trials, difficulties, and temptations of life, we should let the One who is able to guide each of our steps aright, "Lead me lest I stray; Saviour, lead me all the way."

CHRISTIANS—STOP PRIZEFIGHT BROADCASTS.

By RAYMOND M. HUDSON,
Washington, D. C.

Because prizefight broadcasts are so wicked and foul, are doing so much to undermine the Christian, as well as the non-Christian, home and, with the gambling, and liquor advertising, broadcasts are weakening and threatening our Lord's Kingdom and Church, I am constrained that Christians must rise up and stop such broadcasts and accordingly I have written Hon. Frank McNinch, of North Carolina, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, the following letter:

My Dear Mr. McNinch:

I wish to congratulate and thank you for your recently published letter condemning the Mae West broadcast, which gladdened the hearts of all Christian and other right thinking people as you clearly and forcibly warned the broadcasting companies and set forth the principles guiding the Commission in such matters by stating in part:

"The admittedly objectionable character of these features is, in our opinion, attributable to the lack of a proper conception of the high standards required for a broadcast program intended for reception in the homes, schools, automobiles, religious, social and economic institutions, as well as clubs, hotels, trains and other places, reaching in the aggregate a much larger number of people daily than any other means of communication and carrying its message to men, women and children of all ages.

"A clear recognition of the social, civil and moral responsibility for the effect upon listeners of all classes and ages requires such a high standard for programs as would insure against features that are suggestive, vulgar, immoral or of such other character as may be offensive to the great mass of right-thinking, clean-minded American citizens.

"In our present system and the statue under which the Federal Communications Commission functions, the Commission has no power of censorship, but this power and responsibility rests squarely and unavoidably upon the licensee—licenses are granted without any compensation by the licensee to the Government and solely for the purpose of serving the public interest, and hence, the broadcaster must accept, along with the privilege granted, a definite, inescapable and high public trust in the use of the facilities licensed. . . .

"The Commission has decided to take no further action at this time than the writing of this letter in condemnation of the program. However, upon application for renewal of the licenses of the stations carrying this broadcast, the Commission will take under consideration this incident along with all other evidences tending to show whether or not a particular licensee has conducted his station in the public interest."

Do you not think the time is propitious and demands a similar warning and statement to the broadcasting companies against broadcasting the nauseous and brutal details of prize-fights with the accompanying propaganda as one or two negroes are now prominent in the fighting, thus engendering much racial discord and bitterness generally and especially in thousands of families, both white and colored, that would not be reached or aroused save by the radio?

Has not the Congress by denouncing and forbidding the carrying or transporting of prizefight pictures from state to state by individuals, common carriers, and postal authorities thus condemning them as inimical to the public good and moral welfare of the people, thereby, likewise condemned the ringside broadcast of such fights and made it mandatory on the Commission to prevent any further broadcasts of fights and the accompanying propaganda before and after the event?

A contention that the pictures are more vicious and morally undermining than the vivid bloody and cruel details of the average radio announcer is without merit.

I sincerely trust that the Commission will calmly and carefully consider this matter and think it through and then stop such broadcasts. As wise Old Solomon said: "They that forsake the law praise the wicked. But such as keep the law contend with them."—(Proverbs 28:4.)

It would be well to also study and determine as to stopping details and reports of horse races and other gambling, as Congress has also enacted statues against lotteries and in the District of Columbia against other gambling—thus condemning them as deleterious to the general welfare and moral and public good of our people and nation.

And, would not this lead to a stop order against renewing broadcasting licenses to companies which broadcast enticing liquor advertisements and propaganda into our homes?

Cordially yours.

On February 9, 1938, Mr. T. J. Slowie, secretary of the Federal Communications Commission in answer to our letter to Mr. McNinch wrote us as follows:

Dear Sir:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 26, 1938, addressed to the Chairman, making reference to a letter recently directed by the Commission to the National Broadcasting Company relative to a program featuring Miss Mae West which was broadcast over one of its network systems. You state you believe a similar warning should be issued to those stations broadcasting reports of prize fights, horse races and other forms of gambling, liquor advertisements and propaganda.

In reply may I state that your comments in this matter have been noted. In order, however, that appropriate action may be taken with respect thereto, your cooperation is desired in furnishing to the Commission a statement in affidavit form setting forth the fundamental facts with respect to each of the programs in question and specifying, if possible, the call letters or approximate operating frequencies of the stations broadcasting such programs. You may be assured that upon its receipt such an affidavit will have appropriate attention.

Very truly yours,

T. J. SLOWIE,

Secretary.

If laymen as well as ministers throughout our land will take time to write and execute affidavits for the Commission as called for by Mr. Slowie's letter and to pray for God's blessing on our efforts we can eliminate all of these obnoxious and devil inspired broadcasts.

Be sure to send in affidavits.

Rise up Christians and go forward for Christ.

THORSBY INSTITUTE.

For many years Thorsby Institute has had a Helen Keller Literary Society to which all the students belong. In the auditorium hangs a picture which was given to the Society by Miss Keller. On March 5th, the Helen Keller Literary Society presented a pageant: "Toward the Light," by F. Fraser Bond, commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the meeting of Helen Keller and her teacher, Ann Sullivan Macy. Part of the proceeds from this pageant was sent to the American Foundation for the Blind.

The Thorsby Institute Girls' Glee Club, under the direction of Miss Kathryn Foss, music teacher, who has her Bachelor of Music degree from Piedmont College, has several appointments to sing in churches of various denominations in Alabama during the spring. There are twenty-one girls in the Glee Club.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

THE UNCHANGEABLE.

It will help us in these days of change and uncertainty in the economic, political and religious world to bear in mind that there are some things that do not change. They are as they have been for these thousands of years. Consider the sun that gives us light by day and the moon and the stars that shine by night and the earth that revolves about the sun. They go in the even tenor of their way, following the circuits they have transversed since history began. We look up now at the very same sun that gave light to Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden, and to our Lord as He walked and meditated along the shores of blue Galilee. The same moon and stars look down on us and in the same way as they did on Moses and the children of Israel as they wandered in the wilderness for forty years, and on Paul and Silas as they preached and prayed and sang and worshipped on their missionary journey with messages of eternal life to all who would believe. No doubt the changing, shifting clouds could argue, in their rapid changes, that the sun is put out of commission and should get out of the way as they fling darkness over a little part of creation and obscure the rays of the sun from penetrating. But the sun just keeps right on holding tenaciously to his course pursued for ages on ages. So while the changes are flashing before us and chaos seems to prevail for a time, shall we not as sons and daughters of the living God take courage from the fact that while mankind, in his struggle upward, changes his viewpoint, there is that which abides and is eternal. God our Creator and His Son our Redeemer and His blessed Holy Spirit, Who is our Comforter and Guide; these three in one change not. And the man who today can look up and say with ancient Job, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," has the same God and the same Redeemer that Job had in that far-off day of the past.

Will it not help us to interpret our Scripture now just as the good and faithful Apostle Paul interpreted it to the church at Corinth? "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God, which worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues; but all of these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as He will."—(I Cor. 12:4-11.)

Now the strange thing in our day is that there are good men, devout men, lovable men, who seem to preach and teach that the manifestation of the Spirit must be the same to everyone who professes to be a Christian. We are hearing from such in the pulpit these days that the "Social gospel" is the real gospel for our day and if we would save the individual we must first of all save Society. One is made to wonder sometimes if these men with the very best of intentions, bright intellects and happy souls as they are, while they have the courage to talk from the pulpit in the terms of multitudes and society, but are really lacking in courage to face the individual as the Prophet Nathan faced King David, who had committed a grievous sin and said to the King, "Thou art the man." There are people who can face a multitude and talk about the social wrongs and sins, but who seem to be unable to find the individual and say to him: "Thou art the man; and I am here as God's messenger to try to convince you of sin and to ask you to accept my Saviour as your Saviour and Redeemer." Brother, that takes courage and if you don't believe it just try it.

Then it would seem that there are those of us in the pulpit, and in the pew, who know about the greed of man, the corruption of society, and moral depravity, but who feel that they are doing their whole duty if they leave all these things alone and just preach to the individual, "Jesus Christ and Him crucified"—(whatever that may mean to them). I find in the Bible that Jesus in His day talked to, at, and about the Pharisees and the scribes, and actually went into the temple "and began to cast out them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the moneychangers, and the seats of them that sold doves. And He taught, saying unto them, Is it not written,

My house shall be called of all nations the house of prayer? but ye have made it a den of thieves." If you don't think our Lord was giving the gospel to the multitudes and "to the Society order of His day generally, just read the following verse telling how the scribes and chief priests and "all the people" were stirred up and felt about the situation. No, a beautiful and lovely society with a charming and glorious background and surroundings can't save us. If it could, Adam and Eve would certainly have been saved in the garden of the Paradise of God. The most beautiful lilies are not always found in the loveliest gardens, but in the bogs and marshes, and the out-of-way places where the hand of God has planted and shaped them.

I do not find that Moses interpreted God in the same way to Israel that Paul interpreted Him to the Gentiles and to all the world. Neither would the Prophet Elijah interpret God to the world of His day even as Peter, the impetuous spokesman, and John, the Disciple of Love, interpreted Him in their day. But who is the one who shall say that Moses and Elijah and Peter and John and Paul were not all good men and served their God well and interpreted Him through inspiration as it was given them of the Holy Spirit? And so in our day one is of the conviction that our dear Lord realizes these things and in His most lengthy and soul-searching prayer (recorded in 17th chapter of John) uttered these words, "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

The world is never going to believe on our Lord and accept Him as Saviour and Redeemer till those of us who are really His are willing to admit that there are various interpretations of the Spirit; that the Spirit of God in His various interpretations is one, and with Paul can say, "Paul may plant, an Apollos water, but God must give the increase." One is inclined to think in these perilous and chaotic times that Edward Markham, the poet, was really preaching when he said:

He drew a circle and left me out;
Called me heretic, skeptic, a thing to flout.
But Love and I had the wit to win;
We drew a circle and took him in.

May it not be that our circle of thinking (and of fellowship) that we have drawn about ourselves and the few who seem to think just as we think, is too small, and that love for our God and fellowman would have us enlarge that circle? To think is to differ; but to love is to be together.

THE GREATEST NEED.

We stand appalled before a world at war. The Japanese march on through China in what she regards as a "holy war," and the Chinese are being murdered by the thousands in defense of what they feel is "just and righteous." And the Jugernaut of hate rolls on crushing thousands into untimely and premature death. The Spaniards are at each other's throats in a death struggle; each side laying down their lives in their "country's honor." Hitler marches on putting to death those who stand in his way and reaches out his hand and adds another scalp to his belt. If ever the world needed the gospel of the Son of God that need is today. God has not failed and our missionary efforts have not failed. This is mission period in our churches; a period in the time of year when our thoughts turn naturally to the Son of God Who faced and neared His Cross on Calvary. One naturally supposes that His followers, if they understood, sensed the gathering gloom and felt that after all the Lord's Christ was to lose out. Maybe the Christ had some such feeling Himself as He tarried more and more in prayer until finally His agony broke out in sweat as great drops of blood, as that face looked up toward the Father, the Father Who had given that Son to the world to conquer the world, but that Son Who now "Trod the wine press alone." It was then, too, a day of gathering gloom, until it reached its climax on the Cross when darkness really came and our Lord Christ cried out with a voice which we cannot understand, "My God, My God, why hast thou forsaken me?" They would do Him to death on Calvary and thought as they wagged their heads in passing that this man of Galilee had at last been conquered and the world would have no more of Him. But three days later He came triumphant and victorious over "death, hell and the grave." Here then is the message of our time. Our greatest need is to offer our prayers and our devotions, our self-denial and our gifts, that we may together face the uplifted Christ and then the conquering Christ and thus be willing to obey His victorious and most emphatic command, "Go ye into all the world and preach my gospel to every creature, and lo, I am with you even unto the end." The church of our day and the individual of our day will be measured by the willingness to obey that command and to follow Him and to share His life and gospel with others. China needs our missionaries today as it has never needed them before; and our missionaries there are going through the valley of shadows; but they are boldly staying there. They are doing the same in Japan and in Africa and in Spain and in every land to which we are sending them; and here in the home land also, where we are with our prayers and gifts supporting them. They are facing trials and hardships. The greatest need now is that we bear these things in mind and share our mite or "our muck" with those who have not the benefits and blessings of the gospel as we ourselves have, Sabbath after Sabbath and day after day. May God help us bear this in mind as we march toward the Crucifixion and then the Resurrection.

EASTERN VIRGINIA WOMEN.

The Nansemond-Franklin and Gates District of the Easter Virginia Conference made some rapid strides during the first quarter of this year and is to be commended for the splendid work done. Mrs. John King, Suffolk, Va., is the superintendent of the district and is proving to be a fine leader. Great preparations are being made for the spring rally to be held soon and reports are already in hand. Ten churches have reported and these reports show an increase in all phases of the work.

Of course, no district leader can accomplish much without the cooperation of the societies and in this capacity Mrs. King surely does have the desired support. A good follower makes a good leader, so they say, and the women of this district have proven that they are standing by their local societies and presidents and that they are willing to give out the desired information to the official higher up who need this data to carry on their work.

Good leaders make good followers, also, and in this respect the presidents of this district are measuring up and are leading their societies to all points on the Standard of Excellence and Honor Roll.

Besides the points outlined in the standard to be met, many societies have done other helpful and beautiful pieces of work, such as sending sunshine baskets, flowers, cards and trays to the sick and shut-ins, clothes to the orphanage and needy, and helping in the local church needs.

The superintendents of the young people, junior and cradle roll societies deserve a bit of mention here also for the splendid interest and hard work done to train our youth along this line and to create in them a love for missions.

So the wheel of missionary work speeds on and let us keep earnestly and zealously at it that our societies, our conferences and our convention may realize all the goals set for our aim.

MRS. W. M. JAY.

MISSIONARY RALLY.

The Ladies' Missionary Rally of the Western North Carolina Conference will meet with the Big Oak Church, in Moore County, N. C., Thursday, March 31, 1938.

Lunch will be prepared by the Big Oak Church. There will be a small charge of twenty-five cents, and the proceeds will go to the building fund for a new church at Big Oak.

We hope that all districts will be largely represented, and we are expecting a large attendance of the local people.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church"

MISS EMILY CARLETON, Editor, 541 Osceola Ave., Winter Park, Fla.

GEORGIA YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETIES.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill has just spent several weeks in Georgia, consulting with young people's societies and women's groups and helping them with their plans for their spring meetings.

In Richland, where Rev. S. M. Penn is the new minister, a young people's organization has recently been formed. There are members of other churches cooperating in this society in our church there.

In the United Church, LaGrange, the young people are working out a World Friendship Project in a splendid manner. They have organized a small group for a special study of missions. This group will, in turn, contribute to the whole society and make missions really live in their minds.

Last summer a young people's society was organized in the Hillside Church, LaGrange, and it has been progressing rapidly. This group has an active committee working on methods by which the goals for the year may best be carried out.

The United Church, Columbus, has just recently organized an older young people's group—that is, one for young married couples. This is under the direction of the pastor, Rev. Frederick Held. The whole group is enthusiastic about the possibilities for fellowship and service in such a society.

The young people of the Woodbury Church are making great plans for entertaining the Middle Georgia Christian Life Conference which meets with them this spring. Last week Miss Coghill met with Howard McEachern, President, and Mary Bush, Secretary, at the home of the Counselor, Mrs. D. W. Shepherd, in Barnesville to work out the program for this meeting.

YOUTH AND WORLD AFFAIRS.

Well, it looks as though Hitler has accomplished his first step to again make the Fatherland a world power monarchy. What is his hidden motive? I have a pretty good idea as do others who wait anxiously for the outcome.

There are those who say that all these martial actions are put into action by the restlessness of Youth.

But aren't there various peace organizations composed of Youth alone which are striving to wipe out these foolish notions and plant the seed of Fellowship in minds gripped with greed? Of course, there are; and it will be these movements which, in later years, will throw their heads high in the air and say to posterity: "We came; we saw; WE CONQUERED!"

THINGS I KNOW.

I don't know much about religion; I've never had a show,
But I've got a fairly tight grip, Sir,
On the handful of things I know.
I don't know much about prophets
And free will, and that sort of thing,
But I believe in God and the angels
Ever since one night last spring.

I used to be pretty sauey,
Always ready to fuss and fight;
I used to disobey my mom,
Just as any other lad might.
Believe me, I'm a changed lad now,
With the handful of things I know,
And it's all because of a lesson
I learned about eight months ago.

NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP RALLY.

The annual Spring Rally of the North Carolina-Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship will meet Saturday, April 23, at the First Christian Church, at Burlington, N. C.

The meeting will begin at 2:00 in the afternoon and adjourn at 8:00.

The theme for the meeting will be: "Religious Living Today." A complete program will appear in THE CHRISTIAN SUN at an early date.

WALTER COOPER,
President.

WAR IS DUMBNESS—WE MUST HELP AMERICA BE SMART.

As WAR sounds in the walls of China, we ask ourselves, what can be done. What can the Christian world do toward preventing this awful thing called WAR? Some men in America have burned many dollars worth of Japan's toys. Who wants war? That question is one to which we hate to give a reply. Will America be smart if we stay away from the battle field? This is a question that the Christian world and all other smart people should use more often. Be smart and help America be smart. This will stop many heartaches. War is close; so keep these things in mind.

RAY DAY.

CENTRAL IDEALS OF JESUS' TEACHING.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR APRIL 3, 1938.

SCRIPTURE: Matt. 5: 43-48; 6: 33;
28: 18-20; Luke 6: 31.

(CONSECRATION MEETING.)

Daily Readings—

Monday—The Fatherhood of God—Matt. 6: 1-4.

Tuesday—God's Loving Care—Matt. 10: 28-31.

Wednesday—The Need of Prayer—Mark 9: 17-29.

Thursday—God's Kingdom Within—Luke 17: 20, 21.

Friday—The Need of Faith in God—Luke 12: 22-34.

Saturday—The Difficult Way—Matt. 7: 12-20.

Jesus proclaimed ideals in His day that caused the people to exclaim: "Never yet man spake like this man!" Others said: "We never saw it in that fashion." His ideals were so much superior to those of the people that their religious life was pagan.

The first six questions are based upon the daily Scripture readings, which reveal some of the important teachings.

1. What did Jesus teach about the Fatherhood of God?
2. How great is the loving care of God?
3. Does prayer make a difference?
4. Where is God's kingdom?
5. Why have faith in God?
6. The difficult way—what is it?
7. Man's direct accountability to God.
8. The law of love should be the controlling principle in human conduct. Men are to love God and to love each other because God loved them and sent His Son to be their Saviour.

Jesus not only held high ideals, but He practiced the same kind of living. He did those things which pleased the Father.

This meeting should challenge us to make our lives more like the Christ. He presented ideals that have not been reached by the majority of people. This is a challenge indeed!

Suggested Hymns—

CORRECTING WRONG IDEAS OF RELIGION.

LESSON XIII—MARCH 27, 1938.

GOLDEN TEXT: This people honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me.—Mark 7: 1-13.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 7: 1-13.

One of the marks of the majesty and manhood of the Master was His poise and patience in the face of the persistent and pernicious criticism of His enemies. They hounded Him, but with indiscourageable good will he went along the even tenor of His ways preserving a poise and exemplifying a patience that is the inspiration and the despair of those who have to put up with the petty criticisms and the catty remarks of others. Only a double portion of the grace of God enabled Jesus to bear what He bore. Today's lesson is an instance in point.

Ganging Up On the Master.

"There were gathered together unto Him the Pharisees, and certain of the scribes, who had come from Jerusalem." That was a bad combination. The Pharisees were the most fastidiously religious people of the day. The scribes were the professional students of the law, those who were supposed to know not only every jot and tittle of the law, but all the traditions and interpretations of the law. They were the "supreme court" so far as an interpretation and application of the law was concerned. It can readily be seen that they were putting Jesus "on the spot" when they asked Him a question concerning the law and its meaning for everyday life. Let Him make the slightest blunder and they would immediately discredit Him as one who disrespected and disregarded the law of Moses. And of course that would be a serious thing. The Master's attitude toward these "important" (?) people shows that He was no respecter of persons.

Holding the Traditions of the Elders.

The Jews in general, and the Pharisees in particular, were very careful about every jot and tittle of the ceremonial law as concerning the washing of hands, and cups and pots and brassen vessels, not primarily as a matter of removing dirt, but as a matter of religious ceremony. For instance it was inevitable that they should come in contact with Gentiles in the market-place, or that they bought food from those who were ceremonially unclean, that is, those who did not keep the minute details of the law. In their thinking they thus became "unclean" and they had to take great pains to "wash" so that again they stood in God's favor. Much of this was not the original law, but traditions of men, accretions and additions that the scribes and rabbis had added through the years, and which had become in their thinking as sacred, and even more sacred than the law itself. It illustrates how far men can go in killing the spirit of the law by emphasizing the letter of the law. It is so much easier to perform the externals of religion than to have the right spirit within. It is so much easier to hold to the traditions of the elders than to obey the truth of the gospel. To be sure there are high and holy traditions in life as well as in religion. Sailors know something of the high traditions of the sea; doctors know the traditions of medicine, and so on. But tradition becomes tragedy when it concerns such things as the washing of pots and pans, such things as what kind of vestment a man shall wear, what kind of a cross shall be placed in a church or on a church, whether one shall read a prayer or not, what order of service shall be followed, forms of church government, etc., things all right in themselves, but not at all vital in the essential things of the spirit. Men have too often made the traditions of men more authoritative than the truth of God.

Playing at Religion.

"Well did Isaiah prophesy of you hypocrites." The word means basically, an actor, one who plays a part of another on the stage, and hence one who pretends to be some one who he is not. It was a word often on the lips of Jesus, for so many of the Pharisees and scribes played at religion. They pretended to be better than they really were. They pretended to be good when they were not willing to pay the price of being good. They were not sincere, real, honest. And Jesus denounced them in seathing terms on more than one occasion. But we must not sit in too harsh judgment on them, lest we condemn ourselves. Every one of us has to be constantly on his guard lest he become a hypocrite. And not the least danger is that some folks are hypocrites in that they want to appear worse than they really are. Many a man likes to boast and act like a regular fellow when he really is a kind of Mr. Milquetoast.

Saying and Doing Not.

"This people honor me with their lips, but their heart is far from me." It is more or less easy to profess; it is much harder to practice. It is much easier to say "Lord, Lord," than it is to do the will of the Lord. It is much easier to praise God in a hymn on Sunday than it is to be a Christian in the home through the week. It is much easier to draw nigh unto God with our lips than it is to give Him our hearts. It is much easier to give Him lip-service than it is to give Him life-service. But Jesus said that it was He who does and not He who says who honors God and evidences love of God.

Given to God.

The Jews had a rather strange custom. If they said "Corban" which means "given to God," over any possessions or property, or money, it could not be used for any other purpose, except a religious purpose—the vow of dedication could not be broken. This matter of Corban was often taken advantage of by those who did not want to take care of, or give to, their fathers and mothers—they would simply say "Corban" and automatically the things would be forever beyond the reach of father and mother. Whether the dedicated things were ever so used is a mooted question—the chances are that they were not. This custom may have been the great-great-great-grandfather of the bankruptcy law of modern times. In any event are those of today who say that they do not bother about giving the tithe because all that they have belongs to God. (It does, but he never gets very much of it.) And the principle also finds expression among those who say that they can worship God out in Nature as well as in a church, but who generally do not worship him at all.

And Many Such Like Things Ye Do.

This principle finds expression in many forms in modern life. The word of God is made void by the traditions of men. Through the centuries many accessories to Christianity have become in the thinking of some folks the essentials. Things and customs which grew out of certain temporal situations have become standardized and sanctified until they threaten to transcend the divine Word itself.

We may never know here how much is done through our prayers, but we shall know hereafter; and in the meantime we have Christ's promise that where two or three are gathered together in His Name, there He is in the midst of them. This thought alone brings unspeakable comfort; for by it we know that we can come into the very presence of the Lord—that we can speak to Him and ask Him for His help.—Selected.

LIFE'S BEST INVESTMENT.

"A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."—Luke 12:15.

We are told that the United States is investing not less than nine thousand dollars in each high school graduate. How much is a man worth any way?

A man's worth is measured not by the amount of money invested in him, not by the wealth he possesses, nor by the cash that one may collect for his services, but a man's worth is measured by the interests which possesses him.

We think of Edison in terms of the value of electric lights to the world. We think of Lindbergh in terms of aviation. How much are you worth? Perhaps you are not an inventor, but you are a soul. How much does soul life around you grip your soul? How much are you contributing to the soul life of those around you?

Prayer—O Lord, teach us the value of other folks and help us to dedicate ourselves to the good, to the spirit of mankind. Amen.

POWER IN THE WHEELS.

"The spirit of the living creature was in the wheels."—Ezk. 1:20. (Read Ezk. 1:15-20.)

It is an entrancing sight to behold the turning wheels of industry. Within the walls of a factory we stand in awe of its beauty and power.

One of the things about wheels is that they must not only have their proper form and be attractive as well, but they must have power within them to do the work designed for them to do.

Does this mean anything to you in terms of Christian living? "Power within." Christ is the power.

Prayer—Our Father, we are grateful for the urge of the Holy Spirit. We pray to be vitalized and empowered by Him till we shall be perfected in His presence. Amen.

LIFE'S STABILIZER.

"Wherewith shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto according to thy word."—Psalm 119:9-16.

Our ships have been equipped with an instrument called the gyroscope. This instrument is to hold the ship steady when the sea is rough.

We need a mental and spiritual gyroscope to steady us when things go wrong. We are too easily upset, and we lose our self-control and come to grief. The Psalmist says that "Taking heed according to His word" is that gyroscope. The mind saturated with the strength and the serenity of the Bible is not apt to be upset, but will ride steadily and praise God.

Prayer—Our Father, help us to hide Thy word in our hearts where we may find its strength in time of need. Amen.

THE GRIP OF THE CARNAL.

"Are ye not carnal and walk as men?"—I Cor. 3:1.

Man's mad quest for money and pleasures and sensual joys is still evident everywhere. Success turns life to gaities and then he seeks further gaity on borrowed time. Must the brotherhood and the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ wait and keep on waiting for the hearts of men to turn to Him? Or must we slide on to disaster?

The lesson of the centuries is that only the spiritual is the real and enduring. The welfare of every man must be put on the highest plane. Faith in the living God and obedience to His will must be his first policy. Only that will afford life's surest and sweetest satisfactions.

Prayer—Dear Lord Jesus, our hearts hunger for Thee. Teach us to live for the things worth while. Amen.

HOW WE SEE.

"Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth."—James 3:5. (Read the whole chapter.)

One of the outstanding impressions of the Christian ministry is the discovery that they who listen have their own interpretation. Behind all the bungling of the preacher, the people discern his interest, they get a message of the Holy Spirit, and often an interpretation, which the speaker never thought of. The reward of such people is not so much what they hear but what they understand. They find Christ and their best selves reflected in their own manner of meditation.

Prayer—Our Father, give us understanding hearts and the guidance of the Holy Spirit in all things. Amen.

KEEP HEAVEN IN VIEW.

"I, John, saw the Holy City."—Rev. 21:1-5.

We were interested in William T. Ellis' account of his visit to the Isle of Patmos. He says he was greatly moved by it. It is an uninteresting island, lonely, and commonplace. Yet, this is the place where the heavens spread to the soul of John and gave to him the vision of the church and eternal glory. John says: "I saw the Holy City."

We need John's vision in our everyday life to sustain our faith, our hopes; to strengthen us in our hours of loneliness, our hardships, suffering, and our discouragements. Nothing will matter if we can always have before us the City of God.

Prayer—Oh our Father, touch our eyes that in times of darkness we may see the light of Jesus and be sustained by Him to the end. Amen.

STEWARDS OF THE ETERNAL.

By REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

"But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through, nor steal; for where your treasure is there will your heart be also."—Matt. 6:20, 21.

This morning I am preaching for a verdict, namely, that of the young people of this church placing their hearts in heavenly things. My reason: I desire the happiness of every young person in this church. I believe the boys and girls of this church, as of every church, are entitled to happiness now, and through all the years to come. I want your lives to count for the most for yourselves and for all who shall be dear to you, and for all to whom you are dear.

You are well on the road to that happiness. But many with as good starts, however, missed the road. Miserably they miss the road. The fact, however, that you are here this morning where you engage in Christian worship assures me that you are now on the right road. Those who have your lasting, and deepest interest at heart will appreciate the fact that you are here allying yourselves with the church, with its outlook and upreach toward the eternal. Young people, you are in the days of your lives when fond dreams flourish, in the days of your lives when knight-hood is in flower. Happy is that person who has the divinely given privilege of bidding you God-speed in your quest for happiness. How I yearn to say the right word, to do the right deed, in order that you catch a glimpse of the eternal God, and realize that He is on that quest with you.

You are, with the others of us, stewards of the eternal. We are not here just for today, our spirits are eternal. And to the measure in which you catch that truth you are destined to be happy. I feel for us all, for we are all tempted to forget the eternal. We live in a world in which things are temporal, and we are enveloped in temporal things. Our clothes wear out, and become worn and seedy; our pantries, filled today with good food, tomorrow are empty and must be restocked. Our pocket book today with a bit of money, the earnings of our hands, or the gifts of our parents, will be empty before we desire it.

And so we are tempted to forget that there is that which never passes away. We live in the daily newspaper age, today up-to-date, tomorrow only trash with which to kindle a fire.

Suppose God gives us something far greater than all these passing things, and we invest it in only that which is here today and gone tomorrow, eventually we shall realize that we have missed our opportunity, and life will be filled with regret, and remorse.

The saddest words of tongue or pen, The saddest are these: It might have been.

And so I bring to you for your consideration this morning the words of our Lord Jesus Christ. We all trust him, and believe in the eternal truth of his words. What does he say on these matters? Well, down across the centuries come his living words, words as fresh and true today as they were the same day he uttered them on the mount, and words which every young person should learn early to make a part of the working philosophy of his or her life: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal; for where your treasure is there will your heart be also."

Now that is Jesus challenging you to lay for yourselves heavenly treasures. Your best Friend Jesus is telling you what you can count on for happiness that is lasting and sure. He is telling you that wherever you place your tangible, visible strength there will you put your affections and love and loyalty also. Ask yourself the question: Where do I wish ultimately to land? What wish I for my ultimate goal? What are the ideals and accomplishments I wish most of all to reach? When I "arrive" at last what do I wish to be my idealistic environment? Well, perhaps everyone of us would see goals that can be classified as Christian as the answer to these questions. I thank God for Christian teachers, seers, and prophets that called my attention early in my childhood to such things. I thank God that I was early taught that the philosophy of Jesus Christ was best for me, and I thank God for Christian ideals all along the way. I believe that the young people in this congregation can say the same.

How then shall we accomplish the result of laying up for ourselves heavenly treasures, and arriving at true self-expression and happiness? Hear Jesus: Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also. In other words, begin building now, right now, toward the Christian goals of your fairest dreams by putting your treasure into them. Would you like to help make a Christian civilization where men and women loved and trusted each other, and where that love and trust was held sacred, and not violated? Then begin placing your best strength into that dream. Jesus did.

Let me be definite. The Church is the one agency making it the major reason for its existence to bring about just such a condition as I have suggested. Jesus Christ gave his life for the Church. Jesus saw its fulfillment as a dream worth giving up all for, and he gladly laid down his life for its success and glory. The church is the continuation of his ideal under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. You are not able to understand all about this, any more than I am, but while we may miss our guess Jesus will not, did not, and does not. There may be many things about the church you do not think ideal; you will hear some of our elders heavily criticize it, and they will parade its faults in your presence—but the thinking ones who love it, will not. You can line up with the church as the nearest approach to your ideals there is on earth. And you can afford to place your treasure in it.

To be still more definite if you will make a real contribution of the most completely expressive tangible thing you hold in your hands, namely, your money, to the church regularly and conscientiously, you will begin to love the church, to trust the church, and to develop the church's holiest and best ideals into your own life and love, for "where your treasure is there will your heart be also." You will begin to find yourselves fellow-workers with God, and under the supreme guidance of Him whose leadership you can best trust, namely, Jesus. I challenge for your own happiness, and your own joy, to begin today to regularly make a contribution, a respectable and representative contribution of your means to the church.

Are you convinced that the church's message of love, and life, is the message the world needs; and the one with which you wish to align yourself? Then place your money in the church, for money is the stuff of our modern life, and the test of our present civilization, it has a spiritual

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The first spring day was a beautiful day. The sunshine was warm and pleasant. The flowers in bloom. The birds singing. Everything to make us happy. This is a beautiful old world anyway.

The only thing the orphanage had to break into the happiness was the fact we had some sick children.

Quite a number of them have had flu during the last month. We have had no serious cases so far. The writer carries such a heavy responsibility that when children are ill he feels uneasy until they recover.

Fathers and mothers feel the responsibility of their own children in their own home, but the care of children in an institution of this kind weighs still more heavily. They have no others but these in charge to look to and it makes one feel the responsibility greater. Orphanage work is different from any other work. A business man can sometimes get out and play golf and shake off responsibility for the time being; but you don't have the time in orphanage work.

One carries the responsibility twenty-four hours out of twenty-four. Never free and at ease day or night. Orphanage work is interesting work if one is fond of children. Children in an orphanage are just like other children. They have ambitions to do things in life as other children. They will fight as hard to win a ball game as any other boys or girls. If a prize is offered in school they enter the battle in the front line and if they don't win they give the winner a real race.

They are as proud of new clothes as other boys and girls are. They take pride in going neat and clean to Sunday school and church, or wherever they go.

When the school closes we will have a number of boys who are due to go out as soon as they can find work. It will be like parting with our own children. This has been their home for a number of years. They love it because it has been home to them. It will touch a tender place in the heart of the writer. He has learned to love them as his own. It brings tears and heart aches because of the close friendship that has grown during the years.

Superintendent.

John Wycliffe had some commendable rules of Bible interpretation. Among them we read: "It shall greatly help you to understand Scripture if thou mark not only what is spoken or written, but of whom, to whom, with what words, at what time, where, to what extent, with what circumstances, considering what goeth before and what followeth."

WILKINS.

Mrs. Mary Susan Wilkins was born in Alamance County, February 8, 1862, and departed from this life January 19, 1938, at the home of her son, Dr. J. C. Wilkins, in Haw River, N. C. She was the wife of the late Deacon J. D. Wilkins.

Mrs. Wilkins is survived by the following children: Miss Ida Wilkins and Dr. J. C. Wilkins, of Haw River, N. C.; Dr. R. A. Wilkins, Mr. R. O. Wilkins, and Mr. H. B. Wilkins, of Burlington, N. C.; Mr. J. E. Wilkins, of Elon College; Mr. George Wilkins, of Yanceyville, and Mr. Levi Wilkins, of Mooresville; seven grand-children and other kinsmen and many friends.

Mrs. Wilkins was a faithful member of Union Christian Church from early life. Her life was spent in service to her family and community. The light of her life will continue in the minds of those who knew her; thus she lives with us still.

Funeral services were conducted from Union Church with the pastor in charge, assisted by Dr. J. H. Lightbourne, Dr. G. O. Lankford, and Rev. G. C. Crutchfield.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT.

LOST—Somewhere between Virginia and North Carolina—a valuable church member. When last seen he was standing on the steps talking to a CHRISTIAN SUN subscriber, and the subscriber forgot to ask for his subscription. The church member was new and inexperienced in the way of the Church. He needed to grow. (God would have liked to hear him grow!) He needed the warmth and health and life of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. He was hungry for the warm, glowing fellowship found in those pages. He was lonesome and discouraged and blue, and he needed the comfort of the Gospel. He needed the confidence that comes from the knowledge of being "on the winning side." He had youth and talent and great promise. He might have been a great asset in the bringing in of the Kingdom of our Lord and His Christ. But the subscriber forgot to mention THE CHRISTIAN SUN . . . or didn't care . . . or didn't take the time . . . and the youth with the morning sun in his face turned away his eyes, and missed the Vision. The world offered him its tinsel pleasures, and the indifferent maelstrom of humanity tugged him down into the undertow of carelessness and doubt and unbelief. NO REWARD OFFERED—He is gone forever!

It Is Not Too Late—

To save other valuable members for the Kingdom! Why not invest two or four dollars in this kind of thing? It may reach farther than you ever dreamed! Your subscription gift may turn a world upside down and bring a far-off kingdom to the feet of Christ. Try it and see. I dare you!

THE GREATEST INFLUENCE.

"Having your behavior seemly . . . that . . . they may be your good works, which they behold, glorify God in the day of visitation."—I Peter 2: 12.

David was a great man. He slew his Goliaths. He fought and won many battles. He established nations and became a great king. But these are not the things that made him great. David's greatness arose from the songs of his soul; songs which he sang when he was a shepherd boy. Who does not know the 23rd Psalm? Who can estimate the value of that Psalm to the Christian world?

Prayer—Our Father, only Thou dost know the meaning and the power of our years and the greatness of little things that make life large. We pray that we may spend all our years in the fear of the Lord. Amen.

significance beyond all our dreams, lay it upon the altar of the church, and where you put your treasure there will your love and affection be also. You will find yourself a steward of God, entrusted with the eternal values placed in your keeping, and you will find yourself also able to feel in the inmost sanctum of your soul that you have been true to the stewardship entrusted you. In that is your joy, and ultimate happiness.

Broken Alabaster Boxes

By CLARENCE A. VINCENT, D. D.

The breaking of her alabaster box, not the possession of it, has given Mary her increasing influence in the world. "The glory of life is not in having things," writes Bruce Wright, "but in using them. Mere possession is an empty boast. The proper use of what we have is alone worthy of commendation." A drought-wilting world is not saved by a water-heavy cloud floating above it but by the cloud giving itself in abundant showers. The cloud disappears but the earth becomes fresh and fruitful.

Differing Clouds.—This is true of clouds of any size and name. It matters not what the capacity or type of one's ability may be; its glory is in its use for the welfare of another, or others. One person sings a hymn tenderly in a sick-room, and Jenny Lind sings to a clerk in a music store who could not afford to attend her concert in Philadelphia. The one brought comfort to the sick, the other delight to the lowly. It is not the possession of a charming voice but its unselfish use that gives joy to others.

Wealth.—The woman gave two mites, and John D. Rockefeller, Jr., gives millions to build a water-system for Jerusalem, to restore the Rheims Cathedral and the Village of Williamsburg and in many fields for the eradication of disease, and used the power his stock gave him to bring better conditions to the miners in Colorado. The woman's alabaster-box was small and Mr. Rockefeller's large, but the two mites and the millions became significant as they were broken. The question is, what are we doing with our two mites, or our millions.

Power.—Men have the power of natural abilities and of position—one, like Napoleon, uses it selfishly and scatters death and heart-break over France and other European countries; another, like Washington, leads the scattered colonies in a convention that writes a Constitution, that founds a Representative Government and guides the destiny of the new nation during its first years. The war-threatened world today needs unselfish men in all places of leadership. Dictators, whether in a Monarchy or a Representative Government, are dangerous. In every district, village, city, state and nation unselfish citizens and leaders can insure progress in human welfare.

"God give us men!

Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty and in private thinking."

Pervasive.—John writes that the fragrance of the ointment filled the house. The gifts of love have an atmosphere that permeates one's surroundings. A mother's or father's loving gifts fill the house in which they live, and the children are moved by it. A teacher breaks the Box of her love and the whole school knows it. An unselfish citizen gives thought and time to the community and the other citizens are gradually awakened. Business men treat their men fairly and generously and their examples stand out like lighthouses.

Jesus.—The Master gives men and women the willingness to break their alabaster boxes and share their precious contents with others. He awakens a love in them that make missionaries out of them. Their occupations become their fields for service; their talents the gift of God. They are illustrations of Bushnell's sentence, "Every Man's Life is a Plan of GOD." They are living epistles, known and read of all men. They are representatives of Christ in the world and are filled with His spirit. The woman's gift fortified Jesus for His death. The unselfish lives fortify Jesus for His sacrifice and sacrifices in every age and place. Precious thought, that my life of love enriches the life of Christ.

A Memorial.—Christ assured the woman that her sacrificial gift should be spoken of throughout the world, "wherever the Gospel shall be preached" as a Memorial. No true life is wasted. The lowliest disciple adds to the influence of the gospel. Thus, the gospel gathers richness and force from every true life.

Love Never Fails.

Before the world's injustices I stand
With falt'ring will, faint heart and helpless hand—
I hear His voice, "Let not your spirit quail,
For He who lives the life of love will never fail."

REPRESENTING THE SOUTHEAST CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL AND CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials, Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty — In All Things, Charity

NUMBER 13.

THINGS WE NEED

By JAMES H. LIGHTBOURNE.

As a pastor in the Southern Convention, I am aware of weaknesses in the function of the present organization of the Convention which seriously affect me as a pastor. From conversations and conferences with my fellow pastors of the Convention I learn that they, too, feel as I do. And most of them freely express the conviction that something should be done about it.

It would be a very easy matter for our Convention to meet and make certain changes in our organization. But it is not simply change that we need. Probably that has been a difficulty in the past. At other Convention sessions changes have been made, but the changes have not brought about the desired results. Probably we need to look into what it is that is causing our pastors to feel as they do. The changes, if changes are necessary, should grow out of these causes.

In the first place, I think the pastors should make articulate this sense of dissatisfaction which prevails among them. Our editor has invited us to make use of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for this very purpose. It is certainly the privilege and responsibility of the heads of our institutions and the officials of our Boards and Committees to present their conclusions and to offer their plans, but I think we should hear, too, from our pastors. They are the key-men in whatever system of organization we have. The best ever thought of would fail if the pastors refused to work with it.

For my own part, I feel that as a pastor in the Southern Convention, I am not receiving that inspiration and encouragement from my denomination that pastors of other denominations are receiving. I am left rather to play a lone game. I am not made to feel that I am one of a great company and my church a part of a great enterprise. I am not challenged to engage in big things along with my fellow pastors.

At times it seems to me as if the Boards and Institutions of my Convention were competitive organizations and I, as pastor, a hapless victim of the situation. It places me where as a pastor I should not be placed, for my concern and interest for the Kingdom of God should never be open to the inference of disloyalty to any institution or board or enterprise of the Convention.

And, too, I feel a lack of enthusiasm and morale among us pastors. It is difficult to get us together. And when we are together there is absent that cooperative loyalty and spiritual fellowship which should prevail and which we so much need. We have been so much on our own that we have acquired a disposition to do about all our Kingdom work just as it pleases us as individuals. And so we go to Conference if we want to and when we want to, and for as long as we want to; and our attitude toward Conference is about our attitude toward other vital matters and meetings. Rather we have lost the consciousness that they are vital.

And again our churches have little and weak fellowship with other churches of our denomination. It is each church for itself. And the principle is not working well. Since we do as well as we do under the circumstances, it must be God smiles on us. Under more favorable circumstances God might beam upon us. But this situation is so true that we have many churches which might be called, "The forgotten Church."

And also, I sense a lack of denominational consciousness, solidarity, and pride. Now while this can be carried too far, the utter lack of it is suicide. I am proud of the Southern Convention and of the Church of which it is a part. I glory in the things for which it stands. I am spunky about this. Neighboring pastors speak in my presence in this wise: "We Baptists," "We Presbyterians," "We Methodists." And the members of these denominations speak in that manner, too. I feel a need for something of this kind. And I think these others have it because there is something which binds them together, brings them together, has them working together for common objectives and ends.

May I sum up with this statement: As a pastor in the Southern Convention, I sense a need for more denominational contacts, enthusiasms, morale, fellowship, solidarity, and purpose.

LET THERE BE LIGHT

PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES

Dr. C. H. Rowland, pastor emeritus of the First Christian Church of Greensboro, N. C., remains quite feeble. He is always glad to hear from his friends.

It is not too late to plan a real program for Easter. The Board of Christian Education will gladly help in supplying materials. 514 South Main Street, Norfolk, Va., is the address.

Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, pastor of our church in Durham, N. C., is this week assisting Rev. Walter C. Hook in a Preaching Mission at Ingram Memorial Congregational Church, Washington, D. C.

Rev. J. E. McCauley, the pastor of the First Congregational - Christian Church of Richmond, Va., is in the Valley this week assisting Rev. Wm. J. Andes in a series of meetings, which will extend into next week.

Dr. I. W. Johnson seems to be improving slowly at Lakeview Hospital, in Suffolk. He is having to discontinue all responsibilities for work. It is hoped that after a bit of rest he may be able to take up his work again.

Mrs. J. G. Truitt, of Suffolk, Va., is this week attending the Conference of Women Presidents and the Joint Staff of our denominational boards in New York City. As vice-president, Mrs. Truitt will preside at the meeting of the women.

Pastors attending the Fellowship meeting in Suffolk last Saturday were Revs. John G. Truitt, H. S. Hardecastle, Carl R. Key, Arnold Slater, M. S. Poulson, J. H. Dollar, and F. C. Lester. Wonder where the rest of the "boys" were. The young people like to have their ministers present.

Drs. John G. Truitt and S. H. Hardecastle, together with THE SUN's editor, Rev. F. C. Lester were visitors in the office of publication in Richmond, Va., on Tuesday of this week for a short while. They were enroute to Washington, D. C., to attend the Conference on Evangelism being held in that city.

Those interested in any changes in the working program of the Southern Convention may well pass on their ideas to the president of the convention, Dr. S. C. Harrell, of Durham, N. C., or to the chairman of any board represented in the convention before these leaders meet at Henderson, N. C., on Tuesday of next week.

The Board of Christian Education has received two requests for Bibles that it cannot fill. One of them simply says send the book to Linden, Va., and the other one says send to Miss Dorothy at Dyke, Va. If these persons will give us full names and addresses, the books will be forwarded. Other requests for Bibles can now be met promptly.

About one hundred young people met in the Suffolk Christian Church last Saturday afternoon and evening for their spring rally of the Pilgrim Fellowship in Eastern Virginia. The program consisted in part of a trial of Pilgrim Fellowship on a charge that it is not worthy to live. The jury was decided that it is worthy of the confidence of Public Opinion.

YOU OWE YOUR CHURCH MORE THAN MONEY.

Your church renders you what money cannot buy. The spirit of the Church is more than gold, and it is better than bonds. Christian faith, divine fellowship, obedience to the best and highest, are some of the things which the Church inspires. Christian consideration, sympathy, understanding, and love are not sold for silver; they are the gifts of the Galilean through the Church.

The Church has given society the Scriptures, and the Scriptures have given us the Church. You cannot have a Christian civilization without the Christ, nor can you long have the Christ without the Church.

Money will not make a Church, as much as it is needed in the making. We cannot have a Church without you, yourself, or if you wish to put it more generally, without people. You are the Church's chief earthly asset. You, the Christian people, are the Church's glory.

When you fill your place in the pew you make a powerful gift to the Church; when you fill your place in the choir you are giving more than money; when you render a service as a teacher in the Church you give it a priceless gift; and when you cheerfully accept a responsibility in any place in your church and faithfully perform it you are paying a debt which cannot be paid in any other way.

You owe your church love and loyalty! "I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the presence of all His people."—(Psalm 116:14.)

J. G. TRUITT.

WINSTON-SALEM.

We write this to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, to tell of the work, the prospects and the needs of the Winston-Salem Church. We are now in the seventh year since the work here first took form in a rally of the Congregational and Christian Church members on Sunday night, September 13, 1931, in the Y. W. C. A. building, after a careful survey had been made by Rev. W. T. Scott and others.

Rev. W. T. Scott was placed in charge of the work and continued the survey work until April, 1932 when a full time program was launched, and the congregation moved its temporary headquarters to a part of the old Centenary M. E. Church. The response then made was so gratifying that a formal organization took place on October 9, 1932. The fifth anniversary of this organization was observed on October 13, 1937, at a banquet held at the church, with more than sixty present. Mayor W. T. Wilson, of the city, delivered the address of the occasion.

Ground was broken for the building on March 16, 1933 and the first brick was laid April 29, 1933. On Sunday, July 9th, the building was formally opened for services and since that time services both morning and evening and Sunday school have been regularly maintained. Rev. Scott served as pastor until April 1, 1936, when the present pastor came to the field. The membership then was sixty-four. Since that time twenty-two have been received and twelve removed, leaving a present membership of seventy-four. Our Sunday school enrollment is ninety-seven at present, with an average attendance of sixty. Our morning service has an average attendance of forty, and evening service twenty-five. This is better than a 50 per cent attendance of the church and Sunday school enrollment, which is higher than for the average church. Four new members were received on Sunday, February 27th.

Since the last annual conference in November the church has observed the Christmas season with appropriate service and messages, participated in a Union Inter-Race Relations service, a Union World's Day of Prayer, as well as a similar service of its own with thirty-three present. It is now planning for its special Easter service in April. The Lenten season is being observed with special messages on Sunday morning by the pastor, the use of the "Fellowship of Prayer" in the homes and special scriptural assignments, as the story of Jesus from one of the gospels. The Thursday night before Easter will be observed with a special program, Communion Service and the reception of new members.

The Woman's Association of thirty members is active and holds monthly meetings in the homes with good attendance and interesting programs. They are now making a study of the Book of Ephesians with the pastor preaching a series of sermons on this Book each Sunday night during Lent. The pastor takes his turn once a year in conducting a week of devotional services over station WSJS, conducts services at the tubercular hospital, the old folks home, for about one hundred women at the WPA industry and frequent services at the tobacco factories.

The church has a budget of about $1,200.00. Its benevolent budget as assigned by the Annual Conference is $88.80, of which $80.00 was paid last year and $44.80 has already been paid on this year, with $20.00 going to the orphanage, $20.00 to the college, and 88c to superannuation. The Mission offering comes next and will be paid sometime during the mission period. As to our needs, we most earnestly desire to get relief from our church debt of $2,078.00 due the Building Society and steps are being taken in that direction which we hope will be realized. Then if we can effect a settlement with the city on our street assessment of $950.52 and thus save interest on that amount, the church will be in a fair position to carry its financial load. At present the debt burden of some $3,000.00 is just too heavy to meet and a barrier to our progress. We humbly beseech your interest and prayers.

W. M. JAY, Pastor.

Attention is called to the program for the Southern Convention which is printed elsewhere in this issue. Delegates especially will do well to study the program.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

SHOULD A MAN GIVE TO MISSIONS?

This question is not as silly as it may sound. Men are rather careful about making investments, or should be. They have a right to know what is to be done with the money they turn loose from their hard earnings. They ought to inquire as to what is to be undertaken and as to the possibility of accomplishing the desired results. They need to know whether the beautiful dream may become a reality.

Women give to missions. But women do many nice things that men have neither the time nor the desire to do. Is the missionary program such as to call forth the best thought of careful investors, both men and women? Forgetting for the moment the usual reasons presented for the missionary appeal, let us face frankly the real question as to whether men, honest, hard-working, conservative business men should give to missions.

Men do invest in friendships. They know that it pays good dividends. Golf Clubs, banquets, dinners, cigars, drinks, civic clubs like Rotary, and many other things testify to the faith of men that investments in friendships pay more than they cost. The missionary cause is an experiment in friendships. The missionary ignores the walls that divide, and binds about the hearts of people of different nations and races the golden chord of friendship. This friendship does more than the army and navy to prevent international conflicts and war. Nearly all of our tax dollars (and there are many such dollars) goes to wars past, present, and future. Enough friendships would make wars impossible and preparation for war unnecessary. Men who believe in friendship should give to missions, and more largely now than ever before.

International friendship breaks down tariff barriers and makes international trade successful. Foreign markets have much to do with local prices of commodities. The missionary undertakes to get all people to recognize others as brothers and to act in a neighborly fashion. This tends towards fair trade and safe investments in all parts of the world where the message of the missionary becomes effective. Investors in oil in China and Mexico today could well afford a generous gift to missionary work, if that would insure their investments. It takes a long time for the message of the missionary to become effective, but when it happens investments are safe, for honesty and square dealing are part of the Christian ethic as taught by our missionaries.

Disease is no longer personal or a national affair. World travelers and world trade scatter disease everywhere. Business men know that sickness is very expensive. It breaks down the daily out-put of mine or factory, increases expense, and diminishes income. A well world can do more work and live happier than a sick one. The missionary undertakes to teach how to be well and seeks to cure sickness. Business men may well invest in international health. It is a good business deal.

Narrowness and selfishness is not good business for anyone. Those who seek for themselves only usually miss that which they seek. There is a liberality that tends to growth and prosperity. Men like to feel that they are bigger than their own business however large or small that may be. The missionary crusade gives a man expanding possibilities. It lets him get into the company of the really great of the earth. And it links him up with the God of all earth; the God who made all mankind and seeks for the well-being of all His children. The way to share in a big enterprise, to give the personality a chance to expand, to link up with the God and Father of us all is to make definite, consistent, and liberal contributions to missions.

Yes, men should give to missions. Millions of them do, and millions of others would be more successful and happier if they would join in with large contributions.

ATTEND THE MEETINGS.

Sometimes one wonders whether it is worth the effort to attend all the meetings planned by the Church. Quite a large number of members definitely decide that it is not, and they seldom or never attend. Others appear to believe in meetings, for they go far and near, through sunshine or shower to be present when the sons of God meet together.

This writer believes in attending meetings. He has gone from the east to the west and from the north to the south to attend meetings, and always he has found profit in doing so. To these meetings go those who have made preparation to give of their best to those who attend. There some of the wisest and best sit together to plan and to pray for the Kingdom of God. Out from the meetings one can go renewed, inspired and informed, ready to undertake and to accomplish more than was possible without the meeting.

If you have any doubt of this, just look about you at those who make it a rule to attend meetings of the Church and compare them with those who do not attend. The informed, happy, and leading group are usually those who go to the meetings. Those who fail to attend soon lose their place of leadership, whether they be laymen or ministers. This is said with the hope that some who read it will take the warning and attend the meetings of the Church wherever it is possible for them to go. It is the way to leadership, and happiness.

He who looks into the Book of books and fails to recognize divine authority and feel personal responsibility of respect and obedience has experienced a failure that the strongest words cannot express.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Under the orders of my physicians, I dictated my resignation from all Convention official positions. About one week ago, the Doctors said this was absolutely necessary, and I yielded with great reluctance. This is the first time in nearly forty years I have been really ill. This illness came so suddenly that I do not yet fully realize what has happened. I am happy to say that my condition has slightly improved, but the way back to health and extensive work is long and tedious.

With the assistance of my wife, who has been meeting callers, and looking after necessary correspondence, I wish to convey to readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, a few words of appreciation. Writing the Suffolk Letter each week for over five years, has been a great joy to me. I appreciate the many expressions of appreciation that have come to me concerning these "Letters." And I lay down this opportunity with genuine regret. Furthermore, I appreciate the honor conferred on me in promoting me to so many positions of trust, in the organization of the Convention.

In every place, I have sought to be fair, faithful and impartial. In the enforced retirement of the next few months, I am hoping to recover health and strength. Whether these hopes shall be realized, Our Heavenly Father only knows. But I am confident that rest and careful living under the blessing of God, will help me to return to my pastorate, invigorated and refreshed.

I want to thank the scores of persons who have kept my room at Lakeview Hospital so lovely and cheerful with flowers and potted plants. And also to thank all those who have sent messages through telephone, "get-well-cards," and personal letters.

PROBLEMS OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

It is certainly time to begin thinking and planning for the approaching session of our Convention. As we begin to think about the biennial session of the Convention, certain problems present themselves. It seems that at this session we will be called upon to consider the problem of reorganization. There is quite a bit of contention from different sections for a more simplified and, considered to be, more effective organization than we have at present.

The Convention consists of representatives from local churches constituting the Eastern Virginia Conference, the Virginia Valley Central Conference, the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, the Eastern North Carolina Conference, and the Western North Carolina Conference. The work of the Convention is organized, in addition to the Executive Committee of the Convention itself, around departments or Boards.

1. The Department of Missions of which the Woman's Board with its subsidiary organizations is a part.

2. The Department of Publications that has the responsibility of publishing THE CHRISTIAN SUN, THE CHRISTIAN ANNUAL, and other publications of the Convention's interest.

3. The Department of Christian Education that is charged with the responsibility of conducting the young people's work of the Convention consisting of literature and materials for young people's organizations, Leadership Training Schools in local churches, and for the Convention as a whole.

4. The Board of Education that is charged with the responsibility of fostering the Convention's program of Christian higher education centered at Elon College, the Convention's institution.

5. The Christian Orphanage authorized, founded, and supported largely by the churches and individuals of the Convention. This institution is charged with the responsibility of caring for the unfortunate and homeless among our membership.

6. The Board of Superannuation, whose duty it is to conduct a program of education among the churches in the interest of securing funds for the support of our superannuated ministers and their families. This Board receives applications, decides who is to receive assistance from the fund, and determines the amount to be allotted to each individual applicant. All funds received by the Board of Superannuation are forwarded to headquarters at 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City, and checks are mailed to beneficiaries direct from the Board of Ministerial Relief of which Dr. Lewis T. Reed is Executive Secretary.

Our present organization consists of the President of the Convention who serves without salary, the Secretary of the Convention who serves for a minimum salary, and the Treasurer of the Convention. In addition to these strictly Convention officers, we have our heads of departments and chairmen of Boards. We think of our Mission Secretary as the one paid official of the organization although, as a matter of fact, the superintendent of the orphanage, the secretary of young people's work, and the president of the college are paid officials just as truly as is the Mission Secretary.

One important change in our organization that is being endorsed by many is that the Convention elect an executive Secretary whose duty it would be to give his entire time to the interest of the Convention, that he should be equally responsible to all departments of the Convention, and that the appeals of the Mission Board, the Orphanage, the College, the Board of Christian Education, and the Board of Superannuation all be made through this Executive Secretary to the local churches. They tell us that in this way we would have a unified program with equal emphasis placed upon Convention Departments and interests according to their relative claims upon the constituency.

Others are suggesting the uniting of different departments that the organization may be simplified and with the hope that it will be more effective. They contend, first, that all missionary interests should be under one Board and that there should be one budget to meet the demands of our entire missionary program instead of the dual organizations for missions that we now have, together with their separate budgets. Second, that instead of the Board of Education and the Board of Christian Education, we simply have the Board of Christian Education that would sponsor the entire educational program for the Convention beginning with the Cradle Roll in the Sunday school of the local church and extending through the senior class in Elon College, that there simply be one budget for the cause of education in our Convention, and that the Board of Christian Education sponsor the entire educational interest of the Convention. Third, that the remaining boards—the Christian Orphanage, the Board of Superannuation, and the Board of Publications remain as they are. This would give us five departments or boards, instead of seven.

A more radical lineup still is suggested: First, the Board of Missions that would include our present Board of Missions and the Woman's Board with its subsidiary organizations. Second, the Board of Christian Education, including the present Board of Education, the Board of Christian Education, and the Board of Publications. This new board would be charged with the responsibility of sponsoring the college, young people's work through the churches, together with training schools, the publishing of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and other Convention Publications. Third, the Board of Christian Benevolences which include the Christian Orphanage and the Board of Superannuation. This latter plan would give the Convention but three Boards but would include the entire interest of the Convention.

The writer feels that the church and Convention assembled should be willing to face these suggestions with interest and sincerity and that in its wisdom and counsel it should set up an organization for the future that will be vital and forward looking. If these changes are wise, consider them. If they are not, do not approve them. It seems to me the Convention should first consider its responsibility to the present and to the future. We will not gain much by our backward looks. We are proud of what our forefathers have done, but they are not expecting us to rest upon them. They are expecting us who constitute the church today to go forward in our time as they went forward in their time. They were not chained to the past, nor did they expect us to be chained by their actions. When we have seriously mapped our future, the question to consider is how best can certain accomplishments be achieved. Can we do more with a central and concentrated organization or can we best accomplish the work of the Kingdom by central and diversified organizations; that is to say, can the work of the Convention be done more efficiently and more effectively by few boards or departments than by many boards or departments? Which idea works more efficiently in the local church? The organization that is effective in the local church is most likely to succeed in the Convention's program. The writer has found it difficult to decide which is the path of wisdom, but he is convinced that the forces of our Convention can be made more vital and more effective than they now are. It may be that we are lacking in power instead of machinery.

There are other problems that will confront us that are more vital than the problems of organization. Articles on other problems will follow. In the meantime, may the church be much in prayer for the wisdom in the approaching session of our Convention.

"HOW WE ARE INCREASING OUR ENROLLMENT AND ATTENDANCE."

Steady growth and perfect attendance have been the aims of the officers and teachers of our Sunday school. God wants His people to advance, and He is ready to move ahead with them. His command is still that which He spake unto Moses: "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward."

This was the command given by our superintendent to the Sunday school on the first Sunday of the new year (1937). Our attendance was on the decline and the interest was waning. The first and most logical step taken by our superintendent was to call a meeting of the officers and teachers of the Sunday school. Each member was asked his or her opinion regarding the weakness of the school. New plans and ideas were discussed. The old saying "In union there is strength" was evident here, for it was with the few old faithful teachers that a new spark of enthusiasm was started in our Sunday school.

The Royal Pin system was organized to encourage the boys and girls to be present every Sunday. In this system each member is presented with a pin for every three months' attendance. This has increased the attendance immensely. Then, as the social life of our school has been neglected very much, an effort was made to create more interest among the different departments.

The happy get-together of large and small groups making merry by games and dainty refreshments, carried on by Christian young people, added much to the spirit and unity of the school.

The Sunday school should lose no opportunity in keeping itself before the public in ways that are legitimate, and germane to the purpose for which it is organized. We have advertised the school on as many occasions as possible. Interesting notes on our concerts, social gatherings, special days and other functions of the school which appear regularly in the local paper, have added greatly to our attendance.

A new banner was purchased by the treasurer of the school to encourage more activity among the different classes. This has increased the attendance because each group made an extra effort to get their absentee members to attend so it could win the coveted honor.

A contest was started recently to secure new members by offering the Royal Star Pin monthly to each boy and girl bringing the most new members to Sunday school. The value of this was proven by the activity of the children for the month of October when two girls each brought in five new pupils.

The sending of cards to the absentees has encouraged attendance, and many boys and girls have been saved from the world by this method. A post card that reaches Bobby or Mary on Monday after their absence on Sunday impresses the child with the interest the superintendent feels in him.

We have tried to keep in constant touch with all of the sick children of the school because we have found out that a word of comfort and of cheer, or a call at the home, increases the interest between the family group and the Sunday school.

We try also to remember the individual birthdays. The sending of remembrance cards please the little folks and they will show a greater interest in the school.

One of the most important and troublesome problems is the pitiful way in which God's work is neglected during the summer months. Many of our Sunday schools close, but we are proud to say our school remains open every Sunday throughout the year. An extra effort is made to hold on to the children during the warm months. Class picnics, trips to the lake by the older girls, and other activities help greatly.

Special emphasis was made on our Sunday school picnic to give the children a particularly good time. The treats, eats, a varied program of games, wading and swimming were enjoyed by all, and the day was closed with a sunset baptismal service on the shore of the lake. The outing created such an impression on the children that they were eager to attend the sessions of the school.

Certificates of Faithfulness were given to those who attended every Sunday. We have had wonderful results. Our attendance and enrollment have increased.

I hope these few examples will prove a benefit to other Sunday schools. Remember, Brother Superintendent, God will help those who try to help themselves.

NOTE.—Our attendance was down to about 65. We have just closed a very successful year. Average attendance for the last quarter in 1937 was 115, including a bad storm, when there were only 26 present. Average for the year, 96, including summer attendance. Open all summer with average attendance of 76.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A SPIRITUAL TASK.

The emphasis on missions means, above all things, an emphasis on the things of the Spirit. The object and the program of every church now should be that of deepening the spiritual life, the revelation of our Lord through His church, the manifestation of His life and spirit through our lives. Unless we do this we miss the whole spirit of the season which looks to the Cross and the Resurrection of our Lord. Any and every thought of a financial offering should be in terms of an expression of devotion to our Lord and our deep desire that we shall share Him and His message with others. Possibly there is no better definition or description of this fact and attitude than that given by Paul in his marvelous letter to the Romans. In this letter (Romans 10:11-15)—“For the Scripture saith, Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed. For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him. For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they preach, except they be sent? as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!”

In our missionary period, embracing that period which our Lord was crucified and arose from the dead, it should be the aim and the object of everyone to share both the burden and the blessings of our Lord in our willingness to send those who carry the message for us, even the message of good tidings.

Mission Secretary.

DRESSING UP OUR PREJUDICES.

Dr. E. Stanley Jones insists that we may deceive the very elect, ourselves included, by clothing our prejudices in a religious garb. The self-instinct is very deep and often remains unregenerate in our attitudes even though we put the Kingdom of God and righteousness into our words. Paul realized this and when writing to the church at Ephesus said, “Let no man deceive you with vain words.” The good Apostle had discovered that there were those with avowed good intentions and religious words who were deceiving the church which had been planted and was growing at Ephesus.

This Self-instinct dressed up in a religious garb causes clashes in two directions. First, with individuals. Here is a group of people who have unsundered, therefore unsocialized, selves, who themselves set the stage for clash and strife. This may be done in a refined, even a religious way, as was done in the case of the disciples our Lord: “Then there arose a reasoning among them, which among them should be greatest.” “Of course,” says Dr. Jones, “they will all fight for principle, but demand in a most subtle manner that number one must be looked after.” “For the self soon learns that it cannot get its way in the presence of religious scruples unless its assertions are clothed with religious principles.” “The kingdom was in their words, but self was in their intentions.” Not only was this clash between individuals who were disciples, but clashes because of the self-instinct between groups. Jesus was dealing with this clash between His disciples, when

John felt the sting of it, and was constrained to bring up another: “Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name; and we forbade him because he followeth not with us.” Here was the second clash from self-instinct, one group of workers clashing with another group of workers. The self sees in the threatened position of the group a threat to its own self. “It is then ready to stand up and fight,” says Dr. Jones—“for principle, of course.”

They declare that the interest of the kingdom is endangered when, if analyzed to the bottom, it is not the interest of the kingdom, but the interest of their own prejudices that are endangered and so they begin to inquire and declare, “Who are these unauthorized people? They are dangerous. They are not in proper line. They did not use the same words and make the same profession in casting out devils properly as we do. It must all be stopped.” “This Self-instinct back of religious party spirit is on the basis of a great deal of denominational refusal on the part of one group of Christians, to unite with Christians,” declares Dr. Jones.

We do well in the light of such facts to examine very closely, not others, but ourselves. May be we have so cultivated and clothed our prejudices that in keeping with them we are more willing and ready to tear down than to build up. We should ever bear in mind that we are co-workers with God and God’s process is one of continuous construction and building.

Some of us have never organized a local church or congregation, but have taken those which others have planted and watered and where God was giving the increase and have done more to tear down, or to divert, than we have to construct. Some of us have never organized a Missionary Society, or persuaded a Sunday school to take a missionary offering, but have been quite successful in discouraging such efforts, or diverting them and their gifts from ways that have been proven and are worthy and steadfast, into ways of our own choosing and according to our own persuasion and prejudice.

The Apostle Paul was one of the world’s very greatest missionaries to the Gentiles. It was he who wrote: “For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace.”—(Eph. 2:14, 15.)

How earnestly and longingly our Lord must desire that in every heart and in all the world there shall prevail that peace which passeth all understanding, that peace that breaketh down the middle wall of partition between us and makes us one in Him.

The Christ will never draw His followers together as long as they look at and magnify the defects of other followers of His: but He will draw us together when we lift our eyes from each others' defects to His perfection.

ROSEMONT SOCIETY 25 YEARS OLD.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Rosemont Christian Church observed its 25th anniversary on March 23, 1938. The attendance was large, and the occasion one of beautiful fellowship and expressions of gratitude, as the society was reminded of its history for the last twenty-five years.

The program began with a delicious luncheon, served by the ladies of the society. A beautiful birthday cake, covered with twenty-five candles lay on a center table, around which the members, more than forty-five in number, enjoyed the delicious meal.

Mrs. D. D. Johnston, president, presided with dignity and charm. The birthday cake was cut by Mrs. O. S. Mills, the first president of the society. After the luncheon, there was a brief social period, after which came the program, which consisted of devotionals led by Mrs. O. F. Smith, the reading of the minutes, calling of the roll, and collection of dues, and the singing of a solo, "Let Jesus Lead," by Mrs. Sallie Fisher. The feature of the program was the reading of the history of the society by Mrs. O. S. Mills.

There were four of the charter members present, and of these were two of the original officers, Mrs. Fannie Herbert, the secretary, and Mrs. O. S. Mills, the first president. Mrs. Mills was presented a lovely silver thimble by the members of the society, as an expression of their appreciation of the good work she has done through the years, and especially for her good work as the first president of the organization.

The history of the society, which was read by Mrs. O. S. Mills is as follows:

"The Woman's Missionary Society of the Rosemont Christian Church was organized in the early days of the spring of 1913, with the following charter members: Rev. D. A. Keys, Mrs. D. A. Keys, Mrs. Thomas Morrison, Mrs. B. F. Gibson, Mrs. Kate Crockett, Mrs. J. R. Morrison, Sr., Mrs. Cora Billings, Mrs. Fannie Herbert, Mrs. Gertrude Bondurant, Mrs. Florence Morrison, and Mrs. Alice Gibson Mills.

"The first officers were: President, Mrs. O. S. Mills; Vice-President, Mrs. T. O. Morrison; Secretary, Mrs. Fannie Morrison Herbert; Treasurer, Mrs. Kate Crockett. The Rev. D. A. Keys, our pastor, helped us organize. At first we held two meetings a month for, perhaps, a year or more. The vice-president presided over the extra meeting, at which time garments were made for the Elon Orphanage.

"A few more women were added to the roll, but the attendance was small at times; nevertheless, we have never disbanded, nor have we taken a vacation at any time during these twenty-five years. We went through heat and cold, often with not more than a half-dozen present. Once, while we even had to make our own fires, different ones taking turns at the building of these fires.

Our obligations have always been met entirely by free-will offerings, mite boxes, and such like. We have endeavored always to make our meetings spiritual, which I believe accounts for our success.

"We've had only five presidents: Mrs. O. S. Mills, six years; Mrs. Sallie Roane, three years; Mrs. Nettie Drewry, one year; Mrs. O. F. Smith, four years; Mrs. O. S. Mills, a second term of eight years, and the present president, Mrs. D. D. Johnston, three years. We have been blessed with many faithful officers, among them, Mrs. H. C. Heddy, who was our efficient secretary for nine years. Mrs. H. R. Morrison and Mrs. G. R. Odell were faithful treasurers for five years each.

"I think we should mention the fact that Mrs. J. F. Morgan has had almost the entire responsibility for the study books ever since she has been with us, which has been a little more than twelve years. I would like to state a few facts which I consider largely responsible for the organization of our society. There has always been a good attitude toward missions in our church. Dr. W. D. Harward usually preached a missionary sermon once a month, at which time we gave our offering for missions; this we sent to the Mission Board at Dayton, Ohio, for quite a while.

"When our Eastern Virginia Conference was held in Portsmouth, Virginia (I think in 1912), Col. J. E. West made a stirring appeal to the women in regard to organizing themselves into societies. We came home from this conference thrilled with the possibility of doing something worthwhile for missions.

"In the early spring, about March, of the year 1913, a noted missionary woman, Mrs. Peacock, with several others, held a mass meeting in Norfolk, Va., for the purpose of creating interest in the organization of women's missionary societies in all denominations. There was a luncheon meeting held at the Southland Hotel, which was attended by several of our members, among whom were Mrs. B. F. Gibson, Mrs. Thomas Morrison, and the Rev. D. A. Keys. Our society was organized immediately after this Norfolk meeting.

"In May, 1913, a big mass meeting was held at Elon College, N. C., for the purpose of arousing interest in the organization of women's missionary societies in North Carolina and Eastern Virginia. Mrs. B. F. Gibson attended this meeting as a representative from our society."

Respectfully submitted,

MRS. O. S. MILLS.

MINISTERS AND MISSIONS.

IN RELATION TO THE LOCAL CHURCH.

Under the above caption The Missionary Review of the World certainly presents "a declaration of an outstanding Christian thinker" which is so central in the church life of the day that every pastor, as well as every clergyman of THE CHRISTIAN SUN family should consider it. So we pass it on:

"The key man to the missionary enterprise in America today, the one who will determine more than any one else the attitude of the church to the movement, is not the board secretary, or the foreign missionary, but the pastor of the local church. He it is who stands before the congregation every Sunday morning as the expounder of those things which are held to be of transcendent value in human life. . . . Christian missions is not thought of as a one-sided operation in which we are the active ones while they (the non-Christian world) remain receptive, but rather a reciprocal interplay of influences between two foes. . . . The minister must be reasonably certain with reference to the attitude which he should seek to develop in his people. From now on, attitudes are the main thing which America can contribute. What is required is that the attitude within should be made to correspond with the facts in the changing world without."

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church"

MISS EMILY CARLETON, Editor, 541 Osceola Ave., Winter Park, Fla.

PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP ISSUE OF "THE CHRISTIAN SUN."

At the Holiday Conference held in Greensboro, it was decided to have a Pilgrim Fellowship edition of THE CHRISTIAN SUN four times during the year. The first such issue appeared on February 3rd, containing reports of the Holiday Conference and plans and projects of the different young people's groups in the Southeast. This first issue was in the nature of an experiment. We hope that the next one will be a decided improvement—but this can be true only if you will cooperate by sending in material on time.

The next Pilgrim Fellowship issue will appear on April 28th. All of the material should be in the hands of the printer by April 20th, and much of it can be sent in before that time. We hope that every local society will let us know the things they have been doing, and are planning to do. Please take it upon yourself to see that something is sent in from your society. Then, too, we hope to have reports on the work being done through each of our departments. The big feature of this issue will be the plans for the different summer conferences throughout the Southeast.

If the material is all sent in on time, and if each person contributes who is supposed to do so, the paper will still not be affective unless it reaches every young people's group in the southeast. This issue can again be purchased in extra quantities for two cents a copy, if the names and addresses and money are sent in ahead of time.

The success of this edition of THE CHRISTIAN SUN depends on the young people of the Southeast. We hope we will have your cooperation.

ROCKFORD.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill writes that she has just received a letter from Miss Lucy Eldredge, concerning Rockford and the Southeast's participation in it. As most of you know, the meeting of the National Pilgrim Fellowship is to be held June 15-22 in Rockford, Illinois, at the same time the General Council is being held just across the state line in Beloit, Wisconsin.

We quote from Miss Eldredge's letter as follows:

"Thinking nationally and personally I am hoping very much that the Southeast will be well represented. I know the difficulties too well but please do not give up anything you don't have to. This is going to be a conference of a life time. I honestly believe that. The future of our young people's work in a way depends upon it."

As Miss Eldredge knows, the financial problem is one that will cause many of us to hesitate about going. The cost for room and meals at Rockford will be $2.75 per day. We shall be there seven days. Miss Eldredge says, "I am having encouraging success by suggesting to Sunday schools that they pay $5.00 for honor of being represented. One one-room Sunday school in Indiana voted $10.00 toward the expenses of one girl. I think this is going to increase the expectancy for results from the conference."

We hope that our leaders in the Southeast are planning to be "among those present" in Rockford, in June.

SEND HELP.

As chairman of the Committee on Memoirs, I am asking any minister, layman, and particularly the secretaries of the various conferences of the Convention to send me information and date concerning the death of any minister or official of the conferences or Convention that may have occurred during the past biennium.

Please send this information at once, that the report may be ready in due time.

CROWN HIM OR CRUCIFY HIM?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR APRIL 10, 1938.

SCRIPTURE: Matt. 21: 1-11; 27: 11-23.

Daily Readings—

Monday—Crucify Him by Crucifying His Members—Acts 9: 1-5.

Tuesday—Crown Him by Following Him—I Peter 2: 21-25.

Wednesday—Crucify Him by Dishonoring Him—Heb. 6: 1-6.

Thursday—Crown Him by Accepting Him—Rev. 3: 20-22.

Friday—Crown Him by Obeying His Words—John 14: 23, 24.

Saturday—Crown Him by Loving Him—John 12: 1-11.

This meeting should demonstrate the fact that the way of Christ is the way of the Cross. If Christ's teachings have force and power in our lives, it will require obedient lives who are willing to endure hardships and persecutions for Christ's sake. Jesus said: "Except ye deny yourselves, take up the Cross and follow me, ye cannot be my disciples." Just as those of Jesus' day had an opportunity of crowning Christ as Lord of their life or of crucifying Him, we have the same privilege.

For Thought and Discussion—

1. How do we crucify Christ today? Is the war in Spain and China crucifying Christ?

2. When men and women sell their bodies for lust, is Christ being crucified afresh?

3. Do we shout hosannas of praise on Sunday and then crucify Christ in our business, school, and social life on Monday?

4. What steps are necessary today to make the way of Christ effective.

5. What so-called decent and moral practices might be disturbed today by a close application of Jesus' teachings?

6. Would Jesus be pleased with what He saw in your own life, in your home, in your community?

Recently Christian Endeavor had a slogan, "We Chose Christ!" What does it mean to apply this slogan to our daily lives?

We can always set over this world a huge cross, and on it God still hangs and calls to all brave men and women to share His sorrow and help save the world.

Suggested Hymns—

"Crown Him With Many Crowns."

"All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name."

"The Old Rugged Cross."

SERVING OTHER RACES.

LESSON I—APRIL 3, 1938.

GOLDEN TEXT: God is no respecter of persons.—Acts 10: 34.

SCRIPTURE LESSON: Mark 7: 24-37.

Modern transportation, and modern science have made the world a neighborhood. The followers of Jesus must make it a brotherhood. Unless people can learn to get along with, and serve the people of other races, there is not much hope for our world. The modern world is too small, there are too many points of friction if ill-will and suspicion and race superiority and jealousy prevail. The Church of Christ must preach and practice the spirit of brotherhood. It must assert the fact that all races are simply members of one great human family with different gifts and capacities. It must make affective the principle of service, the strong bearing the burdens of the weak, the so-called superior peoples serving the so-called inferior peoples. The lesson for today shows how the Master stepped across the artificial barriers of race and color and creed and served people of another race. He has given us an example that we should do even as he has done.

Getting Away From the Crowd.

"And he arose from thence and went away into the borders of Tyre and Sidon." It may have been as a matter of prudence in avoiding his enemies—Jesus never ran away from his duty—but he did exercise "common sense" in all things. It is quite likely, however, that it was a matter of getting away from the crowd, a matter of renewing his inner life by silence and solitude, a matter of "taking time to be holy." The world is too much with us. We need to get away from things and people occasionally. When one is so busy that he cannot find time for meditation and solitude, he is too busy. Modern Christianity may have too many Marthas and not enough Marys.

And He Could Not Be Hid.

"And he entered into a house, and would have no man know it; but he could not be hid." It was impossible to keep Jesus under cover. There was a radiance about his goodness, a spirit about his personality, that made it impossible for him to be hid. He just could not be shut up in seclusion; his spirit and his goodness manifested themselves. It is just so today. If Christ is in situation he cannot be hid. If there is no evidence of him we do not have his spirit. In a truly Christian life Christ just cannot be hid. On the other hand if one has the spirit of Christ he does not have to give it studied expression. If one has the spirit of Christ he will express it. And other folks will know that one has the spirit of Christ.

A Persistent Plea.

In this "foreign land" there was a mother who had a little daughter afflicted with an unclean spirit. In some way she heard about Jesus. Breaking over the barriers of custom and race and pride she came directly to Jesus and besought him to heal her little girl. She did not get much encouragement at first. Indeed, it seems as if the Master was a little brusque—He told her it was not fitting to take the children's bread and give it to the dogs. (If we understood the words and could have heard the tone of Jesus' voice, perhaps these words would not sound so brusque.) But this woman had faith and persistence. She would not take no for an answer. With ready wit and word she said that even if she could not get the bread itself, she would be thankful even for the crumbs that dropped from the table. Putting it in another way, small favors were thankfully received. It was a magnificent thing indeed. It struck a responsive chord in the Master's heart. "For this saying, go thy way; the demon is gone out of thy daughter." As always, the Master would not turn away from his needy children. As always, there was healing in his touch. As always, sincere faith and persistence won the victory. When folks come to him in humility, in sincerity, in earnestness, in gratitude for favors already received, he does not turn them away empty-handed. He takes even simple-minded faith, sometimes even superstitious faith, and honors it because it is sincere and sustained.

There are many modern mothers who have daughters possessed by evil spirits. It may well be that if these mothers had more faith and more concern about their daughters, they could do more about the situation.

Healing One Deaf and Dumb.

"And they bring unto him one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech." The man was a Gentile, but that made no difference to Jesus. Back of all superficial and artificial barriers Jesus always saw the man or woman, the human being, the individual person. In his thinking, there was no basic difference between Jew and Gentile, bond and free. He was responsive to human need wherever he found it.

Jesus used aids to faith on occasion. In this instance he took the man aside from the multitude—some of Jesus' best work is done in a private, not in a public way—touched the man's ears with his fingers, and also spat and touched the man's tongue with his finger. There was no magical power in the spittle. But it was an aid to faith to the man himself. Indeed, it was only thus that in this instance the man could know what Jesus was about to do.

But there was healing in his touch. His ears were opened, his tongue was loosed. He heard and he spoke. Powers long unused were suddenly quickened and released. It was a miracle that has been repeated through the centuries. At Christ's touch, unused powers have been quickened into action and into life. He releases from bonds and helps to develop capacities.

"And looking up to heaven" he would have the man know that those forces from above were operative in his life. The power that heals and gives life is more than human, it is heavenly.

Doing All Things Well.

"He hath done all things well." Jesus was not only a Master Teacher; he was the Master-Workman. He never does things in a half-way or a half-hearted manner. He never makes a blunder. He never disappoints. He does all things well.

RESOLUTION PASSED BY NORTH CAROLINA EDUCATION ASSOCIATION.

ASSEMBLED IN RALEIGH, N. C.,
MARCH 17-19, 1938.

WHEREAS, it has come to our attention that a definite effort, supported by a very large appropriation of money, is being made to introduce Junior Units of the R. O. T. C. into the public schools of North Carolina and other states, we hereby go on record as follows:

1. Regardless of the arguments that many believe to be valid for R. O. T. C. units on an elective basis for students of college age or regardless of the arguments for C. M. T. C. summer encampments, we depreciate any attempt to subsidize the militarization of boys too young to be drafted for military service.

2. We believe the effect of offering free uniforms to boys in high schools, and the social pressure of the boys who enroll and even of girls of high school age upon their fellow students will introduce unwholesome social ele-

JUST ANOTHER ROOM.

"I go to prepare a place for you . . . And if I go . . . I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also."—Jno. 14: 2, 3.

No, not cold beneath the grasses,
Not close-welled within the tomb;
Rather, in our Father's mansion,
Living in another room.

Nearer than my son, whom fortune
Beckons where the strange lands loom;
Just behind the hanging curtain,
Serving in another room.

Shall I doubt my Father's mercy,
Shall I think of death as doom,
Or the stepping o'er the threshold
To a bigger, brighter room?

Shall I blame my Father's wisdom?
Shall I sit enswathed in gloom,
When I know my loves are happy—
Waiting in another room.

—Robert Freeman.

LEARNING TO LIVE IN TWO WORLD'S.

"Godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."—I Tim. 4: 8.

At a funeral the other day the preacher said that life consists of four large rooms: childhood, youth, middle age, and old age. Each of these rooms has its characteristics and blessings, and each has its own contribution to the other life. Each of these compartments of life has a door which opens into that other life. Until this door is opened, from one to another we pass, until in His wisdom and love God opens the door and we pass through it into a larger and perfectly beautiful world. This is eternity. If we have lived beautifully in these rooms, it will be heaven.

Prayer—Our Father, we pray for the indwelling of Christ in our lives in this life that now is that the holy earth love will not cease when we join the angels of God. Amen.

WHITHER BOUND?

"He that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous . . . Whosoever doeth not righteousness is not for God."—I Jno. 3: 7-10.

Oliver Wendell Holmes said, "The great thing in this world is not so much where we stand as in what direction we are moving."

It is our duty to check our course, and keep the rudder true to the right course. Before us is a future all unknown, a path untried, a course to be charted, and with us is our best friend, fully competent, well known and loved—Jesus Christ—Who is ready to pilot us right. Trust Him.

Prayer—Dear Lord, Thou art our refuge and strength—Thou art our fortress. Thou art our God. Jesus is our Christ and Saviour. In Him we would live and trust this day. Amen.

FRUITBEARING CHRISTIANS.

"And ye shall bear witness because ye have been with me."—Jno. 15: 27.

When one really meets Christ and knows Him in his soul, he is relieved of distress, he is changed in purposes of heart, and he is certain of a right direction. He is known as a Christian because of these things. Christ is a constant companion, a boon to Christian living, instructing him and giving him direction. Then Christ says "Bring forth fruit. Be a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. Go preach the doctrine of what you have received, and lo, I am with you."

Prayer—Our Father help us to live today so that at the end Thou wilt say, "Well done." Amen.

THE FUNCTION OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

"Ye shall receive power after the Holy Spirit is come upon you: . . ."—Acts 1: 8.

If we believe in Jesus, we must believe in the Holy Spirit. It is the same thing as knowing the person and the power of that personality. The cross without the Holy Spirit is but a martyr's stake, but with the Holy Spirit it becomes the world's highest expression of love and we are inspired by it. The Holy Spirit convicts us of sin, teaches us His way, guides us right, comforts the sorrowing and helps the struggling, by inspiring hope, courage and strength.

Prayer—Our Father, impart light to our souls, and set our minds aglow with Thy Holy Spirit. Baptize us with wisdom and power from above. Amen.

LIFE'S PARADOX.

"For whosoever hath, to him shall be given; and whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he seemeth to have."—Luke 18: 18.

Life's great spiritual fact is that we keep things of the spirit only by giving them away. It is the same thing as saying, "He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it"; "He who tries to save his life shall lose it." Self-renunciation is the way of usefulness and of the esteem of others. It is the way of truth and love, yea, it is the way of a flower—they are possessed only as they are shared. Christ teaches us that life itself is the greatest gift and is worth most when it is given.

Prayer—Teach us, O Lord, the rare blessing of giving ourselves to Thy service and that of our fellowman. Amen.

LIFE OR DEATH—EVERYMAN'S CHOICE.

"To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace."—Rom. 8: 6.

Our bodies are very important to us, but if we think only of them, we become wedded to them, and we die. The best physical existence is not BROKEN FOR YOU.

I Cor. 11: 24.

(A Communion Meditation.)

By REV. VICTOR B. CHICOINE,
Winter Park, Florida.

To be broken for something real. That was what Christ was trying to teach men and women. He saw people everywhere being broken for such useless things as wealth, social position, and political preference. There is nothing wrong in being broken if it is for something real. But to be broken for something useless that is ironical to the nth degree.

And yet, with all the history and experience there is back of mankind, this "breaking" still goes on. I recall back in college days visiting a great institutional building and in it were fourteen hundred broken down men and women. They were the poorest of the poor, not ill in body, but they were broken. Life had been too much for them. They had reached a time when apparently they could make neither a living nor a life, and so they had been gathered from the desolate tenement districts, the back alleys, the gutters, to this great building where they were fed and clothed and housed. I tell you it was a terrible sight, these broken people.

And again in this generation, it is being repeated once more. The bill for narcotics, gambling, drink, is mounting every day—and people are being broken every day by any one or all three of these evils. Hospital authorities are telling us that the legitimate patients are being crowded out because of the men and the women who are the addicts. Keely cures that once went nearly out of existence during Prohibition are being re-established from coast to coast to cure the drinkers who are breaking! And young people, especially our young women, cold statistics tell us, are being broken more than the young men! They are being broken—but for what? And there is still that other revolting and also searing thought that is borne in upon the youth of twenty years ago. They went by the millions, to be broken, gladly broken that the scourage of war might be done away with, but they know now that they were broken for a lie!

Our Lord was willing to be broken, to suffer pain and anguish for the folk whom He loved; and also because He believed that in so doing He was carrying out the will of God. It would give Him the everlasting fellowship both with His fellowman and with His Father for which he hungered so greatly!

And if any one of us is broken for the same reasons as was our Lord we, too, will have everlasting fellowship with Him and God. Let no one worry over what will happen if he or she is broken by the world in God's service. For if there is one abiding law in the Universe it is that the men and women who are completely surrendered to God are eternally undergirded.

It might not have been clear to those who went through those days with Christ that that law was working. But it was. For who was it that was not undergirded; and who was the broken one, the pitifully broken one, our Lord bruised, bowed with fatigue, bleeding, or the immaculate Pilate upon his dais? Who was the broken one, the pitifully broken one, Jesus who hung upon the cross, or the High Priest who stood straight and erect and watched the event?

But there is this deeper thought that we so often miss. That body, and heart, which was broken on the road to Calvary, and on Calvary, for us, was not only broken because of love for us, and to work out the will of God—but because of our need! It is so very easy to turn our thoughts toward the blatant sinner, the people in the jails of the land, and say: "Ah, yes, His body was broken for you." It is so very easy to do that to forget that Christ meant also the elite of Jerusalem, ones in high places, the well fed and the well clothed, even the ones who served their turn in the Holy of Holies of the Temple! It was that very thought—that the One beside him was being broken because of his need—that in turn broke the heart of the hardened sinner on one of the other crosses. That thought saved him, and it will save us!

And will you not allow these symbols that are before us, this bread, and this wine, bring you the message that men and women have poured out their lives and have been broken for us! It may be that some of the very food which we ate today was brought to us at the cost of a life. It may well be that the coffee or tea that we drank yesterday we had because of cheap, underpaid, broken laborers. And that bread down there might have found its way to this communion table after some farmer was half-paid for his work and some man or woman broken by the labor.

Those bits of bread down there can, this morning, become for each one of us one of the most provocative symbols for nobler living in all the world! Or can they be nothing more than a mixture of flour, yeast, salt, and some other common ingredients. Boreham, the Australian essayist, tells us the following:

"We are always a little slow to see the real immensity of things . . . There stands at Kettering, in England, the house in which that famous meeting was held from which William Carey fared forth to India. That meeting altered the face of the world. The other day a traveller passed the historic meeting place, and noticed, without surprise, that it bore an inscription: 'I crossed the road,' he says, 'to read what I had expected would prove to be a record of one of the most epoch-making events in modern history. Imagine my amazement when I discovered that the inscription set forth the fact that near that spot a fox was killed by the hounds of the Pytchley hunt! Local sportsmen evidently regard that as the event of supreme interest!'"

And in the same fashion one can look upon Jesus Christ and the breaking of His body as a mere passing incident not worth the recording. One can consider Him just a poor fellow caught in the toils of the Roman government and Jewish fanaticism by His own untempered zeal, and look upon some local incident as of far more importance. But see in Him—Son of Man, Son of God—living, dying for eternal truths, not for Himself, but for you and me, and these words "broken for you" have deep, deep significance.

But is that all? Did our Lord only mean that the disciples were to meet again and again in a simple service merely to remember? Did He not mean that they, too, were to go out from their memorial meals deeply convicted in spirit as to the needs of the world, and if need be, yield themselves to be broken for the same apparently forlorn causes to which He had given Himself? Well, each one of you settle that problem for himself or herself. But I do add this last word. There is so much out there in the world to be broken for today that is useful! And what will you do about it?

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge."—Prov. 1: 7.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The writer is very much interested in seeing THE CHRISTIAN SUN visit three thousand homes in the Southern Convention each week. But it is more than one man's job. Rev. F. C. Lester has the job of looking after THE CHRISTIAN SUN and its subscription list; but it is impossible for him to do all the work in getting enough new subscribers to make out the three thousand subscribers without a good deal of help. When you have plenty of help a big job can be easily done. A few days ago we planted Irish potatoes. Quite a little job when you plant for 100 children to eat through the winter. It would have been a big job for one or two. But Mr. Wagoner, my assistant, had a boy to run off rows, another to put in the fertilizer, another with another plough to mix it with the soil. Several boys to cut the potatoes, a number of them to drop them and others followed with ploughs and covered them. A big job made easy.

Getting enough new subscribers to make out the three thousand can be made an easy job and quickly done. How? If every subscriber now taking THE CHRISTIAN SUN would get one new subscriber and mail it in, the job would be finished and THE CHRISTIAN SUN would be self supporting. (The writer has already mailed his new subscriber in. We expect to get more—Work till the job is finished is our motto.

Let us all help our editor do the job and be able to rejoice with him.

Three thousand subscribers for THE CHRISTIAN SUN—How many will you send in?

4. We call attention to the fact that if full time military instructors are offered at federal expense to our high schools, the temptation will be too great for many administrative units to resist, unless we think soberly upon the moral and social implications of permitting the introduction of this militaristic propaganda.

In Memoriam

NORFLEET.

Linwood Jones Norfleet was born March 5, 1875, and died December 14, 1937. Funeral services were conducted by his pastor, Rev. Carl R. Key, at the funeral home in Suffolk, Va., and interment was made in the Cedar Hill Cemetery at Suffolk.

DAUGHTREY.

A. P. Daughtrey was born September 1, 1871, and passed to his reward on March 12, 1938. He was a member of the Christian Church at Holland, Va. Funeral services were conducted by his pastor, Rev. Carl R. Key, and the body was laid to rest in the Holland Cemetery.

CHEEK.

Lottie May Cheek was born May 13, 1892, and died at the age of 45 years. She was the daughter of the late B. H. and Callie Cheek. It was the pleasure of her pastor to visit her only once. Although this visit came only a short time before the end of her life one could not help from noticing her buoyant spirit and enthusiasm. To her God seemed vital, real and ever present. She was afflicted most of her life but despite her handicap she put most of us who are the pictures of health to shame.

She is survived by the following sisters and brothers: Mrs. C. H. Routh, Asheboro; Mrs. B. E. Presnell, Asheboro; Mrs. Jennie Hicks, Thomasville; Mrs. R. G. Boggs, Franklinville; J. A. Cheek, Asheboro; William Cheek, Franklinville.

Interment in Pleasant Cross Christian Church cemetery followed funeral conducted by the pastor assisted by Revs. Hauss and Lee, of Franklinville and Ramseur.

Art In the Church—Prayer

By AUBREY C. TODD.

The day of making the minister the focus of attention is passing. The pulpit desk is being moved aside and the altar made the center of attention. More attention is being given to the worship of the people than is being given to sermon-making, and the minister had rather hear, "That was a good service," than "That was a good sermon."

Prayer is the crucial point of the worship service. Therefore, this article, which is given with the hope that it may help someone with the big problem of praying.

Prayer may roughly be divided into two types, Aesthetic and Egoistic prayers. In the aesthetic type the prayers assume the form of praise, adoration, thanksgiving and communion. The prayers of the Jews are all of this type, as are most of those used in the Eastern Orthodox and the Roman Catholic Churches. The egoistic or phophetic type of prayer is one of petition or intercession. It is a type that has long been in use by Protestant ministers, but is gradually giving way to the aesthetic type. The prophetic type of prayer has caused the problem of "unanswered prayer" in our Protestant churches, whereas the Jew who prays, "I will praise thee, O Lord, among the people; and I will sing praises unto thee among the nations. For thy mercy is great above the heavens: and thy truth reacheth unto the clouds," has already found the answer to his prayer in the joy of his heart.

The prayers commonly used in the Protestant churches are known as the Invocation, Collect, Pastoral Prayer, and Benediction. Each has a distinct pattern and should require as serious contemplation and organization as is given to the sermon.

The Invocation is an act of attention. An example is the invocation of Ash-Wednesday: "Thou hast mercy upon all, O Lord, and hatest none of the things Thou hast made, overlooking the sins of men for the sake of repentance, and sparing them because Thou art the Lord our God. Have mercy on me, O God, have mercy on me; for in Thee doth my soul trust."

The Collect is a short prayer of a single sentence. It is necessary that the Collect contain an address to God, an attribute, a confession, and effect or clause of consequence. An ancient collect is the following: "O God, who hast folded back the mantle of the night to clothe us in the golden glory of the day; chase from our hearts all gloomy thoughts, and make us glad with the brightness of hope, that we may effectively aspire to unwon virtues, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

The Benediction, in most of our Protestant churches, follow a set pattern, and is usually better organized than any of the other prayers. This is very good, but the particular one beginning, "May the saving grace of our Lord Jesus Christ . . ." has been much over-worked. There are scores of other traditional benedictions which should be used.

The Pastoral Prayer, or the long prayer, of our Protestant churches, corresponds to the Roman Canon of the Mass, and rightly belongs after the sermon. A few warnings concerning this prayer would not be out of place. Do not put too much material in this prayer. The old-time minister cluttered this prayer full of everything from blessings on the President, to petitions for healing grace for Sister Jones. Our finite minds can't take but so much; after that they wander to other realms. If the people don't get your sermon when you preach it, don't repeat it in your prayer. Be sure that this prayer, as well as your others, is impersonal. Do not ask for things: it is better to ask for spiritual graces.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES

Keep in mind the Southern Convention. It meets in Portsmouth, Va., April 26th-29th.

One postage stamp every four days, or one gallon of gas every two weeks is the average American gift to the church. Twenty million American women spend $1,500,000 a day for beauty.

A note from "Victoria of the Hills" (Victoria Edwards) says that she has started to improve slowly. She is able to take a little food and water. She finishes the card by saying: "It is spring up here."

From Lake Worth, Fla., comes a renewal from Mrs. H. A. Culver who says that she doesn't want to miss a single issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. They are building Sunday school rooms for their church. It is delightful to get news like this.

Rural Life Sunday comes on May 22nd. Those interested may get some fine material by writing to the Town and Country Department of the Church Extension Division of the Board Missions of Congregational and Christian Churches, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

On last Sunday, Rosemont Christian Church, Norfolk, Va., closed a two weeks' revival. Rev. George Terrell, pastor of the Trinity Baptist Church, Norfolk, was the preacher. There were eleven additions to the church. Attendance was good and much interest manifested.

Mr. E. L. Jones, a member of our Durham Church, says that his church will have a Home-Coming Day on April 17th, which is Easter Sunday. He invites all former members and friends to come for the day and requests that all who can bring flowers. Mr. Jones says those who do not attend the Sunday evening services are missing a real treat.

Mr. B. H. Samuels, of Harrisonburg, Va., sent his renewal recently with this comment: "It is for various reasons that I like to send this check—first, I like to keep up the record for Antioch; second, I like to help your subscription list; third, many times I see an article in THE CHRISTIAN SUN that is worth the entire year's subscription." Thank you, Brother Samuels.

PALMYRA.

This church, which has experienced some difficult situations, is on the move now. Here is a group of people who desire very much to do things in a big way, but have only recently adopted a plan of procedure. Now, at this writing, the Sunday school has been reorganized, the Ladies Aid Society has bought fence and posts to improve the yard; they have secured lights for the building; they have obtained new song books, and a movement is on to buy a piano to take the place of the old organ. The future for Palmyra looks encouraging. There is no doubt but what they mean business.

JOPPA.

This small group of people, about twenty-nine on the church roll, have been sorely pressed to keep the Sunday school and church alive. In the late revival at this church several new members were received, some of whom have taken a very active part in the religious programs. We have some fine people there who believe that Jesus Christ came to seek and to save the lost and who are willing to work for His Church. Because of the location and the moving away of some of its best workers, the future for Joppa is a bit doubtful; however, work should continue as long as possible. Here is an opportunity to preach Jesus Christ and Him crucified.

DRY RUN.

It has been impossible to get the people out to a morning preaching service here. The Sunday school, which is only thirty-two in number, usually has about twenty-five to twenty-seven present every Sunday. They are a faithful group; they are loyal to their obligations and duties toward the church. At the evening services the house is about half full. The young people, made up from all the denominations represented in the community, are eager to move forward. But for the lack of leadership among the group, they are slow to take advantage of the opportunities they have. It would be a great opportunity for a lay leader, old or young, to take them in hand. This plan will be tried soon. There is a great future for Dry Run.

CONCORD.

This good group of people is not slow to realize their opportunities. They have a movement on now to secure a piano for the church and new hymn books. They have a very active Ladies' Aid Society and are doing things for the church and community.

The attendance is increasing, forty-seven being the average for all services during the winter months. Now we expect the attendance to increase to seventy, this being the average for its membership. We will start our revival services here March 27th. Many new faces are seen at every service, and many from New Market, Va., go over on the second Sunday morning. Here is to be new life, new opportunities, new ideals. The budget was made up and raised without any trouble for the entire year. The future for Concord is pleasant to think about.

BEULAH.

Once we thought there was little hope here for any real advancement. Now we are encouraged. Miss Irene Hensley has been called into service at Beulah. She is the Key-worker of the young people's society of Mt. Olivet (R). At our request she has given her time there for quite a while. The Sunday school, which used to be closed for the winter months, is an all-year affair now. New officers and new faces at Beulah has proven again Jesus' words: "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." Due to local circumstances we have never had a revival at Beulah. However, this year we hope to get the people out at these services and we feel there is going to be much to do at Beulah. The future is bright, and the people are in the right mind.

ST. PETER'S.

Many here did not want an afternoon service. By taking a morning from Mt. Olivet (R), we gave this to St. Peters. So far we have only had two meetings, but the attendance there has justified the change. We have no Sunday school at St. Peters. However, our people attend the Sunday school of the Brethren Church, many of them. We have already secured a piano for the church. As soon as this is taken care of, we hope to have new hymn books. Our Ladies' Aid Society has been doing some nice work. There is much to be done here. And there is abundant opportunities for Christian workers to be witnesses for Him. Pray for more Christian workers at St. Peters.

MT. OLIVET (R).

Last, but by no means least, we have reason to be glad, to rejoice. In our recent bulletin we emphasized the high rate of attendance at this point. We have one hundred and thirty-two on roll here with an average attendance of one hundred and eighteen for the last four weeks. The entire Sunday school has taken on new life.

The church has been revived throughout. The good people of Mt. Olivet (R) are awake to the possibilities of their church and community. And they are doing something about it. Here is a real future. It would not surprise me if, in the future, this group demands a full-time pastor. It can be done. Their giving has contributed in a large measure to their success. God will bless all who give.

AN INSTALLATION SERVICE.

An Installation Service was held at Holy Neck Christian Church for the Rev. Arnold Slater, pastor, Sunday, March 27, 1938, at 3:00 P. M. The Rev. R. L. House, president of the Eastern Virginia Conference, presided. The following program was observed: Prelude, Mrs. J. O. Davidson, pianist; Call to Worship and Invocation, Rev. R. L. House; Doxology; Scripture Reading, Rev. H. E. Crutchfield; prayer for the Church and Ministry, Rev. R. L. House; Hymn, "O Master Let Me Walk With Thee"; Prayer of Installation, Dr. Elwood W. Jones; Welcome from the Community: Somerton Friends Church, by Mr. J. L. Hare; Holland Baptist Church, by Rev. W. H. Corbitt; Holland Christian Church, by Rev. Carl R. Key; Hymn, "The Church's One Foundation"; Charge to the Pastor, Dr. John G. Truitt; Charge to the People, Dr. N. G. Newman; Solo, "My Task," Mr. W. W. Darden; Sermon, Dr. M. S. Poulson; Hymn, "Forward Through the Ages"; Benediction, Rev. Arnold Slater.

A large congregation from the church and the community were in attendance and the program was well rendered and received. In charging the pastor, Dr. Truitt advised him to "Be a Christian Gentleman," to "Be a Shepherd," and to "Be a Preacher." In charging the people, Dr. Newman asked them to "Make the Pastor's Preaching Effectual," to "Allow the Truth to Take Root," to "Be Helpful in Their Fault-Finding," and to "Make Their Preacher Proud of Them." In his sermon Dr. Poulson used as a text, James 1: 27—"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." In a forceful and telling manner he urged both pastor and people to forget not the mission of the church which is to "make bad people good and good people better," to weigh carefully the "assets and liabilities," to "dare to preach convictions" and to "wait for their souls to catch up with them."

CARL R. KEY.

VIRGINIA VALLEY CONFERENCE.

The Virginia Valley Central Congregational-Christian Conference met at Bethlehem Christian Church at Tenth Legion Thursday, March 24th, in a one-day session.

The worship services and the addresses were centered around the theme "Service." The morning worship was conducted by Dr. M. L. Weekley, pastor of the entertaining church, and the afternoon worship by Rev. R. A. Whitten, of the Winchester church.

The address of welcome was given by Miss Ella Pickering and was responded to by Miss Helen Showalter. Mr. W. B. Burke of Seven Fountains, gave a splendid address on the subject, "The Price of Discipleship." Mrs. R. C. Myers discussed the "Service of the Church to the Community." In her address, Mrs. Myers commended co-operation between the churches of different denominations in a community, both by exchange of young people's programs and by supporting the work of religious education in the schools.

The subject, "A Century of Progress," was discussed by Mrs. B. F. Frank and J. C. Bradford. This conference was organized and the first session was held at Antioch, near Harrisonburg, November 8, 1838, with Elder W. G. Proctor, chairman, and Elder Christy Sine, secretary. The Centennial Session will be held at Antioch on August 10th and 11th, this summer.

An address by R. C. Rothgeb, of Luray, using as his subject, "Service to the Church and Conference," followed. Mr. Rothgeb said churches have substituted lawn parties, suppers, etc., for prayer meetings. He recommended religious papers in the home instead of magazines of questionable nature with their glaring advertisements of cigarettes and liquor. He asked, "Are we satisfied with the service we are rendering as a church, as a conference?"

"Rewards of Service" were most interestingly discussed by Mrs. C. W. McCoy and Miss Irene Hensley.

The committee on grouping the churches into pastorates made its report.

Delegates were elected to attend the Southern Christian Convention at Portsmouth, Va., April 26-29, as follows: Ministers—M. L. Weekley, R. L. Williamson, W. J. Andes, R. A. Whitten, R. D. Coulter and W. B. Fuller. Laymen—E. A. Hillyard, W. B. Burke, R. O. Rothgeb, Elphis Morris, R. R. Hosaflook, and Mrs. K. H. Sale.—The Harrisonburg Daily-Recorder.

GEORGIA NOTES.

March 1-3 were great days for the Georgia Congregational-Christian ministers and their wives. We met for our annual convocation at LaGrange, where full sessions were held at the Southeast Y. M. C. A. With the exception of two ministers, we had every church in the state represented. The fellowship was fine, and the program was most profitable. Beginning with a fellowship supper on Tuesday night, March 1st, at which Rev. Alan T. Jones, Demorest, served as toastmaster, till the final session at noon, Thursday, there was real earnestness in consideration of the church and the work of the ministry.

We were privileged to have as our special guest Dr. Charles Emerson Burton, New York City, the honored and beloved Secretary of the General Council of the Congregational-Christian Churches. Dr. Burton's address at the fellowship supper on "The Minister's Spiritual Life" will long be remembered, and the two conferences with Dr. Burton on "The Effective Church" were most stimulating and helpful. In addition to Dr. Burton, we had two other visitors to share in the program: Dr. James R. Clinton, who discussed "Evangelism—Its Message and Methods" and who led the morning devotional services. The Communion Service on Wednesday morning was a high spiritual experience and was made so greatly by Dr. Clinton's fine interpretations; Miss Marguerite Davison, Thorsby, Ala., who spoke on the "Woman's Part in the Work of the Southeast." The conferences on the Georgia work were led by Dr. Edwin C. Gillette, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, and the Superintendent of the Georgia Conference. Rev. R. Wiley Scott, pastor of Central Church, served as Convener of the convocation, doing a good job.

One beautiful human touch was injected into the meeting on Wednesday morning when little Mary Knight, infant daughter of Rev. and Mrs. John Henry Knight, host pastor of LaGrange, was christened by Dr. Clinton.

Two new pastors were welcomed this year: Rev. N. A. Long, "Macedonia Parish," Braselton; and Rev. S. M. Penn, "Richland-Doerum Parish," Richland.

Invitations for next year's session were received from the United Church, LaGrange, and from the Central Church, Atlanta. Rev. S. M. Penn was elected Convener for the 1939 session, who with the State Moderator, Rev. D. W. Shepherd and Conference Superintendent, will constitute the program committee.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

IF I WERE A CHINAMAN.

If I were a Chinaman in China today, I would want to be Christian. The leaders of China are Christian. They have learned the lessons of sacrifice at the altar of Jesus. They are desperately defending their country at the cost of life. They have looked to the rest of the world for help and have found none. The sacrifice must be their own. They have expected more of Christian countries than they have received. But if I were a Chinaman in China today, I would want to be a Christian, for only the Christians know the grace of forgiveness.

If I were a Chinaman in China today I would probably be in the army. Chinamen do not like to fight; neither do I. With an ancient and honorable history they are notably peaceable. They like to be left alone to work out their own destiny other than as friends may give them guidance. Today they face the necessity of submitting to foreign rule or of fighting for their homes, families and freedom. Their property is being taken from them and destroyed. They are driven from their homes. Their women are raped and their children killed. Apparently, there is nothing for China to do but fight for her life, and if I were a Chinaman in China today, I would probably be in the army although my own soul revolts against war just like the soul of a good Chinaman and a good Christian does.

If I were a Chinaman in China today, I would carry disappointment in my heart but would seek to do it bravely. China is young among the nations that cooperate. A wall has separated her from the outside world through many centuries. The stone wall means nothing today. China became a member of the League of Nations which appeared to be a group of friendly nations allied for mutual help, understanding and friendship. In the hour of her distress, when she is attacked by one of the League members, no other League member comes to her aid. China must be disappointed in the League of Nations. Christianity has gone to China and many have accepted it as the way of life and have given allegiance to its leader as the Prince of Peace. Today the Prince of Peace appears to be the Courageous Christ who like Jesus in the temple, defends that which is right. Most of the mission churches have been blown to pieces by the guns and bombs of the Japanese. China has appealed to the Christian world for help, and up to the present the Christian world has done but little to rebuild the churches, to feed the hungry and to care for the dying. If I were a Chinaman in China today, I would carry disappointment in my heart, but I would be assured that the Courageous Christ would care for His own.

OUR EASTER OFFERING.

For several years the Christian churches in the Southern Convention have made it a habit to give an offering at Easter for missions. This year the custom will continue. Congregational churches within the convention area will likely join in with the Christian churches. This offering will be sent to the Mission Board to be divided between home and foreign missionary work. The offering will count on the conference quota and the local church budget.

Easter is a fitting time for an offering that calls for sacrifice. It is then that we remember not only the death of Jesus but the glorious resurrection. Out of Easter springs the Christian hope. Without it there would be no Christianity. At Easter, if ever, it is right to lay on the altar a sacrifice—a gift that calls for self-denial, that is larger than the usual. This offering of sacrifice should be the gift from every man, women and child who loves the Lord Jesus. The amount in the budget matters but little, but the sacrifice of the soul expressed in money means much.

The amount of the offering should be governed by the needs of the world and the individual's ability to contribute. There can be no question as to the needs of the world. If every nation would instantly scrap its war program and put into the missionary cause the money being spent for wars, there would not be enough to do the work of the Kingdom which needs to be done. The ability to contribute is far greater than most people think. It is entirely possible that all of our city churches on Easter Sunday will spend more for flowers than they contribute to world-wide Christianity. One dares not think of the cost of the extra and beautiful clothing which will be paraded on our city streets and gathered in our churches, both city and rural, and compare that total with the meager contribution to our missionary enterprise. It is very important that members of the church of the Lord Jesus consider their Easter contribution to missions carefully and prepare as faithfully as the most fastidious prepare for their Easter clothing. If this can happen, the Mission Board can respond to the call of China and to the call of other countries around the earth in a far larger measure than our boards have ever yet dreamed possible.

GREAT MASTER, TOUCH US.

Great Master, touch us with Thy skillful hands;
Let not the music that is in us die:
Great Sculptor, hew and polish us, nor let,
Hidden and lost, Thy form within us lie.

Spare not the stroke; do with us what Thou wilt;
Let there be naught unfinished, broken, marred;
Complete Thy purpose that we may become Thy perfect image—Thou our God and Lord.

CHINA NEEDS OUR HELP

THE EASTER OFFERING IS NEEDED.

Answering Americans who fear the sending of relief to civilian war sufferers in China will antagonise Japan, Dr. A. L. Warnshuis, American Secretary of the International Missionary Council, in a statement issued recently, says that the Japanese Christians, appalled by the need are raising funds to send a medical unit to one of the war-stricken areas in China to minister to Chinese refugees whose homes and farms have been devastated. Word of this effort of Japanese Christians for Chinese sufferers comes from Dr. William Axling, of Omaha, Nebraska, a Baptist missionary to Japan and the author of several books on that country.

"Japanese Christian women, Dr. Axling states, have undertaken to raise the money needed," said Dr. Warnshuis. "They already have one-third of the amount.

"The unit will consist of a Christian physician and three nurses. It will be sent as soon as its personnel can be chosen. Its area of-work has not yet been fixed.

"A few Americans have expressed the fear that aid for civilian war sufferers in China might antagonize Japan. With Japanese Christians setting the example in relief work this fear is completely set at rest."

Harrowing details of conditions in China, showing the need for immediate relief from an objective and dispassionate observer who could be counted on to "lean backward" in an attempt to be fair to the Japanese, have been received at the office of the Committee on Relief in China of the Foreign Missions Conference and the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, from one of the best known correspondents in the Far East. Because of censorship and conditions in China he requested that his name should not be used. A grim picture of war as it has been waged by the Japanese, not only in Nanking, but in many parts of China as well, is given by a man who set down "in pain and anguish facts which he felt it his duty to record," as follows:

"After my return to Shanghai an exceptionally well-informed Japanese told me that in their present mood the Japanese army would insist upon retaining 80% of their gains. 'Of course,' he added, 'they may modify that attitude after the war has been kept going a few months longer and the army has begun to get tired of it.'

"Much as they would like to see hostilities brought to an end, most foreign observers of my acquaintance feel that China's best policy is to keep on resisting to the utmost of her ability in the hope of wearing down the Japanese to a point where either the Japanese nation will crack up under the strain or will become exhausted that the other powers will be able to step in and more or less dictate terms of peace. No such dictation or suggestion seems possible at present, however, and therefore I fear we must look forward to, at least, six months of hostilities."

Quoting from an eye witness for whom he vouches, the veteran correspondent continues, "More than ten thousand unarmed persons have been killed in cold blood. Most of my trusted friends would put the figure much higher. These were Chinese soldiers who threw down their arms or surrendered after being trapped; and civilians recklessly shot and bayoneted, often without even the pretext that they were soldiers, including not a few women and children.

"Able German colleagues put the cases of rape at 20,000. I should say not less than 8,000 and it might be anywhere above that. On Nanking University property alone, including some staff families and the houses of Americans now occupied by Americans, I have details of more than 100 cases and assurance of some 300.

"You can scarcely imagine the anguish and terror. Girls as low as eleven and women as old as fifty-three have been raped on University property alone. On the Seminary Compound seventeen soldiers raped one woman successively in broad daylight. In fact, about one-third of the cases are in the daytime.

"Practically every building in the city has been robbed repeatedly by soldiers, including the American, British, and German Embassies or Ambassadors' residences, and a high percentage of all foreign property. Vehicles of all sorts, food, clothing, bedding, money, watches, some rugs and pictures, miscellaneous valuables, are the main things sought. This still goes on, especially outside the Zone. There is not a store in Nanking, save the International Committee's rice shop and a military store. Most of the shops, after free-for-all breaking and pilfering, were systematically stripped by gangs of soldiers working with trucks, often under the observed directions of officers, and then burned. We still have several fires a day. Many sections of houses have also been burned deliberately. We have several samples of the chemical strips used by the soldiers for this purpose, and have inspected all phases of the process.

"Most of the refugees were robbed of their money, and, at least, part of their scanty clothing and bedding and food. That was an utterly heartless performance, resulting in despair on every face for the first week or ten days. You can imagine the outlook for work and life in this city with shops and tools gone, no banks or communications as yet, some important blocks of houses burned down, everything else plundered and now open to cold and starving people.

Some 250,000 persons are here, almost all in the Safety Zone and fully 100,000 entirely dependent on the International Committee for food and shelter. Others are scraping along on tiny holdovers of rice and the proceeds of direct or indirect looting. Japanese supply departments are beginning to let out, for monetary and political reasons, a little of the rice confiscated from considerable Chinese Government supplies, though the soldiers burned not small reserves. But what next? When I asked Japanese officials about post and telegraph services, they said, "There is no plan."

A more glorious victory cannot be gained over another than this, that when the injury began on his part, the kindness should begin on ours.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

I have not been able to sit up one minute for the past two weeks. I am comfortable and the Doctors say my general condition is improving. Our present plans are to leave Lakeview Hospital as soon as the Doctors think it is safe to do so and go from Lakeview to Florida Sanitarium, Orlando, Florida, for a period of several weeks.

I have learned what the Psalmist meant when he said: "He maketh me to lie down in green pastures." Man is so busy (preachers included) that he is quite certain that he must be going here and there. A busy man cannot take time "to lie down." God sometimes makes a man lie down, not only for rest, but to get a different perspective of life. When a man is on his feet he spends the most of his time looking down or looking out, but when he lies down, he cannot very easily look down, and it is more normal for him in this position to look up. In a room, the ceilings and light fixtures include nearly all he sees in the upward look, but if he would tear away the ceiling and the roof above him, or lie down on some beautiful lawn, his upward look goes into infinity.

There may be more material values for man's present purposes, in the ground beneath him, or in the fields and forests that surround him, but God only knows what values there are for man, in the starry heavens above him. Man has not yet measured the distance into which his vision peers with the natural eye and the telescope. Man does not yet know the spiritual treasures looked up for him who can take time to lie down and look up.

Lying down on a sick bed has its trials and disappointments, but looking up brings to one's attention green pastures for body, mind, and spirit. Real rest comes by lying down and when neighbors and friends send so many messages of good will and prayers for recovery, beautiful flowers to cheer the sick room, and so many kind deeds to make the burden lighter, the period of lying down becomes a joy and a blessing. Unable to write myself, I have asked my wife to jot down these thoughts for me, hoping that this little message from one who is "lying down" may comfort some others who are passing through a similar experience.

Dr. N. G. Newman is supplying my pulpits, at this time, and I am hoping to be well again in a few months.

CONVENTION PROBLEMS.

Adjustments.

We like to think of our Convention as a household, a family, working together for the advancement of the cause that is ours. In order to do the Kingdom effectively, we have separated ourselves into different groups assigned to different tasks. We call one group missionary, another group education, another group Christian Education, another group Superannuation, another group the Christian Orphanage, and another group the Board of Publications. We take these groups, organize them, instruct them, provide them with a program, and turn them loose to support themselves and the interest they represent. But the conflict arises in the fact that they are all turned loose with their many demands upon the one and same constituency. The one that has the best organization, the most appealing cause, and the best judgment as to how and when to make that appeal, succeeds best and congratulates itself on its wisdom and business acumen and feels that if the other departments had been as wise and efficient as they, that they, too, would have succeeded, when as a matter of fact, it may be that that particular interest got to the constituency first and at the most opportune season. It may simply mean that "the early bird gets the worm," or we may be face to face with the heathen doctrine of the "survival of the fittest." One thing is certain—we do have a constituency that is appealed to constantly and continuously by the various interests of the church—no criticism whatsoever of these different interests who are making their appeals. Circumstances compel them to make their appeals and to make them earnestly. Our present organization and procedure admits of no other course. If our organization is to remain as it is, then we are certainly face to face with the problem of adjustment.

There should be a Christian's agreement among the different interests of the church—an agreement that would be binding. We must first face the fact that it is impossible for our church to go forward in the path of one or two of our interests only. If the church as a whole is to advance, and as a whole it must advance, these different interests of the church must adjust themselves as to programs, budgets, and appeals. No one department has any Christian right to make demands in excess of the proportionate demands of the other departments, regardless of its own personal needs. The church in her program must practice unselfishness, or it ceases to be a Christian organization. Christian organizations do not admit of selfishness.

Suppose we look at our problems like this. We, as a church, are charged with the responsibility of espousing the cause of missions, of advancing the cause of education for children within the churches and adults in the college, of challenging the cause of benevolences to see that the orphans of our church and the broken ministry of our Convention are properly cared for, of providing for publications necessary to keep our constituency informed as to the progress of the church and requirements of the Convention. These and perhaps others are certainly our responsibility. It is our church, and every individual in that church is responsible to the extent of his ability for the intelligent and effective advancement of every interest of that church. We cannot break up our constituency into a multiplicity of groups that are interested in specific things without a universal interest in the whole. The individual on one board should be vitally concerned as to the efficiency and effectiveness of every other board. We are constituent parts of a whole and are responsible for the achievements of the whole church. If we could realize this universal responsibility, the problem of adjustment would be simplified, but so long as we have these different boards without adequate knowledge and apparent sympathy for what each other is doing, we must have a competitive constituency. I do not object to competition so long as the competitors are for the advancement of each other's interest without detriment to any, but I am opposed to a competitive interest that will advance one cause of the church at the cost of other departments.

It is the hope of the writer that in the approaching Convention we may be able to see our common task, to be conscious of the responsibilities of the church, and realize once and for all that every individual member is responsible for the advancement of the whole church of which he is a part.

DUKE UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF RELIGION.

By action of the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, taken at Burlington, 1936, Duke University School of Religion is now the Convention's "official center" for theological education. Reasons given for this choice were as follows:

"The bulk of the Church east of the Mississippi lies in Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, and Virginia. The largest number of young men entering the ministry come out of this territory. To locate our center of higher educational service at the edge of this region rather than at its center, is contrary to the strategy of any other section of Congregational and Christian Churches. Duke University, by action of the Board of Trustees, offers, through its School of Religion, equal educational opportunities to prospective ministers of all denominations. Its faculty is drawn from the leading denominations of the nation, and increasingly young men of all communions seek training here. Duke University's resources, both financial and cultural, warrant your Committee in feeling that this institution has a future unsurpassed by any other university of the South. Already its student-body, including all fields of learning, is drawn in about equal proportions from all parts of the United States, thus providing a student fellowship that tends to modify provincialism of every section in terms of a constructive outlook. In this atmosphere our young ministerial students will be stimulated to genuinely creative thinking, and be thereby better equipped for Christian leadership."

Although only eleven years old, the School of Religion has become widely recognized. Its student-body for the year 1935-36 came from forty-seven colleges and universities, seventeen states, and nine denominations. Several successful young pastors of our Church have already taken work at Duke.

In addition to work for the degree of Bachelor of Divinity, the University offers graduate courses in religion, leading to the degrees of Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy.

Duke University is within easy distance of a large number of churches, thus making it possible for students to hold pastorates and earn their way through the School of Religion. It also gives the advantage of combining study with actual pastoral experience.

In addition to the activities of the regular school year, Duke provides short-term summer institutes and conferences, including the North Carolina Pastors' School, The Rural Church Institute, and The Institute of International Relations. In these a group of Congregational and Christian ministers have regularly enrolled.

The Southern Convention considers itself exceptionally fortunate in having Duke University School of Religion situated at the center of its church constituency. The Convention feels that no minister need go out untrained under these unusual opportunities for theological education. With the laity becoming better educated, the minister cannot hope to sustain an intelligent following unless he also seeks more adequate preparation. As President of the Convention, I heartily urge young men to take advantage of the splendid resources of Duke University.

STANLEY C. HARRELL.

SPRINGTIME IN THE MOUNTAINS.

"Gee, haw Buck, git up Buck!" echoes over the hills, for spring is coming to the mountains. The sun has warmed up the earth, and the plow boy is plowing his mountain field for corn. A mist has floated up from the lowlands and elings to the mountain side like a soft white veil. The romance of springtime in the mountains is almost ready to cast a spell over our hills. And then what? Well, the people fall into a dreamy trance, walk among the clouds, and call it wonderful! If a stranger who doesn't know the tricks of the hills happens along the trail and sees a broom stick with a piece of red calico tied around it, he turns Romeo, takes off his hat, makes a deep bow, and tells her then and there that she is the "most wonderful one." Of course, with the mountain fog in his eyes and Rhododendrons all around him he thinks he is telling her the truth. However, he is always glad when the fog lifts and he finds his lady fair is only a broomstick. For not many people really want to be tied to these rugged peaks forever. This is the ideal place for writers, artists, lovers, and even married couples who need to make up their quarrels, but it is not just the place for home-makers. There are just a few little things here that hinder, rather than help, in home-making. But since our dear old hills are so great for romance and beauty, we can excuse them for not being an ideal place to live "ever after."

Seriously, people get funny ideas of hills. One visitor was shocked once when I spoke of this being a tough place to live the year 'round. She said, "Oh, I thought by your letters you loved the hills." People don't think deeply. It's like this. If you had a lovely wife and she took some dangerous disease, you would either have to send her to some place to get well, or you would take the disease—but you would love her just the same. If you stayed with her, you'd have to pay the price by giving up health, but if you stay or go, you will still love the wife. Well, I still love the hills, but they are hard to live in. And I'll admit that many times it has cost me a lot just to stay here, more than it will ever be worth perhaps, but I don't blame the hills. When the north wind saws around a mountain cabin and the chimney smokes, I had much rather admire hills from a distance. But this is my lot, and the hills can't help it. Surely, I love hills. I love hills when they are pure and white under a winter snow; I love a hillside covered with wild Iris and Azalea; I love hills when the wind blows a hole in the fog and the sun peeps through to kiss away the dew from the violets. Oh, I would be true to the hills. I even have a "sure enough" sweetheart way out where the trail winds its way along the crest of mountains. Oh yes, all good folks ought to know "my" Clinton Marshall. It wouldn't be right for Victoria of the Hills not to have a sweetheart when spring comes in the mountains. He is wonderful, too. He can't walk, but I couldn't keep up with him if he could. I like 'em when they can't walk. He lives out where they have "painted houses," and he isn't any heathen. I first found him when he wrote the story of his life for the county paper here. It is an inspiration indeed to know the bright spirit we call Clinton Marshall. He had infantile paralysis when very young so he has been in bed almost all his life. He took a course in art, finished, and got a job, and just then lost the use of his right arm. But he did not give up. He learned to write with his left hand, and while he cannot sit up or move very much by himself, he writes, reads, and loves to live. This boy who has lived through "everything" and come out with a smile is worth knowing. One of my dreams is to see Clinton Marshall have a chance to make some of his dreams come true. I think of the sunshine and joy this world needs, and the cheer Clinton could give to all if he had a chance. He has educated himself until all who come his way find him interesting to talk with. Many a program goes out over the radio daily and does not do half the good, nor bring half the joy to human hearts, that Clinton could bring.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

THE EASTER ENVELOPES AND OFFERING.

The envelopes for the annual (Easter) offering were sent either to the secretaries, or the pastors, of all our churches in the Southern Convention last week. The task and the privilege are now with the pastor. He is the key man; his responsibility; his the opportunity. He may shirk the task and side-step the whole matter. He may shoulder the responsibility and embrace the opportunity. Somehow we feel that many, if not all, will prefer to embrace the opportunity rather than shirk the task and invite its consequences.

As stated before, the sole aim and object of the offering is to deepen the spiritual life of pastor and people as together they obey the command of their Lord. Somehow Christ bound up life itself, especially the more abundant life, in a bundle with obedience to His command and the most emphatic command He ever gave, being His final command with a promise was, "Go preach my gospel to every creature, and lo! I am with you even unto the end." All His followers have the opportunity of obeying this command for those who cannot go in person can go in purse; by and through self-denial. Our Lord's great gift was that of Himself on the Cross and only through that way and by that means did He come to a glorious Resurrection. By self-denial we come to newness of life in and through Him. This we have the opportunity of doing in a measure as we distribute the envelopes to all members and friends of congregations, and invite them to make a contribution in the name of their Lord that they may share His life with others. Let us hope that every pastor, every church secretary, every interested layman, will embrace this opportunity as a real privilege in sharing the more abundant life with others.

Mission Secretary.

THE AWAKENING.

All who read THE CHRISTIAN SUN, especially the last few issues, and those who read other church papers, have discovered a sense of alarm, of discontent, and, in some instances, of fright on the part of pastors and other leaders. This sense of alarm is at least encouraging. It shows that pastors and other burden bearers in the kingdom are taking notice, and are not asleep on the job, and in fact are not indifferent to prevailing problems and conditions. One wonders if Dr. E. Stanley Jones, in his book recently from the press has not put his finger on the real difficulty. In his "Introduction," Dr. Jones says: "The Christian has had a rude awakening. For a long time he has lived in a smug world. It seemed so uninvadable, so secure, so eternal. But his smug world has broken down. This smug and compartmentalized world of his has been invaded, his securities have been shaken, and he wonders about the eternity of that which can be so profoundly shaken in time. It has left him confused—and, more, alarmed.

"First, the smug world of the spiritual. He thought he could draw a line about that spiritual and keep it intact. It became his special province. He specialized in the spiritual. But he finds the spiritual cannot be enclosed and encased. All life runs into it and it runs into all of life. Life is much more a piece than he thought it was. A gland may make a difference in one's moral and spiritual state, and one's moral and spiritual state may make a difference in a gland, in fact, in the whole of the physical tissues.

Moreover, he finds that the spiritual is deeply and fundamentally affected by the economic basis of life. The economic presses upon and invades the spiritual at every point. More, it actually changes the spiritual. Russia has taught us that the individual can be changed by the changing of the economic order. We may not like the lesson, but it is there. The other truth is also there, namely, that the spiritual and the moral affect the economic.

"But the point is that the spiritual can no longer be isolated. This actually means one of two things: either we cannot be spiritual at all—the material and the economic must rule the whole of life—or we must be spiritual in larger terms; the spiritual must use the material and the economic, and direct them toward spiritual ends. The smug world of the isolated spiritual is now a thing of the past."

There has been a jolt and a rather rude awakening along another line. We Christians have made a distinction between "the personal" and "the social" gospel. There is no such distinction, for the simple reason that no individual is wholly personal, or wholly social. Christ taught in His day and Dr. Jones emphasizes that teaching by saying: "You cannot tell where the personal ends and the social begins, or where the social ends and the personal begins. For the social is personal." We must bear in mind that Paul through revelation taught that the church is the body of which Christ is the Head, and, moreover, that the body has many members, each serving its purpose and appointed place, but each a part of the body. The hand is quite a different organ and performs quite a different function from the eye, or the foot, but both are members of the same body. "A cell in the body is both individual and social and you cannot tell where one begins and one ends." One who believes the teachings of our Lord as interpreted especially by the Apostle Paul can but see the truth in the declaration: "We cannot be religious as personal beings unless we are religious as social beings, for life is one. It is vascular—cut it anywhere and it will bleed. Religion expressed in purely personal terms is simply not big enough to fit the facts of life. Hence the confusion of much of the religion of today."

This accounts for much of the chaos in the church and in the world. New times have come, new problems have arisen; new conditions obtain. We of the churches have not adjusted ourselves to the inevitable.

And so the alarm we feel may prove our awakening. We can never solve our problems until we recognize them; nor can we conquer our foes until we discover their strength.

We shall not lose hope, nor give up faith. The ship of Zion has weathered many tempestuous storms, even storms and strifes as threatening as any of our day, but said Lord Christ, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

REJOICE AND NOT BEMOAN THE CHINESE SITUATION.

By RAYMOND M. HUDSON,
Washington, D. C.

A study of the present situation in China impels one to feel that Christian people everywhere should stop wailing and bemoaning the situation there but rather should press forward with shouts of joy, rejoicing in the glorious opportunity that is now presented to win that nation to Christ by throwing into it an army of consecrated Christian workers who are willing to live or die to carry forward the cross of Christ just as it was carried to the soldiers in France during the World War.

The Chinese people are greatly moved by the steadfastness of the missionaries in China who are standing by them, although constantly in danger from bombs and shells and continually facing death. These missionaries have been hailed and praised by the Chinese press for being so faithful to their Christ and His work. We give thanks for their fine work and faith. We have now thousands of trained young men and women who are willing to go and face death—meet death—to preach the gospel and minister for Christ to the soldiers and people in the war stricken countries. Will not the Church now gladly grasp this Christ-given opportunity and provide promptly the necessary funds and send forward these workers?

Without any intention of belittling the splendid work of the missionaries in heretofore preaching the gospel in these lands, one cannot but feel that a large group of Christian workers in going there and joining these missionaries to face death for the sake of preaching the gospel and ministering to the Chinese and Japanese soldiers in the trenches can accomplish more within the next ten months in bringing these two nations to Christ than has been done within the last ten years.

That there is a great and urgent call for more Christian workers not only in the war-stricken area but throughout all of China as well as in Japan. During the World War more than two million of our boys went to France and in addition to the chaplains and missionaries and ministers who went with them the Y. M. C. A. sent approximately 13,000 Christian workers to France to preach the gospel and minister to our soldiers. It is true they were sent to minister to our brothers but we must not forget that the Chinese and Japanese are just as much brothers of Christ.

When the call was issued in 1917 for these workers to go to France they responded gladly and the church responded promptly with the money to pay their salaries and expenses.

Can the Church justify to Christ a refusal or failure to send out another large group of Christian workers and missionaries on the ground that the soldiers and people now at war are Chinese and Japanese and not Americans or Europeans? Suppose you try it by going into your closet and in prayer tell Christ this justifies you. If you make this attempt at justification, we are sure it will be followed by your sending a check to the proper treasurer to help send forth these workers.

This is indeed a big job but for some years we have been greatly in need of and praying for a spiritual revival, which we will not receive until we willingly undertake a big job for Christ and for others.

Here is the glorious opportunity. Be thankful and give even unto death.

“And He took the cup and gave thanks. . . .”—Matt. 26:27.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church"

MISS EMILY CARLETON, Editor, 541 Osceola Ave., Winter Park, Fla.

HOLY WEEK.

We are sure that many young people throughout the Southeast have been discovering a new, or rediscovering an old, way of life during this Lenten season—that of following the Christ. The climax of this period will come, of course, at Easter, with its age-old message of hope for all mankind.

Next week, immediately preceding Easter, is known as Holy Week. Many churches hold services each day during this week, commemorating the last week of Christ's life. We hope that the young people of our churches will cooperate with their local church by attending these services. Not only will it enrich our lives if we do this, but it will give the older people in our churches a feeling of hope for their church in the future—and add much to their joy at Easter.

In other churches it is impossible to hold such services as those mentioned above. We hope that the young people in those churches will ask their minister to come to their meeting next Sunday night—or whenever they may have it—and explain to them the events that occurred during Holy Week and their significance for present-day living. Even if you have not planned to do so, we urge that you have some presentation of this story as you approach this week. It will add meaning and appreciation to Easter itself that can be gained in no other way. Only by reliving those events in the week preceding the first Easter can we realize the full joy that Easter brought to those early Christians—and the full joy that it may bring to us.

SIXTH ANNUAL PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP SPRING CONFERENCE.

The Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship held its sixth annual Spring Conference at Suffolk Christian Church on March 26, 1938. The theme was "Pilgrim Fellowship on Trial."

The meeting was called to order by the president, W. B. Williams. We then had a social period of about fifteen minutes in which we met most people from other churches, after which we had some interesting group discussion—Christian Endeavor, Missions, and Sunday schools.

The court session was very interesting and helped the young people to understand the meaning of Pilgrim

Fellowship. The case was "Public Opinion Versus Pilgrim Fellowship."

The witnesses on the side of Pilgrim Fellowship brought out the following points:

The idea of Pilgrim Fellowship is to unite youth with all churches. The reason for Pilgrim Fellowship is to have a central organization for the churches and for them to work for a definite goal.

This organization was the first of its kind in the Congregational-Christian Church.

The verdict was "Pilgrim Fellowship is not guilty." After the Fellowship Supper, Rev. Marna S. Poulson, D. D., gave a very inspiring address on "We are Pilgrims."

In the evening session a very impressive "Upper Room Service" was conducted by Miss Louise Baker.

THE QUEST FOR GOD THROUGH PRAYER.

[A worship service led by Miss Mildred Schraun at the Pilgrim Fellowship meeting in Suffolk, Virginia, March 26, 1938.]

Piano Solo—"Meditation" (Morrisson).

Call to Worship—O Thou that hearest prayer, unto Thee shall all flesh come. Be not afraid to pray; to pray is right.

Hymn—"Just for Today."

Scripture—Matthew 6:5-15. Jesus teaches the disciples to pray.

Prayer—Our Father, each day is a little life, each night a tiny death; help us to live with faith and hope and love. Lift our duty above drudgery; let not our strength fail, or the vision fade. In the heat and burden of the day. O God, make us patient and sympathetic one with another in the fret and jar of life, remembering that each fights a hard fight and walks a lonely way. Forgive, O God, if we hurt our fellow-souls. Sustain us when we face sorrow; give us courage for the day and hope for the morrow. Amen.

Solo—"Beautiful Garden of Prayer."

Poem—

"THE LARGER PRAYER."

At first I prayed for Light:
Could I but see the way
How gladly, swiftly would I walk
To ever-lasting day.

And next I prayed for strength:
That I might tread the road
With firm unflinching feet and win
The heaven's serene abode.

VICTORY OUT OF DEFEAT.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR APRIL 17, 1938.

(Easter Sunday.)

SCRIPTURE: Mark 10:45.

Luke 9:22, 51; 24:38-47.

Daily Readings—

Monday—One Who Would Not Down—
Ps. 37:23, 24.

Tuesday—Peter Victorious—Acts 5:
29-32.

Wednesday—Why Victory Is Sure—
Rom. 8:28-31.

Thursday—Faith Wins Victory—I Jno.
5:4.

Friday—Joshua, Defeated, Wins—
Josh. 8:1.

Saturday—Slaves Win the Victory—
Exod. 1:8; 12:29-32.

Since this is Easter, it would be fine for each Christian Endeavor society to hold a sunrise service, the idea devoted to worship more than to the exchanging of views.

The Son of Man who was also the Son of God had been put to death. He was made to suffer the death of the cross. The marred body was laid away as if no future existed. But the tomb could not hold the Christ. He arose to show to His comrades and to all the world that He was not to be found among the dead things of the world, but always among the living.

Christianity has been a religion of victorious life and power ever since the Easter miracle of long ago. It has caused its devotees to turn defeats into victories, tragedies into triumphs, calamities into crownings.

To Think About—

Is a person defeated just because the world rejects him? Did Bunyan admit defeat when he was thrust into Bedford jail? No, he wrote "Pilgrim Progress." How about Luther when he was imprisoned? How can Christian youth today turn defeat into victory? Jesus lived victoriously because He put "first things first." Jesus lived victoriously because He was steadfast and true to the end. Jesus lived victoriously because He ran risks and accepted the consequence of following His ideals.

Suggested Hymns—

"Fairest Lord Jesus."

"More Love to Thee, O Christ."

"Low in the Grave He Lay."

FINDING OURSELVES IN SERVICE.

LESSON II—APRIL 10, 1938.

GOLDEN TEXT: What doth it profit a man, to gain the whole world, and forfeit his life.—Mark 8:36.

LESSON: Mark 8:27-38.

Who Is He?

“Who do men say that I am?” asked Jesus. It was no idle question; it was asked with a purpose. He himself knew full well by this time who he was—He knew long ere this that he was the Christ. But he wanted to know what impression the men of his day were forming of him, and what was more to the point, what his disciples themselves thought of him. Was he simply a wholesome companion, an interesting and inspiring teacher, simply another of the prophets, or were they gradually getting an understanding of his spiritual mission? “Who do men say that I am?”

Their answers were varied and illuminating. “John the Baptist, Elijah, One of the prophets”—there was the general impression that he was a great man, a man of insight, and one who was worthy to stand in the continuing fellowship of his many-sidedness as they looked at him from different angles. But evidently they had not yet seen in him the fulfilment of their Messianic Hope, they did not understand his Christly office in the sense of being the Lord’s Anointed, the Christ, the Saviour of the world.

And today there are many answers to the question: “Who is He?” Most folks admit he was a great man, indeed a unique man, a teacher of remarkable skill and power, even a prophet—the Mohammedans admit that—a most worthy example. But when men have said this they have not said all that is to be said about this man Jesus. He is the Son of God, he is the Christ, he is the One-Who-Should-Come. Only thus can the miracle of his ministry, and the power of his personality be accounted for. Furthermore he is the Saviour and Redeemer. He did something, mysterious to be sure and hard to be explained, that has redeeming and renewing power. It is to be noted that the divisions or denominations which have made Jesus anything less than the Divine Son of God in a unique way, have never been characterized by growth or power.

He Is the Christ.

“Thou art the Christ,” replied Simon Peter, with insight that according to Jesus came not from mere human understanding—the heavenly Father has revealed it unto him. God has in Jesus spoken His last word so far as the highest revelation of himself is concerned. We need not look for another. Christ is the fulfillment of prophecy and the final answer to man’s need. He is the Alpha and the Omega, the first and the last. He is the express image of the invisible God, it pleased the Father that in Him should all the fulness of the Godhead dwell bodily, he was full of grace and truth, he is indeed the Saviour of the world.

The Christ and the Cross.

“And he began to teach them, that the Son of Man must suffer many things, and be rejected by the elders, and the chief priests, and be killed, and after three days rise again.” He knew full well what was involved in being the Messiah or the Christ. He knew already what the scribes and priests mockingly threw at him on the Cross, that if he saved others he could not save himself. A Cross lay at the center of his Messiahship, his saving ministry. He was to give his life a ransom for many. No cross, no crown.

It all sounded so strange to them. The idea of the Messiah, God’s Anointed, suffering and what was worse dying at the hands of the scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites was unthinkable and Peter promptly told him as much. Alas how little Peter understood the meaning of Saviourhood, of the divine plan of saving by suffering for others. Like us he did not know that only thus can there be salvation. Jesus tactfully told Peter that he was talking the language of earth when he rebuked him. He was minding “the things of men, not the things of God.” Men still think that it was not necessary for Christ to die on the cross. But it was necessary. It was not, however, merely incidental. The Cross was simply a historic fact which revealed an eternal process. It was an expression in time of an eternal fact. Take the Cross out of Christianity and you do not have Christianity at all.

The Cross and Discipleship.

“If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross (Luke says “daily”) and follow me.” The disciple is not above his Master. As the principle of self-denial was at the heart of Christ’s saving mission, just so is it at the heart of Christ’s saving mission, just so is at the heart of Christian discipleship. It is to be noted that Jesus did not say that a man was simply to deny things to himself—the thing goes deeper and further than that. A man is to deny himself, he is to say no to himself, he is to cease making self the center of his interest and efforts, he is to turn from self to Christ. A man may deny many things to himself and still not deny himself in Christ’s use of the term. The fact of the matter is a cross was the sign that a man’s life was forfeit, his life did no longer belong to himself. Just so in the highest sense, we are not our own. True discipleship means complete surrender of our selves to Christ. A Christian in the finest sense of the word is one who has put Christ at the center of his life, and keeps Christ there. This is the true meaning of denying one’s self.

Saving and Losing, Losing and Saving.

For whosoever would save his life shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel’s shall save it.” This is not a pious platitude, it is the finest kind of realism. One who is intent on saving his life, who thinks of self, loses his life, never finds the real meaning of life at all. On the other hand the man who identifies himself with something big outside of himself, who thinks and works and sacrifices in terms of Christ and his gospel, finds that a miracle has taken place, he finds life more abundant, life with new meaning, new power, new joy. “All self seeking is condemned as self-destruction. All true self-sacrifice is approved as self-preservation.”

Ashamed of Christ.

“Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and my words . . . the Son of man also shall be ashamed of him when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels.” It is not a matter of spite, of getting even; it is the working out of an inexorable law. He who is ashamed of Christ and his gospel has in him a spirit that ultimately will bring him to ruin and destruction. That sin, when it hath run its course will bring forth a result that will make the Master ashamed of the man who comes to such a tragic end.

Rev. A. R. Flowers writes: “I am living a very busy life in South Carolina. Poor money crops and low prices, for the last four years, make it hard for one to collect enough funds to carry on, but I know no section in any of the many states in which I have been, where a Christian worker who is sincere in the work of Christian righteousness will be shown more Christian courtesy than can be found here in South Carolina.”

MONDAY.

MY DAILY MOTTO.

I have a little inner shrine
Where I take me every day,
There from a living fount I draw
Of deep and boundless love
And come away refreshed,
And filled with thought from God above.
—Doris Wood.

TUESDAY.

OUTSIDE THE CHURCH.

“Upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning.”—Luke 24: 1.

One of the most popular Easter customs of our American life is the sunrise Easter service upon the top of some mountain. So popular has this become we are told that one was attended by over a hundred thousand persons. About twenty thousand usually attend the service held on Mt. Helix near San Diego.

Thousands of these worshippers are not members of any church. Nevertheless they cannot resist the impulse to reveal their deepest instincts. It is fundamental irrepressible reverence for Jesus. Further, we believe it to be an outspoken conviction by the masses that the basic truth of our life is the resurrection of Jesus.

Prayer—We thank Thee, O Lord, for this world’s obeisance to Thee. Lead us this week in every thought that will make this expression one of fulness toward Thee. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

DOERS AND NOT HEARERS ONLY.

“Be ye doers of the word and not hearers only.”—Jas. 1: 22.

When Jesus announced His betrayal it seems that the disciples doubted themselves. Each had to ask, “Is it I?”

After all, living the best we can, we may be to blame for many things that seem to be wrong. If everybody else were only half as selfish as we are the world would be worse. If everybody else were as cold as I am, perhaps the church would not be near so effective as it is.

I must do my best because others will catch the spirit, and maybe the whole community will catch the spirit, and both the church and the community will be lifted to God.

Prayer—O Lord, we need dissatisfaction with ourselves. Make this week a searching in the light of the sacrifice of Jesus that we may be and do our best to be guiltless against Him. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE WORD’S BEGINNING.

“He that sat upon the throne said, behold I make all things new.”—Rev. 21: 5.

This is the week of the making of all things new. It is like beholding the orchards of the Shenandoah in a blaze of glory with peach blossoms, or the cherry blossoms of Washington, and exclaiming, “Spring is come.” It had been coming before but we had not noticed it.

Christ’s kingdom had been coming for sometime but now it was crystalizing in visible form. Time turned over and started afresh. A new moral and spiritual climate was breathed upon the earth. A new freedom and a new valuation of personality dawned upon the face of the earth and changed the world.

Prayer—O God, we thank Thee for Jesus Christ and for the freshness and beauty of the Christian life. May we enter this week into the spirit of this new world of His. Amen.

FRIDAY.

WHO IS THIS MAN.

“Then the soldiers, when they had crucified Jesus, took His garments, and made four parts, to every soldier a part; and also His coat: now the coat was without seam, woven from top throughout.”—Jno. 19: 23.

Jesus has always been the object of speculation, but never has He been divisible. Though men reject Him, yet they cannot leave Him alone. The world is still asking, “Who is this man?” And the wonders of this man are so great that the same world is crying, “Surely this is the Son of God.” And so we find Jesus fitting every one of us, and He is the universal adjustment of all things. He forgives and accepts all, and He belongs to all, even you and me.

Prayer—Our Father, we would know Jesus. May we find Him and know Him as the apostles of old. May we follow Him as dear children. Make this our heart’s desire all the way. Amen.

SATURDAY.

JESUS A MEMORY.

“He is not here, for He is risen.”—Matt. 28: 6.

There is a faith common to all believers. When one stands in the presence of the little mounds that are kept neat and clean and fresh with flowers in the old church yard cemetery, one thought throbs his consciousness, “They are not there.” Only what might be the visible remains are there. Graves hold nothing of the real.

The fact that the souls that once lived in these bodies now abides in the great bosom of God and His eternity makes the heart strong and serene in the consciousness of a true life that cannot be limited by any power of this world. The memory of Jesus fills us with the fellowship of love and joy; and we know that He awaits us who have not seen Him, yet still love Him.

Prayer—In the solemn memory of the day of our Lord’s death, O Lord, inspire us to live every day in the light of His resurrected glory. Amen.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D., Pastor.

SOMETHING FOR JESUS.

By REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

"And He saith unto them, Follow me."—Matt. 4:19.

In pastor's classes, prayer meeting addresses, and morning sermons we have been considering for the past few weeks "What Jesus has done for us." Let us now take the other side of the matter and consider "What We may do for Jesus." I have been talking to you about His living, serving, suffering, sacrificing, healing, blessing, forgiving, dying, and rising again from the dead: these things He did for us. What can we do for Jesus?

I. "Follow me," He says. In the days of Jesus and a few centuries before, especially among the Greeks, there had grown up the custom of teaching which gathered a band of youth about the teacher, and together they went about learning from their leader. It was a very practical sort of school. The knowledge of the teacher was given the further boon of being imparted in friendship and comradeship. The teacher knew and loved his pupils, and the pupils knew and loved the teacher. It is easy to see how such a school would have some very great advantages. Nor was it handicapped for lack of clothing, shelter, or food, as such a school would be in our day. Those things did not hold the high place that they hold today. A crust here, and a cup of cold water there could possibly make up a meal. And sometimes sleep came before the shelter was found, and the stars watched over their slumber.

So when Jesus said, "Follow me," it was a paramount to saying, Join my school. Become my disciple, learner, pupil. "Learn of me." We have overlooked the first and primary call of the Christ, by taking a superficial view of his call to "Follow me." Learn first. Be trained. Get the mentality of the Christ. Use your minds. Develop your reasoning powers. And develop them with Jesus as the teacher. What can we do for Jesus? We can join His school. Accept His instruction, or rather accept Him as our Instructor. One cannot finish His learning of Jesus in a day. It is a schooling that must last across the years. Even Jesus found the disciples who were taught by His example and His own words, with all the advantage there was of being with Him in person—even Jesus, I say, found His disciples conspicuously ignorant at the close of the long sessions of discipleship. What can we do for Jesus? We can sit at His feet as our Teacher daily, and across the years constantly. How important this is! And how the world needs to learn of Him today!

II. "Believe me," says Jesus. Let me have your confidence, your trust, your faith—is what He is wanting. "Without faith it is impossible to please God." "Believe and thou shalt be saved." We have not tried Jesus' doctrines, and teachings, as we should. We have not trusted Him to bring us through the tangle of our times. We stand back in doubt and fear too frequently. We are timid about taking Him at His word. What can we do for Jesus? We can learn at His feet of His doctrines, and with our hearts we can take Him as our confidential Friend and trust His teachings to lead our lives, and our lands aright.

If we would but really join His school, and make the grade, and trust our Teacher with all our hearts, laying our hands, our lives, in His keeping and directing, He would be a Dictator whose dictations would be worth laying down our lives for! There is still more uniqueness in doing what Jesus challenges than in doing what any dictator on earth demands, because theirs have in a measure been tried before—His has never been really tried in any total way. The best we know would have a chance to become better, and better. Freedom of the finest kind, liberty that is bound only by goodness, and mercy, and justice—all that our hearts hope and more—would be arriving in our civilization. What can we do for Jesus? Begin—begin in our own lives to listen to His will, His word, His teaching; and begin to do all we can to bring His Kingdom on earth in our own lives and actions, and in others.

III. "Love me," says Jesus. No, not in just those two words, but oh so anxiously, eagerly does He plead for it in His farewell talk with His disciples! Perhaps He was too self-respecting, too delicately sensitive to blandly say, "Love me"; but He pleads in a more forceful manner for our love. Listen to His words: "If ye love me, keep my commandments. . . . He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him. . . . If a man love me he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him."

To one of His disciples in the presence of others of them, after His resurrection, he says: "Lovest thou me?" Three times He asked him that question. It was something His heart yearned for! And even at that how unselfish He was! He desired Peter's love that the apostle might be a real shepherd of his sheep—that others might be blessed with Peter's love for his Lord!

Let me take up His cry, and place it upon the ears of my own heart, and upon yours. Let me suggest His pleading, and yearning for our love. What can we do for Jesus? Love Him!

Ah! but actions speak louder than words! "If ye love me (Feel the heart-agonizing hope of those words) if ye love me, keep my commandments." Let your actions tell! That brings me to my concluding word.

IV. "Witness for me," says Jesus. That continues Christ across the centuries. If Christ has not done for our civilization in the past nineteen centuries what we should like, the fault lies not in our Lord, but in ourselves, and our predecessors. Too often we have talked to others before we have been told by Him; too often we have professed with our lips what we have not fully accepted in our hearts; too often we have by our actions belied our love; and too often we have been silent witnesses, which is to witness on the other side. The world is not to be won like that!

"And He saith unto them, Follow me." Let us do it, by His help.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

In this week's financial report it shows that we have reached and passed the fifth rung in our financial ladder for this year. The Duke Endowment made it possible by giving us a very liberal contribution which gave us a real lift.

In checking over the list of churches in the several conferences, we are sorry to say that we find the following facts, as to the number of churches that have not sent an offering this year up to April 1st:

N. C. & Va. Conference	23
Eastern N. C. Conference	25
Western N. C. Conference	18
Eastern Va. Conference	18
Valley Va. Central Conference	8

Total number of churches that have not made an offering 92

What if all these churches had sent us an offering this year! We could have easily been above another rung in our financial ladder.

It may be that as this is the end of the first quarter most of them will mail in a quarterly offering, which will be fine.

If the orphanage ever did need your love and support it needs it now. It seems that needs pile up on us. In the early part of the year the boiler in the old building gave out and it was necessary to replace it. But after investigation we found by using a stoker we could continue to use the old boiler. We could buy the stoker cheaper so we took the cheaper way out.

To still add to our troubles our well failed and we had no water supply sufficient to take care of our situation. It became necessary to drill a new well. We find that people who drill wells don't work for love only but it takes money to keep their machinery running.

I want to say to the Sunday schools not on our list that we will be very grateful to you and will be very appreciative of you if you will mail us an offering to help us at this time. I know you want to do your part in helping support your orphanage. Remember your offerings count on your Conference Apportionments as to the orphanage; but we need the money monthly or quarterly to meet our bills. For twenty-one years the Christian Orphanage has met its bills monthly. We don't want to break that record.

ASK, AND RECEIVE.

During the D. L. Moody Centenary year, just ended, training for earnest Christian men and women for winning souls to Christ was provided through free grants of the booklet, "Lessons in Soul-Winning," by Dr. Will H. Houghton, president of the Moody Bible Institute. These booklets were provided without cost to pastors and group leaders who requested them "in reasonable quantities," to use "in teaching, or preaching, on Personal Work." More than 142,000 were thus used during the year.

Eastertide approaches. Many pastors and churches are looking toward special meetings or visitation for winning souls to Christ. An additional printing of twenty-thousand of the booklets is now available on the same terms as during last year—free for pastors and leaders of personal work groups, who will write and indicate how many of the booklets they will need for personal work instruction. Address requests to the Centenary office, 153 Institute Place, Chicago.

SPRINGTIME IN THE MOUNTAINS.

Surely, I have proven now that I love our hills and feel that hills have something to offer the rest of the world. Yes, I believe yet that these rugged peaks can make a real contribution to the world. They have something more than Rhododendrons to offer.

So now when the plow boy of the hills waves his straw hat and yells: "Gee, haw, Buck, git up Buck!" I will draw some real joy from his carefree spirit. I will also draw inspiration from the way the mountain boy always "begins again." Each summer he sees his cabbage sell as low as 25c per hundred pounds but each spring he starts again with the same happy spirit. He never says "quit." When the Blue Bird comes, new hopes are born in the heart of a mountain boy, and Rev. B. J. Earp says there is real fineness—true greatness, in our hills. Oh hills, we must not disappoint this man.

SUNDAY.

REVIVED.

"As in Adam all die, so also in Christ shall all be made alive."—
I Cor. 15: 20-28.

This is the day of days. The resurrection of Jesus Christ. And we are glad that fifty-two days of each year we can celebrate in memory of that fact.

Resurrection. "What a word! We all realize that evil is forever trying to pull us down, that disease is forever trying to destroy this body; and that our existence is forever trying to fight for physical and spiritual health. But when we realize that the risen Christ means victory over all the forces of death, that predominating truth makes us full of exultant joy. Take heart, dear soul, and conquer in Jesus.

Prayer—O God, may we know nothing of the grave. In that life we now live and in that which is to come, may we breathe the glad air of our immortality with Thee. Amen.

We can be thankful to a friend for a few acres, or a little money; and yet for the freedom and command of the whole earth, and for the great benefits of our being, our life, health, and reason, we look upon ourselves as under no obligation.

QUEST FOR GOD THROUGH PRAYER.

And then I asked for Faith:
 Could I but trust my God,
 I'd live enfolded in His peace,
 Though foes were all abroad.

But now I pray for love:
 Deep love to God and man,
 A living love that will not fail,
 However hard his plan.

And Light and Strength and Faith
 Are opening everywhere:
 God only waited for me, till
 I prayed the larger prayer.

Not for myself I make this prayer,
 But for this race of mine,
 That stretcheth forth from shadowed places
 Dark hands for bread and wine.

For me, my heart is pagan mad,
 My feet are never still,
 But give them hearts to keep them warm
 In homes high on the hill.

Talk on Theme—What is prayer? Is it "the soul's sincere desire uttered or unexpressed?" The trouble with this all too-popular modern definition of prayer is its vagueness, for the soul's desire may be for almost anything—a sandwich and a cup of coffee, an increase in salary, social recognition, political office, love, marriage, happiness, the moon. Far more meaningful is a definition of prayer which was given in the fourth century by Saint Basil, who said that prayer is the elevation of the mind to God. To be sure prayer may sometimes take the form of petition, a crying out for help in an hour of need. As a matter of fact, you can no more keep distressed humans from crying out for help to what they conceive to be a higher power than you can keep a flower from turning to the sun unless you crush the flower. But bearing in mind the religious experience of the saints and seers of the race, surely we are compelled to believe that the heart of prayer is an "elevation of the mind to God" with earnest purpose not to bend his will to one's own desires but rather to make one's own desires conform to His will.

But how can one elevate his mind to God if he is far from sure that there is a God. He can at least make it a daily practice to lift up his mind to what he conceives to be highest and best, and then make an honest, earnest attempt to come into union with that, to square his whole life with that. If he does, he will make certain discoveries. He will discover that he is becoming increasingly able to do, and to find delight in doing what he ought to do. He will find in himself a peace which surpasses all his dreams, the peace of a self which has ceased to be wretchedly divided. He will likewise find in himself a growing insight into the meaning of light, a growing appreciation of whatsoever things are true and beautiful and good, a greater capacity for happiness, and a far greater courage with which to face occasional disappointments and sorrows. And presently, in experiences such as these, he will become aware of a power, akin to, yet greater than himself, that is making for good. He will lift up his mind to the highest and best that he knows and feel able to use the word "God."

More things are wrought by prayer
 Than this world dreams of. Wherefore let thy voice
 Rise like a fountain for me night and day.
 For what are men better than sheep or goats
 That nourish a blind life within the brain,
 If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer

Both for themselves and those who call them friend
 For so the whole round earth is every way
 Bound by gold chains about the feet of God.

—Tennyson.

Hymn—"My Faith Looks Up to Thee." (Played through once for silent prayer—then sing all three stanzas.)

Reading—"WHY DO WE PRAY?"

"I pray because I can't help it. Everyone prays in some fashion or other in life's crises."

"I pray because when I am consciously at my best I want to pray, and I pray when I am at my best."

"The more I pray the more certain I am of the value of prayer."

"All those whom I know best, who have achieved in the realm of the spirit, are, without exception, men and women of prayer."

"I pray because of my Lord's example and teaching, which in this as in all else is final."

Be not afraid to pray; to pray is right.
 Pray if thou canst with hope, but ever pray,

Though hope be weak—or sick with long delay.

Pray in the darkness if there be no light.
 Far is the time, remote from human sight,
 When war and discord on the earth shall cease;

Yet every prayer for universal peace
 Avails the blessed time to expedite.
 What'er is good to wish, ask that of heaven,

Though it be what thou canst not hope to see;

Pray to be perfect, though material
 heaven

Forbid the spirit so on earth to be;
 But if for any wish thou canst not pray,
 Then pray to God to cast that wish away.

But when ye pray, say our, not mine or thine;

Our debts, our debtors, and our daily bread,
 Before the thronged cathedral's gracious shrine,

Or in thy closet's solitude instead,
 Who'er thou art, where'er thou liftest
 prayer,

However humble or however great thou be,

Say our, thy brother man including there,
 And more and more it may be thou shalt see

Upon life's loom how thread to thread is bound;

None for himself, but man and fellow-man,

Or near or far, meet on one common ground,

Sons of one Father since the world began,

So shall God's Kingdom come in might and power,

When all can pray, not mine, or thine,
 but our.

Hymn—"Sweet Hour of Prayer."

Benediction.

PATHES TO HEAVEN

By A COUNTRYMAN.

"Path to Heavens in Chicago Alley," reads a newspaper headline. Two policemen entered a dark alley to investigate complaints that a man lurked in the shadows. Spying a figure moving in the shadows, they commanded him to surrender, and to their surprise found an amateur astronomer with his home-made apparatus making some heavenly observations where the street lights would not interfere with the lights from the stars.

All of which reminds us that there are various pathways to Heaven; not with a telescope, of course. We have the feeling that if Heaven is reached by man, it will be, in many instances, by some unconventional route—that many will find the way even though they do not journey along the beaten path.

Many a mother toils endlessly for the comfort and well-being of her family, that they may be prepared to fill positions of trust and honor in the world, even though she may be unknown. Her pathway is through the home, even the kitchen.

Likewise, many a father gives himself unselfishly to the comfort, support and rearing of his family. Although in the world he is unknown and unsung; yet if he does his work well, he will not lose his reward.

Each has his work to do, each has his place to fill. If one will be led by the Holy Spirit, he can make his work a partnership with the Divine. Work well done, whether it be in the home, on the farm, in the school room, in the pulpit, or any of the many avenues of life where service to mankind is rendered, may be the alley through which one may find a pathway to Heaven, and a reward for faithfulness.

The Lord
is risen indeed.
Luke 24:34

Sing, soul of mine, this day of days.

The Lord is risen.

Toward the sunrising set thy face.

The Lord is risen.

Behold he giveth strength and grace;

For darkness, light; for mourning, praise;

For sin, his holiness; for conflict, peace.

Arise, O soul, this Easter Day!

Forget the tomb of yesterday,

For thou from bondage art set free;

Thou sharest in his victory

And life eternal is for thee,

Because the Lord is risen.

PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES

THE CHRISTIAN SUN wishes for each of you a very Happy Easter Season.

The Mission Rallies in Eastern Virginia last week were of high order and well attended.

It is good to welcome Dr. J. O. Atkinson back to North Carolina. His stay in Florida seems to have given him a new lease on life, for which all are grateful.

The Eastern Virginia Minister's Association will meet on Tuesday, April 19th, rather than on Easter Monday. Dr. J. R. Clinton will be the speaker. Full attendance is expected.

A Preaching Mission is to be held at Ivor (Va.) the week of April 18th, from Monday through Friday with services each evening at 8 o'clock. Dr. J. R. Clinton is to be the guest speaker.

The Board of Christian Education, at 514 South Main Street, Norfolk, Va., has on hand some Mother's Day material which will be loaned gladly to those interested in a program for this special occasion.

In the article from Winston-Salem, N. C., in this paper for March 31st, a statement was made that 88c was contributed to superannuation. This should have been $4.88, which is the quota assigned that church for conference apportionment.

Reports to be made to the Southern Convention which meets in Portsmouth, Va., April 26-29, should be sent at once to President L. E. Smith at Elon College, N. C., so they can be mimeographed and put in form ready for distribution when the convention meets.

Pre-Easter services are being held at the First Christian churches in Portsmouth and Norfolk this week. Dr. J. R. Clinton is the speaker at Portsmouth. He speaks at the Gates Theatre each day at noon and in the Christian Church in the evening. The pastor, Rev. F. C. Lester, is doing the preaching at First Church, Norfolk.

Those who wish entertainment during the Southern Convention should notify the pastor of the entertaining church, Rev. Robert Lee House, at the Arlington Apts., Portsmouth, Va. The ladies would like to know how many they are to feed and certainly the church will need to know the number who wish entertainment over night.

A card from Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, who has been a patient in a Washington, D. C., hospital for some time, says that his condition is much improved now and that he believes he is going to feel better than he has for years. He expected to return to his work in Dover, Del., this week. THE CHRISTIAN SUN is glad to receive such good news.

A young business man called at THE CHRISTIAN SUN office in Norfolk, last week and discussed the circulation of the paper. He says there should be 5,000 paid subscribers and that they can be secured within the next year. How's that for thinking in terms of progress? Who knows but what he is right and that we have been loafing on the job?

The Suffolk Christian Church in quarterly conference recently voted unanimously in favor of establishing a memorial to the late Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., in the form of a bronze tablet placed in church, and a fund to establish a scholarship at Elon College, of which college Dr. Staley was president for eleven years and a loyal supporter and trustee as long as he lived.

Members of the various boards of the Southern Convention met in Henderson, last week to consider the future of the Convention. After lengthy discussions, they voted in favor of united promotion for the various boards. The Convention will face real problems when it meets in Portsmouth, and every delegate and many other members of our churches should be present to consider these problems and seek the best methods of doing aggressive work.

ROSEMONT APPRECIATES MORRISON.

Mr. H. R. Morrison, superintendent of the Sunday school of the Rosemont Christian Church, had a birthday Sunday, March 27th. The school took knowledge of the occasion to sing to him "Happy Birthday to You."

Mr. Morrison has been a faithful worker in the Rosemont Sunday school for twenty-nine years. He has been teacher and superintendent and served in other capacities for these years.

The Rosemont Sunday school is proud of the work of this faithful servant, and appreciates him most sincerely. He is the son of J. R. Morrison, Sr., whose family has been such a great help in the work of the Rosemont Church all these years.

We need more such families, and especially more such men as H. R. Morrison.

LIBERTY, VIRGINIA.

This church is located twelve miles north of Halifax; Va., two miles northeast of the Durham-Lynchburg Highway. It was organized in November, 1910, with 16 members. The building was erected in 1911 at a cost of $1,500.00. The present membership is 200. About ten years ago it was planned to add Sunday school classrooms. The depression prevented this. Eight classes recite in one room. Recently the work of building these rooms was begun. Logs have been cut and money raised to pay for hauling them and sawing the lumber. The building committee, with Brother Burnette Bray as chairman, will carry the work on to completion. This church has a Christian Endeavor society that was organized soon after the church and a missionary society that is doing good work.

This is a pleasant people to serve and they frequently assist the pastor and his family in special gifts.

C. E. NEWMAN.

SHALLOW FORD.

The first of February, 1938, a foundation was laid for a twelve-foot extension to the front of Shallow Ford Congregational-Christian Church. This new structure provides two new Sunday school rooms with an eight foot hallway entrance to the main auditorium, also a belfry built on top, thereby adding to the appearance of the building. Fifteen days after the work was started, the new addition was practically complete with a new coat of paint. Other improvements have been done, planting flowers and shrubbery to beautify the place of worship. The house of the Lord should be an attractive and inviting place to go.

Since this extra project was undertaken, a noted increase in Sunday school and church attendance has been noted.

Brother R. B. Hensley is chairman of the Building Committee and Wayman Moore, treasurer. Subscriptions have been made and mostly paid to cover cost of the new addition.

There is a very live Christian Endeavor society here, which meets every Sunday night. At present there is a membership of 52 with attendance as high as 45 at many meetings. Mr. Samuel Barber is the wide awake president.

This is a very interesting church group to serve, and may the Lord bless them with means to continue the good work. We are thankful to the Lord for all the blessings experienced.

THEY MUST BE REMINDED.

"Christian Stewardship is the concrete expression of a living faith in God and of a sanctified obedience to His will."

"The Christian is the steward of the mental, spiritual, and material resources given to him by Almighty God, and is accountable to the Almighty for those resources."

"Stewardship of material resources is best taken care of by a regular program of Tithing."

These and other profound truths were discussed at the recent Philadelphia Meeting of the United Stewardship Council. Yet it was deplored that after generations of preaching these truths church congregations, by and large, do not fully understand them or at least do not give concrete evidence that they do.

It seems that the minister and his official family must continually use every means to remind church-goers of these profound and fundamental truths. And preaching alone will not do it.

Experience of hundreds of churches indicate that the most effective way to teach this lesson is by means of the systematic and tactful distribution of literature. One series of this literature is varied as to literary style. Some tracts in the series are inspirational, some are Biblical, some are narrative, and others testimonial.

In some churches a small committee entirely independent of the official relationship takes over the distribution of the pamphlets.

Sometimes the program lasts three months, sometimes for three years. A vast accumulation of evidence testifies to the effectiveness of this program.

The series referred to is sponsored by The Layman Company, 730 Rush Street, Chicago, a non-profit organization engaged in publication and distribution of literature on Tithing and Stewardship. This company will send to any address a complete set of 32 complete bulletins, postpaid, for 10c in stamps.

PREPARATION FOR EVANGELISM.

The thirty-second Founder's Week Conference at the Moody Institute, Chicago, came to a close Sunday night, February 6th. More than 51,000 auditors attended the various sessions, and during the seven days forty-one separate speakers brought inspiration and instruction, supporting effectively the conference slogan, "Preparation for Evangelism." Fortunately this wealth of instruction for soul-winning efficiency was made available to the largest student body ever enrolled at the Institute for the winter term, a total of 1,966 for the Day and Evening schools.

With favorable weather prevailing, registered guests were present from thirty-five states of the Union, Alaska, three Canadian provinces, and seven foreign countries. The Institute Auditorium was inadequate to care for various day-time sessions, and overflow services were provided. All evening sessions were in the Moody Memorial Church, one mile distant, where on three of the seven evenings the Sankey Auditorium under the main auditorium was required to care for many hundreds who heard the regular program through the public address system.

A number of the evening services held semblance to the old-time revival service, so deeply spiritual and urgent were the messages, and scores of souls repaired to the inquiry room for guidance and prayer.

Among the more widely known speakers who came at the invitation of Dr. Will H. Houghton, President of the Institute, were: Drs. R. G. Lee, Memphis, Tenn.; Albert S. Johnson, Charlotte, N. C.; Herbert Lockyer, Liverpool, England; H. A. Ironside, Chicago, Ill.; and such effective laymen as Erling C. Olsen, New York, N. Y.; R. G. LeTourneau, Peoria; and H. E. Eavey, of Xenia, Ohio. Appraisals are difficult of rendering; however, many voices declared the 1938 conference to have been a summit of excellence in a spiritual power, and especially in the evidence of revival interest and fruitage.

W. M. RUNYAN,

SUNDAY IN OLD VIRGINIA.

Ah! Here we are again, Sunday morning bright and early in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia with its scenic grandeur spread before us in all directions. No wonder we are thrilled to remember:

This is my Father's world:
I rest me in the thought
Of rocks and trees,
Of skies and seas—
His hand the wonders wrought.

This writer has viewed this panorama marvel at times when a blanket of snow lay like a mantle as far as eye could reach, when torrential rains drove against every obstacle, and vivid flashes of lightening continuously reminded one of the surecharged atmosphere; yet its wondrous beauty was not lost to our admiration.

We are riding with Rev. W. J. Andes on his way to fill his appointments, as did his late father, Rev. A. W. Andes, year in and year out through all weather and road conditions, bending himself to his task of ministering to his people, uncomplaining and unceasing in his labor of love, the very personification of Brown- ing's:

Then welcome each rebuff
That turns earth's smoothness rough,
Each sting that bids—nor sit,
Nor stand but go.

'Til God called him to rest, leaving this fine young counterpart to take up the torch and carry on.

Here we are at Newport Church, splendid church and people, find Bible study class under the able leadership of Brother Louderback. Then with the morning message clear and distinct, accompanied with such a quiet dignity and forcefulness one could but be impressed with the sincerity of this true son of him who went on before.

And just so with Leakesville in the afternoon and Mt. Olivet (G) for the evening service, "Billie" Andes goes preaching, teaching and singing his way into the hearts of these folk. To see these good people jam the isles after the service, a babel of friendly greetings and felicitations, is a most inspiring sight.

Last, but not least, of this day of joyful experiences was the before bedtime period of fellowship at the home of Brother L. E. Morris, at Dyke. Space, limited vocabulary, and ignorance in the use of superlatives prevent adequate description of these good people.

May God bless Rev. W. J. Andes, Christian minister, and the loyal people whom he so ably serves.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

THIS IS HOLY WEEK.

Catholic and Episcopal Churches have made much of Holy Week, but our Church, and other free churches have swung far from anything that smacked of ceremonial observance of days and seasons. But there is no good reason for us to be so unfriendly towards remembering with deep devotion and appreciation the last week of the earthly life of our Master. It is not right for one to live a very gay life for all the year until a certain season and then go into rigid self-denial of frivolous and insignificant things with the hope of making up for lost time. But surely it is right for those who love the Lord Jesus in sincerity to meet every day of a certain week each year to review what Jesus said and did on that day of his last week, and to seek to find in a finer way the fullness of the spiritual presence of the Saviour. Of course, there is no difference so far as the days are concerned: there is nothing to make one day more holy than another. But there are associations gathered about certain days that can stir the emotions and bring to light helpful truths so that life becomes a bit sweeter. This is true concerning the last week of the life of Jesus.

On Sunday Jesus rode into Jerusalem while people sang his praise and waved palm branches. Monday and Tuesday he taught in and about the temple. Wednesday there is no record of what he did. He probably was with his friends in Bethany. Thursday, the day of the Passover, he ate with the disciples in an upper room of some friend's home (probably the home of John Mark), and instituted what we know as the Lord's Supper. It was on this night that he washed the disciples' feet, and talked for so long with the disciples (read the record in John 14-17), and then went out in the garden of Gethsemane and prayed. From there he was taken to court, condemned, beaten, and prepared for crucifixion. The most appropriate time of the year to have communion is on Thursday night before Easter. It was then that Jesus started it.

The Crucifixion.

The meanest thing ever done in this world was to crucify Jesus. He was Love, Divine and human, clad in human flesh. To crucify love is violently wicked. Love is crucified only by hatred. Hatred is no better now than when it was in the heart of the ancient Jews who begged for the death of Jesus of Nazareth. Only the Romans could drive the nails, but the Jews made the plans and had the hate. Crucifixion was the worst and most disgraceful form of punishment. The Jews wanted Jesus to have it, and the Romans took some delight in getting rid of another disturber. At nine in the morning they hung Jesus up to die while they reviled him and gambled for his clothes. They were not prepared for a storm nor an earthquake, but they got both. They did not expect him to forgive a companion in death nor to pray for them. They thought he would writhe in agony, probably for days, but by three o'clock in the afternoon he said a bed-time prayer and closed his eyes in the sleep of death. The crucifixion of Jesus was very surprising to those who were there, and has been the magnet of Love for nearly two thousand years.

When Easter Comes.

Fearful disciples and weeping women turned from the cross and the tomb in the garden to quiet and self-pity. They were sure they had come to the end. Disappointment gripped their souls. The leader was dead. The treasurer committed suicide. The spokesman had denied the Master. All had forsaken him, save a few who stood in the distance. Surely final darkness had settled down upon them. All they could do was to slip back to the grave in the early morning and anoint his dead body with sweet spices, remain to shed some tears, and then return to the old fishing nets and former walks of life. They had not learned the lesson concerning a grain of what dying in the soil and springing up with new life. They expected a gardner to move the body, but had no idea that God could or would. They knew not the Master with whom they walked. He was filled with Life. Drawing the blood from his veins did not take away his Life. It rather freed him of limitations. The dawn of Easter morn liberated his spirit so he could live with those he loved. When Easter came he walked in the garden in the cool of the day and found there a weeping woman. When Easter came he called together again those whom he loved. When Easter came the scattered disciples came to dine with the resurrected Christ, and went out to make a new world. When Easter comes to you, new life will flow through your soul, and you will seek to serve the world for which Jesus died and rose again.

EASTER AND US.

The beautiful new spring clothes which are so evident in our church services at Easter are supposed to be symbolic of the new life which is flourishing in the church. A far better evidence, however, that we have learned the meaning of sacrifice as practiced by Jesus on Calvary is the offering which we present to His church for missionary work around the world. Lovely songs and services may tickle our fancy and even help us to be happy in our hearts, but the truth of the Easter story has its best chance to live in our own souls when we bring an offering that calls for real sacrifice and place it upon the altar of the church for the spread of the gospel, which is the good news that life is eternal when lived in the presence of Jesus. It is not strange, therefore, that some of your friends will be interested in the size of the offering you put into the plate on Easter day, for it will be a token of your own love, like the sweet spices were of the love of the women who went early to the grave. Their gift was costly and fine. The Master is worthy of the best. Easter for us will mean most if we have learned the spirit of sacrifice, of loyalty and devotion, and express it in gifts for our Missions.

THE CHURCH IN CHINA UNDER FIRE

But the Missionaries Carry On.

With six bombing planes wheeling overhead dropping bombs near the railroad station and a temple, what better use can I make of my time than writing about what is happening as it happens?" So wrote Rev. Harry S. Martin, a native of Spring Valley, Wisconsin, and brother of Charles R. Martin, Wisconsin, who is working under the American Board of Foreign Missions in Gunghsien, North China, and lived through the nerve-racking days of the bombing and eventual taking of that city by Japanese troops.

"The planes circle around over the city and then over our houses and then out toward the station," Mr. Martin wrote. "As they fly lower they turn on their sides and drop bombs. We hear the explosions and the process is repeated. It is 10:45 in the morning. They have been flying over us for about half an hour. It has been a bomb morning, if one can make such an adjective. It began to rain a little about four o'clock and I got up to see whether I had my rug on the veranda.

"Before I got to sleep again there were cannon reports from the city wall. The firing persisted so it seemed best to get up and see what was happening. . . .

"People have been coming into the compound all morning and now our back yard is swarming with them. The little temple is crowded and overflowing on to the lawn. . . . The firing seems to come from the city wall, machine guns, cannon and rifles sweeping everything before them. The house shakes and the windows rattle as though an earthquake had struck the place. We can hear the swish not only of bullets but of cannon balls. Jim (Rev. James H. Hunter, of Peoria, Ill.) has just come in to say that a refugee woman has been wounded in the leg. It doesn't seem safe to be wandering too freely over the compound so I am taking to writing again.

"Three days since I have written and unless I get at this I shall not have my account straight. There have been so many things happening that the days already seem confused in my mind. Just now we are living as it were on an island with no word going out and none coming in. We do not have electricity so it is hard to get anything over the radio and there is no train, mail, telegraph or telephone connection. . . ."

One morning Mr. Martin and Mr. Hunter were met by a city policeman who said that he had some Japanese women who were surrounded by a great crowd. The Americans brought the mother and her daughter, a girl of about 12, into their home for protection. At first the Chinese helper did not want to prepare food or drink for these two. But Mr. Martin asked him how he would feel if this woman was Ruth (Mr. Martin's 17-year-old daughter of whom the Chinese helper was very fond) and she were separated from her people and in fear of being shot down at any moment. This argument worked and the Chinese prepared tea and settled the two women safely in a back study.

"Toward evening word was brought me that another Japanese woman was on the place. She was very fearful at first, but when I came back she was installed with the other woman and by holding the egg in a small hole in the wall where the sunshine could pass through. On the tenth day the eggs were taken out and put on paper covered shelves made of kaoliang stalks.

An interesting feature of the method used was that they did not have any thermometer. They used a portion of their skin exposed to the air to tell by the feeling whether the temperature was the right degree. For testing the temperature inside the pails a man takes an egg out and holds it to his eyelid. "I could see that one advantage of that kind of thermometer is that it is not easily dropped," observed one of the missionaries.

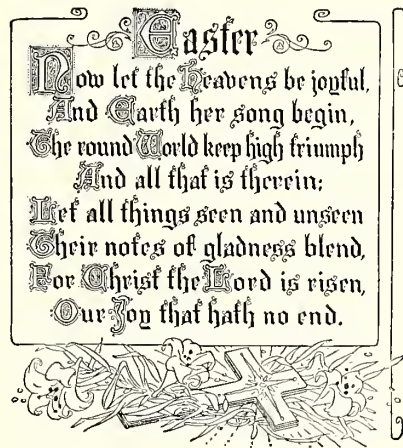

The Tunghsien Women's Bible School was running and Jefferson Academy had about 150 students. The Girls' School had about two-thirds as many students as last year.

The church which had been damaged some, had been partially repaired and a Chinese layman had given a fine altar table on which were placed two new brass candle sticks holding seven lighted candles. Between them stood a fine cross. Everyone sang during the Christmas services from the kindergarten tots to the double male quartet from Jefferson Academy.

"Tunghsien was the first of our North China mission stations to suffer in the present calamity," writes Rev. Harold W. Robinson, after visiting the people there. "The shock that it received was terrific. But its comeback has been phenomenal."

To the friends of Harry Martin and James Hunter and to all Christians in America who grasp the significance of Christian work today in China the following comment from an American who is in the very midst of the war zone in North China, will be of deep interest:

"It became clearer and clearer," writes he, "that the missionary is in a position of such responsibility and leadership as has not been his for decades. This is partly because of his neutral position and the confidence which he commands in more or less degree from both parties in this Oriental war making him the sole mediator between them. The great exodus of trained and high class Chinese and the risks of leadership to those remaining, mean that the missionary must play the pivotal part everywhere and take again the positions for many years ably filled by Chinese. Meanwhile the need is greater than ever."

her daughter. She had two very darling children with her and a babe in arms. . . ."

The condition of Tunghsien following the bombs and terror of refugees, was pitiful. When a missionary from another station managed to make a visit not long after the city had been taken, he said that it indeed reminded him of the Old Testament phrase, "waste places."

But when he went back again around Christmas time he found that work had been picked up and that Mr. Martin and Mr. Hunter had conducted their annual farmers' class in the Rural Service Center with a membership of very high caliber. A new feature was the use of large Chinese water pails for hatching chickens.

Several hundred eggs are placed in one of these pails and heat is provided by charcoal heaters. The two Chinese experts who were running the experiment showed the farmers how they could tell whether the eggs were fertile or not at the end of the fifth day

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The door to my room in the hospital has two signs on it. The one on the outside, "No Visitors," and on the inside, "The Board or Actual Hospital Expenses must be paid before the Patient leaves the hospital." These signs suggest that no visitors can enter the room and the patient cannot leave his room until he has paid his bill. The patient cannot sit up neither can he feed himself, nor write a check. The Doctors have not yet prohibited the patient from thinking, or looking out through the window. Apparently, I can safely think, and look out through the window, provided, I rest while this is going on.

Looking out through the window, one thinks of the contrast between being confined to a room, and having the privilege of going freely, as one wishes, in the great wide open spaces outside.

For the time being, it seems more expedient for this patient to remain on the inside of this room. But there is on the outside of the window, a challenge for the future.

Personally, I am thinking of nearly a thousand members and friends of three churches of my charge who are kindly wishing to help me back to health, and expressing their interest by letters, cards, friendly messages, flowers, and other expressions of friendship and good will. And there are many others who are helping to lighten the burden, and lift the cloud in these trying days.

Looking out the window brings many happy memories of days and opportunities of the past. These memories cannot be shut up in a room and kept under lock and key. They defy the limitations of any building. They remain with us wherever we go.

And then outside that window an April storm has been raging, and trying its strength upon the trees and shrubbery. Rain has been falling in torrents, but the clear sky has appeared through the clouds, and these beautiful trees stand secure in the midst of the storm. The storm will soon pass, and these trees will again be clothed in their usual spring and summer garb.

Sometimes, there is a storm on the outside, and then, there is calm.

There is a Divine Power directing life on the inside of a room and providing many blessings on the outside, for those who trust in Him. Have faith in the present, and faith for the future.

CONVENTION PROBLEMS.

Expansion and Finance.

The Church is the body of Christ, a living organization. If life continues, it must grow. If it ceases to grow, life ceases or becomes more or less inactive. Stationary bodies are not cumulative. The church is the Kingdom of God, operative in human society. Its mission is to seek and to save that which is lost, and such as are saved are to be added to the church. The church needs to become more concerned about its mission and less anxious about its permanency. The only salvation of the church is the salvation of the world through the church itself. The church that does not advance has no right to be called a church. The church advances by the practical application of the gospel to the complex problems of society. The gospel is for man and not man for gospel. So long as there are individuals in the world without Christ and without the gospel, so long the church is face to face with the command of the Christ, "Go and teach all nations." Our forefathers were conscious of the command to seek and to save that which was lost. They gave themselves in great fervor to an enthusiastic and inclusive program of evangelism. Great numbers confessed faith in Christ, and churches were organized rapidly.

For the past decade we have been rather slow to plant churches in new fields. We have not been very enthusiastic in forming new organizations. We have been supposed to be conducting a program of conservation, trying to save the churches that we have already planted. A program to save ourselves is not likely to succeed. About the only way to save ourselves is to start out to save the world. About the only way to strengthen our church is to increase the number of churches.

When we think of a program of expansion, the problem of finance is involved. It takes money to build churches and nurture them. It is much more expensive to build churches today than fifty years ago. There is a great deal more money in the world today than there was fifty years ago. We, as people, are more able to give to our church than we were a half-century ago. If we were blessed with a spirit of liberality that possessed at least a part of our people, when our church would expand, we today could expand more rapidly than they. Our liberality has failed to match our prosperity. It would be good for us as a people if we were prospered in this world's goods only to the extent that we were prospered spiritually.

The problem of expansion not only involves finance but involves leadership as well. It is not a part of wisdom to organize a church and not provide for the new organization an inspired and adequate leadership that they may not be discouraged but that always they may be filled with hope and glorious expectation. It would be easier for us today to provide funds for an expanded program of our church than to provide competent and adequate leadership. We have now come to the day when we as a church should become much concerned for ministers for our pulpits and consecrated laymen for our local churches. It would be well for the Convention in its approaching session to lay this matter upon the heart of the church that among other things they might pray definitely, first, that our people may become liberal to the extent that they are prospered, and second, that they would pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers unto His vineyard. We are not producing ministers sufficient to take the places of those who either retire or are called from labor. There are a great many fine young people in our churches who are blessed with talents whom the Lord could use wonderfully in His service. Perhaps by prayer their minds might be opened to the opportunity that they might be enabled to hear the call of God, that the need of the church and of the world might be met through them.

Let us be much concerned that the Portsmouth Convention shall be free of petty contentions and that we may have with us and among us a definite spirit of cooperation and peace so that together we may face the task of supporting the churches that we now have and of formulating plans to organize new churches where they are needed.

L. E. SMITH.

UNITED PROMOTION FOR THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

At the call of President Stanley C. Harrell, members of the various boards of the Southern Convention met in Henderson last week to consider the matter of unifying our convention work. From 10:30 in the morning until 5:00 in the afternoon these representatives of the Church considered our problems and sought to find the best possible solution. It was difficult to agree, but before the day was done a resolution passed expressing the opinion of the group that the convention should have united promotion for all of its boards, asking President Harrell to appoint a committee, or committees, to study details and to be ready to make recommendations to the convention which meets in Portsmouth two weeks hence.

There are several ways in which this can be worked out. The one in which this writer believes is somewhat like this. Keep all boards intact as they are, for the present, at least. Elect a convention secretary or superintendent who will be an executive and field agent for all of the boards and the convention itself. Make this convention official the responsible head for all promotional activities, perhaps including the editing of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Set up a central office with adequate help. By combining the several different offices into one and thereby eliminating some salaries and expense accounts, it is quite possible to do more effective service with the money now being spent for expenses.

The convention may not be inclined to follow this line of reasoning. If it does not, then some other plan must be discovered so that our work may not only continue, but grow. It is certainly not wise for one person to edit THE CHRISTIAN SUN, direct the work of the Board of Christian Education, and pastor a city church. THE CHRISTIAN SUN itself needs full time service, and so do the other two jobs. The convention should face squarely these problems and seek for the best solution without regard to who may now hold office. Office holders are eager that the convention shall do exactly this, and they will abide by the decision of their fellow workers, and do it gladly.

LIFE'S BEAUTIFUL TREASURES.

The other day I looked at a memory book—of "Storms"—and I was wondering . . . why don't you and I make memory books, too? There is so much strength in looking at lovely things, and all about us there is beauty for a look—life's beautiful treasures. "We must own what we own not—

The sunset light upon the sea,
A passing strain of melody
Are ours beyond recall.

What would you put in your memory book? Storms? War? Failures? I'd like to put a rainbow in mine and under it those beautiful words of Gipsy Smith's: "God walked through the fields one day and took the colors of all the flowers and wove

THERE IS A MAN ON THE CROSS.

Whenever there is silence around me
By day or by night—
I am startled by a cry.
It came down from the Cross—
The first time I heard it,
I went out and searched—
And found a man in the throes of crucifixion,
And I said, "I will take you down,"
And I tried to take the nails out of his feet.
But he said, "Let them be
For I cannot be taken down
Until every man, every woman, and every child
Come together to take me down."
And I said, "But I cannot hear you cry.
What can I do?"
And he said, "Go about the world—
Tell everyone that you meet—
There is a man on the Cross."
—Elizabeth Cheney.

them into a beautiful mantle and wrapped it around the shoulders of a shivering storm." I'd like to keep in my memory book the beauty of a reverent face at worship, the loveliness of a lovely soul, the nobility of Christ-like character, or "like a candle white in a hallowed place, the sacred light of an aged face." I'd like to imprison in my memory book the "sachet of blue-bottled wind," the "thunder of the swallows in the chimney," and "the sound of the green grass growing."

Others have treasured them—these beautiful "unconscious hoardings of a soul"; one saved "clear shining after rain," one "the water courses of Reuben," one "the willows" by the rivers of Babylon. One treasured a garden in Arimathaea, one the fragrance of an alabaster box, one the memory of a Supper Table with its beautiful "after dinner speech," one an Upper Room, and One a Cross!

GOD HAS HIS MEMORY BOOK, TOO.

With gentle hand and loving look
God must have made His memory Book;
And there He keeps undimmed by age
Some precious saying on each page,
While from the leaves so oft tear-marred
The fragrance of the spikenard
Still tells in poignant gain and loss
Of Love that suffered on a Cross.
Within these pages' sweet possession
We note His "Word of Intercession;"
Or where a thief's heart doth unharden
We mark His "Word of Kingly Pardon."
And here with tenderness that's rare
Abides His "Word of Filial Care."
The loneliness, the human need
Are treasured here for all to read.
I trace them all; it is for me
That Word of Final Victory" . . .
While His last "Word of Perfect Trust"
Subdues the fearful "dust to dust."
Thank Thee, God, that we may look
At such a precious Memory Book.

Such treasures are priceless. They can never be stolen from us. Such memory books will never get dog-eared, nor out-worn. Such keepsakes will never have to be thrown away for lack of storage room, nor left behind when we take our journey to that Treasure City whose very gates are pearls, whose foundations are made of jewels.

Some treasures come from without. All memory books are made of treasures like that. They become dearer as they are shared with others. Some treasures are mined from within—treasures of character. They become dearest when they are shared with Him. Treasures!

How dear they are—that silken knot of blue,
That yellowed page, that withered rose,
Each true heart knows.

Such trifling things, of little worth are they,
Yet love-gifts—and above our gold
These things we hold.

It may be God has precious keepsakes, too:
The two small mites that one let fall
When 'twas her all.

The spices sweet on which the tear drops fell,
That by those tender hands were borne
On Easter morn.

The fragments of an alabaster box,
Once broken, that a heart its store
Of love might pour.

Small things—yet priceless love-gifts.
Can it be,
That among God's keepsakes there is aught
My love hath brought?

LOUISE INGLES HYDE.

Undoubtedly Christ would have his moments of invective for our modern sinfulness, but it is far more true that, having denounced sin, he would then go back to his main business of demonstrating in personal contacts the contagion of righteousness, because of his very great love for humanity.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

THE EASTER OFFERING.

"This do in remembrance of me," so said our Lord as he gave to the disciples the emblems of His own sacrifice. His body is yet bruised and broken. His heart is still in anguish for a world that is unregenerate. We, too, may give of our self and substance in remembrance of Him. This, we will do on Easter as we lay our dimes, dollars, tokens of our services and self on His altar to be used in sharing His love and His life with others. Every pastor in all our churches of the Southern Convention have been asked, not by the Mission Secretary only, but by the Convention itself, to give all their congregations and all the peoples of their congregations the privilege of making an offering at Easter, that we may share the fact of His Resurrection with those who suffer in ignorance of that fact, whether at home or abroad. We are called upon now, not to show our respect to a Board, or a Secretary, but to show our willingness to share with others the best that has ever come into our own lives, namely, the life of Him, Who said, "I am the Resurrection and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but me." It is because we want to invite men and women, boys and girls, to come unto the Father through and by the power of the Spirit of God as revealed in His Son that we ask all our churches to take the Easter offering for missions. Letters have gone to every pastor for the offering. The case is now in the hands of pastor, the secretary and the congregation in every church. May God in infinite wisdom and love guide each and all, and give to each and all the joy of a glorious Easter.

CHRIST IS ARISEN INDEED.

One cannot go through this week without missing something quite wonderful, if one does not read the accounts given by the four gospel writers of the Crucifixion and Resurrection of our Lord. Try the experiment. It will please and help very decidedly. If one wants an hour, or less, of real enjoyment, just let one read without prejudice and without haste the last chapter of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. Talk about chaste, language, engaging narrative, and the "king's English," to the delight of mind and heart, here you have it. If I did not believe the Bible an inspired Book on any other account I would be forced to believe it solely on the ground of its superb and unparalleled style, sentence construction, gripping narrative. Jesus Christ has arisen indeed. No one person, and certainly no four persons, could write of Him and His Resurrection as the writers, Matthew, Mark, Luke and John have done, unless there was absolute truth, reality, fact, in their narrative. They were not trying to deceive folks; under an influence natural to the point of being supernatural; they were just telling the plain, straight-forward, unvarnished truth. They portray the weakness as well as the strength of the situation they are describing. Some doubted the reality of the Resurrection and these writers tell you so. They didn't try to make one think that all were agreed; they state the facts and hand the case to the jury—that public and those individuals, who were on the jury then and all on the jury yet, deciding in each case for one's self.

And so we come now, whether on the exact day of the year, or not, we come to the event in the world's history, that most important of all events, the Crucifixion and Resurrection of our Lord. As has been so often pointed out the world honors and magnifies other names because of the lives they lived. We worship Jesus Christ because of the death He died. He compelled the men of His time to crucify Him when He was only thirty-three. I say compelled because He would not relinquish the world vision He had of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of all mankind, even in the face of the most cruel and shameful death. By modifying His ideas, by compromise, He might have lived on the earth to have been fifty, or sixty, or seventy.

But there was no compromise. He came to establish the kingdom of God on earth and this He could do by giving Himself, all that He had and was, even in an ignominious death. Here is the world's supreme sacrifice. And He invites all men everywhere to enter in to that sacrifice with Him, and through self-denial for His sake, come to be heirs and joint heirs with Him, in making this a better world, in establishing here on earth the kingdom of heaven. This is that for which He gave Himself on Calvary, and that to which He invites all of us to give ourselves, that He through us and that we through Him, may make a warless world; a world of peace and plenty; a world of justice and mercy; a world of love and brotherhood. This was His task and is today His task through us who are willing to deny ourselves in His name and for His sake.

This is the Resurrection message, the missionary message, ultimate victory through Him who said: "All power in Heaven and on earth hath been given unto me. Go ye therefore."

GUILFORD DISTRICT RALLY.

Women of the Guilford District of the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference met in annual session with Palm Street Congregational-Christian Church, Tuesday, March 30, 1938.

The meeting was called to order by the district superintendent, Mrs. A. B. McFarland, of Guilford College. The program was based on "The Supreme Challenge of the Church," with scripture reading from Isaiah 61:1. Appropriate words of welcome were given by Rev. M. A. Pollard, pastor of the entertaining church.

The roll call showed delegates as follows: Greensboro, First, 20; Greensboro, Palm Street, 16; Monticello, 8; New Lebanon, 3; Reidsville, 3; Pleasant Ridge, 1; Hines Chapel, 8; Winston-Salem, 4. Ministers present were: Revs. B. J. Earp, W. E. Wisseman, J. L. Foster, M. A. Pollard, J. L. Neese, C. L. Moody, Jr., G. C. Crutchfield, and W. M. Jay. Rev. Crutchfield introduced the ministers and visitors to the rally. It was very gratifying to have such a goodly number present; we feel that the pastors of our various churches are behind the missionary societies.

The superintendent's message was most inspiring. Her topic, "The Church and the Missionary Societies," tended to show the necessary relationship and harmony that must exist between the two if we are to help bring God's Kingdom on earth. The Church is dependent on the auxiliary bodies in order to function as God would have it to.

The rally was fortunate to have Mrs. R. J. Sykes as soloist. "My Task," and "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go," were beautifully rendered.

The morning address was delivered by our own Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, an Elon Alumna and North Carolinian, now field worker for the Congregational-Christian Churches of the South. No one could have delivered such an inspiring message and given it in that way of Miss Coghill's. She truly has individuality and personality. Her address, "Saved to Serve," contained, briefly, the following points: (1) The church should have one big organization arranged to include every woman of the church; (2) Each of us should face the existing problems of today—war, race, industry, society, tenants, etc.; (3) Church women should be world-minded—interested in and attempt to understand the problems of the world and attempt to bring about peace; (4) The church should undergird her responsibilities with Christian living.

The morning worship service, in charge of Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, was most challenging and uplifting. The noon meal was bountiful and indeed well prepared by members of Palm Street Missionary Society. The afternoon address by Dr. J. O. Atkinson was read by Mrs. Mattie Cox Parker. Dr. Atkinson was unable to attend the rally in person, but he was there in spirit. His subject, "Good Tidings," showed us that we must minister to those who need us and that we must share with others. The glad tidings become "Good Tidings" when we do this. Our foreign missionaries do not leave when danger confronts them. This takes courage. With Christ as our example, we will strive to attain our goal.

"Our Mountain Work" was delivered in minute detail by Rev. B. J.

AN EASTER PRAYER.

Lord, now that spring is in the world,
And every tulip is a cup
Filled with the wine of Thy great love,
Lift Thou me up.

Raise Thou my heart as flowers arise
To greet the glory of Thy day,
With soul as clean as lilies are,
And white as they.

Let me not fear the darkness now,
Since Life and Light break through Thy tomb;

Tcach me that doubts no more oppress,
No more consume.

Show me that Thou art April, Lord,
And Thou the flowers and the grass;
Then, when awake the soft spring winds,
I'll hear Thee pass!

—Charles Hanson Towne.

Earp, home missionary in Carroll County, Va. There are many difficulties, obstacles, etc., that must be overcome before the mountain people will be won to Christ. The Mission Board wisely chose the present representative, he is alert, interested, and truly a man of God.

The following officers were elected: Superintendent, Mrs. Viola Cockman, Greensboro; Assistant, Mrs. D. E. Mitchell, Reidsville; Secretary, Vera Geringer, Brown Summit; Assistant Secretary, Mrs. Fred Rudd, Greensboro.

Heretofore, Winston-Salem Church has not been on record in this district. It is now on the rally record and should be placed on State roll. There is an active society there. Dr. W. M. Jay is pastor, and the Guilford District Rally is to meet there next spring.

It was moved and carried that henceforth all delegates to this rally are to pay 25c per plate for lunch to the entertaining church.

This was one of the best rallies this district has held. More than seventy registered delegates and visitors were present.

ALAMANCE MISSIONARY RALLY.

Under the splendid leadership of Miss Sadie Fonville, president of the Alamance District of the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference, the district rally was held at Union Christian church, Union Ridge, North Carolina, March 29th, with very good attendance.

The meeting opened with devotionals led by Rev. Millard Stevens, pastor of the host church, and the program: "The Supreme Challenge of the Church," carried the theme, "To Give a Garland Instead of Ashes," throughout the day.

The following ministers were present: Dr. J. H. Lightbourne, Rev. B. J. Earp, G. C. Crutchfield. State officers present were: Mrs. J. H. Lightbourne, president of Woman's Board of the Conference, Burlington; Mrs. H. D. Lambeth, secretary, Elon College; Mrs. W. R. Sellars, superintendent of Spiritual Life, Burlington; Mrs. W. M. Hook, superintendent of the Cradle Roll department, Elon College.

The superintendent's message was splendid. Miss Fonville has made during her chairmanship of the district, a most faithful worker. She chose for her subject, "The Church and the Missionary Societies."

Miss Patty Lee Coghill, Jacksonville, Fla., was at her best when she spoke interestingly on "Saved to Serve."

The ladies of the Union church served a nice dinner in the hut near the church and at 1:30 they gathered again in the church for the afternoon session, which opened with devotionals by Dr. J. H. Lightbourne, Burlington. Dr. J. O. Atkinson's message, "Good Tidings," was heartily enjoyed by all. Rev. B. J. Earp gave an interesting account of "Our Mountain Work."

Miss Tora Rudd was elected president of the District the coming year, and Mrs. Mattie Parker, assistant, with Mrs. L. L. Hooper, secretary. By invitation the meeting next year is to be with Bethlehem church.

BANQUET FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

There will be a banquet for young people at the Southern Convention meeting in Portsmouth, Va., on Thursday evening, April 28th, from 6:15 to 7:45 o'clock. The Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship is planning this banquet program. The prospects are good for a very profitable and pleasant evening. Rev. Leonard M. Outerbridge, executive secretary of our denominational boards, will be the speaker for the convention that evening. It is hoped that every young person who can do so will be present for the banquet and the evening session.

AN EASTER MEDITATION.

By DOROTHY FRENCH,

Superintendent of Devotional Life,
Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship.

Throughout the dim and misty ages of all time men have been seeking God; as this Easter-tide draws near, we are even more aware that, despite all the materialism of our times, men are still seeking God. Youth is a part of those who are involved in this great search. When, in fact, have young people ever been more genuine in their search for the eternal truths of the universe? Some may argue that it isn't God that is being sought always but merely food and clothes, shelter and rest; nevertheless there is something that urges men on, something that will not let them stop. This has been true since the world began, throughout all ages, among all the races and nations of the earth.

"For this is life. . . . To know. . . . God."

"Our hearts are restless till they find their rest in Thee."

There is a book, a library no less, of stories and songs, history and biography, sermon and drama, that presents a moving-picture from the lives of people of all ages long ago, of their adventures along the way as they found God and of what he has to do with everyday life. At first God seemed far away and unwilling to be known, but this was because their knowledge was limited and only increased gradually as their interests became broader and they learned to be fair, friendly and unselfish with other people. At last came One who tried to make everyone see that God is not a thing to be afraid of, but a Father full of loving kindness; unselfish and concerned only for the well-

WILL THE TEACHINGS OF JESUS WORK TODAY?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR APRIL 24, 1938.

SCRIPTURE: Matt. 5: 9, 38-48; 7: 12.

Daily Readings—

Monday—Jesus' Hard Sayings—John 6: 57-59.

Tuesday—Jesus' Sayings on Preparing for the Future—Matt. 6: 24-34.

Wednesday—Do Jesus' Sayings On Prayer Work?—Matt. 7: 7-12.

Thursday—Is Divine Healing Practical?—Mark 16: 17-20.

Friday—Are Men "Born Again" Today?—John 3: 1-13.

Saturday—Dare We Practice All the Sermon On the Mount?—Matt. 7: 24-29.

E. Stanley Jones says: "Everybody is breaking up. Everything will have to be made new. After what image? That is for the younger generation throughout the world to say." Amid the crash of empires and change of things, there are those who say, "Let us maintain the state of things as they are." There are others who say, "Let us have a better day in which the right of life and the pursuit of happiness shall be more equally guaranteed." These two types of persons "Call each other names." The one is called a conservative. The other is called a liberal or radical.

In the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus uses "salt" and "light"—(Matt. 5: 13-16). "Salt" saves, or keeps. That would be conservative. "Light" shows the way by enlightening the mind and heart. Is it possible to be both "conservative" and "enlightened." Read I Thess. 5: 21.

For Consideration—

1. How do I know Jesus is interested in my personal religious life?
2. What new attitudes should I develop?
3. What teachings did Jesus give on evangelism?
4. Why do I believe Jesus believed in peace?
5. When does pleasure become a danger, and fun become sin?
6. How did Jesus feel toward Samaritans in His day?
7. Who should take the first step, and how to eliminate prejudice?
8. How do we know that Jesus believed in the Church?
9. How can I be more loyal to other Christians and to the Church?
10. How should we prepare ourselves to get the most from Church worship?

Suggested Hymns—

"This Is My Father's World."

"Lord, Speak To Me, That I May Speak."

"Work For the Night Is Coming."

LESSON III—APRIL 17, 1938.

GOLDEN TEXT: This Jesus did God raise up, whereof we all are witnesses.—Acts 2:32.

SCRIPTURE LESSON: Acts 2:22-36.

Before discussing in general outline the lesson for today, it might be well to call attention to the fact that the sermon from which it was taken—Peter's sermon at Pentecost—a sermon that is so sound, so simple, so scriptural, and so spiritual that it is a pattern or example for preaching at its best even today, and a sermon that brought five thousand to Christ, was preached by one who at one time was a rough, and apparently an uneducated, certainly an untrained man, a fisherman. When Jesus first saw him He saw all too clearly the man's limitations, his lack of self-control, his instability, his impetuosity, his rough and ready self-confidence. But He also saw just as clearly his finer possibilities and his potential strength. "Thou art Simon; thou shalt be Peter (A Rock)" said Jesus. And Jesus with Peter's help, and Peter with Jesus' help made the thing come true. As Peter came under the influence of Jesus' teaching and influence, and as he responded to it and yielded to it, he became a new man. Here at the beginning of this lesson we find an illustration of newness of life through Christ, of which the Easter story is the prophecy and the pledge. We have no idea of what we could become and what we could do if only we would completely and consistently surrender our lives to Christ, and respond to His call.

The Man Christ Jesus.

"Ye men of Israel, hear these words: Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God unto you by mighty works and wonders and signs which God did by Him in the midst of you, even as ye yourselves know." Peter began with the historic Jesus, the Son of Man. Christianity begins there. It is rooted in a historic person, the Man Christ Jesus. God had given abundant evidence that His spirit was in Him and His approval upon Him. Mighty works evidenced supernatural power at work through Him, amazement and wonder accompanied these mighty works, and signs were given that God was well pleased in His Son. These listeners of Peter knew this, these things had been done in their very midst. Jesus cannot be explained away. He presents a stubborn historic fact. It may be difficult to explain Jesus; it is impossible to explain Him away.

The Crucified Jesus.

"Him being delivered up by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye by the hand of lawless men did crucify and slay." These men had crucified Jesus of Nazareth. He had come unto his own and his own had received him not. But his death on the Cross had not been an accident or even an incident. God had sent His Son into the world to be the Saviour of the world, and the Cross of Christ was an essential factor in that salvation. Furthermore

FOR ME.

Under an Eastern sky,
Amid a rabble cry,
A man went forth to die,
For me!

Thorn-crowned his blessed head,
Blood-stained his every tread,
Cross-laden on he sped,
For me!

Pierced glow his hands and feet,
Thru hours o'er him did beat
Fierce rays of noon-tide heat,
For me!

Thus went thou made all mine,
Lord make me wholly thine,
Give grace and strength divine,
To me!

In thought and word and deed,
They will to do; ah! lead my feet
E'en though they bleed,
To thee!

Author Unknown.

Christ was not an unwilling sacrifice. They had crucified Him with His consent. He had power to lay down His life and the Father had given Him power to take it again. Christ gave himself for our sins. By the obedience of one man were many made righteous. It took courage for Peter to charge those men with crucifying his Master. The Spirit had changed Peter from a fearful, weak, disheartened disciple into a courageous, strong, victorious apostle. The Spirit of God gives power to witness for Christ.

The Risen Christ.

"Whom God raised up, having loosed the pangs of death; because it was not possible that He should be holden of it." The resurrection of Christ is a historic fact. It was the absolute consciousness and conviction of this fact that so completely transformed the disciples and sent them out to conquer the world. The history of the Christian Church is a continuing witness to this fact. There may be some mystery as to the "how" of the resurrection; there can be no question as to the "fact" of the resurrection. As Peter says "it was not possible that he should be holden of it (death). The universe would be a hollow and a blasphemous mockery if such a one as Christ should die. It would be contrary to all common sense if the universe did not conserve human and personal values. Peter marshalled a list of scriptures to prove to his hearers that Christ should rise from the dead. But the most vital thing he said was that they were all "witnesses" of that fact. After all the resurrection is not so much a thing to be explained, as something to be experienced. "This Jesus did God raise up," said Peter, "whereof we all are witness." The true Christian can witness to the fact that Christ lives and is alive forever more.

The Spirit of the Living Christ.

"Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, he hath poured forth this, which ye see and hear." After He rose from the dead He appeared to His disciples often enough and over long enough a period to convince them that He actually was alive for evermore. Then He withdrew His visible appearance from them—He ascended up into heaven, He became a part of the spiritual and unseen order. But He did not withdraw His spiritual presence and help. At Pentecost He manifested Himself with power through the coming of the Holy Spirit. Hereafter the disciples had Him as a continuing presence. The Holy Spirit is the Spirit of the Father who was manifested in the historic Jesus mediating the spirit of the eternal Christ in the common experiences of men. Jesus has not left us comfortless, or alone, or orphans, as one rendering makes it. Through the Holy Spirit He is at work in the hearts of His followers and in the world. He has promised to give His power to those who undertake His work. "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you."

The Lord and Christ.

"Let all the house of Israel therefore know assuredly that God hath made Him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom ye crucified." The stone which had been rejected by the builders had become the cornerstone of a new and eternal spiritual order. That meek man whom they had crucified and as they thought put to death on

MONDAY.

THE QUIET HOUR.

I have a little inner shrine
Where I take me every day,
To hide away for just awhile
From life and work and play.

There, from a living fount I draw
Of deep and boundless love,
To come away refreshed and filled
With strength from God above.

TUESDAY.

SWEET FOR THE BITTER.

"The water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life."—John 3: 5-15.

We are told that in the Mediterranean beyond Syria there is a spring of sweet water springing up with such force that it pushes aside the salty sea water and it may be dipped up and drunk. This spring, they say, is fed by the Lebanon Mountains.

This freshwater spring in a salty sea is a picture of the springs of eternal life in the Christian soul.
However alien or hostile might be the surroundings, the Christian soul is fed from the hills of heaven and are kept sweet—midst all life's bitter surroundings.

Prayer—Our Father in Heaven, be Thou the refreshing of our souls midst the worldliness of this life with all its bitterness. Feed Thou our souls by the all-powerful refreshing of Thy spirit. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

AS A LITTLE CHILD.

"Jesus called a little child unto Him, and set him in the midst of them"—(Matt. 18: 1-6, 10-14), and said,

"Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Luke 22: 32.

Jesus was always a friend to little children. It is assumed also that little children knew this for they were often with Him. So true was the spirit of the child that He identified Himself with their lot, and when the older ones objected He told them that of such is the kingdom of God, and that they must become like them.

Prayer—Teach us the lessons of simple trust and happiness. Amen.

THURSDAY.

ARE PARENTS ALWAYS RIGHT?

"Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right."—Eph.
6: 1-8.

Our minds often hark back to our parents and their early homes, habits and customs. We recall the family altar, the church-going habit, and the simple family pleasures. They never knew a night-club, a cock-tail party, or a motion picture, and many other things so well known to life today.
Their conversation was not always "smart," but they believed that walking with God was the secret of success and somehow they seemed to have laid upon the springs of happiness.

We feel sure that many modern parents are not always right, but the text places obligation "in the Lord."
As fine as the present generation may be, we long to see them inclined to the faith of our fathers and to seek Him who is the fulness of life.
Parents can be right only in obedience to their Heavenly Father.

Prayer—Our Father, we know that the dizzy modern world does not satisfy.
We pray to Thee to give us the simple faith of our fathers and a trust in their devoted spirits. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE SOUL'S SOLE ESSENTIAL.

"We look . . . at the things which are not seen: for the things . . . which are not seen are eternal."—
II Cor. 4: 18.

We are impelled to look at life from the spiritual viewpoint or lose its value entirely. Life is just what we do every day, and it is filled with hundreds of modern inventions that demand our time—radios and automobiles, etc. . . . But we are certain that heaven does not look at life through these things; if so there are hosts of the ages past who never saw such things and therefore lost.

In a word, mere things are not essential to life. All great qualities of character are possible without modern luxuries. The soul is the sole essential of the worthy life.

Prayer—Our Father, help us to live by the wooings of Thy Spirit as it is in Jesus Christ. We like things.
Thou hast given them to us. But forbid that we shall cling to them. Make us rich in soul for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SATURDAY.

A BEAUTIFUL NAME.

"Holy and reverend is His name."
—Psalms 111.

We are told that the Moslem has ninety names for their God, and all their devotees know them.

How many names for God have you? How many beautiful characteristics of God do you know? He is a God of love, peace, mercy. He is Father, Wonderful Counselor, Mighty, etc. . . .

It is feared that we are not trained to meditate upon God's names and the characteristics by which He is known. It is a good exercise to read the Bible looking for His names. As you proceed, make a list of what you find.

Prayer—O Lord, teach our hearts to extol Thy infinite qualities, and to meditate upon Thy name both day and night. Amen.

CHRISTIANITY IN THE SUBCONSCIOUS

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D., Pastor.

THIS WATCH.

By REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

"He made everything beautiful."—Ecc. 3: 11.

This morning I am going to talk to you boys and girls about this beautiful watch. My text found in God's Word is: "He made everything beautiful." But let me tell you in the out-start that you are far more beautiful than this beautiful watch. God's children are the most beautiful things God ever made. But let us talk about this watch.

First—It has a chain. That is to keep it from getting lost, or being dropped and broken. You are bound to your God with chords of love for the very same reason. Do not break that chain by bad habits of neglect, or indulgence, or wrong-doing. Strengthen that chain by attending Sunday school and church every Sunday morning; and by remembering to pray every day.

Second—It has a message. In fact that is what this watch is for, to tell its message. Its message is the time of day. Let me ask it what time is it, O beautiful watch, and it replies at the present moment, six minutes past eleven. And this watch is always ready with its message. I have some engagement to keep, some time to make, some work to do; and this watch is faithful to proclaim its message to me to help me. Boys and girls, you, too, have a message. For your message the world is waiting, friends, and fellow citizens will be needing, and are even now needing your message. Be faithful in proclaiming it.

Third—It has work to do. Its work and its message go hand in hand, or its work is to move its hands constantly, steadily toward fulfillment of its duty. It could not give forth its message unless the labor went on within. There is something within, alive, ticking, working, moving, that keeps it in constant preparation to tell its message. Its work is announcing the time of day and night. It is what goes on within that makes the hands give their signals. You are here now thinking about God, and religion, and Jesus' noble life, and his work of love for us, and his challenge of duty to us; you are here to talk to God in spirit, to close your eyes in worship, and open your hearts in love, to sing—ah! all these things are helping that something within in preparation for the work without which is yours to do.

Fourth—It has power. There is strength within this watch—a power plant is in there which we call a mainspring. That mainspring is so fashioned that its power serves both to pull, and to hold-back! If it pulled too fast it would cause the hands to tell a falsehood. We go too fast and our lives are warped out of their right place. But in this watch there is that which holds back. This makes the watch tick off its time just like the stars move in their orbits. This watch and the stars walk side by side! You may walk side by side, boys and girls, with the stars of the universe if you do not go too fast, nor loiter along the way. Or let me say this if we keep our lives "chained" to God, through Jesus, we shall walk with the eternal God; and be somebody in the world.

Let me call your attention to the simple, but very important fact that this mainspring must be tightened regularly. That is called winding the watch. If that is not done the watch does not, cannot, do its work! You may in very truth tell a neighbor tomorrow that yesterday morning you were winding your spiritual watch when you attended church. You wind your spiritual watch when you talk to God in the morning and evening in prayer, and you wind your spiritual watch when you listen to him in Bible reading, or quiet thoughtfulness. Do you want power? Pray! Worship God in his holy places, commune with him, for in that there is strength.

You need power to hold back from temptation to do wrong, or to failure to do right; to refrain speaking an ugly word, or making an unkind wish, or doing a bad deed. Power to pull forward courageously is found in this watch. That power came from "winding the mainspring regularly," and you will have power if you do neglect your spiritual needs.

Fifth—It is valuable. This watch cost a lot of money. It has solid gold about it, twenty-one jewels in it, high grade brass, and very fine steel within it—and only think of all it took to go deep into several different mines of the earth, and about the world to get the metals found herein. Even this beautiful, thin crystal, was once mere sand and other such things. This watch cost more than money. Hard work, great skill, inventive genius, rich personality lies back of it in the watchmakers that made it, and the honesty and integrity of the men who merchandised it, all these things are back of it to make it cost a great deal. You cost far more. God's word says, "You are bought with a price." And that is a very real price. You are infinitely valuable.

Sixth—It is a result. Back of this watch is the mind that made it, that designed it, and decided its purpose and destiny. This watch did not just happen. It is the result of thought. Thinking is back of this watch. Back of this world, as true in its moments, is God who thought about it, and each of you.

Seventh—It is a gift. A surprise, for it was given to me! At Christmas time somebody thought about it, and others were told about it, and they all thought of the joy it would give me, and the help it would be in my work—help me not to preach too long sermons, I suspect—and help me not to start my services too soon, for I have always been tempted to begin a service before the time had arrived. I like to be on time. And so the first church I had after seminary days gave me this beautiful watch, or the money, and I had the pleasure of purchasing it. And I like it! It is a gift! A good and noble gift! You are God's gift to your parents and the world, and God has given you the greatest of all gifts.

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." How lovely Jesus is! And He is a Gift!

God made everything beautiful.

worn to the breaking point and lost control of his actions. However, we are told that this loss of control did not get him into trouble, for he had a subconscious self which through the habits of years functioned properly.

After all, the character of any individual is that which reveals itself when he is free from surveillance or restraint. A man's character is what he is when nobody is looking; it is what he is in the dark.

Prayer—Our Father, we pray for the integrity and the truth of Jesus Christ in our inward self. Wherever we go, whatever we do, and whatever befalls us, we pray that we may always be found true. Amen.

"Whenever we think of the actions of our fellow-men it is the part of love to be slow in judging their motives."

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Our little children are looking forward to the school closing which is just one more month. They are having their school plays and quite a number of our little folks are in the plays. Oh! how happy they are to be in the plays and how they do enjoy the privilege of having a part. Parents enjoy seeing their children act their parts well. When the plays are given whether it is raining or not, the parents are there.

The writer makes it a point to attend the school plays because we always have a number of children in the plays. We like to encourage them by going to see them act and we, too, get lots of joy out of it. The orphanage has two to graduate this year. A boy and a girl. The girl will enter college next fall. The boy will seek work where he can earn his own living.

It is just as heart-breaking to the children here to leave when their time comes to go, as it is in our own home.

It has been home to them. It is their only home now. The writer will remember the day he left home to establish his own home and make his success or failure without parental care. His eyes filled with tears and a lump in his throat that almost choked him. Several years ago we had a girl who had finished her high school course and had taken the business course at Elon College. She had secured a splendid position. The day came for her to go. She went up stairs and got her suit case and came down. When she started to tell us good-bye she broke down and wept as if her heart would break. She said: "I did not know it would be so heart-breaking to leave the orphanage." She has made good and is now educating her younger brother out of her savings.

The orphanage has three girls and one boy who will finish their business course the last of May and they, too, will have the same experience.

It touches one's heart when a child comes in the institution and as it grows and develops into a young man or woman, as the case may be, they grow into your heart as your own and then when the time comes for them to go out it often brings a heart-ache and a silent tear. It is great that children who have been left homeless and helpless in the world to have a home that the church has established, to which they can go. It gives them an opportunity to make good and be useful citizens of our great country.

the Cross was God's Anointed One, the Christ who should come. And because He had been obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross, God had highly exalted Him and given Him a name that is above every name. Jesus the Christ is also Lord. He shall rule forever and ever and of His kingdom there shall be no end. Our modern world needs this message. It looks sometimes as if things had gone to the dogs. But the future belongs to Him. With inspired insight and foresight John saw that the time would come when the kingdoms of this world would become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ. The question is, "Is He my Lord?" "Do I acknowledge Him as my King?"

A COUNTRYMAN SAYS:

March 21st—the first day of spring, so the almanac says. The farmer's New Year. It was Solomon sang:

For lo, the winter is past,
The rain is over and gone;
The flowers appear upon the earth,
And the time of the singing of birds is come.

A time of resurrection of nature, hope, aspiration, energy, and endeavor. And so, with all this newness of life about him, the farmer goes about his task of preparation and sowing of the seed which may bring forth a harvest that will sustain and bless humanity.

As nature's New Year begins, and we farmers begin our new year's work, if our work ever begins or ends, we feel that no other calling or profession requires more planning and more patience than ours. The world wants results, and wants them now, and can hardly wait to sow the seed and wait until the harvest. The farmer through necessity, if not otherwise, cooperates with his Maker in his dependence upon the forces of nature even from the germination of the seed until the time of reaping.

In this work courage, faith, patience, and industry are necessary for success. Can every farmer be a success? A man is a success if he is a good man. The prophet described Jehovah's tests of a good man: "And what doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" Three simple tests indeed, but tests upon which many of us sadly fail. Tests which are not out of our reach, and may be passed by him who would cherish the comradeship of the Divine Partner.

AN EASTER MEDITATION.

fare of His children; whose love is not confined to a chosen few but gathers in all people. The Bible presents for us the most thrilling book of real life ever written. It is very much alive, but one has to enter it himself with his imagination on tip-toe, to find the aliveness in it. Within its pages we can sing the songs of the Psalmist as he stands under the night skies, or as he, with others, makes a pilgrimage to Jerusalem to worship in the temple there; listen to the Words of the prophets of old, which are still so applicable in our times; sorrow with those who are in exile, and rejoice with those who are triumphant; sit down by the lakeside or upon the mountain to join the crowds who listen to the stories Jesus tells; it may be in the market place or along the road to church that the story is told, but wherever it may be, we can wholeheartedly enter into the spirit, the movement of it all and be dazzled by the greatness it unfolds. In this way the "Book" can truly come alive.

Slowly the Bible of the race is writ,
And not on paper leaves nor leaves of stone;
Each age, each kindred, adds to it
Texts of despair, or hope, or joy, or moan.
While swings the sea, while mists the mountain shroud,
While thunder's surges burst on cliffs of cloud,
Still at the prophets' feet the nations sit.

Why, when there are so many places where people can find God will they continue to say, "Where is God that we may find Him?" There are some who believe He exists primarily among the planets and stars, in the great out-of-doors, in the infinite forms of nature everywhere. They think of looking for Him only in what is beautiful; but He equally exists in all the tragic forms of life—in fact, wherever a human being breathes, there is God. Wherever there is life of any kind, there, at the heart of it, is God at work. And just as all men have a restless longing to reach out to a Power greater than themselves so does God Himself have a deep longing to speak in some way with each other of us. In the solitary wilderness there burst upon Moses the inexplicable beauty of the "burning bush." Quietly he stood before the beauty of it and clearly heard God speak. And thus vividly he realized that he stood on holy ground.

How vast today, even as in Moses' time, are the possibilities for us to know God and dedicate our lives to His work. We can sing praises that we have been privileged to look up into His face and find that He is loving; in the wonder of the hills, the waters, the sky, we have found that God is infinite; in the people of the world we have seen His works; in the city we have heard Him calling us. And now, at this Easter season, we can rededicate ourselves to the need of those who have not seen Him here. In the chill of their indifference, in the fire of their mockings, in the shadowland of their unbelief, we can pray that our spirits may be kept broad awake. In a land where democracies are on the decrease, where men are led only by a desire for selfish gain, where nations are preparing for a warfare more destructive than ever before in the history of man, youth must needs realize their task is great—that it will demand courage and foresight, a relentless energy and untiring labor, and a fine spiritual stamina.

May it not be true that the times are so difficult as to seem hopelessly confused, and that we may be completely overwhelmed by the task required of us? Must we not often feel with Jeanne D'Orge:

I wish there were Someone
Who would hear my confession.
Not a priest—I do not want to be told of my sins;
Not a mother—I do not want to give sorrow;
Not a friend—he would not know enough;
Not a lover—he would be too partial;
Not God—He is far away;
But Someone who would be a friend, lover, mother, priest, God, all in one
And a stranger besides—who would not condemn or interfere;
Who when everything is said from beginning to end,
Would show the reason of it all
And tell you to go ahead
And work it out your own way.

After all isn't this what prayer means? God is not far away. "Closer is He than breathing; nearer than hands or feet." And in the end we will have to work it out for ourselves with God's help. In that Book which has withstood all the ravages of time and all the criticisms of non-believers God has given us the solutions to all problems—in living examples of His own can we work out the destiny of the world. But only through concentrated and devoted study can this have any hopes of accomplishment. Daily can we devote a portion of our time to the study of His word and receive in return an inspiration for the spiritual way of life, that will make our opportunities for good boundless as the rim of the world. The building of the spiritual life is a steady and gradual process.

Many of us have been putting forth a special effort toward this daily devotion to the word of God during these days of Lent. Realizing its greatness and the beauty and strength it adds to our lives, let us continue it through all the days of all the years.

Thus by a few working together can the whole universe be drawn into a great spiritual way of life that will break down all the barriers of strife and war, selfishness and ruthless dealings with others, pain and all the useless sufferings of humanity.

Let us then labour for an inward stillness,
An inward stillness and an inward healing;
That perfect silence where the lips and heart
Are still and we no longer entertain
Our own imperfect thoughts and vain opinions,
But God alone speaks in us, and we wait
In singleness of heart, that we may know
His will, and in the silence of our spirits,
That we may do His will, and do that only.

Irony and satire are powerful whips, but a whip is the most useless thing conceivable in the quest of truth and a good understanding.

FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH,
Portsmouth, Virginia.

The Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches will meet here for its biennial session next week. The Rev. Robert Lee House is the pastor.

LET THERE BE LIGHT

PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES

A partial report to the Secretary of Evangelism of the Eastern Virginia Conference shows that on Easter Sunday those churches reporting added a total of 78 to their membership. It is hoped that churches which have not yet reported will do so before the convening of the Southern Convention.

Rev. J. Everette Neese sent a good letter to his people just before Easter on a beautiful letterhead which carried a picture of the cross and the Christ with a statement "Christ Is Risen." The letter announced services for Holy Week and Easter Sunday. Such letters have real value in church work.

All young people who can possibly do so should plan to be present for the young people's banquet at First Christ Church, Portsmouth, from 6:15 to 7:45 Thursday evening. There will be a fine program and those who attend will want to hear Rev. Leonard M. Outerbridge at the evening hour. The banquet ticket is 40c.

Men of the Southern Convention will be interested in the banquet for men at 6 o'clock Wednesday evening during the convention next week at Portsmouth. The banquet will be held at the Shelton Congregational Church, and the price is 50c. The principle speaker will be Mr. Donald Adams, who is doing work among men for our denomination.

Rev. James R. Clinton, D. D., of Philadelphia, Pa., is to give the commencement address at Thorsby Institute this year on Monday morning, May 30th. Dr. Clinton was born and educated in Ireland and began his preaching there. Later he came to the United States because of his wife's health and was pastor for several years of the Central Congregational Church in Philadelphia.

The 20th International Convention of Christian Education, under the auspices of the International Council of Religious Education, will meet at Columbus, Ohio, June 28 to July 3, next. A fine program is in the making. Any who may be interested in attending can receive further information by writing to the Board of Christian Education at 514 South Main Street, Norfolk, Va., or to the International Council of Religious Education, 203 N. Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Chairmen of the boards of the Southern Convention met at Norlina, on last Tuesday, to consider further the plans for united promotion in the Southern Convention. Prospects are that the convention, which meets in Portsmouth, Va., next week, will mean much for the future of our southern church. Be sure to be there at the opening on Tuesday and stay through until the close on Friday. The work of the Church is the most important we have to do.

"The Times" of Chattanooga, Tenn., for April 11th, carried the picture and a long article concerning our minister there, Rev. Milo J.

REV. S. C. HARRELL, D. D.

President of the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches and pastor of Main Street Christian Church, Durham, N. C.

Sweet. The church celebrated his second anniversary by adopting resolutions of appreciation for the service which Rev. Mr. Sweet has rendered to the church and pledging their personal loyalty to the church and its minister. Rev. Mr. Sweet held services each night during Holy Week and has evidently carried on a very constructive type of work during the past two years at Union Congregational Church. Dr. James R. Clinton has recently held services in this church, and Mr. Sweet speaks very highly of Dr. Clinton and the work he is doing.

THE FLORIDA CONFERENCE.

The fifty-fifth annual meeting of the Florida Congregational-Christian Conference is in session this week at the First Congregational Church, Tampa. THE CHRISTIAN SUN regrets that the program did not arrive in time for publication.

The program centers around the theme, "Christ At the Heart of Life." Interesting features are "Interpreting Christ to Others," by Rev. Everette B. Lesher, of Jacksonville; "What Christ Means to Me," Rev. Victor B. Chicoine, of Winter Park; "Making the Life of the Church Christian," by Rev. Elisha A. King, of Miami Beach; "Christ's Man and a Christian Society," Rev. J. Bernard Root, Sanford; "Christ At the Heart of the World," Rev. Leonard M. Outerbridge, of New York; and conferences for men, ministers and women.

Officers of the conference are: Moderator, J. H. Winchester, St. Petersburg; Treasurer, Chas. A. Hoyt, Jacksonville; Supt. and Registrar, Dr. Edwin C. Gillette; Associate Supt., Rev. W. T. Scott; Director of Religious Education, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill; President of Board of Directors, Rev. Elisha A. King, D. D.

TO MARRY IN JUNE.

The following announcement appeared in the April 17th issue of the Orlando Sentinel-Star (Florida):

"Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Carleton of Winter Park, Fla., announce the engagement of their daughter, Emily, to the Rev. F. C. Lester, of Norfolk, Va., son of Mrs. Elizabeth J. Lester and the late George Thomas Lester. The wedding is to be an event of early June.

"Miss Carleton is a graduate of the Winter Park schools and of Florida State College for Women, where she was a member of Alpha Chi Omega sorority and Phi Kappa Phi, national scholastic honorary. For the past five years she has been a member of the faculty of the Winter Park High School. She is editor of the Young People's page in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and secretary of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship.

"Mr. Lester is a graduate of Elon College (N. C.) and of the Divinity School of Yale University. He is the pastor of the First Christian Church of Norfolk, Va., and the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN."

The many friends of this couple will join with the staff of THE CHRISTIAN SUN in wishing for them a long continuance of the useful lives which they have led and a happiness that shall never fail them. J. T. K.

OUR OCEAN VIEW CHURCH.

CHRISTIAN SUN readers have not heard much from the Ocean View Church recently, not because there is nothing to write about, but simply because no one has taken the time to write about what is actually happening here. As a matter of fact, more real progress can be noted over the past few months than in any period since we have been here. Both from the standpoint of the organization of the church for work and what is actually being done, we have a very favorable report to make.

For a long time the people here have wished that the church had furniture that would give it the appearance of a place of worship. It is difficult to produce effective services of worship in a house that does not have anything in the way of religious symbolism in its furnishings. Until recently the Ocean View Church was merely a large hall. We have secured a fine suit of light oak furniture consisting of pews and complete altar furnishings which fits into our church very nicely. The furniture adds so much to our church and we are thoroughly enjoying the use of it.

In addition to these furnishings the church has been completely screened, two Sunday school rooms have been completed, and a kitchen equipped which can also be used for a classroom.

All the improvement at the church has been done on a cash basis. All labor has been donated so that the only expense was for material used. The total cost of all improvements has amounted to over $700.00.

While doing this work on the church we have not neglected the church debt. The mortgaged indebtedness of the church has been reduced to less than $100.00 and we owe less than $100.00 on the furniture. The Christian Missionary Association has stood by the church and helped in clearing up our debt.

So far as the organization activities are concerned the church is very active. Under the direction of Mr. L. R. Bartholomew, the Sunday school is moving along nicely with a very loyal group of teachers. Monthly teachers and officers meetings are held. The Young People's Christian Endeavor meets on Tuesday night, and the Junior Society of Christian Endeavor meets on Sunday night. The church is sponsoring a Boy Scout troop which meets on Friday night. The Missionary society is meeting all the requirements for an honor society. The Ann French Circle is the first really active organization I have ever seen that did not have a president. The circle meets each Tuesday for a covered luncheon and each time some person is selected to preside at that session. The adult choir and the young people's choir take alternate Sunday nights in singing for church worship.

The Mission Board is making a good investment here in the young people who are growing up in the church, as well as in the regular channels of the church service.

JOE A. FRENCH,
Pastor.

ANTIOCH.

Our church, under the leadership of our beloved pastor, Rev. W. J. Andes of Harrisonburg, is moving along fine.

Last spring the balcony of the church was made into three Sunday school rooms. These are used by the Primary, Junior, and Young People's Classes. They have been a great help in many ways. Our Sunday school has only an enrollment of 75, but we have a very fine class of 21 young people. At the present time we are working on a debate with one of the churches in Harrisonburg. On February 13th, our class had charge of devotional services for Sunday school. We observed Race Relations Sunday, building our program around the theme: "The Negro."

Last fall a truck load of apples was donated and delivered to the Christian Orphanage at Elon. Mr. Moody Niswander furnished the truck and hauled the apples.

A pageant was presented at Christmas, but due to bad weather there was a small crowd and our offering for superannuation was not what we had hoped it would be.

Recently we had the privilege of having the Linville-Edom High School Glee Club to sing for us. Several of the Glee Club are members of our Sunday school. They rendered an excellent program of sacred hymns and several Negro spirituals. Also Rev. Roy D. Coulter, of New Market, supplied our pulpit in the absence of our pastor, who was in North Carolina. Rev. Mr. Coulter brought a

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

THE BEAUTY OF THE CROSS.

When Jesus looked forward to his cross he could see little beauty in it. To the disciples it was stark tragedy. As the women who followed him from Galilee looked at Jesus on the cross they could see no beauty. It was probably a rough log to which the Roman soldiers nailed the hands and feet of Jesus. Crucifixion was the most disgraceful method of death.

But a few hundred years later the Romans set their hands of skill to make beautiful crosses. Looking back to Calvary they saw something beautiful and made of wood and gold beautiful crosses.

A Jewish writer who had looked back on the cross of Jesus and gloried in it said there were three things that abide. When the Romans began making their beautiful crosses they planted them on a pedestal with three foundations. The bottom one was love, the middle hope, and the top one faith.

The cross of Jesus was planted in the love of God. The reason for the cross was that "God so loved." Without that love of God there would have been no cross for His Son. Out of that love grows hope—hope that overcomes difficulties, hope that looks beyond the present to the future, hope that brings heaven down to earth. Beyond the hope is faith—faith that reaches up through the cross to the heart of God, and faith that comes down from above and permeates human life. When the Romans made beautiful crosses they planted them on a pedestal of faith and hope and love, for all of these were to be found on a rugged cross of Calvary.

Beyond the dark clouds that overshadowed the earth from twelve to three o'clock on that first Good Friday, there was the radiance of God's eternal love shining. Fearful disciples and weeping women might not see that beauty because of their own self pity but the light was there all the same. To a penitent thief Jesus said, "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise." To a broken-hearted mother who watched from the distance Jesus said in effect: "Do not worry, John will take care of you." For those who jeered at him and those who gambled for his garments, Jesus said, "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do." In all of these sayings the radiance of God's love was streaming from the cross. Eyes blinded by self-pity, hatred or indifference could not see it at the same time, but the light was there, and when they looked back with clearer vision they saw that it was there. When the darkness was done, and the earthquake had ceased, and the tumult was over, Jesus calmly said his bedtime prayer—"Father into thy hands I commend my spirit"—bowed his head and gave up his spirit.

Kind friends came and took down the old shell in which his spirit had dwelt, wrapped it in clean linen cloths and laid it in a new-made tomb, but the liberated spirit of Jesus was not placed in a tomb. It went in search of doubting disciples to give them new courage because the love of God, the hope of God and the faith of God had come to the earth with its redeeming power through the cross on Calvary.

Of course, there was tragedy, wickedness of the vilest sort, or else there would have been no cross of Jesus, but there was beauty, radiant beauty, eternal glory streaming from the cross of Calvary. Because of this beauty, this magnetic beauty, the world through all the centuries has turned to the cross with hope. Men have made their theories concerning it, theories that can never agree, but in spite of these dividing theories people still stop their business on Good Friday and look up again with tear-dimmed eyes while they sing, "In the cross of Christ I glory, towering o'er the wrecks of time; all the light of sacred story gathers round its head sublime" and find themselves being purified by some indefinable goodness which comes from the heart of God to save a sinner.

There was so much beauty in the cross of Jesus that we want to lay on our hearts some burden and have in our spirits faith, hope and love so we, too, may help to reveal God's love for His sinful world. Among other things this means that our offering for His Church and the missionary work which it undertakes must be big enough so that the sacrifice attached thereto has something of the beauty in it which the cross of Jesus had.

ATTEND THE CONVENTION.

Next week the Southern Convention will meet in Portsmouth, Virginia. There is nothing new about the Convention meeting; it does it every two years. But there certainly will be something new in the Convention when it meets.

Of course, the entertainment will be good. The hospitality of Virginia is noted far and wide. The Portsmouth Church is making ready to entertain. But the reason for the Convention is not to be entertained, to enjoy hospitality or even to find good fellowship with members of other churches.

The tragic world in which we live demands of us greater service than we are giving. China deserves more from the Southern Convention than we are giving to the entire world outside of the Convention. Japan is even more needy than China. India is trying to find the Christian message. Africa needs our help as never before. Turkey is utterly dependent upon our Church for the gospel message. Syria and the Near East await our help. The world is being made over in our generation and this Southern Convention of ours seems to be quite content to do the same kind of things in the same old way that they were done before the world changed.

It is a good thing to help struggling churches within our own borders, but President Smith of Elon, was entirely correct when he said last week that we need to do more than that. The way for churches to grow strong is to build new churches. We have a half dozen churches in our Southern Con- (Continued on page 7.)

SUFFOLK LETTER.

A brief message from one who has been in bed over a month, and whose condition will not permit him to be propped up for a few minutes, must of necessity be simple and somewhat personal. My condition has improved during the past week, and the doctors think I will soon be able to sit up, and I am happy to bear testimony to the efficient service rendered me in Lakeview Hospital by the faithful physicians and nurses. They are making every effort to aid me to recover my health and strength, and their service has made this experience much easier, and they have made the dark days much brighter for me.

I expect to recover, and I wish to pay tribute to this Institution for deepening my faith and increasing my hope. I am perfectly resigned to this experience, for the Lord has blessed me with good health during my ministry, and this is the first time in my ministry, and this is the first time in my life I have been confined in bed for a month. I cannot promise to dictate or write a "Letter" every week. The doctors have advised me not to continue, but when it is possible, I shall be glad to write a message for THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

The Convention which meets in Portsmouth, next week, will be called upon to elect a Staff of Editors for the next biennium. My term ends at this session, and I wish to thank the Convention for this privilege, and hope they may find a successor who will be more efficient than this writer.

Although ill in bed, I have kept up with the discussions of Convention problems. I have missed only one session in forty-two years. I cannot be present to have a part in shaping plans for the future, but if I could be present I would counsel the Convention to be very cautious in making any radical and revolutionary changes. Usually, the people who clamor for radical changes are never satisfied unless changes are constantly made. The present structure in its broad outlines, represents very careful work of leaders who planned wisely in the past.

I. W. JOHNSON,

CONVENTION PROBLEMS.

Spiritualization.

The fact that there are problems confronting the Convention in its approaching session is not news. This fact is known to everyone among us who has interest and a concern for the future of our church. We do have problems in organization, expansion, and finance, but these are not our greatest problems. Our greatest problem is in making the church a church—a New Testament Church—the kind of church that will meet the spiritual requirements of our people and the people of this day. If we could find the proper solution for our spiritual problems, a solution that would cure our spiritual ills, solutions for other problems would be more easily found.

First of all, I think we have a pretty clear conception of what the church is, what it was meant to do, and what its mission is to our complex society of today. Religion is first individual, and then it is social. Society is saved not in the mass but in individual units. The church is constituted by individuals—individuals who have been saved by the grace of God. As such, it represents the kingdom of God which the Master said is like a bit of leaven hidden in three measures of meal that will continue to spread until the whole lump is leavened. The church, the organization of redeemed individuals, is meant to be the force in human society that shall ultimately save the world.

I think also to spiritualize the church, it will be necessary to take a new account of sin, recognize that there is such a thing as sin in human society, that men continue to commit sin, that sin has its penalties, and that the only way to escape the penalties of sin is to get rid of sin. The only way to get rid of sin is to be forgiven by God through Christ. The tendency on the part of the church for the past decade has been to soft-pedal sin. We have discontinued singing hymns that remind us of our sins. We do not like for our preachers to preach about sin. We do not like to be disturbed because of our personal wrongs. We like to live in individual and selfish complacency, feeling that God is in His Heaven and all is well with the world. As a result we have drifted rapidly away from the sound doctrines by which we were saved and the high ideals to which we were pointed when first we knew God. Those practices that have a tendency to keep our minds and hearts stayed upon God such as devotional reading of the scriptures, personal and private devotions, witnessing for Christ on public occasions, conversing with other Christians about the high things of the Kingdom, giving ourselves to the business of introducing others to Christ with the hope that they may know Him as we know Him, are certainly requisites to a thoroughly spiritual life. You may rest assured that sin is prolific in its plans and purposes and that it is constantly and continually pounding away at the foundation of our very lives; and unless we are spiritually minded, we stand in danger of being swept away by the avalanche of wrong. The war between the spiritual and the carnal is still on, and unless God is our helper, the carnal will conquer.

As an effort to spiritualize the church, we should face squarely the question of what the church is expected to do. Is it the church's business to guide labor unions, to assume the responsibilities for improving economic conditions, to settle race questions, and to solve social problems; or is it the duty of the church to reveal God to the world through Christ, to make plain the way of life, to hold up Christ as the Saviour of the world and man's personal Redeemer, to see that the individual is equipped for living as a member of the church and as a part of the Kingdom of God in the world? Now I realize that it is difficult to break up the influence of a whole life into compartments, that a life is either Christian or it is not, and that if a life is Christian that life will behave as Christian in all relations. I am also aware of the fact that Christ did not die for a gospel that was unable to save the whole of life, and having saved the whole of life, ultimately to transform the whole of society. The question of spiritualizing the church is involved in the place of beginning to transform man and the society of which he is a part. Do we begin with problems that are manifestly the fruits of Christianity, or do we begin with the problems that constitute the very essence of Christianity? It is perfectly obvious that we begin with the latter, and having begun with the latter, we are bound to end with the former. It is not much use to discuss with an individual Christianizing the economic and the social orders unless he himself has been Christianized thoroughly. In other words, the light has to be lighted before it shines. One great trouble with us today is that we are trying to realize the fruits of Christianity without first discovering Christ in His entirety for ourselves. It seems to me that to spiritualize our church by spiritualizing the individual first and the local church as a unit second and the Convention as a whole third, we must begin to put the emphasis upon private and personal practices, upon the influence of personal devotions, the privilege of public worship, the responsibility of giving Christ to those who have Him not, whether such individuals be our next door neighbor or whether they live in lands far away, upon further study to acquaint ourselves with our creed which is the Bible, to know conditions and relations regarding which there is a "Thus saith the Lord," to acquaint ourselves with the weapons of eternal truth by which we may win the battle for righteousness in our own souls and the conquest for the Kingdom in the soul of society. Then I think as individuals and churches we could put ourselves and what we have on the altar for the coming of God's Kingdom in its fullness. L. E. SMITH.

A WAY OUT.

As a pastor in the Southern Convention, I, too, feel that there are some "Things We Need." What do we need? Dr. Lightbourne states these needs as "denominational contacts, enthusiasms, morale, fellowship, solidarity, and purpose." By this is not meant that we as a Convention have no backbone or guiding personality. The Lord Jesus Christ, the head of the Church, is both. If we are loyal to Christ and love him as we should we will be the same to the Church. By this is not meant to criticize in a destructive way. It is all meant in a constructive sense. We are seeking a way out of some of the difficulties in which we as pastors and members of the Convention find ourselves.

These few days remaining before the Convention should be utilized in studying the program and the problems that are ours as a fellowship. Each delegate should go to the Convention thoroughly acquainted with the issues involved and be prepared to express not only his own mind but the thinking of all the members whom it is his or her privilege to represent. Dr. Smith has well stated the "Problems of the Southern Convention" and two possible ways out. You may read them on page six (6) of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for March 31st. There is no greater need and no better way out than the election of an executive secretary who would promote the entire Convention program. This writer believes that the latter alignment of Convention enterprises in the form of three boards suggested by President Smith; namely, a Board of Missions, a Board of Christian Education and a Board of Christian Benevolences would be organization enough to care for our needs. This would simplify, centralize and coordinate the Convention program as a whole.

MRS. JOHN KING PASSES.

The Norfolk Virginian-Pilot of April 17th carries the announcement of the death of Mrs. John King, prominent church woman of Suffolk. The article is quoted in part:

"Funeral services for Mrs. Emma King, widow of John King, who died last night at 11 o'clock, will be conducted Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock at the Suffolk Christian Church by the Rev. John G. Truitt, D. D., pastor of the church, assisted by the Rev. A. L. Franklin, D. D., pastor of Main Street Methodist Church. Burial will be in the King lot in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

Mrs. King was the daughter of the late Ocie and Mattie Beamon Crump of Nansemond and Isle of Wight Counties. Surviving is a sister, Miss Zaidee Crump; a number of nieces and nephews by marriage, and several cousins.

"She was prominent in church, social and civic centers of the community and was an active worker in the Suffolk Christian Church. She was president of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Christian Church, and district superintendent of Nansemond-Gates-Franklin Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference of the Christian-Congregational Church; she also held membership in the Ladies' Benevolent and Social Union.

"Mrs. King was president of the Suffolk Social Club, and also held membership in the Suffolk Woman's Club, and in the Silver Cross Circle of King's Daughters.

Her activities, until recent failing health, brought her in touch with many phases of community life, in which she took an active and constructive interest, and her loss will be felt in church, clubs and in charitable circles."

vention who could and ought to have a full-time missionary on their pay roll. It doesn't make sense for us who claim so much in the way of principles to simply mark time while the world moves forward. If the Bible is our rule of faith and practice, and if Jesus Christ is the Head of our Church, then we must move forward in a larger way than we have ever done. New churches must be established and our world-wide program of religious development must become vital to us and not merely an incidental thing. There are a dozen men within our church who could easily give more for foreign missions than all of our Southern Convention members are now doing. These are facts that we need to face and facts we will face when we meet in Portsmouth next week.

Bishop Kern, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has recently written a challenge to his church on behalf of the young people. He says the young people are ready for a new crusade. They are eager to do things to make the world a better place in which to live and make the message of Christ effective in human life. He calls upon his church to give the leadership needed for a crusade of youth in 1939-1940. Our church needs exactly this same thing. Unless we can reach, inspire and guide our young people, our Church is doomed to utter failure. We have been doing a little, but it is very little. The convention needs to face this situation and see what can be done.

We often lament that our people seem to have no church loyalty. If they move away from their local church they are likely to become members of some other denomination. Why do they do this? What do we give in the way of instruction that will make them loyal to the church? Is there any literature which new church members, as well as older ones, are supposed to read in order to know what it is they are loyal to in the way of a church? The answer quite largely simmers down to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. It is our one piece of literature which may give this needed information and inspiration. It goes into only about 2,200 homes—probably 2,000 in the Southern Convention where there are 30,000 people. The paper doesn't have a chance to develop loyalty on the part of our people because the most of the people never see it. For years the editorial service has been rendered by people who are busy at other jobs and who can not possibly give time to editing the paper so as to make it the loyalty-developing organ that it should be. If we want our people to be loyal to our Church then it stands to reason that we must give them the things that will make them loyal.

These are only a few of the things that are to be considered by the convention in Portsmouth next week. Others equally important will claim the serious thought of members of Congregational and Christian churches in the Carolinas and Virginia. It is exceedingly important that every delegate be in place at the opening session and stay through to the closing benediction. It is also important that other representatives from the various churches, men and young people who are interested in

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A KING AND A KINGDOM.

Jesus the Christ, the very humblest and lowliest of men, was obsessed with one idea. That idea was that the kingdom of Heaven could and must be built here on earth. He talks about this kingdom in His earthly ministry as He talked about no other one subject, mentioning it, or its equivalent, no less than a hundred times. But not merely does He talk of a kingdom, but my kingdom. Here is indeed the most unique and marvelous Person this world has ever seen. Single handed and alone without an army, state, or organization of any kind, born in a manger, brought up with no place of His own to lay His head, not knowing where the next day's food and raiment were to come from, this man sets out to build a kingdom on earth and in doing so declares that He is to be King in that Kingdom. When He was ready to acclaim Himself king He was not dressed in royal apparel, neither was He drawn in a coach of four or six. On the other hand daily garments were cast on an ass and while some of His followers strowed palm leaves in His path and cried out "Hosanna to the King," He knew well enough that He was marching not to be seated upon a throne in the capital of His country, but to be nailed to a tree and there die a shameful death, forsaken even by His devoted followers and forsaken, seemingly, by the God, whose He was and for whom He was giving His life. A man in the humblest sort of manner, riding through acclaiming throngs to a death on a tree and over whose head is to be inscribed in the three prevalent tongues of His day, "This is the King of the Jews." And when Pilate was besought to change the inscription he only said, "What I have written, I have written." The words still ring out in the world, "Behold your King," and somehow as the centuries pass, men and women more and more feel that here is a King, a King Who is building a kingdom. And somehow or other, those who acclaim Him thus feel that He is winning out, and by the grace of God, will win out.

From Radio Guide for April 23rd. we take this amazing tribute:

"More than seven hundred million volunteer soldiers of the same King, the greatest army ever mobilized by one monarch, will shout hosannas to their sovereign this week.

"And no guns will boom! No caissons will roll!

"At the foot of a gentle hill in time-weary Palestine, where Golgotha stands stark and shimmering in the biting sun, in the valley by the Mount where olives grow and palm trees troop down, bowing their heads and murmuring a soft, swishing lullaby, down the hills of a hoary, tortured land—there this paean will begin, 'Hosanna to the highest, Hosanna to the King.'

"There where an angel once told a weeping woman—'Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here, for He is risen.'

"There by the tomb the Easter story will be told again and radio will cast it around the world and the army of the King will mark time and listen. In a hundred languages it will be broadcast by a thousand tongues—the air will be filled with hosannas.

"For when the captains and the kings and the shouting and the tumult die, and the far-flung navies melt away, and all the ballyhoo of all the world shrivels and dries into such futile words, even as these, this fact is self-evident:

"The most popular radio program of all time still is the spoken word of God, and the most popular story of the air still is the story of Easter, for man does not want to forget and in his groping misery he cries out:

God of our fathers, known of old
Lord of our far-flung battle line—
Beneath whose awful hand we hold
Dominion over palm and pine—
Lord God of hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!"

One day His followers in all the earth will join in the acclaim, Behold our King, our Redeemer, our God.

DR. W. E. GRIFFITH—A MISSIONARY I KNEW.

About three years ago, in Florida, Dr. William Elliot Griffith died. A man who had lived four years in Japan after the country had been opened to foreigners by Commodore Perry in 1854.

About eight years ago, after an absence of fifty years, he returned to Japan and in a sermon before the foreign missionaries, told what he had seen.

When he first went to Japan, he had seen the heads of a hundred men put upon poles as a warning to evil doers. He had seen a mother bring to the foreign doctor a baby whose eyes had been eaten out by smallpox. As there were no doctors in the land, smallpox and pestilence swept through the land and carried off thousands. There were no Christians and an edict in force 250 years, stated that any one who believed in the Christian religion would be put to death. But in the year 1872 the famous Iwakura Embassy visited the United States and when they saw the great number and power of the Christians in America, they knew that Japan could not carry on trade relations with the Christian nations if it put Christians to death. A telegram was sent back to Japan to this effect, and the edicts which had been posted everywhere, came down in a night.

When Dr. Griffith came back to Japan, the changes which he saw were marvels: the edict against Christians abolished; between two and three hundred thousand Christians; a constitution (1889) which allowed one to embrace any religion he pleased; great independent Christian churches (Congregational - Christian, 109); great outstanding Christian pastors; great Christian colleges and universities; from twelve to fifteen members of parliament (406 members) nine times as many as our Christian numbers would entitle us to; great Christian influence in all the departments of the country; great Christian literature; the Bible the best seller.

So Dr. Griffith said: "If some great magician had waved his magic wand of the fair land of Japan for those fifty years while he was absent from the land, the changes which had taken place could not be more wonderful.

Morrison went to China in 1809 and worked seven years before he gained a convert. When asked how many Christians there would be at the end of a hundred years, he said at the rate they were winning men to Christ there might be a thousand. But when the centennial celebration was held in 1909, 177,000 were reported. And when he was asked about the future of missions, he replied: "The future of missions is as bright as the promise of God."

MISSIONARY RALLIES OF NORTH CAROLINA WOMAN'S CONFERENCE.

We have just returned home from the seven District Rallies of the North Carolina Woman's Conference, namely, Alamance, Guilford, Randolph, Chatham-Lee-Moore, Durham-Wake, Halifax and Vance-Warren. The main address at each rally was delivered by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, of Jacksonville, Fla., and she improved every day as she presented her message: "The Modern Woman Saved to Serve the Present Age." Miss Pattie has a way of cheerfully getting the attention of her audience, and then with her pleasing personality, driving home the Missionary responsibility.

Most of the Rallies were well attended. The Rallies at Big Oak, and Wake Chapel were decreased in attendance as a result of funerals. The Halifax District had the largest attendance, offering and greatest number of reports, and societies represented.

The Young People at Big Oak and Liberty (Vance) seemed to be taking extra good interest and part on the program. The Rally at Liberty had the most ministers present. The pastor of the Shallow Well Church went to Canada to get married but his fine people knew just how to really make the Rally welcome. Every one of the entertaining churches was beautifully and tastefully decorated with lovely flowers, which reflects the love of the one who said "Go ye."

Should you feel a sense of doubt or discouragement, just go to some of the Rallies of the North Carolina Women; see their zeal, earnestness and devotion for the cause of Missions, and you will be strangely drawn closer to the Master of Missions. To note the enthusiasm of those good women and hear them plan their work is indeed inspiring. It appears from the Rallies, that the Conference which meets at Park's Cross Roads, in October will be favored with some splendid reports.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS.

From The Pilgrim Highroad for April, we find some very pertinent suggestions made to young people as to the best way in which to get the most we can out of our Sunday School lessons. We would like to share these suggestions with you.

1. Put the lesson in its proper setting.
2. Read the lesson carefully:
 - a. Scripture passages printed.
 - b. Scripture passages mentioned as references.
 - c. Comments on the Scripture.
 - d. Article by the lesson writer.
 - e. Additional materials bearing on lesson.
3. Meditate upon thoughts that are stimulated:
 - a. New ideas.
 - b. Organize familiar facts.
 - c. Planning to use the lesson in the future.
4. Test the effectiveness of the use you have made of the lesson materials by these questions:
 - a. Have I gained new information?
 - b. Have I been prodded into further study?
 - c. Have I formed a new purpose or a new determination to carry out an old purpose?
 - d. Can I carry out this purpose in a life activity?
5. Pray for divine guidance in line with the teaching of the study.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

The Virginia Christian Endeavor Union will hold its state convention at Massanutta Springs, June 16 to 19, 1938. The registration fee for those over 17 years is $1.00. For those under that age the registration is only 50c. Mr. C. E. Warrington, a member of First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va., is the state president. Preliminary announcements indicate that there is to be a fine convention this year.

JOBS IN A CHANGING WORLD.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR MAY 1, 1938.

SCRIPTURE: II Peter 1:2-11.

(CONSECRATION MEETING.)

Daily Readings—

Monday—Early Occupations—Genesis 4: 3-12.

Tuesday—Ruth, a Job-Seeker—Ruth 2: 1-7.

Wednesday—Needed Craftsmen—Exodus—35: 30-35.

Thursday—A Labor Strike—Exodus 5: 1-12.

Friday—The Right Spirit in Job-Seeking—Romans 12: 9-18.

Saturday—Is the Ministry Over Supplied?—Isaiah 6: 1-8.

I have in mind a young man whom I gave a ride a few days ago. Among his first words were, "I am going to Norfolk to see if I can get a job." He was confident there were jobs, and was on the lookout for one. A job means employment or a way by which one makes money. We have cheapened our ideals for honest labor in our efforts to make money. The American mind is studying through selfish interests job-seeking. The general question is: "How much will I get out of this?" This attitude eliminates the idea of rendering service. Young people must make careers for themselves in a difficult period of change. Some of the difficulties they face may be listed as follows:

1. This is a period of uncertainty. Vocations that appear to be full of promise now may in the long run offer limited opportunities for service.
2. There is an over-supply of workers. For many young people the problem of choosing a vocation has reduced itself to the necessity of finding a job—any job.
3. This is an age of specialization. In nearly all work the demand is for workers who have become experts in specialized tasks.
4. This is a day of continued concentration upon materialistic values. Human values are being emphasized more and more, but the great accent in the work-a-day world continues to be materialistic.

In the face of these problems it is very important to give place to Christ's guidance.

Suggested Hymns—

"To the Work."

"Work for the Night is Coming."

"He Leadeth Me."

RELIGION.

Recently written books and newspaper editorials reflect a return to religion in all parts of the United States. It is reported by churchmen in the metropolitan areas that there is a sharp increase in the attendance at churches. The noonday services at Trinity for brokers in Wall Street often overflow.

There is a new personal freedom which has its gains and its temptations. Time will not permit even the beginning of a discussion, but no thoughtful observer of this after-war period can fail to see that life is being lived by a different code and with different ideals and objectives than in even a comparatively recent day.

Nor has religion, either in its institutional form or as an individual experience, passed through these years without challenge or change. That it is of all things upon earth one of the most enduring does not mean that it is necessarily one of the most unalterable. That it has changed and can change may be an occasion for gratitude as well as concern.

In the guise of realism, a lot of filth and vulgarity have in recent years, swept over the world, doing great harm to the finer values of civilization. Laws have been flouted; moral and social conventions have been cast aside; economic instability has set in, and men are much confused.

So among the many lessons the years teach, we do well to ponder and lay to heart certain ones of great importance. One of these lessons is that though the world has been changed, it is the same world. There is a continuity in human life and human history. If progress is slow, we need not be disheartened or be caused to surrender our faith. Man invariably returns to religion when he sets out earnestly to find a better technique of personal living.

The trend
Is upward still, and slow,
More slow than glaciers at the pole.
It yet goes forward.

RECEIVING VISION FOR SERVICE.

LESSON IV—APRIL 24, 1938.

GOLDEN TEXT: This is my beloved Son; hear ye Him.—Mark 9:7.

LESSON: Mark 9:2-10.

As Dean Brown says: "When any man undertakes to write about the transfiguration, and then holds up his sheet in the clear light which streams from the narratives in the Gospels, he is ready to apply to himself the words of criticism passed upon Peter's foolish offer, 'He wist not what to say.' The holy mount is a place to feel, to adore, to aspire, rather than to talk." But there are some things which can be said, even if one does not wield a pen in the inimitable way in which Dean Brown then proceeds to write about the Transfiguration.

A High Mountain Apart.

It is significant how again and again the gospels record how Jesus would go "apart." Again and again He tried to be still so that He might know in a fresh sense that God was. Again and again He felt the desire for a period of unhurried meditation and communion in the Father's presence. Jesus knew that religion was something more than merely going around doing good. He knew that only as the soul was fed by the springs of the Spirit could it be vigorous and vital. For too many of us moderns, the world is too much with us. We need to "go apart" so that we may deepen our acquaintance with God, and avail ourselves of spiritual resources for living vitally and victoriously spiritually. It is so much easier to be active than it is to achieve character. But great souls grow in solitude, even though they are active in good works. Every life ought to have its "Upper Room," or its "Mountain-Top," where above the levels of ordinary life, in the larger horizons of thought, in the purer air of the spirit, things might fall into their places, and where we might feel anew the touch of the Master on our lives.

The Inner Circle.

"Jesus taketh with him Peter, and James, and John." Not because he thought any more of them than of the other disciples, but because they were prepared spiritually for the experience on the Mount, at least better prepared than the other disciples. Spiritual things are spiritually discerned. There are those who have eyes to see who see not, and ears to hear who hear not. Every person who goes to services of worship does not see the same thing or hear the same thing. We get out of church services largely what we take to them. God has many, much richer experiences for us than we can appropriate, because our hearts are hardened and our eyes are holden.

The Transfigured Christ.

"And He was transfigured before them." The word means "to be changed into another form." There is, of course, an element of mystery here. But there is at least a clue to what took place. Here was a man who from the beginning had kept his life open to God, and the life of God dwelt in him in fulness beyond anything we know. The flesh may be, and usually is somewhat of a veil of the spirit, but not always. In this case the Spirit of Jesus shone through the flesh the light broke forth from within, and something of the glory of God itself shone forth. Even his clothes caught up the wondrous purity and beauty of that inner spirit and light, and shimmered with dazzling brightness, even as of sun-smitten snow. There are men and women today whose faces glow in like manner, although of course not in like measure, when they have conscious fellowship with God, or some rich spiritual experience.

Fellowship With the Unseen World.

"And there appeared unto them Elijah with Moses; and they were talking with Jesus." It may be that these represent the law and the prophets. It may be that it was because each of them had made a miraculous exit from the world. In any event they appeared and talked with Jesus. One of the evangelists says they talked about his "exodus." Death for Jesus was not the end. It was simply an exit from this life into a new order or life.

Talking When One Has Nothing to Say.

"For he knew not how to answer." Peter as usual acted on the impulse of the moment. He felt that something ought to be said, but he did not know what it was. But he said it just the same. We must not, of course, be too harsh on the big-hearted, blundering fisherman. He did about as well as we would have done under the circumstances, and just about what we would have done. He wanted to stay up there on the mountain of spiritual privilege. Like many of us he had not learned that spiritual experiences cannot be preserved in such an inadequate way. It is a splendid thing to go on a mountain-top. But one cannot always stay on the mountain top. Mountain-top experiences must be translated into every-day life.

A Voice Out of the Cloud.

"And there came a cloud overshadowing them, and there came a voice out of the cloud." There is an element of mystery in religion, and any sensible man recognizes it and acknowledges it. There are some things that we just cannot understand ourselves or explain to others. But there are some things that we can understand, and which we can explain. And the primary demand which religion makes on us is to act on the knowledge we do have, to follow such light as we do have, to act on the certainty we do have, rather than to stand back because of what we do not understand. Indeed as one acts on what truth he has he comes to understand more truth. Obedience is the organ of spiritual knowledge.

Hear Ye Him.

"This is my beloved Son; hear ye him." The Father set his approval on Jesus. His words are with authority because He has the Father's authorization. Jesus Christ is the final authority in all matters moral and religious. Men should listen to Him as He speaks about any issue that concerns human life. No one else speaks with the authority that He does. The wise man will hear Him and obey Him.

Jesus Only.

"And suddenly looking around about, they saw no one any more, save Jesus only with themselves." Jesus is the dominant figure in the world today. There are resurgent forces to be sure, but these systems will have their day and pass away. And increasingly Jesus will stand forth as the central figure.

THE SECRET OF SUCCESS IN MISSIONS.

Missions are the special work of the Holy Spirit. No one may expect to be filled with the Spirit if he is not willing to be used for missions. No one who wishes to work or pray for missions need fear his feebleness or poverty: the Holy Spirit is the power that can fit him to take his divinely appointed place in the work. Let every one who prays for missions and longs for more of a missionary spirit in the church, pray first and most that in every believer personally, and in the church and all its work and worship, the power of the indwelling Spirit may have full sway.—Andrew Murray, in the Missionary Herald.

MONDAY.

THE QUIET HOUR.

I have a little inner shrine
Where I take me every day,
To hide away for just awhile
From life and work and play.

There, from a living fount I draw
Of deep and boundless love,
To come away refreshed and filled
With strength from God above.
—Doris Wood.

TUESDAY.

"I WANT TO KNOW."

"Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord."—Hosea 6:1-3.

We have oft heard the Yankee expression, "I want to know." Though this is a colloquialism and a slang, it expresses intellectual curiosity, and intellectual curiosity is the mark of a live person. That is the means of growth.

So it is with the Christian life. We shall know if we follow on. Spiritual inquisitiveness is a means of grace and a knowledge of God.

Prayer—O God, forbid that we shall say Lord, Lord, and still know not Thee. May we find Thee in our every experience. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

IRRISISTIBLE SEAS.

"We went through fire and through water."—Ps. 66:1-14.

William T. Ellis reminds us that our beaches and shore lines are being ruined by changing of currents. We all know that when the sea goes on a rampage the mightiest efforts of man are impotent. Shores have been swallowed and cities engulfed and there is but little that we can do about it.

We remember the song, "Like a mighty sea, Comes the love of God flowing over me." The tides of God sweep as irresistibly as the sea, and they change the hearts of men and nations. Many other tides are sweeping over us and changing us. The only thing we can do about it is to pray that the floods of God may stem these other tides, sweep over us, and change us according to His will. This is done by every one laying himself on the altar for His glory.

Prayer—Dear Heavenly Father, Ruler of all mankind, Thou who dost hold the universe together, hold Thou us together in this little world of ours. Let Thy grace engulf us, we pray. Amen.

THURSDAY.

A COMMON CREED.

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."—Matt. 5:31-46.

There is a vast difference in things, in people and their habits and customs. Some of them we do not like at all. But there is found to be in most people, some things common to all, and one of those things is the spirit of charity—giving to help the poor.

Our text furnishes a common platform upon which all Christians agree. However divergent may be the views of people upon other matters, they meet here and agree. After all, our differences do not matter. All that the Master required of any one was "Follow me." All that the prophets of old required was "do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with God."

Prayer—Our Father tune our lives to that note of Thine—"Inasmuch." Help us to see Thee in all things and in all people whom we meet. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE WORLD'S WORN STONES.

"Who therefore ye ignorantly worship, Him declare I unto you."—Acts 17:19-31.

One of the vivid memories of my life is my visit to Pompeii, in 1929. Pompeii is an excavated city of worn cobblestones and stairways, of broken walls and temples. Centuries of sandled-footed people and ox carts have trodden those stones until they were worn away into a series of furrows and hollow arches. There is here a partial answer to the age-long quest of man—"How old is the world?"

In the presence of these ruins and all that they signify concerning man, shallow scepticism is a petty childish thing. There is reflected here centuries of worshippers who have trodden these stones to the temple where they worshipped their God. We wonder what marks we leave behind us that shall, in the centuries to come, be mute witnesses of the true God, to those who come on after us. There is a way. It is Christ. "In the Cross of Christ I glory."

Prayer—Our Father, others may have worshipped an unknown God, help us to worship Thee whom we know, and may we leave behind us footprints that show others the way. Amen.

SATURDAY.

WHAT SORT OF GLASSES DO YOU WEAR?

"Now we see through a glass darkly."—I Cor. 13:1-13.

As I lay on the lawn in our flower garden one day taking a sun-bath, I donned eye-shades to protect my eyes from the blazing sun. It was interesting to note the color of everything. Everything lost its natural color and took on the color of amber. Everything looked the same. And to my amazement I could look square into the sun, and as I did so it appeared to be a big ball of fire descending at terrific speed down a cylindrical shaft connecting my eyes and the sky.

Life is colored by the medium through which we look. To see life aright in all its glorious colors and values we must put away all our prejudice, fears, jealousies, selfishness, etc. . . . We must put on the clear pure glasses of Jesus Christ. Much of the world which seems wrong seems

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D., Pastor.

"WATCHMAN, WHAT OF THE NIGHT?"

Isaiah 21: 11, 12.

By REV. R. A. WHITTEN.

Is this the first, the second, or third watch? Will morning soon dawn? This question from the prophecy of Isaiah written in that ancient period of the world's history, when the Assyrian oppression not only afflicted the people of Judah, but all the nations around as well. The Prophet of God stands in his vision where he can view all neighboring nations, and in every direction whither he would turn his eyes he sees only deepening darkness. Eventually the silence is broken by the sound of a voice. It is the voice of an unseen inquirer coming from the depth of darkness, but its earnestness lays hold upon the heart of the Prophet. "Are there signs of morning light?"

It has ever been the duty of a watchman to sound the alarm in case of imminent danger. A Christian has ever been likened unto a watchman who has been set upon a tower where he can watch for the souls of men. We are far removed from the time this prophecy was spoken, and they tell us that the fruitful land of Edom has long since been changed into a barren wilderness, where no human voice is heard and the stillness is disturbed only by the roar of the wild beast or voice of the vulture's cry. We may never know the full meaning of the oracle, but its spiritual lesson may be applicable to our own day and need.

The Voice of the Soul.

Out of the darkness there came a sound. It was the voice of a soul in desperation crying out for deliverance from its benighted condition.

Often we Ministers have gone to the bedside of some sufferer who having lain for months, day after day, night after night, tossing, struggling with pain. Strength is almost gone, hope almost exhausted and faith at the breaking point. Physical frame tottering and ready to fall, and looking hopefully, despite the gloom, they ask us, "Is there sight of dawn," and if we have proven the promise, may say, "The morning cometh, I see a light."

Today the world is suffering and the deepening shadows of war foretell a deeper darkness than Edom ever knew during the Assyrian oppression.

No nation seems to be exempt from this impending peril which threatens the people of the world in its most enlightened period. We find ourselves in the meshes of greed, graft and selfishness which, if not checked will lead us ultimately into midnight darkness such as ancient Egypt, or Edom ever knew. If our ears are tuned to catch the message, we can hear the voice of the world, a desperately, in earnest calling, not to man-made schemes, but to God.

Godless Dictators, with selfish ambition are driving their subjects like dumb cattle to the slaughter where they sacrifice them upon a cruel military machine which neither feels, thinks, nor cares. The sacrifice they make might be pardonable if made for noble ends in defense of its own good name or the protection of its boundaries, but with a boldness more brazen than that of a burglar who goes forth under cover of night to take the substance of another and his life if need be, nations of our day have landed battleships and troops without provocation upon the soil of other nations and fought undeclared war, killing innocent women and children whose dying cries have been heard around the world. The world looks on in amazement, horrified and in distress we hear them ask with their dying breath, "Watchman, what of the night? How long?"

The answer the world seems to be making thus far is again the voice of militarism, "I will build bigger and better ships, etc." "My armies shall excel the armies of the world." Is the sword the proper implement with which to clothe a helpless and defenseless world that is seeking light in the present hour of darkness.

A Cry For Help.

The voice, if it be heard by discerning ears will be found to be a cry of distress. The high sounding phraseology of world military leaders, advocating modern weapons of destructive warfare is not the language of the common people who have no hate in their hearts or ill will toward their fellowmen. Perhaps, as never before there is heart hunger for something that will satisfy that indefinable desire which God has planted in every human heart, and which we know, in part as religion and this desire is manifest among all men everywhere of all races asking, "How long till dawn?"

The voice is heard and it comes from the people of the world. It is not always the same in form, but always with that deeper yearning of spirit that would be free. "Watchman, what of the night?" It may come from the scholar who has built of his doubts a castle in which he dwells as a slave, or from a young man or young woman who have scoffed at religion and would further ridicule it by asking the question, but the real prompting of the query may come from a hidden motive, buried beneath the multitude of passive things to which life has been given, and which has left an aching void, and good impulse, long trampled under foot, may rise to assert itself for life's nobler ends. It may be a simple, but honest question from the heart of the world's most ignorant and unlearned nevertheless, sincere. It may come from pleasure seeking people of both young and old who would contrast the pleasure of the world with what religion has to offer, the voice of the agnostic, trying to shift responsibility for his own ignorance to an unseen and unfelt power, thus deluding himself in that unhappy state of mind. There may be heard the failing voice of tottering old age, the care-free heart of the child, the penitent groans of the sinner who has spent all and is in want, the poverty stricken soul that has fed on chaff, lifting its voice in piteous cry, all come, all ask. Some in sincerity, some to mock and jeer. Still they come. Will the followers of Jesus hear the cry? Will they be given hope? Night has settled upon their souls too deep and in some cases for articulate voice to be heard. Will the followers of Jesus hear and understand?

Those who love and belong to that group as His followers, will, I am sure, agree that our ears have not always been quick to hear, but have been too slow to understand. Yet, even the worst failure has sometimes been a great success. Stephen died and it seemed that his work was in vain, but Paul was born, and the New Testament, and the planting of the early church was the result of the failure. The greatest and most miserable failure that can come to the Christians of all lands in this day when the standard of Christ should be held high, is indifference to the call which comes. We might try to excuse ourselves, saying it is an impossible task. True it is, if we are to see it through, but His promise has not been revoked. The Assyrian oppression lay heavily upon the land of Judah, but it was more grievously lying upon the land of Edom. The gloomy outlook of Christianity which

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Easter Sunday is always a happy occasion at the Christian Orphanage, provided it is not raining. Easter Sunday this year was cloudy but warm and comfortable. The good women of many Missionary Societies, Ladies' Aid Societies, Young People's Societies, and many individuals, sent in dresses and many articles of clothing for the Children's Easter outfits. All of them have been real good to us this Easter season and of all the years, I believe this year has climaxed all former years. The dresses sent in are beautiful and of splendid material and the girls were delighted to get them. We are grateful, indeed, for the wonderful expansion of love and interest you have in the little children here.

On Thursday before Easter Sunday after all the dresses had been received they were sorted out according to ages and the children of certain ages were invited in age groups to come from all the buildings and make their own selection. When this certain group had been supplied another group was invited and so on till all ages had been fitted out in a new Easter dress—all were happy and grateful. The happy part was to see them march off to Sunday school happy as larks on Easter Sunday morning.

Of all the children, I believe none were quite so happy as Patsy. Patsy is the youngest little girl in the Johnston Hall. Some of the young people of the Holy Neek church in Virginia, gave Patsy a full Easter outfit. When it came we opened the package and showed Patsy what a beautiful Easter suit she had received. She said, "I am happy." And all through the day she would come in the office and say, "I am happy."

On Easter morning the writer happened to be in the office and Patsy came in all dolled up in her new Easter outfit. She was happy beyond expression with her face wreathed in smiles. She said, "I wanted you to see how I looked."

The writer thought if the young people who had a part in making this little child happy could have seen her on Easter Sunday morning dressed for Sunday school would have been many times repaid for any sacrifice made.

In conclusion I want to say the children had a happy Easter and we all pray that God will richly bless all of you who had a part in making them happy on this occasion.

very stirring message. We hope to have him return again soon.

It was a great privilege for a delegation from our church to attend the Pilgrim Fellowship Banquet and hear Miss Ruth Seabury speak on "Turkey." She was indeed a wonderful speaker and we wish more could have heard her. Rev. F. C. Lester, of Norfolk, was also a visitor in the conference at the same time.

This year marks the centennial of this conference. The first session of this conference was held at Antioch, near Harrisonburg, November 8, 1838. We feel honored to have the conference meet with us again August 10th and 11th.

A very fine revival was brought to a close last week. Wonderful spiritual messages were brought to large audiences each night by Rev. J. E. McCauley, of Richmond, Va. The song services were in charge of the pastor, Rev. W. J. Andes, and Woodrow Wampler, a student at Westminster Choir School of Princeton, New Jersey. Choruses were sung each evening by a large Junior Choir. We have had eight additions to the church in recent weeks—four by the letter of transfer and four by profession of faith. We all were delighted to have Rev. McCauley with us and feel that he did a great work among our people. We hope it will not be long before he can return to us for another visit.

Already some of our young people are making plans to attend the Leadership Training School at Elon this summer.

We ask the prayers of all our Christian friends that we may continue in the service of the Master.

EIGHTEENTH ANNUAL WAVERLY DISTRICT MISSIONARY RALLY.

The Waverly District Missionary Rally of Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference held its 18th annual session at Waverly Christian Church on April 7, 1938. The theme was "Steering or Drifting."

The meeting was called to order by the superintendent, Mrs. E. T. Atkinson. She addressed the Rally in a very splendid way, using as her topic, "It Is the Spirit Which Animates the Workshop."

The Rally was very fortunate in being able to present on that day two returned missionaries, Mrs. Hubert Lloyd, from Japan, and Mrs. W. G. Smith, from China, who gave very inspiring addresses.

Mrs. Manson of Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., led a very impressive vesper service in the afternoon.

Various churches of the district rendered special music during the day, which made the program a very enjoyable one.

The officers elected for the year 1938-1939 were: Mrs. Garland Spratley, Dendron, Va., superintendent; Mrs. O. M. Coekes, Elberon, Va., assistant superintendent; Louise Pittman, Wakefield, Va., secretary.

The Rally was invited to meet next spring with New Lebanon Church, Elberon, Va.

Out of the combined wisdom, prayers and loyalty of those who attend the convention may grow a new church, a progressive, eager, enthusiastic church in this Southern Convention. But if only a few attend, and they do it for only part time, God may have to look elsewhere for enthusiasts to carry forward his kingdom program. Meet us in Portsmouth next week.

we behold today as we try to visualize a world need, and the world task, staggers our deepest imagination. Let us remember that the gloom and darkness, bringing despair has settled more heavily upon a world that is asking in all seriousness, "How long the night?"

In 60 per cent of the earth's inhabitable area we are told that life is cheap; 55 per cent of the world's two billion souls are under some form of dictatorship. Truly, the world is filled with restlessness, uneasiness and heart hunger, while millions wait in breathless anxiety, the coming of the light of day to awaken us from the terrible night mare through which the world now passes. The Sun of righteousness has risen with healing. Jesus Christ offers the souls of earth His peace which, if possessed would cause men to live in God's world as brothers.

SUNDAY.

THE POOR MEAN MOST.

Blessed are the poor in spirit."—Matt. 5: 1-12.

Quite frequently I receive a letter written with a leadpencil and upon the cheapest paper. Once I recall finding a post script to such a letter written on a piece of used envelope.

Usually these letters are from a mother who is pouring out her soul for her boy and soliciting my interest and helpfulness in a watchcare over him. These letters usually conclude with a "God bless you."

Such glimpses into godly lives are an inspiration. They mellow and strengthen our own faith. We are assured that the Christians are found everywhere and in all walks of life. We are not to be poor in order to be God's children. Nevertheless it seems that God means most to the poor, and perhaps the poor mean most to God. It would be a calamity if there were no poor.

Prayer—Our Father, we thank Thee that the doors of Thy Kingdom are open to all people, and that those who love Thee may walk therein. Grant unto us all, poor or rich, to walk in humility of heart and fidelity of spirit. Amen.

THANKS TO WORKERS.

Thanks to all ministers and laymen who had a part in carrying the ball over in the recent CHRISTIAN SUN campaign.

I will not be able to see all of you to thank you personally, my brethren and good sisters, for the fine spirit and interest you manifested and the most splendid way you carried the banners of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference of the Congregational-Christian Churches to heights of success. I am taking this method of saying to each of you that I do most certainly appreciate the response given to the interest of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. I had a great faith in you all, knowing that if you failed it would be the first time you had let us down. I am sure each of you feel much better since giving your time to securing new subscriptions.

We welcome the new subscribers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN "family" to our reading circle. We hope that the new addition to your reading matter will be both pleasant and profitable to you.

The success in this endeavor makes the writer feel encouraged, for it reveals the fact that when we together lay our hands and shoulders, as well as our hearts, to a task, things can be done.

I trust that already you have made your plans for the coming Conference year, but just let me remind you that it will be much easier for you, as a church, to keep your program up to date than to allow the year to roll by and then at the close of the year be compelled to put on a mad scramble and then, perchance, face difficulty along money lines; this procedure is neither Christian nor business-like in principle. Won't you see to it that everything is brought up to Conference next fall in full, and that we will not only give THE CHRISTIAN SUN a banner year, but every department of our church work as well?

ART IN THE CHURCH WORSHIP

By AUBREY C. TODD.

Worship is a method by which we recover our values, by identifying ourselves with God. This act of worship can be consummated in one's closet, by the sea, or on the hill; but it is the duty of those who are responsible for the church program to see that this act can best take place within the church.

All church leaders who prepare worship services should bear in mind the essential steps in a worship-experience, namely, attention, adoration, confession, contemplation, and consecration. Religious services from the immemorial have followed these steps. The liturgical churches of today follow these same steps in their set patterns of worship.

The minister or leader who spends seven hours in planning an address and only thirty minutes in planning the worship service is virtually admitting that he thinks his thoughts are more important than a personal experience with God on the part of his congregation. The liturgical churches that have spent hundreds of years in building their services of worship can't be wrong. The people would not have accepted the same set pattern day after day and year after year if it did not fulfill a need.

Attention is called to worship merely by the separating of oneself from the ordinary routine of the week and going to the church. Once in the church, further aids to attention are added by the Organ or Piano Prelude, the Introit, the Call to Worship, or Opening Scripture Sentences.

Adoration or Praise is usually expressed in a hymn, litany, or psalm. The Gloria Patri and the Doxology are frequently used in churches of our denomination.

Confession always follows Praise, and should come early in a service of worship. Some churches use a standard Prayer of Confession that is repeated in unison; in others this prayer is given by the pastor. In either case, it should be brief and to the point. It should not be personal or selfish, but in it the evils of humanity at large should be recognized as due to our own failures.

Contemplation usually begins with the reading of the Scriptures and continues through the Sermon. Often the act of consecration is consummated during the preaching of the sermon. Some ministers so plan their sermons. At other times it takes place in a prayer at the close of the sermon, or in a consecration hymn sung at the close of the service.

In many of our rural churches a great many hymns are placed in the order of worship. When this is done, the words and tunes should be watched carefully, so that they might be placed in the part of the service to which they are best adapted. A simple service is more effective than an elaborate one, but at any rate, it should be well-planned.

(Sample services of worship may be secured by writing to "Art In the Church," care of "The Christian Sun," 514 So. Main Street, Norfolk, Va.)

How Summer Conferences Help

By A. LANSON GRANGER, Jr.

One evening, last summer, on the shores of Lake Michigan I sat in a youth conference listening to a group of young people relate some of the most vivid impressions and experiences which had come to them after one week of inspiring fellowship. I suppose that I shall never forget some of these spontaneous testimonies of clearer visions, of enlarged horizons, and of a sense of spiritual power which had opened up to them. One young man, I remember well, said this: "Frankly, religion has never meant anything to me, and I did not come to this conference because I wanted it to. I have been particularly repulsed by communion services, but the other evening in the communion service something happened to me, something that has made me different, and I would like to carry it with me from here." One young girl said that all the conference had given her physically was a cold, but that intellectually it had given her more insights than she had ever packed within a week, and spiritually it had enable her to have a greater understanding of life. One night, walking across the grounds of Linwood Park, Ohio, with a boy who had come to the conference there, I asked him quite bluntly what to him was the most impressive thing about the conference. Without hesitance, he replied: "Two things. One is the course in Bible that I am taking. Really, I never believed it was such a great Book. The other thing I enjoy is a walk along the banks of the Lake in the evening." This list of experiences could be multiplied. Many similar ones have I heard from young people who have been to the Elon Leadership Training Conference.

All of these are very simple and human affirmations, but they do, I think, justify the opinion that attendance at a youth conference can be one of the most transforming experiences in the life of any young person. Indeed, after one or two weeks at a summer conference, I have heard young people say literally that those days had been the greatest of their lives.

The youth conferences which are to be held at Elon College and other places in 1938 give an opportunity for the young people of our Southeast to share in some of the most joyous fellowships and rewarding ideas that are available to them. These conferences can be one of the most enriching experiences of one's life.

PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES

The Southern Convention is in session at Portsmouth, Va., this week. May much good come from this meeting, which is one of the most important ever held.

EASTER IN EASTERN VIRGINIA.

At the meeting of our Eastern Virginia ministers on Tuesday after Easter, each man present reported on the Easter program in his church. Brief penciled notes give recorded information like this:

"Antioch had the best services yet, with children and women in the program," said the pastor, H. E. Crutchfield, who also said that the service at Mt. Carmel was above the average.

Rev. B. H. Watkins said the morning service at Ivor was beautiful with excellent music, fine communion and best attendance yet. He reported a good worship service at Burton's Grove in the afternoon, with a fine pageant in the evening. The offering for missions met the quota for the year.

The Christian Temple had good music at both services and an excellent pageant at the evening hour presented by the young people. Dr. H. S. Hardecastle reported that they received nineteen members and consecrated six children.

Rev. Joe A. French said that Berea (Norfolk) had a fine morning service with the communion, and that four members were received and two baptized at Ocean View in the evening.

At Dendron the Rev. J. S. Johnson conducted a pastor's class previous to Easter, held communion on Thursday evening and received three members at Easter.

The new pastor of Holy Neck, Rev. Arnold Slater, reported good services for this fine church, but could not compare it with previous occasions since he has been there only a few weeks.

Rev. Carl R. Key, of Holland, received one member on Palm Sunday, and held a union communion on Thursday evening with six Baptist deacons, the Baptist pastor and the pastor of Holy Neck sharing in the service. They gave a mystery play on Easter Sunday evening.

"Franklin had an encouraged Easter with fine music," said Pastor Elwood W. Jones, who baptized four persons and received six members at Easter.

"Waverly had a well attended sunrise service at which three members were received. The young people had a large share in the eleven o'clock service," said Pastor T. F. Wright.

Rev. J. H. Dollar conducted a pastor's class and preached each evening during the Holy Week. Baptists shared in the communion on Thursday. The church held a sunrise service. The largest crowds since he has been pastor attended the services on Sunday. The altar was decorated in white, and ninety-two Cent-A-Meal boxes were placed on the altar. The missionary offering amounted to $143. Seven members were received.

"Mt. Zion had one hundred and fifty-seven people present at the Easter service," said Pastor J. H. Warren, who reported that the offering was the largest in years.

At South Norfolk, Rev. O. D. Poythress received three members and consecrated four children. The missionary offering was received from the largest crowd attending services since 1929.

W. B. WILLIAMS.

Mr. Williams, of Newport News, is president of the Pilgrim Fellowship of Eastern Virginia, and is this week sponsoring the banquet for young people at the Armory, on Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, on Thursday evening at 6 o'clock.

Rev. J. E. McCauley, of Richmond, held a candle-light communion service on Thursday night and a service around the cross on Friday. Members are to be received at Pentecost.

Climaxing the week's services at Portsmouth, First Church, under the leadership of Dr. Clinton, the Elm Avenue and Shelton churches joined with First Christian in a union service Easter Sunday night. "Eleven members were received and as many more are expected," said Pastor R. L. House.

At First Church, Norfolk, the young people conducted a sunrise service and the pastor, F. C. Lester, received six members at two well attended worship services in which music played an important part.

Rev. J. G. Truitt conducted a pastor's class, held a service on Wednesday, with a Thursday communion and a Friday service. On Easter Sunday they received twenty-three members into the church, with more people present than could get into the house.

At Old Zion the young people conducted a sunrise service, the pastor, Rev. W. H. Garman, preached at the morning service and at the evening hour the choir rendered a cantata. The altar was beautifully decorated with flowers and the offering for the day was $104.00.

Rosemont Church, Rev. J. F. Morgan, pastor, joined with South Norfolk for a sunrise service. Three babies were consecrated at the morning worship service. The music was a very helpful part of the services and Easter lillies helped beautify the church. Attendance during the day was unusually good.

ROCKFORD.

The Rockford program is growing every day. It is a "planning conference" a time when young people from many states come together to compare notes on their Pilgrim Fellowship achievements and to plan for the next two years. Every day at least six commissions will meet to outline suggestions for activity in states and associations. "Missionary Action," "Social Action," "Personal Religion," "State Activities," "National Organization and Program," will receive major attention. Every day also visitors will come from Beloit to share their experiences and convictions with us, so that all of us will meet many leaders of our denominations and have an opportunity to talk personally with them. There will be vespers on the lovely Rockford campus. There will be play hours. There will be impressive Sunday services, including an afternoon rally to which we are inviting Wisconsin and Illinois young people in large numbers. There will be trips to Beloit. These are just glimpses of what the program will be like. Add to this enthusiastic adults and Pilgrim Fellowship youth leaders from thirty or more states, and you will begin to have Rockford. We shall crowd much into those seven days. It will probably take us the rest of our lives to do the things we shall want to do as a result of this experience. I am hoping that every state in the Southeast will be represented at Rockford. You have so much to give, and so much to gain by coming. Less than two months now! Let's work and pray for Rockford because it will give us another opportunity to prepare to do our part in the building of a Christian world.

LUCY ELDRIDGE.

REV. WM. T. SCOTT, SUPERINTENDENT, FLORIDA CONFERENCE.

The fifty-fifth annual meeting of the Florida Congregational-Christian Conference was held at Tampa, April 19-21. At this Conference, Dr. Edwin C. Gillette resigned as Conference Superintendent, continuing however as Superintendent for the District of the Southeast for the Board of Home Missions. Rev. Wm. T. Scott was elected Conference Superintendent of Florida, filling the vacancy caused by Dr. Gillette's resignation. At the mid-winter meeting, Mr. Scott was elected Associate Superintendent by the Board of Home Missions for the District of the Southeast. Mr. Scott is also Conference Superintendent for Georgia. His election in Florida is a recognition of the effective work he has been doing in both Georgia and Florida. Members of the Conference expressed themselves as very well pleased with his election. Dr. Gillette will continue to have close relationships, serving as Superintendent of the District, but Mr. Scott will be the responsible State Superintendent. Dr. Gillette was elected Registrar of the Conference. Rev. Victor B. Chicoine, of Winter Park, was elected preacher for the next meeting of the Conference, and Rev. Everett B. Leshner, of Jacksonville, was elected moderator.

Rev. James E. Walter, Associate Secretary of the Missions Council for the New England region represented the Board and delivered two missionary addresses. Superintendent Gillette gave a survey of the churches; and while there have been losses due to the revision of church rolls, there was an increase in the number received into the membership of the churches on confession of faith and by letter. He reported three successful efforts with regard to church debts. The church at St. Petersburg, which had a debt of $83,000, plus an indefinite amount of unpaid interest, has, during the season, reduced that indebtedness to $40,000, which has been refinanced. During the Easter season a successful effort was made to raise $10,000, to the joy of all.

The small church at Jupiter had a debt of $650.00 to the Building Society. A winter resident offered $200.00 if it was cleared off. By strenuous effort this amount was raised and this church surprised the Building Society by paying that debt before it was all due. The Jacksonville church has had a successful campaign to pledge $2,500.00 toward their church debt to the Building Society. During the year there were ten pastoral churches in the Florida Conference, a larger number than in any one year in a number of years.

HOW TO CHOOSE A VOCATION WISELY.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR MAY 8, 1938.

SCRIPTURE: Matt. 25: 14-30.

Daily Readings—

Monday—Consider Your Aptitude—Exodus 31: 1-5.

Tuesday—Ask, Is It Christian?—Romans 14: 17-19.

Wednesday—Ask, Can God Bless It?—Romans 13: 12-14.

Thursday—Consult Your Friends—Providence 11: 13, 14.

Friday—Ask God's Guidance—Psalm 37: 1-9.

Saturday—Believe There Is a Place For You—Ephesians 1: 1-6.

We might say there are three general classification for vocations. The first includes those which deal with things as a mechanic, a carpenter, a farmer, a bricklayer, etc. The second are those which deal with ideals as a journalist, an author, an inventor, or an artist. The third class are the vocations which deal with people as a salesman, a teacher, a preacher, a social worker, etc.

Many ask this question: "How can I know what I would really like to do?" There are three common ways by which a person may discover his likes and dislikes. First, there are opportunities for tryouts during summer vacation, and at odd times. In this way we may get some idea as to what we might or might not be fitted for.

Second, interview men and women who have succeeded in certain vocations. The Christian Endeavor may invite certain persons representing typical vocations to speak to the society regarding their work.

Third, by watching people at various kinds of work may give us a bit of indication as to whether such work would be enjoyable or profitable.

Assign these five tests for "Choosing a Vocation Wisely" to different speakers that they may enlarge upon the thought as they see fit.

1. What do I like to do?
2. What am I able to do?
3. What am I trained to do?
4. What needs to be done in the world?
5. What is God's will for my life?

The first four may be made on a purely human basis, but as Christians we cannot omit the will of God for our lives. Dr. William Russell Owen says, "Favor your bent; follow the gleam; and wait for the open door."

Suggested Hymns—

- "For the Beauty of the Earth."
- "O Master Workman of the Race."
- "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee."

THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL AND CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

Elon College.

Nearly fifty years ago, the Southern Convention undertook to evaluate its strength, to face its problems, and to chart its future. Those who constituted the Convention then knew that certain things were necessary if the church of which they were a part was to fulfill its mission in the world. It knew that a ministry trained and equipped was positively essential, that the church with all of its enterprises was utterly dependent upon its leadership, that an inadequate and poorly trained ministry meant an inefficient and ineffective leadership, and that without proper leadership it would be impossible to achieve either at home or abroad. With an adequate and properly trained leadership, solution for her problems would be more easily found and satisfactory going in the future would be more certain. The Convention also faced the fact that if they were to have a leadership properly trained that none other but the Convention could do the training. Other denominations had their schools but they were training for their specific problems. The states touched by the membership of the Convention had their schools, but the state schools did not train in the field of religion. The minister must of necessity be a student of religion. Without fear or hesitation our church founded Elon College as her school, and through the years it has sought to support the college that its work might be efficient and its future assured.

During the past six years the college has gone through unusual experiences, has suffered serious financial reverses, and economic embarrassment. It has also experienced unprecedented growth and un hoped for economic improvement, so that today Elon College stands in the front rank of the small church colleges in this country. The present standing and influence of Elon College is a source of appreciation and gratitude on the part of the whole church. In the day of need the church began to rally to the support of that which was her own. Colleges, universities, educational associations, and accrediting agencies have spoken most complimentary of Elon's recent achievements and present position. The college stands now in sore need of Convention encouragement and assistance. The Convention at its recent session apportioned to the several conferences, with the instruction that the conferences would in turn apportion to the local churches, a total (Continued on page 15.)

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

OUR THANKS.

With this issue the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship is again attempting to use "The Christian Sun" as its medium for carrying the news, plans, and programs of its member groups to all parts of the Southeast. If this is not successful, we will have no one to blame but ourselves.

We are grateful to the editor of this paper for offering to let us use its pages once a quarter for a special edition, and for his help in actually setting up the contents of it.

We are grateful, too, to those young people and young people's leaders, who responded to our call for material and sent theirs in promptly, without any added urging on our part. You have them to thank for all the interesting reports and plans which you find in this issue. In fact, they "made" this issue, and we appreciate it.

We are also grateful to those officers and individuals who sent in orders for this special issue of "The Christian Sun," so that the members of their society might benefit by it. We hope that they remembered, this time, that the payment—and very small it is—should accompany each order.

We will be glad to have any suggestions as to ways in which we can improve the next issue of "The Christian Sun" that we help to edit. We will also appreciate the news and plans of your group from week to week, for the Pilgrim Fellowship page which is in each issue.

Emily Carleton.

"MAY I COME?"

If the summer is going to be as hot as the winter was warm, it will be very hot, especially in June, July, and August. That is the time when a person naturally tires of his job. A change of work and interest is vital to the human body, even if the change is only for a short period of time. Wouldn't it be nice to work hard and get most of the work done, so that you will be able to leave for a week and attend a Summer Conference. Then you can come back with a renewed interest in your work and a revitalized life, so that you can do your work more thoroughly and adequately.

Yes, it is time to be thinking about summer conferences. There will be quite a few of them scattered throughout the southeast which will be of interest to us. Conferences will be held in Florida, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama and North Carolina. Elsewhere in this issue of "The Christian Sun" you will find the exact location of each of these delightful conferences.

But wait a minute . . . if you are going to have recreation, fellowship, fun, studying, and preparation for being a better person, who can come and who is allowed at these meetings? No one can come except those who have a desire to come. You may be any age—although there are different conferences for different ages. Ministers are even supposed to come; deacons who will bring their cars loaded with old and young people; leaders of young people and interested adults; and, of course, the young people of each church are supposed to be there. And yes, by all means, bring the children of the family along; they will enjoy it as much as you will.

If your church is just dragging along, if it needs new ideas, new fellowship, new spirit, send representatives to these summer conferences. If your church is really wide awake and not one of those which is just "getting by," we will not worry about you, for you know that you must have representatives there. In other words, "Watch the church grow and do something worth while, if that church has representatives at a summer conference." That "second wind" is vital to every church, to every organization, to every person, young or old. "May I Come?" If you don't, we'll be reading of you in the obituary column soon, so far as your spiritual growth is concerned.

W. J. Andes, Supt. of Leadership Training.

WHAT DO YOU FIND AT A SUMMER CONFERENCE?

The question is often asked, "What will I find at a Summer Conference?" And, "Will it be worthwhile for me to go to a Summer Conference?" Listen to the things others have found there. What a variety of things were found! They found what they went for and what they looked for.

Some found nothing but a group of buildings or tents or cabins and some people there. They came back and reported that they were never going to waste any more money and time attending Summer Conferences. Such a pity that that individual would not come out of his selfish shell and let his soul and spirit be free and enjoy the Conference.

Some found fellowship. They didn't know that they could have such a fine time. They attended everything possible, shared experiences with others, entered into the discussions and the classroom work. They wouldn't miss the Conference next year for anything.

Some found the joy of a special friend. What would a Summer Conference be like if a few couples were not seen. The Conference at Elon is noted for its power of bringing boys and girls there, and then in a few years a new home begins with the courtship starting on the Elon campus.

Some found new visions of duty and responsibility. Visions of the possibilities of the Church and its power, visions of a new and better Christian world.

Some found incentives to action. They found a new way, a new method, and determined to use it. Their imagination was fired to a new height. They went home and put theory into practice.

Some found class training and returned from those classes better prepared to lead others into a greater knowledge of the truth. These were saddened by the fact that they could not take in all of the classes which were offered.

Some found a new lease on life, received a new and different and more wholesome outlook and inlook on life. God became more real to them as they realized that they were the Master's friends.

Some found God. In those quiet minutes alone, the lovely worship services, the companionship of others, there came a knowledge of God which permeated their souls until they were born again and anew into the fellowship of the Almighty God, our Father.

Many other things were found which were valuable and conducive to better living in this world. Will you go and see what you can find at a Summer Conference? Remember that Jesus once said, "Seek and ye shall find."

NORTH CAROLINA-VIRGINIA.

By the time this is printed, we, of the North Carolina-Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship will have had our spring meeting. We believe that we have a splendid program and we are looking forward to having a good time in Burlington.

As I review our work for the past year, I believe that we have done a great deal to promote fellowship and Christian living among the young people of our conference. More and more young people are becoming interested in the Pilgrim Fellowship; as evidenced by our meeting last year, and again at our State meeting in Sanford last fall. This fall we plan to have another State meeting and elect officers, thus having a stronger and more unified Pilgrim Fellowship in our state.

We plan to do much more in the North Carolina-Virginia next year than we have in the past. Some of the goals of our group for next year are:

1. An active Fellowship in every church.
2. Plans for further development of Pilgrim Fellowship in the State.
3. Caravans visiting all churches of our conference.
4. Our quota of delegates to represent us at the Rockford meeting this summer.
5. A local program in each church which will include emphasis on daily devotions, missionary and social action projects.

6. Each church represented at the Elon Training School this summer.

WALTER COOPER,
President.

VALLEY OF VIRGINIA.

Since the last Pilgrim Fellowship issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, we have been fortunate enough to have Miss Ruth Seabury, of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, visit our fellowship. Miss Seabury addressed groups at Winchester, Linville, and Bethel. The young people were much impressed at her interpretation of "The Moslem World." At Bethel we had a Fellowship Banquet at which ten of our youth groups were represented. The following program was effectively carried out:

FROM OUR TREASURER.

According to its constitution, the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship is to secure its funds by means of an offering taken by each local group each year, "preferably to be received the first Sunday in May." This is the only way the Southeast Fellowship has for securing any money for its actual expenses—to pay for materials sent to the local groups and for reports of meetings and conferences, which will be helpful to local groups.

For a larger and more complete program for the Southeast, we ask that you do not overlook this offering. The treasurer, Emmanuel Hedgebeth, Elon College, North Carolina, will acknowledge all contributions gratefully.

Welcome—Miss Hazel Davis, Elktion.

Response—Rev. F. C. Lester, Norfolk.

Get Acquainted Period.

Instrumental Duet—M. A. Dofflemyer and Lawrence Gentry.

A number of young people's groups discarded their own Sunrise Services and participated in the All-Valley Interdenominational Sunrise Service in Harrisonburg. This service was conducted by the Rockingham County Youth Council, of which Rev. W. J. Andes is president.

Other young people's groups took part in and helped plan many services on Easter Sunday in their own churches—Sunrise Services, pageants, worship programs for Sunday school and the preaching service. One group helped plan a Candlelight Communion Service.

Some of our societies are cooperating in a splendid way with youth groups of other denominations. They have joint meetings on Sunday evenings in different churches. They also entertain them at socials.

Several of our Christian Endeavor Societies are divided into different age groups—Juniors, Intermediates, Seniors. One society has been reorganized recently and is now "going strong." We are using The Pilgrim Highroad more and more as a source of help for our Sunday evening meetings and activities in general.

We are expecting to have a program or banquet in connection with the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, which meets at New Hope in June. Our next bulletin will be based on "Leadership" and we hope it will prove to be very helpful to each of our groups. We are planning to send several young people to the Elon Leadership Training School this June.

Our young people are becoming more interested and we believe we have actually begun to make some progress.

IRENE HENSLEY, Sec.

FLORIDA.

There has been no meeting of the Florida Pilgrim Fellowship since the last Pilgrim Fellowship issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. However, the Florida State Conference of Congregational Churches was held in Tampa, April 19-21, and the young people had charge of the program on Tuesday evening. The president, Henry Witte, told of the plans and work of the Florida Pilgrim Fellowship and Muriel Poole, of New Port Richey, gave a report of the Holiday Conference held in Greensboro, N. C.

During the Lenten season many of the societies in Florida used "Lenten Devotions for Young People" as their daily meditation material. The West Palm Beach group studied the life of Christ during Lent and liked particularly Charles Dickens' Life of Christ. They also used "Lenten Devotions for Young People," and each one of their group gave up something during Lent. They served a breakfast for their young people's group at the church following the Sunrise Service on Easter. Other groups throughout the State sponsored or helped with Sunrise Services, and also presented pageants and dramas on Easter for their churches. The Winter Park young people united with the young people of the Methodist Church and gave a fine presentation of "The Cloth of Sendony" at the joint evening meeting of both churches.

The young people in Florida are looking forward to the Summer Conference. This year it is to be held in a finely equipped state forestry camp, which will be an ideal location for the group.

More About Our State Work

GEORGIA.

This year for the first time all of the Georgia young people are uniting in one group for their summer conference. Inability to secure a suitable location for the South Georgia Conference this year has made this necessary. The united conference will be held at Camp Viola, near La-Grange, in the Middle Georgia Conference, from July 4-9.

There are several advantages in having a joint conference for all the Georgia young people. In the first place, it will widen their personal acquaintanceship and give them a chance to know young people from all over the state. Then, too, the Georgia Pilgrim Fellowship is in a period when great development is possible, and such a conference with representatives from all over the state will help to unite the Fellowship in an effective way.

In order to have the delegates selected wisely, we suggest the following bases:

1. That a committee of three, made up of the pastor, an adult named by the Sunday school, and a young person named by the young people's group, appoint the number of delegates designated for your church, and an alternate for each delegate. We hope that each church will be careful to elect such young people as will make the greatest contribution to the conference and to the local church when they return.

2. Any elected delegate or alternate who finds it impossible to attend should report to the pastor not later than June 24, so that a substitute can be selected.

3. Cost: Total expenses, $4.50. In instances where it is impossible to pay this the delegate may pay $1.50 in cash and the equivalent of the remainder of the $4.50 in food.

4. If the pastor is not reasonably certain that his parish quota will be filled, he should notify Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, 117 W. Forsyth St., Jacksonville, Fla., not later than June 15, so that some other church may have additional delegates.

ALABAMA.

The Christian Life Conference for the East Alabama group of churches was held at Southern Union College, Wadley, March 25-27. The largest attendance ever known at this conference testifies to the success of it. Over seventy-five guests were entertained overnight by the people in Wadley, and many others attended the sessions. The hosts at Wadley showed a fine, hospitable, and cooperative spirit, although the large attendance taxed their capacity. Every delegation was ready with stunts, cheers, and special programs. Two effective religious plays were given: "One of the Nine" was given by Phenix City, and "At the Temple," by Lanett.

As the theme of the Conference was "The Art of Living Together," the various sessions were devoted to different phases of that difficult art: The Art of Sociability; The Art of Destroying Domestic Difficulties; The Art of Curing Campus Complexities; The Art of Being Neighborly; The Art of Building Congenial Communities; and the The Necessary Rules and Regulations for Practicing These Arts. The Sunday morning sermon brought to the conference the only way of accomplishing anything worthwhile, "The Christ Directed Life."

Inspiration and good fellowship came from the leaders: Miss Annie Campbell, of Phenix City; President Ross Ensminger, and Mrs. Harper, of Southern Union; Prof. A. R. Van-Cleave and Rev. Alan Jones, of Piedmont College and Demorest, Georgia; Prof. Rascoe Maddox, of Thorsby Institute; and Dr. F. P. Ensminger, of Birmingham.

Ten goals for the coming year were accepted by the group of young people. The newly elected officers are:

President, Henry Weaver, Phenix City; Vice-President, Irma Phillips, Truitt; Secretary, Lois Dollar, West Point, Ga.

Langdale was the society which has shown the greatest improvement during the past year. This record and the group's fine spirit throughout the conference won for it the award, a large picture of Christ at the well, which will be most welcome in the new class room these young people have been making more attractive.

* * *

Easter week-end Andalusia District Young People held their Christian Life Conference. This year Coldwater entertained the group. The program committee has selected as a theme: "Responsibilities of Youth to Christ and the Church." The following questions were discussed:

1. Will youth carry on for Christ?
2. Where, What, When, and Why will youth carry on for Christ?
3. Who will help youth carry on for Christ?

The young people called upon the County Welfare Worker, Mrs. Dell

O'Neil Hart, and the County Superintendent of Schools, Mr. E. B. Norton, to lead two of the discussion groups. Miss Lois Townsley, of Thorsby Institute, Dr. F. P. Ensminger, and Miss Marguerite Davison were out-of-town leaders who helped make the conference a success, while Mrs. M. A. Boyett, of Coldwater, Coach Havard, of Rose Hill, and Rev. W. H. Tillman were fine local leaders. The young people who enjoyed the good conference held at Indian Creek last Easter in spite of the freezing weather were glad that this year Easter came a month later.

* * *

Several of our Alabama Pilgrim Fellowship young people are to have responsibilities on the program of the State Christian Endeavor Convention, at which Dr. Daniel Poling is to be the chief leader. Young people from the Thorsby Society are to help direct recreation and music at the convention. Their pastor, Rev. L. L. Stanley, is adult sponsor of the Fifth District, Margaret Golson is its treasurer, Ruth Primm is Quiet Hour Superintendent, and Richard Peterson is vice-president of the state organization.

EASTERN VIRGINIA PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

The program presented at the Spring Rally of the Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship held at the Suffolk Christian Church on March 26th was one of the most interesting and instructive we have ever held. The theme of the program was “The Pilgrim Fellowship on Trial.” And, of course, the most interesting part of the program was “Court in Session.”

There have been so many requests as to just how this part of the program was presented that we are listing the details for those who may find it interesting.

SCENES Court Room.

CASES “Pilgrim Fellowship vs. Public Opinion.”

CHARACTERS: Judge, Clerk, Bailiff, Court Stenographer, Prosecution Attorney, Defense Attorney, Four Main Defense Witnesses, Two Surprise Witnesses, Jury of Twelve (this Jury was selected from the registered delegates at the Rally).

MATERIAL FOR DEFENSE: Pilgrim Fellowship Bulletin No. 58—“What Is the Pilgrim Fellowship?”

MATERIAL FOR PROSECUTION: Objection to Pilgrim Fellowship, such as: “What is the need of a Pilgrim Fellowship?” “Isn't it intended to take the place of Christian Endeavor?” “Do we not already have too many organizations?”

PROCEDURE:

Opening of Court—Paneling of Jury.

Prosecution Attorney's Plea to the Jury.

Defense Witnesses questioned by Defense Attorney.

Witnesses cross-examined by Prosecution Attorney.

Defense Attorney's Plea to Jury.

Judge's instructions to Jury.

VERDICT OF JURY: “Not guilty as charged by Public Opinion.”

We believe this “Trial” presented the purpose of the Pilgrim Fellowship in a clear and interesting manner, and that it brought out some points and information about the Pilgrim Fellowship that could not have been presented otherwise.

At this meeting Miss Edna Fulcher of Norfolk was elected our delegate to the Rockford Conference and Miss Frances Everette, of Holland, alternate. Allen Piland, of Holy Neck, was appointed chairman of a special finance committee to raise funds to send our delegate to the Conference. Allen is asking the young people of each church in our Fellowship to contribute to this fund.

Also, at this meeting the group

VICTORIA OF THE HILLS PASSES.

The message arriving April 22nd, stating that Victoria Edwards (our "Victoria of the Hills") had died April 21st, and would be buried in the afternoon of April 22nd, brought a pang of grief and deep regret to the heart of your writer, the Mission Secretary. "Victoria of the Hills," feeble of frame for years, but ever strong and serene of soul, had managed to sing her song of love for her hills and, in fact, of love and life itself, we are persuaded, into the hearts of hundreds, maybe thousands, of CHRISTIAN SUN readers. Repeatedly for ten or twelve years physicians had said she couldn't live long, but her invincible courage and strength of spirit refused to succumb and in fact survived the last wasted ounce of her exhausted body! How she did love her hills! How she did love life and all that was strong and blessed and beautiful in life! One wonders if the creed of Arnold Walter had not long since become her creed, "I would be strong for there is much to suffer; I would be brave, for there is much to dare; I would be a friend to all—the foe, the friendless; I would be humble, for I know my weakness; I would look up and laugh—and love—and lift." Whatever her creed, both CHRISTIAN SUN readers, and her pastors and those who knew her best, know that her deeds were golden and the melody of her life charmed and soothed all who caught the inspiration of it through her writings and her service.

One who had been her pastor for years testifies that she was the backbone and the life of our Elk Spur church, for, though exceedingly limited in physical endurance, she was never asked to do anything for church, or Sunday school, or community betterment, and refused. Her reply always was, said her pastor, "I feel unworthy, but I will do my best."

Here, indeed, is the life and here, indeed, is the testimony that should help all who read these words, "I feel unworthy, but I will do my best."

Victoria Irene Edwards was the daughter of Deacon Washington Edwards and wife of our Elk Spur church. She was born August 19, 1903, and, as already stated, passed from the mountain peak (for she lived right on top of the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia) to the still higher life on April 21, 1938. The funeral was conducted by her present pastor, Rev. B. J. Earp, and a former pastor, Rev. O. A. Elmore, assisted by two other ministers, one from Hillsville; another from the Moravian church of the hills. Despite the very cold, rainy day a large concourse attended the funeral from our Elk Spur church and the burial in the family cemetery nearby. She leaves to mourn their loss, besides her aged father and mother, four living brothers and one sister. We share with these the sorrow that is our own.

When we opened our first school in Carroll County in an abandoned storehouse at Elk Spur, in 1920, with the then Miss Iola Hedgepeth as teacher, Victoria was one of the first to register. There was no school at that time in her vicinity, nor Sunday school, nor church, and her father's house lodged and boarded our first teacher and the one who blazed the way for opening a Sunday school and later planting a church in that community. We have there now a substantial house of worship with its day and Sunday school rooms, and close by is the parsonage. Miss Victoria advanced rapidly in her studies, early in her career accepting Jesus Christ as her guide, redeemer and teacher. Then she became obsessed with one idea, that of fully equipping herself for teaching and helping uplift, in the name of her Lord, her beloved mountain neighbors and friends. When prepared she came to Burlington to enter high school, paying her board and keep by services in the home before and after school hours. She did the same in the home of Brother Garrison not far from Windsor, Va. She was too diligent in her studies and broke down by keeping hours that were too long for physical endurance, and was sent home to recuperate. She was then sent to a State Sanatorium in which she spent some years and then returned to her home on top of the mountains she loved so dearly to fight her battle with life and then finally to keep her rendezvous with death. Well, we shall miss her writings in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, but shall be the richer for the inspiration that her musical pen brought us. Her church and Sunday school have lost one whose place it will, indeed, be difficult to fill. The highest tribute her church and Sunday school can pay to her memory is to see to it that the work she did there shall not be in vain, and the life she lived shall not be fruitless through the years that are to come.

Standing by the door of this little mountain home in Virginia is Wash Edwards, father of "Victoria of the Hills," whose sweet spirit went last week to dwell with her heavenly Father.

One could write on about such a life, but let us content ourselves now by adapting to our use words from Gray's Elegy:

Large was her bounty, and her soul sincere;
Heaven did a recompense as largely send;
She gave to mis'ry all she had, a tear;
She gain'd from Heav'n ('twas all she wish'd)
a friend.

No farther seek her merits to disclose,
Or draw her frailties from their dread abode;

(There they alike in buoyant hope repose),
The bosom of her Father and her God.

J. O. ATKINSON.

(I wonder if it would not be fitting and would also fulfill the wishes of many, to put a memorial, either in our church at Elk Spur, or at her grave nearby, a permanent marker? Maybe a Sunday school, or church library would be the most fitting; maybe a substantial marker in stone at her grave. If CHRISTIAN SUN readers feel so disposed they could express their wish to the writer, Mission Secretary, who would gladly act as treasurer, or jointly with a suitable committee carry out the wishes of any who may desire to express them. RANDOLPH COUNTY DISTRICT MEETS.

A delegation of women representing the Randolph County District of the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference met Thursday, March 31st, with Big Oak Christian Church, for their annual district rally, with Mrs. I. H. Faust, the President, Ramseur, N. C., presiding. Mrs. Faust used for her topic "The Church and the Missionary Societies."

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, of Jacksonville, Fla., made the principal morning address.

At the noon recess the ladies of the Big Oak Church served a splendid picnic dinner to the fifty guests and delegates.

The afternoon session was begun by special music followed by Dr. Atkinson's address, which was read by Mrs. H. F. Brady, of Ramseur, N. C.

Rev. B. J. Earp filled a very special place on the program, talking on: "Our Mountain Work."

The afternoon session was also taken up with the selection of officers. Mrs. Hugh R. York, of Ramseur, was elected president; and Mrs. Elbert Brown, of Ramseur, secretary.

MRS. ELBERT BROWN,
Ramseur, N. C.

MISSION LITERATURE FOR 1939.

All missionary literature and study books necessary for next year's programs are to be sold in one complete packet. The one for the woman's societies will cost $2.00. The one for the young people's societies will cost $1.50. It is hoped that a packet for junior societies will be made up for between $1.00 and $1.50. All orders for these packets must be in the hands of your convention literature superintendent by June 1st, so that they may be filled in time for the packets to be delivered at the fall conferences. They are to be paid for when delivered. It is hoped that every society in the convention will take advantage of this plan. Much more material is included in these packets than you pay for. Orders will be taken at the Southern Convention to be held in Portsmouth, Va. If you have not given your order to your conference literature superintendent please do so as soon as possible or instruct your delegates to the convention to make an order.

DEVOTIONAL LIFE.

During this Lenten season local societies and churches have been emphasizing the importance of this phase of our work. Many young people's groups bought enough copies of "Lenten Devotions for Young People" for each member to have one. Other young people's groups have made a special study of worship at this time, in order to better plan and carry out their worship periods for the rest of the year. Still other groups have been assisting in the mid-week service, by conducting the worship service there.

On Easter day itself, many young people planned or helped with Sunrise Services—from the Valley of Virginia to the tip of Florida this was done. Still others assisted in the actual Easter service of the church, or presented an appropriate pageant that evening.

The Superintendent of Devotional Life wrote an "Easter Meditation" for that issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN which was a splendid contribution to that paper. Quoting from that, Many of us have been putting forth a special effort toward this daily devotion to the word of God during these days of Lent. Realizing its greatness and the beauty and strength it adds to our lives, let us continue it through all the days of all the years."

MISSIONS.

The young people of the Southern Convention were certainly fortunate to be able to hear Miss Ruth Seabury, from the Boston office, and from her to learn about "The Moslem World." She spent some time at Elon College, and addressed groups in Eastern Virginia and in the Valley, so many of our young people were able to hear her.

"The Moslem World" is our foreign Mission study for this year, and Miss Seabury has made it very near and interesting to all those who heard her. One enthusiastic and inspiring speaker like her is of inestimable worth to the cause of Missions. We only wish that we might have more such visitors to the Southeast.

Many of our young people's groups are using Edwin White's Highland Heritage as a study book for their groups this year. As you probably know, it is the young people's book for the home mission study this year, and we are very proud to think that one of our own number was asked to write it. If you have not used it in your group, we urge you to do so. Perhaps you can plan a regular study group, basing your study around this book; if you do not go into it in such detail, it will be wise to, at least, have one of your members review it—perhaps devoting several meetings to this purpose.

PUBLICATIONS.

This month the North Carolina-Virginia Fellowship has published a new issue of their occasional bulletin, "The Fellowship Recorder." It is a splendid illustration of an effective way to "get across" announcements and plans to every young people's group in your section.

Since it appeared just before Easter, the meditation concerned that period of the year. A copy of the program for the Spring Rally, with its well known speakers and interesting-sounding discussion groups, was given to encourage attendance at that meeting. Then there was a message from the president, Walter Cooper, and a list of the goals for the coming year. Finally, there was an article on "Caravans," by Frances Foster, stirring up interest in them.

The North Carolina-Virginia group has produced an attractive and effective bulletin. We wish that we might have similar ones in each Fellowship.

SOCIAL ACTION.

In the latter part of April, students all over the United States will take their stand in student cooperation for peace. This movement, which was at first called a Peace Strike, has grown every year. As international relations become more tense, some feel that war is the inevitable outcome, but there are some of us who remain hopeful of solving this great problem of war.

Those who fail to show their interest in such a problem are doing themselves and their generation a great injustice. It is a problem which calls for intelligent study, leading to a clear understanding of the causes for the tension between nations today.

The reading of Kirby Page's new book Must We Go To War is an excellent beginning. His plans for what individuals can do are splendid, and as usual his ideas are well expressed and verified. There is a great deal of material to be found on peace, America's position today, and discussions of various points of view as to the solution.

Keeping down tension at home is a great factor in reducing international tension, so we need to be thinking of our domestic problems, as well as our foreign problems.

Panel discussions, book reports, and informed speakers are excellent means of presenting the information; open forum discussions are the best means for obtaining a clearing house for opinions.

Kirby Page writes that our inactivity in this great problem of Peace is as good as a vote for war!

"ALL OUT FOR ELON COLLEGE."

That will be the cry of the conductor of the Southern Railroad passenger train as you arrive at Elon for the Summer Leadership Training School, June 27-July 2. So up you scramble from your seat and grab for your baggage. Off the train you jump, ready for a week at Elon. Going by the main stores of the town, and the post office, you finally make a right-hand turn and go up to the west Dormitory or the Ladies Dormitory. In that building you may secure directions as to your further procedure. Everyone will be glad to see you, especially Dean Wisseman. Don't fail to "go half way" in being friendly to those you meet. Prepare now to have the time of your life in that week at Elon.

Churches, young people's organizations, and adult groups ought to be planning now to send their representatives. You could not spend any money to a greater advantage than by using it to help someone attend this summer conference. Quite a few Sunday schools are making plans now, so that they may send someone. Every church ought to be represented and every group of ten young people ought to have a delegate. One for every ten is a very low attendance, but it is enough for us to start on. If you find that you can't go to Elon, you can become one of the ten and help with the finances for some delegate from your group.

In getting ready for the Elon School, there is another question to discuss. What are your local problems? Sit down with a few of your leaders and talk this matter over with them. When you send a delegate or delegates, have them supplied with questions concerning your problems. Let them keep their eyes and ears open, and when they return they will have been especially helped. The summer school endeavors not only to answer general questions and to solve

FOLLOWING VISION WITH SERVICE.

LESSON V—MAY 1, 1938.

GOLDEN TEXT: All things are possible to him that believeth.—Mark 9:23.

LESSON: Mark 9:14-29.

From Mount of Vision to Valley of Service.

Life cannot be lived always on the mountain-top. An experience with the Master constitutes a challenge to service. Spiritual privilege involves spiritual responsibility. Religion has little reality or meaning when divorced from the problems of life. Men are to worship God in order to better serve men. When God gives us a blessing He expects us to share it with others. The experience of the disciples in coming down from the Mount of Transfiguration to find the afflicted awaiting them is a parable of life. The pendulum of religion should swing between worship and service, between experience and service.

A Helpless Son.

This boy had a grievous ailment. He was subject to what we would probably call "fits"—Mark describes it as having "a dumb spirit." When one of these fits would come upon him, he would froth at the mouth, grind his teeth, fall on the ground, wallow around, sometimes fall headlong into the fire, or into water. The thing was so grievous that the boy was pining away before the father's and mother's anguished gaze. In desperation the father had come to the disciples for help.

This boy had been afflicted this way even from childhood. He may well stand for that great band of boys and young men who have been possessed with some spirit even from childhood—some terrible temper, some hot passion, some tendency to lying, some deep-seated selfishness, some dominating impurity, some binding habit of evil. Only the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ can deliver them from this bondage.

A Distracted, and Disappointed Father.

In desperation and despair the father brought the boy to the Master. He undoubtedly thought that Jesus would be with the twelve, but when he arrived with the boy, Jesus and Peter and James and John were on the Mount of Transfiguration. He told the nine of his plight, and asked them to cast the evil spirit out from his son. But, alas! they were not able. Because of their lack of faith they were not mediums for the spirit which could have made the boy whole again. Literally and spiritually they were out of touch with Jesus. And apart from him they could do nothing. In despair the father was about to turn away empty-handed, when Jesus and the three disciples appeared on the scene.

An Adequate Lord.

Jesus, first of all, rebuked the disciples, and the multitude, for their lack of faith. When one lacks faith he just about lacks all. Certainly only love is more vital. "O faithless generation"—thus Jesus characterized the people of his day. And thus would he characterize the people of our day. So many of us have lost our compelling faith in the adequacy of moral and spiritual forces. We depend entirely too much upon material things, and mere man power.

Then the Master questioned the father more in detail about the boy. As has been written above, it was a sad case of long standing. There was value in having the father recite the symptoms and effects. It is touching to see how the man identifies himself with the son's condition. And it is illuminating to notice the point of his approach to the Master. "If thou canst" said the man. He was not sure whether Jesus could do anything about it. On previous occasions men had questioned whether Jesus was willing to help. This is the first instance where a man questions whether Jesus is able to help.

"If thou canst," said the man. "If thou believest," said Jesus in so many words. The central problem is the matter of faith. How much faith do you have? "All things are possible to him that believeth," said Jesus. That does not mean that a man can do anything and everything—it is not a blanket promise from Jesus in that sense. It does mean that if a man has faith, he can do anything that he must do. There is nothing we ought to be which we cannot be by faith; nothing we ought to do which we cannot do by faith; nothing we ought to know, which we cannot know by faith. There is nothing we ought to have, which we know God wants us to have, which we cannot have, and shall have, if our faith in God is true and unclouded. One of our most urgent needs is the need of faith. There are many things that God wants to do for us and through us, which he cannot do because of our lack of faith.

With a note of authority Jesus commanded the evil spirit to come out of the boy. Immediately there was a terrific struggle in the boy. The dumb and deaf spirit "tore the boy much." There is always a fierce struggle in any man when Christ seeks to deliver him from the power of the evil one. Satan does not give up his victims willingly or easily. Some of the greatest battles in the world have been fought by young men and young women, older men and women, as they stood face to face with Christ and fought out the issue in their souls.

A Healed and Restored Son.

"But Jesus took him by the hand, and raised him up; and he arose." Again and again we see the personal touch of Jesus. There was power in his word and there was power in his touch. God does not deal with folks wholesale; his most effective work is done as here and there he deals with them as individuals. We cannot convert men en masse. The church will find a new increase in power when it works with individuals, as individuals. The same principle applies to other realms of life, in every realm of life where we are dealing with men.

The Secret of Impotent Disciples.

"This kind can come out by nothing, save by prayer." Because the disciples had not prayed, they had not prevailed. Prayerlessness always results in lowered spiritual vitality, which in turn brings failure. One wonders if too many modern Sunday schools and churches do not have too much mechanics and too little dynamics. One wonders if we would not do more if we prayed more. It is not by might nor by power but by the Spirit of God, that things really happen. About the only way in which the church can move ahead today is on its knees. The ills of our world will be cast out only by spiritual resources born of prayer.

FROM AN AMERICAN IN JAPAN.

Safe, courteously treated, and up to now, unhampered in his work, one missionary reports from Japan "everywhere a growing tension. Boycotts, military consumption of all materials at dictated prices, drastic reductions in importations of raw materials and the floating of huge bonds . . . discouraged business men." A sad picture if one reads between the lines. American movies were to be banned but so great was the demand that they were cut 50 per cent in imports. . . . "The whole nation is singing two songs, both patriotic. . . . Girls are replacing men in many industries.

MONDAY.

"OVER THE GRAVEYARD GATE."

"How say some among you there is no resurrection of the dead."—I Cor. 15: 12-22.

We have heard of some cemeteries which bear above their gateway the inscription: "Anything so universal as death must be a blessing." What a blessing it would be to so regard the coming of death, either to the young or the old. Then, in no sense would we regard death as a calamity, and in no sense would we dread it; or grieve about it, at least we would weep more sweetly for the dead. After all, we can see nothing but blessing in it when we quote Paul "we put off mortality." To be freed from the ills of mortality. Blessed thought.

Prayer—O, our Father, make us to see the blessedness of the completion of this earthly life, and give us a clear faith in the life beyond. Amen.

TUESDAY.

OUR GREATEST AFFLICTION.

"I say to every man among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think."—Rom. 12: 3.

Self-love is the greatest affliction of the world today. There is lots of religion and not enough of the Gospel. There is much about Jesus but not enough of the Christ. And youth is going out into a world of lions.

Prayer—Our Father, we pray that we may think, act, and deal soberly and humbly, unselfishly and with the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE WRONG DIRECTION.

"He that believeth on me, the work that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go to my Father." "Whither I go ye know, and the way ye know."—Jno. 14: 12, 4.

The pitching of his tent toward Sodom was the most tragic move Lot ever made. He was ruined. He never recovered his pristine character in God.

The word of first importance in every one's life is "Decision." The word of second importance is "Direction." Tell me not who you are, which church you belong to, or what you have been doing, but tell me "Whither are you bound."

Prayer—Dear Father, mold us and keep us into thy will, and direct our thoughts and words and actions, for Thy glory. Amen.

THURSDAY.

SUNSHINE CHRISTIAN.

"Happy is he who hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God."—Ps. 146: 5.

"Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord; that walketh in his ways."—Ps. 128: 1.

What kind of God have you? There is a fine liveried Negro who waits at the entrance of the department store. He wears a smile always and in addition to the list of customers passing that way, he is helpful to all. One day he was asked how it was that he could always wear a smile. He replied by saying, "That's the kind of God I have." What kind of God have you? Upon the kind you have will depend the kind of person you are.

Prayer—O God of Joy, Peace, Love and Blessing, be Thou all this within us and forbid anything to the contrary may ever be found in us. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE LOST GRIP.

"They caught him and cut off his thumbs and his great toes."—Judges 1: 6.

Here is something to think about—a permanent punishment that strikes at the very balance of life. Remove your thumb from your hand and you have moved the center of the grip. Remove your great toe from your foot and you remove the balance and poise of the body. Power for doing is gone.

Sin removes the center of the grip on life. It removes the balance and poise of character. Hands grapple life. So does Christian character. Feet run the race and enable one to press on toward the mark. So does Christ in the life. Try Him.

Prayer—Our Father, we Thy children are without hands and feet altogether when we are without Christ. We would be like Jesus. Make us so. Amen.

SATURDAY.

CLEANSING THE LEPER.

"Cleanse lepers."—Matt. 10: 8.

We are told that there were a great many lepers in Palestine in the time of Christ. They were an object of His thought, pity and prayer. They were embraced in His plan for the future.

Did you ever hear one pray for the lepers? I never did. However, by a little investigation and information we learn that we might well do so today. We are told that nearly every state in the Union has its leper colonies. Medical science is curing it as it cures other diseases. Nearly all cases are being cured and restored to society as useful citizens. Pray for the leper.

Prayer—Our Father, none were too low for Christ to look upon and administer healing. None were too ill to be beyond hope. We pray that Thy hand may be in medical science in the cure of the leper. We pray for all sorts of sufferers and diseases. Send Thy healings in science to heal the people and heal the nations. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SUNDAY.

WINDOWS OF HEAVEN.

"I will open the windows of heaven and pour ye out a blessing."—Mal. 3: 10.

WHERE GOD IS.

By REV. VICTOR B. CHICOINE,
Winter Park, Florida.

"And the people stood afar off, and Moses drew unto the thick darkness where God was."—Exodus 20: 21.

There may be some figurative language used in this episode concerning Moses, the people, the thick darkness, and God. But I believe that for the most part it is a literal event. There was a thundering, driving storm on the mountain-side, the people stood apart, and Moses entered into the tumult to seek God's will.

I.

In those days of student preaching and ministering when I would be called to a home where a loved one had been taken I often went with heavy feet. And as I went I would think over and over: "What shall I say? What shall I say? What comfort can I bring?" And over and over in another kind of thick darkness I became aware of God. I found His name spoken tenderly, and men and women completely trustful of Him! With me it is no longer a question whether one learns more of life and God in the sunshine or the shadow. The testimony through the years has mounted to the point that I now say where the thick darkness is—God is!

There is nothing wrong with standing close to joy, fun, sunshine, laughter. And no man should say that God cannot be in merriment. But I do say that God is in the thick darkness; it is certain that He is there. It is God's business to be in the darkness above all other places. If God avoided darkness—especially the thick darkness—He could never be the Father which Christ tells us about. No, life will not be richer, deeper, fuller without the dark hours; the fact is that life will be poorer, more shallow, more nearly empty!

II.

They who go into the darkness where God is gain some mighty and stabilizing experiences that others who stand afar off lack and need greatly. Too many of us standing afar off lose so much! It is not safe to stand afar off. Some think it is safer, but that is not true. The trouble is that these so-called dark hours, to our finite minds, contain undescribable terrors. God is in the great temples of the land where there is light, color, and glorious music. He is to be found in the music and words of the great hymns of the ages. His presence is to be recognized in the happy fellowship of the prayer meetings. His presence is to be seen in the glowing countenances of the men and women who have yielded all that in them is unto Him. Make the list as long as you please of the places where God is to be found, but do not leave out the thick darkness!

In Moses' day the people stood afar off. In our Lord's day—and the day He died—the people still stood afar off. They are still standing afar off from Him and where God is. That is one of the sad reports we have from Germany. Some of the noblest of the leaders—deeply spiritual men—have entered into the thick darkness of concentration camps and prison—but the people have stood off!

The people crowded about Jesus when He was free to feed them, heal them, speak those marvelous words of His to them. But when He drew near unto the thick darkness how far off many of His followers stood! Yet it was that very event which was to save them. It was the very event, as black as it seems to be, that was to eventually light the world, to keep before the world an undying rebuke for its savagery. And they stayed away, afar off, from that event.

III.

Any hawk with trinkets and a bit of a show can gather a crowd close about him within a few minutes. But let a man, sincere and intelligent, try to gather a group to venture with him in some great experience with God, and the people begin to move away and to stand afar off. And he with the few must enter into the darkness for the sake of the others. How great is the debt we owe to the men and women who for our sakes have entered into the thick darkness!

When the Pilgrim fathers and mothers pushed off from England's shores for America and its bleak forests and dangers there were many who stood afar off. And they who stood there were hoping that eventually the word would come back that this gallant band had arrived and that God was there, and that all would be well with them, if they, too, went later on! After Sir Wilfred Grenfell went into the darkness of the north and returned he had to call a halt on the large numbers of people who wished to journey with him to see the country on the safer return voyages! And many women would have given great fortunes if they could have seen the fame that was to come to Jane Addams and entered with her in those early days into the thick darkness of a great city. If only they had not stood afar off their names would have been coupled with hers forever in the world's book of fame! Believe me, it is as I said, dangerous to stand too far off when great events are transpiring for the Kingdom of God!

And then one thinks of Father Damien going into the darkness of the leper world while many stood afar off and wished that they, too, were like him. And did he not find among those sufferers joy, peace, and God? And yet, there are still some who believe that when their health goes that God goes; that when wealth slips from them that God has slipped from them; that when friends are lost to them the friendship of God is lost to them; that when light, laughter, and fun cease for a time that God has ceased to be forever. But men and women have proved, as Moses proved—that entering in the thick darkness, leaving even all that the crowd holds to be dear, will bring one to God. "Madam," said a great minister once to a lady who was lamenting she had lost her Lord, "go down into the slums and work and you will find Him."

I have not described nor defined the kinds of darkness, the thick darkness that is before us and gathering around us personally and nationally. I have merely hinted. For he who does not recognize the coming shadows in this hour never will in any hour! But the darkness must be and can be entered into by someone. Once it was Moses. Later it was our Lord, and today I hope and pray it will be our beloved Church, and entered into the spirit of the Master!

But having said that I wonder sometimes if what we call darkness is darkness after all? May there not be some fault of ours? Could it be our lack of sight, our allowing a kind of film of fear to come over our spiritual sight, our lack of being able to distinguish between true and false values? That day Moses had his experience on the mountain-side it was physical darkness that had settled down on the slopes. But that is not our problem. We know how to take care of physical darkness. We have met that problem with marvelous physical equipment. We have far-reaching searchlights, and electric

GEORGIA.

The Georgia young people have three separate Christian Life Conferences through which they carry on much of the Georgia Pilgrim Fellowship work. This spring each of these groups is holding a meeting. The programs are splendid and the meetings should be of great value to each section.

Hear Dean Wisseman, as the conductor and dean of the Elon Summer School of Leadership Training, cry out now: "All out for Elon College." This simply means for you to get ready now and when the time comes, you will be prepared. Let all the Pilgrim Fellowship groups of the Southern Convention, especially, take up the cry, "All out for the Elon Training School, June 27-July 2."

CONFERENCE OR STATE PUBLICATIONS.

Many state and conference groups of young people in the Southeast Convention of Pilgrim Fellowship have their own monthly, quarterly or occasional publication. This is, in my estimation, a splendid way of advancing the cause and principles of our Pilgrim Fellowship. The leaders in the church tomorrow are the youth in the church today. So, let each conference or state group consider the importance of knowing what others are doing and of sharing plans of spiritual help with one another. If your conference or state Pilgrim Fellowship, as an organization, does not have such a publication, then you make suggestions at your next group meeting outlining what you have in mind and assuring the officers of your cooperation. It will be a real help. Try it.

J. EVERETTE NEESE,
Publication Supt.

MATERIALS.

Have you ever become almost distracted, wondering where the proper materials for a particular program could be secured? Then, if that is true, it is for you that I write. The question often arises as to best materials available for particular groups. Let me say in the beginning that the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Convention, Rev. F. C. Lester, Norfolk, Va., Executive Secretary, can answer any request relative to programs for special occasions. For quarterlies and monthly periodicals you will find it difficult to secure better materials than I have listed below:

FOR USE IN SUNDAY SCHOOL.

For boys and girls of high school age (14 to 17 years), The Pilgrim High School Quarterly—Secured from the Pilgrim Press, Boston, Mass.

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

(18 to 24 years.)

The Pilgrim High Road—The Pilgrim Press, Boston, Mass.

FOR EVENING PROGRAMS.

For your evening meeting there is none better than The Pilgrim Highroad. Harry Thomas Stock writes the programs under the heading, "The Pilgrim Fellowship Programs." They are interestingly written and easy to present. If you have never used The Pilgrim High Road, do not try another publication of any kind until you have tried the best. Each issue of The Pilgrim High Road contains something of the following:

Interesting stories. Points of view. Youth in the church today. A page devoted to "What's Going On" among the various Pilgrim Fellowship groups. Suggestions for worship programs (as fine a worship programs as I have ever seen). The Sunday school lessons, Pilgrim Fellowship programs, and Christian Endeavor topics. In no one publication can more valuable and useable material be found. Try "The Pilgrim High Road."

J. EVERETTE NEESE,
Publication Supt.

HAVE YOU HEARD YET?

No doubt you have heard something definite about a Caravan in your own district of Pilgrim Fellowship. At least your Committee hopes so, for on April 20, the official Southeast Caravaning Season was opened and ever since—we're all for the open road!

Certainly ours is a program which demands fortitude, and a desire to carry on to our fellow men the high aims of our own Christian purpose.

We do hope you may share our enthusiasm for the benefits we believe can be derived from such trips as have been suggested to you. All we ask is a trial—after the first trip the difficulty comes in waiting until you can go on another!

If at any time we can be of any service to you in any way just let us know, and our best will come back to you.

We feel sure that you won't forget those brief reports of all the Caravans you go on. Thanks for all of your cooperation, and Bon Voyage!

amount of $12,500 for Elon College. The college greatly needs this amount. If the churches of the Convention and the Convention could secure this amount for the college, her position would be most satisfactory. The Board of Education reporting to the Convention in session this week will ask the Convention:

1. For its approval of Elon College and commendation of the work that it is doing.

2. To adopt a plan whereby the college, in cooperation with Convention officials, may carry its program of education to the last local church constituting the Convention that the churches themselves may have a program of training that will mean local enrichment and development.

3. That the Convention devise in some way plans whereby the college may receive its share of the apportionments. Other departments of the Convention are out of debt and at the same time receive practically their full apportionments. Other children of the Convention are properly fed and clothed. They can earn their way. Elon College, just as truly a child of the Convention as any other department, is unable to earn its way and because of its inability, it needs the encouragement and succor of its mother. The college is only appealing to the Convention to provide for its support as the Convention provides for the support of other departments. The college pledges itself in return to render larger and more efficient service to the church.

voted to publish another "Program Guide" to be used next year. This "Guide" will be distributed at the July meeting.

Charles E. Heath, Jr., our first vice-president, is chairman of the program committee for the July meeting, and has already started to work on his plans.

The work of our young people in Eastern Virginia is progressing very nicely, and we look forward to another big meeting in July.

INTERDENOMINATIONAL LUNCHEON.

Following a custom in vogue in New York City for the last few years of holding a May Day Luncheon for Protestant church women, the three national church women's groups—the Committee on Women's Work of the Foreign Missions Conference, the Council of Women for Home Missions, and the National Council of Federated Church Women—are uniting in an appeal to church women in all of the communities of the country—said to number 77,000—to hold similar interdenominational luncheons on Tuesday, May 3, 1938 to consider together

Unity in Christian Service.

Believing that both enthusiasm and inspiration will come with the knowledge that so many in all parts of the country are simultaneously gathering for earnest thought of their relation to the affairs of the Church, the nation, and the world, and that attention may be focused on the vital needs of the day, an outline program is being prepared that will be sent free to any applicant on receipt of a stamped and addressed envelope (size 5 x 10 inches).

torches that will throw a beam of light hundreds of yards. There would have been no need for their generation to have stayed out of the darkness that baffled the people in Moses' day.

I suppose it is too much to expect that all who are in the fellowship of the Church are willing to step forward and plunge into the darkness even if God is there. Do you recall the story of Sir Nigel and his White Company? The company stands before him in a solid line while he calls for volunteers to step forward and go with him on a dangerous expedition. He does not see a single man leave the formation. He is amazed for it seems that these veterans of his have turned cowards. But the great knight has not seen clearly for through the years of campaigning his eyes have become dim. An aid steps forward and says something like this: "Sire, they have stepped forward—they stepped forward as one man! All are willing to go with you!"

I say, perhaps, it is too much to expect something like that from the Church as a whole in the present crises and when those other black shadows in the offing come upon us. But it does seem that even now large numbers of us are too far off from where God is—in the thick darkness!

FAMILY ALTAR.

The use of "Windows" in the Word of God is striking. It is seen in such passages as these: "The windows of heaven were opened," "And the windows of heaven were stopped," "If the Lord make windows in heaven," "My beloved looked forth at the windows," "Who are these that flee as a dove to their windows?" "Their voice shall sing in the window."

The subject of windows is an interesting one. We look out of them and see life. We have been told of a picture which represents a window with a little child inside looking out and feeding the birds in a deep snow. It is a symbol of life doing "unto one of the least of these." We see Christ at the window of heaven pouring out His blessings upon His needy children.

Prayer—O, our Father, we need Thee every hour. As we look up pour out Thy blessings upon our waiting souls, that we may have what Thou seest we need. Amen.

The National Pilgrim Fellowship

I'VE BEEN TO ROCKFORD.

It was a cold, icy, drab day in February, and the Rockford region had almost been cut off by frozen floods. But there was warmth and friendliness on the campus. Even the girl who guided the lost stranger to the President's office was in a fine frame of mind, in spite of the fact that she was facing the tribulations of mid-years. And President Cheek was hospitality itself. She is delighted that we are coming, and is going to prove a royal hostess. She attended the World Congress of Youth in Geneva, Switzerland, and will tell us something about that meeting.

The college is beautiful, set in an attractive campus. It has an ivy covered quadrangle, with enough of the appearance of age to give a sense of solidarity and permanence. The interior is spic and span. (Evidently girls do not rough house at college, for the furniture, woodwork, floors, and all gave the appearance of perfect housekeeping and mature demeanor on the part of the students.) And the dining-room is the restful kind of place, in which we shall not be crowded, in which we can relax while we visit and eat. I didn't stay for lunch, but I'm told that nobody ever complains about the food. Ever hear of a college like that? Guess you're glad we're going there.

They have all the facilities we need: good classrooms, large enclosed porches for group meetings, a spacious campus with plenty of trees, a quite restful chapel, tennis courts, and a swimming pool. It is a perfect place for our meeting. All we need to do is to furnish the brains and the purpose. And, from all advance reports, we are going to do that.

I've been to Rockford, And I like the sample. See you all there, soon.

Enthusiastically yours,

HARRY THOMAS STOCK, Sec'y,
Young People's Work.

WHY WE'RE GOING TO ROCKFORD.

Much of the importance of Rockford lies in the fact that it is the first meeting of the National Council of the Pilgrim Fellowship. The Council has probably done more to strengthen our fellowship than any one of us realizes, but we have not had the opportunity as a group to see how far we have come, or to plan together for the future of the Pilgrim Fellowship. At Rockford we shall be doing both of these things. We shall have a chance to see how states are developing their programs, how some of them have been working together in regional activities. Even more important, we shall be determining the main emphases of our national program for the next two years.

"YOUTH BUILDING A NEW WORLD."

I saw a youth today.
In his hands
He held a Book.
I saw him read
And then look off
To the horizon.
On his face was the Radiance of the morning sun.
In his eyes
Was the look
Of one who "dreams great dreams."

He set one foot
Upon the industrial world,
And one upon earth's battlefields,
And youth of every country, creed,
and color
Came and stood with him.
Together they soundlessly raised,
Above the clang and clatter of steele,
Above the hate and "shock of war,"
A structure of shining beauty.

"Youth," I questioned,
"What are you doing?"
And the youth replied,
"I am building a new world!"
—Louise Ingles Hyde.

Throughout the whole conference we shall be experiencing again what we felt at Lakeside, Ohio, two years ago—the sharing of stimulating and vigorous fellowship, which does more than anything else to make us realize our unity of spirit and purpose. As I see it, Rockford will mean a great step toward the achievement of a more effective Pilgrim Fellowship.

Sincerely yours,
LANSON GRANGER, Pres.,
Nat'l Pilgrim Fellowship.

DEAR OLD MOTHERS.

I love old mothers—mothers with white hair
And kindly eyes, and lips grown soft and sweet
With murmured blessings over sleeping babes.
There is something in their quiet grace
That speaks the calm of Sabbath afternoons;
A knowledge in their deep, unfaltering eyes
That far outreaches all philosophy.

Time, with caressing touch about them weaves
The silver-threaded fairy-shawl of age,
While all the echoes of forgotten songs
Seem joined to lend sweetness to their speech.

Old mothers! as they pass with slow-timed step,
Their trembling hands cling gently to youth's strength.
Sweet mothers! —as they pass, one sees again
Old garden-walks, old roses, and old loves.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES

Pastor E. J. Sanderson reports a very happy Easter Sunday at Haw River. The day began with a wedding at 8:30. Five new members were received into the church at the well-attended morning service. Mrs. Sanderson is continuing an extended visit with her people in Canada.

NEWS NOTES FROM THE CONVENTION.

About thirty laymen and perhaps as many ministers attended the men's banquet and heard Dr. William F. Frazier describe the type of laymen needed in local churches.

The Woman's Missionary Conference was well attended and business transacted in excellent fashion. Our women are leaders in our churches, and when they come together in Convention they still lead.

The Finance Committee recommended, and the Convention adopted, the same financial goals for the next two years that we have had during the past biennium. The present financial plan is to be continued.

The Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship executed a good program at the young people's banquet which was attended by a large number of young people. The church dining room was filled to its capacity for this banquet.

It was agreed that our Congregational-Christian Church has made a real contribution to the world, is doing so now, and may do so in the future. It was further emphasized that our contribution can be much larger than it is now.

Dr. H. S. Hardeastle, acting as chaplain, presented good messages on the religion of Jesus that reaches the individual and works itself out into social endeavor. The closing communion service was a fitting climax to the Convention program.

Dr. I. W. Johnson, secretary, and Dr. W. C. Wicker, treasurer, were absent from the Convention for the first time in many years. Both of them have served the Church for approximately a quarter of a century and are now retiring. The good wishes of the Convention were extended to both.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is to continue to be published by Mr. John T. Kernodle, of Richmond, Va. A goal of 3,000 subscribers in the Convention was set and the conferences are asked to local churches in like manner as it does moneys for the various enterprises.

Eighty-eight delegates were registered at the Southern Convention last week. There were many visitors but the total attendance was far below what seems to be necessary. The Convention passed a resolution asking the conferences to consider having one representative from each church in addition to the present delegation.

The Board of Education and the Board of Christian Education are to be merged into one Board under the title of Board of Christian Education. This Board will direct the educational program of our Church, beginning in the Cradle Roll department and continuing through Elon College. President L. E. Smith is to be chairman of this Board.

Considerable emphasis was given to the fact that the total membership of our churches is decreasing rather than increasing. This was due, in large part it appeared, because of the revision of church rolls, but the Convention was of the opinion that the time has come for a forward and progressive attempt to make net gains in Sunday school and church enrollment.

An office of Promotional Secretary was set up to be financed by the Convention, the Board of Christian Education, and the Mission Board. This secretary will be charged with editing THE CHRISTIAN SUN, stimulating the growth of local churches, and presenting the claims of the denominational enterprises. Rev. F. C. Lester was elected to fill this job, but at this writing has not accepted the office.

COMMITTEES OF SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE COMMITTEE ON EVANGELISM.

REVS. J. L. NEESE, W. M. STEVENS, F. ERVIN HYDE, M. A. POLLARD, AND ROY D. COULTER.

Dear Co-Workers:

By this time you have already received my letter to each of you personally congratulating you on being a member of such an important committee, and outlining to you the work I wish each of you to help us do. I have checked your reports to your conferences last fall and I see that the members of this committee received into their own churches last year 260 new members. Drop me a line telling me how many you have received up to the present time this year, stating how many of them are on confession of faith.

Please let me call to your attention a resolution adopted by the Southern Convention this week: Resolved, That we challenge each church to add annually at least one new member net per fifty members it has on its roll. Explain to your fellow pastors and through them to their churches that this means a net gain in every church, and that it means that if a church has fifty members or less that it must gain one new member above all losses from its roll either by death, revision or transfer; if it has a hundred members it must gain two above all losses, etc. Last year we lost, according to our annual reports, 287 members, a net loss of 287 members.

You and I are charged with the responsibility of stopping that leak. We are charged with the responsibility of opening the front doors of our churches and closing the back doors! Will you not join with me in prayer every day until our next Convention sessions that our Southern Convention may show a gain, a real gain, in this biennium? Hold the challenge in the above resolution up to each of your pastors and churches in your respective conference, and let us see which conference will come nearest meeting that goal, or which will go farthest over it. Yours for a growing church, growing in grace, and in power, to win others to Christ.

JOHN G. TRUITT, Ch'rman,
Committee on Evangelism.

was presented by Prof. A. L. Hook, of Elon College, in keeping with our Elon College emphasis program at the Henderson Church. As a pastor it is my desire to acquaint my people with the various enterprises of our church and encourage them to be loyal thereto. The pictures of Elon College were presented to a capacity house, and I must here confess that they were far superior to my expectations. Prof. Hook has spent much time and energy in filming this set and he has certainly done an exceptional job. He is only too glad to visit other churches, as he did ours, and present the program free of charge. Correspond with him and confirm a date. They are well-worth seeing.

J. EVERETTE NEESE.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF COM- MITTEE ON TEMPERANCE.

That for the individual the safest and most Christian course is that of total abstinence from the use of, and refusal to participate in the manufacture or sale of alcoholic beverages.

That in our churches, and more especially in those departments maintained for the children and youth, intensive and morally stimulating courses of instruction in temperance education should be provided.

That advertising alcoholic beverages should be prohibited by State and national laws.

That every effort should be exerted to divorce the issue of prohibition from political attachment and abuses, and that it should be considered and acted upon as a moral issue with the most serious social implications.

That we associate ourselves with our sister denominations in an effort to arouse public sentiment in protest against the abuses and violations of the law of God and the laws of the land, and particularly as to those laws which have to do with the spiritual and moral life of our people.

HENDERSON CHURCH.

Our work at the Henderson Congregational-Christian Church is progressing nicely. We received into the church on Sunday, March 13th, three members: Mrs. B. C. Jordan, Ann Reames and Vergie Lee Garrett. We are now completing plans for a Fellowship hut to be erected at the rear of the church. This additional space is greatly needed and we ask an interest in the prayers of the Christian people in this project.

J. EVERETTE NEESE,

Pastor.

MOTHER'S LOVE.

Her love is like an island
In life's ocean, vast and wide,
A peaceful, quiet shelter
From the wind, and rain, and tide.

'Tis bound on the north by Hope,
By patience on the west,
By tender Counsel on the south,
And on the east by Rest.

Above it like a beacon light
Shine faith, and truth, and prayer;
And through the changing scenes of life,
I find a haven there.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

MY MOTHER.

When the second Sunday in May comes, we are all reminded of the contribution our mothers have made to us, and the love and honor that we owe them. One need not be softly sentimental in order to be frankly appreciative of the high heritage which his mother has made to his life. This writer believes in the values of Mother's Day and has tried to make that day a happy one for the mothers of his congregation. Last year he wrote most that he knows on the subject of Mother's Day. This year he wishes to be more personal and tell something of his own mother, whose picture appears on the front page of this paper.

My mother is not greatly different from other good mothers. She never had the cultural advantages that many have had, but her life on a farm in North Carolina for forty-one years gave her an opportunity to read God's laws in nature and in the Good Book. A struggle for a livelihood and the care of ten children gave her sufficient knowledge of suffering and sorrow to make life mellow and sympathetic, and five of the children still live to call her blessed. She remembers the hardships of the Civil War that claimed the life of her father and cast fear into the hearts of little children. But from the early days down to the present, as she approaches four score years, she has known the protecting presence of the divine Father who rules in the destinies of men.

My mother has contributed to her son a firm faith in God, a willingness to work without the hope of reward, a steadfastness to duty that flinches no responsibility, a loyalty to ideals that changes not because of the opinion of others, a belief in the Bible as the word of God and a guide for daily life, a Christian fortitude that makes one continue when others quit, and with it all a sense of humor that gives zest to daily routine. Her son has not yet learned how to use his heritage, but he is grateful for it.

On Mother's Day many another son can remember his heritage and pay a true tribute to the mother who gave him life, and a purpose for living.

THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

Elsewhere in this paper and succeeding issues will be found facts and interpretations of the recent session of the Southern Convention. Your editor wishes to make just a few observations concerning the Convention.

The Portsmouth Christian Church is to be congratulated on inviting and entertaining the Convention.

It was a big job for a little church, but the entertainment was excellent, and the church will be the better for having rendered this service. There are many other churches that would be the richer if they would share with others, and invite their church friends to meet with them.

The Convention faced frankly its reason for living, and in so doing justified its existence. Less emphasis was given to hearing reports, and more thought placed on the future of our Church as it takes its place in the world of today. This is a good sign. A church that does not produce the fruits of righteousness has no more right to cumber the ground than a fig tree that does not bear figs—and Jesus would cut down the latter as well as the former. After this Convention we cannot be content to report a declining membership in Sunday school or church. Neither will we want to haggle about insignificant figures, history, or even plans of work while the world about us dies for lack of the Gospel of Christ. Our faces are to the future and our eyes are on the Christ who leads us on to accomplishments.

The Convention moved towards a united front. We have various types of work to be done. For years each board and institution has gone its own way to promote its own cause. Now the Convention says that there should be a well-rounded program in the local church that will build the Kingdom of God in the present world. Enterprises of the Convention are to be presented by one person, and in a cooperative way with all the leaders of boards and institutions. It is believed that in unity there is strength.

The ultimate success of the Convention program depends upon the local churches. Unless we can produce more and better churches, the boards and institutions have reached their height of success. If the churches grow, then the united work can progress. It is for this reason that the Convention set in motion plans for the development of local churches. The election of a Promotional Secretary will not guarantee the success of our Church, but happy, eager, and energetic pastors and people who are constantly securing recruits for Kingdom service can guarantee the future of our Church. It is the devout hope of those assembled in Convention that our local churches may see new light, feel a new up-surge of spiritual fervor, and join heartily in progressive Christian service.

Ours was a great Convention, we believe, but the ultimate test of its worth is the growth of the churches within the Convention and their impact on the modern world.

REV. CHARLES H. ROWLAND, D. D.

News came to "The Christian Sun" on Monday morning that Dr. Charles H. Rowland, of Greensboro, N. C., had died, and that a funeral for him would be held Tuesday afternoon. This news was not altogether unexpected for Dr. Rowland had been ill for a long while. Details of his life and work will be given later by those more familiar with the facts, but at present the editor wants to record his personal appreciation for the life of this good man.

As pastor at Franklin, Va., and Greensboro, N. C., Dr. Rowland made his largest contribution as a preacher. His eloquence was that of a good man rather than that of poet or orator. The enthusiasm of his own heart went out to the hearts of his people. Because he loved, they loved.

In the councils of the Church he was wise, sympathetic, and courageous. In Conference and Convention he met with his fellows to consider the work of the Church he loved more than life. Younger men may follow his good example and be present when the church councils meet.

The pastorate gave to him the opportunity he craved. He sat in no house by the side of the road while the race of men passed by, but he went into the streets, market-places, and homes where people lived and moved and thought and felt. In his sight a man was a man without regard to race or social status. He loved people, rich and poor alike, and received the love of all who knew him. He had the heart of a pastor, and believed in his work.

His beloved companion and three excellent daughters will feel most keenly his going, but many others will join with them in their sorrow. They will not grieve, however, as those who have no hope. They expect to see him again some day in the Home prepared by his Master, and shall not be surprised if he is talking to others about the glory of God and the joy of Christian service.

OUR MISSIONARY NEEDS.

It is impossible for those of us who live in a quiet community to realize what is going on in the mission fields around the world. Especially tragic is our work in China and Japan. Everywhere the calls are greater than our Board can meet. Churches throughout America are giving not only to the general cause but to the specific things. Even yet we are unable to do half that needs to be done.

Recently some independent missionaries have spoken in our church conferences and churches telling of the work which they are personally undertaking in foreign countries. The appeal is specific and challenging. News comes that some of our churches are responding to this independent missionary endeavor. One could not object in any fashion to the type of thing that is being done, but it does seem a pity that our own church program should fail of accomplishment while we turn aside to join with others in their program.

Those interested in projects should write to Miss Helen Smith at 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass. She can give the names and addresses of boys and girls, students, evangelists, pastors and all types of missionary workers who can be contacted personally and supported by individuals or groups. This writer sincerely hopes that our own church people will respond to our own church work.

A GREAT MOTHER.

The pastor was serving his first pastorate. It was about the second year in that parish. The Sunday school met on Sunday afternoons. The organist was a boy about sixteen years old, who played the little, one-lung organ with two fingers—not knowing a great deal about music. The pastor, of course, was very anxious for a revival of religion and he believed the congregation was about ready for it.

The service of the Sunday school on one afternoon had been turned into a revival service and he had asked the organist to sing "The Ninety and Nine," while some one else played. The organist had sung the first verse of the hymn and the pastor noticed a tremble in the voice that did not belong there. It already had been seen that he was usually pale and dark rings were about his eyes as if he had not slept the night before. About sixty boys and girls were present. In the midst of the chorus, the voice broke and the boy broke down entirely and took his seat. There was sympathy in the company. The larger boys and girls were deeply stirred and in a few moments, almost without an invitation, they filled the altar from one end to the other.

There was a great revival after that. The pastor wanted to know why the organist broke down. He knew that he did not do that ordinarily and that he had looked very tired and worn. All were afraid he was sick.

The next day the pastor stopped at the humble home to find out the trouble. There were a number of children in that family. The mother sat in her rocking chair by the window and the pastor thought he had never seen her so pale and with such a haggard look. Dark circles were about her eyes and before he could inquire about her oldest boy she asked: "Is it wrong, Pastor, to pray that you might die?"

The pastor was startled by such a question but it was asked in such a quiet, gentle voice that he was convinced that, if it was wrong, she was ready to repent.

"I know God will do what is best for us," she continued, "but I am sure I have never told you the difficulty in our home. I did not think it was necessary. My husband is a drunkard." Her voice trembled as she told this, but in a little while, with a look of great longing in her eyes, she continued, "Last Saturday night, about two o'clock, he came home drunk and swore he was going to kill little George. I took him in my arms from his crib to shield him. The wrath of the father was then directed against me. The oldest boy got between his father and us to persuade him and protect us, if possible. My husband drove us downstairs, through the kitchen and out into the deep snow in the back yard. My bare foot prints are there now. He shut the kitchen door and declared that if he could not kill us, we should not come in. My big boy went to the front door and then unlocked the kitchen door and let me in. We were very cold.

"For nearly two hours he forced us around. My oldest boy finally persuaded him to go to bed and to sleep. The next day was Sunday. He was still sullen and in an ugly humor when he awoke. My boy told me that you had asked him to sing and that he broke down. That is why.

"Oh, Pastor, I feel like I am a coward if I pray to die! We have been married over twenty-one years. When we were first married he was a good man and was in his place in the church when Sunday came. That went on for about ten or twelve years. Since then my life has been a hell. If I should die now the children would be left in his hands, therefore, I have to live. I have sometimes wished that he had died when he was young and pure, but that would have broken my heart, for I loved him so."

What could the pastor do or say? There are thousands of mothers in the same (Continued on page 14.)

CONTRIBUTIONS

SOUTHERN CONVENTION ACTIONS.

Others will be writing about the Convention. Certainly the church at large should know what was done at Portsmouth. Impressions and general statements will not adequately convey what was done. THE CHRISTIAN SUN is the only means by which information may be given in print. It is fortunate that the circulation of the paper has recently been increased. If the paper went to every home in the church, it would be possible to inform the whole constituency about the important actions taken in the recent session of our Convention. Detailed information should be given about the actions that are far reaching.

The adoption of a five-point program for the local church was significant:

1. Devotions—home religion. Present to every family in the church a simple plan by which devotions can be conducted at a time most convenient to the family. This material should contain instructions that would create a respect for and a loyalty to our church. Prayer and Bible reading should be emphasized.

2. Public Worship—church attendance at morning and evening services with special emphasis upon the evening service. The evening service is the natural time for evangelism to reach the unsaved. Our churches should not abandon the evening service. If proper effort is put into the program for the evening service and the sermon is Biblically evangelistic, both the church and the world will be attracted.

3. Evangelism—an evangelistic program in every church with instructions as to how to locate non-church people in given communities and how the church may organize to reach these unchurched people. The church has never grown without an evangelistic effort. These non-evangelical churches receive more members as a result of evangelistic emphasis in their given communities put on by sister churches than they receive from their own efforts. We must increase our membership. There are plenty of unchurched people in every community. Christ invited them to come but He has commanded the church to go. It is our responsibility.

4. Education—information regarding our church, our institutions, and our program to reach those who are in the church and out of the church for greater service—a complete program of organization by which it may be done. Our own Sunday school literature should be used, and THE CHRISTIAN SUN should be in every home in the membership of our Convention.

5. Stewardship and Finance—proper support for the local church, for the enterprises of the Convention, for the departments of the denomination, undergirding the whole program with a campaign for tithing authorized and adequately planned by the Convention and requested for every church in the Convention however large or small, rich or poor. The whole future of our church rests upon our willingness to give for its support.

These are only statements that will be put in the hands of a special committee to make a full statement and provide the information called for under each item. Plans for introducing the program to the local church and putting the same into operation was referred to the Advisory Committee which, according to Convention action, is constituted by the President of the Convention, the Chairmen of the Boards, and the Presidents of the Conferences constituting the Convention. It is hoped that the Advisory Committee will be called into session as soon as is practical in order that this important program may be put into operation at the earliest possible moment. In practically every session of the Convention keen interest in the local church was manifested. If we can improve the local church, the entire Convention will move forward.

L. E. SMITH.

THE BIBLE A REVELATION.

“Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law.”—Psalm 119: 18.

The Bible is primarily a revelation of God, and is therefore from God.

Its great purpose is to make God known that many may be brought into communion with him through the knowledge given.

The things made known in the Bible are utterly beyond reach of man unless made known by the Holy Spirit as stated in I Cor. 2: 11, “The things of God knoweth no man, but the spirit of God.”

The Bible, then, is a spiritual book and belongs entirely to the spiritual realm.

It was impossible for any man to produce what is in it, for all is a matter of revelation.

No man is educated who does not know and believe the Bible.

Why do men speak against the Bible? Let the word of God answer: “If they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.”—Isaiah 8: 20.

May the preachers of our land come back to the first base and listen to the word, “Ye must be born again.” And when we are born again of the Spirit, then we have light, and when we have light, we will return to our God-given commission.

What was the great commission given to the church?

Let the word of God answer again: “Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel.”—Mark 16: 15.

A great many of our churches have turned away from this great God-given commission of preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ, and have gone into the show business.

God have mercy on the preacher who fails to cry out against his church putting on a show.

Listen to your radio program and see how many churches all over our land are putting on shows.

I thank God that no church that I have served has ever sponsored a show under my ministry and over my protest.

When men and women accept the Bible as God's revelation and separate themselves from the world, then we will return to our God-given commission of preaching the gospel.

In this day of cultural regeneration, in this day of regeneration by character, so-called, in this day when they are putting in the Sunday school literature that you can so train the child that he will never know sin, oh, how we need to preach again that the soul outside of Jesus Christ is dead.

That's why mothers and fathers need to wake up, wake up to the fact that their children outside of Jesus Christ are dead.

In these days we hear a good deal about the Fatherhood of God. There is no such thing as the Fatherhood of God outside of Jesus Christ.

Ye must be born again.

May the Church wake up and come back to the old-time gospel of Jesus Christ, for it is the power of God unto every one that believe.

HERITAGE—WE OWE.

Yesterday being Sunday, several of us girls took a walk through the cemetery. On our way back to the college, we were approaching the first house of one of the townspeople when one girl said: "Let's go in and see this lady."

Of course, I didn't know the lady, but the chance to contact with a new personality secretly delighted me, and so I consented.

Perhaps it was the beauty of the approaching sunset, or perhaps the enchantment of the oncoming dusk or perhaps the lovely hanging Wistaria—but something about the place made everything seem very romantic.

She was such a charming little old lady, with pretty white hair and enticing manners. I liked her from the first, but I liked her even better when our conversation drifted into the olden days of Elon College.

Days when our college campus was a wilderness; when Saturdays were spent in boys and girls being allowed to pick up brush around the school. This was a rare privilege—they were together during this clean-up time. This was their social hour.

Days when East Dormitory was the girls' dormitory; when there were open fire-places in each of the rooms; when girls kept their own fires burning.

Days when students washed their faces in large wash-bowls and water was carried from the well in big buckets.

Days when boys and girls studied by oil lamps.

Days when class rooms were disturbed by the professor's pausing to have a new log put on the fire.

Days when boys worked hard to stay in school; when certain boys brought a cow to school and sold milk to pay their expenses.

Days when boys stayed in Noah's Ark and "kept houses."

"Yessirre," it was fun to think of those good old days when Elon sent out some fine specimens—some of the best men we'll ever know.

Elon has come a long way since those days. Soon we'll celebrate Elon's fiftieth anniversary. Surely, when we see what Elon has done in these past fifty years, we cannot help but feel a renewed urge to strive—to go a bit farther.

Regardless of what we do, we can never give of ourselves as did our Mothers and Fathers who have gone before. We can never quite repay our heritage!

MARGARET J. EARP.

A VISIT TO OUR MOUNTAIN CHURCHES.

On March 19, 1938, my husband and I, by appointment, met Rev. B. J. Earp at his home and went with him to his charge in Carroll County, Va.

We had been away from the work for ten years, having been located at Rocky Ford from the fall of 1925 to the spring of 1927, and spending the year of 1926 up there as mission workers. Rev. M. T. Sorrell was the pastor at the time I went, and Miss Morey, a mission worker. During the first year she and I taught the Rocky Ford day school and also assisted the pastor in church work. She went back to her home in May, of 1926.

Later I married and remained on as teacher of Rocky Ford and my husband, W. S. Bray, and I continued in the mission work, often visiting the Elk Spur Church and vicinity.

The churches have grown some, but death has also taken some of their members. Many of our school children are now married and their children attending school. We were very glad to meet our friends and we had a good time together. Mr. Earp preached at each place and also had Sunday school. Inclement weather and measles at Rocky Ford hindered the attendance.

Miss Victoria Edwards, on whom we called, is quite feeble, but we hope she may recover. Mr. Walter Edwards, her brother, a senior deacon at Rocky Ford, continues faithful to his duty, and his son, Clarence, who was one of my pupils at Rocky Ford, has recently been elected a deacon. Brother France King also continues faithful and was at church Sunday. May God prosper and bless the mountain work and pastor, is my prayer.

MRS. W. S. BRAY.

LEBANON CHURCH.

The third week in July, for forty years, has been the time of the year for the annual series of meetings at Lebanon Church, Senora, N. C. This year the time was changed to the week following the third Sunday in April. Rev. J. F. Morgan, of Norfolk, Va., was with us, and the services were well attended. Brother Morgan was at his best both as preacher and song leader. It was one of the best meetings held at this church for years. The congregation was strengthened spiritually and there were several professions of faith and four united with the church.

Lebanon is an old church situated in a splendid farming section. It has had a part in making history for the denomination. Here the Longs, Staley and the Apples preached in their early days. Three ministers have gone out from here, Cornelius Apple, W. L. Wells and B. J. Earp. In recent years there have come reverses by changes in local conditions. There are four churches close together where formerly there were but two. Many among the leading members during the present pastorate of twenty-one years have passed to their reward. However, there are at present a number of faithful ones carrying on the work. They are a pleasant people to serve and love their church and the cause of the Master.

C. E. NEWMAN,
Pastor.

BURTON'S GROVE.

Burton's Grove Christian Church observed Easter on April 17th, by special services. In the afternoon, at 3 o'clock, the pastor, Rev. B. H. Watkins, preached a most inspiring sermon.

In the evening, at 8 o'clock, a special Easter service was observed. The following program was in order:

The worship service was conducted by the pastor; the subject was "Myrrh-Bearers." The scripture lesson was Matt. 28:1-12.

After the worship service a pageant was given by the young people of the church entitled "The Gift of Life." The service was featured by special music, with Miss Doris Watkins at the piano. The hymn "Nailed to the Cross" was rendered by Misses Morris, Marquite Stephenson, and Doris Watkins, and Carl Barrett. A duet, "I Gave My Life for Thee," was sung by Mrs. J. H. Stephenson and Mrs. B. H. Watkins, and a solo, "Christ Arose," by Miss Elsie Faison.

At the close of the service an offering was taken for Missions, which amounted to the church's apportionment for Missions for the year.

Under the most faithful leadership of the pastor the church seems to be going forward very nicely and is very enthusiastic for the future.

FOR THE JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOL AGE.
"What can boys and girls of the early 'teen age really do in World Service? Just talking about anything is not half so interesting as doing something! Here are three stories of what intermediate groups have done: . . ." This fine pamphlet has just been issued by the Department of World Fellowship, and the Board of Christian Education at 514 South Main Street, Norfolk, Va., has several of these pamphlets which will be sent to leaders upon request.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

OUR CONVENTION.

One, who at the present time, goes into any group interested in the status and progress of the church may expect "Problems." This writer in recent months and days has had the privilege of either personally hearing these group discussions, or reading of them, in the councils of various denominations. Those best acquainted with and most deeply interested in the church realize; "The church is slipping." Take the statistics of any denomination for the last ten years and as far as this writer knows they tell the same story that actually, or relatively, the church is slipping—and the slipping is backward instead of forward.

Now the most hopeful sign, as this writer sees it, is that the church is facing this fact, recognizing that it hasn't the grip that it once had and is not making the progress it once made. We can never solve the problem, nor conquer an enemy, until we face and seriously consider the factors entering into the problems and the strength of the enemy.

Our Southern Convention at Portsmouth, last week, was exceedingly significant and deeply interesting to this writer, because the hundreds who gathered in that Convention seemed to realize the gravity of the present situation and the actual need of taking steps to build with Christ and go forward. Every speaker on the program, of course, realized that the church at present has its burden and its task, and that the "problems" can be solved. The difficulty, of course, in such a situation is that every speaker had his, or her idea, as to how the "problems" will be solved. One might become discouraged at these multitudinous opinions, but one takes heart from the proverb, "In a multitude of counsel there is wisdom." It was a great Convention; great in public utterances; great in comparative attendance; great in the deep concern manifested for the church as the living body of our Lord, and that for which He gave His life and suffered His death on Calvary. This writer believes sincerely that out of our Portsmouth Convention will come a spirit of devotion to the church, a deep desire for spirituality in the church, and progress in building up the kingdom as represented by our fellowship such as we have not witnessed in years. The devotion, the consecration, the anxiety, the earnest petitions and devout prayers to almighty God uttered and unuttered during the sessions of that Convention will not, and cannot, be in vain. If there is power in prayer, wisdom in counsel, progress in devotion and courage in consecration, then the church of our fellowship can but receive the blessings and benefits of the Portsmouth Convention. The inclination is to write of the great utterances, the high lights, the outstanding events of the Convention, and these will be written about in THE CHRISTIAN SUN and elsewhere in the weeks to come and no one writer can cover the field, even cursorily in one article, even of many columns. We just wish all CHRISTIAN SUN readers could have enjoyed all, or portions, of that great Convention.

Of course, the most beautiful, the most orderly, the most joyous, single session, or event, of the Convention was that of the Woman's Missionary program over which Mrs. John G. Truitt, Suffolk, Va., presided with such grace and impressiveness. No one who was in that part of the Convention can ever forget the sweetness and the sacredness of the hour, and the utterances from beginning to the end, of all who took part in their marvelous program and procedure. As in the day of our Lord when here on earth it requires the hand and the heart of woman to reveal to the world the spirit of the Master, Who said to, and about a woman, "Where-soever this gospel shall be preached in the whole world, there shall also this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her."

As will be seen from the above several of the churches are sending in their Easter offering for missions. It is to be hoped that all the churches who took the offering will soon complete the same and send in the funds as they are needed for immediate use in supporting our missionary work at home and abroad. If any church in all our number failed to take the offering it is not too late and it is to be devoutly hoped that the offering will be taken even if it is not as large as might be desired, so that we, all of us, may have a part in the divine and unselfish task of sharing with others the blessed gospel of our Lord.

THE AMERICAN BOARD FELLOWSHIP OF THOSE WHO CARE.

Dear Friends:

We are earnestly asked by our representatives in India to pray for the Christian churches and communities and their leaders in that land in this hour of unprecedented opportunity. Let us pray especially for such evangelical leaders as Dr. Bhaskar Hivale, of Bombay, whom many of us in America know personally, and others like him. Here are a few sentences from a statement that challenges prayer:

"... The Indian Christian Church is increasing at the rate of 200,000 every year. . . . Never during these decades has India been so responsive to the Christian message. . . . Never was Indian Christianity so profoundly respected for its character. . . . Never was Indian Christianity so generous and open-handed . . . there is far more money raised in India itself for the Christian work in India than comes from other lands. . . . Never was Indian Christianity so intelligent. . . . Never before have there been won for Christ in a single decade so many of India's caste people as during the past ten years when more than 30,000 of these were won, the reason nearly always given by the caste people themselves for becoming Christians being that they had noticed the transformation in the life of the depressed classes through becoming disciples of Jesus. . . . India's depressed classes are on the move in a vast and growing revolt against Hinduism . . . a heavy responsibility (rests) upon every branch of India's church . . . the main concern of the church all over India must be to preserve its purity and sincerity in spite of increasing numbers . . . Christian people of other lands dare not turn lightly away from the cry for help that comes from India's awakening millions . . . only nine missionaries at work for every million of India's vast population . . . (pray for) a vast increase in the number and quality of Indian leaders themselves."

I have been greatly stirred by the "Call to a Forward Movement" issued by the National Christian Council of China in the midst of these critical and awful days. Read these sentences, imagine many more of the same spirit and then humble yourself in prayer for China. What might not happen if this call were widely and sincerely answered:

"In the midst of suffering, and loss, and national crisis we would call upon the Christian Church to move forward. The gospel of Christ is not a message of defeat, it is a summons to struggle against the forces of evil in the lives of men and nations. It is the good news of the love of God in action, of help for those in need, of devotion and sacrifice for the welfare of society and the state, of ideals of the world-wide Kingdom of God, and of faith in the ultimate victory of right.

"We, therefore, call on all Christians to cherish this assurance in their hearts, and through daily communion with God and the constant realization of His nearness, to find inward peace in the midst of turmoil, reserves of strength to bear the burdens of the day, courage steadfastly to face the uncertainties of the future, and faith to go forward.

"A deeper experience of Christian fellowship and communion with God, as individuals, in the religious life of the home, and in the worship of the church.

"A deeper concern for winning men and women to Christ and for the salvation and welfare both of the community which each church serves, and of all mankind.

"One of our missionaries writes: 'Our Chinese Christian leaders are proving their loyalty to Christ to the utmost. They put us missionaries to shame.'"

Those who wish to and can do so are asked to observe the fifteen minutes from 8:45 to 9:00 A. M. every Wednesday morning for united prayer. That is the time when the Boston group meets, but the bond that binds The Fellowship of Those Who Care together around the world is faithful intercession daily for the American Board, its missionaries, the Christian communities in many lands and their leaders; for the churches in America and for the coming of the Kingdom of God around the world.

Yours sincerely,
FRED FIELD GOODSSELL,
Executive Secretary.

RANDOLPH DISTRICT OF WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

The Randolph District Woman's Missionary Conference of the Western North Carolina Conference met March 31st, at Big Oak Congregational-Christian Church in annual session.

The meeting was called to order by Mrs. I. H. Faust in the absence of Mrs. R. E. Caviness, District Superintendent. The program was based on the Supreme Challenge of the Church, with scripture reading from Isaiah 61:1. Ramsey, Ether, Park's Cross Roads, and Big Oak reported around 50 delegates and visitors present.

Revs. B. J. Earp, M. A. Pollard, and G. M. Tally were present and assisted with the program.

The Superintendent's message was good. She used as her theme the "Church and the Missionary Societies." She has done a good year's work, and is faithful and loyal in her love and devotion for the cause of missions. All sympathize with her in the loss of her husband recently.

Good music was furnished by the Big Oak choir.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, of Jacksonville, Florida, was an inspiration to all as she, in her happy, sweet way, spoke on "Saved to Serve."

Mrs. J. B. Cole very impressively conducted the worship service, after which the ladies of the church served a grand lunch on the church grounds at the noon hour. The afternoon session was opened with music.

Mrs. H. F. Brady read in her pleasing and distinct way Dr. J. O. Atkinson's message.

Rev. B. J. Earp was interesting in his account of our mountain work.

The following officers were elected: Mrs. Hugh R. York, Superintendent; Mrs. E. N. Brown, Secretary.

The place to meet next year will be determined later. The rally this year was good, and the Big Oak Church is to be congratulated for its enthusiasm and interest in missions. They are also building a new church and have the material on hand to begin it right away.

Mrs. I. H. FAUST.

NORFOLK DISTRICT MISSIONARY RALLY.

The eighteenth session of the Norfolk District of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference met at the Christian Temple on April 5, 1938, with the superintendent, Mrs. J. F. Morgan, presiding. The theme used for the day was: "Steering or Drifting." Recognition service showed nine churches well represented. The superintendent's inspiring message on the topic, "It Is the Spirit Which Animates the Workshop," was delivered in a very gracious manner. This was followed by an impressive and dignified worship service, "A Service of Challenge," which was led by Mrs. A. B. Jarvis, of the Christian Temple.

We were quite fortunate in having for our speakers of the day, Mrs. Hubert Lloyd, a missionary from Japan, and Mrs. W. G. Smith, from the mission work in China. These workers were able to bring us wonderful and appealing messages from the two countries in which we are vitally interested at this time, giving us a clearer insight into the actual conditions.

The following officers were elected for the coming year: Mrs. Joe A. French, Superintendent; Mrs. R. B. Wood, Assistant Superintendent; Mrs. R. E. Pulley, Secretary.

Departmental conferences were conducted by Mrs. J. F. Morgan on executive problems; Mrs. A. B. Jarvis on the work of Spiritual Life superintendents, and Mrs. J. E. Cartwright on Literature.

HAZEL H. PULLEY,
Secretary Pro Tem.

N. B.—All money for mountain mission work should be sent to Dr. J. O. Atkinson, at Elon College, N. C. Gifts of clothing, etc., to be distributed among the people should be sent to Rev. B. J. Earp, at Fancy Gap, Va.

"When my luck seems all out and I'm down at the mouth; when I'm stuck in the North and I want to go South; when the world seems a blank and there's no one to love and it seems even God is not in heaven above, I've a cure for my grouch, and it works like a shot—I just think of things that I am glad I am not."

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church"

MISS EMILY CARLETON, Editor, 541 Osceola Ave, Winter Park, Fla.

WHERE IS THE WAY?

Lo, in the darkness I wander,
Where is the light?
Nothing know I, but I wonder,
Is there no light?
Lord, in Thy vastness I wonder,
Where is the way?
How may I reach Thee, I wonder,
Is there no way?

Where is the way? "The fog comes on little cat feet. It sits looking over city and harbor on silent haunches," and World and Church and Individual Souls are asking, "Where is the way? . . . Where is the light?"

It is a terrible thing to have lost one's way in the dark. It's a fearful, lonely, dangerous thing to travel a mountain-top or a valley in the stealth-creeping, life-destroying fog. There are wrecks in the fog. There are lives lost in the darkness.

"Life is a maze, a tangle of ways." Have we "passed the 'Steering Star' in our quest for 'that something,' that 'magnificent obsession,' that giveth life?" All over our land this summer Christian conferences will be in session. "If in those classrooms, or under those campus trees, or on that cool green sod, youth and age shall fail to find the Face of God in Christ Jesus, those conferences shall have been in vain."

Over the top of Warm Springs Mountain in Virginia is a road, down which runs a long, white line. Those who live near there tell us that it was put there to guide travelers through the fog. Over the Highway of the Kingdom is also a white line. It says to every pilgrim, "This is the way; walk ye in it." And the Guide of that Road stands and calls clearly to every pilgrim, "I am the Way. Follow Me!" Only as we follow the White Line will we find the Way, and only as we look into the Face of the Guide—into that Face of Compassion and Love and Patience and Encouragement, into that Face of marvelous beauty and comfort and inspiration—will we find the Light. He is the Way, and He is the Light. Following Him, whether through sunshine or shadow, fog-bound souls may say with Browning:

I go to prove my soul!
I see my way as birds the trackless way,
I shall arrive! What time, what circuit first
I ask not; but unless God sends His hail
Or blinding fireballs, sleet or stifling snow
In some good time, His good time, I shall arrive;
He guides me and the bird. In His good time!

And following unquestionably those "clean," "sweet," "strong," "invigorating," "holy winds of God" will blow the fogs and the darkness from our souls.

MY MOTHER.

By ROY DAY.

Years are passing; gray hairs appear upon the head of one of the finest persons who ever lived. She sees us grow from short to long pants; she teaches us right from wrong and all of the things of benefit to us in this good world. Do we love this wonderful lady? With all our hearts! Down the path of knowledge she sends us year after year, kissing us as we leave. Tears fall from her lovely eyes when we get sick. Do we do anything to repay this lovely soul?

She is always proud of her girl or boy, and she cherishes the moments she has spent with us. We become very sad when she grows old. But the world must go on. When we are away from mother we are always comforted by her pleasant face in our vision. Never, as long as we live, will we see, hear or touch such a lovely soul as MOTHER.

The friendships which we form help to develop our character and mold our habits. Friends influence us for or against values in life. To please our friends we do certain things and will not do some other things. Our contacts with people today have a wide variation, and it is necessary that young people make choices of friends according to certain standards and ideals.

The Ideal Boy or Girl.

Do you agree with this summary: "The ideal boy is one who strives to live the fourfold life. He is a good sport, fights hard, gives his best, plays the game of life 'fair,' and is clean in appearance and in habits. Mentally he will be growing as did Jesus—(Luke 2:52). Last, but not first, he must have Jesus in his heart and life."

"The ideal girl must have the following requisites: truth, justice, kindness, humility, duty, prudence, faithfulness, patience, discretion. She may not be perfect in each grace, but will be at the job of developing these every day. A good description of the ideal girl is found in Proverbs 31:10-31."

For Discussion—

1. What kind of friendships did Jesus have?

2. Consider our own friendships. With what sort of people do we associate? Are we seeking sinners and trying to lead them in a kindly way to the Christ?

3. Should we be friendly toward all people? Can we mingle freely with all people without being "common" and cheapening ourselves?

4. What are the essential qualities of a Christian friend?

5. Think of a friendship which has "gone on the rocks" for some reason. What caused the break-up?

Suggested Hymns—

"What a Friend We Have in Jesus."

"Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life."

"We Would See Jesus."

COOPERATING IN SERVICE.

LESSON VI—MAY 8, 1938.

GOLDEN TEXT: For he that is not against us is for us.—Mark 9:40.

LESSON: Mark 9:30-41.

Jesus gave a great deal of his time, especially during the latter part of his ministry to "the training of the twelve." His greatest work was not done with large crowds or in the presence of the multitudes, but in the patient training of the little band, in whose minds he implanted his truth, and in whose hearts he put his spirit. Some of the most effective teachers and preachers are those who are patiently and persistently teaching the work of God. Numbers do not always mean everything. Sometimes much more effective work is being done in small classes than in great crowds. Mark says "And he would not that any man should know it," that is know that he was going through Galilee. Not because he was afraid, but because he wanted to have the smaller group with him so that he could teach them. We folks sometimes go too much for crowds. We have a tendency to mistake enthusiasm for achievement. We make activity a substitute for enlightenment. We would rather whoop things up than to take the long, hard, but after all the only sure way, of teaching. There is a place for a teaching ministry and a ministry of teaching.

Jesus Talks About His Death and His Resurrection.

"For he taught his disciples and said unto them, 'The Son of Man is delivered up into the hands of men, and they shall kill him; and when he is killed, after three days he shall rise again.'" To be sure Mark wrote these words after Jesus had been crucified and had risen from the dead. But Jesus spoke them before these things happened. And that is the significant thing. It might not have been so significant if he had merely said that his enemies would kill him—he knew of course of the rising opposition and the deadly venom of his enemies; but he predicted on more than one occasion that he would rise again from the dead the third day. Here is one of the stubborn facts of history. Here was one of the acid tests of the Master's spiritual insight and authority. What more exacting demand can be made of him than to demand that these prophetic words find exact fulfilment. Small wonder that the Father on another occasion said "Hear ye him." The story comes down from another day about a man who was thinking about establishing a new religion. One of his friends told him that it would not be hard to get a following if he would do two important things: get himself killed, and then rise again from the dead the third day. So far as the writer of these notes is concerned, he has confidence in what Jesus Christ said and he accepts it as the final and authoritative word in things moral and spiritual, on the basis of these words as recorded by Mark. Jesus spake as never man spake before. Or since.

"But they understood not the saying, and they were afraid to ask him." It may have been because they were still looking for an earthly kingdom, and they could not think of their King as being killed by his enemies. It may have been that they could not fit in the resurrection of an individual with their concept of the resurrection of the nation as a whole at the last day. In any event they did not understand what Jesus was talking about. And they were afraid to ask him.

It may be, however, that they were afraid to ask him because they feared, or knew, that he would tell them what they already half-surmised and did not want to know. At least that is true with us. We may not always know just what Christ expects of us, of what he would have us to give up as the basis of full surrender. But we are afraid to ask him, for fear it will be something we do not want to do, or something we do not want to give up. And hence we lose the victory and the power and the joy of life.

Jesus Talks About True Greatness.

"When they were in the house he asked them 'What were ye reasoning on the way?' but they held their peace; for they had disputed one with another on the way, who was greatest." The question may have been precipitated by the fact that Jesus took Peter and James and John on the Mount of Transfiguration. However, it arose, it is a sad commentary on the hardness and the blindness and the selfishness of human nature. Here was the Master under the shadow of the Cross and here were the disciples disputing as to who was greatest, or as Matthew puts it, who should be greatest in the Kingdom of heaven. Although Jesus did not hear the conversation directly—it is not easy to dispute about place and preferment in the presence of Jesus—he knew all too well what was going on. And he used the opportunity to teach the disciples, and us, the measure of true greatness. The test of greatest, the measure of greatness, is not how much a man knows or has or does, but his willingness to use such as he knows and has and can do, for others. Those hold first place in God's kingdom of spiritual values who are willing to be last of all, to be the servants of all. The Master gave meaning to these words a little later, when knowing that He came from God and went to God, took a towel and girded himself and washed the disciples' feet. Paul showed the same spirit when he—the world's greatest theologian and missionary—picked up sticks to build a fire for a group of convicts. Schweitzer showed it when he gave up fame and fortune to go to Africa to use all that he had and was in the service of God's black and blighted children of underprivilege.

But we can all have it, even if we are not so great in capacity as were these and other great servants. As Phillips Brooks says "Greatness after all, in spite of its name, appears to be not so much a certain size as a certain quality in human life. It may be present in lives whose range is very small." There is only one way to spell true greatness—in letters that spell s-e-r-v-i-c-e.

Jesus Talks About Tolerance.

The disciples saw "one casting out demons in thy name; and we forbade him because he followed not us. But Jesus said, 'Forbid him not . . . for he that is not against us is for us.'" Here was the spirit of intolerance. One would have expected better of the disciples who had seen so much of Jesus' broad spirit and intolerance. But they felt that they had a special claim to his spirit. They felt that those who were not of their own group of particular belief, should not attempt to minister in Christ's name. This spirit of tolerance, alas! is all too prevalent today. There are those who scoff at social service work because it is sometimes done by folks who do not go to prayer meeting. There are those who think that unless a man is a member of the church he cannot do any acceptable Christian service. There are those who think that the Spirit's operations are confined to their own particular organization. The fact is that there are those who are known as Christ's disciples who do not minister in His spirit at all. And there are those who are not professedly Christ's disciples who do minister in his spirit.

"Tell me thy company and I will tell thee what thou art."

THE QUIET HOUR—"Let me hide away for just awhile now, O Lord, and draw from Thee to my own soul, some of Thy boundless love."

MONDAY.

BURSTING INTO SONG.

"My soul doth magnify the Lord."
—Luke 1: 46-56.

William T. Ellis tells us of a peculiar experience which he had on the Tigris River. Upon passing women at the water's edge filling their jars with water, this oarsman would burst into "Wade-on-the-spot" love song, and they would answer him likewise.

Mary's Magnificat from which our text is taken was a spontaneous outburst of love. We need more singing saints who burst into song because of Christ in them.

Prayer—O God, put a new song in our hearts, and make us sing it aloud to the children of men. Amen.

TUESDAY.

KITCHEN SAINTS.

"Not to be ministered unto but to minister."—Matt. 20: 20-28.

Jesus must have served in the kitchen of His mother. As well as knowing how to hew logs in the forest, He must have known how to wash dishes.

Our pen does not command fit words of praise for those who serve. There is a group of devoted women who not only serve in their homes, but week after week bear the arduous burdens of surpassing meals served at the church. "They have been called 'kitchen saints.'"

But "kitchen saints," as important as their service may be, should not allow themselves in that service to forget the larger service which their souls must share also—fellowship and devotion. This was "the good part" which Mary chose.

Prayer—Our Father, we pray for the sainted women of Thy church. While they glorify the name of Jesus in their lowly tasks, may they also find joy in publishing good tidings of Him. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

DAY DREAMS.

"When I remember Thee upon my bed."—Psalms 63.

We take little stock in dreams. The most of the time they are the result of too much beef-steak in the evening. But none of us can avoid the importance of day dreams. These are the dreams we have when we sit before the open fire and think, or possibly, the things we think about when lying sleeplessly upon our bed. They reveal the true character of our personality.

If petty things occupy our minds then, the soul must be small. If large things, great and good, hold the field, life will be measured thereby. God will have His way then.

Prayer—O Lord, as the thoughts of a lover turn to his love, so turn our thoughts to Thee. Amen.

THURSDAY.

OVER-LOOKED SAINTS.

"Let your conversation be as becometh the gospel of Christ."—Phil. 1: 21-30.

Questions regarding God, Christ and religion, often come to me from the most surprising sources: a sailor, or a man of the streets, or the barber. We are often surprised at the mention of books which they know about and possibly have on their own shelves.

This brings us to the solemn fact that men are more religious than they are willing to admit, and more so than we are apt to give them credit for. It encourages the belief that there is more religious conversation among them than we know about. It gives us hope that more and more "They that love the Lord will speak often with one another."

Prayer—Our Father, teach us how to appreciate others more than we do. Endow us with the wisdom and the thought to say the right thing in the right place, for the glory of Thy kingdom. Amen.

FRIDAY.

UNRECOGNIZED SAINTS.

"Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus."—Phil. 2: 1-13.

Outstanding things are not the marks of Christian manhood and womanhood. The great majority of Christians are just folks going hither and thither trying to earn a living.

Now and then someone is pointed out to us as a great religious leader. The truth is, there may be hundreds of lives who have contributed to one's greatness, persons who have never been known or named. They are lowly people who have walked with the Master and in doing so have inspired one or dozens to greatness. Be not discouraged, dear souls. Live for Christ and He will bless four fold.

Prayer—O Lord, Thou dost not call us all to the stage, but we all have a part to play. Give us a consciousness of Thy presence in any service we may be called upon to do. Amen.

SATURDAY.

WRECKLESS SOULS.

"A prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself; but the simple pass on and are punished."—Prov. 22: 3.

Dr. William T. Ellis gives us an experience of his. He says that when he visited the great salt lake, of Salt Lake City, he went out for a swim and dived in. Never again. The salt nearly ruined his eyes and nostrils. He suffered many days. He says, hereafter he will dive into nothing until he has investigated and found out what is in it.

Diving into things without the proper investigation is a common sin of the American people. How reckless we are with our minds, bodies and

KEEPING GOD IN REMEMBRANCE.

By REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

"They did not like to retain God in their knowledge."—Rom. 1:28.

Here in this letter to the Romans, God is turning the searchlight of his word toward a comparatively modern Western civilization. Paul was brought as a Jew, amongst a people who revered the name of God, a people with conscience, and knowledge of him. He was born a Roman citizen, and had lived in a city where Western civilization washed its shores. His heart now turns toward Rome with all its legions, its power, and its enormous wealth. He is aware of its luxury, and also of its misery. Writing to a few people in its great capital city, who know and love Jesus, he is warning them of God's wrath upon those who ignore him. Three times in six short verses in his opening chapter he uses the phrase, "God gave them up."

Paul sees the great, loving father-heart finally turning loose those who hopelessly held out against his love. Paul says, for instance, in the first place: "They changed the glory of the incorruptible God." "For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen," and yet they said its only accidental, there is no God behind it. They looked on the sunset, and blasphemed God, they listened to the laughter of children, and couldn't hear God, they enjoyed his bounties and blessings, and did not thank God. His glory, they could not see. They heard sweet music, and did not recognize the melody as a part of his glory. They saw heroism, kindness, goodness, and beauty, but they said these are only orphans, they have no God back of them. They simply could not see any glory that belonged to God. "They changed the glory of the incorruptible God."

In the second place Paul says that they "changed the truth of God into a lie." If God said I will, they said he will not, and for his truths about life, and the issues thereof, they drew a red mark through them and called them a lie. God's redemption they ignored. A man once in the gutter, or in the grip of evil passions, and bad habits, hears the story of God's love and becomes a blessing and a power in his community, and they laugh it to scorn. Here is a family that loves God, and keeps his commandments, and instead of acknowledging the truth which lies back of their beautiful lives they make God out a liar. And for changing the truth of God into a lie, "God gave them up."

And in the third place Paul says, "They did not like to retain God in their knowledge." In other words they did not like to remember God! They shut him out, locked the door, and turned the lights down low. But God cannot be supreme in the universe, God cannot be God, and allow that to be done to him. He will come back. I shall never forget seeing Richard B. Harrison play the role of "The Lawd" in Green Pastures. In one scene he says, "I think I will. I'll go down an' walk de earth agin an' see how dem poor humans is makin' out. What time is it by de sun an' de stars?" Jest exactly half-past, Lawd," says Gabriel. And the 'Lawd' takes his hat and walking cane from the rack, and says, "Well, take keer o' yo'self. I'll be back Saddy." They did not like to remember that God was coming back knocking at their hearts, and so they shut him out. But just as in the play he will be back Saturday. He cannot be shut out, and because they persisted in trying to erase him from their memory a third time Paul writes it, "God gave them up."

It is a good thing for God to smash the doors of our indifference, and self-satisfaction. It is a good thing for God to come knocking upon our consciences. Do not pray to be rid of God. Let him keep coming even if it does hurt the conscience, for as long as God knocks at the door of the heart there is hope. Let us keep God in our remembrance. Let us remember him, always.

We are at the Communion table this morning. Let us hear the words of Jesus saying, "This do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me." It is such a joy to a Christian to remember God. I am not saying that as we come to this table we do not feel pain because of our sense of sin, but we are sorry for our sins, and we repent with a godly sorrow; and deep down in our better natures we rejoice in remembering God. One of the greatest blessings in our church services is this service which brings us so near to Jesus. It helps us to remember.

It helps us to remember our sins, and it helps us to repent of them. It helps us to remember our ideals, and press forward toward them. It helps us to remember our vows, and to determine to keep them. It helps us to remember our obligations to follow Jesus today, and tomorrow, and always. It helps us to remember the cross. The bitter, rugged, cross was borne by Jesus for us. It helps us to remember that. And it helps us to remember Jesus. And if we remember Jesus we shall keep God in our knowledge.

"And when we had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat; this is my body, which was broken for you; this do in remembrance of me. After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This is the New Testament in my blood: this do ye as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me."

When to the cross I turn mine eyes,
And rest on Calvary,
O Lamb of God, my sacrifice,
I must remember Thee.

According to Thy gracious word,
In meek humility,
The cup, thy precious blood, I take,
And thus remember Thee.

Let us pray: "O God, help us to remember rightly our Lord Jesus at this hour, and in remembering him may we see the glory of God, the truth of God, and the goodness of God; and may we keep God in our knowledge, for Christ's sake. Amen."

FAMILY ALTAR.

souls! "Be ye steadfast immovable always abounding in the work of the Lord."

Prayer—O God, forbid that we shall subject our spirits to unwise behaviour. Forbid that we shall do anything to impair our bodies or souls. Amen.

SUNDAY.

DEAD END CHRISTIANITY.

"Thou, therefore, my son, be strong."—II Tim. 2:1-13.

Speaking of unrecognized saints, a warning must be sounded to these dear souls, lest in their unrecognized state, they may lapse into deadness and uselessness. There are a lot of people content with little dead-end business jobs, having no purpose in Christian service beyond the membership in the church. They are content with the simple embodiment of negative virtues. God forbid.

Prayer—O Lord, fire us with a passion for positive service wherever we may be used. Amen.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The month of April carried us above the sixth rung in our financial ladder for this year—sixteen more to reach and pass. We feel happy that the Sunday schools and friends have been so loyal to help us in this work.

More than a year ago one of our beloved pastors wrote me and said an application would be made to the Christian Orphanage to take three children. The family were members of his church and were in needy circumstances and he insisted that we take them in.

In due time the application was filed. The writer visited the home to see the conditions as they existed. It was really pathetic. Poverty and want was evident. A mother left homeless with a family of little children and no income. Can you imagine any thing more pathetic. The mother in bad health and not able to work with a burdened expression on her face, with her little children looking to her for bread. As we took in the conditions we thought of the sacrifice which reads as follows: "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: to visit the fatherless and widows in distress and keep himself unspotted from the world." The writer was not long in deciding that this home would be one home where this scripture could be carried out.

The thought came to the writer that if it could be possible for our church members to have gone with him on his visit and seen first-hand the conditions as they existed, he would no longer have to plead for money to run this institution.

People don't give freely because they don't know the need. We have people of wealth who would be liberal if they only knew the need first-hand. They have no opportunity to come in contact with it. We have many cases just as pathetic. Little children with bright minds helpless and without a chance in life. They want to make good. Let all of us contribute something to help them make good.

A GREAT MOTHER.

condition in this beautiful land of ours. All that one could do was pray to Almighty God. He did that.

That mother braced herself anew for her terrible task. Out of apparent defeat she won a wonderful victory. Before he died, the husband came back to his long deserted place. He was happily converted and the oldest boy who played the one-lung organ with two fingers became a talented pipe-organist, was secretary to a world famed educator and is now pastor of a large church in a big city. So far as the pastor knows the other children are all fine Christian characters.

Who, but a mother who was loyal to her God, could win such a victory.—Exchange.

In his death the church has lost a friend, a member who will be greatly missed. A good man has passed from our midst. Our Father has seen fit to call him where some day he will greet us with his genial smile and welcome us to a greater fellowship.

YOU OWE IT TO YOUR MOTHER

To treat her with the unvarying courtesy and deference you accord to those who are above you in rank or position.

To study her tastes and habits, her likes and dislikes, and cater to them as far as possible in an unobtrusive way.

Never to intimate by word or deed that your world and hers are different, or that you feel in any way superior to her.

To manifest an interest in whatever interests or amuses her.

To seek her comfort or pleasure in all things before your own.

Not to forget that, though she is old and wrinkled, she still loves pretty things.

To make her frequent, simple presents, and to be sure that they are appropriate and tasteful.

To remember that she is still a girl at heart so far as delicate little attentions are concerned.

To give her your full confidence, and never do anything of which you think she would disapprove.

To lift all the burdens you can from her shoulders, which have grown stooped in waiting upon you and working for you.

To consult her and ask her advice in regard to whatever you are about to do, even though you have no doubt as to what your course should be.

To bear patiently with all her peculiarities or infirmities of temper and disposition, which may be the result of a life of care and toil.

To make her a partner, so far as your different ages will permit, in all your pleasures and recreations.

To be on the lookout for every occasion to make whatever return you can for her years of sacrifice and planning for your happiness and well-being.

To do your best to keep her youthful in appearance, as well as in spirit, by taking pains with her dress and the little accessories and details of her toilet.

Not to shock or pain her by making fun of her religious prejudices, if they happen to be at variance with yours, or if they seem narrow to you.

To introduce all your young friends to her, and to enlist her sympathies in youthful projects, hopes, and plans, so that she may carry her own youth into old age.

To talk to her about your work, your studies, your friends, your amusements, the books you read, the places you visit, for everything that concerns you is of interest to her.

If she is no longer able to take her accustomed place in the household duties, do not let her feel that she is superannuated, or has lost any of her importance as the central factor in the family.

To remember that her life is monotonous compared with yours, and to take her to some suitable place of amusement, or for a little trip to the country, or to the city if your home is in the country, as frequently as possible.

The boy and girl who endeavor to pay back what they owe to their mother are the ones who will be the most sought after by the people who are worth while, and be likely to make the most successful life.—Selected.

REPRESENTING THE SOUTHEAST CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL AND CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials, Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty — In Principles, Charity

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1938.

NUMBER 19.

A GOOD MAN IS GONE FROM US

When the death angel claimed the spirit of Charles Henry Rowland in the early hours of May 2, 1938, the Congregational-Christian Church lost one of its best men. For fifteen years he had made his home in Greensboro, N. C., where he served the Christian Church as active pastor for twelve years and as pastor emeritus for three years.

Dr. Rowland was born September 19, 1868, in Wake County, N. C. He graduated at Elon College in 1900. Soon thereafter he was married to Miss Bertie Graham. The only son, Charles Henry, Jr., died in infancy. Surviving are his wife and three daughters, Miss Margaret Lane Rowland, Mrs. W. E. Wisseman and Mrs. M. T. Garren.

DR. C. H. ROWLAND.

Dr. Rowland was licensed to preach by the North Carolina and Virginia Conference at Hines Chapel, in 1890, and 48 years served his denomination with unstinting devotion. Almost half of his ministerial life was spent at Franklin, Va., where he gave 23 years of his life, and developed the Christian Church from a small group to a large and active church, and built a beautiful brick building. In Greensboro he won his way into the hearts of the people and strengthened the church. When angina pectoris made it impossible three years ago to carry the responsibilities of a pastorate he resigned, and the church elected him pastor emeritus for life.

For years Dr. Rowland was president of the Eastern Virginia Conference and later filled that office in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. He was a long time trustee of Elon College, which institution conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Divinity. There was no more earnest, eager and loyal minister among us than Charles Henry Rowland.

The funeral service conducted in the Christian Church of Greensboro, on Tuesday, May 3rd, was one of triumph. A large choir sang, "Rejoice and Sing." Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, president of the Southern Convention, read from the scriptures messages of hope and inspiration. A soloist sang, "Open the Gates of the Temple." Rev. W. E. Wisseman, son-in-law of Dr. Rowland, read the 21st Psalm, and repeated, at his request, Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar." Dr. L. E. Smith, of Elon College, led in prayer. The body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Elon College. Active and honorary pallbearers included the board of deacons of the Greensboro Church and some two-score ministers. The large funeral procession was escorted from Greensboro by the police.

With undaunted courage Rev. Charles H. Rowland served his church, with deep affection he mingled with his fellows, and with triumphant faith he passed to the beyond "like one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams."

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES

Rev. J. F. Morgan reports a very fine Mother's Day in Rosemont Church. Mr. Morgan has just finished his work in a ten-day revival at Craddock Methodist Church (Portsmouth, Va.). The Rev. R. N. Harkness is the pastor of this church, and on last Sunday the two preachers exchanged pulpits at the evening service.

A Preaching Mission conducted by Dr. James R. Clinton at Christian Temple, Norfolk, last week included special features. Thursday night was dedicated to the young people, and the Junior choir of the church rendered good music. On Sunday Dr. Clinton brought special Mother's Day sermons and at the morning hour a special service of confession and consecration was used. The Church of the Air was conducted each morning over Station WTAR by Dr. Clinton.

DR. C. H. ROWLAND.

Elon College's needs are many. They have always been many, and no doubt they always will be, but her greatest need is friends, friends who will walk with her in the ways of progress, and who will sacrifice with her in the mornings of adversity. Friends who will share with her what they have, whether it be much or little.

Dr. C. H. Rowland, of Greensboro, N. C. was a great friend of Elon College. For more than twenty years he was an honored trustee of the institution. He was faithful to the college in every particular and loyal to her in every undertaking. He not only gave the college his best efforts and money, as he could spare it, but he gave the college his children for training for life. He rejoiced in Elon's successes; he suffered with her in her reverses. In the dark days of 1931-34, at different times he declared, "If the college goes down, I will go down with her. I will die for the college, but I will not die with it."

In the death of Dr. Rowland, Elon loses one of its best friends, one of its most loyal supporters, and on behalf of the college, I am taking the liberty to express the college's sincere appreciation of Dr. Rowland's love, help, and sacrifice for the college, and to extend to his loved ones and friends the college's sincere sympathy in this hour of loss and bereavement.

THE UPPER ALAMANCE FELLOWSHIP OF CHURCHES.

May has a fifth Sunday, the 29th; and the Upper-Alamance Fellowship of Churches meets on fifth Sundays. The place of meeting will be Bethel Church, just off Route 62, and of which Rev. J. Frank Apple is pastor.

The churches of the Fellowship are Berea, Bethlehem, Bethel, Burlington, Carolina, Concord, Elon College, Graham-Providence, Haw River, Hope-dale, Long's Chapel, Mebane, Mt. Zion, Shallow Ford, and Union. Each of these churches is urged to have official representatives present besides as many of the congregations as can be interested in attending. For this meeting we would like to have two music will be provided by a chorus from the Reidsville church. For the 6 o'clock service Dr. John G. Truitt, pastor of our church at Suffolk, Va., will be with us and we can look forward to a great message from him. This program sounds inviting and should challenge our Fellowship to a fine attendance.

Readers of this article who are members of the churches of the Fellowship are asked to assist us in promoting the meeting. Plan to go, talk about going, talk to your pastor and discover if he knows anything about it and plans attending. There are many and great possibilities in this Fellowship of Churches, but we must discover them and develop them. Meet me at Bethel Church, Sunday, May 29th.

HINES CHAPEL.

The second quarterly conference of Hines Chapel Congregational-Christian Church showed that the church is in fair condition, both spiritually and financially. This conference was held April 30, 1938.

On Sunday morning, May 1, at 11 o'clock, a very impressive sermon was delivered by the pastor, Rev. LeGrande Moody, a ministerial student and a member of the Senior Class of Elon College. Prior to the sermon the church voted to recommend Mr. Moody for ordination as soon as possible after his graduation from college. He seems to be a rather unusual young man, talented, and interested in the church. He is full time pastor of Apple's Chapel and Hines Chapel churches.

Following the sermon the church observed the Lord's Supper. Rev. J. L. Foster, of Elon College, spoke appropriate words and administered the Communion Service.

On Sunday evening at 7:30 the young people of the First Church of Greensboro, N. C., brought a very interesting program to the young people of Hines Chapel. The program was in charge of Miss Frances Foster. Others on the program were Misses Dorothy Clymer, Dorothy Mae Truitt, and Elberta Murray. Words of welcome were spoken to the group by Rev. LeGrande Moody, pastor of Hines Chapel. The purpose of this meeting was to acquaint the youth of the church with Pilgrim Fellowship. The group brought the purposes, aims, and ideals of Pilgrim Fellowship. May many more church groups take an active part in the Fellowship.

things and we name them in order of their importance:

1. Every church represented officially by pastor and officers.
2. A large mass meeting of the memberships of these churches.

We regret that this meeting conflicts with the Baccalaureate Sunday at Elon College, but our program is being arranged to avoid conflict with the services at the college. To this end we are calling the Fellowship to meet at 3:30 o'clock and again at 6 o'clock, with a picnic dinner on the church grounds. The host church will provide iced tea and the like, and those attending are asked to bring baskets.

For the 3:30 service Rev. J. L. Neese, pastor of our church at Reidsville, will be the speaker, and special Why Rural Life Sunday?

By THOMAS ALFRED TRIPP.

On May 22nd, many churches will be observing Rural Life Sunday. "Dust bowl," "share-cropper," "farm tenancy," "soil conservation," "farm relief," and many more unorthodox terms will be heard by the faithful in churches "in the wildwood" if not in city cathedrals.

It is appropriate that Rural Life Sunday should be observed upon the fifth Sunday after Easter, which is the ancient Rogation Day, when the pagans invoked the blessing of their gods upon the newly planted crops.

St. Mamertus, Bishop of Vienne, in the fifth century, added the day to the calendar of the Church as a time to express thankfulness to God for "increase and abundance of the fruit of the earth" and, evidently, to give Him a hint to keep up the good work.

In the same vein, American Christians today might be expected to pray for temperance on the part of God so that through crop-control a proper balance between market demands and surpluses may be maintained.

The more serious will observe this modern Rogation as a time of repentance for sins against the farm and the farmer. Our rural problem is essentially a religious one. For a long time farm and rural life have been disintegrating. Although we have at our command the technical knowledge and equipment for righting our agricultural situation, little has been done.

The failure is in our spirit. We lack the motivation to go ahead. The farmer will need more than he now has to take the long view and rebuild his soil and his community.

It will demand even stronger spiritual forces to endue New England industrialists, Wall Street financiers, and dwellers in the great cities with sufficient foresight and unselfishness to give up the temporary political and economic advantages necessary for government action on behalf of southern cotton growers, western grain farmers, and Pacific Coast fruit producers whom they seldom, if ever see.

Rogation in medieval England degenerated into "gang days" when the priest, the lord of the manor and a few of the faithful, followed by all the ruffians of the parish, "perambulated the bounds of the parish" for the purpose of reminding the aggressive and acquisitive not to encroach upon the property rights of their neighbors. At strategic corners and landmarks the priest would repeat such Scriptures as the 104th Psalm and say, "Cursed be he which translateth the bounds and doles of his neighbor."

Similarly, there are those who will employ Rural Life Sunday for modern "parochial perambulations." They will mark out the boundaries between landlords and share-croppers, industry and agriculture, rich and poor, and city and country.

But others will strive for the ethical and spiritual sources of agrarian reform, through their support of the rural church, the farmer's family in search of the good life, and his rapidly disappearing community.

* * *

Agricultural reform is in danger of foundering upon the shoals of ignorance and selfishness in wasteful farmers, unreliable tenants, arrogant landlords, predatory financiers, ruthless industrialists, and unscrupulous politicians.

If a solution of our rural problem is to be found in other than a revolutionary farm-class technique, which would almost certainly meet such resistance as to result in a violent fascism, we must develop a people, in city and country, of quite a different character than we now have.

The chance to get this is slim, but it is worth the effort if the churches are still in serious business.

If farmers knew that they were engaged in what may be the last death struggle for their own free existence and if city dwellers realized the importance of the rural contribution, not only to their subsistence and the vitality of their own populations and future leadership but to the very continuance of America Rural Life Sunday on the 22nd of May, this year would be a real Rogation in every church from Broadway to Main Street.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

PASTORS AND CHURCH CONVENTIONS.

Members of Christian churches sometimes entertain themselves by discussing how much better people in other denominations get along than we do in ours. If they do, there certainly must be some reason. The following story may indicate one reason why they do.

A new minister went to a new Baptist Church in a city well-known by readers of this paper. It happened to be the time of the year for meetings in Baptist churches. Within six weeks of the time he arrived he had attended three meetings, one of them quite a long way off, at the expense of the congregation. They said to him:

"We expect our minister to know what is going on in the Church and to do his share. The church will pay your expenses, and the church expects you to attend the meetings."

Every pastor of every church should attend the conference, convention and council meeting. There is no other way for them to know what is being undertaken and no other way for them to do their share in the denominational enterprises. Unless they go they can not render the best service in the local church because they do not know what is expected and do not have the necessary inspiration to do it. They may do a good work, but they can not do their best.

Attending conferences is very expensive. This is particularly true concerning our denominational General Council. Those who go to Beloit, Wis., from the Southeast will be gone practically two weeks and will have to pay considerable money. Local churches need ministers who are informed and inspired. They can get them by being sure that their ministers attend the meetings and take part in whatever is being accomplished. For this reason it is wise for the local church to help pay the expenses of the pastor who needs to attend the meetings of the denomination. When we learn to expect the pastors to attend, and make it possible for them to do so, we may find that our churches take on new life and that our ministers can stand alongside of ministers of other denominations without hesitancy.

ELON SUMMER CONFERENCE.

It is now time for every church to be busy planning for pastors, Sunday school superintendents, teachers, missionary workers and young people to attend the Elon Summer School of Leadership Training, June 27 to July 2. Some churches already have money in hand to pay the expense of some of their young people. Others are busy raising money and selecting representatives to go. These are the churches that are really planning for growth. There are some young people who have money in the bank that they have saved themselves so they can attend this summer conference. Some of the pastors have it on their schedule to be at Elon.

Our church is eager to serve in the field of leadership training. Excellent courses are being prepared to meet the needs of young people, Sunday school superintendents, teachers, leaders of missionary societies and pastors. Every year we have one of our own missionaries attend this week's conference, but unfortunately we have only a few members of missionary societies present to hear him. Again this year we are to have excellent courses for ministers, perhaps better courses than ever. It will be just too bad if some pastors, missionary leaders, Sunday school superintendents, teachers and young people are compelled to be absent when those who are eager for progress in our church get together for fun, fellowship and serious study. Let every church plan to send its delegates, and all who can plan to attend.

All that is said about the Elon Summer School may apply equally as well to the other summer conferences held in the Southeast, and indeed throughout the United States. This is one type of work in which our Church is intensely interested and from which may come new life for the churches. Your cooperation concerning this will mean much to the future of our Church.

YOUNG PEOPLE.

The first regular delegated meeting of young people of Congregational and Christian Churches in the United States will be held at Rockford, Ill., June 15 to 23, 1938. A member of First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va., is president of this National Pilgrim Fellowship. Excellent leaders from all over the country will be there to speak and lead discussion groups. Representative young people from practically every state in the union will be there to meet with friends, exchange ideas, think concerning the growth of our Church and to make plans for the building of a Christian world. This is not a mere dream; it is a fact.

Some of you may be dreaming about attending. You may feel that it is beyond your possibility, as indeed it will be for most of you, but certainly every conference group in the Southeast should be represented. Every conference has been invited to send one or two representatives. These persons will make the trip, get the ideas and bring back the help which we need in our local conferences and churches. They are your representatives.

It is too much to expect that these young persons give their time and pay the entire expense. Those who can not go may have a share by giving something to pay on expenses for those who do go. Eastern Virginia is working definitely on this project. They want to pay the full expenses of their delegates. Other conferences may be doing the same. It is an easy matter for a Sunday school class, a Christian Endeavor society, or a missionary society to give a dollar or two on this expense. In so doing you will tie up your own organization with the denomination- (Continued on next page.)

Our Contribution to the Future

By ROBERT LEE HOUSE.

This address was delivered before the Southern Convention in Portsmouth, Va., by Rev. Mr. House, the president of the Eastern Virginia Conference and pastor of the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va.

It is easier to trace the past than to chart the future, but the one is essential to the other. It is not the part of wisdom to blunder carelessly into the future. "Where there is no vision the people perish." We should use the wisdom of the mariner, who carefully charts the way before beginning the voyage. The future may be determined. We should never be content as mere spectators on the sidelines; we should be a vital part of the real future, shaping it as the potter shapes the clay.

There are anxious moments when I, too, ponder the future of our Church. What will it be. Do we have a future? Do we have a future in the city or in the country, in the North or in the South? More than once it has seemed that churches and conferences were on the verge of bankruptcy. I venture to hope that we may make some worthwhile contributions to the future. "O God Our Help In Ages Past, Our Hope For Years To Come. . ."

1. The future will need men of strong character, fortified by all the resources of religion. Our Church may contribute some of these men. Just as Suzzanna Wesley made her contribution to the world through her son, John, so our Church may make her contribution through her loyal sons. This should be our speciality.

2. Our Church should contribute some ministers to the next generation. The Church of Wellons, Staley, Moody, Beecher, and Cadman has justified its existence. We may make it our business to produce ministers worthy to stand in this exalted succession. The great need of the Congregational-Christian pulpit is men who are efficient and sufficient, men whose souls have been swept by the regenerating winds of God, and whose lips have been touched with a live coal from off the altar on high. Whether it be the Cathedral Church or the rural pulpit, let us have good ministers of Jesus Christ, of whom we need not be ashamed. Ministers who stand at their posts as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land will constitute an indispensable contribution to an uncertain future.

3. A united and inclusive Church. The criticism has been advanced that our Church has been so broad and general that it has ceased to be distinctive. And yet I raise the question whether we should be limited and therefore distinctive as a barber shop or as inclusive as a department store? Should we theologically bury our heads beneath the sands of one creed or doctrinally submerge ourselves beneath the waters of one ordinance in a desperate effort to gain distinction? Or should we strive for an inclusive, cosmopolitan, ecumenical church?

There should be room in our Church for the low and high churchman. We should not restrict our worship to the regalia of a high church service or thin it down to the crude and impoverished worship of the purely informal service. All things are ours—Paul, Cephas, Apollos, Advent, Lent, Holy Week, Pentecost, the prayer book which Cranmer wrote for the Church of Henry, the Pilgrim Hymnal, and the Principles and Government of the Christian Church, all for use in the free service of God. We must utilize these times and festivals of religious emphasis which belong to the Church year. All things are yours—the militant message of the Methodists; the litany and liturgy of the Lutherans; the brass and Boanerges backbone of the Baptists; the daring of the Disciples; the piety, prestige, and predestination by proxy of the Presbyterians; the candles of the Catholics. The question is not have we been too broad, too general, and inclusive; but have we, are we, equal to the task? We have a great Gospel, a great Church, and we face a great world. Only a united and inclusive Church will be adequate for the future.

4. A whole Gospel. Our Church must declare the whole counsel of God. No one part of that Gospel, however essential, is equal to the whole. We must never permit our Church to be theologically sidetracked. Only a whole Gospel can save the world. More than one religious body is giving the distinct impression that theirs is the only Church in which one may be saved. But at best that emphasis, if true, would be one-sided and inadequate. Let the Congregational-Christian Church be one in which one may not only be saved, but one in which and through which one may help save the world.

The religion of a clear mind and a warm heart is the product of a whole Gospel. The "mind of Christ" was a clear mind. The heart of Wesley was not warmed at the expense of his intelligence. The religion of a clear mind may become nothing more than ethics, and the religion of a warm heart may easily degenerate into credulity and superstition. But religion becomes invincible when the two are combined in Christ, St. Paul, Luther, or Wesley. The pale and sickly future will need the tonic and menu of a whole Gospel. A large order, but let that be our contribution.

al enterprises. The time is now short. Why not take it up next Sunday in your class or society and get some contributions which you can send to the treasurer of your conference fellowship? You will like it. It will do you good and it will help to make possible the progress of our young people's work here in the southeast. Somehow this writer believes that you can be depended upon to do it, and he hopes so.

Be charitable in your thoughts, in your speech and in your actions. Be charitable in your judgments, in your attitudes and in your prayers. Think charitably of your friends, your neighbors, your relatives and even your enemies. And if there be those whom you can help in a material way, do so in a quiet, friendly, neighborly way, as if it were the most common and everyday experience for you. Tongues of men and angels, gifts of prophecy and all mysteries and all knowledge are as nothing without charity.—Cardinal Hayes.

CONTRIBUTIONS

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE CHURCH.

The Convention Theme, "The Spirit Giveth Life."

The Program Committee requested the writer to suggest a theme for the recent session of the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, and to bring a message on the first evening of the Convention, based on the theme. It was the writer's understanding that the theme adopted was not only to be the principal emphasis running through the sessions of the Convention, but that it was to serve as a rallying slogan for the entire church after the Convention. We expressed a sense of need of some banner under which we could marshal ourselves and our brethren in an aggressive effort for our church and the membership of the churches. After much thought, prayer, and earnestness it seemed that such a challenge should have to do with the Spirit. We live in the reign of the spirit. If the church is to move in the right direction and accomplish her high purpose, it must be under the leadership and in the power of the Spirit. The wording of the theme was "The Spirit Giveth Life." It was taken from Paul's assertion "The letter killeth, but the spirit maketh alive." The theme of the Convention was born in a moment of consecration and enthusiasm. I am today convinced that the strength of the church should be rallied beneath the banner, "The Spirit Giveth Life." Who else could give life? Life carries with it the idea of activity, intelligence, aggressiveness, achievements, victory and we do not need victory, victory in our own lives, in the lives of the ministry and laity of our church, in the life of the church as a whole. The spirit would bring life if we would permit him, through prayer, through consecration, through witness, through exhortation, through proclamation, through sacrifice, and through organization.

In last week's CHRISTIAN SUN, the writer presented to the readers of our church paper the five-point program adopted by the Convention for the local church. If the committee to be appointed to prepare the materials suggested by the five-point program will relate effectively the theme of the Convention "The Spirit Giveth Life" to each point of the program, this would immediately become a living program, rather than a dead document. The trouble with the majority of the actions of the Convention in biennial sessions has been that practically all such actions have been recorded in the proceedings of the Convention but never translated into the life and activities of the church. God forbid that this should be true with our recent Convention, but may the officers of the Convention see that the more important actions are carried out in detail and are with a living emphasis passed on to the constituents of the local church. We need something that will arouse the church as a whole. We have the machinery, that which giveth life is accessible. If the Convention's machinery is sufficiently wise and alive to connect the machinery meant for the local church with the power accessible then our church will begin to achieve in those things that make for kingdom progress. Truly the Spirit giveth Life, but it is with the individual and with the church as to whether or not that life is received. If our hearts are right, our hands are clean, and our minds open, we will receive, and when we receive, like those of old, we will be conscious of a new life, of a new power, which will mean new triumphs.

The writer would like to hear from ministers, laymen, laywomen, and young people, regarding the essentials of this article. Do not send your reply to the writer, but send it to THE CHRISTIAN SUN for publication. The Spirit Giveth Life; may the Church be prepared to receive that Life.

MINIMUM HOURS—MAXIMUM PAY.

Time was when work was plentiful, needs few, and recreation thought of as only a rich man's privilege. There was no standard wage. The laborer so often worked without knowing what his daily compensation would be. The farm hand's day was usually from sun to sun. Shop, mill, and factory knew no eight-hour rule. But we have come a long way since that era, leaving many primitive customs and ancient modes of living. The complexity of society, specialization in crafts, higher standards of living, and a need for rest and recreation for health's sake have brought us face to face with a highly socialized economic problem—the problem of adopting minimum hours and maximum wages. The issue will not down. Conditions demand the change. The problem must and will be solved through rightful application of reason.

We look back with bewilderment to the days of our forefathers, when men were jailed for debt, believed in witch craft, fought duels, and looked upon others as sinners who dared to place religious belief in faiths and creeds other than their own. Time will come when our grandchildren will be bewildered as they scan the social and economic standards of this generation. They will rate us as primitive, just as we rate our forebears.

In this age of high-powered machinery, less hours for work does not mean less work done. A maximum wage does not necessarily mean higher prices in this era of volume production. A maximum wage will guarantee to the workers a fair share of the profits from the goods he produces. Shorter hours will add to his efficiency. The application of such humanitarian principles will add to the nation's health and wealth. Low standards of living always prove to be the most costly to society. Low wages create slums, and these become breeding places of crime and disease. The public pays the bill for both, and it would be far better to pay the price in higher wages and reap the reward of a good citizenship, self-supporting, than accept the alternative of increasing crime and the wards of society.

The best worker is a contented worker, and no man can be contented when he is called upon to give a maximum number of hours for a minimum amount of pay.

Shorten the working day and you spread the work; and as you spread the work the number of workers will increase. Increase the number of workers and you lessen relief needs. Give each worker more wages with less hours and you start the solution to our one great human problem—the problem of feeding and maintaining a contented and happy people.

THE LIQUOR PROBLEM.

Alcohol is a poison in the same class as heroin, cocaine and morphine. It is a habit-forming drug.

Its immoderate use produces disease, insanity, disorder and death. Such use is therefore immoral.

Its moderate use is dangerous because such use leads to immoderation. Therefore, total abstinence is advisable.

Any plan that discourages the advisable, and encourages the dangerous and promotes the immoral, is morally wrong, economically unsound, socially undesirable, and politically unsafe.

If prospective parents use alcoholic beverages their children are liable to be physically and mentally defective. All children have the right to be well born!

PLEASANT HILL COMMUNITY CHURCH NEWS.

By EDWIN E. WHITE, Minister,

Pleasant Hill, Tenn.

Spring is beautiful in the hills; we wish you might share the joy of it. It is high time that we report on the winter's activities and tell you something of the program for the summer.

Perhaps more was accomplished in our work last winter than ever before. Hundreds of the neediest children in some twenty rural schools were provided with clothing and shoes. Many would have had to drop out otherwise. A marked improvement in school attendance resulted. We were able to help with hot lunches in numerous schools. Many children simply do not have the right kind of food; all too many have not enough of any kind. . . ."

The winter was a hard one, especially in the region left destitute by the closing of the mines. WPA work brought some of the men about $21.00 per month. How some of the other families got along at all is a mystery. Mason jars provided by friends last summer proved a real help to many.

The Community House at Ravenscroft has rendered a fine service in that old mining center. The Pleasant Hill doctors have maintained a weekly clinic besides making many calls on the sick. Blankets supplied by the Red Cross helped many families through the winter. Red Cross yeast for pellagra and Red Cross garden seed have been distributed. Beginning with sewing groups, the woman's club is now a helpful community organization. Scout work is active; the boys are going in for gardening and the girls plan to can the produce. The library has been a blessing. Groups gather at the house for fellowship. . . .

We have rejoiced in being able to get summer work for boys and girls started early; the little schools have been closed for weeks. A Pleasant Hill Academy graduate of a decade ago, who after some college training and some years in business now wants to put his life into his native hills, and his wife, a college graduate in home economics, have been hard at work for a month. They have gathered boys and girls of a number of communities into clubs for weekly meetings. Gardening, sewing, canning, and other skills much needed in the hills will be emphasized. So will recreation; boys and girls of our region desperately need wholesome fun. Scouting, hiking, and camping are contemplated. Projects of community helpfulness will be undertaken. Worship, Bible study, Bible studies, character education, in fact, all the best Vacation Bible school program, will be included. And the work will continue for months.

It is hoped that we can organize groups for adults in some communities and get the young people together into societies to worship, discuss vital subjects, enjoy wholesome recreation, and undertake community activities. About $100.00 a month will be required to keep up this work. Other splendidly equipped young people are asking eagerly to come and work this summer and more helpers are needed. About $40.00 a month apiece would support them in a most helpful work.

The craft shop about which we have talked so long is now a reality, with an expert craftsman turning out beautiful articles. We still need money to finish some rooms in the building, finish paying for the excellent machinery we so fortunately found for sale, and carry on the work until enough markets are secured to keep the shop busy. We want to see crafts of all kinds developed throughout our region, especially those using easily available material to beautify homes or bring in a bit of cash. The Extension Service of the University stands ready to help in every way, is now planning a basketry school for our community. If you are interested in buying craft articles or in selling them, perhaps through a club or society, we shall be glad to hear from you.

About two great and special needs we must write you later—the long-felt and increasingly evident need for a trained and able social worker to help us solve the social problems of all kinds from a wide area that demand our attention; and the need for a persistent program of preaching, teaching, and pastoral care throughout our region as a basis for the better life we want to see established. Just the right man for the latter work is now available.

Many regular needs call for the help of friends—to operate the parish car hundreds of miles a month over all sorts of roads; to pay our half of the cost of an indispensable mimeograph machine purchased jointly with Uplands Sanitorium, on time payments; to buy supplies of many kinds for the program. Gifts that we should gladly receive and that you or some group in your church might like to send include: a bolt of cloth, a drum of powdered milk, late garden seed or money to buy them, a good tool for the craft shop, volley ball and net, softball and bat, crayons, construction or drawing paper, scissors, good children's books, and good magazines.

VICTORIA OF THE HILLS.

[The following personal letter from one of our former Christian church missionaries to Japan, though personal, will be read with interest by many "Christian Sun" readers. One, or two other personal letters have come in response to my own letter announcing the passing of Victoria Edwards, "Victoria of the Hills." J. O. A.]

"Dear Mr. Atkinson:

I was grieved to read in April 28th issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, that "Victoria of the Hills" has left us. Though I had little personal correspondence with her and that only last Christmas, I felt she was my friend. She was so appreciative of the shepherds who came to her hills. She loved her church both local and general. She put so much heart in her articles and loving sympathy. I usually read her articles first of anything in THE CHRISTIAN SUN and felt strengthened thereby. I appreciated knowing a little more of her life through your appreciative article.

"I do not know what local memorial could best be dedicated to her. But could not her appealing letters be published in a booklet with a sketch of her life? Much that she wrote of the hills would appeal to those outside the Christian and Congregational group. In our complicated and bewildered living a literature of simple, pure and healthful living appeals even to those whom we would suppose indifferent.

"That is why Mrs. Carroll's books, written about the early days of our So. Berwick, Me., Christian Churches, and the customs then, have been best sellers.

"My cousin, writing from Berlin, N. H., said the girls gave her a very acceptable book for Christmas, letters of a Maine country woman—so simple and about such every-day events she wondered why it could be so popular. Such letters as "Victoria of the Hills" wrote are very timely and with a lasting interest.

"I enjoy reading your column in THE CHRISTIAN SUN and was glad to see a contribution from Rev. Woodworth recently. I wish he would write more of his forty-two years in Japan for us. Mr. Fry, too, who is at Auboindale Home for Missionaries, near Boston, could give us much of value.

"You will be glad to know that Portsmouth (N. H.) Christian Church is prospering—for adults, two men and two women—were received into church fellowship last Sunday.

"Gordon College supplies more of our leaders than any other school. We are too far away from Elon College and Defiance to look to them for help.

"I hope your recovery may be permanent.

"With best wishes for your health,
Sincerely,

ALICE TRUE,

The hope is again expressed that those who care to share the gospel of our Lord with others will take the Annual Missionary Offering for that purpose and send it in at an early date as it is so much needed. Several we know have taken the offering and maybe are waiting to complete it and this we hope will be done at an early date and the church treasurers will remit the amount on hand for this wholly divine and unselfish cause.

"The noblest form of love is not sentimentalism, not passion, but principle."

THE PASSING OF DR. ROWLAND.

As stated in last week's CHRISTIAN SUN, Dr. C. H. Rowland left us early Monday morning, May 2nd. Those of us who knew him best, and therefore loved him most, cannot think, speak, or write of him without restraint. A man of deep feeling himself out of which depths flowed abundant streams of friendship and love for others, he evoked from others currents of like kind and character. He loved abundantly and therefore was loved. He had friends because he was a friend.

He did not major in scholarships and books, but his chiefest concern was with folks, their nature, their needs and their welfare. A real human being himself he understood other human beings and fathomed them and felt with and for them in their efforts and struggles, and rejoiced with them in their victories. He knew by nature and by instinct that which many of us study many books to learn, and then do not learn and know as he did. In this particular he was richly endowed. He loved, therefore he was loved; he was a friend, therefore he had friends. One said to this writer when informed of Dr. Rowland's death, "I deeply regret to hear it for he was a special friend of mine." Of course, hundreds of others could and no doubt did say the same, "I regret his passing, because he was a special friend of mine." The banks of flowers so lovingly and lavishly bestowed for the funeral and burial of this great heart sought in a measure to symbolize the passing and the glory of the life he had lived and the triumphant death he had died. We, his kinspeople, loved ones and friends can but think of him as his desire was that we should think of him, not as one dead, but as one gone on a journey, on which, or at the end of which, as he so strikingly put it in his own words, "I shall be waiting at the gate to greet and welcome you." That about expresses it—gone on, but "waiting at the gate." God bless him. He was a man of God, and of a great faith, and we know his words are true words.

The lesson of his life cannot escape us. He enjoyed life and drank of its refreshing drafts, not as one draining a cup to the dregs, but as one who accepted to the full the words of our Lord Christ when He said, "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." So we can't think of a life like that as gone and from which there was no turning with him.

MISSIONARY WORK IN A FRONTIER CITY OF MANCHURIA.

Evidences of Salvation Seen and Heard Among Peoples of the Far East, Where Many Hear the Word and Others Buy Scriptures.

A letter from a missionary in India, tells of the great changes that have come to many since his going there recently as a missionary. He never saw a smile nor heard a song until people began finding Christ. Now he meets many on the streets who both smile and sing; and their faces shine with light from within. Lives and homes have been revolutionized, he writes. When beginning his study of the language, dearth of happiness and spiritual depression were almost more than he could stand. After a few years now he meets on every hand men, women and children who have joy and gladness; and a hope beyond the grave. So does God also work here in Manchuria.

The city of Hailar, far up here on the Mongolian plains from where this is being written, is our most distant outstation west of Harbin, 550 miles away. Few here have received the light of salvation. There are two Russian hotels in this city in either of which warm, comfortable accommodation could be had, but we find it best to sleep on the hard benches here in this little meeting place, which has dirt walls and a flat dirt roof.

It would not have been right to take Evangelist Chang's warm brick "Kang" (bed), for his bedding is less, and he is accustomed to sleeping on a Kang. An air mattress obtained from America is truly a boon for the missionary in itinerating. The ticking of my narrow mattress and some feathers in it were being used by my parents when I came fifty-five years ago; likewise a home-made North Carolina blanket of those days has followed me many thousands of miles over this wide field, where winters are severe.

Sleeping in this cold chapel is preferred because (1) one can thus be with, or nearer, one's Christian colleagues the whole time, and (2) the fewer contacts we have with Russians at such border towns as Hailar, the less we are suspected of being spies by certain people. It is hard for some, whose purposes are so different from ours, to understand our motives of love, consideration and spiritual helpfulness. Because of this suspicion we are frequently caused much inconvenience. But rather than jeopardize our work, it is best to be "all things to all men."

Next door to the chapel is a tin shop, where a young Christian man makes sheet-iron stoves, stove-pipes and tin kettles. The partition is one of single boards and paper, so thin that the evangelist and the young tinner easily talk to each other. The young man became a Christian from hearing preaching through the board partition. He works every day from early morn until nearly midnight, as do most workmen in Manchuria. The average laborer in western lands has an easy time compared to the lot of many in the Far East, who must begin work around 5:00 A. M., and continue until late, seven days in the week. During the few months preceding Chinese New Year, which usually comes in February, the hours are much longer. Their two meals a day, set before the workmen, who frequently eat while working, consist usually of thin stewed millet with cold pickled (salted) turnips or cabbage. Only occasionally is there a meal that includes meat. Laborers usually eat, sleep and work in the same crowded room.

Our young Chinese Christian tinner strikes away loudly on tin and rivets much of the day and night, but never when services are in progress. A better place has not been rented because funds are insufficient. Patient Evangelist Chang has become accustomed to the noise. At the close of a hard, busy day the missionary finds it not easy to sleep when the tinner's pounding is so near. But there is one truly redeeming feature in this characteristic mission-field situation, and it goes far with both the missionary and the evangelist: the tinner has learned several gospel hymns as he has worked away, or has attended the services, and sings these while he works! The noise of pounding is music, when accompanied by the singing of one whom you have led to the Lord!

A young man exclaimed to me the other day: "You know, Pastor Lan, I can actually discern a Christian now when I meet one on the street. I asked a young man I met on the street only yesterday: 'Aren't you a Christian?' He smiled and replied, 'Yes,' but wanted to know how I knew. I told him that I could just see it in his face!" This young man was from another outstation 300 miles in still another direction from Harbin. We have not been able to go there for more than year because of strained political conditions. The little band of Christians at that isolated place have never had a leader, however this young man and others have continued true under very trying conditions.

Here in Hailar many have heard the gospel these eight days and some have accepted the Lord. Others will be baptized. But this is one of the most wicked cities in all Manchuria: notorious for gambling, opium dens, and other wickedness, having, most likely, the lowest percentage of Christians of any other provincial city in Manchukuo. It is a hard place for mission work, but here we have sold hundreds of Bibles, New Testaments, gospel portions and other Christian books during this visit. Never during twenty-eight years of mission work have we ever found such a ready sale for the Word of God. Many seem to be really hungry for spiritual food. Even in opium dens and places of gambling we sold complete Bibles, as well as scripture portions and other books making plain the way of salvation. Numerous scriptures were sold at another important town near here where meetings were also held, these in the school house.

Letters from "Inside the Wall" (China) report the same situation that we find here in Manchuria; namely, that the present disturbed conditions and distress of mind among many make response to the gospel more ready than for years. It is truly a time when we should press the Lord's work as never before, and this we are trying to do, for there are no considerable hinderances to the work here in Manchuria. The moral and financial support of God's people in the homeland, who are standing so nobly behind their Foreign Mission Board, and the fine way the Board is backing us up, are sources of strength to us and are greatly appreciated by us all.

CHAS. A. LEONARD, SR.,
Harbin, Manchuria.

PASSING OF DR. ROWLAND.

We know full well where, and how to find him and join him on his blessed and triumphant journey. He preached many sermons out of the fullness of his heart, and the abundance of the love of God, that reached other hearts, but the greatest sermon he preached was the life he lived, and the great love wherewith he loved. Not many weeks before his great adventure he wrote me: "I am confined now mostly to my room and bed, but I greatly enjoy making sermons I have never preached, and will never preach by word of mouth." His unwritten, even his unuttered sermons found their way into many a heart, who with the writer of this will indulge the hope that our faith shall not fail us, nor our love cease, until we, too, shall enter and be greeted by him at the gate." What a life! What a love! What a victory!

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church"

MISS EMILY CARLETON, Editor, 541 Osceola Ave, Winter Park, Fla.

CARAVANS.

The following articles are copied from the Caravan Bulletin, recently sent out by Frances Foster, chairman of the Caravan Committee of the Southeast. If any society is interested in doing some "Caravanning" and would like a copy of this booklet, write to her at 614 Arlington Street, Greensboro, N. C.

YOUR PRESIDENT SAYS:

The very word Caravans strikes a friendly interest in most of us. As young people, we like to travel, and we like also to vary presentation of our programs so as to be always interesting and fresh, especially at this season of the year.

True Christianity is concerned with individuals in their relation to God and to other individuals; and our program and our religion will be successful only if they be real to us.

How much better we can push the cart along if we know whose shoulder is at the other wheel. Let's make of Caravans a Get-Acquainted idea, and broaden it out into real Christian service.

MAY WE SUGGEST?

That you select two or three of your strongest local Fellowships in different parts of your conference to make the initial Caravan trips.

That you designate the group of churches which is nearest each of these active Fellowships as the group they are responsible for visiting.

That you give the appointed leaders in these special Caravan groups as much information about each of the churches to be visited as possible, such as complete name and address of key worker, pastor, and so on.

That these two or three groups who go on the trips make very definite arrangements with the key worker or with the pastor in each of the churches they are to visit. (Name a date in your first letter to the key worker. It may save time and postage. Also, if you do not know the locality of the church, ask the key worker for directions.)

That you may use a Pass It On Caravan. That is, make preliminary arrangements with the young people's organization nearest your own group, take to them as worthwhile a program as possible, leave copies of the Pilgrim Fellowship materials with them, and ask them to follow the same plan with a church near them, etc., until every church has visited and has been visited.

That you maintain a spirit of fellowship throughout, remembering that the attitude of the visiting group will mean a great deal more in the long run than anything they might have to say.

That you make a brief report, giving the outstanding happenings of each of your trips to your Caravan headquarters, 614 Arlington Street, Greensboro, N. C. These will be published on our page in THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

EARLE G. WARD,
President.

THE ROCKFORD CONFERENCE AND THE EASTERN VIRGINIA YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Committee on the Rockford Conference Fund is eager that every young people's organization in Eastern Virginia make a liberal contribution toward sending a representative, or representatives, from the Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship to Rockford, Ill., in June. Every young people's Sunday school class, missionary society, Christian Endeavor or other young people's organizations will please endeavor to contribute not less than $1.00 and send the money to the chairman of the committee, Allen Piland, at Holland, Va., just as soon as it is possible to do so. If there is enough money to pay expenses, two representatives will go from Eastern Virginia. Please send your contribution at once so those going can plan their trip.

Saturday—Popularity is Fickle—Matthew 21: 1-11; 27: 19-25.

The following testimony from a high school senior, who was voted

"most popular" in his school, is quite interesting. He was an active member of a church and of a young people's society. He never smoked, never drank, and did not attend the senior ball because of certain convictions he had. When asked how he won the vote of his classmates, he said, "I never try to fool my friends about my ideals and standards. I never engage in pretense. My friends know my conduct is the result of my honest beliefs. Most high school students respect a fellow's honest beliefs. What students can't respect is a fellow who pretends to be a rounder when he really isn't or pretends to be a saint when he isn't. Then, too, one thing I never do: I never assume a holier-than-thou attitude, and I never preach out loud. I let my actions speak for themselves. If I happen unintentionally to be at a party where cocktails are served, I don't get on a soapbox and make a temperance lecture. I simply say, 'No, thank you,' and let it go at that. I never noticed that anyone thought less of me because I refused to drink."

For Discussion—

1. Did this fellow have the right idea about how to maintain high ideals?

2. Should he have been more outspoken in denouncing the wrong-doing among his associates.

3. What points would you check for an ideal girl? An ideal boy?

4. What constitutes true popularity?

5. What things in life are more important than popularity?

Suggested Hymns—

"Fairest Lord Jesus."

"There's Sunshine In My Soul Today."

"Draw Me Nearer."

THE WORLD'S YOUTH IN CONVENTION.

At Melbourne, Australia, August 2-8, 1938, the Tenth World's Christian Endeavor Convention will be in session. On July 6, in Seattle's sunlit harbor, a trim steamship will stir in her berth, will be slowly warped from the pier, and will turn her prow toward Hawaii, the Fiji Islands, New Zealand, Australia, Pago-Pago, Southern California, and home.

A happy, expectant party will be lined up at the rail as she sails. Not

TESTING DISCIPLESHIP BY SERVICE.

LESSON VII—MAY 15, 1938.

GOLDEN TEXT: Come, follow me.—
Mark 10: 21.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 10: 17-31.

Christ Talks to a Rich Man.

There is no more dramatic situation in the New Testament than the incident where Christ and the rich young ruler stand face to face with each other. Here, for the young man, was "the tide which taken at the flood" would have led him not to fortune—he already had too much of that—but to fame of an enduring kind. Think what this young man might have become if he had yielded all and followed Christ. He had riches, youth, education, position, power, prestige, character, and ability. Think what Christ could have done through him if he had become his disciple! It is significant, too, that in spite of all these things, the young man felt an urgent lack in his life. Things can never finally satisfy the hunger of the human heart for God. Whatever may have been his name, he certainly might be called "The Young Man Who Might Have Been." There is no picture more somber and sad, not even the picture of Judas going out and hanging himself, than the picture of this young man with all his splendid possibilities going away sorrowful. How desperately unhappy he must ever have been afterwards! What haunting memories he must have had through the years that followed! How often he must have wished that he had made the great decision and accepted the great challenge!

Several things need to be mentioned in this connection. Attention has already been called to the fact that although the young man apparently had everything that heart could desire, he had a hungry heart, for he did not have God. Mere keeping of the law does not satisfy the heart. Man can live in the best sense only as he has the spirit of God in his life. But this young man had allowed his gold to crowd out God.

The young man thought he could do something to earn or win eternal life. But eternal life cannot be earned. It is the gift of God. Mere keeping of the law will not give this life. It must come through faith and by the grace of God in Christ.

Jesus calls attention to the fact that

He is God. The interpretation that makes Jesus say that only God is good, and thus disclaims any title to goodness or divinity misses the mark. Jesus rather calls attention to the fact that because none is good save one, only God, He is one with the Father for the young man had called him good. Jesus meant one of two things: "I am not good" or "I am God." For most Christians at least he meant the latter.

When Jesus lists the commandments he gives only those dealing with a man relations with his fellowmen. This young man had been very circumspect in his life. He was a splendid moral man. He had an excellent character. So far as his attitude toward and relationship with men were concerned he had an excellent record. But he had shut God out of his life. He had other gods before God. Gold was his god. The words of Jesus go straight to the heart of the matter. They were not a condemnation of riches as such; they simply announce a principle that applies to every one of us. God demands first place in our lives. He will brook or tolerate no rivalry. He demands full and complete surrender. He insists that every idol must be torn down and thrown out. He will have all or none.

"Go sell . . . give . . . come, follow me." Jesus does not say that the young man will find eternal life simply by selling what he has and giving the proceeds to charity. He is to find life as he follows Jesus. He is to come out of a new relationship. But that new relationship in this case could not come until the young man had got rid of his gold.

The young man went away sorrowful. But perhaps Jesus was even more sorrowful. He realized more fully than the young man himself what a tragedy had taken place. He knew the larger, finer possibilities of that young life if it could only have been set free from the bondage of material things.

Christ Talks About Riches.

"How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God . . . it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God." Riches have a tendency to make a man self-sufficient, they make it possible for a man to indulge himself, they almost inevitably create barriers between men, they usually supplant God as an object of devotion and trust, they develop as a rule qualities of mind and heart which are not the essential qualities of mind and heart which are prerequisites for entering the kingdom of God. For these and other reasons Jesus stated very plainly that it was hard for "them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God." Read Jesus' words as one will, one cannot get away from the conviction that Jesus warned against the perils of riches. This does not mean that Jesus condemned riches, or that he condemned rich men. It does mean that Jesus regarded riches as a stewardship, fraught with terrific consequences for character, and involved with many dangers to those who possessed them. Jesus gives a word of encouragement, however, when he says that even rich men, by the grace of God may be saved. They will be saved not because they are rich in this world's goods, but because by the grace of God they have found the secret of serving God with their riches, rather than of serving God instead of their riches.

Jesus says something else in this connection. Simon Peter wanted to know "what there was in it for him?" Like the other disciples Peter thought of the kingdom in terms of material prosperity. It was hard for him to discern spiritual things. And thus far he and the other disciples had not got much out of their venture, that is much in a material way. Indeed the disciples who did have some means had evidently long since lost that. They were beginning to wonder whether it was a paying investment after all.

Jesus' answer to Peter's question is significant. "There is no man who hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or mother, or father, or children, or lands, for my sake, and for the gospel's sake, but he shall receive a hundred fold now in this time . . . with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life." Back of this statement which need not be taken literally there is the abiding principle that it pays to follow Christ, that even material things find a legitimate increase in his service. But above all material things, there is a new and a richer and a fuller kind of life. This life, and the life which is to come is always richer for those who are sincere disciples of Christ.

"When Israel rebelled against God, he allowed their enemies to take them captive; when they were sufficiently punished for their sins, their enemies were also punished for theirs. This clearly demonstrates that both saints and sinners must sooner or later receive a just reward for their conduct. This is the teaching of the entire Bible."

THE QUIET HOUR—Into my closet with Thee let me go now, O Lord, and draw from Thee some of Thy boundless love.

Prayer—Our Father, we are often like Thomas. "We know not, and how can we know the way?" Forgive us. Help us to follow Christ. Amen.

Prayer—Our Father, into every minute of the day we would pour all our strength of faith and devotion and be made strong for Thee in all our services. Amen.

MONDAY.

THE RIGHT KIND OF FRIENDSHIP.

"Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you."—Jno. 15:14.

Peter a devout and leading apostle came to rely strongly upon himself. This made him rather boastful. On one occasion when this assurance asserted itself and he would take the kingdom in his own hands and defend the Christ from His enemies, Christ reproved him and told him: "Get thee behind me satan. Thou savorest not the things that be of God." At the same time He admonished those that would follow Him, to bear the cross.

Man must remain humble in the presence of God. Follow Him.

Prayer—Dear Father, Thou art the spirit. As Christ is the way grant unto us a double portion of Thy spirit to follow Him all the way and be obedient even unto the cross. Amen.

TUESDAY.

A LEAP IN THE DARK.

"Things which are seen were not made of things which do appear."—Heb. 11:3.

The ship was riding at anchor in the bay of Panama one night, when the alarm was sounded "Man overboard." Immediately a man leaped over the side and swam two hundred yards to save the man in need. He thought nothing of the hazards he ran. He thought of nothing but "a man is in dire distress and in need of something I can give."

Christian living is often that way—a leap in the dark. But with a soul embued with His spirit to give what it has to give, and with a God who doeth all things well to His children, and with a Christ who never fails in the right leadership, what matters it.

WEDNESDAY.

"THE SON OF MAN."

"Whom do men say that I, the Son of man am?"—Matt. 16:13.

Fifty-four times in the Gospels Jesus is referred to as the "Son of man." Jesus calls Himself "the Son of man." To understand this fact leads one into an understanding relation with Him. In other words it means that Jesus is as man should be. In this fact we understand how He is "the Way." In it we realized an increased faith, and we find it possible to follow Him more easily. Take the humble fishermen apostles as example, of whom it is said, "And seeing Him they followed Him."

Prayer—O, Dear Saviour, help us to follow Thee better. Make Thy way known unto us through Thy Word, through our meditations, through our desires, and we will follow Thee all the way. Amen.

THURSDAY.

COMMON ORE.

"If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible to you."—Matt. 17:20.

Discussing "Lighter but Stronger Loyalties," Dr. Chas. W. Gulkey, Chicago University chapel dean and famed cleric, declared at the Y. M. C. A.'s 56th annual luncheon in San Diego, yesterday, that lighter loyalties well amalgamated into life's needs make stronger loyalties for humanity.

Illustrating his point, he said that engineering genius and science that makes lighter metal and at the same time makes it stronger, aptly illustrates how the same can be achieved along spiritual lines.

FRIDAY.

ANCIENT REMEDIES.

"All thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children."—Isa. 54:13.

The old remedies for common ills in the household are as effective as they ever were despite the effectiveness of medical science. We still revert to onion and honey for a cough and it is fine.

The old Gospel for the children is still the great need of the age. Without it we shall realize the hopelessness of the children's future. Life without appears innocent and accommodating, attractive and satisfying. This fixes a terrible grip upon us. But the day of reckoning and bitterness will come. We must follow the example of our ancient parents who began in their homes to teach their children all they knew of God.

Prayer—O Lord forgive us of our failures. Reveal our responsibilities to our children. Make us faithful and loyal forever. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"LIFE WITH A SKYLIGHT."

"A window shalt thou make to the ark, and in a cubit shalt thou finish it above."—Gen. 6:16.

Lights above—skylights in one's life—are necessary to bring heaven's glory into our soul. This is how Jesus reveals His light to us. If we are conscious of our mission to be His light to the world, we must have side windows through which we may look out into the world and see the needs of men that they may have access to our lives. The eternal spirit of God waits to be expressed through us.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D., Pastor.

"SACRAMENTAL GRACE."

A Communion Meditation.

By REV. CARL R. KEY.

"This do in remembrance of me."—I Corinthians 11:24.

The Lord's Supper was instituted by Jesus the first evening of the Feast of Unleavened Bread. This passover Feast was one of the events during the eventful hours before His arrest in the Garden of Gethsemane. It was all weird and sad. Nevertheless, the passion of our Lord was of a "sacred character."

The Apostle Paul was the first Christian to keep this feast for Christians. He kept it first at the Church of Corinth. But for his genius the "mysterious significance" of this feast might have been lost. Paul knew that it was easy to forget Christ. This feast is so vivid none can forget it. He shared this "sacramental grace" with the Corinthian Christians.

If it were easy to forget Christ in the time of Paul it is easier to forget Him now. We live so many centuries later. Man is just as weak and sinful as ever. Man needs the strength to live more truly in remembrance of Him. With this consciousness we seek the gift of sacramental grace at this table. As sinners and short of the glory of God we Sit at the feast, dear Lord,

Break Thou the Bread;
Fill Thou the cup that brings
Life to the dead;
That we may find in Thee
Pardon and peace;
And from all bondage win
A full release.

"This Do."

Our faith must be just as simple as that command. There is power and majesty in these words of the Master. That is why they still live. That is why men find grace in their content. His words live because he lives. We meet the Living Christ at His table today. The bread is a sign of His broken body. The wine is evidence of His blood shed for you and me. The white linen cover represents the purity of His body and His blood. Jesus should be very real to us here. Our hearts should be purified by His presence. We meet Him in this miracle of reality.

As this transformation takes place we come to know Christ intimately. We know He gave His life for us. What a price to pay! What a claim he has upon us! It was His only possession. He gave it gladly. He gave all. "Is it more blessed to give than to receive." If we would receive our share of the happiness we seek in this world we must give our lives to Him in return. It is not a business transaction. We need not expect value for value. "It is more blessed to give." The Perfect Life of Christ is invaluable. Our lives are worthless if measured by His life. When full surrender is made to Him we receive to our amazement a double portion of His grace.

Perfect submission, perfect delight,
Visions of rapture now burst on my sight.

Our supply is more than enough. We can "grace to others show."

By this table, as we partake, we feel keenly that His peace enfolds our hearts. This should be surety enough that the grace of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, is never withheld. Such peace is stabilizing to the soul. It quenches spiritual thirst. It is as refreshing as the cool spring water of an oasis to the parched tongue of a desert traveler.

These symbols should be a sign of hope not death. If we are Pauline enough we have "the hope of glory" in the life to come. In this life there is hope. It is Christ that we expect to meet in glory. The tomb is a sign of death but it was empty on that first Easter morn. "He is not here; He is risen." Our hope and our trust is in this risen, living Christ.

"This Do in Remembrance of Me."

This command comes from the same Christ whom Paul once persecuted. "It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks." It is hard for him to persecute Christ and the Christians. It is the same Jesus whom we persecute and try to forget. It is hard to forget a forgiving, loving person who has done much for us.

Here would I feed upon the bread of God, Here drink with thee the royal wine of heaven;

Here would I lay aside each earthly load, Here taste afresh the calm of sin forgiven.

The living Christ told the lawyer in search of eternal life to love the Lord God with all his heart, with all his soul, with all his strength, with all his mind, his neighbor as himself and live. To love God thus is to remember Christ. To remember Christ is to live. "This do, and thou shalt live."

"The Lord's Supper may be a stated form or a service of Holy Communion. The difference depends upon the spirit with which we approach it. When we come to the table of the Lord with simple faith He who established it will meet us there, the symbols are transmuted with reality. A miracle, far greater than physical transformation is wrought. We know as never before His life was given for us. We feel, as at no other time, His peace enfolds our hearts. We understand St. Paul's great word, "Christ in (us) the hope of glory." In the gift of sacramental grace we find the strength to live more truly in remembrance of Him."—The Wonderful Way, page 80.

FAMILY ALTAR.

Prayer—Our Father, we seek through the radiance of Thy love above and through Thy grace, that light shineth unto a perfect day, that we may not be barren. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"GOOD CHEER."

"Fear thou not for I am with thee; for I am thy God."—Isa. 41:10.

We all grow weary under discouragements. Life often presents us with the picture of a man that is whipped. This is life's gravest peril.

We also grow weary and discouraged spiritually. It is then that we may cease to pray, because we will say that God does not hear and He does not care. God save us from it. If we can hear His words, "Fear thou not for I am with thee," whatever may be the discouragement, the touch of divine friendship and concern will furnish a new and effective grip on things and lead to a joyous recovery.

Prayer—O God, help our ears to hear the voice of the Holy Book, the voice of the Holy Spirit, and the voice of life, that we may experience companionship with Thee, and be delivered from our discouragement and fears. In His name we ask it. Amen.

"God does not require us to do impossible things; hence, no one should offer inability as an excuse for not trying to obey. Besides, we often have much more ability than we are willing to admit. A failure to earnestly use what we have is a common sin of neglect."

"Preaching is the projecting of truth through personality."

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Our farming activities at the Christian Orphanage are at a stand-still. We have had but little rain since Christmas. Practically none during March and April and none so far in May. Our spring hay crop is practically ruined on account of the drought.

We sowed sixty acres in lespedeza this spring and will probably have a complete loss. We planted forty acres in soja beans for hay and it is so dry we are very much afraid the stand will be poor. Our farming operations at this time are very discouraging.

Our public school closes Tuesday, May 10th, and the children will be glad to get out. Eight months, every school day without missing a day, the little fellows get tired and are glad when school closes.

We have one boy and one girl to graduate from high school this commencement. A friend will make it possible for the girl to further her education in Elon College. The boy is expecting to get a job by which he can earn his living.

We will have three girls and one boy to graduate in the Commercial course at the college this spring. To get them placed in a good position where they will be able to make their own way will be a job for the writer. So far we have always been able to find jobs for our graduates. We hope we will not have much trouble this year.

Our big family has been enjoying strawberry short cake for two weeks, out of our garden. We would have had lots of them if the dry weather had not caught them.

We have no control over the rain and have to abide by the weather whether it rains or not.

In Memoriam

DUKE.

James Phillip Duke was born March 21, 1877, and died January 14, 1938. He was an active member of Liberty Spring Christian church from an early age until his death. Funeral services were conducted by his pastor, Dr. D. W. Johnson, and interment was made in the church cemetery.

DEAVERS.

The Newport Christian church and community, near Shenandoah, Va., was greatly saddened by the death of Mr. R. Gilbert Deavers. He was born September 11, 1875, and died April 9, 1938, making his age 64 years. His devoted wife, two sons, and nine grandchildren mourn his passing.

Brother Deavers was a man whom everyone respected and loved. He had been a member of the Newport Christian church for a number of years and had endeavored to live the Christian life as best as he could.

Let those who mourn be comforted to know their "God is not a God of the dead but of the living; and all live unto Him."—(Luke 20: 38.)

W. J. ANDES.

WELLS.

Robert Henry Wells, son of Clifton Wells, and Mabel Yarboro Wells, died at the Naval Hospital, Portsmouth, Va., March 26, 1938, at the age of nineteen years. In the latter part of 1937 Robert joined the navy. In January of this year he developed pneumonia from which he had recovered when a relapse came.

Besides his father he is survived by his grandfather, Deacon J. H. Yarboro, of Semora, N. C., and three sisters, Mrs. J. M. Mosley, Bracey, Va.; Mrs. J. T. Blick, Jr., Lawrenceville, Va.; and Mrs. J. E. Everette of Emporia, Va. He professed faith in Christ and united with the church several years ago.

C. E. NEWMAN.

PUGH.

Mrs. Alice Davidson Pugh was born October 23, 1890, and died February 6, 1938, in the Randolph County Hospital after a protracted illness. People admired her for her frankness and devotion to any cause she thought was right. Yet she was broad enough to allow everyone his own opinion. So far as the writer was able to ascertain, Sister Pugh was just what she claimed to be and nothing more. She had welded about her a family circle which was commendable. Yes, her children rise up and call her blessed. And regardless of what she was to others, to her children she was mother—the only mother they will ever have. They trusted her, loved her and will cherish her memory throughout their lives.

Her husband, Rev. John Q. Pugh, and the following children survive: John Q., Jr., and Howard, of Gibsonville; Mrs. James Gaddis, Asheboro; Frances, Muriel, Rachel, Virginia and David of the home; also two grandchildren survive.

Funeral services were conducted from Pleasant Cross Christian Church of which she had been a member for many years, by her pastor, assisted by Rev. Mr. Garner and Rev. M. A. Pollard. The large crowd and beautiful floral offering attest the esteem in which she was held. May the blessings of God be upon the bereft.

E. CARL BRADY.

PRICE.

In loving memory of Mrs. Nollie A. Price, whom God, in His infinite wisdom saw fit to remove from our midst on April 30, 1937, we, the members of the Holmes Bible Class of First Congregational-Christian Church, Richmond, Va., desire to express our devotion to her memory as a member of our class and church.

While knowing that the place she filled in her church, home and community will always be vacant, we believe that our loss is her divine gain and that she is now happy with the redeemed in God's mansion of glory. We shall sadly miss her kindly smile, her quiet manner, and her great and steady devotion to her church and Sunday school, since she was always ready to give of her time and means. Therefore, be it resolved:

First—that we submit to God's will, trusting in His great wisdom and loving kindness and mercy;

Second—that the memory of her life shall ever be an inspiration and encouragement to us all;

Third—that we extend anew to the bereaved family our deepest sympathy, and may their memory of their sainted dead be a blessed inspiration;

Fourth—that a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family, to "The Christian Sun" for publication, and be made a part of our class minutes.

HOLMES BIBLE CLASS.

HOZIER.

When the death angel came and called for Arthur F. Hozier, on January 19, 1938, the First Christian Church of Norfolk, Va., lost one of its most loyal members and the Board of Deacons lost a friendly brother and wise counselor. Brother Hozier was one of the few who remembered the founder of our church and who had been faithful to the church during the greater part of its history of ninety years.

Therefore be it resolved:

1. That the Board of Deacons and First Christian Church record their sincere appreciation for the high type of Christian character and continuous loyalty of our friend;

2. That we pledge anew our loyalty to our church and the Christ which it represents and seek in every possible way to carry on the work which was so near to the heart of the deceased;

3. That we express to his widow, relatives, and friends our sincere sympathy and offer them the consolation of the Christian religion which has in it the hope of meeting Christian friends in the heavenly home;

4. That a copy of these resolutions be recorded in the minutes of the church, a copy be sent to the family, and a copy offered to "The Christian Sun." for publication.

WORLD'S YOUTH CONVENTION.

a mere vacation voyage for these travelers, but the beginning of one more adventure in the world friendship of Christian youth and youth's leaders. For the prime purpose of this July to September journey is to represent North America at the Tenth World's Christian Endeavor Convention.

That tour party is at the moment well nigh completed. Carroll M. Wright, superintendent of the travel department of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, announces that there are just a few more places to be had before the reservations have been filled. It would be well to wire Mr. Wright if you can be one of the North America delegation which take the boat on July 6, from Seattle to the islands Out There and Down Under.

Dr. Stanley B. Vandersall, secretary of the World's Christian Endeavor Union announces a fine preliminary program on the general Convention theme, "The Challenge of Christ to Youth—Follow Me!"

Among the Convention speakers will be E. Stanley Jones, Daniel A. Poling, Harry N. Holmes, and Jesse M. Bader.

ART IN THE CHURCH SINGING

By AUBREY C. TODD.

The Christian life has found one of its truest expressions in song and music. Great religious leaders have found an outlet for their innermost feelings in the medium of song. Take, for example, the many songs of Charles Wesley. More than likely, Wesley wrote the largest per cent of the hymns in the book you are using at the present time; and in them you can read something of the thought and feeling that was his. Or, for a better example, consider Martin Luther, who sang his way into the hearts of his fellowmen. His "Ein' Feste Burg ist unser Gott" will ever live as long as Christian people gather together in the spirit of Christ.

These songs have not lived merely because they were mediums of expressing great experiences. They live because we who sing them may also experience the feeling of him who wrote, and because they are means of developing ethical ideals in our own lives.

Responsibility of Selecting Songs.

If this be true, there rests a great responsibility upon Sunday school superintendents, Christian Endeavor leaders, ministers, and all others who choose songs to be used in the churches. Of course, the finding of appropriate hymns for different subjects and occasions requires considerable time. It is much easier to choose a few hymns after getting to the service. And then, too, it is much easier to sing the old familiar hymns than to learn new ones. Easy, yes; but is it fair?

May I present some of the dangers in choosing hymns? The first one, as I have pointed out above, is laziness. Another is the love of jazz. This disease, which has afflicted many of our small country churches, can be cured with a little bit of energy and effort on the part of the leaders in these churches. Another danger that is prevalent in many of our non-liturgical churches is singing just for the sake of singing, with no particular purpose or aim in mind.

Some Suggestions.

Now, a few suggestions. Use new hymns that express modern currents of thought and aspiration, especially along the lines of public service and social righteousness. Disregard those that contain outmoded ethical or theological beliefs. I have before me a book that has a pencil line drawn through the word "battle" in the line, "Christ will lead us in battle," and below it is written "goodness." I don't know who made the change or why he did it, but anyway it offers food for thought. Don't junk all the old gospel hymns. There are some good ones that should be hung onto. Do not make emotional appeal the first test. Tears do not always indicate a change of heart. Select music which fittingly expresses a worshipful spirit. It is difficult to meditate on the meaning of the hymn and to pat your foot at the same time.

These suggestions apply to small churches as well as large ones. Singing does not have to be elaborate to be effective; yet, it should be varied so as to meet the differing temperaments of the congregations. Simple chants and chorales may add a great deal to a worship service. Choral responses to prayers and Scripture readings find a place in most humble surroundings.

Together let us endeavor to make our singing broader, more inclusive in spirit, reverent in tone, and pointing toward the new day. "Sing unto the Lord a new song"—(Psalm 149: 1). "Let the people praise Thee, O God"—(Psalm 67: 3).

The Churchmanship for Our Day

By CHARLES EMERSON BURTON, D. D.

The characteristics of our day stand out boldly on the background of the past. One who was a youth fifty years ago has the background if he is not too busy to look at it. There were no autos, no radios, no movies, no Sunday papers, no Sunday ball games, no Sunday entertainments.

The Church and the Sunday school competed with taking naps, taking walks, visiting friends, buggy riding, and the new pastime of bicycle riding.

In other words, the Church had the right of way on Sunday, and much more right of way than now on every other day of the week. Moreover men, women and children were not fagged out by the high geared activity and the high tension spirit of our day.

Against this earlier day just see what the Church must contend with now. It is not necessary to elaborate. As someone has said, "The soul of America is gas; its god the million-voiced motor." And another, "For no particular purpose we are mostly going from nowhere to nowhere." Ours is a magnificent day; ours is a terrific day. Whoever or whatever would live in our day must gear himself or itself to its speed and power. The Church must shout for a hearing. To make the spirit of love dominant in the hearts of individuals and of society the Church must force its way in the space already over-occupied.

The churchmanship of our day must match the workmanship of our day. Consider the workmanship which makes an automobile or an airplane safe, not to mention the workmanship in scientific laboratories which delve into the secrets of the universe.

First of all there must be a spirit to match the demand—a dynamic spirit which flings aside all feeling of defeatism, the confidence of being in the right, the determination to win in the name of God, the faith that is the victory.

About this spirit must be gathered all the resources of the Church; the resources which abide in the persons who make it up and may be in its membership; the resources which abide in their possession of personal talent and of financial ability. The Church must face all the tasks that the Church needs to do with determination to do them; it must face all these tasks with a purpose of putting at work every individual professing allegiance to it.

This calls for perfection of organization—one that will stand the test. Think of the test through which the automobile must go on the testing field. Let the Church be submitted by its own wish to such tests. Let it perfect its organization. Let it train its leadership. Let it enlist its personnel. Let it formulate its program. Let it heed the command of its great leader, Jesus Christ.—Advance.

PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES

Born to Rev. and Mrs. Robert A. Whitten, in the Memorial Hospital, Winchester, Va., April 25th, a daughter, who has been given the name Mary Ruth. Both mother and baby are doing nicely.

Mrs. C. H. Rowland and children wish the Church to know that they greatly appreciate the kindness of the Greensboro (N. C.) church to Dr. Rowland through his long illness, and to them at the time of his death.

Dr. W. C. Wicker, who was ill so long last year, has been able to meet his college classes at Elon all this year, and feels that he is on the road to complete recovery. His many friends rejoice with him.

If there is any doubt in your mind about your subscription to this paper, just turn to the front page and read your label. It may be that you will want to send your renewal right away. There are several who should.

Sunday School Conventions will soon be meeting. Secretaries had better be getting things ready so reports can be made easily. Delegates should be elected, and dues sent in promptly. This should be our banner year for Sunday School Conventions.

Will your church have a vacation church school this year? The Board of Christian Education has on hand a number of good books and other material for the use of leaders in planning and conducting such schools. Write to 514 South Main Street, Norfolk, Va.

Rev. B. J. Earp writes the following: "Since the death of 'Miss Victoria of the Hills,' I wish to acknowledge receipt of two boxes of clothing from Apple's Chapel, one box from Pleasant Grove and one package from Rev. LeGrand Moody. Thanks to these friends for their kindness to the mountain people."

A thoughtful minister called at the office of the Board of Christian Education recently and got several Bibles to give to children in his churches. He had counted up those who are ten years old, and those who have become ten since the Bibles have become available. Each child received a Bible or New Testament last Sunday.

The books are available not only for ten-year-olds, but for all who need and will use the Book and who may not be able to get one for themselves.

The recent Convention passed many resolutions (but not so many as sometimes). Many of them are good resolutions. But none of them will succeed unless those responsible accept them in good faith and try to put them into effect. You will find many of them listed elsewhere in this paper. What will you and your church do about them?

About two-thirds of the Conference year has passed. It is a good time to check up and see what the report will probably be. With some concerted effort it may be possible to add many new members, pay up all bills, and meet Conference Apportionments in full. Those who wait until fall to give this matter thought will likely be disappointed.

One of our fine, cooperative churches is Bethlehem Church in Eastern Virginia. On last Sunday morning the Willing Workers Missionary Society, under the direction of Miss Ruby Piland and Mrs. Moore, conducted the closing service for the Sunday school. Mr. C. F. Savage is the superintendent of this school. A fitting climax for the day was the message brought by the pastor, Rev. R. E. Brittle, at the evening worship service.

In Birmingham, Ala., on Friday, April 29, 1938, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, voted to merge with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Methodist Protestant Church. The new Methodist Church will have about eight million members. It seems that when Congregational and Christian Churches began the merger they really started something. There are real difficulties to be overcome, but the Kingdom moves forward when Christians come together in cooperative work.

The young people in a little church on Main Street of a certain city are interested in being among those who spend a week at Elon College in June. In order to have the needed cash they have written a little play which they will present along with several other things on Friday night of next week. In doing this they learn to write and to give entertainments, they add to the social life of their church, and they make the world know that they mean business about this matter of religion. "Go thou and do likewise."

HON. J. O. ATKINSON, JR.

Elon College is proud to present one of her alumni as a candidate for the United States Congress. Certain friends and Democratic forces in the Sixth Congressional District of North Carolina have selected James Oscar Atkinson, Jr., as their candidate for Congress. Mr. Atkinson is the son of our honored and esteemed Mission Secretary, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Sr.

Mr. Atkinson, though young in years, is mature in experience. He is a graduate of Elon College, took his law course at Harvard University and the University of North Carolina. Since receiving his law degree, he has practiced in Greensboro. Through faithfulness, efficiency, and skill, he has built for himself a worthy place in the hearts of his fellow citizens and a good patronage in his chosen profession. For a number of years he has served as County Chairman for his party in the County of Guilford. Because of his wisdom and achievements in this responsible position, his friends covet for him a position of greater trust and higher service. Any effort in his behalf will be greatly appreciated by Mr. Atkinson and his friends who are supporting him in this worthy undertaking.

On June 4th, the electorate of his District will select a nominee to place on the regular ballot in the fall election. Those who are interested in Elon College and in good government will wish for our alumnus and friend, J. O. Atkinson, Jr., victory in the primary to nominate and in the campaign to elect.

REIDSVILLE CHURCH NEWS.

The Reidsville Church closed one of the greatest revival meetings on Easter Sunday night that has ever been held in the history of the church. Over three hundred church members and sinners found their way to the altar, seeking a change of heart.

The auditorium, annex, and balcony of the church were filled each night. On the last night over a thousand people crowded into the church and several were turned away, not able to get in. Over fifty have already united with the church during this conference year. Many more are coming in later.

Truly these are great days when people are hungering for real gospel messages. Jesus said, "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me." The great need of today is to lift up Christ.

Rev. J. P. Trueblood, of Hertford, N. C., did the preaching during this meeting and the pastor had charge of the singing and personal work. A group of men and ladies met each evening before service for prayer.

God is blessing in a great way every department of our church. Over five hundred were present in Sunday school. We are praying that this year will be one of the greatest of soul winning in the history of our denomination; and I am sure that it can if every minister and church can have a great desire in their hearts for the lost to be brought to Christ.

"Woe unto them that are at ease in Zion."—(Amos 6:1.)

MOTHER'S DAY AT ROSEMONT.

Rosemont Church enjoyed a very delightful Mother's Day. On the Sunday before, our pastor suggested that members of the Garden Club, and others who enjoyed the arranging of flowers in memory of mothers who had passed away, or in honor of mothers who were living. The response to this suggestion was generous, and twenty-three beautiful arrangements adorned the chancel, and our church became a veritable garden of flowers and sweet memories. All enjoyed the beauty of the lovely roses, peonies, Sweet Williams, snap dragons, etc., and the mothers and grandmothers present were much pleased with the kind and thoughtful remembrances.

The pastor, Rev. J. F. Morgan, preached in the morning on the topic, "What Mothers Can Do for Their Children," and at the evening service, the pastor of the Craddock Methodist Church, who was exchanging pulpits with Mr. Morgan, preached an inspiring sermon.

Special music, appropriate to the day, was furnished by the choir.

MRS. M. A. HEDLY.

THE CONTRIBUTION OF CHRISTIANITY.

It is indeed a great pleasure for me to speak on this momentous occasion. It is my happy lot to represent the strongest tie that binds the human race together; namely religion.

Since I am a Christian and speaking for the Christian forces of our city, I, therefore, claim to represent not only religion, but the religion which embraces the highest and best in the whole of human life. The Christian religion has been at the very heart of cultural advancement. It is the backbone of democracy. Social conditions always improve where Christianity is embraced. Law and order prevail where Christ is revered. The very foundation of modern education, especially American education, is the Christian Church. Music never reached its own, or anything like attained the height it now enjoys until the Christian religion made its imprint upon. The printing press was conceived and brought forth for the purpose of printing and distributing the Christian Bible.

Down through the ages Christ and His Church has stood out in leading men upward. He is still bidding for man's loyalty. He will lead our civilization to higher planes if we will follow Him as loyally in the light which we have as our forefathers did in their way.

As we make this initial broadcast, it is fitting that we have representatives of state, education, medicine, the press, religion, and music. All these have their part in every well-rounded society. It should continue to be in the broadcasting system of this station.

I could hope for you a prosperous ministry for this portion of our state. May you render a service that is needed to bless mankind. Most of all, may power, light and love, which comes from Christ radiate through this station until it shall enlighten every darkened home and cheer each saddened heart. Since the radio is becoming such a prominent factor in our civilization, it is to be hoped that WRNL will continue to shed forth such light and the same spirit which it sends forth to bless others will be returned unto you. In conclusion, I must congratulate Dr. Bryan and his colleagues in this undertaking.

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ORDINATION.

Dr. Clarence A. Vincent, of the Community Church, at Miami Shores, on May 2nd, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination to the Christian ministry. A very happy party helped Dr. and Mrs. Vincent to celebrate this significant event. Dr. Vincent began in the ministry of the Freewill Baptist denomination, but early transferred to the Congregational fellowship and in that fellowship has served significant churches. He has been pastor at Sandusky, Ohio; Galesburg, Ill.; Boston, Mass.; Washington, D. C.; and Winter Park, Fla. In the latter church he was pastor for a number of years and entered most heartily into the fellowship of the conference. He has always been a big brother to his brother ministers, especially to the younger men, who have appreciated his interest and his help. Through his contacts and through his writing, he has come to be known by a host of people and all will heartily congratulate him and also Mrs. Vincent on this fiftieth anniversary. Dr. Vincent is doing a vigorous piece of work as pastor of this young church in a suburb of Miami.

WHY SOME MINISTERS FAIL.

It is of high importance to the divine purpose that the minister should be inviolate. Many good men and true have watched their work for the Kingdom of God suffer, seen their ideals—which they had in the springtime of youth—shattered and had high hopes blighted, in the van of intellectual or religious progress by the difficulty of distinguishing between what they consider their first duty as a minister of the Gospel.

Many ministers know the cause of a broken spirit and profaned duty. They know the cause and the remedy; yet, dare not allow anything to violate the whims of wife or friends. These demands upon their time—which should be given to God—have grown to be the bulwark of safety, they think to "get by" with a good sermon as the substitute for personal work. I Timothy 5:8 is sometimes found to be a great source of joy to these men of God. But there is a greater One who speaks in Matthew 10:37. This they ought to do, and not leave the other undone.

If some ministers are called to an important conference, they must first get the consent of their wives. The wife may have other plans. It matters little if her plans are in opposition to the work of the Church. They are her plans. The parishoners have learned long since never to call the minister except in case of serious sickness or death. They have become reconciled to the weekly or monthly sermon as the only spiritual consolation they may expect.

Pity the poor minister whose violated purpose for the Kingdom has come before the Throne as "neither hot or cold." He has compromised his soul. He fears the wrath of wife and family more than the wrath of God.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

THE REASON FOR RADIANCE.

Some people think the Christian religion is effective only when the emotions are stirred with joy, when the countenance is radiant. Radiance is excellent, but it is not all of religion.

The Gospel writers tell of one occasion when the countenance of Jesus became radiant, and his garments reflected only white. He was with three of the disciples on the mountain where they had gone for prayer. It was while He prayed that the experience of the radiant heart came. Moses and Elijah, the Law and the Prophets, were very real to Him then. Jesus was in the realm of spirit. When Peter began talking to keep from thinking, he said:

"It is good to be here. I like to stay here. This is marvelous. Let's build tabernacles and stay here."

When he got through chattering and looked at the real situation he saw no one but Jesus. The radiance had both blinded him and illumined his vision. The radiance made him forget the rest of the world. His religion brought so much joy that he wanted to keep it always, and keep it to himself.

But the radiant heart of Jesus sent him back down the hill to where a distressed father watched a hopeless boy wallow in the dirt and foam at the mouth while helpless disciples wondered why they could not cure the lad. The reason for radiance is to illumine the path of people who travel towards eternity. The radiant souls will find its work in those places where people have fits.

Christian people go into the church to learn of the Law and the Prophets and to find fellowship with Jesus in order that when they come into contact with those who know not the Lord they may be witnesses to His grace and power. The radiance is not alone for those who feel it, but also for those who need it. Without this radiance the world will continue to have spasms and even the disciples of Jesus will stand by helpless.

This crazy world in which we live needs desperately the radiance of those who know Jesus in the power of His spirit. The sick must be healed. The distressed must be helped. The hungry must be fed. The crippled must be made well. Society must be transformed. The gods of Pleasure and Profit must be dethroned. Before this writhing world the Church seems to stand helpless. But it is not. In the midst is One whose radiance can restore the joy and power of the Church and fit it for the work which must be done.

The radiance of religion is not merely to be enjoyed, it is to be used in healing the world-tragedy of our day.

The religion of Jesus may have originated in the closet or on the mountain top, but it expressed itself in the market place, or wherever there was human need. If our religion succeeds only in making us feel good it is not the religion of Jesus.

QUITTING THE PULPIT.

When should a minister quit the pulpit? For many this question has little importance, but to some of us it is very vital. For many centuries the ministry has stood out in the minds of men as being different from other professions or lines of work. It is generally believed that those who preach are in some very definite sense called of God to perform that special work for him. Like a preacher of old the minister can say, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel." Once in the pulpit, when should one leave?

The most obvious answer is: "When the message is delivered." Mean little boys have often thought that the minister could quit a particular sermon long before he did (and some very wise men have agreed). Churches have been sure that it would be well for the pastor to move to another field while the preacher struggled for new thoughts to give those who were wondering when he would move. But this does not go to the heart of the topic. When should a man give up the ministry and do something else?

Some six years ago the Southern Convention laid its hands on one of its best pulpit orators and evangelistic pastors and put him at the head of its college. At its recent session the Convention voted to take from the pulpit another of its ministers and put him into promotional work. Does the Convention have the right to do this kind of thing? Should a minister heed such a call? It is the opinion of this writer that these questions deserve more serious consideration than they sometimes get. Back of every Convention vote in matters of this kind should be very serious thought. And the Convention membership should not be shocked if the man in question should say "No" to the call of the Convention and remain in the pulpit which he loves. On the other hand there may be a work worthy of a minister. The pulpit is not the only place to preach, although it is doubtless the best.

It must be difficult for men who have been in the ministry for many years to retire. Preaching is fascinating and richly rewarding in the realm of the soul. To quit with no hope of beginning again must not be easy. And yet the time comes when that must be done. Younger men take the places of the older, and the world moves on. When should a minister retire from the pulpit ministry? Who is wise enough to say?

Doubtless the most difficult retirement of all is when one finds that he cannot measure up to the high standards of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. But even in this there must be some reward. The willingness to enter into the sacred profession surely does something to the soul. There is joy in seeing the work go on under the leadership of more capable hands. But how is one to know when his labors are ended in pulpit ministry? Here are unanswered questions worthy of sincere search for truth.

F. C. L.

PERSONAL DEVOTION

By GEORGE M. GIBSON.

In the paradox of spiritual life there is a principle of spontaneity, and a principle of discipline. This we see illustrated in many ways in nature and in life. On the one hand, freedom; on the other, control. The freedom of the winds that blow where they list; and the rigid controls of natural law.

The genius of Protestantism has specialized in spiritual spontaneity. Crying, Every man his own priest, it rebelled against stiff formality and tyrannical ecclesiastical control. Pleading, Every man has a right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, Protestantism challenged systems of thought and of government. It has produced great seers and mystics who have made manifest in all their works how deeply legitimate is the principle of spontaneity in things of faith.

But, just because the deepest reality is paradoxical, when one of its aspects is emphasized to the neglect of others, such overemphasis leads to its own defeat.

Thus our vaunted freedom of spiritual life, too often neglecting the nature of reality itself and the character of God, turns itself ultimately into slavery. Those most loudly crying liberty, are most deeply enslaved to their own boredom. And since it is freedom of self, rather than the freedom of God which is sought, divinity becomes obscured.

It is nothing very original to observe that our times suffer from a sense of the unreality of spiritual things. The modern mood has seen God as the product of man's own imagination, or the picture of his best aspirations. To continue to think of him as the Great original, the Creator of nature and man, in a psychological time, was to brand oneself a relic of medievalism. And we might have continued in this mood had the mood produced results of inner peace the soul requires.

But even mingled with our most arrogant claims for man-supremacy and our arguments for his native right to be free, we have lifted the cry for a vision of God. The modern soul as well as ancient souls requires to experience God as something other than itself. Life longs to see him as the Great Authority, and to meet him in obedience as the worthy and sufficient answer to human dilemmas.

And as we become the more deeply concerned with sensing the reality of God, we are proportionately indifferent to our "natural rights" to self-expression. Though still refusing to allow powers and principalities to interfere with that which is most sacred to us, we find, if we are earnest in the search, that we are humbly prepared to submit ourselves to the discipline inherent in the Christian profession.

Among all the interests of modern life, religion alone has been almost unique in claiming for itself a purely subjective area. The scientist, the artist, the social engineer, all are more and more bringing themselves to the objective mood. Personal opinion does not matter so much to the man of science. Convictions, prejudices, attitudes, and even personal rights, are all to be subjected to the objective search. What matter if one believes or wishes otherwise? Dynamite and poison will destroy.

What difference though a multitude decide against the truth, it is still true.

But in religion alone, we have vainly hoped to achieve spiritual life by ignoring its demands. There is contradiction in our very cry for liberty and self-expression. For readiness to hear the divine word is evidenced by self-submission to an order of truth not of our own making.

To use a much overworked word, there is a "technique" to the Christian life. It is simple and discoverable. To read the gospels, to merge one's self with the life of the beloved fellowship, to be constant in the prayerful-seeking attitude, reveals to us that the God-knowing life may never drift on flowery beds of ease. On the contrary, just as the scientist through discipline develops skill, as the engineer submits to the mathematics and techniques of his practical art, as the artist and musician give themselves over in subjection to the demands of their dream, so the searcher after God must find him on God's terms, and not on his own.

In that wonderful chapter in Hebrews that refers to "the chastenings of the Lord," Moffatt gives the meaning, "The discipline of the Lord." Contemporary distaste for the disciplinary aspects of the Christian life proves nothing but the distaste. The ego-centered soul of the times needs nothing more than rigorous submission to the life of prayer, of good works, and of fellowship duties humbly accepted and loyally discharged. Such discipline, though at first grievous to free souls, is later found benign. For through it the heart is prepared to hear the word of God, and the will made ready to accept.—Advance.

Cultivate within yourself thoughts that you know will increase your faith, courage, determination and other success-making qualities. Think right and you will act right, and just as you think right and act right you will be on the way to right results.

It is remarkable how a life that is ordinarily dull and unproductive can be changed by right thinking into a life of great and useful effort. Wrong results in your life are primarily produced by wrong thinking and the only way to annihilate wrong thoughts is to put right thoughts in their place. Wherever you are at this moment, there is an incomparably higher place for you.—Grenville Kleiser.

A man with nothing to do does far more strenuous "labor" than any other form of work. To be enforced to be idle is terribly difficult and even a small proportion of your day wasted is worse than working many hours overtime. But my greatest pity is for the man who dodges a job he knows he should do. He is a shirker; and boy! what punishment he takes . . . from himself.—E. R. Collcord.

The pleasantest things in the world are pleasant thoughts; and the great art of life is to have as many of them as possible.—Montaigne.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

I am in bed at Lakeview Hospital, but am improving and can walk a few steps each day. I expect to leave the hospital next week and will be compelled to continue the "rest cure" for several weeks, probably months. It may interest those who read this "Letter" to know something about an experience I had the night I became ill. About nine o'clock while reading the 42nd Psalm, the 5th verse struck me very clearly as a suitable text for my next Sunday sermon. These are the words of the text: "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? And why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise Him for the help of His countenance." I wrote an outline of a sermon which I expected to preach the following Sunday. I laid this upon my desk, went to my room, and retired, little dreaming that I would be awakened during the night by a serious illness, which would send me to the hospital and compel me to lay aside my work for a long period of rest. It is needless to say that I have not preached the sermon, but the point of interest to me, is the fitness of that text for my own use and experience.

Any man who has been working for years in a field as dear to him, as the Christian ministry is to me, will be "cast down and disquieted" when he faces the situation such as I have faced. It has not been easy for me to lay down the work I love with such devotion. I have found my chiefest joy in the work of the Christian ministry.

And facing these facts, as I have done, I have needed the spirit of the Psalmist as expressed in the words of this text. And when one may out of such an experience, say with the Psalmist, "Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise Him for the help of His countenance," a great victory has been won. I hope some day to return to my pulpit and preach this sermon, which was born in the shadow of a great trial.

I am reciting this experience because I know that I am not alone in this affliction. Many others have faced experiences darker than mine, with a faith that did not waver, and a courage that did not fail. It is comforting to know, and encouraging to learn that God is all sufficient in every emergency. In sunshine and in shadow, in health and in sickness, in joy and in sorrow, in work and in rest, God is our refuge and strength. We may wet our pillows with our tears of sorrow and disappointment, but they will be dried, when we catch the spirit of the words: "For I shall yet praise Him, for the help of His countenance."

UNITED PROMOTION.

The Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches in its recent session in Portsmouth, Va., undertook to unify its promotional work. The various departments of the Convention at stated intervals have been doing their own promotional work without due consideration of other departments. It was the feeling upon the part of some that this system had developed a spirit of rivalry that was hindering rather than helping and that it would be a part of wisdom and indicative of progress if the Convention would create an office from which publicity materials, plans, programs and appeals might go to the church as a whole, giving each department its proper emphasis and allotted time. In order to effect this change, it seemed advisable to discontinue technically the Board of Education and the Board of Christian Education but in reality to continue the work of both boards in one organization. Consequently the Board of Christian Education was constituted. The Board of Christian Education was elected without regard to membership of the two previous boards. The membership of the new board is as follows: L. E. Smith, M. S. Poulson, H. S. Hardecastle, J. G. Truitt, Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, Joe French, and R. L. House.

The Convention, the Board of Missions, and the Board of Christian Education were authorized to determine and provide for the expense of the office constituted as "Unified Promotion." The Rev. F. C. Lester, pastor of the First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va., and editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN was elected by the Convention as Secretary of Promotion for the Convention. The three boards charged with the responsibility of determining and providing expenses of the new office met in Durham, Monday, at 11 o'clock, to determine the financial requirements of this new undertaking.

The newly constituted Advisory Board of the Convention, consisting of the President of the Convention, the President of Convention Boards, and the Presidents of the different conferences constituting the Convention, is charged with the responsibility, in cooperation with the Promotional Secretary, of outlining and directing the program of promotion within the Convention.

It is hoped that these new adventures undertaken will result in the proper emphasis upon all departments of the Convention and may secure entire cooperation on the part of all for the good of each individual department and of the work as a whole. Certainly we need to see the needs of every department of our church and to know that every department is essential to the whole, and to see that the church as a whole cannot move forward in parts but must progress together. It is a common law of life that the weak is dependent upon the strong, and the strong is under obligation to share with the weak. We have a great church with abundant resources. If we can have Christian cooperation and Christ-like service and sacrifice, nothing can hinder a forward movement along all lines.

Let no one be deceived. A perfect organization does not guarantee progress, particularly in matters of spiritual import. A perfect organization, however, is a long step on the road to success. If the organization be charged with an invincible spirit, achievements in high things are inevitable. A spirit—I mean the spirit of the Almighty—operates a good bit like electricity. Connections must be intact before power is transmitted. Organizations within the church must be in accord if they are to be charged by the spirit. We should look well to our own selves to make sure that the current is not broken when it strikes us. By giving our newly constituted office due consideration and our Secretary of United Promotion encouragement and sympathetic cooperation, we can accomplish something for our church that is really worthwhile.

MODERATE DRINKING.

It is surprising how pitifully weak the average human being is. Every drunkard starts out to be a moderate drinker, but fails—a conquered victim—in the pathway of this thing we call habit. It is a question whether there is such a thing as temperance where one undertakes to drink regularly. Alcohol is indeed king, a conquerer supreme, always has been, always will be. His very nature makes him so. The would-be moderate drinker boasts bravely that he can "drink or let it alone," but few there be who are ever able to prove that it can be done. In the days of our forefathers the decanter sat on the sideboard and a little toddy in the morning and maybe a little more in the evening was a common practice. But not so with the American of today. He must go "the whole hog or none," and that is usually the way he winds up (apologies to the hog).

People drink liquor because they want to feel different. They want to get a punch, a kick, a sensation, a liberation from something they don't like, a forgetfulness. They want to talk a little more freely (especially if it's a party), to be more companionable. Look in on such a gathering, as this writer had occasion to observe recently from the mezzanine of a fashionable hotel where the younger set was having a holiday dance. It was a gay party and easily became more so as the evening passed. Points of contact were more easily made, conversation was more liberal, although less sensible.

Something strange about the effect of alcohol on the human brain. It will make a silly talking fool out of even a sedate college president. It changes the spirit of a party from an evening of dignity and refinement to one of hilarious action both in word and deed. And the price the participants pay the next day! That "morning after the night before" feeling! The "hangover" that still hangs for two or three days! That stuffy feeling from excessive smoking and too many high-balls! The incapacity to concentrate, to coordinate the muscles and nerves and turn off work the next day. The inclination to say: "What a fool I was—I should have had better sense!"

The man who says, "I never drink enough to interfere with my work," doesn't know what he is talking about; that is, if he makes a practice of drinking regularly. A person is drunk to a certain extent after the first drink is taken. That is easily proven in automobile driving tests. That person, man or woman, who spends a "night out" and indulges even moderately is less capable of working efficiently the next day, all his or her arguments to the contrary notwithstanding. Alcohol just doesn't work that way.

This writer has had occasion during the past fifteen years to be brought into contact with men who drink, many of whom are now human derelicts beyond all hope of any possible salvage.

Alcohol causes strange psychological changes of which the drinker is wholly unaware. He or she who drinks may be sure that with the first glass queer changes begin to take place. A man or fine personality and quite companionable may become unbearably quarrelsome and a positive nuisance. Another, usually quiet and inoffensive, becomes a braggart and wants to start trouble. A woman who drinks (and they do these days) may become overbearing, arrogant, or sullen; or she may become suspicious of everybody, even her children and her husband. Women do not drink and smoke because they like the taste or have a natural inclination in that direction. Such is contrary to her refined nature. They indulge in both because they think it's smart, and because their gentlemen friends tell them it's perfectly all right.

It is easy to note in a cocktail party how sloppy and loud the language becomes and how reckless the behavior when everybody "lets go." Personalities as well as faces seem to disintegrate. Our country is facing a great social upheaval. This male and female drinking at the same bar presents a problem that this nation has never faced before. Such a condition has never existed before in this country. Fifty years ago respectable women never drank in public. It just wasn't done. Now the women must keep up with the men.

This intermingling of the sexes in saloons, dance halls, and even in cocktail parties in the home is bringing about strange changes in society. It is breaking down barriers that heretofore have stood the test of social intermingling. Some women drink to overcome their sex inhibitions. Without some stimulation they are too modest and reserved to be good sports and go along with the rest of the party. "Under the influence" they find it easy to "let go," and not so embarrassing. Their gentlemen friends, of course, encourage them.

Yes, the social drinking of today under state and federal protection and direction presents an ignoble experiment.

Another problem that confronts the nation is the giving of cocktail parties in homes where there are children. Whatever dad and mother do is all right regardless of what the Sunday school teacher or the physiology teacher in the week-day school may say. So long as they are reared under such environment and influence, what can be expected of the homes they themselves later establish? As is the home, so goes the nation.

APPLYING THE GOSPEL IN THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

During the last biennium of the Southern Convention a fine piece of work was done by the Social Relations Committee as is evidenced by their report and recommendations. We must continue to concern ourselves with the social application of the Gospel of Christ for the whole of life. "Faith without works is dead." Careful study and planning, individual consecration, and prayer must be given to this phase of our church work. Economic, political, and social relations have their religious implications. A healthy atmosphere and fruitful activity in these fields are as vital to abundant living as that of a deep and abiding religious experience.

During the present biennium your committee, composed of Revs. Carl R. Key, Geo. N. Edwards, W. T. Scott, D. J. Bowden, and Carl H. Voss, Dr. L. E. Smith and Dr. J. E. Rawles, urge that each member and each conference in the Convention place emphasis where emphasis is due in this sphere of activity. The Convention report will appear soon in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for your study and action. Please send regular reports on any social action that may take place in your community and conference to your committee chairman. Your committee will be glad to serve you in the field of Social Relations at any time which can be arranged. The application of the gospel to every-day life may be emphasized in addresses, sermons, forums, study groups and institutes. We would like to see each conference consider carefully all social issues in their fall sessions and take some action thereon. We recommend for study and use "The Social Action Magazine," published monthly by the Council for Social Action, 289 Fourth Avenue, New York City, at $1.00 per year. "Study Packets" on several questions may be had from the same addresses at 25c each.

CARL R. KEY, Chairman,
Committee on Social Relations.

It is good for a man to be checked, crossed, disappointed, made to feel his own ignorance, weakness, folly—made to feel his need of God; to feel that in spite of all his cunning and self confidence, he is no better off in this world than in a dark forest, unless he has a Father in Heaven who loves him with an eternal love, and a Holy Spirit in Heaven who will give him a right judgment in all things, and a Saviour in Heaven who can be touched with the feeling of his infirmities.—Charles Kingsley.

FAITH THAT CONQUERS.

Although one under inspiration declared years ago, "Whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith," we have not yet achieved that victory. Every question and pronouncement as well as every person and program, of our time, are subjected to searching analysis, or put down with a question mark. We seem to have lost faith. This applies to standards of government, social attitudes, and the church. There comes this morning in the mails to thousands a printed letter calling on the women to "rebel," asking them to start a "rebellion" in their community against present price conditions and the conduct of affairs in government. This is no uncommon occurrence now. Capital and industry meet and rebel against the conditions to which capital is being subjected. Labor meets and calls for a rebellion against how labor is being treated. Races meet and call for a rebellion against present race relationships. A church group meets and calls for rebellion against other church groups. We seem to have lost faith all along the line. Moral and spiritual standards, that were seemingly well established and impregnable, no longer suffice and under the pressure of doubt and interrogation, that which was counted immoral and unspiritual are now accepted as moral and spiritual, or if not that then as important. We seem to have lost faith. This accounts in large measure for the great decrease in missionary giving, which was solely in faith for the wholly divine and unselfish task of preaching and revealing Jesus Christ and Him crucified as the one and all sufficient Saviour and Redeemer. We have substituted works for faith, forgetting the fact that even works that endure are the fruits of faith in God and His Son. James, "the practical," under inspiration wrote, "Faith without works is dead. Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works." But even this practical man of the Book, and of our teaching, did not substitute works for faith, but related works to faith even as John, the beloved and the mystic, under inspiration wrote. "I (the Christ) am the vine, ye are the branches. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit He taketh away." Our works to endure and to fulfill the promise are to be related to faith even as the branches are related to the vine.

The gospel of our Lord is still the power of God unto salvation and the greatest work in this world is that of sharing by and through faith, His love, His life, His gospel with others that through and by means of that sharing our own lives may bear fruit, not as a result of our work, but of our relationship through faith to Him, who said, "I have overcome the world." You and I, dear readers, cannot overcome the world, but our Lord has already overcome the world and we overcome through faith in Him and in His power to conquer. He has promised to be with us unto the end of the ages on condition that we, His followers, go forth to preach and to teach and thus share His gospel with a world that perishes without it.

THE WHOLE PROGRAM.

Rev. W. Millard Stevens, pastor of our Union Christian Church, Route No. 2, Burlington, N. C., devotes the fourth and final page of his church bulletin for Worship Service, Sunday, May 8th, to what it seems to us he has fittingly called The Whole Program. We cannot give in THE CHRISTIAN SUN a reproduction of the page referred to, since it is done in such attractive manner, but the wording is as follows:

If You Were An Orphan, or your children were orphans, would it not be a gloriously blessed thing for someone to adequately support and equip the orphan's home—For you.

If You Were Young, with a bright mind, plastic and ready for the molding hand of Christian teachers, would it not be a gloriously blessed thing for someone to support Christian schools and colleges—For you.

If You Were Old, having spent your strength as a preacher of the Gospel, or the wife of a preacher, would it not be a gloriously blessed thing if someone provided adequate ministerial relief funds—For you.

If You Were Lost, unsaved, in some destitute part of the homeland, or in some foreign land, would it not be a gloriously blessed thing if someone sent a missionary your way to preach Jesus—For you.

If You Met Christ, walking your way, looking for those who help Him bless and save the world, would it not be a gloriously blessed thing if you could say to Him, "Master all these things have I done—For you."

All these things we can help to do by supporting the program of this Church.

If any of our pastors have presented the whole program of the church in a better form than that we would like to hear from them?

Some of our churches, Newport News specifically among others; rejoice that their full apportionment for missions has been raised thus early in the year and now sent in to the Mission Secretary. It is a source of rejoicing to a church and a people when they can realize that through denial and faith in God they have reached a goal set for themselves or suggested to them by others who care and who have the interest of the kingdom at heart.

We deeply appreciate the offerings now coming in from churches and Sunday schools, consecrated and dedicated as they are to the divine and wholly unselfish task of sharing the Gospel of our Lord with a world hungry for that Gospel, and waiting in darkness till it brings the light.

Gratefully,
J. O. ATKINSON,

CHECKING THE CHURCH ROLLS.

It seems to me that every pastor will want to take a very definite interest in his church roll. He is the pastor of every man, woman, and child on that roll, as well as some others. He wishes to know exactly who is on the roll, where they live, and something of how they live. He will want to be able to know who of his members live in other places, and what their addresses are. These are facts vital to his ministry and usefulness as a pastor. He should be able to answer the question any day, certainly any month, as to how many members he has on his church roll.

Ordinarily speaking, there are three ways by which a church roll is diminished: (1) By death, and no one knows better than the pastor about the deaths. He should check those names and see that the record is correct there; (2) By letter of transfer, and although sometimes members join another church without asking for a letter, a church may include those in the letter of transfer group. No one knows better than a pastor who these are, and he should see that their names are properly checked; (3) Revision of the church roll, for in spite of all the vigilance, it will occur that there are occasionally names that must be stricken from the roll on a basis of revision; for instance, a person may leave the community and his address never be obtained. Eventually his name would come off the roll by old age and death if for no other reason.

In a certain sense, a name is never off the roll. Once it is put on the regular membership roll of the church he may join another church or die, yet his name shows on that roll. And anyone looking over a church roll centuries old should be able to find the names of all who ever united with that church. Their names are never off the record. Every church should keep a roll book, pages permanently bound together, so that every name will always be there. Cards in a card index file are fine for daily use, but in addition to them there should be a bound book of members on the church roll.

Brother pastor, check your church roll. See just how many you do actually have on it. Do not check them off, check them on! Do not erase them, find them. Do not blame them, bless them. Do not be proud of how many you have to check off, take your joy out of seeing how many members there are in your church, and by some method or other, going after them. Certainly you will have to revise your roll. I have found it necessary, and you will, too; but let us take names off only when we know they belong off.

And now, what is your net gain in new members? That is the question to which we wish to give a ringing, joyous answer the next time our Southern Convention meets. What conference will show the best rate of net increase? What pastor will show the best net record of gain? And let us all seek to make that net gain in folks whose Christian lives count in the community and church. Any pastor seriously checking his church roll will find himself making pastoral calls that will count for the general betterment of his church.

A REFRESHING AND HEROIC STORY FROM THE PEN OF OUR LATE LAMENTED W. W. STALEY.

[In these days of "relief" from individual effort and initiative the following record of one who lived a victorious life is exceedingly timely and will be appreciated and enjoyed by our family of "Christian Sun" readers. Dr. J. A. Hunter, formerly a professor in Elon College, presented it under the caption, "Selections From a Scrapbook," to the Daily Times News, of Burlington, N. C., May 6th, as follows: J. O. A.]

"The compiler of these articles has made a selection from which may serve a two-fold purpose—giving some facts regarding the life of a man who meant much to Alamance County and possibly lending some encouragement to a young person whose ambitions far exceed the scope and size of the contents of his purse. This article was contributed by Dr. W. W. Staley, president of Elon College, to constitute one of the many auto-biographies listed in a volume entitled 'College Men Without Money.'

"I have been asked to tell why and how I worked my way through college. Because there was no other way to get through college, but to work through, gives the reason why.

"My father, John Tilmon Staley, was a school teacher. He died of typhoid fever at twenty-eight, when I was five. My mother married Archibald M. Cook three years after my father's death, and was the mother of eight children: three Staleys and five Cooks. At the close of the Civil War, emancipation left us nothing but land.

In 1886 my uncle, Lieut. J. N. H. Clendenin, proposed that if I would work with him on his farm he would send me to Dr. W. S. Long's school in Graham the next winter. I worked on the farm that summer and entered school January 17, 1867, and walked three miles to school that term.

At the end of that term, Dr. W. S. Long proposed to furnish me board, clothes and tuition, if I would live with him and provide wood, keep rooms in order, build fires, cultivate the garden, milk cows, feed horses, and cultivate a small crop in summer vacation. I accepted and entered his service in September, 1867. I hauled wood two miles, cut and placed the same in place for fourteen fires, swept school rooms and built fires; attended to horses, cows and garden; went to the country for feed, flour, meat and live beef and butchered it; cultivated vegetables, potatoes and corn in summer; did sundry errands for Dr. Long; and recited lessons when other duties did not prevent, and kept up with my classes.

"In 1869, I taught the Graham Public school and in the spring I entered the store of Col. A. C. McAlister in Company Shops (now Burlington) as clerk. In addition to my store duties, and with the consent of my employer, I attended to the morning express train and sale of tickets at 4 o'clock. My pay as clerk was board, laundry and $10.00 per month; and I received $10.00 per month for attending to the early morning express. At the end of the year Col. McAlister paid me $5.00 per month more than he had promised.

"In the spring of 1871, I spent

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church"

MISS EMILY CARLETON, Editor, 541 Oseeola Ave, Winter Park, Fla.

NEWS FROM INDIA.

Recently many young people throughout the Southeast have received a printed letter from Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Dudley, telling of the work they are doing in India. Mr. Dudley, while on furlough last summer, attended the summer conference in each of our southeaster states. His classes on World Friendship were different from the usual missions course—he did not burden us with statistics and other "dry" material, but succeeded in building up a healthy attitude in the minds of the young people who came to his classes toward the people of other nationalities and races.

Many of you will remember the pictures Mr. Dudley showed us of life in India, and also that money was contributed by some of the young peoples groups with which he might purchase films to use later. In this letter both Mr. and Mrs. Dudley speak of the value of "The King of Kings"—a moving picture—which they have shown many times since returning to India.

About their work Mrs. Dudley says: "There is a large boarding school for boys and girls on the compound; there are the village congregations and schools. Could you have been with us yesterday as we visited three village congregations, all from the lowest strata of Indian society, you would have been overwhelmed as I was afresh with the depth of degradation of ignorance, especially among the women. And yet, when in one congregation I saw the difference in one woman who, as a child, had studied only three years in school, it gave me hope for the future. Partly as the result of financial stringency and lack of steady supervision for the last few years, things have run down hill badly in some of the villages."

Mr. Dudley tells of the financial condition of the school. "Upon arriving it was immediately evident that the Boarding School was not making both ends meet. Under these circumstances, one can reduce expenses or increase income. We are trying to do both. At Christmas each child went out to raise two cents from sixteen persons. They raised $35.00. The staff is trying to raise $90.00 from Indian friends. In the meantime we have decreased the cost of feeding a child to about 80c a month. If this seems extravagant, I hasten to add we are studying the matter with a view to economy. Some of our Indian workers in 50 schools are getting $4.00 to $5.00 a month, paid at the end of the year when grants come. It is not inspiring to contemplate the family circumstances of such people."

Mrs. Dudley makes one request—and all of us can do something about it, if we will. She says: "Will those of you who can and care to, collect used picture post cards, marked 'used picture post cards, of no commercial value'? You have no idea of the joy a pretty card gives a village child. We use them in various ways as incentives for regular attendance at Sunday school, etc. There is no limit to the number we can use."

Here is a project which every society can carry out in the way of foreign missions. Begin now saving—and asking your friends to save for you—any picture post cards you may receive. Dig up old Christmas and Birthday cards, Valentines and Mother's Day greetings. Ask the women's society in your church to save them for you. And when you have some ready, send them to R. A. Dudley, Aruppukottai, South India.

YOUTH AND THE HOMES OF TOMORROW.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR MAY 29, 1938.

SCRIPTURE: I John 4:19;
Deut. 6:6-9.

Daily Readings—

Monday—Laying a Good Foundation—II Tim. 1:5-7.

Tuesday—Learning to Work Today—Luke 10:38-42.

Wednesday—An Ancient Ideal—Prov. 31:1-23.

Thursday—An Example of Noble Motherhood—Prov. 31:24-31.

Friday—Dangers to Avoid—Prov. 30:11-17.

Saturday—Home Influences That Jesus Felt—Luke 2:40-52.

Some young people are giving thought to the home which shall be theirs tomorrow. Others are giving little attention to the importance of the future home life. The attitude with many is, "I am not studying marriage. I have too good a time like I am." The lack of preparation for marriage has, no doubt, caused much unhappiness among the homes of our land. Marriage should not be considered "A leap in the dark." The lack of forethought and consideration make it a leap from which many never recover.

Dr. G. Walter Fiske, of Oberlin, concludes that whereas there is one divorcee for every six or seven marriage licenses issued in the United States there is only one divorcee to every hundred marriages among church-going families. The gospel of Jesus teaches the secret of successful marriage—respect for personality, consideration, forbearance, unselfishness. The homes of tomorrow will be the result of today's friendship, courtship, and marriage. John W. Eliot, a social worker, says that family life must be built on reverence: (1) Reverence for parents, (2) reverence of equals for each other, and (3) reverence for the young.

For Discussion—

1. How can the Church help to bring about reverence in the family?

2. Do the movie and novel patterns of "love at first sight" make a contribution to the permanent marriage? Why?

3. Loyalty has always been essential for happiness in wedlock. (Gen. 1:24.)

4. Habits of self-control go far in guaranteeing the success of a home.

Low principles and cheap ideals should not be tolerated by young people.

Give unto your partner a life as clean as that which you expect to receive.

"Doxology."

"Faith of Our Fathers."

"What a Friend We Have in Jesus."

SERVING THROUGH CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP.

LESSON VIII—MAY 22, 1938.

GOLDEN TEXT: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.—Mark 12:31.

LESSON: Mark 12:13-17, 28-34.

"Ganging Up" On the Master.

"Politics make strange bed-fellows"—thus goes an old saying. And so does opposition to Jesus. Here were the Pharisees and the Herodians, miles apart in their religious views and their attitudes toward the Roman government, coming together to trap Jesus. "And they send unto him certain of the Pharisees and of the Herodians, that they might catch him in talk." The Pharisees were the strict religious party, they demanded complete independence from Rome, and continually opposed taxes or tribute to Rome. The Herodians were a political party, who held their positions through the spoils system, and who naturally favored Roman rule and were willing to pay tribute to Rome. The forces of evil know how to organize against Jesus. It is high time that the forces of righteousness learned how to work together for a common cause. A divided church cannot hope to do much in a world of organized evil. And if people of all kinds can get together in a common cause of evil, certainly all kinds of people who are one in Christ ought to be able to get together in a common cause of righteousness.

A Little Blarney.

"Teacher, we know that thou art true, and carest not for any one; for thou regardest not the person of men, but teachest of a truth the way of God." It was a little blarney. They thought they would appeal to human vanity by giving Jesus some "soft soap." As a matter of fact they spoke the truth far better than they knew and they paid Jesus the highest compliment. Jesus hewed to the line and let the chips fall where they would. He never "drew his punches." He always spoke the truth, regardless of the rank or station of those to whom he spoke. He never toned down his message. He never soft-pedaled his teaching. He never showed any favoritism. He preached the truth in love. Ministers need not be foolhardy, but they do need to be fearless. There is always a temptation for a minister to preach what people want instead of what they need. There is always the temptation to avoid themes that offend people especially if those people hold high positions in church, and give liberally. God needs men and women today who teach and preach the truth.

A Question With Dynamite.

"Is it lawful to give tribute to Caesar, or not? Shall we give or shall we not give?" It was a dangerous question. If Jesus said it was lawful to give tribute he would be denounced as one who was in sympathy with Roman rule and would be branded as an oppressor of his people. If he said it was not lawful he would be branded as a rebel and a revolutionary. These men of diabolical cunning could not possibly have framed a more delicate and dangerous question.

An Answer With Power.

"But he knowing their hypocrisy said unto them. . . bring me a coin . . . whose image and superscription is this? And they said unto him Caesar's." This man Jesus, what a keen and sensitive mind he had. How admirably he handled delicate and difficult questions. Now get the point of his answer. "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's." The Pharisees and Herodians had asked him if they should "give" to Caesar. Jesus answered that they should "render" or "pay." They were living willingly or unwillingly under Roman rule. They enjoyed certain benefits and privileges from that government. They, therefore, should be willing to pay for those privileges and that protection. The citizen of a country is under obligations to his country.

But when a man has discharged all his responsibilities as a citizen of his country he has not discharged all his responsibilities. Jesus adds some significant words to "Render unto Caesar." "And unto God the things that are God's." His image and superscription is on us. Man is a citizen of a heavenly country, too. Man does not primarily give, he pays." A man is living an incomplete life if he does not recognize his relation to and his duty toward a Supreme Being, the one and only living God."

Another Hard Question.

"And one of the scribes came . . . and asked him "What commandment is first of all?" The rabbis counted no less than 613 commandments. Which among all these is the greatest or first in importance? The scribe might well have been puzzled, and quite sincere. And here again Jesus was "on the spot." Was the first commandment about sacrifice, about a Sabbath law, about ceremony or ordinance, about circumcision, about some duty to God or to man? Come to think of it, it is a hard question.

Another Answer With Power.

The answer was immediately forthcoming. Without a moment's hesitation Jesus says "The first commandment is to love God with all one's being, soul, mind, body, heart and strength. God must be put first. But more—He must be loved. This is the first commandment. The love of God is the distinctive mark of his true worshippers. And for us at least that love of God has been made known through His Son Jesus Christ. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God as revealed in Jesus Christ first, and thou shalt love him with every fiber of thy being. He must be enthroned in our hearts and affections and wills and minds. This is the foundation of true religion.

But again Jesus adds another significant word. He gives a second commandment, which he himself says is like unto the first. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Than these two commandments there are none greater. Indeed as Jesus says in another place on these two commandments "hang all the law and the prophets"—they are the basis of every divine commandment and every prophetic utterance. And the two go together. A man cannot truly love God without loving his neighbor. Nor can he truly love his neighbor unless he loves God.

Look at the order in which Jesus put the objects of one's love. Love God first. Love one's neighbor. Love one's self. It is not wrong to love one's self. One ought to love himself. But love of self must not come before love of God, or go beyond love of neighbor. When one truly loves God he will have the same regard for others that he has for himself. This is just another way of stating the Golden Rule.

Not Far From the Kingdom.

The scribe readily saw the central significance of Jesus' answer. He saw quite clearly that Jesus had gone to the heart of the question. To love God with all one's heart and understanding and strength, and to love one's neighbor as one's self was much more important and fundamental than burnt offering and sacrifices. Right relationships with God and man are far more important than correctness of creed and ceremony.

"And Jesus said unto him "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God." Not far. But not in it. He

MONDAY.

IN THE GARDEN.

"Did I not see thee in the garden with him?"—Jno. 18: 26.

I am in the garden with Him this morning. It is the garden that God has given me. I am surrounded by flowers, evergreens, green trees of oranges and lemons loaded with their fruits, all hedged about with bogan-villa, California privet and strawberry guavas. My soul sings the song, "And the voice I hear, Falling on my ear; The Son of God discloses." And the melody which the Lord gives me is: Stay in that further and more beautiful garden with Him. One cannot walk in a garden and contemplate "How come," without bringing his soul in touch with God.

Prayer—Dear Lord, speak to me always and midst times of darkness or gloom enable me to keep my eyes fixed on Thee and to follow Thy voice. Amen.

TUESDAY.

A DAILY SURPRISE.

"The things which God hath prepared."—I Cor. 2: 9-14.

Each day is a gift of something new—new thoughts, new experiences and new opportunities. This new day has been prepared for me. It is God's token of His care and affection. What will I do with it? It may be that I shall not understand all that happens in it. But I know that it is a part of God's great plan and that I must fit myself in that plan.

Prayer—Dear Father, our time is in Thy hands. We thank Thee for today's tokens of Thy love and care. We dedicate our lives to Thee afresh. May we do Thy will. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

GOD AND I.

"Other foundations can no man lay."—I Cor. 10: 15.

"I am only a plain man," said he, "dismayed by life's hundred's of puzzling questions, its disagreements and confusions, what am I to do? I must take the cup of salvation of the Lord and drink. If I would be at peace, I must be always aware of God and make His Word my constant companion, comfort and counsel."

Prayer—O Lord, Thou who change not, midst all the overturnings and confusions of life, Thy will be done. Amen.

THURSDAY.

GOD THE ULTIMATE.

"I have planted, Apollas watered; but God gave the increase."—I Cor. 3: 5.

It may be true that my hands have done much to make this garden. But that has been only my part in God's plan. Much that I do comes to naught. But one of the daily surprises is that the result, as unexpected and disappointing it may be, turns out for the better, and thus I renew my vows to Him who doeth all things well for them that love and serve Him.

Prayer—Dear Father, we know not Thy way, but we know Thee. And we trust Thee. Help us always to do our best. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE SILENT MULTITUDE.

"And Mary kept all these things and pondered them in her heart."—Luke 2: 19.

We are told of an incident in D. L. Moody's life when he was being serenaded at his home one evening, he and Mrs. Moody appeared on the porch and after he had spoken to them they called for a speech from Mrs. Moody. She merely replied, "He speaks for me."

We have heard very little about Mary the mother of Jesus, but how great! We have heard little about Mrs. Moody, but what a soul stay, we are told, she was to him. In this she represents the great multitude of saints in the world who seldom speak but whose lives are an inspiration to all who know them. Blessed is he whose ministry in the pulpit speaks the heart-throbs of the thousands who think thereon.

Prayer—O God, the most of our work is done through the lives of others. May the silent hosts of Thy children speak effectually always for Thy kingdom. Amen.

SATURDAY.

LIFE'S FINGERBOARD.

"Ye shall be witnesses unto me."—Acts 1: 8.

"Life is a panorama of folks passing by. No matter how lowly one may be, what he does and says points somewhere, and that token summons others to somewhere and to do something. Our task is to know that, and to see to it that our pointings are toward those values of goodness and godliness that turn the minds of others toward God.

Prayer—Our Father, we would be Thy witness, and witnesses of our Lord Jesus Christ. So dominate our lives that all we do and say may be that. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"DOMINUS, DOMINATE."

"Whatsoever he saith unto thee, do it."—John 2: 5.

In other words Mary put every soul of that party under the influence and in submission and obedience to Him. The familiar word "Dominate" comes from the latin word "Dominus," meaning "Master," "Lordship," "Lord of all." "O Lord, be Lord. Master mine, Master me." So prayed an earnest Christian. "Do let the Lord be Lord." So the great preacher, F. B. Meyers enjoined his people constantly.

A God-ruled life—the greatest compliment.

Prayer—Our Father, without Thy ruling in our lives, we make a mess of everything. Help us to put ourselves and our work always in Thy hands. Be Thou our Sovereign. In every act and thought, make us wholly Thine. Amen.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D., Pastor.

A DOOR IS OPENED.

By REV. VICTOR B. CHICOINE.

"A great door is opened unto me and there are many adversaries."—I Cor. 16:19.

This was no idle statement by Paul, but a literal fact. This letter to the Corinthians was written from Ephesus which had been the home of the great painter, Apellas. The great Temple of Diana which was there was named as one of the Seven Wonders of the ancient world. It had been 220 years in building and was a mass of shining marble. It was said to contain the image of the goddess which had come directly from the skies. In it also was a great treasure house where the nobles and nations stored their precious things. There was the great theatre, the largest in the Hellenic world, capable of containing 50,000 persons. And finally, there was the Stadium, or Race-course, where the gladiators fought and also men with beasts. It was a great city with many interests and here Paul felt he must stay because a great door of opportunity was open to him and to the Church.

The Church from her earliest beginnings has had her great moments of opportunity and on occasions has made great use of them. It happened when the world, sick of paganism, cried out: "Come and give us hope. We need a new inner light. There is no strength in the old gods. Come and help us!" And the Church went into that open door and began to dot the earth with chapels and churches with open doors. Then again the world cried out: "Come and heal us. Our bodies are full of sores. Our bones are broken. There is no health in us!" And the Church entered into that door and built hospitals around the world and sent out doctors and nurses to heal and to serve. And again the world cried out: "Come and help us for we are ignorant. We blunder daily. Oh, Church of God, give us knowledge lest we go down into the pit of death!" And again the Church entered into that wide open door and everywhere built schools and places of learning.

But new woes have come upon the world. Or, perhaps, one had better say that they are not new ones—but that they are old ones long ignored. Only now they have become so grievous, so sore, so open and running that they can no longer be overlooked.

I am not thinking of the Church as entering these open doors as a political organization either covertly or openly. I believe that would be a tragic mistake. But for the Church not to take her stand on the great moral issues and fail to enter into conflict with war, gambling, liquor, nationalism and all such, besides preaching the love of God as seen in Christ Jesus, would be utter and blind folly of the worst kind!

Of course, the Church can attempt to save herself from dust and confusion and build a great esoteric membership; erect greater buildings; hoard her wealth and let the world go by. Some have advised this and have tried that method. They have said: "Stay out of the troubles of the world. Do not enter into that province." They have said: "Let the Church have the open door. And let men and women come into the Church if they choose to do so that they may be made strong—but the Church must keep out of the world." And the result of all that is seen today in Russia and in Germany.

A church that merely looks at life, no matter with how much sympathy, or how great a philosophy, or how great a righteous indignation—but only looks—is a dying church! Nothing can save the Church that merely looks on. It is the entering Church that will continue as the living, creative, saving Church. The Church has been at her best, done her greatest work, called into her fellowship the boldest spirits when she has had the missionary mind of Christ upon her. Charles Silvester Horne once said: "Churches will survive the mistakes they make in trying to help their fellows; what they will not survive is the attitude of detachment when the destinies of people are in the balance."

Our Lord was accused by His enemies of entering into many places. The evidence is that He did enter into places where they who condemned Him did not and would not enter. But the centuries have sloughed off the false evidence and that early condemnation has all been changed. For we love Him today for the very things for which He was condemned! But that verdict of guilt by His own generation because He went into the highways and byways to save the souls of men, I believe, was one of the most crushing of all the burdens placed upon Jesus.

And the adversaries of which Paul speaks—where are they to be found? They are both within our ranks and without—and the greatest of our adversaries are within our ranks! Sin is out there in the world. Evil is rampant. Men and women are being crushed and slain. Youth is being used and then tossed aside like a sucked out orange skin. But sin, out in the world, can be faced and dealt with. Our greater danger is from within from an adversary called indifference! And how it is possible for anyone anywhere, and especially Christians, to be indifferent toward the ills and sins of the world as so many are today is difficult to understand. Can it be that the deeper emotions are dried up? Is it that they have lost faith in mankind? Is it possible that selfishness has so throttled them that they have no more interest in their fellowman? Is it that they think of the present struggle of humanity as only a glorified jungle existence—and if men and women go down, it is no more than what happened when the weaker animals perished ages ago?

But whatever the trouble is the Church can do nothing, absolutely nothing, unless the men and women who comprise her membership will let the spirit of God be manifest in them. Her greatness and effectiveness will not necessarily be increased through larger memberships; or more complete organization; or greater endowments; or polishing of ritual. But effectiveness will be increased through hosts of consecrated men and women in pew and pulpit making themselves felt in the daily life. Indifference must die!

And there is the adversary within our own ranks who will attempt to silence any prophetic utterance of the Church that interferes with any well paying business even if that business is a parasite of the worst kind. But the Church dare not preach, offer, give to the world anything less than what the world needs. I mean a religion toned down; a religion that overlooks the sins of one group and strikes hard at the sins of another group, will not be sufficient. I mean that we must be the kind of a Church that deals with an even hand toward those within the Church and those without. Of course the world at large will care no more for this than they did for the religion of the prophets, Amos, Hosea, Isaiah; or the religion, or way of life of our Lord—but the Church if it is to bear God's name without further shame can preach no less!

And there is also the adversary

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The Elon consolidated public school closed last week. It has been the custom for a number of years to give all the children in high school grades what we call a "high school picnic." The Christian Orphanage had twenty-five in the group. The school closed on Tuesday evening and on Thursday morning all the high school students started for Kimesville Lake, about fifteen miles away. The day was clear and cool and an ideal day for a picnic. The shore along the lake was dry and sandy. The man who owns the lake had about a dozen boats for rent. The children had a great time boat-riding and some of the boys went in swimming; but the weather was too cool for the girls and they were not brave enough to venture. The Superintendent of the orphanage went along as we had so many children in the group. The children had a very happy day and it was the decision of many of them that it was the best high school picnic we have had in a long time. It was one of the nicest behaved groups we have ever been with on a picnic. Nothing was said or done to mar the happiness of the occasion. We had no accident.

At the noon hour the lunch was spread on the long table in the grove and after thanks were returned for the bountiful spread everybody proceeded to satisfy their hunger. It is fine for young people to get together and have the association of one with another. It brings the community closer together and in a sweeter fellowship. We hope to have the pleasure of attending many more annual high school picnics.

"Our Lord's preaching, correct in every sense, furnishes an outstanding example of appropriateness. He repeated the truth first preached by John that the kingdom was "at hand," because that was still the fact. Since Pentecost the kingdom has been in existence. With this fact our preaching must agree."

Marriages

SMITH - APPLE.

On Saturday, April 16, 1938, Miss Blanche Smith and Lester Apple were united in marriage in the First Christian Church of Reidsville, N. C. The vows were heard by Rev. J. L. Neese, pastor of the church, and former pastor of the bride. The couple were attended by Miss Esther Smith, sister of the bride, and Leslie Brown. The service was very simple and was witnessed by a few intimate friends.

The bride is the youngest daughter of Mrs. Adolphus Smith of McLeansville, N. C., and the late Mr. Smith. The groom is the only son of Mrs. Jesse Apple and the late Mr. Apple of Elon College, N. C. The happy couple are at home at Elon College, Route No. 1, where the groom is interested in farming. May God's richest blessings abide with the couple always.

In Memoriam

ROWLAND.

Whereas, Dr. C. H. Rowland was called to his higher and heavenly reward early on the morning of May 2nd, we, as his co-laborers and brethren in service, desire to record the following:

First—That in the passing of Dr. Rowland our Piedmont Ministerial Association has lost an invaluable member and one who was very loyal and faithful to the Association during the years in which he was able to attend.

Secondly—That we, his ministerial brethren, have each lost a real friend, a very congenial associate and a brother in service.

Third—That we share with his family and other loved ones our regret at his going, and our gratitude for his great faith, his victorious life, and triumphant death.

THE PIEDMONT MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION.

EDWARDS.

Miss Victoria Edwards, known to "The Christian Sun" family as "Victoria of the Hills," has been called to a richer reward than this world had to offer. She was born on August 19, 1903, and her body tenderly committed back to earth at the family cemetery near her home in Carroll County, Va., in sight of her church, Elk Spur, on Friday, April 22, 1938.

A service of appreciation for such a faithful, prayerful, consecrated life, such as she lived, was conducted in her church, while her slender body rested in front of the altar. Her pastor had charge of the service and was ably assisted by Rev. O. A. Elmore, of Elon College, N. C., a former pastor; Rev. C. D. Crouch, of the Moravin Church; and Rev. W. G. Hughes, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Hillsville, Va. Many friends were present to express a tribute of love to one who truly deserved it. Her body may sleep the long sleep of death, but the spirit of Victoria is still alive, and God grant that it may be the inspiration under the guidance of the greater Spirit, to stir many spirits into real activity for the Christ she so devotedly loved that not even the vilest could afford to doubt the future of her departed spirit. Most truly the psalmist was right: "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his Saints."—(Ps. 116: 15.)

four months more in the Graham school, and entered the sophomore class in Trinity College (N. C.), in September, 1871. I graduated from Trinity in June, 1874, in a class of thirteen.

"The first half year in Trinity I boarded myself by renting a room from a minister whose wife prepared meals for me and another young man who is now a distinguished judge.

"Two years and a half I boarded on credit with W. S. Bradshaw and his good wife.

"After I finished I paid for my board with interest, paid my tuition in full (though the college did not charge ministerial students), and made a donation of $10.00 to the college. In addition to this I secured a $100.00 subscription from each of the twelve members of our class to be paid in four equal annual installments after graduation.

"After leaving college I taught with Rev. D. A. Long and Judge B. F. Long in Graham, and preached as assistant pastor of New Providence church till 1877, when I entered the University of Virginia.

"About the easiest task of my life was to work through college; and if I may make one remark, it would be that the danger of schools is to make education too easy. The armor used by Roman soldiers in camp exercises was twice the weight of that which they used in battle. This made battle easy as compared with drill. It seems to me that college life ought to develop human powers by double strain so as to prepare for life's big task. Hot-house methods cannot make men of greatest endurance and usefulness."

within our ranks who thinks of the Church as a select group; and that Churches are in different grades. For them there are the Churches that minister especially to the down-and-outers; Churches that minister to the comfortable middle classes; and Churches that minister to only the cultured and wealthy groups and between each Church is a great gulf! But it does not take much imagination to picture the scorn that Jesus would have for that kind of an adversary, or that kind of a Church!

If only the present membership of the Church of Christ would today enter that great door of which Paul speaks—enter with higher commitments; holy ideals; would begin today to filter into every cranny and crevice of life with the Master's spirit. His attitude toward life, what a transformation would soon take place. And that is in the reach and power of the Church to do! We are not far from the Kingdom of God! But the distance to be traversed in spirit for some of us is such a long way off! And yet with the spirit right—we are so near to the Kingdom! and that distance can be traversed—must be traversed—because a great door is open before us!

admired. He gave mental assent. He was convinced. But he had not committed himself. Alas! how many there are who are so close to the Kingdom, and yet so far. If only we could yield ourselves, commit ourselves. If only we would obey instead of merely admiring Jesus.

A religion that never expresses itself in action is like a man of seemingly normal physique who is dumb or paralyzed. Expression is the ultimate test of reality.

SAYINGS: WISE AND OTHERWISE

A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver.—Solomon.

Impossible is a word to be found only in the dictionary of fools.—Napoleon.

Are we all making liquor? Yes, we are in the business now.—P. E. Lindley, in this Paper.

If the Church does not work today there will be little chance to work tomorrow.—Editor.

All that many a man realizes on his investments is what a fool he has been.—Exchange.

Nothing is so nerve-wracking as talking pleasantly to a man who is leading up to a request for a loan.—Exchange.

What an absurd thing it is to pass over all the valuable parts of a man, and fix our attention on his affirmatives.—Addison.

Great men are very apt to have great faults; and the faults appear the greater by their contrast with their excellencies.—C. Simmons.

It is better to hear the rebuke of the wise, than for a man to hear the song of fools. For as the crackling of thorns under a pot, so is the laughter of the fool.—Ecclesiastes 7: 6.

Said the Farmer to the Druggist:
'Now be sure an' write plain on them bottles which is for the Jersey cow and which is for my wife. I don't want nothing to happen to that Jersey cow.—Exchange.

I have not so great a struggle with my vices, great and numerous as they are, as I have with my impatience. My efforts are not absolutely useless; yet I have never been able to conquer this ferocious wild beast.—Calvin.

At the Sunday dinner the father criticized the sermon, the mother the organist, and the daughter the choir, but the little son brought the subject to a close when he said, "Dad, I think it was mighty good for a nickle.—Biblical Recorder.

To discover the moral quality of the universe, man must be vividly aware not only of those things which have time-space relations, but also of those values which transcend such relations. That discovery is possibly only through the cooperative endeavor of those who strive to utilize all potential capabilities of mankind. Toward this goal, science and religion are advancing hand in hand.—Kirtley F. Mather in "Science in Search of God."

The person who is still able to think and to choose must never say that he is what he is, or that his life is what it is, because of something that happened in the past, or because of the environment in which he finds himself. He is what he is, and his life is what it is, because of the reactions he permits himself to cultivate toward past and present, and because of his attitude toward himself as a developing person.—Winfred Rhoades in "Advance."

What about Dr. B? Is the Board going to be able to send him out to us? Our need of doctors in the North China Mission is more acute than it has ever been before and, as I intimate above, our Chinese doctors ought to be replaced by foreign, as the Chinese aren't going to be able to carry on as they did before. Certainly they can't take the responsibility; that can be carried only by a foreigner under the present circumstances.—One of our missionaries in China.

As the great-grandson of a Methodist preacher, the grandson of a Methodist steward, and now president of the Southern Baptist Convention, I wish to challenge Southern Methodist to go afield at the same time with Southern Baptists in a soul-winning campaign in 1939. If these two great groups of evangelical Christians will catch the spirit of Wesley and Whitfield, of Bunyan and Spurgeon, and preach the gospel in church and hall, in schoolhouses and brush arbors, in city streets and the open fields, God will give us a revival which will bring salvation to multiplied thousands and moral uplift which will banish to the moles and the bats the idols which are now entrenched in the Social Order.—Dr. John R. Sampey.

RURAL WELFARE.

One committee of our Southern Convention, which is conspicuous for its absence, is a Committee on Rural Welfare. It is high time that the rural church be included in our Convention requirements. There has been a tendency to send the indifferent or poorly trained preacher to a country church, and this was justified on the ground that the man would never shine in a city. That day has passed. It was not wise ecclesiastical statesmanship which sent so many untrained and half-educated ministers into country churches and into smaller churches in the cities. We have paid a tragic price for that sort of administration. These churches now know the difference between good preaching and bad. They have lost their young people. Men and women on the farms are no longer content to listen to men who fail to stimulate interest and command intellectual respect. A turn of the dial on the radio at home will bring them in touch with some of the leading preachers in America.

There are many things which a minister may do in his public life; there is one thing which he must do. He must preach! No charm of personality, no administrative skill, no enthusiasm for community service can compensate for failure in the pulpit. There is a place for the social worker, or for the labor counsellor, who approaches his task in the spirit of Jesus. But when men leave the seminary to enter the Church as preachers, then the Church has a right to demand that they know how to preach. The day has passed in the country when we may tolerate the old time-worn complaint of the irritated layman, "He is a good man, but he can't preach." For such a man there is no room in the rural church. The good man who can't preach is seriously handicapped in a day when the mastery of the spoken word counts for so much. And it does count in the rural church.

R. D. COULTER.

A LAYMAN WRITES OF NEW PROGRAM.

I read in May 5th issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN what Dr. Smith said about the five-point program for the church which was adopted by the Portsmouth Convention. These are all points of vital interest to the Church, and I sincerely hope that they will not suffer the same fate that many other forward programs have suffered.

Much has been said in recent years about the grouping of our small churches into convenient groups and locating a pastor in the field. If this were done, many laymen believe, it would be an important factor in the solution of our rural church problems.

Of course, some of the groups would need some assistance from conference to support a pastor, but no doubt one could see more accomplished with the money used in the groups than the way it is being used now.

I have talked with a number of laymen about our rural church problems and all of them are of the opinion that the presence of the minister in the church community can do much in revitalizing the church.

Laymen and laywomen look upon the minister as their leader, and if the ministers is there to lead, we believe the church will go forward. We country people believe that until our churches are grouped and a minister is located in the field, the minister should spend a few days each month in the community doing pastoral work. His services are most needed among those people who are not regular attendants at church. We believe he should carry the gospel into the homes of those who do not belong to any church and do not attend any church.

Certainly we should all cooperate with our leader in this work. Then we shall soon be witnesses to the fact that the Spirit giveth life.

W. H. FREEMAN.

SOCIAL RELATIONS REPORT.

During the past biennium of the Convention, the Committee on Social Relations has sought to carry out its work in the following fields:

(A) Peace plebiscite. In cooperation with the national office of the Council for Social Action, the Committee urged the peace poll among the churches of the Southern Convention. The result of this poll has been most useful in stimulating further study, conference, and education among the churches;

(B) Duke Institute of International Relations. The committee is glad to report that ministers and laymen of our churches have attended the Duke Institute of International Relations during the last two sessions;

(C) Race relations. The biennium has seen a marked interest in promoting better race relations among the churches of this Convention. The women's missionary societies of North Carolina and Virginia each held a state-wide meeting in 1937, devoted to a study of the way in which local church societies might develop more interest and action in the field of Christian race relations. Your chairman gave addresses at both of these gatherings. He also conducted a seminar on race relations in connection with the nation-wide conference on the religious education of adults, held at Lake Geneva, Wis., in the summer of 1936. Likewise, he helped to secure the adoption of an anti-lynching resolution by the North Carolina Council of Churches last January. The committee is cooperating with the State Commissions in both North Carolina and Virginia.

(D) The Junior R. O. T. C. During the past year your committee, through its chairman, has been seeking to get the churches and schools of North Carolina awake to the effort that is being made by the Federal Government to introduce junior units of the R. O. T. C. into the high schools of the state. As a result, both the North Carolina Council of Churches and the North Carolina Education Association took recent action protesting this effort to militarize the youth of the high schools. One unit had already been established at Wilmington when the matter was brought to the attention of the Council of Churches. Both public school and church agencies will keep vigilance to prevent the organization of any others in North Carolina.

(E) Rural life. During the past year, the mission study book of the Home Missions Council was devoted to a study of rural life. The social textbook, Rural America, was widely used in the churches of the Convention.

LEAKESVILLE MEMORIAL AND HOME COMING SERVICE.

The Leakesville Congregational-Christian Church in the Virginia Valley Conference will hold its ninth annual Memorial and Home Coming Service on the first Sunday in June. This service was instituted by our beloved Rev. A. W. Andes, in 1930, and has continued to grow in favor with the people and in influence for the church, and has been a great aid in the upkeep of the cemetery which adjoins the church yard. The occasion is an all day service, beginning with Sunday school at 10 o'clock and Memorial sermon at 11:00, with special selections by the choir and male and mixed quartets. The afternoon service is composed of short talks by visitors, congregational singing, quartets, and choir selections. Also a history of the church will be given. All friends, and especially former pastors, are cordially invited.

R. O. ROTHGEB,
Church Secretary.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

CAN THE CHURCH WIN IN OUR DAY?

The world in which we live was not made for the Church of Jesus Christ. The Church does not fit into the scheme of thought of the politicians, big business, or labor leaders. Even the social life of this world has little place for a Christian Church.

Of course, there are individuals in every phase of the world's life who are devoutly Christian. But those who are planning for the war that is upon us and those who are preparing for the one that is about to be upon us are hardly to be classed as sincere followers of Him who said that all the Law and the Prophets center around love. And war in the realm of business can be almost as diabolical and deadly as war that is carried on with guns and hand-grenades. If one is to believe magazines, newspapers and Madam Gossip, the social life of the world is filled with fancy drinking, little dress, and plenty of free-love. The ideals of Jesus have difficulty in finding a place in our modern world.

But there is hope for the Church. It has seen darker days, and still lives. The prospects were not so good when twelve men gathered about Jesus in the hills of southern Syria and heard Him talk about beginning the Church. But Jesus was so certain about the success that He said even the gates of Hell would crumble before the power of the Church. After one of the twelve had committed suicide and the others had run away, things looked pretty dark, but Jesus called the eleven together and sent them out to win the world. He said they could do it, and they pretty nearly succeeded—probably would if they had not been murdered so quickly. Through the centuries there have been dark periods, and faint hearts have given up in despair. But the Church has gone on, for always there has arisen a Martin Luther, a John Wesley, or some one who really was in earnest about making the Church succeed.

In many communities over the earth today there are those who have not bowed the knee to the gods of Profit, Pleasure, War, or Wickedness. They are the salt of the earth. Their influence will save. The Church will live. It may be a very different Church from what it is now. There are possibilities of improvement. It may be weaker. But it will live. Many faint hearted may give up and quit. Deserters will be found all along the road. But the Church will move on towards ultimate victory.

Why so certain? Because Jesus Christ is still present in the affairs of this world. God has not deserted His people. The people may forget Him, but He never forgets them. God is not merely the Creator of the earth; He is the Director. His spiritual grace will find some choice souls who can be depended upon to go the right way, even if it costs life. God is not a Dictator. He allows people to make their own choices. They may cut each others throats if they like. Nation may rise up against nation and destroy even civilization as we know it. God will let them. But in the long after-while somebody will again declare the Truth of God from some mountain top and the world will come back to worship. Always in the shadows is the mighty hand of the living God, and out of the shadows moves man towards the light of God's truth.

There may be considerable doubt about the Church of today winning the world. There are movements towards union and increased strength. There are strong voices ringing across the world bidding men follow the Christ. But there are many strident tones that distract attention. High powered salesmen for every ism known to man peddle their wares at every fireside. Selfishness, bedecked in garments of beauty, struts across the stage and bids the world follow. About half of the church members of America have followed, or at least they are supposed to have, for they are not seen at church where the sons of God meet together for counsel and worship. No, the Church may not win the world of today. But the Church will go on, and when the storm is over, the most fragrant flower to raise its face towards heaven and shine with radiant beauty will be the Church. Political states may be gone, pretty theories of economics may be in ruins, and the play places may be scattered to the four winds, but the Church will arise out of the debris more lovely than before, for only the real will arise.

A MESSAGE TO SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

For ten years this writer has shared in the work of the Board of Christian Education, which Board undertakes to aid the local Sunday schools and the Sunday school conventions. For a while we had a Secretary who visited the schools and helped with planning them. In later years there was no money available to render this service. An office secretary was all that could be afforded, and only part of my time could be given to the work. It has been a real joy to render the little service and to meet with many of you. It has grieved me that more could not be accomplished.

At the recent Southern Convention it was voted that someone should go in the field who would render service in the local churches and schools. This is the kind of service needed, and desired. It promises to be the needed stimulus for teachers, superintendents and pastors. It will make possible greater leadership for young people. Under the new arrangement the work sponsored by the Board of Christian Education will have a much better chance to be promoted.

But the sad side of the story still is that there appears to be not enough money with which to do the needed work. The Sunday school can help to change this by sending to the Sunday school conventions the amount of dues requested, or a little more if you are able to do so. The amount is not large in any case, but if all schools will just be careful to send in the total amount this will make it much more certain that the man can go into the field to work. Will you please check on this matter and see that your school sends in its dues? Thank you very much. It is in this way that the forward step can be taken, and in this way you will express your approval of the action of the Southern Convention.

WHY DELEGATES?

Recently delegates have been elected to represent our churches at the General Council meeting at Beloit, Wis., on June 15-23, and soon delegates will be elected in the Sunday schools to attend the Sunday school conventions. Why all this talk and bother?

There is work to be done by larger groups that cannot be done by lesser ones. The denomination has educational and missionary work around the world that could not be carried on by any one church. The message of the denomination becomes vocal when her representatives come together to discuss Christianity as it is related to modern life. This kind of work cannot go on without the assembling of leaders.

This is the process of democracy. A Bishop or Pope might call together those to whom he wished to give a commission. There would need to be no delegates for this. But in our Church the delegates represent their people in a people's meeting. No one will give orders at Beloit. No one will say the last word on any matter. Many will discuss, and the multitudes will think and vote. The Council is a meeting of all the churches of the denomination to consider our common heritage and our united task. Every member of every church is supposed to be represented there. On the stage will be our men and women who preach, teach, and practice in the far places of the earth. They will be home to tell us of what goes on out there. Your delegate should hear them, counsel with them, and return to tell you how the rest of the family is doing around the earth.

If a delegate is absent the chain is broken. The messengers may speak, but there is no ear to hear and heart to interpret to those who elected the delegate who is absent. Unless every area of the Church is represented, the message at Beloit will be weakened and the churches back home will lose the much needed impetus of the Council.

All this is true of the Sunday school conventions. If you are a delegate, be sure to make an honest effort to represent those who elected you.

STUDYING OURSELVES.

On the last page of last week's paper were some very interesting facts and figures concerning our Southern Convention churches. They are worthy of some serious thought. A very hurried study will show such things as these:

One-half of our churches and pastorates pay their pastor less than a thousand dollars for a year's service. Not a big salary for the man of God. How can he give to the Church in money or service enough to inspire others to contribute largely?

Two-thirds of the churches are in the open country. Only nineteen are in cities of more than 25,000 people. We are a rural church in the Carolinas and Virginia. Our city churches may get lonesome, but if the country churches do their share the Church is safe.

One-half of the churches have fewer than 100 members. This making it impossible for the group to carry on their work and give largely to missionary and benevolent causes. Only 33 churches have more than 250 members. We need more churches of this size, and must have them if we are to do our share of the world's work.

One-fourth of our churches received no new members during a full year. Another half received ten or fewer. Only nine went above 25 in increase. We are not working very hard at the main business of the Church, the winning of the world to the Christ and His Church.

Two-thirds of the churches gave less than $100.00 per unit to benevolences and missions. At this rate our churches will not win the non-Christian world.

Only 32 churches have full-time resident pastor. Figures could likely be produced to show that these are the churches that had the largest increase in membership and gave the most to benevolences and missions.

This study, and similar ones, should not make us discouraged but should rather send us out with new enthusiasm to make our churches the kind that we want them to be.

PRAY FOR OUR MISSIONARIES.

Well trained men and women have been commissioned by our Church and sent as messengers of the Christ to needy places of the earth. Today many of them are in difficulties greater than we can imagine. They represent the Prince of Peace in a world at war. They preach honestly and sacrifice while nations practice selfishness and greed.

In China they are probably having the worst time, unless it is in Japan. An undeclared war is not only destroying property, closing schools, churches, and hospitals, but it is killing our people (not the missionaries) and breaking down the young faith that gave promise of fruitage. The armies have gone past many of our mission stations. The missionaries are bravely carrying on to the best of their ability. Often they are perplexed. They know not what to do. They are overworked. Death and destruction stare them in the face on every side. They need our prayers.

Pray for our missionaries. They are our companions in the work of the Lord. They are facing our difficulties for us. They give everything and pray often. Perhaps we can give more, and certainly we can bear them up to a throne of grace. They need our prayers, and they want our prayers. Pray for the missionaries. And if there is anything else you can do, follow the leading of the Great Spirit to whom you pray. But pray for our missionaries.

METHODISTS MOVE FORWARD.

With only a remarkably few dissenting votes the Southern Methodists voted recently to join with the Methodist Protestant and northern Methodist Church to form one great Methodist Church with some eight million members. Many of us believe that this is a great step towards making real the prayer of Him who prayed that His followers should all be one, be as united as Jesus and God the Father were united.

There are many problems yet to be solved by our Methodist friends. But they can and doubtless will find a way. God bless them as they try.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

For the first time in ten weeks, I am writing a "Letter" "with my own hand." We are spending two weeks at Whaleyville, Va., as guests of Mr. and Mrs. T. O. Knight (my wife's brother-in-law and sister). If my strength will permit, we will probably go to Florida Sanitarium, Orlando, Fla., about June 1st, for one or two months. The final diagnosis of my case is "Coronary Occlusion." The best treatment known to medical science is rest. For this reason the doctors have not allowed me to have visitors, and these orders must be enforced for several weeks, if I hope for continued improvement. Under most favorable conditions, there is a possibility that I may take up my work again after the summer is past, but the doctors warn me that I must not expect to be able to do as much work as I have been doing for the past year or two. If God has work for me to do, He will give health and strength if I will give Him time and cooperation. I expect to get well and return to my church work. CHRISTIAN SUN readers will pardon me for using so much space recently concerning myself, and my only reason for doing this is the insistent requests of many friends that they have some direct information from me in this way.

Dr. N. G. Newman is preaching for me during my illness, and the churches appreciate his faithful service. He consented to do this for me, at a sacrifice, and I have rejoiced that he is available at this time.

I have been deeply interested in reading the reports adopted by the recent session of the Southern Convention, and the comments appearing in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. In some respects it was a revolutionary Convention. Amendments were made to the organization as found in the book "Principles and Government." The combining of two Boards is one case. The law of the Convention provides a method of making amendments. This was ignored and disregarded. It is evident that the delegates decided to express their will and wish regardless of convention laws and established order. It remains to be seen whether the actions of this Convention are for a "Unified" and "Simplified" program. The Convention is fast taking over the functions of the Annual Conferences, and the various Boards and Departments are apparently becoming dictators of the policy of the Convention.

PROPOSED CHANGE IN CONVENTION REPRESENTATION.

The Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches is constituted by the five different conferences in the Carolinas and Virginia. It meets in biennial session for worship, reports, inspiration, and plans for the future.

The present basis of membership in the Convention, aside from Convention and conference officials and presidents of church institutions, is the local conference assuring every conference representation. The proposed change shifts the basis of membership in the Convention from the conferences to the local churches and is practically the same as the present basis of membership in the local conference; that is, in addition to Convention, conference, and institution officials within the Convention, each church is to be represented by at least one delegate. Under the present basis delegates to the Convention are nominated and elected by the several conferences at their annual meetings. Under the proposed plan the delegates would be elected by the local church.

The proposed change may have some objectionable features, but in the opinion of many its advantages would far outweigh any disadvantage.

In the final analysis the Convention and the whole of the church rests on the local church. If the local church elects its own delegate, it will at least face the fact that we have a Convention and that the local church is to have some part in that Convention. This plan would give the right to have a voice and a part in the plans of the whole church and would acquaint the local churches with the actions of the Convention. Our trouble has not been the lack of vision and plans. We have passed some fine resolutions. Our weakness has been the failure to get these resolutions effectively back to the local church. It should be the goal of the Convention to have every church represented in its biennial sessions and to have reports of the more important actions of the Convention presented by the pastor and by the delegate in every local church on the first Sunday of public worship in the local church after the Convention. We can't expect our churches to act intelligently upon the recommendations of the Convention without knowing what these recommendations are. It is difficult to get people to read, but you can get them to listen.

Personally I believe in large gatherings and assembling our people in large numbers. If when we met in Portsmouth in recent session we had had 500 delegates as the papers reported instead of less than 100 as the records will show, we would have made an impression upon the city of Portsmouth that would have lingered for some time and would have meant something to the cause that is ours. For instance, if representation in the Southern Baptist Convention recently closed in Richmond had been restricted to the capacity of homes in the city of Richmond that would take delegates, the country would have known little about the Convention and the impression upon that city would have been negligible. It will cost money to have a large delegation at the biennial sessions of the Convention, but it will also mean inspiration, influence, and a new day in our church. People who have not been attending have ideas—ideas that would be of value to the cause. Let's bring them together and exchange these ideas and see if we can't do something worthwhile with and for this church of ours.

The proposed changes in the membership of the Convention are to be presented by the local conferences for their approval or disapproval. I am sure that the president of the Convention will see that this resolution is put in shape and presented to the annual conferences when they meet.

THE PRAYER OF FAITH.

A Countryman says:

The following prayer by Hannah Kobaus, in Wee Wisdom, the magazine for boys and girls, is the prayer for the wee folks who read the magazine. They say it when they need more health, help, and understanding. We of the open spaces sincerely wish that the children with whom we work, and all children, and all adults as well, might realize the truth, power, and reality in every line, and so attune our heartstrings with the chords of heaven that we might make it really our prayer:

God is my help in every need;
God does my every hunger feed;
God walks beside me, guides my way
Through every moment of the day.
I now am wise, I now am true,
Patient, kind, and loving, too.
All things I am, and do, and be,
Through Christ, the Truth that is in me.
God is my health, I can't be sick;
God is my strength, unfailing, quick;
God is my all; I know no fear,
Since God and Love and Truth are here.

ARE WE ALL MAKING LIQUOR.

By P. E. LINDLEY.

Our Federal Government is sponsoring a vast rum-making business in the Virgin Islands. It comes under the P. W. A. program. Back in the days of prohibition the people of the island found going pretty hard, since markets were legally closed to their wares. But as soon as the dry law was laid safely away in the tomb, our Uncle Samuel proceeded to rehabilitate the liquor industry in the islands, which had by this time grown poor raising bread, chickens, and ordinary sugar. And in order to do the job up right we put the United States Treasury behind it and supplied the needed capital. Now the business is thriving again and all of us who claim to be American citizens, I suppose, may take part of the credit for the expansion of the trade. Are we all making liquor?

When I first read of the great rum project financed by our public money, I was almost bewildered. I could hardly believe it. Of course, I knew that our government permitted the manufacture and sale of hard beverages, but it was more than I could take in to hear that the government itself was actually making the rum. So long as the authorities merely allowed it, I could count myself out. But when our own Federal Government takes the money from taxes from all the people and turns it into rum for the market, that takes me in, too; and I never wanted to be called a liquor-maker. Now there seems to be no choice left. I am a part of the country and my country makes liquor. I may vote for and speak for the dry cause all I please, yet I know my government, to which I try to be loyal, is making the very product I am preaching against.

Yes, we are in the business now. Before attempting to discuss this strange question I wrote our Washington office of the Division of Territories and Island Possessions for information. Material was sent me immediately. I have before me the official report by Mr. Brown who is in charge of the Virgin Islands Company. According to this report we have already actually sold over 121,000 gallons of rum, and we have 430,000 gallons more placed in charred oak barrels to be aged. The business is doing well.

Several problems grow out of this complicated situation. For one thing, some will say that we little fellows are not paying Federal taxes and therefore need not let our consciences be disturbed. But, as every economist knows, the average run of humanity always pays the taxes. We may not be the ones who write the checks, but we are the ones who pay them. You buy a Ford car, for example; you may think nothing about paying a tax. But Mr. Ford, who does pay an income tax, adds it to the cost of all of his cars and we pay it for him. A good business man—and Ford is one—will pass the tax on to the consumer. It becomes a part of the cost of production; then the purchaser, you see, really pays that tax. So the big man may write the check and get the receipt, but we pay the tax. And it is this tax with which Washington is making the rum in the Virgin Islands.

For another thing, it puts a strain on one's patriotism. A person hardly knows whether he is innocent or guilty. He hardly knows whether to rail at the government and save his conscience or praise the "powers that be" and put his conscience to sleep.

Still again, it weakens the argument for temperance. If the government itself makes rum, why should not any one else do so? Where is the logic for condemning a thing that the central authority itself actually does? The puny voice of a local pleader is faint indeed against the all-powerful spokesmen who represent the entire nation. Let a local person speak against the evils of rum-making and he has his own government on the opposite side. His argument is neutralized, for as I said, the money he gets for preaching the sermon goes on its way to support the state, in part, and helps make more rum.

To be sure, the Virgin Islands project claims to be a rehabilitation scheme. No doubt many native families have been benefitted from the new employment. I can appreciate that side of the affair, and I think real human good has come from the enterprise. At the same time, we are making rum with public money, and that is what I don't like. We are told to render unto Caesar what is Caesar's, and unto God what is God's, but I want to know where Caesar's rights stop and Christ's begin. Can anyone inform me?

AN ANSWER TO AN OPEN LETTER TO THE CHURCH.

It is a great thrill to read again and again the history of the early Church. Those present at Pentecost were endued with the power of the Holy Spirit. The message of the risen Christ and hearts filled with the Spirit served them in good stead in their preaching and in the organization of the early Church. These must be relied upon today. Since we live in the reign of the Spirit still, we ought to act like it in the Church and in the throng. Too many of us are dead from the belt up because we hold to the letter of the law, neglecting the spirit, which maketh alive.

The theme of the Southern Convention, "The Spirit Giveth Life," is a fitting banner for us to follow during this biennium. It is Biblical. It is apostolic. It is the foundation upon which the early Church was built. If our hearts are aflame with the Spirit of Truth as we teach, as we preach, and as we live in the sanctuary and in the market place, saints and sinners alike will see that we are very much "alive." We, too, may build on the foundation which is Jesus Christ, our Lord.

That company of Christians at Pentecost waited and prayed ten days for the coming of the Holy Spirit. Those were days of waiting and prayer for days of power. The Church has come upon a time of waiting and prayer today. The Convention rightly had its periods of waiting and prayer. Likewise, each church and each individual must have such periods to prepare adequately for the work that lies ahead.

The five-point program and the Convention machinery are adequate. The clergy and laity must be spiritually alive, aware of the needs of each local church and anxious to do something about the issues of the day if we are to become a victorious Church. Greater cooperation must be evident. Since authority is vested in the corporate body, it is necessary to rely upon the power of persuasion and individual opinion. Our past and present experience, our needs and the Spirit which giveth life determine the authority by which we do these things. Here is, perhaps, our greatest weakness. We cannot ignore them. We are as strong as the weakest link in the chain. The conferences should exercise more authority than they have in the recent past, train lay-leaders, insist upon thoroughly trained seminary graduates who come as candidates for ordination, for parishes in the rural areas, and see that church and clergy abide by such groupings in every instance, urge that ethics and etiquette be closely observed by both in all their relationships, and promote fellowship whenever possible. We can be democratic and still observe the authority necessary to guarantee harmony and progress between churches and individuals. While the Spirit giveth life, it also guarantees authority for the whole of our religious experience.

CHURCH GROWTH AND PROGRESS.

It is inconceivable that our Lord Christ should plant and sponsor any other than a growing church. Long before He founded the church and declared Himself its body and head, Isaiah, under inspiration, had said, "Of the increase of His government and peace there shall be no end . . . to establish it . . . from henceforth even forever." In his parables our Lord likened the kingdom, which the Father through Him was establishing on the earth, to that which had small beginning, but resulted in the manifestation of great and universal power—the mustard seed which grows to be the greatest among herbs; the leaven hidden in the meal until the whole lump was leavened; the merchant man seeking goodly pearls and selling all he had to buy the pearl of great price.

We are living in a time of transition. We always are. Men and women have always lived in time of transition since Adam changed his place of residence, through disobedience, from the Garden of Eden. However, in some periods transition is more obvious to the casual observer than others and there are so many changes in the various fields of activity and adaption at present that change everywhere is apparent. This is the great opportunity of the preacher and the church. It has ever been the task of pulpit and church to face and deal with great problems and only as the pulpit and church have taken advantage of the opportunity has the church enjoyed growth, even as its Builder and Maker intended it should. When our Lord looked out over the multitudes, whose minds were under a cloud, and whose souls were without salvation, He considered them as sheep without a shepherd and instead of despairing, He declared Himself to be a Shepherd of the sheep.

In such times when men and women in the church and out of it are disposed to go to extremes in beliefs and creeds we still have the comfort of a God who never changes and, by His grace, a faith that need not falter.

The world about us is not asking us how many things we believe about God and the needs of humanity, but is putting us to the test by requiring that we show the fruits of our creeds by our deeds.

I have no way of knowing in how many particulars Abraham's belief in God differs from my own. I have no way of calculating how many varied ideas and opinions he held about God; neither does the Book tell us. But this is very, very plain: Abraham "believed in God and it was imputed under him for righteousness."

Just how many and varied beliefs ancient Job had of God, one has no way estimating. But this we know and this to Job was sufficient to withstand all the disappointments, and vicissitudes of His life, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." They could take everything else from him, but Job knew that much and this stood him in everlasting endurance. Then we have those all-sufficient and divine words of John 3:16, "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but should have everlasting life." Nothing is said of how many things they were to believe about Him, of what creeds they should formulate in their own mind and thinking, but the condition was "Whosoever believeth in Him."

In time of upheaval, change, doubt or uncertainty, the way is made so clear and plain that if one will accept that Way "the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein."

The message that must be given to men and women everywhere, in Japan, China, Africa, in the United States, in your state, in your community and mine, is the simplicity of the gospel of our Lord and its power and directness in reaching the heart and saving the souls of individuals. Not our creeds, but our deeds are recorded in the Lamb's book of life and by these the world about us, and one is persuaded the God above us, judge us and either condemn or approve.

COMMENTS ON THE PASSING OF VICTORIA OF THE HILLS.

Rev. G. D. Hunt, Roanoke, Ala., writes, "I am grieved at the passing of our dear sister, Victoria Edwards—'Victoria of the Hills.' She was, indeed, a great soul. Such is the way of this life. It has its dark shadows, but it opens out in the perfect day."

* * *

Mrs. S. F. Coghil, Henderson, N. C., writes, "Someone has already expressed to you what I said I was going to write. Have the letters of Victoria of the Hills, as they were printed in THE CHRISTIAN SUN from time to time, put in a pamphlet for the sake of others, and put a good plain marker at her grave. Anything that will help the work in her beloved mountains would and will give her joy."

* * *

Prof. J. E. Branch, Route No. 2, Garner, N. C., writes, "Our Sunday school (Mt. Herman) is ready to assist in making some donation to place a marker at the grave, or place a memorial to, 'Victoria of the Hills.'"

"Ambition to make the Lord's work a success is commendable, but an inordinate desire for personal preference is certain to bring spiritual disaster."

VISIT INDIA WITH OUR WHITE FRIENDS

And Miss Dorothy Cushing as Guide.

Did you ever take tea with a Maharajah?

Rev. Emmons E. White, for three years pastor of the Congregational Church in Palmer, Mass., got his first

REV. E. E. WHITE.

“close-up” of a king when he was entertained with 100 other delegates of the International Fellowship by the King or Maharajah of Travancore at his beautiful estate in Trivandrum.

Last year, after an extended stay in America due to the depression, Mr. White, who is the son of Mrs. W. F. White, of Saybrook, Conn., returned to his work in India under the American Board of Foreign Missions, with headquarters at Manamadura.

Although he had lived previously in India for nearly fifteen years he had never visited Travancore. He found it quite modernized with sidewalks and many concrete roads. There was an astronomical observatory and a fine public park with a museum and a zoo.

It was a day's trip from Manamadura. For the last sixty miles the train wound its way up grade through beautiful wild scenery. There were brooks, mountains, and everywhere the lush vegetation of the tropics. Indeed, a fertile land full of coconuts. “Never in my life have I seen so many coconut trees,” exclaimed Mr. White.

During the conference Mrs. White and the children, Laura, Robin, and Stephen drove to Trivandrum to join Mr. White and, although they did not attend the conference, the children were delighted at the lions, tigers and other animals in the zoo. Mrs. White is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George L. Parker, of Grafton, Mass., and the sister of Raymond E. Parker, Berkeley Street, Springfield, Mass.

The conference which Mr. White attended was made up of Hindus of all communities, Mohammedans and Christians, (Roman Catholic, Syrians, Jacobites and Protestants).

I was deeply impressed with the fine, brotherly spirit which prevailed at this conference,” writes Mr. White. “Truly the spirit of God is working in the minds and hearts of many of the best people in India. There is no doubt about the changes which are coming over India.”

The discussion covered all topics—religious, social, economic and political. They passed a resolution which worked for the removal of caste, communal and racial discriminations and to discourage caste and communal partitions in hotels and restaurants as well as to make free association among the different races and castes. All the delegates gave full and hearty assent. Contrary to the idea that some people have that the American or European missionary always dominates the situation, Mr. White reports that “the ten European and American delegates present remained silent most of the time.”

The Maharajah gave a dinner party from five to six, if you please, at the palace. Busses and cars brought the delegates to the grounds. A brass band of native players with white suits, baggy trousers, long black stockings, and flat green hats, played outside the palace. The residence itself was built upon a hill with spacious, beautifully kept grounds and an inspiring mountain view in the distance.

“Just outside the palace stood groups of guards, all resplendent in uniforms of various bright colors and many of them standing stiffly at attention,” Mr. White narrates. “We entered the palace in single file, each of us carrying a little white card with our names in full printed on it.

“As we came before their Majesties, the Maharajah and Maharanee, we handed our cards to a kind of usher who read aloud the names as each person stepped up and made a low bow to the Rajah and Ranee and then passed out of the room and down a corridor ending up on the lawn where tea tables were spread with cakes, sandwiches, and other good things. We found our places at the tables, but did not eat until their Majesties came and we all remained standing until they were seated.”

After that, the party was escorted about the grounds to view the garden and the fountains, and then brought back to an outdoor theatre to witness five Indian dramas. “There was a band of Indian musicians and Indian music throughout,” writes Mr. White, who himself is adept at singing Indian Bhajans. The acting was all a kind of pantomime dancing. It was done by skilled Indian dancers dressed in bright colors and glittering garments, which the foot-lights accentuated strikingly.

“I wish I could describe for you that dancing. It was not like tap dancing or any other dancing I had ever seen. It was subtle and gracefully done. Every turn of the wrist or the head or the eyes conveyed a special meaning. The chief dancer was a man who was the instructor of all the boys and girls in the dramas. He took the part of the God, Siva. In one pose he looked exactly like the picture of the dancing Siva.”

A Brahmin lawyer, a fellow member of the International Fellowship, took Mr. White to see his school for backward children at Trivandrum. The Brahmin called a little girl who was a student and put his arm about her shoulder as he talked; the lawyer was a Brahmin; the child was an out caste. “I thought,” says Mr. White, “how absolutely impossible that would have been a few years ago. How much the splendid example of Mahatma Gandhi and the principles of Jesus, incarnated in him, have meant in revolutionizing India. Gandhi's name is still one with which to conjure.”

Sometime during the party each member of the conference had an opportunity to talk with their Majesties. “Both the Rajah and Ranee are rather short in height, quite young, and appear very intelligent and well educated. There was no leave-taking. At the close of the drama everybody arose, our busses drove up, we climbed in and it was all over.”

READY FOR ROCKFORD.

It is now time for those going to Rockford to be making definite plans. Several from the Southeast have already said they are going and expect to be ready when the time comes. Others are waiting to hear from the churches with their contributions before they know whether or not they can go.

Please check on your young people and see if they have sent their contribution to the proper person so the delegates from your conference may be ready to go to Rockford. It will not take much from any one group if all will share, but whatever is given should be sent in at once.

A RADIO PROGRAM.

The Pilgrim Fellowship at First Christian Church, Norfolk, recently held a radio program for their evening service. Several noted characters were represented on the program, but the topics discussed related to religion and modern church problems. Among the speakers was Dr. James R. Clinton, who represented President Roosevelt. His address follows:

A Fireside Chat.

My Friends! It is with very deep appreciation that I accepted the invitation to speak on Mother's Day over this station at Berkley, Va., to the youth of America.

Much history has passed over and under the bridges America has built in the last one hundred years. If you could have your choice, would you prefer to live your life amid the conditions which prevailed one hundred years ago—or any time in the "horse and buggy age"—or amid the conditions which prevail today? It is a moot question. We do not know what the conditions will be like one hundred years from now. But in some respects, at least, we can affirm that we are moving in the right direction. Note the advance in arts of comfort, convenience, and entertainment. We are moving farther and faster and with a growing sense of social responsibility; we are surely on our way to that golden age when this resourceful land of ours will have for its added millions enough for every citizen. There are, however, grave perils associated with the complexity of our modern life, perils to which we should give earnest heed. Life is more nerve-racking today than ever. And when we appreciate the discoveries and inventions commonly regarded as tokens of progress, it is by no means clear that they have added to the sum total of human welfare and happiness.

The benefits of the automobile are fairly obvious to all: the enormously increased facilities for the transit and delivery of goods, the opportunity of getting away to the country or the seaside during the week-ends and on these long summer evenings, the lowering of production costs in many businesses, the creating of a whole group of trades and avocations which depend directly or indirectly on the automobile industry—and of course the constant addition to our splendid highways over this great land.

But there is a lot to be said on the other side. Think of the toll of the roads—the long and lengthening list of killed and maimed. Some of us think that this item alone outweighs the advantages. There are thousands of mothers today who may never find any comfort in our splendid highways or our magnificent automobiles.

We are a race of runners. Our mania is speed. Men rush from point to point and record breaking is a modern disease. They will rush, breaking their necks (or other peoples) to save five minutes, and then not know what to do with it when they have saved it. And this modern mania for speed is a symbol of the way many are trying to run away from the responsibilities they ought to shoulder for their fellowmen. And that goes for the wealthy minority and for the rank and file of our working population.

Too many at the top and bottom of society today are trying to run away from life. The administration is saying to Americans everywhere today: Do not run away from life. There must be no renegades, no run-aways from the difficult problems and the posts of duty in this country.

Suppose I turn your thought to another discovery which has done much to revolutionize social life—the radio. It is far from being an unmixed blessing. Put on one side the delight and profit of sitting at one's hearthstone this home day and hearing a great orchestra concert—or outstanding news reporter, or brilliant entertainer, or sensible preacher, or the president of the United States. There is also another side—the disturbance caused by those who have a

The "Book of Books," a volume of sixty-six books, is one of the greatest pieces of literature ever published. It is a living book that belongs to every nation and every generation. It is as vital today as it was when it was formed. People who do not turn to the Bible for religious guidance regard it as a source where principles of daily living may be found. Those who have received the divine messages of the Book may exclaim with the Psalmist: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and light unto my path."

In the Bible one may find history, biography, poetry, drama, illustrative stories, wisdom literature, prophecy, and other kinds of writing. Above all, it is the inspired record of the life and teachings of Jesus. Samuel Coleridge, poet and philosopher, testified, "I know that the Bible is inspired, for it takes me to greater depths than any other work in literature."

Christian Endeavor urges us to set aside some definite time each day for quiet meditation, Bible reading, and prayer. Examine the Christian Endeavor pledge.

For Discussion—

1. Should one refuse to read the Bible because he does not understand it all?

2. Why do we not know more about the Bible?

3. How can Bible instruction and appreciation best be introduced into American home life today?

4. What ways of reading and studying the Bible are most helpful?

5. The topic in the daily readings may be used to good advantage.

MAINTAINING PERSONAL EFFICIENCY.

(A Personal Aspect of Temperance.)

LESSON IX—MAY 29, 1938.

GOLDEN TEXT: Every man that striveth in the games exerciseth self-control in all things.—1 Cor. 9:25.

LESSON TEXT: Dan. 1: 8-16, 19, 20; 1 Cor. 9: 24-27.

A Young Man With a Heart Purpose.

There were a number of reasons (or excuses) Daniel could have given to justify himself and his friends for eating the king's meat and drinking the king's wine. (In this case it was primarily a matter of religious scruples, rather than of the question of merely drinking wine.) They were young, and young folks think they have to have their fling. They were away from home and when one is away from home he thinks he can do things that he does not do at home. They were prisoners in a foreign land so why should they bother about religion. They were subject to the whims and mercy of a despot, so why should they dare to disobey his orders. They would be conspicuous if they dared to be different, so why should they expose themselves to ridicule and scorn. And so on they might have reasoned. A young man must have a deep, compelling purpose if he is going to get anywhere in life. He must have courage if he is going to live up to his ideals. He must not be afraid of consequences if he purposes in his heart that he is going to live up to his religious convictions.

It should be noted in Daniel's case that he not only had a heart purpose; he had a great one. A great many young people have purposes enough, but they are not always worthy purposes. Let every young man and young woman purpose in his or her heart that they will not defile themselves with the things of the world, that they will not flaunt their religious vows, that they will not break faith with those who believe in them.

A Young Man Who Was Likened In Spite of His Convictions.

"Now God had made Daniel to find kindness and compassion in the sight of the eunuchs." A young man can live up to his ideals and still not be a prude, or kill joy. A man may be intense in his convictions and yet be likeable if he has the right spirit. True goodness is always attractive. In the long run folks always admire, and even envy the young man or young woman who sticks up for personal ideals.

Putting Ideals to the Test.

"Prove thy servants, I beseech thee, ten days . . . and as thou seest, deal with thy servants." Daniel was not afraid to bring his ideals out into the arena of life. He believed the simple life would justify itself. He was willing to match his kind of living with the way of those who ate the king's meat and drank the king's wine. If folks would be willing to do this, honestly bring their lives to the test of actual life, they would see that sobriety, temperance, simple living produce sounder health and saner living.

We can apply this principle, of course, to the matter of the Christian life. Let a man try Christ's way of life for even as long as Daniel tried his philosophy of life, and he will be convinced of its superiority. He that willeth to do shall know, said Jesus.

The Proof of the Pudding.

"And in every matter of wisdom and understanding, concerning which the king inquired of them, he found them ten times better than all magicians and enchanters that were in all his realm." This is more than poetic fancy; it is verifiable truth. Those who live by high ideals, those who eat simple food, take proper care of their bodies, think high thoughts, keep their bodies as becometh the temple of the Holy Spirit, feel better, think better, do better work.

Life As a Race.

Paul likens life to a race. It is a good analogy. Each of us has a course to run. Each of us has those who want us to win and those who want us to lose. Each of us must run his own race. Each of us must discipline himself so as to run a good race. Each of us must be willing to pay the price of continuous training. Each of us may win the prize. The race is not always to the swift, however, or to the strong. The emphasis in our case is not so much whether we won but how we ran. Indeed, our race is an obstacle race. He that endureth to the end wins, no matter how many others may have finished before him.

Maintaining Personal Efficiency.

What would you think of a man who was just about to enter a race who ate a hearty Christmas dinner, or drank to excess? Football coaches will "fire" men from the squad for breaking training rules, sometimes even for smoking a cigarette. For those of us who are Christians, life presents inexorable demands. We must live at high personal efficiency all the time. Our bodies are the temple of the Holy Spirit. It is not enough that we feel good enough to get by. For Christ's sake we are to live at our best. Anything that lowers our efficiency, anything that debilitates us, becomes sin, no matter how seemingly harmless it may appear, or may be to others.

Master Not Servant.

"I bring it (my body) into bondage." Paul made spirit not flesh the master. Appetites, passions, feelings would gain the ascendancy. We must be constantly on our guard. We must be willing to "buffet" our body, in the sense of making it subject to the things of the spirit. He who is subject to the flesh is a most abject slave. Only he who exercises self-control in all things wins the prize.

A Cast Away.

"Lest when I have preached to others, I myself should be a cast-away." Not lose his salvation—we do not run a race to win salvation. But even one who is saved can fall far short of his finer possibilities, and fail to bring forth the fruit of the Christian life of which he is capable. Places of preferment are no guarantee of security. A man does not automatically receive character simply because he preaches or teaches to others. Let every minister and teacher practice the highest that he teaches and preaches.

A RADIO PROGRAM.

radio, and almost every family has a receiver now—a disturbance going on through the early hours of the morning, keeping their neighbors awake and shattering the peace of the entire street with the raving of their loud speakers. Home is our castle—but we have no right to invade our neighbors castle. And if at midnight we send out the strains of a jazz band, with a power capable of penetrating a brick wall, we are invading our neighbor's castle just as surely as if we broke down the wall and marched into our neighbor's dwelling at the head of a company of saxophone players.

Are we making real progress, my friends? Will life a hundred years hence be better than it is today? The answer depends largely on our youth. We must master conditions instead of letting conditions master us.

Presidents and dictators cannot be expected to have all the wisdom even of this world in presenting their programs and methodizing their policies.

MONDAY.

PATIENCE.

"Tribulations worketh patience."

—Rom. 5:3.

"Let patience have her perfect work."—Jas. 1:4.

"Although we are thankful to God for a garden and the inspiring surroundings that lend thought and vigor to devotion, it is not without its healthgiving obstacles. A card table is my desk. The wind blows at times swishing from every direction. Books, little stones and other objects hold the papers in their place. One hand holds the fly of the paper in the typewriter while the other picks out the type. Impatience says, "You cannot do this." Patience discerns that it can be done. It reckons with every difficulty and finds a way to overcome it. In difficulty it is a sense of victory. So while we thank God for the garden of life, let us thank Him also for those things that make life difficult, for in the difficulties we find victory.

Prayer—Thou hast called us, Lord, to overcome. Make us overcomers over the world the flesh and the devil. Amen.

TUESDAY.

A GLIMPSE OF GLORY.

"Now we see as through a glass darkly, but then face to face."—I Cor. 13:12.

It was a mountain trip. The sky was overcast with snow-laden clouds. The day "was dark and cold, and dreary." Slowly and gently this dreariness changed to ecstasy as the air began to be streaked with soft falling snow until everywhere beautiful, beautiful snow. We drove on and as we looked back, a sudden burst of sunshine from behind the clouds somewhere lit up the magnificence of a mountain peak in the distance. The exclamation "glorious" expressed our delight but feebly. It was celestial. It was as if a vision of heaven had been unfurled. Does life ever furnish you glimpses of beauty that remind you of heaven? Follow the gleam.

Prayer—Our Father, make Thou all spiritual awareness in our souls. foregleams of Thee. Lead us on by them till we shall be with Thee in that glory. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

A TREMENDOUS TRUTH.

"Thy kingdom come."—Matt. 6:10.

In all the revolutionary aspects of our country there is a tremendous truth. As we look back over things, and as we study the heart of things as they are, we must observe a swing toward truth. We cannot escape observing also an increased interest in Christianity and a trend toward acceptance of the standards of Jesus as the supreme law of man's living. We are coming to know that the ideas of Jesus are the most practical ideas and are the only way to happiness. Can you think this?

Prayer—Dear Father, thou dost call us every day to a new living. We pray that we may have the courage to dare to live the Jesus way. Amen.

THURSDAY.

A BUNCH OF SWEET PEAS.

"Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."—II Tim. 2:15.

As I sit here in this garden, there is before me a frame of sweet peas. They are not as prolific and beautiful as we had hoped they would be. Insect enemies, heavy winds and rains have done their work. But nevertheless there they are. They represent a lot of toil, perseverance, patience, sweat and constant care, and in their imperfection the air is made sweet with their fragrance.

Toil, perseverance, patience, care—a bunch of sweet peas—sweet spiritual attributes for God's kingdom.

Prayer—Dear Father, we would see Jesus. We would have Jesus' spirit to live by that we may do as well as a bunch of sweet peas. Amen.

FRIDAY.

LIFE INDESTRUCTIBLE.

"Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal:""But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal."—Matt. 6:19, 20.

Depression and repression have taught us all that nothing is fixed and safe. They have also taught that the great essentials of life remain yet untouched. Something seems to tell us to turn to love and the abiding loyalties; and that God is God, hear ye Him. The wise person will live for the things that last.

Prayer—O Thou, who changest not, abide with me. We pray that we may live by those qualities that abide. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"EXCEPT YE BECOME."

"Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Matt. 18:3.

Simple saints; plain people; ordinary everyday Christians, whose chief concern is being good and doing good, and knowing the will of God the Father. Such are the masses of the church, and such are the strength of the church. Such are the strength of the nation. Are you included?

Prayer—Our Father, we pray for childlike hearts. We rejoice that the way has been made plain by Jesus. Help us to walk therein. Amen.

A CHRISTIAN FORTRESS.

By REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

"He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty."—Psalm 91:1.

A Christian home is a Christian fortress. I went out as a boy feeling that my home was a Christian fortress. I went out with this psalm as a part of my equipment for life. It was well nigh as precious as the twenty-third. It was a picture of the fortress I had ever behind me, and to which I could always return. The first sermon I ever tried to preach was from this ninety-first psalm. It was the second verse: "I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress: my God; in Him will I trust."

I want to say a word for private devotions in the home. We talk a great deal about "going to church;" we are all anxious about "church attendance;" and we are devising ways and means of getting people to one service on Sunday out of many different kinds that may be offered. Statistics are being compiled, and pressure is being made to get people to public worship. This is good, but it is not beginning at the right place. It is impossible to get everybody to church, but everybody lives in some sort of a home, or at least well nigh everyone does. Mainly the church is looked upon as a Sunday affair. The home is daily. The church does not appeal alike to every member of the family. The home is the portion of all. There are reasons and excuses both that bar from church, but most of these do not hold concerning the home.

Now one of the central things about a church, that which as much as anything else makes it a holy place, is its altar. It is a "place of prayer." To its altar sinners may come, to its altar the defeated and discouraged may come, to its altar the weak and needy may come, to its altar all may come, high and low, rich and poor, young and old, may find succor and solace at its sacred place. And we do not want to do anything, or say anything that will lessen the number who come. They must come in ever increasing numbers, but every home can have an altar. Every home can be a place of prayer.

Many a man who does not attend church who does attend home; many a young person does not go to God's house that does go to his mother's house, and many a child is kept from attending church who lives in a home. Do you see my point? Daily, constantly, we may all live in the "secret place of the Most High."

We used to ask mother, What is the "secret place of the Most High?" Where is it? Can one live in the church house? One young man here has jokingly advised his mother to take her bed to the church and sleep there, so much does she love her church, and work for it. No, one does not live in the church building. But we all may dwell in the "secret place of God." That is the Christian home which I am talking about. Mother used to tell us and show us that we lived in the "secret place of the Most High." And as I look back on it now I see that it was really a "secret place." Mother's way of slipping into some other room and praying, our way of quietly, timidly gathering about her when the day was done and darkness had shut out all the rest of the world for Bible reading and prayer, was the "secret place." The way in which we refrained from speaking about it to boys and girls with whom we played, who did no such thing, made it "secret place." It is our secret. It was a family "going into its closet, when God had closed the shutters with darkness, and praying in secret." The Father who saw in secret rewarded openly!

"He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." The ninety-first psalm goes on to tell what happens: That person, those children, that father and mother, shall have "refuge," they shall have a "fortress!" "He shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler." When I was a boy I went in and out of that sort of home. I used to go to "corn-huskings," which were also "corn-liquor inbidings," but I was delivered from the "snare of the fowler," because I dwelt under the shadow of the Almighty. Men passed their drinks, but I always had the courage to say no, indeed, it was practically not offered me because they knew I would not take it, and perhaps mainly out of respect for my mother. It is a personal illustration, but it held in many ways and we can afford to make one of the main prayers of our lives that God will fill our city, and our country with Christian homes, Christian fortresses, from which our boys and girls may go into life as men and women. They will need to be "delivered from the snare of the fowler, and from the noisome pestilence." And there is a "noisome pestilence," do not forget that. From the noise of rowdyism in hotel ball-rooms, cabarets, and road houses, to the noise of battle which may be showered down death on a sickening civilization any time. If we can only have our sons and daughters dwell in the "secret place of the Most High," they will be delivered from "the snare of the fowler, and from the noisome pestilence."

Yes, indeed, we need a church-going people, but until we have a home-making altar, a tryst-keeping family, a people of Christian home-making, we shall not have the love and devotion to the church which our hearts so greatly desire. If all my preaching has not made some dear young couple resolve to build their home on a Christian basis, and rear their children with a daily reminder of God in the "secret recesses of that home;" if all my preaching has not enabled some family to say to their members we are not going to forget God in our daily round of family life; then I feel that my preaching has been lacking in its power. More than I crave a packed Church. I desire praying homes, a people who know God as a part of their daily living and their daily worshipping. And I know those homes will furnish worshippers in our church, teachers in our Sunday schools, and preachers in our pulpits, and missionaries to bless the roads of earth with the beautiful Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The Christian home is the Alpha and Omega of a Christian civilization. Let the Christian home break down, that unit of love of father and mother and children—that self-giving, sacrifice-making love—let that break down and we cannot imagine the worst; but let that hold "there shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling." "For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways."

But I hear someone say He means family prayers, and does not he know that you cannot do that now? It is a pity preachers know so little about life. Why sure you could do that back in the hills of North Carolina in days when you were a boy, but you cannot do it now. Yes, we can have a home which is a "secret place of the Most High." We may not, and indeed, we cannot, have every member of the family present every time for a moment of family worship, but we do have to have every member of this

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Sometime ago I met a man who was very much interested in tithing and helping those in need. During our conversation he related this story to me:

He said that some years ago he had a mule for sale. He had no further need for the mule. A colored man came to see him and wanted to buy the mule. The colored man had lost his mule the day before, but he had no money with which to buy another. He told the owner of the mule that if he would sell him the mule for $40.00 he would give a mortgage on it and pay him in the fall when he gathered his corn and picked his cotton. This man sold the mule and took the mortgage. He laid the mortgage in his safe and thought no more about it. In fact, he said he forgot it.

Along in the late fall this man had a phone message from a colored woman stating that she was the wife of the man to whom he sold the mule. She said her husband died a few weeks before. She told him that they had gathered their corn and picked their cotton and asked him if he would come down to their home and settle with them. One very cold morning he went down to see the colored woman. When he reached the home he was very cold. He went in the house where the colored woman had a good fire. She gave him the best chair she had in the house and put more wood on the fire and tried to make him comfortable. All the time, she was saying to him, "I don't believe we can pay you all today, but we don't want to lose the mule. If you will let us pay you what we have, we will pay the balance next year." She repeated that several times during their conversation.

This friend observed that sitting on the other side of the fireplace were five little colored children without shoes and without comfortable clothing. He had noticed while going up to the house that the hogs in the lot were thin and in need of corn to fatten them to make meat for the family. He said quite a number of thoughts passed through his mind while he was sitting there. He thought to himself that he had money in his pocket and didn't really need the $40.00. This family of colored people did. This man's children had plenty to eat and these colored children did not have plenty to eat. His children were comfortably clothed for the winter, and these little colored children were not. If he took the corn, they would have nothing to feed the mule and no corn to fatten the hogs. If he took the cotton, they would have nothing with which to buy comfortable clothing for the winter. He took the mortgage from his pocket and tore it into shreds and threw it in the fire. He said to the colored woman, "Take good care of the mule and feed your hogs some of this corn and fatten them. Take the cotton and sell it and buy your children some shoes and comfortable clothing for the winter, and I will give you the mule. He got in his car and went back home and forgot the experience.

Several years after that this man was taken critically ill. And one morning the phone rang, his wife answered. A colored woman said to this man's wife, "I am the widow of the man that bought the mule from your husband. Your husband gave me the mule after my husband's death. I heard he was very ill, and I want you to tell him that I am praying for him." This friend said that that was worth many times the $40.00 the colored man was to have paid him for that mule. He said he didn't know of any contribution he had made that had brought him quite so much joy as making that contribution to help feed and clothe those little colored children for the winter. He didn't know whether the colored woman's prayers were answered or not, but he got well and is now in good health.

The thought I am trying to get across to you is this. Riches don't always bring happiness. Money doesn't always bring happiness. But lending a helping hand to those in need does bring to one's heart a joy that does not come any other way. If people who have money to spare could come in contact with cases of real need as we do from week to week and month to month, I feel sure that we would never have to appeal for money to run this institution and care for these little children. I know we would be amply supplied.

I am glad to say that our financial report this week carries us above our $7,000 rung in our financial ladder for the year. We do hope and pray that all the Sunday schools which are not on our list of schools that make monthly contributions will join with the others who are giving and let us make all the conferences 100 per cent.

A RADIO PROGRAM.

If open confession be good for the soul, it may not be out of place for a president to acknowledge his limitations and errors. My political opponents would suggest that their name is Legion—for their are many. These, like Republican jokes, need not be taken seriously!

I ought not to hesitate, however, to say that I am now convinced that the release of liquor and the free flowing of the drink trade is both an economic fallacy and a moral mistake and tragedy.

American youth should know how to destroy this cursed devil of liquor—the arch-dupe of democracy! I deplore our tragically moderated attitude toward the drink and pray that America will again rise under great moral and spiritual strength and push this infamous business out of our midst.

They tell me that Presidents of America pass through three stages in their term of office. The first is admiration, the second is toleration, and the last is abomination. Well, my friends, in whatever state we are, let us all learn to be content, and, in broader brotherly Christian sympathies, let us move courageously and steadily forward so the conditions of life which our grandchildren will inherit will be fairer than those our mothers and grandparents ever knew.

In Memoriam

KING.

On the night of April 16, 1938, our heavenly Father called to rest our beloved president, Mrs. John King. In her death the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society has suffered an irreparable loss.

She was a true, faithful Christian worker, intensely interested in the society, filling her position with dignity and perseverance. She gave freely of her time, love, and money, and always appealed to the members to help her and ever showed her appreciation for the cooperation she received, thus endearing herself to the women who sincerely mourn her loss.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we humbly bow in submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, who doeth all things according to His loving kindness and tender mercy.

2. That we honor her life by consecrating anew our lives, and being true in service to the cause she loved so well.

3. That we extend to her sister, Miss Zadie Crump, our heartfelt sympathy, realizing their devotion to each other. No regret can be added to natural and tender grief. We commend her to God, whose grace is sufficient in the hour of trouble.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her sister, a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication, and a copy be entered on the records of our society.

VISIT INDIA WITH OUR WHITE FRIENDS.

tained in America, hangs on the wall of his bungalow in tropical India.

"We want our India home to have the spirit of Christ always in it," write the Whites, "and to be the meeting place of the finest things in both America and India. On the wall of our living room hangs an oil painting of a sunset on the Connecticut seashore. Opposite stands a piano, the gift of a dear friend, and above that another painting of the Palmer Church in winter, also a gift. . . . We want now to share with you our joy in the privilege of being returned to serve Christ in this great and needy field."

In Madura, the Whites noted many improvements—wider streets, busses taking the place of old horse carts, and quite a number of new homes in the residential section. The Whites are located now in Manamadura (pronounced "Mah - nah - mad - yurah"). It is smaller than Aruppukottai where they were formerly located and is more on the general line of transportation. On the campus is a boarding school and a mile away a leper hospital.

When the Whites were welcomed, songs were sung and pupils threw flower petals. Robin and Stephen White, to the great amusement of all, began to gather up the petals and throw them back on the heads of the singers.

RADIATING LIVES.

"Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—Matt. 5: 16.

One of the clear calls of the present day heard above the din of all life's confusions, an appeal coming from the larger areas of science as felt in the existence of the airplane, the radio and the "eye of Palomar," is, that we cannot separate ourselves from the whole wide world; that whether it is a war in Spain or China, we are related to it and that we must make our lives count in the whole scheme of things. We must feel as never before, the commission to "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel unto every creature."

Prayer—Baptize us, O Lord, with the spirit of Jesus Christ. As we try to function as citizens of our country, O may we function more greatly as citizens of Thy kingdom on earth. Amen.

church present before we have public worship. And you would be surprised to know with how few we can have a Wednesday night prayer meeting! But we have these services just the same, and the church feels the power of them, and the community and the world feel the power of them. Have that family worship even if there are times when only one member of the family can be actually present in person. Judge Joseph M. Woods, of Pennsylvania, told me once as I attended, with his son, his family devotions, "young man, my dear wife is in heaven, my daughter, Catherine, is a missionary in China, my son, William is in his own home, and my son, Joe, here is with you in Princeton; but I have my family devotions right here in this room every morning, and wherever they are they know that someone attends the family altar in the Christian fortress of their childhood."

Begin that family altar by reading the ninety-first psalm. The closing verses of it are: "Because he hath set his love upon me, therefore will I deliver him. . . . I will be with him in trouble; I will deliver him, and honor him. With long life will I satisfy him, and shew him of my salvation."

"A soft answer turneth away wrath, but don't try to substitute soft soap."

A STOMACH'S DIARY

10:00 A. M.—Oh, dear! Another warm day. Wonder if I'll be abused as I was yesterday. If I am, I'm going to strike. Just disposed of a half-chewed breakfast. We ran for the car, which meant I was so jiggled about and so tired that it took me twice as long to do my work. Hope she gives me an hour or two of complete rest before anything more comes my way.

10:30 A. M.—Two glasses of ice water have just arrived. It will take all the energy I can pump up in the next hour just to warm me up to normal again.

10:50 A. M.—Half-chewed breakfast did not satisfy her and she has bought some peanuts and started again.

12:00 A. M.—Peanuts have been drifting along steadily ever since. Think she has finished them, too.

12:30 P. M.—Decided she wasn't hungry, and instead of a good solid dinner sent me down a cold malted milk heavy with the chocolate. Could have managed it all right if it hadn't been so unnaturally cold, but that made it terribly difficult to deal with.

1:10 P. M.—More ice water.

1:40 P. M.—Was mistaken about the peanuts; she found another handful in the bottom of her vanity bag, and now I am getting them again.

2:05 P. M.—More ice water.

2:10 P. M.—She has been lifting some heavy books and as usual used my muscles, instead of her arm muscles. Tired me almost as much as a six-course dinner.

5:30 P. M.—We were invited by a drug store cowboy to have a soda before going home. Had a lemon phosphate and then had to run for a car.

6:00 P. M.—Fried potatoes, cucumbers, veal cutlets, catsup, apple pie with crust like asbestos lining, cookies and canned blueberries.

7:45 P. M.—We are strolling down to the corner with a guy in a sport shirt and white pants for a pineapple walnut sundae.

8:20 P. M.—Got home and found somebody had made some iced tea and cheese sandwiches. She drank two glasses. I tried hard to keep the cheese and the nut sundae separated but they mixed in spite of me. I go on a strike.

8:30 P. M.—I have sent back the sundae, the cheese, and the iced tea.

8:40 P. M.—Returned the blueberries and the pie.

8:45 P. M.—And the peanuts.

9:00 P. M.—The devil to pay—can't get the doctor.

9:17 P. M.—Doctor found at the movies. Mother thinks it's a weak stomach she inherited from her father.

9:45 P. M.—Doctor says it is from a bilious temperament. Castor Oil—GOOD NIGHT!—Selected.

THE SHIP

I am standing upon the seashore. A ship at my side spreads her white sails to the morning breeze and starts for the blue ocean.

She is an object of beauty and strength, and I stand and watch her until at length she is only a ribbon of white cloud just where the sea and sky come to mingle with each other. Then some one at my side says: "There! She's gone!"

Gone where? Gone from my sight — that is all.

She is just as large in mast and hull and spar as she was when she left my side and just as able to bear her load of living freight — to the place of destination.

Her diminished size is in me, not in her, and just at the moment when someone at my side says: "There! She's gone!" there are other voices ready to take up the glad shout: "There! She comes!"

And that is dying.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES

Congregational-Christian ministers of Middle Georgia have organized a Fellowship and Study Club which will meet quarterly in LaGrange. There were 14 present for the first meeting held recently. They will meet again in September. Rev. D. W. Shepherd, Barnesville, was elected chairman.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT.

The baccalaureate sermon for the forty-eighth graduating class of Elon College was given last Sunday by Rev. John G. Truitt, D. D., pastor of the Christian Church, at Suffolk, Va. Dr. Truitt graduated from Elon with the class of 1917, receiving both the B. A. and M. A. degrees. He later graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary, and some years ago received the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity from Elon College. Dr. Truitt has held some of our best pastorates, which includes the present Suffolk Church, the largest in the Southern Convention.

Rev. Carl R. Key, pastor of the Holland Church, says: "I have recently organized a Young Adult Class in the Sunday school here. We have a prospective list of 64 members. Nineteen have attended thus far. A lot of enthusiasm has been shown and we hope to see the class grow considerably in the next few months. The officers and members are working hard for new members."

The North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention will hold its annual meeting on Thursday, June 9th, with New Lebanon Church, near Reidsville, N. C. The Youth Fellowship will have their meeting on Wednesday night, June 8th, at the same place, beginning at 7:30. The Thursday program will begin at 9:30 A. M. and continue through the day.

According to recent reports Rev. D. M. Spence, pastor of our Sophia Parish in North Carolina, is making excellent progress. Since January 1st he has received thirty-three members into the High Point Church and two at the Sophia Church. He is perfecting the organization of each of his churches. Repairs on the Flint Hill and High Point churches, and on the parsonage located at Sophia are being pushed. During the first three months of Mr. Spence's pastorate he has made more than 250 visits in his parish, which include two rural fields and one city part-time church.

RECOGNITION SERVICE.

An event of special interest took place at the North Miami, Florida, Church on Sunday afternoon, May 15th, when Rev. George W. Penn, the new pastor, was officially recognized. Mr. Penn, the son of Rev. S. M. Penn, who was formerly of Sophia Parish,

REV. WILLIM LASSITER McLEOD.

Alumni Day is a big event at Elon College now. The graduating class has its exercise in the early morning, and the remainder of the day is filled with the activities of the Alumni Association. The morning speaker this year was Rev. William Lassiter McLeod, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Jennings, La. Since graduating from Elon, Rev. McLeod has studied at Columbia Seminary, Decatur, Ga., and received his B. D. degree from the Presbyterian Seminary, Louisville, Ky. Elon conferred on him at this commencement the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity.

North Carolina, but now of Richland, Georgia, came to the North Miami Church from Lanett, Alabama. He also served the First Church, Albemarle, North Carolina, for two years.

The recognition service was presided over by Earl J. Henshaw, lay leader of the North Miami Church. The invocation and scripture lesson were given by Rev. A. J. Patterson, acting pastor of the First Church, Miami. Official greeting for the town was given by Mayor W. S. Heyward. Greetings from the neighborhood churches were brought by Rev. R. W. Johnson, and Rev. Frank E. Harlow represented the Greater Miami Ministerial Association. The sermon was given by Rev. W. T. Scott, Superintendent of the Florida Congregational-Christian Conference. The charge to the minister was made by Dr. Elisha A. King, minister of the Miami Beach Church, and Dr. Clarence A. Vincent, minister of the Miami Shores Community Church, charged the people. Rev. Mr. Penn officially accepted his new responsibilities and pronounced the benediction.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

PENTECOST.

Next Sunday is Pentecost. Saint Luke in the Acts of the Apostles said that, "when the day of Pentecost was fully come" things began to happen and among those was the bringing into the new Church of 3,000 converts. Pentecost was a Jewish feast which followed fifty days after the day of the passover. But for the followers of Jesus it was the day of receiving of the Holy Spirit in fulfillment of the promise that Jesus would be with them.

Dr. E. Stanley Jones is quoted as saying, "There was a time when the Christian Church celebrated Pentecost, the anniversary of the coming of the Holy Spirit, more than it did Christmas, the anniversary of the coming of Christ. Now Pentecost has largely dropped out. Did we find it easier to celebrate Christ's birth than it was to be born again? Was it easier to commemorate his coming into the world than it was for us to go with his message into the world? Did it cost less to give gifts at Christmas than to give ourselves at Pentecost? Christmas is the festival of God with us; Pentecost is the festival of God in us."

This coming of the Holy Spirit marked the beginning of the Church as such. The disciples had followed Jesus and had sought to learn of him but had failed to get his spirit. They knew something of the teachings of Jesus but they hadn't learned how to forget themselves in doing the things which he taught them to do. When Pentecost was fully come they had forgotten their personal desires, had yielded themselves to the divine will, and were ready to receive the power which comes from on high.

It is worth noting that this Pentecostal experience was the fulfillment of the promise of Jesus. He told them that it was good for him to go away so the Holy Spirit would come to abide with them. He said that their job would be to win the world, but they would not do it alone for he would be with them. He prayed that they might be united in spirit like he himself was at one with the Father. This never happened until Pentecost. The promise of Jesus to those who love him is that his own spirit shall abide with them, and his spirit is the spirit of the Father, God.

It should be noted, also, that the promised spirit comes only after proper preparation. Jesus told them to wait in Jerusalem until the promise was fulfilled. They went to Jerusalem, found a regular place of meeting, waited patiently for the promise, continued in prayer, developed a spirit of unity and filled, by election, the place vacated by Judas. It took them ten days to get right to begin work, but when they were ready the spirit of God came upon them mightily.

There were no words at the command of the writer of the Scripture with which to describe what actually happened on the day of Pentecost. No one yet can describe exactly what happens when the spirit of God comes into human life. It may be similar to tongues of fire; it may sound like a mighty rushing wind; it may be described with other words, but only those understand who have experienced it. Of this we are certain: those who were afraid became bold; those who vacillated became determined; those who doubted worked courageously; and the helpless, hopeless, discouraged group of disciples were transformed into an enthusiastic band of workers who dared the world to do its worse and who by sheer courage, devout loyalty and sincere love transformed the world of their day and started a Church that has lived for nineteen centuries.

Perhaps we do not need a duplication of Pentecost, but certainly we do need for ourselves individually and for the Church as a whole the same kind of spirit that the disciples of Jesus witnessed at Pentecost. It is this more than anything else that the world needs today. "It is the Spirit that maketh alive."

THE COLLEGE OF WHICH WE ARE PROUD.

During the past week-end Elon College held its forty-eighth commencement exercise and graduated seventy young men and women. Since 1891 the graduates of Elon College have been helping to build Christian churches and to develop Christian character. If the few who have graduated through the years can do as much as they have done it stands to reason that now since classes are larger the contribution of Elon College to the world will be greatly increased.

"Elon Alumni News" for May is quite a creditable little publication and tells of progress at the institution such as to rejoice the hearts of those who have studied in the institution and those who have contributed toward its support. This has been an unusually good year. The enrollment has surpassed any previous year. The college has a good faculty. There is a growing spirit of loyalty and Christian outlook. The financial condition of the college is improving. It is the kind of college to make one justly proud.

Graduates of the institution have reached such attainments in their respective fields that now they can be called back to speak at commencement time. Their message will rank along with the best to be found anywhere. This is a good day for a college. It is a happy experience for the graduates to return for commencement when members of their own class, and those they have known in college days, come back from fields of successful attainment to bring messages of good cheer. The editor was delighted to sit at the banquet table with members of his own class and to hear from them the story of their individual attainment. Many others had such joy at commencement time. Elon is becoming more and more the kind of institution that makes the Church proud of it. We rejoice in her attainments, we believe in her future, and we shall continue to contribute students and money so the college can continue to bless the world with an ever increasing enrollment and graduating class.

VETERANS OF THE CROSS

REV. ELISHA A. KING, D. D.

Pastor of Miami Beach, Florida, Community Church.

"The laborer is worthy of his hire."—Luke 10:7.

The word "Cross" means, first of all, the instrument on which Jesus was crucified, a Roman method of executing foreigners. Second, it means the Christian confession for the making of which the martyrs died. I stood in the Coliseum and saw the place where they died all because they believed in the crucified Christ and would not deny their faith. The third meaning is a symbol of Christianity found on Churches, an emblem used by many societies and by men and women as jewelry (this latter may or may not have significance); and still another meaning, a symbol of self-denial for the Cause of Christ, the movement known as the Kingdom of God, the Christianizing of the world.

By Veterans we mean those who have seen service and are passed the age of vigorous activity, but have given faithful service in the past and have been honorably discharged, relieved of heavy responsibility. The term is a military one, and refers, of course, to those who have seen service in war. Soldiers are usually retired on pensions. It is said that French soldiers who were with Napoleon at Waterloo wore a bronze button on which were the words, "I was there." They were the veterans.

So much for the meaning of the title of this address. We are using the word Veteran today to describe a minister of the Gospel who has reached the age of retirement—65 or 68, or perhaps 70.

From earliest time men have felt themselves "called" by God for special service among men. The mention of Abraham, Moses, Isaiah, Amos, and St. Paul is enough to show what we mean, but modern Christianity provides many other and different examples. Rather than draw from other sources I will mention my own experience briefly. My "call" to the ministry was not sudden or spectacular, but one that covered a period of years. My early religious experiences were in a Christian Endeavor Society and a Y. M. C. A. These activities took place during a four-year high school course. The crisis came after graduation in a drafting office in a large manufacturing concern. The owner and manager offered me a permanent place in the company with the promise of ultimately becoming a member of the firm. It was a great opportunity to enter the business world. I had to give my answer in a few days' time. For a day and a night I struggled with these two great possibilities, a business career literally handed to me by a friendly business man, a career already started with the promise of financial success. The other proposition was a life wholly devoted to religious work with no immediate opening, with no real knowledge that I could succeed in it, and without financial backing. However, there was a passionate desire in my heart to give my life to Christian service, while I had no great enthusiasm at the thought of a business career.

I tried to be fair with myself in making this choice and finally declined the business offer. My decision was not received very happily in my home and most of my friends did not hesitate to tell me I was foolish to turn down so fine a business offer. The sequel to this story is interesting, but need not be a part of this talk.

I entered Y. M. C. A. service, in which I remained for nearly ten years, until I had to make another decision and that was whether or not I should become a minister of the Gospel I would not do so without special preparation and that meant a three years' Theological Seminary course. By this time it took two people to decide, and the decision was made. We were married and started to school once more, without very much of this world's goods, but a faith so strong and a confidence so great that it took us through those years with great joy and gladness until finally we arrived at our first pastorate at $800.00 a year and a house.

I am not telling this story to acquaint you with phases of my personal history, but for a purely homiletical purpose and in order to make my point I must tell you one thing more.

As a pastor, I saw no very promising hope of being able to save enough from my salary to provide for old age, and I knew well enough that the time would come when a church somewhere would perhaps kindly, but nevertheless firmly, suggest that I resign and give way to some younger man. This is what the average minister after he is 60 years of age dreads when he stops to think of the economic future.

At this point and before I present the purpose of this address, let me speak of the compensations of ministers generally. I am a member of a National Commission that has been studying the problem of adequate salaries for ministers for several years and the information secured is startling as well as disheartening. The average salary is very low and there are still hundreds of pastors living on salaries less than a thousand dollars a year. In the Congregational-Christian Churches of the United States the average salary is only $1,646.00 per year.

The purpose of our Commission is to help churches to see the importance of paying larger salaries to their ministers especially in the light of growing costs of living. Without discussing the statistics, let me say that in view of everything we have advocated a standard that constitutes a minimum amount as follows: A pastor in a suburban community should have at least $1,800.00 and house; in a small town, $1,350.00 and a house; in a poor farm community, $900.00 and house. You can well guess that if this is a suggested minimum standard, the present salaries must be much lower.

Perhaps, I might say, that there are still some church men who think so long as a pastor has chosen (or has been chosen) to devote himself to preaching a free Gospel, he should not be anxious as to his pay! He has chosen a life of self-sacrifice, let him be content to live it. But there are many successful business men who recognize the importance of church leadership and believe the pastor of a church is worthy of a far more liberal support than most of them now receive.

Let us go back in this narrative to the place where I said that I could see no promising future for old age support. Life insurance may be one way of providing an estate for those he leaves behind, but that is more than many can afford. It was about this time that The Pilgrim Memorial Fund was being raised and a plan of annuities was set in motion.

The plan was this. The minister paid 25 per cent of the cost of the annuity, the Pilgrim Memorial Fund paid 48 per cent, and gifts from the churches and individuals provided 27 per cent. Thus a minister who had served this denomination for not less than 30 years would have an annuity of $500.00 for the balance of his life, and his widow would have $300.00. This means $10.00 a week, which sum removes the retired minister from the need of charity and he has a right to

SUFFOLK LETTER.

By the kindness of the Nominating Committee and the thoughtfulness of the President I was not elected to membership on any Board or appointed to service on any Committee of the Southern Convention for the next biennium. After a continuous official service covering nearly forty years it is a relief to be free from these responsibilities. This retirement is accepted graciously.

The present trend of leadership is a departure from the purpose of the founders of the Convention. And the latest proposed change as published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN of May 26th goes still further astray. We have had enough tinkering with our organization for the present. Those ambitious pulpit orators and platform speakers who are dissatisfied with the size of the audiences in our church assemblies will have to be patient for a long time. No living minister of 1938 will ever see the constituency of the Southern Convention much larger than it is today, unless some great leader, not yet discovered, arises to challenge and arouse the churches to a new conquest of spiritual forces. It cannot grow, in a large way, under any of the existing plans or processes advocated and adopted. The church grows by the law of life. This is not said in a spirit of criticism. It is a simple statement of fact which must be admitted by any person conversant with church history. There must be a return to the fundamentals of the Christian faith and the deeper spiritual experience. No kind of an organization can be a substitute for dynamic Christian preaching and genuine Christian living. But the crudest type of organization cannot prevent the over-flow, nor stop the growth of the kind of power available for the church that will pay the price.

Again and again the thought comes to me, as it came so often, during the recent Convention, while I was ill in the hospital: "Why doesn't someone pay the price and turn on the power switch?" The disciples had spiritual life before Pentecost—but not power. It would be interesting to know who was leading in prayer when the power came. It was probably Peter. He turned on the switch and the power came. That is one need, and until we face this fact, and reach up and out for a Divine uplift, we are helpless. Let us lay aside our quibbling machinery; let us stop tinkering with the motor; turn on the switch and get the power for the pulpit, the school and the church.

I. W. JOHNSON.

"THE WHITE PILGRIM'S" HISTORY IS REVIEWED FROM DIARY RECORD.

By DR. J. A. HUNTER.

I have in my possession, temporarily, a very interesting book, printed in the year 1818, which contains a diary carefully written by one of the most interesting characters ever produced in this section of the state.

At the beginning of the last century an innovation in religious procedure was made at a camp meeting in the state of Kentucky, which influenced many sections of the Southern states. A period of religious emphasis, call it a revival of religion, if you wish, was associated with a camp meeting to which came farmers from great distances, accompanied by their families. These families lived in tents throughout the duration of the revival. Such a powerful transformation was manifest that the movement spread far and wide. The first was held at Crossroads in our county.

In 1805, such a meeting was held at Haw Fields, when a sixteen year old boy was deeply impressed. During an illness some years previous he had promised to follow the Christian life if he recovered his health. However, he had not fulfilled his promise.

"On the first day of the meeting I went early to the place where I saw the wagons coming in from different directions and the people arranging their tents in different places on the grounds. I sat on a log by myself and felt deep concern for the salvation of my soul."

Preachers of various churches were present. The first speaker was from the state of Georgia. Before he had finished his sermon our boy was deeply stirred, and "many were begging for mercy." A second minister addressed the assembly but his preaching was drowned out by "the cries of the mourners and the shouts of the Christians." The boy was under deep conviction, returned for the "candle-light" service, and later had a very restless night. The next day he decided to plough but at eleven o'clock in the morning stabled his team and went to the services. He was converted, not at the meeting but at his home a month later.

He went to his neighbors and told them of his new experience, he addressed numerous groups but with much misgiving on his part.

In the year 1807 at the age of sixteen years and nine months he started out as a missionary. His first tour was in Southeastern Virginia, in the rural sections near Norfolk, Suffolk, and Portsmouth. He mentions several times a Reverend Barrett and was associated at various times with James O'Kelly and with Rev. Benjamin Rainey, whose tomb is in a private cemetery near the Burlington Mills. Later he was robed entirely in white and was called "The White Pilgrim."

In various towns he did missionary work, in western North Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland and New Jersey. He preached in churches but seemed to prefer services in a home, to which the neighbors were invited to participate in the service. In his diary he gives many observations of his personal and religious experiences. He mentions Apple's Chapel, Yanceyville, Hillsboro and other places. Of course, he does not mention Burlington because our thriving city was then made up of several plantations. There was no railroad and as a consequence his travels were on horse-back or on foot. His work helped to establish a new church organization now known as the "Christian."

This sixteen-year-old boy continued his tours for 28 years until his career on earth came to a close. We must admire his courage, his perseverance under many trying circumstances, his consistency and his self-sacrificing labors. The name of this pilgrim was Joseph Thomas and some of his grand-nephews are now living in our midst.

NOTE: In submitting the above for publication in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Dr. Hunter adds, "In the Christian Church at Haw River is a memorial window with a full-length portrayal of the White Pilgrim.

The diary to which reference was made in the opening paragraph is the property of Mr. George Thomas, of Burlington. Two copies of the diary—printed and bound—are in the library of the University of North Carolina." J. O. A.

RELIGION SUPPORTED BY SCHOLARSHIP.

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

"It is true that, while all scholars have not been devotees of religion, many of the best scholars in every period of recorded history have been interested in and devotees of religion." This, in substance, was the declaration of Dr. W. P. Paterson to our class in the "Philosophy of Religion" when I was a student in 1913-14, in the University of Edinburgh, Scotland. The fact that Dr. Paterson, then Dean of the University, was recognized as the outstanding Scottish theologian of that time, and as one of the three greatest students of philosophy in Scotland, and one of the world's recognized leaders in scholarship, makes his observation of more than ordinary interest. Dr. Paterson contended that history would support the conclusion that "the more enlightened the period, the greater the concern the scholarship of the period showed in spiritual values."

The highest scholarship may not have been on the side of religion. But how different would history read if organized religion had always been on the side of scholarship! The highest religion has always been on the side of the highest scholarship in every period of history, and likewise is the reverse true. True reason has always supported true religion, and true religion has always supported true reason.

Many of the scholars who have been excommunicated from the Church because of their intellectual deductions and pronouncements were more truly religious than the religious organization which denounced them. Scholars have been condemned as enemies to religious faith because their faith enabled them to see more than the Church which condemned them wanted to see. Thus the men condemned as heretics by one generation have been canonized as saints by the next—and "the truth of religion" has gone marching on, enlisting among its devotees the greatest scholars as well as the simplest folk of each period of time.

The fact that the best in scholarship has supported Christianity does not increase the truth of Christianity—but that fact argues for the truth which Christianity claims to possess.

While I was pastor for six years at the seat of one of the two largest state universities in America, the last year of which time being Chaplain of the university, I frequently came in touch with a certain type of student whose number seems to be increasing at the present time—students who flout religion. I have many times in later years in special work among college student bodies met this type of student, who is best described as being of the Sophomoric mind—though not always in the Sophomore year. Some of them take pride in flouting religion—some discredit and ridicule religion—some simply ignore religion—while some concede that religion may be of concern to those who do not know so much as they do.

Every pastor has met this type of young person. The observation previously referred to, which was made by Dr. Paterson, the noted Scottish scholar, should be of sufficient challenge to embryonic scholars to cause them at least to "think it over," and observe contemporary scholarship to see whether or not, on their own respective campus, the observation made by Dr. Paterson will hold true.

Personally I believe it will hold true in practically every college or university today; the professors who hold the highest scholarship—except in some rare exceptions which might prove the rule—will be found to be devotees of religious faith.

This being true, it is no credit to an undergraduate's scholarship standing for him to discredit or ignore religion, the most Sophomoric-minded would readily acknowledge that many who knew at least "a little more" than they can personally boast of knowing "as yet" are not only ardent believers in the "truth of religion," as Eucken expressed it in the title of his great book several years ago, but that many of their intellectual superiors make religion the major concern of their lives, carrying out the injunction of Jesus—"Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness." When young students of the type of mind referred to are approached in this manner without any apology, presenting life facts for their consideration instead of mere theories or speculation, really worthwhile students appreciate the challenge involved.

What students, who are in the church, whether they are "A" or "C" students, should do is to "have a reason" for the faith that is within them, and be ready at any time to "stand up and be counted on God's side." No young person needs to apologize for believing in the power of religion or for being a disciple of Jesus Christ, for in the fellowship of Christian believers are found the leading scholars of our nation.

It should bolster up the faith of any apologetically religious student today to learn that Wilbur Huston, the young scientist who was chosen a few years ago from all the students of his educational training in America as the one best qualified to be the successor of Thomas A. Edison; it should bolster up the faith of any apologetically religious students today to learn that this same Wilbur Huston believes so much the "reasonableness of Christianity" that he has decided to give his life in religious work instead of in the field of engineering for which he is so abundantly well qualified by technical training and adeptness. Some of the students of lesser intellectual caliber, who scoff at religion, might well pause to reflect on their attitude toward religion as compared with the attitude of Wilbur Huston, "the young wizard in both electrical and mechanical engineering," the outstanding honor student in each of the three educational institutions from which he graduated."

The following clipping taken from a recent editorial of a secular paper in the middle west offers food for real thought:

"Often the name of some one prominently played up on front pages is forgotten in a short time. For instance, do you recall the boy genius of Seattle, selected from a field of 1,400 applicants to succeed the late Thomas A. Edison, in 1929?

"He was accepted with the belief that he had the ability, ambition, and integrity it would take to follow in the footsteps of so great a man as Thomas A. Edison, known the world over as 'the electrical wizard.'

"After a brilliant record in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and a successful experience as a consulting engineer, Huston is now turning from science to devote his life to religion.

"'Instead of building better and bigger bridges and machines,' says young Huston, 'the present day's need is to build individuals.' In his opinion the world needs electrical engineers, but needs social engineers more.

"For the second time in his short career, the name Wilbur Huston is before the public. His future spent in building character will be watched with great interest.

"As Wilbur Huston so aptly puts it, 'The light that men need to guide them in these confusing days is not the kind that comes from the electric bulb.'"

"If each church would take a measure of its strength—form an estimate of its resources—and then outline a program of work worthy of its strength, we could do a thousand times more work than we are doing."

HISTORY WORTH REPEATING.

Most likely CHRISTIAN SUN readers will be amazed and gratified, as the writer of this was, to learn that the "White Pilgrim" wrote and preserved a diary, three copies of which are known to exist, one owned by a descendent; the other two—printed and bound—in the Library of the University of North Carolina. For this find, and the sketch given in another column, we are grateful to Dr. Hunter. The "White Pilgrim" (Rev. Joseph Thomas) was actively identified with the beginnings of our history as "Christians" here in the South and the names given in his diary with whom he associated—James O'Kelly, the Barretts and others. We are not wishing to repeat in this column the facts noted by Dr. Hunter, but to call attention to a fact of history that we sorely need to bear in mind in our day. The ministers of our early church and history followed and repeated the experience and history of the early disciples of our Lord: "And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following."

While it is true that the world progresses and even "time makes ancient good uncouth," there is no better teacher for the present, and guide for the future, than the actual facts and experiences of history. The church of the present, Christian churches of our own, or other types and forms, are not moving forward, or if moving at all, are doing so at a slow pace.

The note and mark of real progress in the church in all decades of the past has been evangelism. A church must evangelize (if history teaches us anything) or it stands still, stagnates, goes backward. This is not to say that evangelism alone is enough. It is a beginning and the banner under which the church moves forward. The Cross is yet and must ever remain the sign under which the church conquers and makes the forward march.

As indicated, evangelism alone is not enough, but it is a beginning in the right direction. As "charity begins at home," but loses its virtue and vitality if it remains there, so evangelism begins with the individual, but fails of its purpose if it remains with the individual. The gate of evangelism is an entrance into the Kingdom, but only an entrance. He who enters by that gate must press forward if he is to stay within the gate and become, as is his privilege, a real part and factor in building up the Kingdom of God on earth. Scripture still stands and emphatically declares, to each and all, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." Salvation is not one's own until it is made so by the gift, grace and pardon of our Lord Jesus Christ. One coming into possession of salvation through such gift and experience has then, as one's very own that which he is enjoined to "work out with fear and trembling."

One can not live in one's own house until he has a house of his own in which to live. One can not work out his own salvation that one does not have, nor work into it, as for that matter, except as it is given by the grace of God.

All of us in the church naturally wish to see the church go forward. It takes neither prophet, nor the son of a prophet, but merely a glance at history, for one to declare emphatically the church will go forward when it again puts evangelism, through an experience in Jesus Christ, at the beginning and as a solid foundation on which to stand and to build. "Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our Faith."—(Hebrews 12:1, 2.)

Mission Secretary.

THE MISSIONARY IMPULSE.

The missionary impulse is first of all a religious impulse; missionary endeavor is the outward projection of heart-felt love for God and man. The logical end of a religious revival is the beginning of a missionary campaign. In the sequence of church history great missionary movements have arisen out of creative periods in the life of the home church. Any course of missionary education which fails to take account of this central fact will lack the primary impulse to missionary service, the spiritual glow without which no missionary enterprise can hope to succeed. Conversely, every quickening of Christian life or strengthening of religious purpose in an individual or a congregation provides a fresh opportunity for successful missionary education.

For the religious impulse must needs be fertilized by the missionary idea if it is to bear fruit in missionary service and support. Sometimes that idea seems to lie inherent in the circumstances of the hour. The eighteenth century revival went flaming through England at the very time when the British Empire, through her soldiers and sailors, was reaching out to the ends of the earth. The new Gospel message was literally carried around the world on the wings of the wind and the waves of the sea. Explorers like Captain Cook became indirectly servants of the Gospel, pointing the way to its world-wide application. Out of these numerous world contacts, acting upon recently aroused religious feeling, arose the world movement of modern missions. Similarly, during a period of expanding settlement on the American continent great religious revivals issued in nation-wide expansion of home mission effort in the United States and Canada.

The church which has set herself to make this a Christ-like world must accept it as a primary duty to let her membership know what the world is like today. Details of the picture must be filled in so that real understanding may produce sympathy and fellowship between the Christian church and all communities, peoples and areas of life that are without Christ.

Two other elements in the missionary equation exactly match each other: they are the purpose of God and the needs of man. Ultimately, the claim of Christian missions rests down upon the unity of God and his eternal purpose for the world of men. Over against that purpose lies the need of our common humanity. The answer to that need can be summed up in the one word redemption.—The Missionary Review of the World.

HALIFAX DISTRICT RALLY.

The women of the Halifax District of the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference held their Spring Rally with the Virgilina Church, Virgilina, Va., April 6, 1938, with excellent attendance.

The meeting was called to order by the district superintendent, Mrs. B. J. Earp, of Ingram. The program, "The Supreme Challenge of the Church," carried the theme, "To Give a Garland, Instead of Ashes," throughout the day in message and song.

The following ministers, humorously introduced by Rev. B. J. Earp, were present: Revs. C. E. Newman and J. Howard Smith. The absence of some of our ministers was regretted.

The superintendent's message was ably delivered by Miss Margaret Earp, a senior of Elon College. She tended to show how harmony and co-operation must exist between the Church and the missionary society, if we are to function in the highest and truest manner.

The Rally was fortunate to have Mrs. Lucy Gregory as soloist. Her selection, "O, Love, That Will Not Let Me Go," was beautifully rendered.

The address of the morning was delivered by our own Southern field worker, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill. Her appropriate message, "Saved to Serve," was presented with sincerity and in a charming way.

The devotional period was in charge of Mrs. C. V. Dunn, of the Ingram Church, based on Isaiah 61:1-3.

The ladies of the entertaining church served a delicious and bountiful dinner under the beautiful trees of the church lawn. The afternoon address, an inspiring message prepared by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, entitled, "Good Tidings," was read by Miss Margaret Earp.

Messages and reports of "Our Mountain Work" were brought by Rev. B. J. Earp, and Mrs. Elsie Bray, a former workers in our mountain churches in Carroll County, Va. An informal period of questions and discussion gave us a comprehensive insight of the habits and needs of our mountain folk.

The following officers were elected: Superintendent, Mrs. B. J. Earp, Ingram; Secretary, Mrs. S. R. Gay, Lynchburg, Va.

By invitation the meeting next year is to be with the Congregational-Christian Church, Lynchburg, Va.

MISSIONARY FOR SUMMER CONFERENCES.

Peculiar interest attaches in these days to the Japanese Christians, and so a man, who, like Rev. William P. Woodard, of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, in Osaka, has spent over 15 years living with the Japanese, can interpret many things to Americans. Mr. Woodard, home on furlough, will teach in the Summer Conferences as follows:

Florida Conference, June 4-11; Grandview, Tenn., June 14-21; Elon College, June 27-July 2; Georgia, July 4-9.

When Mr. Woodard first went to Japan, his duties were primarily evangelistic, but along with this distinctly religious work, he got close to the boys and girls through summer camps. He also toured the country speaking and showing films in small villages, including the moving picture of "The Life of Christ." He found people interested in this film even where there was but one Christian family in a town.

After being stationed at Sapporo for a time, Mr. Woodard was transferred to Seoul, Korea, for special service among the Japanese there, and he did not return to Japan until 1935, when he was stationed in Osaka at the headquarters of the Kumial Churches (Congregational) as secretary of Evangelism and Education. In this work he has made a careful study of the life and growth of the Japanese Congregational and Christian churches. His duties, too, have made necessary considerable travel and wherever he went he chatted with the people finding that the average Japanese got his idea of America and Americans from movies, sensational papers, and cheap shows.

Born in Kalamazoo, Mich., Mr. Woodard was educated at Kalamazoo College, and later took work at Union Seminary. He served during the Great War in the army.

LOCUSTS, SNAKES, ELEPHANTS, CHRISTIAN SCHOOLS AND HOMES MAKE INTERESTING COMBINATION IN AFRICA.

By DOROTHY P. CUSHING.

Locusts that swarmed into the compartment of a train; and a cobra, which paid an unwelcome visit to his home, figures in news from Arthur J. Orner, of Chikore, East Africa.

Mr. Orner went back after furlough under the American Board of Foreign Missions last November. Shortly after dark, the train on which he was traveling to Umtali from the seaport of Beira, ran through a large swarm of locusts which had settled on the tall grass and trees by the side of the lines.

"Before the windows could be closed, the compartments were literally overrunning with insects, hopping madly about and being crushed under foot at almost every step as we rushed about trying to get rid of them," writes Mr. Orner.

The youngest members of the family are taught by Mrs. Orner, using a correspondence course, which the Rhodesian government sends to white children in remote parts of the country.

The older Orner children are away from home. The two youngest, Henry and Betty, have forgotten about Chikore during their year of furlough in America, and so are deeply interested in everything. In fact, Father Orner says that they are too much interested because they are hardly old enough to know what is dangerous.

"A few days ago," he writes, "they came in to report that they had seen a snake go under a tin tub outside and that when Betty removed the tub to have a good look the snake had run out and then back again. I rather discounted the story—thinking it was probably a lizard—but went out to investigate, picking up a stick just to be sure. When I moved the tub, out came a cobra—one of our most dangerous snakes, but one which, fortunately, is not very common here!"

With responsibility for the supervision of 17 Kraal schools, employing 35 teachers, and with approximately 1,300 children, Mr. Orner has to do a great deal of traveling in the bush. He also has to conduct the final examinations, which is a real job, especially as it comes at the hottest season of the year when the heat in the low-lying Sabi Valley is apt to be intense.

"Often on these trips where a white face is almost never seen, I think of you in America and wish that you might be along for a time
