James L. Cash, local furniture dealer, has been attending Sunday school without an absence for such a long time that the conclusion of another year of perfect attendance no longer excites unusual interest. Tomorrow will mark the end of a record of 39 years of perfect Sunday school attendance.

Cash is a member of the Congregational-Christian Sunday school. When out of town on Sunday he always attends Sunday school wherever he may be and frequently he visits other local Sunday schools.

Reduced to statistics, Cash has attended Sunday school without a single absence for 1,928 consecutive Sundays. Based on a 30-day month, this record is equal to slightly more than 64 months or more than five years of Sundays—From a recent issue of a Durham, N. C., paper.

The Convention says: "Secure 3,000 Subscriptions"

The Southern Convention asked the Conferences for 3,000 subscriptions to "The Christian Sun" and apportioned them as follows:

North Carolina and Virginia, 1,050	Eastern Virginia, 1,050
Western North Carolina, 325	Valley of Virginia, 225
Eastern North Carolina, 350

The Conferences accepted their quotas and apportioned the subscriptions to the churches.

It Can Be Done.

Even if these subscriptions are secured, two-thirds of our church families will not have the paper in their homes. It certainly is possible to get the paper into one-third of our homes.

Somebody said that it couldn't be done,
But he with a chuckle replied
That "maybe it couldn't," but he would be one
Who wouldn't say so till he'd tried.
So he buckled right in with the trace of a grin
On his face. If he worried he hid it.
He started to sing as he tackled the thing
That couldn't be done, and he did it.

It Should Be Done.

Church people should read their church paper. This is especially true of pastors, deacons, secretaries, treasurers, Sunday school superintendents, teachers, missionary leaders, and young people. Many of them never have, but they all should.

Somebody scoffed: "Oh, you'll never do that;
At least no one ever has done it;"
But he took off his coat and he took off his hat,
And the first thing we knew he'd begun it.
With a lift of his chin and a bit of a grin,
Without any doubting or quiddit,
He started to sing as he tackled the thing
That couldn't be done, and he did it.

Let It Be Done Now.

Since we didn't do it yesterday, and cannot do it tomorrow, let's get the subscriptions now. The people need to read and the paper needs subscriptions. Without fear of failure just strike right out to get the subscribers for your church and you will be delighted when this work is done.

There are thousands to tell you it cannot be done,
There are thousands to prophesy failure;
There are thousands to point out to you one by one
The dangers that wait to assail you.
But just buckle in with a bit of a grin,
Just take off your coat and go to it;
Just start to sing as you tackle the thing
That "cannot be done," and you'll do it.

The Churches respond: "We Will Do It"

"Our only rule of
faith and practice."

Hymn for a Father and Son Service

By Rev. OSCAR EDWARD MAURER, D. D.
(Moderator General Council.)

Fathers and sons, in faith together standing,
Pledge new allegiance to the Lord of Lords.
Loyal to Christ, rejoice in his commanding:
Show that your living faith is more than words.

Fathers and sons, in prayer together kneeling,
Open your hearts; make your petitions known;
Voice join to voice, your inmost needs revealing;
Doubt not new strength is granted from the throne.

Fathers and sons, put on the Christian armor,
Gird on the Spirit's sword and face the foe;
Never faint-hearted, scorn each weak alarmer;
Shoulder to shoulder into battle go.

Fathers and sons, the Church of Christ is waiting,
Waiting for valiant, fearless men, and true.
Lovers of right, all foul injustice hating;
Clear comes the ringing call of Christ to you.

Father of men, make keen our ears to hear thee,
Make swift our feet to answer to thy call;
Win thou our hearts till we no longer fear thee.
But follow gladly, sons and fathers all.

Tune: "Ancient of Days."

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

On next Sunday evening Dr. James R. Clinton of Philadelphia, will be the speaker at the Burlington, N. C., Church.

Rev. W. J. Andes is spending this week at his home in Harrisonburg, Va., and attended the Valley Sunday School Convention at Winchester.

Next Sunday is the day set apart in honor of our Fathers. In various ways, churches and groups will seek to bring joy to this member of the family.

The preachers of Eastern Virginia hold their annual picnic at Lake Prince, near Suffolk, on Friday of this week. This is always a jolly occasion.

Rev. B. J. Earp and his people at Ingram, Va., are this week conducting a Vacation Church School. Miss Clarene Andes of Harrisonburg is aiding them in this work.

Under the leadership of Mrs. O. C. Brown, Pleasant Ridge Sunday school had a Children's Day program on last Sunday. At that time they made an offering to the Board of Christian Education.

Rev. Emanuel Hedgebeth was the preacher the past two Sundays at the Elon College Community Church. Mr. Hedgebeth graduated from Elon at the recent commencement. Dr. L. E. Smith, president of the college, is pastor of the church.

If you need help in conducting a Vacation Church School in your own church, write to the Board of Christian Education, Elon College, N. C., and ask for what you need. You may not get all you want, but the board will do its best to help.

The First Church, Greensboro, will commission their young people who attend the Elon Leadership Training School at a special church service on next Sunday evening. Following the Elon school, their Vacation Bible School will begin and run for two weeks.

The Congregational and Christian Church people will hold services in the Park Street School of Ashboro, N. C., at eight o'clock next Sunday evening. They expect to have new hymn books for the occasion. All those interested in the work at Ashboro are invited.

The Lynchburg Church held its Children's Day program last Sunday. Among those taking part were Matilda Chambers, Evelyn and Frances Gallier, Roberta Harris, Ruth Dunn, Arline Daniel, and Oma F. Talley, Jr. A talk was also made by the superintendent, Mr. J. W. Tolley.

The annual observance of Children's Day at Burlington Christian Church took place last Sunday at the 11 o'clock hour, when the children of the Sunday school and church, assisted by several young people and adults, and the Junior Choir, presented the pageant, "That Joy May Be." The program was under the direction of Miss Julia Woodson.

The most important thing happening in the Southern Convention next week is the Elon Summer School of Leadership Training. All pastors should share in their school, and join with the young people and church leaders in a week of good fellowship. Be sure that your pastor is able to go, and that some young people and church leaders go with him. That is the way to train your leaders and strengthen your church.

Leaders from five churches near Franklinton, N. C., met on Friday night of last week at the Christian Church in Youngsville to consider forming a pastorate. Decisions of the leaders gathered there must be confirmed by vote of the churches before they become effective. The decision was to form the pastorate, to accept the offer of the Southern Convention for the pastor to use the parsonage at Franklinton, and to ask Rev. S. E. Madren to become the pastor.

CHURCH ORGANIZED AT HOPE MILLS, N. C.

About three years ago a group of Christian people in Hope Mills, N. C., erected a building and began holding Sunday school. In recent months there has developed a decided sentiment that there should be a church as well as Sunday school. Consideration was given to the Congregational Church, and the Easter sermon that was broadcast by our Raleigh church so appealed to the people who heard it that they wrote to the pastor, Rev. Allyn P. Robinson, Jr., stating that they wanted to become a Congregational church. Mr. Robinson passed this letter on to the Promotional Secretary who immediately contacted the Hope Mills people, and began work with them.

On Saturday night of last week, officers were elected as follows: secretary, Miss Mattie McArthur; treasurer, Mrs. Joel Johnson; pianist, Miss Helen Johnson; sexton, Walker Evans; deacons, Claude Smith, Elmer Culbreth and Walker Evans; trustees, John S. Ray, Joel Johnson, Elmer Culbreth, L. E. Woodson and Murphey Brown; ushers, Robert Townsend, Howard Brown and Claude Smith; and church reporter, Miss Mary Herring.

Thirty-seven names are on the Charter Membership Roll, and there are good prospects for others to be added soon. The nice little building was practically filled on Sunday for the ordination of deacons, the first communion service, and the dedication of the building. The local choir and a children's choir from the Episcopal church both rendered excellent music. The services of Sunday were led by the Promotional Secretary. Rev. Allyn P. Robinson, Jr., Raleigh, gave the dedicatory address. Rev. W. J. Andes worked in the community three days last week and aided in the business on Saturday night. Mr. L. E. Woodson spoke for the local church at the dedication. The pastor of the Church of God brought greetings from the churches, and Mr. L. L. Vaughan spoke the greetings of the Eastern North Carolina Conference.

WILL YOU BE THERE?

Jesus told an interesting story of a man who spread a feast and invited guests who would not come. Some of them thought more of cattle and land and marriage than they did of the feast. They had little tasks of their own to perform and had no time to eat with the King. It is a strange story.

But no more strange than things that will likely happen next week in our churches hereabouts. By hard effort and considerable sacrifice leaders of our Church have planned a wonderful opportunity for pastors, Sunday school superintendents and teachers, missionary leaders, and young people at our college next week. Advertisement has gone, to these leaders in local churches, and urgent invitations have been given. Teachers have prepared to give their very best to those who may sit in the classes at Elon, and many of them will travel for long distances. The college has everything in readiness to welcome the people. In fact the table is all set for a fine week of study, worship, fellowship, and spiritual renewal.

But, unless this year is different from all the rest, many of the pastors, most of the superintendents and teachers, and many others will go steadily on attending to cattle, considering land, and sharing in social pleasures without making much effort to be a part of the group who will search for God at the college.

Your church paper is not blessing you out. It is trying to tell you that unless you share in the summer conferences of your Church, you are missing one of the very best things that the Church has to offer. It is insisting that you should be among the sons of God when prayer is to be made and study to be done.

Elon is just one of the many such conferences and training schools being conducted for our Church people. A revival of study, fellowship, and willingness to be among the leaders will transform our Church in this area.

PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP

In most of our Conferences across the country the young people are organized for fellowship, study, and work. This is a modern movement in our Church. It has grown up with the present generation. It is not perfected, but it is growing.

It is the purpose of the Pilgrim Fellowship both nationally and in the conferences to aid young people in becoming the best that they can be. Plans are carefully laid to aid each other in personal religious development, in rendering service in the local church and through the denomination, in being a useful part of the Church universal, and in making the Christian ideal effective in all phases of life as it is lived in the world today.

Many of the young people in our churches are unwilling to be an insignificant and ignored part of the Church. They want to think, to speak, and to act. Religion, for them, is not static. It is dynamic; it is powerful; it is explosive. Simply to attend church, give as they are told, and perhaps to have some small share in the annual revival meeting is not satisfying. They want to think things through, make plans and execute them, and in every way be part of the real Church.

One fine characteristic of the Pilgrim Fellowship is that it is broad in its vision. With the courage of the Pilgrims they seek fellowship with all who are working for the right. Play and study and worship are enjoyed in the local group. But that is not enough for the modern Pilgrim. The world must be shared and enjoyed. Conference and country and continent are but parts of the world in which we live. The Pilgrim Fellowship is daring to undertake a friendship that includes people everywhere. American young people love Madam Chaing Kaishek and the young people of China. Their hearts beat in sympathy with German youth. White and black know that they must live close together; they desire to be friends rather than enemies. Old dividing lines no longer separate these modern Pilgrims who share in fellowship.

Those of us who are older need not fear youth. We may need to question our ability to lead them. They need guidance, and seek it. They want to find channels of Christian service and the best methods of work. They will listen to reason, but they have little patience with prejudice. The best young people in our churches are desperately anxious to render Christ-like service in the Church. It is our business to aid them in finding the paths that lead men to God.

A NEW CHURCH ORGANIZED

Sunday was a big day for this writer and for the people of Hope Mills, N. C. The writer led both services. In the morning three deacons were ordained and the communion was observed. In the afternoon the building was dedicated. Rev. Allyn P. Robinson, Jr., of Raleigh delivered the dedicatory address, and Professor L. L. Vaughan, chairman of the committee on home missions of the Eastern N. C. Conference, gave the greetings of the Conference to the new church of thirty-seven members.

At a business session on Saturday night officers were elected. The First Congregational Christian Church of Hope Mills, N. C., is now ready for active service. The people have built the house of worship, paid for it, and dedicated it. Now they are ready to become part of the Conference and to do the work of a church. It is a fine group of people, and they have an attractive building in which to worship.

On next Sunday Rev. Julius Shepherd, a student at Elon College, will preach for them, and on Monday will take some of the young people to the Elon Leadership Conference.

A new church has come to life among us. It is a challenge for the others to take on new life, and to be worthy of the new church.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

This is the third and last of a series of articles on "The Meaning of Church Membership." The first discussed, "Becoming a Christian"; the second, "Joining the Church"; and this, "Duties of a Church Member."

The first duty of a church member is baptism. In the Christian Churches members are received into fellowship before being baptized. Baptism is regarded as a symbol of a public consecration of the life to Jesus Christ, and of a purpose to do the will of God. Two modes of baptism are recognized by the various churches of the world, viz., immersion and sprinkling or pouring. The Christian denomination leaves the mode of baptism to the wish of each candidate, believing that the fact is more to be emphasized than the form.

The communion service should be observed by every member of the church who seeks to grow in grace. Jesus definitely commanded his followers to "do this in remembrance of Me." In a long experience as pastor this writer has observed that many people decline to partake of the Lord's Supper because of erroneous interpretations of Paul's counsel. The minister should carefully explain Paul's meaning of "eating unworthily." He was referring to the manner of eating and drinking, and not to unworthy persons. No one is worthy to come into His presence.

Church attendance is vital to the growth of a Christian. Can a child receive the best education by remaining away from school? Surely the child who expects to be benefitted by the public school must attend it and submit to the discipline and guidance of the teachers. The same law of development operates in our relation to the church. The church offers the best religious instruction and fellowship on earth. Attend the church and take part in its worship.

Supporting the church by giving to its various enterprises, regularly and systematically, is conducive to spiritual growth. Give of your means as God has prospered you. Children who unite with the church should begin at once to give to the support of the local church. The amount of the contribution may be small, but it should be given freely and gladly. Every young person should be taught to make money, to save money and to give money. Thrift, economy, and liberality are three commendable financial objectives.

Christian living is the chief objective of a broad-minded Christian. Paul said: "For me to live is Christ." Jesus said: "I am come that they might have life." Salvation is desirable not because it saves one from hell, or spiritual death, but because it saves one from sin and endues one with power to live a richer, deeper, fuller life. Reading the Bible and daily prayer are indispensable to spiritual living. One cannot urge too strongly the importance of being able to say: "Thy word have I hid in mine heart that I might not sin against Thee." And the daily private devotion will greatly strengthen one in the time of temptation and trial.

Many other duties might be named. These are only a few, in a broad outline. It should be the daily desire to be worthy of the honor of being a member of the church of the living God. What a company of church members encircle the earth. The great and the small, the rich and the poor, the strong and the weak—all these mingle their voices in praise and prayer to carry on the work of the kingdom of God on the earth. Many are untrue to their vows and are not worthy to be mentioned, for they are tares among the wheat and volves in sheep's clothing. But the promise is: "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life."

WHERE SHALL I GO TO COLLEGE.

This is a perennial question with young people who have completed high school work and with parents of these young people. Years ago the selection of a college was quite largely in the hands of parents. Parents paid the bills, and they reserved the right to say where the children should go. In more recent years high school graduates are not looked upon as children. They are looked upon as young men and young women capable of making their own decisions and selecting their own colleges. Even though parents continue to pay bills, they are inclined to grant to their sons and daughters this personal prerogative.

It is necessary for the college to sell itself to the high school generation of today. The only way for a college to sell itself is to make its equipment attractive, its curriculum inclusive, its teaching force effective, and its graduates superior. If the graduates are able to excel in the fields for which they have been prepared, they become successful and irresistible salesmen for the colleges in which they have been prepared for their respective responsibilities. Excellencies for success are by no means confined to courses and grades but must include initiative developed to a successful degree and morals and character above question. Positions open to college graduates are demanding not only trained minds but good habits and clean hands. The college graduate who succeeds today must not only know what is necessary to pass an examination in the classroom, but he must know how to meet the tests in society and must be at home and know how to take part in a church service.

The church-related school of today is taking its place in the program of higher education in a more telling way than in previous years. If the Boards of Trustees, the faculties, and the administrations of church related schools will have the courage to stand firmly for those factors contributory to morals and religion, they will encounter no serious difficulty in not only maintaining the present prestige but year after year will see the demands for the type of training that they give rapidly increasing. The world has not gone to the Devil and the dogs. There are still opportuni-

FOR THE CHILDREN

GOODWILL DAY.

By AUGUSTA THURSTON.

Bobby gazed wistfully from the lighthouse window toward the shore. He felt as if he had been shut in forever. He had been kept in by a broken leg in a cast and was not yet allowed to try the difficult steps up and down from the lighthouse.

Bobby lived on the lighthouse with his father and mother and his brother and sisters, Jim, Sally and Jane. Bobby's father was lighthouse keeper and Bobby's mother, his assistant. Once his father's assistant had been a man but when the assistant had been taken sick Bobby's mother had taken his place for weeks and then took an examination and was officially appointed assistant, the first woman assistant lighthouse keeper ever appointed in this part of the country.

What fun they had on the lighthouse and what games they played. And how they helped father and mother keep everything polished up spick and span as it must be in a lighthouse. Every day they went back and forth in a little motor boat to the mainland to school.

But now Bobby felt as if he had been away from school for months. Today was Goodwill Day. The school was going to have a Goodwill party. The children were going to dress in costumes of many other lands and tell stories and sing songs of children in other countries and play games that they had played. They were going to listen to the message of the Goodwill which the children of Wales broadcast every year to children all over the world and this year the school was going to send a reply to the children of Wales.

Bobby could imagine each part of it as he looked out over the water. The party must be over by this time and he watched eagerly for the boat bringing back his sisters and brothers.

Soon he heard the put-put of the engine—then another, then another. What was this? There seemed to be several boats coming across to the lighthouse. As they drew nearer Bobby's eyes grew bigger. Why, there were boatloads of the school children, a gay sight dressed in their bright colored costumes of many countries. They landed and ran merrily up the steps to the lighthouse calling "You couldn't come to our Goodwill party so we brought a Goodwill party to you."

Bobby's eyes shone with excitement as he watched them troop in—French, Dutch, Italian, Chinese, Japanese, Spanish, German, Turkish and many other costumes. What a jolly time they had. They performed for him their songs and stories and recitations just as they had at the big party. Bobby's mother gave them lemonade and cake.

Last of all one boy got up before an improvised microphone, rigged up from a lamp stand and a small saucepan. He was dressed in a Welsh costume and pretending to be one of the children of Wales he gave again the message they had heard broadcast this Goodwill Day.

"This is Wales calling. The boys and girls of Wales are calling the boys and girls of all the world.

"We rejoice to think that above the tumult, on this one day of the year, we can greet each other as members of one great family, the family of the nations of the future.

"The world is full of suffering, cruelty and strife. And we are told that civilization may perish. Let us tell the world that civilization shall not perish. More than ever the world needs what we alone can give—the confidence and comradeship of youth.

"May we then, on this Goodwill Day, dedicate ourselves afresh to the service of our fellows in ever widening circles. "So shall we, millions of us, grow up to be the friends of all, the enemies of none."—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

THE WORLD.

Great, wide, beautiful world,
With the wonderful water around you curled,
And the wonderful grass upon your breast,
World, you are wonderfully drest.

The wonderful air is over me,
And the wonderful wind is shaking the tree;
It walks on the water, and whirls the mills,
And talks to itself on the tops of the hills.

You friendly Earth! how far do you go
With the wheat fields that nod and the rivers that flow,
With cities and gardens, and cliffs and isles,
And people upon you for thousands of miles?

Ah, you are so great, and I so small,
I tremble to think of you, World, at all;

And yet when I said my prayers
today,

A whisper within me seemed to say:
"You are more than the earth, though you are such a dot;

You can love and think, and the Earth cannot!"

—Matthew Browne.

A LETTER FROM A SANATORIUM.

My Dear SUN Readers:

As I lie here day after day in the Sanatorium, pondering over the things of life, I often wonder why I have to be here away from my loved ones; and why I have to be sick. God knows best and He does all things well.

I have met many people here and to my sad surprise some are very wicked. They don't seem to be concerned about their souls. It seems that any one with such a dreadful disease as T. B. would be thinking of hereafter and realize that their life here may not be long, repent and try to live for Christ while they are here.

Here on our porch we have a little prayer service twice a week. While we are having it, others in the lobby adjoining our porch will be playing cards. You can't get some of them to take any part in a prayer service.

I often wonder why our ministers never visit here. I haven't seen but two ministers since I came here eight months ago. I often wish some minister would come in and have prayer with us and talk with us. I also hear that remark from others. It would cheer us very much. We lie here in bed day after day, read our Bibles, talk about them, and try to do the best we can, but no one ever comes in and discusses it with us or gives us a word of encouragement.

Jesus said, "I was a stranger, and ye took me not in; naked and ye clothed me not: sick and in prison, and ye visited me not. Then shall they also answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee hungry, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee? Then shall he answer them saying, Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not unto me." —(Matt. 25: 43-45.)

I am afraid we all miss doing what Jesus wants us to do, and live far from our calling. May God help us everyone to do our duty whatever the sacrifice may be. God bless everyone.

MRS. J. M. BAILEY,
Sanatorium, N. C.

CHANGES IN RELIGION.

Religion itself does not change, but religious practices do change. Verily, "Time makes ancient good uncouth." This writer is not an old man and yet since his early manhood many changes have come in the practice and conduct of religious people. Being a teacher in Elon College—less than forty-nine years ago—I was sent to a certain county in Virginia to see the parents of certain prospective students. Going to one home, that of a deacon in the church, after discussing the matter of sending his son to Elon, the good deacon took the writer out in the large back yard where a brandy still was in "full blast," pouring out its stream of "liquid fire." The deacon, owner and operator of the still, said, "You are not used to this in your section of the country, but I was trained to plant orchards, grow apples, make them into cider, distill it into brandy and sell it to all and sundry who might wish it. However, our good pastor is beginning to preach that it is not right for a deacon in the church to engage in the manufacture and sale of liquor. If he proves this to my satisfaction I shall certainly quit the business and turn my orchards into some other sort of produce, even if it should mean need and want to my family." In a very few years that deacon had been convinced by his pastor and he had gone out of the liquor business forever.

On this same trip the writer was carried a few miles to the parent of another student prospect. We found the man of the house out with his "still," going vigorously ahead in his manufacture of brandy from the produce of his orchard. After discussing with him the prospect of sending his son to Elon, he turned to the one who had carried us to his distillery and said, "Tom, I wish you to take the treasurer's book and see if you can collect some money next week on our pastor's salary. I am so sorry I cannot attend the revival next week, but I must run my still now as the season has come. I do hope they will have a good meeting and that there will be many converts and our pastor will be paid." And then turning to me he said, "Our good pastor is beginning to preach that an officer in the church ought not to engage in the manufacture and sale of liquor and if he convinces me that he is right according to the Bible I am going to give up stilling whiskey, though the sacrifice on my part will be a greater financial loss than I am able to stand if I am to educate my children." Well, his preacher convinced him, the son came on to college and the brandy distillery was abandoned and the orchard cut down and planted to productive crops.

My next visit on this trip and about two miles further on was to the home of a widow with some daughters, one of whom was ready for college. I was invited and asked to have a seat and mother would be in after awhile. After waiting half hour or more the widowed mother came in, flushed cheeked, warm and looking the picture of health. Immediately after being introduced she said, "Brother Atkinson, excuse me for keeping you waiting, but I had "a charge" on at my brandy still and could not leave it at the time. By the the way," she continued, "our good pastor is beginning to preach that widows with children to rear should not engage in the manufacture and sale of brandy and if he convinces me that it is wrong I shall quit it, though I do not see how I shall get along without it." In a few months I learned that she became convinced and she quit the practice of years. All this is very vivid now in memory and is in contrast with the opinions of many who say that the world is growing worse and religion means less and less.

It hasn't been long, as the decades register themselves, since the first missionary went out from a Christian country to preach the gospel to idol worshippers in Africa, India, Japan or China. It was very recent when the famous "haystack prayer" meeting was held and the first four volunteers ever to go out from America to carry the gospel to others volunteered to dedicate their lives to preaching the gospel to those in fields afar who knew not our Lord. Today several thousand are out there on the battle front for us and millions of money are given voluntarily for their support and the support of redemptive work in which they are engaged. The biggest single enterprise, employing more men and women in more parts of this world than any other enterprise, is that of Christian missions, those who with unselfish devotion hazard their lives that the message and the love of our Lord may be shared with others. Some may yet argue that the world is growing worse and may be it is, but it behooves all of us to make our unselfish contribution in the effort, the divine task in fact, in enlarging the kingdom of heaven on earth. There are those yet who are willing and ever ready to pray, "Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed will be Thy name, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." To this end may God help us.

Again one or two Sunday schools not heretofore doing so joined the increasing number of those taking the monthly offering. There is no better place to inculcate the missionary spirit than in the Sunday school, since the youth of the church is to be found in the Sunday school and the missionary passion and zeal is not begotten in a day, but like the kingdom of heaven itself it is a matter of gradual growth and development coming finally to the manifestation of a great power. We are anxious to see the day when every Sunday school of our Convention shall be taking and sending in the monthly offering for missions, since we know that it will enrich the lives of those in the schools who do this good thing. We are grateful for the above offerings for the past week, and especially grateful are we for the nice offering from "a friend" who wishes her name withheld.

Gratefully,

Mission Secretary.

MISSIONS IN ELON TRAINING SCHOOL.

Mrs. Elizabeth Harris, president of the Southern Convention Woman's Board, requests that it be announced that, because of lack of time between the recent session of the Convention and the Elon Training School, the Woman's Board will not be able to furnish a leader at the Training School this year.

Rev. W. E. Wisseman, Dean of the Training School, announces that Mrs. Gladwyn Childs, one of our missionaries to Africa, will be present and offer three courses in the Training School. In addition to this, the school will have a leader present to present the study books and other materials, and who will discuss with those interested the best methods of missionary education in the church, Sunday school, young people's societies, and missionary societies.

Those interested in missionary education are invited to the Elon Training School, and will find it profitable to attend.

EDITOR.

A CALL TO MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

A letter from the president of our North Carolina Woman's Conference has just been received which urges the attendance of our Elon Summer School of Leadership Training by at least one interested member of each of our missionary societies. A missionary speaker and instructor will be there and much good will be gleaned in the class period as well as the regular addresses and personal contacts. This will be a stimulus to the societies to have one or more to come back familiar with our study books and the materials for the coming year. The program in THE CHRISTIAN SUN is a strong one and one of which many should avail themselves. If you have not decided to go, why not pack up and go at once. It will be time well spent.

MRS. W. M. JAY.

THE CHURCH'S CHANCE IN CHINA.

By GEORGE W. SHEPHERD.
Missionary in China.

Not so long ago I dropped down out of the clouds into the capital of a certain province in China to look into the matter of wounded refugees. As I drove from the aerodrome into the city I found that half the houses and the shops were just piles of debris, some of them smoking still.

That afternoon the siren screeched. We had another air raid.

"Now I am going to find out something about the spirit of the people in this town," I said, "I shall see if it is in other towns."

We strolled outside the city into the zig-zag trenches until the planes left. Then I walked back to the houses and shops that were still blazing; spent hours standing there waiting until the owners returned. I wanted to find out what effect bombing had on them.

Always with the people determined resistance follows the destruction of their own homes. They follow the usual procedure of putting their papers or most valuable possessions in a suitcase, keep them handy, and when the siren sounds, they have no time to worry about anything else. They just go to a place of safety, then return to their smoking homes.

The owners I waited for did not say much at first. They looked at their homes; raked among the embers; talked among themselves.

Then, one by one, the vigorous members of those families walked out into the street; looked up into the sky; and using all the Chinese swear words and then some more, said exactly what they thought of people who would bomb their homes without provocation. They said it many times and with vigor.

Then they gathered together what they could, built little mat shelters in which to set up their shops and stands and homes.

Darkening the sky with bombers, striking quickly, does not destroy the spirit of man. It cannot destroy resistance—it increases it a hundred fold. No use in saying steel and bombs will bring these people to their knees or that armed might will conquer the spirit of man.

Never! It cannot be done in Europe; it cannot be done in Asia. It doesn't work that way. War creates more hatred; simply leads to more violence.

I cannot begin to describe the harvest from the seeds of hatred. Our sons must pay the price. Every Chinese boy and girl is growing up to hate the Japanese. Hatred is in the textbooks, it is in the atmosphere, it is everywhere. The people live and breathe hatred. The more bombs, the more bayonets, the more hatred.

The more inner vitality within China, the more resistance. Resistance depends on the human spirit, but that is the kind of human spirit that I find the Chinese have.

I frequently walk into a village and find the little children immediately run screaming to their mothers.

"Now, now, don't be afraid," the mothers say. "This is another kind of foreign devil, not that kind I told you about."

All I can do under such circumstances is to be quiet and turn my back and wait until the mothers say: "Pat the child." Most of them I dare not pat or go near.

No. War is the wrong way out, so far as I see it from the inside. It will not accomplish what the militarists suppose it will. The morale of the Chinese is going up like the thermometer in spring and summer: you can see it rising.

Multitudes To Be Fed.

When the Japanese mechanized columns drive along a valley, thousands, hundreds of thousands, it may be a million people—depending upon the density of population in the area—are ejected from their homes. They pack their children and belongings into baskets and just walk out—the greatest migration in history.

What are you going to do for them? Missionaries walk on the streets and stumble over them. They are at the doors of Protestant missionaries, Catholic missionaries. Everywhere are the sick, hungry, and dying.

Why doesn't the Chinese Government do something for them, you ask.

For every dollar missionaries spend the Chinese Government spends ten.

And still the need is not met. It will certainly increase as long as the war goes on.—Missionary Herald.

WINSTON-SALEM.

The Woman's Association of the Winston-Salem Church recently enjoyed a pleasant evening when they had their home mission study book, The American City and Its Church by Samuel C. Kincheloe. The book was taught by Miss Mazie Hosiek, Mrs. J. E. Brown, Mrs. Mayne Neal, and Dr. W. M. Jay. Much discussion interspersed the teaching and much interest was displayed. A covered dish supper was enjoyed and all were elated over the success of the meeting.

This society is meeting all the points on the Standard of Excellence and the interest and attendance is growing.

DELEGATES TO YOUR SUMMER CONFERENCE.

Is your church planning to have a commissioning service for the delegates sent to your summer conference? We hope so. If none has been planned, take it upon yourself to see that you do have one. It is much more meaningful for the delegates if they are commissioned by the pastor, or the Sunday school superintendent, in case you do not have church again before the summer conference, before the whole group. They feel then that they are truly representing your church, and will go to the summer conference with the realization that they are to bring something back to their church. For those who go to Elon, next Sunday will be the last Sunday. It is not too late to have some such service—and have it at Sunday school, if you do not have a preaching service that day. If your minister has not planned for such a service, ask him about it. Surely he will be glad to add it to the service on Sunday.

You may use any service you like; for a suggestion we reprint below a commissioning service found in the May Pilgrim Highroad, which in turn got it from the Congregational Conneticut.

A CALL TO SERVICE

Call to Worship.—

MINISTER: The Lord said, "Who will go for me, up to new heights of achievement, through training for service?" And my soul answered, "Here am I, Lord, send me."

Hymn (Congregation): "Spirit of God, Descend upon My Heart"; or "I Would Be True."

The Challenge of Our Fathers.—

MINISTER: As we have sought to understand the life of our time and to discover our place in the days that lie ahead, we have been aware of those leaders who, in years gone by, have treasured ideals similar to our own.

Poem (read by member of group):

"To Our Forefathers."

You who have handed us life's torch,
new kindled,
We are your own, in us you live again.

Oh, may we prove your influence has not dwindled,
That earth holds yet a sturdy race of men!

You who have given all that we cherish:
Life, and the gracious gifts that living brings—

Amid the trivial things that daily perish,
Your spirits lift us up to fairer things.

We are your children—citizens or sages,
Sharing your race, your likeness, thought and aim;
Guarding life's spark, to hand it down
the ages,
And make earth somehow fairer that we came.

—Frances Crosby Hamlet.

MINISTER: We have rejoiced in the progress which our fathers have made, but we have also seen something of the distance we have yet to go on the long road to God. We have seen with sorrow and regret the sins of our day—the injustices of avarice and greed, the helplessness of ignorance and fear, the tragedy of hatred and suspicion. Yet above the noisome disturbance of our times we have heard the voice of One saying, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly," and we have resolved to take our part in building a world in which that abundant life is possible for every person.

Hymn: "Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life," or "Faith of Our Fathers."

Litany of Dedication.—

MINISTER (to Delegates): I, as the minister of this church and ministering in the name of Christ, hereby set you apart and commission you to represent this church as chosen delegates to the Summer Conference.

DELEGATES: We accept the commission to be representatives of this church at the Summer Conference, and promise to conduct ourselves, in work and in play, so as to be worthy of this trust.

MINISTER: This church sends you with a glad heart and a hopefulness that you may prepare yourselves by study, worship and fellowship to be more worthy followers of Jesus the Christ.

THE CHURCH AS A SCHOOL.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR JUNE 25, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Luke 4: 14-21.

Daily Readings—

Mon.—Freedom of Citizenship—Romans 13: 1-7.

Tue.—Faithfulness in Stewardship—Luke 12: 42-48.

Weds.—Joy of Singing—Psalm 100.

Thur.—Exercise of Worship—Ps. 96:7-10.

Fri.—Process of Preaching—Romans 10: 13-15.

Sat.—Aspiration of Salvation—Titus 2: 11-14.

This topic suggests that the Church is an educational institution, which is engaged in teaching the Christian religion. The Sunday school is an educational institution within the Church. Through departmental and class activities, children, young people and adults are nurtured and guided in Christian experience. In the Sunday morning church services the young people and adults receive guidance and strength for effective Christian living.

The educational program of the local church includes worship service, formal and informal study, discussions, lectures and talks, recreation, and many other helpful activities.

A period should be devoted to discussing the definition and purpose of Christian Education.

Questions for Discussion—

1. Is our Christian Endeavor program in the church properly graded? Do we need one or more new societies to adequately serve the church?

2. What are the educational agencies in our church? Are they working harmoniously?

3. Is the Christian Endeavor, and other units in the church school building loyalty and devotion to the church? What improvement can be made?

4. Many people in the church are aware of the importance of education in the program of the church. Does this mean that there need be any less stress on soul-winning?

Suggested Hymns—

"Love Divine, All Love Excelling."

"O Master, Let Me Walk."

"Draw Thou My Soul, O Christ."

PAUL WRITES PERSONAL LETTERS.

LESSON XII—JUNE 18, 1939.

GOLDEN TEXT: Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth.—II Timothy 2: 15.

LESSON: I Timothy 1:1-4; 6:1-16; II Timothy 1:1-14; Titus 1:1-6; Philemon.

The Power of the Written Word.

There is power in the spoken word. There is also power in the written word. Some men have done far more by the things they have written than by the things they have said. One cannot account for the continuing influence of Paul apart from the letters which he wrote, and which make up more than half of the New Testament. And some of the most effective and inspiring things he wrote were embodied in letters which he wrote to individuals. Let one read in their entirety, or even in part the four letters which form the background of today's lesson, the letters to Timothy, to Titus, and to Philemon, and then ponder on the fact that for nineteen centuries ministers and teachers and Christians in general have read them and taught them, and he begins to see just what power there is in the written word.

May the writer add a personal word here. He has been a great letter-writer, penning again and again some brief word of congratulation to a young couple who had been married; or a young person who had just graduated from school or college; or who had won some honor or success; or to some family in trouble; or to some fellow minister who had undertaken a new work; or a word of congratulations to a home in which a new baby had arrived; and so on. And again and again long after the matter had been completely forgotten, the recipient of the note would tell him how much it had meant, and how even yet the note or letter was kept among treasured possessions. In turn he has received letters and notes from friends, which have warmed his heart and strengthened his life. We Christians do not write enough friendly, personal letters. We should become what someone has called "The Knights of the Golden Pen." But enough of this by way of introduction.

A Beautiful Relationship.

"To Timothy, my beloved child." Timothy was not Paul's child at all. In fact, he was now a grown man. But he was Paul's child in the spirit. He had been converted under Paul's ministry, and he had been trained under Paul's missionary work. There had grown between these two men—the one older, the other younger—a strong and beautiful tie of friendship and love, based on mutual respect and community of interest and common loyalty to Christ and common devotion to His cause. Paul had a great genius for friendship. There was a transforming power in his friendship. The friendship between Paul and Timothy ranks high in the world's great friendships.

A Rich Heritage.

"Having been reminded of the unfeigned faith that is in thee; which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice." This young man Timothy had a great spiritual background. He had been born of a line of noble women, and he had been nurtured in an atmosphere of faith in the high values and the abiding goods of life. There is contagion in good and great personality. Happy indeed is that young man or that young woman who comes from a home which is graced by Christian parents.

Stirring Up the Gift That Is in Us.

"I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God which is in thee through the laying on of my hands." The word really means "to kindle into flame." To whomsoever much is given, much will be required. Paul did not want Timothy to be half-hearted. He wanted him to develop to their highest degree the capacities and talents which God had given him. We are not to do so merely enough to get by; we are to live at our highest and our best.

A Good Witness.

"Nevertheless I am not ashamed; for I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." It was not the popular thing to be a Christian in Paul's day. In many instances it was a dangerous thing. But Paul was not ashamed of Christ or of Christ's gospel. He testified before great and small.

He knew he had believed. To be sure, Paul knew what he believed. He had convictions and he spoke them out. But beyond what he believed was in whom he believed. It was not what he believed, but whom he believed that counted. What he believed was made real and vital because he knew whom he had believed. This is life eternal, that we should know the only true God and Jesus Christ whom He has sent.

Fighting the Good Fight of Faith.

"Fight the good fight of faith," said Paul. The Christian life for Paul was no pleasure jaunt or joy ride. It was a stern battle; a battle not against the flesh and blood, but against spiritual wickedness in high places and against the unseen forces of evil. One must be on his guard, one must put on the whole armour of God, one must fight the good fight of faith, and having done all, one must stand. The Church and the church members must become militant. We must strike our tents and go on the march. We must war against all forms of evil within and without. We must endure hardness like good soldiers of Jesus Christ.

The Spirit God Has Given Us.

"For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind." Love casteth out fear. The gospel is power; how often Paul wrote about the gospel as power! The fulfilling of the law is love. Religion is based on common sense. It honors sound thinking.

The Church In Thy House.

Paul in writing to Philemon and his wife and their son refers to "the church that is in thy house." It was in that case a necessity—there was no church or church building where the Christians could meet for worship. But the fact that we have churches today does not weaken the force of Paul's words. Our homes should be a "church" in the sense that they are dedicated to God; in the sense that they are places where prayer is offered, in which there are miniature kingdoms of God, in which there is co-operative service for Christ. The strength of the church in the heart of the city or country depends upon the strength of the church in our homes.

"My Son Onesimus."

"I beseech thee for my son Onesimus." Onesimus was a run-away slave. In some way he had come into contact with Paul at Rome, and had been converted. Now Paul was sending him back to his master Philemon. In Christ there is no bond or free. So Paul refers to Onesimus the run-away slave in the same terms which he uses when he calls Timothy "my son." True Christianity breaks down and removes the false or superficial barriers which otherwise keep men apart. Our modern world desperately needs to learn the meaning of true brotherhood, the basic fact of unity in Christ,

MY LIFE AND YOURS.

"The word was made flesh and dwelt among us full of grace and truth."—John 1:14.

It is the highest compliment that can be paid any one to say that he lived among us full of grace and truth. We have heard it said of many a saintly person. Grace and truth means love, and Christ came into the world to reveal just that; and that is the simplest and best description of what God is and what man ought to be.

Does the word become flesh in our lives? Are we prompted by love and governed by truth in what we do and say?

Your seeds blow into my garden, friend,
Whenever the wind is right;
They blow on the wind of the breeze by day,
They ride on the gales by night.

Your words blow into my life, my friend,
Or, whether of good or ill;
Your thoughts fly over like ships of love
Or daggers that pierce and kill.

Your life is a garden of love, my friend,
And planted with kindly deeds;
So ever and over the wall will flow
Into my garden, your seeds.

TUESDAY.

"CHRISTIANITY MASQUERADING."

"For their sakes I sanctify myself."—John 17:19.

Some one frequently points out with embarrassing frankness the difference between Christians and Christ. Many Christians engage in un-Christian practices, which is nothing more nor less than "masquerading Christianity." The non-Christian world needs to be told what is a Christian and what is not a Christian. Christianity needs to be rescued from un-Christian practices. It was for all these that Christ sanctified himself. It was for this Gospel that He sanctified himself.

Prayer—Holy Father, we believe that the world would turn more eagerly to Christ if only it saw more of Christ in us. That is what we ask Thee for this day. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"THE HEART."

"For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."—Matt. 6:21.

The word "Treasure" here is a synonym for "affections," or loyalty, or chief interest. Often one mistakes the meaning of the church, and his life does not harmonize with his religious professions. Such a one uses the church as he uses a Sunday suit of clothes and looking all dressed up. Go to church all one pleases, and conform all one pleases to its ritual, that does not make him a Christian. The heart must be the church—the chief interest.

When the affections are set on Christ then the life takes on a new meaning.

Prayer—Dear Father, teach us how to bring our hearts in their truest affections to Thee. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"AWAKENING AND WORK."

"And thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins."—Matt. 1:21.

This text represents Jesus in thought and deed—teaching and work. Work is more important really than teaching, but both are necessary. Teaching makes aware. Work is the power that makes the teaching effective. The knowledge of Christ awakens us and the power of Christ makes life anew.

Prayer—Thy kingdom, O Lord, is not in word but in power. Kindle Thy light and Thy power in our hearts this day. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"WHEN ALL THINGS PASS AWAY."

"Heaven and earth shall pass away: but my words shall not pass away."—Mark 13:31.

There comes a time to every one when all things pass away; things behind are no more and he is ushered into something new. That new something is the survival of the spiritual man. When man has come to the end of himself, he must arise and go to his father. At last there is the inescapable God, eternal judgment, and the soul of man. Are you ready?

Prayer—O God, our Father, we put our faith and trust in Thee. Establish our feet on solid rock. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THOUGHT FOR THE DAY.

"But Jesus took him by the hand, and lifted him up."—Mark 9:27.

They might not need me, yet they might,
I'll let my heart be just in sight;
A smile so small as mine might be Precisely their necessity.

Prayer—Our Father, help us to dedicate ourselves anew to Thee and to Thy service. Amen.

SUNDAY.

MY PART.

"Many shall come from the east and the west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the Kingdom of heaven." Matt. 8:11.

The song says that all nations and people shall be there. However, the discord and distress of this present world would indicate that we are still a long way from it.

We look out on the world and wonder what can save it. Well—there is nothing that will save it but the conversion of men's hearts to the will of God. Everything else is superficial, unsatisfactory and transient. Then I, and you, and we, and they, one by one, till all men have been converted, are the first to take the step. We must live in unity with God and all Christian people.

Prayer—O Lord, our God, enter into the hearts of the millions throughout the world. Give us all the vision of purity and unselfishness. So may Thy kingdom come, and the world be made one in the love of Thy Son, in whose name we pray. Amen.

THE PREACHER FOR THIS WEEK IS
REV. VICTOR B. CHICOINE, D. D.,
WINTER PARK, FLORIDA.

NOT A WORKER OF MIRACLES.

"John did no miracle but . . ."—John 10: 41.

John did no miracle, but he discovered that there were forces of unmeasurable power that were available for him. John did no miracle, but when he had finished his sermon that day long ago on the banks of the Jordan, many of the clever ones, the ones who had been poking fun at religion, went to their homes knowing that the cheap motives behind their ridicule had been laid bare. John did no miracle, but after his life was finished with a swift blow of the sword in that great and gloomy castle of Macherus on the shore of the Dead Sea, his associates, and his enemies knew that a mighty, fearless, and honest soul had been in their midst. John did not perform miracles, but he did leave behind an imperishable tradition for integrity and persistence.

I.

Once and only once did John flash. It was that same day spoken of before on the Jordan. After that he marched on steadily, until like his Lord, he died for truth. I suppose that we will always be obliged to have those in our midst who scintillate. But to always be in the company of those who must be vivacious, continually giving rapid repartee, who refuse to have deep and sober moments of reflection, would be one of the most boring experiences that I can imagine.

One would be certain of having great, deep, and sober moments with that man John who had come out of the desert. One recalls a story of William Cary, the great missionary to India. As a young man he had offered himself to go to that great field, and had been asked, I judge, somewhat scornfully, what could he do? His answer was, "I can plod!" So could John the Baptist plod. He could—and most important—did plod with God!

It may be that some of us have wished that we might do one great, flashing deed for the Kingdom, for God, for Christ, and then die. There are those great and noble souls of yesterday who have felt this way.

G. Studdert Kennedy once wrote:

Sometimes I wish that I might do
Just one great deed and die,
And by that one grand deed reach up
To meet God in the sky.

But what about doing no great, flashing, miraculous deed, and doing daily, and week by week, small but constructive deeds for Christ and His kingdom? There is more to this than many of us care to admit or care to do. I mean that it would be better not to be so eager to meet God in the sky, and to meet Him by living in the hard places here and now!

Not a single one of us, no matter how much wishful thinking goes on, will ever work a miracle. We need to make up our minds on that point and quit that kind of dreaming. But that does not mean that we cannot do mighty works for the Kingdom. Countless myriads of microscopic creatures build a mighty coral reef that defies the tempest and the tides. There is no miracle about it. They build and die, they serve an infinitesimal moment, but the structure, because they have given themselves to it, goes up and on, and is built.

In certain church histories that record miracles supposed to have happened and aided in the early days of the Church, are accounts of miraculous interventions, bleeding statues, strange voices, and scenes being observed in the skies. I believe none of them to be true. What I do believe is that those early Christians kept doggedly at their task of building the Kingdom of God through love and faithfulness to the Master.

Long ago I gave up expecting miracles from people no matter how loudly they proclaimed what they had done in other churches! Once I believed them, but no longer is this true. As a pastor I know to a complete certainty that right now the Church needs the doggedness, the same doggedness within its ranks, that John had, more than anything else. Kingsley once wrote:

Be good . . . and let them who can be clever:
Do noble deeds, nor dream them all day long:
And so make life, and death, and that forever,
One grand, sweet song.

Nobody worked a miracle one bleak and wintry Sunday in an English community when the preacher, because of the deep drifts of snow, could not get to the church. But a consecrated layman, name unknown, going into the pulpit upon the urging of the few that were there, and doing the best that he could do, won a lone boy who was a stranger in the church that morning. The boy was Charles Haddon Spurgeon! The world can get along very well without miracles, but it cannot get along without the unmassing but dependable folk who love the Christ! It is not as someone has said, "Well done, thou good and brilliant servant," else would there be little hope for millions. It is "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

John never did perform a miracle, but you can make a grand list of those things that John did do, and what is also important, what influence flowed from those acts. He did speak in a hard moment and Herodias could not silence him. By his acts he told the world and all time that there was no price that interested him giving up his convictions. And he did ally himself with the Son of Man without any equivocations! As I see it, John knew the better and the more lasting way to help the Master; in doing his best, and leaving the rest to God.

II.

It must never be forgotten that in the grandest act of the life of our Lord—his death upon the cross—when the pain and anguish were the greatest, he attempted no miracle. Why? Because it was not the best nor the final way. G. H. Morrison tells us of an experience in the life of William Blake, who living close to the Master had caught the grand idea of unswerving loyalty to the best: "A young friend and disciple came to him in despair. His vision failed him. He was a painter on the threshold of a great career, had gleams, saw deeply. Now he came to Blake because for a long time he had seen nothing of the soul of things. Then Blake turned to his wife, 'Catherine, we, too, lose the vision, do we not? We, too, have our hours of insight into things, then for us, too, it passes, does it not. And what do we do then?' And his wife answered in perfect simplicity, 'Then, Mr. Blake, we kneel down and pray.'"

Should we not see God in a Book that has never been criticized for impurity and whose central theme, the Christ, has never had his character reflected upon even by his arch-enemies?

"A modest confession of ignorance is the ripest and last attainment of philosophy."

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

God has been good to us this spring season. In fact, He has always been good to us; far better than we deserve. He has sent us such beautiful rains all through the spring months that the crops on the orphanage farm are looking fine. Our strawberries have given out, and our dew berries are just beginning to ripen. Our snap beans, cabbage, beets, and other vegetables are furnishing our tables with plenty of good things to eat. Our Irish potatoes will also be large enough to use in another week. The children are fond of vegetables and we are happy that we have them. We think of the blessings He showers upon us from time to time and wonder if we are half as grateful as we should be. It is so easy to take things for granted and forget to be thankful and appreciative.

The writer read a story some years ago that has always made a deep impression on him as to appreciativeness. A fine young man married a fine young woman. She, like all good wives, was anxious to cook things that he would relish. She learned that he was fond of pie. She put herself to a lot of trouble one day to cook some good pies. He ate very heartily of the pie. When the meal was finished, he asked her to let him help clear the table. She said "No," and began to weep. He was greatly surprised and asked what was the matter. She said, "I put myself to extra trouble to cook you some good pies, and you sat here and ate six pieces and did not say one word about how good it was." Many a good wife perishes to death for words of appreciation she never gets from her husband. We often forget to be appreciative or to show our appreciation.

Some time ago I went to a movie at the college. Four little boys thought it was free, and after they found out it was not free they seemed to be very much disappointed that they could not see it. They were little fellows and rather than see them disappointed, I bought them tickets. They took their seats several rows in front of me. Before the show started, one little fellow got up and came to me to thank me for the tickets for himself and the others. The smile of appreciation on his face was worth far more than all the tickets.

God showers His blessings upon us from day to day, and I often wonder if we don't just take it for granted and often forget to be thankful.

PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

DELEGATES: We go with this hope of the church uppermost in our hearts and dedicate ourselves to becoming approved workmen that need not be ashamed.

Prayer in Union:

Our Father, we have made this covenant with Thee and our fellowmen. Give us the strength of Thy Spirit to find the vital issues of life and deal with them constructively, earnestly, spiritually and deeply. May we feel Thy Presence with us. Help us to find the help which will make our minds clearer, our sympathies broader and warmer, and our hearts richer for Jesus' sake. Amen.

Hymn: "O Jesus, I Have Promised."

GEORGIA YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE.

PLACE: Camp Viola, Montvale, Ga.

DATE: July 10-15, 1939.

COST:

$4.50. Those desiring to do so may bring $1.50 in cash and the remainder in food. Food will be credited at the current prices in stores. Wherever possible bring cash, as we can then have more balanced meals.

FACULTY:

Rev. R. Wiley Scott of Atlanta will be the dean. Miss Marie Crosby of West Africa will be the guest missionary.

STUDENTS:

Notify Pattie Lee Coghill, 117 West Forsyth Street, Jacksonville, Florida, giving the number of students from your church, and whether they are boys or girls. This must be done by July 1.

WHAT TO BRING:

Bible, notebook, pencils, sheets and blanket, towels, soap, pillows, bathing suit, clothes for play, musical instruments, and other things to make the week enjoyable for yourself and others.

tional Christian Endeavor movement as the theme for a two-year program for the societies of North America.

The convention at Cleveland will be attended by 15,000 or more delegates, representing more than three million young people of Protestant churches, and the theme and its adaptation to society and church work with individual, youth group, community, and national issues, will "go home with the delegates" to inspire and direct youth programs and activities.

The huge Cleveland Public Auditorium will present a gala and spectacular appearance on Thursday evening, July 6, when President Poling opens the convention and Homer Rodeheaver and his famous trombone lead the thousands of young people in their convention songs.

Included in the program of the days to follow will be:

"Presidential Night," July 7. The theme, "Christ Calls to Christian Endeavor." Speakers, Dr. Poling and Arthur J. Stanley, Associate President of the international union.

Citizenship Day, June 9. Theme, "Christ Calls to Church Loyalty and Unity." Communion service conducted by Dr. William H. Foulkes, vice president, and the clergy of Cleveland and of the convention.

Missions Day, July 10. Theme, "Christ Calls to Evangelism and Missions." Among the speakers, Dr. W. H. Judd of China.

"Youth's Response" Day, July 11. Theme, "Christ Calls to Personal Consecration." Three outstanding young people representing various sections of North America will participate with Dr. Poling as speakers.

The convention will end in a service of consecration and recommitment—the response of the convention to its theme.

PIEDMONT COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

The Piedmont College Commencement was made significant this year by the presence of Mr. Malcolm B. Dana, who has been elected to the presidency of the college. Mr. and Mrs. Dana were both present and were welcomed to the campus most cordially.

Mr. Dana is a graduate of Carleton College and Hartford Seminary and also has had some special training in England. He has been devoting his life especially to work with young people's conferences. He is the son of Dr. Malcolm Dana, for several years secretary of the Town and Country Department of the Board of Home Missions.

The degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred on Rev. John P. Jockinsen, pastor of the Congregational Church at St. Petersburg, Fla. Degree of Doctor of Education was conferred on Professor W. S. Roberts of the science department of Piedmont.

Marriages

FLINT—MIDDLETON.

On Sunday morning, June 4, at the home of the bride, R. 2, Walnut Cove, N. C., Mr. Raymond A. Flint and Miss Frances Middleton were united in marriage. The groom is an employee of City Tire Service, Winston-Salem, N. C., where he has worked for about five years. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Flint of Germanton. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Middleton, and is a member of Salem Chapel Christian Church. They will reside in their attractive home on Route 3, Winston-Salem N. C. Their many friends wish for them long, happy lives of usefulness.

G. H. VEAZEY.

MONGER—HENSLEY.

On June 3, at Mt. Olivet (R) Church, Miss Irene Hensley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Hensley, became the bride of Mr. Lloyd Monger, son of Mrs. Nannie Monger. M. W. Mann, pastor of the bride and groom, was the celebrant.

The altar was beautifully decorated with mountain laurel, fern and cathedral tapers. The wedding march was from Wagner's "Lohengrin." The ceremonial rites were read to the soft strains of Schumann's "Traumerei," and the Wedding March from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" was the recessional. Mrs. M. W. Mann was the organist.

The bride wore a dress of blue lace and carried a corsage of Talisman roses. Her maid of honor, Miss Ellen Monger, is a sister of the groom. The groom had as his best man, his brother, Carol Monger.

Immediately after the ceremony, a reception was held at the home of the groom's mother.

Following a northern tour, Mr. and Mrs. Monger will be at home at Elkton, Va., where Mr. Monger is connected with the Elkton Milling Company.

In Memoriam

BROWN.

Eli Willard Brown, son of Rev. Wm. R. and Mrs. Servilia Brown, was born March 30, 1860, and died May 19, 1939. In early life he was converted and united with the Pleasant Ridge Christian Church, near Ramseur, N. C. He remained a devoted and loyal member until his death. He served the church as teacher, superintendent, trustee, and deacon, for 45 years or more.

In 1887 he married Sarah Frances McDuffie, who survives him. To this union were born ten children, nine of whom are living. They are: Mrs. T. L. Helms, Randleman; Mrs. R. M. Johnson, Raleigh; Mrs. Victoria Gaddy, Ellerbe; Mrs. P. E. Johnson, Sanford; Mrs. W. H. Penny, Durham; Mrs. Terry Rees, Goulds, Florida; W. V. Brown, High Point; L. N. Brown, New Orleans, La.; O. C. Brown, Ramseur. The deceased daughter was Mrs. Lalah Hayworth. He is also survived by a brother, Henry Brown, of near Siler City; and 22 grandchildren.

He was a loving husband, an understanding father, a helpful neighbor, and a friend of all.

The Churches Are Responding

The call for new subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN has been heard in the churches, and good news comes back to this office.

A young pastor says: "There is not a subscription in my church, but there will be. . . ."

Another pastor writes: "Enclosed please find check for $4.00 for new subscribers. . . . Also you will see my last Sunday's bulletin announcing my campaign; also my letter sent to sixty families. . . . I am going to follow up each letter with a personal call, or telephone call. I mean business about this SUN, and I hope to get a good number of subscriptions."

A Pastor Writes to His People

YOUR church and your minister have joined with the churches and ministers of the Southern Convention to increase the subscription list of THE CHRISTIAN SUN by nearly 1,000 new subscribers.

YOUR church wishes to increase its 100 subscribers to 140 subscribers. We have been checking the roll and find that several families in our church do not subscribe for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. It is well worth the $2.00 per year that it costs. A little self-denial would easily accrue the amount of the subscription, and you would scarcely miss it.

The church news in it is worth the price. All conferences and conventions in our Southern Convention use it freely for their announcements. There are sixteen pages: an editorial page; a page of special contributions like the "Suffolk Letter"; a Mission page; a Woman's Mission page; a Young People's page; a Sunday School lesson page; a Sermon page; an Orphanage page; College page; a page of daily devotions; Children's page; a page of news of persons, places, and churches; a front page with often a picture of church and the minister; a back page with some interesting article or item featured; a page of obituary and marriage notices; and two pages of general information and interest. Sixteen pages in all.

I want you and your family to read THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Please call me over the telephone, or send me a check, and let me have it sent to you.

Those who read it say, "I could not be without it." Call me today, or send me your order. I shall be glad to enter your subscription right away. I get no commission, but I am doing this because I believe in it, and wish THE CHRISTIAN SUN read in every home in my church.

JOHN G. TRUITT

Such response from the churches puts new life into the office force. If you will give us more subscriptions, we will give you a better paper.

Has your church started its program to get the members to read the Church Paper? Do not be left behind. Others are moving forward. Join the procession.

Thank You! Thank You! Forward We Go!

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

A World Council of Churches moved one step nearer realization this month, with the opening at Swarthmore, Pa., on June 11, of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America. A panel of world Christians presented their ideas of a World Council of the Protestant bodies to the four hundred delegates there assembled.

Friends of the Rev. Marna S. Poulson of Portsmouth, Va., will be quite pleased to learn that he is able to be up and around the parsonage again. On Sunday morning, June 11, Dr. Poulson was able to attend the morning service and hear his son, Harper Poulson, speak. His son has been visiting Dr. Poulson, and supplied for his father on three Sundays.

Revival services will begin next Sunday at New Lebanon Christian Church near Reidsville, N. C. There will be services at eleven o'clock, two o'clock, and seven forty-five. Rev. J. Everette Neese, pastor of the First Christian Church, Henderson, N. C., will assist his father, Rev. J. L. Neese, during the meeting. Services will continue throughout the following week.

The America Red Cross has raised approximately $800,000 for the distribution of food, medicine and other relief, in China during the present emergency. This is, so far as has been ascertained, the largest contribution by any single non-Chinese organization to the cause of China relief in the past two years. Missionaries were largely the agents through which this relief was distributed.

The Tidewater Virginia friends of the Rev. Dr. Charles Eldred Shelton and Mrs. Shelton, regret to learn of their departure from Virginia the latter part of June, to Pittsburgh, Pa., where Dr. Shelton's son, Dr. Whitford Shelton, is a professor in the University of Pittsburgh. Dr. Shelton is pastor emeritus of the Shelton Church, First Congregational-Christian, of Portsmouth, Va. Dr. Shelton was eighty years old on Friday, June 16.

The problem of required attendance at the shrines of state Shinto, is one that has caused serious study by the Japanese National Christian Council. This council has placed itself on record as accepting the interpretation that these ceremonies are patriotic in character, and "is pressing for the early elimination of religious elements." Dr. Hachiro Yuasa, former president of Doshisha University, Kyoto, Japan, says: "The difference between state shrines and those of religious Shinto should be kept clearly in mind. Attendance at the shrines of religious Shinto is as voluntary as attendance at the service of a Buddhist temple or a Christian Church."

VALLEY OF VIRGINIA SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN EN- DEAVOR CONVENTION.

The annual meeting of the Valley of Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention was held on June 14 at the Winchester Church. The theme for the convention was: "Threshold Preparation for the Church." The program was as follows:

MORNING.

Devotional Service—Rev. R. A. Whitten, Winchester.

Welcome—Mrs. Orville Hoover, Winchester.

Response—Norman Morris, Mt. Olivet (G).

Enrollment of Delegates.

Address: "Our Program of Progress"—Mrs. F. C. Lester, Elon College, N. C.

Call for Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Problems—Rev. R. A. Whitten.

Address: "Catalogues, Character, and Christ"—Dr. J. G. Truitt, Suffolk, Va.

AFTERNOON.

Devotional Service—Rev. C. G. Scannell, Leaksville.

Report of Departmental Committees. Business Session.

Discussion of Problems presented at Morning Session—led by Rev. R. A. Whitten.

Address: "Threshold Preparation for the Church"—Rev. F. C. Lester, Elon College, N. C.

EVENING.

Devotional Service—Rev. R. A. Whitten.

Address: "The Cost of Building a Tower"—Rev. W. J. Andes.

About eighty guests from the other churches were served a most delicious meal by the members of the Winchester Church at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Cather. The delegates were entertained in individual homes for the evening meal.

Dr. John G. Truitt was taken ill while at the meeting and so was unable to give the evening address as planned. Rev. W. J. (Billy) Andes proved an able substitute.

The officers for the coming year are: president, Mr. Clarence Phillips; vice-president, Mr. Norman Morris; secretary, Mr. R. O. Rothgeb; treasurer, Mr. R. R. Hosaflook.

Superintendents for the year are: Organized Classes, Raymond Andes; Teacher Training, Mrs. Clarence Phillips; Home Department, Mrs. Mary Davis; Missions, Anna Lou Showalter; Christian Endeavor, Mrs. Lloyd Monger; Cradle Roll, Mrs. C. M. McCoy.

This convention will be held next year at Bethel Christian Church, near Elkton, Va.

NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

On Thursday of last week just a few more than two hundred people met in the tabernacle of the Christian Church in Danville, Va., for the consideration of problems connected with Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor societies. Twenty churches reported and eighteen were represented. More than half of the churches were not represented in any way.

President Millard Stevens gave a fine address on the "Long Arm of the Sunday School." Many problems were considered in an address by the Promotional Secretary, in four discussion groups, and by the convention assembled as a committee of the whole. Resolutions were passed that may mean much to the schools and societies, if they are put into practice. Business was transacted that concerns all the churches. Inspiration was

SUMMER HAS COME.

Today is summer. Yesterday was spring, but spring has gone. Autumn lies ahead. And winter awaits. With absolute accuracy the seasons come and go. They have for as many millions of years as the mind of man can consider. God controls the seasons, and they work perfectly. Only man makes mistakes. If men ruled the universe, days and nights could not be depended on, and summer might get mixed with winter. Even now we stop the clock to make the day longer and change the time to save the daylight. We get confused; but God never does.

Summer signifies the time of development. In the spring crops are planted and cultivated. In the summer they grow and develop ready for the harvest in the autumn. Then comes winter with its rest. This is summer. It is the time for growth, for development. It is so with our churches, especially in the country. People can attend services better than when the weather is bad or the work is so pressing. This is the time to increase attendance, conduct Vacation Schools, go on picnics, attend training schools and camps, hold revivals, plan for promotion and rally day, think through church problems of finance, education, missions, increase in membership, and real service to the world, visit other churches to see how they work, and to do some reading in the field of religion. Let summer mean to you personally what it means to corn and cotton, the time of development.

"LET THERE BE LIGHT."

This is what God is reported to have said when he flung the sun, moon, stars, and the earth into their places. He was not in favor of darkness. Neither was Jesus of Nazareth. He opened up channels of truth through which light could shine. His own life was so radiant that he could say: "I am the light of the world." To the disciples who sat on the mountain side with him he said: "Ye are the light of the world." Christians are to be so radiant that others may see their beauty and glorify God.

Those who are the friends of God and the followers of Jesus need not fear the light of truth—any truth. In fact, they should seek for truth. They need to know when the Bible was written, by whom, and why. They should welcome what those discover who delve into the ancient records and bring back to light the facts concerning the sacred writings. They need not fear to know that the Bible was written by hand on parchment in languages far different from ours, centuries before the art of modern printing was known. If some mistakes were made by some ancient copyist, what matters? Perhaps the man who wrote originally did not know all the mind of God, and certainly those who read today do not get the full meaning of all that is said in the good Book. When the light of the centureis is turned onto the Scriptures, they glisten all the brighter with a divine radiance that is a light unto the pathway of those who would follow God.

In every field of thought and endeavor light is invaluable. Without it we stumble and fall. With it we see the way that leads to successful living. In the darkness of ignorance and in the shadows of half-truth we cannot do our best. We need the light of complete revelation in order to be at our best. Those who would insist that training for the ministry and for teaching in the church is dangerous are simply "whistling in the dark" with the hope of keeping you in their company. Believe it or not. Just as God said in the beginning: "Let there be light"; so he is saying to his church in this tragic day. It is not God who wants us to be ignorant or blind. He wants us to walk in the light with a steady assurance that our light comes from him and leads to him. Turn on the light in your home, in your church, in your business, in your play, in your politics, and in the deep recesses of your own heart, and God will love you.

SUPPORT THE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTIONS.

The plan of cooperative work among the churches of the Southern Convention includes Sunday school support of Sunday School Conventions. The amount of contribution asked by the conventions varies from five to fifteen cents per member enrolled in the school. This is a very small amount. But it is a very important matter.

Without this support the conventions cannot operate. It takes some money with which to work.

And the Board of Christian Education is also dependent on the conventions. This Board works in the field of religious education. It furnishes plans and materials, it aids leaders, it trains teachers and officers, and it helps to guide young people's work. At present the Board is paying the expense of the Promotional Secretary. This is a new and very important venture for the Southern Convention. The success depends largely upon the support coming from the Sunday schools and churches.

If you believe in Christian education, the work of the Board which the Church has elected, and in the work of the Promotional Secretary, then be sure that your Sunday school sends the full amount of dues to the Sunday School Convention. This applies to Christian Endeavor Societies also, for they have dues to the conventions, and they receive help from the work being done.

We study how to make money, how to get a new car, how to go for a long vacation, and for many other things. But what about study concerning how to do successful work for the Church we call Christian? A constant stream of books and magazines come from the press. But do you read them?

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The ministers of the Eastern Virginia Conference held their annual family picnic on Friday, June 16, at the Girl Scout Camp on Lake Prince. About thirty-five persons were present. The day was ideal. Rev. R. E. Brittle, Mr. E. F. O'Berry, Mr. B. B. Briggs and the writer went fishing early and had good luck. The fish were cleaned and taken to the picnic where they were fried. Some breakfast bacon, supplied by the generosity of Mr. E. F. O'Berry, and some fried corn bread prepared by a fisherman's recipe made a very strong appeal to the hungry preachers, their good wives and children. Such a fish fry, under the trees by the side of a beautiful lake, with lemonade prepared by the skilled Dr. John G. Truitt, makes it possible to satisfy the appetite of any epicurean when the delicious lunches, brought from the various homes, are added as a last course.

Unfortunately all the ministers and families could not be present. It was voted unanimously to have the next annual picnic at the same place through the courtesy of the Norfolk Water Department. It is the earnest wish that every minister and family may be able to attend the next picnic at Lake Prince. It is a joy and a privilege to enjoy the fellowship of ministers' families on such an occasion, and it is fine to have some laymen with the group to add a touch of dignity when the jokes are being told.

Those who believe in apostolic succession should agree with the serious judgment of the writer that every minister should be a fisherman. There is no finer recreation. From digging worms to catching a ten pound bass a minister may find work and relaxation on a trip to the lake or river. But a quiet shady spot on a lake is the ideal place for this pastime. The writer has recently had the privilege of testing some new fishing poles. We caught the limit in two or three hours. This is a sure sign of returning health for this preacher, for he was able to fish without any indication of physical disturbance. An examination by Dr. D. L. Harrell on yesterday indicated very satisfactory improvement.

Christianity improves the social life of those who are loyal to its teachings. A group of ministers and their families offer a good suggestion of the possibilities of all human life when brought under the sway of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Why should any group of people think wine, beer and whiskey are better than lemonade for a social party? Why should people patronize the various institutions offering amusement, on Sunday, instead of attending church and worshipping God? Chiefly because they have not properly measured the values of the higher things offered by the church of the Lord Jesus Christ. American social life is becoming paganized through the influence of paganism in religion. Wherever the Bible becomes just a book, and not The Book, Jesus Christ becomes a mere man and not The Man. When the Bible goes down and Jesus Christ is shut out, social life collapses. Christianity can save America—and all the other nations. And it can save the social life of our people and make it happy and conducive to longer life and deeper spiritual significance.

I. W. JOHNSON.

FOR WHAT A COLLEGE EDUCATION?

It is expensive to go to college. It always has been. Expenses for the individual student, personal and otherwise, are greater than in years past, and apparently are increasing regularly. When it comes to an education, people are beginning to count the years. In spite of the multiplied hours of leisure for American people, the demand to press a college education into as brief time as possible is becoming insistent.

A regular college course leading to a Bachelor of Arts degree requires the completion of one hundred twenty semester hours of work on the college level, distributed from the freshman to the senior years. In this age of "speeding up," there are some who go to school practically twelve months in the year so as to complete the requirements for an undergraduate degree in three years instead of four. Then, of course, from two to four years are required for advanced degrees. It takes time from the standpoint of the college for an individual to prepare himself for the responsibilities of life. To simply spend four years on a college campus, however does not mean that the student will graduate. If he is to graduate, strictest application to educational requirements must be given

In addition to time and effort, it costs money to go to college. College expenses run from around $350.00 as a minimum to $2,000.00 a year as a maximum, which means that the cost of a college education in dollars and cents ranges from $1,400.00 to $8,000.00, not considering the individual student's personal expenses during his college career. Conservatively speaking, in the less expensive schools the cost in dollars and cents will be $2,000.00 and in the more expensive schools $10,000.00. Why all this expense? Is it worth the cost? These and other questions clamor for answers.

Life is largely what we make of it. If we wish to live in ignorance, we may. Our paths are already laid out for us, and our associations are determined. If we wish to inform, enrich, and make life worth living, the ways have been indicated, the opportunities have been created, and they are ours not for the asking but for the price. If life is to mean what it should to us, we must know something of what has been done in this world of ours. Knowledge of the past will be a commentary on the present and an inspiration as we look to the future. With due appreciation of the contributing factors to present day civilization and to our own personal privileges that are at hand, we are able more properly to evaluate our own abilities and to see more clearly our obligations to our day that those who come after us may have an even greater inheritance than has been ours from the hands of the past. The individual who has been properly trained for life cannot live for himself and for his day alone. He is ever conscious of the fact that he is indebted to others for what he is and for the opportunities that are today at hand, and that if he is to prove himself worthy of these bequests, he must enrich the inheritance of those who are to come after him.

A college education pre-supposes the acquisition of information and personal inspiration that will result in individual initiative calculated to create universal values. This is all good and well, but with the getting of information, we must also get understanding, and with the getting of understanding, we must get wisdom. With the acquisition of facts, we must also acquire a degree of grace, culture, and refinement. An individual may know books, but if he is ignorant of society, he has missed the mark in his education. A person may know how to enter a library and how to locate any book or article in that library and may know how to analyze the information found, but if he does not know how to act in society, his college has deprived him of one of the essential factors in education. A person may know how to read a book and get the most out of it. He may know how to enter into conversation in a drawing room party, make himself agreeable and profitable in conversation, but if he is ignorant of table manners, his education has been sadly neglected. It is a reflection on a school for a graduate of that school not to know the simple rules of table etiquette and the ordinary requirements of a properly conducted dining room. Pressure is being brought on the administration of Elon College for cafeteria service instead of the dining room where all gather at a given hour for meals. The cafeteria idea would solve some financial questions and would relieve us of the responsibility of trying to conduct the dining room as it should be. It would also take from us the opportunity and responsibility of instructing our students in this essential factor of human conduct. We may fail miserably in this undertaking, but we are at least making an effort in this direction. The cafeteria in our schools may help to solve financial problems, but it also helps to destroy one cultural aspect sadly needed in the homes of our country. With all the cost of a college education, it certainly should give instruction in some of the finer things of life. Above all things a college graduate should know how to act in society and how to conduct himself on all occasions that may bring him in contact and communion with his fellow citizens.

The present official enrollment of Elon College is in advance of last year as of this date. We are hoping for a larger enrollment from the homes where THE CHRISTIAN SUN goes and the homes of our church. For those who come to our campus, we will do our best in the field of education and practical social living as well as spiritual and religious achievements.

PIEDMONT COLLEGE ELECTS NEW PRESIDENT.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Trustees of Piedmont College, Mr. Malcolm Boyd Dana, son of Dr. Malcolm Dana, who is well known in Congregational circles as Director of the Town and Country Department of the Extension Boards and as a staff member of the Inter-seminary Commission, was elected president of the college. Mr. Dana has been on the campus since June 1, and is taking hold in a fine way.

Mr. Dana received his education at the Charles City, Iowa, high school and Berea Academy in Kentucky. He graduated from Carleton College in 1934, majoring in economics. In college he had Varsity Letters in basket ball and baseball and held the college tennis championship. He studied in the Chicago Theological Seminary in 1925-26, residing for a time at Hull House. He received the M. A. degree in religious education at Hartford Seminary in 1927, the B. D. degree in 1930, and studied abroad in the spring of 1933.

For twelve years, Mr. Dana has specialized in the matter of personality development, character education and leadership training. He has done some remarkable experimentation in this aspect of the field of education. During the last three years he has been assistant general director and treasurer of Keewaydin Camps, an organization of nine camps, giving large experience in management as well as affording large opportunity for inspiring leadership with young people's groups.

Mr. Dana thus brings to Piedmont College thorough training for his work, a broad experience in America and Europe, Christian consecration for service, idealism, and a pragmatic common sense, qualifications which make him the ideal leader for Piedmont College. The Trustees and friends of the college look forward with enthusiasm to his coming and feel that the college will grow and prosper under his inspiring guidance.

A MESSAGE FROM A MINISTER.

If there is anything that is needed today, it is men and women who know God, and will consult God in all things.

The Bible is primarily a revelation of God, and is therefore from God.

Its great purpose is to make God known that men may be brought into communion with Him through the knowledge given.

Light and knowledge is found in God's word, I Thess. 4: 13. "I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren."

We may possess not only a high school education, but also a college degree and yet be completely ignorant of Christ and his salvation.

Many today are ignorant of Christ, ignorant of their own soul's need, and ignorant of its eternal destination.

If there was ever a time when we should preach the whole truth and not compromise with the devil, that time is now.

There are problems in the educational situation in this country that should cause us to pause and think.

More young men and women than ever before in the history of the world are receiving high school and college training.

And at the same time there is more lawlessness than ever before.

An education that is divorced from Christianity is more often a curse than a blessing.

In this day of religious confusion, before we let men and women come into our churches and preach and teach they should be required to answer the following questions:

1. Do you believe in the trinity of the God head?

2. Do you believe in the verbal inspiration of the Scriptures?

3. Do you believe in the total depravity and lost condition of all men by nature?

4. Do you believe in the personality of Satan?

5. Do you believe in the virgin birth and deity of Jesus Christ?

6. Do you believe in the shed blood atonement of Jesus Christ for sins?

7. Do you believe in the bodily resurrection and Lordship of Jesus?

8. Do you believe in the eternal security of all believers?

9. Do you believe in justification by faith?

10. Do you believe in the personal premillennial, and imminent second coming of our Lord Jesus Christ?

11. Do you believe in the eternal hell, and conscious punishment of all unsaved?

12. Do you believe that all believers are called into a life of separation from all worldly and sinful practices?

13. Do you believe that all believers in this dispensation are members of the body of Christ, the true Church?

Before you listen to any preacher, or accept him as your pastor, put to him a clear questionnaire as to his beliefs. Know where he stands.

Any minister who is ashamed to put himself on record, in language plain and easily understood, as to his doctrinal position, has no right to demand a hearing.

Stop listening to men preach, stop giving money to men who do not accept and preach the "more sure word of prophecy."

Elon College Golden Anniversary

THE ELON COLLEGE GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY CLUB.

"The mills of the gods grind slowly" is an ancient saying usually attributed to the wheels of Justice, meaning that the individual who sows will eventually, even though in the distant future, reap the harvest that he fully deserves.

The machinery of this Golden Anniversary vehicle of ours continues to move, even though slowly, very slowly. I presume that most of the ones of the alumni, church and friends who are vitally interested in Elon College and in this anniversary program are not different from the writer. I have wide visions, big plans, a lot of enthusiasm, and unbounded expectancy, and I know that tomorrow I will get into the thick of this fight with everything that I have. I start out and talk with a man, and he passes my card back to me and says, "I am interested. I expect to pay my $50.00, and just as soon as I think my bank account will not be overdrawn, I will mail you a check." With all the persuasion I possess, I am unable to move him from that decision. Undaunted, however, I am determined to continue this thing, and my hopes are undimmed. The goals set shall be reached. I hope that you will join me in such an attitude and determination. Won't you speak to some interested individual and have him send in his card for next week's report. I will join you in that resolution and determination. Let's see if we can't push the thermometer past the $20,000.00 mark in a short time.

The following is the report for this week:

Name	Pledged	Paid
Mrs. O. E. Young, Vernon, Ala.	$ 150.00	$ 5.00
P. V. Parks, Elk Park, N. C.	50.00

OFFERINGS FOR THE COLLEGE.

It is certainly encouraging not to be forgotten. We all like to be remembered. We like to be remembered in a helpful way.

Elon College continues to be encouraged by our Sunday schools and churches who are reminded that they have not yet sent their contribution to the college but are getting those contributions off in the mails, and they reach the college promptly. It is a source of encouragement to you to help your institution, but it is doubly encouraging to your institution to receive that help. A few of our friends remembered us the past week as follows:

gained by those present that will make them better persons and more efficient workers.

The Danville Church and pastor, Rev. M. T. Sorrell, entertained in a very gracious manner. Everything possible was done for the comfort and joy of the delegates and friends. This included a sumptuous noonday meal served on the church lawn, and a visit to interesting places about the city.

Officers for the coming year are: president, Rev. W. M. Stevens; first vice-president, W. T. Dunn; second vice-president, Rev. B. J. Earp; secretary, Miss Evelyn Stewart; assistant secretary, Kenneth Hook; treasurer, Mrs. Floyd H. Dunn. The departmental superintendents are: Orphanage, Mrs. L. E. Carlton; College, A. L. Hook; Missions, Miss Frankye Marshall; Christian Endeavor, Miss Cora Lea Scott; Children, Mrs. J. L. Foster, Adults, Rev. J. H. Smith; Religious Education, Rev. W. E. Wisseman; Young People, Miss Avis Dunn.

By vote, the first Sunday in October is to be Rally Day and an effort is to be made to get everybody to Sunday school and church. Preparing for this a survey is to be made of each community in order to find new members. The Board of Christian Education will furnish survey cards.

The meeting next year is to be with the Apple's Chapel Church and the time of meeting is to be decided by the Executive Committee.

FOR THE CHILDREN

NANU'S SEARCH.

By ADELAIDE FAIRBANK.

"Nanu, you know it is useless to ery so, because there is no bread in the house and no grain in the village to make it from."

"Mother, will the gods never cease to be angry with us? Will the train never come? Have we not sacrificed the last grain we had and done worship enough to please them?"

"Nanu, you talk too much," said the mother wearily, and she rolled over with her face to the tumbled-down wall of the wretched little hut.

But Nanu could not sleep. Her body ached from head to foot. She had had nothing to eat but grass and bark for three days, and there was no prospect of anything to eat in the morning. There had been no famine quite so terrible as this in all her ten years of life. There were no crops in the fields; the cattle were all dying; there was not even a green thing to be seen anywhere, and the rivers were all dry. Nanu's two younger sisters had died of starvation, and her father and brother and older sister had gone away in search of food. They had heard of a government camp where people could get work and food for the work. Nanu wondered if they would come back, as they had promised, with food for the starving mother and girl. Then a terrible thought came over Nanu—suppose her mother were to die; what would she do?

"I will go and find Bapa (father) and get some food from him and come back to her. I will go now while she is asleep." She filled the brass cup with the last drop of water in the earthen mart and put it where her mother could reach it. Then she stepped out into the night.

The village was silent and gleamed ghostly white in the clear moonlight. There was no sign of life anywhere, but she started bravely forth. For hours she walked over rough country roads; the parched ground was very hard to walk on. About three o'clock in the morning, Nanu became very frightened. At last she stopped for a rest and rolled up under a tree, covering up her head with rags. It was broad daylight when she awoke. She started up guiltily and ran a few steps down the road. Her strength soon gave out and she had to sit down and rest. By this time she wondered if she would have the strength to call to a passerby, should one appear. Soon a cart came rattling along the road. Nanu called out as loudly as she could, and the man pulled his bony oxen up to a standstill.

"What do you want," he asked roughly, but not unkindly.

"Have mercy on me," cried the child, "and tell me where the government camp is. My father is working there, and my mother is ill and starving."

"I am going to the camp," said the man. "If you follow in my track, you will get there." But he did not offer to help poor Nanu.

The empty cart rattled on, and Nanu followed. Of course she could not keep up with the cart and, overcome with heat and weariness, she lay down by the side of the road in utter exhaustion.

Nanu never knew how long she lay there. The first thing she knew was when she opened her eyes in a big airy, sunlit room and saw a white lady with a kind face bending anxiously over her, holding a cup of milk in her hand.

Later, when she was well, the Indian matron told her they had forced food and medicine down her throat, and the white lady had been with her for long hours of every day. Love and care had caused Nanu to live. Her first thought was of her mother, and she told her sad story. She was promised that a messenger would be sent to look for her mother and that she should be given food.

How clean and comfortable everything around her was! How good the food tasted! She had never dreamed that there was such a place in the world! She wondered what sort of village this could be, and was told that this was a school for little girls, which the white lady took care of with money sent by some kind people in America.

"Are they poor people of low caste that they are so kind?" asked Nanu.

"No," said the woman, "they belong to God's caste, for they worship the one great God who is the Father of us all—rich and poor, of every land alike. He sent us His Son to tell us that He loves us and wants us to pray to Him and not to other gods who do not hear."

"Does he never get angry," asked Nanu, "and send disease and famine?"

"He does all things through love, just as a father," said the woman.

"If I pray to Him, will he find my family for me?" wondered the child.

"He will take care of them anyway," was the answer.

"Oh," said Nanu, "I like this God and His Son who are so kind. It was a long while before Nanu thoroughly understood all this, but what she did understand made her happy. A week later the messenger returned. The man stopped and talked with the white lady, and Nanu saw him shake his head sadly. Then the lady came to Nanu and told her very gently that her mother could not be found and that no one in the village had seen her. The messenger had gone to the camp to see if she might have gone there, but she had not. Nanu's father and brother had gone away a few days before to find the family. Nanu's sister was ill at the camp. The messenger thought it best to bring her to the girl's school and had brought her along on his back.

Nanu was very sad to think that they could not find her mother, but was very happy that her sister would be made well. So she prayed to the good God, whom she was learning to love and trust, to care for the rest of her family, wherever they were and to make her sister well.

The two girls have never found the rest of their family, but through their friends in America, they have found home and friends and school and health, and ever so many things they never knew about before—Adapted from "Here and There Stories."

THINGS YOU USE ON THE FARM.

How many can you answer? Each answer is in the sentence itself. For instance, the first answer is "spade." Look carefully at the first statement and see if you cannot find the word "spade" spelled out for you.

1. I grasp a dead nettle by its root.
 2. If you listen, you will hear a kettle singing on the fire.
 3. The old sheep lowered her head to the lamb.
 4. Who entered the house and left the door open?
 5. The old hermit entered his hovel with a sigh.
 6. The farmer offered his son his choice of the level tract or the hilly field.
 7. The old rag was quickly thrust out of sight when company came.
 8. These plants are mine, and these Ede received from the nursery.
 9. The exhibitor threw a gondola picture on the screen.
 10. I stood where a persimmon tree dropped its fruit richly on the ground.

A LAYMAN AS MODERATOR.

The Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. elected a layman as moderator in their recent national Convention at Cleveland, Ohio. This is unusual, but significant. The layman referred to is Dr. Sam Higginbottom, now beloved and noted in many nations as a really great missionary. Through his zeal, consecration and good sense, tens of thousands are being led to a higher level of living and hundreds, not to say thousands, are embracing the religion that has made him what he is. He is not a preacher, nor a prophet, nor an evangelist, but in a unique way found his way to the heart of thousands in India and is indeed doing a marvelous work.

Dr. Higginbottom is an English farmer, educated in the United States, graduating from Princeton University in 1903, entering the missionary field immediately. Let the Associated Press of June 10 tell some salient facts about this wonderful missionary who is different; declaring that modern India knows him as "a missionary extraordinary," who taught impoverished farmers western ways and increased their crops six-fold the story continues:

"Hearty and robust at 64 he radiates a peculiar enthusiasm born of India. He acquired it one day near Calcutta, where famine and pestilence dwelt in one of the world's richest regions. It came along with an idea.

Educates India.

"'Why,' he asked church superiors, 'wouldn't the teaching of modern farm methods be the best way to carry our religion to the whole of India, helpfully, naturally and economically?'"

"They pointed to the expense and inquired about his knowledge of farming.

"Although nearing middle age, Sam Higginbottom returned to America, enrolled at Ohio State University to study agriculture. He scheduled many weekends of money-raising speeches. When he graduated two years later he had $30,000.

"Back in India, the new farm specialist purchased the worst tract he could find. It was rough, gullied, and would not rent for eight cents an acre. But there were two assets—the land bordered a railroad from which it would be seen by travelers and it was near Allahabad, capital of united provinces and their 50,000,000 population.

"The venture was successful from the start. It became the home of Allahabad Agricultural College. The farm had a rental value of $7.00 an acre in three years.

Project Successful.

"The story got around India. Mahatma Gandhi wrote congratulatory letters. Dr. Higginbottom was told he had checked India's double starvation of the mind and soul.

"From this early success came a campaign to put the country's "sacred" cattle—one-third of the world's total—on a paying basis. The Hindus resisted, for in their cows they saw the reincarnation of deceased brothers and sisters. Dr. Higginbottom built modern barns. He built silos to show how fodder could be stored. Sanitary milking methods were demonstrated. Rural India got its first cream separator.

"The cows grew larger and were healthier. Many Hindus were convinced."

Dr. Higginbottom founded a college of which he is president and after ten years there are more than two thousand pupils. "This is my answer to poverty," said Dr. Higginbottom.

Verily, in this man that Scripture is fulfilled, "Unto each one of us was the grace given according to the measure of the gift of Christ. He gave some to be apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of the ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ: till we all attain unto the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God."

May we each, by the grace of God, find our place and our work and seek with all diligence to do it, tolerating and welcoming, as brothers beloved, all who are seeking to make this a better world in which to live and to build up the kingdom of heaven on earth.

As may be seen from the above one or two Sunday schools and churches not heretofore reporting the missionary offering have done so the past week. We are indeed grateful for this indication of increasing interest in missions. The Easter offering still comes in and there are yet others to report. We shall be happy and grateful to receive these reports.

WORSHIP PROGRAM FOR WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETIES OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

Prepared by

MRS. J. EVERETTE NEESE.
Henderson, N. C.

THEME: "The Courage to Serve."
PIANO PRELUDE: One stanza of "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee."
(Pilgrim Hymnal No. 291.)

CALL TO WORSHIP: "He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."

RESPONSIVE READING: The story of the Good Samaritan.

Leader—"And, behold, a certain lawyer stood up, and tempted him, saying, Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?"

Response—He said unto him, What is written in the law? how readist thou?

Leader—And he answering said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself.

Response—And he said unto him, Thou hast answered right: this do and thou shalt live.

Leader—But he, willing to justify himself, said unto Jesus, And who is my neighbor?

Response—And Jesus answering said, A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead.

Leader—And by chance there came down a certain priest that way: and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side.

Response—And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked on him, and passed by on the other side.

Leader—But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was: and when he saw him, he had compassion on him.

Response—And went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him.

Leader—And on the morrow when he departed, he took out two pence, and gave them to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee.

Response—Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbor unto him that fell among the thieves?

Leader—And he said, He that showed mercy on him. Then said Jesus unto him, Go, and do thou likewise.

POEM: "The Voice of God Is Calling."

The voice of God is calling
It summons unto men;
As once He spoke in Zion,
So now he speaks again.
Whom shall I send to succor
My people in their need:
Whom shall I send to loosen
The bonds of lusts and greed?

I hear my people crying
In cot and mine and slum;
No field and mart is silent,
No city street is dumb.
I see my people falling
In darkness and despair,
Whom shall I send to shatter
The fetters which they bear?

We heed, O Lord, Thy summons,
And answer, "Here are we!"
Send us upon Thine errand,
Let us thy servants be.
Our strength is dust and ashes,
Our years a passing hour—
But Thou canst use our weakness,
To magnify Thy power.

From ease and pleasure save us;
From pride of place absolve;
Purge us of low desire,
Lift us to high resolve.
Take us and make us holy,
Teach us Thy will and way,
Speak, and behold! we answer,
Command, and we obey.

—John Hayne Holmes.

PRAYER: A Prayer for our city, taken from the "American City and Its Church."

O God, we pray Thee for this, the city of our love and pride. We rejoice in her spacious beauty and her busy ways of commerce, in her stores and factories where hand joins hand in toil, and in her blessed homes where heart joins heart for rest and love. . . . Help us to make our city the greater home of our people, where all may live their lives in comfort, unafraid, loving their loves in peace and rounding out their years in strength.

Bind our citizens, not by the bond of money and of profit alone, but by the glow of neighborly good-will, by the thrill of common joys, and the pride of common possessions. As we set the great aims of the future of our city, may we ever remember that her true wealth and greatness consist, not in the abundance of the things we possess, but in the justice of her institutions and the brotherhood of her children. Make her rich in her sons and daughters and famous through the lofty passions that inspire them. . . .

Grant us a vision of our city, fair as she might be: a city of justice, where none shall prey on others; a city of plenty, where vice and poverty shall cease to fester; a city of brotherhood, where all success shall be founded on service, and honor shall be given to nobleness alone; a city of peace, where order shall not rest on force, but on the love of all for the city, the great mother of the common life and weal. Hear thou, O Lord, the silent prayer of all our hearts as we each pledge our time and strength and thought to speed the day of her coming beauty and righteousness.

—Walter Rauschenbusch.

POEM: "The Place of Service."

"Dear Lord," I said, "I cannot serve
No quiet spot have I
From which to reach with tender hand
And draw the tempted nigh;

"No sheltered home is mine, wherein
To stay their wandering feet
Till faith and understanding love
Have made Thy message sweet;

"I cannot go to seek them, Lord,
My days are filled with care,
The struggle of the market place
Holds me forever there."

Then: "Ah," said He, "haste thou to serve!
Dost thou not see my grace?
My tempted ones are thronging thee—
Here in the market place!"

—Earnest Worker.

HYMN: "The City, Lord, Where Thy Dear Light." (Pilgrim Hymnal No. 341.)

CLOSING PRAYER.

Lord, teach us to accept Thy teachings as a reality and help us to put thy desires into action. Make real to us the indifference and negligence of which we are guilty. Give us courage to serve in those needy places of life and to magnify Thy name in our every-day lives. We ask in Thy name. Amen.

JOHN R. MOTT STOOD AS A TOWER.

When the much discussed missionary report came before the Uniting Conference in the closing hours at Kansas City, John R. Mott towered majestically. For months a large group had stood for three or more boards of missions, but the report as submitted provided for one board for the Methodist Church, though a strong minority opposed. It was for Dr. Mott as chairman of the committee to make the final winning plea which he did. Says he:

"If I might just say this word: I read in what we are doing here that we are summoned not only to what I call the united front, and a great advance, but we are summoned, I think, as never before, to great acts of trust; first, trust in what we have called here unerring guiding principles that I maintain have never led an organization or a Christian into a blind alley; also, great acts of trust in one another.

"Here we are weaving together three splendid churches, but we are doing more than that. We are weaving together various groupings, drawn on various lines, into what may become the most impressive and contagious and triumphant unity in our modern time. There have got to be great acts of trust in one another.

"Then I should say above all, to make this possible, because you and I are not atheists, we are profound be-

Pilgrim Fellowship

"Youth at Work in the Church"

Emily Carleton Lester, Editor

MISS COGHILL HONORED.

Young people and older people throughout the Southeast know and love Pattie Lee Coghill. The people in our churches in Florida have recently given her as a token of their love and appreciation a gift of over $100.00 as she completes her tenth year of service there. This was presented to "Pattie Lee" at the State Conference by Mrs. Robert Williams, who preceded her as the extension worker in Florida. We would like to share with you a letter from Mrs. Williams, which tells of the gift:

"The presentation had a personal note, telling how I first met Pattie Lee in Ether, N. C., while doing S. S. S. work, and how very fittingly it seemed to select her for Florida from the Christian fellowship just at the time of the merger.

"The 'speech' went on to say that we respect her professionally. She has guided wisely the development of the religious education of our children and our young people, and has been a helpful counsellor of our women's groups. She has always been faithful. We have marvelled at her ability to accomplish a great deal under difficult circumstances.

"Then we love her as a friend. She is always a welcome guest at whatever uncerthly hour she arrives. We give her full leeway in our homes, turning over to her our irons, bath tubs, etc. We like her for herself. We like her looks and her charming manners, her fine integrity, her sensitive spirit, and her deep spirituality.

"Feeling this way about her, the gift was a joyous expression, though quite inadequate of our love for her. The money was not to be used to pay bills or to get the young people of Florida out of debt, but for some satisfying and thrilling new venture that will give her pleasure and refreshment and enthusiasm to go forward."

AFTER CONFERENCE—WHAT?

The young people of Florida have already returned to their homes after a week's experience which they will never forget. This week the young people of Tennessee are meeting at Pleasant Hill Academy, the young people of the Southern Convention are meeting at Elon College, and the first session of the Florida Junior High Camp is meeting. These groups are enjoying the privilege of a week of work and play, worship and recreation, fellowship and renewal. Soon the other groups of young people in the Southeast will have their summer conferences.

After these young people have gained new enthusiasm and inspiration at these training schools, and have returned to their homes and their home churches, then what? Are those who have stayed at home going to give these delegates an opportunity to "give" to their local church? When the delegates return with new ideas about aims and methods in the Sunday school, will the superintendent say "We've always done it this way, and we are not interested in any new ideas?" Will the young people be given an opportunity to report—either at Sunday school or at a church service—each one telling about some phase of the work or play at their summer conference? Will the leaders in the local church expect that these young people will try to do something constructive in their local church, even if they have never been among the group of leaders there before? Will your church give your representatives a chance to serve when they return?

Think over these questions. Be ready to give your delegates the help they will need when they return home—so that they will be able to make the descent from the "mountain-top experiences" they have had and begin to serve with enthusiasm in your church.

WHY WE PROTESTANTS BELIEVE IN DEMOCRACY.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR JULY 2, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Acts 6:1-6.

Daily Readings—

Monday—One God to be Worshipped—
Ex. 20:1-6.

Tuesday—A Spiritual Household—Eph. 2:18, 22.

Wednesday—Life and Liberty in Christ—
John 10:7-10.

Thursday—God Above Earthly Powers—
I Tim. 2:1-6.

Friday—Friendship and Love in Christ—
John 15:12-17.

Saturday—Brotherhood in Christ—
Matt. 23:8-12.

In discussing this topic we should seek to discover what Christianity and democracy have in common.

They have a kindred attitude toward people. Democracy seeks to liberate people of all grades and conditions, giving each person his largest possible chance. Christianity seeks to do for individuals spiritually what democracy endeavors to do for individuals politically and socially.

They have a kindred regard for the importance of fellowship among people. Democracy seeks to make a real community of a nation wherein all the people feel themselves a part of one another. Christianity brings all followers of Jesus Christ into one vast fellowship.

Protestant Christianity and democracy recognize the right of private judgment and private choice. In a democracy, each individual has a voice, a vote, in the running of a nation. Ideally he is free to vote as he chooses. Christianity, according to Protestantism, "teaches the priesthood of all believers—each person stands in his own right before God, and answers for his own actions."

Other Points for Discussion—

1. Is the Church a democracy? To what extent do we delegate powers to certain church leaders and officers for sake of efficiency?

2. Many churches use such statements as "We welcome everyone." If a negro family, or Japanese, or Mexican, family sought admittance to our church membership, would we gladly take them in? Why?

3. Would you approve of the following statements: (a) "Direct access to God in seeking forgiveness for sin is the possession of every believer; the only Mediator necessary is Jesus Christ." (b) "The best spiritual blessings are not to be bought and sold."—?

Suggested Hymns—

"My Country 'Tis of Thee."

"In Christ There Is No East or West."

PAUL REVIEWS HIS LIFE.

LESSON XIII—JUNE 25, 1939.

GOLDEN TEXT: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith."—II Tim. 4:7.

LESSON: II Cor. 11:16-12:10; Phil. 1:12-24; 3:7-18; II Tim. 4:7, 8.

Those of you who have read or seen the play, "Green Pastures," may recall that dramatic moment when the Lawd is talking with his prophets and reveals something of the eternal heart-ache and heart-break of the Father's heart by saying in the quaint way of the language of the play, "Being God ain't no bed of roses." Paul could paraphrase those words and say, "Being a Christian, or being a foreign missionary ain't no bed of roses." although Paul would have used more eloquent language. For Paul's career was filled with hardship and heart-ache. In one of the few times when, goaded by the proud spirit of his opponents, he did boast mildly and very moderately about his own experiences, he presents a gripping summary of his career so far as the dangers and difficulties of his life and work are concerned. There were physical hardships, physical dangers, even near death itself, again and again. He suffered at the hands of nature, at the hands of foreigners, at the hands of his own countrymen.

Read the list of "perils" to which he was constantly subjected, as recorded in II Corinthians 11:24-27, and you will see what he suffered and endured. Then there is a tug at one's heart as he adds, ". . . besides those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches." That was the thing that bore most heavily on his heart—the sense of concern and of responsibility for the churches. He took upon himself the weaknesses and the divisions, and the hardships and the persecutions, of all the churches. He carried them in his mind and on his heart. Life for Paul was "no bed of roses."

The Thorn in the Flesh.

And then there was "the thorn in the flesh." It is idle to try to decide what it was. But Paul had some handicap or some affliction that was grievous to be borne. Thrice did he earnestly beseech God to take it from him. He would not take "no" for an answer until he became convinced that it was not God's will that it should be taken from him. Then with characteristic spirit he used his handicap. In his weakness he found a new source of strength. In what would have been his shame he found a source of glory for God. In what would have humiliated another man, he rejoiced and found pleasure. Paul took trouble and personal limitations and used them in such a way that he found great joy, and that he glorified God.

All Things Working Together for Good.

Paul had long had a desire to go to Rome. And finally he got to Rome. But it was as a prisoner, under Roman guard, with no opportunity to get out and preach the Gospel, which he knew was the power of God. Many a person would have turned sour and surly. But this fellow Paul was irrepressible and undiscourageable. In writing to his Philippian friends, he told them that he wanted them to know that the things that had happened to him had fallen out rather to the furtherance of the Gospel. If Paul could not get away from the guards to preach Christ, he would preach Christ to the guards. And when these guards went off duty and others came on, Paul preached to them. And so on until as Paul writes his imprisonment had been a blessing in disguise. The Gospel had been preached in a way that could not have otherwise been preached. Furthermore, Paul's example in preaching Christ to the praetorium guard had greatly encouraged others to preach Christ. If only we would serve Christ just where we are, with just what we have, as did Paul!

Homesick for the Glory Land.

There were times when Paul got a little homesick for the glory land. "Having a desire to depart and be with Christ"—he did not think of it in terms of death; which he said would have been better for him than to have to go through what he was going through. But he was committed to the Father's will. He knew that his work had not been finished. He knew that "to abide in the flesh is more needful for your sake." He would carry on to the last. As long as he was in the world, he would give himself to others.

Old in Body, Young in Spirit.

The average person is more or less familiar with Paul's words about forgetting the things that are behind and looking to the things that are before, and pressing toward the mark of the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. But it is quite possible that many of them do not know that Paul was a comparatively old man when he wrote those words. Middle age, and even old age, had not taken off the edge of his zest for Christ, or his desire to grow in grace and in the knowledge of Christ.

So many times when folks get to middle age, and especially when they have been trying to do right along the way, they have a tendency to let up a bit and rest on their oars. But not so with Paul. He pressed on. He kept going and growing. It is well to remember that when he wrote these words, he was not only a comparatively old man, but he was one of the best men who ever lived. What a rebuke he is to so many of us with our complacency and our self-satisfaction, as contrasted with his hunger and thirst after righteousness.

Journey's End.

And finally the end was coming as come it always must. The old man knew it; he knew that the time of his departure was at hand. Here again he refers to death in a wholesome and simple way; he knew that there was no hope for a reprieve and that he would soon "be poured out as a drink offering." And he writes those words that set the heart to beating just a little faster as one reads them: "I have fought a good fight." Life had been a stern, serious business with Paul. He had no delusions about the difficulties involved in being a Christian and in doing the Master's work, if it was done honestly and well. Paul was a fighter in the best sense of the word. He never quit or whined or went on furlough. He endured hardness as a good soldier of Christ.

"I have finished the course." He changes the figure of speech to a race instead of a warfare. He had not turned aside, he had not stopped, he had not even slackened his pace. He had been called by God for a special work, and he had finished his course.

"I have kept the faith." He did not mean that his faith had been static. Paul had a growing faith. His letters reveal that fact. But he had kept faith with Christ and those who trusted him. He had faced all that life could do to him, but he had an even deeper faith than when he became a Christian. These are great words.

The Crown of Righteousness.

Henceforth there is laid up for me the crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give

"FRIENDSHIP OF THE LAW."

"Rulers are not a terror to good works."—Romans 13:2.

A motoreyele cop came along side me on my left and waved me over. "Driving a little bit fast aren't you, friend?" "That's all right," said he, "just a friendly warning." We are told that in New York State, signs along the road read: "In case of trouble phone the Sheriff," giving phone number.

This is an attitude of the law, not often thought of. The primary function of the law is intended not to be punishment but friendship, and it seeks to befriend the one in trouble. The person intended no evil will, or should find it so.

God is an ever present help in time of trouble. When in trouble call upon Him. When not in trouble serve Him and praise His name.

Prayer—Our Father, we have need of Thee. Forbid that we should think of Thee through fear but with love and confidence. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"PROFESSIONAL GOODNESS."

"Greet ye one another."—I Cor. 16:20.

"Peace be to Thee."—III John 14.

We have been used to the modern hotel system of doormen, bellboys, elevator boys, chamber maids, etc., whom some delight to call "Flunkies." A recent experience in hotel life in Shanghai, China, gave us a new angle on this system. A helper at the curb, two youths at the door, the elevator boy, etc., every one with their greeting and "Can I help you?"

"Different from others" did you ask? Yes, the basic human touch more accentuated. And we are told that this touch is becoming more common everywhere. "Merely professional," you say, "and all with their hands out for 'eumshaw,'"

Truly indeed. But isn't it soothing and satisfying to be so greeted? We like the hominess of it. It makes for good humor through the day. After all good nature and politeness is religion in action. How much better the world would be if in the every day walks of life we all did it. It is easy to do, and it costs nothing. And our "eumshaw" is a lot of happiness.

Prayer—O Lord, forgive us of our bad manners, and teach us how to shine with the cheerfulness of good will and helpfulness. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"RELIGION OF LETTERS."

"I now write unto you."—II Peter 3:1.

Letters from friends are a joy forever, and letters to friends are an impelling interest. There is particular inspiration in a few letters of friends long since gone to their reward. Would that more of such letters had been kept. Their words are like angelic voices from the beyond. They satisfy the soul. They steady the ship. They remind us that life is short and fleeting, and soon shall pass. God forbid that it shall pass wanting in letters of light and love that shall be something of inspiration to the noble and the true to those coming on.

Prayer—O Lord, forbid complacency in ourselves. Help us to see the relation of our fellowman to Thee and the good we may do future generations by giving our best while we pass this way. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"THE PRINCE OF PEACE."

"Peace, peace, when there is no peace."—Jer. 6:9-15.

On this subject let Dr. William Ellis speak. He says: "Our world is talking all around the peace theme. There is danger that we may lack the insight and courage to face the core of the matter. For the price of peace is the Prince of peace.

Only the accepted sovereignty of Jesus can give us a world wherein the abiding peace exists. A selfish, greedy, fear-filled world is bound to break out into war. Even the highest self interest cannot prevent this. Except Christ rule peace simply cannot prevail.

Prayer—O Lord, we pray for the people of the world that their hearts may come into the way of the Savior. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"A WORSHIPPER IN WAITING."

"True worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth."—John 4:23.

The true meaning of these words of our Savior should become the consciousness of every person who enters the door of the Church. The custom today (in the less credal churches) is to use up the time of waiting as if there is nothing else to a service but the program and therefore they must do something until it begins. They engage themselves in looking at others, seeing what they wear, how they look, talking with one another, and there is a chatter all over the audience.

Upon entering the sanctuary, quiet should reign. Worship has begun. Sit quietly in meditation and prayer; read the hymn book, the responses, the credal statements therein; give thyself a searching examination. Draw near to God. Worship. With the world shut out and you shut in, there is communion which is the highest form of worship.

Prayer—(Pray as you feel.)

SATURDAY.

"EVERLASTING BEHAVIOR."

"Each man's work shall be made manifest."—I Cor. 3:13.

THE SUPREME QUESTION IN RELIGION.

“What wilt Thou have me to do?”—Acts 9:6.

The conversion of Saul of Tarsus was one of the most mysterious conversions of which we have any record. People have tried to explain it. Some have even discounted the narrative as well as the experience itself. But explain it any way you wish, you cannot explain it away. Something happened in the life of that little Jew called Saul. Enough happened that it changed his way of living in the days that followed. Enough happened that it changed the history of the world. The proof that something happened is the changed attitude and changed life of the man himself. That is the only proof of any conversion—the effect upon the life and the conduct following the conversion. Paul's life after that experience is convincing evidence that something happened.

Christianity found its greatest opponent in the man who was once its greatest opponent. The antecedent of Paul's conversion, that which without question led up to the final climax and his complete surrender, was the martyrdom of Stephen, and the genuineness of the lives of those known as Christians. Paul realized when he was converted to the Christian faith that the supreme question in religion is not what one should believe about certain doctrines, but what one should do for God—“What wilt thou have me to do, Lord?” That was his question. The inspiration of his new faith in the Lordship of Christ inspired him with a desire to do something for his Lord. True conversion always inspires men and women to service. That desire to do something for God is the only evidence of a genuine religious experience. Religious convictions can only be expressed in conduct.

Religion is not a theology to be argued about, but an experience to be expressed and verified in terms of life. Religion must touch the whole of a man's life in order for it to touch any of his life. Instead of being a department of one's life, religion, if it is to have meaning and value, must be a part of all one's life. Religion does more than to influence a man in his praying. It is possible for an irreligious man to pray. But only “the effectual, fervent prayer of the righteous man availeth much.”

Religion determines how a person lives. The genuineness of one's religion is expressed in what one desires to do, and what one refuses to do. Religion determines one's conduct in business, in politics, and in social life, and in the home as well as in the church. Religion determines how a person works, because it puts conscience into one's work. The sincere Christian desires to have his daily life and work bear constant testimony of Christ's redeeming power. Too many people try to convince themselves that they are Christians because of certain things they will not do. Christianity is not evidenced by negatives. Paul's inquiry was not “What do you want me not to do?” but “What wilt thou have me to do?” The Christian lives in affirmatives and not in negatives. Every worthy vocation in life can be made just as sacred as the work of the minister or the work of the missionary if one will dedicate himself and his work to the doing of God's will. The supreme question in religion since the days of Jesus has been, “What wilt thou have me to do, Lord?” Not until Christian people of every church and creed realize that Christian service should receive the major emphasis in all the preaching and teaching will they be able to convince the world of the importance of Christian faith, for “Faith without works is dead”—not only dead but useless.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

to me at that day.” Not material rewards are the dividends of religion. But Paul believed in the essential integrity and fairness of the universe. He believed that back of the seeming indifference of the world itself, there was an intelligent and loving Spirit, God himself. He knew whom he had believed. And he knew that death would be his coronation day. The Lord himself, the righteous Judge, would crown him with the crown of righteousness. “Goodness is its own reward.” Righteousness is profitable both in this world and in that which is to come.

And Paul makes no claim to special privilege. He says that the Lord will give the crown of righteousness to all of them that have loved His appearing. Whosoever will may partake of the water of life freely. God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation, he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him.

FAMILY ALTAR.

There is a Philipino cook on board my ship who is an artist in pastries. One of his arts is carving figures from vegetables, mere ornaments for special occasions. It is astonishing what he can do to a sweet potato. And we are told that these materials harden and may be kept indefinitely.

There is a handicraft of living in which acts intended for the moment only become a permanent influence. Let us examine ourselves. What is our handicraft, for good or evil?

Prayer—O Lord, grant us so to live that our words and deeds may abide for beauty and glory. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE BACKGROUND OF SILENCE.

“Be still.”—Psalm 4:1-8.

“How perfectly quiet it is!” exclaimed the city guest.

“Listen,” said her host; “what do you hear back of the seeming silence?”

It took some minutes for ears unused to subtler sounds than the automobile to catch the incessant undertone of insect music, which night and day fills the woodland.

Thus with life. Unnoticed behind the clamor of things hums softly and sweetly the music of the ordinary lives of the plain people—tireless, self-forgetting men and women by the millions, busy about commonplace tasks, making the real melody of life.

Prayer—Behind all the noise and garishness of today, we would hear, O Father of the universe, the softer notes of life as it is lived in quiet reality. Amen.

—Wm. T. Ellis.

“If sinners should refrain from intoxicating liquors for reasons of health—both mind and body—surely Christians should with the additional incentive of being the ‘light of the world’—an example to the lost.”

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The Christian Orphanage of the Congregational-Christian Church fills a place in the church that no other institution of the church can fill. Elon College cannot reach out its arms and take in its care little children who have been left homeless. It is not its line of work. The Mission Board cannot. It would be out of the question. The Board of Christian Education cannot because running an orphanage is out of its line of work. It is not the mission of either of these institutions to do this kind of work. But it is the mission of the Christian Orphanage. The Christian Orphanage was established for this purpose, and its mission since it opened its doors in January, 1907, has been to give little helpless children a home, training, and a chance in life. Through the years, since it has been carrying out the mission for which it was established, four hundred and fifty-seven children have received a warm welcome at its front door; many of these children had lost father and mother, and had no home and no one to come to their rescue and give them a home. They were helpless and dependent. Many of them had lost their father, the bread winner for the family. The mother, left with a group of little children that she could not provide for, appealed to the orphanage for help in her distress, and the orphanage went to the rescue.

A few days ago the orphanage had a most pathetic appeal to take two little boys. The father was killed in an auto wreck in 1937. The mother was left with several little children that she tried to support and care for; but found it impossible. In a moment of grave discouragement and despondence she committed suicide. They appealed to the orphanage for a home and care. Who could have the heart to say no to them? They came—bright little fellows, the oldest nine, the youngest, four. The youngest is such a fat, chubby little fellow one cannot help but want to pick him up in his arms and love him. Who is it that would not get a little more joy out of life by chipping in a contribution when the offering is taken in his Sunday school to help give these little helpless dependent children a home and a chance? They perhaps will, with proper care and training, grow into two fine citizens who may make their mark in the world.

Other denominations in the State of North Carolina are ministering thousands of dollars in this kind of work each year and they look on their orphanages with a great deal of pride and count them an asset to their denomination. Today the orphanages in North Carolina are giving a home to nearly five thousand children. They consider it a fine investment. May the Congregational-Christian denomination take a greater interest in their orphanage and contribute more freely to support it.

livers, there must be great acts of trust in our living Lord.

"This morning, long before day-break, I had my mind drawn to a passage that came vividly before me as a few weeks ago I passed by that island by which St. Paul and his great company there were threatened with shipwreck, when you remember he stood out among them in the time of greatest fear and doubt and trouble, all alone, and said, 'Do not have fear. I believe in God.' That spirit, no matter what our fears, no matter what our forebodings, the spirit of St. Paul, the great missionary apostle, 'I believe in God!'

"In other words, we believe in the super-human factor, which will not only, my friends, lead us into something that the ordinary world will call unity, but something much greater than that. What we want is not the dullness of uniformity, but unity in diversity. We want something that transcends and draws in everything which anybody here calls vital and is authenticated by Christ. Therefore, I say, 'Great acts of trust in Him.' Then, my friends, we will look back, all of us, and our children will look back to this as one of the great creative hours with God."—*N. C. Tools for Toilers

A DIFFERENT KIND OF BOOK.

"Health for Mind and Spirit" is the title of the book referred to, and its author is W. R. Northridge. "Of the making of books there is no end," but every worthwhile book is like a new breath of life to its readers. The minister who quits reading the best in recent books has already reached his maximum efficiency. There is little chance for him to grow.

It is always refreshing to dip into "a different kind of book" from time to time. The recent book by Dr. Northridge is just that type of book. The title is suggestive and inviting—"Health for Mind and Spirit."

Because so many men and women are constitutionally inadequate for the complex life of our day, and because their number is constantly increasing with each succeeding year practically a new field of responsibility has been opened up to every pastor within the past twenty-five years. In every community there are people who need and who are seeking help and guidance in making life's adjustments. They are not psychopathic cases but may easily become such unless the help needed is received in time. A working knowledge of psychology will enable a minister to render invaluable help to such people. For a man to be qualified to meet this new responsibility he must know how other men are successfully serving in that capacity.

Dr. Northridge in his new book, "Health for Mind and Spirit," gives data from the clinic of his own observations and service which every minister would find profitable reading. The book is unusually interesting and rewarding. It is published by the Abingdon Press, and can be secured from any book store for $2.00. Every pastor should without fail secure a copy of this important book.

In Memoriam

BRILL.

Hamilton Gaver Brill was born in Hampshire County, W. Va., November 10, 1855, and died on June 9, 1939, aged eighty-three years. He was a loyal member of Timber Ridge Church from boyhood days to the end of his earthly life. Burial services were held in the church Sunday afternoon, June 11, conducted by the pastor, who was assisted by Rev. C. H. Anderson, Rev. Daniel Spaid, and Judge G. K. Kump. His body was laid to rest in the church cemetery. Brother Brill is survived by his wife, who before her marriage was Miss Sallie Arnold. He is survived also by three daughters, eleven grandchildren, and one sister, and four brothers.

R. A. WHITTEN.

WILLIAMS.

Mr. John J. Williams passed from this life March 21, 1939, in the seventy-eighth year of his life.

Funeral service was conducted by his pastor, Rev. L. L. Wyrick, assisted by a former pastor, Rev. T. J. Green.

Brother Williams was a faithful member of Shallow Ford Christian Church for many years.

Therefore be it resolved:

1. That we shall greatly miss him in his faithfulness and loyalty to his church and community.

2. That we extend to his family our deepest sympathy in their sorrow.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to "The Christian Sun," and a copy be placed upon our minutes.

FAUCETTE.

Whereas, God, in His infinite love has seen fit to call to her reward our sister, Mrs. J. T. Faucette, on March 19, 1939, we, as a church and as individuals desire to record our appreciation of her and our sorrow in our loss. Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That the Shallow Ford Christian Church, of which she was a member, has lost one for whom they mourn.

2. That we extend to the family our warmest sympathy and earnest prayers that God's promises may fall soothingly upon their sad hearts and when life's work is done they may form an unbroken circle around His throne.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, one spread upon the church records, and one sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Summer Camps and Conferences

In one hundred camps, conferences, and schools of various kinds, the young people of Congregational and Christian Churches gather this summer. On returning home they will have much to say about the good times they had while together. They will tell of sports, of play and pranks, of songs and games, new and old, which they have learned. One purpose of these schools is to train young people to enjoy living and to lead others in such enjoyment.

But underneath and beyond this play-time and fun there is something more serious, and many of those who attend the conferences will find new height and depth to life. In the classroom will come a broader vision of the Bible, the Church and the activities in which religious people engage. At the Vesper Hour some will hear not only a call to worship, but a call to service. Like three disciples of Jesus, some will climb to a mountain of transfiguration as they gather together in little groups to make plans, consider problems, and to share with each other Christian experiences.

Not all of the disciples of Jesus saw the "vision glorious," but those who did were nearest him in his hour of trial and among the leaders in building his Church. Not all of you who attend the conferences, camps, and schools will find a trail to the mountain peak, but those who search for it and follow on will be rewarded with a new Christian experience and will turn again home with an inner radiance not known before.

Those who cannot attend any of the one hundred conferences can do two things to help. They can pray for those who do go, and they can arrange for them to have opportunity when they return to transform the radiant experience into Christian activity. This is a particular opportunity for pastors, church officials, and Sunday school and young people's leaders. When those who have attended one of these camps or conferences, and felt their hearts "strangely warmed" come back to the old church, give them an opportunity to serve.

"The Christian Sun" congratulates those fortunate youth who gather in camp, conference, or school for study, worship, fun and fellowship. You have an excellent opportunity which your Church is giving you in order that you may better serve this tragic world. In the words of Tiny Tim, "God bless you, every one!"

A HYMN OF YOUTH.

By Rev. Harry Thomas Stock.

(Written especially for use at Summer Conferences.)

O Gracious God, whose constant care
Supplies our golden days,
Whose joyous fellowship we share
At work, at rest, in play and prayer—
Accept our heart-felt praise.

We thank Thee, Father, for each word,
Each thought, revealing truth;
For prophet voices gladly heard,
For daring dreams, for friends who stirred
The fragile wills of youth.

Companion of our vesper hour,
Renew in us each day
Our lofty purpose, grant us power
That worthy thoughts in deeds may flower,
In Christlike lives, we pray.

Surround us through temptation's maze
When artful foes assail;
Help us a peaceful path to blaze,
To lead mankind in nobler ways,
Give strength—we would not fail!

Tune: Whittier (Dear Lord and Father of Mankind).

faith and practice."

Stanzas from "The Present Crisis"

When a deed is done for Freedom, through the broad earth's aching breast Runs a thrill of joy prophetic, trembling on from east to west,
And the slave, where'er he cowers, feels the soul within him climb
To the awful verge of manhood, as the energy sublime
Of a century bursts full-blossomed on the thorny stem of Time.

Careless seems the great Avenger: history's pages but record
One death-grapple in the darkness 'twixt old systems and the Word;
Truth forever on the scaffold, Wrong forever on the throne—
Yet that scaffold sways the future, and, behind the dim unknown,
Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above his own.

Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide;
In the strife of Truth with Falsehood, for the good or evil side,
Some great cause, God's new Messiah, offering each the bloom or blight,
Parts the goats upon the left hand and the sheep upon the right,
And the choice goes by forever 'twixt that darkness and that light.

For humanity sweeps onward: where today the martyr stands,
On the morrow crouches Judas with the silver in his hands;
Far in front the cross stands ready and the crackling fagots burn,
While the hooting mob of yesterday in silent awe return
To glean up the scattered ashes into History's golden urn.

New occasions teach new duties; Time makes ancient good uncouth;
They must upward still, and onward, who would keep abreast of Truth;
Lo, before us gleam her camp-fires! We ourselves must Pilgrims be,
Launch our Mayflower, and steer boldly through the desperate winter sea
Nor attempt the Future's portal with the Past's blood-rusted key.

—James Russell Lowell.

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

Rev. J. E. Neese is aiding his father, Rev. J. L. Neese, in a revival meeting at New Lebanon, near Reidsville, N. C.

Misses Clarene Andes and Frances Lamb are this week aiding Dr. W. M. Jay with a Vacation Bible School in Winston-Salem. They will be in Albemarle next week.

Miss Edna Fulcher, office secretary for the Board of Christian Education is this week aiding Rev. C. E. Newman and his good people in a Vacation Bible School at Union, Virgilina, Va.

A paper always seems to be so much better when it is paid for in advance. It then belongs to the subscriber. Look at your label and let your conscience be your guide. Thank you!

Several young people from the Rosemont Church attended the State Christian Endeavor Union, which was held at Massanetta Springs last week. They report a good meeting, and came back with new enthusiasm for the work here in our church.

The Rosemont Christian Church observed Children's Day on June 18. A most interesting program was presented by the children, under the direction of Mrs. J. D. Swink, Mrs. F. A. Goforth, and Mrs. J. F. Morgan. There was a very fine attendance.

Cecil Thomas and Ellis Clark are working in the Eastern North Carolina and the Valley of Virginia Conferences respectively with the hope of opening some of the closed churches in these conferences. Any help that readers of this paper can give them will be greatly appreciated.

Reports from the Pastor's Conference at Elon last week are that the program was very helpful. The discussions were concerning practical problems of the pastor. Why not check the list of pastors present and see if yours was among them? If he was not, try to plan for him to be there next year. Rev. R. L. House has been elected to plan the school for next year, and this means that another good program will be ready.

A new parsonage has just been completed by the Rosemont Christian Church, and the pastor and his family moved into it on June 15. On Monday night, June 19, open house was observed and a large number of members and friends of the church visited the new home. There were many expressions of gratitude for the Parsonage, and every one seemed to be glad that this new building had been added to the other church equipment. The Parsonage Building Committee was composed of the following persons: W. H. Farrow, chairman; H. L. Bondurant, Stanley Mills, W.

CONVENTION NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention will meet with the Rosemont Christian Church, Norfolk, Va., on Tuesday, July 18, 1939. The program of the convention will appear in a later issue of THE SUN.

JOE A. FRENCH,
Executive Secretary.

FROM A CONFERENCE SECRETARY.

The Eastern Virginia Conference will meet November 1 with the South Norfolk Christian Church. Forty-two churches and their pastors and lay-delegates will be there represented. A Conference apportionment of $15,913 is requested of the churches.

A net increase of two hundred members is requested for our rolls. Neither of these will be easy to reach unless pastors and members think about it now, and work along that line, it is entirely possible. An average of $1.50 per member would pay the total conference apportionment, and two hundred net increase in membership for the Conference is not a very big increase.

How will your church come out on these two things? Will it bring in its apportionment in full? Save an extra $5.00 during the summer months to help see that your church pays its Conference apportionment in full. Have you read a copy of the minutes of last year's conference held in the Suffolk Church? It makes very interesting reading for any member of the Christian or Congregational Churches of the Eastern Virginia Conference. Do the records show growth, strength, and enthusiasm in your church? You can get a copy of this annual with the minutes in it from your pastor in all probability. Read it. See how your church is coming along, and let us all get ready for Conference.

Help get some new members into your church. Help set a good example for those already in by attending church, and by taking a genuine interest in all its work. Those that work at the church enjoy their Christian faith, have a good time, and do a mighty lot of good. As you read these lines, determine now to be a better church member yourself, and be present November 1, 2, 3, for the Conference at South Norfolk, or wherever your particular conference happens to meet this fall.

JOHN G. TRUITT, Secretary,
Eastern Virginia Conference.

PLEASANT RIDGE CHURCH.

RANDOLPH COUNTY, N. C.

Pleasant Ridge Sunday school sent two delegates to the Elon Leadership Training School. The young ladies selected by the school were Mary Dean Brown and Ruby Williams. This is the second or third time that this church has sent representatives to the Leadership School.

On Sunday evening, June 11, at 7 o'clock, the children of the Sunday school put on a Children's Day program under the direction of their teachers, Mrs. O. C. Brown and Miss Golda Pell. The program, "The Children for the Church," was prepared and furnished by the Board of Christian Education. The children did their parts well and were a credit INDEPENDENCE.

On next Tuesday this country goes on holiday to celebrate Independence Day. On July 4, 1776, the Continental Congress, meeting in the old State House in Boston, finally adopted the Declaration of Independence and read it from the steps of that building to the crowd gathered there. From that date we have inherited a free country. On the Fourth of July we will wave our flag, sing our national anthem, and give thanks to God for our independence.

But are we independent? As a nation we take our place among other nations. But we must depend upon them for their friendship and their trade. We are independent, and can be independent, just so long as we sincerely do this. Our honest dependence is our guarantee of independence. Unless we can be trusted to be friendly and to share the rich stores God has put within our borders, the world will see to it that we lose our independence. If we can be trusted, and if we will be friendly, then we can be independent.

Our safety as a nation lies not in seclusion or suspicion. An imaginary boundary between us and a friendly Canada is much safer than the depth of the oceans that separate us from those who may hate us. From beyond the seas an enemy can come as if on dry land. Simply to stay at home is no assurance of protection. It may be a very great danger, and it certainly is never going to be practiced. National borders can no longer be defended from travelers. The dog that grabs a bone and growls at others is very certain to end in a fight, while those who share what they have will likely lie in peace when the meal is over.

Our national independence depends upon our willingness to share in a friendly way with the people of the earth. Our missionaries do more than our battleships to save our freedom. The missionaries go to serve and share; the battleships simply dare. The Church and every citizen may well be interested in what the Government does, and what business does, to make friends or enemies abroad. On this, and on our ability to live cooperatively, depends our national independence. Our heritage is good. The future is ours to make.

DEMOCRACY IN THE CHURCH.

With loud noise and much speaking we proclaim our belief in democratic government. We call on men to die that democracy may live. What is there in democracy that is worth more than human life?

Nothing but human freedom. The form of government is not so important. The beauty of the word has nothing to do with the matter. The real difference lies in the realm of personal freedom. We call ours a democratic country, while in it is to be found multitudes who have no more chance to vote than an Egyptian mummy, no more chance to make a living than an African pigmy, and no more chance for health than an Arab.

But what of the Church? Does democracy have a chance among the descendants of those who fashioned the Constitution and separated from Episcopacy? Are Congregationalists and Christians practicing the principles of individual freedom? Perhaps the Council for Social Action will make a survey of this sometime and proclaim to the world how well democracy works in the Church that has little else to distinguish it from a dozen other denominations. Such a survey would likely be very illuminating.

Consider a local church. There democracy should be at its best. Every member is supposed to vote in business session. Suppose they try! What will happen? The pastor, the deacons, the trustees, the officers, the cliques will all get disturbed, and somebody will likely suggest that those who pay should be the ones to vote. Suppose a new minister is to be called. Will the rich and the poor, the educated and the ignorant, the old and the young, will all classes of the church be consulted about what should be expected in the new pastor, or will a certain few call the man they want? Consider the plans for the work. Are all considered, or do the few tell the others what they are supposed to do? Does democracy work in your local church? If not, why not?

TWO HUNDRED LEADERS.

Today (Saturday) two hundred leaders of Congregational and Christian people left Elon College after a week of training and inspiration. They return home feeling something of the thrill of being workers in God's Church. The group included the teachers of the school as well as the pupils, for the leaders were inspired by those they taught. There were pastors, two Sunday school superintendents, several members of missionary societies, many Sunday school teachers, and a long list of young people who have dreamed that some throbbing to serve the Christ through his Church.

It was a fine group that left Elon today. They had come from good homes and churches. They had spent a week in our college. They had studied their Bibles, entered into worship experiences, discussed religious problems and problems of religion. Their hearts had been warmed by the divine Spirit as they made plans for their local churches and young people's conferences, as they tried to find the Christian attitudes, and as they pledged anew in some holy moment to live loyally to the best. They left Elon with heads high and hearts throbbing to serve the Christ through his Church.

This army of the Lord is now divided. They have gone back to forty-one communities and tomorrow they will worship in many churches. Not many will be in any one church, and some will be lone representatives in a whole church. The church at home has not received this holy inspiration. The members there have labored as usual about the usual tasks. Their reading has been the same as before. No new friendships have been formed, and no new vi- (Continued on page 9.)

SUFFOLK LETTER.

This "Letter" is being written under physical difficulty. On last Tuesday I went out to Lake Prince for one or two hours of fishing. In walking down the bank to my boat my right foot slipped and I fell, badly bruising and spraining my left ankle and the muscles of that leg. For four days I have been in bed, suffering intensely at times and am not yet able to walk without assistance. This unfortunate accident followed a week when I felt unusually well. I am reminded of an old lady I knew when I was a boy. She seemed to believe that "the worst is yet to come." If you called upon her and said: "This is a beautiful day," she would invariably reply: "Look out for a rain after a fair day." If you said: "I am feeling fine today," her answer was: "That is a sure sign you are going to be sick."

It is comforting to the lame, crippled and wounded people to know what miracles are being wrought by skilled doctors in their offices and hospitals in bringing relief to so many persons afflicted in this respect. It would fill many volumes, if an attempt were made to give a detailed history of all the cases treated and helped in the hospitals of the United States in one year. This work is done so quietly and regularly that historians have ceased to take notice of its importance. And the public does not appreciate the fact that Christianity has inspired and sponsored such work from the days when our Lord walked upon the earth. When John the Baptist was in doubt about the personality of Jesus, our Lord sent this message of assurance: "Go and shew John again those things which ye do hear and see: the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them." The skill of modern science has not yet surpassed this simple work of Jesus, and it has found its highest inspiration in His work and teachings.

There are multitudes of people who are lame, crippled and incapacitated for normal activities. They see other people come and go and they must remain on the side-lines as silent witnesses to the blighting hand of in-explainable misfortune. Sometimes the loss of normal physical health and strength is due to accident. There are numerous cases traceable to recklessness and riotous living in the days of youth. Whatever the cause the fact remains that any form of human affliction deserves the sympathetic consideration of people who are blessed with good health and plenty. Real Christianity opens heart and hand to render assistance where needed, if it is possible to do so.

Think what Christianity has done for physical, moral and social depravity! Once at Easter, Dr. W. W. Staley was severely criticized by one of the members of the Suffolk Christian Church for having a violin played during the service. The offended member said: "Dr. Staley, I am going to leave your church. You have brought that 'fiddle,' an instrument of the devil, into your church, and I will not stay in such a church." The pastor listened respectfully to this statement, and quietly said: "I have brought a great many people, who were agents of the devil, into my church, and have seen them transformed by the grace of God. If the 'fiddle' is the agent of the devil, as you claim, and I can rescue that instrument for Jesus Christ, aren't you willing to admit that it is commendable to save the devil's 'fiddle' as well as these old sinners who formerly belonged to the devil?" The man replied: "I never saw it that way before." He changed his attitude under the plea of the great pastor.

I. W. JOHNSON.

THE BOARD OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

By action of the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches in session at Portsmouth, Va., April 26-29, 1938, the Board of Education and the Board of Christian Education were merged into one board under the title "The Board of Christian Education." The Board consists of seven members of whom the president of Elon College is chairman. This newly constituted Board was charged with the responsibilities formerly borne separately by the Board of Education and the Board of Christian Education. It becomes the duty and responsibility of the newly constituted Board to sponsor and direct a program of education for our local churches, conferences, and the Convention itself.

The Board is greatly concerned for the success of Sunday School Conventions in our several conferences. The Board wishes to be of practical help to these conventions and to convey the fact to our Sunday School Conventions and from the Convention itself back to the local Sunday school and the local church that the Sunday schools individually and collectively can be of great help to the Board itself in the prosecution of the work assigned. All Sunday School Conventions have dues requested from the local school. These dues when paid go to meet necessary expenses of the local convention and other items that the Sunday School Convention would be expected to pay, the remainder to be forwarded to the Board of Christian Education for the support of the general work. The Board finds itself in rather serious financial straits at this particular time. It is the hope of the ones of us who have been charged with responsibilities that every local Sunday school will respond with dues apportioned promptly. Otherwise the Board shall find itself greatly handicapped. We all recognize the necessity and the value of the work being done in the interest of our church through her young people, and I am sure are willing to contribute our share that this work may be continued.

At this particular time under the direction of the Board the Elon Leadership Training School is in session at the college. There are, including the faculty, a little more than two hundred in attendance. It is a fine thing for representatives of different classes of our local Sunday schools and churches to gather together at a common meeting place to face the problems of the church and seek earnestly to fit themselves more adequately for a proper solution of these problems. In an atmosphere of counsel and instruction the individual must be better fitted for his duties in the local church. We cannot measure accurately the beneficent results of our training school throughout our Convention. If your Sunday school is not represented in the training school, begin to plan now to see that it will be represented next year. It is not all work and serious meditation. There are opportunities for recreation and a general good time. Young people always have a good time when they get together. The college is glad to have this fine group of our church on its campus and is very happy to cooperate with the ones in charge in the most helpful way possible. The college belongs to the church, and whatever use the

REPORT OF ELON SUMMER CONFERENCE.

THE SCHOOL.

The Elon Summer School of Leadership Education last week was of high quality. The churches sent fine young people who entered heartily into the program. Attendance on classes was almost perfect. Three hundred and eighty-one credit cards were earned by the pupils. (Each pupil could get three credits.) This is more than in any previous year.

The school is run on a non-profit basis and just did pay for itself. It is a service to the churches offered by the Board of Christian Education.

Special features not in the announcements of the school included pictures of our work in Africa and an address by Mrs. Childs, pictures of our mountain work given by Mr. W. E. Walker, the famous DeMille picture called "The Sign of the Cross," a commissioning service for the Student Summer Service workers, a communion service led by Dr. Halliday, meeting of the five conference groups to plan for work back home, pictures of China, and an offering of $19.25 for the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship project.

The following is a list of the people attending the Elon Summer School according to Conference and local churches:

Elon College Golden Anniversary

Quite a number of our friends are getting a little impatient about the slowly rising temperature in our golden anniversary thermometer. Some of these friends have done what they could to make the temperature rise. Others are taking theirs out in wishing. The temperature of the thermometer hanging on our porch has been pretty high for the past two weeks. The sun, however, does not affect the temperature in the golden anniversary thermometer. It takes gold or its equivalent, not the sun, to send that up.

Many seem to feel that unless they have the money to pay, they should not make their subscriptions. Of course cash in hand is most desirable, but whenever the cash comes, it can be used to pay on our obligations. The majority of us who are interested prefer to make our pledges and pay on designated dates. If you have not sent in your subscription, why keep us in this suspense. Your name added to the list would be helpful in bringing others to a decision and definite cooperation. Three subscriptions a week will not send the mercury to $150,000 by commencement 1940. If you have sent in your subscription, how about the other two members of your committee? Won't you make it a point to see them as early as possible, have them make their pledges, and send in their cards. This undertaking is of sufficient importance to our whole church to enlist the cooperation of every member of the church and Sunday school. Your cooperation will not only encourage others but will save us the expense of personal solicitation. We know that you want every dollar that you give to come to Elon College, and we are trying to cooperate with you to that end. Please come to our assistance that the amounts needed may be raised without so much cost to the college.

The following is the report for this week:

Name	Pledged	Paid
Dr. A. L. Lincoln, 660 Park Ave, New York City	$ 50.00	$ 50.00
Rev. S. E. Madren, Henderson, N. C.	50.00
Rev. Robert Lee House, Portsmouth, Va.	50.00
Totals for week	$ 150.00	$ 50.00
Total for week	$ 150.00
Previously reported		17,400.00
Grand total		$17,550.00

OFFERINGS FOR THE COLLEGE.

Contributions to the college to be credited on conference apportionments continue to come in from churches and Sunday schools. Practically every week since January some church or Sunday school has expressed its interest in the college by forwarding contributions. During many weeks a large number have made their offerings. Some of these are small, some are large. We are expected to give according to our abilities. When we have done what we could, there is a certain personal satisfaction and certainly a beneficent reward awaiting us.

If you have not sent in your fifth Sunday offering or a contribution from your church, the next few weeks will be a most opportune time. The college needs and will greatly appreciate your help during these summer months.

The following offerings were received during the week:

THE BOARD OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

church wishes to make of its facilities, the administration is happy to grant such wishes. Rev. W. E. Wisseman, pastor of the First Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C., has been serving as Dean of the school for the past three years. Mr. Lester has been serving as Executive Secretary. At a meeting of the Board of Christian Education last evening, these two efficient workers were reelected to their respective positions. The Board adjourned to meet the latter part of September to plan definitely for the work of another year.

L. E. SMITH.

“And he is the head of the body, the church, who is the beginning, the first born from the dead, that in all things he might have the preeminence.” So we see that both in creation and in grace the Son reveals what the Father thought and planned. —J. S. Kirtley.

FOR THE CHILDREN

WHAT WE DID ABOUT POLLY.

There were three of us boys, and we had never wanted a sister. When mother told us one was coming on the 4 o'clock train, we didn't know what to say.

"You are getting too rough," mother said. "You need a little girl to help you to be kind. A friend has just died; she leaves a child about as old as you, Bert. Poor Polly has no one to care for her, so she is coming to be my little girl and your little sister. Of course, boys, you will be very kind to her."

Bert looked at Walter, and then they both looked at me. We did not say a word, but we all knew none of us liked it. Just as soon as we could get away, we went to the old apple tree. We always went there to talk things over.

"Bert," said Walter, "do we need a girl?"

"Horace," said Walter, "do any of us want a girl?"

"Of course we don't," I said. "Of what use are girls, anyway? They always scream at every mouse or snake. They don't hit a ball or throw one. Doesn't it make you laugh to see a girl try to throw anything? Of course we don't want a girl."

"But she is coming, and we can't help it," said Bert. "What are we going to do?"

"Why do nothing or just as we did before she came. It will be very easy to ignore her."

"But mother says we are to be kind to her."

"We can let her alone. Let her play with Janet Day, or with some of the other girls."

"Girls ought not to expect to tag after boys, anyway," said Walter.

Mother expected us to drive to the train with her, but we all went down to the river early that afternoon. We did not ask if we might go, either. When we got home, it was late. They were eating supper, and that girl was sitting by mother in my place. Mother made us all shake hands with her. None of us said a word, but Bert grunted a little. Then we sat down to eat. We could not help looking at the girl on the sly, to see what she was like.

Polly was thin and pale; she had dark eyes and hair, and seemed afraid. Her black dress made her look even paler. She was not pretty, and I knew she was timid.

Well, I am afraid we were not very kind to her. Somehow we could not let her alone as we had planned. You see she did not want to play with the other girls. She wanted to be with us, and was always tagging after us. We did not say much to her, and sometimes we teased her.

I did feel a little sorry the day I let the see-saw down. It must have hurt her, but she never said a word; she did not even cry, but I saw tears in her eyes.

The small river near our house, where we often played, was not quite safe, because the bed was full of deep holes. If you knew the river, you could wade out to some rocks all right; if you did not know it and were not careful, it would be unsafe to try.

One day I was playing at fishing, and the rest were wading near shore. I hated to tell about this, but I must if I tell anything, and truly I did not remember the holes.

"Polly," I said, "wade out to this rock where I am."

"I don't believe mamma wants me to go so far," said Polly.

"Oh, you silly thing, come along!"

"Polly looked at the water, but she did not stir.

"Are you coming?" I said, and I know my voice was cross. "If you don't come, I'll duck you under the water."

Polly started; she looked pale, but tried to smile. When she was up to her knees, she stopped.

"Come along," I said. She took one step, and was in up to her neck. If she could have kept still, it would not have been so bad. But she slipped and went out of sight. She had stepped into one of the deep holes.

We were terribly frightened, but we caught hold of her dress and pulled her out. We took her home and waited around the house to see how she was. Pretty soon the doctor was sent for, the fright had thrown Polly into a fever.

We could not sleep that night. At last Bert said: "If she will only get well I'll let her have my rabbits."

Finally we all fell asleep. Mother came to us the next morning. "Polly is better," she said, smiling, "and she wants to see you, Horace."

"Horace," she said, "don't worry. I didn't tell! I won't ever."

Polly kept her word—she never told, but I did. I went straight to mother and told her how unkind we had all been. Since then we have all been kind to her. And Polly—you ought to see her now! Why, we could not do without our Polly now! —Exchange.

A TRUE-FALSE TEST.

Each of the following statements is either true or false. If you think the statement is true, put a check by the word "true"; if it is false, then check the word "false." For each right answer give yourself 10.

1. Abraham was the first of the Patriarchs. True. False.

2. Moses was given that name because it was his father's. True. False.

3. Israel was a name given Abraham when he was old. True. False.

4. The name Israel means "Prince of God." True. False.

5. The name of the first king of Israel and the great Apostle to the Gentiles was the same. True. False.

6. The Israelites loved David because of his good looks. True. False.

7. Aaron was the brother of Moses. True. False.

8. Jesus had four brothers. True. False.

9. The Old Testament has only twenty-seven books. True. False.

10. The word Gospel means "Good News." Four books tell Good News about the life of Jesus. True. False.

Ask your Sunday School teacher to check your answers and tell you how many are correct.

to themselves and to their trainers. A special offering was taken for the Board of Christian Education. Following the children's program, the pastor, Rev. J. F. Apple, preached, using for his subject: "Some Guide-Posts in Life." Both programs were well attended.

Pleasant Ridge is planning to have a Daily Vacation Bible School. The Board of Christian Education is furnishing two teachers, Student Summer Service workers, to conduct the School. These workers are well trained for this work, which is so important for the children and the community that every church should put on a Daily Vacation Bible School.

GIVING GOD FIRST PLACE.

A recent editorial writer in one of our leading daily papers contended in an article of some length that the world of His day condemned and crucified the Christ, not because of His attitude to God, but His attitude to man. Several Scriptures were quoted in the attempt to substantiate this position. However, our contention is that the said writer was certainly in error and tried to substantiate a doctrine which plain facts of Scripture and experience will not justify. What the enemies of His day, for the most part grew angry at and hated the Christ for His claim that He and the Father were one and that He was here on earth to live in the flesh and interpret the real will and word of God. When He was asked which was the first and greatest commandment He said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, mind and strength." He put God first in this as He did in all cases. He declared that He came to do not His own will, but the will of the Father, who sent Him and it was because of this intimate relationship which He claimed to have with the Father that the world of His day learned to despise Him and finally crucified Him. He thought it not robbery to put Himself on an equality with God, claiming to be as He was the only begotten of the Father. It is true that His attitude toward mankind was different from that of any other person prior to His day, or since. He emphasized the worth and the weight of the individual and had a friendly attitude to the poor and the needy, the halt, the blind and the maimed. For this the "high-brows" of His day did hate Him and said He had gone to be the guest of a sinner and it is true that His companions and friends in His day were chosen, not from among the high and the great as the world counts them, but from men and women of low estate and in most humble and lowly circumstances. This He did, not by putting man first, but by putting God first, "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believed on Him should not perish, but should have ever-lasting life." He exalted the Father and in doing so naturally exalted His fellowman, because He recognized the universal fatherhood of God. It has been said and truly that no one may love his neighbor without loving God, but one certainly cannot love God without also loving his neighbor. The whole modern missionary movement grew out of the idea that what the world needs is a knowledge of the Christ, the Son of the living God and in giving the world this need, the greatest possible service is rendered to mankind. There is no place in the teachings of our Lord for hatred, either of man, or nations, and when the world shall learn to give God first place, as revealed through His Son, will wars cease and hatred be done away with.

Our report is not as extensive this week as it is some weeks, but there are three, or four, bright lights in it that gives us courage and help to relieve the situation. Several churches yet have not reported on the annual (Easter) offering for missions, but we presume they will be doing so shortly now.

Gratefully,

Mission Secretary.

ENCOURAGING MISSION REPORTS.

While it is true that we have reason to rejoice because of increased assuming of responsibility by the more than twenty outstations here in north Manchuria, there is nevertheless considerable superintendence that the missionary must give. Every day letters come. Then there are matters regarding which we must write, sending out salaries, encouraging collectors, evangelists and pastors, meeting preaching engagements, making trips to the outstations, handling of accounts, receiving callers and attending to other administrative work. Nearly every letter requires a reply, but they are all welcome. Perhaps your readers would like to share extracts of a few letters received these past three days.

The first is from the fine young evangelist, Chang Yan-hsiang, at Pansiehe, an outstation over near the Siberian border where Christian work is difficult, three hundred English miles east of Harbin. He tells of the earnestness of those who attend the early morning prayer meetings, held before the people go to their work; also of a mid-morning reading class for women, attended by some twenty church members and enquirers studying the one-thousand-character primer which makes possible reading of the New Testament. The daily evening services are also well attended. A number have recently enrolled as enquirers and others are awaiting baptism. Those who come to the Sunday morning services number from forty to fifty. Some of these are from a new mining town. The evangelist cannot now go there because of certain strange regulations, but he is assisting the Christians in organizing a place of prayer, and hopes, when permission is obtained, to open a gospel hall at the mines. Many new industries are being opened up throughout the country. Hundreds of thousands of laborers are now coming from China for this work.

From a center opened last year the following letter has just come, written by a young lay evangelist, Liu Kian-Keng. Liu succeeded a student evangelist who has now re-entered school. Liu says that the few Christians of Winkeshu and others who are interested in becoming Christians gave him a real warm welcome. "Every evening we have services for not less than two hours," he writes. "These are attended by more than thirty people. Twenty have enrolled as enquirers, most of them merchants. We are hoping you or a Manchurian pastor can come soon to baptize some who are awaiting baptism. Last evening a special meeting was held to organize a reading class. This will make it possible for those who have not attended school to read the New Testament. The class is to meet for two hours daily, an earnest Christian, Mrs. Sung, to give voluntary assistance in teaching this. The catechism will also be taught."

One of the most important of our outstations, though three hundred fifty miles distant, is Hailar, recently made a provincial capital. It is growing into a real metropolis now with the extension of railway and motor facilities, 35,000 Manchurians (Chinese) living in that interesting city. Hailar is far up on the Mongolian plains, west of Harbin and not far from the Siberian border, across which the trans-Siberian railway makes its way toward Europe. This synopsis of a letter just received from Kou Shou-Ching, the evangelist there, should cause rejoicing. "Come soon," he says, "for some of the enquirers could wait no longer and have gone to their spring work out on the plains, but others are still waiting for baptism." It is difficult to obtain permission to go to these border towns, but we are expecting to go soon. "I rejoice to say," continues Evangelist Kou, "that the school teacher, Mr. Swen, was moved by God to donate a suitable wall-clock for the preaching hall. He and his family have also gone forward in the Christian life. An enquirer, Mr. Wang, has given a new large blackboard. And last Sunday old Mr. Li Hsien-Ku came forward to declare that he had stopped opium smoking and is going to live a new life. He is attending the daily 6:00 A. M. prayer meetings. In appreciation of God's forgiveness of his sins, which he confessed in tears, old Brother Li gave $100.00 for the purchase of a church organ. Recently the spring floods washed away a good part of the town. Twenty or thirty men, women and children were drowned. During the flood there was special prayer at the chapel. Not one Christian was harmed. This impressed the people. We thank God for His goodness, but sorrow with those who have lost so heavily."

We shall be leaving in a few days for Hailar and other places. The organ has been purchased and will be taken up to that distant city. Thus the Lord blesses his work throughout this field. There are difficult situations, but God is good and helps us meet them.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

We were very happy to have many of the boys and girls who were here last week attending the Leadership Training School to visit the orphanage while here and go over our plant and see the buildings, the grounds, the children, and see also our cattle and hogs.

We are always glad to have visitors. They can see first-hand the plant the church has here. They can also see the children and their work and behavior. When you see something for yourself, it always makes a more lasting impression than for someone to tell you about it. I have had several to try to tell me about the World's Fair in New York, but I would get a far better impression if I could visit it and see for myself.

We are happy to have these young people visit the orphanage because one of these days they will have to assume the responsibility of supporting it. The older heads who have been so faithful and loyal all these years and have made it possible for the orphanage to live and grow and serve are passing away one by one. The orphanage has had heavy losses in the last few years by the death of some of its most loyal supporters. We miss them. It always seemed to give them a real joy to help us in this work. The little fatherless children appealed to them and they got a real joy out of helping them. The writer well remembers a man who some years ago made it possible for us to buy thirty-two acres of land known as the Dawson property, and when he laid his check for nearly $1,800.00 in my hand as his part of the purchase price, he took my hand in both of his and with tears trickling down his cheeks he said to me, "This is the happiest gift I ever made. The little children needed the shade of these beautiful trees and I am happy they have it." Later on this same man gave us a much larger gift to help build the "Baby Home" building, and still later, when he set aside an endowment of half million dollars, he remembered us in that. He was not a member of the Christian Church, but he had a warm and tender heart full of sympathy for the helpless child. He has since passed on to his reward, but he still lives in the lives of those he helped. May our young people assume the responsibility which will soon be theirs and do even a better job than we older ones have done.

sion of Christ, the Church, or the Kingdom has come to them. Into this uninspired group will go those who are inspired. It will be like a very small blaze of fire in a big building. If the building is hard and cold enough the blaze will be extinguished. But if the building is of the right material, a new fire will burn through the entire structure. It is to be hoped that the inspiration of the two hundred leaders will inspire others, and that the churches throughout the entire Convention will feel the throb of new and divine life. This is the reason for the training school. This is the prayer of those who made the school.

We have heard of two Chinese coolies who were having a heated argument. A crowd gathered to watch and listen, and one of the onlookers remarked how astonished he was that, in spite of the earnestness of the two coolies, they never got to blows. "Of course not," a Chinaman explained. "The man who strikes first is admitting that he has run short of ideas." —Biblical Recorder.

Pilgrim Fellowship

"Youth at Work in the Church"

Emily Carleton Lester, Editor

EX-PRESIDENT, TWO GOVERNORS TO ADDRESS CHRISTIAN EN- DEAVOR CONVENTION.

Seven thousand or more Christian Endeavor youth delegates, representing Protestant youth groups throughout North America in the Thirty-Seventh International Christian Endeavor Convention, will gather at Cleveland, Ohio, July 6 to 11.

The convention theme, "Christ Calls," will be interpreted in terms of both personal and social responsibilities shared by Christian young people today. Inspiration and information will come to the gathering from a number of America's best known and most authoritative religious and civic leaders, among whom will be Former President Herbert Hoover. Mr. Hoover will receive in the convention session, Thursday evening, July 6, International Youth's Distinguished Service Award for his many public services here and abroad. President Poling will bestow the award.

Addresses will also be given to the delegates and by radio broadcast by Hon. John W. Bricker, Governor of the host state, Ohio, and Hon. Herbert H. Lehman, Governor of the neighboring state of New York.

The governors' addresses will climax a day of impressive demonstrations of the convention's strength, spirit, and objectives. The day opens with devotional services, preceding workers' and leaders' groups which will enroll in simultaneous conferences several thousand young people, and continues in afternoon events which include a parade in the downtown streets of Cleveland.

Others on the program include:

Dr. Walter H. Judd, medical missionary of China; Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, New York City; Dr. Louis H. Evans, Pittsburg, Pa.; Dr. Jesse H. Baird, President of San Francisco Theological Seminary; Homer Rodeheaver, song leader; Dr. William Hiram Foulkes and Dr. Harry N. Holmes, Vice-President of the International Society of Christian Endeavor; Mrs. Daniel A. Poling, who will conduct a Daily Fellowship of Prayer; Dr. Schuyler Garth, Youngstown, Ohio; Dr. Raymond M. Veh, Harrisburg, Pa.

A united communion service, state and denominational group meetings, sightseeing and tour opportunities, a daily Quiet Hour devotional service, banquets and luncheons and other fellowship events, and a noon radio conference each day will be featured in the Cleveland Convention.

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

On June 10, 1939, the annual meeting of the Eastern North Carolina Pilgrim Fellowship was held at the Youngsville Christian Church. The major part of the program was given over to discussions of practical problems for young people in the local church. These were led by Rev. S. E. Madren, Rev. F. C. Lester, and Mrs. F. C. Lester.

The group voted to cooperate with the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship in a mission project for the young people of China, this to be in addition to the regular apportionments, if such is carried out. The resolutions adopted by the group included: (1) Establishing five new young people's societies in the Conference during the coming year; (2) At least one representative from each church at the Elon Summer Conference next year; (3) The young people in each local church doing something for their church (planting shrubbery, painting, hymn books, etc.); (4) One young person in each local church on the committee for securing subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Officers elected for the year are:

President—Mrs. Brookston Eaves, Liberty; vice-president—Josephine Evans, Mt. Carmel; secretary—Josephine Langston, Henderson; assistant secretary—Luvenc Holmes, Pope's Chapel; treasurer—Odell Arnold, Louisburg.

Superintendents: Devotional Life—Mrs. J. E. Neese, Henderson; Leadership Training—Cecil Thomas, Shallow Well; Missions—Mrs. B. M. Newman, Liberty; Social Action—Regina Carter, Youngsville; Publications—Myrna Young.

Counsellors: Rev. S. E. Madren, Rev. E. M. Carter, Rev. A. C. Todd, and Mrs. E. M. Carter.

RECREATION FOR ENRICHMENT.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR JULY 9, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Col. 1: 9-18; 3: 17.

Daily Readings—

Monday—A Wrestler Spiritually Rewarded—Gen. 32: 24-30.

Tuesday—Godliness Above Bodily Exercise—I Tim. 4: 8.

Wednesday—Self-Control, a Christian Requisite—I Cor. 9: 24-27.

Thursday—Separateness Imperative to Godliness—II Cor. 6: 14-18.

Friday—The Fight of Faith—I Tim. 6: 11-16.

Saturday—Jesus, the Example and the Goal—Heb. 12: 1, 2.

A committee should be appointed to survey the recreational agencies in the community. Try to find out the number of young people touched by these agencies, and the money spent for "good times."

All young people should own and study the following pamphlets: "Youth Action On the Use of Leisure Time," purchased from the International Society of Christian Endeavor, and "Youth Tell Their Story," published by American Youth Commission of the American Council on Education.

Many churches today recognize play as a channel for spiritual enrichment and include recreation as a part of the church program. The Church must do more than provide for recreation for its own members. It must feel responsible to lift the level of recreational life in the community.

The recreational work of the Church is two-fold: (1) To enrich the lives of its own constituents through wholesome play activities; and (2) To crusade for more constructive recreational opportunities for all people.

For Discussion—

1. What sort of activity is needed for relaxation and refreshment both in body and in mind?

2. What is a good balance between indoor life and outdoor life?

3. What is a good balance between physical recreation and mental recreation?

4. How much time should be spent in a diversion simply for "the fun of it?"

5. How much time should be spent in a hobby or avocation which requires and helps to develop a particular skill?

6. What type of recreation should be encouraged by the Christian Endeavor, both for the group and for individuals in the group?

Suggested Hymns—

"Take My Life and Let It Be."

"Fairest Lord Jesus."

"Joy to the World." S. E. M.

A RULER WHO BEGAN WELL.

LESSON I—JULY 2, 1939.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Give thy servant therefore an understanding heart . . . that I may discern between good and evil."—I Kings 3:9.

LESSON TEXT: I Kings 3:3-15.

For the past six months we have been studying the New Testament. The first quarter was given over to the events that occurred in the life of Peter after his calling by Jesus. The lessons of the second quarter dealt with the life of Paul from his miraculous conversion while on the road to Antioch until the time just preceding his martyrdom.

This quarter's lessons are from the Old Testament. They are a continuation of a series of character studies of Old Testament leaders which we started a year ago. Those studies brought us down to the close of David's reign.

Solomon succeeded to a throne that had been well built by his illustrious father. It is true that he had not been the unanimous choice of the people, but they had all accepted him, and under his rulership the kingdom of Israel was to reach the pinnacle of its glory.

Solomon was "a ruler who began well." We are told that "Solomon loved Jehovah, walking in the statutes of David his father." Certainly there was no better beginning than by loving Jehovah, and certainly he was wise in following in the statutes which David had laid down for his guidance. We, today, in ruling the kingdom of our lives greatly need the love of Jehovah in our hearts, and we need to follow the righteous councils of goodly men who have lived in the past or are now living.

But not only did Solomon have the love of Jehovah in his heart, he gave proof of this by his actions, for "the king went to Gibeon to sacrifice there." Now while David had built a unified kingdom, there had been no time left to build a temple for his God in Jerusalem, and "the great high place" of sacrifice was at Gibeon. We are not called upon to make sacrifices of burnt offerings as were those of times gone by. Jesus Christ made the one great sacrifice of propitiation for us. Yet God does expect us to make sacrifices for him today. We may not be able to do big things for him, but we can do the smaller things that he asks of us. Isn't it strange though how hard it is to make these smaller sacrifices? How willingly, we think, we would make the larger sacrifices. But would we?

We should not try to bribe God by doing good—or our goodness avails us nothing. Yet our very act of sacrifice brings its reward. After the busy day is over, we find Solomon sleeping, and as he slept he dreamed; and in that dream "Jehovah appeared to Solomon, and God said, Ask what I shall give thee." God would never have appeared to Solomon, except Solomon had been in the proper place and had, by his sacrifices placed himself in the necessary attitude to hear him. Then there is another thing, Solomon was in the right attitude to choose the right gift, and he did. How different might his choice have been, if God had asked him immediately after some flattering visit by some foreign dignitary, such as possibly the visit of the Queen of Sheba. But God appeared to him directly after a time of sacrifice. "I am but a little child . . . give me therefore an understanding heart . . . that I may discern between good and evil." What a request to make! In our dreams what mighty men are we—all things are possible. We can command riches, great honors, authority, power—how many of us today would choose "an understanding heart." Yet it is the wisest of all choices. God himself tells us so. Solomon found it so. And this gift never left him; he became the wisest of men, and as long as he followed the council of his own wisdom, there was none like him. And God gave him also that which he had not asked, both riches and honor, so that there were none among the kings like unto him, all his days.

"Solomon awoke; and behold, it was a dream." Yet we find almost immediate proof, if we will continue to read the story of his reign, that it was a dream come true. At times our approach to God may be through a dream—some nebulous thing almost undefinable—yet we wake to find it fact—a covenant that God will keep as long as we desire. In times that were to come Solomon did on numerous occasions fail to follow his own wisdom, and he paid bitter penalties for those failures. It was then that he found that all was vanity and vexation of spirit.

Much depends upon our making right choices, and remaining true to them. Ida Tarbell calls to mind one of the characters of Grecian Mythology: In his early youth, that greatest of mythological heroes, Hercules, was visited by two beautiful maidens. The first, whose name was Pleasure, offered him a life of ease and delight. The other, Virtue by name (and the word virtue is derived from the same root as the Latin word for man—it signifies strength), offered him a life of usefulness and honor. Hercules made the wise choice, he chose Virtue, and he spent his life using his strength to help those less strong than himself.

God also promised Solomon that he would lengthen his days, but this promise was conditional. He must continue to walk in God's ways and keep his statutes. Though Solomon managed to hold on to his wealth and though his wisdom was heralded around the world, he lost this promise because he turned away from God. He lost his popularity, his morals, his religion; and he died at the comparatively young age of sixty years. He was a ruler who began well; but that was not enough. One must finish the course, one must keep the faith to the end. We, like Solomon, must make our choice, and we, too, have the promise: "Choose ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all things shall be added unto you."

NOTE—We are sorry that at the time of going to press the Sunday School Lesson Notes had not been received from Dr. Hardeastle. These notes have to go from Norfolk to Elon College and then come back to Richmond, and evidently were delayed somewhere in transit. The substitute notes were necessarily hurriedly written, and without the auxiliary helps which would ordinarily be available. J. T. K.

The thing that lasts in the universe is God's kindness, which continues "from everlasting to everlasting." What a revelation of God! The infinite, undying, imperishable love of God is mine. Older than the mountains, deeper than their roots, wider than the heavens, and stronger than all my sin, is the love that grasps me and keeps me and will not let me go, and lavishes its tenderness upon me, and beseeches me, and pleads with me, and woos me, and rebukes me, and corrects me when I need, and sent his Son to die for me.—Alexander Maelaren.

The term Father indicates the originating power, so the eternal Father is the originator of everything that God has made, whatever be its nature.—J. S. Kirtley.

"THE STATUTE OF LIMITATION."

"To every man according to his several ability."—Matt. 25:15.

The text is taken from the well known parable of the talents. (Read verses 14 to 30.) We would call it the Bible's "statute of limitations." By this we mean that every one is natively endowed with certain gifts in life which are his assets and working tools for his achievements, and that it is folly to try to do something beyond that ability.

On the other hand the most important meaning of the parable lies in the increase of talent to which there is no limitation. A person may "grow in grace and the knowledge of the Lord" and in spiritual perceptions and experience, and it is folly, yes, certain loss of soul not to increase.

Prayer—Our Father, grant unto us to know the gifts with which thou hast endowed us, and may we have the courage and wisdom to grow in these until we come into their fullness in Thy Presence. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"WHEN CHARACTER IS REVEALED."

"Endure hardness."—II Tim. 2:3.

Paul speaks of the sufferings he has had to endure for the sake of the Gospel which he preached and for his steadfast purpose to live true to Christ. He exhorts Timothy, a young minister, to expect much suffering similar, and encourages him to endure with him, for therein is the test of his faith.

William T. Ellis, in his daily comments in the Christian Herald, gives an example. He says an automobile accident left aunt Em., an aged country woman, with a black eye, and the woman in the other car behaving badly. Aunt Em. made no comment about the other lady. She simply said, "we must say nothing about the accident and go about our errand as if nothing had happened." An observer called her "a sporting old lady." Ellis called her "a fine Christian," for that is how she met every emergency.

Our characters stand revealed in emergencies. Is Christ seen in you when your emergencies come?

Prayer—Our Father, we thank Thee for the brave and true souls of life. Make us so always. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"HAVENS OF HAPPINESS."

"He bringeth them unto their desired haven."—Ps. 107:30.

Verses 23 to 32 are a picture of a ship weathering a storm and coming to harbor safely. And the psalmist likens this to the soul of man and God who protects him.

Down in the South Pacific, a thousand miles from land, we met another ship and both "hove to" in order to transfer mail back to the states. It was necessary to launch a life boat to do this, and to launch the boat our ship circled in order to form a lee of smooth water against the rough seas. That made the boat crew safe and happy.

Every life needs such lees, such havens of peace in its struggles. Jesus, our Pilot, brings us into that haven. Each day, let him steer your life. Follow him like a ship obeys the rudder. Then the "desired haven."

From every stormy wind that beams,
From every swelling tide of woes,
There is a calm, a sure retreat,
'Tis formed beneath the mercy seat.

Prayer—O Lord, Thou art our refuge and strength, and we turn to Thee for Thy havens. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"DOING AWAY WITH GOOD THINGS."

"If thine eye offend thee, pluck it out."—Matt. 18:9.

Trees are wonderfully good things, and nature has taken a long time to grow them; but we cut down trees to make room for a home, a farm, or for better trees, or for a view, thus enlarging and making life better.

The eye is a wonderfully good thing in itself, but if it hinders the highest expression of life, Jesus teaches that it is wisdom to remove it; thus teaching that if character is to attain its heights we must eliminate much (good in itself) that stands in the way. Everybody who amounts to anything must, at one time or another deal drastically with circumstances. Souls must grow in the sunlight of God. Everything else is secondary.

Prayer—Our Father, we are reminded that Jesus gave up a lot of the comforts of life in order to achieve his mission. Give unto us the courage to clear the way for the best that is in us. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"THE WISDOM OF THE FATHERS."

"Our fathers have told us."—Ps. 44:1.

The history of Christian faith challenges every age to profit by its wisdom. Our Christian forefathers have left us a rich legacy. It is tragic that we do not follow their teachings nor profit by their experiences better than we do.

Nothing is more pertinent for this age than the ripe experiences of these patriarchs. It is saddening to note that many good people brand our forebears as "old fogies," declare earlier Christianity as "out of date," and spiritual experience as a myth. Much as one may think differently, morality cannot be maintained without religion. This applies to you and me, and it applies to the nation.

Prayer—Our Father, we thank Thee that the foundations have been laid in faith, and none other foundations both any man make. Grant unto us Thy spirit and Thy courage to plant our forth there. Amen.

REV. ALLYN P. ROBINSON,
RALEIGH, N. C.

THE EXCELLENT BECOMES THE PERMANENT.

Time was when our fathers spoke the words that conclude the familiar creed with a sure confidence that left no room for doubt—"And the life everlasting." It may be that some of them stumbled a little over the phrase which preceded it, but they concluded with a triumphant conviction: "I believe in the life everlasting."

But that time is past and now we are not so sure. It is a beautiful story, and somehow even now it holds our imaginations, the story of women coming early in the morning to find an empty tomb; the story of women coming desolate and broken-hearted to be turned away from their weeping and to know joy in its stead. Wistfully we turn again to hear it, for its beauty haunts us and we wish that it were true. The choir has sung it for you and perhaps we ought to leave it there; for essentially it is poetry. And the minister's words are poor indeed to convey its overwhelming loveliness. Then there is so much danger that something may destroy the illusion. "He is risen; he is not here." On this day let us do nothing to destroy our dream. Let our hungry hopes be fed. For one brief hour let us forget our questionings.

It is pleasant, isn't it, however hard-headed and realistic we may try to be on most of the year's 365 days, to turn aside and listen to the poetry of an ancient tale that seemed to speak such fair hope to mankind? If it were only that I think that I should be silent today, that I might through the medium of the music we have heard and through these lovely flowers try to recapture with you some of that ancient spell which now seems so rudely broken for many of us the glorious impossibility of Easter.

But it is just because I do not believe that this is just a lovely story, haunting but incredible, which we can pass over and be done with, that

I must speak, even though I have no words for what I want to say.

For it seems to me that there is something about Easter that is desperately important. There are details about the story that seem to me quite negligible. I don't think it matters in the least what we believe about them and probably those within reach of my voice this morning will have many interpretations. But, however, you may interpret the facts, or however much the story you may reject, I do not believe that you can pass by Easter as an idle tale.

In this United Church we are greatly concerned, and rightly so, I am sure, about great problems of social welfare. For us the Kingdom of God is not some magic land to come, but the ideal toward which we strive to mold the very society of men in which we find ourselves. We are eager for that day when all men shall know a greater justice, for that day when war shall no longer threaten to destroy the things that we hold dear. But it seems to me that these very things that we are concerned about make Easter all the more important. For if there is not some essential truth in Easter, if Good Friday and not Easter is the climax of our Christian tale, if it's possible to put the best of earth upon a cross and thus be done with it, then it appears as someone else has said that, "The things we care for most are at the mercy of the things we care for least."

It is men and women who have learned to love great causes that really have a stake in the truth or falsehood of Easter.

Of course, it seems almost a corollary that if we have a real and a serious concern for these causes which we champion that we are also lovers of people. The highest values that we know are realized in people. We agonize for peace. Why? Because we want to see human spirits have a chance to grow, freed from the preposterous burden of hate and cruelty that modern war lays upon those who share in it. Some of us give the best that is in us for just some little measure more of racial justice, for some delight lessening of the oppression which modern capitalism lays upon millions of men. And why? Because we believe men have the right to be men and we cannot rest while they are denied the life that they might know.

Many of us have passed beyond the stage where our personal immortality matters very terribly. Some few among us are of so full grown a stature that they would be quite willing to give up life with no sure certainty of anything beyond, if only as they laid life down they could forward the causes that they hold dear or bring life to those they love.

But when you begin to think in terms of the persons who give meaning to our cherished causes or in terms of those in our more intimate circles whom we dearly love—then you begin to see, too, that Easter does matter terribly.

If all the values that in our best moments we hold most high are doomed finally to a fatal extinction—if there is nothing at the core of the universe that supports the best that we know; if all we cherish most is born but to be shoveled into the tombs; then a motive is gone out of all our finest action and the final meaning is taken from out of all our noblest deeds and thoughts. What is beauty apart from a human spirit to appreciate it; what is truth without that intangible thing we call human integrity, wherein is loveliness if men are really only chance aggregations of atoms doomed finally to pass into nothingness or into the disordered array of some final chaos.

You see it does matter very much, this Easter story! But of course, merely to say that proves absolutely nothing. Perhaps just because so much is at stake we ought to be on our guard against wilful thinking.

What can a modern man believe about immortality? I think that it might be said right here that there is much in the modern mood which will appeal to many as being highly commendable. I like the modern man's insistence upon realism—his scrupulous attempt to avoid fooling himself. And there is something healthy, too, in the rejection of what someone has called "those clergymen's heaven which members of other professions might find something of a strain." The conception of heaven which another day found quite acceptable seems to many a high-minded spirit of our time not only stuffy, but positively immoral. As if the religious man worked only for reward or fear of punishment and sought in the sky what he willingly denied his brethren here on earth! I have occasionally been astonished by the lavish heavens certain quite utterly Puritan souls pictured for themselves, as if their Puritanism were but a shell that they would gladly throw away. It may be, too, that some have feared to say or think too much about another world because their fine concern with the affair of life here and now has made them eager not to divert attention to

SATURDAY.

"GOD'S REFRESHING."

"In the shadow of a great rock."—Isa. 32: 2.

It was among the hills of Haiti. We were on patrol duty. The sun beat upon us with blistering effect. We followed a trail up a gorge and came to a great overhanging rock, over which a water fall was pouring from some hundred feet above. What a refreshing, both to man and beast! And we learned the meaning of our text. Mere trees could not give us the protection from the torrid sun; only this great rock and its falls, with an under-surface still retaining the coolness of the night.

Such is our Lord to our souls as we journey along life's weary way.

Prayer—Our Father, forgive us that we forget Thee and suffer. We come to Thee for Thy refreshing and life. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"A SOLVENT CHURCH."

"The Lord doth go with thee; He will not fail thee."—Deut. 31: 6.

"Like a spring whose waters fail not."—Isa. 58: 11.

A few facts regarding the depression serve to increase our faith in God and the Church. These facts are: "During the depression only one out of the 2,300 churches failed; whereas, one out of every 22 commercial enterprises went in bankruptcy, and one out of every six banks closed its doors."

These facts should silence all the loose criticism being handed around about the failure of the Church. And when we consider all the faithful ministers, teachers, and Christian workers who, with grit and grace, gave up months and months of salaries, or sacrificed salaries to the home and kept on for the sake of the cause, we are compelled to believe in the Church, in Christian service and the ultimate hope we have in God.

Prayer—Our Father, Thou hast so many faithful followers, O that we may be numbered among them. Amen.

an "other-worldliness" such as the middle ages know.

But if as a result of a reaction not utterly devoid of value man now feels bereft of something desperately important, what is he to do about it?

I have been reading with interest Dr. Wieman's book on the "Growth of Religion." If the thinking of any theologian is set in the framework of modern thought, Dr. Wieman's is. Indeed his book is an attempt to build a theology consistent with the philosophy of naturalism. What then does he offer? There is, of course, a cultural immortality that is quite provable. Death under certain circumstances may increase rather than decrease the influence of individuals—and something of that which is finest in them live on in the community of men. Many an individual has, I suppose, conquered the futility and fear and even the limitation of death by giving himself to the community. But the community can not conquer its own death and even if one culture does pass on to another something of value that abides, one must face in the end the heat death of the universe. Perhaps in the thousands of years that lie ahead even that might be conquered, but the scientists are quite unanimous in predicting the final end of the world as we know it.

"Perhaps the simplest way to conquer death," says Dr. Wieman, "is to take it as a completion and ending." "I warned both hands before the fire of life; it sinks and I am ready to depart." "Not a few old people can say with sincerity," he claims, "Gladly did I live and gladly die; and I lay me down with a will."

But how much this leaves unanswered; how many must die young in this imperfect world, like a rose choked in the grass; and of how many is it true that when the body grows more feeble the mind and spirit burn with even brighter fire?

Is there nothing more that we can hope for? Dr. Wieman hints at it. He suggests that there is something called eternal life which may be lived here, but which is eternal because it is of that order of value which is God. "As order, structure, principle, whether in existence or not, it is eternal and changeless. When out of existence it is the possibility of existence. When in existence it is possibility actualized."

Jesus said the same thing very simply. He was talking with Martha when her brother lay dead. "Who-soever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." That is—insofar as you share in the kind of life that Jesus lived—you are becoming part of something that is eternal—something that death has nothing whatever to do with. And then Jesus asked, "Believest thou this?" Is it not harder to disbelieve it than to believe it?"

Approach the question scientifically if you will. I for one have little patience with those who put religion in one compartment of their minds and science and logic in another. The Barthians for whom religious truth comes by supernatural revelation leaves me unpersuaded. They make too great a cleavage between reason and religion. For me reason must be an avenue to God or else to believe in God makes the whole world irrational. One of the eminent Barthians, Dr. Emil Brunner, speaking at Duke the other day, denied the cleavage by saying that there is no room in reason for God, but there is room in God for reason. I believe the last half of his statement, but I do not believe the first half.

I think we must admit quite frankly that immortality is a matter of faith. It certainly cannot be proved if by proof you mean verification. By the same token, it cannot be disproved. But faith in immortality—faith that there are values in life which are eternal far from being something over against reason seems to me to be the declaration that this is a reasonable universe. If you begin to reason at all, you must begin with the assumption that it is possible for a human being to think and to arrive at something we call truth. That assumption is, of course itself faith, but that is a faith that most of us are not willing to deny, for we could hardly live at all without it. Is it such a great step further to declare with the late Dr. Gordon that "the voice of the Infinite based on the evidence of the finite registers its decree in favor of the immortality of man?" In other words, just as Jean Leverrier "discovered" Neptune and plotted its course long before that planet was ever sighted with a telescope, because certain perturbations of the heavens could not be explained except by the supposition that somewhere there existed the planet Neptune—so men have believed in immortality because the facts seemed to demand it.

For me there is something inescapable about the oft-quoted words of George Herbert Palmer. As he looked upon the body of his wife, one of the greatest and most lovely women of her time, stricken e'er life reached full bloom, he said, "Though no regrets are proper for the manner of her death, who can contemplate the fact of it, and not call the world irrational if out of deference to a few particles of disordered matter it excludes so fair a spirit?"

John Fiske of Harvard spoke of immortality as "the supreme act of faith in the reasonableness of God's work." Easter is a declaration that this is a reasonable world. That there are some things which are invincible. That the best things are not at the mercy of the worst, that life and love and goodness are stronger than death.

A man hangs upon a cross. Nails are in his hands and feet; a spear is thrust in his side until all the life blood has gone out of him and men leave him there for dead and those who love him seal his body in a tomb. That is Good Friday. Easter is not, I think, the message that a God who refused to intervene when this man hung in agony on the cross now miraculously restores him. It is rather the message that those who were defeated and desolate beyond the power of our imagination to comprehend were suddenly born upward with new hope because of the overwhelming sense that death could not kill this one whom they loved. The real victory was won on Friday. On the third day it began to dawn upon the conscious of those who had so hardly understood. It was the realization that insofar as one is a part of God, there is no death.

Men search eagerly the ancient records; hotly they dispute about an empty tomb, and labor over little contradictions—but the reality is not to be found that way. I suspect it is to be found best of all by those who themselves love life too much that in spite of everything they dare to assert their belief in life's reasonableness. When we try to follow this strange man whose essential spirit could not be touched by the nails which pierced his hands and feet; we find a strange thing happening. He calls us to give up our petty selves—to lose them in something far greater than ourselves—in that great force or movement toward the Good which men call God—and then suddenly we find that what he said was true, that one finds life by losing it. Then even a modern man, critical and questioning, finds faith born anew within him, and knows somehow that he is touching something over which death can have no power. As one early follower wrote: "Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. For I am persuaded that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus, our Lord."

Suggested perhaps by a verse of Emerson's, Jane Addams summed it up in the title of a book of hers—The Excellent Becomes the Permanent. Love is greater than hate; its power far mightier than four nails and a spear. Truth is at the heart of the universe, part of its imperishable core. Ugliness, in the end, must give way to beauty and the human spirit laying hold things is itself eternal. That no good cause is served in vain for me is the message of Easter—that this is a reasonable universe.

Independence Bell—July 4, 1776

There was a tumult in the city
In the quaint old Quaker town,
And the streets were rife with people
Pacing restless up and down—
People gathering at corners,
Where they whispered each to each,
And the sweat stood on their temples
With the earnestness of speech.

As the bleak Atlantic currents
Lash the wild Newfoundland shore,
So they beat against the State House,
So they surged against the door;
And the mingling of their voices
Made the harmony profound,
Till the quiet street of Chestnut
Was all turbulent with sound.

“Will they do it?” “Dare they do it?”
“Who is speaking?” “What’s the news?”
“What of Adams?” “What of Sherman?”
“Oh, God grant they won’t refuse!”
“Make some way there!” “Let me nearer!”
“I am stifling!” “Stifle then!”
When a nation’s life’s at hazard,
We’ve no time to think of men!”

So they surged against the State House,
While all solemnly inside,
Sat the Continental Congress,
Truth and reason for their guide,
O’er a simple scroll debating,
Which, though simple it might be,
Yet should shake the cliffs of England
With the thunders of the free.

Far aloft in that high steeple
Sat the bellman, old and gray,
He was weary of the tyrant
And his iron-sceptered sway;
So he sat, with one hand ready
On the clapper of the bell,
When his eye could catch the signal,
The long-expected news to tell.

See! See! The dense crowd quivers
Through all its lengthy line,
As the boy beside the portal
Hastens forth to give the sign!
With his little hands uplifted,
Breezes dallying with his hair,
Hark! with deep, clear intonation,
Breaks his young voice on the air.

Hushed the people’s swelling murmur,
Whilst the boy crys joyously;
“Ring!” he shouts, “Ring! Grandpapa, Ring! oh ring for Liberty!”
Quickly, at the given signal
The old bellman lifts his hand,
Forth he sends the good news, making
Iron music through the land.

How they shouted! What rejoicing!
How the old bell shook the air,
Till the clang of freedom ruffled,
The calmly gliding Delaware!
How the bonfires and the torches
Lighted up the night’s repose,
And from the flames, like fabled Phoenix,
Our glorious liberty arose!

The old State House bell is silent,
Hushed is now its clamorous tongue;
But the spirit it awakened
Still is living—ever young;
And when we greet the smiling sunlight
On the fourth of each July,
We will ne’er forget the bellman
Who, betwixt the earth and sky,
Rung out, loudly, “Independence;”
Which, please God, shall never die!

Beginnings of American Democracy

Members of Congregational and Christian Churches have some delight in believing that their forefathers aided in establishing Democracy in both State and Church here in America. Congregationalism came to America on the "Mayflower" and established itself in government by the covenant which follows:

The Mayflower Compact.

In the name of God, Amen! We whose names are underwritten, the loyal subjects of our dread sovereign Lord, King James, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, etc., have undertaken for the glory of God and the advancement of the Christian faith, and honor of our King and country, a voyage to plant the first colony in the northern parts of Virginia; do by these presents, solemnly and mutually, in the presence of God and of one another covenant and combine ourselves together into a civil body politic for our better ordering and preservation, and furthermore of the ends aforesaid; and by virtue hereof to enact, constitute and frame just and equal laws, ordinances, acts, constitutions, and offices from time to time, as shall be thought most mete and convenient for the general good of the colony; unto which we promise all due submission and obedience. In witness whereof we have hereunto subscribed our names, at Cape Cod, the 11th of November, in the year of the reign of our sovereign Lord, King James of England, France, and Ireland, the Eighteenth, and of Scotland the Fifty-Fourth, Anno Domini 1620.

At a conference at Old Lebanon Church near Surry, Va., August 5, 1794, Rev. Rice Haggard, standing up with a copy of the New Testament in his hand, said: "Brethren, this is a sufficient rule of faith and practice, and by it we are told that the disciples were first called 'Christians,' and I move that henceforth and forever the followers of Christ be known as Christians simply." Rev. Mr. Hafferty moved to take the Bible itself as the only creed. Out of this conference grew the five fundamental principles by which the Christian Church has been governed since.

Principles of the Christian Church.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. The name Christian to the exclusion of all party and sectarian names.
3. The Holy Bible, or the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament our only creed, and a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character, or vital piety, the only test of church fellowship and membership.
5. The right of private judgment, and the liberty of conscience, the privilege and duty of all.

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

We hope you had a very happy celebration of Independence Day.

Rev. E. M. Powell has as his assistant in a revival at Beulah Christian Church this week, the Rev. W. J. Andes.

Miss Edna Fulcher, office secretary for the Board of Christian Education, assisted Union Christian Church, Virgilina, Va., in conducting a Vacation Bible School last week.

Pastor Le Grand Moody is being aided this week in a revival at Mt. Bethel Christian Church by Rev. J. Everette Neese. The Rev. Mr. Neese assisted his father last week in a meeting at New Lebanon.

Dr. W. M. Jay closed a successful Vacation Bible School on last Sunday evening at Winston-Salem. Misses Frances Lamb and Clarene Andes were his assistants. These two workers are at Albemarle this week and next.

Rev. J. F. Morgan of Norfolk, was the evangelist in a revival at Lebanon Church near Virgilina, Va., recently. He also assisted the pastor, Rev. C. E. Newman, in the revival at Hebron, which closed on last Friday. Fourteen additions to this church were reported.

Rev. Victor B. Chicoine, his wife, and three daughters, were welcome visitors in the home of the editor on Friday night of last week. They were on their way from Winter Park, Fla., where Dr. Chicoine is the pastor, to Maine, where they are to spend their vacation.

Revival services will begin at New Elam Christian Church on the third Sunday in August. Rev. R. T. Grisom is their pastor. "Pray," asks one of the members, "that we will have a great revival first in the church, and that many sinners may be brought into the fold."

TWO GOLDEN ANNIVERSARIES.

"I, James, take thee, Myrtle, to be my wedded wife, to have and to hold . . ." Nearly fifty years have passed since these words were spoken in the nuptials of James L. Foster and Myrtle White. In the same year in which Elon College opened its doors for higher education to young men and young women, James and Myrtle Foster became man and wife. Today they plan to celebrate their golden anniversary in a most unique fashion.

Twenty years after their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Foster were in charge of the Christian Orphanage, and for their anniversary they invited guests from far and wide to visit them and to bring gifts for the unfurnished orphanage kitchen. The party was a great success, and the orphanage kitchen was well equipped. Five years later, in the parsonage at Waverly, Virginia, the Fosters invited guests to celebrate their silver wedding anniversary, not with gifts for themselves, but with a silver offering for the parsonage. The offering totaled $100.00, and James and Myrtle were delighted with their silver anniversary celebration.

Nineteen-forty is their golden anniversary, and during the past week Mr. and Mrs. Foster have laid plans for their celebration. "We've about decided we'll never get anything for ourselves," says Mrs. Foster with a gracious smile, "because there is always some worthy cause for us to help—and this time it's the college we want to see out of debt." Since the silver anniversary in Waverly, two children, Mary Lee and James, Jr., have grown up, graduated from Elon College, and are highly honored citizens in their community. "So, in celebrating our fiftieth anniversary," says Mr. Foster, "we want to pledge 100% loyalty to Elon College. Mary Lee has already pledged her $50.00, and here are pledges of $50.00 each for Myrtle, James and me. We're going to see Elon out of debt!"

McCAULEY BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION.

On June 4, ten of the eleven living children, six daughters-in-law, twenty-one grandchildren, two great-grandchildren, a large number of nieces, nephews, and cousins met at the old homestead near Chapel Hill, N. C., to celebrate the eightieth birthday of Mrs. Sallie Spear McCauley.

She is the mother of sixteen children—eleven are still living. All were present except one daughter, Clara, who is supervisor of public school music for the city of Knoxville, Tenn. She was unable to attend the reunion due to the commencement exercises of her schools.

The day was indeed a joyous one. Mrs. McCauley is still alert in mind, vigorous and active of body. She still keeps up with current events and does more work than many people of much younger age. She is still interested in the welfare of her large family, her church, and community. She is especially interested in her church.

Mrs. McCauley is the granddaughter of Rev. Little John Utley, who jointly with Rev. H. B. Hayes, organized the First Christian Church of Raleigh, now the United Congregational-Christian Church, on September 22, 1842. Later he organized Damascus Christian Church, near Chapel Hill, N. C. Mrs. McCauley has been a member of the latter for sixty-three years.

She has many honors to her credit in the rearing of her family and the service she has rendered her church, community, and denomination. So far as we know, she is the oldest continuing paid subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. She has not missed an issue for sixty-three years. Of the sixteen children which she bore, thirteen lived to be grown. Out of that number she sent eight to Elon College, including Rev. J. E. McCauley, who is pastor of our Richmond, Virginia, Church.

For thirty-four years she has been a widow. During that time she has been energetic and untiring in labors for her family, wise in her direction, and devout in her religious fervor for them. Her influence has been left in her local church and now throughout her denomination because she did what she could.

May God give her many more happy birthdays.

ADVERTISE YOUR MEETINGS.

All commercial concerns know that it pays to advertise. There certainly can be nothing wrong with the right kind of advertising. If one has something for the public, it is important to let the public know about it.

Most of our Southern Convention churches will be holding revival meetings this summer. Usually a visiting pastor does the preaching, and there is good music. The services are intended to help people, and they usually do help those who attend.

But it sometimes happens that some who would like to attend if they knew about what was going on do not know until after the meeting is over. There should be someone in each church who knows how to advertise and who will see that the evangelistic meeting is properly advertised. The pastor may well do some serious study in the field of advertising. The newspapers are glad to tell who is expected to do what. News is wanted by all reputable papers. This is one method of advertising, but only one of many. Posters and hand bills are good when properly used. Personal letters may do much. Visits are excellent. The telephone is effective.

This paper is anxious to tell where meetings are to be held, at what hours, and by whom they are to be led. In two minutes this can be written on a card and mailed to "The Christian Sun" at a cost of one cent. Someone who reads the paper may attend your service and be greatly benefitted. Of course we want a report on accomplishments, but we also want to help you advertise your meetings. Send us the news, please.

A FAULT OF THE CONVENTION.

The Southern Convention is composed of delegates elected by the five conferences within the bounds of North Carolina and Virginia. The convention meets every two years. For more than ten years this writer has been elected by the convention. It may seem like base ingratitude for him to suggest that the convention can be wrong. It is not. He is grateful for the opportunities to serve which the convention has given to him.

The fault of the convention is that it gives to one person more work than he can possibly do. This writer is supposed to edit this paper. That is enough work for one person, and one person should have that job. He is also responsible for selling the paper and making collections and otherwise acting as business manager for the paper. That is no small matter, and needs more attention than it can possibly get at present. In addition to this he is Promotional Secretary for the convention. There is an unlimited amount of work to be done in this field. This same person is executive secretary for the Board of Christian Education. All these jobs are given by the Southern Convention to one person.

At Elon College, N. C., in offices furnished by the college, the Board of Christian Education has an office with a college girl to work, and "The Christian Sun" has an office with another college girl to work. Both girls try hard to do the necessary things during the school year and then they give full time during the summer. Accounts have to be kept with all "Christian Sun" subscribers, with all churches that send us money for any enterprise, for each of the offices, and for the Promotional Secretary. To and from these offices goes a constant stream of mail. It is here that much of the copy for this paper is prepared. For their services the girls get their college expenses and ten dollars per month. Some think this is too much pay, but others think it is too much work and responsibility.

It is devoutly to be hoped that the convention will sometime be able to divide the work among more people, and that the convention will discover that it is poor economy to overload workers. If the work given to one man and two college girls were divided among the six full-time workers who are prepared to do different types of work, the Southern Convention would take on new life. It is now suffering for lack of badly needed service, and is doubtless cutting short the life of its elected servants.

THE PROMOTIONAL SECRETARY.

It has been ten months since the Promotional Secretary began work at a salary of two hundred dollars per month and a traveling expense budget not to exceed more than nine hundred dollars annually, and now the news comes to your editor that some of the churches within a hundred miles of his office do not know about him or his work. Let the editor speak his mind about the secretary.

The convention is putting into this new office some real money, and has a right to expect returns. The Mission Board puts in $100.00 per month, the Board of Christian Education gives all that it gets (which will probably be about $1,500.00 this year), and the convention treasury has to supply the balance of the budget for the offices and for the publication of this paper. These people have a right to know what is being done, and to know that work is being accomplished. The fact that the secretary is a timid soul is no reason for the people to be kept in the dark.

The Convention expects the secretary to visit the 75 pastors and the 200 churches. The pastors are the leaders and must be kept informed and inspired. The churches should be perfectly familiar with all the votes of conference, convention, and general council. They should know what is expected by Mission Boards, institutions, and all who appeal to the churches for support. Officers of churches, Sunday schools, young people's societies, and missionary societies should be kept informed about the latest plans and programs, and be kept busy at their jobs. Training schools should be within reach of all churches so new leaders will be ready to take the place of the older ones. All churches should, somehow, be induced (Continued on page 7.)

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Today is July 1st. One hundred and sixty-three years ago a group of colonial statesmen, with a vision of freedom for this land, drafted that epoch-making document called "The Declaration of Independence." A copy of that historic declaration hangs upon the wall near the writer's desk. Some important changes have been made in the political life and fortunes of the United States since July 4, 1776. And that declaration, adopted finally by the thirteen colonies, or states, laid the foundation for an experiment in civil and religious liberty.

July 4, 1939, is in another age, far-flung from that historic July 4, 1776. In the intervening years nearly all the great nations of the earth, which were formerly ruled by autocratic sovereigns, overthrew their form of government and adopted the democratic form for their national guidance. Then, under a reaction, many of these swung back to the rule of a dictator. Today the nations of the world are living under a nervous tension anticipating an early declaration of war. And some of these nations are seeking to destroy personal liberty by the sword. The patriots of the Thirteen Colonies were willing to lose their lives that men might be free.

Religious liberty is more seriously threatened today than at any period for many centuries. The forces against freedom are more powerful than in many previous generations. Their methods are more subtle; and for these reasons the Christians of all denominations should be united to defend the priceless heritage of religious freedom. The freedom of the churches in America was bought by great labor and sacrifice. Our forefathers paid for this liberty by giving their lives. It must not be possible for the people of this generation to let this sacrifice be made in vain.

There are people in our own Congregational and Christian Churches who think that the Five Cardinal Principles adopted by the Christian Denomination a hundred and forty years ago, are out of date, and should be discarded as obsolete. As a matter of fact the present religious outlook indicates that all Protestant Denominations, as well as Catholics, may be called upon to rally their forces in defense of the truth that "The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a privilege which should be accorded to and exercised by all." Our churches should re-examine the fundamentals of our faith, and the expediency of our traditions. Our pulpits should be aflame with a message and a mission which should call men, women and children to the altar of prayer and consecration.

This age needs the gospel of a cross and a risen Lord. It has too much of superficial thinking and artificial living. There are people in our church pews who want the preacher to turn on the electric fan and cool their fevered brows and furnish free ice-water to soothe their parched tongues. The preacher who attempts to do this kind of service will die from spiritual poverty, and his congregation will perish of dry rot. Yes, a vital message, reinforced by vital Christianity, has a place in the church; and the ministry cannot escape the responsibility of delivering this message. This is not a criticism of present day preaching; it is a challenge to make it better and more dynamic. This is not a criticism of church members; it is a call to enlistment and consecration. That call is timely. It is inevitable.

FOUNDERS' DAY.

Elon College expects to inaugurate Founders' Day September 14, 15, 1939. The matter of observing such an event as a part of our Anniversary Program of celebration was discussed at the recent meeting of the Board of Trustees. The idea was approved, but the question of exact date was left to the Executive Committee to decide.

Searching the records the committee found that on September 14, 1889, page 22 of The Christian Annual, a Provisional Board for the college work, consisting of W. S. Long, President; J. P. Barrett, Secretary; F. O. Moring, Treasurer; J. H. Harden, and G. S. Watson, was appointed. In connection with the appointing of this committee, the location for the proposed college was discussed at length.

In 1890, page 4 of The Christian Annual, the architect's drawings of the proposed new buildings for the college located at Elon College were presented. Pending the erection of the buildings, steps were taken to lease the Graham Normal College buildings as a temporary home for the college. In the spring of 1891, pages 30 and 31 of The Christian Annual, the original building, as presented in architect's drawings in the previous year, was presented in detail and apparently complete and ready for occupancy. Action was taken requesting that the fall term of the college be opened in the new quarters. The following fall the college that had its beginnings the year before in Graham College buildings was transferred to Elon College, and the doors of the new building were opened on September 2, 1891, for its first session.

In the light of the above facts the committee decided that the college really had its beginning with the appointment of the Provisional Board on September 14, 1889, and that this date should be observed annually as Founders' Day. This day will be first observed on September 14, this year, and will perhaps extend through the morning of September 15.

The committee further decided that the program for Founders' Day should have to do with certain historical data as to the beginning of the movement to establish a college in the South for the Christians, and should in a very definite way recognize and honor the original faculty, all of whom are living with the exception of Dr. Wm. S. Long, the first president, and should be of further interest to the Elon alumni, particularly all who studied under the original faculty during their period of teaching. Dr. J. U. Newman has in all probability come in touch with and instructed more students at Elon College than any other faculty member during the entire history of the college.

FELLOWSHIP NEEDED.

Christianity gave to the world a new sense of fellowship. In the early church a note is given to this effect: "The believers all kept together"—(Acts 2:44). There was a common purpose and a common life. They were existing for the good of each other and for their Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. This sense of fellowship gave them power so that they faced persecution with an unusual audacity. It was reported of them that "these who have turned the world upside down are come hither." Emphasis should be given to the word "these." The early church became a church because of its community of life and interest.

As the Gospel of Jesus Christ was spread throughout Palestine, Asia Minor, and Europe, churches were organized. These churches were individually governed and had what we would call freedom of the local church. What a bond of fellowship was in existence between the local church in one vicinity and a church in another place! Reading the letters of Paul, one feels this great unity of spirit and of fellowship. One church helps another that is in financial distress. Encouragement comes to another church that is weak spiritually. Salutations and greetings flow freely from the church and from Paul and other great Christians to their brethren.

The church of the modern day needs strength of fellowship. Throughout the ages it is a recognizable fact that wherever the fellowship is weak, there the church is weak and ineffective. It is unfortunate that today there are so many denominations. This fact would not be quite so ugly if all of these denominations were in friendly fellowship and cooperation with each other. Frequently there is heard one denomination attacking another because of certain beliefs and actions. A tribute should be paid to the broadcasting companies for not allowing one denomination to attack another through the use of the radio. The denominations expect cooperation from agencies outside of the church; then why should they not cooperate with each other and achieve a great fellowship.

A tragic situation appears within the Southern Convention. We have emphasized local church freedom and an autonomous church. Each church of the Congregational and Christian denomination has been left to work out its own salvation. As a result there is no great unity of fellowship. And churches are dying for lack of it. Most of the churches within the Southern Convention are rural and are small. They have no funds to send delegates to great conventions, and the worst of it is that there is no sense of a need for a larger fellowship. The Boards of the church constantly appeal for money. Elon College wants students from the constituency of the church. The Board of Christian Education desires to help the local church with its Christian educational program. The Board of Missions is anxious to help small struggling churches and is attempting to spread the Gospel as far as possible. THE CHRISTIAN SUN needs subscribers and readers. Unless there be a strong fellowship existing between the churches of this Convention, one cannot do much in the promotion of the various agencies of the church. Agencies and Boards create fellowship to some extent, but they divert attention and interest to themselves as an individual agency or board. Someone, and not something nor some program, must promote this sense of fellowship that the early church had. If we sacrifice fellowship for the promotion of church programs, church boards, and church agencies, we shall head for destruction. If the newly elected Promotional Secretary is to promote anything, why should he not first of all promote fellowship between our churches, creating a greater feeling of unity both among ourselves and with our Lord Jesus Christ?

CALLING ALL SECRETARIES: CONFERENCE AND CHURCH.

(SECOND INSTALLMENT.)

On page two of the new report blank, questions have to do with the pastor and his relationships, and with the membership of the church. On page one the same of the pastor for the last year is asked; on this page it is the pastor for the next year and such matters regarding him as his address; the conference in which he has membership; if he is of another denomination, which; the year of his ordination; the year he began his pastorate of your church; if he is not ordained, when was he licensed; whether he has been installed or if not, then whether some kind of recognition service was held; whether he is a member of the Annuity Fund, and if so whether your church pays its share of the dues. It will be seen that all these questions require the conference of secretary and pastor.

Follows a group of questions having to do with church membership, and these are so simple that no explanation is necessary. Each conference secretary is requested to place on each report blank in the proper place the membership reported for last year so that the tabulation for the new year can begin at that point.

The next questions have been asked before, but yet they are new to most of our churches. However this information is desired and can be given in most cases if the secretary will give a little time to it. Here they are: the number of male members, the number of female members, the number of absentee members. Of course, in answering these questions, boys are males and girls are females. The next two questions are of such a nature that the pastor and Sunday school secretary will have to cooperate. If they cannot be answered this year, then plan now to be able to answer them in 1941. (1) The average attendance in the Sunday school. (2) The average attendance at the principal service of worship.

Each church in the Southern Convention has a CHRISTIAN SUN subscription goal. This goal is asked and the number of subscribers in the church membership. The office of THE SUN will be glad to provide each church secretary with the lists of SUNS mailed to each post office serving the communities of your church. Might we suggest that each new subscription to THE SUN and each renewal carry the information of church membership when it is presented.

Page three. This page begins with askings regarding membership in the auxiliary organizations of the church, and it would seem no explanation is necessary.

But follows the tables for financial reports, and on this page those having to do with home expenses. May accuracy be a goal. Under current expenses the first question asks the total salary of your pastor and the second the part of that salary paid by your church. Then the number of other salaries paid by the church and the total. (1) the general current expenses of the church, (2) of the Sunday school, and (3) of all other organizations. A provision is made for miscellaneous expenses, which would include all home expenses not carried in the items above or the two that follow. These are (1) the amount spent during the year on improvements and (2) the total paid on the indebtedness of the church if any. A grand total of home expenses is then in order.

Two further questions are asked on this page: The value of the church building and lot, the value of the parsonage building and lot, and the value of all other properties owned by the church; and the indebtedness, if any, on each of these.

Elon College Golden Anniversary

OUR GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY.

This is the summer of 1939. By the first of June, 1940, less than twelve months, we will have celebrated the Fiftieth Anniversary of Elon College. The Church, through its institution of Christian higher education, will have served its constituency in the broad field of Christian Education for one-half century.

We may tabulate the amount of money invested in equipment on our college campus. We may tabulate the amount of expense of operating the college through the fifty years of service. We may list permanently the names of everyone who has at any time and for any length of time enrolled as a student at Elon College. We may list the names of all who have served on the faculty and reckon the number of years given in such service. We may amass facts showing the tangible results of the college's efforts to train her youth for service of church and state. But not at any time or in any way will we be able to determine accurately the effect of the influence of the college on the church and on the world.

Here minds have been instructed, talents have been discovered and developed, personalities have been enriched by the influences of culture and refinement. Lives have literally been redeemed and changed. Whenever a life is faced about and turned into profitable channels, eternity alone will be able to evaluate the total effect of such a change. Society has been enriched and the destiny of the world determined by changes in human life. We live not for ourselves. We live for others. The life that is lived for itself must cease. The life that is lived for others will never cease. Every dollar given to Elon College is a definite investment in those things that count. The dividends of such investments will be gratifying and enduring. Elon College is stepping toward solid ground. Whenever you give $50.00 or more, that you may become a member of the Golden Anniversary Club, you assist the college in another step toward financial security and a larger service to the church and the world.

Dr. D. J. Bowden of the college faculty has been assisting in soliciting memberships in the Golden Anniversary Club during the week, and will give part time, together with the writer, until July 15. Following that date, he will give full time until school opens. There may be others who will be glad to solicit. Won't you please let me hear from you. Why not send your subscription in now? It will save time and effort. This campaign begins next week in dead earnest. We need cash badly. If you can make a payment on your pledge, it will be greatly appreciated.

The following are new names for the week:

SUNDAY SCHOOL OFFERINGS.

It is encouraging to be remembered. We came near being forgotten this week. Dendron Sunday School of the Eastern Virginia Conference sent us an offering of $3.26. This is fine of the folks at Dendron. There are scores of others from whom we would be delighted to hear.

If our many friends in the Sunday schools and churches throughout the Convention could begin to realize how much it means to the college to receive their remembrance offerings which count on their conference apportionments, I am sure there would be very few who would not respond. It costs the individual in the local church and Sunday school very little, but if two hundred Sunday schools and two hundred churches would send in a contribution, when the amount is totaled in the office, we would be greatly encouraged and much more able to meet our obligations. When your college is able to balance its budget, which means the payment of bills due, you are the happier and the position of the entire church is much stronger. We earnestly solicit the cooperation of all.

Following is a report for the week:

FOR THE CHILDREN

“YEARS AN’ YEARS AGO.”

Three little cousins were spending the week at Grandpa’s house in New Hampshire. Somehow, much as they enjoyed being there, their minds kept going back to their Massachusetts homes. A big celebration was to take place at Lexington and Concord this year, and someone was to take the part of Paul Revere in the great outdoor pageant of events. Marion began to chant:

On the 18th of April in ’75

(Hardly a man is now alive

Who remembers that famous day and year).

Small Ruth interrupted with, “I suppose Grandpa can remember.”

“How silly! It’s 150 years tomorrow since Paul Revere took that ride. People can’t remember what happened before they were born,” scornfully answered Marion. “But he studied a lot about it and maybe when he was a little boy he talked with someone who was there.”

“No!” said Harriett, “but our great, great-grandfather was a little boy at that time, and his father and uncles were at the bridge and helped fire ‘the shot heard around the world.’”

“Well, anyhow,” sighed Marion, “one of our great, great, great-grandfathers was there and we are all daughters of the American Revolution.”

“I’m glad I’m here this week. It’s been great fun. Even that little Polish girl tagging on didn’t do any harm,” said Harriett.

“Grandma says she’s a nice little girl and we must be good to her. She has to work very hard looking after her little brothers and sisters and the only play time she has in when she comes over here on errands. Grandma keeps her as long as she can, I think. Grandma is so kind to everyone,” said Ruth.

“Let’s go across now and play in the shack,” said Harriett briskly and the girls jumped down and sped along toward the “shack,” a small log house which the older boys had built a few years before. There was a fireplace at one end and there were strange old-fashioned pots and pans with which the children could cook. The children had early been taught to be careful about fires, and it was the fixed rule that no one should leave the shack without being sure the fire was out. The three girls were soon frying griddle cakes when they heard the horn for dinner.

“Put the fire out, Marion, ’cause you can run fast and catch up with us,” said Ruth. Marion went to the spring outside and got a bucket of water. She sprinkled the ashes with water and thumped them with the tongs and made sure that they were out. Soon dinner was over and the girls were ready to go out again. As they glanced toward the shack, to their amazement they saw smoke coming out the chimney.

“That little Polish girl’s gone and built a fire,” said Harriett, jumping at conclusions. “She disobeyed Grandma and built a fire in there. We’ll go tell her what we think of her.” But as the girls reached the shack, they saw that it was on fire. Ruth ran back to get Grandpa, but the other two girls kept on. Suddenly someone came running so fast that she almost knocked them down as she went by into the shack. “O, my grandfather’s cockade,” she cried. She went over to the hearth, pulled up one of the stones that was a little loose, snatched a small object from beneath it, and darted out. Just then the smoke filled the room, and as she reached the fresh air the little girl fell in a heap, overcome by smoke and fright. It was Anna, the little Polish girl.

“What made you start a fire in the shack, you bad girl?” asked Harriett.

“I didn’t make any fire,” answered Anna, “I saw the fire and came to get my cockade.” By this time Grandpa and the hired man had reached the shack and had soon put the fire out. The ashes which Marion had thought were dead had flared up again and set fire to some soot in the flue. After Grandpa had made Marion promise that she would be more careful next time, he turned to the poor little shivering Polish girl, who sobbed, “Harriett thought I set the fire.”

“That’s no way to treat a stranger,” said Grandpa, “to suspect and distrust her.”

“I’m sorry Anna,” said Harriett, “that I said that about you; but what did you go into the shack to get?”

“It’s grandfather’s cockade. I kept it in there so it wouldn’t get torn up. It’s my precious legacy handed down to me from my great-grandfather. He fought for freedom here in 1777. He loved a Polish girl, so he later went back to Poland. But he loved America and wanted his sons to come, but they never did. That was years an’ years ago; finally my father came to America and brought us. Great-grandfather handed down the legacies which he wore in the American Revolution. Father had one. My great-grandfather fought with Kosciusko under Washington, and he learned to worship God as the soldiers of Washington did,” Anna said shyly. Sometimes I go and stand under the windows of your church, but no one asked me to come in. Maybe now you’ll invite me to church, too.”

Grandpa nodded a cherry “yes.” As they reached the house Ruth’s father appeared. “Well, sir,” Grandpa said, “Now you’ll take four daughters of the American Revolution to the celebration at Lexington—instead of three. This little girl’s great-grandfather also fought under Washington and she’s going along with us.” So the four happy little girls were soon on the road toward Massachusetts to take a part in the commemoration of what their ancestors did “years an’ years ago.”

to pay all of their Conference Apportionments and Sunday school convention dues as well as meet all missionary and orphanage quotas. All churches should be supplied with good pastors, and all pastors should be given good jobs. Churches should be grouped so they can get better service.

These are some of the things that the convention has a right to expect from its Promotional Secretary. Who knows what he has done? Let him speak next week.

"THE MINISTER."

This writer has just re-read the small volume by the late lamented Dr. W. W. Staley, "The Minister." Our information is that all the copies of this remarkable book were sold soon after publication by The Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio, in 1915, and copyrighted by the author. And yet one could wish no better thing now, especially for our ministers, young and old, in our Congregational and Christian Churches, than that they could and would read this brief volume.

It contains less than a hundred pages, but every page of it is pure gold and seems to have been written by the hand of a prophet and the heart of a seer, for the very day and time in which we now find ourselves. No one who knew him, Jew or Gentile, white or colored, great or small, ever doubted Dr. Staley's call to the ministry and no one could question that the man lived up to his calling of the Lord in Christ Jesus. Dr. Staley was a preacher, a minister, a pastor, first of all; and then a man also. However, he was more than a man, as he prized his ministry and his high calling far more than he prized any other name, or surname, given among men.

The volume has five brief chapters: "The Minister in His Study"; "The Minister in His Personal Life"; "The Minister in His Pulpit"; "The Minister in His Parish," and "The Minister in His Community." The introduction was by the late Dr. A. W. Lightbourne, Dover, Delaware, who says: "The author has exalted his theme. The preacher is here presented in his call, his preparation, his mission, his message, his methods of study and work, his personal Christian experience, and his private and public life. One is surprised to find so much included, and so little omitted, in a volume of this size."

We cannot begin in this brief description to give the reader any adequate idea of the merit and value of this book and the need of the ministers in our day to read it. We must content ourselves with a sentence here and there. Every chapter and paragraph is based on and grows out of the direct teachings of the Bible, such as for instance, "Paul exhorts ministers to 'study to show themselves approved unto God; workmen that need not be ashamed.' This suggests 'a study'; and this study is the mint where his gold is coined. Here he broods over kingdom-questions, weighs soul-interests, meditates upon eternal destinies, and prepares for assaults upon the citadels of wrong."

We cannot forbear quoting from another paragraph in this same chapter on "The Minister in His Study": "The study is not a place of rest or ease; but a place of prayer, research, testing, decision, creation. Like the camp of the Romans, the work here is twice as heavy as on the field. Here all the past, all the future, and all the live questions of the present, converge in the minister's mind like sun-rays in the sunglass. Here his mind and heart mature in the silence and deep reflections of his soul. Here is the place of growth." "Ideas are not born in the crowd. Great thoughts are born in solitude. Jesus retired from the multitude to prepare Himself for great service, and ministers can do no less."

In his chapter on "The Minister in His Personal Life," Dr. Staley declares, "Pulpit ministrations is only one function of the minister. His personal life is the largest thing in his ministry. His personal character, habits, influence, attainments, constitute the largest value in his ministry. In gunnery the rule is, that the gun should be a hundred times the weight of the projectile. In preaching, the minister should be a hundred times weightier than his message. Jesus was always larger than His message or His miracle. What He did was never as large as what He was. No wonder Jesus spent thirty years in preparation and only three years in His public ministry."

In his chapter on "The Minister in His Pulpit," the author says, "The minister in his pulpit is more than preacher, though that is his chief function. In his pulpit he is the leader of devotion, the director of worship, the representative of all the activities of the congregation. . . . Preaching differs from all other human utterances in the source of the message and the character of the minister."

As stated in the beginning, no brief review can give an adequate idea of the worth and merit of this wonderful volume. Though published nearly twenty-five years ago, it seems more a message for our day than for the day in which it was published. It is safe and sound, based on fundamental facts culled from the teachings of Scripture, which no thinking man can gainsay. How we do wish this volume could be re-published and put in the hands, certainly of every minister, our younger ministers especially, of our Christian and Congregational Churches. The volume, like the Bible itself, has no denominational limitations, and can but appeal to the sound sense and good judgment of every student, or would-be student, of the Bible. J. O. A.

MISSIONARIES AS SEEN BY A NATIONAL.

[Address at Near East Mission Annual Meeting.]

For many years I have been closely related to your work. In fact I am a page or a leaf in that work. I am one of you—yet in certain respects I am not. I am only an outsider and I would like to express myself on your work as an outsider. In a way it is a tribute.

What is a missionary? My definition is not a dictionary one. It is what I have seen. A missionary is the most resourceful person. He is the most adaptable being. He does not take defeat as an end to his work, but using it as a stepping-stone marches on breast forward. He is a person that finds a way out.

Let me briefly give you a resume of your work as I have seen it. I have heard the early history of the missionary work. They had to break the wall of prejudice, turn hate to love and sometimes play with death. Then, I saw the missionary work in flower—growing, flourishing and extending. In those days the missionaries were ambassadors in more than one sense. They were the leaders of men, shaping the thought life of the community or city where they lived.

Then came the years of troubles. Every missionary became a hero at his or her post. The privations, isolations and death itself could not budge them from their places. They chose the sufferings of the land to the comfort and freedom of their own land. Outwardly everything was lost, the end had come. But not for the missionary!

Some of you, after the storm ceased, with the salvaged remnant from the great wreckage, moved on to alien countries, not minding the difficulties of climate, language, traditions and culture. That great nightmare, inadequate material supply could not stop you. You pitched your tent toward success. You built a new altar. You began to erect new temples of knowledge, going on undaunted.

Those who remained behind, "hard pressed on every side but never cut off, perplexed but not driven to despair, struck down but not destroyed," standing on the very ashes of the old structure, dreamed of state-ly mansions. What a change in such a short time! Well do I remember the early annual meetings after 1922. As if the poor missionary had turned up every stone to prepare a report for the annual meeting!

How different everything looks now. You have started new projects. You have made new contacts. You are known from the highest to the lowest where you live. You are no more an unknown quantity in the land. You have stamped the country with the stamp of your best cultural and educational system. You have procured the appreciation and confidence of the people.

One often hears these remarks, "Amerikan terbiyesi eiddi bir terbiyedir." ("It leads to self-expression and helps to build the character.") The old hostility is getting less and less and confidence is taking the place of distrust.

Then came the years of depression and still they are with us. When it was necessary to close up some of the institutions, you, too, remember with me the headaches and heartaches and tears. It was like cutting off one's right arm.

The missionary looked as a man almost defeated. But when this thing had to be repeated again, he had found a way out, a sublimation, shall I call it? Victory in outward defeat. I hear that this year also you are face to face with financial problems, the present looks very indefinite and limited.

Your record is before you. Things get old in this world. The American Board, that noble institution, I suppose is getting old. But age does not mean defeat. It, too, can rightfully say with Paul, "I have had a part in the great contest, I have run my race, I have preserved the faith."

But, my friends, God does not get old. He has other means, not used by man yet. To us remain the aspirations and visions of the future.—Missionary Herald.

FOR TWO CENTS A DAY YOU CAN SAVE A LIFE!

Nowhere on earth are there so many hungry humans as in China!

An area which is normally occupied by 149,000,000 has been either fought over or flooded. Both calamities have befallen many regions. The last estimate is that some 30,000,000 Chinese have fled from their homes before the perils of invasion and high water.

Such a dislocation of human life inevitably spells suffering. It invites pestilence.

The enormity of China's catastrophe exhausts the imagination. Our minds are unable to comprehend what it all means. We comfort ourselves with the thought that this is happening on the other side of the world. These are not our kinfolks. We fancy that they have been so "conditioned" to hunger that starvation does not really hurt. And so we turn away to less distressing matters.

But an empty stomach means hunger, and the end of starvation is death—whether we want to think about it or not. These thirty million Chinese love their children and cling as tenaciously to life as do we.

For a hundred years we have been sending missionaries to China. Her national hero, Sun Yat-sen, and her present leader, Chiang Kai-shek, have professed their faith in Christ. Out of the so-called Christian nations of the West has come the enginery which has made this vast destruction possible. We cannot turn our backs on China and preserve our own self-respect.

Fortunately our money goes a long ways when it reaches China. At present rates of exchange ten cents will save a life for five days, while a dollar will not only keep an individual in food for over a month but will provide something towards shelter for the coming year.

Reliable and economical translation of America's gifts into food for Chinese mouths. The Federal Council of Churches has united with the Foreign Missions Conference of North America in setting up the Church Committee for China Relief with an office at 105 East 22 St., New York City, with a personnel recruited from the various mission boards. Gifts received by this body will be transmitted to the American Advisory Committee in Shanghai, which is composed of four American business men and four missionary executives.

Scattered throughout the areas of need are hundreds of devoted missionaries, both American and European, who have been able to stay in the country or to return to their regular stations. Their safety-forgetting service of protection and relief has won the confidence and admiration of all classes of Chinese society. Associated with them are large numbers of dependable Chinese of proved integrity. Years of sad experience with recurring floods and famines have trained these people in the effective administration of relief in such a way as to meet local needs and at the same time avoid the pitfalls of imposition, graft and pauperization.

Do not let your interest in China stop with an exclamatory reading of the headlines. Look behind the reports of marching and counter marching, conquests and retreats, and see the hordes of hungry men, women and little children. And then remember the words of our Lord, "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me."—The Christian Pilgrim.

BUILDING A CHURCH PROGRAM OF RECREATION.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR JULY 16, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: I. Cor. 12:1-14.

Daily Readings—

Mon.—A Spiritual Exercise.—Jas. 4:7-10.
Tues.—Exhaustless Strength in Jehovah.
—Isa. 40:28-31.
Wed.—Right Evaluation of Conduct.—
Rom. 14:16-18.
Thurs.—Warning Against Shallow Pastimes.—Ecc. 11:9.
Fri.—A Good Leader.—I Cor. 10:32-11:1.
Sat.—A Worthy Prize.—Phil. 3:13-14.

We discovered in the study of our last topic the Christian viewpoint regarding recreation. The topic this week deals with the recreational program of the church. The one which follows will deal with the recreational program for the home.

With the social committee in charge of this meeting, and everyone feeling responsible to help, the society should build a well-rounded recreational schedule for the coming year.

Following the devotional service, the leader should give some values commonly recognized in the recreational program of the church. They may be listed as follows: Recreation: (1) encourages wholesome friendships; (2) provides relaxation and refreshment according to individual needs; (3) encourages laughter and merriment, and a sense of the joy of living; (4) helps people to develop their capacities as social beings; and (5) furnishes spiritual impetus and growth.

Questions for Discussion—

Jane Addams said: "We have turned over provision for public recreation to the most unscrupulous members of the community." Who molds the recreational standards of youth in your community? What are you going to do about it?

A minimum program of recreation for every church ought to include four out-door events (hikes, picnics, campfires), two programs for outside guests, a formal "dress-up" affair, informal suppers, four programs for the community (debates, lyceums, musical or literary entertainment), two good plays, and promotional leadership in wholesome physical sports. How does your society measure up?

Suitable Hymns—

"Praise the Lord, Ye Heavens Adore Him."
"Love Divine, All Love Excelling."
"Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus."
"Soldiers of Christ, Arise."

VIRGINIA FELLOWSHIP TO MEET.

"What Price Fellowship?" is the theme chosen for the annual meeting of the Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship, which convenes this year at Liberty Spring Christian Church, near Suffolk, on Tuesday, July 11, at 10 a. m., the program continuing throughout the day.

Three young people will discuss the theme, and Rev. A. Lanson Granger, Jr., past president of the National Pilgrim Fellowship will deliver the inspirational address. Group discussions and a fellowship period will follow the afternoon program.

The aim of this year's program is to give definite help to the local church. A discussion group is planned especially for ministers who are interested in the young people's program.

If the forty-four churches in Eastern Virginia send representative young people and their pastors to this meeting, every church in the conference will be benefitted.

Remember to bring a picnic lunch.

WHAT I LEARNED AT ELON.

By BERTHA MAE WEBB.

(A Report to Newport News, Va., Church.)

As most of you know, this was my second trip to Elon. It really has been a privilege to attend this beautiful college, our church school.

The course that I shall tell you about first was, "What Can We Believe?" taken under Rev. Arnold Slater. Under him I learned that when we do not think, we do not believe, and when we do not believe, we do not live. I wonder if there is anyone else who has pictured God as I have—as a dear Old Man with long white whiskers and long white hair, sitting on a throne in Heaven, just looking around and seeing us at all times. But this is not true—"God is a spirit."

When we do something good for people, we feel good. Paul once said, "When I would do good, something always pulls me down." I wonder if this is not the case with most of us. When we are tempted and temptations are so great, our will power

JEROBOAM: A MAN WITH A GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

LESSON II—JULY 9, 1939.

GOLDEN TEXT: "In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he will direct thy paths."—Proverbs 3:6.

LESSON: I Kings 11:26-43.

A Man Who Might Have Been.

Of all sad words, of tongue or pen,
The saddest is "It might have been."

In some such fashion wrote the poet many years ago. And Jeroboam might be listed among the legion of men and women who might have been so much more than they were. He did not live up to his high promise, and although he had native endowment and boundless courage and industry, he is remembered to this day as a man who used his influence for selfish purposes, and who by his example and personal conduct led many people astray from the religion of the God of Israel. To biblical students he is known as "Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who did sin, and who caused Israel to sin." Again and again is reference made to his sin, and how by his sin he caused others to sin. For no man sins to himself, because no man lives to himself. Jeroboam had a great opportunity, but alas, he did not live up to it.

Jeroboam first appears in the biblical narrative as a revolutionist, or rebellionist. The record states that "he also lifted up his hand against the king"; which is another way of saying that he fomented a rebellion or revolution. Perhaps he was not altogether to blame. Outwardly Solomon's reign had been characterized by magnificence and splendor. But much of his wealth and his glory had been built at the expense of his people. He resorted to forced labor and heavy taxes. The people were grievously burdened. There was a marked unjust distribution of wealth.

Jeroboam's mother was a widow, and her meager earnings may have been taxed to support the king in his luxury. The fire of resentment and of rebellion burned in the heart of this ambitious and capable man. Unfortunately he could not keep the matter to himself, for the record indicates that he made open rebellion against Solomon, and except he had fled for his life, he would have been executed forthwith. Like many another man who has aroused the displeasure of the ruling power, he found safety in flight to another country. In his case he went to Egypt.

It is significant to note, too, that Jeroboam was a man of ability and courage and industry. In fact it was these qualities that first attracted Solomon's attention. He was "a mighty man of valor," "he was industrious," and Solomon gave him charge over all the labor of the house of Joseph—he made him a superintendent or overseer of the construction group that was rebuilding or repairing the walls and fortifications of Jerusalem. It was from the inside of things that Jeroboam organized his revolt. The Bible itself does not recount the details of the rebellion. It simply states that Jeroboam lifted his hand against the king, and that he was forced to flee to Egypt for his life.

The writer of Kings recounts one incident that should cause us to judge Jeroboam in a more sympathetic way. One of the prophets of the Lord himself, in a symbolic way, predicted that Jeroboam should have ten of the tribes of Israel for his own kingdom. He made this prophetic dictum in the name of Jehovah, the God of Israel, according to the record. Jeroboam must have felt himself as an instrument in the hands of God to take upon himself the kingdom.

Needless to say, when Solomon heard of all of this, he got busy. Oriental monarchs then, as Oriental rulers now, brooked no opposition, allowed no political ambitions on the part of others. He sought to kill Jeroboam. But fortunately for himself, the young man escaped and fled to Egypt, where he remained until he got news of Solomon's death. And then he came back to Israel, and events played right into his hands.

Rehoboam, Solomon's son, fell heir to his father's kingdom. He was waited upon by a deputation from Israel, which asked him to lighten the tax load, and to lessen the forced labor. Rehoboam consulted with the older men who counseled moderation. If he had taken their advice all would have been well. But he turned to younger men, who counseled even more drastic measures than Solomon had employed. The men of Israel rebelled and established an independent kingdom. And Jeroboam, with insight and an eye to the main chance, took advantage of the situation and was made king over the ten northern tribes.

Jeroboam was quite an executive and an administrator, but he had a false sense of religious values. He was selfishly ambitious. He was afraid that if the people from his territory went up to Jerusalem to worship, they might be weaned away from allegiance to him. To guard against this possibility he established shrines at Bethel and at Dan, the southern and the northern limits of Israel, or the northern tribes. He also appointed priests, as we would say, from the laity, who were not of the priestly line at all, and commissioned them to perform the activities of the hereditary priesthood. As an added safeguard he established feasts of his own devising. Reduced to common language, he thus set up a man-made religion as a substitute for the divine revelation given to the Hebrew people.

The tragedy of the situation is that because he was in a position of authority, he caused the people to sin. Israel turned to the worship of false gods, the religion of the Jewish people was adulterated, and for years and years, the pernicious effects of this false religion were felt in Israel. For, as is always the case, a man's influence for good or for evil continues after he is dead. "The power of a dead man," is no idle phrase. The evil as well as the good that men do, lives after them, to curse or to bless the world and they that dwell therein. Let every man take heed how he lives, for his unconscious as well as his conscious influence lifts or lowers not only his own, but succeeding generations. This is especially true if he be in a position of prominence or authority. Leaders in church or state ought to walk worthy of the calling wherewith they have been called. And so ought the common man. There is no life so humble that it does not influence some other life. And even the humblest man or woman can inspire others and help to bring nearer the Kingdom of God by the simple method of living a pure, strong, Christian life. Indeed the lesson for today will be lost if we think that the principle applies only to those of high position, that the lesson concerns only a king of a far-away day and a far-away land. The lesson is a warning to all of us not to depend on worldly wisdom and not to have any other gods before us. We are to put God first and to keep Him first.

"There are spots on the Sun, so say the scientists. Alas! It seems there are blemishes in everything. Our sun may not be perfect but it's the best we've got and we'll hold on to it until the critics give us a better one."

"IN LOVE."

"Love never faileth."—I Cor. 13:8.

He is thousands of miles away. Not a waking hour passes that this lovely wife, who is at home, is not envisaged in his mind. His whole being longs for her presence, her tender care, her good cooking, her constant and ever charming love. Though life has decreed it so, it seems all wrong that her life should be denied him. Great will be the reunion when it comes.

Enjoying such love as this he does not understand how any man and wife once in love, in the face of their differences and problems, which must arise, can regard their problems as primary and agree to separate, thus tragically shadowing their lives and that of their children forever.

There is a remedy which, if taken, will save every one from the tragedy of divorce. That remedy is: First, "Be ye not unequally yoked with unbelievers." Second, "Let the husband render unto the wife her due and likewise the wife unto the husband." Third, "Train the children to love." Fourth, take Jesus in the transaction and follow his teachings, ready to sacrifice all things selfish to make Him supreme, and married life will be one continuous stream of joy.

Prayer—Our Father, we thank Thee for the blessings of love in our lives. We pray for the spirit of Jesus, Thy Son, within us always, and for the courage to leave it all always with Him. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"INORDINATE USE OF TIME."

"See that ye walk circumspectly—redeeming the time."—Eph. 5:15, 16."The time is short."—I Cor. 7:29.

Outside his room there is a card room designated as such for the pleasure of all who desire that pastime. There are some who love that pastime inordinately, as we think.

They begin about nine o'clock in the morning and stop at a late hour of the night, stopping only for meals and then in a hurry to get back to the game. Among them is the wife of a minister and another the wife of a man who is ill alone in his room. We cannot understand how anyone can play at a game so continuously during their waking hours and enjoy it (we have reason to believe there is no monetary consideration). It is believed that the duties of a house wife of the home, of the children, and with the consciousness of the reality of life's purpose, would compel and impel anyone to subordinate pleasures to those ends. It is not even understood how it can be a continuous pleasure physically. That there is "nothing else to do" is not true. These same people complain of not having time to do some things for which they are responsible. But there are good people who do it that way. God bless them. May they do nothing that dims their vision or sense of God.

Prayer—O Lord, our God, 'tis in Thee we live and move and have our being. O may we be thankful and render unto Thee our work and our pleasures in a way that will do Thy kingdom good and please Thee. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"CHRISTIAN AND DEVILISH COOKING."

"Know ye that your bodies are the temple of God."—I Cor. 3:16.

After eating some "devilish" cooking and as a consequence spending a half week in bed with a doctor's bill besides, convalescent, he sought out the prospects for some "Christian food." The menu called for "Fried Liver." He ordered a piece broiled—soft. It was served, broiled all right, but charred to a crisp.

We wonder why regimented cooks cannot produce foods not only to taste but to the good of the physical being—food to the physical well being may be called "Christian food." Food which bears prima facie evidence of the indigestible is certainly "devilish."

If it is "good neither to eat flesh nor to drink wine nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak." It is certainly good neither to eat nor drink that which causes the body to be offended or made weak, for this body is the "Temple of God" and "if any one defile it" "him shall God destroy."

Would that there were better Christian cooks (or more cooks who produced Christian food) in some places, and would that all of us were better Christian eaters.

Prayer—Our Father, teach us and make us willing and ready to be taught the truth of right and wrong, and whatsoever we do to do all to the glory this temple of our body and to Thy glory both here and hereafter. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"RIDE IT THROUGH."

"There came down a storm of wind on the lake . . . He rebuked the wind and the raging waters . . . and there was a calm."—Luke 8:23, 24.

The sea is calm tonight. For the past few days high winds have stirred the mighty ocean and rolled this "Leviathan of the Sea" about like a piece of drift wood. Tonight the winds have ceased and the majestic ship rides on an even keel and in a couple of days we expect to be in port—our desired haven.

We may learn from the calm that the storm is only a passing disturbance. It does not last, and it is always succeeded by a calm. That

FIVE FAMOUS FOOLS.

About the worst title that can be conferred on a man is for society to class him as a fool. There are various attitudes and practices which cause one to receive the title. There are said to be ninety-three different kinds of fools referred to in the Bible as warnings to men and women today. In every generation, these types are found in full quota.

First is the individual who is known as "The Short-Sighted Fool." Jesus tells us the story of the man's life. This short-sighted fool thought only of his barns filled with plenty, quite forgetting about his need of a Mansion in the Skies. His barns were bursting with prosperity, and he soliloquized. He seemed to fancy that he could satisfy his soul with oats and corn. He was so short-sighted that he could not see that the lever of time would some day come along, and "then whose would these things be?" The story of this short-sighted fool is found in Luke 12: 16-21.

Material prosperity is not to be frowned upon or despised. No one but a fool discounts the importance of material values. Money is sacred. It represents personality, time, talent, and effort. But the person who makes material values an end in themselves instead of a means to end is living in a fool's paradise. This fool recognized that he had a soul. "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years, taken thine ease—eat, drink, and be merry." He could have saved himself from playing the role of a fool, if instead of saying what he did, he had said, "The Lord certainly has blessed me with large crops and great prosperity. And to show my gratitude to God, I am going to make a large contribution to Missions, and make a large Thank-Offering to my church. I am going to use my prosperity in honoring God Almighty."

The second of the Five Famous Fools referred to in the Bible is the "Careless Fool." In Proverbs 14: 9

we find this kind of fool described. "Fools make a mock at sin." They call it a "spree," "a night of it," or "a good time." They forget that "he who compromises with sin handicaps his children's children." Only a fool will play with fire—only a fool will play with sin. Parents who are indifferent to the need of spiritual training for their children are playing the role of the careless fool. The greatest heritage any child can have is the heritage of a noble Christian home training.

The third of the Five Famous Fools referred to in the Bible is the "Skeptical Fool." He is the man who is described as "the fool hath said in his heart there is no God." He is the man who wants to live without thought of how, and tries to make himself think that there isn't any God. The thought of there being a God carries with it the idea of responsibility and accountability to that God. Nobody but a fool would blatantly deny the existence of God.

The fourth of the Five Famous Fools is the "Self-Confident Fool." Some might call him the self-righteous fool—the person who thinks he knows it all—the person who thinks he is the "best ever." People who think that their correct notions about God, heaven, hell, the Bible, etc., are sufficient credentials or that their theology and creed are enough are fools. The Theological Fool is another name for this type of the self-confident and self-righteous fool. People who argue religion instead of living it are only fooling themselves.

The fifth of the Five Famous Fools referred to in the Bible is the "Religious Fool." We find the story of their foolishness in Matthew 25: 1-13. They were in the right crowd—they wanted to meet the bride-groom, but had failed to make the necessary provisions. They had the lamp of religious profession, but did not have the oil of religious possession. No matter what creed a person may subscribe to, and no matter to what church one may belong, if the spirit of Christ is not in a person's life, and if the oil of love and good-will is not in his lamp of Christian profession, the door will be shut. A lamp is no good without oil. Neither are Christian professions, creeds, and theology, and even church membership itself of any value without the oil of sincere faith expressed in right living. It is better for a person to have the wrong theology and the right life than to have the right theology and the wrong life. The sincere Christian seeks to have both.

ship masters learn one thing to do in a storm, "ride it out." After all, calm predominates (we have had calm for five months).

We over-emphasize the hard times of life, and forget the good. Like the ships we log the storm but nothing is said about the calm. Yet, it is the calm that God is always giving and it is peace He is always leaving with us.

Prayer—Our Father, teach us how to ride the storms of life in the name of Jesus, and how to appreciate His peace He so graciously bestows. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"LIFE'S CONTRADICTION."

"When I would do good evil is present with me."

Paul was discussing the ever present temptations of life and the struggle one has to be faithful to good.

There is another phase of human life with which we struggle, just as potent an enemy as Paul's: that is undertaking to do things when circumstances will not permit, and then the loss of that ambition when opportunity does present itself.

One day we exclaim "O that I had the time to do that thing!" Another day we have all sorts of time and we relax and have no disposition to drive ourselves to work. One day we are overwhelmed with worldly cares, and the next day we are blissfully at ease.

Let us learn that all weathers are God's weathers, all times are God's times, that we ourselves are God's at all times and that an unfavorable disposition may be due to the condition of the liver. We are enfolded in God's care, so let us work while it is day and trust Him.

Prayer—Our Father, we pray for the abiding consciousness of Thy love with us always—give us more trust. Amen.

"JUST PEGS."

Provide things honest in the sight of all men.—Rom. 12: 9-21.

In building our log cabin we have reverted to the pioneer's use of hickory pegs. Hat racks, towel racks, and hangers for every use, are simply pegs driven into the logs. Our bookshelves are only boards laid upon pegs.

There is a seemliness and a dignity about these plain pegs that no expensive hardware could match. Sim-

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

It seems that some of our Sunday schools think we can run an orphanage on fresh air. Quite a number have not sent us a penny this year. The children we have at the orphanage have good appetites and eat food. It takes quite a lot to supply food for ninety or a hundred children. They wear clothes and it takes money to buy clothes. Every Sunday school is supposed to send us a monthly offering to help support the orphanage. It certainly would be fine if they would. If all would take a part and do their duty how much easier it would be to carry on the work. Then, too, if we had funds we could do much better work—a finer piece of work. It is hard to build a house if you have just half enough timber to build it. When a need arises in your community and little children are left helpless and dependent and you appeal to the Christian Orphanage for help we try to help you. When we take a child it means an added expense. We must have friends from somewhere to meet it.

If I take a group of boys out in the field to do a piece of work one cannot help but admire the boys who link into the work to do their part and do it well. How fine it would be if all our churches and Sunday schools would do their part and help to make the Christian Orphanage one of the finest in the State of North Carolina. Don't you think with more than thirty thousand members in the Southern Convention that we should run a real home for children?

We took in a little boy a few weeks ago. If you could visit the orphanage and take the little fellow up in your arms and realize that his father and mother are gone, that he is dependent upon you to give him a home, food, and clothes, and a chance in life, you would have a different feeling toward the orphanage than what you perhaps have had before. Visit the orphanage and see the plant, the children, and what we are trying to do here for little dependent children. Why don't you have your Sunday school picnics on our grounds? We have nice cool shade. We will furnish the picnic table. If you will notify us a day ahead of time we will furnish you a barrel of ice cold lemonade to quench your thirst. We want you to come. We extend to you a cordial invitation to come. Come and see the home you have helped build for little children. It is your institution.

becomes so weakened that we are led to sin. What is the worst thing that can happen to us? The worst thing that can happen to us is to sin and to keep on sinning. We sin when we do not make our lives like Jesus' life. Sin is not only doing mean things, but thinking mean things. We are responsible for sin. Jesus has no patience with those who are always blaming their sins on conditions of living. We have a will to choose between good and sin. Man is judged not only for what he is but for what he is trying to be.

I also learned under Rev. Mr. Slater that to be a real Christian we have to be a follower of Jesus Christ, and as a follower of Jesus Christ must continue to be righteous to the end of our earthly journey. Also we must be honest, truthful, and love our fellowmen. I have also learned that if we practice our religion as we find it, we come to know more about it. None of us should be satisfied with our religion, but instead we should try to know more about it and live as a real Christian lives, striving to live more like Jesus. I have learned that we are not judged by what we are half so much as by what we are striving to be. I know that it is very easy for most of us to say that we are Christians, but when we are tested it becomes very difficult. I also learned that it is our choice between good and sin, and to be a Christian we must choose good. We must not only think of life on earth, but of the everlasting life—life after death.

I also took a missionary course, "Our Task Abroad," under a Mrs. Childs, a missionary from Angola, Africa. I shall not go into details about this course.

One of the most enjoyable things was the group meetings which were held every night just before we went to bed, from ten until ten-fifteen.

Our theme through the week was, "Let the meditations of my heart and the words of my mouth be acceptable unto Thee, O God." This theme brought forth a most interesting discussion.

Mr. Todd told us something about "Worship." The question was asked, "What is worship?" Worship is awareness of God's immediate presence. We should honor and praise Him. We should confess our sins to God, ask His guidance, and dedicate ourselves to Him. Some people go to church just to see a friend. We often hear people say, "I wonder if so and so is going to be at church," or "So and so is going to be at church and I must go and see him." I would like to know if we ever ask ourselves this question, "I wonder if God will be there?"

I appreciate the privilege of attending the Elon Training School.

"Always begin by doing that which costs me most, unless the easier duty is a pressing one. Examine, classify, and determine at night the work of the morrow; arrange things in the order of their importance, and act accordingly. Dread, above all things, bitterness and irritation. Never say, or indirectly recall anything to my advantage.—Madame Swetchine.

If we would be successful winners of souls we must be moved with compassion for the lost and the perishing. We must sympathize with men in their sorrows and troubles, if we would hope to gain their affections and to do them good.—D. L. Moody.

THE MINISTER OF EDUCATION.

By W. A. Harper, 159 pp., Ashland, Ohio:
University Post. $2.00.

Reviewed by

DR. WILLIAM A. KEITH
Minister of Collegiate Church, Nashville, Tenn.

Religious education is never a dull subject. But Dr. W. A. Harper, professor of the study at Vanderbilt University School of Religion, has added to its interest an imaginary situation in which an expert is employed as "Minister of Education" by a church at "Bakersville." Dr. Paul J. Sheron helps the church meet its problems in religious education and helps himself by courting and marrying one of the church school teachers!

Dr. Harper confesses his discussion "represents partly experience and partly meditation on it." All of the situations discussed such as a church adopting objectives, transforming its method of teaching as well as materials, conducting a Worker's Council and building a library have been part of actual life somewhere.

In discussing the theory of religious education Dr. Harper sets forth his own type of "Creative Teaching." "Creative teaching is thus seen to be a cooperative enterprise. All persons involved, both teachers and students or growing persons, will necessarily enter into the process. The teacher is there to contribute out of his experience, but the initiators and active agents are the students or growing persons. . . . Creative teaching rests on the fundamental assumption that learning is best achieved under conditions of freedom, sharing, and responsible participation on the part of the students or growing persons. Teaching is not 'getting persons told' but stimulating growing persons to arrive at intelligent testing in terms of an integrated standard of life voluntarily chosen."

The fiction in this account is a little too obvious at times. Some one unsuspectingly asks the right question and gives the Minister of Education to launch to a learned and comprehensive discussion of a theme then and there. But the talks he gives do embody the very best account of what religious education can and ought to be today. They are fully documented with ample quotations and interpretation of the best thought and digest of books in the field.

This book is the latest in a series Dr. Harper has written during a long and valuable life as teacher and expert in religious education. It will be profitably read by ministers, church school workers and parents who are concerned that their children have a more creative experience of religion in the church. Many more churches might have the transforming experience of "The First Church at Bakersville" if this book's wisdom were applied to its own need and possibility.

Marriages

CHANDLER - WILLIAMSON.

Mr. Graham Quinton Chandler and Miss Janie Malissa Williamson were married at my home, Virgilina, Va., on June 7, 1939. The ring ceremony of the Congregational-Christian Church was used. The bride is the daughter of W. P. and Maybell Williamson of Buffalo Springs, Va. She is a graduate of State Teachers College, Farmville, Va., and has been for seven years a popular teacher in Mecklenburg County, Va. Mr. Chandler is the son of the late Robert and Viola Chandler of Texas. He is a traveling salesman for White-Turner Casket Company of Winston-Salem, N. C., and is located at Buffalo Junction, Va. After an extended bridal trip they will be at home to their friends. Their many friends wish for them a happy and useful life.

licity is always more beautiful than ornamentation.

Just so the life that abounds in the ordinary, old-fashioned virtues of honesty, thoughtfulness, thrift, industry and considerateness, is more symmetrical and beautiful and effective than the one overlaid with sophistication.

Prayer—Lord, keep us simple and sincere, and ever lovers of the homely things. Deliver us from the tyranny of fashions and moods, that we may walk humbly before Thee. Amen.—Wm. T. Ellis.

SUNDAY.

"INSPIRATION POINT."

"I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help."
—Ps. 121: 1.

Rumaging through our photo diary the other day, we came upon a card showing "Inspiration Point" on Route No. 80 near Elcentro, Cal. It took us back to the day we climbed it. It is a crag, commanding a grand view of perfect loveliness that seems to soothe and calm one's spirit.

As much as we would, we cannot keep the mountain-top experiences always. Everyday life is in the valley where we work and toil; where we are with commonplace people doing the common place things. Let us learn as Jesus learned that the common place is made more important by the mountain-top experience. It is the vision that saves sordid souls. Neglect not the vision.

Prayer—Our Father, as Jesus loved the hills and grand views, so may we. Give us serenity of soul and strength of purpose that fills everyday life with glory. Amen.

THE FIFTH UNIVERSITY

By CLARENCE A. VINCENT, D. D.

Sir James Barrie said to the students of St. Andrews University: "Mighty are the four universities of Scotland, and they will prevail. But even in your highest exaltations never forget that they are not four but five. The greatest of them is the poor, proud homes you came out of, which said so long ago, 'There shall be education in the land!' She, not St. Andrews, is the oldest university in Scotland, and all others are her whelps."

Habits.

The true homes are the training places of good habits. It was there we formed habits of health and cleanliness and neatness and respect for others' rights. Patiently in the home were taught and practiced by our parents the conduct that at last became a habit. So much in the contacts in life depends upon the physical characteristics formed in childhood and youth!

"Our second mother, habit, is also a good mother." It is true mentally, that a thoughtful home, where the parents think things through and talk things over, trains the children in thinking and judgment. Out from such homes come the clear-thinking citizens, the leaders in every community. Corruption and tyranny begin to tremble when the citizens think truly and act courageously. "Beware when the great God lets loose a thinker on this planet."

Ideals.

A home that holds up the Christian ideals is a character and world-building university. The home that neglects to live and teach such ideals is robbing the children and neighborhood of the greatest example and training. Holland writes, "Ideals are the world's masters." If they are weak or selfish they gradually destroy society. If they are unselfishly moral and social they are subtle builders of civilization.

Jesus taught that all men are brethren. The realization of this ideal comes slowly, but it comes! What is civilization? It is the power of good men and women. The home should believe in and teach honesty, brotherhood, freedom, justice, reverence, and peace. Such a home is, indeed, a university.

Experience.

Jesus taught his disciples that religion is a life. The world was crushed under the weight of forms when he lived. "I am the way, the truth, and the life" and "He that hath the Son hath life." A saved life is "a life hid with Christ in God." As this experience of God in the soul became a fact, old oppressive, deadening forms began to crumble, and new forms began to express the new life. This has been the story of every awakening and reformation.

The home is the most effective university for the training of the generations of men in this life of experience and practice. Good will in the heart and applied in the activities of society will bring the kingdoms of this world into the Kingdom of our Lord and his Christ. Lead the children to Christ, fathers and mothers. The loving atmosphere of the home, the reading of the Scriptures morning after morning, the example of prayer, the teaching of the children to pray, the example of a home that serves its neighborhood and the world is the most effective institution in the world. The Church, the government, and the schools are important, but above them all is the home, the "Fifth University."

"Our only rule of faith and practice."

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

A revival meeting is being held at Long's Chapel from July 9 to 16. Rev. H. E. Crutchfield is the preacher.

The Promotional Secretary enjoyed attending services at Albemarle, New Lebanon (N. C.), and Happy Home Churches on last Sunday.

The Virginia Valley Central Conference is to be held this year at the Newport Christian Church on Wednesday and Thursday, August 9-10.

Rev. A. Lanson Granger, Jr., has accepted an invitation to spend August at Asheboro, N. C., helping our group there to plan for the organization of a church.

Rev. Herbert G. Councill, Jr., of Franklin, Va., who recently graduated from Yale Divinity School, has been called to and has accepted a Congregational Church in Canterbury, Conn.

The revival meeting closed at Mt. Bethel Christian Church on Friday night of last week, with eight additions to the church. Rev. LeGrand Moody is the pastor and had as his assistant Rev. J. Everette Neese.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention will meet on Tuesday of next week with Rosemont Christian Church, Norfolk, Va. The program for the day will be found on page eleven of this issue of THE SUN.

Rev. J. E. McCauley of Richmond, Va., is to assist Rev. E. M. Carter in a series of meetings which will begin at Fuller's Chapel, near Henderson, N. C., on Sunday, July 16. Rev. A. Lanson Granger, Jr., will fill the pulpit of the Richmond church on Sunday.

Rev. J. F. Apple assisted Rev. S. E. Madren in a meeting at Mt. Gilead last week, which closed Friday evening. A good spirit was manifest in the entire meeting. At the closing service eight persons were received into the church upon profession of faith. Others are expected to join later.

There has been erected at the University of North Carolina a monument to Mathew McCauley in recognition of the contributions of the McCauley family toward the establishment of the University. The unveiling services will be held at 4:30 o'clock on Thursday afternoon of this week, and will be under the auspices of the Daughters of the American Revolution. Rev. J. E. McCauley, pastor of our Richmond church will be among those present at the unveiling.

VACATION CHURCH SCHOOL AT LYNCHBURG.

A Vacation Church School was held at the Lynchburg, Va., Church from June 19 to July 2, 1939. It is reported that the school was the finest held at the church for several years.

Teachers were as follows: Miss Ettie K. Harvey, Mrs. Maggie May, Miss Eunice Leebrick, and Rev. J.

Howard Smith, Director and Teacher of Juniors and Intermediates. The enrollment was sixty. Mr. J. W. Talley is superintendent of the Sunday school.

Certificates were awarded at a Commencement Program given on Sunday evening, July 2. Attendance and cooperation were fine. A picnic for the entire school was held Friday, June 30, at Seminole Lake, and seventy-five people were present to enjoy the fun and fellowship.

MT. OLIVET (G).

One of the most educational and worthwhile projects of the church has just been experienced at Mt. Olivet (G). This Vacation Church School was, in many respects, the most successful in the history of this particular church.

The enrollment reached forty, which included about all the children of the community regardless of denomination. Of this forty, thirty-one received certificates for regular attendance and faithful work, two for three years of good work, and four for special recognition.

The teachers and helpers were some of the local people who consider this program worth while and beneficial, and for these reasons were willing to give their time and energy in instructing and enlightening those who will help constitute the church of the future.

The success of the school is largely attributed to the presence, help, and inspiration of the pastor and his wife, the Rev. and Mrs. M. W. Mann. This was an unusual privilege, since it is the second time that the pastor and his wife have guided and assisted largely in the Vacation Church School—the first time being fifteen years ago when we held our first school of this kind and the present local teachers were then students.

Mr. Mann took charge of the music and worship and Mrs. Mann taught the Juniors. Other workers were: Mary Gentry, Frances Parish, L. C. Parish, Jr., and Ruby, Winona, and Thelma Morris.

The school reached its climax on June 30, at which time a program demonstrating the work of the school and a pageant, "Speak, Lord," were presented.

If you have not had a Vacation Church School, start planning for one during the summer. You will find it helpful, worth while, and recreational.

During the two weeks of the school three evening meetings were scheduled for the adults of the church, at which time Mr. Mann was in charge of the teaching of new hymns found in the Pilgrim Hymnals, which have recently been purchased under the sponsorship of the Young People's Auxiliary.

Other things of interest that the young people have done for the church in a material way, but for the spiritual enrichment of the church, is the frosting of window panes so as to create a more worshipful atmosphere; and the purchasing of carpet for the aisle and pulpit.

On June 25, the entire Sunday school went to McIntire Park, Charlottesville, Va., after having its regular Sunday school, for a picnic, which everyone enjoyed immensely.

All in all, things have been moving quite rapidly, yet smoothly, with this "church on the hill."

THELMA MORRIS.

NEW, BUT EXPECTED.

During recent years the Federal Government has been furnishing work for millions of people who could not find employment. Recently Congress has passed a law requiring these laborers to work 130 hours a month, which is five hours a day for six days per week. Rather than comply with this new requirement, a large number of W. P. A. workers are reported to have gone on strike. When those who are being furnished relief refuse to take it because it requires work, a new chapter is being written in our national history.

One cannot argue that five hours of work a day is too strenuous for able-bodied people. No objection is made to the conditions under which the work must be done; the hours are simply too long. The Federation of Labor is undertaking to get the law changed so those on relief rolls will not have to give so much effort in return for the living which the Federal Government offers.

This is a new situation but one that was to be expected, because the Government has been so very free in passing out money in recent years. If a living can be had without labor, there are many who will refuse to work. We are told in sacred Scriptures that from earliest times man was expected to make his living by toil. Unless we come back to that standard and teach people to work for that which they get rather than seek to get it for nothing, there are grave dangers lying ahead of us. The Government would seem to be right in saying to those who are not willing to work an average of five hours a day for a living that they have a right to do without food and shelter.

PREACHING.

The person who is called to the ministry has as his major responsibility an activity called preaching. He is expected to tell from the pulpit the teachings of the Sacred Book as they apply to human experience in the day in which we live. It is the business of the preacher to present the idea of God in such fashion that people will want to honor and serve God. He is expected to preach Jesus in such a way that people will love him and seek to follow him. The preacher should present the Holy Spirit as the living presence of God, ministering to human needs, and do it in such a way as to induce people to seek his presence and aid.

If this be so, and it seems to be reasonable, there is little place for the personal pronoun "I" in the pulpit. What the minister has done is insignificant in comparison with what God has done. It is Jesus who is to be exalted and not the speaker. The power of the Holy Spirit is much more important than the personality of the preacher. It seems to be easy for preachers to forget this and to refer to themselves in a sermon much more often than they do to God, to Christ or to the Divine Spirit. It may be a profitable practice for ministers to get a trusted friend to count the personal references in a few sermons and thus give the speaker a chance to check up on himself to see whether he is preaching the Christ, or himself.

The day of preaching is not gone. People like to hear good sermons. They sit by the hour to hear what the man of God has to say. Fortunate is the person who can preach the message of the Eternal with fascinating words, interpretative gestures, and with a persuasive personality. Men of the ministry, you are called of God to preach "the unsearchable riches of God in Christ Jesus." The "good news" is still needed. Preach it!

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

One phase of religious education within our Convention bounds is the work done in the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions. These programs are prepared with the hope of helping all who deal with religious education in local churches. It is expected that those who attend the conventions will themselves have clearer vision and deeper devotion because of what they hear, see, and feel while attending the conventions.

With this in mind there are devotional services and inspirational addresses. Those who lead must themselves sometimes climb to a mountain height and get new contact with God. Those who lead the devotional services in Sunday school conventions have an opportunity of inspiring those who will lead such services in many local schools.

In addition to this there are talks that are intended to give information, new plans are presented, problems are discussed and solutions sought. Teachers become better informed, and superintendents stock up with new ideas. Pastors see things differently and are able to render better service because of these conventions. At last this is what is intended, and anything less makes the conventions unworthy to be classed in the realm of religious education.

TO GIVE, OR TO GET?—THAT IS THE QUESTION.

Shakespeare's idea was doubtless better than mine—he said: "to be or not to be"—but it is important for us to decide whether for us life is to be a giving or getting process. Churches must answer the same question. Preachers need to give some thought to this, also. Have we some contribution to make to the world, or do we want simply to receive? Will we support institutions so we may receive in return, or will we give so the Church may grow? Shall we attend meetings just for what we can get, or shall we attend to contribute our thought, prayer, and personality as well as our money? Are we living with the purpose of giving or simply to get? That is the question that determines our worth in God's world.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The old time experience meeting was interesting. It was sometimes dull and tiresome when the same testimony was repeated in every meeting. The story was told that on one occasion an experience meeting was enlivened by the testimony of a man who had been partly paralyzed, but who was able to return to the meeting after an absence of several months. After several others had told what the Lord had done for them, the leader called upon the afflicted member to tell what the Lord had done for him. With difficulty he arose, and leaning upon his crutches, said: "Brethren, I tell you the Lord has mighty nigh ruined me. But I am glad to testify, although I am a wreck, as you can see."

The testimony meeting has almost passed. Many people were helped by testifying, and their testimony helped others. What would be our testimony if called upon to bear witness to what God has done for our soul? The answer to the question would vary with each individual case. But it seems to be reasonable to answer this question as a Christian, as follows:

God has answered my prayer. That is a great blessing. It indicates that the witness has met the conditions of answered prayer. The Psalmist said: "If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear me," and follows that by saying, "but verily God hath heard me." That means he had put iniquity out of his heart while he prayed. It is a great favor for God to answer. It means that the line of communication between man and God is open and in use. And great things can come into the person's soul whose heart is fixed and unmoved by a living, vital faith.

Not only does God answer prayer but he gives to those who pray a power to weigh values in life. And that is essential to well-balanced living. We are living in a time when many people are not willing to evaluate living in a sensible, religious way. Material things, sensual pleasures, carnal desires and physical comforts attract the attention and appeal to the people of this age. How shall we spend our time? How shall we use our talents? Is the Sabbath a holy day or a holiday? How shall we spend our money? The answer to these and many other kindred questions will indicate the estimate one puts on values. God will help any person to know spiritual values and direct one in the making of proper adjustments. And the divine ideal is for every one to "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness." Every one should recognize the fact that spiritual worship, in the house of the Lord on Sunday, is the highest privilege of man on this earth. To be a consistent Christian is much more important than amassing a fortune.

God also gives us the inner urge to witness for Him when we are obedient to His will. Why does a young man make a date with his sweetheart? Because he is compelled by some social or civil law? No. He is motivated by an inner urge—the urge of his love. Why does the minister preach? Is it because he is compelled by some external authority or power? Under the power of God he can preach because he is moved by an inner force—the urge of love for God and humanity. Duty is a great word. But love is the greatest word and represents the most powerful motive in human life. The kingdom of God is a kingdom of love. And the work of every Christian should be done out of a spirit of unselfish love. That spirit will, under the power of God, change the whole perspective of all work and all living. And God calls us to this high standard that life may be happier within, and more useful for others.

WHO'S WHO.

As Elon College enters her fiftieth year of service and into earnest preparation to observe properly the fiftieth anniversary of her services to the church and to the world at large, there are certain things that need to be clearly understood.

There are some who feel that this anniversary includes only the graduates of Elon College. There are others who feel that it includes only those who have at one time or another been students at Elon College and that only those who have been matriculated students at Elon are eligible for membership in the Golden Anniversary Club and are expected to have a part in the exercises commemorating this historic occasion.

The celebration is all inclusive. The graduates, the non-graduates, every member of the church in the Convention, and all friends of the college and whosoever will may come and have a part. The church founded Elon College, and certainly the church is expected and requested to have much to do with the observance of her own institution's fiftieth anniversary. Membership in the Golden Anniversary Club is open to any and all. The one condition is the payment of $50.00 which constitutes the charge for membership. There are approximately thirty thousand members of the Congregational-Christian Church constituting the Southern Convention. The college is owned by the Convention, and it is the privilege of the churches of the Convention to continue their support of the college by participating in the celebration. It is estimated that more than ten thousand have matriculated as students in Elon College since its founding. There is no way to estimate the number of friends that the college has. It is to be hoped that her friends outnumber her natural constituency. Certainly there are many thousands who today are interested in Elon College and who are anxious for its continued growth and development. From this vast constituency the college is hoping and praying that there may be at least three thousand who will volunteer and come to the college's assistance in this hour of need as well as share in its benefits and add to its joy on the occasions of her celebration.

I wish that this message might reach the entire constituency. At best, however, it can be hoped to reach only a small fraction. THE CHRISTIAN SUN that carries this article is limited to less than twenty-five hundred homes. It is hoped that the ones who read may be able to discern the real situation, the seriousness of this appeal, and that they may act promptly and generously. From time to time news will be given regarding the periods set apart for celebration and the program to be executed on all occasions. You can help much by contributing your share in contributions, witnessing, and appeal. Your cooperation will mean success.

PLEASANT RIDGE (RANDOLPH).

The second quarterly conference of Pleasant Ridge Christian Church was held Saturday evening, June 24, with our pastor, Rev. J. F. Apple, of Elon College, presiding.

It is in these conferences and through the inspiring messages which our pastor brings to us at these times that we, as church members, are made to feel more keenly our duty to our church and how very important it is that we, in order that the church may grow, must give our most loyal support and cooperation in response to this call of duty.

I sometimes wonder why more of our church members do not attend these church meetings. Is it because they do not realize that one member has just as much voice in the transaction of the business of the church as another, or is it because they do not have the interest of their church at heart as much as they should? However the case may be, I am sure it would be more encouraging to our pastors if more of their members would attend these meetings.

We members of Pleasant Ridge feel that we are indeed very fortunate in having for our pastor such a one as Brother Apple. He has been with us six years, filling one appointment a month for the first two years, and two a month for the past four years.

During his ministry the church has made visible progress. Besides the addition of many new members to the church, we have painted both inside and out, recovered the church, bought shrubbery, covered the windows with art glass, and have just completed the installation of electric lights.

Our Sunday school with Sybrant Pell, superintendent, continues to grow. We have organized a Worker's Council and through the cooperation of the officers and members of the Sunday school we are realizing very encouraging results.

We have also organized a Women's Missionary Society and at present have twenty members. We are young in the work, but we hope, as we grow older, to grow stronger. Pray for us that we may become more missionary minded and more zealous in the work of our Master.

We are now looking forward to the Daily Vacation Bible School, which will begin Monday following the fifth Sunday in July.

DEACON THOMAS FRANKLIN LYNCH.

Recently the Board of Deacons of the First Christian Church, Burlington, met in a supper meeting honoring Deacon Thomas Franklin Lynch. While in session it was agreed that further recognition should be given Brother Lynch's long service as a deacon by asking for the publication of his picture and his record together with a picture of his church in THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Deacon Lynch was born January 1, 1859. His grandfather on his mother's side was Rev. T. J. Fowler, whose wife was a granddaughter of Rev. James O'Kelly. This makes Deacon Lynch a great, great-grandson of O'Kelly, founder of the Christian Church in the South.

Old Union Church of Burlington received Brother Lynch into its fellowship in 1881 and in 1884 he became a charter member of the First Christian Church and a deacon. This gives Brother Lynch a service as deacon of fifty-five years.

Besides being a charter member of First Christian Church Deacon Lynch is also a charter member of Beulah Lodge of Masons, Burlington. For many years he saw service as an engineer with the Southern Railroad, but for several years has been retired.

On January 1, 1926, Deacon Lynch celebrated his own birthday by attending the one hundredth anniversary services held at Elon College honoring Uncle J. W. Wellons, and at which Uncle Wellons preached.

Deacon Lynch's record of long service is an enviable one and places him among an elect group. At this writing Deacon Lynch is enjoying good health and has the appearance of vigor and alertness, and the hope and prayer of his fellow-deacons of the First Christian Church is that he may celebrate many more happy anniversaries of his birth and of his election to the office of deacon.

"SEE, MOTHER, SEE."

We have just read the anonymous letter of a mother entitled "What Can We Believe?" in the June issue of the Atlantic Monthly. We pass it along to you, lest you miss it.

It is a story of a mother, through the tragic death of her twenty-one year old son law student, rising from a vague belief and understanding of God to a very definite belief and understanding of Him.

Through the gift of this son she learned that "each of us," as she says, "is an immortal soul in process of growth and the body is but a temporary tool, with attributes of intellect and emotion, an instrument by whose means the soul gathers what it needs."

One of the outstanding qualities of her son was, it seems, seeing the beauty and glory of things about him, habitually saying to her, "See, mother, see." During her great sorrow this voice was still saying to her, "See, mother, see."

Gradually she became aware of a "calm within my swirling agony," like a "quiet at the center of a storm," and "Bill seemed to be there saying, 'I'm all right, mother, I'm all right.'"

From then on every bit of attention and sympathy by friends, though it was but a cup of tea—"wordless sympathy" which hitherto has seemed but an effort to "bind up the broken-hearted with fibers from their own hearts" (not God's)—now spoke to her in different terms. She says, "I had mistaken the signs for the things signified. I had not understood that kindness and love are bright signals that the soul gives to show God's presence in the heart—as the vessel in the harbor flies a pennant when the owner is aboard."

"And now," she goes on, "I see God in human hearts. All the thoughts, flowers, words, and prayers of my friends are shining lights of an altar wide and high where I kneel by the side of my son and where his love illuminated Christ for me. God is now the deepest reality of my existence, and when I am frightened by the things I do not understand I see the pennant flying there and I know God is." Until her own experience, any amount of finding God was distasteful and unreal to her. Because of our natures we shall always question God's purpose and His plan. She says, "And now I no more doubt His being and His love," and the words "See, mother, see" bid her to look further and more deeply still for His riches of life, and not to mourn the hand of death, nor the son as lost.

Elon College Golden Anniversary

YOU CAN NEVER TELL.

This matter of soliciting subscriptions and contributions to the Anniversary Fund by mail is an uncertain adventure. You watch the mails, sometimes in vain but not always. Occasionally you are surprised. One who had reached the decision that so many have reached—that she intended to join the Anniversary Club and pay her dues before the time expires but would not make a pledge—finally became so interested that she wrote out a check for $10.00, signed her pledge, and sent it in. This is a fine example. I hope that many, many others will take the hint and do likewise.

Another good friend of the college who has just completed paying his pledge to the Development Program made a pledge of $100.00 which is to be paid on or before May 1, 1940. This is encouraging.

Friday I happened to be in Norfolk, Va., on business. I was to meet Mrs. Smith in the Monticello Hotel at three o'clock. A few minutes of three I walked in, and one of the first students at Elon College halted me as I passed by with a hearty handshake, a few words of congratulations on what is happening at Elon, and an inquiry as to how we were getting along with the debt. I slipped a card in his hand. When I arrived at the college, I found a good letter with a check for $25.00. I am sure he will find it possible before the time is up to make an additional contribution.

There are scores and hundreds of Elonites who are greatly interested in this campaign who have made up their minds that they will assist. What encouragement it would be if they would join with the rest of us in making their contributions that their generosity might be examples to others. Every subscription received through the mails saves time, money, anxiety, and lends encouragement.

FIFTH SUNDAY OFFERINGS.

The month of July brings another fifth Sunday. The Convention plan for the support of Elon College calls for an offering from our Sunday schools on the fifth Sunday, these offerings to be counted on conference apportionments. Brother Pastor, this is a fine opportunity to get at least a part of your conference apportionments in hand. Why not appeal to your Sunday schools for help? The average Sunday school is glad to lend assistance to whatever task the church is asked to perform. This is one way, Mr. Superintendent, that you and your school can render a service that will be helpful not only in the local church but throughout the Convention. Whatever service we render to Elon College will come back to us and our local churches five-fold. It is fortunate for the college that there is a fifth Sunday in mid-summer. The summer months are lean months for the college. It is certainly an opportune time for the Sunday schools to come to the college's assistance the fifth Sunday in July.

Offerings from the churches and Sunday schools have been somewhat tardy. I believe, though, that we have not had a week since conference that we did not receive at least one offering. There is only one this week, but it is a good one, and we appreciate the same.

FOR THE CHILDREN

A CARPENTER LIKE JESUS.

Nduna was a little black Zulu boy, who lived in far-away South Africa. He did not live in a home like ours. His home was small and round, built of straw thatched over a framework of slender branches. There was only one room, and the fire was built in the center on the mud floor; the smoke went up through a hole in the roof.

One day something wonderful happened to Nduna's family. For a long time his mother and father had been listening to the stories of white people. They often went to church to hear them sing. At last they said to each other, "Let us follow the white man's Jesus. I believe that their God loves us." And then they joined the church. After that they did not want to live in the tiny little but any more, but wanted a clean, orderly, beautiful home. "We must show our neighbors how a Christian family lives," the father said. And so they built a little three-roomed cabin. What a good time Nduna had helping build the new house!

Then the family sent Nduna to a mission day school. Here every day the teacher would tell the children about God and His dear Son Jesus. How Jesus was here on earth to teach big people and children how to be good. One morning the teacher read from the Bible these words about Jesus, "Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary?"

Now this was the first time that Nduna had ever heard that Jesus was a carpenter. He had not realized that Jesus had to work very hard and was very tired when his day's work was done. He began to think that this Jesus was one worth following. Nduna was interested in this and hoped that some day he would be able to build and become a carpenter like Jesus. But Nduna had one great fault—he was proud and boastful—proud especially of his big, handsome father. So little Nduna soon became very lazy in school.

One day Nduna's father became ill with influenza. As the days passed and the little boy was not allowed to see his father, the boastful feeling left Nduna. He often went around with tears in his eyes. At last his father called his son to his side and whispered to him, "Remember to be like Jesus." Soon after that he died.

Nduna's mother was left with many little mouths to feed and very little money. At last she remembered the dear old lady living up at the mission boarding school at Inanda and went up to see her. As the lady listened lovingly to the sad story of Nduna's mother, she asked, "Could not Nduna help?" The mother replied, "We cannot find work for him to do, and besides his father wanted to keep him in school." At last Mrs. Edwards thought of a plan. Nduna was to come on certain days after school to pull weeds and do little errands to earn money.

Have you ever pulled weeds for an hour or more at a stretch? Did you like it? Neither did Nduna and he pulled very slowly, sometimes almost falling asleep. When Mrs. Edwards would read the Bible to the garden boys, Nduna would promise to try a bit harder. As the days went by Mrs. Edwards tried giving Nduna different

THE CORK AND THE WHALE.

A little cork fell in the path of a whale,
Who lashed it down with his angry tail;
But in spite of his blows it quickly arose,
And floated again before his nose.

Said the cork, "You may flap and sputter and rap,

But you can never keep me down,
For I am made of the stuff that is buoyant Enough to float instead of drown."

work. When he would pound together a little chicken coop or make a little support for a vine or tree, he was happy. "Why not make him a carpenter?" she thought.

So she wrote to the Adams Training School and asked them to take Nduna and let him work in their shop and learn and let him work outside of school time to help earn some of his fees. Nduna went, but even then there he had to work in the garden. He would often give excuses, when he was given a job of any kind. He seemed to get lazier and lazier. One day the missionary sent for him. He told Nduna that he had expected him to be a true son of his father but that he had failed. Since there were so many boys that were willing to work to learn, he must be sent away.

Nduna felt ashamed. Now that he no longer had the chance to work, he wished he might. He could not sleep that night. How ashamed his father would be of him! All at once he remembered something his father had told him—"Remember to be like Jesus." "I'll never forget again," he said to himself. "I'll beg the missionary for just one more chance."

The next morning bright and early a little black boy was seen sitting outside the door. As soon as he heard sounds within, he timidly knocked. With tears in his eyes he told his story and asked for one more chance. The missionary just couldn't refuse when he saw that this time Nduna meant it.

Today if you went in the carpenter shop at Adams Training School, you would see a neat boy working hard. Nduna is no longer the first to put down his tools when the bell rings. He loves his work and hates to leave it. He has decided to be a carpenter like Jesus.—Adapted from "Here and There Stories."

MARY'S LITTLE LAMB.

Perhaps every school boy or girl has at one time learned and recited "Mary's Little Lamb." But how many know the story of Mary and her lamb? For, you know, there was a real Mary and a real lamb, and the little school house where this story happened still stands in the town of Newport, N. H.

It was like this: There lived in Newport, nearly a hundred years ago, a woman by the name of Sarah Josepha Hale. She was not only a great leader to help make our country what it is, but she was a great writer of poems for the young folks. So one day she saw Mary going to school and the lamb following after her. When she learned what had happened at school she wrote the poem that has been read and recited by children all over the world.

Abraham Lincoln was President of the United States during the time Sarah Hale was most active in her work, and she induced President Lincoln to declare Thanksgiving Day a national holiday.

A memorial tablet has been dedicated to Sarah Josepha Hale at Newport, and soon there is to be a statue to the memory of Mary and her little lamb, which will be a shrine for the young folks of America.—Sunshine Magazine, 1938.

"There is a Sunday conscience as well as a Sunday coat; and those who make religion a secondary concern put the coat and conscience carefully by to put on only once a week."

March 30, 1939 to June 30, 1939, inclusive:

CHRISTIANITY NOT DEAD IN RUSSIA.

In spite of the continued atheistic propaganda in Soviet Russia, as promoted by communistic officials, by means of ridicule, education, persecution and materialism, those familiar with the present situation assure us that religion—and particularly evangelical Christianity—is not dead in Russia. The expression of it may have changed and been driven to cover, but the hunger of the human heart for God has not been satisfied and the vital spark of men and women who have received life from Christ has not been quenched.

Soviet Government census has recently shown (according to The Sentinel) that two-thirds of the 80,000,000 Russian people living in villages and one-third of the 40,000,000 people living in larger towns are still definitely believers in God, in spite of the twenty years of pressure and persecution to suppress all religious faith.

The Soviet authorities have been disturbed by the revelations of the census and have sought to suppress the facts. A German writer states that there are today 30,000 organized Christian groups in the Soviet Republics, in addition to many secret societies. Faith in God and a desire for some relation to Him—even in the form of unenlightened religion—will not die.

Many factors that have been supposed to support religious institutions—capitalism, private property, wealth, and an independent clergy—have lost influence, but the roots of religion still remain. The younger generation, declares the Deutsche Landshau, that does not remember the regime of the Czars, is less prejudiced against religion. Many Russian congregations are said to be made up largely of people under thirty years of age. Ministers are ordained secretly, have no definite parishes, and travel about unrecognized by the enemies of religion, but known to believers. Many of the clergy are artisans or small trades people, and gather groups of believers in unfrequented woods and ravines. Piety is nourished in the hearts of the people who are encouraged to memorize Scripture, songs, and prayers. It takes courage to join such groups, as was true in the early days of Christianity, but persecution endured helps to strengthen rather than to weaken faith in God. The truth of Christ's promise is proved today, as to the Church founded by Him and characterized by living faith in Him: "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—Missionary Review of the World.

Although the offerings from Sunday schools and churches the past week are not up to the average they are appreciated all the same, since they indicate a continued interest on the part of many in sharing the kingdom of righteousness and the life of our Lord with others. Sharing with others that which they most need is the task of Christian missions. And there is no need greater than that supplied by the gospel of our Lord.

A PROGRAM OF WORSHIP FOR A WOMAN'S MISSION SOCIETY.

THEME: "Stewardship."

Piano Prelude: "Take My Life and Let It Be."

Call to Worship by Leader:

Ye are not your own; for ye are bought with a price. Therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's.

Hymn: "A Charge to Keep I Have."

Scripture Lesson: Matthew 25: 14-30.

Solo: "Take My Life and Let It Be."

Prayer:

Thanksgiving for the many good things in life in which we may share.

Petition that we may covet earnestly the greater and the best gifts of life.

Prayer that our spendings and our usings may add to the happiness of those about us, and never lead to envy or bitterness.

Prayer that we shall use such as we have and are for the Kingdom of God.

Leader's Talk: "The A B C's of Stewardship."

Introduction: The A B C's are very simple, but they are very important. They are the basis of all later learning, and one ought to master them. In like manner there are a few simple but important factors in learning the laws of stewardship, not only of money, but of all that we have and are.

(It might be well to start out something like this as a means of getting attention.)

1. "God is owner of all things."

He created them.
He owns them.
He created man.
He redeemed man.

Until a man learns and recognizes this basic fact, he will never be a good steward.

2. "Man is the Steward of all things."

Man does not own, he merely possesses. Not only does God own all things, but God gives man the powers to make money and to do things.

Man is a steward of what he is and possesses:

His time.
His talents.
His money.
His influence.
His life.

3. "Man must give an account of his stewardship."

Sometime, somewhere, we are going to be called upon to give an account of our stewardship. We will have to give an account of how we have used that which God entrusted to us, what we have done with that which He trusted in our hands.

4. "As Christians we ought to be eager to be good stewards."

Not because we are afraid of what will happen to us, but because we are grateful for what has been done for us.

Prayer: Briefly asking God to help us to be wise and faithful stewards of all that we have and are.

Question Period: (The leader might ask three questions and try to get members of the society to answer them extemporaneously, or she might ask the members in advance to be prepared to answer a stated question briefly. This part of the the meeting may well be one of the best features of the programs.)

1. What is the relation between wealth and character?
2. Can you suggest some ways of making money that are not Christian?
3. Should a Christian acquire money by gambling or by winning a bet?
By a prize in a card game?
4. What do we mean by sacrificial giving?
5. What are some adequate motives for giving?
6. How is giving related to the spiritual life?
7. What are some of the ways in which a person can be a good steward of his life, even though she does not go to the mission field or into full Christian service?
8. Give some specific instances of how people are good stewards of their talents.
9. What are some of the rewards of a good steward?

Poem:

A Hill-Born Prayer.

From lust of gain or greed of gold,
Keep me with high and holy mien;
But if the ships of routine bring
Some precious cargo, clear and clean,
Safeguard me in my stewardship
By glimpses of thy great unseen.

From lust of place or pomp of power
Save me with pure and passionate pride,
Curb not the hunger of my soul,
But keep ambition sanctified.
Safeguard thy steward, Lord, each day
By vision of the higher way.

—Ralph S. Cushman.

Tabloid Tithing Truths.

If the meeting is not too long, members of the society might read these pithy paragraphs about the stewardship of money:

When a man gets rich, God gets a partner or the man loses his soul. The Kingdom of God can never be established by raising money, but it can never be extended without raising money.

Give, not from the top of your purse, but from the bottom of your heart.

Jesus teaches that a man's attitude toward the Kingdom of God is revealed by his attitude toward his property.

Not how much of my money must
I give to God, but how much of God's money shall I use for myself?

Stewardship puts the Golden Rule in business in place of the rule of gold.

Poem:

I know not all who wrought for me in the years of yesterday;
I know not who has fought for me along the weary way;
But I know the blessings bought for me cost struggle, hard and long.
The passing years have brought to me great gifts and love and song.

So I must live for those unborn, and give my very best;
Nor dare my daily task to scorn, nor shun the highest quest.
Since others wrought to help me live in a broader, better way,
I'll work and fight, I'll plan and give, to others a better day.

NOTE—This program may be too long to use in its entirety, but it can readily be adapted to the length desired by omitting parts of it. If it is to be used only as a worship program, the leader's talk may be omitted. The outline can easily be filled in, however, in case the entire program is given over to stewardship.

FRANKLIN.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Franklin Congregational-Christian Church has had a good year under the capable leadership of Mrs.
E. P. Jones, president.

Special programs have been rendered; among the most beautiful was the Christmas program, when they were ably assisted by the Junior Missionary Society. The annual anniversary party was held in March, at which time a lovely poem dedicated to the society was written and read by Mrs. B. V. Hargraves.

The week of prayer and the World
Day of Prayer were observed in a fitting manner, and four new members have been received. All requirements of the conference have been met and a contribution of $5.00 to Kagawa was made.

Two public meetings have been held —one for all the church members and one was held recently when Mrs. John G. Truitt was guest speaker and delivered a strong, helpful address. E.

"Youth at Work in the Church"

Emily Carleton Lester, Editor

CHRISTIAN YOUTH IN MISSIONARY ACTION.

Many of you have used pamphlets entitled "Christian Youth in Missionary Action" in your young people's groups for the past several years. This pamphlet will not be issued any more. Instead, this material will appear in The Pilgrim Highroad. (Another excellent reason why this magazine is a "must" for all young people's groups!) The material for 1939-40 appeared in the June Highroad. This article gives sources for materials to help you in planning the missionary part of your programs, tells different methods which can be used in presenting the missionary phase of Christianity in your group, and gives a brief account of each of the study books to be used this coming year. It also presents in graphic form the work of the home and foreign mission boards of our denomination.

If you take The Pilgrim Highroad, be sure to use this valuable information in the field of missions. If you do not take the paper and would like a sample copy, please write to the Board of Christian Education, Elon College, N. C.

WORLD CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIAN YOUTH.

Fifteen hundred young people will gather at Amsterdam, Holland, on July 24, to consider for eight days "The Christian Community in the Modern World." The theme of this world conference, for young people of many nationalities and races, is "Christus Victor." Its stated purpose is "to mobilize youth to witness to the reality of the Christian Community as the God-given supra-national body to which has been entrusted the message of the victory of Jesus Christ over the world's spiritual, political, and social confusion."

Dalter Staves, the president of the National Pilgrim Fellowship, and ten others from our denomination are to go as official delegates to this great world-wide conference for young people. We will be hearing from them concerning the results. The addresses they will hear will include such subjects as "In the Beginning God,"

"The Christian, the Churches and the Church," "Can Men Be Brothers?" "I Have Overcome the World." They will attend, in company with other young people from all over the world, discussion groups on: "Christian Youth in a World of Nations," "Christian Youth and Education," "Christian Marriage and Family Life," "The Church: Its Nature and Mission."

DON'T GIVE UP!

Many young people's groups cease functioning in the summer months. Why take a vacation from God? Why stop thinking about your problems in relation to the Christian method of solving them? Instead, put a new emphasis in your summer program, do something different—but keep on doing something! The young people in the First Church, Greensboro, add a meeting during the summer on a week night. They meet in the homes of the members once a week—this year they are considering "Personal Religious Living" at these meetings. Perhaps your group can have an outdoor vesper service once a month, can meet with the young people of some other church, can find new activities to engage in. If you need help in planning your programs, or in finding materials, write to Board of Christian Education, Elon College, N. C.

NOTICE!

If your group follows the Christian Life Topics as given in The Pilgrim Highroad, or if you are interested in having a meeting on the particular topic for July 30, "Understanding the Jew and His Problems," you may secure information and materials free of charge by writing to the National Conference of Jews and Christians, 300 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y. At this time, when all the world is interested directly or indirectly in the Jews and their problems, this would seem to be a vital topic for every young people's group. See that your group takes advantage of this material which is offered for your use. When you write for it, explain the purpose for which you wish to use it, so you will receive material to fit your particular need.

GOOD TIMES IN THE HOME.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
JULY 23, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Pro. 22:6; Deut. 4:9, 10; Ps. 101:2.

Daily Readings—

Monday—A Sinful "Good Time"—Dan. 5: 1-4.
Tuesday—Life in the House of Wisdom—Prov. 9: 1-6.
Wednesday—A Happy, Godly Family—Job. 1: 1-5.
Thursday—Blessing of a Godly Mother—Prov. 31: 10-31.
Friday—Just Cause of Merriment—Luke 15: 25-32.
Saturday—A Home Made Happy—Luke 19: 1-9.

The home is the best place in which to spend leisure hours in a profitable way. In this day when we are going outside of the home for recreation and social fellowship, when commercial amusements take so much of our attention, it is important for us to emphasize "good times in the home."

A certain young girl was having as her week-end guest a girl friend from a college in which the former girl was a senior. She was worried, fearing lest she would not be able to entertain her friend that she might enjoy the week-end visit. Her expression was, "There is nothing to do." This experience is very common to those who have not worked out a program for good times in the home. Young people should not feel that "dates" are the only means of entertaining their week-end guests, and that the picture show and dance hall are the only places for them to go.

Parents should be invited to this meeting. Give them some part on the program. If any have a play ground in the back yard or basement, let them discuss its value.

Write on the blackboard: "What We Enjoy At Home." Ask each person present to name one thing.

Discuss things which the family may do together, as well as individually during leisure time.

For Further Discussion—

1. What does the Bible say concerning man's right to have a certain amount of leisure time for his own improvement and relaxation?

2. When can the play spirit become a liability rather than an asset to the individual?

3. Is our church doing what it should to help young people occupy spare hours constructively?

Suggested Hymns—

"Take Time to Be Holy."
"Take My Life and Let It Be."
"A Charge to Keep I Have."

REHOBAM: A MAN WHO MADE A FOOLISH CHOICE.

LESSON III—JULY 16, 1939.

GOLDEN TEXT: A man's pride shall bring him low.—Proverbs 29:23.

LESSON: Kings 12:1-5; 12-17; 20.

The Important Matter of Home Background.

It is quite easy to point out that Rehoboam made a foolish choice, and that he made a mess of things. Nor would one want to put all the blame on others, for he ought to have known better. But it is only fair to point out that the young man had a doubly heavy handicap to overcome because of his early home life and environment, and his early training. Let us note several factors that entered into his young manhood.

In the first place he was the son of a rich man, a man given to luxury, a man who followed in large measure his selfish whims and even sensual desires. In spite of his much vaunted wisdom, Solomon did some very foolish things. It would seem from the records that he gave little attention to the training of his son. Being the son of a rich man, Rehoboam could gratify every whim of his own. Furthermore he did not have to work. He lolled around in luxury, spoiled, pampered, petted. That was a handicap grievous to be borne.

Then again the atmosphere of the royal home was not of the highest and purest. His mother was an Ammonite, a worshipper of strange gods. His father had a large number of wives and concubines, and it was inevitable that the young man would be influenced by what went on before his eyes and behind his back. A harem with its suspicion, bickering, jealousy, and sensually did not furnish the most elevating atmosphere for a boy or a young man in the formative period of life.

And finally, his father as well as his mother did not give him a very good example of true piety and godly living. As has been said, his mother was a worshipper of strange gods, and it was at her insistence that Solomon introduced the worship of such gods in Israel. And later in life Solomon himself followed after strange gods. He forsook the religion of Jehovah. Little wonder, then, that it became a matter of "like father, like son." When you come to think of it, you could not expect too much of a young man who came out this atmosphere and with this home training during the formative years of his life. And you cannot expect much from our young people who come from homes of self-indulgence and luxury and idleness and irreligion. The public schools and the Sunday school and church cannot make up for the lack of wholesome home atmosphere and sound training.

A Foolish Decision.

Readers of these notes will probably recall the incident at the beginning of Rehoboam's reign that caused the division of the Kingdom. Son of Solomon, and rightful heir to the throne, he might have made a glorious record if he had used common sense and kindness at the beginning of his reign. The people of Israel, restless under the hardships of forced labor, the grievous tax burdens and the gross inequalities of Solomon's reign, asked Rehoboam to lighten their burdens, and promised him loyalty if he did. Rehoboam turned first to his father's counselors, older men and men of experience and seasoned judgment. They advised a more moderate policy, tempered with kindness and motivated by a sense of service. Rehoboam then turned to his young companions, and when they counseled an even more grievous policy than his father had dared to follow, the king accepted their advice, and then announced his purpose to the people. There was an open revolt, and the ten tribes broke with the two southern tribes, and established a separate kingdom, with Shechem as the capital. Ever afterwards the kingdom was divided.

There is, of course, a moral here. All honor to the enthusiasm, the wisdom, the courage, and the idealism of young people. No one believes more in them than the writer. But alas for any nation or any institution that depends wholly upon the wisdom and advice of young people! There is some knowledge that can come only through experience. To be sure, older people are rather conservative, they move slowly, they tend to preserve the "status quo," and they need some of the spirit of daring and some of the enthusiasm of youth. But in every sphere of real life, from the young people's department where there is need of an adult counselor, to the rulers of nations, there is desperately needed the wisdom, the insight, and the seasoned judgment of age.

prospered. But the record adds, "When he had established the kingdom and had strengthened himself, he forsook the law of God, and all Israel with him." Like many another man, he could not stand prosperity. Things crowded God out. He became too prosperous to remain pious. He felt self-sufficient. He grew rich in things and poor in soul. He forsook the law of God. Many a man and in fact whole families in prosperity and success have forgotten God. Furthermore many a man in high office, in neglecting religion and making light of it, has caused others to forsake the law of God as well. A materialistic civilization makes it increasingly difficult to be spiritually-minded. Our modern life makes it difficult to remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy. And the man who forgets God on Sunday is not likely to remember Him much through the week.

The chronicler sums up Rehoboam's fault when he says ". . . and he did evil because he prepared not his heart to seek the Lord." Perhaps he was not a wicked man at all. But he gave no place in his program to the things of the soul. He made no provision for seeking the Lord. His reign, though outwardly successfully, was characterized by that weakening of the moral fiber of the nation that led ultimately to its downfall and destruction.

Profiting by Mistakes.

Rehoboam evidently saw some of the handicap under which he had been reared, for instead of allowing his sons to remain in idleness and luxury, he sent them out among all the people of Judah and Benjamin. The wise father sees to it that his children have something to do. Many a parent who has had to work hard and who ought to know the value of hard work has made the mistake of making things too easy for the children.

MONDAY.

"PARTNERS IN THE WORLD'S BIGGEST BUSINESS."

"Ye are laborers together with God."—I Cor. 3:9.

We are partners with God in His business. If this were a daily and constant consciousness of our being, it is believed that the realization itself would reform the world quickly. A Christian should know that he represents God and all that God represents. A Christian is a credited commissioned associate with God, doing business in His name and by His authority. No matter how humble, insignificant and unknown, this is true.

This knowledge exalts daily living to His glory, a living beyond the pettiness, sordidness and meannesses of life.

Prayer—O Lord, our God, make us conscious that we are called and empowered by Thee to do Thy work of bringing the Kingdom to this world. Save us from the forgetfulness of this. In Jesus' name. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"A TIME FOR ALL THINGS."

"There is . . . a time to every purpose under heaven."—Ecc. 3:1-12.

There is excellency in everything in the world; and the work of the world is our work, and His work, and there is excellency in God's work. It is through faithfulness and loyalty to this work whereby God shall judge the righteous from the wicked.

There is a time for everything in connection with this work. We burn rubbish in damp weather lest the fire spread and destroy. We burn out the chimney on a rainy day lest we set fire to the house. Our lesson tells that there is a time for everything, for work, for rest, for play, etc. Paul exhorts us to do all to the glory of God. And it is the doing of all these things at its proper time and to the glory of God that compasses His truth, and merits the fulness of time.

Prayer—O Lord, increase our vision of the work Thou hast for us to do, and may we ever wait on Thee. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

TUNING UP.

"In the morning will I order my prayers unto Thee."—Ps. 5:3.

One of my treasured books is the little book of daily meditation and prayer. It brings to me God's plan of the day. It brings to me the consciousness of the need of a closer walk with Him in the kind of man he would have made. It brings to me a deepening and enrichment of my own spiritual life. At the beginning of the day it is like setting the course to steer by, or like tuning in on God's spirit for harmony with Him in all the way.

Prayer—O our God, unto Thee we pray, in Thy love we look up to Thee in the morning. Make straight Thy way before us and lead us in Thy righteousness. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"GOD'S WASTE BASKET."

"So shall it be in the end . . . the Son of man shall . . . gather out His kingdom all things that offend . . . and shall cast them into a furnace of fire."—Matt. 13:40-42.

Jesus discourses on the kingdom, on the work of the kingdom, and on His children being His fellow-workers in bringing His kingdom to fruition. Like a carpenter cleaning up his shavings and rubbish when he finishes his product; like a house-wife cleaning up and disposing of useless things when her task is done, so Jesus will clean up in the last day.

The lives of some remind us of those whose dwelling place is never set in order—living, but with a lot of rubbish. If we are God's workmanship and partners, let us be the finest product possible. Let us follow the example of Jesus—what He does He finishes. So let us: remembering that our Father has a "sea" in which he dumps all of our sins, when we clean up and let Him have them.

Prayer—Our Father, we would cast off all the unpleasant remnants of our yesterdays, and begin each day anew, striving more nearly unto perfection for Thee. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"A DEFINITE PURPOSE."

"Run that ye may attain."—I Cor. 9:24.

If this is God's world, and we are His workers, and He is depending upon us to help Him bring everything into line with His plans (and we believe He is), it is evident that we are hindering the coming of His kingdom, for there is a lot of rubbish, and we are spending a lot of time foolishly.

"So run that ye may attain," said the apostle. Day by day Paul "pressed on toward the mark of the prize of the high calling." The goal is the reason for the race. When the race is finished, may we be found at the goal. There is a crown there and it is possible for all to attain it. The condition of attainment is: Dedicate the life to Him and live with the purpose of reaching the goal.

Prayer—Our Father, we want to count for Thee. Help us this day to do so. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"A FINE SUGGESTION."

"What thou seest write in a book."—Rev. 1:11.

A friend said to me the other day, "Life's problems may be made clear by setting them down in writing and, instead of nursing them to distraction (as we often do), clarify them (Continued on next page.)"

JESUS AND A PERPLEXED HUMANITY.

“As Jesus saw the crowds, he was moved with pity because they were so bewildered.”—Matthew 9:36.

The human parade is the most interesting sight in all the world. It was so in Jesus' day the same as it is today and the same as it has been down through all the world's yesterdays, and as it will be in all the world's tomorrows. There is nothing more interesting to people than people. The stream of human life challenges us to look and to seek to understand. It was not the size of the crowds which moved the Master's heart to pity, but the needs of the crowd, and the needs of the individual members of the crowd. For him the individual is never lost in the crowd. It was their bewilderment that moved him to pity. Some were bewildered because of their handicaps. Some were handicapped from birth; many had been “damned into the world” rather than born. Some were handicapped by lack of opportunity. Some were handicapped by environment. And some were handicapped by sin. In the crowd he saw people who had been exploited and defrauded. He saw people who were bitter toward life; people who had lost hope; people who had lost faith; people who, because of all this, were bewildered and perplexed, seeking to know, but never ascertaining what life was all about.

They had the same battle of faith, the same perplexities, the same emotions, as people have today. Go where you will, study people of any age, any period, and you will find that heartaches, baffled aspirations, souls burdened with guilt, lives defeated, provide the dark background of the human picture.

There are four attitudes to take toward life's perplexities and toward the perplexed multitudes—Censoriousness, Cynicism, Indifference, and Sympathy. The last attitude named expressed the attitude of Jesus. He was moved with pity. Some people spend their time and energy in envying those who are more fortunate than they. Others, the wiser people, exercise sympathy and interest toward those less fortunate than themselves.

Humanity is sadly perplexed and bewildered today. Millions of people who were directly affected by the World War, either as participants or as victims in one of a thousand ways, had hoped against hope that the World War was a war to end war, and that in that experience humanity had learned the lesson it would never forget, the lesson that in peace and not in war humanity rises to its greatest heights. They have been disillusioned by what has taken place since the war—by the failure of nations to remove the causes of war and to build a constructive order of peace. People have been disillusioned by the failure of education, agitation, and legislation to effect a greater moral security for the oncoming generations. In a thousand ways people of today find things different from what the past so earnestly promised.

Jesus is the only one who has a message of promise for the bewildered multitudes of our day. It is a message of hope for a day when mankind is putting its trust in human devices instead of putting its trust in God. Humanity is sadly perplexed today by the world situation with its wars and rumors of wars—no one knowing what a day may bring forth.

The world is sick—politically, industrially, economically, commercially, and morally. And there is no hope for its recovery and for its restoration to health until humanity recognizes two things—first, what caused the sickness; and second, the fact that Jesus of Galilee alone can give peace and health and hope. He alone can allay the illness and overcome the perplexities. He alone can lead bewildered people out of the darkness into the light. He alone has hope for a bewildered world. “I am the way, the truth, and the life. No man cometh unto the Father, but by me,” and no nation can gain security and peace except by obedience to God's laws.

Jesus is the answer to every perplexing problem that puzzles men in their human relationships. He is the peace which is a never-failing antidote for poisoned minds and for disillusioned nations. He is the strength for every emergency in any of life's relationships. As Jesus stood outside the city walls of Jerusalem and wept, “O, Jerusalem,” so he stands among the nations today—“O, humanity, how often would I have gathered you as a hen gathereth her brood, but ye would not.”

The nations may wait; they may wait until total destruction overtakes them, but we as individuals may act now and pledge him our love and allegiance. And we can pray that the nations will not wait too long before they make Christ the universal King of all nations.

FAMILY ALTAR.

by writing opposite them what the scripture says about the subject. It will be a revelation,” he said, “how through this method many of our so-called troubles will disappear.”

Prayer—Dear Lord, we pray for deliverance from our troubles. Give us more of Thy wisdom and peace. Amen.

SUNDAY.

A TRAGEDY OF THE AGES.

“See if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow.”—Lam. 1:12.

I have just come from a sick room. He is a very sick man, and there is very little hope for his recovery. The wife is broken hearted and views her sorrow as something specially individual, and the cry of her troubled soul is, “My sorrow is greater than I can bear,” forgetting that today is built upon yesterday and that her sorrow is but the repetition of thousands of the ages.

There should be comfort in the thought that our trials are not new and that God has had a long experience in dealing with them. He knoweth our frame, He will not leave us comfortless, and He will be with us in all troubles.

Prayer—O Lord, be with them that are sick and in trouble, and help them to remember that Thou art with them and will help as Thou hast helped. Amen.

Few, if any, people over-think! They over-worry and over-fuss, and over-complain—but people who are always trying to improve every moment to a good end, keep growing in strength of mind and in character. The artist and musician practice constantly and are never satisfied. To the very end they still wish to improve. The healthy mind never wears out, so long as there are ideas in it to work out their purpose.—George Matthew Adam.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The Christian Orphanage received a letter a few days ago that made us feel complimented. It was from a Mercantile Company that we had been buying goods from for twenty-two years. The letter said we were a "neglected customer." For the twenty-two years they had never had to write us and ask for the payment of a bill—that promptness had always been our motto. They said in the letter, "We want to take this opportunity to thank the Christian Orphanage for the business it has given us and assure it of our appreciation."

When I read the letter I just felt like writing a personal letter to each Sunday school that for all these years have been faithful in sending us monthly offerings each month to help us maintain this record.

We are just as grateful as we can be and appreciate it more than we can express in this letter.

It is the loyal Sunday schools and friends that have made it possible for the Christian Orphanage to carry on for the thirty years of its service to helpless boys and girls—more than 460 of them. We can invest in earthly things that flourish for a season; but at some future time they will crumble and fall and go out of existence.

When you invest in human life—though it may be a little helpless boy or girl entirely dependent—you are investing in something that will live on. We want to thank those who have been so faithful all these years, and pray that God will put it in the hearts of those who do not help us a desire to join in the good work, and send offerings to help us. Don't you want to have a part.

The orphanage has trained a singing class and will be glad to visit churches that wish to have it put on its program. It is strictly a religious program. If you want us to come to your church write us when you want us and we will be glad to comply with your request.

We want to renew our invitation to the Sunday schools to picnic on our campus.

Come and see your orphanage and you can visit your college at the same time. If you will visit your institutions you cannot help but be more interested in them.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

FRANKLINTON, N. C.

The Afro-Congregational-Christian Convention, and the Women's National Home and Foreign Missionary Conference, Mrs. P. M. Lee, president, met June 20-24, at the Franklinton Christian College, with the Rev. J. D. Farrar presiding.

There was a very nice program presented by the president to guide the Convention. The participants were present to take their parts, to the delight and joy of all present.

The following subjects were discussed by the different speakers:

- "The Need of a Better-Trained Ministry"—Rev. F. C. Hammond, Raleigh, N. C.
 - "The Minister and His Parish"—Rev. C. E. Upton, Norfolk, Va.
 - "Missions"—Attorney L. J. Raney, Newport News, Va.
 - "The Position of the Church in the Rural Community"—Rev. J. F. Stanley, Dudley, N. C.
 - "What Should Be the Church's Attitude Toward Youth"—Miss P. L. Fraser, Atlanta, Ga.
 - "Franklinton in the Future"—Rev. R. L. House, Dean of Franklinton College Institute, Portsmouth, Va.

Wilson Garris, of Murfreesboro, rendered two lovely solos, accompanied by Mrs. Boone, also of Murfreesboro. "Open the Gates of the Temple" and "No One Told Me of Jesus" were used.

The mite box offering was received at the door by Mrs. C. V. Byrd and Mrs. Letcher Eley, and amounted to $28.20. Mrs. W. J. M. Holland, Sr., sends this information and is a most loyal member.

PLEASANT HILL.

The Pleasant Hill Temperance Society held a meeting at Pleasant Hill Christian Church on Sunday, July 2, having all-day services.

The morning devotional was in charge of Mr. York Teague and prayer by Rev. A. O. Lindley. A very impressive address was delivered by Rev. Kale K. Burgess, who is a very enthusiastic worker for the cause of temperance. Mr. Burgess based his message on the important things of life, and placed great emphasis on the evils of alcohol.

The afternoon service consisted of singing and a short talk on patriotism to our flag by Mr. W. H. Albright. A speaking contest was then held, with the children from different churches taking part. Miss Mary Katherine Terry from Center Church was the winner.

NORTH CAROLINA WOMAN'S BOARD.

Word comes from Mrs. J. H. Lightbourne, president of the North Carolina Woman's Mission Conference, that Miss Ruth Isabel Seabury, Boston, Mass., will be the speaker at the annual woman's conference, October 10, at the Ingram Congregational-Christian Church at Paces, Va. This is a treat in store for us and one to which we can look forward. Let us begin planning in our minds to be present.

The North Carolina Woman's Board met June 15 at Burlington and transacted the regular business pertaining to the conference work. Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, Young People's Superintendent of the conference, was elected to attend the School of Missions at Northfield, which began July 3. This was in accord with the vote of the conference to send the president or some other delegate each year to a mission conference.

In Memoriam

HITE.

China Hite, son of Mrs. Lawyer Hite, departed this life on May 20, 1939, at his home near Buffalo Springs, Va., at the age of forty-seven years. He was his mother's only child and had been an invalid since a small boy. He was cared for by his mother in the most tender and devoted manner. Her prayers for years were that she might be spared to care for him. While she is grieved at his going and feels keenly the loss of his presence, she is confident that the Lord doeth all things well. The funeral and burial were at the home on Sunday afternoon, May 21, 1939, and was conducted by the writer and assisted by Rev. Mr. Crane of the Baptist Church. A very large crowd was present to express sympathy and love. Beautiful flowers were in abundance.

C. E. NEWMAN.

RICE.

Mrs. Annie Boyd Rice passed to her reward at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Pearl Whitt, Chase City, Va., on May 30, 1939, at the age of ninety-two years. The funeral and burial were at the old home near Averett, Va. The funeral was conducted by the writer, who was assisted by Rev. Mr. Lane of the Disciples Church. Sister Rice's husband, Deacon Lee Rice, died about twenty-five years ago. She is survived by the following children: Patrick, Robert, Amos, Carl, Jimmy, and Mrs. Pearl Whitt. Sister Rice was a member of Hebron Christian Church for nearly half a century. She was faithful in all duties. Her faith in God was her comfort in life's most trying experiences. For more than two years she was confined to her room, waiting the summons. She left this testimony—that she was ready to go and be with her Savior. Children and grandchildren have a rich inheritance in the memory of their devoted Christian parents.

C. E. NEWMAN.

PRESSON.

It has pleased Almighty God in His infinite wisdom to remove from us Brother Luther J. Presson. He was born in 1871, and passed away on April 4, 1939, at Memorial Hospital, Richmond, Va.

Brother Presson had been a loyal and consistent member of the Dendron Christian Church for about twenty years, and at his death was one of its deacons.

He was laid to rest by the side of his wife who had preceded him by about eight years, in Rocky Hook Cemetery.

He is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Alice P. Cobb and Miss Bessie Lee Presson.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we shall greatly miss him in his faithfulness to his church and community.
2. That we extend to his family our deepest sympathy in this, their deep sorrow.
3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to "The Christian Sun," and a copy be placed in our church minutes.

Every one of these subjects was mastered by the speaker. Everyone seemed to have given much study to his subject. The Convention appreciated very much the visit of friends in the persons of Miss Priscilla Chase, Mrs. Childs, missionary from Africa; Rev. R. L. House, and Rev. F. C. Lester, editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. After a very delightful session the official board succeeded themselves, and last but not least the Convention was given a surprise banquet, Friday night thus closing one of the best sessions of many years. This was due to the untiring efforts of the President, J. D. Farrar and his co-laborers.

CHARLES HARRIS,

PACIFIST AND REALIST

By SHERWOOD EDDY.

"Real life never presents a simple choice between an absolute right and an absolute wrong."

"Thus there is not one exclusively right position, but two or more possible conclusions for sincere Christians. Indeed the same individual often passes through these two phases of thought. Christian logic or the appeal to conscience may lead one to be a pacifist. The logic of events in realistic history sometimes forces him later to the other conclusion. Dick Shepherd said: 'Because I am a Christian I am and must be a pacifist.' An equally great British leader, Professor John MacMurray, says: 'Because I am a Christian I cannot be a pacifist.' We thus have two positions, two parties, two vocations in the dialectic tension of progress through conflict, which may be among the things that work together for the good of ultimate peace.

"In the end, after all argument and thought, each must make his decision and his choice between two evils. If he takes the absolutist standpoint and retires to the cell of his individual conscience in China or Spain it is still an evil to see his country overrun, robbed, raped and destroyed, and be not permitted by his conscience forcibly to lift a hand to oppose it. Or, if he takes part in the destruction even of defensive war, many of the things he has to do are evil. There is no logical demonstration in reason or at the bar of conscience that can prove either position absolutely right or absolutely wrong. Since the decision is beyond the range of proof the Christian must take the final step in faith, accepting the position which seems to him the lesser of two evils and the greater of two goods.

"But wherever he decides to stand, let him not think that he only is right and all others are wrong. History has often been made by small absolutist minorities which took a stand in advance of their time and suffered the consequences. The sacrifice of Jesus is the supreme example of one who apparently took the absolutist position and put the conscience of the whole world on the defensive. He was both an idealist and a realist.

"Both of these positions will be found to be necessary, maintained in dialectic tension, if society is to advance and finally do away with the war system. Whether we are pacifists or pragmatists, somehow we must work together to stop war. The question is whether all together we can stop it in time to save our civilization. Let not the pacifist think that by adopting his seemingly more idealistic position he has abolished war or solved the problem. And let not the majority who march off to the boundless destruction of war and its inevitable aftermath think that they alone are patriots."—"Revolutionary Christianity" (Willett, Clark).

"Our only rule of
faith and practice."

Why I Value the Church

LINES FROM A LAYMAN

There are many reasons why I value the church. First and foremost, I value the church because it was established by my Redeemer, because in it and through it I can praise His name and humbly worship the Father of us all.

I value the church for its influence in the world, in the community in which I live.

I value the church for the opportunity it affords me in the quiet hours of worship to hear the Gospel expounded, and for the satisfaction that comes with a fuller knowledge of the love and mercy of my Creator.

The church, wherever its activities are centered, or wherever those who constitute its membership may assemble, whether it be a modest frame building or a costly edifice, stands above all other institutions. Even those who do not know the church for its spiritual blessings and comfort know it as God's house, as a place dedicated to His service. And for this I value the church.

I value the church, love the church, as the one connection or avenue into which I can turn from the complexities and confusion of a hurrying, busy world, for rest and strength.—John E. Wigington, in "Southern Christian Advocate."

Home-Coming Day will be observed at Barrett's Christian Church (Eastern Virginia) on July 30.

Shallow Ford Church, Rev. L. L. Wyrick, pastor, held its revival meeting last week with Rev. W. M. Stevens doing the preaching.

Rev. J. D. Dollar of Alabama has been helping his nephew, Rev. Melvin Dollar, in a revival at Carolina Christian Church, near Burlington.

Rev. Jesse H. Dollar of Newport News, Va., was the assisting pastor in the revival last week at Belews Creek Church, of which Rev. G. H. Veazey is pastor.

Cecil Thomas is conducting a Vacation Bible School at a mission Sunday school in West Raleigh this week and next. This work is a project of our United Church, Raleigh.

The revival meeting at Union Ridge is scheduled to begin on the fourth Sunday in this month. Rev. J. D. Dollar of Langsdale, Ala., will assist the pastor, Rev. W. M. Stevens, in this series which will last for ten days or two weeks.

Rev. S. E. Madren says: "Rev. B. H. Watkins helped me in a meeting at Pope's Chapel this week. Much interest was shown throughout the week, with increased attendance each day. At the close of the meeting two united with the church upon profession of faith."

Miss Frances Lamb is this week holding a Vacation Bible School at Ether, N. C., and Miss Clarene Andes is doing likewise at Salem Chapel, near Walnut Cove, N. C. They closed a two week's school at Albemarle on last Friday and will conduct a school at Pleasant Grove (N. C.) next week.

Rev. Emmanuel Hedgebeth is serving our new church at Hope Mills, N. C. Last week he held a Vacation Church School with thirty-three enrolled and an average attendance of twenty-nine. Miss Helen Johnson, one of the members who attended Elon Training School, aided in the Bible School.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Western North Carolina Conference meets with Randleman Church on July 27. The program of the Convention will be found on page 7 of this issue.

Herring, Mr. and Mrs. O. LeRoy Horton, and Miss Gladys Horton. In the absence of the pastor, Dr. J. G. Truitt, who was assisting Rev. B. J. Earp in a revival meeting at Ingram Christian Church, Chaplain W. W. Elder and Dr. W. B. O'Neil were the preachers on July 9.

In preparing for revival meetings beginning at Eure on August 6, Oak Grove on August 13, and Damascus on August 20, Rev. C. Rexford Raymond, pastor, recently sent a letter to the members of the three churches. Dr. Raymond asked them to "pray daily for the help and guidance of God," send to him a list of prospective members, and "pray daily for those whom you hope to see converted." It is expected that Mr. Julius Shepherd, a ministerial student of Elon College, will lead the singing for these meetings. (Mr. Shepherd is recuperating from pneumonia at his home in White Hall, Ga.)

CALLING ALL SECRETARIES: CONFERENCE AND CHURCH.

(THIRD INSTALLMENT.)

The last page of the new report blank is devoted chiefly to Benevolent and Missionary giving by the Church. Three groupings are made and arbitrarily, Home Missions, Foreign Missions, and Benevolences. This nomenclature is far from satisfactory.

Under "Home Missions" the following items are carried: (1) Conference Fund, (2) *Convention Home Mission Fund, (3) †Conference Missions, (4) C o n v e n t i o n Fund, (5) Christian Missionary Association Dues, and (6) ‡One-half the Woman's Missionary Society Fund.

Under "Foreign Missions" provision is made for: (1) *Convention Foreign Mission Fund, and (2) †One-half the Woman's Missionary Society Fund.

*The Convention Home Mission Fund and the Convention Foreign Mission Fund each include, in those churches where an offering is received in the Sunday school for missions and which is sent to Dr. Atkinson's office as such, one-half the total of these offerings for the year.

†This fund is asked by the Eastern Virginia Conference only.

‡This sum should be arrived at on the basis of the funds actually sent by the Woman's Missionary Society and its auxiliaries to the treasurer of the Woman's Conference.

Under "Benevolences the following provision is made: (1) *Elon College, (2) Elon Orphanage, (3) †Christian Education, (4) ‡Superannuation, (5) Miscellaneous Benevolent and Missionary Gifts.

*This includes only those sums paid against the apportionment for Elon. It does not include gifts to the Elon Indebtedness Campaign of a few years ago nor to the Golden Anniversary now in force.

†This should include dues to the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions, but these are not included in the Conference Apportionment. If a church has an apportionment of $50.00 to Christian Education and reports $60.00 paid, but the $60.00 representing $40.00 paid to the Southern Convention Board and $20.00 to the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention—the apportionment has not been met.

‡This would include all gifts to the cause of ministerial relief: budget, Christmas, and Communion Sunday gifts.

These tables are so arranged that totals can easily be carried and at the close a grand total of all giving for the Church.

A few additional explanations follow. Some Sunday schools designate the third Sunday offering for missions. If so, then it should be credited as a total to the fund to which it goes, Home or Foreign.

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor

SUMMER EVANGELISM.

According to custom many of our churches in this area are holding what is popularly known as revival meetings. A recent writer in a Baptist publication says that we are likely to continue the name revival long after the fact of a revival has ceased to be. Yet it must be remembered that we are seeking in these mid-summer meetings to do a phase of our evangelistic work.

There are some who consider this the only evangelism done during the year. If that is true in any particular church it is quite unfortunate. The minister who secures a decision in a summer revival accepts the background of religious training which the pastor and Sunday school workers have given during the entire year. These other workers have their share in the winning of people to Christ, and happy is the revivalist who remembers that faithful Sunday school teachers and pastors have put into the minds of the people fundamental teachings of the Christian religion. The evangelist may secure a decision to accept Christ, but it will remain with the pastor and teachers to continue the process that will furnish food for the souls of those who have made a decision and will keep them growing in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus.

Every church may well plan to hold a summertime series of services, especially for evangelistic purposes. A survey of the community will determine who is to be sought. The evangelist may preach, but back of him should be the prayers, the songs and the earnest effort of all those who are faithful workers through the year.

WHEN THEY JOIN.

At the close of a revival our churches usually invite people to join the church. This invitation is extended to any who want to follow the Master and who can answer a few simple questions sincerely. No effort is made to contact these people before they approach the altar for church membership. They do not meet with the pastor, the deacons, or any other group for a discussion of what church membership means. They simply say they have heartily repented of sins, they believe in God as a personal Savior, and they expect to be a follower of Him. Sometimes they have never heard these questions put until they hear them at the altar where they are being examined for church membership. This is very poor instruction for those who are to become a part of the body of Christ, the Church. It would be much better if the pastor and deacons talked to these prospective members in private before they come before the church to be voted upon.

The ceremony of inducting people into our church membership is void of much that is impressive or significant. It is usually done hurriedly without beautiful ceremony, significant symbolism, or anything to impress the candidate for church membership with the importance of the church. Masons and other fraternal brethren do not make this mistake. Episcopalians and some other Protestant groups do much better than we. These others have a much lower mortality rate. We lose too many of our members immediately after they have joined. By improving the ceremonial impressiveness of the service in which the people become a part of the Church of God we can do much toward strengthening the life of those who join and assuring the church of life-long membership.

There is a certain New England church with a thousand members, six hundred of whom have definite jobs to do for the church. The pastor makes it his business to see that every new member is given something specifically to do for their church. If the pastors in the Southern Convention, who receive members into their churches, will see that these members are given some definite job to do for the church, the chances are that they will have these members busily at work next year when the revival comes around. If they will add to this a subscription to "The Christian Sun" and a copy of the Sacred Scriptures, the chances for constant effort will be greatly improved.

When people unite with the church they should know what they are doing because they have been previously instructed, the ceremony should be beautiful and impressive, and these new recruits should be given definite jobs to do in the Church of the Living God.

SHOCKED, SURPRISED, DELIGHTED!

The office force of "The Christian Sun" has undergone a terrific shock. Nothing like it had happened before. Saturday was a quiet summer day, with no indication of storm or anything unusual about to happen. The workers were busy with the routine duties, preparing copy for this issue, and otherwise behaving as normal. Then the unexpected happened.

Into the office walked the Rev. Jesse H. Dollar, pastor of the Newport News Congregational-Christian Church. Nothing unusual about this, for a good many of the pastors call to see us and make us happy by their fellowship. BUT . . .

With no preliminary warning the said Rev. Jesse H. Dollar handed us a check for $74.00, balance payment on 60 "Christian Sun" subscriptions in his church of 374 members!

We had expected the Rev. Mr. Dollar and his church to secure the apportionment of 50 subscriptions, for they usually do the things they are asked to do by their Conference, but we were greatly surprised at the distance they went beyond their goal. This is really going the "second mile," which is done so seldom with "Christian Sun" subscriptions that it shocked us.

After reviving from the momentary shock, we find ourselves keenly delighted—and even hopeful that some other church will follow this good example and go far beyond its quota for "Christian Sun" subscriptions.

Thank you, Mr. Dollar and the Newport News Church! You have made us very happy. We sincerely hope that the weekly visit of the paper into your homes will bring you an equal amount of delight.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

An interesting joint meeting of the Young People's Class and the Twentieth Century Baraca Class of the Suffolk Christian Church was held Sunday, July 9, at 10:00 A. M. Thirty-five years ago Mr. MacClenny was elected teacher of the Young Men's Class and has taught continuously with the exception of three years when he was living in Sunbury, N. C. About the same time Mr. Hersey Woodward, now deceased, was elected teacher of the Baraca Class.

The following charter members of the Young Men's Class were present last Sunday: Dr. W. T. Gay and C. O. Lancaster. Greetings to the meeting were expressed by J. C. Ramsey, Jr., president, and Sidney Harrell, secretary. Dr. Gay and R. C. Harrell, Jr., brought messages of greeting and appreciation of the courtesies extended. The lesson was taught by Mr. W. E. MacClenny.

It is difficult to measure the influence of a progressive Sunday school class. This is especially true when the class is composed of young men in the formative period when opinions and habits are being developed for life. A spiritually minded teacher can do much to direct young men in the proper way of thinking and living. Week by week the opportunity comes to drop a thought fitly spoken, and drive home a truth of vital importance. Happy the young men who have such a teacher, and fortunate is the teacher who has this great opportunity. The Young Men's Class of the Suffolk Church has been exceedingly fortunate during these years in having a teacher who is sincere, constructive and spiritually minded. His work speaks for itself and his influence has been in the direction of higher thinking and stronger Christian character.

Many organizations have been launched in recent years purporting to give young people a better opportunity for spiritual development in the various churches. Nothing yet has appeared to surpass the Sunday school in laying the foundation for church membership and religious growth. The Sunday school has not been strongly emphasized by many leaders in recent years. It has passed through a season of severe hostile criticism. It has been neglected and abused. But it survives, because in theory, if not in actual experience, it has attacked the problem of teaching the Bible more directly than any other organization has dared to do in the present generation.

The Sunday school class can be a center of religious education, missionary instruction, social fellowship, personal evangelism and spiritual expression. The church formerly held to the theory that the prayer meeting was the place to teach young people to pray in public and express themselves in personal testimony. This could be easily done in a Sunday school class where a meeting is held in a private classroom. Under wise guidance young people are responsive, in a Sunday school class, to this method of participation. Trained teachers, who are consecrated to their work, have a great responsibility and a greater opportunity than the pastor of the church, when the spiritual life of youth is involved. People who are willing to stick to their post and do their best to be faithful to their duty should be congratulated and encouraged. The Suffolk Christian Church is doing a great work in religious education, and the two classes above named have played a prominent part in this program.

I. W. JOHNSON.

CHARACTER EDUCATION.

Elon College was founded for the purpose of training young people for daily living as well as for position and achievements in business and profession. Her faculties have been selected and her curriculum constructed with this end in view. Moral and religious training, contributing factor to character development, has always received major emphasis. "Christian character first, last, and always" is still the motto for our institution. Our curriculum is designed for mental development, personal culture, and the practical application of information acquired for the usual responsibilities of life. It is to be expected that the faculty of Elon College will be interested in serving the homes from which our students come, in presenting to the children of these homes the right kind of ideals before they reach college age, and to be of further service to them after they have left our campus for permanent positions.

Dr. J. D. Messiek, Dean of the college, has made possible such assistance in a very practical way by compiling out of his experience in contact with young people and adults as well as a fund of material published under the title, "Personality and Character Development," by Fleming H. Revell Company of New York City. The publishers were so impressed with the manuscript that they readily accepted the same on very considerate terms. This is a very valuable book for anyone wishing to develop his own personality and to be of assistance in guiding others in such achievements. The book is replete with programs and examples stimulating interest in character development. It also carries directions for the training of youth, calling attention to his faults and showing how to prevent or correct them. The book is of chief value to parents in assisting the child in living a wholesome life and developing correct attitudes toward others. Parent-Teacher organizations, study groups, women's clubs, etc., will find the book most helpful. Directors of playgrounds providing for the proper use of leisure time among young people will find many stimulating programs and helpful suggestions. In fact, all who deal with young people will find the book full of helpful suggestions. Alumni of the college and the home of our church could well afford to purchase the book which sells for $1.50. Orders should be sent to Dean J. D. Messiek, Elon College, N. C.

L. E. SMITH.

INGRAM, VIRGINIA.

Many are the pleasant memories that come to one's mind as one returns to some church and community of former years. This week I am reveling in that pleasure, as I work with the Rev. B. J. Earp at the Ingram Christian Church. This church has been remodeled and improved until it is as lovely and worshipful as anybody could wish, with its beautiful carpet and windows and pulpit, choir loft, and pews; and in addition to this, its fine Sunday school addition, with all modern conveniences.

But as important as are these material things, they are not to be compared with the fine folks that make up that church and community. Out of their homes of devotion to the church, the Bible, and the Holy Sabbath Day, have gone men and women far and near to make places of leadership in sundry walks of life. Their fine roads and automobiles have not lessened their interest in their church, nor in the homes of their community. One of the major inspirations of the com-

Reflecting Christ In the Sunday School

By REV. C. L. MOODY.

Each Sunday school represented here today has a mission to perform, a part to play, and a service to render in the building of God's Kingdom. We as individuals and as Sunday schools are members of the body of Christ. Each one has a specific work to do.

As members of the body of Christ, we must look to the Head to direct our movements, our meditations, and our messages concerning the kingdom. Just for a few minutes this afternoon I want you to look with me at the functions of each of our Sunday schools, and let us see just how we can most effectively reflect Christ in the Sunday school. I think all of us realize that if our Sunday schools are to render service, and if they are to reach out and bring into the fellowship of the kingdom those around them, then they must reflect Christ. If we are to reflect Christ in our work we must be as nearly like him as possible.

What methods did Christ use in doing his work while on earth? In the first place, he invited men to come; after he had invited men to come he taught them; and most important of all, he saved them. It is essential that our Sunday schools do these three things that Christ did if we are to fulfill our mission, if we are to reflect him in our works.

These three functions or duties of the Sunday schools are: to invite, to teach, and to save. The first recorded word of Christ when he began his public ministry was one of invitation. Multitudes came thronging to John the Baptist by the Jordan, and Jesus came also and was baptized, and proclaimed by John to be the Son of God.

When two of those standing there heard John say those words, they left the prophet, followed Jesus, and said to him: "Teacher, where dwellest thou?" "Come and see," Jesus answered. Also the last recorded words of the Master, on the last page of the Bible, is invitation: "And the spirit and the bride say come. And let him that heareth say, come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely."

Despised and rejected by men, crucified to death, he still invites. What a wonderful Savior we have! One who regardless of what we do to him still invites us to come.

All through his ministry he was inviting men to come; in everyday experiences he gave the invitation. He didn't just wait until Sunday. He said, "Come, follow me." Another beautiful thing about his invitation was that he made no restrictions and no exceptions: "Come to me all ye that labor . . ." (Matthew 11:28.) In the temple on the great feast day Jesus cried out in their midst, "If anyone is thirsty, come to me and drink." (John 7:37.) And the crowd that followed him into the desert without food heard him say: "I am the bread of life; he who comes to me shall never hunger." His invitation was tender; it included the most helpless, even the little children: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, hinder them not, for to such belong the Kingdom of God." (Mark 10:14.)

Beloved, can our Sunday school neglect the first, the very first, step in doing the work of Jesus Christ? Can we do any less than what he did? Are we in our Sunday schools inviting those around us to come; are the children and grown people in our communities being invited to the Sunday school? I leave that question with you. If your Sunday school is not a Sunday school that invites, then it is failing to reflect Christ, and you as a member of that Sunday school are failing your Lord.

Now the second thing that Jesus did was to teach. "And seeing the multitudes, he went up into a mountain, and when he was set, his disciples came unto him; and he opened his mouth and taught them saying: . . ."

In the Gospel of Matthew Jesus spent the next three chapters teaching the multitudes. He taught them many things, revealed to them the true nature of God. He taught them who was blessed, what it meant to kill, to commit adultery, and urged them to love even their enemies. In his teachings he taught them how to give their gifts, how to pray, told them where to lay up their treasures. He told them not to judge each other, to pray much, to beware of false prophets, to be doers of the Word, and to build their houses on rocks. He taught humility, the value of a human soul, taught them how to live life here in this earth, and taught them about heaven and the Kingdom of God. He taught as one having authority, not as scribes or Pharisees.

Our Sunday schools must follow in the footsteps of our Lord and teach our people as though we had authority, because beloved, we do have authority—the authority of Christ who commanded us in the last verses of Matthew to go and teach all nations, and, "Lo, I am with you even unto the ends of the world."

If our Sunday schools are failing to teach and instruct and enlighten the people after they have invited them, then they are failing our Christ. Are you Sunday school teachers teaching a crucified Christ as Savior of the world? If you are not, I pray God to have mercy on your souls.

We have seen the first two things that Jesus did. Follow with me now the third function and duty of the Sunday school, as we see what Christ did as the first head of the Sunday school. We see that he saved those who came to him. He gave them salvation and eternal life.

Matthew 1:21 tells us that he shall save his people from their sins. Jesus himself said that he had come to save that which was lost (Matthew 18:11.) All through his ministry Jesus was saving people—that was the most important phase of his mission. He tells us so in the 9th chapter of Luke, the 6th verse: "For the son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them." That is the reason God gave His only begotten son to the world, that he might save men: "For God sent not his son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." (John 3:17.)

Jesus on another occasion said: "I came not to judge the world, but to save the world." (John 12:47.) So you see, my friends, it was the work of Jesus to save the world. If our Sunday schools are to follow in his footsteps, it must be our work in the Sunday schools to save men, women, and children. We can never reflect Christ in the Sunday schools until we do as he did, and he invited, taught, and saved. That is the work of every Sunday school represented here today, and every Sunday school claims to be Christian.

If you don't remember another thing I have said in this little address, remember this: take these words home with you, take them back to your Sunday school. Your work for the kingdom as individuals and as Sunday schools and as churches is to invite — to teach — to save.

"Did you ever see a boy with a new ball who says to the gang, 'You may play with my ball and bat, but you must let me pitch?' There are people in church like that. They say, 'Do my way, or I quit.' They are just being childish and need to grow up."

Elon College Golden Anniversary

Dr. D. J. Bowden and the writer are to spend this week in Norfolk in interest of the Golden Anniversary Campaign. There are some things about the campaign that are disappointing and others that are encouraging. Rarely a day passes but that someone says that he is going to contribute. "I expect to pay my anniversary fee," he says, "but I will not make a pledge. You can count on me, however." I asked for the privilege of publishing the pledge, but he refused. If these friends of ours and of the college could only realize that people follow examples! Not all are leaders. A larger number, necessarily so, are followers.

I received a very encouraging letter from a good friend of mine and a friend of the college, a part of which I quote:

"I enclose herewith my check for $50.00 to pay the pledge which I recently made to the Anniversary Fund which of course you will have duly credited against that pledge.

"Now, having that out of the way, you may put me down for another $50.00, payable about the first of the year 1940. This letter will authorize you to enter my pledge.

"I have been watching that thermometer, and have wanted to see it pass the $20,000 mark. It is moving too slowly, and unless you have something in the back of your head which has not been published, or unless a lot of enthusiasm is somehow started, I fear that the mark of $150,000 by June 1940 may not be reached. The question in my mind is how that enthusiasm is going to be generated. I have not heard the matter mentioned whatsoever around our church except what I have had to say, and of course I could not talk until I had made my pledge. I could not speak with enthusiasm until I had started something myself."

TO PASTORS AND SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS:

The month of July has five Sundays. This is good news for the college. By vote of the Convention all Sunday schools are requested to make an offering for Elon College. The college has gladly agreed that this offering shall be counted on conference apportionments. This is a fine opportunity for churches to make a substantial payment on their conference requirements. The churches and Sunday schools have been doing pretty well this year. The month of August will perhaps be the hardest for the college financially. A small offering from every Sunday school will amount to a great deal and will help the college in a fine way.

I am appealing to one and all to come to our assistance at this time if possible. You will not make a contribution this summer that will be more appreciated or more helpful. The first of the month is always exacting. We will greatly appreciate your cooperation and help.

Sincerely yours,
L. E. SMITH,
President.

munity as far as homes go is the beautiful mansion built of stone quarried on the premises in which the Carltons live, and which is known far and near as "Carlbrook." Although it is an estate of rare charm, and expansive lawns and broad acres, the warm cordiality and noble Christian spirit and manner of Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Carlton keep it true to the ancient quality of the sincere Christian homes of their fathers and mothers of other years. In this home the Bible is loved and read, and the church is a chief source of thought and enthusiasm.

The spirit of harmony and togetherness in the whole church and community is remarkable. Everyone, high and low, seems to love each other and to respect each other, and to work together on a common level. Young men who were little boys when I was here several years ago, are now deacons and church officials. Several who were very dear to me as a young minister still looking toward my seminary days are now gone on to their eternal reward. But they left the heritage of noble lives behind them, and the church and community are still uplifted by their memory. It was a great privilege to serve Ingram and Pleasant Grove Christian churches and to be given the help and inspiration that they both offered, in a day and time when it could and did mean so much to me. As I move about among these people this week, I am reminded of the great help I have had from dear friends in these neighboring communities. May God bless them everyone. Brother B. J. Earp is doing a good work at Ingram, and is greatly loved and appreciated by all.

FOR THE CHILDREN

A LESSON FOR MARJORIE.

It was Saturday night. Miss Alice, preparing for teaching tomorrow's Sunday school lesson, was feeling thoughtful and discouraged tonight. What must be done about her class of girls? Up until today Miss Alice had thought that her class was coming along nicely; but since this morning all her pride in them had vanished.

For this morning Miss Alice had talked with Addie Peek's grandmother. All day she had remembered the look of sorrow in the old woman's eyes as she gravely answered Miss Alice's question about Addie's absence from Sunday school: "No'm, Addie's not sick, but she's not going back any more." Miss Alice, very much surprised, questioned her and the story came out. Addie was not happy in Sunday school because the other girl's didn't treat her well. Marjorie Mays was the worst; she tormented Addie about her shabby clothes, about her having to ride to church in the milk wagon.

"Of course," said the grandmother, "I could make Addie go to Sunday school, but—"

"Please," interrupted Miss Alice, "may I see Addie for a little while tomorrow afternoon?"

"Yes," came the answer, "Addie is always home afternoons."

Now Miss Alice wondered how she was going to teach Marjorie to be friendly and kind in a world so needing her kindness and friendliness. She thought of all the Sunday mornings they had spent together in class. Little things that had not seemed important at the time now began to pop up. Marjorie carefully arranging the chairs of her own little friends in a group to themselves; Marjorie out on the church lawn, carefully drawing her own group of friends around her with a manner of "stay away!" to other little girls; then Miss Alice remembered the whisperings of the little girls in class about boys, compacts, parties. Only a few Sundays ago a fine lesson had been ruined because Marjorie, having borrowed the rings of several friends, had sat showing and admiring her jeweled hands. Pretty things, gay things, seemed to be growing more and more important to Marjorie. Then Miss Alice thought some more. Where were all these little girls getting their training for spiritual things—for God and service to Him? In that one little hour in Sunday school on Sunday morning! That was all they got! Miss Alice dropped her head in her hands and prayed earnestly: "God, help me to teach them the valuable things in life. Make them see that they are being selfish and vain."

Her answer came the next day. On Sunday morning, as she and the girls fled into class, the superintendent's wife rushed up to her, much excited, and said, "Alice, can you be ready at two? We're going down to Greenville this afternoon and we're taking you with us." For one minute of blinding joy Miss Alice's heart sang. She'd see her mother and her brothers! She was sick with longing for the sight of them. But the next instant she remembered. This was the afternoon she had promised to see Addie. Oh—but how could she miss this chance to go home; she so seldom had a chance to go, and Addie was always home afternoons, her grandmother had said. But suddenly Miss Alice saw little Addie—her little scuffed shoes, her formless, colorless clothes, her wistful eyes. Addie needed her, Addie must come first. So she said very bravely to her friend, "I'm sorry, but little Addie Peek's been absent from Sunday school. I sent her word I'd be out to see her this afternoon. If you see mother—give her my love."

As her friend walked away, Miss Alice closed her eyes, for the tears had sprung to them, so badly had she wanted to go home. When she opened them Marjorie was standing close, looking at her teacher curiously, intently. "Miss Alice," she said in wonder, "you wanted to go home awful. I could see it on your face. But you didn't. You're going to see Addie instead. You thought of her before your own self."

Marjorie's face was thoughtful. She was considering something new to her. Then Miss Alice saw what was happening and her heart lifted. Marjorie was learning something—she was being taught the lesson of sacrifice and of unselfishness. And then it was that Miss Alice remembered her prayer.—Adapted from The Junior Teacher, by Lillian Moore Rice.

"After a careful and lifelong study, we have about decided to agree with the fellow who said the only perfect people in the world were the perfect fools."

MISSIONS AN IDEA.

The most powerful thing in this world is an idea, especially an idea come to its time. Our Lord Christ knew this when He gave to His followers the idea of missions. He knew full well that there was enough dynamite in this idea to blow the whole Roman Empire into fragments and to turn the world right side up. He knew full well also that as the missionary idea took possession of the mind and the imagination of His followers there were no powers, nor principalities, nor individuals, nor governments under the sun able to stop them. Possessed by the missionary idea they went forth in the face of persecution, of impending dangers and of death. Those possessed by this idea are still doing just that sort of thing. When Lord Christ said, "Go ye and teach all nations, and lo, I am with you" He knew full well that He was releasing an idea that had no limitations to its power. We who are missionary in spirit and in deed, members of our missionary societies and as such taking a part in the world-wide task of missions, hardly know ourselves the power of this idea over us as individuals. The women meet in their missionary societies once a month and bring their dues little or much, as they see fit. They somehow feel that they must, and that their chief object is to be punctual in attending their meetings and in paying their dues and having their program. I say the women think this is their object and superficially and outwardly it is; but in reality that which carried them to their meetings, and the payment of their dues, is an idea that they little reckon with, if at all; the idea, namely, that Lord Christ Himself released and which has gripped them and caused them to carry on, year after year, without stopping to question the deeper motive. And they have a good time in doing so. Of course they do. Having a part, however small, in carrying out a great idea is a joy and brings a delight and a satisfaction that one cannot explain. The women's missionary society is usually the most delightful and enjoyable society in the community, or in the church, and the only explanation of it is that it is consciously, or unconsciously, carried on through the power of an idea, namely, that Jesus the Christ, the Crucified One, is the world greatest need and is sufficient to solve individual and social problems and ultimately bring the world to that state and condition of which the prophet wrote when he said, "For out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of Jehovah from Jerusalem. And he will judge between the nations, and will decide concerning many peoples; and they shall beat their swords into shares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

Around this idea every missionary society is organized and it does seem that every pastor would wish a society in his church, giving itself to the consideration of this idea released in the command of our Lord. Yes, every church, of course, should be missionary, but every church has many interests and must look after many enterprises and the welfare of all its members. On this account, it seems a most fitting thing as well as a divine arrangement to have a woman's missionary society, founded upon and seeking to promote the idea released by our Lord Christ when He said, "Ye shall be witness of me unto the uttermost parts." We could heartily wish that all our Sunday schools would join the gradually increasing number of those who make the monthly offering for missions. However, we are profoundly grateful to those who do, since we realize that it is purely a matter of desire and decision and a most unselfish one on the part of those who do. We are pleased to acknowledge the above and are grateful for every dollar of it.

LOST ON THE RIM OF THINGS.

We live so much in the externals of life and in the midst of the incidents of religion that the realities of life and of religion count for little as compared to the appearances of things. So it is easy for us to be lost in the midst of the complexities of life and to substitute the outward forms for the realities of religion. The so-called heathen religions, cherished among the nations, have had through the centuries devout souls seeking after God. Some of the noblest on earth have been found in these ancient religions. With gods many and prophets almost without number, they have developed religions with their creeds and rituals and institutions. But the weakness of heathenism has always been a religion of outward form, of elaborate ritual, leaving men to grope on in the darkness feeling after God. Thus mankind, with its immortality of life and formalism of worship, has tended to develop a religion wanting in a knowledge of God as men struggled on in their confusion.

Even in the Christian Church, in our so-called Christian land, the multitudes have no firm grip on God, able to speak with convincing certainty of the God revealed in Jesus Christ. Why not push aside much that confuses and throw overboard the non-essentials and hold fast to Jesus Christ, as did Stanley Jones in India? Instead of pretending to believe everything and trying to observe all the demands of the churches, why not hold fast to Jesus. Start with him and find God as he came to show us the Father and also start with him to learn of our relation to humanity. Thus with him as a starting point, we may come to know God and also to know men.

The kingdom of heaven set up on earth is the grand objective of Jesus. This kingdom is both present and to come; it is within and manifests itself without, a kingdom that embraces every other kingdom. The old preachers, in discussing the church in other days, often spoke of the church militant and the church triumphant. This the invisible church was primarily spiritual and eternal. They cherished in this view about the same idea held by Jesus as he proclaimed the kingdom of heaven, teaching his disciples to pray "Thy kingdom come."

The militant church is the agency for bringing in the kingdom. The various divisions of Christians, the several denominations, get their differences largely by stressing the non-essentials. This accounts for much of the confusion in Christian lands and results in weakness as well as confusion. Some preach the personal gospel; others stress the social gospel, forgetful that the gospel Jesus preached was both personal and social. Fatherhood certainly implies both of these.

So it is not strange that Jesus said, "Come and follow me." He laid down no creed, he organized no church, he provided no ritual for his followers. "Come, follow me, learn of me." This finally led to the cross, where he disclosed the heart of God and the possibility of our humanity. He got away from the outer rim of life into the inmost core of life and of religion.—N. C. Christian Advocate.

CALLING ALL SECRETARIES.

In at least one of the conferences the churches do not designate the causes or institutions to which the apportionment is to go. This is left to the discretion of the conference. In these conferences we are asking the conference secretaries to make the distributions on the basis of the action of the conference. This pertains especially to the Western North Carolina Conference. The reports as now carried in both The Annual and the Year Book do not present an accurate picture of the giving of the churches of these conferences. To do this will require some mathematical ingenuity on the part of the secretary and perhaps eight hours of labor, but it will be worth both.

The financial tables are closed by the asking of the amount of the apportionment for the church, and whether the apportionment has been raised. It is the understanding of the secretary that this can be answered in the affirmative only when each item of the apportionment has been met in full. The church may have raised more than the total of the apportionment by many dollars and yet not have met the apportionment because it has not raised and forwarded in full the apportionment for Christian Education or Elon College. Or item five (5) under Benevolences in the explanation above may be as much as or more than the total of the apportionment and the church yet not have met the apportionment.

The secretary will be happy to correspond at any time with any interested secretary of a local church with regard to the matters presented in these three explanatory articles.

DOCTOR'S TALK STARTS RUN ON COTTON HOSIERY.

A medical missionary started a run on cotton hosiery at Winona, Minn., recently.

Immediately after Dr. Walter Judd, just returned from China, spoke 275 women students at Winona State Teachers College agreed to wear lisle or cotton stockings and boycott Japanese goods, especially silk. Dr. R. B. Tozier, a faculty member, added impetus by assuring the girls they need not dress to please men.

Today the town's two large department stores reported supplies of cotton hosiery sold out. A similar situation was reported at Northfield, Minn., where Dr. Judd spoke to St. Olaf college students.

Pilgrim Fellowship

"Youth at Work in the Church"

Emily Carleton Lester, Editor

ELON SUMMER SCHOOL.

By MARY DEANE BROWNE.

I am glad to say that I was one to enjoy the pleasant week at the Elon Training School. It was a week well worth my time.

One subject which I took, "How to Understand and Use the Bible," taught by the Rev. Mr. Slater of Virginia, gave me an idea of how and when the Bible originated. One of the most convincing points, which proves that it is the greatest and best book ever written, is the fact that it has been translated from Hebrew and Greek into seven hundred and seventy languages and dialects. Another point for discussion was that the Bible is (as we have always heard) a book, but to get down to the essential facts it is a library of sixty-six books: a collection of writings on one great theme, "God and man's relation to Him."

The course, "The Place of the Church in the Life of Today," conducted by the Rev. Mr. Robinson of Raleigh, made me realize more clearly how important a place the Church has in the life of today. It is not only a hospital for sinners, but a refuge for saints. One task of the Church is to be a source of strength for the world's problems, and not an escape from the difficulties of the world.

The course, "Our Task Abroad," taught by Mrs. Gladwyn Childs, a missionary from Angola, Africa, was very interesting, but I will not go into detail about it.

Aside from the studies, I very much enjoyed the inspirational chapel and vesper services. The group meetings at 10 o'clock every night seemed to bring the day to a very fitting close.

Another thing for which I am grateful was the privilege of visiting the orphanage. It was while there that I realized what a noble work our Church is doing in helping maintain such an institution.

Last, but not least, I want to say that I was happy to be one of the four from the Western North Carolina Conference.

ANTIOCH PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP HOLDS INTERESTING MEETING.

The Antioch Pilgrim Fellowship (Valley of Virginia) held its regular meeting last week with the young people of the Linville Church. There were forty-five young people and two adult counselors present. Raymond Andes was in charge of the program. During a short business session Leon Frank was elected as secretary to take the place of Clarence Andes, who is doing Student Summer Service work in North Carolina.

The theme of the program was "Christian Citizenship," and was divided into four parts: (1) Labor, (2) Patriotism, (3) Law and Government, and (4) War. Questions were prepared on each of these topics. Reading of secular literature and Scripture were given in connection with each phase discussed. All were supplied with ballots and voted on the questions. These were tabulated and some very remarkable things were learned.

An offering was taken for the mission project of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship in China.

A social period followed in the basement of the church. Games and contests were under the direction of Herman Hunley.

The next meeting of the Antioch Pilgrim Fellowship will be held July 20. At this time the election of officers will be held, we will review the work for the past year and make plans for next year. We only have a small group of young people. Our organization is less than a year old, so it still has the thrill of something new. We had seven young people at the Elon Summer School of Leadership Education.

Saturday—Salvation Expressed in Water—John 4: 10-14.

All about us there is beauty through which God would reveal Himself to us if we but had eyes to see it. The candid camera has revealed to us many beautiful scenes of commonplace things and in them beauty which the eye had failed to recognize.

Let persons in the meeting exchange ideas as to what they consider beautiful in the commonplaces of life. Here are two lists. A girl included: the serunch of dry leaves, the feel of clean clothing, a cool wind on a hot day, climbing up a hill and looking down. A boy included: the feeling of running, looking into deep water, a swallow flying, water being cut by the prow of a boat, a race horse, the feeling of a dive, a thrush singing. God has put beauty all about us.

These may be used as short talks:

1. Our eyes are often untrained to see beauty close at hand.

2. Our minds are geared to the sensational and bizarre aspects of life, so that more wholesome experiences have no joy or thrill.

3. We let our minds be crowded with unworthy and impure thoughts so that there is little stimulus to seek and find beauty and inspiration in our surroundings.

4. How can we find beauty in the commonplace?

- Through the eye.
- Through the ear.
- Through the love of people.
- Through an appreciation of bravery, courage, service, and sacrifice.

5. What can be done to beautify the church building and grounds?

6. What can be done inexpensively, yet creatively, to add beauty to the home?

7. What can be done to adorn the walls of our minds and hearts with the resources of literature, music, art, friendship, religion, and service?

Suggested Hymns—

"This Is My Father's World."

"Open My Eyes That I May See."

"O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee."

ASA: A LIFE OF TRUST.

LESSON IV—JULY 23, 1939.

GOLDEN TEXT: Help us, O Jehovah our God; for we rely on Thee.—II Chronicles 14: 11.

LESSON: II Chronicles 14 and 16.

Times of Peace.

"In his days the land was quiet ten years"—the nation was at peace. Nations do not, as a rule, do much creative work while at war. War is essentially destructive and disruptive. War restricts human liberty, and makes inevitable and necessary dictatorial powers. To be sure there are some values involved in war, but they are not to be compared with the conquests of peace. If the nations of the world today were devoting a small fraction of the time and money that they are devoting to war and preparation for war, to the arts of peace the world would make a remarkable progress.

A Religious Revival.

"Asa took away the altars of the strange gods, and the high places, and brake down the images, and cut down the groves." It was perhaps the first real religious revival of the kingdom. And it was initiated by the king himself. Asa seems to have been a devout and sincere man—"he did that which was good and right in the eyes of the Lord his God." Men in positions of authority help or hinder religion by their attitudes and by their acts. A nation cannot expect God's blessing upon it if it is transgressing God's laws. Perhaps the most needed thing in the world today, the only saving element as a matter of fact, is a revival of genuine religion.

Trust in God—and Working.

"Therefore he (Asa) said unto them 'Let us build these cities and make about them walls and towers, gates and bars, while the land is still before us, because we have sought the Lord our God, we have sought him, and he hath given us rest on every side.'" The astute soldier and leader who told his men to "Trust God and keep your powder dry" was saying the same thing. Trust in God does not excuse us from doing everything that we can for ourselves. God will not do for us what we can do for ourselves. It is not enough simply to give up the bad during a revival; we must take up the good. We are not to be overcome by evil, but to overcome evil with good. One does not have to be a militarist to believe that in our kind of world we still have to have policemen, and armies and navies. But in the final analysis these are not the ultimate security of nations.

One With God a Majority.

"Lord, it is nothing with thee to help, whether with many, or with them that have no power; help us O Lord our God; for we rest on thee, and in thy name we go against this multitude"—thus did Asa pray as he faced the Ethiopians with their host of armed men. When a man knows that he is not sufficient for a situation in his own strength, but does know that he has put himself in harmony with the divine purpose, and has laid hold on divine resources, God and he form a majority. They that be for him are more than they that be against him. God does some of his most effective work through minorities.

A Word of Encouragement.

"And the spirit of God came upon Azariah the son of Obed and he went out to meet Asa and said unto him . . . Be ye strong therefore, and let not your hands be weak; for your work shall be rewarded. And when Asa heard these words he took courage and put away the abominable idols out of the land of Judah." How much a word of encouragement and appreciation can mean. What an opportunity a minister has every Sunday to speak some word that shall encourage some man or woman, some young person to be true to ideals, to keep on keeping on, to withstand the temptation, to be true and brave and steady! What opportunities Sunday school teachers have to do the same thing! In fact what opportunities all of us have to speak a word that will bring courage and strength to our fellowmen who are trying to walk in the paths of righteousness, and to work the will of our God. A word spoken in season—how far-reaching it may be!

A Man's Foes in His Own Household.

"And also concerning Maachah the mother of Asa the king, he removed her from being queen, because she had made a grove: and Asa cut down her idol, and stamped it, and burnt it." Rather high-handed methods to be sure, but in keeping with the standards of the time, and not to be judged by the standards of our time. The point is that it took courage to do a thing like that. As a matter of fact it takes about as much courage to live up to our highest ideals in the family circle as anywhere one can think of. Jesus who knew life and human nature once said that a man's foes shall be those of his own household. By a strange paradox, those who love us most and whom we love most, often keep us from living at our best, not consciously, but unconsciously as a rule. On the other hand there are men and women heroically following the Light, in spite of the indifference and even the opposition of those in the family circle. Many a frail, humble woman has dared to be true to Christ against an indifferent, and even an antagonistic husband.

Trusting in Might, Not on God.

Unfortunately Asa did not always keep his simple faith and his humble spirit. When he was attacked by Baasha the king of Israel, he turned to Benhadad the king of Syria for help, instead of depending upon the God of Israel as he had done on a previous occasion. Like many another man, Asa could not stand too much prosperity. As he grew in power, and as he became more wealthy he became more self-sufficient, and less disposed to depend upon God. Men make a mistake when they depend upon their wealth or their shrewdness or their personal charm, instead of upon their inner righteousness.

Getting Mad at the Preacher.

"And Asa was wroth with the seer, and put him in a prison house, for he was in a rage with him because of this thing." All that the seer or the preacher had done was to tell Asa the truth. And he had told him in a kindly way, too. But the truth hurt Asa. And he flew into a rage and had the preacher thrown into prison. He was not the first man, or the last man, who became angry because the preacher told the truth. Folks are always getting mad and leaving the church because the preacher "steps on their toes." Even if he preaches the truth in love, they do not want the truth, if it hits them, or cuts across their prejudices. One thinks of the fellow-villagers of Jesus at Nazareth threatening to throw him over the precipice because He told them that God loved Gentiles. And one thinks of Adolf Hitler putting Martin Niemöller in a concentration camp because Niemöller spoke the truth about the supremacy of the Church to the State. But Asa and Hitler and their ilk overlook the simple fact that although one can put a preacher of truth in prison, one can-

MONDAY.

"THE GRACE TO BLUSH."

"My Lord, I am ashamed and blush to lift up my face to Thee, my God."—Ezra 9: 6.

To be meek and humble is considered by some to be unmanly. The fellow who wrote "I am the Captain of my soul," seemed to feel that it is noble, heroic and Christlike to face front with an iron will that undertakes to subdue everything, disregarding the principles involved.

That man is in error. Humiliation and shame is as manly as heroism when there is cause for it. And surely there is much cause for it in us poor weak human beings. There are deeds, words, yea thoughts, that we need to be ashamed of. Who can stand in purity before the purity of our Lord Jesus Christ?

Prayer—Dear Lord God, we are weak and Thou art strong. It is so easy for us to go astray. Be Thou in us a daily guidance that we may not go astray. Amen.

TUESDAY.

MORE THINKING UPON.

"Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things."—Phil. 4: 8.

The apostle encompasses all the teachings of Christ in this injunction. In view of the horrible things of this world, many of us are forgetting this truth and growing pessimistic. It is all right to know the misery there is in life that we may help to alleviate it, but along with it we must never forget to remember the good: happy hearts, contented households, multitudes who are living life sweetly, Christians who dwell on the conscious presence of God. There are multitudes who believe that many things are wrong with the world; but more are right and the good are getting better.

Prayer—O Father, Thy kingdom come, and we give Thee thanks for it. We come to Thee and lay ourselves on the altar for Thy service. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE OF THINGS.

"I am the light of the world."—John 6: 12.

"He will bring me forth to the light, and I shall behold his righteousness."—Micah 7: 9.

The crowds are passing by every day and scarcely notice the spiritual significance of things, and yet there is something of God with every one. One dreads loss; another finds faith and love in the mirk of business; a failing and faltering soul still is buoyed by ambition of achievement. It is all there plus every variety of human emotion. A close walk with God each day leads us away from the mirk and darkness of life and closer to the light in which there is no darkness, where God is, and where we have the power to see spiritual values.

Prayer—(Pray as you feel).

THURSDAY.

CRUSADES, OR EXAMPLES?

"To make ourselves an example unto you."—II Thess. 3: 9.

As a primary proposition, which is the better, a crusade for ideals with everybody, or a personal example? We have been told of a hardened sinner who was converted at a revival. The preacher inquired of him what sermon it was that convicted him. He replied that no sermon had convicted him. He then named a godly woman whom every one knew and said that it was her life that had saved him.

Example is the most effective way of helping others. A well kept house and home is a tremendous incentive to the community. Lives of noblest level and highest Christian practice are the most powerful contribution to the salvation of the world.

Prayer—Our Father, we would obey Thy word and become examples of light along life's pathway. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"HEART TROUBLE."

"Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life."—Prov. 4: 26.

The physician took out his stethoscope and listened to his heart and then said, "heart trouble." That was the beginning of the end of a man's life. He was a Christian and lived as true to his God as he had known how. He was a clean liver with no habits calculated to damage a heart. But he was an energetic, tireless and rapid worker. Therein, he taxed his heart and had to quit untimely.

What is the matter with you? What is the matter with the world? Isn't it "heart trouble?" The matter with the whole world is at the roots of the human soul. One thing must be: Keep the heart right!

Prayer—Dear Father, the gospel song, "If the heart keeps right," strikes a new note in our souls. God help us to keep it right. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"IF."

"If thou hadst been here, my brother had not died."—John 11: 21.

"Of all sad words of tongue or pen, the saddest are these, it might have been." "If" is the biggest word in the English language. If a certain statesman had been in church Sunday instead of on the golf links, the course of the world might have been different. No one can estimate what losses come to life because of absence from

Preaching In a Time Like This

By REV. ALBERT C. DIEFFENBACH.

Newton Center, Massachusetts.

Preaching in a time like this is like preaching any time. It has not changed. This is the answer to an inquirer who would like more sermons on the issues of the day. He will not hear them or read them, for the ministers today, like all their peers who have gone before since the beginning, are not chiefly interested in recognizing the present situation, even when it seems to involve the whole world. Their meat is something else. One may find to be sure sermons with allusions to and illustrations from the contemporary scene, and occasionally a whole discourse will make a frontal attack on some great evil. Yet that is not the rule. It is a curious reaction among preachers that at present, when conditions in the world outside have grown inexpressibly bad, according to the publicists and the newspaper editors, who denounce and exhort and despair, many of the messages of the pulpit have become if not more serene than usual, certainly more detached and sure.

Way Is Plain.

One would hardly know from the announcements of subjects printed on this page or in the Monday morning reports that there was anything extraordinary going on. Someone here or there may flare up against Communism or the other side of it, Fascism, and such things, but this kind of preacher decreases in number, subsides and returns to the others who never got out of the conventional way but have just kept on preaching.

If they seem out of the world, it is illusion, for they are aware of what is occurring, and they believe the best way for them as ministers of religion is plain and straight. Some preachers no doubt have a feeling of impotence and futility, as Dr. Raymond Calkins says in Advance, in a world which is apparently bent on self-destruction. But that unhappy ministerial state is a wonted one in ordinary days, for the reason that at all times preaching is about and to persons who know they are not nearly as good as they ought to be. To see quite clearly that today differs from yesterday only in degree is the preacher's part. More persons in more ways are doing more havoc to themselves and others. The number who are cast down in wretchedness is inestimably larger than it has been since the Great War.

The preacher knows all this, and the stronger his reaction is against the facts the deeper he goes in for the simple, elemental truths of religion and offers them in words as nearly of one syllable as he can. He feels that he can do his best preaching for the times by disregarding them and calling upon the deeps of truth for life in the individual soul.

Saints Had the Secret.

Examples without number, in the continuity of religious history, assure him, perhaps best of all Jesus himself. His was a way of preaching religion in its entirety, removed from anxiety about the details of actual existence, in either the individual or society. This was the way of those who are among the immortal saints. They did not get confused and bothered about the wrongs, no, not from Augustine the Catholic to John Woolman the Quaker. They first looked into their own lives and put them in order and told others how it should be with them. Their contribution to a better world is incalculable.

What they have left for a memorial is the undated and fresh truth for all generations. They illustrate almost without exception there is nothing timely in religion and that the more one turns from outward circumstances whether large or small to the inward things of the spirit, the more one masters oneself and influences the world. This is as clear as daylight, and it is to be imputed as high merit to the preachers that on the whole they keep the great tradition.

Reports of Fourteen Sermons.

In a sheaf of fourteen sermons reported last Monday morning the main points were: the greatness of Masaryk because he was a Christian man; guarding one's tongue against gossip destructive of a reputation; in the individual character greatness lies; the spirit may triumph over physical pain; to have peace in the world there must be regeneration of the heart; Jesus' teachings transcend all limitations; had the Russian church opposed the tyranny of the nobility there might not have been a revolution; the defense of democracy cannot be carried on by abrogating the democratic method; America has undergone an appalling decline in marriage relations; God can do no more for us than love can do—sympathize, uphold, redeem; the function of the church is the purveying not of social advice but of real devotion to Christ; the plain truth of religion is the only help for the world which cannot trust its leaders; men should not longer receive relief, they should all be put to work; security depends fundamentally on character and not on riches.

All of the foregoing illustrate what actual preaching is like, and, by and large, what it ought to be.

Two noted English preachers, G. Campbell Morgan and J. D. Jones, both beyond seventy, have said recently the same thing on this matter without collusion. For the present situation they would preach as they did in the Great War. The sovereignty of God is the precise phrase each used independently to describe what his main subject matter would be.

Devoted to the Individual.

That means the Law of Righteousness is the only thing to be uttered in a time of moral disorder and international tension and hate. For it is true that all evils, whether large or small, are the result of the disintegration of morals, the decay of religion, the irresponsibility of the individual. And all the good will come again only by way of religion in the individual. That is why preaching is always the same.

One should strive to have poise and imperturbability in a disordered world, and thus bring it back to order again. Dr. Calkins impresses me with these words: "I will be less and less occupied with plans and panaceas, with programs and policies, and devote myself more and more to individuals. For the great drama of the outside world has its reflection, its reproduction, in the heart of the individual man. If I can change the outlook, alter the attitude, meet the need of one human soul, I am doing a work of lasting importance. For this means not only a life saved but the only kind of life that can ultimately save the world."—In Boston Evening Transcript.

HANKS CHAPEL REVIVAL.

Revival services will begin at Hanks Chapel Christian Church on the second Sunday in August. There will be an all day service on Sunday, and Rev. W. J. Andes, the pastor, will preach at the morning hour. Dinner will be served on the grounds at noon. The afternoon service will be in charge of Mr. Charles D. Johnston, superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, and the Singing Class.

Services during the week will be at 11 o'clock in the morning and 7:45 at night. People who are close by are invited to share in these services. All are asked to pray that souls will be born into God's kingdom during these revival days.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

We are glad to report that after a lot of time, worry, and expense, we finally got our deep well finished and started the pump a few days ago. The water is cold and good. It certainly will be fine to have plenty of water. If nothing happens, I believe from now on we will be blest in that line. To be short of water in an orphanage family is a real handicap. If we never had any problems to cause extra expense, we could get along with our yearly income. But extra expenses come and we cannot help it. For instance, the deep well had to be drilled 270 feet to get water. It had to be lined and relined to get far enough down to shut out the quick sand. The pipe to carry the water quite a distance to the pressure tank, the deep well pump and fixtures to go with it, cost quite an outlay of money. This was an expense that we were not looking for at all a year ago.

We never look for hospital bills, but they come. Repair bills on buildings all cost money. You see, all the money you send us goes to keep up the plant, as well as the children. The cost of the well will be added to our capital account and increases the value of the orphanage plant that much. We have it as an asset and a blessing.

If our people would visit the orphanage and see what the church has here and get first-hand information, it would be fine. A lady visited the orphanage sometime ago, and we received a letter from her this week in which she had this to say: "I just want to take this opportunity to tell you how much I appreciate the work you are carrying on there and the way you are carrying it out. I felt since being down there is too little consideration of the orphanage on the part of those who should support it." Distance doesn't count much any more. Good cars and good roads bring places close together. Come to see us and spend the day.

A LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

Sir:

Two weeks ago you called upon me as Promotional Secretary to tell something of what is being accomplished by my office. I am glad to respond.

It has been my policy to let the work speak for itself. If anything important gets done, somebody will learn about it—and tell it. Since you, and others, insist, I will list a few noticeable things that have been done since my job began and in which I had some share:

In the Valley of Virginia: All churches grouped into pastorates, and two new pastors secured. Adjustments are now being made and another pastor being sought.

In Eastern Virginia: A new church at Little Creek, one new pastor located. Another church aided in getting a minister. Another group aided in seeking a minister.

In North Carolina: A new church organized at Hope Mills, another beginning at Asheboro. One church back in Conference that had voted out. Several pastors aided in finding work. One group of churches organized as pastorate, and several others in the process.

All enterprises of the church have been presented at all Conferences, and Sunday School Conventions. Missionary meetings have been attended and aided. The ministers have been visited and encouraged. A long list of Sunday school, missionary and young people's workers have been given suggestions and materials. Hundreds of personal conferences with pastors and local leaders have taken my time and given me joy as I have come to know the loyalty and love of these church workers.

Our Church is now one hundred and forty-five years old. During the years there have developed some sore spots. It has been my hope to clear these and make the organism of the Church function more normally. Some of them show signs of improvement. If someone, skilled in the ministry of souls, can be given to the churches to clear these festering places, then our beloved Church will get back some of its youthful vigor.

In recent years we have closed several churches. This summer we have two college ministerial students out trying to open the doors of these churches. In some instances we have waited too long to make this effort, but some churches may begin to function again. Two fine young ladies are conducting vacation Bible schools where there might not have been any without their aid.

Mr. Editor, did you know that we need within the Southern Convention this fall eight new ministers? This may not mean much to some, but when one undertakes to find that many preachers that the churches will call and like, it becomes a big job.

Some very fine reports have been made (one this week in this paper) of the Elon Summer Conference. It takes a lot of work to put on a successful school for two hundred people even if the school does last for only a week. Try it sometime. The whole problem of religious education within the Convention falls largely to me for solution and execution. Think for a minute of what you would do if you had two hundred churches to aid with training teachers for children, young people and adults. The best literature available for all age groups is to be found and recommended (and then try to get the churches to use it). Training schools for superintendents, teachers, and prospective teachers are being planned so all churches can share in this good work.

These churches of ours are filled with young people who are eager to know how they can best serve. Through the Pilgrim Fellowship they turn to me for information and inspiration. Now, Sir, this is where one can find real joy, for they are bubbling with life, eager to be active, restive under authority, and anxious to help the Church serve this needy world.

If any of your readers, Mr. Editor,

In Memoriam

WILLIAMS.

Mr. J. J. Williams was born August 10, 1860, in Orange County, N. C., and departed this life at his home in Guilford County, N. C., on March 21, 1939.

In 1880 he married Miss Bettie Jones Kernodle. Surviving him are his wife and three children: S. L. and N. L. Williams, and Mrs. Pansy Powell; eight grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

Mr. Williams attended the Graham Academy in Graham, N. C. He taught the public school in his community for several years. At one time he represented the Farmers' Mutual Fire Assurance Company of Guilford County as Agent of Claims. In addition to his public activities Mr. Williams was a prominent and successful farmer.

In early life Brother Williams accepted Christ as his Savior. He has been a very helpful and loyal church member through the years.

Funeral services were conducted in his home church by the pastor, assisted by Rev. T. J. Green, a former pastor. May the Lord promote his memory, and comfort all who sustain a loss.

L. L. WYRICK.

PATTON.

On the first day of March, 1939, the death angel entered our midst and bore away one of our most valued and beloved charter member, Mrs. J. W. Patton. She took an active part in all our affairs, gave liberally to the support of the Gospel and all charitable institutions. She loved the Church and all its interests.

She was a true friend, a devoted wife and mother. We sincerely mourn the loss of our beloved member, but we know that our loss is her eternal gain, and we are assured that she has entered into the joys of the redeemed.

We commend her example of faith and devotion to Christ, to all who knew her and loved her.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we have lost one of our best and most beloved members, the community a valued friend, and her family a devoted wife and mother.

2. That we recognize the hand of our Heavenly Father in all His affliction and bow most humbly to His will, knowing that He does all things well.

3. That we extend anew our sympathy to the family.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be placed on the records of the Woman's Missionary Society, and a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

not imprison truth. Truth crushed to earth will rise again, the eternal years are hers.

When You Are Sick—Call on God and Call a Doctor.

In his latter years Asa became ill with what seems to have been the gout. The chronieler criticizes him because "in his disease he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians." He writes this, not because it is wrong to consult physicians, but because in Asa's case it was evidence that he had lost his early, simple, vital faith in God. He is likewise teaching that although God works through physicians, that God himself is the Great Physician. If you are ill, seriously ill, or potentially seriously ill, call a doctor. The man whose child has diphtheria and who does not call a doctor is not showing faith, but a lack of plain common-sense. But in addition to calling a doctor, one ought to call upon God. In answer to prayer God can and does release healing power that is a real factor in the healing process. The physician and God are workers together.

church where the will of God is set forth. No one can fully appreciate the sadness of a soul who wakes up to realize that if he had gone to church he would have not gone into sin. It was Jesus' custom to go to church every Sunday. Tomorrow is Sunday. The Lord calleth thee.

Prayer—Our Father, we thank Thee for the truth, beauty and glory of the church, and for the duty we have of being a part of it. May we not forget. In Jesus' name we ask it. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"INSIDE LOOKING OUT."

"Comparing spiritual things with spiritual."—I Cor. 2:13.

Paul describes the difference between the wisdom and spirit of the world and the wisdom and spirit of God. Man cannot live in the world and be competent to judge the church, or to know the spirit there. If he would know the spirit of God and the things that are freely given us of God, he must place himself where the Holy Ghost teacheth and look at the world in which he lives. Only by doing so is he able to judge all things rightly. Only by doing so can he at all have any semblance of the mind of Christ.

Prayer—O Lord, lead us into truth by the way of Thy love. We live in the world. It has a tremendous pull on our lives. Grant us Thy spirit to be in and know the true church, and apply its principles to everyday living. Amen.

A WORLD FULL OF OVERCOMING

By REV. ALVA MARTIN KERR, D. D.

It was Helen Keller, was it not, who, in answer to the lament that there is so much suffering and sorrow and misfortune in the world, replied, "Yes, but there is also so much overcoming." The overcoming! That is the part which so many people miss. They see the hardship, the pain and sickness, the grief and disappointment; but they fail to see the marvelous heroism with which so many men and women meet and overcome these hard things. Helen Keller herself was a brilliant example of just such overcoming—indeed so brilliant that one hardly thinks of her blindness and deafness and dumbness because she has overcome them all marvelously and with such grace and sweetness. We do not think of her as deaf and blind, but rather we think of her loveliness, her undaunted spirit, her incredible patience and persistence, her remarkable mastery of her misfortunes and handicaps. And so instead of becoming an example of the world's gloom and woe, she has become a luminous illustration of its overcoming and of the manner in which God can enable one to turn even the most hopeless of situations into beacons of strength and light.

And there is so much more of just such overcoming than most of us ever take time to think—indeed than most folks ever know anything about. There is not a community which is not being enriched by it. Men and women who have met misfortune and met it bravely, who have suffered intolerable pain or disappointment but suffered it sweetly, who have gone down under crushing burdens but have gone down with a smile on their face and a sympathetic hand held out to those who were worse off than themselves! Homes that through long, long years have sheltered sickness or insanity, and where husband or wife or child or other loved ones have through an interminable length of time ministered with a devotion that is entrancing in its unbroken faithfulness and tenderness! Who has not seen such homes? Who has not been put to shame by such uncomplaining suffering, such loving ministry, such radiant gloom? How almost universal it is that in the very lives and in the very homes where petulance and glowering and complaining would be most justified, there we find most of sunshine and good cheer. It is only in the homes where sickness is of short duration that folks complain and gall under it most. It is only where there is minor and passing affliction that there is resentment and bitterness, as a rule. Almost invariably in those homes in which sickness is a matter of long, wearing years, and in those individuals to whom misfortune is a life-time task, there is a marvelous amount of overcoming that gives sunlight and cheerfulness and a large measure of genuine happiness.

One of the things most to be regretted about life is that there are so many who do not perceive and appreciate this wonderful and beautiful overcoming that is taking place every day in the common life that is all about them. They are impressed with it in Helen Keller or some other outstanding hero, but they are absolutely blind to the heroic element which is constantly being infused into life by their own friends and neighbors. There is not a community which does not have some one whose life is such that if it were written up by some Dickens or O. Henry, the story would touch to the depths the very men and women who live near it day by day without once perceiving that it has anything peculiarly touching or admirable about it. Thus an incalculable amount of the richest and best part of life is going to waste—going to waste because it is unappreciated and unused by us whose spirits ought to be enriched and purified in its presence. There is scarce a community which does not have at least one home in which for years and years some poor unfortunate cripple or some infinitely more unfortunate mental defective has been shut within its four walls. The pathos of it, the heartache and strain of it, are beyond human language. And yet what marvelous overcoming—overcoming on the part of the loved ones who minister with such faithful tenderness even more than on the part of the afflicted. But how few of us ever realize that these are heroes made out of common clay and before our very eyes? And how rarely ever do we speak a word of admiration and encouragement either to the afflicted or to those who wait upon them, or spend a cheerful hour with them to light them on their hard way? Thus we rob them, we rob ourselves. We rob them of the help and strength our presence and friendship could and should give. And we rob ourselves of the spirit and benediction that fall like the refreshing dews of heaven from the lives of those who are overcomers. One of the most illuminating and enheartening studies of Scripture is to trace out how many and varied are the promises which God has made to him who overcometh. It is a compensation which inheres in the here and now as well as in the everlasting future, and it lifts life out of the sordid and the common and puts radiance into it. And no one can understand the world's life, nor be fit for the everyday life that is around about him, until he has learned to perceive and participate in its overcoming. How much glorious overcoming there is!—"The Herald of Gospel Liberty."

CAROLINA CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

Carolina Christian Church is located three miles north of Burlington, N. C. It was organized in 1932 under the leadership of Rev. J. F. Apple, with thirteen charter members. The L. Banks Holt Manufacturing Company let us use a dwelling house for our church services.

In 1935 we remodeled the building and added two class rooms. Then about eighteen months ago the Carolina Mill closed and, since the members of the church were employed at this mill, it seemed almost impossible for the church to continue. Our present pastor, Melvin Dollar, who is a graduate of Elon College, has been serving us one year this month.

In the past year several improvements have been made. We have painted the church inside and out and also wall papered and covered it. At present we are working on a young people's classroom.

Since the L. Banks Holt Manufacturing Company has discontinued this mill, the houses are for sale. This past December they decided the church to the deacons.

Now, as we have two Dollars instead of one, we have bought a parsonage for their use.

Our Sunday school and church attendance has greatly increased. At present time we have a strong young people's society, which is a great help to the church and community. We have also an organized choir which is a spiritual help to the church. We are glad to report that we are having preaching services every Sunday instead of twice a month as in the past.

Working conditions have permitted us in the last six months to raise our pastor's salary from $125 to $520 per year. The present membership of the church is seventy-three and things look bright for the future.

The following ministers have served this church: Revs. Roy D. Coulter, G. C. Crutchfield, J. Everette Neese, O. A. Elmore, and Melvin Dollar.

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

The Upper-Alamance Fellowship meets with the Carolina Christian Church on Sunday, July 30.

Rev. Robert Lee House of Portsmouth, Va., is this week assisting Pastor Moody in the revival at Apple's Chapel Christian Church, near Brown Summit, N. C.

Rev. Miles A. McLean, pastor of the Congregational Church at Fort Myers, Florida, preached at Apple's Chapel for the opening of the revival on last Sunday morning, and at New Lebanon in the afternoon.

Mr. Ellis Clark has just completed a two weeks' vacation school at Linville, in the Valley of Virginia, with forty-eight pupils enrolled. Several local workers assisted in the school, three of whom had attended the Elon Leadership Training School.

Congratulations to Burlington Christian Church on its CHRISTIAN SUN subscription list! Their apportionment is ninety-two, and they have ninety-eight subscribers. Pastor Lightbourne says they hope to have additional subscriptions. Thank you, Burlington.

The Virginia Valley Central Woman's Missionary Conference is meeting today (July 27, 1939) at Mt. Olivet Christian Church, Rockingham County, Va., beginning at 10 o'clock and continuing through the entire day. A most interesting program has been arranged. The office of publication regrets that a copy of it did not reach Richmond in time to be printed in last week's issue of THE SUN.

After a visit to Virginia, the Rev. Mr. Murdock Butler has returned to his home in Conshohocken, Pa., where he is the pastor of the Gulph Mills Christian Church. During his stay in Virginia, Mr. Butler visited the Newport News Church where he was pastor in 1911. Sixteen people, who were members of the church there when he was pastor, were present for a prayer meeting which he conducted during this visit.

The Rev. James R. Clinton of Philadelphia, pastor-at-large for the Home Boards, will do the preaching in the open-air services in the grove adjoining the Timber Ridge Church beginning August 20 and continuing for two weeks. The music will be directed by the Rev. J. Owen Long of Harrisonburg. The pastor, Rev. R. A. Whitten, and his people expect great things, and ask that others share in praying for the success of this occasion.

The First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va., held its Daily Vacation Bible School the week of July 14. This was the second school held, and the attendance was doubled and the number of children attending each day tripled over last year. The pastor, Mr. House, conducted the general worship, instructing the group about the history and sanctuary of the church. The Juniors made books and

The morning worship of the church was planned and given by the Junior and Intermediate groups, assisted by the Primaries. This was climaxed by one young girl joining the church and the decision of several others to join in the near future.

UPPER ALAMANCE FELLOWSHIP.

The Upper Alamance Fellowship will meet with Carolina Christian Church on next Sunday at 4 o'clock. The principal speaker for the afternoon will be Mr. Vitus R. Holt, a member of the Burlington Christian Church, who has made a study of our churches. All present will join in a basket supper at 5:30. (Bring your own.) The evening program will be presented by the young people under the direction of Walter Cooper. Rev. W. J. Andes will be the speaker. The evening session will begin at 6:30 in order that those present may attend the evening church service elsewhere.

FORSYTH-GUILFORD ASSOCIATION.

The Forsyth-Guilford Association of Churches will meet on July 30, 1939, at 2:30 P. M., at Salem Chapel Christian Church near Walnut Cove, N. C. The program will be as follows: Scripture Reading and Prayer.

OBJECTIONS TO PASTORATES.

Some people are afraid of grouping churches into pastorates. They think that it is difficult for two or more churches to agree on the pastor to serve them, that the little church may not have equal opportunity with the larger ones, and that the pastorate may break up soon leaving the churches in worse shape than before the attempt at grouping.

A church that has a minister for part-time shares with another church the services of the minister. The only question to answer is whether it is better for the other church to be near or far away. The members of a single church are not always agreed on who the minister should be. The majority is supposed to rule. This will apply to a group of churches just as it does to one church.

The little church has a better chance to have a good minister if it is in a group than if it tries to go alone. Left alone the little church usually has to call a man from a long distance, in which case the service is inadequate, or take a man less qualified to serve who will work for little salary and who usually gives little service. A preaching ministry is about all that a small church can expect to get if it goes alone. In a parish with other churches, it may also have pastoral service. The only way for a small church to get a good minister and real service is to unite with near-by churches and secure a resident pastor.

Pastorates seldom need to break up. They can continue so long as the people are willing to let the majority rule and cooperate on that basis. But even if in some future time the pastorate should be discontinued, the values of the grouping would have been enjoyed so long as it lasted.

There are no real reasons why churches located near each other should not cooperate with each other in every possible way. In so doing they can answer the prayer of Jesus for the unity of the Church.

WASTED MONEY.

The money spent by ministers in going long distances to serve churches is wasted money. The time used in such travel could be invested to much better advantage. Scattered churches under the leadership of a single minister are our most expensive luxury, and one that we cannot afford longer.

If the money now spent for cars, gas, oil, and other expenses of travel were turned into the purchase of books and magazines, the printing of church bulletins and local church papers, and otherwise invested in constructive work, then the churches of our denomination would feel the thrill of new life. Many of our ministers spend so much for transportation that they cannot buy books and better prepare themselves for the high calling of the ministry.

So much time must be spent in travel that study is often neglected. The man of God may be of real help when he talks with a family about the religion of Jesus as they try to live it in the home, church, and community, but the time spent riding along the highway usually has little or no value for the people who pay the pastor's salary and need his ministry. Wasted time is one thing that can never redeemed.

Our churches cannot afford the luxury of wasted time and money on the part of the ministers. There is not nearly enough money to do the things that are desperately needed, and our people need more service than all our ministers can render. If we are to use good judgment, we must abandon the foolish luxury of preachers riding long distances and overlapping each other in territory. The sick, the perplexed, the sinful, the children, the youth, and the aged need the helpful ministry of the pastor who lives near and is known by his daily service. Leaders in the church need the help which a trained minister can give. The community needs the presence of a leader in things religious. We need to stop wasting money in paying for preaching only. This we can do by grouping churches, locating preachers near their people where they can really be pastors, and by giving the preachers a chance to study and to serve rather than waste time and money in useless travel.

HOW TO FORM PASTORATES.

The first step in forming a pastorate is in making up your mind that you want to do it. Then you get this idea over to other members of your church. Presently the church wants to get into a group and call a minister.

Most conferences have suggested the churches that should get together. This grouping may not seem wise to you, and your church. It is not binding, but it has back of it the judgment of some interested people. Consider it. Think what churches are near enough together to be served by one man, and what churches could pay a man a living salary.

Elect a committee to work with a like committee from another church or churches. Invite the other church (or churches) in the group you have in mind to elect such a committee to meet with yours.

Invite the Promotional Secretary of the Southern Convention to meet with the committee from the churches. He will be glad to assist. He can give information about available ministers and can otherwise help in setting up the pastorate.

The committees from the churches may decide on the pastor they think would meet the needs of the to-be-formed pastorate and then report back to the churches for instructions, or for the election of a pastor. Of course, plans for further meetings of the united committee, for salary and parsonage, and for other cooperation between the churches will need to be considered. No action of the committee can bind the churches, but the churches will seek to fol- (Continued on next page.)

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Eastern Virginia Christian Sunday School Convention was organized November 6, 1868. The following officers were elected: Dr. W. B. Wellons, president; Rev. R. H. Holland, vice-president; Rev. C. A. Apple, secretary; and Mr. Thomas J. Kilby, treasurer. It was voted that the Convention should meet annually on Tuesday the second Sunday in May.

Inasmuch as the first meeting in 1868 was an organization session, the first regular session was held in May, 1869. The recent session held at Rosemont Christian Church, on July 18, completed seventy years of history for the Convention. During these years the Convention has passed through many changes both as to the time of holding the session and as to the method of work planned for the program. For a number of years the Convention session covered three days. It was then reduced to two days. For several years the session has been limited to one day, at times having an evening session.

It may be of interest for SUN readers to know that in 1869 there were five churches in the Eastern Virginia Conference having a membership of over one hundred as follows: Antioch, 564; Bethlehem, 224; Cypress Chapel, 432; Holy Neck, 335; Suffolk, 124. There were eighteen churches in the Conference with a total membership of 2,301. The Sunday School Convention was small in its beginning but undertook the task of stimulating the organization of mission schools for the purpose of establishing new churches and the development of Bible study in the various churches. In some of the Sunday schools children were taught to spell and read in the Primary Department. A number of people learned the first lessons from a book in the Sunday school.

The recent session of the Convention at Rosemont was well attended. A full program provided for discussion of some of the problems and plans for the whole church. There were no reports from the various Departmental Superintendents. This was a disappointment and a distinct loss for those who desired information as to the progress of the past year. The Convention chiefly emphasized cooperation in paying off the indebtedness of Elon College, the adoption of the Program of Progress prepared by the denominational leaders, representing the General Council, and the financial support of the general enterprises of the denomination.

One wonders when the Convention will face seriously the urgency of increasing the membership in our schools and the efficiency of the various departments. A Program of Progress certainly must include a greater emphasis upon the work done in the local Sunday schools. Every church with a Sunday school membership less than the church membership faces a task within its own church membership. That condition exists in many of our churches today. Eight of the forty-three churches of the Eastern Virginia Conference have a Sunday school membership equal to the church membership, and these are among the smaller churches. Not one of the large churches has a Sunday school enrollment equal to the church membership.

This observation is not made with any intention of criticizing the present plan or program of the Convention. But it does seem to the writer that our Convention and our churches concentrate more effort upon the development of the local Sunday school. The Convention should not be limited to a one-day session. At least two days should be given to the work, and this would give time to plan a more extensive program covering the various phases of the needs and opportunities. A one-day session is great. But a two-day session could be twice as great.

FRANKLINTON COLLEGE NEWS.

We had a good conference at Franklinton—the best yet. There were seventy-five registered delegates and an equal number of children in the Daily Vacation Bible School.

The Board of Control had its annual meeting on June 27. Members present were: E. C. Gillette, J. G. Truitt, E. C. Lawrence, J. A. Henderson, R. L. House. An important committee was appointed to raise funds and begin work on the incomplete building. Rev. J. A. Henderson is chairman of the committee. An Airplane Banquet was held Thursday evening. This was followed by a program called Talent Night. Dr. E. M. Halliday won the enthusiastic applause of the audience, and the hearty endorsement of the critics, by his selections on the harmonica.

R. L. HOUSE.

GOOD REVIVALS.

Millard Stevens was with me at Salem Chapel and did some able preaching. The church was greatly inspired. We received three members (adults). The meeting closed Friday night, July 7. Services were held at 8:30 A. M., and 8:00 P. M.

Services at Belew Creek came to a close last night (July 14). Rev. Jesse H. Dollar did the preaching and got results. We received six members, all children.

You may publish the above statements of you wish. The encouraging thing about both these meetings is that the church has seemed to assume a greater responsibility of loyalty. I feel sure we will get other members later as a result of each meeting.

I cannot tell what the outcome at Pleasant Ridge may be next week. I am praying and hoping for a real revival.

BARRETT'S CHRISTIAN CHURCH OBSERVES HOME-COMING.

On Sunday, July 30, 1939, Barrett's Christian Church in Eastern Virginia will observe Home-Coming Day. A cordial invitation is extended to all of its former living pastors, all non-resident members, and all former members and friends to attend this meeting.

A fine program is being arranged for the occasion, which will include worship, music, and fellowship. The observance begins at 10:00 A. M. with Sunday school and the morning worship at 11 o'clock. At 12:30 a plate lunch will be served. At 2:00 P. M. appropriate home-coming exercises will be in order. Special music will feature all of the services of the day.

Remember the date—Sunday, July 30, and the place—Barrett's Christian Church, one of the oldest Christian Churches in the Southern Convention.

You are most cordially invited to be present.

low the wisdom of the committee. In such a simple way our scattered churches can get together and find for themselves the path to progress. The services of the Promotional Secretary are at the disposal of any church or group of churches that desire his assistance in forming a pastorate. Write to him at Elon College, N. C. Right now is a fine time to get several new pastorates formed.

Twelve Years Is Not So Long

By THE LATE HERMON ELDREDGE.

Twelve years is not so long. Just a week ago today I met a young woman on the train whom I had first met twelve years ago, when she was a girl twelve years old at our first summer school of the Christian Church at Virginia Beach, Va. I remembered her and her little sister of ten years very well, for they were quite the "the life of the party" when they were in evidence. And now this young lady was on her way to Chicago to become the Director of Religious Education of one of the great churches of that city and to lead children and youth in facing the great adventure of life.

Can it be that this is the twelve-year-old I met only twelve short years ago at Virginia Beach? No, she is not the same; she is the product of the years.

Twelve years is not so long, but in those twelve years there has been a great background of Christian Education working and it has transformed this young woman from the little child of twelve years ago to this competent Christian young woman who faces me today.

And it has been a full program of Christian Education from the home through the church and community and school and on to the college and university into the full life she now enjoys. She has before her the school of experience, but she is prepared to meet it. Twelve years is not long, but how much has come into that life in these twelve years! There have been woven into that life the atmosphere and teachings of a Christian home and the background of a Christian Church with its Sunday school and its Christian Endeavor society and its helpful atmosphere of service. There have been woven into that life, and into the life of that little ten-year-old sister (who is also a teacher of Christian Education) the love and Christian nurture of parents and teachers and preachers, and this followed up by the training of Defiance Christian College and—well, twelve years is not so long, but those twelve years have wrought a miracle in transforming these two children who played around the grounds of Virginia Beach into competent, useful, Christian leaders.

Twelve years is not so long. And I am thinking now of an outcast woman whom I know very well. Twelve years ago she was in a home in the hills of the East, with every possibility of as useful a life as any young girl of her age, but today she is an outcast and despise by society and there is none to speak well of her. She has deserted her home and her friends, who would now help her if they could, and has chosen to live with the underworld. And twelve years ago she was a carefree girl in a Christian home. Twelve years is not so long.

But this bright girl of twelve years ago lacked the counsel of those who might have helped her then, and she was given her own will and way, which led not in the path of Christian nurture. A part-time church had little influence on her life. She left school and home as early as she found it possible to do so and the years have brought to the world a young woman who may spread evil continually for many years to come. The whole story of that life is too heart-rending to go over in any detail, but it is enough to say that there is a broken home which ever has a shadow and a world which has a problem with a life which is given over to sin and self-will.

Twelve years is not so long, and twelve years ago you could not say but that there was as much natural promise in the life of one of these young women as in the other. The one who is now seemingly beyond the reach of home and church and right was as fine and as bright and as promising a child as you will find in a long journey. But the home and the church and the school failed somehow, and what a difference for time and eternity it made!

Do the words "Christian Education" sound like machinery? I sometimes think they do, but what better name can we give it? Whatever you may call it, we mean that which gives a child a Christian home with Christian nurture and a church and school and playground which are controlled and motivated by Christian love and wisdom, and a college which knows God as well as "things" and which sends young men and young women out into the world with a faith as strong or stronger than when they came on to its campus from Christian homes.

What we mean by Christian Education is that love and nurture and training which takes a child in its earliest years and work with God in performing the miracle of changing that life into a Christian manhood and womanhood through the influences of a Christian home and school and church and on into larger life through training and service until a man is given to the world which shall be after the pattern of the man Christ Jesus. That is true Christian Education and that is a true goal in homes and churches and colleges and on playgrounds and in study and work and play.

Twelve years is not so long, but there may be put into that twelve or twenty years that which will prove a blessing or a curse to the child and the man and the world.

We have been satisfied with too small and detached and fragmentary a program. We have not linked the home to the church and the school and to the other relations of life; but we have now sensed our mistake and realize that it is not enough that a child shall go to Sunday school or to Christian Endeavor, but back of that and in it all shall be the church and the home and the school all working together in all the life of the child and in the making of the man which is to be.

We have "specialized too much with the child and have tried to reach him in one way or another or with one society or another and have not considered the hours and days he spends in other situations. The Sunday school or any other society should never forget the home, and should not seek to take its place in a child's life. It should rather study how it may work with the home and with the church and school in building up that life in true Christian character. No organization should live for itself, but all our church organizations should live for the good of those who compose them and for the service they can render to the Kingdom.

Twelve years is not so long, but in twelve years we should get nearer our goal of having the church know the home and the school and the child, and work together with them in the making of the man.

And it is coming. Daily Vacation Bible School and Week-Day Religious Instruction in a thousand centers of our land are signs of its coming. But these are not enough, although they are the earnest of much which is to be. The greatest problems center in the home, and our greatest forces for right and for righteousness in the life of the church and the child are in our Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor societies. Our first and great task is to make these finer and more fruitful in reaching the child, not only an hour a week, but more fully into his home and school and play life. And the church will begin to be not only a field but a force for good in the child's life, and the Kingdom of EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

The forty-fifth annual session of the Eastern North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention met on July 11 at New Hope Christian Church, near Wake Forest. Although only half the churches of the Conference were represented, there were more than one hundred people present, including eight ministers who serve in Eastern Carolina. The members of the New Hope Church served a bountiful dinner and supper on the grounds.

The theme of the Convention was "Reflecting Christ," which was the topic used by the president, Rev. J. Everette Neese, in his address. This theme was also carried out by Rev. S. E. Madren, who spoke on "Reflecting Christ Through Christian Endeavor," and by Rev. C. L. Moody, who spoke on "Reflecting Christ Through the Sunday School."

Rev. F. C. Lester presented in graphic form the different phases of work being carried on by the Eastern North Carolina churches through their Conference, emphasizing the importance of cooperative effort in the "helping hand" the churches hold out to various groups through their apportionments. Dr. L. E. Smith spoke on "The Board of Christian Education, Its Work and Needs," showing that the work of the Board for the churches is limited only insofar as it lacks funds to carry on its work.

During the afternoon the group divided into three sections, those interested in young people's work going to Rev. Allyn T. Robinson's group, those in young people's work to Mrs. F. C. Lester's group, and those interested in the general subject of "Improving Our Sunday Schools" were led by Rev. A. C. Todd.

The evening address was given by Dr. Stanley C. Harrell of Durham, N. C., who gave "The Marks of an Effective Sunday School."

The Attendance Banner was won by Amelia Christian Church, the Progressive Banner by Pope's Chapel, and the Mission Banner by Wake Chapel.

Two important items of business were transacted. It was voted that the time of the next annual session would be left to the executive committee, so that the Eastern North Carolina Sunday School Convention could cooperate with others in securing a person well-trained in Sunday school work to be present at all the Conventions next year. In the event that such is impossible, the meeting will be held on Thursday after the second Sunday, which will be more convenient to the farmers than Tuesday. The other business item was a vote to raise the dues to ten cents a member from each Sunday school in the Convention.

The officers elected for next year are as follows: Mrs. E. M. Carter, Youngsville, president; Rev. A. C. Todd, Sanford, vice-president; Mrs. Brookston Eaves, Liberty, secretary; Mr. J. F. Hillyard, Cary, treasurer. The meeting will be held next year with Mt. Herman Christian Church, near Garner.

BURLINGTON VACATION SCHOOL.

The Daily Vacation Bible School of the First Christian Church, Burlington, N. C., was held from June 26 to July 7, 1939. A very fine school was held this year, with an enrollment of ninety-five children and fourteen teachers and helpers. The faculty consisted of the following: Beginners Department, Messrs. Kenneth Wallace, J. D. Ezell, Clyde Gordon, and Miss Peggy Lightbourne; Primary Department, Messrs. Harold Mercer, Melvin Dollar, and Miss Rebecca Terrell; Junior Department, Mrs. Harvey Horne, Miss Margaret Fonville, and Mrs. J. D. Strader; Intermediate Department, Rev. Melvin Dollar, and Dr. J. H. Lightbourne. Miss Tora Rudd was the Superintendent.

The theme of the school this year was "The Bible." The three older departments learned something of how our Bible came to be. In the handicrafts period many useful and interesting things were made, some of which were: Jewish scrolls, a shepherd's tent and animals, wooden book-ends, a frieze portraying the life of Christ, repaired song books for the Junior Christian Endeavor, and a book case made for the Junior Department.

One of the most interesting sessions of the school was when the Juniors and Intermediates brought old and odd editions of the Bible from their homes. The oldest Bible was published in 1765. A copy of the Catechism was found that was published in 1755.

Following eight days of Bible drill the girls met the boys in a game of Bible baseball. The girls, first at bat, began as if they intended to run away with the game. Their first two batsmen got on base, but two outs followed. Then two more hits scored a run and filled the bases. An out followed and the side was retired. In the eighth the first three girls got on base, but the next three went out in order. The boys made a gallant effort in their half of the eighth, filling the bases with two down, but with victory in sight the side was retired. The score showed 1 run and 13 hits for the girls and no runs and 7 hits for the boys. This is the second victory for the girls, since they won last year 2 to 1 in eleven innings.

The school closed with a picnic on the church grounds to which all the parents were invited. TORA RUDD.

A MARKER FOR BARRETT'S CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

One of the oldest of our churches in Eastern Virginia is Barrett's Christian Church, located near Wakefield, Va. Three years ago the people gathered at a "home-coming and decided that a marker should be placed at this famous old church, so that this sacred spot can be remembered by future generations. Fifty dollars ($50.00) was collected and an additional amount subscribed. The money was turned over to the treasurer, W. E. MacClenny, of Suffolk, who has kept it on deposit.

A committee was appointed to carry forward the work. This committee is composed of W. S. Barrett of Dendron; W. W. Hines, Petersburg; J. Q. Hancock, Sedley; J. F. Wellons, Wakefield; and W. E. MacClenny.

The committee believes that there are many others within the confines of the Eastern Virginia Conference who would like to have some part in contributing to this most worthy undertaking, if only it should be called to their attention. We urge the ministers to mention this matter to their congregations at their next appointments. The committee is eager to complete their work by having collected the necessary funds by having the marker ready to be placed not later than September or early October.

Any contribution that any one feels inclined to make to this fund, and there should be many, should be sent to Mr. W. E. MacClenny, Suffolk, Va., who will acknowledge same by sending the contributor a receipt.

That was a wonderful tribute an old Scottish woman paid to George Matheson, the blind preacher. When asked why she moved from her basement to a sunny garret, she replied, "Ye canna hear Matheson preach and live in a cellar." Is it true of our teaching that those who receive it cannot live low lives, or dwell in the darkness? If otherwise, our teaching is vain."—The Christian Herald.

FOR THE CHILDREN

SUE'S BEAUTIFUL BOUQUET.

One night little Sue sleepily said "Good night" to her family and started up the stairs to her own little room to bed. Her uncle, who was visiting them, suddenly called her and said, "By the way, Sue, come back for a few minutes, please. I have a question or two to ask you."

Sue turned back, sat down on a stool at her uncle's feet, and looked up at him wonderingly. "Do you say your prayers every night, Sue?" he asked.

"Well, most every night," she answered. "Sometimes I get so sleepy that I just say, 'Dear Heavenly Father, help me to be a good girl.'"

"Do you belong to God?" asked her uncle.

"I go to Sunday school sometimes," said Sue, puzzled.

"Well, sit here by me for a little while and I will tell you a story." And here is the story as the uncle told it:

Once upon a time there was a little girl. When she went to school one morning she carried a beautiful bouquet of lovely pink rosebuds, fresh and fragrant, with the dew still upon them.

"Oh, what a beautiful bouquet!" her teacher exclaimed. "Won't you let me put them in this vase of water? Then all day long they will keep lovely and sweet, and they will give a great deal of pleasure to others, too, for all the children can enjoy them. Won't you give them to me?"

But the little girl clutched her bouquet tightly. "Please, teacher, I mean for you to have them sometime, but not just now. I want to keep them for a little while. I shall take good care of them for you," she replied.

So, instead of giving her flowers to her beloved teacher, she took them to her own desk. As she did not have a vase, she laid the flowers carefully on her desk and went about her day's work. Several times during the day she wished she had given them to her teacher, but she felt she could not walk down the aisle before all the other children. The others hardly noticed the flowers.

By and by the day ended. "Now is the time for me to give my bouquet to the teacher," thought the girl. So she picked up her flowers and went down the aisle.

"Teacher," she said softly, "here's my beautiful bouquet. I really meant to give it to you this morning." As she spoke, she held it out, but when she looked down she was amazed to find that it was no longer beautiful. The lovely buds had opened during the heat of the day; they were faded and withered. Even as she held the bouquet, a few petals fell to the floor. The fragrance and perfume were gone. The girl remembered how lovely it had been when the dew of the morning was upon it. Slowly she drew her hand back with the faded bouquet in it.

"But I don't suppose you want my bouquet now. I did not realize until this moment that it is no longer beau-

MOON LULLABY.

The moon is a baby
In her crib in the sky
Dreaming so sweetly
While the stars trip by.

She'll soon be a lady
In silver white gown,
A crown on her head
Shining brightly down.

Then she'll be an old lady
Like grandmother dear,
Knitting all day,
And scarcely can hear.

One night she'll go tripping
Across the blue sea,
To shine on dear children
Like you and like me.

Good-bye, lady moon,
Please do not stay long.
We will watch for your coming,
And sing you a song.

tiful," she said, as she turned away with a sob. Suddenly she felt very old and very tired.

But the teacher stretched out his hand. "Oh, but I do want your bouquet," he said and his voice seemed kind and loving. "You and I would both have been much happier if you had given it to me in the morning in all of its freshness and beauty; but such a bouquet as this is precious to me, even though it is faded and withered."

He smiled at the little girl so lovingly that she went home with a smile, too, but her heart was sad because she had not given her bouquet to the teacher when it was fragrant and lovely.

That was the uncle's story. Slowly Sue turned to him, looked at him wonderingly a second, and then the meaning of his story dawned upon her.

"Why I am that girl, and the teacher is Jesus, isn't he? But the bouquet?" she asked with a puzzled look.

"Your fresh young life is your lovely bouquet, Sue, and Jesus, the Teacher is asking for it now. Are you going to keep it or are you going to spend it in service to him?"

As Sue went up the steps, she firmly resolved never to neglect her prayers again. She was going to get up bright and early Sunday morning and go to Sunday school, not only next Sunday but every Sunday after this. —Adapted from Junior Life.

HOW GOOD WAS THE GOOD SAMARITAN.

By REV. ALLEN T. JONES,
Demorest, Georgia.

He was good in that he bound up the wounds of one victim of a gang of thieves. But did he stop there? What a shame if there was no effort to clean up the Jericho Road and make it safe for all travelers!

"Binding up the wounded!" Missions to people who are already Christian, community chests, Red Cross aid, relief—all this is so commendable that we are in danger of thinking that it is the sum-total of goodness. But the pity is that there should ever have been so many wounded in the first place.

Modern good Samaritans need to stress the preventive side of religion, to hold that when people keep falling off the side of a cliff, ambulance work at the bottom is not enough. Wanted is a fence around the top.

And modern Samaritans will be disappointed when the only fruit of love is charity. For of such it has been said that it is twice cursed. It hardens him who gives and softens him who takes. To playing the role of Lady Bountiful, stooping down to give a "helping hand" they prefer to give a "linking hand" of mutual respect and of common endeavor for better things.

The forces that control society are not those which the state employs against its worst offenders. The powers of greatest influence in our nation continue to be those that reach down to the heart and mind of individual men and women, purifying their motives and enlightening their judgment. Churchmen and schoolmen must not grow discouraged in the face of highly financed and noisy opposition. The battle is not to be strong. In patience let us possess our souls and claim the souls of youth.—Charles J. Turck.

WE RISE BY LIFTING.

That title seems, on its face, to violate a natural law, but in reality it doesn't and it certainly does declare a moral and spiritual law. It would be well if we could learn this law especially as it applies morally and spiritually. We do not improve our morality nor our spirituality, and neither do we win the esteem and admiration of other by belittling, or abusing, other people. Even some ministers, preachers in their pulpits, sometimes so far forget themselves as to discredit other ministers and the ministry itself in the minds and hearts of their congregations. The late lamented Dr. W. W. Staley, who in his days said so many wise things, said that when any minister in the pulpit began to berate his fellow ministers and declare that many of them were not worthy to be in the pulpit the ministers so declaring were hurting themselves worse than anyone else; because a minister, and the ministerial profession, are naturally held in such high regard it is very easy to berate them.

Examine the proposition just a little. Suppose the next time you call your physician, in case of sickness, he takes occasion to state that fifty per cent, or some large number of physicians are "quacks." One wonders if by that statement your physician would raise himself in your esteem and admiration. Or suppose the next time you have an attorney he were to declare to you that fifty per cent, or a large number of lawyers were frauds and dishonest. You might have arrived at that conclusion yourself, but it would not increase your estimate and esteem for the attorney making the declaration against other attorneys. We just simply do not rise in the esteem and respect of others by knocking, belittling and abusing other people, especially those of our own calling or profession. We rise by lifting. If a physician is a "quack," or an attorney is a fraud, his patrons and constituents will find that out without being advised by others of that profession. And if brother ministers are false teachers and promoters of evil, it will not be long before the pew, the laity will make the discovery and either refuse to call them as pastors, or will make accusations against them, based on the actual facts to proper officials in the church.

There are two Scriptures that sometimes help us ministers as well as others if properly applied, namely, "Judge not, that you be not judged. For with that judgment ye judge ye shall be judged: and with what measure you mete it shall be measured unto you. Why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considereth not the beam that is in thy own eye." (Matthew 7:1-3.) The mote as one knows is a very small object; the beam quite a large one.

The second is that in which Jesus Himself said, "For God sent not the Son into the world to judge the world; but that the world should be saved through Him. He that believeth on him is not judged: he that believeth not hath been judged already, because he hath not believed on the name of the only begotten Son of God." (John 3:17, 18.)

The fact is the pulpit is not a place for abuse, but for exhortation and for a revelation of God's love, mercy and grace for a sinning world. Abuse is not preaching. We are commanded to exhort with all long suffering and endurance and in doing this we help to lift others and in the lifting we ourselves go upward in the high calling with which God has so highly honored us.

The general thought in these lines applies to laymen as well as to ministers. There are those in a community who belittle others, delighting seemingly to tell and report the weakness, the faults and frailties of others. Such people do not raise themselves in the esteem and admiration of their neighbors, though they seem to think they do. We simply do not rise by pushing others down. The fifteenth Psalm gives a great sermon for us all, in which it is declared that, "the ones who shall sojourn in the presence of God and shall dwell in his holy hill, are those who slandereth not with his tongue, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor." Possibly the poet was not far wrong when he wrote:

There is so much bad in the best of us
And so much good in the worst of us,
That it ill behooves some of us,
To abuse the rest of us.

NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA
CONFERENCE CHRISTIAN MIS-SIONARY ASSOCIATION.

It has been the hope of the officers of the Christian Missionary Association that it will not be necessary to borrow money to finance its appropriations; but unless money is received from some source, it is going to be necessary to borrow, or else require those to whom the appropriations go to wait for this remuneration.

This year the Christian Missionary Association should close its records with a sizeable balance. But monies received at the Christian Missionary Association meeting in September will not meet the appropriations due the first of August and the first of September. So this statement is made and it is in the nature of an appeal.

Please send at once membership dues to the financial secretary, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, 401 Church Street, Burlington, N. C., if you can meet that obligation at this time. Dues are due for 1938-39 before or on Tuesday after the third Sunday in September.

J. H. LIGHTBOURNE.

CORRECTION!

By mistake THE CHRISTIAN SUN published two weeks ago a program for missionary societies on "Stewardship." This should be the program for September. The one printed this week on "Philippians" is the right one for August. THE CHRISTIAN SUN regrets its mistake, and hopes that the missionary women will keep their copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for July 13, so they can have the program material for September.

The American Board has reported that Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Chandler have left Boston on their way toward China after two years' furlough in this country. They have answered numberless legitimate inquiries which have come in, and they will be greatly missed.

Pilgrim Fellowship

"Youth at Work in the Church"

Emily Carleton Lester, Editor

HOW YOUNG PEOPLE MAY ASSIST IN THE CHURCH.

By MASON HOLLAND.

[Talk given at the Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship.]

We as young people of today, do not realize how fortunate we are for having the church, or the church building, where we may meet for worship, meditation, and prayer. Our forefathers and mothers did not have these advantages.

May we, through these days, open our eyes, our ears, our very selves to the revelation of God, which comes to us through the world He has made. We are called upon to make burnt offerings, as were those of times gone by. Jesus Christ made the one great sacrifice for us. Yet God does expect us to make sacrifices for Him today. We may not be able to do big things for Him, but we can do the smaller things that He asks of us. The church of the modern day needs strength of fellowship among the young people. Often where the youth fellowship is weak, we find the church weak. If the church provides a good meeting place for fine fellowship of youth, it is helping to meet one of the most important needs of today.

But fellowship is not enough. Young people need other things beside companionship. They must be trained, and trained in the church to be leaders and to be able to meet daily problems in a Christian way, and to help carry on the work of the church, in Sunday school and in the missionary societies and other phases of church work.

The church offers youth the best religious instruction and fellowship on earth. To obtain these instructions we must keep the young people in church, and help them realize they are playing a great part in the worship. One way to keep young people in church is to give them work, such as teaching in the Sunday school, putting them on different committees and letting them assist wherever and whenever they can.

Sunday school superintendents, teachers, missionary leaders, and young people in our churches may feel that it is impossible to attend

"CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP."

Below are given the questions and results of a "Christian Citizenship" test vote conducted by the young people of Antioch and Linville Churches in the Valley of Virginia. Test yourself.

I. Labor:

1. Do you think that a Christian citizen can conscientiously support government regulations of working hours and rate of wages?
Yes—30. No—14.
2. Do you think that a Christian citizen can become a millionaire by his own labor?
Yes—17. No—28.
3. Do you think that Christian women citizens should seek a career other than homemaking?
Yes—23. No—21.
4. Would you as a Christian citizen make use of a machine or labor-saving device, if it meant throwing men out of work and on relief?
Yes—6. No—39.

II. Patriotism:

1. Would you as a Christian citizen salute the flag?
Yes—43. No—2.
2. Would you as a Christian citizen vote for a negro for President of the United States?
Yes—23. No—22.
3. Would you as a Christian citizen cooperate in any policy that you opposed if the majority were in favor of it?
Yes—19. No—28.
4. Judging from a Christian standpoint, would you favor a League of Nations?
Yes—30. No—15.
5. Do you as a Christian citizen believe that immigration should be restricted in the U. S.?
Yes—29. No—15.

III. Law and Government:

1. Should a Christian citizen violate a law, if obeying it means disobeying his conscience?
Yes—8. No—34.
2. Do you, thinking as a Christian citizen, believe in unlimited freedom of press and speech, some freedom of press and speech, or none whatever?
Unlimited—11. Some—31.
None—1.

IV. War:

1. Which war would you as a Christian citizen take part in, offensive, defensive, or none at all?
Offensive—1. Defensive—18.
None—25.

BEAUTY AS AN AID TO WORSHIP.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR AUGUST 6, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Rev. 21:10-27.

Daily Readings—

Monday—"The Beauty of Holiness"—I Chron. 16:27-30.

Tuesday—The Beauty of Peace—Psalm 122.

Wednesday—The Beauty of Music—Psalm 150.

Thursday—The Beauty of Humble Service—Matt. 20:25-28.

Friday—A Lake-Side Experience—Luke 5:1-9.

Saturday—A Mountain-Top Experience—Mark 9:2-8.

Challenges to Thought (for short talks):

1. Beauty in architecture. It is usually easier to worship in beautiful churches than anywhere else. Church architecture and design are an important branch of the art of worship. Churches should be more beautiful than our homes.

2. Music has always been an important aid to worship. Both instrumental and vocal music are employed in nearly every formal church service.

3. Beauty in the world of nature may be used as an aid to worship. Outdoor services at dawn or sunset, candlelight, consecration services, services with form and beauty, all indicate the desire of youth to couple the religious and esthetic.

4. Lovely literature, both sacred and secular, may be used to great advantage in worship. It is important that the selections be well read.

5. Pictures may be used with great effectiveness. Many helpful services of worship are built around the great masterpieces of Christian art.

6. Beautiful physical symbols, such as crosses, candles, altar furniture, and the like are valuable aids to worship. Dare to create a little altar with cross and candles as a focal point for your worship service.

There are hindrances to beauty—

1. Beauty is not always appreciated and understood because people have different ideas about what is beautiful.

2. Beauty is not given proper attention often because people are physically lazy, mentally sluggish, and emotionally stagnant.

3. Beauty is marred because of sin. Make this meeting more than a discussion of the topic. Take steps to improve the worship of the church, Sunday school, or Christian Endeavor society. Consult with your pastor.

Suggested Hymns—

"When Morning Gilds the Skies."

"For the Beauty of the Earth."

"Fairest Lord Jesus." S. E. M.

JEHOSHAPHAT: A LIFE OF OBEDIENCE.

LESSON V—JULY 30, 1939.

GOLDEN TEXT: Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness.

—Matthew 6:33.

LESSON: II Chronicles 17:1-19.

Public Office as a Public Trust.

Jehoshaphat looked upon his public office as a public trust. He evidently thought that he had been permitted by God to become master in order to serve. The records indicate that he used his high office for the public good and not for personal profit. And even after he had prospered and grown in possessions and in prestige and power, he remained humble and obedient, seeking the will of the Lord, and then trying to do it. For twenty-five years he ruled Judah, and they were years, for the most part, of prosperity at home, and friendly relations and influence abroad. It is well with a nation and a community when its leaders are men and women who look upon public office as a public trust, who look upon their appointments or their elections to office not as a means of "feathering their nests," but of furthering the best interests of their people.

Personal Religion.

"And Jehovah was with Jehoshaphat, because he walked in the first ways of his father David, and sought not unto Baalim." What Jehoshaphat preached for others he practiced himself. "He sought the God of his father, and walked in his commandments, and not after the doings of Israel." The last phrase in that quotation is significant. This king did not take his standards of conduct from his contemporaries. He did not "do as the Romans do, when he was in Rome," figuratively speaking. It would have been so easy for him to adopt the easy-going ways of his fellow-leaders in adjoining Israel, to accommodate himself to their practices, to compromise his ideals. But he was made of better stuff. He walked according to his conscience made sensitive by the spirit of God. Like every other man and woman, young and old, Jehoshaphat had to choose his standards of conduct, his ideals of religion. It took courage then, and it takes courage now. Our modern world needs more men and women, more young people, in every area of life who courteously but firmly have the power and the courage to say "No" to so many things in modern life that are contrary to the teachings and spirit of Christ.

"Seek Ye First the Kingdom and These Things Shall Be Added Unto You.

"There Jehovah established the kingdom in his hand . . ." The writer of Chronicles put a causal, not a casual, relation between Jehoshaphat's piety and his possessions, between his goodness and his goods, between his religion and his riches. Because he was good he prospered. But of course this is not always the case. Godliness does not always pay in dollars and cents. The good do not always prosper in material things. Righteousness does not guarantee freedom from hardship and suffering. But the principle does hold good that those who seek first the kingdom of God shall have added unto them the things that they need. Seeking first the kingdom does not always pay material rewards, but it pays spiritual and abiding dividends. It is profitable both for the life that now is and for that which is to come.

A Double-Barrel Reform.

"And his heart was lifted up in the ways of Jehovah; and furthermore he took away the high places and the Asherim out of Judah." This wise king knew the power of suggestion and the pull of the sensual. He therefore destroyed the centers of pagan worship and of immoral practices. He tried to help to answer the prayer, "Lead us not into temptation," although, of course, he had never heard that prayer. The chief reason why it is so difficult to teach and train boys and girls and young people in ways of sobriety and purity and honesty is that on every hand there are saloons or their equivalent, road-houses and tourist cabins, night-clubs, gambling places, and many other kindred places and institutions, some of which stink to high heaven, but running openly and with the consent of those of us who represent the Church and the Kingdom. The folks who say that there is not as much temptation for young people to drink as there was in the days of the Eighteenth Amendment simply refuse to face the facts. We need a clean-up in America on a national scale if ever we are to make much progress in elevating morals.

But Jehoshaphat was a wise man. He knew it was not enough to throw evil out. He knew that he must put good in. He therefore launched an educational program which sought to reach every city and village and community in his kingdom. He sent out chosen men to teach "the book of the law of Judah." It was a comprehensive program of religious education on a scale, even though the nation was a small one. Christian educators have come to realize in recent years that the Church must give itself with more diligence and devotion to the task of Christian education. The Sunday school has done and is doing some good work, but it is not able to cope with the problem. Daily Vacation Church Schools also help. But it appears that week-day religious education and moral education in the public schools are also necessary. The tragic fact is that in America there are millions of young people who are not connected with a Sunday school, and who are getting little, if any, moral and religious instruction. And those who do attend Sunday school do not get nearly as much help as they ought to get. The following quotation ought to stab us awake to some ugly facts: "Child crime has come through child neglect. It was ascertained recently in New York City that out of 55,000 below the age of sixteen who had fallen into the hands of the police only one-sixth had ever heard of the Ten Commandments. The same test applied to high school pupils, revealed that in one school three-fourths of the students could not write anything about them. A Los Angeles judge found that only two per cent of the thousands who came before him were members of any church at the time of their arrest." Record shows, too, that in January, 1936, the Sunday schools in America, on the average, had only about sixty-five per cent of the attendance they had in 1926. One of the most vital tasks of the church today is to reach the unreached, to teach the unreached.

Moral Leadership Among Nations.

"And the fear of Jehovah fell upon all the kingdoms of the lands that were round about Judah." Nations, like individuals, unconsciously as well as consciously influence the lives of other nations, for good or for evil.

"TRUST GOD."

"The things which happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the gospel."—Paul.

To every life some clouds must come,
Some dreary o'ercast skies;
Some disappointments hard to bear,
Some plans we must revise.

Some treasures that are prized as dear
We have to sacrifice;
Some cherished goals be lost to view,
E'en though they may entice.

Some friends on whom we counted most Forsake us on the way;
Some comrade fighting by our side
Proves traitor in the fray.

But come what will of good or ill,
It happens for the best;
Although I may not know His will,
In His arms I can rest.

Could I but see His motives all,
I'd chose no other way,
I'd recognize His wisdom still,
His leadings day by day.

—J. Berger Johnson, in "Signs of the Times."

TUESDAY.

"GOD IN A GARDEN."

"Their soul shall be as a watered garden."—Jer. 31: 12.

I never knew Thee, Lord, until
My garden brought us face to face,
Revealed Thy gracious miracle
Of sun and seed in little space.

Since I have seen Thine alchemy
Change earth-brown bulbs to living gold
Of daffodils, eternity
Has seemed a simple truth to hold.

The incense breath of nigonette
Has summoned me to vespers, too;
And may I nevermore forget
To live my heart, as pausies do!

No dim cathedral is as still
As twilight in this holy place;
I never knew Thee, Lord, until
My garden brought us face to face.

The simplest things of God's creation lead to faith and to reverance for Him. As much as I love the ocean, you cannot estimate my disappointment when at sea, I look out upon the limitless, restless and fruitless waters only, and not Milady's Garden, as each morning at home I feast upon it from my bedchamber window.

WEDNESDAY.

"SELF-RIGHTEOUSNESS AND BEECH TREES."

"Hath he not made thee and established thee?"—Deut. 32: 6.

"Shall you sit here."—Num. 32: 6.
"Scemeth it a small thing unto you to have eaten up the good pasture, but ye must tread down the residue . . . with your feet."—Ezk. 34: 18.

Speaking of dictatorships, Lord Halifax recently said they "are like beech trees, magnificent and imposing to look at, but nothing grows underneath them, and they cannot rear their kind in their environment."

Of the fruitless fig tree, Jesus said, "Cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground?"

Prayer—O Lord, make us Thy faithful and fruitful servants. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"ABOVE THE LEVEL OF THE CROWD."

"And he ran before, and climbed up into a sycamore tree to see Him."—Luke 19: 4.

That is getting above the crowd. That is what all need in spiritual experience and power. On the level of the crowd is where the world is milling around. This obscures vision and detracts from spiritual understanding. It is true that this is where we live and it is the place of practical Christianity; but one must get above these things to envisage the eternal and maintain a sense of the spiritual in order to minister to the crowd.

Prayer—O Father, as we go about our work today, grant us moments when we can be lifted up to see Thee and know Thee in their midst. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"A RECORDING WORLD."

"Give all diligence to make your calling and selection sure."—II Peter 1: 10.

Dear Christian friends and brothers,
If we could only know
How faithfully the world records
Just what we say and do,
Oh, we would write our record plain,
And come in time to see
Our worldly neighbor won to Christ
While reading you and me.

—Joseph W. Barron.

Prayer—Our Father of love and mercy, have mercy on us and pardon our waywardness, and give us Thy spirit to make us right in the light of all men. Amen.

SATURDAY.

MY NEIGHBOR'S BIBLE—WHO?

"Let your light so shine that men may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—Matt. 5: 16.

I am my neighbor's Bible,
He reads me when we meet;
Today he reads me in my home . . .
Tomorrow on the street,
He may be relative or friend,
Or slight acquaintance be;
He may not even know my name
Yet he is reading me.

—Joseph W. Barron.

Prayer—Dear Father of us all, grant unto us to so walk and live that we may be known of men to walk with Thee. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"INSENSIBLE."

"If any man will hear my voice and open the door."—Rev. 3: 20.

Base desires make a person insensible to divine approach. Selfishness effects a soul so that it cannot see God. But why live in the baseness? The day is bright with the sun and the night is bright with the stars. In the them is God.

Prayer—Our Father, who art ever waiting for responses, come into our hearts and abide with us. Amen.

REFLECTING CHRIST.

By REV. J. EVERETTE NEESE.

[President's address delivered before the Eastern North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention at New Hope Christian Church on July 11, last.]

Near the capitol in Rome is a room that was a school room about eighteen centuries ago. Across its threshold one morning came two school boys with their books. In an idle moment one with a bit of charcoal traced on the wall a crude cross with an outstretched figure hanging thereupon. Beneath it the boy cartooned the face of his companion and wrote this inscription: "Aleximos W o r s h i p s Christ."

Fallen now is the empire, gone the towers and temples. The forum itself is passed to dust, but that boy's attitude toward Christ still abides in the world today. The years will go, and with them will pass our ambitions, prosperity, successes, and friendships. But what we think of Christ, and how we reflect him will stand forth when life's outer scaffolding falls away leaving the soul with its open secret revealed.

When Hugh Bradford was being taken from West London to Newgate to be burned, they gave him leave to speak, and it is recorded that that man shouted from the trolley in which he was being conveyed the whole way down from West London to Newgate, "Christ, Christ, none but Christ." This reflecting of Christ in his action has come down as a memorial to his memory.

It is a law of influence that we become like those whom we habitually admire. Who has not watched some old couple come down life's pilgrimage hand and hand with such gentile trust and joy in each other that their very faces wore that self-same look. Those were not two souls; it was a composite soul. Half a century's reflection had told upon them; they were changed into the same image. They had become alike because they had habitually admired each other.

It was reserved for Paul to make the supreme application of the law of influence. He himself was a changed man; he knew exactly what had done it; it was Christ. On the Damascus road they met, and from that hour Christ's life is absorbed in his. The effect could not help but follow—on words, on deeds, on career, and on creed. He became like him whom he habitually loved. "So we all," he writes, "reflecting as a mirror the glory of Christ are changed into the same image." Here is a solution to the problem of sanctification in a sentence: Reflect the character of Christ and you will become like Christ. There are many ways through which a reflection of Christ can become a part of living.

It is true that home impressions are lasting impressions and that nothing influences a young life like home atmosphere. The experiences of childhood linger with us to the grave. Thus we must conclude that the home is one of the many places of importance in which we should reflect Christ. We remember the assertion of Joshua when he said, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve," and after giving the alternative to the God of their fathers said, "As for me and my house we will serve the Lord." In substance he was saying, "In my home God will be reflected in all that we do."

How wonderful it would be if in our homes we could develop the habit of reflecting Christ in every daily association.

I love that poem of Edgar Guest called "A Heap o' Living." There is a world of truth in it, but I think even he attaches too much significance to houses. Some of us today cannot live in one house, but we can still have homes. Some of us use a minute apartment, a furnished flat, or a rented house, but we can still have homes. It isn't the house or the furnishings that constitutes a home; it is people; people who will live like Christ and reflect his spirit in their every association.

In Scotland they used to have a custom that when a man and woman had been married and were setting up their home, to read at the family altar the first chapter of Genesis. Thus with prayer and the Word of God the home was consecrated and dedicated to God. A Christian home can build into its members a Christian conception of God as Father, of Jesus as Savior, and of mankind as brothers.

When Christ is properly reflected in the home, our next progressive move should be to reflect Christ in the Church. The Church is God's instrument of blessing. Priceless things have come down to us from her. We can make our Church a place of blessing if we but deepen our loyalty and expect that through her ordinary services God will give new proof of His sufficiency to forgive sin and bestow the life everlasting.

Let me take you for a moment to the Gate called Beautiful on the occasion when Peter and John found the crippled beggar sitting there. Have you ever wondered why the beggar was always found outside the temple? Such deformities as his were not allowed inside the Jewish synagogue, for, they reasoned, how could a person worship a perfect God if one had to look at such imperfections? Even the sound of body found it a hardship to enter the temple if he were lowly of purse. It was this bartering, this commercializing of religion that so disgusted the Master. There were no signs in those days: "This door is always open to the weary of body or spirit; come in and rest and pray."

It was Jesus that gave us brotherhood, a fellowship that he called his Church. It was formed to succor the needy regardless of their station in life. Its only bond is love; its only purpose—others. I recall a friend of mine who earlier in life wandered into a city church during a worship service. He was weary of body, soul, and spirit. Life seemed hopeless and meaningless. He had no friends. Yet, as the emblems of the Lord's Supper were offered to him, there rang out the words of the minister, and echo through the years, "This is my body broken for you. This is my blood shed for the remission of your sins." The sense of being alone left the sojourner. He had found a friend. I need not complete the incident. It has been enacted countless times. This is the Church's legacy from the Cross.

Rome with its might has passed. Corinth with her vices has ceased. Athens with her learning is but stored in the archives of history. But Jesus has given to the Church a legacy which has changed it and will continue to change it throughout all eternity, if those comprising its constituency will reflect Christ within and without its walls. The last phase of life in which I would insist that we reflect Christ is in personal life. "Ye shall be witness unto me."

The Greeks have gone down into history as the truth-seekers of the world. Seeking after wisdom, they endeavored to find God and those profound truths that center in Him. By the banks of the river which flowed

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

I wish our income for support of the orphanage were amply sufficient so that it would never be necessary to speak about finances, but such is not the case. Some of our churches and Sunday schools seem to forget the fact that it takes money to run an orphanage. It costs money to care for children, but it is a fine investment. If you have a family, you know it has cost you a lot of money to rear your children and educate them. But if they do things worthwhile in life, you forget the self-denial that has often come to you, and you are happy and rejoice that you made the investment. All parents are, or should be. All of us want our children to do greater things in life than we have been able to do. They perhaps have had better opportunities than we had when we were young. They certainly will have better opportunities in the future.

Who would complain about school tax? We know it goes to build an educated people and a finer country in which to live. But in our own busy activities of life we must not overlook the fatherless and the helpless. They, too, want a chance in life. The Church established and built the Christian Orphanage thirty-four years ago to give the fatherless a home—those who are unfortunate, father and mother gone—dependent and homeless. All Sunday schools are expected to give an offering each month to help support it; but some forget. Surely they want to have a part, but just forget.

I want you to know how we stand up to July 21, 1939, as to number of churches in the conferences and the number not giving or just forgetting us:

Conference	Churches	Not Giving
N. C. & Va.	44	16
Eastern N. C.	48	14
Western N. C.	39	10
Eastern Va.	42	8
Valley of Va.	20	5
Ala. Conference	23	19
Ga. & Ala.	12	10
Total	228	82

The eighty-two churches not contributing do not mean to be disloyal, surely not. They perhaps have never visited the orphanage and do not know what the Church has here. They don't realize what an opportunity they have to help the fatherless. If you don't invest in the orphanage, you cannot be so vitally interested.

If you invest in a home, you feel proud of your home. You have made an investment. If you will invest in the Christian Orphanage, you will be more interested. Try it and see.

summer conferences, camps, or schools, but those who attend will be the church leaders in the days to come. There are golden treasures in these conferences that are waiting for us. What they will mean to us and to our churches depends upon attendance. We should urge the churches to begin the process of developing future leaders whom God can call into His divine fellowship. Christianity brings people from all nations together in a fellowship of a loving Father-God, who is God of all nations.

Again the world needs the help of youth in making up its opinions. Youth always has had visions and dreamed dreams. It has a keen sense of reality. We belong to the sort of generation that takes pride in standing upon its own feet. Young people should have the opportunity to learn more about the church to which they belong. Send delegates to these conferences; the delegates who will gain the most will be the ones who have had some training from their home church. These delegates will bring back from the conferences new ideas and suggestions to make church work more inspiring and interesting to the young people.

Every church should have a vacation Bible school. This time will be spent most enjoyably, as well as profitably. This is only possible if the young people of the church will volunteer to serve as assistants. May we young people assume these new responsibilities, and give to the world a good job!

Youth today has all the character that our forefathers and mothers had. Let us use it, make us use it, and necessity may make better Christian workers of us. We pray for God's help, that we may give our best to our task, which is not merely a task, but a challenge.

In Memoriam

BROWNE.

Whereas, God, in His infinite love and wisdom, has called to his reward our brother and co-worker, Eli Willard Browne, we record our sorrow in his passing and also our appreciation for his long and useful life. Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to God's will, knowing that He doeth all things well;
2. That Pleasant Ridge Christian Church, of which he was a trustee and deacon, has lost a faithful and devout member;
3. That we extend to his family our deepest sympathy and earnest prayers that God's promises may give them comfort and consolation in their sorrow.
4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be recorded in our minutes, and a copy be sent to the county papers and also to "The Christian Sun."

GEO. T. GUNTER,

ERNEST BEANE,
EVERETT COX,
Board of Deacons.

BEANE.

William Ernest Beane passed to his reward at his home near Ramseur, N. C., on June 30, 1939, at the age of fifty-two years.

In 1910 he married Miss Adeline Scott, who with seven children survive. They are Hubert and Hilton of Asheboro; Mrs. Fred Allred, Ollie Mae, Fenton, Marie and Ernestine of Ramseur. There is also a grandson, James Beane; one sister, Mrs. W. W. Redding, Asheboro; three brothers, Rev. P. F. Beane, Delmar, Del.; C. H. Beane, Asheboro; and J. E. Beane, Siler City.

As a member of Pleasant Hill Christian Church he was loyal and useful, serving as deacon and Sunday school superintendent.

In his passing his family has lost a devoted husband and father, his community a kind neighbor and his church a most loyal member. May the Lord comfort the bereaved ones in their time of sorrow.

Funeral services were conducted by his pastor, Rev. J. F. Apple, assisted by Rev. G. C. Craven. Interment was in the church cemetery.

The unusually large crowd in attendance and the many beautiful floral offerings attested the high esteem in which the deceased was held.

Mrs. O. C. BROWNE.

TWELVE YEARS IS NOT SO LONG.

God will begin to come with power where it is manifest in the lives of coming men and women.

Twelve years is not so long, and gives us twelve years of getting the Sunday school better acquainted with the Christian Endeavor society and with missionary work and study, and all of these better acquainted with the home and school of the child, and we will make a change in the Church of God which will cheer our hearts and help to bring in the Kingdom.

Twelve years is not so long—look around you and look into the faces of little children on the Cradle Roll, and remember that in twelve years from now they will be in high school. Look around you and see those fine young high school folks, and then use your mind and imagination and think of them twelve years from now when they will be the preachers and the teachers and the fathers and the mothers of a coming generation.

As we look at these little children and as we face these young people of junior and high school age, let us remember that it is now or never in most of their lives. If the only program we have for their lives is a "keep still" or "don't" program, which only runs from day to day or from week to week—well, then we do not have much to offer them and we will not have them long with us.

Twelve years is not so long, but 1939 is waiting to see what your vision was in 1927.—Herald of Gospel Liberty, September 15, 1927.

SUN'S PULPIT.

through Athens, grew up the various schools of philosophy. In the shady avenues of the city men who called themselves "Philo-sophio" or "Lovers of Wisdom" walked and talked of their great problems. But having no revelation, they were as blind men feeling their way along a wall. Christ is the "Light" and "In Him is no darkness at all." Thus in reflecting Him, we are sure of his continued presence which prohibits us ever to walk in darkness.

A certain soap maker, having run out of superlatives to define the perfection of his product, hit upon a statement that said in a novel and compelling way the last word that could be said concerning it. "As we couldn't improve our product, we improved the box."

We can't improve the content of religion, but we can improve the container—ourselves. Much has been said as to the kind of religion needed at the present day. But there is only one sufficient religion, and that is Christianity. It needs not to be changed or improved, though some methods of advocating it may be bettered. The "box" is what people see, so let's make the "box," the personal life, more attractive, thus reflecting Christ more effectively in the Home, in the Church, and in our Personal Lives.

are needed, if Christ is to be released into the lives of millions more effectively. There is not time here to tell what my thoughts are, but there may be other opportunities.

In July we are in Paris where I have been asked to preside at one of the meetings of the World Congress of Faiths at the Sorbonne, and then for six weeks I am preaching in England and Scotland on the exchange between America and Britain. We get home in September.—In Advance.

TOURING FOR PEACE

By S. RALPH HARLOW.

[Professor Harlow has been making a world tour as visiting professor for the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace while on a sabbatical year of leave from Smith College. Editor.]

I inclose a few lines which you may use in Advance, or throw in the basket, as you see fit. In case you do print the lines, will you state that the author gives permission to anyone who cares to use them as a hymn. The words came to me on a bus riding into Athens (Greece), yesterday.

We have had eight wonderful months and have covered over 25,000 miles since we sailed from Los Angeles last August. In New Zealand and Australia, where we spent two months, the churches gave us a warm reception. I preached in the leading Congregational Churches, including that of the Moderator, Dr. A. C. Nelson, in the Beresford Congregational Church in Auckland. In Wellington I preached in the Terrace Congregational Church. Also in the Otahuhu Congregational Church of which Rev. Hamish Mathew, a graduate of Yale, is pastor. One evening was spent with the Congregational students in Camden College, which trains men for the Congregational ministry in Australia. This seminary is in Sydney and Principle Reynolds made a deep impression on me as a scholar and spiritual leader. I preached over the radio several times in Australia and in Melbourne in the Collins Street Congregational Church, the largest Congregational Church in Australia. Mostly I was in colleges and Presbyterian and Methodist Churches.

We had three months in Ceylon and India, under the auspices of the International Fellowship, which opened up for us innumerable doors of opportunity. We covered over 7,000 miles in India, spending fifteen nights on trains. We lived for the most part in Indian homes, with Hindus, Moslems, Parsees and Christians. We visited more than thirty colleges and universities, lived in five ashrams, and were state guests in Mysore of the Prime minister, Sir Mirza Ismail. We saw India through Indian eyes. We also made contacts with many of our friends in the mission stations and visited in every mission of the American Board in India. I spoke at the centenary of the church in Bombay founded by Mr. Newell and his associates. He was one of the first seven missionaries ordained in Salem back in 1812. Later his son was minister of Edwards Church in Northampton of which Mrs. Harlow and I are members. I was ordained in 1912 and sat on the same pew in the Tabernacle Church in Salem where Newell sat in 1812. The minister of the Bombay Church is B. P. Hiwale. Dr. Hiwale was in our home many times when he was a student at Harvard and had his first Thanksgiving dinner in America at our table. So there was quite a link between the Hume Memorial Church in Bombay and us.

One of our most interesting experiences was a week in the home of Professor Wadia of Wilson College in Bombay. Professor Wadia is a Parsee and lives on Malabar Hill. The Wadias treated us as though we were members of the family. But this was true in many Indian homes. In Calcutta we spent a week with the Guptas. Mr. J. C. Gupta is the chief whip of the Congress Party for Bengal. Mrs. Harlow was the only American from the States as delegates to the All India Women's Conference at Delhi, where she was a guest speaker and had a unique experience among hundreds of India's outstanding women.

We had three weeks in Egypt where I lectured at the American University in Cairo and at the National Egyptian University, also in colleges at Assiut and Alexandria. I flew over to Jerusalem and had a memorable visit at the Hebrew University and in the home of Dr. Judah Magnes the president. How tragie that whole situation is in Palestine. But what I saw of Jewish refugees on ships makes me sick at heart that such brutality and such race prejudice can exist among people who are supposed to have had Christian culture through many generations. What must the Jews think of us!

At Beirut I gave the annual lectures for their Religious Emphasis Week. The students, Moslems, Jews, Greek Orthodox and all varieties of faiths came out in large numbers and every night stayed for an hour of questions following the lectures.

Mrs. Harlow has given some 58 talks on this trip and I have now given over 200, mostly to student groups but also to many church groups, and clubs, especially teachers' association. In India a Nobel Prize winner, Sir V. C. Raman, was chairman of one meeting, and Sir Mirza Ismail of another. In Cairo the Moslem Dean of the National University presided and had the school teachers of Cairo attend the meeting. Yes, we have had great opportunity all along the line and we pray God that our lives and words may have been of some use in the building of the Kingdom.

I have done much thinking on the whole missionary endeavor and have come to the conviction that some radical changes are (Concluded on page 15.)

GOD, THE SOURCE OF LIGHT AND BEAUTY.

A Hymn by S. Ralph Harlow.

Tune: St. Asaph 8. 7. D.

God, the Source of light and beauty
Grant response in sense and sight,
Stir our minds to call of duty
Rouse our souls from earth-born night;
Shine now through our clouded vision
Clearer knowledge of Thy will;
Till Thine undefeated purpose
Through our lives Thou shalt fulfill.

Great Musician of the thunder,
Builder of the mountains' range,
Painter of the sunset splendor,
Planner of the season's change;
Help us fill man's heart with beauty,
Still the roar of guns and strife,
Build Thy Kingdom of the Future
Here within our daily life.

Author of Creation's being,
Thou hast shared our pain and loss,
Through Christ's gallant life of service
Shines the radiance of the Cross;
God, the Source of light and beauty,
Faith assures Thy reign above,
But on earth we need Thy presence,
Teach us how to walk in love.

Prove Yourself a Christian

By WALTON CRUMP WICKER, D. D.

Prove yourself a Christian.

How?

By your conduct every day,
By the things you do and say;
Spread good cheer when skies are gray.

Prove yourself a Christian.

How?

By unselfish, kindly deeds,
Helping others in their needs,
Listening to the voice that pleads.

Prove yourself a Christian.

How?

In everything you have to do,
Be honest, kind, and true,
Bright and pleasant all day through.

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

The annual meeting of the Valley Virginia Central Conference will be held at Newport Christian Church on August 9 and 10. Complete reports and full delegations are expected.

Rev. W. E. Wisseman, pastor of the First Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C., and his family, left on Monday for Texas. They will spend some time in Dallas, but for the most part they will be with Mr. Wisseman's parents in Mason, Texas. They will return to Greensboro About September 1.

THE REV. MR. APPLE REPORTS.

Mt. Zion Christian Church had its revival meeting the week of July 9, with the Rev. J. L. Neese of Reidsville as the preacher. Four persons united with the church, and others are expected to join later. The baptismal service will be the second Sunday in August.

Bethel Church, near Mebane, N. C., invited the Rev. Victor Murchison of the Friends Church to preach at the revival the week of July 16. Eight new additions were made to the church. Plans are under way for this church to add Sunday school rooms to their building.

Pleasant Hill revival will start on the first Sunday in September. The pastor will do the preaching.

J. F. APPLE.

VIRGILINA LETTER.

The annual series of meetings in this field of four churches began at Hebron the week following the fourth Sunday in June and closed at Lebanon on Friday evening before the fourth Sunday in July.

HEBRON.

Rev. J. F. Morgan assisted. The weather was favorable and attendance was good. Brother Morgan is valuable help as a singer, preacher, and by personal contact, in the home. Sixteen united with the church, and Christians were strengthened.

LIBERTY.

Rev. B. J. Earp was our helper here, who by his earnestness in the pulpit and evangelism in the homes visited endeared himself to the people. Eighteen united with the church.

UNION (VIRGINIA).

Rev. O. D. Poythress was with the pastor. The attendance increased until at the last service there were five hundred present. This closing service was the best revival the church has experienced in years. There were scores of reclamations and rededications, twenty-five professions of faith, and twenty united with the church. Others are expected to join. The people were delighted with Brother Poythress as a singer, preacher, and his pleasant manner in the home.

LEBANON.

This is the home church of Rev. B. J. Earp, who by special invitation was present and did the preaching. Rains and storms interfered with the attendance. Brother Earp is an earnest gospel preacher, an excellent personal worker. There were twelve professions, several of these in the home, and seven accessions to the WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA SUN- DAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Western North Carolina Conference met last week with the Randleman Christian Church. There were more than one hundred present, although only one-half the churches in the Conference were represented. Ministers serving churches in Western North Carolina who were present during the meeting were: Rev. Harold Loman, pastor of the host church; Rev. E. Carl Brady, Rev. B. H. Lowdermilk, Rev. W. J. Andes, Rev. D. M. Spence, Rev. J. F. Apple, and Rev. J. L. Foster. The members of the Randleman Church furnished the delegates with a delicious dinner and supper.

In his address, the president, Mr. George T. Gunter, listed the following as "Problems of Religious Education in Our Conference":

(1) Lack of worship, (2) Lack of definite aims and goals, (3) Irregularity in attendance of leaders, (4) Poorly graded Sunday schools, (5) Not enough young people's activities, (6) Poor methods of selecting teachers, (7) Large per cent of members not well informed about denomination and its work, (8) Insufficient leadership training, and (9) Lack of consecrated, talented teachers. In his talk on "Improving Our Sunday Schools," Rev. F. C. Lester suggested various methods of solving the above named problems.

The afternoon address was given by Dr. L. E. Smith on "A Program of Progress in Religious Education." He suggested that the Sunday schools have a superintendent of worship, have Worker's Council meetings once a month, improve their places of meeting, and develop closer cooperation among the workers in their school.

Very helpful group meetings were held, in which ministers, superintendents, teachers, and young people met separately to discuss their problems and ways of solving them.

The evening program was in charge of Mr. Sybrant Pell. Rev. W. J. Andes spoke on "Young People at Their Best," emphasizing that this occurred not simply at work, at play, in good health, or in so-called worship, but only as they sought to follow the Master in all things.

The Convention voted to send the Board of Christian Education $60.00, to aid in carrying on its work. It also voted to leave the time of the next meeting to the executive committee, in order that this Convention may cooperate with the others in securing the service of an expert in the field of religious education. The meeting next year will be held at the Liberty Christian Church.

The present officers were all re-elected for the coming year. They are: president, George T. Gunter; vice-president, H. J. Overman; secretary-treasurer, Thomas Lowe. The superintendents reelected were: Elementary, Miss Lola Farlow, Young People, H. J. Overman; Adults, Rev. John Q. Pugh; Teacher Training, H. J. Cochrane; Christian Endeavor, Rev. M. A. Pollard; Missions, Mrs. R. E. Caveness; Orphanage, Rev. E. Carl Brady; College, Miss Maple Lawrence.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTIONS.

The five Sunday School Conventions within the Southern Convention were well attended this year, helpful programs were enjoyed, and several important matters were decided. Two ideas took form after the Valley of Virginia Convention met. All the other conventions decided to emphasize Rally Day the first of October, and to cooperate with the Board of Christian Education in trying to secure a specialist in religious education for the convention speaker next year. In order to get such a speaker, the time of meeting was left in the hands of the Executive Committee of the conventions. It is hoped that the conventions will follow each other as rapidly as the leaders may be able to get from one to the other. If we can have a trained leader to share in our convention programs it will mean much for the assistance of the Sunday schools.

VALLEY CONFERENCE NEXT WEEK.

The annual session of the Valley of Virginia Central Conference will meet at Newport Church on Wednesday and Thursday of next week. Several important matters will come before this Conference. A survey is being made of some closed churches, and a decision should be made concerning their future. Adjustments must be made in pastorates. The financial program may well come under review as reports are made on the first year of the new plan. Other matters equally as important will claim the attention of the delegates to this fine Conference.

Rev. and Mrs. J. F. Morgan of Norfolk, Va., will direct the music. The Rev. Mr. Morgan is president of the Eastern Virginia Conference, and pastor of Rosemont Christian Church. Rev. W. T. Scott, Superintendent of Florida and Pastor-at-Large in Georgia, will be the principal speaker. Convention officials will be present and share in the conference. A large attendance is expected.

CONFERENCE REPORTS.

Each church and pastor is expected to make report to the annual Conference. Most of the ministers do a fairly good job in making a report (one did report last year that his salary was $1.50). But the church reports usually have much chance for improvement. It is very important for these reports to be completed and accurate. Otherwise they have little or no value. The church secretary has the responsibility of making the report. He needs the cooperation of the pastor, the treasurer, and the leaders in all auxiliary organizations.

These reports are called for only once each year. Please make them complete and accurate. Your record goes into print and tells the story of your church. The report is read around the world. Take the needed time to do a good job. Your church is depending upon you, Mr. Secretary. Do not let your church down by failing to give the complete record of your church.

APPORTIONMENTS.

When representatives of the churches get together in Conference they decide that work needs to be done that one church cannot do alone. They agree on what is to be undertaken, and then they agree on how much each church should do. This latter is called Conference Apportionments. It really is the amount that the churches through their delegates say that the churches can and should do.

The amount contributed to Apportionments by the churches is the service of the churches to the world outside the local community. It is a measure of the strength, the spiritual worth, of the church. It is the strong hand of the church reaching out to minister to people in the name of Christ. It is not, therefore, a matter to be taken lightly, or to let pass without a serious effort to accomplish. The enterprises of the Church can grow only as they are strengthened by the offerings from the churches.

This year the churches are asked, for the first time, for a definite number of subscriptions for "The Christian Sun." This new feature can mean much towards the development of the local church. Those churches that read this paper are usually among the leaders in other matters. If you want your church to be a leader, be sure that you report in full the list of subscribers to this paper.

ANOTHER CHURCH IN THE MAKING.

Fifty interested people met the Promotional Secretary at Gibsonville, N. C., on last Saturday afternoon to consider organizing a Christian Church in that town, which is only two miles from Elon College. Recently a revival has been led there by Rev. Harold Loman, and quite a group said they wanted a Christian Church.

At the meeting last Saturday afternoon temporary officers were elected and needed committees selected so the work can be continued. Plans are under way to purchase a building once used by the Lutherans, to secure contributors, to secure prospective members, and to organize a church if conditions seem to warrant such an organization. Services are to be held each Saturday afternoon at four o'clock in the old Lutheran church.

This is the fourth church to begin in the Southern Convention since last September. Two have been organized and are now working as churches, and two others have temporary organizations that are getting things in line for the organization of churches. Two of these groups took the initiative and asked for help in getting organized. Maybe the world is not so bad after all. Perhaps those of us who are in the churches are not quite aware of how those feel who are not in our churches. Doubtless we have been a bit too slow in seeking ways in which to serve the unchurched. These four groups ought certainly to challenge the older churches to be worthy of the confidence of those who seek our fellowship.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

A consecrated layman called today. He has an opportunity to visit many churches of several denominations. Out of this experience a strong conviction has possessed him, namely, the need of spiritual emphasis, in a more emphatic way, in Sunday school classes and church worship services. This man is neither old nor out of harmony with progress and spiritual liberty. On the contrary he is alert and up-to-date in his thinking. But he is seeing the drift of our modern life in a swing to materialism and hollow, empty formality. And in his wider experience he is able to discern the clearer course which leads out of the mist into the heights of richer fellowship with God.

Somehow it is the candid opinion of this writer that this good friend is expressing the judgment of many other laymen as well as ministers of the Gospel. Something is wrong with the world. The church is not meeting the situation with a united front and a courageous message. Individual members of the church, in many instances, know that they are not living close to the Master. There is an empty space, an empty room, in a perplexed heart, that is hungry for fellowship with the Christ. And that void cannot be filled by the pursuit of pleasure and the neglect of worship. Who is to bear the responsibility for this hunger which has not been satisfied? Is there a substantial offering of the bread of life for people who attend our worship services?

What is your answer to these questions? Does your preacher feed your mind and soul when he speaks in the pulpit of your church? If not, why not? Is he to blame? Are you doing your part to make that sermon profitable and uplifting? Is he faithfully doing his part? Is the Sunday school teacher using the golden opportunity to make an impression for sincere spiritual fellowship? What is the real objective in teaching a Sunday school lesson? Have teachers and preachers found the highest plane of spiritual appeal?

The word spiritual is often loosely used, and its meaning is sometimes lost in narrow interpretations and shallow definitions. To some minds spiritual is synonymous with mysticism and emotionalism. Christianity is both mystical and emotional, but its content is not confined to these terms. Spiritual teaching must deal with mystical and emotional thought and experience, but spiritual living transcends all definitions and theological dogma. The inner life, the center of all motive, the source of all love, must be touched by religion if it is to be brought under the dominion of Jesus Christ. Out of the heart are the issues of life. The heart is the center of deadly poison, if it is evil and sinful; it is the source of life, if it is motivated by love and transformed by the grace of God. A gospel that does not touch the heart is not worth teaching or preaching. Jesus gave clear emphasis to the importance of having a pure heart.

The way is clear for intelligent approach to the central theme of salvation through the blood of Jesus. The cross is greater than any other philosophy of life. It is the only way of salvation. Nothing else can meet the demands of hungry hearts. Old-fashioned, of course, but it is up-to-date. The sun is old-fashioned, but its light and heat give life to man and beast, field and forest. Love is old-fashioned, but it warms the heart of lovers just as forcibly as it did five thousand years ago. The Gospel is both new and old; new to us, but old to God, if any thing is old to Him. New, or old, it is the supreme need of this age. It is the sweetest theme for young and old.

I. W. JOHNSON.

SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTIONS.

All of our conferences constituting the Southern Convention have Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions that meet annually. These conventions meet during the summer. I have had the privilege of attending all conventions except the Valley of Virginia. The programs have had more really to do with Sunday school work and Sunday school problems than heretofore. We seem to be becoming conscious of our need for more efficient and more aggressive Sunday schools and to recognize our problems in meeting these needs.

There were certain actions taken by all conventions that should be of great interest to the Sunday schools in particular and the entire program of church work in general. In an effort to improve further our one-day convention sessions, it was voted to refer the time of meeting of these conventions for next year to the Executive Committee of the local convention in cooperation with and at the advice of the Board of Christian Education. The purpose of this action is to arrange for consecutive meetings of the conventions next year, thus making it possible to secure at least one Sunday school expert to visit all associations.

It was also voted that the first Sunday in October be designated as Rally Day for all Sunday schools in the Southern Convention, rural and city school alike. On this day it is hoped that the entire Sunday school and church together with friends may attend Sunday school and make it a great day in every church throughout the Convention. The fact that every Sunday school is putting on a Rally Day program on the same Sunday should within itself be an inspiration.

Three of the conventions passed a resolution requesting Sunday schools and organized classes to take membership in the Elon College Golden Anniversary Club. There are about two hundred Sunday schools and perhaps four to six hundred organized classes. If all would put this resolution into effect, it would be a great blessing to the Sunday schools and organized classes as well as to the college. This is a critical year for our college. We have succeeded in bringing the institution to its present position financially and otherwise. This, the occasion of its Golden Anniversary, is the opportune time to pool our prayers, our efforts, and our gifts and pay the last dollar of its debts. Sunday schools, Sunday school classes, and individuals taking membership in the Club will be placed on a permanent record at the college and displayed prominently throughout all the years to come. It will be an honor for the name of your Sunday school, your class, or your own name to be on the list.

Other important actions were taken by these Sunday School Conventions, but the above are universal and have to do with the Sunday school and organized classes in other conventions. The convention that did not vote requesting the local schools and organized classes to take membership in the Golden Anniversary Club passed a resolution calling upon the Sunday schools to support the college more generously. The needs of the college are of concern to all of us, for the college is really our college, and what we do for it really helps us and helps our local church.

All conventions were well attended, and there were evidences of enthusiasm for the improvement of the work of the schools in our church.

L. E. SMITH.

The Task of the Hour

By COL. J. E. WEST.

[The following is the main part of an address delivered at the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention. Editor.]

To properly discuss the subject I have chosen for this occasion, there must be a long introduction of a historical nature.

We stand today on historic ground. On April 26, 1607, the early Virginia colonists took Virginia in the name of God and his Son Jesus Christ, set up a wooden cross at Cape Henry, and made a thankful prayer to God for a safe voyage. They established the first permanent English settlement in America at Jamestown on May 13, 1607. On Sunday, May 14, 1607, Rev. Robert Hunt administered the Holy Communion. Among other things they came as missionaries to the Indians, as King James' instruction to the London Company provided that "the true service of God be preached, planted, and used not only in the said colonies, but also as much as might be among the savages bordering on them."

Representative government in the New World was established at Jamestown on July 30, 1619, where the first enactments of the first assembly were concerned with the church, and some measures were taken to educate some Indians in "true religion." This was natural because the founders of Virginia were religious men and missionaries as well as leaders in civil government. While some individual Indians were truly converted, and funds were being raised for further instruction, this work suffered severely on account of the treachery of the Indians and the massacre of 1622 when the colony was saved from extinction by Chanceo, an Indian convert. Purchas, in his Pilgrimes, says: "Such was (God be thanked for it) the great fruit of an infidel convert to Christianity." The Pilgrim Fathers landed at Plymouth Rock in 1620.

Religious liberty preceded civil liberty and Christian colonies were planted in the New World. Out of Christian colonies came a Christian nation. Their ideal was a government based on religious and civil liberty, a government of equal opportunity to all, a government in which every man would be a sovereign and where justice would reign and right triumph. Both religious and civil liberty are an inheritance from our forefathers. A few of the outstanding characteristics of the colonists were:

1. Faith in God as the ruler of nations and as the guide of this nation;

2. Faith in the Bible as the inspired word of God and as a revelation of His truth.

3. They opposed divorces, believed that the home was the foundation of society and should be kept pure.

4. They were severely strict observers of the Sabbath and kept fairly well the Commandment: "Remember the Sabbath and keep it holy."

Those are some of the things that have made the nation great. It is no wonder that Virginia and New England produced so many early statesmen. They were, in part, a product of this religious inheritance.

In 1690 the first regular convention of Virginia clergy was held in Jamestown Church, Rev. James Blair presiding. Among other things, the Convention discussed the founding of a college to train ministers, and in 1693 Rev. James Blair, president, opened the college of William and Mary, "A seminary of ministers of the Gospel where youths may be piously educated in good letters and manners; a certain place of universal study, a perpetual college of divinity, philosophy, languages, and other good arts and sciences." At that time the colony had one privately endowed public school and a few old field schools. During the Revolutionary Period through the influence of Thomas Jefferson, a member of the Board of Visitors, "the perpetual College of Divinity was abolished in favor of modern languages, law, and medicine."

While many private schools, Christian colleges, and universities existed for a century or more after the founding of the college of William and Mary, the second oldest college in the United States, public education was rapidly provided for in public schools and state institutions. In 1819 Thomas Jefferson founded the University of Virginia on advanced educational lines, but as the capstone or head of the public school system he tried to provide and did in part for the state.

On account of separation of church and state, religious instruction was excluded from the University of Virginia, as it was from the public schools, which were poorly supported. In the state of the Pilgrim fathers Horace Mann, as Secretary of the Massachusetts State Board of Education from 1837 to 1848, reformed that state's educational system and exerted such an influence over educational matters that some of his admirers called him the "founder of public schools in America," which is hardly correct. The Encyclopedia Britannica says: "He was also assailed by religious sectarians on the ground that he was secularizing the public schools. In 1853 Mann assumed the presidency of Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio, which was to be non-sectarian and co-educational. Various professors and supporters of the institution who distrusted his religious views harassed him."

Great as Jefferson and Mann were along education lines and with increasing popularity of public schools and state support in institutions of higher learning, a strong minority regretted the absence of Bible instruction or the reading of same, and while losing the battle, the conflict of thought was stressed in the increasing of denominational colleges in the South and the changing of denominational colleges in the North to independent institutions.

After the War between the States, public schools became more numerous and popular, people of Protestant denominations sensed the lack of what is called Christian Education, fought a good fight to keep open Christian colleges, found new ones, added theological departments, and established new theological seminaries.

During this period there was a rush of American students to German universities for Ph.D.'s or other degrees, and educational experts did not consider a man highly educated unless he received a higher degree from some German or English university. These graduates returned to America full of higher criticism of the Bible and of false standards of religion and government and as teachers and readers, by a gradual, quiet method, indoctrinated American boys and girls with these German ideas and ideals which reached into our homes, schools, and churches, and we are suffering today from this mistake. Notwithstanding that the Bible could not be taught in public schools and state institutions, thousands of unnamed Christian teachers have kept the fires of Christian Education burning because of their high Christian characters and walk in life, and our leaders in Christian Education should develop this field also.

This question of Christian or Religious Education is nothing new except in name and emphasis. My father, Henry Thomas West, deacon

Elon College Golden Anniversary

GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY CLUB.

We did not make a report last week. Membership in the club is advancing a bit with this report. Professor D. J. Bowden of our faculty and the writer spent the last two weeks in Norfolk and vicinity. This is the first personal effort in the interest of our Golden Anniversary Campaign. Memberships reported in this issue do not indicate the whole story. We are grateful for every pledge and every contribution. There are about as many who expressed an interest and assured us that they would contribute but preferred not to sign a pledge as there were those who signed pledges.

If the friends of the college could but realize how much their definite obligations mean to this campaign, I know they would not hesitate in committing themselves definitely, for when one person makes a definite pledge, it is that much easier to get the second one. So, my friends, since you are planning anyway to take membership in the club, why not send in your obligation now and let the college have the advantage of the influence of your decision in appealing to others? The campaign is approaching a critical stage, and we need your help. Please do not delay longer. To mail your subscription in will save time, effort, money, and anxiety. Uncle Sam will be glad to bring it if you will just put a three-cent stamp on your pledge and address it. We await your encouragement.

The report for the week follows:

THANK YOU.

The college wishes to express its thanks to all Sunday schools in the Convention that have sent offerings to the college since the last annual conference. These offerings, we need constantly to remind ourselves, count on our local church's apportionment to conference.

Tomorrow, Sunday, is the fifth Sunday in July. All Sunday schools are asked to receive an offering on this day for the college. By the time this article goes to press, Sunday, of course, will have passed, and I trust that you will have received your offering. We have heavy obligations on August 1. This offering may be a little later than the first, but if you will forward it as quickly as possible, it will be of great help to us. We have been getting along finely this year, and I am sure that we will maintain our good records.

The following offerings have been received during the week:

Sunday Schools.
Eastern Va. Conference:
New Lebanon	$ 1.50
Eastern N. C. Conference:
Fullers Chapel	1.00
Churches.
Eastern Va. Conference:
Bethlehem	14.60

LIBRARY BOOKS RECEIVED.

The Carlton Library at Elon College gratefully acknowledges receipt of new books in recent weeks. Among these is a file of the Year Books from 1879, together with thirty-five other books from Dr. Edwin C. Gillette, Jacksonville, Fla., Superintendent of the Southeast.

Miss Nellie Fleming of Burlington contributed two hundred and thirty books, which included the Redpath Library of Universal Literature.

Dr. Loring B. Chase of East Northfield, Mass., has contributed twenty-two books.

Several other people have sent very acceptable contributions. The library is still in need of books, and those who have some they can contribute will do the college a favor by sending them to Mrs. Oma U. Johnson.

THE TASK OF THE HOUR.

and treasurer of Spring Hill, Sussex County, Va., superintendent of the Sunday school, and a vice-president of the Virginia State Sunday School Convention, died on July 6, 1883. His will contained the following provision for the education of his youngest son, who was then seven years old: "I desire that my son shall be sent to school in like manner as described for my daughter, with great care in regard to his moral and religious training while going to school."

THE CHRISTIAN SUN of July 20, 1883, contained an article by me on "The College." The college of which I dreamed then became a reality seven years thereafter and opened its doors as Elon College, September 2, 1890. That son entered the first day. What I claimed for the college has come true. true. Elon has made good, notwithstanding its ups and downs.

I have always been a strong advocate of Religious or Christian Education, but I take a broad rather than a restrictive view. Protestantism has not fully solved the problem to its satisfaction.

Elon's religious influence continued to be felt, like that of other denominational colleges, but the problem was not solved. Then another distinguished Virginia and adopted son of North Carolina, Dr. William A. Harper, former president, erected on Elon campus the first Christian Education building on any college campus in America, winning the praise of Christian Education leaders, and solving, in part, the problem left unsolved by Jefferson and Mann. Our college and denomination had a memorable victory and many never appreciated same until the last Southern Convention caught the broader view of Christian Education by combining the two boards of Education into the Board of Christian Education, with the president of Elon College as chairman. Just as the University of Virginia is the head of the public school system and V. P. I. is the head of agricultural and technical education in Virginia, so Elon College is the head of our system of Christian Education and must take its message more and more to all the Church, which it has been doing to some extent. This system of Christian Education includes the college, teacher training, and vacation Bible schools, the Church, Sunday school, and the home. The system is one and what injures one part, injures the whole.

Elon, the head of the system, is severely handicapped on account of its mortgage indebtedness. "The task of the hour," or I might better say, "the duty of the hour," is to pay off this indebtedness by May, 1940. Some tasks can be avoided or delayed, but this is not one of that kind. It can be done by a united effort all along the line. With Dr. L. E. Smith as leader, the campaign in strong hands, the plan is perfect, and I only want to help along an untouched source. Many people cannot give as much as fifty dollars ($50.00), so I shall ask every Sunday school and every Sunday school class that can possibly do so, to sign a pledge for $50.00, payable by May, 1940. Let us give every man, woman, and child the opportunity to contribute.

I would begin with thanksgiving and prayer to God for the promoters and founders, the presidents and trustees who have guided them, the sacrificing and underpaid faculties and officers; the Suffolk Christian Church for permitting its pastor, Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., to serve as non-resident president for many years, the graduates and non-graduates alike, every man, woman, and child who made a contribution from one penny to many thousands of dollars, those who have offered prayers or shed tears in its behalf. Talk about its achievements and not its mistakes. Take it all in all, it is a wonderful record. In its fifty years' history there is glory enough for all.

During the World War before a conference or convention I spoke on "The Duty of the Hour." Substituting a few words: "The dominant thought in every Christian and Congregational heart should be an earnest desire to win this campaign and a willingness to make whatever sacrifice of property, time, pleasure, habits and prejudices as may be necessary to attain the desired end." This is my challenge to the 30,000 Christians and Congregationalists in Virginia and North Carolina. America could not win the World War by money and men only, and had to enlist men, women, and children in giving, sacrificing, and saving of food and the war was won. As a "Four Minute Man" I sold war savings stamps, as well as Liberty Bonds.

The world is turned upside down, there is war and rumors of war, and we are passing through strange times in the United States. The nation is going to the poorhouse in automobiles, sit-down strikers have taken charge of private property, and relief workers are striking against the government which is granting relief. I have been amazed at the number of thoughtful men and women who say that our nation will not survive its present form of government, if some law is passed, or some law is not repealed, or the budget is not balanced. I do not believe these pessimistic prophecies which are general in the nation will come true, although I must admit some of the criticisms are justifiable and things do not look good. On the bright side of the picture so far as engineers, inventors, and scientists can do, we are living in the golden age of history and still greater things are ahead for youth and the coming generation and the New York World's Fair is showing the world to be. The question is, have we progressed as rapidly spiritually as we have materially? Have we marshaled all the spiritual forces of the nation, and is youth as well prepared spiritually as mentally and physically to lead in the greater age yet to come, or the world to be? In my opinion, if America goes down or changes its democratic form of government, it will be from the destruction of the profit system or a lack of Christian Education, with a moral and spiritual decline. I pray that my Church will ever stand for these two foundation stones of this Republic.

SALEM CHAPEL HOMECOMING.

The annual Homecoming service will be held at Salem Chapel on the first Sunday in August (next Sunday), which has been the custom for more than half a century. All friends and former pastors are invited to worship with us on this occasion. The program provides for the regular Sunday school at ten o'clock, followed by a service of worship and preaching. Dinner will be spread at the church, and an hour and a half will be spent in fellowship with friends, many of whom never see each other on any other occasion.

"Uncle Charlie Johnston and his children" will have charge of the afternoon services, which we are sure will be very interesting and inspiring.

Visit "the old church with a new vision."

G. H. VEAZEY, Pastor.

The great task of church and school today is to declare unflinchingly the principle that in things harmless, moderation is temperance, but that in things potentially dangerous and destructive, total abstinence is the only temperance. The church and school together can foster a type of individual and social life that will gradually express an effective group opinion against alcohol.—Charles J. Turck,

THE ORIGIN OF MUSIC.

Music is a speaking art, using instruments and voice to express emotions. It is a mode of motion in atmospheric air. It has its origin in God. All things originate in God. "All things were made by Him, and without Him was not anything made that was made." God made this plain to Job in the words, "When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy" (Job 38:7). The idea is expressed again when there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men" (Luke 2:14). David touched the highest notes of praise in the psalms on the strings of his harp; and John "heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder; and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps"

Nature was made by God in the beginning, and nature is full of harmony, which is the soul of music. While there is no real music in nature, the Greek conception of the "music of the spheres" carries with it the suggestion that music has its origin, at least in part, in nature. But we must look to man for the origin of music as a science and an art. Man is next to God in his creation and dominion. "In the image of God and with the dominion over the world;" and it is in the soul of man, and not his mind, that music is born, for music had its origin in the religious nature of man. In all primitive races and nations, such music as they had was in praise of their gods. The nine muses in Greece inspired song, and Homer says they were daughters of Zeus, and they brightened the banquets of the gods by their lovely voices, attuned to the lyre of Apollo. In all primitive ages, music is in touch with deities. Its origin suggests the hunger of the human soul after the divine. This thought of "feeling after God" (Acts 17:27) is universal, and any question on that subject is the fallacy of modern doubters whose science makes them ascend from monkeys. It is safe to say that music originated in a crude form of worship of an unknown, but realized, deity. In all countries of mythological types, their gods have been regarded as the inventors of music and musical instruments.

Music springs out of the inner life and appeals to the inner life. It is heavenly in origin and expression. It belongs to the religious world and inspires worship in the soul of man. It seems to be an historical fact that Christianity is the only living religion that inspires song. Hinduism, Buddhism, Mohammedanism, have no hymn book.

Music has its origin in God, is developed and rendered to God by man, and thus runs in a circle like man himself—made in the image of God, spends his life in the service of God, and then returns to God. Music is the rhythm of the universe, the echo of eternity, the soul of man in its finest feelings and highest expression, the soother of babes, the inspiration of manhood, the mark of civilization. Its soul is pure, its tones are true, its melodies are sweet, and its harmonies divine.

It is not possible to state the origin of music in a positive way, because it is so ethereal and heavenly in its spirit and sweep; but it is safe to assume that heaven is its home, God is its author, and man is the only medium through which divine melody speaks. When music is degraded by improper use, it is sin, for sin is the wrong use of the best. Man was God's best, and man only could sin. Music is God's best in man, and man is at his highest when he makes best music; and music will find its highest expression around the great white throne."

The Daily Chicago Evening Post declares a great truth in saying, "Propaganda is the business of the Christian Church. 'Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel' was the marching order of its founder. To charge the Federal Council of Churches with efficiency in propaganda is to pay high tribute." Possibly the Post spoke better than it knew for every offering made to missions is a salient declaration on the part of the donor that he, or she, is seeking to obey the marching order of Him who is the founder and builder of the church. Our donations to missions, made as they are to share our spiritual, and not merely our material blessings and benefits with others, are thus wholly divine and unselfish. On this account we rejoice to receive donations for missions knowing full well that those who made the donations did so with the desire to obey the marching orders of their Master and Leader. The above acknowledgements, knowing that they represent gifts from many individuals for the sake of their Lord, are made with a heart of deep gratitude.

VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The Woman's Missionary Conference of the Virginia Valley met Thursday, July 27, at Mt. Olivet (R), in an all-day session. The churches from Page, Green, Rockingham, Shenandoah, and Frederick Counties in Virginia, and Hampshire County, W. Va., were represented.

The speakers for the day were: Mrs. M. J. White, Luray, a returned missionary from the Philippines; Mrs. G. P. Bostick, Luray, a returned missionary from China; Rev. Rush Sine, High View, W. Va.; and Mrs. Leslie Wing, Poplar, Mont. Mesdames White and Bostick spoke very interestingly of the people in the fields where they had worked. Rev. Mr. Sine gave a very interesting lecture on India. This address was made more interesting by a large map of India, which was made by the young people of Winchester Church under the direction of their pastor's wife, Mrs. R. A. Whitten. This map was a wonderful piece of handwork.

Mr. Wing, a young Indian from Montana, spoke of the Indian life on the Reservation. He made a great impression on his audience as he spoke earnestly about his people. He wore a beautiful Indian coat, which showed skill and careful workmanship. He also displayed a few rare specimens of beadwork.

The young people of Winchester gave a pageant entitled "Inspiration."

The pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. M. W. Mann, and the women of the church entertained delegates and visitors in a most royal manner. Dinner was served in the basement of the church.

Linville Church was chosen for the Missionary Conference for 1940. The following officers were installed for the coming year: President, Mrs. R. C. Myers, Broadway; Vice-President, Mrs. S. A. Jenkins; Secretary, Miss Helen Showalter, Harrisonburg; Treasurer, Miss Verdie Showalter, Harrisonburg. Superintendents—Life Memberships and Memorials, Mrs. R. A. Larrick, Wichester; Young People and Juniors, Mrs. R. A. Whitten, Winchester; Cradle Rolls, Miss Mabel Higgs, Shenandoah; Literature and Mite Boxes, Mrs. Lena Sours, Luray; Spiritual Life, Miss Opal Oates, Winchester.

A vote of thanks was rendered Mrs. K. H. Sale, the retiring President, and Mrs. B. F. Frank, retiring Secretary, who had served four and nineteen years respectively. The Superintendents of the various departments gave reports showing good work done in their various branches.

The music for the day was in charge of Rev. and Mrs. Mann, and the two worship services were in charge of Miss Oletha Spitzer of New Hope and Miss Anna Lou Showalter of Antioch. Mrs. B. F. FRANK.

CHINA DEMONSTRATES HER SPIRITUAL STRENGTH.

By JEAN LYON.

[Jean Lyon is a New York City newspaper woman, and a China-born daughter of missionaries. Facts in the article, whose sources are not credited, were taken largely from news releases from the China Information Committee, which are sent out regularly by a group of Americans in China who are interested in seeing that the outside world gets a true picture of events in China.]

The close of the second year of China's armed resistance to the aggression of Japan marks a new phase for China. While she has been fighting, she has been building. A new China is springing up in the west and south—a China which no one dreamed could be so rapidly developed or quickly unified.

The impression gained in this country from newspaper reports and the maps of military maneuvers has been that China has lost the heart of her country to the invaders. With the large cities of Shanghai, Peiping, Nanking, Hankow, and Canton ostensibly in Japanese control, Americans feel that most of China is now "occupied territory." There has also been the feeling that with the industrial centers gone, and with the seacoast cut off, China's ability to manufacture or to import supplies was ended—that, in effect, she has already lost the war.

The amazing truth is that China, on the contrary, is surging with new life. The largest proportion of territory in China still belongs to "free" China, and in the "occupied" territory only six per cent of the loyal Chinese magistrates are completely unable to carry out their duties because of Japanese control, according to a report by Dr. H. H. Kung, President of China's Executive Yan, and also its Minister of Finance. In the completely free western territory China is doing a pioneer job of settling and developing while she continues to harrass the Japanese army in the invaded areas. China has found a new ability to organize her economic structure, to rebuild her industries, and to establish herself as a unified government. Rather than growing weaker in the two devastating years just past, she has grown stronger.

Observers recently returned from China report that the highway from Chungking to Burma is completed, and is carrying a steady stream of supplies to the Chinese capitol. China's Communications Minister has just returned from a month's survey of the transportation facilities and reports that the Yunnan Railway leading into China from Haiphong in French Indo-China, together with the highways, is able to handle an adequate amount of supplies into free China. Relationships with the French authorities in Indo-China has improved, and the cargoes at Haiphong, he reports, are moving rapidly.

Already 755 industrial cooperatives have been organized to provide work for the refugee workers from the occupied cities, and to provide home-made supplies to the increasing numbers of people arriving in the west. Plans are already drawn up for the establishment of 10,000 more of these cooperatives during the next year. Products shown at a recent exhibit of the work of the cooperatives held in Chungking included cotton cloth, soap, matches, chemical and mechanical products such as synthetic gasoline (one of the products China has had the most difficulty in acquiring), vaseline substitute, simple motors and parts, and munitions. Synthetic cotton manufactured by Shensi cooperative united is reported to be supplying 70 per cent of the needs of the Chinese Red Cross. Another group of cooperatives in Hunan province is specializing in army uniforms and blankets.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA.

For the last few years the young people of the Western North Carolina Conference have had no Conference organization. All of the other Conferences in the Southern Convention are so organized. At the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention recently held in Randleman the thirty-five young people present decided that they would like to have a Conference Pilgrim Fellowship organized there. The group voted to have a meeting of young people from all of the Western North Carolina churches at Pleasant Ridge Christian Church, near Ramseur, on Sunday afternoon, September 10. Mr. and Mrs. Sybrant Pell of Asheboro were chosen to provide a program for that meeting. Miss Thelma Thomas of Biscoe, N. C., is to handle the publicity.

We hope that all the young people of our churches in the Western Conference will keep this meeting in mind and will plan to be "among those present" at Pleasant Ridge on the second Sunday in September.

WHAT THE MINISTER MUST PAY.

[Talk given at the Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship meeting.]

The minister is the key-person in the young people's activities in his church. The attitude and interest of the older people and the youth leaders are important and the right spirit of the young people themselves is essential. But in the final analysis, the life and success of their work depends on the minister. They will be alive and active to the same degree that he is. In reality, the church itself will be successful to the same degree because its vitality is measured by the vitality of the young people. This thought offers a challenge to the minister and makes him realize that his contact with the youth of his church and his guidance of their work are not only important, but necessary to the effectiveness of his ministry.

His first obligation is to learn all that he can about the young people's department of our Congregational and Christian Churches. He must see Pilgrim Fellowship as the official young people's organization of our denomination and know the relation this great body to his local church. Every young person and every young people's organization is a part of the National Fellowship. The minister must know this fact and help his local group to feel the bond of unity that draws all Congregational and Christian young people together. He should know what the national organization's purposes are and guide the young people in incorporating them in their own purposes. It is of great importance for him to learn the program National Pilgrim Fellowship is promoting so that his local program

WHAT CAN WE DO ABOUT INTEMPERANCE.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR AUGUST 13, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Prov. 23:29-35.

Daily Readings—

Monday—The Sin of Ephraim—Isa. 28:1, 7, 8.

Tuesday—A Kingdom Lost—Dan. 5:24:30.

Wednesday—Ignorance, the Cause of Sin—Hosea 4:6-11.

Thursday—A Drunken Murderer—Matt. 14:1-12.

Friday—Among "Works of the Flesh"—Gal. 5:17-21.

Saturday—Denied Spiritual Inheritance—1 Cor. 6:9, 10.

There are two purposes of this meeting: (1) to reaffirm the evils of alcohol and counteract misleading advertising and fallacious popular notions about drinking; (2) to point out certain activities and enterprises by which Christian youth can do something to promote alcohol education and thwart the organized liquor traffic.

In promoting temperance, young people can:

1. Become informed concerning the physiological, economic, and moral consequences of the use of beverage alcohol. Many good study guides are available which present this information.

2. Arrive at strong personal convictions concerning the use of beverage alcohol. It ought to be clear that Christian young people should not use it or associate with those who habitually use it.

3. Analyze political issues and give support to candidates and causes which strengthen the cause of temperance. More and more the issue is being brought into local politics.

4. Make surveys of the local community, listing the laws which govern the sale of liquor, noting the extent to which these laws are observed, counting and reporting violations.

5. Design, make, and display posters which spread the message of temperance; invite high school groups to discussion and debates in which the cause of temperance is presented.

6. Cooperate with local agencies, such as the W. C. T. U., which combat intemperance.

ELIJAH: A LIFE OF COURAGE.

GOLDEN TEXT: Jehovah is far from the wicked; but he heareth the prayer of the righteous.—Proverbs 15:29.

LESSON: I Kings 18:1-46.

The Prophet of Fire.

This man Elijah was a man of fire. From the time when he first steps dramatically on the pages of the Old Testament and boldly tells the king, Ahab, that there is to be a long drought, until the end of his ministry, when he disappears in a chariot of fire, he is a man of action, a fire-brand, a dynamic, irrepressible, courageous figure. There was something about this prophet that arrested attention and commanded obedience.

Little, or nothing, is known of his background. He came out of the desert, the wild, rough places of Gilead. The stern necessities of desert life, its simplicities and its disciplines, had developed a strong, wiry body and strong, steady nerves. It had developed a sternness and ruggedness of character. It had fostered a quiet and listening mind. It had developed a spirit of independence, and a spirit of courage. It had produced a sense of the unseen, and a consciousness of a divine mission. When Elijah steps forth he feels that he has been sent from God, that the world of the Lord has come unto him. From first to last he has a tremendous, sometimes a misguided, zeal for his God, the Lord of hosts. He was a man of God in a very real way.

A Man of Courage.

Elijah apparently was afraid of no man. He stood before the king and rebuked him for his sins. Like everyone of us, Ahab blamed his troubles on others. He made himself believe that whatever was wrong with things was due to this fiery fellow who went about proclaiming the word of God. Elijah bluntly tells him that it is Ahab himself who is troubling Israel. He and his father's house have forsaken the commandments of the Lord, and they have followed Baalim. The unrest without, and the unrest within, have come from a violation of the divine commandments. Furthermore, Elijah flings out a challenge to the powerful king. He commands him—his words are more than a request—to bring the issue between the gods of Baal and the true God to a test. The king is to summon the prophets of Baal, the prophets of the false religion which his wicked wife had introduced (poor Ahab was not the first man who got into trouble because he had a foolish and wicked wife), and to submit to a test that would show once and for all which was the true God. It was "his master's voice" and there was nothing for the king to do but to obey.

Elijah also had the courage to indict the people of Israel for their folly and their disloyalty to Jehovah. "How long halt ye, or go limping, between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him." Not open rebellion but indifference is the great sin. Alas for those of us who go limping between two opinions—trying to serve both God and mammon.

And finally the prophet showed his courage by espousing the cause of Jehovah against eight hundred and fifty prophets of a false religion. There is so much temptation to trim one's message when "everybody else is doing it," to "go with the crowd," to "soft-pedal" the message that is unpopular. But Elijah had the courage of his convictions. He would stand for God if he had to stand alone. There is something exhilarating about the man as he stands on Mount Carmel and flings his challenge against the king, the prophets, and the people.

It took courage for the prophet to "build again the altar of Jehovah that was thrown down." It is difficult to be a good witness for God when one is in a hostile crowd, or a crowd that makes light of religion. Many a man who is brave physically is a coward morally. Many a man is not man enough to stand up for Christ before the world.

A Test of Fire.

The story of the experience of Elijah on Mount Carmel ought to be familiar to the average reader of the Bible. It makes interesting, even thrilling, reading. The old prophet asked no odds. He gave the prophets of Baal all the time they wanted, and every concession. When after hours of cajoling and calling upon their god they got no response, he "burns them up" with irony that cannot be surpassed. "Perhaps their god is taking a nap after a good meal, or perhaps he has gone off on a little hunting trip, or perhaps he is talking with a friend and does not hear them, or perhaps he has gone for a little pleasure jaunt," taunts Elijah. All to no avail do the prophets work themselves into a frenzy in order to attract the attention of their gods, and to secure their help. Finally, in despair, they give up, confessing defeat.

Then Elijah goes to work. Taking twelve stones, thus with irony to remind the people of the original unity of the nation, he repaired the altar of Jehovah which had fallen into disuse and into despair. Then he dug a trench around the altar and after laying the sacrificial bullock on the altar he poured water on the whole until everything was drenching wet, and even the trench around the altar was full of water. Then leisurely and calmly the man of God called upon his God, imploring Him to show His power and to vindicate His name. Forthwith "the fire of the Lord fell" and consumed everything, the sacrifice, the altar, the stones, even the dust round about, and the water that was in the trench. It was a convincing demonstration of the superiority of the true God of Israel over the false gods whom the people ignorantly were worshipping. And then with a ruthlessness which can be interpreted only in terms of the stern days from which this story comes, Elijah slew the prophets of Baal with his own hand. He was living only in the twilight of the day of Him who told us to love our enemies.

To be sure, the thing does not work that way now. A Christian would hardly dare to put the thing to a test thus between himself and, say, for instance, a Mohammedan. God's supremacy is not thus demonstrated. Indeed in Jesus on the Cross, or before the soldiers of the governor, we see just the opposite. But the principle still holds true. God is still willing to be put to the test. He still demonstrates His superiority over all false religions by His ability to transform life and to develop a type of character beyond anything that any other so-called god can do. Christianity today and always must be judged by its fruits. When so judged it stands supreme.

AID FOR WORLD'S FAIR VISITORS.

The ability of New York to absorb the hundreds of thousands who are expected to crowd the metropolis during the month of August remains open to some question, according to experts on such matters. And because of that fact, the famed Actors' Church—Union Methodist—has added still another function to its unique list of services.

The church, of which the Rev. C. Everett Wagner is minister, has long been a focal point for visitors, due

"A MEANING OF PRAYER."

"Lord, teach us to pray."—Luke 11:1.

Luke says "without prayer Jesus did nothing"—why did He pray? We are taught that He prayed not to bring the will of the Father into harmony with His will, but that His will might be identified with the Father's will. He prayed so simply yet so beautifully and effectively that the disciples desired to be able to pray that way.

We bring ourselves into perfect harmony with the will of God through silence, meditation, adoration, confession, petition, intercession. These are the attributes of the Lord's Prayer when He taught them to pray.

Prayer—Our Father, help us to bring ourselves into such communion with Thee that we may become possessed of Thy plan, Thy thought, and Thy passion for the world. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"IMPELLED TO PRAY."

"Call upon me, and I will answer thee."—Jer. 33:3.

A proper conception of God impels one to call upon Him. When one knows what God is, what He will do for His children, and that He is present everywhere, creating all life, fulfilling all laws of nature, from the atoms of the earth to the solar system, from the laws of gravitation to the laws of men, he is impelled to pray.

Prayer—Our Father,

Speak to us then, for we're hearing
And spirit with spirit doth meet,
For nearer art Thou than breathing,
And closer than hands and feet.

—Adapted from Tennyson.

WEDNESDAY.

"IS QUIET POSSIBLE?"

"Be still, and know that I am God."—Ps. 46:10.

In God, our Father, we find directive mind and purposeful will. If we would study arithmetic can we do so successfully midst the noise of radio and clamorous, blatant, roaring, maddening, frightful noises? Neither canst thou hear the voice of God midst the exciting incessant feverish din and roar of the world. If we would know Him we must have a sanctuary of silence, in order to give God a chance at our souls.

Prayer—Eternal God, help us in our feverish days, to find a quiet for Thee where we hear Thy will, learn Thy will, and have our spirits warmed to Thy spirits. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"ABSOLUTE POWER."

"I can do all things through Christ."—Phil. 4:13.

This is not only a testimony of Paul, but it is a promise of God to give absolute power to us. Power for what? Paul was in chains in prison, had no money, position nor anything. Only once was he freed from prison miraculously. His power was the mastery over life's ups and downs, over surroundings and obstacles, over self, over sin, and power to see God and preach His gospel.

Prayer—O God, we thank Thee for the power that is ours. Forbid that we shall fall victims to fears and anxieties, and enable us to arise above these things. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"RELIGIOUS PROSPERITY."

"I wish above all things that Thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth."—III John 2.

Religious prosperity. What is that? How puny beings we would be if we were not more prosperous physically than we are spiritually.

Some one has aptly said that climate, diet and exercise are the main contributory causes of health. Is not the same thing true of soul health? Climate: surroundings and environment. Diet: soul food—Bible, good literature, religious culture, pure thoughts. Exercise: doing good, concerned about others, preaching, teaching, living, witnessing.

Prayer—O Father, Bread of Life, be Thou on our daily diet list. Make us fit in our moral and spiritual muscles. In His name, we ask it. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"SHINING SOULS."

"Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself."—Dan. 1:8.

Clean thoughts, chaste ideals, blameless living, give grace, beauty of character, and distribution of life, to face and bearing. They make a shining soul.

Prayer—Our Father, help us to eschew those things that bring weakness, and make us discreet and dower us with Thy grace and spirit. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"BEWARE OF VENEER."

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."—I Cor. 3:11.

The practice of veneering is by no means confined to wood-work. A lot of us practice it in our living. Shallowness in fundamentals is veneer. Conventional morality is veneer. Futile theories without practical fruition is veneer. Hypocrisy is veneer.

Great characters build on the rock of Jesus Christ and not on false fronts. That is the only assurance of our peace.

Prayer—O God, our Father, teach the wisdom of walking Thy way, how to live victoriously, and to lean always on Thy sturdy arm. Amen.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.

GUIDEPOSTS ALONG LIFE'S TRAIL.

When the Apostle Paul wrote those defiant words, "I press on towards the high calling in Christ Jesus," he was announcing to his followers and warning the oppressing authorities in the Roman Empire that he had found something by which to live. For him the road was marked out; he was making it his mission to carry the message of Christianity throughout Asia Minor and all of the then known civilized world. Nothing could balk him, for the guideposts were clearly marked and he had no sense of uncertainty. The teachings of a simple Galilean had given him impetus and direction.

For Jesus it had been no simple task to find that direction. He had found the guideposts of his own people and his own time to be inadequate. Instead, he had to search anew, not an easy task! That which had sufficed for his fathers was not enough for Jesus. He made it a point to note "ye have heard it said of olden times," but—and here lies the difference—"I say unto you!"

You see, Jesus lived in a time not dissimilar to our own. It may be repeating the obvious to say that Jesus encountered problems quite akin to our own, that he faced the disintegration of an age, that he was aware of the end of an era, and that he sought eagerly for guideposts by which he might move out along life's trail. Reiterating the axiomatic, however, does not alter the fact that his difficulties were not at all unlike our own. We, too, face those self-same problems of the individual as he tries to adapt himself to the world in which a seemingly blind destiny has placed him. We face the end of an epoch and note with growing misgivings the collapse of all that has hitherto been solid and enduring in Western Civilization. Like the ancient Hebrews, of whom we hear in the Book of Isaiah, "We grope for the wall like the blind."

With that same faith in the potentialities of man and the world, we must find one guidepost to be those who have gone before us, the "pilgrims and strangers from afar" who have traversed this way before and have given us indications of what we may expect and what we must do to fulfill the command, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and then all these things will be added unto you." Those who would follow these guideposts must find them in the personalities and lives of such great hearts as Madame Curie, Louis Pasteur, Father Damien. These are but a few of those who have blazed the trail. The path will be overgrown with the underbrush of indifference and ignorance unless others follow in their wake and seek to make this world a more Christian world, one in which all war and racial discrimination, all hate and intolerance, all exploitations and oppression are steadily diminished.

Another guidepost is marked for us with the legend "Go the second mile,"—a dictum of Jesus. In plain, everyday language that means the incarnation of the ideal of love and of understanding in the life of our world. For individuals, it means a growing sympathy and tolerance, a realization that the common good is the goal of man and not the satisfaction of individual interests and petty desires. For nations, it implies the creation of peaceful relations among the various nationalities and people who are now at each other's throats. Second guessing is an easy thing—all too easy—but it is safe to say that if the "second mile" guidepost had been followed by nations in our contemporary civilization, there would be no bombastic speeches by fascist dictators, no wholesale bombing of Chinese cities, no engendering of fear on a world-wide scale. "But we do not in an ideal world," we are told. Quite true! The fact remains, however, that the precept of going the second mile, of loving one's neighbor as one's self, is still the guidepost which points men to the City of God rather than to the City of Destruction.

To be sure, none of us live—nor ever shall live—in the make-believe world of a Shangri-La where men need struggle no longer and where the sheltering mountains spare them the onslaught of greed and the lust for power. No, such a consumation, so devoutly to be wished, shall forever remain a "lost horizon" so far as we moderns are concerned. But that need not deter us from seeking a direction more compatible with the common welfare and from finding our guideposts so that we may move forward with a firmer step and a more reasonable purpose. As Professor Hocking points out, we are beset with a sense of "lostness." Our fate will be a terrible one unless we can find direction in this chaotic world—and that direction must be the correct one, in harmony with the profound insights of a prophetic Christianity.

PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

will be in keeping with it. He should keep informed about the developments and progress of the national body and know that through it Congregational and Christian young people work with the interdenominational youth movements. When he fully understands Pilgrim Fellowship, he will see it in its proper relationship to his local groups and know that it does not take away any of the local independence. It rather links together groups which already have common purposes and gives them life and an effective means of accomplishing these purposes.

The minister will next realize the importance of the conference Pilgrim Fellowship because it is the link between his local group and the national organization. He will want to attend its meetings with his young people and secure all of the information he can. The conference Fellowship must have his support in order to be effective. He can be a real help by giving his counsel and guidance and he should be one of the chief means through which the conference Fellowship contacts his local group.

In his own church the minister must give to his young people the love and understanding they need. He must help them mold their program and guide them in carrying it through. He must be vitally interested in them and show his interest in them and show his interest by attending their meetings and lending whatever aid he can.

The minister must realize the worth-whileness of a united young people's program for our denomination. In order to make it effective in his church and conference, he must be willing to pay the price. His payments must be a thorough understanding of the national and conference programs, a keen interest in his own group, and a willingness to give his thought, effort, and ability for the good of the larger Fellowship.

Ministers, will you pay the price?

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The Lord has greatly blessed us with splendid seasons this year and the orphanage corn, beans, and hay crops look promising at this time. The Lord is always better to us than we deserve, anyway.

The Christian Orphanage Singing Class has already made engagements for all the Sundays in August.

The First Sunday in September is our annual "Homecoming Day." We invite all the boys and girls, who have been reared in the Christian Orphanage and have gone out, to come back and spend the day with us and meet their old friends of former days. We all like to go back home. It makes no difference how long we have been away, there is joy in going back to the old home where we spent our childhood days. It brings back to our minds many memories of the past. Some of them are very vivid ones, too. The children reared here get pleasure in coming back home. It is the only home many of them know anything about. We are looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to having them on our campus again. Quite a number of changes have taken place since many of them had a home here. New buildings have been built. Quite a lot of land has been purchased. The dairy herd has been greatly improved. These and other things will make the visit interesting.

In Memoriam

NORFLEET.

Mrs. Willie M. Norfleet, aged seventy-six years, passed on to her reward on July 3, 1939. She was the oldest child of Isaac W. and Ann Porter Everett of Nansemond County, Va. In 1888 she was married to Fulton B. Norfleet. Three children were born to this union—Clyde, who died at the age of three years; James Lee of Portsmouth, Va.; and Mrs. P. C. Holland of Holland, Va., with whom she made her home. She is also survived by two grandchildren, James Everett Holland and Mrs. Ocie Lee Duke, a great-grandson, Leon, one brother, H. B. Everett. Surviving also are several nieces and nephews and other relatives.

In girlhood she joined Holy Neck Christian Church and remained a loyal and loved member until her death.

Funeral services were conducted July 4, at 3:30 P. M., at the home by the Rev. Arnold Slater, assisted by Dr. W. B. O'Neill of the Holland Christian Church, and Rev. W. H. Corbitt, Holland Baptist Church. Burial was in the Holland Cemetery.

ROYSTER.

Robert Spencer Royster, son of William Ellis and Mary Obryant Royster, departed this life on June 26, 1939, aged sixty-nine years. On December 25, 1904, he married Miss Nannie Royster, who survives him with two sons and two grandchildren. The sons are Elmo, of Norfolk, Va, and Lawrence, of Virgilina. Brother Royster had been a member of Union Christian Church for twenty-four years. For the past ten years he served as deacon. He was a real Christian gentleman of the highest integrity. He was faithful to his church and gave liberally to all her enterprises.

The funeral was at his church. Rev. J. F. Morgan, who received Brother Royster into the church, assisted with a beautiful tribute and song. Burial was in the town cemetery, and a large crowd attended. Floral tributes were numerous and beautiful. A useful man has gone to the home prepared by his Savior. Loved ones are sorrowing, but the memory of his faithfulness will help them to carry on in life's duties.

C. E. NEWMAN.

BRILL.

Mrs. Fannie May Davis Brill, a life-long member of Timber Ridge Church, died in the sixty-eighth year of her life in the Winchester hospital on July 17, 1939, after a lingering illness. She is survived by two children, Mrs. M. F. Seldon and L. R. Brill; her mother, two brothers, other relatives, and many friends.

Services for the deceased were held in the church on July 20, conducted by her pastor, the writer, assisted by the Revs. C. R. Sine and C. R. Anderson. A large congregation was present to pay a tribute of respect to Mrs. Brill. May God comfort and bless her loved ones.

manufacturing laboratory supplies for the secondary schools of the province. They are making such things as fluid extract of gentian, and anatomical models of the human body.

New inventions are being made, the most recent one being a new spinning machine. The rich mine deposits of western China are being developed—gold, tungsten, and tin.

A new pharmacy factory has been established at Chengtu. Cotton mills, flour mills, match factories, and machine shops are springing up daily, according to reports from Chungking.

These facts are indicative of the new power in China. China is providing herself with the strength to continue her resistance against Japan for an indefinite length of time.

THE LITTLE RED SCHOOLHOUSE.

In the early days the Little Red Schoolhouse was a Christian institution, working hand in hand with the church. Teacher and students together began the day with prayer, read from the Bible, and found in their New England primers the essence of Christian teaching. A high percentage of moral teaching was the record for the old McGuffey "reader" and its companions. The log college and its colonial descendants had but one purpose—the development of Christian leadership.

The last century has seen tremendous changes. The spiritual element in public school education has been quietly but persistently receding toward the vanishing point. This secularization of American education is strikingly shown in Parker's investigation of the moral and religious content of 1,291 American school readers. He discovered that from 1776 to 1786 religious emphasis was about one hundred per cent; from 1786 to 1825, fifty per cent; from 1825 to 1880, twenty-one per cent; from 1916 to 1920, five per cent.

The church faces a crisis and in most instances little more than an hour to two a week is being devoted to its task of teaching the Christian religion.

Look over the American horizon today: 17,000,000 boys and girls without any religious education; another 17,000,000 in our Sunday schools receiving only superficial training; juvenile delinquents in thousands—a part of the organized system of crime education; an annual crime bill of $12,000,000,000 with the largest amount of expenditure charged off against the nineteen-year-olds; a student population in our colleges and universities of 1,000,000—bewildered, seeking the way to a secure and satisfying life in an insecure and confused world.

How long will America continue to spend one hundred times as much on crime as it would take to make religious education practically universal? Teaching the Christian religion is the function of our Sunday schools and churches. Christian education is the need of the hour.—Anon.

“Christianity professes to be a religion of redemption, and its adequacy must be tested, fundamentally; by its ability to deliver us from our most un-Christian practices and sins.”

“If hopes were dupes, fears may be liars.”

HOW IS YOUR HEART?

How is your heart? Are you satisfied with a general glow of good will toward the race, with a mere profession of love, with an occasional contribution to some philanthropic cause, or does your love take on a concrete, practical character and, beginning with the members of the family in the home, the associates in business, the neighbors in the community, does it reach out to the underprivileged of the land, the sufferers in distant nations? Are you ready to forgive sinners their sins, slow to believe evil of anyone, quick to seek out "mitigating circumstances" when a wrongdoer is exposed, and to endeavor to "put him on his feet again?" These are some of the tests of love, of the good heart. Love is more than justice, though it must, of course, include justice. We must be merciful as God is merciful. We must learn the meaning of grace by a review of the heavenly Father's dealings with us. There is a certain lavishness about true love. The element of circulation has no place in it in the sense of give and take, for love is beyond price. Love goes the second mile, breaks the alabaster box of precious ointment, tries and tries again, never gives up. How is your heart?

Time flies. How rapidly the years come and go! As men and women grow older they tend increasingly to seek out the deeper meanings of human existence. Some of the objects of life which in one's youth appeared to be momentous, at evening time seem to dwindle in importance. What is to be the final test of success? Some men answer, "Amassing wealth;" some, "The enjoyment of ease and comfort." But the supreme question to which any man must address himself in appraising his life should be: "How well have I followed the Christian principle of love?"

Love is "the greatest thing in the world." It is the key to an understanding of the mystery of life; for not only does love work its magic upon its object, but it also transforms the subject himself. When one's heart is in good condition, one's whole life glows with spiritual health; for one sees the good in men as the great reality, and their sins and faults as sad accidents and limitations upon them. The good-hearted man learns the deep meaning of fellowship with all mankind, with Christ, and with God. If any man's answer to the question, "How is your heart?" is "Strong and sound," that man has already learned what heaven is, and the secret of God's great purpose in creation and redemption.—Zions Herald.

CONGREGATIONAL & CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

"Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church."

Vol. XCI. RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, AUGUST 10, 1939. No. 32.

REV. JULIUS SHEPHERD.

The Elon College faculty, students, and the college community were greatly shocked Sunday, August 6, on receiving the news of the death of Mr. Julius R. Shepherd.

Mr. Shepherd completed two years of college work at the University of Georgia, and entered Elon College last September as a ministerial student. He was a member of the Baptist Church at White Hall, Georgia, where he was a deacon and from which church he was licensed to preach.

Julius was the son of Jesse Shepherd, and was born in Graham, North Carolina. His father was a member of the Bethlehem Christian Church. Julius is a nephew of the Rev. David Shepherd, pastor of the Congregational-Christian Church of La Grange, Georgia.

It was Julius' ambition to be a minister in his father's denomination. He joined the Elon College community church last spring and planned to re-enter Elon in September. Julius was one of the finest spirits that we have had at Elon College in years. He had a good personality, was an excellent student, possessed high ideals and an ambition to accomplish something worthwhile in life. We can hardly think of his death. His brethren of the ministerial group selected him as their leader for the coming year.

In experiences of this kind we of the Faith submit in the assurance that He who is all wise doeth all things well.

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

Suffolk Christian Church added ten new members to its roll during July, making a total of fifty-six received into the church during the Conference year.

Cecil Thomas, Student Summer Service worker in the Eastern North Carolina Conference, is assisting Rev. E. M. Carter in revival meetings this week.

The revival at Berea, Norfolk, Christian Church will begin the first Sunday in September. Rev. Jesse H. Dollar of Newport News, Va., will be the guest preacher.

Miss Frances Lamb is conducting a Vacation Bible School this week and next in Windsor, Va. Miss Lamb and Miss Shirley Powell last week directed a Vacation Bible School at Pleasant Ridge, near Ramseur, N. C.

Miss Clarene Andes, assisted by Miss Rachel Earp, is conducting Vacation Bible Schools in our Carroll County churches for three weeks. These young ladies also furnish the music for the revival services each evening, conducted by the pastor, Rev. B. J. Earp.

Rev. Joe A. French was the preacher for the revival at Noon Day Christian Church, Wedowee, Ala., the week of July 23-28. He reports a good meeting, both from the standpoint of attendance and interest manifested. Mr. French will return to Norfolk for services the third Sunday in August.

Rev. J. Everette Neese writes: "Rev. Le Grande Moody recently closed a ten day's meeting with fine visible results. His meetings were timely and highly inspirational. The closing night of the meeting we had eight additions to the church and have received four since. Our church enjoyed his presence and invites him to return whenever possible."

DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL AT MT. OLIVET (R).

We have just closed a Daily Vacation Bible School at Mt. Olivet, Rockingham County, which was conducted entirely by local help. We had a standing attendance of better than thirty, and each pupil was prompt, studious, and interested in the course of study.

The instructors were: Beginners, Miss Hilda Monger; Primaries, Miss Laura Lam; Juniors, Mrs. Blaine Lam; Intermediates, M. W. Mann. Mrs. Mann had charge of the music, and Miss Camie Lilly and Mrs. J. J. Fry were general assistants.

The handwork done by the Juniors and Intermediates consisted of dresser scarfs and tea towels done in fancy work, and sent, by the request of the young people themselves, to the Orphanage at Elon College. The closing was on Tuesday evening, July 25, with the program consisting of an outline of work done, followed by a pageant.

OUR REVIVAL MEETING AT CONCORD CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The regular revival services for Concord were held, beginning the fourth Sunday in July and concluding the following Friday. Our fourth Sunday eleven o'clock service was conducted by the pastor (J. U. Fogleman). At the noon hour a splendid lunch was served on the church grounds. The afternoon service, at 2:30, was conducted by the Rev. Luther A. Nall, who is pastor of the Calvary Baptist Church of Burlington. Special music was furnished for both services by Mr. Henry Easley and the Murray girls of Burlington.

Bro. Nall did the preaching twice each day during the week. This man of God is a great preacher and he gave us gospel messages on each occasion. The church was wonderfully blessed and revived. Then, too, eight souls were converted to God. And we know, also, that many good seeds were sown, which we feel will spring up to bear much fruit in due season.

At the conclusion of the Friday evening service the doors of the church were opened and five new members were added to the church. We feel that others will join later. The attendance was good throughout the meeting, and the cooperation and fellowship was enjoyed by everyone. The church choir, under the direction of Bro. Underwood, rendered a great service.

The pastor wishes to recognize the "pounding," which the church members gave to him as tokens of their appreciation during the week. There were many good things for the pantry and table. My people are always liberal.

Let us praise the Lord for His presence, His saving grace, and for all of His many physical and spiritual blessings. "Praise the Lord O my soul, let all the earth praise the Lord."

VALLEY GROUP REPORTS:

Group No. 4 of the Valley of Virginia churches recently held a picnic and get-together at Endless Caverns picnic grounds. This group has as its pastor Rev. Roy D. Coulter, who has proven himself a real leader. There were some two hundred people in attendance and a fellowship worthy of comment.

After a bountiful lunch, the ladies were gathered and led in a discussion of group problems by Mrs. Clarence Phillips of Bethlehem Church. The men were led by Mr. Ettel of Mt. Jackson, Wissler's Chapel Church. The discussion of both groups revolved around the need of a parsonage for the pastor. A committee composed of Mr. Hillyard and Mr. J. Lohr was appointed by the men and given authority to purchase the land and building near the Mayland Church and convert it into a parsonage.

The real good of the meeting was manifested by the good fellowship and spirit of cooperation on the part of all the churches. The leaders of the discussion groups stressed this spirit, and rules for matters of importance among the group of churches were adopted. It was agreed that any four of the six churches should have the authority in calling a pastor, regardless of the number of members of the opposing two churches, and all would abide by it.

The young people of Palmyra Church, led by Miss Louise Bowman, put on a program at Wissler's Chapel the fourth Sunday evening, and there was a crowded house to see the fine

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Subscriptions are essential for the success of any newspaper. This paper is dependent upon its subscribers for most of its income. There are no advertisements. There is no endowment. The Southern Convention, the Mission Board, the Orphanage, the College, and the Board of Christian Education make up any deficit on the paper. At present, the income from subscriptions is running very low and making it difficult for the officials of the Church to pay for the paper.

The Convention and Conferences have asked the churches to become responsible for securing subscriptions. Several of the churches, both large and small, have reached their quota, but quite a number have not yet sent in their list.

Those pastors who are holding revival meetings might well consider that an opportune time to secure the needed subscribers to the church paper. All new members should have it, if they are to be instructed and inspired as members of the church. Officials of the church need the paper, so they will know how to carry on the work in cooperation with Conference and Convention. Young people need it in order that they may keep informed about what other young people are doing to make the world better. Missionary leaders need it for program material and news of other societies and to know what is being done with the missionary money. Every home connected with our church in the Southern Convention needs "The Christian Sun," and according to the vote of the Convention and the Conferences our churches bear the responsibility of getting the paper into the homes of the members. This is a new venture, and one that can mean much toward the success of local churches. Undoubtedly, it will mean more to the churches than it will to the paper, but those of us who work with the paper will be very grateful for renewals and new subscriptions sent by individuals or church societies. We are depending upon the churches, and we feel sure that all of them will cooperate.

VACATIONS.

The continuous turning of any machine will eventually grind it to pieces. The constant effort of a minister will sooner or later wear him down. The energy of human beings working in a church will expend itself unless given opportunities occasionally to rest and revive. Vacations are very necessary for all of those who labor. Some pastors and churches never work hard enough to need a vacation, but others press so steadily during the most of the year that it becomes necessary for them to find change of scenery and, as Jesus said, "rest a while."

Vacation time should be used largely for rest, for doing things that are different, for developing friendships, and for that relationship that makes one rest back on the everlasting arms of the Eternal. Most ministers find some time during vacation to read and meditate. Many of them plan the year's work that lies ahead and come back to the church not only with renewed health and vigor, but with a new vision of things to be done during the coming year. Sermon topics may be selected, church work outlined, and a sufficient amount of planning done to make the new year seem different because the minister has had a vacation. This planning certainly should not consume too much energy, or else the vacation simply becomes a time for study.

The churches that have a heavy schedule are benefited by giving their pastor a month's vacation—particularly when they specify that he is to use it for rest and not for making money, even in as good a thing as revival meetings.

HELP FOR REVIVALS.

There are two difficulties about getting ministerial help for revival meetings. The first is related to using our own ministers, and the second is concerned with using some men too much.

If there is something distinctive about our denomination, it would seem to be important to use our preachers rather than going outside to secure evangelistic help. Of course it is a fine thing on occasion to invite people from other communions so we may know their point of view, but as a rule, if we are to build our own churches, we need to use our own people. There are church members today in our fellowship who feel that their churches have been weaned away from the denominational program because ministers of our church are seldom or never invited to assist them in evangelism or other forms of church work. They do not know our ministers and our officials. It is not strange that some of the churches, then, do not support the enterprises of our denomination. Of course they do not support other enterprises. They simply do not support. This is because they are not closely allied with the leaders of our own church group. When a revival meeting is being planned, it is important for pastor and people to give serious consideration to the selection of an evangelist. They want to reach new members, but they also want to build up and establish a church of the Congregational and Christian fellowship. It is usually best to select leaders from this church to do the work for the church.

On the other hand, it is not right for pastors to be away from their fields too much of the time. It is reported that some ministers conduct as many as twelve to fifteen revivals during the year. This means that those men are away from their field one-fourth of the time. The offering for revival meetings is usually large in proportion to the amount paid for pastoral service. This is particularly true where the salary is low. There is a moral question as to whether a minister who is paid by his church for full- (Continued on page 7.)

SUFFOLK LETTER.

During the past week revival services were held at Oakland Christian Church in Nansemond County. The writer was assisted by Dr. N. G. Newman, the assistant pastor of this church, and Rev. R. E. Brittle who did the preaching. The meeting closed on Friday night with thirteen additions to the church. Brother Brittle rendered acceptable service by his faithful and untiring labor.

A week of revival services in a country church offers a good opportunity for social as well as religious fellowship. In visiting among the people in their homes it is a joy to strengthen the ties of friendship between ministers and laymen. What is more desirable, socially, than a good meal with a friendly family? Dr. Newman does not like to eat watermelon just before his regular meal. He prefers it between meals and at bed time. Brother Brittle likes it at any time of the day, and thinks if he can eat a large piece of watermelon he can also eat a good meal. The pastor could not keep pace with these brethren in eating watermelon but looked on with pleasure and interest.

But the chief interest is centered in the meeting. The attendance of the young people during the Oakland meeting was unusual in numbers and interest. Thirty-seven young people sang in the choir on Thursday night. And their singing was inspiring and uplifting. A supply of new song books, donated by three or four Sunday school classes added to the spiritual efficiency of the musical programs of worship. It was good to be there.

And yet there are many people who proclaim the opinion that the revival meeting has passed. That depends in large measure upon the opinion and attitude of the preacher who occupies the pulpit. Preaching in a revival meeting is not easy. It is very difficult if the preacher is lacking in real spiritual interest and enthusiasm. A revival must have an atmosphere favorable to its development. Corn will not germinate in an iceberg, and it will not grow in a refrigerator. There must be a warm fire in the pulpit before the congregation feels the glow of increasing interest.

Is it not possible for our churches to be increased in number and in membership by a general revival movement? Are the ministers of our churches ready for such a spiritual refreshing? Would it be reasonable to expect united ministerial support of an aggressive leadership in that field? What response would our laymen give to a call to prayer for a revival in Sunday schools, Young People's societies, Pilgrim Fellowship and all churches.

The time is opportune and the fields are white already to the harvest. There is a dire need in our very midst and at our doors. Souls are perishing. They are spiritually hungry—more hungry than the multitude which Jesus fed with a few loaves and fishes. "We haven't the means," says someone, and neither did Jesus, but He drew upon unseen, available resources for power to increase the lunch provided by the obedient lad. We can bring what we have, with a definite objective, and under God's blessing great things can be done in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord.

Such a movement, such a spiritual blessing must be preceded by much prayer and intelligent preparation. But it must come down from God. There is no power on earth to produce a revival except the power of God in people who are saved and consecrated to Him. God is ready. May the churches unite for this great work.

ELON HAD A FLOOD.

The location of Elon College is 700 feet above sea level. The tides are not likely ever to reach her campus. However, she is exposed to the skies, and the clouds often hang heavy.

A little more than two weeks ago in the early evening hours there came what is commonly called a cloudburst. The campus and the surrounding community were literally deluged. While there was no authoritative record of the amount of rain fall, Professor N. F. Brannock declares that within an hour and a half's time a tub eight inches deep was filled to overflowing by the rain fall.

There is a decided slope in the northeast corner of the campus. The wall surrounding the campus is three and one half feet high. The depression extends from the Christian Education building to the wall. The water fell so rapidly and in such abundance that the corner of the wall was filled to overflowing. As the water poured over the wall it was partially undermined. The pressure was so great, that one hundred and five feet of the wall was washed away.

Workers on the campus have been cleaning the mortar from the brick, and the wall will be rebuilt by the time school opens. There were other minor damages caused by the storm. Not in the history of this section, has the community had such a flood.

In the administration of the college affairs there are frequent losses and disappointments. There are also happenings that are gratifying and encouraging. One month from the writing of this letter freshmen will be registering for the 1939-1940 session. We had a very fine freshman class last year, and indications are that the freshman class for 1939-1940, which will be our Golden Anniversary year, will be larger than the freshman class of any previous year. It is also noted that we have a larger number of upper-classmen returning than usual. At this writing practically every room available for girls has been reserved. Room reservation fees have been paid. There are perhaps half a dozen girls of the former student body who will return but who have not reserved rooms. We usually have ten to fifteen new girls register during August. Present rooming conditions for young men are a bit more favorable. We have room for perhaps fifty more boys. However, there are practically this number of former students who have not reserved rooms and who will return. And, of course, a large number of new male students will be applying for entrance.

The question of dormitory facilities is becoming acute at Elon. Perhaps the enrollment should be limited and when the quarters were filled not admit any others. During the past three years the administration has been quietly and without any publicity selecting students for Elon. We have not at any time turned away any member of our own Church. We are anxious that families belonging to the Church patronize their own school.

The inference of this letter is not that since we have been flooded with water from the sky we are flooded with an influx of students, but merely to count our blessings in the face of our misfortune. There are still many of our own young people who are going to college who have not sent in their application. We will be very happy to receive the same.

HOLY NECK ECHOES.

In March, 1938, the writer accepted the call of the Holy Neck Congregational-Christian Church after a pleasant and interesting pastorate of three and one-half years at Albemarle, N. C. Going from an industrial area to a rural one proved to be not only a contrast, but a liberal education. These eighteen months on the field have persuaded me that our rural churches have a greater contribution to offer than I had ever imagined. Perhaps these observations of mine may prove an inspiration to others.

Holy Neck (corruption of Holy Neck) is unique in that it is one of the few rural churches that has for years independently supported a full-time pastor. Located in a good farming section of Eastern Virginia no doubt is a factor, but does not tell the whole story, since other churches equally well located have not accomplished this desired goal.

In answer to those who continually say: "You can't do in the rural church what you can do in the town and city church," I am inclined to agree if the present set-up is not definitely changed, but there is no adequate reason to believe that changes cannot be made.

Naturally the equipment and conveniences do not always measure up to the standard of the city churches, but in two particulars, the two most necessary, there are grounds for improvement, i. e.:

A varied and inclusive church program and a proper emphasis on Stewardship.

Facts and figures are more convincing than theories; the following brief resume of the activities of Holy Neck do not reveal the ideal, but I am sure that they do present a rural church that recognizes its opportunity, even in these days of change.

1. THE PROGRAM—The Church School, with a capable superintendent, has an average attendance of 135, and the morning service has an average of 155 for the year. The Missionary Aid Society meets regularly with a planned program and a record for meeting its conference standards and apportionments.

A healthy Pilgrim Fellowship keeps abreast of the times and pays its obligations to the missionary cause in full, with the Juniors ready for graduation by following a similar program.

The members of the choir take their rehearsals seriously enough to produce desired results in the ministry of music.

The educational needs are not neglected. A daily Vacation Bible School takes care of the children and the local Leadership Training is supplemented by having delegates at Elon College every summer.

The church calendar is made the basis of the church program with

CHURCH FLOATS AWAY.

During the recent flood in Kentucky, the Gregoryville Christian Church, at Gregoryville, Ky., was lifted from its base and floated a third of a mile down the creek, and is considerably demolished.

Strange to say, the pulpit Bible was found dry and undamaged. Fourteen benches are still good. A brick store near the church had three feet of water in the basement.

The people are planning to rebuild the church at once on a higher location, and much has already been donated for doing this. Services are now being held in the county school house. Anyone interested in helping to rebuild this church, may send donations to Mr. Floyd Wilson, Carter County, Gregoryville, Ky.

special services for Advent, Lent, Easter, Whit-Sunday, Thanksgiving, Mother's Day, Father's Day, Children's Day, Memorial, Armistice, and Graduation added to the variety and inclusive program. The annual revival provides the time for the ingathering and strengthening of the church.

Yes, Holy Neck has a tradition, but a tradition is not enough; it has a duty to the present and a program for the future. The church, the rural church, has a real place, a vital place in the Kingdom.

2. STEWARDSHIP—Can the rural church be self-supporting? Perhaps not in every instance, but in developing available resources and presenting Stewardship in its right relationship to the church, improvement can be made. At Holy Neck, in addition to the support of the pastor, this church with a membership of less than 300 has repainted the inside of the parsonage, put on a metal roof and recently built a screened front porch. The ladies furnished the kitchen, including an electric stove and also the guest bedroom, even to hanging pictures on the wall, and putting shades to every window in the parsonage. (Incidentally, these features seem to be necessary fixtures and furnishings for every parsonage.)

Other expressions of good will of a more personal nature were not overlooked, for the parsonage pantry was replenished on two occasions, and the men not to be denied made it possible for the pastor to get two suits of clothes and an overcoat. Giving is living, appears to be the motto. In doing this the church did not forget its obligations to the Conference and world-wide service, and kept its reputation of paying these in full.

What is possible for one rural church is not impossible for others.

The writer can afford to write these things because he takes no credit for the achievements. A short pastorate of eighteen months would not permit that. Holy Neck is used to prove my thesis that the rural church is not to be regarded simply as "a feeder for the city church," but can and must produce a leadership and provide a program that can keep pace with the needs of the day and serve our Christ and his Kingdom most effectively.

What Is the Solution?

1. Personal pastoral oversight. In this instance the long and worthy pastorate of the beloved Dr. N. G. Newman has been a factor along with the vision of other previous pastors. The day of the "preaching point" is over; at best, it was never conducive to growth.

2. An informed membership that feels itself an integral part of all Conference interests and by representation at its meetings keeps the local church informed and alive to every effort.

3. Teaching Stewardship. It is not fair to the members of the rural church to ask them for less than they can afford to give, for this deprives them of God's blessing, and at the same time prevents the local church from enjoying the full-time ministry.

The unselfish loyalty and devotion of the laity deserves admiration and there is every reason to believe they will respond to the challenge of our day, when they see the rural church in its true perspective and so coordinate the resources and efforts to produce the best results for the Kingdom.

ARNOLD SLATER.

Elon College Golden Anniversary

Canvass for funds in a day like this is not the most encouraging undertaking. When such an effort is made in mid-summer, the hazards are multiplied.

Dr. D. J. Bowden, of the Department of Christian Education, and the writer have been in Norfolk, Portsmouth, Berkley, South Norfolk and Portlock during the past week working in the interest of the Golden Anniversary Campaign. Abundant success has not attended our efforts. The time, however, was not spent in vain. In addition to publicity and increased interest in the college, a number of our friends have joined the Anniversary Club, for which we are grateful. One friend, who is not a member of the Church, or an alumnus of the college, said that he would not make a pledge but that he would give his check for $50.00, that he was glad to make the contribution, and that he felt that what has been accomplished at Elon College since 1935 deserved to be recognized and further supported.

When those of us who belong to the Church and are interested in its efficiency and progress realize fully the position that Elon College holds in our Church, the contributions that the college is now making, and that further the Church now has a property including endowment valued at a million and a half dollars, with a debt of only $135,000 against it, those who possibly can will be glad to contribute a minimum of $50.00, and those who are able to give more will be delighted to do it.

Today is the day of need for the college. We must get rid of this debt. It has hampered our institution and the work of our Church long enough. We are able to do it, and by the grace of God we will.

A CONTRIBUTION THAT COUNTS.

One day last week I stopped at a home to ask a good brother for a contribution for our college. He received me cordially and invited me to have a seat on the porch, for it was very warm.

Said he, in the course of the conversation, "My wife and I have talked the matter over and have decided that in our present condition we could hardly afford to give to the college at this time. You see," he continued, "I am crippled with arthritis. My wife is also afflicted with arthritis. I have a large family. I have been unable to work for two years. Times have been a little hard with us, but I have been fortunate in that I have provided for a little income. Since the services on Sunday we have talked about the college again and have decided that we would like to have a part in this good cause. If you will make out the card on as easy terms as possible, I will sign it and we shall try to pay." Then he said, "Wait a moment, and let me speak to my wife." He came out with a check for $50.00 and said, "We decided that we might as well pay now. It probably will help you more if paid than pledged."

That is a thrilling story. I hardly knew whether to accept the money or not, and yet he was so earnest and anxious in his decision. This experience encourages me to believe that if God can put it into the heart of a man like this with his handicaps to contribute to the interest of the college, that He can likewise put the same desire and purpose in your heart and in the hearts of hundreds and thousands of others, and that by and by the debt on our college will be paid, and we shall be happy in our freedom to go forward in this program of Christian Education in the name of our church for modern youth. Your pledge and contribution will be greatly appreciated.

A Minister's Influence

By JOHN R. SCOTFORD.

Promotion and Education Division of the Board of Home Missions.

In the average parish the good pastor is remembered longer than the great preacher. His ministerial standing is a distinct asset to a man when he becomes pastor of a new church. Because he has been vouched for by his denomination, he is accorded a hearty welcome and finds awaiting him a group of people who wish to be his friends. Few newcomers enter a community with more prestige.

But the official position of a pastor is also a barrier between him and a host of people. He is regarded as one who has been "set apart." The popular supposition is that he is different from other men.

Occasionally a minister is tempted to rebel against the artificiality of many of his contacts. Jesus went about doing good without benefit of ecclesiastical standing, and thereby became the friend of publicans and sinners. Many a minister has wondered if he could not do more real good talking to people in the marketplace than preaching from a pulpit.

Unfortunately most of us lack the personal winsomeness of Jesus. Not many would give up their fishing to follow us. We may regard the institution of the church as a good deal of a nuisance, but it is through its organized life that we make most of our human contacts. One of the great justifications of the church is that it draws people together and thus exposes them to the personal influence of the minister. Many of us would have a hard time finding a following, if it were not for the religious organizations which we have inherited from our predecessors. But every minister wants to be something more than cog—or a carburetor—in an ecclesiastical machine. What steps he will take to avoid such a fate depends upon the temperament and training of a man.

Titles are a dangerous commodity. One of the most inane salutations ever invented is that of "Reverend." It means little and is rarely used correctly. Strictly speaking, it is not a title but an adjective, which may be placed before a title. "Reverend Jones" is incorrect, and makes most intelligent ministers writhe. If people cannot be weaned from the "Rev.," teach them to make it "the Rev. Mr. Jones." "Rev." undoubtedly helps the postoffice to deliver mail correctly, but otherwise it is a hindrance and a nuisance. About once a year it is helpful to talk to the church school about the proper way to address a minister in the hope that the children will take the news home to their parents.

As for the title, "Doctor," that, too, is of questionable value. When a man of ample stature and ripe experience is called "Doctor," whether properly or improperly, it probably does no harm. But, for ministers who are either young or not naturally impressive, such a title sets up a hurdle which must be negotiated before real friendships can be established. There is much to be said for the custom of the army, the navy, and the more sophisticated college faculties of discarding titles in ordinary conversation in favor of plain "Mister." The minister's family might well set a good example in that respect.

The same principle applies to a minister's appeal. Clerical garb is an effective muffler of profanity, and it gets a minister certain advantages. For young men it is dangerous, as it tends to frighten people away. On the other hand, S. Parks Cadman wore clerical clothes with much gusto, and it hampered him not at all. Before deciding on a clerical outfit be certain that your personality completely overflows your clothes—which was the case with Cadman.

An air of much learning will always separate from common folk. He can't know too much, but he should not talk as though he had swallowed the dictionary.

Curiously, the appearance of great piety will effectually separate a minister from the mass of men. Frank Buchman once said, "You may not like it, but it is really our sins that draw men together!" Most people are rather painfully conscious of their shortcomings. They know that they have made an abundance of mistakes and blunders. In the presence of a minister who seems to be quite saintly they feel just plain uncomfortable.

On the other hand it is not necessary for a pastor to simulate that sorry creature, the ministerial sport, just to prove that he is human. But he can so conduct himself that people will feel that he is facing the same problems which confront them.

A pastor needs to be careful lest the institution which he serves comes to cloud his vision of life. It is very easy to live behind stained glass windows and see everything from an ecclesiastical angle. One becomes very busy about many things, some of which do not really matter. Recently I heard of a prominent pastor who said to a parishioner seeking counsel, "I'll give you ten minutes." People quickly sense whether we are more concerned with the building of an institution or the helping of men and women. It is very easy to become priests and Levites when we see human need—and go by on the other side of the road.

Nothing helps a man to win the confidence of people like years of continued service in one church. When we come to a community as "the new minister," the emphasis is inevitably upon our ecclesiastical standing, but, if we stay around long enough, our ordination will be forgotten and we will be accepted for what we are. In times of trouble people tend to seek counsel of one whom they have known for a long time. Their lips open more readily for an old friend than for a stranger. One of the contradictions of church life is that the longer a minister remains with a church the poorer his statistical record is likely to become, but the greater is his personal influence in the community.

In our youth most of us ministers were more or less hampered by our ecclesiastical swaddling clothes. His wife chastens him and his children educate him. He meets defeat. The mysteries of human experience are gradually revealed to him. The church ceases to be an end in itself and becomes a channel through which he can work with individual men and women. As his personality mellows, his influence grows.

EDITORIAL.

time has a right to take additional pay from outside sources. If he holds a revival meeting and gets an offering of say fifty dollars ($50.00), it may be appropriate for him to turn the money in to the treasurer of his church, since the church is paying his salary. Some preachers do that. Otherwise they are being paid by their church and using their time for remunerative service elsewhere.

In selecting help for a revival, these two difficulties should be kept in mind. On many occasions the best evangelist is the regular pastor, backed up by his deacons, Sunday school teachers, and other workers. It is a fine thing sometimes to invite a brother pastor who understands the local situation, and who will help to do a constructive piece of work, but it does seem that we need to do some very serious thinking in the field of selecting helpers for revival meetings.

II. THE DEVELOPMENT OF MUSIC.

[The excerpts herewith presented are from the second of a series of five lectures that the late lamented Dr. W. W. Staley delivered at the Elon Chautauqua, July, 1924, on the general topic, "The Music World." As stated last week, it was Dr. Staley's idea, at the request of many who heard them, to have the lectures put in book form, which idea was never carried out. We are sure "Christian Sun" readers will profit by reading what is herewith offered under the sub-title given above. J. O. A.]

Music was originally connected with the dance, military evolutions, and religious rites. In all cases, it expressed emotions. The clapping of hands, the stamping of feet, and the shout of voices are natural expressions of happy feelings. Music had simple but genuine beginnings; and no other art has had such logical and gradual development. Instrumental music leads the way and runs back into the prehistoric past. Musical instruments range from the rudest horns and cymbals to the pianoforte. In this long range, there are 778 musical instruments.

The development of musical instruments has been the development of genius, business, pleasure, and worship. There are three outstanding instruments: the organ, the violin, and the piano. The organ has been called the king of instruments. Organ-building appeared first in Egypt, the cradle of civilization; was carried into Greece, and then in Europe. Its use in church was introduced by Julianus, a Spanish bishop, about 450 A. D., but not until the seventh century was the organ used in congregational singing by Pope Vitalian of Rome. The Greek Church has always refused to use the organ in church. The organ, like all great things, has had a great history. In very primitive times, the organ was blown by the mouth, and holes in the pipes were opened and closed by slides. The bellows was added in one or several pairs, and compressed alternately, that the wind supply might remain uniform.

Clesibius, an Egyptian, 200 years before Christ, applied hydraulic pressure to the organ, and the hydraulic organ was made as late as 826 A. D. The prejudice against the hydraulic organ introduced the pneumatic organ. The word "key" in music was given because it unlocked the sound within the pipe. The first keys were from three to five inches, and several feet long. Players were called "organ beaters," and struck the keys with their fists or elbows. The first keyboard to be credibly recorded was in the eleventh century, at Magdeburg. It had sixteen keys, forty inches wide. The early organ required much leather for the bellows—in one case, seventy cowhides for twenty-one bellows.

The tones were loud, and could be heard throughout the town. The swell, by which expression is gained, was invented and used in England in 1712, but slowly adopted in Germany. There is no limit now to the expression of the organ.

The violin ranks highest as a stringed instrument, and may be classed as an Italian product. It is the most wonderful instrument in the orchestra. It ranks next to the human voice in flexibility, and outranks the voice in range. Its music charms all people. It sympathizes with wealth, poverty, and affliction. The greatest virtuoso was Pagarini, in the last part of the eighteenth century. In former times it was considered unseemingly for a woman's hand to touch the violin; but that day has passed, and the finest violinists are now women.

The pianoforte was invented by Bartholomeo of Florence (1651-1731), and two of his makes are still in existence—one in Florence, and one in the Metropolitan Museum, in New York. Germany is famous for pianos. Steinway, in America, takes high rank. The first piano sent to England was made in Rome by Father Wood, an English monk. This instrument came across the Atlantic to America, and now America is the greatest piano-builder in the world.

Voice is the other department of music, and voice culture is delicate, extensive and of wide influence. Voice is from heaven, as heard at the baptism of Jesus, saying, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Voice is really the sound uttered by living beings, with man next to to God in the scale of culture. There is no school for animal voice-training. Nature completes her work in all below man.

All the emotions of the human heart can be moved by the human voice. Anger and love are known more by voice than words. In fact, music would die if the race were mad. People cannot sing when mad. Men and women leave the choir when they get mad. The lullaby of the mother, the song of praise in worship, must be in a sweet spirit. Music is the fountain from which gushes pure emotions in sweet currents to soothe wounded spirits and sad hearts.

The development of the voice is one of the great elements in Christian civilization; and it has sweetened home, enriched worship, made the Sunday school, entertained society, and led the march of progress along the highway of hope. This would be a dull world without music; and education and business would suffer irreparable loss if the musical voice were dead.

We regret that our report of receipts the past week is so brief. Let us hope that it will be larger next week. The church and the church alone, with its Sunday School and Missionary Society, is the only institution that makes donations to share the gospel with others. County, state and nation make donations to assist in benevolences and to relieve material and physical wants and needs, but none of these agencies make a contribution to missions. It was to His followers, the church, to whom Christ gave the command, "Ye shall be witnesses unto me the uttermost parts." Only His followers have been willing to witness for Him by word of mouth, or by donation of purse. We are profoundly grateful for the donations that come in as they show unmistakably that they are followers of Him, who said, "I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." NEWS FROM MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

By MRS. W. M. JAY.

ELON COLLEGE.

For the past ten months the Elon College Woman's Missionary Society of the Congregational-Christian Church has held regular monthly meetings and also a circle meeting each month. The society continues with groups of four circles, with the younger people forming the auxiliaries.

Each monthly meeting has had an interesting program. A guest speaker has come many of the times and presented the devotionals. Mrs. W. N. Huff, Mrs. D. J. Bowden, Mrs. J. D. Messick, Mrs. W. E. McCardell and Rev. Duane Vore have aided in special music.

Even though the year hasn't come to a close yet, each circle has reached its financial goal, and each group also helps to sponsor an auxiliary; thus they aid these departments in reaching their goal.

In August the division of circle members will be made. Each year the names are shuffled and drawn, and by this method, the change makes each member become better acquainted and gives them contact with those whom they probably do not have an opportunity to mingle with except through the society gatherings of the church groups.

Under the leadership of the cradle roll superintendent, Mrs. M. W. Hook, the annual Cradle Roll Rally was held in the reception room of the Y. W. C. A. on July 20. Dr. G. O. Lankford and Mrs. J. L. Foster assisted Mrs. Hook in the program, after which the children had their mite box opening. A social hour was enjoyed by both the little folks and their mothers.

On the second Sunday in July the society held its public meeting in the Whitley auditorium at 11 o'clock, with a splendid congregation present. The president of the society, Mrs. J. L. Foster, read the call to worship and Miss Helen Barney gave a prelude of organ music. The young people had charge of the choir and Mrs. D. J. Bowden sang the offertory solo.

The message, "Missions An Idea," of Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, was presented by Mrs. Mattie Parker, in a well written paper. Dr. Atkinson could not be present, owing to illness. The message of Rev. F. C. Lester, Promotional Secretary, was brought by Mrs. Lester, in his absence, since he was called out of town.

Three small boys of the Willing Workers, Dale Kimrey, Charles Me-

Carn, and Nash Parker, Jr., served as ushers and had charge of the taking of the offering.

The August and September meetings will bring the year to a most successful close and the following officers have been named to serve next year. Mrs. W. P. Lawrence, president; Mrs. M. W. Hook, vice-president; Mrs. E. W. Vickers, treasurer; Mrs. Ruth Rogers, recording secretary; Mrs. H. D. Lambeth, corresponding secretary.

MRS. H. D. LAMBETH.

WAVERLY.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Waverly Christian Church held regular meetings throughout the year. Two new members have been added to the roll, making a total membership of seventeen at present. Both study books have been used with Rev. T. Fred Wright, the pastor, as teacher. A splendid attendance and much interest was the result and many report an enjoyable time.

The World Day of Prayer was observed in February in a union service, with the other churches of the community taking part. Two boxes of clothing were sent to the mountain work and many extra projects done.

After the business meeting in June the program was turned over to the Cradle Roll Superintendent, Mrs. O. C. Osborne, who gave a very successful party to the mothers and little folks, with fifteen answering the roll call. Mite box opening and refreshments followed, and all report a lovely time.

Mrs. F. E. Kuoeller sends us the Waverly report, which shows that these ladies have been diligently working at the task assigned.

AMERICA'S STAKE IN CHINA.

By JEAN LYON.

[Jean Lyon is a New York City newspaper woman, and a China-born daughter of missionaries. Facts in the article, whose sources are not credited, were taken largely from news released from the China Information Committee, which are sent out regularly by a group of Americans in China who are interested in seeing that the outside world gets a true picture of events in China.—Editor.]

Prophecies of the outcome of the war in China cannot be made. John Gunther, author of Inside Asia, believes that it will be difficult for Japan to win. She has been sucked in further than she ever intended. P. C. Chang, member of the People's Political Council of China, now visiting in the United States, likens the struggle to the struggle of a fist being pushed into soft glue, rather than a fist against fist. ". . . the glue will follow the fist," he says, "although the fist may feel very proud that it is going ahead. In other words, the glue is going to surround the fist. The further you go in, the harder it is to get out."

Mr. Gunther, however, also believes that it will be difficult for China to drive Japan back into the sea.

To Americans the importance of the outcome of this war lies in the facts behind it of broken treaties and unhalted aggression. With each success of aggression in Europe and Asia the hope of a world which can live by peaceful treaty agreements fades. That Japan should be forced to lay down arms and turn to the conference table is an essential to a future peaceful world. And that she should do it without having tasted the brew of success by arms is another essential.

China is growing stronger, to be sure. But until the United States ceases to give aid to Japan, China cannot be expected to win the battle for future world peace.

Americans can do several things to show their belief in treaty agreements and peaceful settlements of conflicts. They can insist upon placing an embargo on Japan. They can carry on individual boycotts of Japanese goods. They can give succor to the wounded and to the refugees of China who are helpless victims of aggression.

Until America faces her own responsibility in the conflict, however, there may continue to be a "stalemate in the Far East," as John Gunther predicts. Despite China's growing strength, her task of resisting a Japan who is aided by the democracies is too great. If China is to win back her right to live as a peaceful nation, she must have the moral support of Americans.

Thirty thousand people gathered for the opening session of the Baptist World Congress in Atlanta, Ga. Among the 30,000 were messengers from sixty nations. Dr. George R. Truitt of Dallas, Texas, native of North Carolina and one of the world's great preachers, is president of the body and presided at the opening session. This gathering in itself was a fine tribute to a great Christian Church that keeps close to the heart of humanity as well as close to their Lord and Master. The entire nation is honored in having the Baptist World Alliance to hold its sixth session in the United States of America. —N. C. Christian Advocate.

"Youth at Work in the Church"

ANTIOCH YOUNG PEOPLE COMPLETE YEAR'S WORK.

On July 20, 1939, the Antioch Pilgrim Fellowship, Valley Virginia Conference, started on its second year of work. A brief check-up on last year's records shows the following facts: enrollment at beginning of year, 17; new members added, 5; average attendance, 15; attendance of charter members, 82 per cent; percentage attendance of entire group, 78 per cent; amount raised by group, $45.00; charter members with perfect attendance, Raymond Andes, Herman Hunley, Mark Showalter, Max Showalter, Glen Showalter.

It was decided to have two meetings each month during the coming year, rather than one. One of these will be a business meeting followed by a social hour to be held the first Wednesday of each month in the homes. The other meeting will be a worship service at the church on the third Sunday night of each month.

Officers elected for the coming year were: president, Raymond Andes; vice-president, Helen Showalter; secretary, Leon Frank; assistant secretary, Mark Andes; treasurer, Ewell Tate; superintendent of music, Everett Wampler; superintendent of missions, Herman Hunley; superintendent of world fellowship, Anna Lou Showalter; superintendent of literature, Norma Showalter; adult adviser, Miss Verdie Showalter.

The officers met and planned the work for the coming year. Some of the things to be included are: (1) Books for our library, (2) Peace play for November, (3) Support Mission Project of the Southeast, (4) Give award at end of year to most outstanding member, to be based on work done and attendance at meetings, (5) Vesper service, (6) Picnic.

EASTERN VIRGINIA ACTIVITIES.

The following activities were reported to the Sunday School Convention by Charles E. Heath, Jr., president of the Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship:

1. A Fellowship Supper was held in conjunction with the sessions of the Eastern Virginia Conference at Suffolk Church in November, 1938.

2. At the annual Spring Conference in Portsmouth on March 25, 1939, nineteen churches were represented by one hundred and six registered young people and friends. The theme was "Pilgrim Fellowship at Work."

3. Eighteen churches were represented by forty-nine young people at the Elon Summer School of Leadership Education.

4. Nineteen churches were represented by one hundred and eighteen registered young people and friends at the Summer Conference at Liberty Spring Church on July 11, 1939. The theme was "What Price Fellowship?" At this meeting seven young people's missionary societies reported; seven young people's societies reported; three Christian Endeavor societies reported; two churches represented gave no reports. From the reports it appears that seventeen churches had about five hundred and fifty people, with four hundred and eighteen active young people in the societies.

5. Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship helped send Hal Ruppenthal of the Kansas Fellowship to the World Conference of Christian Youth at Amsterdam, Holland.

6. Ten dollars ($10.00) sent to the Board of Christian Education to help pay for the service it renders.

7. The Fellowship in session on July 11 voted to help the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship share with the young people of China by erecting at Tientsin a building for Christian education and fellowship.

PALMYRA YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Christian Endeavor Society of Palmyra Christian Church presented a program at Whistler's Chapel on Sunday night, July 23. In addition to hymns, scripture, and prayer, the service included a song by a group of small children and a short play entitled "The Loveliest Thing." This program was under the direction of Miss Louise Bowman.

"Christianity is a traveling faith; it is never healthy when it stops; its genius is to go farther."

WHAT CAN WE DO ABOUT GAMBLING?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR AUGUST 20, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Amos 8: 4-10.

Daily Readings—

Monday—Gambling Over Jesus' Vesture—John 19: 23, 24.

Tuesday—Gambling With Birthright—Gen. 25: 27-34.

Wednesday—Gambling With One's Soul—Mark 8: 34-38.

Thursday—Gambling With Sin—Mark 15: 12-16.

Friday—Gambling With Death—Gen. 2: 15-17; 3: 4-6.

Saturday—Gambling With Eternity—Mat. 7: 21-23.

The Christian Youth Council of North America, representing nearly forty denominations and interdenominational agencies, makes the following statement about gambling: "Deets Pickett, in his book, Fools' Gold, estimates that in 1936 gambling cost every man, woman, and child in the United States approximately $50.00. The total cost of gambling has been estimated to run well over four billion dollars annually. Gambling is undoubtedly one of our greatest social evils and is probably far more widespread than even our most informed people in the church have ever imagined. It can be found in almost every street and alley, in rural as well as in urban communities, and it affects both rich and poor, young and old alike. It is a major enemy of Christian living because: (1) It violates the law of order in the universe, for chance takes the place of reason; (2) It demoralizes human personality and character; (3) It promotes crime. Gambling and other centers of vice are usually headquarters for those who engage in crimes of violence; (4) It places a financial burden on society."

Questions for Discussion—

1. What is the most common form of gambling in this community?

2. What are some ways young people can satisfy their desire for adventure without gambling and without getting into trouble?

3. Do high school young people gamble much, such as betting on baseball games, football games, slot machines, etc?

4. Some people say that it is all right for a man to gamble if he uses his spare money not needed for food, clothing, education, and other necessities. Do you agree? What are your reasons for your answer?

Suggested Hymns—

"Rise Up, O Men of God."

"True-hearted, Whole-hearted."

"All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name."

ELISHA: A LIFE OF RIGHT- EOUSNESS.

LESSON VII—AUGUST 13, 1939.

GOLDEN TEXT: Be ye kind one to another.—Ephesians 4:32.

LESSON: II Kings 5:1-27.

A Place for Us All.

Do not be discouraged because you are not like somebody else, or because you cannot do things as well as somebody else. God made us different, and there is a place in His purpose and His Kingdom for us all. Elijah and Elisha were so different from each other, but God used them both because they yielded themselves to do His will. It is not primarily a question of who you are, or what you know, or what you can do, or what you have, but primarily a matter of whether you give such as you have and are to God unreservedly. Be yourself. But give that self wholly to God. He has a place for you and He can use you in an amazing way, if you do His will.

A Great Man—But.

Naaman was a great man. He was captain of the army of Syis—that indicated he was a man of ability and industry—and he had won honors as a general. He was held in high regard by his master, the king. He was a man of valor, a man known for his courage and fearlessness. But, but, but, he was a leper, and that was the tragedy of it all. Unless he could find some cure for this dread and deadly disease, all of his ability and courage would come to naught. How true it is of so many men and women. They have looks and ability and position, but, but—but they are moral lepers, they have secret sins, they have glaring faults that impair their influence and their usefulness. Unless they can find help in Christ they are headed for disaster.

A Faithful Witness.

In Naaman's household there was a slave girl, a little maiden, an Israelite who waited upon Naaman's wife. She had been reared in the faith of her fathers; she knew of, and she had faith in God. She had in her heart a great compassion for her master, and a great yearning that in some way he might try to avail himself of the help of her God. She mentioned the matter to her mistress, who in turn mentioned it to her husband, who told the king. Immediately, the king made plans to have his favorite and capable general go to Israel that he might find help in Israel's God. Here, to the writer of these notes, is one of the most thrilling passages in the whole Bible. This little girl, with a firm faith in her God, and a compassion for her master, though a slave, bore her witness for her Lord. How she puts to shame so many of us who seldom, if ever, bear at least a vocal witness to our faith in our God. And how true it is that often those who are servants and those who live and work in obscure places know more about God and know God better than many high places. For instance, there are many servants working in the best homes, who actually know more of God through experience than do their more cultured and wealthier mistresses. And many a man working at a humble task in shop or mill or on a farm can teach his master about the reality of God. We see another instance of this in the fact that the king of Israel thought that the King of Syria was trying to pick a fuss with him, for he did not think of his God as one who could heal leprosy. Folks in high positions are not always the best authorities on religion. They may know more about God, but they do not necessarily know God better than people in humble walks of life.

A Proud Man.

When Naaman appeared before Elisha's house, Elisha did not even deign to come out to greet him. Instead he sent word to Naaman to go and wash seven times in Jordan. That was adding insult to injury. This man Naaman was "some pumpkins." He thought he should have had a little more attention paid to him. Elisha ought to have "kowitzed" to him. Furthermore, if he was going to wash or bathe anywhere, he was not going to bathe in the muddy Jordan, when there were clear, pure rivers closer at home. That got Naaman's goat. In a huff he turned and started back home again. And was the old fellow hot, as we would say.

What a barrier pride, especially false pride, is to some of the best things in life. It shuts the door to many of life's best things and richest experiences. Jesus realized its danger and again and again insisted that it was only as men were willing to humble themselves, to lay aside their false pride and their false dignity, that they could enter the kingdom of heaven, that they could discover and appropriate the highest values of life. Many men and women are not willing to confess publicly that they are sinners, that they have missed the way, that they need help outside of themselves, and thus miss the joys of the Kingdom. Men, even the greatest of them, must repent and confess if they are to get into the Kingdom.

A Sensible Word in Season.

As Naaman turned away in his blind rage, one of his servants made bold to speak to him in a very common-sense way. He suggested that if the prophet had told him to do some great thing, he would have done it. "How much rather than when he said, 'wash and be clean?'" The servant "had something there," and the angry general had sense enough to see it. It must have hurt his pride to take advice from one of his servants, but he did it. He went down to the river Jordan and dipped seven times, and as he came up out of the water the seventh time his flesh was even as a little child's. His obedience, by faith, had made him whole.

If only God would ask us to do some big thing, how we would do it! If we had a million dollars, how gladly we would give it to our church, or our college, or to some charitable institution. If only we could preach like Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, how gladly we would preach. If only we could teach like some Sunday school teacher we know, how gladly we would teach that class of boys and girls. If only we had the opportunity to do some big thing, how gladly we would do it, especially if we could get some publicity from it. But for the most part God does not give us huge sums of money, or many and varied talents, or the opportunity to do "big things." And so, because we cannot do the things we would like to do—and think we would do, if we had the chance—we will not do such things as we can do. What a different world this would be if we did what we could.

The Reward of Obedience by Faith.

It is all the story of the rewards of obedience to the divine will through faith. Naaman had to take the word of the prophet by faith. He had to submit himself to what looked like a foolish demand by faith. He had to persist in what must have seemed like a foolish course, for even after he had dipped six times there was no change. But by faith he kept on and he received the blessing and the reward. God says if we confess our sins he will forgive us our sins. He says if we seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, we shall have the needful things of life. He says that if we believe on Christ, we shall have eternal life. We get things backwards

MONDAY.

“WHEN ALL THINGS PASS AWAY.”

“Heaven and earth shall pass away: but my word shall not pass away.”—Matt. 13:31.

There appears in the papers often accounts of findings in archeological research of prehistoric man and animals. These findings not only speak the history of the earth, but also the changes that take place. Undeniably it is God's law whereby He announces that all temporal things pass away and that there is nothing eternal.

This is a good law, for without it there would be no progress. The old passes that the new may come. We wonder what is about to be born in the travail of the present day? Our hope is that spiritual things will survive. Three things remain: God, the soul of man, and the eternal judgments of right. Realizing this, what to do would be plain enough to us.

Prayer—Dear Father, “Change and decay all around I see; O Thou, who changest not abide with me.” Amen.

TUESDAY.

“DOING MORE THAN REQUIRED.”

“Whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him two.”—Matt. 5:41.

Seven hundred and six persons were rescued from the Titantic because a lad—a radio operator—on the Carpathia remained voluntarily on duty thirty-five minutes longer than he was required. Had he not done this the Carpathia would not have heard of the disaster till the next day and seven hundred and six lives would have been lost.

There is a wide-spread spirit today, to do only what is required, and life is going on the rocks because of it. We need the wide-spread spirit of Jesus, go on further—the second mile—and do something that we are not supposed to do.

Prayer—Our Father forbid that we shall be thinking of how little we may do, but of how much we can do. Help us to see needs, and try to meet them. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

“OUR ADEQUATE RELIGION.”

“Art Thou he that should come, or do we look for another?”—Matt. 11:3.

Here is the truth in a letter creed
Enough for all the roads we go;
In law is all the law we need,
In Christ is all the God we know.
—Edwin Markham.

What do you expect of religion?
Jesus looked up and said, “Father, God.” What do your senses feel when you look up in prayer? Religion must furnish you a conception of a personal God, and in that realization you will be given an inner mastery over self.

Prayer—Our Father, Thou art the need of every heart, and through Jesus Thou dost answer the need of every heart. Be Thou our greatest reality and the supply of our every need. Amen.

THURSDAY.

“THE BUSINESS OF CHRISTIAN LIVING.”

“For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him shall not perish, but have everlasting life.”—John 3:16.

The business of Christian living is belief and not understanding. We cannot understand God any more than we can understand a cotton field. But we can believe in God as we do in a cotton field.

We cannot comprehend our Lord but we know Him as a friend, we can accept His counsel and we can let Him in our lives. So by prayer in the morning unlock the door of the soul and let Him in during the day—and when thou liest down at night, by prayer again, lock Him in till thou dost wake. Amen.

FRIDAY.

“A FRIEND OF MAN.”

It is better that we suffer
As we wend our weary way,
Than to never know the meaning
Of a heartache through the day.

It is better that we worry
Just a little o'er our need—
For, without a care or worry
Hearts might lack a kindly deed.

It is better that we hunger
Once or twice, or perhaps thrice,
Than to never know the neighbor
Whose provisions don't suffice.

It is better that we labor
'Neath a burden hard to bear,
Than to never share a burden
Of someone for whom we care.

It is better that we stumble
And repent and start again,
Than to criticize another,
When we know not of his pain.

Yes, it's better that we ponder
As we hold a brother's hand—
Giving of our all to help him
So he'll know we understand.

It is better—oh, much better
That we be a friend to man,
Giving of our love and labor
Helping him when'er we can.
—Norma Parker Brock.

“DISCOURAGED.”

“To whom shall we go?”—John 6:68.

Probably the easiest thing in the world for most of us is to become discouraged. It is inevitable that at one time or another we feel that our efforts are being wasted and that it isn't much use to try any longer. Did you know that when Abraham Lincoln was forty-four, he wrote a letter to a friend declaring that his career seemed doomed to end in disappointment, and expressing discouragement in the strongest possible terms?

OUR PREACHER FOR THIS WEEK IS
REV. JOHN H. KNIGHT,
NORFOLK, VA.

THE JUDGMENTS OF GOD.

"O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!"—Romans 11:33.

During one of the recent tornadoes which tore its way through the state of Georgia, an old colored mammy was heard to remark, as she looked from her window and saw the wind bowl over buildings and trees, "Ole Massa sure is walkin' down de highway!"

Who has not been impressed with the flashes of the lightning and the roars of the thunder, and felt that in this electrical storm, which science would explain by natural causes, is a visible demonstration of the mighty power of the Most High God? Is it just the mere survival of primitive fears that man is awed by the whirlwind and the storm, or is it something more than that? For he is standing in the very presence of Deity when the lightnings crackle and the trees snap and the winds roar.

The Psalmist and many other writers of lesser inspiration have recognized that the voice of the Lord breaketh the cedars (Psalm 29:5), the glory of God thundereth (Psalm 29:3), and the stormy wind fulfills his word (Psalm 148:8). In this recognition they felt that they were worshipping at God's foot-stool.

But what about the death and destruction which follow in the wake of such demonstrations of Divine Power? Here man comes squarely up against that blindest of blind avenues—Divine Providence and the Judgments of God. After all, is God in the wind and in the storm? Is it "Old Massa" or is it a combination of natural causes? So sometimes, in order to shield God from what might superficially seem to be cruelty or indifference to human welfare upon his part, we say, "Why God had nothing to do with it. It was mere chance that it happened that way."

But is there such a thing as chance? Could God abdicate his throne one minute so that there should unexpectedly and undesignedly transpire in the universe a combination of circumstances that would be outside his divine control? Accidents may appear to happen, but not so with God. The words chance, luck, and fortune are not within the divine vocabulary.

Dr. E. P. Whallon, writing in The Presbyterian, tells of a little girl, who, when she heard of the tragic gas explosion which snuffed out the lives of four hundred and fifty-five innocent little victims in New London, Texas, a few years ago, asked her mother, "But mother, where was God?" Commenting on the keen analysis apparent in this child's mind, Dr. Whallon says, "We feel the most satisfying answer to this little child's question is to say that God was not far away, though he seemed so."

And so we have arrived at a quandary. It has always been a difficult process to attempt to justify the ways of God to man. There is apparent in the world today an immaturity of mind which is always trying to pry into the secrets of the Divine. There are inquisitive mortals who would demand that the Divine should outline for them with mathematical precision the mysteries of the universe. "O, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out!"

There are some things that we must leave with God. There are some questions that only Divine Providence can answer. God knows best, and God knows why. It evidently is not wise that we mortals, at this present state of affairs at least, should be allowed to enter into the furtive reflections of him "who doeth all things well," and "upholdeth all things by the word of his power." But although it is not ours to know the reason why, we may well be assured that there is One who does, and that being a purposive being, our God does all things in wisdom and true discernment.

Hemmed in on all sides, then, with the problems and perplexities of life, what shall be the attitude of the Christian man? Since it is not given unto us to know the reason for all things as yet, the Christian must wait with patience, bridging over the unknowable with the span of faith. Only the presence of faith in our lives can withstand the cynical attitude toward Deity which often develops in the face of the absence of an explanation for things. Faith is a divine quality which sweetens the normally bitter experiences of life.

Faith is abandonment to God. Faith is committal. If one has truly committed his life into the hands of God, and "Old Massa" in his higher wisdom desires to take that life in the midst of the storm to a Higher Sphere, then well and good. That which has been committed to God is his anyway; and who can say him nay?

Faith makes acceptable that which otherwise would fret the soul, and unbalance the mind. Faith brings healing, adjustment, and reconciliation as its fruitage. The man without faith cannot stand up under the terrific strain of life. Many a mind has cracked because of the absence of faith. Faith gives validity to a mysterious providence here and now, and gives hope of a future knowledge "even as also I am known." Faith makes it possible to love God even though we do not understand him. "How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out."

FAMILY ALTAR.

Not all of us, of course, can rise from our discouragement to do what Lincoln did. But it is worth remembering, for it spurs us on to new endeavor.

Prayer—Our Father, the next time we think we are out of luck, help us to look to Jesus, deny ourselves and look to Him. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"LOSING SOUL."

"Kept by the power of God."—I Peter 1:5.

Almost everyday furnishes something in the commonplace that teaches us God, the soul, and eternal right.

When Germany asked Belgium for a corridor to France, Belgium was promised immunity from strife. She refused and all the world knows what happened. After the holocaust the Kaiser is quoted as saying to Albert, "So you see you have lost all." And Albert is said to have replied, "But not my soul."

The soul that on Jesus still leans for repose,
I will not, I will not desert to his foes.
That soul, though all hell should endeavor to shake,
I'll never, no, never, no NEVER forsake.

Prayer—O Lord, we commit the keeping of our souls to Thee, to give us courage in our difficult hours. Amen.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Since we have gotten our new well in use, we now have plenty of water and some to spare. Fifteen years ago we built a swimming pool for the children, but the water supply ran low in the wells in the Elon community, and for several years we have not been able to use it. Since we now have water, we have filled the small pool for the little children, and that takes in half of our population. We have allotted certain hours for the several buildings so that the pool will not be overcrowded at any one time. All children like to play in the water. It has been hard to keep them out the branches. The swimming pool will relieve us of that worry. It is a joy inexpressible to see the happiness the little fellows get out of playing in the water. They have a great time. The water is clear and clean and fine for them to swim in. Since the larger pool has not been used for a number of years, it has cracked very badly, and it will take about $150.00 to repair it to make it usable for the larger boys and girls. I wonder if we do not have some big-hearted man or woman in our denomination who would like to bring a real joy to the larger boys and girls by donating money to put this pool into usable condition for them. If you could see the little children so happy in theirs, I believe you would get a lot of joy out of bringing this happiness to the larger children. Unless someone will make the donation, the larger children will not have this pleasure this year. The orphanage doesn't have the money to spend to do it. Who wants this joy?

Our annual home-coming day will be held on the first Sunday in September (Sunday before Labor Day). All the children who have been reared in the Christian Orphanage and have gone out are invited to come back home on that day. We hope to have many, if not all, back home on that day.

CHARLES D. JOHNSTON,

VALLEY GROUP REPORTS.

program. The fifth Sunday evening the choir from Wissler's Chapel sang for the good people of Concord, before the regular preaching service by the pastor.

There is a group spirit. It is making itself felt over the entire group. We would not go back to the old way. We believe that the Kingdom of God will be nearer and His presence felt more keenly through this happy fellowship of Group No. 4. We only wish that other groups in the Valley could learn to give and take when the welfare of the churches is at stake. May God bless them, that we may build the churches of the Valley with the aim that only Christ and the Kingdom are to be served and not our selfish wishes.

DAN RIVER DISTRICT.

SUNDAY, JULY 30, 1939.

It wasn't just the usual district meeting today. It was much more than that! I wish you could have been at Lebanon, Semora, N. C., and have seen that packed church. Extra chairs had been placed in the aisles.

The sun was shining a welcome when we drove upon the church grounds. And inside the church a gentle breeze floated from one window to another. Of course, some of the usual procedure took place: We were called to order and we all sang the opening hymn.

Now a new banner entitled "Dan River District" was to be awarded to the church which rendered the best singing during the day. Lebanon led with their three selections. From the moment Lebanon began their first number the other churches felt shaky. Lebanon put heart and soul into the music which filled the church.

Rev. C. E. Newman led us in prayer. Mr. W. L. Taylor made the entire congregation feel welcome and at home in his three minute talk on "the more we see people, the more we like them." Mr. Talbert from Pleasant Grove responded to the welcome.

Next came the special music from the Pleasant Grove Church. They had the novel idea of using their children's choir. Twenty little boys and girls from the Primary and Junior Departments sang one song; the Pleasant Grove Choir sang the other two.

Several visitors were presented to the congregation. Mr. Walker was there to make pictures of the group.

The secretary of the district, Miss Avis Dunn, although notified only a day ahead of the program, led our thoughts on the Sunday school lesson. Miss Dunn left in our minds that in the Lamb's Book of Life there is room for each of our names.

Ingram was the next church to sing. Extra chairs had to be put in the choir for the singers from this church.

Dr. Smith delivered the morning message. He read to us the entire second chapter of Acts. Dr. Smith declared that the time had come for us as Christian people to act—for a personal examination, to find out whether we as a Church have the right to name ourselves "Christian." Dr. Smith urged prayer as the winner of victory. Our present time resembles much the days of the early Church. We have like persecutions, but we also have the same God.

All the churches of the district brought a basket, and these we spread together out under the trees. This part of our fellowship was equally enjoyed by all.

After lunch Rev. C. L. Moody spoke on the training of the child. He gave us some helpful facts on the origin of the Sunday school and the part it plays in the life of an individual.

Rev. B. J. Earp asked Rachel Earp and Clarene Andes—the two workers who are to help with Bible schools and revivals in our mountain churches—to stand. Rev. William Andes led a prayer of consecration for the work in Carroll County.

Just before adjournment the judges announced that Ingram Church was awarded the banner for singing.

FOR THE CHILDREN

GETTING RID OF NAPOLEON.

A CHILDREN'S SERMON.

By DONALD STERLING.

Arthur Balfour was a British statesman who served as First Lord of the Admiralty during the early part of the World War. The Secretary of the Navy is what we would have called him here in the United States. I was reading the other day one of the first things Arthur Balfour did when he took charge of the British admiralty office. The man who had been there before him left a small bust of Napoleon in the office. Arthur Balfour threw Napoleon out of the office window.

The reason he did that shouldn't be very hard to guess. Arthur Balfour wanted to make it very plain to everyone in that office that now he was in charge things were going to be run differently. The man before him must have wanted to be a little Napoleon or he would not have kept a bust of Napoleon around. Mr. Balfour didn't think much of the Napoleon idea, so he pitched Napoleon out the window.

It was about the same sort of thing that used to happen every once in a while in the old district schools our parents or grandparents used to attend. First there would be a teacher who kept a lot of birch rods on his desk. When the boys wouldn't behave they got a birching. And sometimes, when the boys were just as big as the teacher, instead of letting the teacher birch them they would throw him out of the school. Then there would be a new teacher, maybe a little whisp of a girl who couldn't rule with the rod if she wanted to. The first thing she would do as the new teacher would be to break all the birch rods left by the previous teacher and chuck them into the stove. When she did that, all the pupils knew she meant to run the school on a different principle. So it was when Arthur Balfour threw Napoleon out the window.

When we invite Jesus to take charge of our lives, which is what it means to be a Christian, we have to pitch certain things out the window. Maybe it is the habit of bossing younger brother or sister about with a superior air. Maybe it is the habit of pouting and making everybody about the house miserable if we can't have our way. I don't suppose any of you boys or girls ever lay down on the floor and kicked and screamed when mother said, "You can't have another piece of candy before dinner," "You must put on your rubbers before going out into the wet," or, "No, you can't go barefoot yet." But I have heard of boys and girls like that.

When we invite Jesus to take charge of our lives, so that we can grow more and more like him, then we say to all the bad habits of the sort we have mentioned, "Out the window you must go!"—Advance.

WHAT MAKES A RAINBOW.

You know what glass prisms are and you have probably played with them and noticed the different colored bands of light seen near them when the sunlight falls on them. The explanation is that a beam of sunlight is not a simple thing, like a straight piece of paper, but is a cord formed of many different colored waves bound together. A prism has the power of separating these different waves and spreading them out so that we see the different colors which they make, as violet, yellow, or red bands of light.

Little drops of rain have the same power; so if the sun is shining while the rain is falling, and we happen to be in just the right place, we can see the bow of beautiful colors against the background of sky or cloud. The sun beams striking the drops of falling water have been split apart, bent, and sent back to us, and the effect of all these little drops together is the beautifully colored rainbow.

FILL IN THE BLANKS.

Following are statements about some character in the Old Testament. After each statement, fill in the name of the person. There is one space for each letter; thus, if there are four spaces, the character has four letters in his name. See if you can guess them. Answers next week.

- 1. First man tempted by woman.
2. Gave us our religious basis for law.
3. Mother of Isaac.
4. Plagued by frogs.
5. Noted for loyalty to her mother-in-law.
6. First king of Israel.
7. Powerful Philistine warrior.
8. Led the Hebrew children into the Land of Promise.
9. Suggested her mother for her brother's nurse.
10. His strength was in proportion to the length of his hair.

so many times. There are men and women who are waiting for certain feelings in religion before they act, when as a matter of fact if they act in obedience to God's word they will experience the joy and the peace and the power. If we know these things, happy are we if we do them.

In the Presence of God

In the castle of my soul
Is a little postern gate,
Whereat, when I enter,
I am in the presence of God;
In a moment, in the turning of a thought,
I am where God is.
This is a fact.
When I enter into God,
All life has a meaning.
Without asking I know;
My desires are even now fulfilled.
My fever is gone.
In the great quiet of God
My troubles are but pebbles on the road,
My joys are like the everlasting hills,
So it is when I step through the gate of prayer
From time into eternity.
When I am in the consciousness of God
My fellow men are not far off and forgotten,
But close and strangely dear.
Those whom I love
Have a mystic value.
They shine as if a light were glowing within them.

So it is when my soul steps through the postern gate
Into the presence of God.
Big things become small, and small things become great.
The near becomes far, and the future is near.
The lowly and despised is shot through with glory.

MY CHURCH

There is something differentiating and suggestive in the little pronoun MY. Whenever I can say this is MY house, MY car, MY country, all these things at once change their relationship to me; before this that house, that car, that country were the same they are now, but then they did not belong to me and I to them. And so when the church on the corner of the street or along the highway becomes MY church, it to me is no longer foreign, and I am no longer indifferent to what happens to it. All that is of value in it and in its program now appeal to me because it is MY church. Its programs, its projects, its services being MY programs, MY projects, and MY services in MY church, I am gripped by them as never before. I find MY heart warming up to the history of that church now. Its founders, pastors, lay-leaders, are of vital interest to me now. And thus MY church becomes for me the best church in all the world. And so when I discover it has need for me, needs MY influence, MY service, MY financial support, I gladly respond to its appeals because it is MY very own, and I am its very own; we two are joined in one. It is a part of MY life and MY life becomes a part of the history of that church. The causes of the church therefore cannot suffer without causing MY church to suffer. MY church is me in MY superlative mood. But however splendid its doctrine and ideals, MY church is never better than those of us who make up its membership. It is good or bad or indifferent as we are good or bad or indifferent.—"Methodist Protestant Herald."

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

Rev. D. W. Shepherd, La Grange, Ga., will be guest minister for the Holy Neck revival beginning Sunday, September 6.

The Holland and Holy Neck Churches held a Daily Vacation Bible School with an enrollment of forty-six, July 24-29. The closing exercises were held Friday afternoon, July 29.

Rev. J. Everette Neese, pastor of the Henderson, N. C., Church, has resigned from that pastorate to continue his school work and church work in Massachusetts. Details of Mr. Neese's move will be given at a later date.

The Women's Missionary Societies of Holland and Holy Neck met at Holy Neck Church, Thursday, July 28, and Dr. W. B. O'Neill gave a thorough and interesting review of the study book, "Our City Churches or Our Church in the City."

THE CHRISTIAN SUN office has had many requests for copies of the paper for August 10, whose front page contained the picture of Rev. Julius R. Shepherd. It will be greatly appreciated if those who do not wish to keep this issue of the paper will mail it to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Elon College, N. C.

REV. J. E. McCauley to Leave Richmond.

At a recent conference of the Richmond Christian Church, Rev. J. E. McCauley tendered his resignation. The church requested Rev. Mr. McCauley to reconsider, but he has definitely decided to sever his relations with the church at the end of this conference year. During the eight years the Rev. Mr. McCauley served the Richmond church, conditions have been very difficult, but there are indications of successful attainment. Some good church or churches will doubtless demand his service in the very near future.

HAPPY HOME.

The revival at Happy Home was well attended this year. The pastor, Rev. W. J. Andes, brought the messages at night. Each morning a Bible school was in session with an enrollment of sixty-five. We were fortunate enough to have our pastor's mother with us to aid in the work of the Bible school, Junior choir, and in the organization of a ladies' missionary society. Mrs. Andes is a very charming Christian lady. Her visit has meant so much to us that it is indescribable.

As a result of the meeting, thirteen additions were made to the church and many lives reconsecrated.

At a recent quarterly meeting a call was extended to Rev. Mr. Andes to serve our church for an indefinite period of time. In so doing we feel that we have "hitched our wagon to a star."

South Norfolk Christian Church, Wednesday, November 1-3, beginning at 10:00 A. M.

The time will be here, and will find some of our churches and committees unprepared, if we are not careful. Let us begin now to get our reports and church records in fine shape.

We are anxious for a full delegation from every church, and a good accounting of the year's work just finished. Then, too, let us go to our conference and plan together a great program for the years to come.

Any suggestions concerning the conference program may be sent to the secretary, Dr. John G. Truitt, Suffolk, Va., or to this writer at 3507 Bainbridge Blvd., Norfolk, Va.

HOME-COMING AT BARRETT'S CHURCH.

Home-Coming Day was celebrated at Barrett's Christian Church on Sunday, July 30. About three hundred people gathered at this old church to greet their friends and relatives, and to worship in the sacred old shrine.

At eleven o'clock a well prepared worship service was conducted by the pastor, Rev. B. H. Watkins, which set the spirit of the occasion in the hearts of all present, and gave to all a sense of the presence of the Christ in his earthly sanctuary.

After the worship service, Rev. T. Fred Wright of the Waverly Christian Church, preached a most challenging sermon on the text: "Speak to the Children of Israel, That They Go Forward."

At 12:30 P. M. a bountiful dinner was served, which had been supplied by the good people of the community through the dinner committee and served by young ladies of the church. The afternoon services consisted of a brief song service led by Brother J. F. Wellons, choir leader of the church, and a special musical contribution by the Rollings brothers. Rev. J. M. Roberts, a former pastor of twenty-five years ago, was then presented by the pastor. Brother Roberts addressed the congregation on the subject: "The Meaning of Home-Coming," which was a very inspiring and challenging address.

Brother W. E. MacClenny of the Suffolk Christian Church, was then presented by Brother Waverly Barrett of Dendron Christian Church. Brother MacClenny gave some very interesting data on the history of the church, which was received very gladly by the congregation. Mrs. J. Q. Hancock was then presented to the audience, and read a most interesting paper on "Old Barrett's Church." On motion made by Brother MacClenny and voted by the congregation, the paper will be forwarded to THE CHRISTIAN SUN for publication.

Friends, former members, and non-resident members came from Richmond, Norfolk, Petersburg, Washington, D. C., and many other places to attend this service. Their testimony was that this was the best home-coming they had ever attended at Old Barrett's, and as pastor of this church, I would say that our own people have received the greater inspiration and benefit from this day spent at this church in the presence and power of God's spirit.

B. H. WATKINS.

THE VIRGINIA VALLEY CONFERENCE.

Another annual session of the Virginia Valley Central Congregational-Christian Conference has become history. For a hundred times before it had met. The first meeting in the new century was fine.

Mr. Roy Larrick of Winchester is a business man who gets business done. A surprising amount of singing, speech-making, and good fellowship were mixed into a conference session that had much business to transact. When the hour for adjournment arrived, the work was completed.

Rev. J. F. Morgan of Norfolk, president of the Eastern Virginia Conference, and his wife were in charge of the music, and they made the conference happy with the singing. Rev. W. T. Scott, Superintendent of Georgia and Florida, spoke to the young people on Wednesday evening, and to the Conference on Thursday. Both addresses were timely, inspiring, and helpful. Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College, and Mr. Charles D. Johnston, superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, presented the cause of those institutions to the delight of the conference. The writer had the honor of speaking twice, once concerning the whole enterprise of the Church, and then the closing message. Both Rev. and Mrs. Morgan addressed the conference, Mr. Morgan speaking on Evangelism and Mrs. Morgan speaking on Missions. Add this much to the fine work done by the members of conference and it is easy to see that it was a great conference.

A news item later will give details concerning the work. Suffice it to say here that nearly all of the churches were represented by delegates who were eager to learn how to do better work and who are anxious for the success of our churches in the Valley. The people at Newport entertained royally. Difficulties were faced frankly and a Christian solution sought. Reports indicated a good year just closing with prospects for a better year opening. It was a joy and privilege to share in this session of the Conference.

THE NEW REPORT BLANK.

The new report blank on which the churches make their reports to the Conferences is well prepared and is intended to meet the needs of those who deal with statistics of the churches. It is a bit complicated for some of the church secretaries, or rather it takes considerable effort to make it complete. The secretary will need the cooperation of the church treasurer, the Sunday school, and all other organizations within the church.

But of what value is a report from the church unless the report is complete? It most certainly is worth the effort of the pastor, the secretary, and all others who may be needed in order to get a complete report. Only so will our churches be properly represented when the reports are printed and distributed to the public.

Since money is now sent to institutions throughout the year, it is very necessary for the report to Conference to indicate what has been sent to the various enterprises and what is to be done with the money sent to the Conference. If this is done, it will be easy for Conference officials to carry out the wish of the local church and to make proper tabulations. Unless the church report carries this information, it is almost impossible for the report to have meaning or value.

INSPIRATION OR PERSPIRATION?

What does it take to make success? Is it inspiration, or will perspiration do? On this hot summer day when energy runs low, the atmosphere is depressing, and difficulties look like mountains, there seems to be little inspiration in the office of the editor. Within an hour the last mail for this issue must be on the train. Other materials are ready, but editorials are lacking. Your editor certainly would like to have some inspiration, but it seems to be a steady stream of perspiration that falls from his brow.

Dr. Charles R. Brown, Dean Emeritus of Yale Divinity School, is one of America's greatest preachers. Both he and Mrs. Brown say that it was not inspiration or superior ability that lifted him to success, but that hard work was the path to attainment. At the time he was Dean he borrowed about two books each week from the city library in addition to his own, and those borrowed from the Yale libraries. It takes work to read that many books. It takes work to reach success.

Those of you who take the pains to read this editorial need not worry about the writer being out for success, but you may be assured that your way to success will be blessed with perspiration more often than with inspiration. If you are willing to keep on when others quit, if you can "screw your courage up to the sticking point" (thanks to Shakespeare for such a fine idea), if you will stay steadily with your job and put into it your best, you can be assured that others will be inspired by your example, and good success will crown your life even though you may more often feel perspiration than inspiration. After all, what is inspiration but the vision of something worth one's best effort and the eagerness to accomplish one's best?

ARE YOU NEEDING HELP?

The office of Promotional Secretary was established so the churches could get needed help. His only business is to help the churches.

If you are planning a survey, he can furnish cards and suggest ways of doing the work.

If you plan for an opening Sunday in September, Promotion Day, or Rally Day, he can help you with materials and suggestions.

If you must secure a new minister, or if you wish to form a pastorate, your Secretary is ready to aid you.

If you want a training school this year, he will be glad to assist in planning for it. If you need help, ask for it.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Under the guidance of Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary of the Southern Convention, the Woman's Missionary work has become one of the most inspiring and effective departments of the Convention. The Woman's Board very wisely provided for the organization of Young People's Missionary Societies. The young people have responded with enthusiasm and deep interest. They will be the leaders among the women within a few years.

A movement has been launched by the leaders of "Pilgrim Fellowship" which may materially affect the present plans and methods of Young People's Missionary Societies. Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship has been requested to cooperate in raising money for a missionary project in China. In keeping with this suggestion it is reported that some of the Young People's Missionary Societies have changed their name to "Pilgrim Fellowship." This change of name may not, of itself, appear to be of material importance. But it may have a far-reaching significance, if this change is to be sponsored by the Department of Young People and it is to be followed by many of the Young People's Missionary Societies.

At the 1932 session of the Southern Convention held in Burlington, N. C., the following request was submitted by officers of the "Youth Fellowship:" It is the wish of the young people throughout the Southeast to share in the work of the church. We are, therefore, asking for admission into the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches as the Department of Young People with the name of "Youth Fellowship." Since that date the name "Pilgrim Fellowship" has been substituted for "Youth Fellowship." This request was adopted by the Convention. From that date the Department of Young People has been a department of the Southeast Convention and official relation with the Southern Convention ceased to exist. The Southern Convention sponsored the organization of the Department of Young People with the name "Youth Fellowship." It has supplied funds for the development of this work, furnishes a page in THE CHRISTIAN SUN for "Pilgrim Fellowship" and continues to support the department.

The Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches is a voluntary organization for fellowship and inspiration. It has no jurisdiction over local churches, Conferences, Associations, Mission Boards, Orphanage, Educational Institutions or "Pilgrim Fellowship." It is not a legislative body in any respect whatever. It does not aim to do a work similar to the Southern Convention, but to promote fellowship between ministers and churches in the Southeast. It raises no funds, as a Convention, for any departments or denominational work. The funds for the promotion of "Pilgrim Fellowship" have been raised under the auspices of the Southern Convention, and not the Southeast Convention. It seems to the writer that "Pilgrim Fellowship" should have an official relation to the Southern Convention as well as the Southeast Convention.

Until there is some action by the Southern Convention, or its official departments, authorizing a change of organization of the Young People's Missionary Societies into "Pilgrim Fellowship" and making appeals for financial offerings for any department, it is the part of wisdom to follow plans adopted by the Southern Convention. It may be that the "Pilgrim Fellowship" is the organization which can more effectively promote Missions among the young people. If this is to replace the Young People's Missionary Societies it should be done by order of the Convention. There can be no valid objection to giving money for Chinese missionary work. If supplemental gifts are made by the young people they should be forwarded by the Young People's Missionary Societies through the regular channels of the Southern Convention, when raised within the bounds of the Convention.

THE OLD BARRETT'S CHURCH.

By MRS. ANNE HANCOCK JOYNER.

[Read by Mrs. Virginia Barrett Hancock at the Home-Coming of Barrett's Christian Church, July 30, 1939.]

Just for a brief moment of time let us turn our thoughts back to about one hundred and forty years ago, to the "Old Barrett's Church," as it was called, founded by Elder Bural Barrett, who served as its pastor for a number of years.

Let us get a crude mental picture of what the old church looked like. The structure was of wood, with backless benches serving as pews, where the colored were seated in the back of the church, glad to hear the Word of God spoken. During revival services a bush arbor was built outside, where the preacher held services during the noon hour for the colored. These were not college educated preachers, but called by God to serve Him. Dotted about on the grounds were the covered wagon, ox carts, or horse carts with huge brown umbrellas. These were days when style and fashions were unthought of.

The following paragraphs are real facts and direct words from records dating from 1818 to 1856, not in order of their conferences which were held once each month, but some interesting facts from some of the years.

"In 1818 entered into an association and agreed to hold annual meetings to regulate and set things in order that concerned that association. In a few years' experience found it necessary at one of the annual conferences to form a constitution (not articles of faith) for better government of the churches. This constitution agreeable to the scripture, guarantees to each individual church power to regulate its own business." 1832—"A quarterly conference held at Barrett's Meeting House to inquire into the situation of the said church, motioned and agreed that Brother Matthew Harris attend to and keep meeting house in order.

"Motioned and agreed that Brother John Kitchen and Benny Travis be appointed to wait on Brother Willis Stephenson, and that he may show cause why he does not attend church regularly." 1839—"That Elder C. has been guilty of much un-Christian conduct, and that we have borne with him from time to time and have seen no signs of reformation in him and he be considered no longer a member of the church at Barrett's." 1841—"Benjamin Travis was appointed committee to wait on Elder Lewis Craven and request him to become pastor of the church. To which proposition he consented on conditions. Sometime about October 10, following, Elder Craven was taken from us by death." 1843—"Resolve that it is the duty of each member of the church to attend meeting at least once a month and if any brother or sister should fail to attend meeting monthly, unless for a good reason, they shall be waited on by a committee from the church, and for missing three months in succession they shall be dismissed from church. That Elder John Kitchen and William Wellons be appointed to wait on Elder Jones and inform him if possible to continue our

Is Religion a Luxury?

By OSCAR S. BLINN.

(In current issue of "Advance.")

Some years ago there appeared on the cover of The Congregationalist one of the boldest challenges to our organized Protestantism which has ever come to my attention, and one which has become increasingly pertinent to our churches in these days of progressive "suburbanitis." The challenge read, "YOUR CHURCH—CLUB-HOUSE OR POWER-HOUSE?" The failure fearlessly to meet that test produces rampifying results, not the least of which is the constantly more complicated problem of raising the necessary funds with which to balance the budgets of the local church. Even in the so-called prosperous years church trustees generally were losing sleep over the recurring task of making ends meet; the depression has only brought the difficulties into sharper relief.

Does not the financial approach in the average church run somewhat along the following lines: "We need so many dollars to run our institution next year. Let us be business-like enough to dig down and produce that amount. As a first step let us, by individual approach, use some high-pressure tactics upon our small group of well-to-do constituents in order to induce them to subscribe the major part; and let us try to raise the balance among the small fry by pointing out that we should expect from them at least as much as they spend on cigarettes or the movies." I would be the last person to decry the improvement of business methods in our churches, or to deny the truth of the trite comparisons just suggested; but if we stop there, are we not cheapening the whole undertaking? Have we not missed the essential point of Christian giving?

Jesus and Paul both taught that the grace of giving is one of the necessary, spontaneous outflowerings of Christian character. One simply cannot be a genuine follower of the Master unless he is demonstrating his joy in and gratitude to God by regularly investing an important part of himself, both his time and his substance, in the work of the Kingdom. Accordingly, the raising of money for the work of the church is a spiritual, rather than a material, enterprise; the dollars collected are incidental and of secondary importance.

Any church which is largely dependent upon a few wealthy givers, is in an unhealthy condition, for three reasons. FIRST, the man whose gift has become indispensable, either consciously or unconsciously tends to exert a proportionate veto power (there are pastors whose unsealed lips could tell some tragic stories). SECOND, the loss of such a giver, either by death or by removal, cripples the church. THIRD, the church member of average means tends to feel relieved of the responsibility for doing his share. Possibly this last consideration is the most serious. In every church the number of members (many of them still attending services) who, for some reason or on some pretext, make no pledges, can be regarded as little less than ecclesiastical scandal. There may be exceptional cases; but I make bold to suggest that any church family which is so hard-pressed that it cannot afford to contribute, is in such straits as to require financial assistance from the church itself, and the deacons would do well to investigate the case with that thought in mind. When the head of the family loses his job or suffers other reverses, one of the first results, all too often, is the cancellation of the church pledge, even though the telephone, the automobile, and music lessons remain intact. Is religion so much more a luxury than these tangibles that it should be thrown overboard at the first squall? I have always assumed that when Jesus, in the much debated passage in the twenty-first chapter of the Gospel of John, asked Peter the searching question, "Lovest thou me more than these?", he was referring to the fish lying on the fire of coals. But entirely aside from this, is there any time when a man needs to practice his religion more completely than in the midst of trouble?

One of the strongest arguments recently used in the New York Constitutional Convention in favor of eliminating the anti-gambling section from the State constitution, has been the contention that many churches use "Bingo" as a means of raising money. While there are few churches of our own fellowship, which have been guilty of this violation of the criminal law, the discussion has served to focus our attention upon the various "indirect methods" of raising money for religious purposes. The writer has no desire to indulge in a blanket indictment of indirect giving, but merely suggests that when the basic principles of stewardship permeate our churches, there will be far less occasion to raise money in questionable ways.

In the church of which I am a member, only one out of every three subscribers to current expenses makes any pledge for the benevolence program; and I believe that that is a fair average for our Congregational-Christian Churches. If so, is this not also a major scandal? It is difficult to perceive how any conscientious reader of the New Testament could confine his religious interest and activity to his own parish. Entirely aside from that, however, I venture seriously to raise the question whether a subscription to the running expenses of the local church may properly be classified as a gift at all. If the essence of a gift is the parting with something of value without any intention or expectation of a direct return, then the money which we contribute for the purchase of good preaching, acceptable music, a comfortable sanctuary, religious education for our children, etc., is hardly more than a quid pro quo, for which we receive full value. It is only when we pioneer into the realm of contributing to benevolences, most of which could not possibly bring us any return, except in spiritual satisfaction, that we are dealing with the grace of giving in the sense of the term. Some boards of trustees are still haunted by the nightmare of possible competition between raising a budget for current expenses and appealing for money for missions. Years ago a representative of what, during the past two years, we have come to know, euphemistically, as "287 Fourth Avenue," remarked significantly to me that there is a divine kind of mathematics by virtue of which two and two often make considerably more than four.

Lest the forgoing be considered too destructive in its criticism of prevailing conditions, let me hasten to point out the brighter, constructive side of the problem. Like most of the worth while things in life, the joy of intelligent giving is a matter of education—slow as that process must be. We have a denominational Commission on Stewardship which is more than glad to suggest plans and organization for such a project. Pulpit presentation, forum discussions, cooperation by church organizations, bulletins to irregular attendants, dramatizations, and special worship services are some of the means available.

This is not the place for a discussion of the Every Member Canvass. The technique used in most churches is capable of considerable improvement. There are, however, a few

Elon College Golden Anniversary

The report last week should have carried two larger contributions that are greatly appreciated, Mr. Garland Gray, $250.00 and Mrs. Ella Gray, $250.00. These contributions which carry the total beyond $20,000.00, are included in this week's report.

It was the writer's pleasure and privilege to attend the Valley Conference. I found an increased interest in the college and a desire on the part of many to do their share. There is a keen interest in the idea of burning the notes held against the college as a part of this year's commencement program. Everybody seems to be enthusiastic for this thing to actually happen. We all would be most happy. Something very necessary, however, must precede the burning. Creditors hold the notes. They will not turn them over to be burned until the cash is turned over to them. The college would turn the cash over today if it had it. If all who would like to see all claims against the college settled and all notes destroyed will give what they can, will do their best, the burning will take place.

At the Valley Conference a lady whom I had seen only once before came to speak to me at the noon hour. She gave me an envelope. I recognized her. She said, "I am interested in the college. I asked, "Would you like to join the Anniversary Club?" She said, "The $50.00 is in the envelope which I gave you."

Another who has been interested in the college since I came as president and who was one among the first to give $20.00 to the college and who has generously supported the college every year since, expressed his interest, gave me his pledge for membership in the Anniversary Club, and the next day brought me the check.

A minister and his wife expressed great interest in the college, gave me their pledge and a partial payment. There were others who were greatly interested and who gave their pledges, one about whom I wish to write a separate article.

We are grateful for the contributions this week and hope and pray that the number will increase. We are moving slowly but we are moving.

SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHURCH OFFERINGS.

Our Sunday schools and churches continue to remember the college. Of course as they send in their contributions they are helping to meet their conference apportionments which they are expected to pay in full before the next annual meeting of their conference. We greatly appreciate every interest that these donations express.

The following Sunday schools have sent in their fifth Sunday offerings. If your Sunday school does not appear on the list and you received the offering, won't you please forward the same as early as possible. If your Sunday school did not take the fifth Sunday offering, won't you please do something about it. We greatly need your help. Your cooperation will mean encouragement in trying to do a difficult job.

pastor for the ensuing year, and we mutually pledge ourselves to use every exertion in our power to remunerate him for the loss he must necessarily sustain in continuing in the pastorate of our church.

"That each male member be requested to pay 16½c monthly for upkeep of meeting house." 1844—"Elder John Kitchen, William Wellons, G. L. Brittle be appointed messengers from this church to attend the Eastern Virginia Conference to be held at Antioch Chapel." August 31, 1845—Direct words of Dr. William B. Wellons: "Deeming it expedient to better arrange our class paper to the church at Barrett's, I have taken the liberty to insert it in the Church Book, also setting the time, all news received since November 22, 1843. Those news previous to that date will be left blank." 1846—"Resolve that Stephen S. Barrett and William B. Wellons be recommended to that said conference at Union Chapel, Southampton County, for ordination." 1847—"Resolve that Brother Mills B. Barrett be recommended to attend the annual conference to be received as an un-ordained preacher." 1850—"Resolve that Elder James J. Holy be invited to take a seat with us and participate in our deliberations."

"Resolved that the second Sunday in August be set apart as a day of fasting and prayer for a powerful display of God's power at this place last year. Resolve that we, by the help of God, protract our August meeting." 1853—"That Brother James W. Wellons be granted leave of absence from the church to preach." 1856—"Resolve that John B. Barrett, James M. Barrett, Calvin Scarborough, Mills Brittle, Edwin F. White, and John S. Coaker be trustees to the land deed. That a committee be appointed to wait on Sister Hester Morris and summons her to attend conference for charge brought against her for having dancing at her house."

If only those good saints that have passed on a century ago to the great beyond could view our church yard, with its most beautiful and expensive automobiles which have taken the place of their ox carts and covered wagons, can you, in any way, conceive how amazed these good friends would be?

"Harsh counsels have no effect; they are like hammers which are always repulsed by the anvil."

GOLDEN WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.

The Durham Daily Globe (as the Durham paper was known at that time) carried the following announcement August, 1889:

"Mr. John S. Carden and Miss Mary Susan Allison were united in marriage Wednesday morning, August 22, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Allison, near Caldwell Institute in Orange County. The bride's pastor, Rev. W. F. Wilhelm officiated."

Some few years after Brother Carden was married he felt the call to preach the Gospel. To prepare himself for this work, he realized he should go to school some more, so he attended school at Caldwell Institute for three years. Then in 1896 he attended school at Elon College for one year.

FOR TODAY.

O God, give me strength to live another day. Let me not turn coward before its difficulties or prove recreant to its duties. Let me not lose faith in my fellowmen. Keep me sweet and sound of heart, in spite of ingratitude, treachery, or meanness. Preserve me from minding little stings or giving them. Help me to keep my heart clean, and to live so honestly and fearlessly that no outward failure can dishearten me or take away the joy of conscious integrity. Open wide the eyes of my soul, that I may see good in all things. Grant me this day some new vision of Thy truth, inspire me with the spirit of joy and gladness, and make me the cup of strength to suffering souls; in the name of the strong Deliverer, our only Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. Amen.

—Phillips Brooks.

It was quite a task and took a great deal of courage to do this, as finances were at a very low ebb. He then moved back to his home in Orange County, and lived there until 1904, when he moved to his present home in Durham, N. C. He was licensed to preach in 1892, and was ordained in 1900.

Since that time he and his good wife have labored together, though the road at times has seemed very rugged. They have kept their faces turned toward the higher plains of life. We know that on numerous occasions Brother Carden has walked ten or twelve miles in order that he might catch a train to fill his appointment. Or perhaps he would drive twenty or thirty miles in his buggy on a cold day in order to be there on Sunday. During all of these years he has had full work most of the time. Part of the time he has had as many as six churches in one year. At the present time he is pastor of Morrisville, N. C., and Mt. Hermon churches.

To this couple were born ten children, four of which died in infancy. Their only son, Samuel S., was drowned in 1926. Their youngest, Naoma, was an invalid for five years and passed on to her reward in December, 1936. There are four daughters living: Mrs. Bettie Scaff, Mrs. Minnie Harward, and Mrs. Mamie Wagner, all of Durham, N. C., and Mrs. Ada Franklin of Stem, N. C. There are sixteen grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

Rev. and Mrs. Carden are issuing the following invitation to CHRISTIAN SUN readers and other friends:

THE BRAVE AND FEARLESS.

Under a Mebane, N. C., date line, August 11, it was noted that a missionary from that town, who had been visiting her mother for a year, was returning for her twentieth year as missionary to China. When one reads of the terrible bombing and destruction and death in China at the present as carried on by the Japanese, one can but decide that these missionaries have some daring and courage that the rest of us haven't got. Through the years and by the hundreds these missionaries have been going out and are still going out to the various nations of the world in order to carry the message and live the life of the Prince of Peace to a world distraught because of paganism, idolatry and hate. It is a slow and tedious process and besides it requires such a faith that comparatively few have. They evidently go, taking their own lives in their hands and facing dangers, many and varied, and live with the assurance; "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." We who live in peace and for the most part in plenty and prosperity little realize what it means to go to fields afar in lands, customs and conditions that separate them far from their loved ones, from the ease and comfort of home conditions. After all one looking on cannot analyze, nor fully grasp, the motive that moves these missionaries to surrender all and go out without hope or expectation of earthly reward, political, or social prestige, or economic advantage. One can say that a long, long time ago there lived a strange young man, who dying by the time He was thirty-three years of age, said, "Ye shall be witnesses of me unto the uttermost parts of the earth." That is not only a command, but a declaration of a fact and there are still on the earth an ever increasing number who are willing to go out and under the most trying circumstances and difficulties share His life with others and show people how to live. This is indeed a great mystery, but a mystery that wins the admiration of all who look upon it without prejudice. It has been said and truly that this strange young man has had more influence, and is having more influence, in the earth than all the armies and navies that have been formed and built since His day some nineteen centuries ago. Those of us who haven't the courage, the daring, or the privilege of going in person do have the high and holy privilege of going in purse and in prayer.

The missionary offerings are not large, but are appreciated, expressing as they do the attitude toward missions and the desire to have a part in the wholly divine and unselfish task of sharing with others the gospel of our Lord. If peace between the nations of the world shall ever come it will be through and by the work of the missionaries who go out in the name of the Prince of Peace, who Himself said, "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." (John 14: 27.)

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS TO W. M. S., FRANKLIN, VA.

Sometime since the Woman's Missionary Society of our Franklin Church celebrated with a very suitable program its Birthday Anniversary, 1912-1939. At this happy meeting a poem composed and read by Mrs. Hargrave for the occasion was enjoyed so very, very much that they decided to give it wide reading through THE CHRISTIAN SUN that other societies might share with them the inspiration of the poem. We are glad to submit it herewith, a copy having been furnished us by the Franklin Society.—J. O. A.

1912—BIRTHDAY GREETINGS—1939.

W. M. S., Franklin Christian Church.

In March of nineteen hundred twelve,
A band of a faithful few
Organized our society,
With hopes that they would do
Great work, where broad fields lay unkept—
Where laborers had not gleaned,
Where was suffering, greater than which man
Had neither heard of nor seen.

Each day they prayed and labored on,
This faithful little band,
Led on, as oft they might have paused,
By God's sustaining hand.
Perchance brave efforts came to naught
And brewed disconsolation,
For these whose visions opened wide
Across the heathen nations.

Did they become discouraged,
Or falter? Oh no, never!
But step by step their foothold grew,
In glorious endeavor,
And as the years have come and gone,
Whilst Satan's wiles would lure
Poor souls that knew not of the Christ,
Our work's been slow but sure.

We boast not, but in humble pride
Cannot but think and feel
That as we've grown in number,
So have we grown in zeal.
With open hearts we heed the calls
That float across the seas.
We give ourselves, our prayers, our means,
In answer to these pleas.

It's courage, tho', and faith we need,
To work and grow still faster
As we reach out afar and near
In service for the Master—
Service that is filled with love,
God grant it may increase.
'Til strife shall fade and we shall know
A world of lasting peace.

So, women, by each one of us
There's something to be done
Today, if from the scourge of sin
And war, the world is won.
So come, let's set about our tasks,
With resolutions hearty.
And come back, really proud, next year
To our Mission Birthday party.

—Lillian Hargrave.

MISSIONARY SOCIETY ORGANIZED.

The ladies of the Happy Home Congregational-Christian Church met on July 19, 1939, and organized a Woman's Missionary Society. Eighteen charter members were enrolled, although others have joined since. At this first meeting Mrs. A. W. Andes met with the ladies and discussed with them their new society and what it should mean to them. After the discussion the following officers were elected: Mrs. H. E. Robertson, president; Miss Ruth Stephens, vice-president; Mrs. G. D. Ellington, secretary; Mrs. R. D. Hill, assistant-secretary; Mrs. T. F. Dye, treasurer. Superintendents—Mrs. George Hill, literature; Mrs. W. D. Wall, spiritual life; Mrs. R. D. Hill, cradle roll.

The missionary society will meet on Friday night before the first Sunday in each month. Plans are being made for a careful study of the mission work of our denomination. The officials of the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference are invited to be with us at any time. It is felt that the missionary society will give much missionary zeal to the local church.

MRS. G. D. ELLINGTON,
Secretary.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.ROSEMONT.

The Young People's Missionary Society of the Rosemont Christian Church held its annual Rally and mite box opening on July 21 at the church. A short devotional service was given, including two solos by members of the society and an interesting and inspiring message by Mrs. D. B. Brent. The opening of the mite boxes revealed an offering of $10.76. A social hour followed with entertaining games and delightful refreshments.

Miss Frances Herbert is the secretary of this splendid group of young people, and many plans are being made for the new year.

LIBERTY SPRING.

The Young People's Missionary Society of the Liberty Spring Christian Church held a special meeting recently on a Sunday night at the church. During the business session the mission project of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship was discussed and it was decided to have a lawn party to raise money for the project. The program was based on China and is as follows; Prelude: "O Zion Haste."

Life of Dr. and Mrs. Robert E. Chandler and Mrs. George Shepherd—by Emily Harrell.

"In the Name of Christ, Help the War Sufferers of China"—by Polly Thompson.

"Fochow College On the Move"—by Susie Lee Parker.

"Americans in China"—by Harrell Byrd.

"Christianity On Trial"—by Martha Parker.

Hymn: "Fling Out the Banner."

Prayer by Emily Harrell.

The program chairman for this meeting was Miss Emily Harrell, and the item above shows that a well planned one was carried out.

MRS. W. M. JAY.

PRESIDENT OF THE ENGLISH METHODIST CONFERENCE ON THE NEW BIRTH.

It does not argue well whenever the doctrine of regeneration recedes to the hinterland and is superseded by literary groups and a keep-fit movement. No one need speak lightly of these activities, but what the fit man and woman is to do should also be our concern. In spite of the fact that infants have been baptized, young people confirmed, and Sunday schools graded the major part of the community is caught and held in the meshes of a desolating worldliness. The only hope for these people is the new birth. The thrilling implication of Jesus Christ's words to Nicodemus is not that a man must be born again but that he can be born again. There is the miracle of mercy and of grace. A man with a heart blackened by vice, or hard as pride and selfishness can make it, can be cleansed, softened, renewed—

"A humble, lowly contrite heart, Believing, true and clean."

We are not unmindful of what has happened—discoveries have been made, the intellectual complexion of the world has changed—but no discovery in the physical world has robbed sin of its pervasive consequences. Nothing has made superfluous the atoning death of Christ. There is still only one way to heaven.

Some weeks ago I traveled the thirty-six miles from Exeter to Shebbear, and reflected as I did so that a greater man did the same journey a hundred years before. How different it was! He walked and I rode—instead of a cart-track a broad highway; instead of laden women trudging with heavy load to the nearest market town, well-dressed ladies who refuse to grow old, careering through the countryside at fifty miles an hour. How changed! Yes, and how much the same! The birds sang then as they do now, the lambs played exactly the same games in the fields. There was the same sun and heavenly breezes, and the same noble hills, which in a hundred or a thousand years have not grown one gray hair. And so it is with the heart of man. It is still true that the one insistent question of awakened humanity is, "What must I do to be saved?"

The church that has the answer to this question has the future of the Kingdom of God in its keeping. Methodism would be faithless to its past, its founder, and its Lord if it were content to place the outcast in a Salvation Army shelter and simply cultivate the good opinion of people who are more at home at a bazaar than in a prayer meeting.

The evangelist is sure of three truths—God's love and grace, man's sin and need, and the power of Christ to save the most sinful man on earth. There is always the danger of the church becoming a comfortable place for the once-born, and these are the inner problem of many a church. They protect their minister as long as he is reasonably tame, they support the funds, and ask only that the sermon shall be brief, soothing, and full of interest.

But early Methodist literature is the story of conversions. "The Lives of the Early Methodist Preachers" are six little volumes which would be mere rags and sawdust if the stories of conversion were taken out of them. Such stories, too, are the life-blood of missionary literature.

If, then, what I have been saying is true—and I have no doubt about it—should it not be our purpose, by the grace of God, to go back to our churches with whatever method may seem best to us but with a firm resolve to preach Christ as the one and only Saviour of every sinful man?—The Methodist Recorder.

An investment of life and money with the American Board today offers far greater possibilities than ever before. As rapidly as work can be supported in a local area, we pioneer into spheres of work that have long waited for help. The Board never had so many opportunities for service. Appeals for help and needs unanswered are cause for serious concern to every Christian. They await your own response and that of your church. We invite you to go with the American Board.

"Youth at Work in the Church"

Emily Carleton Lester, Editor

EASTERN VIRGINIA PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

[Report of the Thirteenth Annual Summer Conference at Liberty Spring Christian Church on July 11, 1939.]

Nineteen churches were represented by one hundred and eighteen young people and friends who shared in the program, "What Price Fellowship?" at the Liberty Spring Christian Church on July 11. It was the Thirteenth Annual Summer Conference of the Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship.

After the morning session was called to order by the president, Rev. R. E. Brittle, conducted a very inspiring devotional period. During the business session the Southeast Fellowship mission project was discussed. Miss Frances Everett, the Southeast Mission Superintendent, explained that the project would not interfere with the regular missionary projects now in force. It is the desire to create among the young people a spirit of sharing and sacrificing in a Christian way rather than to emphasize the raising of a certain sum of money for something or other.

The rewritten constitution was read, discussed, and adopted by the Fellowship in session. The actual voting was carried out at the afternoon session.

After a short fellowship period, two young people gave talks. Miss Mason Holland told "What the Young People Must Pay" in serving the church, and Miss Doris Davidson had as her theme "What the Minister Must Pay." These talks served as a prologue for the inspiring address by Rev. A. Lanson Granger, Jr., entitled "Is It Worth It?"

After lunch the group gathered for the afternoon business session. The Fellowship voted to share in the Southeast Project. The constitution was adopted. The officers for 1939-40 were elected. The Committee on Place received a number of invitations, but no definite place was decided on at the July 11 meeting. Among other things, the Committee on Resolutions expressed the thanks of the Fellowship to Dr. Johnson and the good people of Liberty Spring Church for the hospitality shown the Fellowship.

Dr. C. Rexford Raymond did a splendid job of installing the new officers. After the installation, Julian Granger sang, "We Would Be Building."

After the discussion groups for young people and ministers, Mrs. E. T. Batten led a fellowship period out of doors. It was enjoyed by all.

The worship service, "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," conducted by Miss Mary Effa Savage, brought to a close a very successful conference.

CHAS. E. HEATH, President,
Eastern Va. Pilgrim Fellowship.

VALLEY OF VIRGINIA PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

The Pilgrim Fellowship of the Valley met in joint session with the annual Conference at Newport Church on August 9. A business session was called when we elected officers for the ensuing year and discussed plans for the future. Rev. and Mrs. F. C. Lester met with us and offered helpful suggestions. Mr. Lester explained the mission project that the young people of the Southeast are undertaking in China.

The evening session was in charge of the young people, with Miss Eugenia Snow presiding. Rev. and Mrs. J. F. Morgan of Norfolk, Va., were in charge of the music and their selections were hymns appealing to youth. Rev. W. T. Scott, assisted by Rev. F. C. Lester and Dr. L. E. Smith, conducted the installation service for the following officers: Eugenia Snow, president; Mrs. Lloyd Monger, vice-president; Raymond Andes, secretary-treasurer; Rhoda Driver, assistant secretary-treasurer; Superintendents—Anna Lou Showalter, missions; Hazel Davis, social action; Thelma Morris, devotional life; Gwendolyn Smith, leadership training; Mabel Higgs, publisher and reporter. Pastors and Counselors—Rev. R. D. Coulter, Rev. M. W. Mann, Rev. R. A. Whitten; Lay-Counselors—R. Roy Hosaflook, R. O. Rothgeb, and Mrs. Edgar Nelson.

Following this Mr. Scott delivered an impressive message, using as his subject "Making the Most of Your Life." At this service an offering

WHAT CAN WE DO ABOUT MISLEADING ADVERTISING?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR AUGUST 27, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Isaiah 30: 8-13;
Proverbs 12: 22.

Daily Readings—

Monday—Impartation of God's Word—Deut. 6: 4-9.

Tuesday—A Prophetic Writing—Hab. 2: 1-4.

Wednesday—Teachers of False Doctrines—Titus 1: 10-16.

Thursday—A Divine Broadcast—Luke 2: 8-14.

Friday—An Honest Testimony—I Tim. 1: 12-17.

Saturday—The Faithful Witness of Truth—John 18: 33-38.

We are the victims of dishonest and vicious advertising more than we commonly suppose. Advertisers frequently distort or misrepresent the truth, make use of unfair allurements to attract attention and win favor, belittle rival products and conceal unfavorable facts about their own products. Flagrant exaggeration is a common device of present-day advertising.

Young people can do something about dishonest and misleading advertising only when they get hold of real facts and cases. Consumers' organizations, such as Consumers' Union of United States, publish and distribute reports of laboratory tests of all kinds of consumers' goods. These tests frequently reveal cases of misbranding, grossly exaggerated claims, misleading statements, and the like.

Build up a strong resistance against vicious liquor, cigarette and cinema advertising. Let different members prepare practical examples which they have observed of misleading advertising and present for discussion. Wherever members of the society are convinced that a piece of advertising has been misleading, the president or secretary should be authorized to write to the company sponsoring the advertisement or a particular word or phrase which is inaccurate.

For Discussion—

1. To what extent does misleading advertising actually control us in daily life?

2. What attitude should a Christian take toward a misleading advertisement?

Suggested Hymns—

"Who Is on the Lord's Side?"

"Give of Your Best to the Master."

"Living for Jesus."

(A SOCIAL ASPECT OF THE LIQUOR PROBLEM.)

LESSON VIII—AUGUST 20, 1939.

GOLDEN TEXT: Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink.—Habakkuk 2: 15.

LESSON: Joel 1: 5-7;

Daniel 5: 1-5, 17, 25, 28.

A Fearless Mouthpiece for God.

One hears, every now and then, of a Sunday school teacher—it is usually the teacher of a large men's class—who does not teach the regular Sunday school lesson when it is a Temperance Lesson. One wonders why. In some cases it may be because the teacher himself uses beverage alcohol, but that is rare rather than the rule, at least one likes to think so. In general, however, it seems to be due to the fact that these teachers do "not want to offend anybody," "to make anybody mad," "to bring politics into the church," "to try to make men good and sober by law or by talking to them," and so on. And that raises the question as to the purpose of teaching Sunday school. Is it to give people only what they want, to soothe their consciences and leave their feelings unruffled, to teach only what one cares to teach? Or is it to declare the whole counsel of God, to teach the truth in love, to bring men and women to a sense of sin and a sense of need for salvation from sin, to point out the personal and social implications of what men do, and to throw the light of God's Word on the things that are the enemies of the Kingdom of God, and a denial of the ideals and spirit of Christ? Sunday school teachers need to do some straight, hard thinking on this subject.

Whatever may be the policy of modern preachers and teachers, it was the policy of the men of God of Biblical times to speak boldly against the personal and corporate sins of their day. Again and again, therefore, one finds drinking and drunkenness denounced by the prophets and teachers of Israel. One need not look elsewhere for his authority or sanction in speaking out against the liquor traffic—he has it in the Bible. We hear a great deal today about education against alcohol. It will help tremendously if Sunday school teachers and ministers will regularly, courageously, but kindly and sensibly, teach and preach against the evils and the dangers of beverage alcohol. God certainly has only pity and compassion for the drinker and the drunkard—the slaves of liquor and their victims—but one may be sure that He hates the liquor traffic itself. It is a denial of everything for which the Kingdom of God stands, and for which Christ died. He hates it for what it does to individuals and to society. It stands condemned in His sight and He awaits the time when His people will rise up in their might and smite it utterly. "Believe it or not," the liquor traffic is doomed. As the reign of Christ increases, it must decrease.

Alcohol and the Community.

The lesson today approaches the liquor problem from the standpoint of the community. Other lessons have dealt and will deal with the matter of beverage alcohol from the standpoint of the best interests and the highest welfare of the individual. Today's lesson emphasizes the fact that beverage alcohol is a community problem and menace. Ah, there's the rub. It were bad enough if the blight of the use of alcohol fell only upon the drinker himself. But no man, and of all men, the drinker, liveth to himself, or drinketh to himself. In satisfying his appetite for drink—an acquired appetite, it needs to be said, for that is one of the dangers of the use of beverage alcohol—he is aiding and abetting and supporting and developing the liquor traffic itself. He is fastening with ever-stronger bonds this monster on the community and the nation. There is not much good to be said for the liquor traffic. And that is not to be blind to the fact that it causes much money to be put into circulation, and gives employment to many people, and utilizes many products in its manufacture and distribution. From the standpoint of the community and the nation, when all the returns are in, its figures stand on the wrong side of the ledger. It is a liability instead of an asset, both from the standpoint of money and of men. It produces and fosters a whole family of evils that blight the individual and curse society. It is this social factor in the liquor problem which so many people overlook. They think that it is nobody's business whether they take a drink or let it alone. They do not see that drinking, even in moderation, has social issues, and that drinking to excess has distinctly tragic social consequences. This is all the more true in our modern, complex, inter-related life.

Drinking and Its Attendant Social Evils.

The story for today's lesson shows how excess in drinking breeds other evils. Belshazzar's feast probably was all right at the beginning. But when the wine began to flow freely, the men and women began to cast off restraints. This is so often the case. For alcohol first attacks the brain centers which are the seat of judgment, self-control, and balance. The loss of muscular coordination comes later, and is evidence that something worse has already taken place. Men and women under the influence of liquor usually lack self-control, usually let down the bars of moral action, usually give way to their lower appetites and passions.

Excess in drinking led to sensuality. The king had his concubines at the feast and it is not difficult to imagine what took place. Public dance halls are often next door to rooms available for clandestine things, or vice versa. Lust and liquor are closely related. Young people often do brazenly what they would not think of doing if they were sober. So very often that is tragic, when liquor comes in looseness also comes with it.

And the story shows the abysmal depths to which liquor will sometimes drag men. The king ordered his servants to bring out the golden vessels that his father had taken from the Temple in Jerusalem, and he and his debauched fellow-banqueters actually drank wine from these hallowed vessels. He wouldn't have dared to do it if he had been sober. It was an act of blasphemy that can be accounted for only because of his drunken condition. Thus do men take God's best gifts and prostitute them to the god of drink. Thus does liquor desecrate the highest and best in life.

The Hand-Writing On the Wall.

How quickly the bragging and bluster of the king was changed to fear and trembling when the hand-writing appeared on the wall. And how cowardly and cringing do men become when they face the inevitable penalty of their brazenry and blasphemy. Let no man be deceived; God is not mocked. As we sow, we shall reap. He that sows to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption.

"There are three classes of people in the world: the wills, the won'ts, and the can'ts. The wills have capacity to anything, the won'ts oppose everything, and the can'ts never do anything."

MONDAY.

"LOVE IS NOT ENOUGH."

"You must love the Lord—with your whole heart, your whole soul, your whole mind, your whole strength."—Mark 12:30.

Love is often said to be enough. The words of our text are the words of Christ about that. Read them again. Now what do you think?

For instance, love is not enough for marriage; there must be the skill of living together agreeably. Love is not enough for parents; parents must understand children, see through their eyes, and live life along with them. Love is not enough for a child to a parent; the child must respect the experience and wisdom of the parents, and live according to their leadership, whether this obedience accords with youth's impulses or not. It is not enough to love the Lord, but one must follow through with heart, soul, mind, and physical strength.

Prayer—Our Father, in Thy light, we shall see the light. Make Thy love come true in our home. Give us understanding hearts that make life sweet and fruitful. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"WHEN AND HOW TO PRAY."

"When thou prayest enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut the door, pray."—Matt. 6:6.

Christ never argues about prayer. In all His teachings and in all His ministry there's not the faintest suggestion that we ought to say our prayers. He takes prayer for granted as something that His children will do, and the subject of prayer is approached by Him in such terms as, "When ye pray." Christ does not urge us to get ready for heaven, He takes our good sense (which He has given us) for granted and thus says, "In my Father's House there are many mansions." "I will come again and receive you unto myself." Heaven is taken for granted, and "follow me," is the injunction.

Prayer—O Lord, Thou didst make our lives for Thee, and there is no hope save in Thee. We would not live without Thee this day, and we would follow Thee all the way. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"GIVE ME REST."

"A Sabbath of solemn rest."—Lev. 23:3.

Everybody is tired and everybody is looking for rest. Perhaps this may be qualified a bit, but we do know that "tired" is one of the commonest complaints of humanity, and we do know that freedom from labor in shorter hours and more holidays is the goal for which the human race is in a mad search.

We overlook that God has provided rest for the weary in a very special way, the Sabbath rest. Mankind is seeking that rest through frantic automobiling and hectic pleasure-seeking. Let us keep Sabbath in relaxation and worship. Let us try God's rest.

Prayer—O Lord, we would rest in Thee, in quietness and devotion. In this way we learn the meaning of life. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"GLORIFIED PRAYER."

"It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord."—Ps. 92:1.

The author of the 92nd Psalm makes a spiritual suggestion—that it is not only good to give thanks, but also to show forth His loving-kindness in the morning. He also suggests that we should show forth His faithfulness at night. What does prayer amount to, unless we go farther? To show forth God's loving-kindness along our way is the highest spiritual achievement. That and only that is glorified prayer.

Prayer—Our Father, we are Thy souls. Save us from mere static belief, but may we be luminous with Thy spirit. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"HOW THE KINGDOM COMES."

"So they went and saw where He was staying, and they remained and spent that day with Him."—John 1:38.

Two youths make a simple visit to Jesus. Two things happen to them. They fall in love with Him and they make a complete surrender to Him, changing completely their plans. This constitutes a complete transformation: a touch with Christ, a surrender to Christ, a surrendered life. So the Kingdom comes.

Prayer—Our Father, each day we come to Thee, may we touch Thee, and be embued with Thy power to save our fellowmen, and Thy Kingdom. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"DAILY BREAD."

"Give us this day our daily bread."—Matt. 6:11.

This prayer for daily bread does not refer to the meat nor the loaf, but it refers to prayer for power to see His providence in the usual. We are dependent upon God for bread, but we have bread for the soul that the mind knows not of.

The lovely things are quiet things,
Soft falling snow,
And feathers dropping from flying wings
Make no sound as they go.

We need the power to see Jesus in these quiet things, in the power that clothes the flowers, and feeds the birds. If we would have this vision, we must daily go to Him and be fed daily by His spirit.

Statement of Religious Convictions

By ARTHUR C. BROOKS.

[The following article is a statement made by Professor Brooks of Asheville, N. C., to a Council called at Elon College, on June 20. Mr. Brooks is a graduate of Yale Divinity School and is now a chaplain at a boy's school in Asheville, N. C. The Council recommended that he be licensed and the education and executive committees of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference granted this request and licensed him on that date. Editor.]

"The Jewish-Christian religion has always involved a philosophy, but it has never been a philosophy. In its most essential nature and most continuous meaning, it was and is, costly adventure for the Kingdom of God."

Thus does a great minister express himself in a recently published book. I quote it here because first, it is my belief that any statement of religious convictions must of necessity be difficult and probably inadequate. Secondly, any such statement must have as its main theme the Kingdom of God. The difficulty is great in the first place because the Christian religion is dynamic, is a way of life, and not simply a set of intellectual beliefs that can be fully expressed by some creed or formula. In the second place, any such statement must use certain theological or philosophical terms, which defy adequate definition, and which mean different things to different people. I will try, therefore, to state my religious convictions by giving an interpretation of the above statement, "costly adventure for the Kingdom of God," hoping thereby to indicate my belief about God, man, Christ, and the Church.

Jesus said, "The Kingdom of God is within you," or as sometimes translated, "among you." It seems to me that both of these translations must be taken in order to explain the meaning of Jesus as to the coming of the Kingdom. Each one has within himself the possibilities of living as a member of God's kingdom on earth should live, and because of this, there is the possibility of a society made up of such men and women which can be called the Kingdom of God. That is the adventure, to so live that we as individuals and the society in which we live may rightly deserve the name we bear—Christian. Costly, difficult, and even impossible, if we depend solely upon our weak human wills.

There is another, perhaps even more important, meaning of Jesus' saying. It is not in achieving perfection in our individual and social lives that we realize the Kingdom. The Kingdom is not a static state which we reach after a long struggle. It is in the struggle and the adventure itself that we feel we are a part of God's Kingdom. We recognize our weaknesses and human limitations; we realize that we will never have a perfect society. But we also find that life has meaning and happiness and peace for us only if we live consecrated and unselfish lives of devotion to the highest we know. This is not the attainment of a state of perfection, but it is only by living thus—as if the Kingdom were going to be realized through our own lives—that we realize any small fraction of it.

The world is a world of good and evil and man as a creature of this world has within him the possibilities of good or evil. Man is of this world, but there is also within him a spark of the divine. As in the story of creation where man was formed of the dust of the ground, but God breathed into him the breath of life, there is in each that divine element which is part of God's Holy Spirit. By just so far as we live according to that Spirit, do we deserve to be called heirs of His Kingdom.

This leads me directly to a statement about my belief in God. He is transcendent and immanent, the ultimate ground of all things, and He is characterized by an ethically purposive will.

He is transcendent and working in the universe of order and meaning, and is immanent in bringing into being finite persons who share His spirit in ethically creative activity and worship. We know God only through His revelation to us. He is revealed to us in the world of nature where we see beauty and wonder beyond human comprehension, but He is revealed to us primarily in the life and spirit of His son, Jesus Christ, through whom we see God as infinite in wisdom, goodness, and love. We see that Ultimate Reality is a "Person" to be loved with heart, will, strength, and mind.

The faithful of all great religious worship God and, whether they know it or not, it is the same God in whom we live and move and have our being—the Creator of the ends of the earth. However, I feel that in Christianity we have the highest conception of God. It is only in Christianity that we believe in God as the Father of Jesus Christ, with all the significance that statement implies, and it is only in Christianity that the Spirit of the living God working in us is the Spirit of the risen Christ. In Jesus the Spirit and the will of God were revealed supremely, once and for all.

This leads logically to a statement concerning Jesus, my belief as to what he was and what his significance was and still is. In such a paper as this I cannot and need not try to give an exhaustive dissertation but can only indicate some important features.

Three ways of thinking about Jesus have recurred again and again: (1) As merely a man who was God's ideal for humanity. (2) As God in man, entering his humanity to share its burdens and to influence its life. (3) As Savior of the world, the leader in the quest for national and individual righteousness. These three ideas have been expressed in creeds and doctrines by incarnation, deity, and Saviorhood, and any adequate conception must include all three. To treat of these three briefly:

(1) Jesus was, if we can accept the records at all, a man. He was like us in sharing our human nature. He was, however, unlike us in the use he made of it. In Jesus, God teaches us by example. To each he reveals the best and the worst in ourselves. He was the realization of the ideal life in

FAMILY ALTAR.

Prayer—Our Father, teach us more and more our dependence on Thee and appreciate Thy unceasing care. Preserve our lives that we may daily do Thy will, and show forth Thy kingdom. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"FAITH THAT FOLLOWS THROUGH."

"I have not found so great a Faith, no, not in Israel."—Matt. 8:10.

The Centurion had sought out Jesus for the healing of his child. So great was his faith that he told Jesus that if He would only say the word the child would be healed. That is certainly going all the way in Faith.

Jesus commended some people for their faith and He upbraided others for the lack of it. But He made it plain that it is "according to your faith be it unto you." In other words it is faith that works—vital and throbbing in one's life.

A young man studying for the ministry lacked funds, was discouraged, and about to give up. But God sent him a father who said to him, "Bob, if God has called you to preach, He will provide." He did. That man got his education and is still preaching the Word with an absolute faith, and God an unfailing provider for His life.

Prayer—(Say the Lord's Prayer.)

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

There is one trip that the writer looks forward to from one year to the next. More than twenty years ago we visited the Valley Virginia Central Conference for the first time. At that time the most convenient way was to travel by train all night to Washington City and then catch a train to Harrisonburg, and go out to the Conference from there. It took all night and most of the next day to make the trip. The people were so kind to us that we fell very much in love with the good people in the Valley and it has always been a pleasure to attend the Conference since that first visit. Since our first visit our love and admiration for the people in the Valley has not lessened, but has grown.

Last week, in company with Dr. L. E. Smith and Rev. William T. Scott, we left Elon College after two o'clock in the afternoon, in an automobile, to attend the Valley Virginia Conference. We spent the night in Harrisonburg. What a difference in the time to make the trip, from twenty years ago.

We now have beautiful hard-surface roads all the way. The beautiful mountain scenery in all its grandeur and beauty seems to lift one higher and nearer to heaven. At this season of the year the scenery along the way through the mountains is grand and shows the handiwork of God. No painter, it makes no difference how well he can paint, can paint anything so beautiful as the mountains clothed in all their beauty. It seems that as one climbs the mountains surrounded by the beauty of nature on every side that it makes one want to get in closer touch with a God who has created such a beautiful world for man to live in.

The Valley Conference was a most pleasant one. All the sessions were filled with a sweet spirit that was uplifting and inspiring. May God, who made the beautiful mountains and us all, richly bless the good people of the Valley Virginia Central Conference.

IS RELIGION A LUXURY?

underlying suggestions that ought to be carried in mind. The work naturally falls into two parts, namely the training (both technical and spiritual) of the canvassers, and the approach to the canvassees (to use an extremely non-Websterian word). Canvassers should be paired with the greatest care so as to bring together men who are not well acquainted with each other or who represent different types of thought. The young men should be drafted and paired with older men. It is astonishing how the bonds of fellowship can be strengthened by an afternoon's unselfish work with a man of different age-group or point of view. Every home in the parish should be called upon, even those in which there is no likelihood or possibility of a pledge; and the approach in every instance should be with the spirit that the church is far more interested in the family called upon than in anything they may give.

Any church which seriously and prayerfully undertakes a program of this sort, will not only, sooner or later, solve its financial problems; but—and this is of far greater importance—it will become a genuine "power-house" for God.

STATEMENT OF RELIGIOUS CONVICTIONS.

his conquering of sin and devotion to the Kingdom of God. Jesus' likeness to us, his humanity, gives him his real significance for us. It does not explain away his individuality, but makes us all feel closer to Him and to God. The most significant fact about the historic Jesus is that he has become the Christ of faith.

(2) The divinity of Jesus has already been touched upon in speaking of the revelation of God. Jesus is our standard for thought and experience of God, showing us what God is like and what he is doing. Through Jesus we feel God's presence and see God's Spirit not quantitatively but qualitatively. It is the purpose of God in Jesus which is divine. His divinity does not rest upon facts which differentiate him from all men, possible or actual; it rests upon facts which show he is the supreme influence which God is using on men. His divinity rests not upon the origin of his person but upon the fact of his present continuing power over the hearts and consciences of men.

(3) Jesus is the Savior of the world not in terms of the early messianic conceptions of a king who would usher in magically a rule of righteousness. To put it in simple terms, he is the Savior in that salvation is in being possessed by his spirit and his ideal of love. It is thus that the Kingdom of God is realized by men and through men for society.

A final word about the Church. The Church is the only institution organized primarily for the purpose of proclaiming the Gospel, worshipping God, and striving toward the realization of the Kingdom. It is a body of consecrated people, and is a consecrated institution. It is my hope, however, that the ministry in the Church is not the only ministry open to one who tries to adventure for the Kingdom of God and to help others to do the same.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MUD AND VIOLETS.

"I don't see whatever possessed you, mother, to ask me to go out this weather to call on Aunt Phoebe Mason! It was mud, mud—all the way there," and Mildred Dudley, with a resentful little pull drew off her rubbers by the kitchen stove.

"She was glad to see me—who wouldn't be, sick in bed, and in that crossroad, out-of-the-way place! I'd die—I know I should—if I were obliged to stay there for a week, to say nothing of being confined to my room for years! Mother, why didn't you tell me there was so much mud?"

"Why, I didn't notice it in particular, dear, when I went there yesterday," said Mrs. Dudley, in reply to her daughter, holding the while a fork of dripping doughnuts over a kettle of boiling fat.

"It was as bad yesterday as it is today," insisted Mildred, "and worse if anything, for it rained while you were out."

"I had forgotten. But come to think of it, now you mention the fact, there was some mud on the short stretch of road up Baxter Hill." Mrs. Dudley deftly "spread" another fork of puffy doughnuts as she spoke.

"And you didn't notice it?"

"The mud? No. Just as I reached the foot of the hill I saw directly ahead of me, on the ridge sheltered by the stone wall, a tiny tuft of yellow violets—the first I'd seen this season. 'Twas hard getting at them, I admit, and I lost one of my rubbers, but I didn't mind a little thing like that—the violets were so beautiful! How could I think of mud with those cheery little faces in my hand!"

"I didn't see any!" said Mildred, slowly.

"But there were others there, dear, for I left some. I'm afraid, Mildred," she added, gently, "the reason why you didn't see them was because you were looking at the mud. And we'll find mud all through life if we look for it—and blossoms, fragrant and beautiful, if we look for them! For my part, dear, I want to find the violets."—Classmate.

We decided to have a picnic at Verbena Park, three miles south of Shenandoah, Va., August 23, in order that the young people of our churches in the Valley may become better acquainted, and for fellowship and inspiration. It is hoped that a good delegation from each church will be present. Bring your lunch and enjoy an evening of fellowship and fun.

The young people of the Valley are hoping to do a more effective work this year after hearing the challenging messages of the Conference.

FORSYTH-GUILFORD ASSOCIATION.

The Forsyth-Guilford Association of Churches met Sunday afternoon, July 30, at Salem Chapel. The meeting was called to order by the president, Rev. D. M. Spence. Rev. G. H. Veazey led in the singing of a hymn, after which Miss Geneva Marshall read the first Psalm. Dr. W. M. Jay led in prayer.

Following the devotions, Mr. H. V. Marshall, superintendent of Salem Chapel Sunday school talked on "Benefits Derived from These Fifth Sunday Conferences." He mentioned specific instances in which he has received information relating to problems in the church school.

An Open Forum was conducted by Dr. W. M. Jay, using a number of questions relating to the educational work of the local church as a basis for discussion. Problems of teaching, the value of vacation schools, and the importance of sending representatives to the Elon Leadership Training School were among the questions freely and enthusiastically discussed by the congregation.

Rev. F. C. Lester, Promotional Secretary, addressed the meeting on the subject of "Our Churches at Work." Mr. Lester presented the various points of The Program of Progress, which has been adopted by the denomination for use in the local church. The first five points of this program, "Bible Study," "Public Worship," "The Home," "Missions," and "More and Better Workers," received special emphasis as suggestions were given for following this program. Mr. Lester urged that churches promote all of the agencies of the church rather than give support to a few favorite ones.

Officers for the coming year were elected as follows: Rev. D. M. Spence, president; W. L. Padgett, vice-president; Frankye Marshall, secretary-treasurer. The hour for beginning the regular meetings was changed from 2:30 to 3:00. Apple's Chapel will be the place of meeting for the next fifth Sunday.

After adjournment a fellowship supper was much enjoyed.

Mt. Auburn Church, Rev. E. M. Carter, pastor, joined in the recent union revival meeting at Manson, N. C. As a result of this community service, eight people joined the church and ten were baptized.

Rev. W. S. Alexander of Brooklyn, N. Y., was the preacher for the morning service at our church in Richmond, Va., on last Sunday. The Promotional Secretary was pleased to worship there and to hear Dr. Alexander preach.

Miss Edna Fulcher is holding a vacation Bible school in our church at Morrisville, N. C., this week. At the close of August Miss Fulcher will conclude her services with the Board of Christian Education after a little more than six years of faithful and efficient work.

Miss Louise Crabtree reports a successful Bible School at Damascus Christian Church recently under the leadership of Cecil Thomas, assisted by Mrs. Walter Crabtree, Mrs. T. E. Wright, and Miss Crabtree. The handwork done by the girls is being sent to the Christian Orphanage at Elon College.

After an illness of several years, Deacon Brock Jones of Holy Neck Christian Church, Holland, Va., has passed to his reward and his body was buried on last Sunday. He was a highly respected citizen of his community and is widely known as the father of Mrs. John G. Truitt, wife of our Suffolk, Va., pastor.

Rev. C. LeGrand Moody has received a call to serve a church in Connecticut while attending Yale Divinity School. Mr. and Mrs. Moody expect to leave for their new home after the second Sunday in September. Mr. Moody is now pastor at Apple's Chapel, Hine's Chapel, Mt. Bethel, and Kallam's Grove.

Miss Frances Lamb is this week aiding Rev. J. H. Warren with a vacation Bible school at Little Creek, Va. This will finish the service of Miss Lamb as a Student Summer Service worker for this year. She has done fine work, and made many friends in this area. She goes to Andover-Newton for further training this fall.

Howard's Chapel, Kallam's Grove, Mt. Bethel, and New Lebanon Churches have decided to form a pastorate. These are our churches near Bethany Consolidated School in a fine farming section of North Carolina. A committee composed of three members from each church met on Monday evening to consider plans for forming such a pastorate and to begin the search for a pastor.

Rev. B. J. Earp, pastor of our mountain mission churches, reports good vacation Bible schools and revival meetings at all three churches. At Elk Spur eleven members were added and at Rocky Ford twelve members were added to the church roll. Mr. Earp's daughter, Rachel, and Miss Clarene Andes did good work in assisting the pastor and in leading the vacation schools.

UPPER ALAMANCE TRAINING SCHOOL.

The Leadership Training School of the Upper Alamance Fellowship of Congregational and Christian Churches will be held at the Burlington Church, Sunday, October 8 through Sunday, October 15, meeting every night during the week except Saturday.

Mrs. J. L. Foster of Elon College, will teach the course on children's work; Rev. W. M. Stevens of Burlington, will lead the group on young people's work; Rev. J. F. Apple of Elon College, will teach an administration course for church and Sunday school officers; Professor Merton French of the Elon College faculty will teach a Bible course; and Miss Ruth Isabel Seabury of Boston, will discuss Christian life problems.

Classes will convene each evening from 7 to 8 o'clock, and a general service from 8 to 9 will be in charge of Miss Seabury.

Church leaders should begin making plans to attend this school.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE TO MEET.

The Advisory Committee elected by the Southern Convention "to have general supervision of the Promotional Secretary in making effective the objectives adopted by the Convention" will meet in annual session at Norlina, N. C., at ten o'clock, Tuesday, August 28. This committee is composed of "the chairmen of Boards of the Convention; the president of the Convention; and the presidents of the five Conferences constituting the Convention." The Promotional Secretary will gladly receive suggestions to be considered at this meeting. All those interested may write him at Elon College, N. C.

TORN BETWEEN THREE.

You have often heard the expression "torn between two." At the noon hour of the Valley Conference I talked with a young lady who was really torn between three. She voluntarily came to speak to me about the college. Her father and mother were dead. She had not had the privilege of going to college. She had but little money, a part of which was left by her parents. She wanted to do something for the college in appreciation of and in memory of her parents. She said, "I want to join the Anniversary Club as a memorial to my father and mother. I have that much money in the bank, but I am not sure that I should use it in this way." Then she said, "My younger sister is not too old to go to college. We do not have the money to send her." Here was an earnest, honest soul with a little money with great love for her parents, for her church, and for her sister. What should she do was the question. Finally she said, "If my father were living, I know he would give $50.00 to the college, and I am going to give it for him. I will trust for the rest." This is the kind of experiences that touch one's soul. I know that God can and will put the same generous spirit toward the college in the hearts and souls of those who are more able than this loyal girl and that some day the debts of the college will be paid and its financial affairs stabilized. May the Lord richly bless these girls and all who should be interested in our college.

OUR MISSION BOARD.

It appears from the records that on June 7, 1907, the Home Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention was organized; that on April 8, 1908, Col. J. E. West of Suffolk, Va., was elected president of the Board; that on July 30, 1918, the Home Mission Board Charter was amended so as to include the foreign mission work; that for thirty-one years Col. J. E. West has been the president of the Southern Convention Mission Board; and that since its organization the Mission Board has had no secretary except Dr. J. O. Atkinson of Elon College, N. C. These two great men, Col. J. E. West and Dr. Atkinson, have led our southern Church in missionary work for almost a third of a century. We have had no other leaders. Others have helped, but these have led. They have made for themselves a continual abiding place in the hearts of our church people.

On August 31 another fiscal year for the Mission Board will close. Near the middle of September the Board will meet to check on its progress and to plan for its future. The report for this week gives a total of $17,325.83 as receipts for this year. In order for the Board to reach its total of last year, it will be necessary for it to receive within the next week $809.03. There may be mission money in the treasury of Sunday schools, churches, or other organizations. If so, please send it to Dr. Atkinson at once. There may be friends who would like to send a special gift to help this needy world. Such a gift will add joy to the hearts of your church leaders, and will bless those who receive the service of the church at home and abroad. This is an important matter, and one that demands haste.

UPSIDE DOWN.

When your world turns upside down, what do you do? Perhaps your world does better than that and is secure under your feet, but in these days there are multitudes who have found the foundations slipping from under. The things that had seemed to be secure would no longer hold.

That is true of the Chinese girl who recently crawled over twelve dead bodies as she slipped from the hospital in search of food. She had been adopted by an American family in China, raised as an American, came to America to school, but was deported as an alien before schooling was done. The foundations of civilization are no longer secure for many millions in China, most of Europe, and multitudes around the world.

Churches and pastors sometimes feel this lack of support when a change in pastorate must be made. Those who have worked for an honest living feel it when there is no longer a job that will mean a living. Lovers feel it when one is unfaithful or when death breaks the bond. Accidents and disease snatch away the foundations on which one has rested. Misunderstandings and anger among friends turn the world of friendship upside down and spill the joy that should be in human hearts.

What do you do when such a calamity befalls you? What do your friends do at such moments? What is possible? Is there anything left that can really sustain one?

The answer to such questions depends upon the mettle of which you are made, and the will which you make. If you whine, and cry, and quit, there is no hope. If you have the will to live, the courage to keep on, and the wisdom to look for sustaining grace, you will see your world right itself and make a place for you. Of course there will be suffering. That is the kind of world we have, but there is also successful living. The best man who ever lived on earth said, "I have overcome the world." "Follow me."

No one has ever had a greater opposition and struggle than Jesus of Nazareth, and no one has ever made greater success of living. He learned how to rest back on the eternal purposes of God while the world whirled about him and trembled beneath his feet. This is the only hope for us who live in the midst of great storms and find our little world bottom side up. There is a Divine Power within reach of all human beings, a Power that is good enough and great enough to do for us all that we need. Without this sustaining Power the people of this world are destined to everlasting despair. Let its light and strength come into your heart, and darkness disappears, and you feel secure in the presence of the Eternal.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE AND OUR COLLEGE.

As we watch the thermometer climb towards the successful payment of all our college debts we may forget a very important matter.

In all of our churches there are fine young people who need college training. There are no better young people than ours. They have quality. They could be trained as efficient workers for the church.

At Elon College, N. C., we have a college that belongs to our church. It is ours, for we built it, we own it, we support it, and by our vote we elect those who run it. We can make it what we will. It is a good college. It will compare favorably with anybody's college.

On September 4, 1939, the college will begin its fiftieth session. It needs our dollars to pay its debts, but far more important, it needs our young people to train them for the church. Six hundred of them, an average of three from a church, could sit in the class rooms of our college and search for culture. Will they be there? Will we do missionary work in our college while our own young people either seek training elsewhere or fail to seek it at all? Now is the crucial hour for the answer to this. Pastors and church leaders should not consider their work done until they direct our young people to our college. Only so will our church become what it should, and can.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Many years ago some one wrote a humorous song, using the title: "Little Brown Jug." In pre-prohibition days the song was often sung with zest, and the words, "Ha, ha, ha, you and me, Little Brown Jug, how I love thee," were familiar to young and old. The little brown jug has seen its day, and the little brown bag (paper) has taken its place.

The little brown bag is being used in great quantities by the customers of the A. B. C. store in the city of Suffolk, Va. One pint and quart bottle containers are slipped into a little brown bag when purchased. This is a convenient way to take the liquor home. How customers delight to have one of these little brown bags is indicated by the firm grip on the package as they go down the street. Saturday seems to be the best day for little brown bags. Recently three drunks, all young men, passed by our residence giving visible evidence of the "kick" in the contents of the package tucked out of sight in the little brown bag. About midnight the "kick" stirs up a family disturbance in which men and women seem to share an equal part in vulgarity and disgusting profanity.

And yet there are many conscientious people who favor the habitual use of alcoholic liquors as a beverage. And there are many people who declare that drunks are rare in a community where liquor is "controlled" by dispensing under the A. B. C., or some similar system. Statistics are not always available or reliable on this point. But the facts are that any kind of intoxicating liquor will intoxicate, if used in sufficient quantities, regardless of the system under which it is sold, or the manner under which it is "controlled." It is too early to measure the full effect of the present system. Wait until a generation grows up under the freedom of youthful impulse to follow the dictates of aroused thirst. The drinking young men of one generation furnish the list and supply the ranks of the confirmed drunkards of the next generation. All moderate drinkers do not become drunkards. But some of them become addicts to a habit which they cannot break. And there is the possibility that no one can foretell who will become the unfortunate victim of alcohol poisoning. Certainly, the total abstainer will never be in personal danger, as long as he is loyal to his decision to abstain from its use in any form.

Liquor "control," so-called, is not the best road to sobriety. The weakness in any "control" system lies in the self-evident fact that the state is unable to control a package of liquor after it is delivered into the hands of the purchaser. Police surveillance and warning will not prevent that liquor from making a man drunk, when he drinks to excess, and there is no external power that can prevent excessive drinking, if the opportunity is offered, and the purchaser desires to satisfy his thirst. It is comparatively easy to set up a "control" system to dispense alcoholic liquors. What the mothers and wives need is some power to control the drinking, and the effects of liquor upon the human body and mind. That power resides only in each individual. In many cases the will has been weakened until the customer is a victim of his own thirst, and surrender is made early in the battle for soberness.

Total abstinence is the only safe way to control alcoholic liquor. It is the Bible way. It is the way of scientific research. It is the way of human experience. It is the way of reason. The human body does not need alcoholic beverage. The chief objective in making and selling liquor is to make money. It is not a charitable business. If there were no money profits in liquor the business would go into bankruptcy. If the business, as now handled by the various states, was conducted on a no-profit basis, either for the manufacturer or the state, the system would be abolished by the next legislature. The money motive appeals to tax-payers. And the large profits blind the vision of many people to the dangers lurking in the use of strong drink. The little brown bag is as dangerous as the little brown jug.

VALLEY OF VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

For the past nine years I have been attending the annual sessions of the Virginia Valley Central Conference. This conference comes in mid-summer. As a rule they have the majority of convention officials in attendance. These occasions are inspirational and helpful. I believe, however, that this year's conference was one of the best if not the best of all programs that I have had the privilege of sharing.

The conference met with the Newport Church. Rev. Mr. Schenell is pastor. The good members of the church had certainly set their house in order and were ready for the entertainment of delegates and visitors. The entertainment was efficient and enjoyable—plenty of good things to eat and good homes in which to spend the night. Many very excellent addresses on vital themes were delivered. Rev. W. T. Scott, a native North Carolinian and now pastor-at-large for Georgia and Florida, was the visiting speaker. Mr. Scott delivered three very timely and helpful addresses. His visit to the conference was eminently worthwhile. The other speakers were either from the Valley Conference or from the Southern Convention. The spirit of the conference was harmonious and progressive. It was presided over by Mr. Roy Larrick, a layman of Winchester, and he did an excellent job of it. Rev. and Mrs. J. F. Morgan of Rosemont, Va., had charge of the music. Mr. Morgan has the happy faculty of making his audience happy, optimistic, and of getting them to sing. His services were most helpful.

Our church in the Valley is constituted by a very fine constituency. All through the years they have not had a sufficient number of good pastors to serve their churches. Last year they made an effort to group their churches into pastorates with the hope of securing acceptable ministers who would live within the parish. This is a long step forward. There are great possibilities for our church in the bounds of the Valley Conference. Practically all of their present ministers are new; that is, they have come into the conference within the past three years. It is hoped that all will make good and that our church in the Valley will go forward.

There is one vital phase of the work in the Valley that ministers, officials, and the entire church should consider carefully. No Christian Church has yet been able to go forward by living within and spending what it gives on itself. The Kingdom just does not come that way. Money given for the larger program of the church reacts with strength and growth to the local field. This is difficult to understand as it is difficult to see how a little leaven hidden in three measures of meal will eventually leaven the whole lump. "Such," said the Master, "is the Kingdom of God." The leaders of the Valley Conference would do well, I think, to give thorough study and careful consideration to the support of their local churches and to the support of the larger program of the denomination of which they are a part.

It was a pleasure and a privilege to be a part of this session of the conference.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION OF NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

The Christian Missionary Association of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference will meet at Salem Chapel, Tuesday, September 19, 1939, at 10:00 A. M.

This Association is a missionary organization supported by individuals, groups, and organizations within the conference, who hold membership in the Association by virtue of the fact that they pay annual dues of $5.00 each.

There are forty-three active churches in this conference, and thirteen of these were represented at the last session of the Christian Missionary Association at Belews Creek by one or more paid memberships. As the Christian Missionary Association is the authorized agency for all the Conference Missionary and Extensive Work within the conference, it should have the full cooperation of every church within the conference. It is true that the Conference Home Mission Funds are turned over to this body, and of course, practically all of the churches contribute to Conference Missions, yet this fund is very inadequate to do the work that is already urgent for fields in need.

The purpose of the Christian Missionary Association is to supplement these funds, and if every pastor and church would feel the urge and the necessity of increasing these mission funds by securing one or more memberships for the Christian Missionary Association, the fund would become more nearly adequate to do the needed mission work within the conference. It is therefore urged and faithfully hoped that every pastor will see that his church or churches are represented at the next Christian Missionary Association session. The Burlington Church is at present carrying the burden of the load. This is not as it should be; not that we would wish the Burlington Church to do less, but that the other churches should show a like interest.

Do you want to see the work already started continue and grow; do you want to see new fields opened up and given a chance to thrive? If so, then our Home Mission work in the conference should receive our most careful attention. The Christian Missionary Association represents you in this work.

WAKEFIELD VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

The Vacation Bible School which was conducted by Rev. B. H. Watkins, pastor of the Wakefield Parish of Congregational and Christian Churches in Southampton County, was a great success. There were forty-five children enrolled and the average attendance was forty-three. These children were transported to and from the school by the pastor in his automobile at his own expense. As many of these children have no way of getting to Sunday school and no church near enough for them to walk, we felt the urge to give them the advantage of a Bible school in their own community. Brother R. C. Hines and his good wife consented for us to use a nice shady grove near their home and a small out-building on the premises, so we made it mostly an out-door affair, and did the children enjoy themselves, some for the first time in a Bible school, and some for the first time in any school!

We had four classes: Beginners, Primaries, Juniors, and Intermediates. We used four of our own students trained at Elon Summer School for this work, who outlined courses in each department. Miss Nellie Joyner, a member of the Ivor Church and a student at Southern Union College, taught the Intermediate class. The subject of this course was "Discovering God in the Beautiful." Miss Doris Watkins, member of the Wakefield Church and a Junior in high school, taught the Junior class and the subject was "What Is In Our Bible?" Miss Amy M. Stephenson, a member of Burton's Grove Church, taught the Primary class, the subject being "Our Homes." Amy is also a Junior in high school. The Beginners were taught by Miss Grace Branch of the Wakefield Church and a high school student.

This school was the most interesting school that I have ever been associated with, and the reason is this: It had a two-fold purpose—first, to give to some children the advantage of Bible teaching, and second, to give experience to some very much interested and worthy young people, who are willing to train for leadership.

At the request of the children, we are anticipating repeating the school next year.

ACTIVITIES AT THE REIDSVILLE CHURCH.

Summer and vacation time is usually a most trying interval in church life. However, this isn't exactly true in the Reidsville Christian Church. This Sunday school has held a remarkably high average—something over three hundred per Sunday; officers and teachers were almost always 100 per cent on the job. A large congregation greets the pastor every Sunday morning at eleven o'clock, and the night services, though off, are as yet fairly well attended. The mid-week prayer service is one of the most inspiring of all the services and large crowds are always on hand.

Wednesday night, August 9, the third Quarterly Conference convened. Gratifying reports were turned in by every organization of the church; and Rev. J. L. Neese, the pastor, with the Board of Deacons and Trustees, feels highly pleased.

Recently Home-Coming and Memorial services were held in which former pastors, members, and friends renewed their friendships and paid tribute to those who have gone on.

October 11, 1939, marks the 25th Anniversary of the Reidsville Church, and special services are now being planned to fittingly observe this event.

Much credit is due the young people in the Christian Endeavor for the interesting programs they put on. Each fourth Sunday night the society has full charge of the service. On August 5, these young folk, with Mrs. D. E. Mitchell and Mrs. C. J. Wright as chaperon and senior adviser, enjoyed a week-end retreat atop the Blue Ridge Mountains at Elk Spur. They found Rev. B. J. Earp, assisted by Miss Clarene Andes and Miss Rachel Earp, in the midst of a three week's revival campaign at Rocky Ford, Elk Spur and Ivy Hill Churches. Given the opportunity, each of the young people contributed his or her part in song and testimony. There was not one dull or restless moment from arrival to departure, and such a wonderful manifestation of the spirit in each heart as they witnessed the need of this phase of the work in Carroll County! Each one pledged to pray daily for a revival.

"The Hills" mean more than mere mountains to these young workers now that they have actually visited the tomb of "Victoria of the Hills;" sung "Amazing Grace" for Victoria's father, Wash Edwards; and joined hands for prayer in the services with the mountain people.

"God plans all perfect combinations."

Elon College Golden Anniversary

FOUNDERS' DAY.

It is the custom of the average college to recognize the day on which it was founded and to observe the day with fitting ceremonies. Elon College has not taken recognition of this historic occasion within the last eight years. I am not sure about the preceding years.

As the beginning of our fiftieth anniversary celebration, September 14 is to be observed as Founders' Day. As a definite part of the ceremony, members of the original faculty will be honored. It is certainly an evidence of divine favor that all members of the original faculty except its president and founder, Dr. W. S. Long, are living. We are grateful and are planning on this, the opening day of our celebration, to express this gratitude.

An interesting program is in the process of formation. The Honorable Clyde R. Hoey, Governor of North Carolina, is to open the program of celebration at eleven o'clock with an address concerning the contribution of the Church to the cause of education. The Governor is one of the most popular speakers on the American platform. He is blessed with an unusual faculty for administrative affairs and expresses his convictions with grace and dignity. We are most fortunate in having the Governor to open this historic program.

Col. Julius H. Harden of Burlington, N. C., a member of the Provisional Board appointed by the Convention to select a site for the college and a member of the original Board of Trustees, is to speak for the Provisional Committee. He is the only surviving member. Col. E. E. Holland, a member of the original Board of Trustees of the college and the only one living who has served continuously since its founding has been invited to speak representing the original board. It is fearful that Colonel's health will not permit him to render this service. Dr. E. L. Moffitt, a member of the original faculty of the college and for six years President of the College, is to speak representing the faculty. There will be other speakers on the afternoon program.

At the evening hour a banquet in honor of the original faculty will be held. Dr. W. H. Boone, President of the Board of Trustees, will preside. Greetings will be brought by the writer. Music for all occasions will be furnished by the Music Department of the college.

This is not only an invitation but an urgent request for all who were members of the student body or faculty in those early years and all who were members of the Christian Church at the time of the founding of the college to be present. Of course we invite and urge equally all who ever attended Elon College at any time and for any length of time, all who are members of the church at present, and all who possibly can to attend the services. The college will arrange lunch for the occasion.

The full program will be put in definite shape and will be printed later.

COLLEGE MAIL.

The following encouraging notes were found in the college mail on August 1:

SUFFOLK CHRISTIAN CHURCH BULLETIN.

John Galloway Truitt, Minister.

Fifth Sunday's offerings in Sunday school are counted for Elon College; and are credited on our regular Conference Apportionment; in that way all Sunday schools have a share in making a bigger and better church college.

Elon College is putting on a Golden Anniversary Campaign this college year, and is seeking 3,000 persons who will give one dollar for each year of the college's history, or namely, $50.00. Elon has been doing a mighty fine piece of work for the Southern Convention for fifty years. And it is hoped that many in our church will be glad to help make her present campaign to clear herself of all indebtedness a good success. The pastor and his wife, and several other members have already agreed to pay $50.00 each by May 1, 1940. Suffolk has always stood by the college, and will do so this time. By the constituent's help Elon is making a great and good place for herself. Dr. L. E. Smith is doing a most commendable work for the church and the college as president of Elon. Sunday school classes are being asked to contribute, wherever possible, one Fifty Dollar Membership to the Golden Anniversary Club. Elon will be in our plans for the year. Count on us to do our best.

The following letter speaks for itself:

Harrisonburg, Va.,
July 31, 1939.

Dr. L. E. Smith,
Elon College, N. C.
Dear Sir:

It is indeed a pleasure to send you an inclosed check for four dollars and fifty-eight cents ($4.58) from the Antioch Sunday school at Harrisonburg, Va.

I cannot tell you how much joy it is to me to send you this check since I have had the pleasure of seeing the college. I was very much impressed with my visit and will do all I can for the support of Elon.
Yours truly,
HERMAN HUNLEY.

FOR THE CHILDREN

THE LITTLE GIRL WHO HAD NO PENNY.

WHEN THEY CAME HOME.

Two little boys sat on the fence and watched the big moving van back up to the porch. They saw the big movers lift heavy trunks on their strong backs. They were two unhappy little boys, for all they could say was, "I don't like . . ."

"I don't like this street," grumbled Bobby.

"I don't like this house," grumbled Jack.

Father came up the walk with a load of books from the car, and he heard what Jack said. "Of course, it doesn't look like home. It isn't home yet." Both boys looked up in surprise. "It takes a lot of work to make a home. Home is where people who love each other work and play together. Everybody helps at home. Want to carry books?" he asked.

So the two little boys walked behind the big moving van, and they carried their loads just as willingly.

"But it really isn't like home. There aren't any neighbors," Jack said sadly, when father stopped a minute to rest. Father looked up and down the street. He saw the pretty white cottage next door, and the red brick house across the street, where two trieyeles waited on the porch. "I am quite sure there are neighbors. Sometimes you have to be a neighbor first, you know."

Bobby and Jack looked up and down the lonesome street. No one was in sight. Then the screen door of the little white cottage opened slowly. They watched to see what would happen, for it seemed to be opening by itself. They saw why when a little brown dog dashed out the door dragging his leash after him, and then an excited lady came running out shouting and slapping her hands.

"Quick, Jack! You head him off, and I'll catch him," shouted Bobby.

Of course, two nimble-footed little boys were too smart for the little brown dog, and in no time at all they were carrying him back to his home.

"Thank you, thank you," she cried. "I wouldn't have had him run away for anything for my little granddaughter loves him so. You are moving into the brown house, aren't you? Please tell your mother, I'm coming over to see her when she is ready for company."

Eagerly the two boys ran home to report the news. "She talked just like Mrs. West next door at the old home." Jack explained when he had told the story.

"It is a little bit like home," Jack said slowly.

"Of course," mother laughed gayly. "Now help me with these blankets and you'll each have a bed to sleep in tonight." So they went to work willingly, for it was fun to be making a home.

When the long day was over, and the movers had carried in the last load of boxes, mother sat down wearily. "We'll get supper," offered father. "Come on, boys, we can make toast."

Bobby pointed out the window excitedly. Across the way the lady in the white cottage was carrying something smoking hot in a big kettle. Jack ran to open the door.

A LIVING SACRIFICE.

One heart my Savior to adore;
One tongue to praise Him more and more;
Two eyes to see His glory fair;
Two lips to speak to Him in prayer;
Two ears to hear His holy will;
Two hands His service to fulfill;
Two feet to tread His path to heaven;
And all to Him are freely given.

—Signposts on Life's Way.

"I knew you must be tired," she said, "and I brought over some soup for your supper. No, I'll not stay to talk now. I'll be back tomorrow. Let me know if I can help," and off she went leaving the delicious soup on the table.

Father found dishes while the boys hunted spoons. They sat down at their old places at the old table in the new dining room. They heard the old clock ticking outside in the new hall.

"Just a minute," said mother. And from a packing box she brought the party candlesticks and gay red candles. Father lighted them. Then he bowed his head while he gave thanks to the Heavenly Father in the old familiar words the boys knew so well.

Jack looked across the table after the amen. "It's just like home," he said to his brother. Bobby listened to the ticking clock. He watched the candlelight on his mother's face.

"It is home," he said happily. "I'm so glad we came."—Selected.

"God knows us through and through. Not the most secret thought, which we most hide from ourselves, is hidden from Him."

It was the second Sunday that Rachel had no offering for Bible school, and if it had not been that she loved her school and her teacher so dearly she would have stayed at home. "They know I always bring an offering if I can," she said.

Somehow, though, the other children had forgotten that, and she heard Julia whisper, "Rachel hasn't even a penny, but I have five cents."

"So have I," said Tom. "If I couldn't bring any money I would not come to Bible school."

Perhaps, the teacher heard what they said, for when she began to talk, she told about some of the helpers of Jesus who had no money to give, but who gave something much better—help to those in trouble, sight to blind eyes, hearing to ears that were deaf, healing to the sick, and, best of all, the precious story of Jesus to everybody who would listen.

"When I came in this morning, I found that a little girl had put the chairs in a circle for me," she said. "Then this same little girl took care of the little new girl, and she sang every song and helped in everything that we said and did. We must give our pennies and nickels when we can to send God's message to others, but we can give Him other gifts more precious to Him."—The Sunbeam.

HOME.

A prize which was offered by a London paper recently for the best definition of home brought about five thousand answers. Among the best were the following:

A world of strife shut out, a world of love shut in.

Home is the blossom of which heaven is the fruit.

The only spot on earth where the faults and failures of fallen humanity are hidden under the sweet mantle of charity.

The father's kingdom, the children's paradise, the mother's world.

Where you are treated best and grumble most.

A little hollow scooped out of the windy hill of the world, where we can be shielded from its cares and annoyances.

"A man making application for membership in an active church, being asked what he could do said, 'Well, I am good on objections. If any thing is proposed I can object to it.' We have too many of that kind already."

III. MUSIC AS AN ART.

[The excerpts herewith presented are from the third of a series of five lectures that the late lamented Dr. W. W. Staley delivered at the Elon Chautauqua, July, 1924, on the general topic, "The Music World." We are sure "Christian Sun" readers will profit by reading what is herewith offered under the sub-title given above. J. O. A.]

The fine arts, architecture, sculpture, painting, poetry, and music are studies for mankind. The first three are productions out of nature of material already in existence and for the eye; but music and poetry are creations out of the soul of man. All of these arts express beauty and appeal to the aesthetic in man. Poetry expresses beautiful, rhythmical thoughts and feelings in words; music expresses them in harmonious sounds. Music is the finest of the fine arts. Beauty in expression reaches its highest point in sweet sounds. It is the most universal art. More people can play or sing than can write poetry. It appeals to the widest and deepest emotions in mankind. Some one has said that "the father of poetry is music, the father of music is rhythm and the father of rhythm is God." It is the art of expressing the divine in man.

Man is a rhythmic being, born into a rhythmic world, and is at his best when singing God's praise. No doubt the Greeks were the first to bring music up to a fine art. They were the first, so far as known, to use a musical scale similar to the scale in use at the present time. The Greeks were really the first to develop all the fine arts, and modern seekers after the beginnings of this art of arts naturally turn to the Greeks. In this search are found a few hymns to their gods, which show that this art has always been a religious art. This seems to prove that religion is inherent in human nature and finds its natural outlet in music. It may be said, therefore, that music is the religious art. Music as an art is universal, and this accounts for the hundreds of musical instruments and songs of all nations and all generations. Sculpture undertakes to carve out of Parian marble a perfect human form. Its expression is physical. Painting seeks to reproduce beauty already in existence in landscape, sunsets, and skies. Architecture creates forms out of material already existing; but poetry and music, twin sisters, go into the realm of the unseen and create new beauties out of the mental and spiritual world.

Music, like all other arts, has had its misuse and reverses; but, like truth, "when crushed to earth, it rises again." During the fourth century, the church passed through a trying period during the short reign of Julian the apostate. By his own testimony, he was a Christian up to his twentieth year, though he did not proclaim himself a votary of the ancient gods until he was emperor, when he was known as the "Apostate." He attempted to introduce pagan ritual into the Christian Church. This retarded church music. The philosophy of his day was not the best, even of Greek philosophy, and degraded Greek worship.

The dangers which so many feel for the church at the present time is only a repetition of past history. Julian's reign was brief (only two years—361-363), but when Ambrose became Bishop of Milan, in 374, he set to work to sift out the irreligious music which had crept into the church, and to defend the church against the introduction of Arian worship, proposed by Empress Justina. It will be so again. The church is measured by her music as well as by her faith. This is the art that reveals the heart of the church. Heresy and schism, and the inroads of world-powers, endanger the church, but she will recover herself again and sing the songs of Zion, with pure music and a pure heart. It was through Ambrose that Augustine was brought back from departure from orthodox faith, and largely through the power of music. While the church has cultivated music, music has cultivated the church. Where is the heart of music in the cities? In the churches! Who are the most cultivated people? Those who have musical influence. Music is the art that refines society, cultivates taste, arouses the holiest emotions in the soul, and unites all creeds in praise. A common hymn book does more to unite believers than verbal arguments. All creeds unite in praise when they sing the same songs. Did not some one write: "Let me write the songs of a nation, and I care not who makes her laws?" One might say, "Let me write the songs of the church, and I care not who writes her creeds."

NEWS FROM MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

By MRS. W. M. JAY.

FRANKLIN.

Mrs. E. Phillip Jones is the newly elected District Superintendent of the Nausemond-Franklin-Gates District. She reports two new woman's societies and a general increase in enthusiasm and interest. The treasurer, Mrs. E. R. Bryant, reports the financial reports on time and as good as usual. This district always measures up well in all the points and we may expect great things under the guidance of Mrs. Jones' efficient leadership.

PORTSMOUTH.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the First Christian Church held its annual public meeting on Wednesday evening, July 26, at the church. The theme for the evening was "A Re-Interpretation of Missions." The meeting opened with a song service, after which Mrs. M. L. Parker, Superintendent of Devotional Life, read a portion of the 41st chapter of Isaiah and led in prayer, closing with the Lord's Prayer in unison. James Wesley Parker, violinist, with Miss Imogene Kitts as accompanist, rendered several selections. Mrs. T. A. Cross read the poem "Nobody Told Me of Jesus." Two short talks were given—"Missionary Milestones" by Miss Caroline Gort and "A Re-Interpretation of Missions" by Mrs. C. F. Rudd. The hymn, "O Master Let Me Walk With Thee" was sung. After a very impressive sketch "How Much?" by five ladies, an offering, to be applied to the society's missionary apportionment, was received. The meeting closed with singing "Give of Your Best to the Master," and the Mizpah Benediction.

Mrs. R. F. Edwards is the president of this splendid society and Mrs. M. K. Smith is the secretary.

OUR SEMINARIES AND THE STUDY OF MISSIONS.

By RODERICK SCOTT.

The Church is the center of the Christian enterprise.

A church has never come out of a college or hospital, but many a hospital or college has come from a church.

It is therefore natural that a returning missionary should look critically at the church's leadership.

And a splendid leadership, by and large, this missionary finds it to be. It is wonderful that with the increasing burdens thrown upon the ministry as men begin to see that Christianity is not a private concern or one sociological factor among many but a movement with a responsibility for civilization which must both answer for its sins of omission or transgression and work out the present problems of society.

Wonderful, I say, that so many of our best youth are willing to enter it, and so many sons of ministers and missionaries.

A splendid group I find them, I repeat, by and large; but the group seems to me to be defective at one point—its missionary perspective. I do not mean that the young ministers do not believe in missions; I mean that their perspective and the perspective of their training schools is at fault.

I mean that they do not understand missions. They think that missions is something that belongs to missionaries, not to other Christians. They are not conscious of the world Christian community.

The tendency of the minister is to think of missions as something that belongs to a program, to be cared for on Friday or on the third Sunday in Lent, or by the missionary committee—not as something inherent in the Christian attitude.

The world-mission is inherent in the very nature of Christianity, declared the Madras Findings.—Missionary Herald.

THE STORY OF A LOG CHURCH.

Back of all the Duke benefactions, those of Washington Duke, Benjamin N. Duke and James B. Duke, and their loyalties to the Methodist Church stood a little log meeting house, 30 by 35 feet, covered with rough boards. Wooden shutters took the place of glass windows and instead of a stove there was a huge fireplace in one side of the church to warm it in winter. This church was erected in 1840 and named Hebron.

The man who gave the land and built the house was William J. Duke, at that time thirty-seven years of age, and who later in life came to be called "Square" Duke by joining his title as magistrate with his upright dealings with his fellowmen. He was also known in later years as "Uncle Billy of the Old Ship" on account of his delight in singing "The Old Ship of Zion."

"Uncle Billy of the Old Ship" and the builder of Hebron Church was seventeen years the senior of his brother, Washington Duke, who was twenty years of age when this church was built. But Hebron became the house of worship for him and his sons, Benjamin and Bunchanan, till they moved to Durham in 1873, when Ben was eighteen and Buck sixteen years of age.

In this little log Methodist Church where the circuit rider came and preached and where Washington Duke sat in the "amen" corner and "lifted" the tunes, these two boys of his attended church through the impressionable years of their lives and got the anointing which has made them Methodism's and the world's greatest benefactors.

Brawny arms of plain yeomen put the logs in place for the first church ninety-nine years ago. But now building stones, equal if not superior to the best in Solomon's Temple, have gone into a perfect Gothic structure fashioned by an architect of renown, and every part of the structure reflects credit upon the builder.

But will the glory of this latter house surpass in glory that of the former house, is a question that both old and young might ask.—N. C. Christian Advocate.

WHAT DO YOU SEE?

When Leonardo de Vinci had completed his painting of the Last Supper, so the story runs, he called two monks to view it. They at once began admiring the beautiful colorings of the tablecloth. Turning to the monks he said in effect, "I brought you to look upon the face of the Master, and you see only the cloth which I had painted upon the table."

The poet sings:

"Two men look out through prison bars—

The one saw mud—the other saw stars."

Somewhere between the table and the Master, between the mud at our feet and the stars beyond our reach, the measure of our appreciation and utilization of life is found.

In other days when New York City was a far off and largely unknown metropolis to the inhabitants of the "provinces," as small town denizens were called by the sophisticated city dwellers, some men from the provinces who made an occasional trip to New York would return to tell of the wickedness of this modern Sodom. They could see only the mud. Other men and women would return and talk of museums, picture galleries, libraries and great preachers and actors. They saw the stars.

What one is able to see and appreciate is the measure of the man. What measure of yourself do you get by such a measuring rod?—N. C. Christian Advocate.

During the past year Dr. Wynn C. Fairfield has been aiding the Church Committee for China Relief. He is now back at his old post in Boston as the secretary for Eastern Asia in the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Under the leadership of Dr. Fairfield, the Church Committee for China Relief received $390,299.00. The China Relief Committee continues its work for another year with, Mr. Fred Atkins Moore as the new director.

How Kola! ("Hello, friend" in Sioux.) The white man of 1862 would not be so greeted, for the cheated, provoked Sioux massacred some seven hundred whites in Minnesota that year. But today the Sioux nation of 33,000 is Christian and there are twenty-six Sioux Congregational Churches.

NEWS OF INTEREST.

The young people of the Valley of Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship met last Wednesday for a picnic at Verbena Park. We expect to have news later of business transacted and fellowship enjoyed.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, extension worker in Florida and Georgia, returns to her work next week after a delightful vacation. She has had a wonderful trip to New York and the World's Fair, as well as a few days of rest at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. F. Coghill of Henderson, N. C.

Each year the Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship gets out a "Program Guide," which goes to each local group to help them in their programs. It contains bibliographies of materials and general suggestions, as well as specific "things to be done" each month during the year. The 1939-1940 issue is just "off the press." The Board of Christian Education, Elon College, N. C., has some extra copies and will be glad to send you a copy upon request.

All young people of the Eastern North Carolina Conference are asked to come to United Church, Raleigh, on Saturday of next week, September 2, for the first fall rally of that group. Come for the inspiration you will receive, for the discussions in which you may share, and for the fellowship you will enjoy during the recreation period and at the picnic supper.

Recently a new young people's society was organized at Hope Mills, N. C., with the following officers: Helen Johnson, president; Doris Smith, vice-president; Jimmy Brown, secretary-treasurer. This group meets every Thursday night, with about twelve members present. Rev. Emmanuel Hedgebeth has been serving this new church at Hope Mills during the summer.

Are you interested in knowing more of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship world friendship project in China? Material is being collected for use in local churches; articles will appear in THE CHRISTIAN SUN; and suggestions for programs are being worked out. Remember when planning your fall program to save some place for consideration of this. We are interested in hearing that Miss Luey Eldredge went to Tientsin on her recent trip abroad and are hoping to learn more about her visit there.

Western North Carolina young people are to meet on the afternoon of September 10 at Pleasant Ridge Christian Church, near Ramseur. There is no conference organization for young people in Western North Carolina, and it is hoped that such an organization will be one of the results of this meeting. All young people—and those interested in young people's work—are urged to be "among those present." Mr. and Mrs. Sybrant Pell of Asheboro are in charge of arranging a program, which will appear in detail next week in this paper.

The fall is a good time for a retreat of the officers of a local or Conference group, in order that they may plan

OUR ATTITUDE TOWARD WORK AND WORKERS.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR SEPTEMBER 3, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Eccl. 5: 18-20;

Jas. 5: 1-4; Col. 4: 1.

Daily Readings—

Monday—Industry and Injustice—Exodus 5: 10-19.

Tuesday—Steward and Servants—Luke 12: 42-48.

Wednesday—Work and Wages—Luke 10: 1-7.

Thursday—Earning and Eating—II Thess. 3: 10-12.

Friday—Laborers and Livelihood—Matt. 20: 1-16.

Saturday—Service and Support—Acts 20: 32-35.

There is a dignity to honest work which we as Christians should appreciate. To feed, clothe, and shelter our bodies is an essential responsibility.

We ought to recognize the rights of labor. Workers should be assured of adequate wages and fair hours, of safe and comfortable working conditions, of a high degree of security against unemployment, of fair provision for old age. These rights should be obtained for all groups and classes of workers.

We should sympathize with the struggles of organized labor to gain its rights. We may not approve some of the methods employed by some branches of labor, but our disapproval here should not make us unsympathetic with the great purposes which are stirring labor to action. We should oppose everything in our public life that tends to keep labor from gaining its rights. We ought to give our support to every fair and right measure that aims to improve the lot of the workers.

For Discussion—

1. What are the problems facing labor today? How may these be overcome?
2. Are the methods sought by labor unions "fair for all" methods?
3. Study and discuss the labor situation in your county and state.
4. What is our national government doing to bring about relations between the laborer and his employer?

Suggested Hymns—

"The Doxology."

"Break Thou the Bread of Life."

"O Master Let Me Walk With Thee."

UZZIAH: A KING WHO FORGOT GOD.

LESSON IX—AUGUST 27, 1939.

GOLDEN TEXT: Everyone that exalteth himself shall be humbled; but he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.—Luke 18: 14.

LESSON: II Chronicles 26.

We make a mistake if we approach these lessons about these kings and leaders of early Israel as simply stuffy stories of some "old guys" who lived long ago, and who had nothing in common with us. They are stories of men who were exactly like us, with the same strength and weakness, the same temptations, the same fears, the same hopes, the same successes and failures, the same problems. And in the stories of their lives we can read the secret of their successes and their failures. Here are drawn out in living letters the abiding moral principles and ethical ideals and the spiritual experiences that are the common property of the human race. They are full of human interest for those who read with a discerning mind and a responsive heart.

A Goodly Heritage.

Uzziah, or Azariah as he is sometimes called, had a goodly heritage, not so much because his father left him a kingdom as because he left him a good example and a good name. His father, Amaziah, had lived a godly life and he had left his son a good name. The word of God itself says that a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches. Happy is that young man or young woman, whose father or mother bequeaths to him a good name, a wholesome influence. And happy is that young person who realizes that thus he or she has received a good stewardship, and tries to keep faith with those who gave him a good name.

A Good Adviser.

Uzziah also had a friendly and capable and dependable adviser. There was a man named Zechariah who "was skilled in seeing God" or "who had understanding in the vision of God." Uzziah turned again and again to this man for advice, and as long as he lived he followed this man's counsel. Happy is the man or woman who has trusted counselors to whom he can turn, knowing that they will tell him the best thing to do because they are able to interpret the mind and will of God.

An Able King.

Uzziah was an able and energetic king. First of all he made war against the enemies of Judah and brought them to terms advantageous to the best interests of his country. He fortified Jerusalem itself so that it would be able to defend itself against the enemies who periodically came against it. He built fortifications in the pasture regions to the South to which his people could go in time of invasion by the wandering bands of marauders. He had wells or cisterns dug, so that there would be a plentiful supply of water both for the people and the flocks. And he equipped his soldiers with the latest equipment for fighting, and introduced modern equipment as a part of the defenses of Jerusalem. In a word, he brought the army of his nation up to a high standard, and equipped it with first-class fighting equipment. His fame spread far and wide. The writer of Chronicles intimates that as long as he sought Jehovah, God made him to prosper.

A Wholesome Hobby.

The king had a wholesome hobby. He loved farming, agriculture, the country. One of the joys of his life was his flocks and herds and his vineyards. Of course, he was able to gratify his love for these things. Happy is the man who has a wholesome hobby, one that enriches his life and develops another side of his nature. Everyone should have some avocation as well as a vocation. But hobbies and avocations should not side-track one from the main business of life.

A Man Spoiled By Success.

"But when he was strong, his heart was lifted up so that he did corruptly, and he trespassed against Jehovah his God." Like many a man before and since his day, Uzziah could not stand prosperity and success. When he started out he was humble and obedient. But as he grew in riches and power he became self-sufficient, head-strong, proud, and disobedient. Success is dangerous. Wealth creates perils. Material abundance dulls and often deadens spiritual sensitiveness. Advancement means new temptations. Unlike Paul, many men and women do not "know how to abound." Many a man who was humble and sympathetic and human when he was poor or in moderate circumstances becomes proud and callous when he becomes well-to-do. And many a man who was faithful in attendance at Sunday school or church when he was starting out in life loses his interest when he becomes wealthy or successful. The story of Uzziah's life is the story of many a man who forgot God.

An Old Issue Brought Up to Date.

When Uzziah went into the temple to burn incense and to offer sacrifice, he was simply dramatizing an old, old issue, which still is packed with dynamite in our modern world. It was a case of the "state" usurping the power of the "Church." As king, Uzziah claimed for himself supreme authority. He exalted himself above the spiritual authorities. He was, in a sense, trying to establish a totalitarian state. Talk about the Bible being an old-fashioned, out-of-date book! The issue which Uzziah raised is one of the "hot spots" in our modern world. Niemoller is languishing in a concentration camp at this moment, because he dared to assert that there were areas in a man's life over which the state had not final authority. There is a wide-spread effort on the part of some groups to define what the Church shall do, what it shall preach, what parts of the Bible it shall teach or believe. The issue of religious liberty is a live issue. The Church is not to interfere in politics, but the Church is to be absolutely supreme in matters pertaining to God, to moral conduct, and to worship. And, as has been stated recently, when men lose religious liberty it is only a short time until they lose all political liberty.

The Hidden Made Known.

When the priests courageously dared to rebuke and restrain the king in his presumptuous act, he became angry; he was, as the record states, "wroth." And "leprosy broke forth in his forehead before the priests." What had been hidden heretofore now stood clearly revealed. There was the leprosy of sin—of pride and arrogance and vanity and self-will—in his heart before it appeared on his head. Sooner or later secret sin makes itself known to all the world.

"Force will only bring new evils in its train. Even now the doctrinaires of a strong, stern government are beginning to tempt you as you step forth from the serenity of this sheltered life. Sirens will lure you to take their panaceas, the soft soothing syrup of economic security. The Fascists will hail you, the Communists will beguile you—both tyrants! But hold fast to this your heritage, the self-respect of an American citizen free born, unshackled by the old oppressors in their new name."

MONDAY.

"IN CASE OF DARKNESS."

"Who is among you that seareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his servant, that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? Let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God."—Isa. 50:10.

There are countless Christians who love and fear the Lord, and who obey Him implicitly, yet, because of some great sorrow or disaster, or loss of health, they walk in darkness with no light to guide them. In such times Satan seeks to enter in, and make you doubt God.

God has not left us without instructions in such cases. That instruction is: trust in Him and be steadfast in faith. Rely upon His promises as firmly as a house built on a rock.

Prayer—Our Father, flood our souls with Thy light. In our dark times when we cannot see may we feel Thy bond, know Thy promises, and wait patiently on Thee. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"SEEKING ESSENTIALS."

"Seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matt. 6:33.

Man is essentially a seeker. Jesus encouraged that. But He says that of all things to be sought, spiritual good is first.

The gravest error of man today, we think, is confusing essentials with non-essentials. The most vital things to us are the things within us, faith, spirit, understanding, attitudes. The Kingdom of God is the reign of God in these things. Therefore, our business is, first, the establishment of that kingdom in our inner man. To do so means to establish righteousness, for righteousness is the kingdom; of peace, for peace is the kingdom; of joy, for true joy is the kingdom.

These and their kindred are the kingdom.

Prayer—Father, Thou hast told us that they that seek shall find. Blessed assurance! Cause us to hunger after righteousness, till Thy spirit and Thy image are established within us. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"A LOCKED LORD."

"The angel of the Lord descended from heaven and . . . and rolled back the stone from the door."—Matt. 28:2.

We are told that in a village church in Mexico, there is a strange wooden image of Christ. Its lips are closed tight by a huge iron lock. It is said that they who do not want some secret of theirs disclosed come and worship this image.

To a great many people Jesus is a "locked Lord." They believe in Him with a sort of inner faith, but to live in Him is a vague sort of thing and heaven is ethereal. They go to church but little, they pray less, and they read the Bible still less. Jesus is a sort of locked blessing. How is He to you, real, vital and essential, or vague?

Prayer—O Lord, forgive us of our half-heartedness. We would give ourselves completely to Thee. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"BASIC LIVING."

"And this is life."—John 17:3.

It has been said that life is a consciousness of "Do's" and "Don'ts." In a way, yes, but life is more than that.

What life is in its immediate exigency and aspect, in terms of "Do's" and "Don'ts," is but a shallow observation. Beneath the rules that circumscribe us is the divine call to know God, to know His life and to know what our duty is in the making of His life a reality is all. Therefore, we must learn to find God basically in life. If we fail we are thrown upon our own resources, if we may put it that way, and when we are thrown upon our own resources, life's Gethsemanes overwhelm us and becomes terrible.

Take Jesus as a guide, and all things will work together for good.

Prayer—Our Father, help us to live so near Thee that the petty concerns of life will not phase us, for we will still be trusting Thee. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"IF I COULD BE SURE."

"Make thy calling and election sure."—II Peter 1:10.

We are told of a young couple who think they must get married. They are young and temperamental. They are poor and ambitious. They say "If we can only be sure that it is true love we have for one another, we will make a go of it."

So it is with all experiences. If we can only be sure. Choose ye this day Christ, whom to choose is the All Wise Guide, who has promised that in Him there is surety. "He doeth all things well to them that love and serve Him."

Prayer—Our Father, have mercy upon us, forgive us of our weak and faltering trust. Abide in us now and forever. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"BY GOD'S SPIRIT."

"Who hath despised the day of small things."—Zech. 4:10.

"Do not despise the day of small things," we often hear it said. God is in small things as much as in the greater ones. The reflection of the sun is in the dewdrop as well as in the lake. "It is not by might nor by power, but by God's Spirit."

OUR PREACHER FOR THIS WEEK IS
REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL, D. D.,
DURHAM, N. C.

TO ASSURANCE THROUGH PRAYER.

Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God (Philippians 4:6).

The greatest burden which humanity bears today is the burden of anxiety. It ranges all the way from the little concerns of one's personal life to dread of the consequences of another world war. How many people do you know who are not harassed by worry? Jesus made the avoidance of anxiety and worry one of the major themes of the Sermon on the Mount. The Bible is everywhere enjoining a faith that will lift the heart above anxious fear and worry, Christians are far from being free from it.

Sometimes we are annoyed by the injunction, "Do not worry." None of us deliberately desires to worry. We feel as if there is no way whereby we may avoid worrying. We just cannot help it. We, being what we are, and the circumstances of life being what they are, worry is inevitable. Surely if there is a way to avoid worry all of us ought to welcome it.

St. Paul, in our text, suggests the fact which we so often overlook. The issue is not limited to what we are and to the circumstances in which we are involved. There is a third factor which has a bearing on the problem. That third factor is God, who is able to change both us and the circumstances which concern us. Therefore God offers our only hope of deliverance from such distress.

Prayer, says Paul, is the answer to our worried minds and anxious hearts. Let us note also that this prayer is to include thanksgiving for what we have received as well as requests for the things which we desire. Paul had in mind prayer which deals with the practical realities of life. We have rebelled, and rightly so, against prayer which is concerned only with material things. But often we have gone so far to the other extreme that our praying does not bring us to grips with the material realities which distress us."

Jesus never commanded us not to pray for the necessities of life. He only warned us against letting material things get into first place. And that is what generally has happened when worry gets the best of us. We are prone to attach too much importance to the things which we fear we may lose. When Jesus said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you," he gave us the clue to all happy living.

With these thoughts in our minds, let us seek the basis upon which we may hope for deliverance from worry through prayer. We who are here this morning believe in God, or we would not be here in church on Sunday morning. We believe in God as he was revealed in and by Jesus Christ. If we then believe in God as Jesus believed in him, there are three facts which we must ever remember:

1. If there is such a God as Jesus revealed, then we can come into direct contact with him through prayer. That was the basic assumption upon which Jesus built his life. It is the assumption upon which all Christian living must be based. The uniqueness of the Christian life lies not in the revealing of what life ought to be so much as it does in bringing us into contact with the God who alone can enable us to be what we ought to be.

2. If God is as Jesus revealed him to be, then we can understand his purpose and know his will. Jesus taught that God is an intimately personal spirit; and that God's spirit and our spirits are kindred. There is a universal language of the spirit, or rather there is a medium of communication between spirits that is above and independent of a common language. No language is needed to interpret the kindly intent of a loving smile or the beneficence of a hand outstretched toward the needy. Just so the praying spirit can learn the will of a loving Heavenly Father.

3. If God is the Supreme Wisdom and the Infinite Love then he is able to show us what is best and to keep us against that which would harm our spirits, if we will but yield ourselves to his leading. In the same chapter from which our text is taken, Paul said: "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content. I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound: Everywhere and in all things I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need." It is only when through prayer we have come to some such faith that we shall be lifted above the cares that would distress us.

FAMILY ALTAR.

A friend of India said to Stanley Jones once, "What a wonderful sunset, especially for such a small place." Your place may be small but it is adequate for the full glory of God. Your talent may be limited, but it is enough to express a complete service for Him.

Prayer—Our Father, as we pray this day awaken our senses to Thy presence in things all around us that we see. This we ask for Jesus sake. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"THE HEAVENS AND A NOOK."

"He looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God."—Acts 8:58.

L. L. Looftbourow, in the "Upper Room," gives us a word picture of his "Nook" in Panama City. He says "We live on a little one-way street, only one block long, having but eight buildings. But this street is named for the world's greatest spirit—Saint Paul. Two of the buildings are churches and two of them are parsonages. At night we see the North Star at one end of the street, and the Southern Cross at the other"—so small a nook, but so heavenly the associations.

Such is every little place which stands for God and His Salvation; enough to cheer all weary workers.

Prayer—Our Father, we commit our souls unto Thee. Deliver us from sin and from forgetting Thee. Send forth Thy Spirit to help us in every day living. Amen.

"Friendship sealed by companionship in sin will not last long. It is not worth having. It deserves not to be known by that noble name. Friends that are glued together by the slime of their lusts will be torn asunder soon; and these foul exudations that seem now to bind them into one will become the fuel to a flame of mutual hate when first a spark of disagreement falls. They will bite and devour one another. The degree of their privacy to each other's wickedness will be the measure of their dislike and distrust."

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Our hearts were made sad at the Christian Orphanage last week when we received a wire informing us that Mr. B. D. Jones of near Holland, Va., had passed to his reward. Mr. Jones was elected a member of the Board of Trustees of the Christian Orphanage by the Southern Convention in the year 1916. He has been a member continuously since that time.

He was a faithful member and attended the meetings of the Board, seldom missing a meeting, until his health failed a few years ago. He was loved by every child in the Christian Orphanage family.

The Board always appreciated his wise counsel and good advice in solving their problems. He was a warm friend of the orphanage and gave it his liberal support. His visits to the orphanage were a benediction to us. He was an inspiration to all.

The orphanage family will miss his visits. The Board of Trustees will have the loss of his wise counsel. The writer feels that he has lost one of the best and warmest friends he ever had. He was a friend and Christian gentleman.

WE STUDY.

We study how to make money, how to get a new car, how to go for a long vacation, and for many other things. But what about study concerning how to do successful work for the Church we call Christian? A constant stream of books and magazines come from the press. But do you read them?

During the summer our Church plans for the children to have Children's Day, Vacation Bible School, etc. Young people and adults are offered camps and conferences. Fellowship meetings and conventions. These are planned so that all our people can study concerning our united work and become better Christian leaders.

"We will never get over these procrastinations, neither in time nor eternity. If we are fortunate enough to get to heaven we will not have the capacity for enjoyment we would have had if we had started early in life. It is folly for anyone to think that a man converted at the eleventh hour will be as high and happy in the kingdom of God as the man who gave fifty years of unstinted toil and sacrificed his very life on the altars of God!"

In Memoriam

MARSHALL.

E. W. Marshall was born near Walnut Cove, N. C., on September 10, 1871, and died in the same home on August 14, 1939. He was afflicted with rheumatism in early manhood and went on crutches for forty-seven years. His last illness lasted only a few days.

He professed faith in Christ and united with Salem Chapel Christian Church when a boy, and to his church he remained true and loyal. He was always bright and cheerful and was a great inspiration to his friends.

Surviving him are two sisters, several other relatives, and a great host of friends. Funeral services were held from the home and Salem Chapel Church, conducted by his pastor (the writer), and Rev. Sidney Reid of the Baptist Church. Burial was in the nearby cemetery in the presence of a large number of friends, surrounded by a beautiful array of flowers.

G. H. VEAZEY.

FULTON.

Rev. Lillian Britton Fulton, D. D., died at Asheville, N. C., July 18. Funeral services were held at the Congregational Church, Lake Worth, Fla., and were conducted by Rev. Edwin C. Gillette, assisted by Rev. Wm. T. Scott.

Dr. Fulton closed a pastorate of fifteen years with the Lake Worth Church at the end of June planning to retire and give herself to lecturing and occasional preaching, making her home in Lake Worth. Her long ministry at the Lake Worth Church had been one notable for the strength of her preaching, the sympathy of her pastoral ministry and her success in building a little church into a large and aggressive one. A large church building, a parsonage, and a recently constructed Sunday school building are monuments of her pastorate.

Dr. Fulton was born May 15, 1881, in Greeneville, Tenn. She received an A. B. degree from Tusculum College and took three years of theological work at Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa. In 1927 Tusculum College awarded her the degree of Doctor of Divinity. For years Dr. Fulton lectured extensively and did evangelistic work. She was ordained to the Congregational ministry in 1920 in South Jacksonville, Fla. She was the mother of three children, whom she reared and to whom she gave the benefit of a college education while carrying on her effective ministry. These children are Charles B. Fulton, a lawyer in West Palm Beach; Mrs. George Boutwell of Lake Worth; and Robert Fulton of Lake Worth, coach and teacher in West Palm Beach High School. Dr. Fulton was loved and honored not only by the people of her church and city, but also by the hosts of winter visitors from many parts of the land.

PLEASANT RIDGE (RANDOLPH) VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

The Daily Vacation Bible School of Pleasant Ridge Christian Church was held from July 31 to August 4, 1939. There were sixteen pupils enrolled, with twelve receiving certificates of perfect attendance.

Those in charge of the school were Miss Frances Lamb, Boston, Mass., and Miss Shirley Powell, Elon College, N. C., with Miss Mary Deane Browne assisting with the games during the recreation period.

The theme of the school was "The Bible and How It Came to Be." Classes were held each morning for the children and each evening for the young and older people of the Sunday school. In the evening sessions Miss Lamb lectured on "Ways of Improving Our Teaching." Thursday night being young people's night, she gave a very interesting talk on "The Person I Hope to Become."

The junior class studied the development of the Bible and the primary class studied about Jewish homes and customs.

The handwork period was in charge of Miss Powell. The children made a movie depicting the life of Jesus, also a Palestine village in the sand table.

Friday evening, which concluded the school, the children, under the supervision of their instructors, presented to the public "The Model School." This consisted of the various things which they had learned and made during the week and proved very interesting, reflecting much thought on the part of the teachers. We were very happy to have with us for the closing exercise our pastor, Rev. J. F. Apple, and Miss Fulcher of Elon College.

This was the first Bible School ever to have been held at Pleasant Ridge, but being only one week the writer thinks that from the interest shown and the inspiration derived by those attending, that we should put forth an effort to have a two weeks' school next year.

We certainly thank our Promotional Secretary for making it possible for us to have this school and to have had in our community such pleasant and enthusiastic workers as were Misses Lamb and Powell.

MRS. O. C. BROWNE.

NEWS OF INTEREST.

the work of their organization for the coming year. After the summer "let-down," it is a splendid thing to have some such meeting, so you can go into the fall work with a "bang" rather than dragging along in the same old way. To prove that they practice what they preach, members of the executive committee of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship have been meeting this week. All during the coming year you will be hearing reports of the things they have planned.

Horace Greely once received a letter from a woman stating that her church was in distressing financial straits. They had tried every device they could think of—fairs, strawberry festivals, oyster suppers, a donkey party, turkey banquets, Japanese weddings, poverty socials, mock marriages, grab bags, box sociables, and necktie sociables. "Would Mr. Greely be so kind as to suggest some new device to keep the struggling church from disbanding?" The editor replied: "Try religion."

"The love of heaven makes one heavenly."

My Philosophy

I allus argy that a man
Who does about the best he can
Is plenty good enough to suit
This lower mundane institute—
No matter if his daily walk
Is subject for his neighbors' talk,
And critic minds of ev'ry whim
Jest all git up and go fer him!

. . . .

It's natchurl enough, I guess,
When some gits more and some gits less,
Fer them-uns on the slimmest side
To claim it aint a fare divide;
And I've knowed some to lay and wait,
And git up soon, and set up late,
To ketch some feller they could hate
For goin' at a faster rate.

. . . .

My doctern is to lay aside
Contensions, and be satisfied:
Jest do your best, and praise er blame
That follers that, counts jest the same.
I've allus noticed grate success
Is mixed with troubles, more er less,
And it's the man who does the best
That gits more kicks than all the rest.

KANG WEI LU CHURCH.
Tientsin, China.

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ"—read it in the clear characters on the beautiful stone that was placed in this Chinese church in 1935. This group of Christians raised nine-tenths of the cost of their beautiful building. Contributions were made by friends in other denominations, by Catholics, Buddhists, and Mohammedans. The building is used every day of the week. It escaped damage during the bombings in 1937, and has been a refuge many times.

To this center come leaders from our other twenty churches near by. For a month or more these picked people are trained to be leaders in their communities. They study what it means to be a Christian, the Christian family, the Church, and all phases of Christian activity.

Look through the scaffolding at the rough walls and buildings beyond. Right there a piece of land like a narrow sliver of pie thrusts in between this small church yard and the dormitories of the Mission boarding school for girls. What the Tientsin Christians want to do is to buy that land and the building upon it and make it over and adapt it so that there can be a sort of hostel and classrooms and small office rooms for use the year around, a working center for the evangelistic work of our Tientsin Association. The Layman's Training work, vacation Bible school, and many other activities would be carried on through the year.

Young people of the Southeast have taken this as their project, and expect to make the purchase of this property possible.

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

Rev. Will B. O'Neill, pastor of our church at Holland, Va., is spending his vacation at his native home in Ireland.

Rev. J. L. Neese of Reidsville, N. C., is this week aiding Rev. J. P. Apple in a revival meeting at Pleasant Ridge Christian Church near Ramseur, N. C. Dr. L. E. Smith preached there Sunday morning, and the Orphanage Singing Class shared in the afternoon service.

Mr. Cecil Thomas has just completed two months of Student Summer Service in the Eastern North Carolina Conference. This week he is helping Rev. E. M. Carter in a revival at Good Hope, near Youngsville. Mr. Thomas spent the past month at Raleigh and Southern Pines.

Rev. W. E. Wisseman, pastor of First Church, Greensboro, returned this week from a month's vacation with his relatives and friends in Texas. He was accompanied by his wife and two children. The Promotional Secretary enjoyed preaching in the Greensboro Church on last Sunday morning.

Our new church in Gibsonville, N. C., is really working. Within a month after forming an organization they have secured about $200.00 to pay on the purchase of a church building, which will cost them approximately $1,200.00 when put in shape. These good people will appreciate any contribution which any CHRISTIAN SUN reader may wish to make. Money may be sent to Mr. John Dennis, Gibsonville, N. C.

Mr. Ellis Clarke of Waverly, Va., has spent two months in the Valley of Virginia Conference doing Student Summer Service. Most of his time was taken with investigating closed churches, but several vacation schools have been held. A recent one at Mayland enrolled twenty-nine pupils and had an average attendance of twenty-six persons. At Wissler's Chapel thirty-five enrolled and twenty-eight was the average attendance. Mr. Clarke wishes to express his sincere appreciation to all who helped to make his stay in the Valley pleasant.

CHANGE IN OFFICE FORCE.

For more than three years Miss Shirley Powell has been office secretary for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and for six years Miss Edna Fulcher has been secretary for the Board of Christian Education and for Rev. F. C. Lester who has been pastor of First Church, Norfolk, and held offices for the Southern Convention.

When the offices moved to Elon College, last September, it was agreed that the girls would continue to work, and that part of their pay would be their college expenses. For a year this plan was followed.

At a recent meeting of those who pay the bills for the office of Promotional Secretary, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and the Board of Christian Education, it was decided that the expense for this work was greater than could be continued, and that the services of one of the girls would have to be discontinued. Neither of the girls thought she could do the necessary work and go to school. Salary attached was not sufficient for full-time work. The result is that both of them are finishing their work with the Convention offices with August. After that date Mrs. Emily C. Lester will be the office secretary.

Miss Powell expects to continue in college. Miss Fulcher will find work. Both of these girls have rendered faithful and efficient service to the church. Those outside the office can never guess the time and patience they have put into their work. No task was too hard for them to do and no hours were too long for them to work. It is with regret that they are permitted to leave the office, and the gratitude of the church goes to them for the fine service they have rendered.

Some church in need of secretarial work will do well to correspond with Miss Fulcher before she secures work. She is very familiar with our church plans and programs, and is an efficient secretary. Her address is 514 South Main Street, Norfolk, Va., or Elon College, N. C.

HANK'S CHAPEL.

The revival at Hank's Chapel was well attended if it did rain most of the time. Two services were held each day—morning and night. The pastor, Rev. W. J. Andes, preached some wonderful sermons. We were fortunate in having Mrs. W. A. Andes, the pastor's mother, to lead and work with the Junior choir and also with us older ones, too. Her coming this way has meant a lot to our church and community. May God bless her as she works, as we have felt that she has left that Christian influence with us that she possesses.

As a result of the revival, nine additions were made to the church—two by letter, and seven by conversion, and many lives were reconsecrated.

The Bible School will begin the week following the fourth Sunday in this month. It will include from the youngest to the oldest in the church and community.

A CALL TO ALMS.

[From United Council for Civilian Relief in China.]

The second annual appeal to the American people to help relieve the untold sufferings of the countless millions of Chinese non-combatants in the current invasion of China by Japanese armed forces, will be launched in the week of October 30 by the United Council for Civilian Relief in China, it was announced yesterday by Col. Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., chairman of the Council. The Council will again stage "bowl of rice parties in some 2,000 communities throughout the United States in its drive for funds to provide food and medical care for the Chinese women and children refugees suffering not only from the horrors of war, but from ravages of famine and flood.

The Council has decided to repeat the "bowl of rice" parties this year in view of the success of last year's drive, Col. Roosevelt announced.

Even far greater stress will be placed on the drive for funds this

GATHER THEM IN.

With this issue the last month of summer, August, will be history. September brings Autumn, with cool weather, gathered harvests, opening schools, and renewed church work. Vacations are over. Business gains momentum. The wheels of industry hum.

In many places the church members have scattered for the summer or for vacation. Now that they are home again, it is time to call them back to worship and work in the church. Pastors have had their time out for rest and renewal. They return with new hope and inspiration. Fortunate is the church that finds the way to gather in all the old members and some new ones for the very beginning of the church work this fall.

Many pastors will send inviting letters to all their constituency, and as rapidly as possible will call in the homes of the people. Sunday schools and other societies will send cards, letters, etc., and will put on special programs that are inviting and intended to create enthusiasm for the work. Some churches, many we hope, will make surveys of their communities and thus locate all prospects for membership. All these prospects will be personally invited to join in the study, worship, and work of the church group.

This is harvest time. Bring in not only the golden grain from the fields, but also bring into the fold of God those who should be His friends and co-workers. Go after them with a vim, with the will to win. There is no better time during the year. Start the fall and winter program with enthusiasm, and according to well thought-out plans. Ask for God's leadership, and depend upon it. Expect success, and work for it. Then your church will grow.

YOUR CHURCH AND YOUR CONFERENCE.

Your church is part of your annual Conference. Unless your church does its full share, your Conference will be crippled. And so will your church. The churches and the Conference are inseparably bound to each other. Whatever helps one helps the other, and whatever hurts one hurts the other.

The standards set by Conference are the standards set by the churches. If your church does not meet that standard, it falls below what your representatives and those from other churches think a church should be. There is no "high and mighty" person off somewhere out of sight telling you what to do. Apportionments are set by the churches in conference with each other in the light of the service that should be rendered and the best judgment of the group as to the ability of the churches to serve.

So far as this writer is informed all of our churches could reach all Conference Apportionments if they really worked at the job through the year. It may be difficult to do a year's work within a month, but even then much can be done. It is now about two months until most of our Conferences meet. Now is the time to check on Apportionments. If something is still lacking, get busy and see that everything is ready when your delegates meet with representatives from the other churches and make reports of the work for the past year.

A new item on the Apportionment work this year is the subscriptions to "The Christian Sun." This work was turned over to the churches because the churches need an informed membership. Unless the people read they will not contribute largely and the work will have to suffer. If our people read of our work, they may become eager to do more than we are now doing. The church paper helps to make better church members. That is why the churches should see to it that the people receive the paper. Pastors and church leaders will certainly want to reach the quota for subscriptions, for in so doing they will be making their work easier and more successful.

THE CHURCH AND LABOR.

The Church is often accused of being in sympathy with capital and opposed to labor. This is a very strange sort of thing. There is very grave doubt as to the truthfulness of the accusation for at least three very obvious reasons.

The Church is composed mostly of laborers. While no definite statistics are at hand, anyone could hazard a guess that a very large part of those who sit in the church on Sunday are those who do the world's work during the week. It is certainly true that most of the ministers come from labor and not from the capitalist group. Why should laborers be opposed to themselves?

Christianity cuts across all dividing lines. It does not recognize classes other than as a means for bringing a helpful message and service. It is not for or against any group. It is for all men in every walk of life. It must of necessity condemn wrong in any person or group.

Christians always seek out those in need with the hope of helping them. The idle rich and the ignorant poor both receive the pity and offered help of the Church, but the latter get most of it.

Churches generally join in the observance of Labor Day. Messages appropriate to the occasion are given from pulpits and papers. Not once during a life-time is a day set aside to bolster up the position of capitalism. If the Church is partisan, it appears to be in favor of labor.

The Church believes in labor when it is defined as hard work. The Bible and logical thought teach that by labor people—all people—should earn their living. Some may earn by cultivating the soil, some by training minds, and others by developing property and transacting business. All honest labor is good, and should bring remuneration that furnishes a livelihood. The Church may well say: "God bless all honest and honorable workmen, for they belong in the Brotherhood of our Master."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Mrs. Aliee A. Barrett, widow of the late Deacon Joseph Alfred Barrett, passed away on Monday, August 21, 1939, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. E. J. Edwards, Washington, D. C. She was eighty-eight years old last December. Besides her daughter she is survived by three sons: Rev. D. P. Barrett of Ponee, Porto Rieo; J. Herbert Barrett of Baltimore, Md.; and M. Pressley Barrett of Lynnhaven, Va.; two step-daughters, Mrs. D. J. Bowden, Norfolk, Va.; and Mrs. W. D. Harward, Dendron, Va.; and one sister, Mrs. Emma J. Eley, Windsor Va.

Mrs. Barrett was a member of Antioch Christian Church for many years. Her body was brought back to the church where she labored for so many years, and laid to rest beside the remains of her deceased husband. The burial service was conducted by Rev. J. F. Morgan, assisted by Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, and the writer.

Mrs. Barrett was a woman of refinement, gentle in her manner, devoted to her church and noted for her piety and strong faith. It seemed natural that one of her sons should enter the ministry and become a missionary. The name Barrett has for many years been well known in the list of ministers of the Christian Church for more than a century. She was a daughter of the late Mills and Margaret Crumpler who were of a deeply religious nature. And all who knew her were deeply impressed by her realistic faith and sweet resignation to the will of God. About two years ago she fell and broke a bone in one of her limbs. She was an invalid during this period. She came to the end of this part of her life with a calm faith and entered into that rest that remaineth to the people of God.

Eighty-eight years! A long time, yes, but how brief when compared with eternity! Through these years this faithful child of God had her share of joys and sorrows, sickness and health. And there were loving hearts and willing hands to render faithful help and make the home-going more radiant and peaceful.

The daughter, in whose home she spent her last days, will have a precious memory of mother's abiding faith and this memory will be a rich compensation for her sacrificial love and service. It is not the wish of any one to be an invalid. We pray for health and wish to be well and strong. But when health fails and the infirmities of age lay their blighting hand upon one, it makes a difference if faith remains steadfast, and if there is some one who has the courage and the patience to stand by in such a time. People who faithfully care for invalids and old people, and seek to comfort them by loving words and gracious kindness deserve many words of commendation.

There are two classes of "shut ins" in the world: First, the people who are invalids, and second, the people who faithfully remain with them in their affliction. Many a mother has rendered such a service to an afflicted child; sometimes the son or daughter is called upon to care for father or mother. Whatever the condition, whoever faces such a situation deserves a brighter star in the crown of righteousness. There are pews in the church made vacant by the absence of those who are sick; and there are others made vacant by those who care for the sick. God has a message of comfort and encouragement for all such who trust in Him. What a blessing to remember that God never forgets the afflicted. The cup of cold water, given in His name, does not escape His watchful eye. The spirit of loving kindness makes the sunlight brighter at noon-day and enriches the evening time of life with its radiance and beauty.

ELON'S FIFTIETH OPENING.

Administrative officers, foremen for buildings and grounds, students employed, and our usual corps of laborers are working day and night to see that Elon's campus and buildings are in first-class condition on or before September 4. The college opens on the 5th. We want to extend to the fine group of young people who come the most cordial and homelike welcome possible. Advanced registration and paid fees are in excess of any in the history of the institution. Unless something happens to prevent those who have planned to come, we will have the largest student body ever known on the Elon Campus. The freshman class will not be very much larger than the freshman class of last year. The increase will be noted in upper-classes. This is a very wholesome condition.

Every young person who possibly can should have at least one year in college, but the great desire of Elon College is to see every student who possibly can take advantage of a full four-year course. Many students come to Elon for only one year, but after arriving and imbibing freely the Elon spirit, they remain for the entire college course.

Certain definite goals have been set for our fiftieth anniversary—six hundred regularly matriculated students, one hundred in the graduating class, and every dollar of our indebtedness paid. We will have no difficulty in reaching the first goal set, we will not likely reach the second, but by every count we should meet the third goal. By the cooperation of everyone interested, we will have no difficulty in raising the required amount. If the task is left to a few or even one thousand, it will be difficult to accomplish. Including alumni, church, and friends, we have somewhere between thirty thousand and fifty thousand constituents. Everyone will want to stand true. The whole world admires loyalty, and he who does his bit to the full shall not miss his reward. There are plenty of excuses why we should not. On the other hand there is a multiplicity of reasons why we should. If you join the anniversary club, you will be found among your friends and the friends of Christian Education as espoused by your institution, Elon College.

On September 5 Elon College will observe the fiftieth anniversary of the opening of the college; that is, when students begin to matriculate, it will be the fiftieth consecutive year of student matriculation at Elon College. You are invited and urged to be present.

L. E. SMITH.

REV. G. D. HUNT CELEBRATES SEVENTIETH BIRTHDAY.

On the second Sunday in September all friends of Rev. G. D. Hunt are requested to meet at Antioch Christian Church, Doublehead, Ala., at 10:00 A. M., to celebrate the seventieth birthday of this servant of God. Everybody to whom he has ministered is requested to come and bring lunch, which will be served on the church lawn at noon. Hon. W. B. Bowling, senior judge of the Fifth Judicial Circuit of Alabama, will speak at 11:30 A. M. Other services will follow in the afternoon. We hope to make this an occasion of joy to all who will come, and especially to Mr. Hunt.

Confirmation for Our Churches

By REV. JOHN H. KNIGHT.

Norfolk, Virginia.

In a recent and timely editorial in THE CHRISTIAN SUN the editor has taken us to task for our shoddy and superficial way of inducting new members into the fellowship of Christ's Church. If we are honest with ourselves we will have to admit the truth of his charges when he says, "It is usually done hurriedly, without beautiful ceremony, significant symbolism, or anything to impress the candidate with the importance of the church."

This leads us to ask the question: Why should we not revive the ancient and honorable rite of confirmation for our churches? Confirmation has always been the historic mode of receiving members into the full fellowship of the Church of Christ. Just because it involves a little formality and is still used by Christians of Catholic heritage is no reason why it should be rejected by evangelicals.

Confirmation is the form still used today among Anglicans, Orthodox, Romans, Lutherans, and Reformed. Among the first three the rite is performed at the hands of a Bishop. Among Lutherans and Reformed the local pastor, being the bishop, performs the rite himself.

By these bodies of believers the act of inducting members into the church is considered to be a sacred act—a sacrament. A sacrament, according to the Book of Common Prayer is "an outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace given unto us; ordained by Christ himself, as a means whereby we receive the same and a pledge to assure us thereof." Should becoming a member of the Body of Christ mean any less than that? Or should taking the vows of membership in the fellowship of grace mean less to the evangelical than it does to the Anglican? If we could only divest ourselves of some of our prejudices, we might see that we have much to learn from our brethren in the liturgical churches. After all, are they not more closely connected with the practice of the historic Christian faith than are we who, in the name of reformation, have thrown out the baby with the bath?

The word "confirmation" means a strengthening, an establishing, a binding together. So it is that the individual who has seen pardon for his sins through the grace of Christ is now by his pastor or bishop strengthened in his faith. He is further established in his new-found faith by this sacramental act of welcome into the visible church, as the leader of Christ's flock blesses him in the name of Holy Trinity. By the laying on of hands of the pastor, he is bound together with the rest of the fagots which have been saved as brands from the burning. He realizes now as he never has before the unity of the Christian faith, and that Christ's children are one people. (Eph. 4:5.)

It is interesting to note that according to early Christian tradition, the laying on of hands in confirmation was reputed to confer on the believer the Gift of the Holy Ghost. This Gift he would greatly need for the maintenance of his Christian faith and life. Not only does this impartation of the Spirit seem to be true of Christian tradition, but also of Biblical and apostolic practice. (Acts 8:17, 18; 9:17.)

If it be the prerogative of the local pastor to exercise this sacramental ministry of confirming grace, then he in humility ought to search his own heart to see if he possesses that which he seeks to impart. He is supposed to have been the instructor of the candidate for church membership, and in a Communicants' Class or other suitable way he should have tried to impart to the intellect a systematic consideration of the doctrines which make Christianity the religion that it is. This important phase of confirmation has often failed miserably because of the theological vacuity of many ministerial minds. The Pastor's Class is no place for soft sentimentality or mere humanistic ethics. The Christian religion has a real framework of belief which should be presented as providing an adequate motivation for high and holy living.

And if the pastor is to be the channel through whom the Holy Ghost is imparted to the kneeling candidate, how he ought to search himself so as to be certain that he possesses a spirit-filled life. What folly for a worldly, carnally-minded, spiritually indolent minister to think that he can impart the Holy Ghost, who is the Spirit of Holiness! Such a minister does not possess enough of the Spirit to keep his own life from being tainted with the beggardly elements of the world. Dr. John Kennedy says, "We ministers must not take ourselves for granted and rant about empty pews, when our people might with good reason rant about empty ministers."

The rite of confirmation, then, is of value to the Christian Church, not only from the point of view of the aesthetic and the symbolical, but also in the connection which it provides with the spiritual realities of another world. The fact that it furnishes us with an orderliness for receiving church members is but a small matter compared with the spiritual benefits which come through it to candidate and congregation.

(In a later issue Mr. Knight will outline a simple Service of Confirmation which may be used in any non-liturgical church.)

LABOR AND DEMOCRACY.

Emphasizing the new dignity which the modern trade union movement is seeking for working people in modern society, the Council for Social Action of the Congregational and Christian Churches of America has released today Labor and Democracy, part of a larger study to be published in a forth-coming volume by Rev. James Myers. Mr. Myers is Industrial Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. Earlier he was for seven years personnel director in a factory where he had charge of labor relations. He presents his personal findings, based on many years of study, investigation, and first hand contacts with employers and labor in many industries.

"Through labor unions," Mr. Myers declares, "workers have found an opportunity not enjoyed by unorganized workers to participate in American democracy. The labor union movement is in essence a demand for democracy on the part of wage earners. It is an effort to elevate labor to the status of industrial citizens with the rights of representative government in industry. It is an expression of our American principles of government applied to industrial relations."

Are labor unions responsible organizations? In answering this challenging question, Mr. Myers looks at the record. First he deals with the question of keeping agreements and finds as a rule both employers and the A. F. of L. and C. I. O. unions have lived up to their agreements. He cites cases; among others, that of the U. S. Steel Corporation and the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, quoting the testimony of the Chairman of U. S. Steel, Myron C. Taylor: "The union has scrupulously followed the terms of the agreement."

Next Mr. Myers considers the charges of graft and racketeering. Declaring that "The rank and file of union members are just as honest as any other class of society." He goes

Elon College Golden Anniversary

GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY CLUB.

Conditions in my home and at the college have required my presence during the last two weeks. I have learned that however worthy a cause is, it is not likely to advance without conscientious and strenuous efforts. When you stop pushing, advancement seems to be halted. During these two weeks we have had only two additional memberships for the club. There are certainly many more who plan to join the club. I hope it will not be necessary for someone to go personally and solicit before those who should will give their pledge or check for membership in the club. Voluntary service is often more effective than solicited service.

The mails run every day, and Uncle Sam will be delighted to bring your contribution and your expressions of interest. If you could realize how encouraging a letter bearing a pledge or a check sufficient for membership in the club is, you would sit down, write a good letter, and forward your contribution or pledge. Elon College is deserving and greatly appreciates every expression of interest and every evidence of assistance. Won't you please let us hear from you before the opening date of our 1939 session.

The following are pledges received during the past two weeks:

	Pledged	Paid
Mrs. E. J. Brickhouse, Norfolk, Va.	$ 50.00	$ 50.00
Mrs. Margaret Kelbaugh, Norfolk, Va.	50.00
Totals	$ 100.00	$ 50.00
Previously reported		20,500.00
Grand total		$20,600.00

SUNDAY SCHOOL OFFERINGS.

If you read these little notes about Sunday school and church offerings for the support of Elon College, I know that you are becoming anxious to see the total of such contributions reach the $3,000 mark. I have been hoping to reach this mark for the past months.

The amount apportioned to the churches for the college is $12,500, and the college needs every penny of this amount and more. The conference year is approaching its close. We have not received twenty-five per cent of the Convention's allotment. A number of our churches and Sunday schools have stood by. Their cooperation has been encouraging. The number of schools and churches supporting the college has increased a bit. We are grateful. There are many who have not found it possible to send contributions. We hope that every Sunday school and every church will make some contribution before the conference year closes. If you do not find it possible to send contributions before conference meets, please determine to raise your entire conference apportionment and send the same to conference. Then the college will get its share. This is our anniversary year, and we hope to break a record in contributions for the college. Your fifth Sunday offerings will count on conference apportionments. If you have not sent yours in, please do so as early as possible.

The following has been received since our last report:

FOUNDERS DAY.

On September 14, 1888, the General Convention of the Christian Church in the South in extraordinary session at Old Providence Church, Graham, N. C., appointed an Advisory Committee consisting of Dr. W. S. Long, Dr. J. P. Barrett, Hon. F. O. Moring, Col. J. H. Harden, and Dr. G. S. Watson. The principal duty of this committee was to locate a site for the building of a college by the Convention. This committee selected what was then known as Mill Point. The tree around which the committee gathered for its decision is still standing. This is a historic spot and may well be considered holy ground. The decisions made were far reaching. It marked a new day in the history of our church and has meant much to ambitious young men and young women through this half century of service.

September 14 has therefore been designated by the Board of Trustees of Elon College as Founders Day. A program of celebration has been authorized. The committee in charge is submitting a tentative program for the day as follows:

Dr. Leon Edgar Smith, presiding.

Morning Session.

- 11:00 Address: "The Church's Contribution to Higher Education"—Hon. Clyde R. Hoey, Governor of North Carolina.
- 12:00 Exercise by the present faculty, present student body, and the Alumni Association. This program will be held on the campus.

Afternoon Session.

- 2:30 Greetings—Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, President of the Southern Convention of Congregational-Christian Churches.
- 2:40 Historical Address—Mr. W. E. MacClenny, Suffolk, Va.
- 3:00 Address: "The Provisional Committee and the Original Board of Trustees"—Col. Junius H. Harden, Graham, N. C.
- 3:20 Address: "The Original Faculty of Elon College"—Dr. E. L. Moffitt. Dr. Moffitt is a member of the original faculty and was president of the college from 1905 to 1911.

Evening Session.

- 7:30 Banquet honoring the original faculty. Dr. W. H. Boone, President of the Board of Trustees, will preside. Greetings, President L. E. Smith. Response, members of the original faculty. To this banquet all members of the Alumni Association and all members of the church fifty years old and over are especially invited. Music for all occasions will be provided by the Music Department of the College.

The entire membership of the church, all alumni and friends of the college are invited to this program, particularly those who are fifty years of age and over. L. E. SMITH.

A CALL TO ALMS.

year, because the need of the innocent, non-combatant sufferers is so desperately great now with the undeclared war in its third year, Col. Roosevelt pointed out.

So much prominence has been given to the actual news of the war in China, he declared, that the real story of the tragic, desperate plight of the countless millions driven from their homes, badly in need of food, clothing, and medical care, has been only partly told.

Despite the heroic efforts of the Chinese people to take care of their own, as well as the courageous work is still an appalling need of medical supplies, food, and clothing on the part of innocent civilians caught in the sweep of war and further harassed by the summer floods and famine, he stated. Press reports from China, and statements by missionaries and others returning from China clearly reveal lack of adequate supplies.

"The Council is appealing to the humanitarian instincts of the American people to aid innocent women and children of a peace-loving, friendly race, suddenly driven from their homes and lacking even the barest essentials of life," Col. Roosevelt stated. "Americans have contributed to relieve suffering in many nations, in flood and famine swept China many times, to Japan to rebuild from the havoc of earthquakes and floods, to the victims of the Spanish war, and to the aid of refugees from Nazi Germany.

"All this aid has been deserved and nobly given, but equally worthy of the charity of the American people are the innocent, non-combatants in China for whom the Council appeals. Not one cent will be deducted from the proceeds of the 'bowl of rice' parties for administrative expenses. Every penny will go toward relieving the suffering of 50,000,000 Chinese non-combatants, most of whom are women and children."

The list of the prominent American citizens who have agreed to head committees in various communities throughout the nation, as well as leaders in industry, outstanding figures on radio, stage, and screen, as well as in social life who have offered their services in the drive this year will be announced in the next few weeks, as well as additional details of the "bowl of rice" parties, Col. Roosevelt said.

FOR THE CHILDREN

NATURAL ENEMIES.

There are certain animals which do not feel kindly toward each other. We cannot always tell just why this is the case. Perhaps if we could go back far enough to some time when the world was a lot younger, we would discover the reason for this enmity or these hard feelings.

We do know, however, that while dogs and cats raised together may get along fairly well, that dogs do love to chase cats and to frighten them so that the cats will climb trees to get out of their way. We know that cats in turn like to chase mice. Sometimes they make a meal of the little creatures right away, and at other times they tease them by pretending they are going to let them go.

But we do not all understand that red squirrels and gray squirrels, although both are members of the squirrel family, do not get along well together. In fact, a never-ending struggle for life between the red and gray squirrel goes on.

The red squirrel is a native of Canada and our own north woods. During the past few years many of the frisky little creatures have found their way into New England.

This meant that there would scarcely be nuts enough for both groups, and so the grays have moved out in search of food and great numbers of them have reached New York State. Probably they will keep on going west, as the red follow and maim and destroy them whenever they can.

These little red squirrels are deliberately fierce and cruel and the warfare, carried on relentlessly, is putting the grays to flight with surprising rapidity. This seems too bad, as, perhaps in time the beautiful gray squirrels will disappear entirely.—Emma Gary Wallace, in Our Dumb Animals.

LITTLE JANE'S VICTORY.

Mother had told little Jane never to go to the pantry and help herself, but always to ask for what she wanted. One afternoon Jane came in hungry, but Mother was lying half asleep on the couch. "Don't disturb her; help yourself," something whispered.

Jane went to the pantry and saw on a shelf a fine red apple, just what she wanted; she looked at it, then went out and shut the pantry door.

Soon she came back, reached and touched the apple—just touched it—then went away again.

Mother was wide awake now, but she lay with her eyes closed. Little Jane came the third time, reached up for the apple, and walked out with it. Oh, thought Mother, is my girl going to yield to temptation, and disobey me?

Soon Jane came back, reached up, put the apple in its place, then turned, shook her fist at an unseen foe, and said, "There, old fellow, I beat you this time; you get out!"

You see, Satan had been tempting Jane to disobey her mother by taking that lovely red apple. Satan is very pleased when he can get boys and girls to sin. But finally Jane got the victory over Satan by putting the apple back. Aren't you glad she did? I surely am.

Presently Mother took Jane to the pantry and gave her that lovely red apple. Oh, how Jane smiled as she ate it! And how glad she was she had not disobeyed.—Selected.

SOME HOPEFUL SIGN.

Amid the turmoil and confusion of our time there are many signs of hope if we will only look for them. There are those who say the world is growing worse, and then there are others as equally intelligent who say it is growing better. This writer leaves that for these brethren to decide, he himself being willing to trust the leadership and the lordship of our Savior and Redeemer, who Himself said, "I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." We can trust Him to make good His word while we ourselves seek with all the heart and devotion we have to be His humble followers and thus, by the grace of God, become co-workers with Him in building His church on the earth.

At any rate the world, even of our day, is not all bad and there are signs that our Lord's longest recorded prayer, that in John 17, for Christian union is being answered. I quote from a recent statement the daily press carried from Religious News Service:

Delegates to the World Conference of Christian Youth—some 1,500 strong, representing the principal Protestant youth movements of the world—last week returned to their homes determined to work for one main objective—the creation of a united church.

The Christian Young people, a large proportion of whom were under twenty-five years of age, spent a week surveying the state of the world and of the church and decided that "the world needs a united church."

This observation was made in a final statement adopted by the conference, the gist of which was that the world will not wait while Christians "argue," and hence international Christian unity—even in time of war—is imperative. The 1,000-word statement, which in effect is an expression of the convictions of the Protestant youth of the world, made hardly a reference to current political, social and economic problems. The emphasis was entirely upon the need for strengthening Christian unity, and of returning to a study of the Bible for a solution of present-day problems.

The following facts are also significant, especially for those who are looking for signs of hope. A leading amusement magazine recently carried an article entitled, "City of Sin." This article points out that while there are 703 movie houses in New York there are in the same city 2,876—four churches to every movie house, even in the city of New York, sometimes called our Modern Babylon. Going a little further it is pointed out that for every night club in the city, where sin and evil are flaunted, there are twenty-eight buildings supported by organizations dedicated to bring comfort, protection and help to all who approach their doors.

There may be, and in many places there are, tendencies and indications which show that the people are indifferent to the church, yet the church doors swing open and tens of thousands of consecrated ministers, and more than that number of consecrated and devoted laymen, love the church and are giving their best effort to building up the church which our Lord Christ is building, and which because He is building it, cannot fail. Ours is the part as His humble followers, not to argue with others whose views about far-reaching matters may differ from our own, for Jesus Himself said, "There are other sheep than these I must also bring into the fold." We do well also to often remind ourselves of John 3:16, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but should have everlasting life." And the Father had already made the promise to His Son, "Ask of me and I will give thee the heathen for thy possession, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy inheritance."

With more devout missionaries in more parts of the world today—than ever before—preaching the gospel of the Son of God we can but realize that God is making good His promise to His Son.

We are grateful for the donations above and for all the contributions that have been made for missions the past year. Our books close for the fiscal year on August 31. While the offerings the past year have not quite equalled those of the fiscal year ending August 31, 1928, we take it that the pastors and Sunday school superintendents have done their duty and that which they deem best. We can work together for the progress and growth of the church and each one in the church and Sunday school has his, or her, own responsibility. This responsibility is not to us, but to the church we love and the God whom we serve and our Lord Christ, whose life we seek to share with others through our missionary endeavor.

Gratefully and sincerely,
J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

MEETING THE CRISIS IN THE CHURCH.

Many churches in America, as in other lands, are facing a crisis. Their income from gifts has decreased, their membership has dwindled, the community in which the work is carried on has radically changed. What is their outlook? What is the solution of their problem?

There are worse things than for an organization or an individual to die a physical death. It is far worse to die spiritually than to lose the reason for existence. If a man or a church cannot longer serve the Cause of Christ in a community "Why cumbereth it the ground?" Physical death may open the way to new spiritual life.

One solution for a dying church may be a change to meet the needs and conditions of the new environment. The change from a dead conservatism to a living organism may be the way to larger service. A church that has served chiefly aged saints, may well begin to reach out to meet the growing needs of youth, to train Christian workers, to evangelize the unconverted and backsliders of the community, to become truly a living power and a missionary-minded congregation. Size never determines vitality, power or usefulness. There is clearly work for every Christian and every church in any environment where human contacts may be made. The first requisite for service is the indwelling and manifestation of the living Christ in the life and work of the individual or in the church.

If churches in America are experiencing a crisis—what about the churches in Japan, where militarism prevails; in Germany where totalitarianism seeks to control church life; in Russia where all faith in God is discredited; in China where foreign invasion destroys property and life; in countries of Europe where unrest, poverty and materialism prevail? What shall be done for the evangelical churches in Spain, in Germany, Czechoslovakia and the Polish Ukraine? Persecution cannot destroy them; poverty alone will not kill them. Such experiences did not destroy the Apostolic Church; nor have they prevented the growth of the church in mission fields. But materialism, self-centeredness and failure to cultivate spiritual life will sap vitality in churches and individuals.

Today, in the midst of world-wide distress, is it not time for Christians to seek spiritual vitality and to express spiritual life in personal service? There is special need to help fellow Christians in distress wherever they may be, and to promote the missionary work of Christ with new vigor wherever doors are open—at home or abroad.—Missionary Review of the World.

THE NEGRO PROGRESSES.

There are 12,000,000 Negroes in the United States, and the greatest improvements in the race have come since the beginning of the World War. There are now over 120 Negro institutions of higher education with 35,000 students of college grade, 2,457 of collegiate professional grade, and twice the entire number studying college subjects. The first Negro collegiate graduate in America was from Bowdoin College in 1826. The number of Negroes now holding academic and professional degrees is 32,478. About 63.8 per cent are men and 36.2 per cent are women. The largest numerical group comes from parents neither of whom could read. The bulk of these graduates enter the professional field. Before 1880 most of these entered the ministry, since that, other learned professions. Nearly 200 have incomes of $5,000 or more; the medium high school salary of teachers is $1,3000. The call for Negro college graduates is more imperative than ever. There is one white physician to every 728 white people, but only one Negro physician to every 3,125 Negroes. There is one white teacher for every 110 white children, one Negro teacher for every 218 of the Negro group.—The United Presbyterian.

CHINA MISSIONS.

The official report from the State Department on July 7 concerning the bombing of the Union High School in Foochow was as follows: "Consul Foochow reports that on June 29 a Japanese bombing plane flew over the school and after diving on it and machine gunning it, dropped two bombs. The first fell a few yards from the school killing two Chinese children, and the second struck the northeast corner of the building and set it afire, resulting in its complete destruction. Mr. and Mrs. Billings, only Americans on property at the time, were not harmed. Appropriate representations have been made to Japanese authorities.

Cordell Hull,
Sec'y of State."

No cable has come from our own Congregational-Christian mission in accordance with their policy that they will not cable if everyone is safe. On July 3, the following cable was sent by the American Board to the mission: "Cable whenever conditions indicate desirable changes Allen, Houston, Beards, Wenshaw, Teacher, Hsuehs, McClure, Thomas, Thelin, Dyer, Jacobs for sailing." Until such word is received, it is expected that plans for return will go forward normally in spite of the present Japanese attack on the city.

"There is a story," quoted sometime ago by Stanley Jones, about three people arguing as to which of their occupations was the most ancient. The surgeon said that his was the oldest profession in the world, for a surgical operation was performed in Eden when a rib was taken out of Adam and made into Eve. An architect claimed that his was older still, for it had created order out of chaos. But it was a politician who won the debate, as he declared that it was the politicians who created chaos! The italics are ours, but not the opinion expressed therein. There is good ground for the belief that the politicians, as a professional class, did not emerge until after the Age of Innocence."

LABOR AND DEMOCRACY.

on to analyze labor rackets in the limited area where they exist. Following this he outlines the remedies for racketeering. These remedies are a strengthening of the democratic processes, political reform and the democratic control of the unions.

Another question which Mr. Myers takes up is: Should labor unions be incorporated? This he answers by showing that unincorporated unions can be sued and can be enjoined. He cites the City Club report to the effect that compulsory incorporation is not desirable and reviews the experience in Great Britain and Scandinavia, where unions are not incorporated.

Labor and Democracy ends with a section on union-management cooperation for efficiency. "In many industries which have been organized over a long period of years," Mr. Myers says, "it has been demonstrated that it is possible for organized employers and organized employees to maintain generally harmonious relations with honesty and integrity and to adjust their differences through joint conciliation without recourse to strikes and lockouts, and for them to cooperate effectively in reducing costs of production." Again Mr. Myers turns to the record. He cites cases: the Baltimore and Ohio Shop Crafts; the Amalgamated Clothing Workers; and the Pulp Division of the Weyerhaeuser Timber Company and the George A. Hormel Co., meat packers in Austin, Minn., with their respective unions.

Labor Day is approaching. Here is a useful pamphlet for the laymen seeking to understand the forces at work in our industrial society.

Youth is not a time of life; it is a state of mind. It is not a matter of ripe cheeks, red lips and supple knees; it is a temper of the will, a quality of the imagination, a vigor; it is a freshness of the deep springs of life. Nobody grows old by merely living a number of years; people grow old only by deserting their ideals. Worry, doubt, self-distrust, fear and despair—these are the long, long years that bow the head and turn the growing spirit back to dust. You are as young as your self-confidence; as old as your fear; as young as your faith, as old as your doubt; as young as your hope; as old as your despair.—Church Visitor, Dallas, Wis.

THE EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP RALLY.

The Eastern North Carolina Pilgrim Fellowship Rally will be held at the United Church, Raleigh, N. C., on September 2. The program will begin at 2:15 and close about 8:15. The theme of the rally will be "Christian Perseverance." All young people, ministers, and young people's leaders are urged to attend. Each one who attends will carry a picnic basket and have supper together at the church. Make a special effort to be there to hear our Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship president speak.

MRS. BROOKSTON EAVES,
President.

A MEDITATION.

[The following was written by Miss Frances Foster, president of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship, for use as the opening vesper service at the recent meeting of the executive committee of that group held at Altamont, N. C. Picture the group seated on a hill, looking out at the mountains and valleys, receiving this message as an inspiration for the work to be done during the meeting.—Editor.]

You and I have been chosen by our fellow-workers to assume places of responsibility, are here to think and plan together about what share the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship can rightly have in building a World Christian Community.

I wonder how often, in the heat of our activity, we lose our perspective. Are we always conscious of the final goal we are seeking—and are we working so that every young person may conscientiously join us in our Statement of Purpose:

To achieve Christian personality after the pattern of Jesus.

To seek a fuller understanding one of another in the interest of happy relations in the home and community.

To work for a united church, practicing Christian freedom, and definitely promoting the program of Jesus.

To secure equal rights and opportunities for all classes and races as equally the children of God.

To practice a Christian patriotism which recognizes the authority of God in conscience as supreme.

To strive for justice in the social order which will afford an abundant life for all.

To work for such international organization of the nations as will preserve peace and security.

Doubtless, our greatest concern is our own unworthiness. We ourselves fall so short of what we think our leaders ought to be. In spite of our great longing to be of the most possible service, we are conscious of our limitations; we continue to make mistakes; and in so many ways our lives do not measure up to our ideals. Yet we may find some courage in the words of great men who have lived before us. Arnold said, "Use your gifts faithfully, and they shall be enlarged; practice what you know, and you shall attain to higher knowledge." If men apart from God have found that "Practice makes perfect," how much more may we as Christians expect from the spirit resources which are ours!

We are nothing; but as we do the best we can with what we have, I believe our powers may be increased—

'Twas battered and scarred, and the auctioneer

Thought it scarcely worth his while
To waste much time on the old violin,
But held it up with a smile:
"What am I bidden, good folks," he cried,
"Who'll start the bidding for me?"
"A dollar, a dollar;" then, "Two!" "Only two?"
Two dollars, and who'll make it three?
Three dollars once, three dollars twice;
Going for three—" But no,
From the room, far back, a gray haired man
Came forward and picked up the bow;
Then, wiping the dust from the old violin,
And tightening the loosened strings,
He played a melody pure and sweet
As a caroling angel sings.

The music ceased, and the auctioneer,
With a voice that quiet and low,
Said: "What am I bid for the old violin?"
And he held it up with the bow.
"A thousand dollars, and who'll make it two?"
Two thousand! And who'll make it three?
Three thousand, once, three thousand, twice,
And going, and gone," said he.
The people cheered, but some of them cried,
"We do not quite understand What changed its worth." And came the reply:

"The touch of a master's hand."

And many a man with life out of tune,
And battered and scarred with sin,
Is auctioned cheap to the thoughtless crowd,
Much like the old violin.
A "mess of pottage," a glass of wine;
A game—and he travels on.
He is "going" once, and "going" twice,
He's "going" and almost "gone."
But the Master comes, and the foolish crowd
Never can quite understand
The worth of a soul and the change that's wrought
By the touch of the Master's hand.

WHAT JESUS SAID ABOUT RIGHT LIVING.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR SEPTEMBER 10, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Matthew 5:13-26.

Daily Readings—

Monday—Righteousness of the Pharisees—Luke 11:39-44.

Tuesday—Christ's Abiding Purpose—John 9:1-4.

Wednesday—Forgiveness Personified—Luke 23:33, 34.

Thursday—Love, the Fulfillment of Law—Matt. 22:35-40.

Friday—Peter's Testimony of Christ—Acts 10:34-41.

Saturday—Christ, the Example of Believers—I Peter 2:21-25.

Someone has said that there are three kinds of people—those who do not live up to any laws, those who live up only to the laws that men enforce in our common life, and those who live according to inward laws that no man can enforce. Christians should be in the last of these three. Their actions are governed by standards and ideals that are inwardly cherished, but which can never be outwardly enforced.

This topic may be used in a round-table discussion.

Give some time to discussing the results of right living. Enumerate the enjoyments in the day-by-day experiences of people with Christian character.

For Meditation or Short Talks—

1. There are no gradations of right and wrong in Jesus' standard for living.
2. All living is an expression of man's spirit.
3. Right living is a social experience and includes one's relationships with others.
4. Right living is a process of growth.
5. Right living regards God as the owner of all and oneself as a steward.
6. Right living involves certain values of the spiritual realm which are contrary to the values commonly exalted in the secular world.

The closing moments of this meeting should be a period of dedication. Let us consecrate our lives to Christ in the manner of right living.

Suggested Hymns—

"What a Friend We Have in Jesus."

"Come, Thou Fount."

"Take My Life and Let It Be."

S. E. M.

"Unswerving faith will make one true to God and the church regardless of all persecutions that may come. When he fails, something is wrong with his faith."

ISAIAH: A LIFE DEDICATED TO GOD.

LESSON X—SEPTEMBER 3, 1939.

GOLDEN TEXT: Here am I, send me.
Isaiah 6:8.

LESSON: Isaiah 6:1-13.

The Turning Point in a Young Man's Life.

Reader's Digest, that deservedly popular magazine, carries a brief section each month entitled "Turning Points." These stories are highly human-interest accounts of how the whole careers of successful men and women have turned upon some incident or event, sometimes seemingly rather trivial, and common-place things. They make interesting and stimulating reading. But none of them can surpass, or even equal, the drama or the significance of the turning point in the life of Isaiah, which furnishes the background for today's Sunday school lesson. For he was one of the world's greatest men, an orator, without equal, a statesman, a prophet of profound spiritual insight and power. All that he became and did was due in large measure to the vision in the temple, the turning point in his life. Because, like Paul, he was not disobedient to the heavenly vision, he became one of the world's immortals. How little do we dream of the unsuspected possibilities of the common-place! For some of you who read these notes there may be just in the offing some incident, some experience that will change the whole course of your life, and make or break you. Life is an adventure. We ought to face every day on tip-toe. We ought to be alert to the divine voice, quick to hear it, and quick to obey it.

A Vision of God.

In the year that king Uzziah died I saw the Lord, sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up." This thoughtful young man may have been in a sober mood when he went into the temple on that day. Uzziah's reign had been a long and prosperous one, but already there were signs that a backwash had set in. Conditions were very much unsettled, and no one knew what might happen. There was need of a strong hand to guide the affairs of the nation. It is against this dark background that we must interpret the vision. On a throne, high and lifted up, sat the eternal God, the true King, not only of Judah, but of the whole world. His personality was over-powering—His train filled the temple, and His glory filled the whole earth. At the sound of His voice the foundations of that magnificent and extensive temple did shake. But above it all sounded the cries of the angelic attendants of this sovereign, spiritual Lord of hosts, proclaiming His holiness, His separateness, His spotless purity, His perfection. Ever afterwards the central theme of the prophet's preaching was "the holiness of God." This was Isaiah's distinctive contribution to the prophetic discovery of the nature of God. Whatever else the vision involved, it gave to Isaiah a fresh, a transforming vision of God. In a later day Jesus said that the world did not know the Father. Then as now our supreme need is a vision of God.

A Sense of Sin.

"Then said I, woe is me for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips." Isaiah was undoubtedly one of the finest, cleanest young men in Jerusalem. But when he found himself in the presence of the holy God, he immediately became conscious, painfully conscious, of his own unworthiness and his short-coming and his sinfulness. It was like the Scottish housewife who thought her clothes had been washed white, until snow fell on them, revealing how imperfectly white they really were. Here is one of the main functions and contributions of worship. If we measure ourselves only by others, we can make out a pretty good case for ourselves. But when we come into the presence of the Holy One of Israel, when we stand in the presence of the Crystal Christ, we see our sinfulness and realize our need. Every man needs the discipline which is involved in true worship. A man cannot live at his best unless he is made to see himself at his worst.

A Sense of the Sinfulness of Others.

"I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips." The order is significant. Ordinarily we see the sins of others, but are blind to our sins. Jesus spoke about trying to cast a mote out of the eye of another, while we have a beam in our own eye. But when a man stands in the presence of the holy God, as revealed in Jesus Christ, he will first think of his own sins. And then he will see more clearly and more fairly the sins of others. He will see that he is caught up in sin as a social fact of life. He will understand that others need the same cleansing that he needs. He will feel the missionary impulse, for as he needs cleansing, so do others. There is none righteous, no not one, for all have sinned and come short of the glory of God. One cannot understand the need of others fully until he has seen the need in his own life. And a man who has seen his own sinful nature will be slow to condemn others.

A Cleansing from Sin.

"And he touched my mouth with it, and said, Lo this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin forgiven." If we confess our sins He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all righteousness. That cleansing is not by our own efforts, nor can it be done by earthly agents. It was a live coal from off the altar that burned away the dross and cleansed. None can forgive sins but God; that is, true cleansing is a divine act. God alone can make the unclean clean. At His touch we become whole and clean again.

A Call to Service.

"And I heard the voice of the Lord saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" Cleansed of his sin, and seeing the desperate needs of his fellow-men, there came a divine call to service. It was because his heart had been cleansed that he heard the voice. And here as is so often the case, the call came in terms of human needs. The need of sinful, needy, suffering men in itself is a divine call. Today as always the call comes, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?"

A Living Sacrifice, Acceptable Unto God.

"Then said I, Here am I, send me." This young man stood at the crossroads of life and destiny. He did not know what was involved; he did not need to know that. But he did know that God had spoken to him, and He had called him. And fully, without any reservation, he gave himself to that call. He could not see the end of the journey, but he did see the first steps. With rare abandon and with abiding faith he followed what light he had. He went out to be one of the greatest men of all time. Today, if ye hear His voice, say, "Here am I, send me."

Prayer.

Almighty God, with Whom is the fountain of life, and in whose Light we shall see light, cause Thy face to shine upon us, and open our eyes, that like Thy servant of old, we may see Thee high and lifted up, and may

MONDAY.

"LIFE'S NOBLE DICTUM."

"Consider the lilies . . . even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."—Matt. 6: 28, 29.

The chief concern of most folks today seems to be what they shall eat, what they shall wear, and how they shall wear it. Life's chief quest seems to be, pleasure, comfort and ease. So high is this standard that the income of a great portion of the population does not meet the demand, therefore we have the strikes, the rebellions, the loans that cannot be met—and we are headed for disaster.

Besides, the immediate future does not promise much better hope. Boys and girls are going to college because they believe that in so doing they will draw a bigger salary, and when they find that it does not do that, they consider education worthless. The one who has ideals of education for service and achievement is considered abnormal. This is the present dictum of life, and it is all backwards.

The dictum of Jesus is what we need, and the dictum of Jesus is: "Take no thought for your life." "To enter heaven maimed is better than living your life in your own idea of self-sufficiency—to keep the commandments is life." "I am the bread of life." "To be spiritually-minded is life." "Righteousness is the supreme object of life." How do you stack up with this?

Prayer—(Pray as you feel, concluding with the Lord's prayer.)

TUESDAY.

"THE OBJECT OF A SERMON."

"Come see a man, which told me all the things that ever I did: Is not this the Christ."—John 4: 29.

Our text is a word picture of the action of a person to whom Jesus had been talking. Her action evinces that which should be in the preaching of, or in the given testimony of the Lord. The object of preaching and teaching is to convince and move to action.

This person, remember, was not a preacher, but her action was moving and saving. Only when Christians let go their experience in Christ, will the world be saved. The task is too big for the handful of preachers. In fact it is the action of His Spirit among men of everyday life that is capable of effectual results.

Prayer—"O dear Christ, help us not to be timid but courageous and speak that which we know of Thee." Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"ARE THEY SAYING IT?"

"Let the redeemed of the Lord say so."—Ps. 107: 2.

Speaking of lay-witnessing, it seems to us that the Christian has something to say, and that he who fails to say it is not guiltless in the sight of God. Midst broken ideals, broken homes, shattered hopes, lost ambitions, the morass of poverty and the horrors of evil all around us, the world today stands in need of a mighty uprising of Christianity.

What we ought to say is: that communion with God is the way out for everyone; that the Spirit of God is seeking for and must find expression in every one's life; that evil must be disposed of and forsaken at whatever cost, and that positive good must be the halo of every one's life. Let us not fail, for Jesus' sake.

Prayer—O God, grant that we may not stand back and be silent. Give us courage for the task of living the redeemed life, and of telling it wherever we go. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"SILENT GLORY."

"He was transfigured before them."—Matt. 17: 2.

The words of our text are taken from the story of the Transfiguration, in which, in a few brief silent moments Jesus and those with Him were transfigured into a heavenly scene and visions of glory.

During the years since this scene, thousands of others have had their transfigured experiences. Paul began with one and often in his later years he rose to magnificent heights in visions of the heavenly glory, in which he could not say all he wanted to. Others (we have seen them), have in time of spiritual power, risen to ecstatic heights in which they became unconscious of surroundings and were lost in wonder as they gazed far away into the face of the Lord.

Such experiences are still possible to you and me. Would that we had more of them. Let us try. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"A BEAUTIFUL SETTING."

"His ways are ways of pleasantness and all His paths are peace."—Prov. 3: 17.

We sat in the home of a friend the other day facing a large window. This window framed a glorious picture of God's all out doors. In this picture were canyons below, hillside homes and gardens further on, and in the distance the sea that was illuminated by a golden sky and sunset that beggars description.

In the papers and magazines the ingenuity of man has fitly framed a beautiful woman in a setting of fruit, or roses, or gardens (too often used to advertise), or perhaps some glorified scene of nature.

Why do not more people live in such pictures? There is no monopoly on any of it. "For me to live is Christ" said Paul. Whatever he meant, he must have included the idea that to live in a setting of Jesus is a most beautiful life, of which the window scene is a true symbol.

OUR PREACHER FOR THIS WEEK IS
REV. ALAN T. JONES,
DEMOREST, GA.

AMOS.

With all the progress being made in his day Amos suspected the devil was making progress, too. From his home on the edge of the wilderness he would go to the big city of Bethel to peddle his wool and figs and to observe “Civilization.”

This is what he saw:

1. Big landowners so eager for real estate that they “panted after the dust on the heads of the poor,” hoping to wash it off and add it to the dirt they already had, (2:7);

2. Judges moved less by the rights of orphans and widows than by the bribes of the rich, (5:12);

3. Merchants, dealing falsely with balances, and impatient that their stores should be closed on Sunday, (8:5);

4. And priests raising money by what they called “sacred” prostitution. (We would deplore that. But then wouldn't they deplore our way of legalizing gambling and the liquor traffic to get money for schoolbooks? Wouldn't they say, “Sorry, but it's tainted money or tain't money?”)

Everywhere there was such a love of the Almighty Shekel that society became divided into millionaires and paupers. A few were building summer houses inlaid with ivory (3:15), and many of the poor were sold into slavery because they lacked the trifling price of a pair of shoes (2:6). As Hosea put it, “Ephraim is a cake not turned!” (Hosea 6:8)—the heat so distributed that the bottom half of the pancake was burned black, while the top remained pasty dough. Men had learned to create more wealth, but not how to distribute it. Were they any better off?

As Amos walked home, he thought of his forefathers in the wilderness. Within the tribe all men were brothers and none were slaves. They never dreamed that the green pastures and the still waters should belong only to a small minority. Was not the way forward to go back to the fundamentals of that life—to loving men more than money, to square-dealing, to brotherhood under God? Without these there would be no future civilization, only doom.

“Square dealing?” Our expression is weak beside the urgent, graphic language of Amos. “Behold the Lord stood upon a wall with a plumbline in His hand. And the Lord said unto me, Amos, what seest thou? And I said, a plumbline. Then said the Lord, Behold I will set a plumbline in the midst of my people Israel” (7:7, 8). God has so made the world that a crooked wall, and all other forms of crookedness, will fall.

Qualifications for Preaching.

To the east of the hills where Amos pastured his sheep the land drops down three thousand feet and more to the Dead Sea. Especially when the sun is rising over the distant mountains of Moab, the view is sublime—that is, if one is up in time to see it, and Amos was no man to lie in bed mornings. Why should he not be contented to enjoy this beauty and let the rest of the world go by? Why was Jesus to set his face toward Jerusalem when he might well have enjoyed a happy home and years of pleasant teaching? In the answer to these questions lies the difference between the man who gets his sermons up and the one who gets them down, between a man with a message and a message with a man.

“When the lion roars, who does not shudder? When the Lord speaks, who can but prophesy?” (4:8.) When Amos was watching his sheep by night and suddenly behind him a lion roared, did he tremble because he wanted to? No more did he preach because he wanted to. He would have understood the cry of St. Paul, “Woe is me if I preach not the gospel!” (I Cor. 9:16), or the protest of Jeremiah, “If I say, I will not speak any more in his name, then there is in my heart as it were a burning fire shut up in my bones.” (Jer. 20:9.)

So Amos was to be, not a pretty elocutionist getting applause, but a man whom God compelled to preach getting run out of town. Amaziah, the king's priest, was to tell him, “You dreamer! Be off to Judah and earn your living there, play the prophet there, but never again at Bethel.” (7:12—Moffatt.)

(Our sympathies are all with Amos for none of us deeply respects that offensively inoffensive man with his nice little talks on how nice it is for us all to be nice. Yet we will be slow to condemn Amaziah, for it is quite possible that he condemned himself, that like many of us he had a wife and children to support, that he, too, thought it prudent to compromise in

FAMILY ALTAR.

Prayer—Dear Lord, the joy that was set before Thee, sit Thou before us, and make our souls beautiful forever.” Amen.

SATURDAY.

“GOD'S CARE OF THE INDIVIDUALS.”

“Thou hast . . . laid Thy hand upon me.”—Ps. 139:5.

We often hear someone assert an opinion that God does not look out for individuals, that such a belief is sheer nonsense. “How can such a busy God,” they say, “have time for my little affairs? My way might even hinder His progress.”

Well, Jesus spoke of the sparrows, each having God's care, and He has promised us even more. Experience has verified the truth of that fact. The Word, even life itself, is replete with the truth of God's intimate knowledge of each individual.

While we adore God for the streams of bounty which flow unceasingly toward all men, let us beware lest we ourselves lose hold of the fact that He is mindful of us individually, as if the universe were blotted out. Trust Him.

Prayer—Our dear Father, enable us to see Thee as Thou art, to know Thee in Thy loving care, and to be strengthened in Thy might, to be steadfast and never lose faith. Amen.

SUNDAY.

“GOD IS WITH US.”

“Thou hast holden me with Thy right hand.”—Ps. 73:23.

Read the whole Psalm. The Psalmist was dismayed because of overwhelming evil and was about to share his gloom with others. But he thought on his way, and, in doing so, was reminded what grievous hurt he might do others. Thus he got hold of himself, decided he would not let go his discouragement. He went to the church of God, he worshipped, he prayed, and he offered himself unto the Lord. The Psalmist was at peace.

You have your blue days, don't you? Very well, in the words of a very meaningful slang, “don't let it get you down.” Trust God and serve Him.

Prayer—O Lord, we draw nigh to Thee. We look for the fulfilment of Thy promise to draw nigh to us. Amen.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Our financial report this week carries us over the nine thousand dollar mark; eight months gone, four more months in which to raise the other eleven thousand dollars to meet our budget for the year. In checking over our record book of the income, I find that we have received $347.78 less than we did last year up to this time. We also find that the Sunday schools and members of our denomination have sent us the sum of only $6,050.08. We have received from sources other than our church the sum of $3,059.00. You can readily see that one-third of the money we have received to run the orphanage so far has come from outside of our church, and had it not come to the orphanage, not one dollar of it would have gone to any other department of the church.

We had quite an expense this year in drilling a deep well. Our old well failed us. We had to drill 270 feet to get below quick-sand. The new deep well pump and the pipe line from the pump to the buildings cost a lot of money. It was a necessary expense and could not be helped. All of this extra expense was not counted in our budget and has depleted our bank account. The Conference year will soon close. I want to appeal to all the churches to raise their Conference Apportionments and send the orphanage's part direct to the orphanage. We need it. I truly hope all our churches will do their best to close the church year with all Conference Apportionments paid in full. Don't you think that would be fine?

PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

So would we keep very near to that spirit which can make of our worthless lives instruments of usefulness.

For each of us our work in Pilgrim Fellowship must often wait until we perform other duties, which are more compelling. I wonder if you have ever thought—as I have in an especially discouraging moment—that our small contribution was indeed so small that, for all our ardor, it could only be lost in the confusion of life around us. But someone has said, "The true way to conquer circumstances is to be a greater circumstance yourself."

Again as we think of great men who have lived before, we have found that no obstacle was too great if they had a keen enough desire:

Longfellow translated the "Inferno" by snatches of ten minutes a day, while waiting for his coffee to boil, persisting for years until the work was done.

Galileo was a surgeon, yet to the improvement of his spare moments the world owes some of its greatest discoveries.

Milton was a teacher, Secretary of the Commonwealth, and secretary to the Lord Protector, but he found time to write "Paradise Lost" and many other great poems.

Lincoln studied law during his spare hours, while surveying.

Of course, it is not easy. It takes concentration and sacrifice. It may be that we will even occasionally have to follow the examples of the Italian scholar who put over his door the inscription, "Whoever carries here must join in my labors." But if you and I are steadfast in our Purpose, ours is a cause which cannot be lost.

Our task demands a lot of work perhaps some suffering, and patience—but we have our faith for sustenance. "No great deed is done by falterers who ask for certainty." We must expect the hard places. And we must meet criticism as did the man who, when told that even small boys laughed at his singing, said: "Then I must learn to sing better."

And we must stand unwaveringly for the thing we believe to be right.

"Endurance is a much better test of character than any one act of heroism, however noble."

When our efforts are rooted in the deep spirituality which characterizes Christian living at its best, it seems to me that—to vary the language of another—the three great essentials to success in our Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship are: Practice, Patience, and Perseverance—and the greatest of these is Perseverance.

My hope is that during our stay here, and throughout our year, we may say with the assurance of our faith those words which Columbus entered in his logbook: "This day we sailed westward, which was our course."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

behold the King in the beauty of His holiness. May this vision of Thyself reveal to us our imperfections and our sins, and cause us to seek Thy forgiveness, for Thou hast promised that if we confess our sins Thou art faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. May the sense of our own sins make us more sympathetic with our fellowmen, and more sensitive to their needs. Forbid that we should judge, lest in judging others we should condemn ourselves.

Help us to see in human need a divine call to service. May we, by the mercies of God, present our bodies a living sacrifice, wholly acceptable unto Thee, which is our reasonable service. Help us to be obedient to the heavenly vision, and to be good workmen that needeth not to be ashamed, going about doing good, bearing one another's burdens, and so fulfilling the law of Christ. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Lord bless thee and keep thee; the Lord make His face to shine upon thee and be gracious unto thee; the Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon thee and give thee peace. Amen.

"Reader, if Christ is yours, and you are Christ's, is there anything on which you may more confidently repose than that Jesus is making continual intercession for you, ever displaying the merits of His cross and precious blood, not only for the Church at large, but for thee, even for sinful thee?"

In Memoriam

PILAND.

We, the members of Bethlehem Christian Church, wish to pay tribute to our beloved member and deacon, Brother Isaac Piland, who died April 26, 1939. He was a faithful member and a loyal deacon. He was a member of the Men's Bible Class. His going has left a vacant pew that was before seldom vacant. Therefore be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of our heavenly Father.
2. That we hold in loving remembrance his loyalty and quiet personality.
3. That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to his family and commend them to God, whose grace is sufficient for them.
4. That a copy of these resolutions be placed on our church record, a copy be sent to the family, and a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

DUKE.

On March 16, 1939, it was God's will to call from our midst our beloved brother Clifton J. Duke. He was a member of Bethlehem Church from childhood, and a member of the Men's Bible Class. He had been in declining health for sometime, yet was bright and cheerful to the end. His life was a benediction to all who came in contact with him. Therefore be it resolved:

1. That in his death we have lost a noble Christian character.
2. That we extend our sympathy to his companion, his children, and his aged mother, and point them to a loving heavenly Father.
3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be recorded on our church record, and a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

a world where those who refuse to compromise pay dearly, sometimes with their lives.)

Be all that as it may, Amos was permitted to preach at least one glorious sermon. Perhaps not more than once in a century will we find a man hewing to the line, as he did, and this not in some safe and secluded corner, but back in the chief city of Bethel, at the royal shrine. We might call his sermon one on

"What God Wants."

Amos began as the prophet Nathan began with David (II Sam. 12), pointing out the sins of others, which men are more apt to see than their own. He told how God would punish the men of Damascus for fighting with "instruments of iron." (1:3.) Just as today there are those who do not relish a type of war involving gas masks for babies, so back then some didn't fancy the new "civilized" weapons of iron, especially when a hostile nation had them. At the very beginning Amos won some hearty "Amens" from the crowd, and they were even more enthusiastic when he announced God's disapproval of the soldiers of Ammon for making no distinction between combatants and non-combatants, for butchering women and children. (1:13.)

Suddenly, however, the "Amens" stopped. Men looked at one another, their eyes big with wonder. For the first time in history a preacher was proclaiming that God is not a tribal god, but a just God, to whom the lives of all men are sacred, whether in Damascus or in Ammon or in Israel.

If twenty-seven centuries later nations still refuse to acknowledge the King of kings, shall we wonder that Amaziah dispatched a message to King Jeroboam saying, "Amos has conspired against thee." (7:10.) For what patriot could talk like Amos? "Are you not as the children of the Ethiopians unto me, O children of Israel? saith the Lord. Have I not brought up Israel out of the land of Egypt?" Yes, but also "the Philistines from Caphtor, and the Syrians from Kir?" (9:7.) Before God, then, no one nation has special privileges. What counts is not my side, or your side, but God's side of righteousness.

Now in his audience Amos had a rich judge, who by the way thought nothing of accepting bribes (5:12). But he loved a dignified and beautiful service. As a matter of fact he had contributed the new robes for the choir. And he could be counted on to buy a ticket for every church supper. "Why should this preacher find fault with me?" he asked himself. And then he shouted to Amos, "Say, brother, I've got religion!"

"Yes, I know," replied Amos, "but what kind of religion?" Whereupon Amos went on to say that the heart of religion does not consist in all-day sings, in dinners on the grounds, or even in solemn ceremonies that stir our feelings. Because men have made these things the sum-total of religion and forgotten all about honest living, "therefore I hate, I despise your feasts. I will take no delight in your solemn assemblies. . . . Take thou away from me the noise of thy songs. But let justice roll down as waters and righteousness as a mighty stream." (5:21-24.)

With these verses we have reached the heart of Amos' message. Micah (6:8) and Jesus (Matt. 6:33) were to give fuller and more balanced statements of what God desires of men, but both believed with Amos that God insistently wants righteousness. Do we believe it, too?

"We are told to use all our gifts of mind in the study of God's Word. But the secret of the Word comes out when the Master Himself interprets it by His Holy Spirit. If these days . . . are going to be days of restoration for you and me, it is going to mean the interpretation of the Word of God through the Holy Spirit. May the Lord Himself draw near and unfold to us the Scriptures. If you have lost the joy of Bible study, get back to your Lord.

The Church Year

By AUBREY C. TODD.

Things to Do in September

Vacations are over and we are turning to our work with renewed devotion. With the beginning of the public school year we are becoming education-conscious, and are making plans for the religious education program of the church. Surveys are being made to see what damage the summer has done and what plans should be made for the fall. It is the time of the year when the church is humming with activity.

Churches that have not been having services during the summer, or that have not been running full schedule, should plan to make the first services challenging. There is no advantage or necessity in taking the entire month to get going. Youth groups should get under way immediately. It is especially important that the opening of school be taken advantage of, and that recognition be given to the young people who will leave their homes to attend colleges.

Pastors should have something to say about the value of an education and the importance of choosing a vocation. This is an appropriate time to speak of the part that Elon College plays in our section of the country. The need for trained religious workers should be emphasized, and young people made acquainted with this field. The most intelligent and consecrated young people in our communities are the ones who should be planning to enter the field of religion. The future of the church depends on them.

Something should be done about the mid-week services of the church. A great opportunity for religious training is muddled by many churches that take the easy path of reserving these services for the ill-planned, and often not planned at all, traditional "prayer-meeting." Forums, book reviews, and study courses will take a great deal of preparation, but they will make the mid-week service more meaningful. Churches that are planning leadership training classes for the fall may secure the necessary form blanks and certificates from the Promotional Secretary.

September is a good month to make a religious survey of the church and community. If the church has gotten into a rut during the summer months, the first step in getting out is to frankly face the situation and the task ahead. Churches that are planning surveys may secure suggestions for a church analysis by writing to "The Church Year" in care of this paper.

Most church schools plan their Promotion programs in this month, so that the classes can get organized in time for the new quarter. Superintendents should keep in mind that all conferences of the Southeast are planning to celebrate Rally Day the first of October, and should be making plans in advance.

Churches that celebrate Holy Communion every three months may wish to have such a service the last of this month, in order to get in line for Christmas and Easter. Christmas Eve will be the last Sunday in December and Easter will be the last Sunday in March. An article dealing with the communion service will appear at an early date in this paper.

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

Rev. E. J. Sanderson has gone from his churches at Monticello and Haw River to his new home in Rochester, N. Y., where he will serve a church and attend seminary.

Last week Rev. O. D. Poythress aided Rev. S. E. Madren in a revival at Good Hope. Seventeen members were added to the church roll, eleven on profession of faith.

Rev. C. E. Newman and Rev. and Mrs. F. Ervin Hyde were among those attending Massanetta Bible Conference at Massanetta Springs, near Harrisonburg, Virginia, recently.

On next Sunday Rev. LeGrand Moody will complete his pastorate in North Carolina, and will go to Connecticut to begin a pastorate and to take work in Yale Divinity School.

Mt. Auburn Christian Church has recently concluded a revival held with the neighboring Baptist Church. Eight members were added to our church and ten were baptized by the pastor, Rev. E. M. Carter.

Rev. E. M. Carter reports a fine revival at New Hope with three additions to the membership and two more to come. Mr. Cecil Thomas, a Sophomore at Elon College and Student Summer Service worker, did the preaching.

Rev. Emanuel Hedgebeth of Holland, Va., has just completed the summer's work at our new church in Hopé Mills, N. C., and has returned to his home for a visit before entering Yale Divinity School the latter part of this month.

The Ladies Aid Societies of the churches in Group No. 4, Valley of Virginia Conference, paid all expenses for Rev. and Mrs. R. D. Coulter, in order that they might attend the Bible Conference at Massanetta Springs for the last week of the session.

Dr. and Mrs. W. M. Jay attended the last week of Bible Conference at Massanetta Springs. They returned to Winston-Salem, where they were joined by their daughters, Virginia and Mary Nelle; then continued on to Holland and Suffolk for a short visit. Miss Virginia will remain in Suffolk where she will teach for another year.

CHRISTIAN SUN readers who knew him will learn with deep regret of the sudden death of Dr. J. L. Rawls of Suffolk, Va., on Tuesday of this week. Dr. Rawls, Superintendent of City Schools of Suffolk John E. Martin, and his brother, Mr. Bruce Martin of Norfolk, were killed instantly when the car in which they were riding was sideswiped by another car while on a bridge, crashed through the side rails and fell bottom-side-up to the tracks of the Virginian Railway thirty feet below. They were on their way to Hopewell, Va., to see Mr. Martin's father who was ill in that city.

OUR CHAPLAIN SPEAKS IN CHINA.

The Shanghai (China) Times for July 14, 1939 carries the picture of Chaplain H. E. Rountree and an announcement from which the following is taken:

"The Fourth Marines Church at the Metropol Theatre, on Sunday morning will have, for the first time in many months, a guest speaker, Chaplain H. E. Rountree of the U. S. S. Henderson. Special services and musical numbers have been arranged for the occasion. Chaplain Rountree has selected for his subject the topic 'The New Birth Scientifically Explained.' Chaplain Rountree's experiences in the field of religion have been many, and no doubt his message to the Fourth Marines Church will be of great importance to all."

C. M. A. TO AID NEW PASTORATE.

At the 1938 session of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Missionary Association, the following action was taken: An offer to Mt. Bethel, New Lebanon, Kallam's Grove and Howard's Chapel of $300.00 per year for two years if they would group and continue a minimum of $800.00 per year toward a pastor's salary.

These churches definitely have decided to accept the offer and have so notified the financial secretary.

It is his understanding that the churches plan to exceed the minimum requirements of the Association as to salary, and also propose to furnish the rental of a parsonage. It is understood the pastor secured will live within the bounds of the pastorate.

This is good news and encouraging to those who are interested in the grouping of our rural churches into pastorates offering contiguous fields of pastoral service and providing support sufficient to meet the needs of minister and his family.

This new pastorate has been designated temporarily Pastorate No. 2. May material success, brotherly happiness, and spiritual growth and service attend this progressive action by these four churches.

J. H. LIGHTBOURNE,
Financial Secretary.

STEWARDSHIP EMPHASIS.

At this season of the year all churches are looking toward plans for the Every-Member Canvass. Such is needful, and the church which does not take advantage of Stewardship instruction as the proper means of introducing the Every-Member-Canvass will make a mistake from which the church will suffer during the coming year. Of course, we need to teach Stewardship for all of life, but the fall season of the year is a good time to emphasize the Stewardship of Money.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Revival services were held last week in Bethlehem and Liberty Spring Churches. At Bethlehem the services were conducted by Rev. R. E. Brittle, pastor. Twenty-four members were received at the close of the meeting. Rev. H. E. Crutchfield assisted the writer at Liberty Spring. Twelve members were received on Friday night. Others will join before the meeting of the Annual Conference.

The people of Liberty Spring were well pleased with the preaching by Rev. H. E. Crutchfield. His sermons were well prepared and spiritually edifying. It was his first visit to this church in this capacity. The congregation will welcome his return. It was a pleasure for the pastor to be able to attend every service and take an active part. The fellowship with the visiting minister was fine. The pastor could not keep pace with him at the dining tables, but he was not out of sight. Returning health adds a thrill to one who has found so much joy in the active ministry. On Wednesday night a large delegation came from Mt. Carmel Church, driving a distance of twenty-five miles, to hear their pastor. This was a tribute to him and a fine indication of their appreciation of him. It is an inspiration to the pastor when his people are loyal and enthusiastic. A church can make the pastor a greater preacher by loyalty and encouragement. It can break his heart and wreck his future by adverse criticism and lack of cooperation.

The chief difference between churches is the spirit of the congregation. The wealth of the members is not the real measure of the strength of the church. A church with a large membership may be very weak. The church with a small membership may be very strong. Where there is unity, love, cooperation, friendship, peace, and a deep desire to build the spiritual life of the church there is strength and a promise of progress. In such an atmosphere the minister finds a sweet fellowship and the church becomes attractive to prospective members. Poor people can equal the rich in making a contribution to the fellowship of the church. Poverty is not a barrier to friendship and good-will.

In the remaining weeks of this Conference year there are many opportunities to increase the efficiency of our churches, and add to the membership, such as are being saved. The fields are white unto the harvest. Faithful laborers can increase the ingathering of the harvest by consecrated effort. Conference apportionments should be raised in full. Sunday school and church worship services should be more largely attended. Definite tasks should be assumed by Sunday school classes and the other organizations of the local churches. The revival spirit should permeate every department of our churches. Give the church building a good "fall cleaning." Clean out the cob-webs. Polish the furniture. Cut down the grass and weeds. Go to church. Put a smile on your face. Tune your voice to say, "Glad to see you," with sincerity. Greet others with a warm hand-clasp. Rejoice in the Lord. Be good, and help to make your church great.

DR. W. C. WICKER.

For the first time in the past eight years at least, death has broken the ranks of our faculty at Elon College. The college and community were greatly shocked early Thursday afternoon by the announcement of the death of Dr. W. C. Wicker, head of the Department of Mathematics for the past eight years. Dr. Wicker was the presiding officer for the annual Robert Morris Day program at the Masonic and Eastern Star Home in Greensboro. In addition to presiding during the forenoon session he had spoken briefly and appeared to be in his usual health. Following a picnic lunch on the grounds he was walking across the yard with two boys when stricken. Medical aid was administered immediately, but he died almost instantly.

Dr. Wicker was an alumnus of Elon College, a member of the class of 1893. For work done in Columbia University he was awarded his Master of Arts degree. Union Christian College in Indiana conferred upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity. He had done graduate work in Duke University, Columbia University, University of Chicago, University of Virginia, and University of North Carolina. He was one of the best informed men on our faculty and in educational circles in the South. He has been a member of the faculty of Elon College for a number of years and taught practically every subject on the curriculum. He was very prominent in Masonic affairs in the state. Dr. Wicker was an ordained minister of the Christian Church, served as president of the Eastern North Carolina Christian Conference for a number of years, and has been pastor of churches in North Carolina and Virginia since graduating from Elon College in 1893.

Dr. Wicker was given a place on the Elon faculty as teacher of mathematics the year after I came to Elon as president. I would like to bear witness to his friendship, loyalty, and ability. No member of the faculty has been or could be more anxious for the advancement of the college or the success of the present administration. He did faithfully the tasks assigned and during the past months worked many days when he should have been resting. When the Elon College Development Campaign was launched, Dr. Wicker pledged and paid in cash $1,000.00. When the Golden Anniversary Campaign was launched, he pledged and paid two memberships in the Golden Anniversary Campaign. The last conversation I had with him was in regard to the opening of the college on September 5, prospects for the coming year, and the Anniversary Campaign. He expressed himself as being very happy because of the present outlook for the college and the possibility of clearing the college of its debts. He said, "We must get the debt paid this year. You know what I have done, and I am willing to do more if necessary." It will not seem right to open school without Dr. Wicker. The students will miss him, the faculty will miss him, and the writer of this article will know that a loyal, true friend has gone from our midst.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Pattie Newman Wicker; three sons, W. Staley Wicker, Dr. Daniel Wicker, and Rev. Worth Wicker; two daughters, Mrs. L. R. Johnston and Mrs. Ruth Rogers; a brother, Edward Wicker of Sanford; and a sister, Mrs. Sam B. Watson of Sanford. Funeral services were conducted by the writer who is pastor of the college church, from the college chapel Sunday afternoon at three o'clock. Burial was in Magnolia Cemetery, Elon College.

L. E. SMITH.

"Learn to be good readers, which is perhaps a more difficult thing than you imagine. Learn to be discriminative in your reading; to read faithfully, and with your best attention, all kinds of things which you have a real interest in—a real, not an imaginary—and which you find to be really fit for what you are engaged in."

Religion Supported by Scholarship

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN.

"It is true that, while all scholars have not been devotees of religion, many of the best scholars in every period of recorded history have been interested in and devotees of religion." This, in substance, was the declaration of Dr. W. P. Paterson to our class in the "Philosophy of Religion" when I was a student in 1913-14 in the University of Edinburgh, Scotland. The fact that Dr. Paterson, then Dean of the University Divinity School, and later the President of the University, was recognized as the outstanding Scottish Theologian of that time, and as one of the three greatest students of Philosophy in Scotland, and one of the world's recognized leaders in scholarship, makes his observation of more than ordinary interest. Dr. Paterson contended that history would support the conclusion that "the more enlightened the period, the greater the concern the scholarship of the period showed in spiritual values."

The highest scholarship may have always been on the side of religion. But how different would history read if organized religion had always been on the side of scholarship! Many of the scholars who have been excommunicated from the church because of their intellectual deductions and pronouncements were more truly religious than the religious organization which denounced them. Scholars have been condemned as enemies to religious faith because their faith enabled them to see more than the church which condemned them wanted to see. Thus the men condemned as heretics by one generation have been canonized as saints by the next—and "the truth of Religion" has gone marching on, enlisting among its devotees the greatest scholars as well as the simplest folk of each period of time.

The fact that the best in scholarship has supported Christianity does not increase the truth of Christianity—but that fact argues for the truth which Christianity claims to possess.

While I was pastor for six years at the seat of one of the two largest State Universities in America—the last year of which time being Chaplain of the University, I frequently came in touch with a certain type of student whose number seems to be increasing at the present time—students who flout religion. Every pastor has met this type of young person. The observation previously referred to which was made by Dr. Paterson, the noted Scottish scholar, should be of sufficient challenge to embryonic scholars to cause them at least to "think it over," and observe contemporary scholarship to see whether or not, on their own respective campus, the observation made by Dr. Paterson will hold true.

Personally I believe it will hold true in practically every college or university today—the professors who hold the highest scholarship—except in some rare exceptions which might prove the rule—will be found to be devotees of religious faith.

This being true, it is no credit to an undergraduate's scholastic standing for him to discredit or ignore religion. The most Sophomoric-minded would readily acknowledge that many who knew at least "a little more" than they can personally boast of knowing "as yet" are not only ardent believers in "the Truth of Religion," as Eucken expressed it in the title of his great book several years ago, but that many of their intellectual superiors make religion the major concern of their lives, carrying out the injunction of Jesus—"Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness."

While I was pastor at the University of Illinois, two young Juniors in the University in different years came to me greatly disturbed by some things they had learned in one of their courses taught by an assistant professor. In each case the young man had come from a fine religious home with splendid Christian training as a background for his educational life. Each of the young men, up until the time they came to my office, had been more or less active in the work of the church, attending the various services quite regularly. Each at the time they came to talk to me was confident that he could no longer have any interest in religion, and wished to sever his relationship with the church. Each said he did not want to take any more responsibilities of a religious nature for, as they both expressed it, they "did not want to play the part of a hypocrite" by pretending they believed what reason would not permit them to believe. They were "done with it all."

The first fellow was an "A" student in nearly all his courses. He had his experience of revolt against religion about two years before the second one. So it was easier to handle the second case when it came. In fact, however, the method of approach used in dealing with these two young students was the same as I had used before and many times since with other students with favorable response. But these two cases are cited as a concrete illustration of the fact that logical minded students if put to the test will accept the logic of religion.

I found that none of the well-known philosophical arguments in support of religion made any appeal whatsoever to the first of the two bewildered lads, who had all at once become aware of having so much learning that he could no longer believe in religion.

After I had exhausted to no effect my supply of philosophical arguments, gleaned from seminary studies, I frankly told him that maybe he had run on to something in refutation of religion that I had never heard of and that if so, I was anxious to hear it, for if it was not reasonable to believe in religion, I wanted to find it out for myself. I told him, furthermore, that I would go along with him and give it up myself if he had the balance of argument on his side for, said I, "Who would want to dethrone reason in order to champion religion?"

I then gave him two sheets of paper, having written the following respective headings—on the one "Reasons Against Being a Christian;" on the other—"Reasons In Favor of Being a Christian." Naturally it would be more to the point to deal with a specific religion than to deal longer with religion in general as our search was of mutual concern and Christianity was the religion he was revolting against.

I asked him if he would write down on the one page the reasons he had in mind which made him conclude that the religion of Jesus was unreasonable. He hastily wrote three or four "stock in trade" arguments against the church, but not against the religion of Jesus. I called his attention to this oversight, and he readily saw that the arguments he had written against the church were not truly arguments against Christianity. So he crossed them out, and started to write about "the element of mystery involved in faith" and "the questionable validity of the gospel records," "the impracticality of prayer," etc., giving perhaps five items in all against the reasonableness of Christianity. Then he hesitated, and began to scratch his head as if trying to think. He started another statement but did not finish, though three-fourths of the one side of the page was waiting for further reasons to justify him to give up his religion.

Again to relieve him of his em-

Labor Sunday Message, 1939

[Issued by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. Requested to be read in the churches on Labor Sunday, September 10.]

The recent world conference of the churches held at Madras, India, to consider their missionary task issued to the world a stirring call to fellowship and Christian brotherhood. It is appropriate that the Church should speak this word at a time of conflict and confusion. In critical hours of human history. God has spoken through His Church and re-directed the course of human affairs. Once again the Church speaks to our age of transition and crisis and lifts up the practice of Christian brotherhood as a commanding ideal above the conflicting ideologies of the hour.

The most menacing evil from which the world is suffering today is lack of brotherhood. This lack has been conspicuous in the relations between race and race, nation and nation; employer and worker. On Labor Sunday our attention is especially directed to the area of our industrial and economic life. It is encouraging indeed that a new spirit of understanding and cooperation is becoming apparent between many employers and organized labor. Widespread recognition of labor unions, the acceptance of the principle of collective bargaining and the regulation of hours and fair labor standards now pave the way for more constructive and intelligent cooperation in American industry.

The trend toward industry-wide organization of employers for collective agreements with organized labor, covering whole industries, offers hope of the more stabilized labor relations and fewer strikes which characterize British and Swedish industry. We heartily commend the efforts of farsighted American employers toward this end and earnestly hope that such trends may be strengthened.

But today there are other areas of misunderstanding and strife to which we wish to call attention.

At the very time when the interests of workers require cooperation and unity, we see organized labor unable to agree within its own ranks. We would express the hope that the conflict between organizations of labor may be resolved and a genuine unity among all the representatives of labor be realized.

Industrial Workers and Farmers.

There is, however, another area to which the Church has in the past given little attention—namely, that of the relation between the industrial workers and farmers. Because of the lack of personal acquaintance and contacts between these two groups, there exists a widespread lack of understanding of each other's just needs and objectives. Prejudice and even bitterness feed on ignorance of these groups concerning each other. Yet farmers and industrial workers have much in common. Both cherish the principle of democracy in organization. Many farmers seek, through their farm organizations, the same essential democratic right of collective action to safeguard their interests as industrial workers seek through

PRAYER.

God, thou Father of us all, we praise thee that thou hast bound humanity in a great unity of life so that each must lean on the strength of all, and depend for his comfort and safety on the help and labor of his brothers.

We invoke thy blessing on all the men and women who have toiled to build and warm our homes, to fashion our raiment, and to wrest from sea and land the food that nourishes us and our children.

Since the comforts of our life are brought to us from afar, and made by those whom we do not know nor see, grant us organized intelligence and power that we may send the command of our righteous will along the channels of trade and industry, and help to cleanse them of hardness and unfairness.

May the time come when we need wear and use nothing that is wet in thy sight with human tears, or cheapened by wearing down the lives of the weak. Save us, we beseech thee, from unconscious guilt.

Speak thou to our souls and bid us strive for the coming of thy kingdom of justice when thy merciful and saving will shall be done on earth.

—Walter Rauschenbusch.

their labor unions. The same thrilling spirit of democracy, the same determination to have a voice in their own economic destinies, runs through both the organized labor and organized farmer movements.

Furthermore, many of the alleged conflicts of interest between farmers and industrial workers rest upon assumptions which are without foundation. There are, of course, wide differences in the economic status of farmers and also in the relations of large-scale farmers and employed labor. Doubtless the position of those farmers who own their own land is more analogous to that of the small business man than to that of the industrial worker. Nevertheless, the recent report of the National Resources Committee showed that the family incomes of farmers and of wage-earners are not far apart and that both are lower than those of all other occupations listed.

It has also been revealed by competent research that farmers' incomes and factory payrolls rise and fall together. While there is need of a just balance of prices of farm products and manufactured goods, there would be little necessity of restricting farm products if the masses of the city and industrial workers received sufficient real incomes to enable them to purchase all the food and clothing needed by their families.

One of the hopeful signs of the times is the fact that labor and farmers are discovering that they are consumers as well as producers. They are finding in the consumers' cooperative movement significant common ground with increasing benefits to both farmers and city workers. The freer exchange of farm and industrial products through consumers' cooperation offers at once a more abundant economic life to both groups and brings them together in what Dr. Toyohiko Kagawa has called a system of economic brotherhood.

Cooperation Among All Groups Needed.

We would point out again that the basic need, not only of farmers and labor, but of all economic groups, including employers and consumers, is to develop a broad understanding, a sympathetic attitude, a mutual loyalty and a spirit of confidence and good will. The soundness of these fundamental principles of Christian brotherhood affords the only sure basis for democracy and offers the only hope of the economic adjustments necessary to a practical and material solution of the problems which now confront us.

With this vital spirit of brotherhood and determined goodwill, all economic groups will be able effectively to deal with such basic violations of brotherhood and good economics as enforced unemployment, which falls with tragic effect on both rural and urban youth. Until unemployment is abolished and economic life is stabilized on high levels of production and just distribution, there remains a danger to our democratic institutions. Until unemployment is ended, there can exist neither a sound economic order nor a Christian brotherhood.

In conclusion we remind the Church that if nations, races, industry, labor, and farmers are to find a true basis of Christian democracy, it is her responsibility and privilege to sound in this hour the clarion call of brotherhood and lead mankind out of its present strife into the fellowship of Jesus Christ, who is our hope of brotherhood and the author and finisher of our faith.

GOLDEN RECEPTION FOR REV. AND MRS. CARDEN.

Rev. and Mrs. John S. Carden celebrated their Golden Wedding Anniversary on the evening of August 22, from eight until half after ten o'clock at their home on Shepard Street, Durham, N. C.

Guests were greeted at the front door by Miss Minnie Mae Franklin, a granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carden. Mrs. Leon Upchurch was standing at the living room door to greet them and to present them to Rev. and Mrs. Carden, A. F. Carden, who was their best man fifty years ago, and their daughters, Mrs. Bettie Sealf, Mrs. J. E. Harward, Mrs. L. D. Franklin, and Mrs. M. T. Wagner.

Mr. and Mrs. Carden were seated on a love seat. Directly behind them were tall arbors with yellow burning tapers. At each end were placed baskets filled with golden rod. Yellow candles were burning on the mantle.

Mrs. Fred Woods, another granddaughter, was at the door of the gift room. From there guests were ushered into the dining room by Miss Mary Bynum Patterson.

The dining table was covered with a lace cloth, the center piece being a crystal bowl filled with yellow chrysanthemums and ferns, and flanked by candelabra on each side. The only light in the dining room was that furnished by the burning tapers on the table and buffet. At each end of the table were punch bowls over which Mrs. Joe Rice and Mrs. Luther Trutman presided. Yellow wafers and yellow and white home-made mints were served with the punch.

Miss Jean Barry was on the sun porch to direct the guests. At the back of the reception hall Mrs. Raymond Rigsbee presided over the golden book, in which each guest registered.

In the music room Mrs. Ruth Berry, Mrs. Robert Kernodle, and Miss Bess White performed at the piano. Mrs. Robert Kernodle, Miss Virginia Harward, Mrs. Hubert Harward, and Paul Moize, rendered several vocal solos. Several piano selections were given by two granddaughters, Miss Mattie Rea Franklin and Miss Betty Sue Harward, under the direction of Miss Bess White.

At 9:30 o'clock at the sound of the wedding march, from the sun porch came little Miss Naoma Frances Wagner as the little flower girl; Betty Sue Harward and Mattie Rea Franklin, junior bridesmaids, all granddaughters of the couple; A. F. Carden as best man, acting in the same capacity that he did fifty years ago; followed by Rev. and Mrs. Carden into the living room where Dr. Stanley C. Harrell stood waiting to perform the ceremony.

Mrs. Carden's dress was of powder blue lace. She wore a gold bar pin, a gift from her uncle on her sixteenth birthday. She had worn the same pin fifty years ago. Her shoulder corsage was of white tube roses and yellow roses. With her silvery hair she looked beautiful.

The color scheme throughout the home was yellow and white. Flowers were placed at intervals in the home.

John William and Tommy Franklin, James Harward and Thomas Wagner, grandsons, acted as ushers.

RELIGION SUPPORTED BY SCHOLARSHIP.

barrassment, I suggested that he take the other sheet of paper headed "Reasons in Favor of Being a Christian," and write down some of the possible reasons which might be in favor of one being a Christian, as we wanted to be fair in the matter, and that, while he was writing some of these possible reasons that support Christianity, other reasons against might come to his mind.

Strangely, he wrote his mother's name the first thing. A consistent Christian life has always been the best argument for Christianity. I called his attention to what Daniel Webster had once said: "The best argument I know for Christianity is a dear old Aunt up in the hills of Vermont." Like a flash my friend replied: "But Daniel Webster was not a Christian himself." "Oh yes," I answered, "he was—decidedly so." Then I called his attention to other outstanding leaders in the nation's history who had been Christian believers. I also called his attention to certain outstanding leaders on the faculty of his University including the President of the University, as they were active members of their respective churches. I asked him if it wouldn't be fair to put down the name of Jesus, and of the Apostle Paul, John Calvin, John Knox, Martin Luther and other historical characters as reasons in favor of Christianity? He agreed, and I complimented him for having put his mother's name at the head of the list—for she was nearest to his life. Then I suggested that the President of the University and the other faculty leaders who were staunch Christians would each be a reason in favor of Christianity. He wrote down the names of the professors on the campus who were well-known Christian leaders. Then he began to write numerous statements setting forth in clear-cut fashion practical and many irrefutable reasons in support of Christianity.

Both sides of the page were now full.

He looked at the other page on which he had been able to write so little. Throwing his pencil down on the table in disgust he said: "I'm a bigger fool than I ever realized I could be. You must think I'm a nut." And taking my hand tightly in his he said, "You can count on me any time for anything I can do at the church." What a Christian leader he became in the church and on the University campus!

Today, he is a Medical Missionary in South America with a splendid record of service to his credit.

The second young fellow came to my office a couple of years later just after his mid-year exams. He was not a member of my church but occasionally had attended our services. He decided to come to see me personally after his own pastor had told him his "problems were due to lack of faith and not a lack of reason;" and that he "must come to realize that there comes a place in religious experience where one has to let reason go and take things absolutely by faith." This advice from his pastor put him in still deeper trouble, and he came to see me. He was not an "A" student himself but some "A" students who ridiculed religion in his presence had greatly influenced his thinking—or his failure to think—and had caused him to decide against religion. So he explained why he couldn't be interested in religion any longer, etc., etc. He quoted several of these "A" students in his fraternity instead of quoting an "Assistant

AN UNUSUAL DONATION.

In our receipt column acknowledging donations for missions in another column on this page it will be seen that there is an item of $26.50 from the estate of the late lamented Rev. P. T. Klapp. It seems that this estate has been quite delayed in the settlement and the attorneys, who have charge of the settlement, write that in the will of the late lamented Rev. P. T. Klapp was a proviso that $100.00 from his estate be given to Foreign Missions. Since there were other bequests the cash received had to be prorated to the various items mentioned in the will, the amount of $26.50 being the pro rata part from the $100.00 named in the will.

Many of us who remember Brother Klapp will recall his deep interest in Foreign Missions. It was he who took the first offering in a church of the Southern Convention for Foreign Missions and he used to relate the name of the church and the amount of the offering. This one recalled was about the time the late lamented Dr. W. S. Long was talking in the Conferences about building a college. So it may be truly said, as the facts in the case verify, that the idea of missions and that of the college grew up along together. Brother Klapp always believed that the light which shines furthest from home, shines brightest at home, and if a church, or a people, could have the faith to accept Christ at His word and go to the uttermost parts to witness for Him they would have the faith to support the enterprises and institutions close at hand. History and experience have proven that when an individual has become interested in missions and will lay his offering on the altar to go to the uttermost parts, such an individual in every instance may be counted upon to help most liberally the enterprises and institutions near by. This seems to me, if not human, then divine, arithmetic and economy. The present writer has noted with joy and delight time and time again that when he by the grace of God could get an individual, or a congregation, sufficiently interested in missions to make sacrificial and self-denial offerings thereto that individual and that congregation were then open to the appeals of other enterprises and institutions of the church. Our Lord Christ knew this and knew well enough that He was not impoverishing, nor hindering, the work close by when He said, "Ye shall be witnesses to me unto the uttermost parts."

We are profoundly grateful that Brother Klapp had the vision to inspire others with his wholly unselfish and divine bequest. The amount received is being forwarded according to the bequest and we pray God's blessings upon it that it may be instrumental in turning some soul, or souls, from idol worship to the worship of the true and living God.

The above report shows that we ended the fiscal year August 31 with total receipts of $17,520.45. We regret that this does not measure up to the total of the previous year, but we have done our best and one presumes that the pastors and Sunday school superintendents feel the same way. People in the churches, either because of inability to do so, or from the lack of interest, no longer give to benevolences and to missions for the spread of the gospel as they once did. We are having a difficult time of keeping our missionaries on the foreign field and supporting the work on the home field and are compelled to curtail and the work suffers accordingly. Is there, or is there not, a growing indifference to sharing with others less favored than ourselves the redeeming love and life of our Lord?

Gratefully yours,
J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

INSTALLATION SERVICE FOR WOMEN'S SOCIETIES.

Hymn—"Open Mine Eyes."
Officers to serve during the coming year come forward.

CHARGE TO OFFICERS:

John 15: 15-17—"Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you. Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give to you. These things I command you, that ye love one other."

You have been chosen to lead this group of women during the next year. Because of your willingness, because of your ability, because of your love for Christ. Do you purpose in your heart so to love Him and serve Him to the best of your ability that through your leadership we may go forward into a year of glorious service for Him?

RESPONSE BY OFFICERS (in unison):

"For their sakes, I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth." John 17: 19.

CHARGE TO MEMBERS:

John 14: 23—"Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him."

I John 2: 3-5—"And whereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected; hereby know we that we are in him."

These are our leaders. But they cannot lead unless we follow. May we stand together as we pledge our support to them. As we sing, may we make this our prayer that God shall have His way with us.

Response: "Have Thine Own Way, Lord."

CHURCH RELIEF WORK IN CHINA.

The importance of the great Christian humanitarian relief work in China, carried on by funds contributed from America, through the Church Committee for China Relief, was stressed in a wireless dispatch to The New York Times from Chungking, China, Tuesday, August 22. The Church Committee for China Relief is the official agency within the churches, constituted by three great Christian groups—the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, and China Famine Relief U. S. A., Inc.—now engaged in a nationwide campaign to raise funds to help save a least one million lives in China. National headquarters of the Church Committee for China Relief, to which contributions of any amount may be sent, are located at 105 East 22nd St., New York City. Mr. Harper Sibley is Chairman and Mr. Fred Atkins Moore is Director. "One American dollar a month will save a life in China," the Director states.

The following article, describing the heroism of missionaries in ministering to the stricken victims of war, and the speedy transmission of emergency relief supplies, made possible through contributions to the Church Committee for China Relief, is reprinted, with headlines, from The New York Times of August 22, 1939:

RAID IN WEST CHINA IS HELD TERRORISM.

Half of Kiating, City Without Any Military Objectives, Is Bombed and Burned.

Aid Goes from Chungking.

Missionaries Walk All Night and Then Set to Work in An Inadequate Hospital.

By F. Tillman Durdin.

KIATING, China, Tuesday, August 22.—Aided by medical supplies, doctors, nurses and American funds rushed here from Chungking in a specially chartered plane, Kiating today carried on the sorrowful task of coping with the misery and destruction resulting from one of the most merciless bombings of a Chinese city carried out by the Japanese air force during the Sino-Japanese war.

An international relief committee of Americans, Britons and Chinese, headed by the Rev. M. O. Brinnistool of Los Angeles, had been hurriedly organized and had put American money to use in erecting shelters for the homeless, establishing food stations and marshalling supplies and workers. Kiating's only hospital, a fifty-five-bed institution, is operated by the United Church of Canada.

In the bombed areas work gangs are making progress carrying away corpses and digging for bodies in the debris. They are gradually clearing away the wreckage from the choked-up streets.

The American relief plane arrived here yesterday afternoon with emergency supplies, a Chinese medical unit under the leadership of J. M. Endicott, a Canadian missionary adviser of the New Life Movement, and this writer aboard. The ship was chartered by the Chungking American committee for dispensing funds collected in the United States by the Church Committee for China Relief.

The Chungking group found half of Kiating, normally a pleasant and progressive little provincial city of 60,000 destroyed. The entire business district, a square mile, was wiped out.

A fleet of thirty-six bombers loosed an entire load of incendiary and demolition bombs in the heart of the town. At least one hundred persons were killed instantly, while hundreds of others burned to death when they were trapped by the flames. The casualties, mostly dead, are estimated at between five hundred and a thousand.

Six foreigners, of a total permanent foreign community of twelve missionaries, including five Americans, who were in Kiating at the time of the bombing, escaped injury. The others, summering with other Szechwan missionaries at the sacred Mount Omei thirty-five miles away, saw the flames of Kiating when night fell Saturday.

Four men from the resort set out for the city, alternately riding in sedan chairs and walking all night. They reached the stricken center at daylight. They were two missionary doctors, I. M. Hilliard and R. E. Outerbridge, just out of medical school at Toronto University, the Rev. R. L. Bacon of Nova Scotia and the Rev. Mr. Brinnistool. Spurning sleep, all set to work at the hospital, where two Chinese doctors were attempting to handle the situation alone. They were still caring for the stream of injured when the Chungking unit arrived and relieved them.

They reported that the Japanese squadron had dropped one bomb at the foot of Mount Omei in full view of the resort on the mountainside and had also directed machine-gun fire at a China National Aviation Corporation passenger plane that had left Chungking and flown westward to evade the bombers.

Oddly enough, the plane, which later played hide and seek with the enemy south of Kiating and escaped, was piloted by an American, Harry Woods, who almost a year ago was shot down by the Japanese with a load of passengers.

The Canadian Church and the downtown clinic were the only foreign properties destroyed represent damage of millions of dollars, and more than 10,000 persons have been made homeless.

Nine students were killed when a bomb struck a dormitory of Wuhan University, which was moved to Kiating from Hankow last year.

Seldom have the Japanese perpetrated a more frankly terroristic bombing of a civilian population. Kiating is without any military importance, without any military objectives, and nothing of a military character was hit. The planes dropped leaflets which warned Kiating against affording hospitality to the Central Government or supporting Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA YOUNG PEOPLE TO MEET.

The young people of the Western North Carolina Conference who were present at the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention voted to hold a rally for their group—with the purpose of forming a Conference organization—on next Sunday, September 10. The program for that meeting is given elsewhere on this page.

The young people sincerely hope that each church in the Western Conference will be represented. If those who read this, and who are members of our churches in that area, will take it upon themselves to see that one or more young people go from their church, it will be a fine meeting. The ministers are urged to come—and to bring some of their young people with them. Do not feel that you need to belong to a young people's society to attend—if you go to a Sunday school class, a missionary society, or are in any way affiliated with a church, please come to this meeting.

It has been several years since the young people of the Western Conference have had an active organization. It would be a fine thing if some of the leaders in other North Carolina Conferences could attend this meeting, to help their friends plan the work that lies ahead. They will be very happy to have young people and their leaders present from other conferences.

VALLEY YOUNG PEOPLE HAVE PICNIC.

The Pilgrim Fellowship of the Valley Conference held a picnic at Verbena Park on August 23. The following churches were represented: Antioch, 19; Bethel, 4; Newport, 4; Mt. Olivet (G), 27; Mt. Olivet (R), 1; New Hope, 3; visitors, 10; ministers, 1; key workers, 4; officers, 8.

A softball game was played by the boys from Antioch and Mt. Olivet (G). The score was 5 to 4 in favor of Antioch when the game was called on account of supper!

Everyone seemed to enjoy the bountiful supper. Rev. M. W. Mann gave thanks at the table. After supper we assembled for games, led by Thelma Morris of Mt. Olivet (G).

Miss Eugenia Snow, our president, read a letter of greetings from Miss Frances Porter, president of the Pilgrim Fellowship of the Southeast. Raymond Andes, our secretary-treasurer, spoke about the China Friendship Project and challenged us to do our best for this worthy cause.

An approaching storm prevented us from having a vesper service which had been planned by Rev. Mr. Mann. However, he did give a few remarks, leaving us with the words of David, "I will lift up my eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help."

We feel that it was good for us to have been together at this picnic. We are better acquainted now with the young people of other churches and feel we are all striving for one common cause and that by uniting our efforts we can accomplish great things. We are hoping to enjoy many more like occasions in the future.

- 3:15 "Pilgrim Fellowship in Your Conference and Church"—Miss Frances Foster.
- 3:45 Discussion Groups:
 1. Developing a young people's program in the Conference—Led by Rev. F. C. Lester.
 2. Building a young people's program in a local church—Led by Mrs. F. C. Lester.
- 4:30 Fellowship Period.
- 4:45 Reports.
 - Election of Officers.
 - Installation of Officers—Rev. W. J. Andes.
- 5:15 Adjournment.

WHAT JESUS SAID ABOUT PRAYER.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR SEPTEMBER 17, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Matthew 6:5-15.

Daily Readings—

- Mon.—Pray in Faith—Mark 11:22-24.
- Tues.—Pray Sincerely and Humbly—Luke 18:9-14.
- Wed.—Pray Believing—Matt. 21:22.
- Thurs.—Pray Importunately—Luke 18:1-8.
- Fri.—Pray for Persecutors and Enemies—Matt. 5:43-45.
- Sat.—Pray in Jesus' Name—John 14:13-15.

In discussing this topic let each of us sincerely learn the manner of true prayer. Jesus stated that we shall not be heard for our much speaking. These verses in Matthew's Gospel contain the essence of our Lord's teaching about prayer and praying.

The following parts of Matthew 6 may be used as the basis for short talks:

Verse 5—Jesus warns His followers against praying for the sake of making an impression; warning against false and pretentious piety.

Verse 6—Jesus advocates secret and private prayer.

Verses 7 and 8—Jesus warns against wordy, aimless praying. Prayer gives one an opportunity to seek for God's guidance and listen for His voice.

Verses 9-13—Jesus outlines for His disciples a pattern of prayer.

Verses 14 and 15—Jesus suggests that a forgiving spirit is a prerequisite of effective praying. A person cannot hold in his heart a grievance against another and have high communion with God.

Someone might speak upon the occasions on which and conditions under which Jesus prayed.

Questions for discussion—

1. Why was it necessary for Jesus to pray?
2. How can we be sure we are praying the right kind of prayer with the expectation it will be answered.
3. If you could pray for only one person or thing, for whom or for what would you pray?
4. What are some ways we have found helpful in giving reality to our prayer life?
5. Did Jesus ask for things for Himself? Did He try to change God's mind? Did He ask for more power that He might accomplish more good? Did He complain?

Study the prayers of Jesus, especially John 17 and Matthew 26:39-46.

Suggested Hymns—

- "I Need Thee Every Hour."
- "Sweet Hour of Prayer."

HEZEKIAH: A KING WHO REMEMBERED GOD.

LESSON XI—SEPTEMBER 10, 1939.

GOLDEN TEXT: Turn us again, O God; and cause thy face to shine, and we shall be saved.—Psalms 80:3.

LESSON: II Chronicles 30.

Hezekiah was one of the greatest kings of Judah. He was a man of strength, of character, integrity, and spiritual steadfastness. It is a good thing that he was. For when he came to the throne Judah was at one of the lowest points in its history, thanks to the foolish and sinful policy of his father Ahaz. It was badly disorganized, it was under a grievous burden of taxes and tribute to Assyria, and it was in constant peril and suspense of greater encroachments from that ruthless and arrogant power. Worse still, and perhaps the cause of all this in large measure, the nation was at a low ebb spiritually. Religion had become formal, and in a large way it had been practically neglected. The task that confronted Hezekiah was a hard one. He had inherited a nation that as one commentator says was "smear-eyed, dull-eared, fat-hearted, whose religion was a precept of men learned by rote." But Hezekiah was a man come to the kingdom for just a time as this. He combined in his person the qualities of a statesman, a warrior, a poet, an antiquarian, an engineer, and the leader of a most important religious movement.

Putting First Things First.

Hezekiah saw that the heart of the problems of his nation was spiritual. The nation was religiously sick, and he knew that it could never be in vigorous health unless it was revived spiritually. He, therefore, began with the most pressing constructive need, the cleansing and opening of the temple. It comes as a shock to us to read that this sacred edifice, the heart of the religious life of Judah had been closed and desecrated, but such was the case—Ahaz had permitted this to be done. Accordingly he ordered the temple to be cleaned thoroughly, and then had it opened again. He reorganized its liturgical work and established again a choir. He invited the people to come again to worship.

What a difference it would make in the life of our nation if the churches and places of worship were closed! How vital their services are to the life of the people and of the nation. Only as religion flourishes can a nation be said to be truly strong. Men and women, young men and maidens, boys and girls, marching to Sunday school and church are far more important than marching armies.

What are you doing, Mr. Reader, to make the life of the Sunday school and the Church vital in the life of your community? Do you attend its services? Do you support its enterprises? Do you consecrate to it your services? This matter comes right down home to our own door-step. True religion is the best kind of patriotism.

A Great Home-Coming Day.

We read with amazement, too, that another religious feature had been neglected. The Passover, the greatest feast of the Hebrew people, commemorating as it did the escape from Egypt, and their redemption from bondage, and their beginning as a nation, had been allowed to lapse. It had not been observed, since goodness knows when. Hezekiah knew the value of a religious festival. Accordingly he issued a letter, not only to the people of his own realm, but to the people of Israel, inviting them to come to Jerusalem to observe the Passover. Come to think of it, it was quite an impressive thing. It was quite different from our annual Thanksgiving Day Proclamation—it was not a mere form, but the expression of a man in high position, genuinely interested in the religious life of the nation, and desirous of leading them back into the ways of their God. Religious festivals and feasts have their place in the life of a people and a nation. People neglect them at their peril. Imagine what would happen for instance if by a decree our Sunday should be abolished! No Sunday, with its recurring reminder of God and His claim upon our lives! No Sunday, with its regular and gracious invitation to come apart and renew that within us which cannot live by bread alone! No Sunday with its ministry of teaching and preaching and worship! Try to imagine our world and our week without a Sunday! What are you doing to preserve Sunday as a day of rest and worship? If everybody used Sunday as you use it, how much religious and spiritual significance would it have?

From Worship to Work.

The Home-Coming Week was a huge success. It was such a success that the people asked that it be continued for another week. It engendered a great deal of religious emotion. And then Hezekiah harnessed that emotion to constructive work.

Under the inspiration of that religious revival, they tore down the high places, broke up the images that had been used in worship, and even broke up the brazen serpent that Moses had set up in the wilderness—an evidence that they had a sharpened insight into the difference between formal and vital religion. Idolatrous practices were stopped, religion was made more spiritual.

It Is the Spirit That Quickeneth.

There is an interesting sidelight in connection with the Passover referred to above. Many of the people, for one reason or another, had not "sanctified themselves" according to the Levitical law. Technically speaking, they were not eligible to receive the Passover meal, or to enter into the Passover celebration. But Hezekiah had common-sense which sometimes is so uncommon in things religious. He saw that these people had "set their hearts to seek God, though they were not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary." Accordingly he offered a prayer in their behalf and allowed them to enter into the feast. With spiritual discernment he saw that spirit was more important than form. It is well enough to have all things done decently and in order. But form can, and often does, kill spirit. Worship is not primarily a matter of form but of inner spirit. God is Spirit and they that worship Him must worship in spirit and truth.

A Singing Religion.

"And the Levites and the priests praised Jehovah day by day, singing with loud instruments unto Jehovah." A singing religion is usually a conquering religion. Christianity especially is a singing religion. The unfortunate thing is that in so many cases only the "priests and Levites" do the singing in an American congregation. One of the great lacks in many modern churches is a lack of participation on the part of the congregation, both in singing and in other parts of the service of worship.

For six years this nation has been subjected to a concentrated and unceasing dose of the inferiority complex. Its young people have been told on the highest authority that they were born too late, that there are no more opportunities, no more frontiers, no more great deeds to be accomplished, no more honors to be won. With all our might we should reject this gospel of defeat. The physical frontiers have been exhausted; but the spiritual frontiers have hardly been touched.—Bruce Barton.

MONDAY.

"BEGINNING THE DAY."

"Teach me, O Lord, in my strength, to be humble; caught on the wave of prosperity, or in low-tide of circumstance, to be grateful still for the experience which shall prove my friends and try my own soul; let me listen for thy voice, saying, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over few things; I will give thee charge over many." Amen.

TUESDAY.

"BACK TO THE FAITH."

"If thou return to the Almighty, thou shalt be built up."—Job 22: 23.

"Come let us return unto the Lord—He will heal us."—Hosea 6: 1.

"We came unto Thee for Thou art the Lord our God."—Jer. 3: 22.

Set up in the heart of Indianapolis, we are told of a billboard which reads "American Democracy is founded on belief in God! Now is the time to return to His worship. American Legion."

We are told that the American Legion of Indiana recently made a tour of this state preaching the cardinal principles of Americanism and a return to the faith and support of the church. This movement was so popular that headquarters was bombarded with requests for other dates. Such words as these were heard: "We stress the fact that we are servants of God. We urge all people and all Legionaires to read and become active in the faith of their fathers, or in the faith of their choice."

The tour is being followed up with placement of billboards in many towns and cities, and the erection of each is celebrated by a luncheon having as its guests the most prominent and influential citizens of the town. The same sort of campaign is also underway in Illinois.

A similar movement is underway in Los Angeles, Cal., urging all Legionaires and ex-service men with their families, to attend divine services in the house of worship, inviting all other groups to join them. It asked that four days or at least four days each year be designated as their "Be American" days.

The churches should thank God for such a movement, praying that God's will be done and that the whole country may have such a revival. And let us begin in our homes.

Prayer—Our Father God, to Thee we come. We would go forward this day in Thy name. Give us Thy vision, Thy spirit, and Thy strength. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"SORRY! . . . BUT . . ."

"And the king was sorry; nevertheless for the oath's sake, and them which sat with him at meat, . . ."—John 14: 9.

For the sake of those with him, for the sake of a certain confidence he would have them maintain in him, for the sake of self-respect, for the sake of pride, even though it required the murder of a godly man, he would not go back on his word. Poor Herod!

And yet, have we not done just about as bad; when for the sake of what others would think we have gone against our conscience? It is easy—if we are not watching and praying. Watching what? Standing guard at the door of our hearts, that no unprincipled act may be committed, even though we have to eat our words.

Prayer—Our Father, forbid that we shall fall victim of our own selfishness and pride, but ever to be given to Thee, rather than ill advised words of ours. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"LINCOLN'S PHILOSOPHY OF HAPPINESS."

"Let your moderations be known unto all men."—Phil. 4: 5.

Abraham Lincoln, sixteenth President of the United States, was born February 12, 1809, in Hardin County, Ky. When Lincoln was asked by a friend how to have a happy life, he replied as follows: "Do not worry—eat three square meals a day—say your prayers—be courteous to your creditors—keep your digestion good—go slow and easy.

"Maybe there are some other things your special case requires to make you happy, but my friend, these I reckon will give you a good lift."

Prayer—Our Father, it is hard for us to realize that we go too fast, now that we may sin by overtaxation of our bodies. Thy temple, until it is too late. Teach youth, Lord, Thy will for his body and for Thee. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"MAKE READY YOUR UPPER ROOM."

"When thou prayest enter into thy closet and when thou hast shut the door, pray."—Matt. 6: 6.

We are told that Jesus planned in advance the "Upper Room" arrangement. We deduce this from the previous understanding of arrangements. We do not know that in doing this He implied full preparation for prayer. But we do know that for prayer to be effective it is important that one should not be disturbed. The whole soul, one's understanding of God, the success of communion with God, all are at stake in prayer. We must be alone with God if we would pray. In order to do this there must be forethought and preparation. Our prayer times must be made ready.

Prayer—Dear Lord, forgive our desultory manner of prayer. Help us to keep inviolate our prayer hour. In these holy hours may we draw from Thee Thy spirit of love and blessing. Amen.

"DEACONS: AN ANCIENT CALLING."

"Men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom."— Acts 6:3.

More than nineteen centuries ago there began a new day. This new day was brought about by Jesus of Nazareth. He began the Christian Church, and appointed its first ministers. The foundations on which he built that Church are as bright and shining today as they were when first laid in Jesus Christ. The Church still has the power, if it will but use it, to redeem individuals, and through them society. The foundation laid nineteen centuries ago were in Jesus Christ. The disciples were to center their thoughts and works in him. Paul said a few years later that he was determined to know nothing save Jesus Christ and him crucified.

Faith—"Ye believe in God, believe also in me." Their faith in Jesus their Lord was to be their first requisite in being builders in the Church of which Christ was the head. Faith in him, faith in him as they saw him go into the Garden, and through the infamous trials, and to the rugged cross-heights of Calvary. Faith, as they saw the empty tomb, and the risen Lord; faith as he showed them his scars, and gave them his commands; faith in him as they began to see things happen in his name. "Ye believe in God, believe also in me" was a first foundation for them to lay.

Love—"If ye love me," yes, they were to love him; to love him with a devotion that would it easy for them to undertake in his name, and to suffer for his cause; to love him with a loyalty that would send them out with his spirit, with his patience, his fortitude, and his message of redeeming love. They were to have access to heaven's power-throne by their love for him. It was for their love for him that he would intercede at the Father's right hand for them. Heaven was to help those who loved the Lord. Without that love they would surely fail, even though they might have faith to remove mountains. Faith might remove mountains but only love could move men. They must have that love if they were to set the Church of their Lord and Savior a-going.

Works—"Greater works than these shall ye do." They were to lay down the foundation stone of serving, of doing something for one another and for mankind. Their movement was to be an active, moving, mighty, helping, saving force. It was to transform life, and even to "set the world upside down" for many customs and conditions of that day and every day. They were to have love, but love leads definitely to action. So their works would be his works, and in his name they would speak to the cripple and say, "In the name of Jesus of Nazareth, rise up and walk." So he talked to them about being the fruit-bearing branches of the life-giving vine.

Sacrifice—Each was to be willing to "lose his life for my sake and the gospel's." To the death, if need be, were they to go for the Church they were to launch for the redemption of the world. To the death they did go before the whole story was told. It was never intended that the Church should grow on flowery beds of ease. They were to believe that Jesus meant everything to them, and they were to offer everything to have him be the same to others. They were to be concerned about the Church, and willing to make sacrifices for it. By such a measure should they be measured: Faith, Love, Works, Sacrifice—and by such a measure should they measure those they appointed to follow in their footprints.

Going thus, the Church increased and multiplied rapidly, so that they could not minister to all as need occasioned. Thus assistants from among the people were called into action. There you have the deaconship. Before the Church had much more than been launched, a calling came into being, that of being a deacon, then a new calling, but by now an ancient and very honorably one, indeed!

Let us observe that (1) The deaconship grew out of a growing Church. It was because the Church was growing so rapidly that a demand for helpers officially chosen was made. It was an emergency measure. It made history, as well as greatly increased the power and growth of the Church. (2) It was the first great demonstration of Christian liberty. The multiplied membership of the Church was asked to

"THE UNDAUNTED SPIRIT."

"I press toward."—Phil. 3:14.

In courage and fortitude, Paul's life was like the Master's. When he said that he could endure all things for Jesus' sake, he meant just that, and for it he paid the penalty of martyrdom.

It is a mistake to assume that good people will not have experiences that harass their souls. There are enemies of religion. And religious people will have enemies; they will, if their goodness is active and vital. All the forces of fear and evil are their natural foes. But the example of Jesus is to be followed—go right on living the life and doing the works that the Father prescribes.

Prayer—Our Father, we pray for the courage of Paul, of Peter, in fulfilling our mission. May we be fearless of foes and headful only of Thy will. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"PROCEEDING IN PEACE."

"Not my will but Thine be done."
—Luke 22:42.

These are the words of Jesus in His agony in the garden. He arose from this agony in peace and resignation and went forth to face his enemies and death.

This was a great decision, . . . life's greatest. It was a decision upon which hung the completion of His mission—the salvation of the world. Any rebellion at this point, or even shirking would have voided the whole plan of the kingdom and annulled all the work which He had done.

We have decisions to make quite as momentous to us. And they are momentous because they determine our destiny and the destiny of man. Many things are all wrong today because, in making decisions, men have allowed themselves to be influenced by selfishness. Their ultimate was in themselves and not in the good of humanity. In making the unselfish decision, we may, like Him, have to sacrifice self. It is hard to do so. Are we willing to be such a Christian Prayer—Our Father, we would give ourselves freely to Thy will, asking naught else but like for Him and heaven for mankind. O Lord, so help us to be Thine. Amen.

"The world is all right. It is the people in it who are wrong that give it a bad name."

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Last Sunday, November 3, was the annual Homecoming Day at the Christian Orphanage. It always comes on Sunday before Labor Day. Quite a number of the children who have been reared here came back with their companions and the orphanage grandbabies." Some came alone as they are still enjoying single blessedness. Some came as far as New Jersey; Maryland; Norfolk, Va.; and other distant points. It was the joy of coming back home. The day was ideal, clear, and warm. There were something like two hundred children and visitors.

The meeting was called to order by Mr. Vitus R. Holt, chairman of the Board of Trustees at eleven o'clock. Dr. G. O. Lankford lead the devotional by reading a selection of scripture and the prayer was lead by Dr. L. E. Smith. The Christian Orphanage Singing Class, under the direction of Miss Erie Laine, sang several selections. To the delight of all present, Miss Martha Lee Whitten, member of the Singing Class, sang a beautiful solo. Mr. Holt then presented Professor J. B. Robertson, the speaker of the occasion, who delivered a very timely address which was greatly appreciated by all present.

Immediately after the adjournment the Homecoming Day Society was called to order by Mr. Vitus R. Holt, president of the society, for the transaction of business. A very fine spirit prevailed in the meeting. The superintendent of the orphanage called the attention of the society to the fact that a six room house near the orphanage that the orphanage had wanted to buy for a long time was for sale. A motion was immediately made and seconded that the Homecoming Day Society buy the house and lot and donate it to the orphanage. The motion was unanimously carried. The society seemed to be real happy to have the opportunity to do something really worthwhile for the home that took them in and ministered to them when they needed a home. They did it in such a sweet spirit and seemed to be so happy to do it that it made us all happy.

Lunch was served on the grounds with ice-cold water and lemonade. It was one of the best Homecoming days that we have had and a spirit of happiness prevailed all the day.

RELIGION SUPPORTED BY SCHOLARSHIP.

Professor" as the other lad had done. My experience with the other lad gave me a quick approach to the solution of this fellow's trouble. But before I asked him to write down reasons "for and against religion" as I had done with numerous other students passing through the same experience, I mentioned certain other "A-plus" students on the campus who, though in their Senior year, were active workers in the University Y. M. C. A. and in their churches. The references somewhat dampened the ardor of his protest. But he took the sheet of paper with the heading "Reasons Against Being a Christian" and started to write as if confident that he would have no trouble at all in proving the logic of his new position. His attempt was unusually embarrassing. Somehow he couldn't recall what "the other fellows" had said. How frequently it is what "the other fellows said" which causes some fellows to discount the claims of religion! But this chap made good as did the first in filling up both sides of the page with "Reasons In Favor of Being a Christian," all of which were definite and irrefutable. When he was through he blushed, wiped his forehead with his handkerchief and said "let's pray." We did—each of us out loud. How happy he was when he left my office! How grateful he proved himself to be in the days that followed.

After leaving my pastorate at the University to come East, I lost track of this lad. For several years I did not know what had become of him. And then a few years ago I received a lovely letter written on church stationery with the picture of a beautiful large stone church on the letter heading. The name of the pastor with an M.A., B.D. degree did not register with me at first. Then as I read the letter which called my attention to the experience just narrated, he told me again of his gratitude for my help in that critical hour of his life, and how he had hoped some day to see me and thank me again. He explained how he saw my name and address in connection with an article I had written in The International Journal of Religious Education. His beautiful letter of gratitude made me again to rejoice for "The Reasonableness of Christianity."

It should bolster up the faith of any apologetically religious student today to learn that Wilbur Huston, the young scientist who was chosen a few years ago from all the students of his educational training in America as the one best qualified to be the successor of Thomas A. Edison, believes so much in "The Reasonableness of Christianity" that he has decided to give his life in religious work instead of in the field of engineering for which he is so abundantly well qualified by technical training and adeptness.

"Instead of building better and bigger bridges and machines," says young Huston, "the present day's need is to build individuals." In his opinion the world needs electrical engineers, but it needs social engineers more. A Middle-West paper quotes him as saying: "The light that men need to guide them in these confusing days is not the kind that comes from an electric bulb."—Advance, June 1, 1939.

In Memoriam

BOULDS.

On July 9, 1939, God saw fit to take from us our beloved brother, J. J. Boulds, a loyal member of Bethlehem Christian Church, the Men's Bible Class, and an honorary member of the Ladies' Aid Society.

Just one week before he passed away he was at the church, thankful to be there bright and cheerful. He was always ready to do what he could for his church. His prayers were always an inspiration to pastor and people. Therefore be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to God's will.
2. That we emulate his trust in God.
3. That we extend our sympathy to his devoted wife and children.
4. That a copy of this be sent to the family, a copy be recorded on our church and Ladies' Aid Society records, and a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

CULLIFER.

Brother E. F. Cullifer departed this life on April 17, 1939. In his going Bethlehem has lost one of its most faithful members. He was a regular attendant of the Men's Bible Class, and honorary member of the Ladies' Aid Society. He always, in his prayers, prayed that we all might love each other because God was love. Therefore be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to God's will.
2. That we emulate his example of loving our neighbor as ourselves.
3. That we extend our sympathy to his family, and point them to a loving and heavenly Father that doeth all things well.
4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be recorded in our church and Ladies' Aid Society records, and a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

STEWARDSHIP EMPHASIS.

Our Commission on Stewardship is without a secretary since the retirement of Dr. W. H. Denison, but by writing Dr. F. L. Fagley, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City, any pastor can receive valuable information on Stewardship, and—where possible—will have the services of an expert or capable leader for Stewardship Institutes by providing entertainment while on the field.

Dr. W. H. Denison, 760 Ferguson Avenue, Dayton, Ohio, though retired from his position, is still very active. There is no one better qualified to present Stewardship in all of its ramifications. He will be glad to communicate with any church desiring his services, but of course his expenses and a reasonable honorarium would be necessary. He is now giving his time to such ministry in the work of the Kingdom.

SUN'S PULPIT.

"look you out from among you seven men." "The saying pleased the whole multitude, and they chose seven of their own number. These deacons were not appointed by the apostles, but they were elected by the people from among the people. It was the first great laymen's movement. It was the backbone of the vast organization which has grown up as the Church since that day. (3) The deaconship was a great calling because they had to be men of good report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom. They were to be measured by the four-fold measure of Faith, Love, Works, and Sacrifice.

After they had been set apart by prayer, and the laying on of hands, we read: "And the word of God increased; and the number of disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith; and Stephen, full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people. What wonders and miracles good deacons have done from that day until this! How they have blessed the work of the hands of their ministers, and increased the glory and strength of the Church in their respective communities! From among the people they come; having the ear of the needy public, they find a way to minister beyond all the preacher may ever be able to do.

The first Christian martyr was a deacon, and he led the courageous way for the thousands who followed in his tread. Faith, yes; Love, yes; Works, yes. Sacrifice, yes, the supreme sacrifice; and looking up into the heavens, he saw the Savior, and cried like him: "Forgive them, for they know not what they do." May God bless the deacons in this church, and especially do we pray for His Holy Spirit upon those newly ordained to that noble and ancient office today!

Dear CHRISTIAN SUN:

I have just received word that my family is on an honest-to-goodness vacation. One of the members of Ingram Christian Church has made this dream come true. Now that such a thing has become a reality for my folks, I do not hesitate to write this hint. There are many hot, tiresome days in the month of September. There are many pastors who work while Church members enjoy vacations. There are many church members who never realize that church pastors are human beings and need a rest. If this hits you, think it over! does your pastor look tired? Don't just give him some time off, but hand him a check, and insist that he go. I hope your pastor will be happy, too!

MARGARET EARP.

"Faith in the heart is necessary, but it becomes 'saving faith' when it is 'seen' in obedience to the gospel."

THE COMMUNION SERVICE

By AUBREY C. TODD.

If our Lord had known what hatred and bigotry would center around His words regarding the bread and cup, there is no doubt that he would have kept silent regarding them. The Roman Church was sufficiently guilty in perverting the truth, but Protestantism was even more guilty. Protestantism became, says Dr. McGiffert in repeating Harnack, "as blighting to intellectual growth as Roman Catholicism at its worst." (Martin Luther, page 382.) Because of the dissension caused by this subject many liberal churches of today have completely abolished the Lord's Supper. The Christian Scientists teach that their bread is truth and their cup the cross. The Quakers abolished the rite altogether in order to put the whole emphasis on faith. Ralph Waldo Emerson gave up the ministry when the Unitarians refused to do the same. The Congregational-Christian Church has made no official statement regarding the character of the Supper. The Congregational Creed of 1912 is completely silent on this subject.

Even the most dogmatic churchmen will admit that certain teachings of the Church regarding the sacraments have been repugnant to the teachings of science and contradictory to the fundamental ideas of Protestantism; yet, these are not sufficient reasons for wanting to abolish the sacraments entirely. Still, if the sacraments are to be retained there is a danger of too liberal views. For example, there is danger in assigning value to these rites that is not distinctive and can be found better in other experiences of life.

Different Views.

It is fortunate that the Congregational and Christian Churches have kept silent regarding the celebration of the Lord's Supper; although, such a liberal stand may be considered unfortunate if the local minister and congregation have no idea what they are doing. It is necessary for the minister to have some sort of opinion regarding the nature of the celebration before he can intelligently perform the service or interpret it to his people. As to whether the service is merely a memorial or a sacrifice or a communion makes a great deal of difference as to where the minister shall stand at the table, what words of institution and prayers he shall use, and at what time in the service he shall receive communion.

The Congregational-Christian Church has printed an order for the celebration of Holy Communion in the Church Manual. Such a standard order of service helps to keep too many variant ideas from straying into the church, yet there are many different viewpoints held. This is permissible and justifiable in our church, since all of these viewpoints may be found in the Bible. The idea that the Supper is just a communion service is justified by the earliest accounts of the Supper as found in Mark.

The idea of the blood-covenant is found in the later passages of Mark. The institution of the rite by the words, "This do," is found in I Corinthians 11:24. The use of two cups is justified by Luke 22:17 and 20. The idea of propitiation is found in Hebrews. The idea of eating the God is found in the sixth chapter of John.

It is well if a minister can be conservative enough and liberal enough to see the value of all these viewpoints. There are usually people in every congregation who differ in their views regarding the Lord's Supper, and it is fortunate if the minister can supply all their needs. The Supper is called the Eucharist because it is a service of thanksgiving. There should be the atmosphere of thankfulness and praise throughout the service. It is called a Communion Service because it is a service of fellowship. It is called a Supper in order that the commemorative or historical aspect might be kept in mind. It is called an Impetratory Service because it yields special benefits to those participating.

The Minister.

The celebrant should keep in mind that the celebration of Holy Communion is a drama of which he is only one of the actors, and should plan the service accordingly. The introduction and instruction should come early in the service and the service should move steadily toward the climax, which is culminated in the words of institution, "This is My Body," "This is My Blood." There should be no dallying after the climax has been reached, but the service should move swiftly to a close. To administer the symbols of the Life broken and the Love poured out is one of the greatest honors that any minister can have. He should enter into this service humbly and with his whole heart.

The People.

A church member who deliberately and habitually stays away from the Communion Service is not worthy the name Christian. A church member who takes the elements of this service feeling that he is fit to partake of the body and blood of our Redeemer takes them unworthily and drinketh damnation to his own soul. The only spirit in which one should participate in this service is that of humility. One should realize that he is sinful and needs the strength that can come from above. This is a time of self-examination and consecration and should be intensely personal. Whether the service is in secret or audible, the member should unite himself with the minister in offering up to God this sacrifice, and should unite himself with Jesus in spiritual communion. Such a service of calm meditation, in which symbols express what words cannot, has great values for rushing men and women of this modern world.

A Church Bell's Message

This is the hour of holiness.
In the distance I hear church bells
Ringing out that all is well,
Ringing out, "Be of good cheer,
Forget your troubles while I am near.

"I am stationed to stay always.
I'm here and there and everywhere,
Not seen nor heard, but will always care
Of what becomes to my awkward sheep
When they meet troubles piled so deep.

"I am here to bring good cheer.
Cheer is for others as well as for you;
So spread it around when folks seem blue.
Don't stop with only your family tree,
But spread it, and spread till others can see."

And so the bells toll out their message.
They bring good cheer and contentment to all
Who seem to be up against a blank wall
As to whether God really cares for us—
And then they know He really must!

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

Rev. and Mrs. B. J. Earp and two of their daughters were welcome visitors recently at the office of publication in Richmond, Va.

The first event of the Elon Golden Anniversary Celebration is scheduled for today. What are you doing to help bring this celebration to a successful conclusion next May?

Chaplain H. E. Rountree who has been with his ship in Chinese waters for some time past, returned recently to San Francisco, which city he left this week for San Diego, Calif.

Mrs. J. H. Warren, wife of our pastor at Little Creek, East Ocean View, Va., has been very ill for the past two weeks. THE CHRISTIAN SUN family hopes for her a speedy recovery.

Rev. J. F. Apple reports having received thirty-six new members to his churches during recent months. Rev. G. C. Crutchfield reports having received eighteen members in two of his churches.

Rev. J. Howard Smith, pastor of First Church, Lynchburg, Va., has returned from a month's vacation in Mexico. En route to Mexico he visited Dr. and Mrs. W. A. Harper of Vanderbilt University, Nashville.

Over two hundred members and friends of the First Congregational-Christian Church of Greensboro, N. C., gathered at the church for a picnic supper last week honoring Rev. and Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, who had just returned from their vacation.

A very successful revival was conducted last week at Pleasant Hill Christian Church, near Liberty, N. C. Rev. J. Frank Apple, pastor, reports nineteen professions and nineteen members added to the church. Rev. M. A. Pollard, a former pastor, preached for one service, and the rest of the preaching was done by the present pastor.

Many readers of THE SUN will learn with regret of the death, last week, of Mrs. Lena Farrar of Suffolk, Va. Mrs. Farrar had for some time past made her home with Col. and Mrs. J. E. West, her sister. She was the daughter of the late Rev. Edwin W. Beale, who took an active part in the educational work of his church in Eastern Virginia. She was a member of the original faculty at Elon College.

The Board of Christian Education will hold its annual session in the office of President L. E. Smith beginning at ten o'clock Friday morning of this week. Members of the Board are Dr. L. E. Smith, president; Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, secretary-treasurer; Dr. M. S. Poulson, Dr. J. G. Truitt, Dr. H. S. Hardeastle, Rev. Joe A. French, and Rev. J. E. Neese. Rev. F. C. Lester is executive secretary for the Board.

All churches within reach of Burlington, N. C., should be planning to share in the fine leadership Education School to be held there October 8-15. Miss Ruth Seabury of Boston and several other leaders from nearby will be there to direct the thinking of those who are interested in keeping up to date with religious education ideas and programs. Plan to be in Burlington every evening during that week. It will help you to live more nobly and serve more successfully.

At the first meeting of the season, the Piedmont Ministerial Association, composed of the Congregational and Christian Church ministers of North Carolina, meeting at Elon College on Monday elected for their officers for the coming year: Dr. J. H. Lightbourne, president; Rev. Allyn P. Robertson, Jr., vice-president; Rev. G. H. Veazey, secretary-treasurer; and Rev. J. F. Apple, chaplain. The meeting was well attended, and much business of interest to ministers was transacted.

A GOOD TIME TO CHECK UP ON OUR LIVES.

Dr. J. Lewis Rawls and Superintendent of Schools J. E. Martin, who were killed last week in a tragic accident in Suffolk, Va., were both teachers in their Sunday schools. Regarding this Dr. J. G. Truitt gives the following on the Suffolk Christian Church bulletin for September 10:

"We have all been thinking much more deeply and seriously this past week. Our fine little city has seen loss, and death, and tragedy in its midst. We have felt again most keenly the uncertainty of life.

"Too, we have seen how much and how well true goodness, helpfulness, and honest service counts. We have had exalted in our midst by noble living some the simple cardinal virtues of our own society, for instance: (1) Hard Work. (2) True Home Life. (3) Love of Family. (4) Mental Alertness. (5) Community Spirit. (6) Regular Church Attendance. (7) Sunday School Teaching. (8) Faith in Fellowmen. (9) Love of Youth. (10) Faith in God.

May we make our lives sublime."

GEORGIA WOMEN'S LEADERS TO MEET.

On September 20-22 the Georgia state women's officers, every pastor and his wife, and the president of each local women's group, are to meet at Camp Viola, Mountville, Ga. (near LaGrange), to talk over plans for the coming year. Mrs. Wm. H. Medicott, leader of women's work for our denomination, will be the guest speaker. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill is helping with the arrangements for the meeting.

The letter Mrs. C. L. Percy of Demorest, state president, has sent out about this meeting contains the following paragraph:

"Those of who attended one or more of the Regional Rallies in April know what a thrill we got out of meeting together, bragging about what our societies had done and listening to the fine speakers whom we had at that time. No one attending those rallies could doubt the importance of women's work in the churches. We could safely say, I think, that no church is stronger than its women, for its women have so much of the care of the children (our future citizens), and the building up of the homes of the community. Whether we like it or not, we are held responsible for the morale of our parish. Let's work together to make our community the cleanest and the finest in our district."

WALTON CRUMP WICKER.

The recent death of Dr. Walton Crump Wicker has left a vacancy in the ministerial ranks of the Southern Convention that will be hard to fill. While he gave much of his time to teaching at Elon College, his first love seemed to be the ministry. For many years he was president of the Eastern North Carolina Conference and at his death he was president of the North Carolina Conference, which is the legal body including the three Conferences within that state.

There was something strong and stalwart about Dr. Wicker. He reminds one of what Peter B. Kyne calls "The Valley of the Giants"—like the great trees of the west he stood tall, straight, powerful. His going left an open space in "The Valley of the Giants."

OFF TO SCHOOL.

A great company of little children start to school for their first time about this season of the year. It is a notable day for them and for the parents who send them. Another large group of young people enter high school. Still another group, not quite so large but very significant, is off to college. A small group enter university. The grand total of all these people includes a large percentage of our youth. It is an important group, for these are the ones who are preparing to think through our problems and lead us as a people.

Fortunate are those who may continue undisturbed their educational processes in these tragic days. In China and Europe they must seek shelter in secluded places and are unable to continue where buildings have been prepared. At present gas masks are not a necessary part of the equipment of little children who trudge away to school. Those who are off to college may feel reasonably safe and will not face the necessity of fleeing to some distant point when airplanes are heard overhead. Those who are permitted to study undisturbed in a world like ours should consider themselves fortunate and seek diligently to prepare themselves for leadership. No one knows how long this freedom will last. The call to arms may resound any time. In a world of hatreds and conflicts there is little assurance that any nation can go undisturbed for a long period of time. China is undoubtedly right in trying to continue her schools, for say her leaders, "Trained leaders will be needed during the years to come."

DELEGATES TO CONFERENCE.

Every church is expected to be represented at the Annual Conference. Records indicate that some churches elect the same people year after year, while other churches think it important to pass around this honor. The president of the Southern Convention calls attention to the fact that it is important to elect some young people as delegates to Conference, and that a report should be made back to the church after Conference. This suggestion is passed on to the readers of "The Christian Sun" with the hope that the Conference delegates this year will be selected not merely to represent the church, but to receive from Conference information and inspiration which will be returned to the local church. All phases of the local church work should be represented by its delegates to Conference. Men should not be neglected, women should have their place, and young people need to be trained for churchmanship by sending them to Conference.

YOUTH GROUP ORGANIZED.

In recent years the young people of the Southern Convention have organized in Conference groups and have done much toward developing leaders and stimulating youth organizations. The work in the Western North Carolina Conference has been slow in development. They have had no conference organization for several years.

But on last Sunday about hundred and forty young people met at Pleasant Ridge Christian Church and organized a Pilgrim Fellowship for the Western North Carolina Conference. A call had gone out just a few days before and these representatives came from sixteen churches. There are not many young people's societies in the churches of this Conference, but some churches have seventy-five young people in their local society. There are many fine young people in this Conference who are eager to take their share in the work of the Church and help to make the world Christian. Prospects are that in the years to come they will find their place and do a commendable service.

When we really come to feel that God is in our life, as all-permeating and ever-present as light and air, all of life will become his sanctuary. The forms and places of worship will be symbols and centers of new divine relationships. There will be no question of business standards in the church, for church standards will be in business, and the ordinary acts and relationships of life will be symbolic of praise, when eating, drinking, and whatsoever men do, is done in the name of the Lord Jesus, and to his glory. The best worship is that which most truly makes for that end.

There is a pallor in an uneventful life—even our bodies seem to deteriorate when life flows too smoothly. Our thoughts settle into grooves of prejudice, our spirits become shallow and complacent. We need falls and rapids to keep the stream of life pure.—Ralph W. Sockman, D. D.

I've known a great many of the great, and the near great, and without exception their simplicity has been in proportion to their greatness.—Channing Pollock.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Another great war is being waged near the battlefields of the recent World War. It is too early to predict the magnitude of this bloody carnage or to foretell the end of the conflict. Suffice it to say that it promises to be terrible, and the end is not in sight.

Why such a conflict among civilized nations? The answer is not easily given. Charges and counter-charges are being made over the radio and are seeking to offer plausible explanations to justify this destruction of life and property. In the conflicting statements it is impossible for the average citizen of any country to arrive at an unbiased opinion concerning such a complex situation. Citizens of the United States represent a neutral country, and this is not the time to violate our neutrality by taking sides with either party.

But it is not out of place to suggest some of the contributing causes far in the background of the present war. Apparently Hitler started the war in Poland. Future historians will probably agree on that point. What started Hitler? Whence did he derive his conception of a government ruled by force? We venture to say that the religious teaching in German free schools, colleges and universities is largely responsible for the present attitude of the Nazi leaders in Germany. For more than a half a century higher education in Germany has influenced the educational leaders of the world. This is strikingly true in the field of religious education. A type of so-called higher criticism has flourished in these universities, and the other civilized nations of the world have been engulfed in a whirl-pool of religious doubt and skepticism. By this process the New Testament has been deleted and Christ has been reduced to the standing of one of the world's greatest and best men—but not our Divine Lord and Saviour.

Hitler came to his present position of leadership in the midst of confusion in a nation that had lost its national reverence for God, for the Bible, and for the Lord Jesus Christ. The Bible became a Jewish Book and Jesus Christ became a peasant Jew. Once the Bible is discredited, to any degree, the matter of disposing of the Book is simple and easy. When a nation becomes convinced that Jesus was a mere man, the authority of His teaching is no longer binding upon the human conscience. The way of force is dictatorship or destruction. Force makes slaves of its citizens. Love makes men out of slaves and sets them free in the name of Jesus Christ.

False religious teaching lies far back of the present world conflict. Religious persecution and the oppression of racial groups may be expected in any land where such conditions prevail. Much of this type of teaching has found a place in our schools in the United States. Some day we will reap what we have sown. The wind will become a whirlwind, and the gentile breeze will be supplanted by a destructive cyclone. Public opinion has opened beer gardens, ball parks, movies and other places of amusement and business on Sunday. Dust covered, discredited Bibles is the explanation. The Bible holds forth a standard of living that regards the Sabbath as a day of rest and worship, free from unnecessary work. The Bible is more than a human product—it is the Word of God. Our national attitude towards the Bible is the real test of our future civilization. No nation can survive with a discredited Bible and a dethroned Christ: for "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." National rulers will reap what they sow. Christianity will survive. God is not dead.

BUSY DAYS AT ELON.

Indications throughout the summer have been that Elon would open on September 5 with a record enrollment. Extensive preparations have been made in anticipation of the beginning of the fiftieth year's work of the college. The campus has been put in order, and college buildings have been cleaned and renovated. Years ago all dormitories were calcimined. This form of decoration has proved to be most unsatisfactory for college purposes. The calcimine was removed from West and North Dormitories. Walls were repaired and painted. East Dormitory was redecorated inside. Practically all the work was done by college students working to help pay school expenses either for last year or for this year. Additional furniture has been purchased where absolutely necessary. This program of renovation and improvement has been expensive, but it was necessary.

The enrollment to date is fully up to expectations. Five hundred and nineteen students were registered the first five days of school, which is about fifty in advance of last year's registration at this date. Students are permitted to register until October 1. Boarding and rooming accommodations are about exhausted. Further registrations must of necessity be day students. We have had fewer withdrawals this year immediately after registration than any previous year. We have a very fine student body, and the spirit on the campus is everything that an institution could wish. Classwork began Thursday of last week, and the work of the fiftieth year of the college is beginning smoothly and efficiently.

On Thursday of this week we will have our first program of celebration commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the college. Founders Day will be inaugurated and observed. The program, while beginning the celebration of the of the fiftieth anniversary, will be held in honor of the original faculty.

It has been reported to me that Mrs. Farrar died last week. This is the first death in ranks of the original faculty after fifty years with the exception of Dr. W. S. Long, founder and first president of the institution. Mrs. Farrar lived until after the college had opened, marking the beginning of the fiftieth year of service by the college. The college wishes to extend to the family and relatives sympathy on this occasion of loss and bereavement.

An earnest invitation is extended to all to attend the program on Thursday. It is hoped that other members of the original faculty—Dr. Newman, Dr. Atkinson, Dr. Moffitt, Prof. Holleman, and Mrs. J. M. Roberts may be present for the occasion. Hon. Clyde R. Hoey, Governor of North Carolina, will speak at eleven o'clock. At the noon hour the original faculty will plant a tree on the campus to be known as the fiftieth anniversary marker. The program in the afternoon will consist of brief addresses by a number who were interested in the institution at its beginning. Your friends, the faculty, and the present student body will be glad to greet you on this occasion.

A TRUE BELIEVER.

The writer has been wondering if anyone would comment upon Rev. George Talley's article of June 22, proposing thirteen questions as important to ask the candidate for the ministry.

One certainly sympathizes with the position that a minister or teacher should have meditated about these subjects and, as Brother Talley says, "put himself on record in language plain and easily understood" on the Inspiration of the Scriptures (2); Lordship of Jesus (7); a life of separation from worldly practices (12); and some other points mentioned.

But since the things of God are so vast and so many and since the best and wisest of us have grown to understand only a few of the great things of Faith, I suppose we would not expect uniform answers. Nor would we say that to agree on what God is going to do in the future is as important as the ability to clearly explain the way of Salvation and the safe path for saved people now. Church history will keep us humble along doctrinal lines, for men of God served Him with love and power, whose influences came down the centuries, who disagreed greatly in interpretation of prophecy and other subjects.

We are all distressed by the unbelief and learning that puffeth up instead of edifyeth, found in religious books, theological books, theological schools and some pulpits. We do not respect leaders who evade issues for policy's sake. So we sympathize with Bro. Talley's intentions. But it seems to us that we get better results, and all we should ask, if we use Bible language in any Bible test. "Trinity," "depravity," "personality of Satan," "eternal security," are not to be found in my Bible Concordance.

An inclusive creed does seem more Christ-like than a planned exclusive one.

Many young preachers I know in this section are greatly disturbed that some of their church members are "not converted." Probably some are not, but I believe fewer than they think. Jesus did not seem to be so concerned that some tares are with the wheat. He clearly and emphatically told his disciples that they would mistake wheat for tares.

In Hasting's Commentary on Romans he says:

"Churches may make their own conditions of membership. They are not the gate keepers of the Heavenly World. One man can see farther than another and farther at one period of his life than another period. To tempt a man to say that he sees what he does not see, or to ostracize him is to give him two black eyes for being blind. Religion is the response of the whole man to God-conscience, will, thought, affection. A creed is merely the utterance of the intellect. This is false to the method of Jesus."

Who is ultimately the man who believes in the Divinity of Jesus Christ? Is it the man who says he is prepared to accept everything the Church has said on the subject? Or is it the man who in the secret place of his soul is able to say "My Lord and My God" and who carries out his confession in loving obedience.

A WAY TO THE STARS.

I shall find a way to the stars.
No obstacle, though black
As night shall dispute with me
My right to the onward track.

I shall find a way to the stars.
Their silver spirits chime
With mine, and I cannot rest—
They call, and so I climb.

I shall find a way to the stars.
The Will, can fetters chain?
My bonds are the frailest reeds.
I say, I shall attain!

I shall find a way to the stars.
No derelict of fate—
God gave me His hand one day,
And mine's the open gate!

I shall find a way to the stars.
For this I do believe:
Each soul has a deathless urge,
And, heeding, we achieve!

cons and Committees on Finance of this particular conference, though what is said may apply to all of the conferences of the Southern Convention.

There is one item of church polity and finance that the pastor cannot well afford to stress, yet which is of vital importance to our fellowship as well as to the minister. This item has both a spiritual and a financial side, and it is for this reason that the writer is addressing himself to both the Board of Deacons and the Finance Committee of the local church. I refer to the matter of "Superannuation" or the insuring of our ministers against want when the time comes that they are not longer able to carry forward the banner of the Gospel.

I will endeavor to be brief, but for fear that some of our laymen do not fully understand, I am calling attention to the fact that there are two ways, at the present time, for providing funds for the aged minister of our denomination and their dependents. The first of these is by contributions in the way of free-will offerings and by conference apportionments. It is necessary that we continue this method, because there are many of our ministers who are too old to accumulate a sufficient reserve by any form of insurance to take care of them even inadequately. The conference begs of you that you will enable it to continue this support by seeing that your conference apportionment is raised in full.

For ministers forty years of age, or even older there is an "Annuity Fund" which was established by the Congregational Church and to which all ministers are eligible. This is a form of insurance that is supplemented by invested funds of the church, and it is hoped that eventually every minister of our united church will be a participant. Some of our ministers have the funds with which to make the initial payments necessary to become participants in the "Annuity Fund." Others do not. It is to the advantage of your church to help them become members as early as possible.

The conference, at its last session, recommended that a leading layman of your constituency should be chosen to get the facts and data necessary and present them to your church, or that you might invite some visitor to come and present them. Your committee on Superannuation stands ready, insofar as possible, to cooperate with you. It will give it great joy to be able to report that there has been definite action taken by a number of our churches.

J. T. KERNODLE, Chairman,
Committee on Superannuation.

"I am sure that the average citizen in his misty-mindedness could do no better for the remaking of his life, which needs that remaking more than he knows, than wander wonderingly during a holiday under the dome of some great temple raised by men to the glory of God, and there try and listen to its voice, and in the silence clear a space round his soul for eternal things. There he may learn how waning ideals may be rekindled, how the boy in him may remain alive, how the hero in him may conquer and subdue the coward, how righteousness alone, and at what cost, exalteth a nation, and what sacrifices a man must make today if he would stand for Christ."

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS IN GROUP NO. 4, VALLEY CONFERENCE.

Vacation Bible Schools were held in three of the churches of Group No. 4, Valley of Virginia Conference by Mr. Ellis Clark, who proved himself a real help and teacher of young people and won his way into the hearts of all those with whom he came in contact. He was in charge of the religious week-day program and the schools were well-attended. The Wood's Chapel-Cedar Grove combination had an enrollment of eighty-three. The Mayland school had an average attendance of twenty-six. The Wissler's Chapel school had an average attendance of twenty-seven. Wherever Mr. Clark taught, the people—old and young—enjoyed his personality and are enthusiastic for his return next year.

The Concord Vacation Bible School was conducted by Miss Vada Golladay, pianist at the Concord Christian Church. There was an average attendance of twenty-six. Twenty-five certificates were awarded.

We feel that the summer work was a great success and know that much good will be the result. "The Church of Tomorrow" will reap the rewards of today's work.

TIMBER RIDGE.

(VALLEY OF VIRGINIA.)

A Preaching Mission was held from August 20 through September 3 at Timber Ridge Church, with Rev. James R. Clinton, D. D., as the guest speaker. Through the courtesy of Mrs. A. C. Oates, who furnished the lumber and pews, and through the work of the men and women of the church, who built the platform and put up the pews and cleaned them, a most delightful pine grove near the church was transformed into a place of worship. All the services were held there, except for a few nights when it was so cool we had to go inside the church.

A total of two thousand, two hundred and sixty people were recorded as attending during the two weeks. Five fine young people were received into the fellowship of the church on profession of faith. There are a number of others whom we believe will come in later.

Dr. Clinton, who is pastor-at-large for our Home Boards, endeared himself to the hearts of our people. His messages were intellectual and vitally spiritual. He taught practical truth and in a persuasive, appealing manner sought to impress his hearers with the necessity of great church loyalty and more Christ-like living. His ministry of song and music was greatly enjoyed and proved to be very beneficial in the services. The pastor feels that the church as a whole faces the future invigorated, with new life, and with new devotion.

Timber Ridge is one of our older churches, having been organized in 1812, and has served for more than a century in a fine way. Many prominent men and women have gone out from this church to serve in professional, business, and domestic life, wherever the providence of God has led them, and they have been known by their deep piety and unreserved fidelity to the Church. If the Church in this century would measure up to the high standard as shown by their example, we must cultivate our people and lead them into a fuller consecration and devotion to the Church of the Living God.

WHERE GOD DWELLS.

One of the questions most frequently asked by little children is, "Where does God live?" Usually it is explained that God dwells in heaven, and in attempting to clarify that statement reference is made to a place above the clouds and even beyond the stars.

However, not many people are satisfied with having God so far away. The Israelites like to think of God as dwelling in their tabernacle. When the priests carrying the Ark of the Covenant marched at the head of the tribes, the people could travel through unknown stretches of wilderness and march bravely into battle with the confidence that they would be victorious. Much of the strength of Judaism lay in the conviction that Jehovah inhabited the temple on Mt. Moriah. But the Samaritans insisted that God lived on Mt. Gerizim, and at Jacob's Well Jesus was invited to settle that dispute. Imagine the astonishment of the Sychar woman when the Teacher explained that God is spirit—not flesh—He could be both places at once. It is exceedingly helpful to think of God as being in the very church, where we worship, rather than far away in heaven. We are equally thankful that He can be in the midst of every group that is truly worshipping.

Now God can even be closer to us than that. Izaak Walton said: "God has two dwellings—one in heaven and the other in a meek and thankful heart." Could anything bring us more hope and help than having our Lord with us day and night, wherever we go? When God can be so personal, it is no wonder that He becomes so precious to many of His people.

When Moses was preparing to construct the tabernacle, God gave him minute directions as to how it should be built. Only certain kinds of material were to be used. The workmen understood that slipshod work would not be tolerated, for it was to be God's dwelling place. It is the same with people. The most High will not accept every kind of dwelling place. We must meet his requirements.

First of all, the heart must be clean. The Holy Spirit can cleanse every life and make it fit for God's presence. Next, the life must be holy—that is, set apart for God's use. If certain things are allowed to enter into it, God is crowded out. We must dedicate our hearts to Him and assure Him that they will be kept for Him alone.

A heart may be clean and holy, yet so proud that God cannot dwell in it. The Pharisee whose prayer was so different from that of the poor publican boasted of his personal goodness and activities. He felt no need of God, for he considered himself good enough, and believed he could take care of himself. Although he thought that he was giving thanks, he lacked the spirit of true gratitude. But when a person says with Paul, "By the grace of God I am what I am," we know God has found a home in his heart.

A meek man is teachable; unto him God can make his way known. He also will instruct others in a spirit of meekness, remembering whence his knowledge comes. He is attracted to Christ because the Savior is "meek and lowly in heart." Since meekness is one of the fruits of the Spirit, we may regard it as an indication of a Spirit-filled heart.

Thankfulness is an evidence of clear thinking. The thankful man admits that every good gift has come from God. This was true of Paul. He was grateful that God had selected him to have a part in spreading the Gospel, especially since formerly he had been a "blasphemer and a persecutor."

Let us strive to maintain a spirit of meekness and thankfulness in order that God may be pleased to abide with us permanently.—Selected.

"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

FOR THE CHILDREN

NED'S EXCUSES.

"It wasn't my fault mother," said Ned. "Meg left her glass so near the edge of the table that it fell off with the tiniest touch."

Ned's mother sighed. Then Ned protested:

"B-ut, mother, it's true. Meg did leave it near the edge."

"Perhaps she did. But she did not knock it off," and mother sighed again.

Then Ned went out to join Meg at her play, knowing that he had worried mother once again.

Mother was always worrying over things, he said. Just yesterday he had come in with a poor report card from school. When he had seen how sad his mother looked, he had said: "Well, mother, it wasn't my fault. I couldn't get my lessons up with the baby crying almost every night."

"Every night?" his mother questioned.

And Ned had stammered: "Well, some nights, anyway."

"If I remember rightly, dear, that happened only once. You are trying to excuse yourself."

"Well, you know I had a cold for a week. So it really wasn't my fault that I did so badly."

"Does that account for your low marks the whole term?" Ned's mother argued then.

Ned had had no answer ready. It was always hard to find an excuse to satisfy his mother. She always seemed to know they were excuses.

It had been just like mother, too, today, to see through his excuse about Meg's glass. And yet it had been so much easier to put the blame on Meg than to admit that he was careless.

Ned's conscience pricked him for a few minutes, as it always did when mother looked so sad. But as he and Meg played throw and catch in the front yard, he soon became his careless self once more.

"Not my fault. Your bad throw, Meg," he called as he missed a catch.

"A good catcher should catch bad throws, too," retorted Meg.

"Not with a sore finger," answered Ned.

As a matter of fact, Ned had twisted a finger at school that day, but it had hurt for only a few minutes. Ned knew quite well that he was merely making an excuse.

"I'm so sorry, Ned," said Meg. "I didn't know your finger was sore."

And Ned felt quite ashamed.

Meg and Ned played back and forth with the ball for some time in silence. Then suddenly Meg began to miss many of Ned's throws.

"I'm stupid," she would say each time. And Ned would not deny it, though he knew full well that it was his bad throw that made her miss.

Then it began to grow dark, and the players went inside.

"Mummy, I'm a stupid player." Ned heard his sister say. "Ned caught all but two of mine, and that with a sore finger. I missed heaps of his."

GIVE HIM A LIFT.

By I. A. Barnes.

If you find a fellow in trouble,
Give him a lift;
It will make your blessing double,
If you give another lift.

If you find one down in sorrow,
Give him a lift;
It will make you a blessed tomorrow,
To give somebody a lift.

Don't pass a fellow on the highway,
But give him a lift;
Life will be happier for you today,
If you give a brother a lift.

If you meet one discouraged and sad,
Give him a lift;
It will make your own heart glad,
To give a neighbor a lift.

Life is too short to be selfish and small
We should be built on a larger plan;

Let your blessings be shared by all,
And be helping the other man.

—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

Ned said nothing. He hurried off to get his books to study. He found, however, that he could not think of lessons. Meg's words kept troubling him. So did mother's worried look.

Finally he pushed his books away, and went to where Meg sat.

"Meg," he said, "my finger isn't sore at all. I played ball badly. Every time you missed, my throws were bad. You're not a stupid player, Meg."

At last Ned summoned up the courage to break his excusing habit. He rushed back to his books with a blush of shyness, but before he began to study he saw his mother's face light up with joy, and heard Meg's happy: "That's awfully decent of you, Ned."

"It was certainly worth admitting it," was what Ned thought as he set-led down to work in earnest. "It makes a fellow feel more like a man."

A LITTLE GIRL'S SERMON.

The little girl of this story is a grandmother now, so you see it was a good while ago that she preached the sermon about which I want to tell you about. She was a loving-hearted little girl, and she liked to see the people about her happy and comfortable, so she was often troubled about a woman who lived on another farm near her home. This woman worked very hard all day long, every day in the long year, but she couldn't go out among her friends, perhaps she could not even go to church, because she never had any dress to wear.

One day the little girl was riding from town with this poor, busy woman's husband, and he was doing what he nearly always did except when he was asleep—he was smoking a pipe.

The little girl watched him thoughtfully, and at last she said, "If you wouldn't smoke so much tobacco, you could buy your wife some new dresses and make her happy."

He had never thought of that before. He liked to smoke and he quite forgot that he was letting himself love tobacco better than he loved his own wife. Perhaps when he was a little boy he had always taken the rosier apple or the biggest cookie, so of course when he grew to be a man he didn't know how to love anybody but himself, and he couldn't be really happy and nobody could love him very dearly.—The Sunbeam.

"If we wish to overcome evil, we must overcome it by good. There are doubtless many ways of overcoming the evil in our own hearts, but the simplest, easiest, most universal, is to overcome it by active occupation in some good word or work. The best antidote against evil of all kinds, against the evil thoughts which haunt the soul, against the needless perplexities which distract the conscience, is to keep hold of the good we have. Impure thoughts will not stand against pure words, and prayers, and deeds. Little doubts will not avail against great certainties."

"Christianity is a life as well as a system of teaching; and as each virtue or quality is best interpreted in the light of the highest example of its kind, so also human friendship becomes transfigured by the friendship which Jesus offers to all who will receive Him."

WAR.

All of us stand aghast at the outbreak of another world war. What the end will be and what the outcome no living mortal can tell. When the powers of hate, death and destruction are unleashed there is simply no telling what the consequences will be. This, however, has proven through the ages as stated in the Bible. "He that taketh up the sword shall perish by the sword." On this account the nation, or the people, who voluntarily take up the sword may expect the consequences. The prophet a long time ago said, that the time would come when war should cease and the Prince of Peace should rule and reign. That time will yet come despite the folly, the short-sightedness and the madness of man. Man is the intelligent of God's creations, being made as he is in the image of God, but at the same time he is the most cruel, deadly, and destructive. It is not a matter of saving our civilization for it may have a wrong basis, but is a matter of bringing in the kingdom of heaven through the reign of the Prince of Peace. To this end all should strive and earnestly pray. When the world shall come to know Jesus Christ and the real significance of the Cross it will lay down its sword forever and will take up war no more as a means of settling national, or international, difficulties. May God hasten that day should be the earnest and constant prayer of all professed followers of Christ. We feel sure that our President and the Congress will do all they can to keep us out of this and if it is humanly possible we should stay out, since by going in we cultivate hatred on the part of other peoples. That of converting the people to the religion of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ may be and is a slow process, but it is a process which He Himself chose and which we should seek with all diligence to follow.

We began the new fiscal year for our offerings from Sunday schools, churches, individuals, etc., September 1, and sincerely trust that the coming year will certainly be equal in donations and contributions to those of the year closing August 31, which, as SUN readers noted, amounted to a total of $17,520.45. We have been grateful for every dime and dollar coming in and shall seek with all the mind and heart we have to increase this the coming year, which can easily be done if the members of our churches and Sunday schools will take seriously to heart the divine task of sharing the gospel with others. Only churches with their Sunday schools and auxiliary organizations make any contributions whatever to missions. So the amount given to missions really represents donations from the church as such to the cause of sharing the gospel with others.

Gratefully,

Mission Secretary.

FLOODS IN NORTH CHINA.

A radiogram through the State Department has just been received by the Foreign Department of the American Board in Boston, from Mrs. Frame, Secretary of the North China Council of the Kung Li Hui, reading:

"Serious extensive floods in Lint-sing, Paoting, Tunghsien, and Tientsin. Flood relief funds urgently needed. Hopei compounds still dry. Arranging foreign man assist Sewall pending Chandler's arrival.

Alice Brame,
U. S. S. Steward."

It is inferred that Mrs. Frame sent this message through the State Department from an American vessel, stationed, either at Changwangtao or even possibly at Tientsin.

The recent news dispatches of floods in North China have given us considerable anxiety regarding the conditions around our mission stations in North China, six of which lie on a flooded great plain. Dr. Wynn C. Fairfield, Secretary of the American Board in charge of correspondence with the China missions, gives the following interpretation:

"This dispatch means that practically all our North China fields are seriously affected. Tchow is the only station on the lower levels not mentioned, and it is almost inconceivable that if all the rivers coming down from the Shansi mountains have been in flood, as reported in the newspapers, Tchow should escape. It is possible that the dykes held in that region and not around Lintsing. The fact that only the Hopei compounds in Tientsin (where schools, church and residences center) are mentioned as dry may be intended to imply that the old compound at Hsiku and the business office on Race Course Road, only a block from the flooded American Consulate, were in the inundated areas. With Mr. Leger and Miss Buell recently arrived in America and Mr. and Mrs. Chandler just on the point of starting back, Miss Sewall is our only missionary in the Hopei region of Tientsin, and Mr. Grimes is undoubtedly tied down with the usual administrative responsibility plus this flood situation, so that it was essential to borrow one of the men from another station to help her with the terrific problems of relief in that crowded region.

It is unnecessary to underline the appeal for relief funds. The American Board will be glad to forward gifts, sending all undesignated gifts as usual to the Church Committee for China Relief (Marked for North China Flood Relief, if you so desire). Relief gifts designated for use in care of individual missionaries will be forwarded through the Treasurer of our North China Mission."

This is not intended as an appeal for special funds, but those who wish to contribute should feel free to do so.

"It may be too much to expect that nations should be governed in their relations towards each other by the precepts of Christian morality, but surely it is not too much to ask that they should conform to the code of courtesy and good breeding recognized among gentlemen in the intercourse of social life."

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION WEEK.

SEPTEMBER 24-OCTOBER 1.

The week following the last Sunday in September is set aside by various denominations as "Religious Education Week" in the local churches. The last Sunday in September is used as "Promotion Day"—the time when the pupils of the Sunday school are promoted from one class to another. During the following week is a good time to make a survey of the community and get new members for the classes of your school. Do not forget to check up on the members of your own church, who are supposed to attend, but do not. Then on the first Sunday in October, present a Rally Day program for the benefit of the old and new members.

MATERIALS FOR PROMOTION DAY.Promotion Certificates—

- Black and White Series—9½ x 11¼ in.—30c doz.
- Standard Series (colored floral designs and Bible pictures)—9¾ x 12½ in.—35c doz.
- New Series Folders (Bible picture on cover, Bible verse and certificate inside)—5¼ x 6¼ in.—(folded)—50c doz.
- Perfect Attendance Diploma—6½ x 11½ in.—60c doz.
- Promotion Gift Booklet (8 pages, colors on enameled cardboard, Bible verses, pictures, certificates, etc.)—60c doz.

Order the above Promotion Certificates from Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass. State number wanted for each department, as well as giving above information.

Suitable Gifts—

- The Little Children's Bible—$1.00 (pupils entering Junior Dept.).
- Prayers for Little Children—10c (pupils entering Primary Dept.).
- Old Testament Stories—by Eulalie Grover—$1.00 (pupils entering Junior or Intermediate Dept.).
- Bible Pictures and Their Stories—by Susanna Fisher—50c.
- Bible—(Pilgrim Press Special Edition with Bible Helps by Sidney Weston)—$1.00 to $2.55 depending upon binding (pupils entering the Intermediate Dept., or older groups).

Order the above from Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass. The Board of Christian Education, Elon College, N. C., will furnish free of charge inexpensive copies of the New Testament for gifts on Promotion Day.

MATERIALS FOR RALLY DAY.Plays—

- "The Church and Her Children"—by Ada Rose Demorest. The Guardian Spirit of Childhood and Youth inquires of the Church how the children and young people are being trained. In reply the Church exhibits the work done by various departments. Familiar music. Easily prepared. Sold only in sets of 9 copies. $1.25 per set.

"Marching With the Heroes"—by Lyman R. Bayard. Through the aid of Imagination, a group of Juniors see face to face their heroes from both Biblical and later times, and learn how to keep step with them. Single copy, 25c; 8 or more copies, 20c each.

"Out of the Bible"—by Lyman R. Bayard. A simple pageant in which children impersonate famous Bible boys and girls, wear Oriental costumes, and tell Bible stories in Bible words. Single copy, 35c; 8 or more copies, 30c each.

The above may be secured from Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.

Rally Day Programs—

"Pressing Toward the Mark"—A service for all departments of the Sunday school.

"Our Rally Day"—A service for the Sunday school.

"The Messenger of a New Day"—A pageant for Rally Day.

"Forward Steps"—A service for each department of the Sunday school.

"Onward to Victory"—A Rally Day Pageant presenting a strong plea for service.

"Radio Rally Day Service"—Unique service "broadcast" to the audience.

"Standard Rally Day Book"—Containing recitations, songs, short plays for use on Rally Day.

The above may be borrow free of charge from the Board of Christian Education, Elon College, N. C.

SUGGESTIONS FOR RELIGIOUS EDUCATION WEEK.

1. A survey of the community to find those not attending services at any church.
2. A check-up on your church roll to see how many members do not attend Sunday school regularly.
3. An urgent invitation to be given to the abovementioned groups to attend your Rally Day service.
4. A "Church Family Night" program, when the families of your church will have a "pot luck" supper followed by a discussion of the religious education program of your church and its relation to the home.
5. A consecration service for Church School workers, preferably at a church service when the whole congregation can be made to feel its responsibility, too. A splendid service for this type of meeting is found in the September, 1939, issue of the International Journal of Religious Education. A copy may be borrowed from the Board of Christian Education, Elon College, N. C. The July, 1939, International Journal also contains some very valuable helps for this week.

"A PRACTICING MISSION."

The "Practicing Mission" is not apart from, but is definitely a part of the new and aggressive United Christian Adult Movement. This movement is one of the most significant aspects of the life and work of the church in America today. Its goal is to take Jesus Christ in earnest and to put his principles into practice in every area of personal and social life in America and throughout the world.

Adult education in the church is coming into its own.

The first quarter of the century brought the child to the center of attention. The past decade has made young people the object of the church's chief concern. Now is the time to give more thought to men and women. And the church shows signs of doing this.

This need not mean less thought and time and consecration for youth or childhood. It should mean more thought and planning and activity for adults. Men and women, it is true, have been most in mind in plans for the Sunday service of worship; aside from that service, however, all too little attention has been given to adult education in the church—opportunities for learning, opportunities for enriching educative experiences.

We propose a real advance by the Congregational and Christian Churches in adult education.

If we could only believe and live out our belief, that we men, in spite of all separating differences, are in our deepest, truest things alike; that all of us lock in our hearts the same hopes and doubts that cheer us and cast us down, we would then be more frank one with the other, and would surely oftener succeed in what we really want to do; that is, lend a helping hand, say a cheering word to our fellow travelers marching, sometimes stumbling, along the high, hard roadway of life."

"You are seeking your own will, my daughter. You are seeking some good other than the law you are bound to obey. But how will you find good? It is not a thing of choice; it is a river that flows from the foot of the Invisible Throne, and flows by the path of obedience. I say again, man cannot choose his duties. You may choose to forsake your duties, and choose not to have the sorrow they bring. But you will go forth, and what will you find, my daughter? Sorrow without duty—bitter herbs, and no bread with them."

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP FORMED.

If there had been a doubt in anyone's mind concerning the interest of the young people in Western North Carolina forming a Pilgrim Fellowship for the Conference, it was quickly dispelled by the large group gathered at Pleasant Ridge Christian Church, near Ramseur, last Sunday.

One hundred and forty young people, representing sixteen churches, were there to learn more about young people's work in their local churches and in the Conference. They elected the following officers to direct the work in that area:

Sybrant Pell, president, Pleasant Ridge Church; Juanita Owens, vice-president, Pleasant Hill Church; Thelma Thomas, secretary, Big Oak Church; William Dan White, treasurer, Hank's Chapel.

Departmental Superintendents are as follows:

Marie Humble, Devotionals, Smithwood; Howard Cox, Missions, Park's Cross Roads; Fay King, Publications, Liberty; Lucile Key, Social Action, Brown's Chapel; Sybil Brown, Leadership Training, Ramseur.

Counselors are as follows:

Rev. W. J. Andes, Hank's Chapel; Mrs. Hugh York, Park's Cross Roads; H. J. Cochrane, Ether.

OUR CHINA FRIENDSHIP PROJECT.

By MISS FRANCES EVERETT.

The dream of Christian youth everywhere is to achieve Christian personality and to build a world Christian community. This same ideal is the purpose of National Pilgrim Fellowship which binds all Congregational-Christian young people together and links them with the great youth movements of the world. The Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship constitutes one of the ten regional divisions set by the National Council of Pilgrim Fellowship and as such is seeking to make the purposes of the national organization a vital part of the life of Southeast young people.

The state and conference fellowships which make up the Southeast Region have been carrying out programs of their own. Many of these groups have been thinking that they would like to make their work more effective and more expressive of the ideals of Pilgrim Fellowship. But no organization felt strong enough to venture far alone! Then came the meeting of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship at Norfolk, Va., in May. The young people there enthusiastically discussed the possibility of working together on a project big enough to challenge the entire Southeast. A representative committee was appointed to contact denominational leaders and young people in the Southeast and consider with them the idea of a project.

The proposal met with an enthusiastic response and the matter of choosing a suitable project claimed the attention of the committee and its advisers. It was learned that the American Board is anxious to provide in Tientsin, China, a Layman's Training Center for young Chinese farmers and farmerettes, and other youth leaders, but there are no funds for it in the regular budget. This seemed to be the ideal project for the Southeast. Something really worth doing. It would give an opportunity for the young people here to express their friendship and good will for the Chinese Christian who are struggling to maintain their ideals in a period of extreme crisis. And the Training Center would be a wonderful tool for service in the hands of our missionaries in the Tientsin area.

The President of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship carried on an interesting correspondence with Mr. Robert E. Chandler who has been in Tientsin for a number of years who sails on September 8 to take up his work there again. He painted vivid pictures of the Chinese young people who come to Tientsin for study in short courses in spite of the fact that they have to live in crowded and uncomfortable quarters. He told of the additional work that could be done with the Training Center: Leadership Training School, Vacation Bible Schools, Young People's Conferences and Agricultural Short Courses for a much larger group. Because of this opportunity for real service the Southeast chose as its project the se-

WHAT JESUS SAID ABOUT SEEKING GOD'S KINGDOM.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR SEPTEMBER 24, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Matthew 6:19-34.

Daily Readings—

Mon.—Seek It Primarily—Luke 12: 29-34.

Tues.—Seek It By Learning Its Mysteries—Mark 4: 10-12.

Wed.—Seek It Unencumbered—Matt. 19: 23-26.

Thurs.—Seek It As a Little Child—Mark 10: 13-16.

Fri.—Seek It Through Repentance—Matt. 21: 28-32.

Sat.—Seek It Through Love—Luke 10: 25-28.

Jesus' advice is to seek God's kingdom first and other things will find their proper place in our lives. If we seek the kingdom of God first, we have an attitude to pray "Thy Kingdom Come." This is the spirit in which the disciples were taught to pray.

God's kingdom begins within the individual but it does not stop there. It finds enlargement only as the individual seeks to promote the cause of Christ. In this way we become kingdom builders.

Let someone speak on methods of seeking God's kingdom (refer to daily readings).

Let others discuss Kingdom Building Tasks.

Questions for Discussion—

1. What are the marks and traits of one who truly is a seeker for the Kingdom of God?

2. What is the relationship between the personal and social elements in the Kingdom of God?

3. What evidence do we have that the "kingdom builder" must be whole-souled in his loyalty to God's cause?

4. What are some enterprises in which local Endeavorers can join with other Endeavorers?

For Meditation—

Christian, rise and act thy creed.
Let thy prayer be in thy need;
Seek the right, perform the true,
Raise thy work and life anew.

Let thine alms be hope and joy,
And thy worship God's employ;
Give Him thanks in humble zeal,
Learning all His will to feel.

MICAH: A MESSENGER OF SOCIAL JUSTICE.

LESSON XII—SEPTEMBER 17, 1939.

GOLDEN TEXT: What doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy (kindness), and to walk humbly with thy God?

LESSON: Micah 3: 1-12; 6: 6-8.

A Preacher from the Country.

Micah was born and reared in the country. People in the country, as a rule, live closer to God than people who live in cities. Religion is more real. The world owes much in the sphere of religion to men and women who came from the country. Take out of the churches of the average city the people who came from the country, and you would take out some of the best and most fruitful men and women. Take out of the ministry the men who were reared in the country, and there would be great gaps in the ranks. You folks who live in the country, who are members of rural Sunday schools and churches are more important than you think. A decline in religion in the country and small towns would be a disastrous thing for religion in general. And you ministers who are serving rural churches—your work is important, strategic, vital. Be not weary in well-doing. Christ is depending on you.

Hitting Right Out from the Shoulder.

This man, Micah, did not mince words. He saw the hypocrisy, the formality, the futility, and the inadequacy of the religion of the leaders, and of the people in general. He saw what had happened to the people as a result of the luxurious and extravagant policy of the leaders who had oppressed the people with forced labor and heavy taxes, and with tribute to be paid to foreign nations. Avaricious landlords took possession of the lands and houses of the people, the poor, and even widows were ejected from their homes, justice became a mockery, oppression flourished.

Even more sinister things had come to pass. Micah speaks out boldly against them. To list them is to see on what dangerous grounds the nation was resting. In addition to charging them with "abhorring justice, and perverting all equity," he denounces them for "building up Zion with blood"—their palaces and public works had been built with the blood of forced labor; they had built Jerusalem with iniquity—graft and dishonesty flourished. This was bad enough, but worse was yet to come.

"The heads thereof judge for reward"—what hope is there for a nation when judges can be bribed, when they render verdicts for money? "The priests thereof teach for hire"—how much vitality can there be in religion when its leaders become simply professional? "And the prophets thereof divine for money"—what can you expect when those who are supposed to emphasize the spiritual in religion, are concerned only with seeing what they can get out of it, and when they preach only what those who pay, want preached? These three indictments of Micah concern the integrity and the hope of a nation. Alas! for any nation or community where those who administer justice and those who teach and preach, are covetous and corrupt.

Now this plain, country preacher boldly denounced the wickedness in high places. He called a spade a spade, and told the priests and princes that they were sinners, that they cried unto Jehovah in vain. Because they had shut their eyes to the light, they had lost the power to see the light. Because they deliberately disobeyed the truth, they had lost the power to see the truth. Because the leaders of the nation had deserted Jehovah, He was going to suffer the hated foreigners to lay waste their country, and even destroy their sacred city. And this prophecy came true in a literal sense.

Hush Money for Almighty God.

The interesting thing about the situation in Judah was that although the nation was steeped in sin and selfishness, formal religion was at a high peak. The princes and priests were observing the outward forms of religion punctiliously. They thought that they could bribe Jehovah by giving him a multitude of offerings and sacrifices. They thought that the temple itself was a thing to conjure with, as long as it was in their midst, they were safe. They thought that because they were Jehovah's chosen people, they could get away with most anything, so long as they performed their formal rites and ceremonies. Micah bluntly told them that all these things were to no avail. God's favor could not be bought. Burnt offerings and sacrifices could not be used as bribes. There was for Him no substitute for sincerity and right conduct. No amount of sacrifices and formal religious observances could be a substitute for right living.

Micah was one of the great voices for what we now call "social action" or the "social gospel." He still has something to say to those who deny through the week by their lives, what they profess with their lips on Sunday. He still has something to say to those who think that because they keep a Bible in their home, or give something to the church, or go to church, or say their prayers, that they can play fast and loose with ethical ideals and spiritual laws.

What Doth Jehovah Require of Us?

If Jehovah is not pleased with "thousands of rams," or with "ten thousands of rivers of oil," if he will not be satisfied even with the offering of one's first-born son, then what in the world does he want? the people might have asked. In reply Micah speaks what Dr. George Adam Smith says "is the greatest saying of the Old Testament" and that is excelled by only one verse in the New Testament. These words are inscribed as a motto of the Alcove of Religions in the reading room of the Congressional Library in Washington, D. C.: "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God."

Here is a summary of one's duty toward man and toward God. To do justly, to do unto others as we would have them do unto us, to show the spirit not only of justice, but of mercy, and to walk humbly with one's God; to have a spirit of dependence upon God; to have a teachable spirit; to be willing to put aside all false dignity and to serve others; to be motivated by the right spirit within—this is what Jehovah requires of one, at least that was the highest expression of religion in the Old Testament. Even Micah, who scaled the heights of spiritual religion far beyond his contemporaries, did not come to the summit of spiritual religion as expressed in the words of Jesus. But his words must have come with a strange accent to the people of his day, who put so much emphasis on the forms of religion to the loss of the spirit.

Dr. W. J. Mayo, of the famous Mayo Clinic, says: "Not one in ten of those now drinking is really addicted to alcohol, but the number of those beginning to drink in the years since repeal is enormous; perhaps thirty million people are drinking today." And he believes that at least ten millions of these will be addicts in the years to come.

MONDAY.

"THE DRAGON FEAR."

"Be strong, fear not: behold your God . . . will come and save you."—Isa. 35: 4.

Fear everywhere is defeating us all; fear of discharge; fear of failure; fear of sickness; fear to commit one's self; fear of poverty; fear of death; fear of the boss; fear of loss of job; fear . . . fear . . .

After all, fear is quite needless. If we knew how to cast our care upon Him: if we only knew that He would take care of us: if we only believed that He doeth all things well to those that love and serve Him: if we only trusted Him that to "be with us in the sixth trouble and the seventh not to forsake us," and that He will never leave us, we would have no cause to worry.

Let us say "The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do to me."

Prayer—"O Master, we would trust Thee more, know Thy love, and thought, and so trust Thee that we may not be dismayed." Amen.

TUESDAY.

"ONLY ONE INCIDENT."

"And the priest . . . of the Lord stood firm on dry ground . . . until all the people were passed clean over the Jordan."—Joshua 3: 17.

Our text is a story of a miracle of the Bible. But moderns call miracles "an incident." A preacher friend, only the other day, undertook to rationalize the Bible to me. He looks upon the prophecies as but foreseings of wisdom and not as divine prophecy. He also calls the miracles "an incident." We believe the Japanese refer to their savagery in China as "The Chinese incident." What will the Lord do with folks like these?

Miracles are still happening every day. Nothing short of miracles could have made history as it is. Sometimes we wonder where God is, but then we find Him within us, and we find Him in the mighty silent forces for good. When we do, our faith takes a fresh hold, and we believe and trust in God more.

Prayer—Our Father, we are Thy children. Help us to have more faith, and be always found steadfast and free." Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"THE CHRISTIAN'S LEVEL."

"The son of man came eating and drinking . . . a friend of publicans and sinners."—Matt. 11: 19.

A young Christian was rather dismayed once to find himself the guest in a home where the bedroom had no heat, the weather was cold, the dining-room was a lean-to where the snow penetrated through. Friends sought to have him go elsewhere where he would be more comfortable. But his host had welcomed him, had received his conversation with pleasure, and so he stayed. The outcome was: changed lives in that home. They all joined the church, and a revival took place in that community.

The Apostles found fault with Jesus, but Jesus spent His days in the homes of the lowly, in the streets where the common people were: and they heard Him gladly, and the world was saved thereby. We need the "Upper Room" experiences, indeed, but only for purposes of power. On the level with folks is where we shall still find Him.

Prayer—O Lord, forgive us of our selfishness and neglect, and send us, Lord, to do Thy work in the hearts of men! Amen.

THURSDAY.

"I CAN."

"I can do all things through Christ which strengthened me."—Phil. 4: 13; also read II Tim. 2: 17.

A soldier wrote home to mother from the trenches. In this letter he said, "My happiest moments are those spent reading my Bible, and saying over and over that little verse you wrote therein:

So nigh to grandeur is our dust
So near is God to man
When duty whispers "lo, thou must."
The youth replies, "I can."

Men who are joining our Navy these days are a fine lot. We are delighted to know that so many of them cherish the faith of their upbringing. The Ship's Service buys one hundred prayer books each quarter for free distribution. That is not enough. Our men are trying to hold to their faith in God.

Prayer—Our Father, be with us, and help us to undertake great things for Thee. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"THE GREATEST HEROISM."

"God gave us not a spirit of fearfulness, but of power and love."—II Tim. 1: 7.

"Let us therefore draw near with boldness unto the Throne of Grace, that we may receive mercy . . . and help in time of need."—Heb. 4: 16.

An officer in the navy had conferred upon him yesterday the highest honor the United States Navy can bestow, the Distinguished Service Medal. It was conferred for his bravery in the sinking of the Panay in the Yangtze River, China.

The world honors men for their bravery in battle and for their courage in facing the enemy. But the most heroic thing one ever did is to stand before a congregation, many of whom are pals, and witness for Christ. When one falls into the hands of friends who would entice them to sin, it takes courage to say no. But what a witness for Christ! Man offers no reward for this kind of heroism, but Christ does—a crown of life.

RELIGION IS DYNAMITE.

"How are such dynamic things done through Him?"—Mark 6:2.

In Lloyd Douglas' "Forgive Us Our Trespases," Julia finds that by forgiving those she has hated she is released of the poison that has made life seem bitter. She writes a letter to her unborn baby, in which she explains how she obtained this power, with the hope that he might also find such a power. Dinny is a grown young man when he finds his mother's letter, and after reading it, he immediately decides to give the plan a trial. He explains his plans to an old country rube by the name of Jason, and Jason ejaculates: "Yer handlin' dynamite, by golly! Julia said 'twas a sort o' a power, 'n' e'd always count on what she spoke. She's put this stuff in yer hands, 'n' told you how t' shoot 't off. God-darned if yuh hadn't better do 't th' way she says."

Religion is dangerous! Multitudes of blundering fools who did not know how to handle it have blown their brains out. Bloody massacres, unjust inquisitions, merciless programs, and "Holy" Crusades have been advanced in the name of religion. Yet, "thousands who, weary and nameless, the straight, hard pathway trod" have rightly used this power to shake the very foundations of civilization.

Prince Siddartha, the great Buddha, found the source of this power while sitting under the Bodhi tree, and went out, a rebel to Brahmanism, to tell others of the way of salvation. Jesus of Nazareth left his carpenter's shop in order that he might give all of his time in telling others of the way of life. "And to as many as believed in him, gave he the power to become the sons of God," even as he himself was a son. Mohammed, six centuries after Jesus, received from the angel Gabriel this same power, and devoted his life to telling it to others. He was persecuted and reviled, having to flee from his own city, but he lived to see all of Arabia accept the plan of salvation that he had found. Socrates, a rebel to the Greek gods, became a "gadfly" and "buzzed" his way into the hearts and lives of his people. Confucius, a rebel to Taoism, could find no rest until others knew what he knew. Michelangelo translated this power into art. Wagner put it into music. Goodhue built it in stone. And what shall I say of Emerson, Tagore, Einstein, Kagawa, Gandhi, and Schweitzer?

Where did they find this power? Why is it so hard to obtain? Why does the church keep so silent about it? Not only has the church kept silent, but has been responsible to a great extent for the concealing of this source of power. We have wrangled over creeds and doctrines, divided over petty trivialities, and hugged to our bosom the non-essentials while the very essence of this power has escaped. Even in this enlightened twentieth century, it seems as if we are as far from the truth as we have ever been.

The Modernist has done as much to prevent the simple teachings of Jesus and to lead the church astray as any one factor in our present generation. The Modernist is neither modern nor is he Christian. He says that Jesus is not a Person of the Trinity, but, neither will he admit that Jesus is as other men. He says that the Bible is not the infallible word of God, neither is it to be placed on the same level with other great inspired literature. He will not discard the creeds, yet he says them with a "mental reservation" and will not accept them at face value. By trying to reconcile religion and science he has only made the gap more obvious. His middle position is not even clear to himself.

Neither is Fundamentalism Christian! Although it is hard to believe, there are still people in this world who believe that the fundamental tenets of the Christian faith are the Virgin Birth, the Walking on the Sea, the belief in a personal devil, the second coming of the Lord, and the Millennial Reign. Some churches think these are the essential beliefs for one who desires to unite with the Christian Church. Isn't it strange that Jesus never considered important the things that the Fundamentalists say are the main body of the religion called by his name? Doesn't it seem like blasphemy to even think of Jesus asking such questions of one who wanted to follow him?

Jesus was not a miracle-man, nor did he depend on magic to get people to follow him. The power that was in Jesus needed no such proof. It was a power that shone through his very being, wherever he went, and was so powerful in its effect that men were willing to leave all they had to follow him. He never asked, "Do you believe I am the second person of the Trinity and was born of the Blessed Virgin Mary?" He asked, "Did you feed the poor? Did you visit the sick? Did you clothe the naked? Did you love my brothers?" That's the dynamite of religion! It's easy to answer yes to the silly doc-

FAMILY ALTAR.

Prayer—O Father, give us courage to learn of Thee and witness for Thee, our King. Give the unsaved the courage to rise up and follow Thee. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"AT YOUR SERVICE."

"Make thy face to shine upon thy servant."—Psalm 119:135.

He was on his vacation, and sleeping on the train. The conductor tapped him on his shoulder seeking his ticket. Though in a stupor, a characteristic smile illuminated his face as he opened his eyes, "What can I do for you?" came the genial question.

There is no provision in God's Word for those who take a vacation from Christian living, or Christian service. Paul said, "be instant in season and out of season." The habit of smiling and offerings one's services serves many an evil situation.

Prayer—Our Father, as the face of Jesus reflected Thy glory, give us grace to reflect always Thy Spirit toward our fellowman, and make us true and humble servants. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"DEAD BUT LIVING."

"This is John the Baptist: he is risen from the dead."—Matt. 14:2.

Yes, Herod succeeded in taking the life of John the Baptist. But he could not kill the influence of the man's life. Happy the lot of the man, woman, or child who so lives that, after his death, one can say: "What an indelible impression he has made on the lives of so many precious souls who go on speaking through other souls when all trace of his name is effaced!"

Prayer—O God, today may we be able to do something, say something for Thee! Amen.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The weather has been very warm and for the past ten days it has given our farms boys a fine opportunity to make hay. They have been working early and late and have about fifty tons cured and in the barn and have about fifty tons more to cut, cure, and get in the barn. If we can have open weather for another ten days and nothing happens, we ought to get it in. One hundred tons of hay is a lot of hay, but when you have fifty head of cattle and four mules to eat hay, it takes a lot of hay during the year. The Christian Orphanage has a splendid herd of cows—Holsteins, Jerseys, and Guernseys. This herd has been built up to fifty cows during the last fifteen years from a herd of seven or eight cows. We are drifting into a herd of purbred Holsteins and hope in a few years to have as fine a herd as can be found in this section.

The Orphanage Singing Class visited Wake Chapel Christian Church last Sunday and put on their program at eleven o'clock in the morning. A fine audience was present to hear them. After the service the good women spread an excellent lunch on a table in the shade of the trees. Bro. W. J. Ballentine furnished cold milk and Bro. C. A. Ballentine plenty of cold ice water and everybody enjoyed it and had a pleasant time. The children enjoyed their visit so much that they hope to go back sometime and give another program. We want to thank each and every one for their special kindnesses to us. We carry this Singing Class to our churches in order that they may get a glimpse, at least, of what we are trying to do for the children in our care. Miss Eric Lane, my assistant, has worked hard to get up a program that will carry a message which will be uplifting to those who hear. It is built around the theme "Doing Our Best."

We hope to get invitations from a number of churches between now and the second Sunday in December. Any church wishing the class to put on their program in the church please write me and if we are not already dated up for that Sunday we will be glad to visit your church. If we are already dated, we will write you the dates we have no appointments so you may select another time.

Superintendent.

In Memoriam

CARLTON.

Franklin Monroe Carlton of Durham, N. C., passed to his reward on August 8, 1939, at the age of eighty-two years. Funeral services were conducted at his home by Dr. S. C. Harrell and Rev. G. W. Perry. Interment was in O'Kelley's Christian Church cemetery. Mr. Carlton had been in declining health for the past two years and critically ill for one week.

He was born in Chatham County in the O'Kelley's Chapel community. He was the son of Anderson Monroe Carlton and Jane O'Kelley and a direct descendant of James O'Kelley, founder of the Christian Church. At the age of twenty-one he moved to Durham and entered the mercantile business.

He first married Miss Alice Turrentine of Durham, who died in 1910. In February of 1911 he married Miss Martha Dillow of Baltimore, Md., who survives. Also surviving are a large number of nieces, nephews and other relatives. He was the last member of his immediate family.

DUKE.

Mrs. Susie M. Duke, wife of R. Thomas Duke, of Newport News, Va., passed from temporal to spiritual life on August 26, 1939. Mrs. Duke was a native of Nansemond County, but had lived in Newport News for thirty years. She was a member of the First Congregational-Christian Church and a deaconess. She loved her church devotedly and was interested in all its expressions of service.

Of the immediate family she leaves her husband; two sons, Tommie, Jr., and Freddie; a sister, Mrs. J. W. Holland of Suffolk; and one brother, J. B. Hueter of Hampton. She was fifty years of age.

The funeral was conducted from her church on Monday, August 28, at three o'clock. Rev. Robert Lee House, a former pastor, assisted the writer in the service. The floral offerings were beautiful and abundant, attesting to the beauty of the life she lived.

May the mantle of her church responsibilities fall upon another as worthy as she, and may the Father speak His peace and comfort to all the bereaved.

JESSE H. DOLLAR.

WILLIAMS.

On July 19, 1939, God in His infinite wisdom saw fit to remove from her earthly home Mrs. Lula B. Williams, who was a charter member of the Woman's Missionary Society of Mt. Carmel Christian Church.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we, the members, bow in humble submission to God's will, for we know our Heavenly Father doeth all things according to His love and mercy.

2. That we extend to the family our warmest sympathy and earnest prayers that God's promises may fall soothingly upon their sad hearts, and that when life's work is done they may form an unbroken circle around His throne.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be recorded in our minutes, and a copy sent to "The Christian Sun."

curing of funds to purchase land and buildings for a Laymen's Training Center in Tientsin, China.

The funds for this project will be an additional gift to missions. They do not conflict with any apportionment young people now have and cannot be counted on the church's regular mission apportionment. The church, however, may receive credit for having made this special gift by reporting it under the head of "other gifts." The offerings are to be entirely voluntary and made because of a desire to share with the Chinese some of the good things young people here enjoy. They are to be an expression of Christian love and friendship and an opportunity for those who give to enjoy a real experience in Christian sharing.

Every young person in the Southeast will want to have some part in the China Friendship Project. Sharing in this splendid adventure will make for growth in Christian personality and will help to make the world more of a Christian community. Thus the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship's project will be a step toward realizing the dream of Christian Youth.

SUN'S PULPIT.

trinal questions of the Fundamentalist and to submit to the middling position of the Modernist, but one can still do this and know nothing of the power of Jesus. It's a different story when one is asked to take a definite stand for the right, for love and beauty, and to be willing to die that these might triumph. It's quite a different story when one is asked to change his life.

If we could get beneath all the stained glass, liturgy, ritual, creeds and dogmas, and see the simple teachings of the Master, I'm sure there would be dynamite loosed. If we were willing to be crucified that labor were justly rewarded, that the Negro were treated as a god-child, that the Jew were given his rightful place in society, and that beauty were recognized as an attribute of God, I'm sure that some ministers would be "taken for a ride," that some church members would be asked to leave the fellowship of the church; but it's the only way we can live and call ourselves Christian. Follow, ye who dare!

"Prayer is vital, and the true Christian will find that the indwelling Holy Spirit draws the heart to God in prayer. Early in the morning, especially, we should find ourselves alone with God. Do not think, however, that by multiplying prayer meetings you are going to find the sanctifying power of God in your own life. I have found that it is prayer with the open Bible that prevails."

"It is in the relaxation of security; it is in the expansion of prosperity; it is in the hour of dilatation of the heart, and of its softening into festivity and pleasure, that the real character of men is discerned."

The Southern Convention and Its Conferences

The Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches includes five Conferences in Virginia and North Carolina. The Convention has the same relation to the General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches as other state Conferences.

The Southern Convention undertakes to do several definite things. It owns and operates Elon College and the Christian Orphanage at Elon College, N. C. It publishes "The Christian Sun" under the direction of the Board of Publications. It does home missionary work through the Mission Board, which also collects money for foreign missions which it forwards to the American Board. Leadership training, young people's work, and religious education are sponsored by the Board of Christian Education. The support of aged ministers, their widows and orphans, is taken care of by the Board of Superannuation. The work of Promotional Secretary is financed by the Convention, the Mission Board, and the Board of Christian Education.

These services are made possible because the Conferences and their churches are willing to cooperate through the Convention. The Convention asks the Conferences for a few definite things. The figures below indicate the strength of the Conferences and the requests of the Convention:

Valley of Virginia:

22 Churches.
2,422 Members.
225 Christian Sun Subscriptions.
$2,750 Apportionment.

Western North Carolina:

40 Churches.
3,638 Members.
325 Christian Sun Subscriptions.
$7,500 Apportionment.

Eastern North Carolina:

47 Churches.
5,570 Members.
350 Christian Sun Subscriptions.
$6,250 Apportionment.

Eastern Virginia:

44 Churches.
9,997 Members.
1,050 Christian Sun Subscriptions.
$15,000 Apportionment.

North Carolina and Virginia:

45 Churches.
8,662 Members.
1,050 Christian Sun Subscriptions.
$11,500 Apportionment.

Pastors who are honored with leadership in the churches of the Convention are expected to guide their people in supporting the Boards and Institutions of the Conferences and Convention. Without the cooperation of pastors and churches the work cannot go forward, but with their cooperation progress is assured.

The next few weeks will complete the record for this Conference year. Now is the time for a final check-up on the year's activities and to do the necessary things to meet the expectations of the Convention and Conferences. It is better to go above the quota than below, for the world is desperately in need of the services which the Church can render.

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

The Rev. Floyd M. Price of Hiawatha, Kan., is to preach at the Henderson Christian Church on next Sunday, September 24.

The Promotional Secretary was the guest speaker at the Woman's Missionary Society of the First Christian Church, Burlington, N. C., on last Monday.

Dr. L. E. Smith, Rev. Aubrey C. Todd, and Rev. A. Lanson Granger were among the North Carolina pastors attending the Eastern Virginia Ministerial Association in Suffolk on Monday of this week.

The Rev. Thurman F. Bowers of Greensboro, N. C., is finishing out the Conference year at Apple's Chapel and Hine's Chapel for Rev. C. L. Moody, who is now a student at the Divinity School of Yale University.

Miss Edna Fuleher, who for six years worked in the office of the Board of Christian Education, has accepted work with the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., and is now located at 514 South Main Street, Norfolk, Va.

A revival meeting is being held this week at First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va. The pastor, Rev. Robert Lee House, is being assisted by Dr. H. S. Hardeastle as preacher and Rev. Ernest Emurian, a young Methodist minister in Norfolk, as song leader.

The Rev. J. Everette Neese has recently left Henderson, N. C., and entered Andover Newton Theological Seminary in Massachusetts. Mr. Neese is the acting president of the Eastern North Carolina Conference and expects to return for the Conference session.

Rev. J. Howard Smith, pastor of our church at Lynchburg, Va., recently spoke to the Lynchburg Ministerial Association on "Religion in Mexico." The Church of the Brethren and Cabel Street Interdenominational Church have also heard the Rev. Mr. Smith on the same subject. This is the outgrowth of his summer visit to Mexico.

The family of Rev. J. E. McCauley is now located at Route 1, Henderson, N. C., where Mr. McCauley becomes pastor of the Liberty Vance Church on November 1. The children have entered school. On September 30 the Rev. Mr. McCauley completes a pastorate of eight years with the Richmond Church. He is available for ministerial service during the month of October and for one or two Sundays per month during the coming year. Anyone interested in securing his services may reach him at 3206 Grove Avenue, Richmond, Va., until October 1, and after that at Route 1, Henderson, N. C.

HOMECOMING DAY AT NEW ELAM.

Homecoming Day will be observed at New Elam Congregational-Christian Church in Chatham County on the first Sunday in October. The public is invited to come and bring a basket lunch. All church members, ex-church members, and former pastors of New Elam are especially urged to be present.

EASTERN VIRGINIA WOMAN'S CONFERENCE.

The Woman's Missionary Conference of Eastern Virginia will meet at Richmond Christian Church, 3000 Grove Avenue, Richmond, Va., on Friday, October 20, 1939, at 10:30 in the morning. Attention is called to the fact that the date of the meeting is changed from October 6 to October 20.

MRS. HERBERT HARRELL,
Secretary.

EAST ALABAMA ASSOCIATION.

The East Alabama Association of Congregational-Christian Churches will meet with the Langdale Christian Church on October 11-12. A large attendance is desired and expected. It will make entertainment easier if those planning to attend will notify Mrs. Ila Cole, Langdale, Ala. The entertaining church is anxious to be ready when their friends arrive and requests that cards sent from the church be returned as soon as possible. Rev. J. D. Dollar, Route 3, West Point, Ga., is the pastor of this church.

NORTH CAROLINA WOMAN'S CONFERENCE.

The North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference will hold its annual session at Ingram Christian Church, Ingram, Va., on Tuesday, October 10, 1939, beginning at ten o'clock in the morning. Representatives from all churches, and especially those having missionary societies, will be appreciated.

We are to have a very great privilege and opportunity in that Miss Ruth Seabury will be our guest speaker, and we want to give her ample time. It is also necessary that we hear the regular reports and conduct the business on which our organization depends.

MRS. J. H. LIGHTBOURNE,
President.

THE MISSION BOARD MEETING.

The Home and Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Convention of Congregational-Christian Churches met at Suffolk, Va., on Wednesday of last week and spent the full day considering the work of our church. The meeting began at nine o'clock and closed at six o'clock. Reports indicated that most of the home mission work being sponsored by the Board is in good condition. The Board voted to continue its support at Ocean View, Richmond, Winston-Salem, Hopewell, Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, our three mountain churches, and in four pastorates in the Valley of Virginia. A new church is being started at Asheboro, N. C., and the Board voted to assist with the pastor's salary there. Rev. A. Lanson Granger is the pastor.

Fitting resolutions were adopted concerning Mrs. E. W. Boshart, a member of the Board who recently passed away. Miss Dorothy Truitt of Greensboro, N. C., was elected to fill the vacancy.

"Some people think that heaven will be partitioned off, and that Baptists, Methodists, Catholics, Presbyterians will have separate quarters. Heaven would be a strange place indeed if it were what some people preach and what some other people practice!"

A WORLD AT WAR.

Four hundred million Chinese have been attacked by the Japanese in an undeclared war of two years' duration. The crushing blow of Hitler and his German army against Poland is the beginning of a bloody warfare against all democracies. For years the battle of words has gone on. Into the armed conflict has come socialistic Russia, and indications are that the Balkan states are being persuaded to turn to the aid of the Nazi leadership. With the fall of Poland, which may be before this goes to press, England and France will be faced with the necessity of carrying on what may be a long war with Germany and an undetermined part of the world, or of withholding their armed force until such time as the Fuhrer decides to take some other area of the world. The decision will be no easy one.

With the Russian pressure on Manchukuo released, the Japanese are increasing their torture of China. It is said by some that China could give greater resistance if the Generalissimo and Madame Chiang Kai-Shek were not so genuinely Christian and therefore opposed to war. China has never wanted war and is not prepared for it. America is not yet willing to cut off the war supplies to Japan. (We are said to furnish about 85 per cent of all Japan's necessities for carrying on the war.) With Russia for an ally for Germany and already established in Poland, and with Czechoslovakia and Poland in the hands of Germany, the German army and nation will now be well supplied with raw materials. German influence is already said to be strong in some South American countries. Today there is no part of the earth that can say with assurance that it is at peace. There is no peace, for the world is at war.

WHAT ABOUT AMERICA?

Neutrality is a big word in the United States today. Nearly all Americans would like to stay out of European and Asiatic conflicts. We want peace, and like to have friends. We fought in one European war and have never been quite satisfied about it. In fact, we were frightfully disappointed. The results were not what we expected. We have no heart to enter the arena again, for wild beasts tear up the things we love best.

When the seas were large and traffic slow, neutrality was possible. But that day has gone. Only a few hours intervene between America and the rest of the world. Our people travel everywhere. Business breaks across all national and racial lines. It is easy to say that we should not fight for Standard Oil or the American Tobacco Company, but if business enterprises cannot carry on their trade around the world, business at home will fail and citizens must suffer. This writer can see no possibility of a neutrality which means "stay out of the way" working in a world like ours. There was a time when it might, but that time is gone forever.

If men would recognize that they are brothers and would use the Golden Rule, then nations could be neutral. But mad men do not stop to think of such fine principles of conduct. The teachings of Jesus have no place in the minds of those who are running rough shod over the world today. They cannot be dealt with as thoughtful Christians can deal with each other. Love doesn't make sense for those who are crazy. Force is the only power recognized by certain modern leaders. Goodness, honor, and truth have no place in their philosophy. They are those who are causing the world heartache.

When our statesmen gather in Washington this week to consider our part in the world situation, they will need superior wisdom. There is no easy and complete answer as to what should be done. Suggestions from those who have constructive ideas will certainly be needed and will likely be appreciated. Statesmanship and not partisanship is imperative.

In times of strain like the present, the Church is under obligation to furnish the counsels of brotherhood, for, whatever may seem to indicate the contrary, human beings are all brothers and God is their Father.

IT IS NO TIME TO FAIL.

Closed warehouses make it difficult for tobacco farmers to meet their church obligations. Rising prices of foods unbalance the budget of many a home. The world war and the fear that America may become involved in it tends to make people cautious concerning their expenditures. It sometimes happens that the first reduction in expenses is the contribution to the Church.

We are agreed that what the world needs today is the message of Christ as proclaimed by the Church. This being the case, it is important for the Church to increase its activities rather than diminish them. Our home and foreign missionary work should be greatly strengthened in the immediate future. Our home mission money goes to put new life into old churches and to build new ones. The foreign mission money carries on all types of church work in several areas around the world. The needs of today make it necessary for our Conference Apportionments to be paid in full.

An increase in contributions to Church enterprises will indicate a renewed faith on the part of those who contribute. It may be a little more difficult to contribute now than it was some months ago, but the world needs the reassurance from the Church that its membership is interested in its messages and program. Confused and distressed people around the world are anxiously awaiting the help which can come from a renewed Christian Church.

It is no time to fail. It is a time to increase our efforts and our contributions. It is a time to show new loyalties and enthusiasm. It is a time for new devotion and new service. The way we express these high qualities is largely manifest by (Continued on page 15.)

The Original Faculty of Elon College

By DR. E. L. MOFFITT.

[Address delivered at Elon College on Founder's Day, September 14, 1939.]

When President Smith asked me to appear on this program today, representing the original faculty of this institution, my first reaction was to refuse to do it—in fact, I had a bad case of “inferiority complex.” Faced with all these handsome, modern buildings, with the very last word in design and equipment, and conscious of all these experts in administration, M. A.’s, Ph. D.’s, D. D.’s, etc., who are largely responsible for the very high rank which Elon holds among her sister institutions today; and England town. The picture is entitled “The Dawn of Ignorance.” “The scene is laid in pre-historic times, when man had not yet emerged from savagery. In the foreground is presented to us a savage man with the rude implements of the Stone Age around him. But it is not of these instruments he is thinking. Far away in the distance he sees a vision of a great city, and he has lifted his forehead to view it. And, as he looks he realizes the rudeness of his surroundings, the brute discomfort of faith, Dr. W. S. Long, Elon’s Founder and first president, they decided to build Elon College. And but for the fact that the little band of men and women who stood in the midst of those crude, meagre surroundings, were not thinking of the poverty that hampered them in all their appointments, but kept their eyes on a vision of what they and their successors through the years to come might achieve, but for this continuing faith, this hope, this great institution would still be a dream, and not the reality that we of the past are just as proud of us as you are today.

I realize that, perhaps, there are some here who will take this last letting my memory carry me back fifty years to this old grove, with its one building for administration, instruction and housing for male students, and it far from completed—walls not plastered, only a few split-bottom chairs for furnishings, no light but oil lamps, no heat but wood stoves, no water but the old college well, only five professors and two department teachers, and seventy-six students; and realizing further that not one out of a hundred of those who would be present on this occasion would even know half of the names of the members of the original faculty, is it any wonder that I should hesitate to be the voice out of that almost forgotten past?

However, in the midst of these reflections there came to my mind a description I read years ago of a picture that hangs on the wall of one of the public libraries in a little New his dismal cave, the crudeness of his tools, the poverty of his life. A divine discontent awakens within him. He sees what he may become; he realizes in this supreme moment of his enlightenment what he may achieve, and he knows for the first time the depths of his own ignorance.

“This experience which must have come again and again to pre-historic man, comes to us, his descendants still. The saviors of the world are not the men who are callous or indifferent, nor the men who live in the gloom of hopeless despair, but the men who see visions of what may be, and are not disobedient to the heavenly vision.”

I think it must have been a feeling somewhat like this that stirred in the hearts of those men and women of faith and vision in the Christian Church fifty years ago, when led by that great man of almost unbelievable statement with a “grain of salt.” Some people think that the older generations live in the past, and believe that all old things are best. We may not be quite as liberal in all our views as some of the younger generations, but—believe it or not—we are not quite as averse to change as the good old brother you perhaps heard of who lived when automobiles were not so common as they are now. His pastor was fortunate enough to be able to own a car, and he rode to church in it every Sunday. This good brother stood it as long as he could, then he wrote the pastor an anonymous letter complaining about his riding to church in an automobile. He called his attention to the fact that Christ never rode to church in a car, and he ought not to do it. The next Sunday the parson read the letter in church and announced that, if the good brother who wrote that letter would present himself at his gate the next Sunday morning, properly saddled and bridled, he'd be glad to ride to church as the Master rode into Jerusalem on that triumphal day many years ago.

On the contrary, we rejoice at the progress that has been made, the successes that have been achieved by those who have followed us during those fifty years of dark days and bright ones, of days of almost despair followed by days of heartening hope and cheer. Why wouldn't we be proud of the changes that have been wrought under the administrations of those who followed us? Especially of the great building program under the administration of that master builder, Dr. W. A. Harper, and his co-workers, and the wonderful internal expansion program of his distinguished successor, Dr. Leon E. Smith, and his capable and faithful associates. But for the fact that they took up the work where we left off, and carried on with ever increasing success throughout the half century that has passed, the work that we did in those hard but ever hopeful years would have come to naught, and even the one out of a hundred who has remembered would have forgotten.

And, come to think of it, Mr. President, your young modern day enthusiasts and university trained specialists haven't got much on us old timers after all. It's true your splendid material equipment, with all these magnificent buildings, laboratories, libraries, gymnasium (and I say that kind of gingerly), Y. W. and Y. M. C. A. halls, sororities, fraternities, and what have you, I say that it's true that all these things, looking back from here make our first equipment look, indeed, almost like the implements of the Stone Age. But when you come to take a look at the mental and spiritual equipment of the college in those gay nineties, I don't know as you have much on us.

Why, just glance at the faculty page of one of our first catalogs, and judge for yourself: Here's Rev. W. S. Long, A. M., D. D., President and Professor of Biblical Instruction and Natural Science, and then there's Rev. J. U. Newman, A. B., M. A., Ph. D., D. D., that wonderful member of that first faculty, who was professor of Greek and Mathematics, and who all these years has remained faithful to the college, through trials and tribulations, days of doubt and sometimes almost despair, but who know, perhaps more than any other one of us can truly say that through all these years he has kept his forehead lifted to the future, and with the ever widening horizon, he has kept his eyes on the vision that he had in 1890, of what Elon College might be, and he has never been disobedient to that heavenly vision. I felt like I'd just like to pause long enough to pay this little tribute to that one of us who has stayed on the job all these years, and for whose faithfulness, gentleness, and helpfulness there will be hundreds, yea thousands, of young men and women who will always be thankful that they have come under the influence of his teachings and his life.

Then there's Rev. J. O. Atkinson, A. B., A. M., Professor of Latin, Mental and Moral Science; and Emmet L. Moffitt, A. B., A. M., Professor of English, German and Political Science (and I even taught French); and Professor S. A. Holleman, Principal of the Academic Department—and he taught everything, Reading, Writing, Arithmetic, Spelling, Geography, etc., etc.

DR. J. O. ATKINSON.

And then the ladies—Miss Berta Moring (now Mrs. J. W. Roberts), who was listed as Principal of the Art Department, and who was in reality the whole thing.

And finally, Miss Lena Beal (later Mrs. W. G. Farrar), who was head of the Music Department and did all the teaching. And may I pause here a moment to say that, since these exercises were planned, we have had the sad news of Mrs. Farrar's death. She died September 5, and was buried in Suffolk, Va., on September 7. This message came as a shock to us all. I had written her asking her to be with us today—and I'm sure she is in spirit.

But to get back to my statement a little while ago, that you new Eloners haven't got so much on us old timers—First, mentally: How many of you could teach Bible and all the Natural Sciences like Dr. Long did; or Math, Latin, German, French, English Chemistry, Hebrew, Psychology, Astronomy, Greek, and Bible as did Dr. Newman at some time during those years; or Latin, Greek Mental and Moral Sciences, etc., as Dr. Atkinson did; or even all the English, French, German, and Political Science as I did—and get away with it?

The second part of my allegation, that you don't have so much on us spiritually, I touch lightly—but if any member of the faculty of the 90's failed to go to Sunday school or church every Sunday morning, Dr. Long wanted to know why, and he didn't mean "maybe." And, if we got to tinkering too much with what were then called modern trends of thought in the theological world (think of it, "modern trends of thought" fifty years ago) why, the whole church would be on our necks. So we tried to walk the straight and narrow. But, seriously, after more than half century of experience and observation in public and private life, I trust I may be pardoned if I suggest that I feel sure that a little more of Sunday school and church in our weekly programs would mean much to us all—especially to those of us who have to do with the directing of the lives of the young men and women who crowd our college halls each year in search of the best things of life.

But we have no criticism to make of you young fellows who can't teach as many subjects as we did. You live in an age of specialization, and we've lived long enough to realize that few can do many things well. It's the specialist in administration or instruction who makes himself felt most in the college world today, and who will leave his impress so deeply in the educational world that those of tomorrow will not forget the work he has done today. Few men can know very much about many subjects, and still fewer can know everything about any one subject, but the man who keeps his eyes on one field of investigation is likely to discover more truths vital to the world than the man who spends his time browsing among the beauties of many fields. But while we are definitely sold on the idea of specialization, we realize that sometimes even the greatest expert may not be right. Our reverence for the specialist stops just a little short of that which Pat's wife had for her family doctor. Pat had a terrible fall and his wife called her doctor in to see him. The doctor examined him very carefully and with a sad countenance turned to his wife and said: "Madam, I am very sorry to inform you that your husband is dead." Pat opened his eyes and said, "But faith and be Christ, I am not dead." But the good wife said, "Oh, shut up, Pat, you know the doctor knows better'n you do." You may make a mistake sometimes, but you're headed in the right direction, and the world will be better off for the truths that you discover in spite of the occasional error.

PROF. S. A. HOLLEMAN.

And, again seriously, Mr. President, we congratulate you on the great work you and your co-workers have done here. Especially are you to be congratulated upon the strength of your faculty—a group of trained specialists who know their subjects, and who know how to share that knowledge with the young men and women who come under the inspiration of their teaching and guidance.

Yes, you are to be congratulated upon the fact that you have the strongest faculty the college has ever had, your equipment is equal to the best, and we see no reason why, under your capable guidance, and that of those who may come after you, the Elon College of 1990 should not look to the youth of today as the Elon of today looks to us of the faculty of 1890.

We know you have your problems, just as we had ours, but we have faith to believe you have the ability to solve these problems that confront you now, and then to go on to the solution of others that will follow. Having been connected with Elon as teacher, president, and trustee ever since its opening, I can assure you that there'll never be a time when there are no problems, but while this is true we are thankful that there has never yet been one that hasn't been solved—except, of course, the current one, the great problems of freeing the college from debt, a problem to the solution of which you are now committing your every energy and interest. And we are happy to believe you'll find the solution before our fiftieth year is ended.

In conclusion, Mr. President, members of the present faculty, and friends, let me say in behalf of the faculty of 1890, that we are deeply grateful to you and your predecessors for the way in which you have nurtured and developed the little institution which was committed to our care

SUFFOLK LETTER.

This is an age when "projects" are the rallying point of emphasis. A "project" is a scheme, design or plan. Church groups attempt to create and hold the interest of their constituency by adopting a "project." Frequently the project pertains to some work outside the regular order of things. One wonders why people who think out plans for projects often overlook the intensive development of their local churches.

There are a few projects which might have careful consideration by those who seek to promote the work of the churches within the bounds of the Southern Convention. THE CHRISTIAN SUN has not carried many reports of Missionary Societies organized by the young people in the Southern Societies organized by the young people in the Southern Convention during the past two years. According to the records of the Woman's Conference of Eastern Virginia for 1938, there were 921 young people, including Juniors, enrolled in the Missionary Societies for these two groups. There were sixteen churches not represented by this type of missionary society. Five of these churches were city or town churches and eleven were country churches. Here is a fine field for another project for some promotional agency.

The comparative figures for the woman's missionary work of the Virginia Valley Central Conference and the North Carolina Conference are not available in the Christian Annual of 1938. But it is a safe guess that there are a number of churches in these Conferences that might be greatly helped by the organization of missionary societies for the young people and Juniors. And the organization of a young people's missionary society is only a beginning. This should be followed up by a definite project to increase the membership in every missionary society already organized for the young people and the juniors. The membership of these societies could probably be increased fifty per cent in many churches. Here is a project for some careful planning.

A young people's missionary society can be made both interesting and instructive. There is ample room for self-expression and self-determination. The field is the world. The opportunity for service is inviting. The program suggests adventure and appeals to the imagination.

In addition to the great service to be rendered by seeking to promote this type of work, it seems fitting to give greater emphasis to this, because it is directly under the supervision of the Southern Convention, and is sponsored by that body in an official way. It is one of the departments of the Southern Convention. The various woman's missionary Conferences of the Southern Convention should give this matter careful consideration this year. Some promotional agency of the Convention should seek to increase the number of the missionary societies among the young people in a systematic and definite way. Apparently, the Promotional Secretary of the Southern Convention has been too busy to give much attention to this important part of our missionary work. It is a fertile field and needs attention and cultivation. If this work is neglected, it may be sadly said in later years, as one of olden time, "As thy servant was busy here and there, he was gone." (I Kings 20:40.) Greater importance should be placed upon the promotion of missionary organizations for our young people.

ELON'S GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY.

Fifty-one years ago Thursday, September 14, the Christian Church of the South assembled in extraordinary session of its Convention in Old Providence Church, Graham, N. C., took definite steps to found a college for the Christians in the South. Fifty years ago this month, Elon College opened its doors for the matriculation of students. One building, not entirely completed, had been erected. A faculty of six members had been secured by the Board of Trustees through the Rev. Dr. W. S. Long, D. D., LL. D., as president. Dr. Long was killed in an automobile accident August 3, 1924. The remaining members of the faculty lived to see the fiftieth anniversary of the beginning of their work as a faculty at Elon College. Mrs. W. G. Farrar, formerly Miss Lena Beale, died September 5, 1939, the day that Elon College opened its fiftieth session. The remaining members of the faculty are still living. This is an unusual record.

Elon College began the celebration of its fiftieth anniversary Thursday, September 14, 1939, with the inauguration and observance of Founders Day. The principal speaker for the day was the Hon. Clyde R. Hoey, Governor of North Carolina. Other speakers were Dr. William S. Long, Jr., son of the founder of the college; Mr. W. E. MacClenny, church historian; Col. Junius H. Harden who was a member of the Provisional Committee that selected the site for the building of the college; and Dr. E. L. Moffitt, a former president of the college and a member of the Board of Trustees. The services were in honor of the original faculty, and as a memorial to the faculty a magnolia tree was planted on the campus by the members of the original faculty themselves.

Other periods of celebration will be observed February 11, 12, and 13, 1940. The theme will be "The Contribution of the Church-Related College to the Cause of Higher Education." On this occasion prominent educators will appear on the program. The final period of celebration will be May 26-29, 1940, the fiftieth anniversary of the first commencement of the college. Certain goals have been set for the year, chief of which is the payment of the debts of the college. Through cooperation of the church, the alumni, friends, and philanthropists interested in education, this coveted achievement will be realized.

A LETTER FROM BROTHER HUNT.

Dear Brother Editor:

Please permit me, through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, to express in a feeble way my sincere thanks to my friends and fellow citizens for their kindness shown me in the celebration of my seventieth birthday. Many cards, letters, and words of friends and loved ones have come to me expressing their love and continued confidence. Many nice and useful presents were brought or sent to me in honor of the occasion. My friends from far and near came to Antioch Church last Sunday, September 10, to share the occasion. Our genial senior judge of the Fifth Judicial Circuit of the State of Alabama was the guest speaker. Other speakers were heard and all were enjoyed. At noon lunch was spread on the table in the rear of the old church. I have never seen a more bountiful dinner spread at any country church. Everything was nice, decent, and orderly. I did not know so many nice things could be said about an old unworthy servant.

I have been in the ministry about fifty-three years. I have spent all

FOUNDER'S DAY.

From all reports and the very large number of visitors present for the occasion it seems that our Founder's Day for Elon College, September 14, was quite a success and very gratifying to those who promoted the same. On such an occasion one naturally falls into a meditative mood. Seeing the happy throngs of old students and friends, who had not been at the college for years, here once more to share their interest and loyalty to the college, gives one new courage and new hope. One can but wonder what the college will do, achieve, and be fifty years hence. However, it seems the way of institutions and all benevolent movements do cause heartaches, disappointments and even tragedies all along the way. As one looks back over the fifty years now passing one can but regret the mistakes that these years of the institution's growth have produced. From the beginning of things until now we suppose it has ever been that institutions founded for righteousness and peace and progress in the world have produced their disappointments, heartaches and tragedies. It was so with Christianity itself, even Lord Christ Himself came to the glorious resurrection only by way of the Cross. Truly, "The way of the Cross leads home." While there were many present at Elon on Founder's Day rejoicing and glad because of what had been achieved and what is being achieved, and what prospect and promise the future holds out, there were scores, not to say hundreds, who were not here. Memory still held a sting for them over some grievance, or disappointment, which they felt as individuals they did not deserve. They did their best as they saw the best, either as students, members of the faculty, or officials of the college, only to discover that they were not understood, or could not be understood, and that others had misinterpreted their good intentions and their best efforts. As stated already, it is ever so in the building of institutions and the carrying on of enterprises for the righteousness and for God. Whoever gives himself, or herself, with zeal, energy and effort to the cause of righteousness and of God may expect heartaches and disappointments along the way. Our Heavenly Father has this way, we presume, of chastising and correcting His children that He may bring them, even through sorrow and deep regret, to an end of victory and triumph.

One would think, for instance, that the work of missions is all sunshine and gladness and that he who carries the cause of missions on his heart has good cheer, appreciation and cooperation all along the line and from all who are concerned. How very far of the mark all this is. With all the great and good work we are doing at home and abroad through the unselfish and devoted life of our missionaries, there are those, and they are good people, too, who will take part in any of it because they can see somewhere a flaw or defect from their own point of view. They will not urge their churches, or their people, to have a part in the divine task as we of our church undertake it, but choose for themselves some other way, even though that other way be with strangers and with others they know little about, even to the heartache, burden and anxiety of those whom they do know and whose lot has been cast in the line of duty in carrying on the missionary work in our church.

There is no need to single out any institution or enterprise carried on for God and righteousness, thinking that anyone of these escape the condemnation and disapproval of some who see things differently. So the best that one can do, who is charged with the responsibility of these institutions and enterprises, is to seek wisdom from on high, remain humble and faithful in the discharge of duty, and go forward as best one can, knowing amid sorrow and regret that all things work out for good to them who love the Lord. We rejoice indeed that Founder's Day called together so many glad hearts and sounded so many notes of hope and praise, for this will give courage in spite of opposition, to those charged with the responsibility and the duties for carrying on the college and the other enterprises of the church to greater and better things.

MT. CARMEL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Mt. Carmel Woman's Missionary Society has ended its year's work with good results. A great deal of our success is due to the interest taken by our president, Mrs. W. T. Cox. I cannot help but mention the part taken by the members as a whole. We had seventeen members on roll at the beginning of the year. We are very sorry to state we lost one of our faithful few, Mrs. E. W. Ballard, in the beginning of the year. Later we lost Mrs. Lula B. Williams, a charter and honorary member. We have had an average of twelve members for the year.

The society held its open meeting August 13 in the church auditorium. The public was invited. We were very fortunate in having as our guest speaker Mrs. J. F. Morgan from Rosemont Christian Church. She gave a very inspirational talk which was enjoyed by all.

We are trusting our Heavenly Father for guidance through another year, and our prayers are that we may be able to do more for the Master's Kingdom than we have done in the past.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE NOTES.

By MRS. W. M. JAY.

Vacation time is over, school has begun, and everyone has settled down more or less to the regular routine and schedule of the year's work. This is the month of checking up on our work to see what we have accomplished and how near we are to the goal which our Conference and Convention have set up for us. It is also the month when we select our officers for the coming year. What an easy task our nominating committees would have if everyone would take the Lord's work seriously and present their talents to Him in loving service. Why is it so hard to get people to assume responsibility in church societies when all have the responsibility alike to take their share of the load and to help push the work? No one person should be allowed to hold an office so long that others do not have an opportunity to give their service and their originality to the society of which they are members. If only our Christianity could mean a whole-hearted, consecrated service to our Master in His service, then we would say, "Yes, with His help, I'll do my best." God has given us talents and what a shame that we refuse to use them when we are asked to be president or some other officer of our societies. Let's make a new resolve and be in the group of "I cans," rather than the "I won'ts."

Let's not forget that news item for THE CHRISTIAN SUN either, and send it in real soon. It helps you and it helps us. Our Conference meetings will soon be here and we all want to have our report in on time and with all points on the standard achieved. Send your report blanks to your district superintendent and to the treasurer of the Conference at once. "See you at Conference" should be our greeting for the next few weeks.

LIBERTY SPRING.

The Junior Missionary Society of the Liberty Spring Christian Church has had a happy and helpful year under the guidance of their superintendent, Mrs. Rosa Duke. They have used the book of Philippians as a basis for their devotionals and their programs of study have been on the two books, "Golden Sparrow" and "Street Corner."

The World Day of Prayer was observed with each child having a part. A special public program was rendered at the church on Easter Sunday night.

During the membership drive nine new members were received, making a total of twenty-four on the roll at present. This society has met all the requirements for the Conference year.

BETHLEHEM.

The young people's society of the Bethlehem Church has had a most successful and outstanding year. Mrs. O. C. Bradshaw was the newly elected superintendent and with the help and cooperation of the members of the society is an honor roll society. Much interest and enthusiasm has been shown and all twelve meetings were well attended and very interesting programs and worship services presented. At the close of each meeting a delightful social hour was enjoyed with lots of fun and eats. Guest speakers have been invited at various times and visitors have been made welcome. They have raised the $100 on apportionment and are going to try to do their part in supporting the Southeast Fellowship project. Several out-door meetings have been held on the lawn of their superintendent, which have added to the interest of the group. Miss Ruby Piland is the chairman of the program committee and much preparation and thought have been given to the work as evidenced in this report.

DENDRON.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Dendron Christian Church has had one of the most successful years they ever had. The finances were more easily raised, the study books meant more than usual to each member, and the society as a whole took on new life and zeal. The study of India was especially interesting and a touch of interest was added by having on display curios which were sent by a friend who recently toured India. Then, letters from friends in India gave the study a more personal meaning.

This society had four members to represent them at the Woman's Convention at Elon College in April. The district meeting was well attended, also, and many were the favorable comments on the guest speaker, Dr. Brewer Eddy. At this meeting a resolution was passed thus: "That one Sunday each month someone from the missionary society should conduct a worship service with special emphasis on missions." This is a great idea and we are hoping and praying for good results. Mrs. Garland Spratley is the secretary of this woman's society and we are glad to hear of the increased interest and will be expecting more good reports.

NEWPORT NEWS.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Congregational-Christian Church of Newport News, Va., has enjoyed a most successful year. The organization is divided into four circles of around twenty members each, and the goal of each circle was twenty-five dollars per quarter. Every circle has been successful in raising its quota. Each circle has had a luncheon each month providing funds and a means of closer fellowship. In December a fellowship luncheon was given for the members and a splendid get-together is reported with forty-two present.

A sunrise service on Christmas morning was sponsored by one of the circles and several visiting speakers from time to time have added to the interest of the society. They observed the World Day of Prayer in February, helped a local family until the mother got work, and cooperated with the young people in sending a box to the orphanage at Easter.

Three study books were used during the year. "The Church in the City" was taught by the president of the Auxiliary, and Rev. and Mrs. Joe French presented the book on India. Both of these courses were all-day meetings and were much enjoyed by all who attended. The third, "A Study of Philippians" was used in the devotional periods.

This group had five representatives at the Woman's Convention at Elon College in April. Mrs. C. L. Rountree is the efficient secretary of this splendid society and reports much zeal and interest.

MT. CARMEL.

The Junior Missionary Society of Mt. Carmel Christian Church near Walters, Va., reports a splendid year and renewed determination for more efficient service next year. Five new members were added to the roll

YOUNG PEOPLE'S MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

This month marks the end of the year for our young people's missionary societies—the time when apportionments for the year are to be in, when new officers are elected, and when plans for a new year are begun.

According to the Year Book of the Woman's Missionary Conference there are twenty-eight young people's societies in Eastern Virginia, five in the Valley of Virginia, and seventeen in the North Carolina Conference. These societies have apportionments amounting to $1,315.00. If a society attains the Standard of Excellence, its members must not only send in money in excess of the apportionment, but must study the book of the Bible recommended by the Spiritual Life Superintendent of the Southern Convention, must hold at least eleven monthly meetings and have representatives at district and conference meetings, must observe the World Day of Prayer and have one other service open to the public during the year, must have a campaign for new members at the beginning of the year, and must study one home and one foreign mission study book—and reports must be made quarterly of these activities! We are hearing of societies that have been able to attain all these points this year and they are certainly to be congratulated on the amount of work they have done. The young people in Eastern Virginia have their own missionary conference, where reports are made. This meeting is usually held the last Friday in September in the Suffolk Christian Church. Young people in North Carolina will share with the women in their annual conference at Ingram Church on October 3, with a program starting at 10:00 A. M.

The Pilgrim Fellowship includes all the young people in our churches, and thus the missionary societies are an active part of it. The Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship issues each year a "Program Guide" which contains suggestions for all types of young people's groups. Your missionary society will find it an invaluable aid, for it reminds you of certain things to be done in each month, if you are to attain the Standard of Excellence (as the time of the "World Day of Prayer" which several groups "let slip" last year until it was too late). The June, 1939, issue of The Pilgrim Highroad contains valuable suggestions for missionary study and activity during the coming year.

MISSION STUDY BOOKS.

As evidenced by the call for study books during the last month of the "missionary year," some young people's groups did very little in the way of study all through the year—instead they left it until the last minute. Other young people's societies, like the one in Holland, Va., are in the habit of planning their mission study well in advance and carrying out definite projects along with it. So that you can be among the groups who plan ahead in 1939-1940, we are listing below the new young people's study books on the general theme of "Christ and the World Community."

Right Here at Home by Frank S. Mead. Cloth, $1.00. Paper, 60c. A book in which the various forms of home missionary service are vividly pictured.

A Course for Young People and Seniors on Christian Missions in America by John Irwin. 25c. For leaders of senior and young people's groups, based on the above book and other materials.

Comrades Round the World: Christian Youth in Action by S. Franklin Mack. Cloth, $1.00. Paper, 60c. A book that seeks to introduce Christian youth of many countries to the young people of America.

A Course for Young People and Seniors on the Theme "Christ and the World Community" by Sue Weddell. 25c. A course for leaders of young people and seniors based largely on Mr. Mack's book.

Spanning a Continent by John R. Scottford. 25c. A pictorial book on the work of home missions in its various aspects, with photographs and descriptive text.

One Great Fellowship by Herrick B. Young. 25c. A pictorial book on world missions, with photographs, pictographs, and descriptive text.

These may be ordered through your literature superintendent, directly from the Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass., or through the Mission Office or the Board of Christian Education, Elon College, N. C.

COMMITTING OURSELVES TO CHRIST.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR OCTOBER 1, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Romans 12:1-8.

Daily Readings—

Monday—Performing Spiritual Arithmetic—II Peter 1: 4-8.

Tuesday—Practicing Self-Denial—Luke 9: 23-26.

Wednesday—Putting on "The New Man"—Eph. 4: 21-24.

Thursday—Living as Christians—Col. 3: 12-16.

Friday—Renouncing the World—I John 1: 15-17.

Saturday—Yielding Ourselves to God—Rom. 6: 11-13.

Young people the world over are asked to be loyal to some outstanding leader. In China the youth are loyal to Chiang Kai-Shek. In Japan the emperor commands their allegiance. In Germany boys and girls, as soon as they can talk, are taught to "Heil Hitler." Towering high above these earthly leaders is one who stands out as the great personality who has been challenging youth to follow Him. Jesus has always appealed to youth and asked them to follow Him.

Jesus calls us; o'er the tumult
Of our life's wild, restless sea,
Day by day His sweet voice soundeth Saying, "Christian, follow me."

Questions for Discussion—

1. Discuss the various commitments by which we regulate our lives. For instance, when we subscribe to a magazine we commit ourselves to pay for it for one year; when we get married we make a commitment to be loyal and true. What commitments do we make as individuals, as citizens, as church members, as children and parents, etc?

2. If we withhold ourselves from all commitments, such as those mentioned above, will life be richer or poorer?

3. There are some sincere people who hesitate to commit themselves to Jesus because they are afraid they cannot live up to the standards and ideals of His teaching. How would you speak to such a person, asking him or her to accept Jesus as Lord and Savior?

4. What commitment is involved in the Christian Endeavor pledge?

Close this meeting with a consecration service.

Suggested Hymns—

"Living for Jesus."

"Fairest Lord Jesus."

"Jesus Calls Us."

S. E. M.

"Friendship is given us by nature, not to favor vice, but to aid virtue."

ISAIAH: FORETELLING THE BIRTH OF THE MESSIANIC KING.

LESSON XIII—SEPTEMBER 24, 1939.

GOLDEN TEXT: His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace.—Isaiah 9:6.

LESSON: Isaiah 7:14; 9:1-7; 11:1-5.

A Word of Caution.

When we read prophecy, we must keep in mind the fact that in most cases we are reading it in the light of history. It is easy to fall into error on this account. There are so many ways in which we can read into a passage of Scripture that which we want it to say. Furthermore, we are likely to interpret literally what was originally spoken figuratively. All this does not mean that prophecy is not to be trusted, or that the prophecies of the Bible have not been fulfilled. But it is to call attention to the common mistake which is so often made in interpreting prophecy, and in straining the prophecies to make them fit the facts, or juggling the facts to make them fit the prophecies. It seems to the writer of these Notes that there is a case in point in today's lesson. At the risk of being misunderstood, he dares to mention it.

"Therefore the Lord himself will give you a sign; behold a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel"—thus reads Isaiah 7:14. Read thus alone it finds its literal fulfillment in the birth of Jesus Christ. But it is hardly fair to the facts to say that Isaiah had this in mind when he uttered these words. One has only to read the context of these words to see that this is true. The king of Israel and the king of Syria had made a league against the king of Judah, who was very much troubled. The Lord bade Isaiah to speak to Ahaz, and to bid him be brave, assuring him that the league of his enemies would come to naught. In order to assure Ahaz that this was true, the Lord asked him to "ask a sign of the Lord thy God; ask it either in the depth, or in the height above." But Ahaz refused to tempt the Lord. Thereupon God said that He would give a sign anyway: Behold a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel. Butter and honey shall he eat, that he may know to refuse the evil, and choose the good. For before the child shall know to refuse the evil, and choose the good, the land that thou abhorrest shall be forsaken of both her kings."—Isaiah 7:14-16. There it is in plain English, an exact quotation from the Bible itself. Specifically it is not a prophecy of the coming of Christ; it is a prophecy of the coming of a boy who should be born, and who would not be old enough to know the difference between right and wrong before the king of Syria and the king of Israel had been driven from their thrones.

This does not mean, of course, that there are no prophecies in the Bible that predict the actual coming of Christ. It does not mean that even in this prophecy there is not the germ of the Messianic hope. It does not mean that prophecy can be explained away. But it does mean that one must try to get all the facts in the case, and that one must not try to make the words of prophecy mean what one wants them to mean. That Christ was born of a virgin, that His birth was prophesied, that prophecy is to be trusted—the writer of these Notes believes these things firmly. But with a host of other sincere Christians, he does take issue with those who read into this Scripture what undoubtedly was not originally in it. But enough of what is to no profit, and on to something more constructive.

The One Who Should Come.

The prophecies of Isaiah and of the other prophets dealt primarily with "The One Should Come." There is nothing more inspiring in all literature than the deathless hope that which these men of God looked toward the future, and the firm faith which they had that God would eventually send "His Anointed," "The Christ," or "The Messiah" to redeem His people and to establish His kingdom. This is the point of the Scripture texts which furnish the lesson for today. It must be remembered that they were dark days when Isaiah uttered his prophecies. The nation had fallen on evil days, and in some cases the prophecies come from the period after the nation had been carried away into captivity, and had ceased to be a nation. But always there was the triumphant faith and the sure hope that God would raise a "remnant," that there would come up a "shoot" out of dry ground, that the people who sat in darkness would see a great light, that the nation would again have a joy like unto the joy of a great harvest. It is remarkable, too, how many of the details of the picture they filled in, how much of the character and the ministry of the Christ they saw hundreds of years before He came. Isaiah himself with an insight born of the Holy Spirit illuminating his mind, saw the character and office of the coming Messianic King, the Christ, the One-Who-Should-Come. Some of the Scripture texts for today's lesson reveal this so clearly.

His Character.

"His name shall be called Wonderful Counsellor (many commentators think that these two words belong together), Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace." Thus does Isaiah delineate some of the qualities of character and some of the functions of office of the coming Christ. The writer remembers the essence of a great sermon which he heard at the Massanetta Bible Conference a few years ago from this text. The preacher built his sermon around these words as an outline, and used these easily-remembered words: Wonderful Counsellor—He knows; Mighty God—He can; Everlasting Father—He cares or loves; Prince of Peace—He will or shall.

Furthermore Isaiah states boldly that the government shall be upon His shoulder. How true that prophecy was—the moral government of the world rests upon the shoulders of Jesus Christ. He is the Head over all things. And Isaiah further boldly stated that "of the increase of his government and of peace there shall be no end." There are those who would scoff at this idea. But the facts are against them. In spite of the corruption of governments and the wide areas of life in which Christ does not yet rule, and in spite of the wars and rumors of war that plague our modern world, the sphere and reign of Jesus Christ waxes and increases. John in Revelation was simply saying in another way what Isaiah was saying here when he said that eventually the kingdoms of this world would become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ.

His Office.

Reference has already been made to this. Christ is to rule. The government is upon His shoulders. "He shall judge the poor with righteousness and decide with equity for the meek of the earth. He shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth and with the breath of his lips will he slay the wicked." It is a figurative way of stating an eternal fact. Christ is to rule, not by physical might but by the power of justice and love and sacrifice. The Cross is the final fulfillment of this prophecy.

MONDAY.

"A MESSAGE FOR YOU."

"Having ears but hear not."—Mark 8:18.

It takes just as much of the spirit of God to receive a message as it does to prepare and to give it. Telegrams bear a message of death and sorrow as well as of business or love. It is our duty to receive it just the same. When you think of going to church, remember that there is a message there for you. When you go, remember to ask the Lord how you are about to receive His message? What is your state of mind and heart? Stop and say, "Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth."

Prayer—O Lord, speak to our souls now, while we wait on Thee. Make us sure of Thee, and useful for Thy cause, ready and prepared for every message. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"THE BONDAGE OF MONEY."

"The Lord shall give Thee rest from thy hard bondage."—Isa. 14:3.

No Christian can ever enter into the depth of Christian life nor can he ever become useful for God until he comes to a place of certainty as to his own relationship with God. As long as a man has any doubts as to his own personal salvation he cannot experience the new birth. He is in a bondage of fear and can say nothing beyond the "hope" that he may be saved. Cast all thy care upon Him for he careth for you.

Prayer—Our Father, "we believe, help Thou our unbelief," and make us clay in the potters hand, plastic for the Master's use. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

ONE THING "TO-MATTER."

"For all seek their own and not the things which are Jesus Christ's."—Phil. 2:21.

"Woe to them that are at ease in Zion."—Amos 6:1.

From the printed page we can get the following words, "Comfort is a stealthy thing that enters the house as a guest, and then becomes a boss and then a master. Aye, it becomes a tamer and with hooks and scourge makes puppets of your larger desires."

Comfort and ease is the supreme objective of the majority of people. The struggle for that has produced our national internal disturbances, but little short of war.

This does not mean that Christians may not have soft beds, or delightful pleasures, but it does mean that they must not love them too much. The supreme motive of life is Christian living and Christian brotherhood, and to achieve that may mean hardships. It certainly means much self-denial.

Prayer—Our Father, show us the way out of our troubles. Teach us Thy way and help us to walk therein. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"HER LAST WORDS."

"Think on these things."—Phil. 4:8.

The mother of Andrew Jackson when dying at Charleston, S. C., is quoted as saying, "Andrew, if I should not see you again, I wish you to remember and measure up some things I have already said to you. In this world you will have to make your own way, you can make friends by being honest, and you can keep them by being steadfast. You must keep in mind that friends worth having will, in the long run, expect as much from you as they give to you. To forget an obligation or to be ungrateful for a kindness is a base crime—not merely a fault or a sin, but an actual crime, men guilty of it sooner or later must suffer the penalty. In personal conduct be always polite but never obsequious, none will respect you more than you respect yourself."

Prayer—Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee for life and words of Jesus, for holy mothers who have us well and for minds to follow the light. Help us this day in His way. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"HEARTS."

"Keep thy heart with all diligence for out of it are the issues of life."—Prov. 4:23.

Step up to the looking glass and look at yourself. Expose your heart, your consciousness, your mind, your soul, to the powerful law of the Lord. Then think of what Jesus said of the evil there. "out of the heart proceed evil things, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies, these are the things that defile a man," and think of Jeremiah's words, "the heart is deceitful above all things," and think of the Savior's plea, "son give me thy heart."

This we must do if we expect to go to heaven, or if we are to go forth with a firm tread on our way.

Prayer—Our Father, cleanse Thou us from secret faults. Enable us to live rightfully. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"NO SUBSTITUTE."

Judgment is turned away backward and justice standeth afar off, truth is fallen in the street, yea, truth faileth and he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey.—Isa. 59:13-15.

America has won the distinction of being the most lawless people in the family of nations. The morning's news brings to us accounts of deeds of men, works of iniquity, of feet running to evil, leaving in their path waste and destruction. The man who is good, they scorn.

"ON THE MARCH VS. MERELY MARKING TIME."

Many people in every age have been satisfied merely to "mark time"—satisfied to maintain the status quo, satisfied to talk about what ought to be done, but never doing it—satisfied with the language of progress but never translating the words into deeds.

God expects progress from individuals and from churches. "On the march or merely marking time?" is a question that should be of concern to every individual, to every church, and to every group. No church has no reason for existence if it is content merely to "mark time." "Forward all along the line" should be the slogan of every local church.

Not only should every individual be "on the march" to a better character—a better life; not only should every church be "on the march" to better things materially and spiritually; but also every nation should be "on the march" to better things socially, industrially, and economically; to fuller peace and a greater security for all mankind instead of merely "marking time" in occupying the vantage place provided by past generations. A glorious history, no matter how glorious that history may be, will not save any nation. Merely to point with pride to past achievements is only "marking time."

Our nation needs the faith of Abraham of old—it needs to be willing to "go out not knowing whither," but confident that under God's divine guidance we may have a future as a nation far more glorious than ever was our past.

The old order, the old regimes, the old customs, the old shiboleths, the old ideals and ideas, the old practices, the old securities, even the old faith and "the old time religion" will not suffice for the new day which, please God, is ahead. Our nation needs "a new time religion"—as new as man's ever recurring needs and as old as man's never failing Christ. The "old time religion" with its contending creeds and its paucity of deeds has not brought the world far enough on the way of social progress. Christ would have the cities of man to become the cities of God.

Our nation, with all the nations of the world, needs a new baptism of human love, a new baptism of religious love—the kind of love that made Jesus not only willing but glad to take up his Cross for humanity.

It is our confidence that America is ready to march, provided that those who lead will, like Abraham of old, seek the leadership of Jehovah God.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE NOTES.

during the year and all requirements have been met. Their goal is to be an honor society when Conference meets. Several public meetings have been held with well-prepared programs and a large number of visitors present. Two socials were held and this was a means of interesting the other children of the church in the missionary society. Mrs. Sherman Johnson is the superintendent of this group and Miss Martha Cox is the secretary.

OAKLAND.

The women of the Oakland Christian Church have been busy, too, this year and the secretary, Mrs. L. F. Darden, gives us the following information. On August 24 they presented a public program at the church with Mr. Mills E. Godwin, Jr., as guest speaker. His subject was "I Dare You" and he divided it into three points: First, "I dare you to become good citizens;" second, "I dare you to develop good character;" third, "I dare you to share with others." Mrs. Curtis Griffin and Jimmie Darden rendered two lovely solos accompanied by Mrs. I. W. Johnson. Under the able leadership of their president, Mrs. C. W. Darden, all requirements on the standard of excellence have been met for the year and plans are being made for the new year.

LIBERTY SPRING.

The Liberty Spring Woman's Missionary Society reports a very happy and successful year under the leadership of Mrs. N. W. Byrd, president.

The study of the book of Philipians proved to be most interesting under the direction of their spiritual life superintendent, Mrs. S. H. Rawles.

Twelve regular meetings have been held during the year, with well-prepared programs and good attendance. They have an enrollment of fifty-three members and seven were present at every meeting. At the close of the last meeting a short recognition service was held in honor of these faithful ones, with prayer led by Mrs. I. W. Johnson. Two new members were added to the roll during the year.

In March this society had the privilege of meeting at the church in an all-day session for the purpose of hearing the two mission study books taught. Mrs. Lee Britt of Suffolk, Va., taught the foreign book "The Church Takes Root in India" and Mrs. R. L. Brewer, also of Suffolk, presented the home book "The American Church in the City." Both of these ladies are outstanding leaders in their respective denominations. It was a rare privilege when Christians.

Since statistics show that 80 per cent of prisoners are youths of eighteen to twenty, it reflects home training. There is still no substitute for the law of God which says, "train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it," "As the sapling is bent so the tree grows."

Prayer—O Lord, forbid that we shall let the trashy literature of today take the place of Thy Word in our home. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"BROKEN HEARTS."

"Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life."—Prov. 4:23.

The world is full of wrecked lives, broken hearts and sorrowing spirits. It needs the healing touch of Him who alone can "bind up the broken heart." Christ alone can do this perfectly. How we need His power that we, too, may minister to broken hearts around us. To the heart that trusts God, all things still "Work together for good."

At the close of the Sabbath the multitudes gathered around Christ, and he healed them all, only the Pharisees with their bitter, unbelieving spirits passed by unblest.

Prayer—Our Father, we look up to Thee through Jesus Christ for light. We trust to Thy divine hand to lead us still, till love that measures all, will lead us into eternity. Amen.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The writer spent a very happy evening with the children in the "Christian Orphanage Building" last Sunday. We have three buildings for children on our campus. They are the "Christian Orphanage Building," known on our campus as the "Old Building" because it was the first building on our campus, then the buildings known as the "Baby Home" and "Johnston Hall."

The children in the "Old Building" had worked up a special program for the evening and invited the writer to make a talk for the occasion. They put on a program in which quite a number of the children had a part. They had worked it up during the week and put it on entirely by themselves except for Miss Hattie Brakefield, my assistant in that building, who played the piano. The program was splendidly rendered and was beautiful and inspiring from beginning to end. The writer was very much impressed with the beautiful spirit of the program. While the children were rendering their program, the writer could not but think of the scripture verse, "A little child shall lead them." The writer has seen programs put on by grown people that did not excel this one put on by these little children.

A LETTER FROM BRO. HUNT.

these years in the Alabama Christian Conference. I have never been tired of my job, and never have I been tired of my people. I have been serving as pastor all these years and never have I been without a pastorate. I have served Beulah Christian Church thirty-three years; New Hope Church, twenty-four years; Pleasant Grove Church, nearly thirty years; Antioch Church, twenty-four years in succession and nearly thirty years in all. I have served churches in Clay, Randolph, and Chambers Counties in Alabama and several churches in Georgia. I am now pastor of Antioch in Chambers County and Noon Day, Roek Stand and Roanoke First Church in Randolph County. I have traveled many miles in this old state preaching funerals, burying the dead, trying to comfort the sick, "without money and without price," but I thank God for the privilege.

I trust I may be able to show my gratitude for all kindness shown. Brethren, please pray for me. Yours in love,

Marriages

LAWRENCE-ISLEY.

Thursday evening, September 14, at 8 o'clock Miss Thelma Elizabeth Lawrence and Clarence Rudy Isley were united in marriage in a beautiful and impressive ceremony in their new home near Elon College. Dr. G. O. Lankford officiated, using the ring ceremony of the Congregational-Christian Church.

Miss Alner Isley, sister of the groom, was maid of honor. Mr. Harold Lawrence, brother of the bride, was best man.

"O Promise Me" was played softly before the couple entered the reception room where the vows were taken before an improvised altar. The bride wore white chiffon and carried an arm bouquet of white rosebuds, sweet peas, and gladioli. Following the ceremony the fifty relatives and friends present enjoyed an informal reception.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George C. Lawrence, Greensboro, N. C. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Isley, Elon College, N. C.

In Memoriam

FARMER.

On the eighth day of August, 1939, the death Angel bore away from our midst one of our most beloved members, Mrs. W. O. Farmer. She was not only an active member of Pleasant Grove (Virginia) Missionary Society, but gave generously of her time and means to the upbuilding of Christ kingdom.

She was a true friend and a devoted wife and mother. We deeply mourn the loss of this friend and member, but being assured that she has entered into the joys of the blessed, we are humbly resigned to His will.

We commend her example of faith and love for Christ's works to all who knew and loved her.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we have lost a devout member, the community a valued friend, and the family a devoted wife and mother.

2. That we humbly bow to His will, knowing that He doeth all things well.

3. That we extend anew our sympathy to the family.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy placed on the records of the Woman's Missionary Society, and a copy sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

JONES.

Brock Darden Jones, Route 1, Holland, Va., died August 18, 1939, aged seventy-three years. The funeral was conducted at Holy Neck by the writer, assisted by Dr. L. E. Smith and Rev. W. H. Corbett. The burial was in the church cemetery. He leaves a widow, nee Selma Rawles, five sons, three daughters, two grandchildren, four brothers, and one sister.

The home has lost a loyal and loving husband and father, the community an industrious and progressive citizen and generous neighbor, and Holy Neck Church one of the most faithful and devoted members it ever had. It was with joy and gladness he entered her courts and joined in the Sabbath worship. As Bethel to Jacob, Holy Neck Church was to Brock Jones, "None other than the house of God and the gate of heaven." May his memory be a rich legacy to his loved ones and the God of all peace their comfort.

a half century ago. We are not only grateful, but we are proud to have played a small part in the life of an institution like the Elon College of today, and we hope that when you attend the Centennial celebration in 1990, Elon College will be so big and strong and beautiful that you'll feel just as humble, but just as proud, as we do today.

In the raising of this Golden Anniversary Fund, we realize that you have set your hand to a great task, but we believe you are equal to that task—and to its accomplishment we pledge our whole-hearted support.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE NOTES.

Methodists, and Baptists met in one body to study together the cause of Jesus Christ on the earth and its needs.

On the sixteenth of May a Mother's Day program was observed with a large attendance. The altar was banked with lilies, ferns, and daises, the center piece being a huge white cake bearing above it a cross. The theme of the program was "Mary, the Mother of Jesus, Was There." Mrs. E. P. Jones, district superintendent, was present and took part in the program. Her visit gave much enthusiasm and inspiration to the group and she was given a hearty invitation to come again. After the meeting they adjourned to the dining room where the program committee, Mrs. J. W. Story, Mrs. G. W. Morgan, and Mrs. N. W. Byrd, had prepared delicious refreshments of ices and cakes.

The following officers have been installed for the coming year: Mrs. R. E. Parker, president; Mrs. G. W. Morgan, first vice-president; Mrs. I. W. Johnson, second vice-president; Mrs. G. O. O'Berry, secretary; Mrs. J. W. Story, assistant secretary; Mrs. C. E. Byrd, treasurer; Mrs. J. L. Horton, corresponding secretary; Mrs. D. C. Butler, superintendent of Juniors; Mrs. J. E. Oliver, superintendent of crade roll; Mrs. Edward Harrell, spiritual life superintendent.

All requirements on the standard of excellence have been met and thus closes a most helpful and interesting year.

the contributions we make for worldwide Christianity.

Your report to Conference will indicate how well your church has responded to the new call in the tragic days in which we live. Do not be content to sit idly by while the world dies with heartbreak. Get into the thick of activities and put into the Church of Jesus Christ every possible dime and dollar, so the work may be pushed vigorously. Your help and the help of your local group is increasingly needed for the activities of your Church.

An American Peace Program

“SIX POINTS”

The National Peace Conference, recognizing the imperative necessity of a clearly defined program in the face of the world crisis, at an emergency meeting on September 6 adopted the following six point program to be recommended to its thirty-nine national member organizations (of which our Council for Social Action is one) and thirty-two community peace councils as the basis for immediate education and action:

1. Keep the United States out of war.
2. Initiate continuous conference of neutral nations to procure a just peace.
3. Work for permanent world government as the basis of peace and security.
4. Prevent exploitation of war for private gain.
5. Recognize and analyze propaganda to prevent warped judgments and unjust animosities.
6. Strengthen American democracy through solving pressing domestic problems and vigorously safeguarding civil liberties.

Such education and action will implement the words of President Roosevelt when, in his nation-wide broadcast of September 3, he declared, “I hope the United States will keep out of this war. I believe that it will. And I give you assurances that every effort of your government will be directed toward that end.” And further, “And it seems to me clear, even at the outbreak of this great war, that the influence of America should be consistent in seeking for humanity a final peace which will eliminate, as far as it is possible to do so, the continued use of force between nations.”

REV. EDWIN C. GILLETTE, D. D.

After nineteen years of happy and successful work in Congregational and Christian Churches in the Southeast, Dr. Edwin C. Gillette of Jacksonville, Fla., retires. He has been pastor in Jacksonville, Superintendent of Florida, and Superintendent of the District of the Southeast. A Christian gentleman, a civic leader, and a devout churchman, Dr. Gillette has won a large place in the affections of the people with whom he has worked and is retiring with the blessings of the church upon him.

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

The famous musician and song leader, Homer Rodeheaver, is to be at the Christian Church of Burlington, N. C., on Monday evening, October 2, 1939. People in that area will certainly want to hear him.

Rev. W. Millard Stevens, pastor of Union Christian Church, near Burlington, N. C., has recently issued a little sixteen-page mimeographed paper telling about the work of that church. Congratulations to "The Union Christian."

The Richmond Church gave a farewell service in honor of their pastor, Rev. J. E. McCauley, on last Sunday afternoon. Several ministers of the city were present. The Promotional Secretary was invited but was unable to be present.

Pastor G. C. Crutehfield says that the children from the Christian Orphanage gave a fine program at Bethlehem (Altamahaw, N. C.), last Sunday morning, and that more people were present than could get into that big church building.

Rev. D. W. Shepherd of LaGrange, Ga., was the preacher for the revival at Holy Neck Christian Church, near Holland, Va., September 4-9. The pastor, Rev. Arnold Slater, reports large attendance, good messages, eight additions, and the church revived. Baptism services were conducted at Norfleet's Pond, Sunday, September 17.

PLEASANT HILL.

The revival meeting began at Pleasant Hill Christian Church, near Liberty, N. C., the first Sunday in September and continued until Friday night. Two services were held each day. Our pastor, Rev. J. Frank Apple, did the preaching until Friday night, when our former pastor, Rev. M. A. Pollard, preached for us.

Mr. Apple and Mr. Pollard preached very enthusiastically and some very uplifting sermons, and we trust the church was greatly revived. Nineteen boys and girls professed faith in Christ and eighteen united with the church at the closing service on Friday night.

BIG TRAINING SCHOOL PLANNED FOR ALAMANCE COUNTY.

A very fine program has been arranged for the Christian Churches in Alamance County, N. C., beginning Sunday evening, October 8, and continuing through the following Sunday. Sessions will be held in the Burlington Christian Church. Courses and faculty are as follows:

For Workers With Children—Mrs. J. L. Foster.

For Workers With Young People—Rev. W. Millard Stevens.

For Church and Sunday School Officers and Teachers—Rev. J. Frank Apple.

In the Bible—"The Pentateuch"—Professor Merton French.

In Problems of Personal Christian Living—Miss Ruth Seabury.

The class work will begin at seven o'clock each evening. At eight o'clock Miss Ruth Isabel Seabury of Boston, Mass., will speak. Miss Seabury will also speak at 10:00 each morning, except Sundays and Tuesday. Her topics for the mornings will be: Monday, "No Longer Foreigners;" Wednesday, "Woe Is Me If I Preach Not the Gospel;" Thursday, "The Christian Witness of the Home;" Friday, "The Missionary and the World Crisis." At the eight o'clock service she will discuss: Monday, "The Test of a Living Church;" Tuesday, "The Heritage of Our World-Wide Fellowship;" Wednesday, "We Need Each Other;" Thursday, "Nothing Less Than a New World;" Friday, "Lord, Revive Thy Church Beginning With Me."

All of the teachers have been busy for months making preparation for this school. A large attendance from all of the churches in Alamance County is expected. Anyone within reach of Burlington is invited to attend and share in this school. There is no admission charge, but those taking courses will be expected to purchase a small book for study.

SUPERINTENDENT OF SOUTHEAST RETIRES.

On September 16 Dr. Edwin C. Gillette closed his office in Jacksonville, Fla., and went to Claremont, Calif., for a six-month's rest before taking up activities as a retired churchman. For nineteen years Dr. Gillette has served in the Southeast. He was pastor of our church in Jacksonville, then Superintendent of Florida, and since Dr. W. Knighton Bloom's death, in 1934, has been Superintendent of the District of the Southeast. Although born in Ohio and reared and educated in New England, Dr. Gillette has all of the dignity and courtesy of a southern gentleman of the old school. His friendliness has won for him friends wherever he has gone. His consideration of others and clear thinking have brought joy to his comrades in church work.

Dr. Gillette lived in Hartford, Conn., from the time he was two until his college years. There he grew up under the preaching of Graham Taylor who was then pastor of the Fourth Church. He has a B. A. from Williams College and did his theological work at Hartford Seminary, where he graduated in 1897. In 1902 Dr. Gillette married Jennie M. Gardner of Taletotville, Conn., and they have two children, Miss Polly Gillette who holds a position in New York City, and Gardner T., who lives in Jacksonville, where he holds a responsible position.

Dr. Gillette's first pastorate was at New Marlboro, Mass., where he was ordained in 1898. For fifteen years he was pastor of Pilgrim Church, Canaan, Conn. Then he decided to live in the "land of flowers and sunshine" and moved to Jacksonville, Fla., where he was pastor for five years before taking over a larger sphere of work.

While residing in Florida, Dr. Gillette has been noted for his interest in civic affairs. He was the first president of the Social Service Exchange of Jacksonville, which preceded the Community Chest. For fourteen years he was a member of the Executive Committee of the Florida

PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP IN THE SOUTHEAST.

In April, 1932, the Southern Christian Convention and the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches met in Burlington, N. C., in what proved to be a very important session. It was at that time that the Southern Christian Convention voted to change its name to Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches. It was at this same meeting that the young people presented and the Convention adopted the following resolutions:

Two years ago this Convention invited young people to a banquet in Raleigh, N. C., and challenged them to organize as a Department of Young People. A hundred young people attended the banquet and accepted the challenge.

A Continuation Committee was elected and authorized to proceed in cooperation with the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Christian Convention and the Extension Workers of the Congregational Churches of the Southeast. Officers were elected and the work begun the night of the banquet. Youth leaders met in a Christmas Holiday Conference at Elon College to map out a program of work. Another Conference was held last Christmas at which time the organization was perfected and more plans made.

Two years ago only the Eastern Virginia Young People were organized. Now there is an organized group at work in Virginia Valley Central, North Carolina and Virginia, Western North Carolina, Eastern North Carolina, Georgia and Alabama Conferences.

It is the wish of the young people throughout the Southeast to share in the work of the church. We are, therefore, asking for admission into the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches as the Department of Young People with the name of Youth Fellowship.

For your consideration and, we hope, approval, we are attaching herewith our Constitution.

About fifteen years ago the young people in the Eastern Virginia Conference organized what they called a "Youth Congress." Later the name was changed to Youth Fellowship, and more recently to Pilgrim Fellowship.

In 1934 the National Pilgrim Fellowship was organized with A. Lanson Granger of Norfolk, Va., as the first president. All through the years the young people from the Southern Convention have had their share in the work in the Southeast and in the denomination.

Since the above report was adopted in 1932 the Southeast young people have met with the Southeast Convention in biennial session, and usually they have met annually in Christian conferences to plan for cooperation in all phases of church work. The Southeast includes eight states, while the Southern Convention includes only two.

The actual work of Pilgrim Fellowship is done in local Conferences and churches. Conference Fellowships are composed of all young people in the churches of the Conference, who make definite plans for all types of work to be done by young people in local churches.

There is no desire on the part of Conference Fellowships or denominational leaders that any group within the local church be known as Pilgrim Fellowship. Sunday school classes, missionary societies, Christian Endeavor societies, boys' clubs, and any other groups of young people within the local church rightly belong in the Conference group known as Pilgrim Fellowship. Some local groups—only two now known to this writer—have changed their names to Pilgrim Fellowship. It is the desire of leaders that all local groups work along the lines of personal religious living, missionary action, social action, leadership education, and the promotion of our publications.

Since each Conference within the Southern Convention has its own Pilgrim Fellowship in which plans are made for local churches, and since leaders from the eight states of the Southeast meet annually for fellowship, inspiration, and cooperative planning, it has not seemed wise to the young people to organize a Fellowship for the Southern Convention.

A Missionary Project.

One phase of work undertaken by young people is missionary action, or world friendship. They work through the local organizations and contribute through the local church, Sunday school class, missionary society, Christian Endeavor, or whatever group may be doing this work.

When representatives of the Southeast met in Norfolk, Va., last spring they decided that the time had come when the young people of the Southeast could, and therefore should, increase their missionary giving. They wanted something that would be of interest to, and could be shared in by young people all over the Southeast. A committee was appointed to consider the matter, and was given the power to act. The committee decided on the raising of $1,200.00 for the purchasing of a lot and building in Tientsin, China, to be used in connection with our church there as a Layman's Training Center. The young people believe that they, the youth of eight Southern states, can give that much to the young people of China as a token of friendship in the time of China's need. They have no idea that this project will take one cent from any other work of the church. If they can have the cooperation of older leaders through the area, they will not only reach the desired amount but will gain valuable experience and will become much more enthusiastic about church work in general. If they must work against opposition, no one can prophesy the result.

The Promotional Secretary of the Southern Convention has worked with the young people in their Congress, Youth Fellowship, and Pilgrim Fellowship since the first organization began in Eastern Virginia. He believes thoroughly in the (Continued on page 14.)

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It was our happy privilege to attend the protracted meeting held at Antioch last week. Rev. H. E. Crutehfield is the pastor. Rev. J. F. Morgan assisted the pastor by his spiritual sermons and devotional singing. The time of our visit was Friday afternoon. The congregation was attentive and responsive. There were a large number of re-consecrations. On Thursday night six new members were received into the fellowship of the church.

This church has a great history. In the early '70's the membership was over six hundred. It served a territory in Isle of Wight County now being served by Windsor M. E., Baptist and Christian Churches, Isle of Wight Christian Church, Central Hill Baptist Church, Mt. Carmel Christian Church, Zuni Presbyterian Church, and Colosse Baptist Church. The membership of Antioch at this time is less than two hundred. During the past thirty years it has passed through some very discouraging experiences. Doctrinal disputes and theological differences divided some of the most active members into disorganized and discouraged groups. Under the wise leadership of the present pastor a better day has dawned and the congregations are larger and more united. A spirit of harmony is growing and the future is brighter and more promising.

It was an inspiration to sit again in this old historic church and reflect upon its glorious past. Among the outstanding former pastors the names of Dr. W. B. Wellons, J. Pressley Barrett, H. H. Butler and W. D. Harward may be mentioned. The church building is unique in that the place of the pulpit has been changed from the east end to the west end of the church. That change was probably made because it was confusing to have people coming into the the building through the side doors near the pulpit during a service, though the location of the church made it more convenient to enter the church from that position.

But the memories of other days and years seemed to crowd into that Friday afternoon service. One recalled the great congregations of the old days. So many faces, once familiar, are absent. Their seats are either vacant or occupied by others. Only one of the strong Barrett brothers is left in the community. The Barrett family was large and quite active in the leadership of this church two or three decades ago. Deacon Robert H. Barrett, the only surviving brother of the late Dr. J. Pressley Barrett, was present and enjoyed the meeting. The majority of the younger generation of the Barrett family have moved to towns and cities and attend

DR. I. W. JOHNSON.

By Louise Byrd Rawles.

Introducing to you a man,
To do justice to whom I never can;
Still I wish that I might be
As patient, as loyal, as kind as he.

Dr. I. W. Johnson is his name,
And fishing is his favorite game;
If you by chance wish him to meet,
You will find his home on Saratoga Street.

He keeps a boat out on the lake
And goes fishing often, for pleasure's sake;
As a fisherman he rules supreme,
Say fishing to him and his eyes will gleam.

Out to the lake he often goes,
Out to the lake to forget his woes,
Only the sound of the motor is heard
For now the boat has passed the curve.

He is the pastor of churches three
And we hope will continue for ages to be;
Oakland, Berea and Liberty Spring,
He carefully keeps like chicks under his wing.

Dr. Johnson sings well in a male quartet,
But as a soloist he is better yet;
An excellent leader for the choir is he,
No better one could there ever be.

He is often called the marrying man,
For he marries more couples than any man in this land;
You pick up a paper and you'll see,
Where he has married couples numbering one-two-three.

This is by no means a complete story,
For there are millions of good deeds to add to his glory;
Still at present I'll have to say,
Farewell until another day.

churches elsewhere. The same thing is true of a number of other large and prominent families of the church and community. These changes break the ties of the community spirit and a new foundation must be laid for future growth.

The greatness of the past and the traditions of our fore-fathers should serve as an incentive to closer unity and loyal cooperation. The Gays, Clements, Bradshaws, Uzzells, Munnfords, Eleys, Beatons, Butlers, Roberts, Whitleys, Pierces, Watkins, Grays, and many other families were also prominent in other days. It is an honor to belong to such a church. It is inspiring to be alive and have a part in trying to carry on the work so well begun by others. It would be fitting if a movement were started to put stained glass memorial windows in the church. New oak pews could also be placed in the auditorium, adding much comfort to the congregation. And some of these days Sunday school rooms will be added, and the young people will rejoice in the greater efficiency made possible by private classrooms. Antioch will grow in the future. Cooperation will make that possible.

I. W. JOHNSON.

CONFERENCE APPORTIONMENTS.

With the exception of the Virginia Valley Central Conference, all other conferences constituting the Southern Convention will meet in annual sessions during the fall. There is always a business side to these annual gatherings. Pastors make reports indicating the extent of their fields of labor and the success of their efforts. Churches submit reports indicating achievements and the present status of the church. It is impossible to include in a report the finer things accomplished by a local church. The facts put to record, however, are indicative of efforts and successes. These reports usually include a comparison between last year's membership roll and this year's membership roll, also the amount of work done and the amount of money raised by different departments constituting the local church organization. There are other matters that have to do with conference, convention, and worldwide undertakings. Money is required for the proper conduct of the affairs of the church locally. Money is also required of every local church for the efficient operation of the programs that have to do with the work of the church in the larger sense. The local church within its own councils determines the amount of money for its own program. The convention through conferences suggests participation by every local church in the larger program of the kingdom and apportions to every church through the conferences amounts required for all the functions of the church at large. Convention requirements are just as necessary for the success of the local church as are local requirements. The local church cannot live successfully when it fails to do either.

In this time of bewilderment, distress, and need, it is the prayer of those who are in responsible positions in the church that every local church and every individual member may be conscious of his responsibility and

The Provisional Committee

By JUNIUS H. HARDEN.

[Address given on Founder's Day at Elon College, September 14, 1939.]

"Christian minister, Christian educator, Christian statesmen, Christian gentlemen, a man great in faith, wholehearted in consecration, constantly energetic, possessed of rare personal charm and grace, founder and first president of Elon College. With a good physique; prepossessing appearance; easy address; genial disposition; a strong mind, clear and comprehensive; only forty-seven years of age, in the full vigor of physical and mental activity; surrounded by a large and increasing circle of influential friends and admirers—the whole church looked to him for the presidency of the new college."

The above is a word portrait of William Samuel Long, the Chairman of the Provisional Committee, and the first President of Elon College by one who painted well.

"Minister, Religious Journalist, and Author. As a man, pious and devout; as an editor, a staunch defender of the truth; as an author, concerned only for the highest ideals; as a minister, loyal to the Gospel and to Jesus Christ; a trustee of Elon College from the beginning, and an unwavering friend. As editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN he created the sentiment that made the founding of Elon College possible."

Rev. John Pressley Barrett, the Secretary of the Provisional Committee, described in another well-executed word painting.

"Merchant, Bank Director, Cotton Broker, Member of the Board of Trade for the City of Raleigh. One of the trustees for the Raleigh Christian Church. Enterprises of great pith and moment were of simple solution to him. He was chosen, with four other prominent citizens of Raleigh, to organize a corporation for and build the first cotton mill in Raleigh. He was slow and sonorous of speech when at ease, but when challenged to debate he responded with force, energy, and irresistible power. He was the son of a statesman. He had a brother who wielded great power in the State Senate, and he was himself a member of the House of Representatives, where he ranked among the most powerful."

Thus the biographer wrote about Hon. Frank O'Kelly Moring, the third member of the Provisional Committee, whose middle name is an unmistakable key to the religious moorings of his family.

Christian gentleman, devoted husband and father, Doctor of Medicine, true friend, capable business man and safe adviser. He was the personification of the gentle, assuring, sympathetic family doctor, whose ministrations were in the same sacred classification of those of the Minister of the Gospel, and in many instances it was his duty to perform the functions of both. It is through such ministrations as this, by men such as this one whom I now describe, that the glory of Christianity may be traced to the Man of Galilee.

It is a pleasure and a privilege to pay this tribute to the fourth member of the Provisional Committee, Dr. George Saunders Watson.

There must be said this about this Provisional Committee as a whole. After a conclusion had been reached by a majority thereof, there was no receding from that purpose. There was no perplexity because of moral abstractions or mental subtleties. It possessed that assemblage of qualities which make success in practical affairs inevitable. That the way might be long and the going hard had no terror for this group of men. They were stalwart, determined, and unafraid.

This concludes references to all the members of the Provisional Committee except the speaker, who was the fifth member. At the time the committee was thoroughly engrossed in the many and major problems of the college development he happened to be drafted for the reconstruction of a cotton mill of substantial proportions which had been destroyed by fire. Only a lad in this broad field of endeavor, he had his tonnage, to use the language of the street, in his duties to the corporation undertaking this major task. About all that can be said of him as a member of the Committee is that he was frequently absent and little worthwhile as a member. Speaking for himself, he can say truthfully and appreciatively, that in following the precepts of an ancient and pagan philosopher and statesman, "If you would be wise, you must live in the counsels of the wise and associate with men of wisdom," he accomplished more for himself than he was worth either to the Committee or to the college.

"Watchman, what of the night?" is an inquiry which has reverberated through all the ages. The response to this inquiry, first recorded in Holy Writ, was "the morning cometh." Your Committee was frequently in the night of perplexity, but when the challenge came to them out of this night—whether from weary overburdened minister, from tired financially embarrassed church member, or from discouraged financially weak church—the reply was always the same from this courageous, purposeful, invincible group of men "The morning cometh"—and we knew that somewhere in the morning we would see the college.

Now let's see something of the density of the shadow of this night. The Christian Church was the first of the American organized Protestant Churches. All of the other American Protestant Churches had their origins in Europe. And this heritage was a vantage and more or less of an asset. We have a continuous history of the Christian Church from 1792 until the present time. In its efforts for liberty and individualism, in the exercise of moral and religious conscience, for more than a century and a half its accomplishments have been marvelous in consideration of the fact that it was born in the latter part of the eighteenth century, and its childhood was in the first quarter of the nineteenth century. It has been wonderfully said of this particular period in our history by L. W. Bacon in "American Church History":

"The closing years of the eighteenth century show the lowest low-mark of the lowest ebb-tide of spiritual life in the history of the American Church. The demoralization of army life, the fury of political factions, the catch-penny materialist morality of Franklin, the philosophic deism of men like Jefferson, and the popular ribaldry of Tom Paine, who wrought, together with other untoward influences, to bring about a condition of things which to the eye of little faith seemed almost desperate.

Handicapped by this low tide of spiritual and moral drift, it took the courage of crusaders in O'Kelly, Rainey, Thomas, Beale, Holt, and the two Wellons, with other compatriots, many of whom are enshrined forever in the unwritten history of the church, sacredly preserved in the hearts of the membership of each individual church, and handed down by heartstone story and sacred song from generation to generation until time shall be no more. Crowns of roses fade, crowns of thorns endure. The triumphs of might are transient. They pass and are forgotten. The sufferings of right are graven deepest upon the chronicles of nations. Father

Again the Golden Anniversary thermometer makes its appearance. We do not have a very long list of members to report this week, but we are encouraged with the ones that came in voluntarily during the week. We know that you are interested in this campaign and that you expect to do your share. There could not be a more auspicious time for the assurances of your cooperation evidenced by your pledge than now. The days come and go. The weeks and months pass swiftly. This is to urge every individual who will to cooperate by forwarding his pledge or contribution immediately.

Since our last report another payment of $1,000 has been made on our debt, reducing the amount now owing to $134,000. We are making progress but not fast enough. This is one instance where numbers count and increase the speed of the race that we are running. Add your contributions to the loyal ones already on the Golden Anniversary membership roll.

The following is the report:

	Pledged	Paid

MRS. LENA FARRAR.

News of the death of Mrs. Lena Farrar reached Elon College on September 5. Mrs. Farrar was a member of the original faculty of Elon College. She lived to the day of the fiftieth anniversary of the opening of Elon College and the beginning of her work as a teacher in the college.

September 14 was observed as Founder's Day. The exercises of the day were planned in honor of the original faculty. When plans for the day were made, it was the hope and expectation of the administration of the college that every member of the original faculty would be present. At that time all seemed to be in reasonable health. Mrs. Farrar's death not only was a loss to her immediate family, relatives and friends, but was a very distinct loss to Elon College.

She had observed the growth and widening influence of the college through these fifty years.

The members of the original faculty present expressed their regrets and offer their sympathy to the family and friends. The college is most appreciative of Mrs. Farrar's connection with the institution in its early days and of the faithful and efficient services rendered as a member of its faculty. It wishes also to extend sympathy to the family and relatives in this loss and sorrow.

Ryan, the Poet Laureate of the Southern Army, well wrote of this:

Yes, give me a land where the ruins are spread,
Where the living tread light around the graves of the dead.
Yes, give me the land where the battle's red blast
Has flashed to the future the fame of the past.
Yes, give me a land with a grave in each spot
And with names in those graves that will not be forgot.
Yes, give me the land of the wreck and the tomb;
There is grandeur in graves, there is glory in gloom;
For out of the gloom future brightness is born,
As after the night comes the sunlight of morn.
And each single wreck in the warpath of might Shall yet be a rock in the temple of right.

The way of your Provisional Committee was literally jammed with impediments of all kinds. It was argued that the denomination was too small to support a college if it had one. With resourcefulness of the highest order this objection was check-mated by an arrangement with the Methodist Church, which provided that their group would be a field from which students might come. "Poverty, poverty, poverty" was the continuous refrain. It was provided that anything which could be produced on the farm could be contributed to the support of the college. The farm could produce an extra bale of cotton for the college. The children on the farm could raise eggs, poultry, vegetables, a pig, a calf, a bushel of wheat or other cereal. Your courageous committee kept everlastingly at it until the job was accomplished. And now we have the college, the best school that I know without money.

FOR THE CHILDREN

TELL ME A STORY—LITTLE DEEDS OF KINDNESS.

By PHILIPPA LINDEMANN.

"Whew!" puffed Granny Duffy, as she drew her little plaid shawl tighter around her thin shoulders. "This wind is a real hurricane." She struggled to close the shutters to protect her stock of red, juicy apples. But Granny was not quick enough. The wind had already sent the apples rolling over the pavement and down into the gutter.

Poor Granny! She was too lame to stoop. What was she to do? She looked up the street and down, but there was no kind policeman to help her. Suddenly from every direction, there came a swarm of newsboys. "Hi, Granny!" they cried; "we'll help you." And all together they picked up the apples and put them back into the boxes.

Then something happened to Granny. She sat down in her old chair and dropped her gray head into her wrinkled hands.

"What's the matter, Granny?" asked Tim Murphy, a freckled, red-headed newsboy who had just finished wiping the last apple.

"I'm afraid I'm sick, boys. I'll have to go home." For a moment nobody spoke; then the boys drew together in a little group. Their faces grew sad. They looked at each other, then at the bundles of papers which they had to sell before they could go home to supper.

"You sit still, Granny. We'll close the stall and I'll take you home," said Tom.

"An' so will I," agreed Skinny Jones. And so the boys settled it.

Granny knew these boys and loved them. Their extra pennies often found their way into her cash box, but when they had none, Granny trusted them. She was kind to all the newsboys, and they, in turn, repaid her. Sometimes they helped her across the busy street, and occasionally, if it was very stormy, they helped her all the way home.

So today Tom and Skinny took Granny home. It was not very much of a home—just an old shanty. The wind whistled through the cracks and rattled the windows. But it was all that Granny Duffy could afford.

Tom made a quick fire in the old stove and soon he had the teakettle singing. He was glad his mother had taught him how to make tea. "Here, Granny," he laughed; "drink this tea. It will do you good. Tea always helps my mother."

"You are dear boys," smiled Granny Duffy. "Take down the brown jar from the shelf and help yourselves."

That was what the boys liked to hear, for Granny's cookies, they said, "touched the right spot."

"We'll have to go now," whispered Skinny, "or we'll never sell our papers."

Tim nodded. "You run over and ask the woman next door to stay with Granny. We can't leave her alone."

The woman was glad to come, and the boys were soon out of sight.

OLD FRIENDS.

By Clarence Edwin Flynn.

Old friends are like the sunshine
Of autumn on the grain.
The springtime tints have vanished,
But all the worths remain.

Old friends are like the moments
Approaching eventide.
Gone is the dew of the morning,
But blue skies still abide.

Old friends are like the gleaming
Of coals upon the stone.
Gone is the leaping firelight,
But the warm glow lives on.

Old friends are like the ripeness
Of fruit upon the tree.
They are life's bounty, mellowed
Into maturity.

—The Better Home.

The next day all the newsboys went to the apple stall, but they did not find their old friend, Granny. Instead, there was a fat, good-natured man who told them Granny was in the hospital.

The boys looked very sad; then Skinny lifted his head. There was a happy smile on his face now. "Fellers, meet me on the lot tonight as soon as your papers are sold. Somethin' important."

"Okeh," answered the boys, as they scattered in every direction.

"Those boys are surely up to something," said the old man at the stall.

Early the next morning there was a great deal of noise around Granny's house. All the boys were there—Skinny, Tom, Charley Neuman, Sam Cohn and many others. And what a racket they did make! Soon the neighbors were aroused, and one woman called through her open window, "What are you boys up to over there?" Her voice sounded harsh, so Tim jumped over the fence, and, while he was talking to her, the boys saw her face with a smile.

Just as the boys were making the most noise a heavy voice came from the corner of Granny's house. "Make yourselves scarce, fellers! What are you doing here?"

The boys were startled this time, for there stood a policeman. The noise stopped. Tim, being the oldest, walked over to the officer and said, "You see, sir, it's this way;" then he lowered his voice and no one except the policeman heard what he said. The policeman went away smiling. For several days the racket continued.

Then came the day when the nurse told Granny she might go home. Of course, Granny wanted to go, but she wished her shanty were not so old and shaky. She had been so snug and warm in the hospital. But, oh, what a surprise was waiting for Granny!

When she reached home she could not believe her eyes. Something was wrong. Granny blinked and looked again. Her shanty was gone! In its place there stood a dear little house painted white with green trim. What could it mean? Had she lost her home while she was in the hospital? Granny turned sadly away. Where could she go? Just then the front door flew open and all the newsboys came running out. "Granny, Granny!" they cried. "Don't you like it? We tried to make it nice."

Slowly Granny turned back. It was hard for her to understand. "Why," she faltered, "you don't tell me you boys did this for me?"

"Sure!" They laughed and helped Granny into the house. She was too overjoyed to help herself. Then they all slipped out of the back door.

Granny was rocking in her little rocker. There was a happy smile on her face. Then came a knock on the door. Granny was surprised to see a policeman standing on the threshold. "Mrs. Duffy," he said pleasantly, "I have a message for you from the force. You've been a big help to us in keepin' the newsboys in our district out of mischief, so we've made up a little purse for you, and we've paid that little mortgage you had on the house, so you can live in comfort now."

Granny tried to thank him, but she couldn't find words. All she could say was a verse her mother had taught her many years before, when she was a little girl:

"Little deeds of kindness,
Little words of love,
Make this world an Eden
Like the heaven above."

—Junior Life.

PATIENT.

From of old according to the Old Testament and the New, God our Father has always been very patient with mankind. He was patient with Moses and with preparing the children of Israel to lead them out of Egypt, the land of the Pharaohs. He was patient and began with one man in founding the family of the faithful, Abraham. He was patient in waiting for His chosen through Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, choosing the seed of Jacob to build up His kingdom on earth. He was patient with the children of Israel, the descendants of Jacob. He was patient in bringing to the rulership of Judah, King David, in mercy giving them a king when God Himself had shown that He was Himself a sufficient King. In spite of evil and wicked kings, God was patient in sending His prophets and priests to call the people back from their apostasy to the way of righteousness. That same patience with erring, self-willed and sinning man is being manifest to this good day. Soviet Russia has openly declared itself a godless nation and Adolph Hitler, dictator of Germany, has done little less! However, there are hundreds and thousands we are told in Soviet Russia and in Germany who have not bowed their knee to the worship of Baal, and like the saints of old still worship the true and living God. Someone recently remarked that it began to look as if this is to be a religious war, a war of those who believe in the Prince of Peace and the promise of God the Father that He should be called Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, and of His government there shall be no end, and those who believe no such things.

This may be a slow process that the church is pursuing and sending out missionaries to convert people from idol worship to the worship of the true and living God, but it is the patient process that our Lord Himself has chosen. In following that way we cannot go wrong. The prayers of all Christian people everywhere should be with our missionaries, who at the risk of their lives are living, teaching and preaching the gospel of the Son of God. Through the missionary effort and endeavor of the church the world is finally to be won to Lord Christ. As stated this is the way that God has chosen and man can only follow that way. We need to offer the petition that David offered in Psalm 25; "Show me Thy ways O Lord; teach me Thy paths. Lead me in Thy truth, and teach me: For Thou art the God of my salvation; on Thee do I wait all the day."

As will be seen from the above there are Sunday schools and churches that remain faithful in their desire to share the love and life of our Lord with others less favored than ourselves. It is gratifying indeed that individuals and churches through thick and thin will make their offerings to the wholly divine and unselfish task of missions. However benevolent a state or a country may be none of these make contributions to missions, the only hope and source of income to missions is from the church and the professed followers of our Lord. On this account, though our offerings are small, we are grateful indeed. May the Lord bless everyone who had a part therein.

Gratefully,
J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

MISS SEABURY TO SPEAK.

Miss Ruth Isabel Seabury, Educational Secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Boston, has been called "an internationalist by instinct." Widely known as a vivid and stimulating speaker on Christianity at home and abroad, Miss Seabury spends the major part of her time addressing churches, women's organizations and young people's groups, schools and colleges throughout America. She will speak at the Elon College Chapel on Friday, October 6, at the North Carolina Woman's Conference at Ingram, Va., on Tuesday, October 10, and at Burlington Christian Church daily from October 8 to 15.

A graduate of Smith College, Miss Seabury has several times been abroad since taking up her work with the American Board. In an extended world tour she visited seventeen countries, often going far off the beaten track of the tourist to interior villages, and observing the work of her own and other boards.

Miss Seabury was selected a delegate to the great International Missionary Council meeting in Madras, India, last winter and visited the Board's fields in the Near East and India in the three months preceding. A few years ago she was invited to spend the summer as friendly visitor and speaker to the summer conferences in England and Scotland as representing the Mission Boards in the United States under the Missionary Education Movement. She was at that time a guest of Miss Muriel Lester at Kingsley Hall, London.

Miss Seabury has been a member of the famous National Preaching Mission and is the author of a series of Mission Study Books. She is an adult member of the United Christian Youth Movement.

The public is cordially invited to hear Miss Seabury, and our church people will certainly want to be among those present to hear her whenever she speaks. The schedule of addresses at Burlington will be found elsewhere in this paper.

"The human weakness of exaggerating difficulties often warps our judgment regarding what can be done in the service of God. Our fear of men exceeds our confidence in God."

INVITATION TO NORTH CAROLINA WOMEN.

The Ingram Church is looking forward to having the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference to meet with her on October 10, 1939. We hope that all churches in the state, whether they have missionary societies or not, will be represented. Ingram Church is on Route 360 twenty miles from Danville toward Richmond. We are delighted to know that Miss Ruth Seabury is to be with us and are expecting a great day.

We invite all of you to come and enjoy the day with us.

MATERIALS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETY.

It seems that today no young people's society need suffer for lack of materials. With all the wealth of program suggestions, books and pamphlets on various subjects of interest to young people, and interesting and helpful plays available, no group should be without the necessary materials. Of course, the problem is how to secure the right material at the very time you want to use it. Remember that the Young People's Department, under the direction of Miss Luey Eldredge, at Dayton, Ohio, or the Board of Christian Education, Elon College, N. C., will be glad to help you at any time.

Your own society can do a great deal toward having materials to use, too. Some groups keep a scrapbook of worship materials and have a committee responsible for keeping this book up to date. All the members of the society are urged to save poems, new hymns, quotations, or copies of whole worship services they find in various magazines and papers and give them to the committee for the benefit of the whole group. Imagine how nice it would be if you were the one who was to plan a worship service around the subject of "Giving" and your society had a scrapbook filled with material where you could pick out the things appropriate to your topic! Well, why not start now to "build" such a supply for your group?

One society in the Valley of Virginia has been taking the Pilgrim Highroad for a year. In that time they have come to realize that each copy contains valuable material which might be used in special programs throughout the year. So they have worked out a loose leaf notebook with headings such as "Alcohol," "Recreation," "Stewardship," and have gone through their file of Highroads and listed each article under the proper heading. Now each month someone has as his job the classifying of the articles in the current number. As the programs for the year are worked out, this is found to be an invaluable aid. Try this in your group and you will find it so, too.

PREPARATION! ORGANIZATION! COOPERATION! INSPIRATION!

Young people, start your preparation now to attend the Eastern Virginia Young People's Missionary Conference which will be held Friday night, October 6, at the South Norfolk Christian Church.

Remember that you are a part of this worthy organization.

Show your cooperation to the Conference by being present yourself and bringing someone else with you.

Receive much inspiration from the well-planned program which will be centered around the theme "Christ for the World."

LOWRINE HALSTEAD,
President.

EASTERN VIRGINIA YOUNG PEOPLE'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The annual meeting of the Eastern Virginia Young People's Missionary Conference will be held Friday night, October 6, at 8 o'clock, in the South Norfolk Christian Church. The church is located on the corner of Jackson and Guerriere Streets in South Norfolk.

This year the president, Miss Lowrine Halstead, has sent a letter to each society, urging a larger attendance than last year. She asks that all young people in the church come, whether or not they are a part of an active missionary society.

The program is to be as follows:

PROGRAM.

THEME: Christ for the World.

Benediction—Dr. C. Rexford Raymond,

INFLUENCING OTHERS FOR CHRIST.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR OCTOBER 8, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: John 1:35-45.

Daily Readings—

Monday—Contact With Christ—Acts 4:13, 14.

Tuesday—Condescension for Christ—1 Cor. 9:19-23.

Wednesday—Confessing or Denying?—Matt. 10:32, 33.

Thursday—Converting the Sinner—Jas. 5:19, 20.

Friday—Compelling Them to Come—Luke 14:16-24.

Saturday—Constellation of Honor—Dan. 12:2, 3.

The word evangel means "good news," then evangelism is simply an act or art of telling or sharing the good news of Jesus. We tell others about our best friends because we love them. The same is true if we love and know Jesus. We want others to know Him, too. A Christian cannot lightly ignore the Great Commission. William E. Gladstone used to say, "There is only one great problem in all the world, and that is how to get the gospel of Jesus into the hearts of people."

Problems for Discussion—

A girl once said, "Evangelism is such a complicated process. There is so much of spiritual affairs I cannot understand. It frightens me to say anything to anybody about accepting Christ."

A business man put it, "I don't feel competent to dabble with religion. That is the preacher's business." What is lacking in these experiences? How may such feelings be overcome? Is evangelism like a special dessert on the menu? Or is it like salt which gives savor to the whole meal? Does the evangelistic program of your society lead young people to face the spiritual issues of their lives and to make definite decisions?

Why do not more people accept their personal responsibilities as evangelists? Is it indifference, or timidity, or spiritual indolence, or what?

Does your society have a prospect list of unchurched and non-Christian people in the community? How can such a list be secured, kept up to date, and used?

Should a decision service be held in the society as a part of its evangelistic program?

Get your pastor to speak to the society on winning others to Christ.

Those present may tell of their experiences of winning others to Christ.

Suggested Hymns—

"Savior, Like a Shepherd."

"Lord, Speak to Me That I May Speak." S. E. M.

THE INFANCY OF JESUS.

LESSON I—OCTOBER 1, 1939.

GOLDEN TEXT: And they shall call his name Immanuel; which is, being interpreted, God with us.—Matthew 1: 23.

LESSON: Matthew 1 and 2.

Introductory.

We begin this week a series of studies in the gospel according to Matthew. Inasmuch as it is one of the most complete gospels, we shall have a splendid opportunity to learn a great deal of what Jesus did and said. For although some scholars raise the question as to whether Matthew the publican who became a disciple of Jesus wrote the gospel which bears his name in its entirety, it is quite certain that the book as it stands contains a great deal of first-hand reports of what Jesus did and said. Hence we come close to the events and the incidents, and hence we can come close to the Master himself. An honest and sustained study of the lessons for this quarter will help to furnish us unto good works.

The Limitations of Heredity.

It is quite common to blame many things on heredity. And the influence of heredity cannot be laughed away. But it is interesting to note that heredity is not all-determinative. There were some unlikely people in the line of ancestors through whom Jesus came. Tamar, who conceived by her father-in-law, Rahab the harlot, Ruth a Moabitess, and Bathsheba all appear in the genealogical table in Matthew. This fact in itself shows that Christ's sinlessness was not due to a sinless ancestry—you cannot account for him by studying his ancestry. Perhaps it is an indication also of God's purpose through grace to save even the foulest sinners. And it perhaps served as a reminder to the Jews of their own weaknesses and failures. Heredity does help or hurt. But a man is master of his own soul, or may be by the help of Christ.

Born of a Virgin.

The Scriptures state that Jesus was conceived by the Holy Spirit and born of a virgin. It is a mysterious, and perhaps an inexplicable fact. But when one considers Jesus Christ in the light of who he was and what he did, it is not difficult to reason back from that to the fact that He was born of a virgin. He was unique in so many ways, why should it be thought a thing incredible that He should be unique in this way also?

Matthew gives us simply one brief statement "And Joseph knew her not until she had brought forth her first-born son; and he called his name Jesus." It is Luke who gives the idyllic account of the birth of Jesus. It is interesting to note that Matthew states that it was Joseph who named Jesus—and "he called his name Jesus."

God With Us.

He was to be called Immanuel which meant "God with us." This is the meaning and the miracle of the Incarnation, which simply means that God became clothed in flesh and blood and came down and lived among men. Jesus was the image of the invisible God. In him we see what God is like in character, and in his attitude toward his children. Jesus himself said "He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father." And what was true in the days of his flesh is true now. God is not away off; God is with us. In the person of his Holy Spirit he dwells among and in men.

Followers of the Gleam.

The visit of the Magi is full of mystery. Who were they? From whence did they come? How did they know that a "king of the Jews" had been born? Was it a special star that guided them? And so on. But in all this mystery there is solid truth. Here is the story who followed such light as they had, and hence came to have more light. Here is the story of men who did the best they knew, and came to know better. He that doeth the truth cometh to the light. Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness. If any man will to do, he shall know.

And perhaps here we have the vanguard of that great host of Gentiles, who sitting in great darkness, saw a light. They were outside the pale of the covenant, but they were not outside of God's great love.

Having Eyes, They See Not.

In strange contrast to the Magi who came from afar to see this strange thing that had come to pass, the chief priests and the scribes gave no heed to the most significant event in the world's history. They knew the Scriptures by heart, but they never clothed them with flesh and blood. They knew where the Christ should be born, but they were not at all concerned that he had been born. They had eyes, but they saw not the beauty or the meaning of the event that was taking place before their very eyes. There are none so blind as those who will not see. If the light that be in darkness, how great indeed is that darkness!

Divine Warning—Human Vigilance.

God warned Joseph in a dream about Herod's diabolical scheme. But He did not pick up the infant Jesus and carry Him away to Egypt. Joseph and Mary had to take him down to Egypt themselves. God does not do for us what we can do for ourselves. He warns, and he offers help, but we must put forth an effort ourselves. Jesus said "Watch and pray." Be on the lookout for danger, and get help from God in time of danger. God warns men of their danger, he does not allow them to go into sin unwarned. He sets up "danger signals" all along the way.

The Slaughter of the Innocents.

It seems almost unthinkable that any man would deliberately set about to slay all babies two years old and under. But here is seen in a dramatic historic incident an eternal fact. The malignant forces of evil are seeking always to destroy every thing that gives promise of brighter and fairer things, whether it be personal values or social ideals. Organized evil, and for that matter personalized evil, today seeks to assassinate good wherever it finds it. We have evidence today of this spirit on a large scale in what Germany and Russia have done to Poland.

A Triumph Over Environment.

Reference has already been made to the limitations of heredity, and the failure of heredity to account for Jesus. The same thing is true of environment. Jesus lived and grew up in Nazareth. Unless we grossly misunderstood Nathaniel's remark, Nazareth was not the most inspiring or cultured place in the world. "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" he exclaimed when told that Jesus had come from Nazareth. Environment counts, but it is not all-powerful. A Salvation Army lassie can go into any environment and keep pure and unspotted. It is not so much a question of where a man is, but what he has in him. Christ's spirit makes men conquerors over environment.

"The habit of reading is the only enjoyment I know in which there is no alloy. It lasts when all other pleasures fade. It will be there to support you when all other resources are gone. It will be present to you when the energies of your body have fallen away from you. It will last you until your death. It will make your hours pleasant to you as long as you live."

MONDAY.

"LET US GIVE THANKS."

"Behold, God is my salvation."—
Isa. 12: 2.

"Everyday will I bless Thee, and I will praise Thy name forever and ever."—Psalm 145: 2.

Those of us who are well and happy this morning, let us repeat His Word,
"thou will keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee."

Prayer—O Lord, we are feeling so well this morning! We have prayed for this and we bow our heads and humble our souls in gratitude to Thee for this blessing. Keep us humbler, and keep us steadfast in prayer, and may Thy Spirit dedicate our lives to Thee continually. Glory to God in the highest! Amen.

TUESDAY.

"LET THE SICK AND THE UNFORTU-NATE GIVE THANKS."

"Though He slay me yet will I trust Him."

"All things work together for good to them that love God."

"Blessed is the man whose strength is in Thee, . . . who passing through the valley of Baca (weeping, sorrow) make it a well . . . everyone of them appeareth before God . . .
they will still be praising Thee."—
Psalm 84: 5-7, 4.

As the cold biting winter winds toughen and strengthen the forest trees, so sickness and misfortune challenges to the courage of faith, strengthens endurance and steadfastness of purpose, and serve as a foothold to spiritual victory.

Prayer—Our Father, though our prayers for health and freedom from misfortune are not answered, make us steadfast in faith. We may be selfish—O Thou Lord of all, give us peace and contentment. We will still be praising Thee. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"WHY DO CHRISTIANS SUFFER?"

"I will show him how great things he must suffer for my name sake."—
Jesus to Saul.—Acts 9: 15, 16.

Here is revealed the paramount reason for Paul's suffering. In it is Paul's commission to preach Jesus to the world. Realizing that commission, Paul counted not his life dear to himself, that he might live his life true to Christ, deliver his message well, and finish his course with joy, all "For His sake."

Suffering "For His sake," has a threefold purpose: (1) Correction,
"Despise not the chastening of the Lord." In this He is seeking to make us like the Son of His love. The Psalmist said, "Before I was afflicted
I went astray, but now have I kept the Word." (2) Subjection: This refers to obedience to Him. Peter said, "He that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin." It means, "Not my will, but Thine be done." (3) Perfection: This means going through experiences like Christ in order to be like Him. If we are to be like Him we must have a "fellowship of His sufferings."

Knowing all this let us not shrink from it, but humbly and truthfully commit our souls to Him that He may refine our natures till the image of Christ is repeated in us.

Prayer—Pray as you feel, and say the Lord's Prayer.

THURSDAY.

"EFFICACY OF SUFFERING."

"If . . . we suffer with Him . . .
we may also be glorified together."—
Rom. 8: 17.

God hath not promised
Sun without rain,
Joy without sorrow,
Peace without pain,
But God hath promised
Strength for the day,
Rest for the labor,
Light for the way,

HOUR

Grace for the trials,
Help from above,
Unfailing sympathy,
Undying love.

"He healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds."—
Psalm 147: 3.

Jesus told the good mother who sought place in the Kingdom for her two sons, that "place" is given to those "for whom it is prepared," by which He means also that it is given for those who are prepared for it.
There is an appointed pathway to glory.

Prayer—O Lord, our Lord, Thy glory is in the rain as well as in the sunshine, grant us to see clear through, let come what will. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"INSPIRATION."

"And I will come down and talk with Thee there."—Num. 11: 17.

"I heard behind me a great voice."
—Rev. 1: 10.

The most treasured experience of a
Christian is his hours of inspiration.
By "inspiration" we mean that extraordinary divine impulse which fills one as he reads God's Word, as he reads concerning God's Word, as he beholds the glory of nature, God's handiwork; and as from these he receives from somewhere divine visions of God's truth, beauty and power. It is the revelation of His presence; His personality and His spirit, in which he received God's glory as others do not, and by which he trusts Him.

Prayer—O God, Thy Spirit moves mightily upon us and we are glad.
May Thy Word weigh heavily upon our hearts. May the Sacred Fires burn within. O God help us to be true and honest, and with Jesus as our center, rise to heights of glory.
Amen.

MAN'S RELATIONSHIP TO GOD.

"The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want."—Psalm 23:1.

The 23rd Psalm is, perhaps, the best known passage in the Old Testament. It contains a promise which is of priceless assurance to mankind. So aptly does it set forth God's relationship to man that Jesus used the figure frequently in his teachings. But it not only sets forth God's relationship to man; it also sets forth man's relationship to God.

It should be remembered that the Lord is a shepherd. He is not a nurse caring for helpless and witless babes. He is not a driver who uses sticks and stones and barking dogs to force the sheep along. He does not spoon-feed them. He leads them in green pastures and beside the still waters, where they must do their own grazing and drinking.

It also must needs be remembered that those poetic words are after all a figure of speech. Men are not sheep whose most notable characteristic is the instinct to herd together and whose only defense is to run away from danger. Men are creatures with an intellect capable of learning the secrets of the universe and directing the forces of nature so as to serve man's ends and purposes. Man has emotions capable of experiencing the tenderest and most abiding love. Man has a will capable of directing not only his own life but the course of human destiny. All of these are expected to be exercised in bringing us into closest fellowship with our Heavenly Father.

The tragedy of modern Christianity is that so many Christians expect their spiritual development to move steadily forward without any conscious interest or activity on their part. Paul enjoined Timothy to study to show himself approved unto God, a workman that needed not to be ashamed. Every Christian should dedicate his best intellectual efforts to the task of being a Christian. The farmer should seek to learn the course of spiritual development even as he seeks to know the nature of his soil and the peculiar needs of the plants which he cultivates. The merchant should know the relationships of the spiritual realm even as he knows that which concerns the welfare of his financial venture. The doctor ought to know that there are principles of spiritual health which can no more be violated with impunity than the laws of physical health. Every individual Christian life is a laboratory of Christian experience.

The Bible makes it perfectly plain that the essence of all true Christianity is love. When Jesus was questioned as to the first and greatest commandment, he answered, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." And he added, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Christian love is no mere spontaneous appreciation. It is the fruit of understanding. It is the product of experience. It is rooted deep in one's standard of the highest values. One can truly love God only when one has come to know something of the glory of his Eternal Spirit. One can truly love God only when one has learned that the deepest needs of the soul are met by fellowship with the God that is a God of love. Christian love is the most beautiful flower in the garden of life.

It is no easy task to live a Christian life. Most of us are prone to underestimate the difficulties. To begin we have to deal with that curious mixture of contradictions which is human nature. There can be no doubt but that humanity responds to that which is true and noble and good. But also responds all too often to that which is base and ignoble. And there has to be a fight to the finish between these conflicting elements of our nature.

We have to live out our lives in the midst of a world that is not attuned to spiritual realities. Our world glorifies the material and makes the material an end within itself. It is the Christian's task to master the material and make it serve spiritual ends. But all too often in our effort to master the material we are gradually diverted from our course and awake to find that we are serving ourselves rather than God and humanity.

As Christians we are challenged to mold our human spirits after the pattern of the divine. It is a difficult task; but it is not an impossible task. In the effort we are helped by all the resources of heaven which Christ has brought to bear upon human life. But it can be accomplished only by the exercise of our wills to the very limit of their strength. We make mistakes; but we must never let a mistake stop us. There may come times when it seems that we are making no progress. Then we must resolve.

"SUFFERING AGAIN."

"And he humbled thee and suffered thee to hunger—that He might make thee to know that men doth not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God doth man live."—Deut. 8:3.

Nothing is more wonderful than the serenity of soul midst the travails of life. Universal righteousness and peace comes from such serenity. Endurance for His sake kindles a sublime enthusiasm that proceeds to the fulfillment of certain destiny. And he who has so long waited for the formation of gold in the earth will surely wait with much long-suffering for the perfecting of our souls.

Grant us, O Lord, that patience and that faith.

Hope's patience till the long drawn shadows flee,

Love's patience unresentful to all schathe,
Verily we need patience breath by breath;
Patience while faith holds up her glass to see,

While hope toils yoked in fears compartnery,
And love goes softly on the way to death.

—Thomas Erskine.

SUNDAY.

"CHRISTIAN SUFFERING."

"What things are gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ, that I may know him, and the power of his resurrection and the fellowship of his suffering, being made conformable unto his death."

These words of Paul affect our hearts greatly. When sufferings come without Christian understanding, we are impatient; when they come as chastisement we murmur; when too exclusively as personal cleansing, we become boastful. But if we can accept sufferings as going along with Christ that the virtues of His life may pass through us, then we are happy and others are benefitted. Such an understanding is powerful to still all rebellious thoughts. Such souls radiate sympathies, dispel fears, restore faith, brighten hopes, calm the troubled, heal the broken hearts. It is worth it to suffer the will of God that may be done.

Prayer—O Lord, grant unto us a consecration that glories only in Jesus in our everyday life. Amen.

The Orphanage
 CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

A pleasant hour was spent with the little folks last Sunday evening. The smaller children live in the building known as the "Baby Home" at the Christian Orphanage. Miss Eunice Long has the children in charge. They get up an interesting program for each Sunday night and all the little tots have a part which makes it very interesting. They always build the program around some beautiful religious theme. One of the larger girls who lives in this building has charge of the program for the evening.

Last Sunday evening they had for their theme, "God's care." The writer was invited to be present and have a part in the service. It is really touching to see all the little tots gather in the reception room and take their seats on the drugget while the service is conducted.

The beauty of the service is the fact that each child, little and big, recites a Bible verse. The larger girls had readings bearing on the subject. Some recited poems or told short stories all relating to the care of God. The simplicity of the service always impresses those who are present. The little fellows are as quiet as lambs during the entire service and not even a whisper is heard. The Bible verses they learn for each Sunday evening will linger in their hearts as long as they live. The writer was very happy to have a part in the little children's service. CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

SUPERINTENDENT RETIRES.

Tuberculosis and Health Association, serving as Secretary and Vice-President. He is a charter member and past president of the Jacksonville Lions Club and served as president of the Jacksonville Ministerial Alliance.

Dr. Gillette is a trustee of Elon College, Elon College, N. C. He is also a Trustee of Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., from which institution he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity. He is an active member of the Board of Control of Franklinton College and has done much to aid our Negro churches in the Southeast. At the last session of the Florida State Conference he was made Superintendent Emeritus of that body by a unanimous vote.

Dr. Gillette will be missed by our church people throughout the Southeast as he relinquishes the responsibilities of leadership which have been his. He is not resigning the work because of ill health or because of lack of interest, but because he has reached the retirement age set by the Home Boards. No one will be appointed in his place, but the general responsibility will be assumed by Dr. Ernest M. Halliday of New York, General Secretary of the Extension Division of the Board of Home Missions. However, the work in the various states will continue to be under the direction of the following men: Dr. F. P. Ensninger, Alabama, Tennessee, and West Florida; Rev. W. T. Scott, Florida and Georgia; Rev. H. S. Barnwell, Negro churches in the Southeast.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN family wishes for Dr. and Mrs. Gillette a pleasant trip to Pilgrim Place, Calif., and a safe return to their home—the Southeast.

young people and the work they are doing. Never at any time have they sought to impede the progress of any other organization or any phase of the church program. Always they have sought to strengthen the churches by making better members of the young people. Their first real work that calls for much money is this China Friendship Project. It would seem that missionary leaders in the churches would be delighted to have this additional help from the young people.

The Promotional Secretary has worked with missionary societies during the past year, has aided in making possible new organizations, and expected to continue to do so. He will be glad to aid in organizing a young people's society wherever one is needed. So will the Pilgrim Fellowship.

The missionary project of our young people is not only a test for the young people but is also a test of the adult leadership. If we can assist them in reaching their goal, we may expect them to aid us in whatever may be undertaken through the years to come.

anxious to do his share that the church may not be hindered in its larger program of service. It is to be hoped that every local church may raise its conference apportionments in full that the larger work of the church may not be seriously hindered but may be free and enabled to make its contribution in a most telling way. Through counsel and cooperation our programs have been made, our needs have been indicated. No church is required to contribute beyond its ability. Oftentimes we find ourselves unwilling, but honestly we can hardly question our ability. As we have been blessed in the past, so we shall be blessed in the future, provided our efforts and sacrifices merit divine recognition. To the faithful the reward is promised, and His promises shall not fail. L. E. SMITH.

lutely keep our faces toward the goal; and pray for courage and strength to continue the struggle.

If Christ had the truth, no other way but the Christian way is worthy of the best that is in man. If Christ were right, there is no other way in which it is safe for man to walk. Twenty centuries of Christian history have proved the truth and rightness of Christ's message. The world is not yet ready to commit itself to Christ's way of love. But it has been given to you and me to see that it is the right way. It behooves us to dedicate mind, and heart, and will to follow where He leads.

vanced posts of the college now of whom we are inquiring, "Watchman, what of the night?" The response is "The morning cometh." Between us and the morning are the shadows of the night. The deepest one of these shadows is the $150,000 debt. The watchmen reporting this are the President, other officers, and the faculty of the college, appealing to us to lift this shadow. They are not only appealing to us, but they are out with the vanguard on the battle front, working day and night to lift this shadow. Elon is not their college. It is our college. It is your college and my college. Each of us should gather from the enthusiasm and sacrificial contributions of these leaders an inspiration that would at once make the "Golden Anniversary" drive against this cloud of debt a successfully accomplished fact already. It is not the duty of the President and faculty to raise this money. It is our duty. It is the duty of the ministers and churches of the Congregational-Christian denomination. It is further our duty, and when I say "our" I mean all the elements of church, as well as those already enumerated, to provide the college with a dairy farm so that the dairy products, poultry, and meats for the college may be produced by patrons of the college. There are tenant farmers all over North Carolina who have the training to make such an enterprise a success, who would be glad of the opportunity to move to a properly equipped farm of this sort, and have the advantage of educating their families here. I have been advised that this is impractical. My reply to this is that if there had been no such farm at New Garden School in the years long gone by there would be no Guilford College of today.

There are other industries which would fit in admirably with this scheme, providing employment for people otherwise unable to attend college. There are fifty-eight high schools within a radius of thirty-five miles of where we are now, graduating 2,142 students this school year. Of these 915 were boys. The majority of them cannot go to college and have nothing to do to earn a competency with which to go to college. An enterprise could be formed that would employ these boys for part time at a sufficiently high hourly wage that they could get a collegiate education here. Further, a line of busses could be operated daily to transport students to the college from within this thirty-five-mile radius, employing boys to operate them, which would enable these boys to live at home and make the round trip to the college every day at far less cost than they could have board and room here. At the same time they could earn enough money in industry, by part-time employment, to more than pay their expenses. The college could operate busses for much less than it can furnish dormitories.

I am challenging you now to a social security that will be permanent.

I am challenging you now to the employment of the thrift, energy, and economy that your Provisional Committee knew about when it founded this institution.

I am challenging you now to adopt the policies that laid the foundation for this Congregational-Christian denomination—its 150 years of successful growth, and paved the way for its fifty years of progress with Elon College.

I am challenging you now to know that there is no social security which is unearned. And I am warning you now of the fate of the barren fig tree. If that inanimate creation was destroyed on account of its fruitlessness, how may we who are created in His own image expect to escape if we are fruitless and then are guilty of the crime of teaching those who follow us that they may be fruitless and survive?

There has never been such opportunity for service as now. The reward for service has never been so lavish as now. Look at Elon seven years ago. Measure her by the Elon of today. The difference is the measure of compensation to your president and your faculty for effective service. They have borne fruit to success.

With this example before us, let us all gird ourselves for the endeavor to make Elon what she should be, the best school we know "with money." Let each of us select his method, as God has given him the right to see his duty, and make Elon the pride of the denomination, the glory of Alamance County and a credit to our great state.

Make Elon College an inexhaustible reservoir from which shall come, year by year, increasing numbers of well-rounded Christian men and women. Women too proud to smoke and too chaste and refined to drink cocktails at a bridge party, or anywhere else. Men, yes I said men, men who may stride into the avenues of the professions, the trades, the various fields of avocation, with the demeanor of plumed knights, demanding recognition and carrying in their souls the teachings and the precepts of the Lord Jesus Christ, along with the consciousness of fitness, as a result of proper application here, and demand of the world and society due recognition and compensation. Men who would resent the intimation that they were to be provided with any kind of unearned social security.

The Southeast Regional Committee is in session this week at Taladega College (Alabama) considering plans for promoting our work in the southeast. Leaders from the Southern Convention were invited, but none were present. THE CHRISTIAN SUN wishes for the group good success.

The Church Year

By AUBREY C. TODD.

Half a Dozen Things for October.

1. Stress Peace.

The first Sunday in October, the eighteenth Sunday after Pentecost, is known in the Church Calendar as Peace Sunday, from the opening words of the Introit, "Give peace, O Lord, to them that wait for Thee." In the midst of the present world crisis, when nerves are tense and propaganda strong, it is well that our churches keep the people well informed and thinking seriously about the problems of war. War aims directly at the heart of Christianity, the sacredness of personality, and the Church cannot keep silent in regard to this crime against humanity. Sermons, forums, and discussions in both adult and young people's groups might well find a place for this timely subject. The editors of "Time," the newsmagazine, have sent a series of articles entitled "Background for War" to the clergy of this country and are anxious to send copies to groups that will use them in discussions.

2. Rally Day.

The first Sunday in October will be observed in all the church schools of the Southern Convention as Rally Day. Such a day cannot be a success unless it has been well-planned. Our Sunday schools have not advanced as they should, and this is a grand opportunity to do something about it. Check over the membership of the church and see if there are families represented that are not in attendance at Sunday school. Make a survey of the parish and see if there are those who are not attending services at any church. Such a check-up usually reveals that there are many children and adults that can be brought into the Sunday school and the church. If your church has an outstanding program on Rally Day or unusual success in getting new members, write an article for "The Christian Sun," so that other churches may be profited and inspired by your example.

3. Conferences.

Conferences will be meeting this month and next. See that all Conference Apportionments are raised in full. If you have not been keeping up with your apportionments throughout the year, and suddenly discover that you are behind, get busy immediately and do something about it. Have your reports complete and ready on time. Elect delegates well in advance to represent your church.

4. Revivals.

Take advantage of the harvest season to stress the ingathering of members into the Church. Go into the "highways and byways" seeking those who should be sharing the fellowship of the church. Some churches will have revivals this month, but a revival is not absolutely essential in order to get new members into the church. There are people all around us who are only waiting for the invitation. Consider seriously the breadth of your church program. Does it appeal to only one class of people; or do all classes find a place in it? Check on the duties of the members and appoint special committees. Don't over-work a few members and over-look the others.

5. Visiting.

Perhaps a great deal of visiting has been necessary this fall, making the fall survey, raising the budget, catching up on Conference Apportionments, and getting new members for Rally Day or the revival meeting. Wouldn't it be refreshing to visit just for the sake of visiting? Such a program has reviving power that is unusual and cannot be found in other programs. In such a campaign, the members should be notified in advance that a committee will call on them at a certain time and that they are to discuss matters pertaining to religion and the church. The committees appointed to do the visiting will report later at a meeting with the pastor. It is surprising the things that will come out of such a meeting. Of course, the committees that do the visiting will receive the greatest benefit, but the members also will enjoy a visit in which money and pledges aren't sought.

6. Memorial Services.

All Saints Day will come on Wednesday this year, and many churches that have mid-week services will take advantage of this opportunity. This day has been observed by the church since the year 731 as a memorial to those who have lived religiously significant lives. Some churches may wish to use this theme on the Sunday preceding All Saints Day. If this is done, there will have to be a decision as to what shall be done with the Feast of the Kinship of Our Lord, which is a very important day, and is always celebrated on the last Sunday in October. Regardless of when the memorial service is observed, it is a service that should not be neglected. The heroes of our country have been those who have been great fighters or statesmen who have gotten our country into war. It is high time that the greatness of our humanitarians, artists, musicians, and great ministers be celebrated. Let us now praise famous men!

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

Rev. J. Calvin Felton and his family of Irvington, N. J., recently visited Newport News, Va., where the Rev. Mr. Felton was pastor in 1921.

All young people in Eastern Virginia are wanted at the annual Missionary Conference at South Norfolk Christian Church on Friday night of this week at eight o'clock.

A ten-day revival meeting has just closed at Turner's Chapel Christian Church, near Sanford, N. C. The pastor, Rev. R. T. Grissom, was assisted by Rev. S. E. Madren.

On Friday night of last week the Promotional Secretary had the pleasure of addressing the newly organized Missionary Society of Happy Home Christian Church, near Reidsville, N. C.

Rev. A. Lanson Granger, pastor of our church-to-be in Asheboro, N. C., will be the preacher at the morning service at Elon College on next Sunday. He recently spoke at a chapel service there.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, extension worker in Georgia and Florida for the Home Boards, is spending the month of October in New England, speaking before women's organizations and young people's groups.

Suffolk Christian Church, Dr. John G. Truitt, pastor, begins a revival on October 8, with Dr. H. S. Hardeastle, the only living former pastor, doing the preaching. Services will begin at 7:30 each night during the week.

"Shine On, CHRISTIAN SUN!" by Mrs. H. E. Robertson, president of the Woman's Missionary Society of Happy Home Christian Church, is dedicated by her to the editorial staff and the many friends of this paper.

Rev. S. E. Madren moves on Friday of this week from the Liberty (Vance) parsonage to the parsonage at Franklin, N. C. Rev. J. E. McCauley moves from Richmond, Va., to the Liberty parsonage on the same day.

Rev. O. D. Poythress of South Norfolk, assisted Rev. S. E. Madren of Liberty (Vance) Christian Church in a revival the week of September 17. Fourteen members were received into the church upon profession of faith.

A large crowd is expected at Ingram, Va., on Tuesday of next week for the annual meeting of the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference. Miss Ruth Isabel Seabury will be the principal speaker, which is attraction enough for any conference.

Ministers of North Carolina should be on the look-out for a notice relative to their meeting on October 9. It has been suggested that the meeting place be changed from Elon College to Burlington, in order that the ministers may hear Miss Seabury in her morning address.

"ALL OFF FOR BURLINGTON."

Miss Seabury, Mrs. Foster, Dr. French, Rev. J. F. Apple, and Rev. W. M. Stevens lead the procession that heads toward Burlington, N. C., each evening during the coming week. They will be ready to begin work at seven o'clock Sunday evening and at the same hour each evening for eight days.

Pastors, church officials, Sunday school superintendents, officers and teachers, young people, and all who are interested in learning how to live the Christian life and render Christian service are invited to be in the throng that gathers in the Burlington Christian Church for this annual school of leadership education. The Upper Alamance Fellowship and the Board of Christian Education are sponsoring the school and anyone within reach of Burlington is invited to attend.

The schedule of classes and ad-resses was listed in last week's CHRISTIAN SUN. The important thing is to be present when the school opens and to be there each evening during the week. Tell your friends that we are "all off for Burlington."

CHURCH REPORTS TO CONFERENCE.

It is assumed that every secretary, and every pastor of the churches in the Eastern Virginia Conference will see this notice in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. As your new secretary of the Eastern Virginia Conference (Dr. I. W. Johnson having served so efficiently as secretary for twenty-nine years resigned last year on account of his health) I shall need your same loyal cooperation in making out your reports to Conference. Before you have read this article your blanks for reporting the work of your church for the year will be laying on the secretary's desk. Just answer each question the very best you can, and mail your report to me not later than October 23, in order that I may make a report of all churches for the Conference sessions. If your report is mailed later than October 23 it will be impossible to include your church on the chart. By October 23 four Sundays of October will have passed and your reports only cover up to September 30. So please mail your church letter, your annual report to Conference in other words, to me not later than October 23.

While I have the floor let me also request the pastors to be just as prompt in sending in their reports to Conference. Blanks have been mailed you for that purpose. Please do not be left out of the conference secretary's reports, and charts, which are compiled and made previous to the sessions of the Conference. The Eastern Virginia Conference meets this November 1-3, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, with the South Norfolk Christian Church, Rev. O. D. Poythress, pastor. The program will appear in next week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. See that your local church, or churches, makes its report to Conference not later than October 23. The church may send its check along with the report for its Conference Apportionments—spelled with capital letters because so important, and needed and wanted in full! Put your church in the "Paid-Apportions-In-Full" class. Many of you have never been out of that class. Let us make this a great session of our Conference.

JOHN G. TRUITT, Sec'y,
Eastern Va. Conference.

THOSE WE LOST.

Tucked away in the meditative musings of our beloved Mission Secretary two weeks ago was an idea that should give leaders of the church cause for serious thought. The good Doctor was remembering not only those who have labored long for the college and the church, but he was also thinking of many who have fallen by the way because of broken hearts. For fifty years Dr. Atkinson has watched the progress of our church. He has been a teacher, preacher, editor, and mission secretary. He has gone in and out among the people. He has been on the inner circle of those who are the church. He knows whereof he speaks.

In all organizations there are differences of opinion. This is as it should be, and makes growth of personality possible. When differences of opinion lead to cruel criticisms, humiliating innuendoes, and personal hatred, then tragedy occurs. If it happens in the church, those who share in it have denied the faith once delivered to the saints by Jesus of Nazareth. It was love, understanding, and sympathy that Jesus taught and practiced.

When people want to leave our churches, the time has arrived for a very careful analysis of what is happening. There are some churches that have lost more members to other churches than they have retained. On many church rolls is a long list of names of those who never attend a service of the church and never contribute to the program of the church. These may be symptoms that the leaders have not always shown a spirit of brotherly love and Christian democracy.

It takes no prophet to say that if our church in the Southern Convention is to grow and render the service that it should, the bonds of brotherhood must be strengthened. The currents that divide must be closed. Channels of understanding and friendship must be opened. Those who are responsible for leadership must find a way to attack evils rather than each other, or the church is doomed.

While we may be proud of certain successes, we must be keenly aware of slow progress, and sometimes failures. The list of those who have dropped out of our churches is almost as long as that of those who are now enthusiastically at work. Surely there is a way to correct this dangerous evil. The needs of the present world demand that we find that way. We need to give thought to those we have lost—and those we are about to lose. A revival of kindness and consideration for others will put new spirit in our churches and the Convention.

THE CHURCH WE LOVE.

The church we love is the one that lifts our spirits. Whether it be by kindly greeting, excellent music, beautiful symbolism, ancient ritual, or thoughtful preaching makes little difference. We enter the church with low spirits after the week's conflicts and expect it to be the "holy of holies" that will lift our spirits into the presence of God. If the church fails us, we cannot love it. If it blesses us, we give it our affection.

The church we love is the one that lifts our desires. Human desires sometimes grovel in the dust, but something within the human yearns for perfection. We may rebel against the church becoming "other worldly," but all the while we crave that courage that will enable us to desire the high and holy things that will last through the ages. If the church can lift our desires above the sordid, then the church can have our heart's love.

The church we love is the one that takes us into the fellowship of service. We join the church to be with other people and to work with them in Christian service. If we miss the fellowship or the service, the membership means little and we lose interest, but if the fellowship is sweet and strong and the service is abundant, then the church ties us to it with hoops of steel that endure forever.

NOW IS THE TIME FOR THE CHURCH TO GROW.

Eleven thousand Christian German refugees are in this country. Many thousand native tenant farmers, migrant workers, and common laborers live below the level of comfort, and several million people find no work. German and Russia have joined hands in a military alliance that may mean further pressure on religion. Japan still slaughters Chinese by the thousands while we sell her the most of her weapons of war. It is in this dark world that the church should bring the radiance that shone from the face of the Master.

This is not the time for the church to retreat. If it becomes necessary for local churches to curtail local expenses or missionary giving, the crying needs of a tortured world should help the church to decide what to do. A bit of sacrifice on the part of the churches will bless a bleeding world today.

SHALL "THE SUN" SHINE?

For nearly a hundred years "The Christian Sun" has shed light into the homes of Christian people in the Southland and in the lesser degree (or fewer homes) in far-away places. The writer of the poem on the back page insists that the "Sun" continue to shine. Editor, publisher, and Convention officials work incessantly in order that the paper may continue. At present they are faced with a very serious problem. It will be necessary for the subscribers, the pastors, and the church leaders to come to the aid of the church paper. Many subscribers are behind in their payments. The subscription list is far too short. This condition makes it impossible to pay for publishing the paper.

A fine list of renewals from Portsmouth, Va., last week gave the workers hope that other such lists will come in shortly. If all the churches will really try hard to obtain the number of subscriptions the Conferences ask, then "The Sun" can continue to shine.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

A few years ago the song, "When the Roll Is Called Up Yonder," was frequently sung, especially in revival meetings. The theme of the song was fitting for preaching concerning the future life. Heaven and hell were frequently referred to by the ministers of those days. In the drift towards a "humanistic religion" the emphasis was transferred to the needs and desires of the present day. We are living in the back-wash of this demand for present pleasure and reward.

It is amazing how far-reaching these trends of thought are in the field of religion. And it is astounding to realize how religious teachers are responding to the demands of philosophy and present-day psychology. Christianity is being influenced by the paganism of popular writers and shallow teachers who use catchy phrases and make astonishing claims of scholarship. These conditions have put many preachers in a hard place. But history should teach alert minds that Christianity should always be aggressive and not on the defensive. The great doctrines of the Bible do not need defensive support. There is no occasion for any teacher or preacher to apologize for supporting the Bible aggressively, or for proclaiming the unsearchable riches of the doctrines of the Scriptures.

Christianity is a religion for the present. But it does not end its work with this present generation. It has a great program. It comes up out of a sunrise that had its first dawn in the impenetrable mists of eternity. And its rays of penetrating light will not fall recumbent upon some fleeting cloud, in the western sky, but will leap beyond sunset and evening star, piercing the endless ages of the future. Its message is only half told when limited to this age. It attempts to answer the question, "What is man?" And it asks and answers the question, "Whence came man?" Then it completes its cycle by giving the only plausible answer to the question, "Whither is man bound?" "Whence?" "What?" "Whither?" These are great questions. And a religion that does not fearlessly and courageously offer some answer to these questions is not worthy of our consideration or support.

It is just as important to preach about heaven and hell as to preach about social injustice and political expediency. Sanitation, good housing, share cropping, tenant systems, capitalism, racial justice, political economy, peace—all have a place in human life. But these subjects are also related to man's future—both in this life and in eternity. The moral and spiritual quality of this life will be carried over into life beyond the grave. It is cowardly to avoid the eventualities and to evade the responsibilities of teaching all we can learn from investigation and revelation concerning the future life. This present life is governed by inexorable law and order. "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." No ethical system can revoke, revise or recant that law. Reward is certain and punishment is inevitable. The stars may change their courses but the word of God abideth forever.

It is morally and spiritually legitimate for Christians to sing, "When the Roll Is Called Up Yonder I'll Be There." And it is just as important for them to sing a response, "I'll Be There," when the call is sounded for service and sacrifice in the church militant on this earth. We should build some houses and mansions on the earth, while we are preparing for entrance into the heavenly mansions. We should fight some battles for right, peace and love, while we are wearing the armour of God. We should shoulder a cross when waiting for a crown. We should respond to the call of our Master.

I. W. JOHNSON.

DR. MARTIN SUMMERBELL.

Students, faculty members, and patrons of Elon College of two decades ago will remember vividly and pleasantly the genial friend and supporter of Elon College and of all interests of our church, North and South, Dr. Martin Summerbell. Dr. Summerbell died Tuesday, September 12, at Lakemont, N. Y., where he had made his home since accepting the presidency of Palmer Institute-Starkey Seminary, in 1898. He retired in 1935 after seventy-three years of active service in church and educational work.

When I came to Elon College in an official capacity in 1931, Dr. Summerbell was on the list of visiting lectures. He made annual visits to the college, delivering a series of lectures on educational, religious, and current topics. He had a brilliant mind, well trained, a genial spirit, a happy disposition, and was a rare personality. Through his cooperation and efforts, the college received a substantial support from the Frances Asbury Palmer Fund and his personal friends. He worked with Dr. Harper in interesting the late W. F. Corwith in Elon College to the extent that the college became the recipient of large gifts from Mr. Corwith. In recent years the college has lost many of its friends and substantial supporters—losses which will be difficult indeed to replace.

In the spring of 1932 Dr. Summerbell made his accustomed trip to Elon and delivered three lectures to students, faculty and townspeople. He expressed his continued interest in Elon College and his earnest concern for its present difficulties and future service. On account of the depression the Palmer Fund was not in a position to give further financial support at that time. Dr. Summerbell, however, on his return to New York, gave further evidence of his interest in and devotion for Elon College by sending his personal check for $200. He kept in touch with the college and often wrote of his interest and gratification for the college's advancement.

In addition to serving as President of Starkey Seminary for so many years, Dr. Summerbell was an active minister of the gospel, serving many influential churches in New York and Massachusetts. He was favorably and influentially connected with educational societies and institutions, influential in fraternal organizations, and helpful in all fields for the betterment of mankind. The Congregational-Christian Church at large suffers an irreparable loss in the death of Dr. Summerbell and will genuinely mourn his going.

The writer wishes to assure the family and friends of his personal esteem for Dr. Summerbell, his sense of loss in his going, and sincere sympathy to those who shall miss him.

REIDSVILLE'S SILVER ANNIVERSARY.

The Christian Church in Reidsville, N. C., will celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary on Sunday, October 8, with a special service at the eleven o'clock hour. A silver offering will be received to pay off the remaining debt on the parsonage. The church will also celebrate by beginning a two-weeks' revival meeting with the Rev. O. D. Poythress of South Norfolk, Va., assisting the pastor, Rev. J. L. Neese, in the services.

The College Is Founded

By DR. WILL S. LONG.

[Address given on Founder's Day at Elon College, September 14, 1939.]

My dear friends, especially those of fifty years ago, it is with a great deal of pleasure mingled with sadness that I address you here today. This is the first time I have appeared on an Elon platform. I am somewhat overjoyed. I shall relate the many things that happened during the construction of the first buildings of Elon College.

On December 20, 1888, the location for Elon College was chosen and the college was chartered March 11, 1889. You see, the Graham College existed under the management of the Christian Church for two years before the college moved to Elon.

One day Dr. J. U. Newman came out of a committee room and said to me, "Will, save all the oak trees as we have named the college ELON from a Hebrew village in Palestine noted for its massive oaks and pretty women." (Genesis 21:26.) The name "Elon" was suggested by Professor P. J. Kernodle. I was placed here on the grounds when a boy to see that the trees were not destroyed. I lived in a shanty next to the one occupied by John W. Long, the contractor of the buildings. He was very kind to me. The people who lived around Elon were also very kind to me—they furnished me with fruits and anything they had to make me feel at home.

Mr. Tom Bradshaw of Graham prepared the foundation and I looked after removing the dirt and trash. We are the only ones that I can remember who are living today that were here at that time. The first brick was laid in April of 1889 by Lizzie Jane Long, young child of Dr. Long (now Mrs. Albert Franklin of Richmond, Va.).

Pardon me if I refer to my father in what I have to say, for he was the president and founder of the college, and I was what you might call his private secretary. I was timekeeper for the laborers on the grounds and also paymaster. The arrangement to pay the laborers was through Mr. Walter Smith, who ran a little store on the corner. Money was sent up every Saturday on the eleven o'clock train from the Morehead Bank of Durham. Mr. Smith deposited the money in his little safe. I paid off by check and he cashed them. The first pay day I had a goods box for a table and wrote a check for a very humble old Negro man named Frank Gant. On receiving this check, Frank scratched the top of his head with one hand and took the check with the other trembling hand and said, "No yo'all see what education gwine to do; this white man set and write on dis little piece of paper and dat is money and dis Negro had to work a whole week for it. Thank you, Massa." This watch I place upon the altar was my time piece then, and today as I have only twenty minutes I shall let it time me. (An Elgin watch fifty-five years old and still keeping time.)

Captain James Williamson built the first house, just across the railroad south of the campus. Mr. Walter Smith built one southwest of the railroad station. We called it the hotel. Reverend Henry Hines built one southeast, where Dr. J. U. Newman now resides. Mr. Sam Tate, a Presbyterian who lived in the Cross Roads section, built a good house across the road, now opposite the public school. Mr. Jerry Whitesell built a six-room house northeast of the campus. This was occupied by boys as a club house. The Cable brothers built some cottages in the corporate limits. These houses were built here by men who had faith in my father's undertakings.

Father met with many reverses. Many of the members of the Christian Church did not think the church able to undertake this great work, consequently they were slow to donate for its cause. One instance that he told me of was when he visited a church and stopped with a substantial member who turned him down flat, saying that any money put into such an undertaking would be thrown away and so he would only give a dime. Out at that church an old widow came forward and gave him the only dime she had and thus encouraged him. This is like the story in the Bible of the "Widow's Mite." He used this example with good effect.

After the building was half completed we had our first celebration. On July 18, 1889, the corner-stone was laid. This was done by the Masonic Order. Many friends gathered here on this occasion. Honorable John M. Moring, a former speaker of the House of Representatives of the State of North Carolina, delivered the address. He was accompanied from Pittsboro, N. C., his home, by his accomplished daughter, Miss Alberta Moring, who later became one of the first members of the faculty. There was a niche left in the corner of the building, where the corner stone was to be placed. When this was done by the Masons, they declared not one thing was wrong with the fitting, as the contractor, John W. Long, had prepared this niche so perfectly that the corner stone was pushed into place without a particle of change. Of course, the day was hot and leaves and trash were all over the grounds and the foot of woman had likely not trodden here before. The ticks and red bugs were here in abundance and those ladies who were on the grounds that day will never forget them, but it was a blessing to me that those insects found a better grade of flesh than mine and did not trouble me any more.

The work had to be rushed, but a reverse came. One day when the eleven-o'clock train arrived, which brought the mail from the bank in Durham where my father did his banking (Alamance County had no banks then), he received a letter from the bank stating that unless certain persons signed certain notes the bank could not allow any more money. It became necessary to do something at once. Father called me at 11:30 A. M. on an awfully hot day and said, "Will, go get old Bob and the cart." (Old Bob was a famous old horse that my father rode thousands of miles to raise funds to erect Elon College. He was the most famous horse I ever knew.) I got old Bob and the cart and these instructions, "Go to see Dr. George H. Watson beyond Union Ridge, fourteen miles away, and have him sign this paper and tell him that if he does not sign it the work on Elon College will be stopped." I made the trip and found Dr. Watson just after dinner. He ordered old Bob fed and he told his wife to get me something for my dinner. He signed the paper and I returned as quickly as possible, in order to keep the workers from scattering and leaving the work unfinished. We pushed on until we came to another difficulty. My father sold his house and farm, two miles east of Graham, to his brother, Daniel Albright Long, in order to keep the farm in the family. He used this money to bridge that gap. The amount was $4,500.00.

The brick for the college was made in the southeast corner of the village south of the railroad. The brick were first contracted by W. H. Trollinger and Peter Hughes. Mr. Hughes pulled out later and Captain Trollinger fulfilled the contract. These were busy days hauling brick to the building, as things had to be rushed. I only know of two parties now who were in that mad business of hauling,

Mr. Buck Gerringer and Mr. Bud May.

My father and mother lived in a three-room cottage during the construction of the building. They slept in one room, cooked in one, and fed the carpenters in the other. My dear mother made many sacrifices to help her husband accomplish the great work he had set out to do. This was the beginning of Elon College. We could not say Alma Mater, for this was our first year, but the student body all came together as one family and loved each other and encouraged every possible effort to make "Our College" a success. We called it "Our College." I shall always be grateful to the friends in Virginia for their loyal support of the college with their finance and patronage. They never insisted on building the college in Virginia, but when they came to Elon they always called it "Our College," too.

Thus the doors of the college were opened on September 14, 1890, but the buildings were not complete. When the students arrived they were greatly disappointed, as most of them had seen pictures of colleges and college grounds and expected something similar—but lo and behold! the windows in the third story were not in and many doors in the main building were not hung. Carpenters were still at work rushing to finish the building. The girls were placed in the numerous little houses in the village. Most of the boys camped in the third story of the main building. Of course, home-sickness was plentiful, and as I had a weakness for music I organized a little string band with the depot agent, a small village merchant, and some carpenters, to go around at night and serenade the girls and drive their cares away. This I enjoyed greatly and I think they did.

Pardon me for saying this here, but I desire to pay my respects to one of the best men and most beloved men that ever graduated from Elon College, Dr. J. E. Rawls. I shall always regret his untimely passing. He was inspired by a commencement address delivered by the noted Dr. Tom Dixon, in which Dr. Dixon said: "When leaving New York City on an ocean vessel going to Europe, we were overtaken by a terrible storm as we were coming out of the harbor. The vessel was east out and likely to be dashed to pieces on the rocks. The captain lowered the anchor; still the great vessel was lashed around by the storm and all expected to be lost at any moment. I approached the captain and asked him if he thought there was any hope of being saved. The captain said, 'Look at that great chain that holds the anchor. If that chain parts we will all be lost, but if it does not we will be saved.' I went back to my room and prayed and thanked God for the lowly blacksmith who welded those links together." The blacksmith did his part well, although his picture will never be in magazines and newspapers. He did his part well and that is where honor lies. Dr. Rawls used this as his motto and I will say the same thing about him. He did his part well.

I am sorry my time is up as I have only twenty minutes to talk to you. In parting I wish to say to you all, especially those friends of fifty years ago, that we are not likely to gather again on earth, but let us live so that when we walk down the dark valley of the shadow and fear no evil, when we reach that shining river where we lay all our burdens down and receive a robe and crown, when we cross that shining river onto the beautiful and shining shore which God has prepared for all his people, where all our loved ones have gone on before, we may all meet and enjoy the blessings of life everlasting.

ROSEMONT.

Evangelistic services will begin at Rosemont Christian Church (Norfolk, Va.) on October 8 and continue for a week or ten days. Rev. John H. Knight, pastor of the First Christian Church, Berkley, will assist Rev. J. Frank Morgan in these services. The Rev. Mr. Morgan has just completed his fourteenth year as pastor of Rosemont Church and was the guest of honor at the annual business meeting and supper conference recently. During his ministry a handsome modern church and parsonage have been erected and the membership of the church has materially increased.

HOME-COMING AT WAVERLY.

An all-day Home-Coming and Rally Day service will be held at the Waverly (Va.) Christian Church on Sunday, October 15, beginning at 10:00 A. M. Rev. J. L. Foster of Elon College, the minister who has held the longest pastorate at Waverly, will be the principal speaker.

All members of the church and Sunday school, all former pastors and former members are invited to be present. Dinner will be served by the ladies of the church.

Rev. Carl R. Key of Torrington, Conn., was a recent visitor in North Carolina and Virginia. He returned home to see his mother, who has been ill for some time. He was a welcome caller at THE CHRISTIAN SUN office, at Elon College. On his way back to Connecticut he took from Holland, Va., Miss Frances Everett, who has entered the School of Religion at Hartford, and Rev. Emmanuel Hedgebeth, who is to be a student at Yale Divinity School, New Haven.

Elon College Golden Anniversary

The effects of a war are treacherous and tragic. People become excited even at the threat of war. There isn't any wonder. Nothing could be more terrible it seems than for our people to be brought into another conflict. It is to be hoped that the Congress of the United States will have a safe judgment as it grapples with this momentous question.

For the time being there is no occasion for our people to become at all panicky. Let's not credit too many things to the war before the war comes. Let's be grateful that our country is still at peace with itself and with the world and that the Congress of the United States is doing its utmost to steer this great country of ours in the ways of peace and of helpfulness to the rest of the world. We should be grateful for the prosperity and apparent tranquillity that we enjoy. The church and her institutions have been a mighty factor for the betterment of mankind. They need and deserve your generous and whole-hearted support. The Congregational-Christian Church in the South and the friends of Elon College have a magnificent opportunity to come to the assistance of their institution of higher learning. Elon College is unselfish in its service and thus is dependent upon the generosity of the church and her friends for the support necessary for the continuance of her program of helpfulness.

The Golden Anniversary Club is moving slowly but surely. Would you like to see the thermometer rise faster? You and you alone can make it rise faster. If you happen to be behind on your pledge, a payment would help. If you have not made your pledge, a card from you at this time would greatly encourage.

Following is a report for the week:

Miss Olive A. Gould, Albion, Me.	$ 50.00
Mr. John Wagoner, Asheboro, N. C.	50.00
Mr. Marvin Sexton, Denton, N. C.	50.00
Total for week	$ 150.00
Previously reported	20,800.00
Grand total	$20,950.00

OFFERINGS FOR THE COLLEGE.

The annual session of the Virginia Valley Central Conference has already been held. The annual sessions of the other conferences constituting the Southern Convention will be held during October and November.

It is our plan to support institutions of our church by apportionments to the churches through the local conferences. It is the wish of the Convention and the conferences that these apportionments be paid quarterly if possible. If not, that they be paid in full not later than the sitting of the annual conference to which the local church belongs. The Convention provides for partial support of Elon College through conference apportionments. A number of our churches and Sunday schools have responded generously through the year. We are grateful. Others have not responded so generously. We are hopeful. Within the next few weeks your church will be expected to complete its report for your annual conference. We all realize, as I am sure you do, that if the churches respond fully to the requests of conference, all institutions of the church will receive what, in the mind of the Convention, is adequate support. If your church does not respond fully then your institutions will suffer.

Elon College wishes to express its great appreciation for every bit of support that it has received from the church. It hereby makes a most earnest appeal to every Sunday school and church constituting the Convention please to do its share in the support of their institution located at Elon College. The administration has done its best, given its best counsel, its best effort. It can do no more.

The following churches according to our records have paid their apportionments for the college in full to date: Albemarle, Mt. Zion, Winston-Salem, Holy Neck, Newport News, and Franklin. Every church has been notified of the amounts paid and the amount due. This is to add to all former appeals a most earnest appeal to all to pay their conference apportionments in full that those enterprises established by the Convention may continue to be of service to man and to God.

The following amounts have been received since the last report:

NO PROPHEYSYING.

The writer had a very delightful visit one evening last week from a German Jew refugee and his good wife. Although, allowed to leave Germany with only $60.00 and no jewelry of any kind except possibly a wedding ring, he and his good wife were happy enough to be out of that land of persecution and in this free country of ours. He had many interesting things to say, the chief of which was that no one could prophesy with any degree of certainty as to what is to be the upshot of the present war. He said that six months ago he could and did prophesy about the prospect and the outcome, but all such prophesy had gone to naught and his opinion was that no living mortal could tell what would come of the present conflict. With this view many of us are ready to agree. It is indeed a strange sort of conflict in which none of us hope to participate, but into which many of us fear our country along with others will be dragged into before the end. It is going to require the wisdom and the very sanest judgment of our law-makers to keep us out of the conflict. Rev. S. M. Zwemer writing in The Missionary Review of the World concludes a timely article with these words, "The missionary enterprise does not rest on opportunism. It is always supremely urgent. When our Savior foretold the days of darkness that would precede His return He said "And the gospel must first be preached unto all the nations" (Mark 13:10). That is the law of priority; now is the hour for us to apply it to our meditations, our prayer-life and our sacrificial giving. Then we shall sing the forty-sixth Psalm until Christ "maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth." In every period of conflict and clouded horizon, let us follow the word of God spoken through the Psalmist: "Be still and know that I am God. I will be exalted among the nations."

If mankind would act with true wisdom, zeal and understanding and would give one-tenth as much to saving life as it does to destroying it with armies and navies we would have no more war. Jesus our Savior and Redeemer is the Prince of Peace and when the world comes to know Him aright it will cease its wars and will follow His teachings and commands. He is the world's only hope. Now is the time, if ever, for all our churches, Sunday schools and individuals to make their offerings to the cause of missions that through missions those less favored than ourselves shall know Him and shall worship idols no more.

It really seems that all Sunday schools and churches should and would make contributions now to our mission cause, since all must realize that the only hope of the world is the triumph of the missionary cause and the missionary message. Our Lord Christ said, "And I if I be lifted up will draw all men unto me." If the eyes of the world were upon Him today, uplifted as He is, men would quit killing one another in war and would do their best to exalt the name of the Prince of Peace and share His love and life with the world. The world will study and learn war no more only when the words of our Lord are taken seriously and are applied to every-day conditions. We appreciate every dime and dollar coming in to missions, for our missionaries are doing their best in war torn world to exalt the Christ and are not deserting Him, nor His cause, even at the threat of airplanes and big guns and war-maddened people.

DARK CLOUDS OVER THE WORLD.

The thoughtful reader of the book of Elihu, repeated references to the gathering clouds and darkness that preceded a thunderstorm. And then we read that the Lord answered Job in the midst of his tragic perplexity
"out of the whirlwind," and said:
"Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge?"

OPEN HEAVEN'S WINDOWS.

Open Heaven's windows
Flood my being, Lord;
Feed me with the manna
Of thy precious word.

Let me feel thy presence
In my soul today;
Give to me a message
While I watch and pray.

Open heaven's windows
Banish fear and gloom;
Flood with light resplendent
Every darkened room.
—Vivien M. Ogden.

Today the darkness deepens over Europe and Asia. There are wars and rumors of new war. The radio and the press carry into every home the latest news about the conflicts.
In Asia the undeclared war against
China continues with all its horrors.
The Man-gods of Nationalism, Fascism and Communism continue to set themselves against the God-man, Jesus Christ. Meanwhile the rules of nations take counsel together to break asunder the bands of Christian ideals and cut the cords of human brotherhood. Hitler's disregard for his treaties and promises and his declaration on the invasion of Poland were typical of the man himself and of the collapse of moral sanctions and regard for humanity in modern warfare. There was not a note of regret, not a hint of personal pain in such decision to invade Polish territory, with the consequent destruction of life, liberty and property.

In his book (just published), Democracy Today and Tomorrow, Dr.

Edward Benes of Czechoslovakia—himself the victim with his people of totalitarian aggression—states that all Europe is in a state of profound disintegration—morally, socially and politically. The long struggle for political democracy, beginning in feudal and monarchic days, and passing through the era of the American and the French Revolutions, the changes rung by the nineteenth century and the liberalism of the twentieth, have developed into what he calls "The struggle for a kind of social and economic democracy," with totalitarianism of various sorts (and power-politics of the oldest kind) harrying it on all sides. And the result has been persecution of the Church. Except in France, Switzerland, Holland and Italy the Protestant Churches of Europe are suffering from poverty and oppression. Many church buildings have been confiscated and evangelical theological schools have been starved into submission. The war now waging will not make it easier for Jew or Christian to live and work in Central Europe.

But Christians should not lose heart nor faith nor courage. Ours is an undiscourageable hope. We know that the darkest hours come before dawn; that God creates the rainbow out the clouds; that He guided his people by a cloud through the wilderness. "Clouds and darkness are round about Him, but justice and judgment are the habitation of His throne." In these days it may seem to us, as to Jeremiah, that God has covered himself as with a cloud so that no prayer can pass through (Lam. 3:44) yet at the end of his lamentations the prophet knew better, for he exclaimed: "Thou, O Jehovah, abidest forever. Thy throne is from generation to generation." Under God's shadow we can live among the nations and carry out His great commission. The Gospel of the Kingdom knows no race-barrier and no political frontier. In the darkest hour the true Light still shines. The end of the world is not yet, and the last chapter of European history will not be written by a self-glorifying ex-corporal.

Amid the confusion of present-day events and the Babel of tongues, amid the darkening of counsel by words without knowledge, we may hear the voice that came from the cloud on the Holy Mount: "This is my beloved
Son in whom I am well pleased—hear Him." The darkest hour may reveal God's love to broken hearts. "The night also is Thine," for then we can see the stars.—Missionary Review of the World."

SOUTHEAST PILGRIM VOICE.

The first issue of the Southeast Pilgrim Voice has just been sent out to key workers in our local churches, ministers, and interested adults. This eight-page bulletin is a result of the executive committee meeting of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship officers held recently at Altamont, N. C. Miss Frances Foster, 614 Arlington St., Greensboro, N. C., president of the Southeast group, is responsible for this fine issue. If you would like to have a copy of the Voice you may secure one by writing to her.

Key workers in local groups—Sunday school classes, missionary societies, Christian Endeavor societies, or what not—are asked to share their copy with the group. Either see that it is passed around and each member gets a chance to read it, or have a program when information from it is given to the group. The Southeast officers are depending on you to do this.

MT. OLIVET (G) YOUNG PEOPLE.

(VALLEY OF VIRGINIA.)

Have we had vacations? Oh, yes, but in spite of that our Young People's Auxiliary has been an active one. Besides the parties and picnics that we have enjoyed together, we have met in the homes for our business sessions.

Our last meeting was on September 12 in the home of two of our members, Hazel and Orvin Shifflett, who live about five miles from our church. The distance didn't seem to bother our young people for we had nearly every member living within reach of the church present. At this session we re-organized, electing the following officers: Galen Morris, president; Frances Shifflett, vice-president; Irene Snow, secretary; Eugenia Snow, assistant secretary; Naomi Snow, treasurer. Chairmen of committees are: Thelma Morris, program; Ruby Morris, social; Elphis Morris, membership; Winona Morris, publicity.

These chairmen are to have a meeting, at which time they will select other members as their helpers. Every member of the society will hold an office or serve on a committee. At our last meeting we were glad to receive two new members, Juanita Parrish and Robert Marshall. Following the meeting, we enjoyed singing, playing games, and eating delicious watermelon.

During the summer months we have helped to finance a bus, making it possible for children and parents from a section where there is no Sunday school to attend ours. We are now working on the Mission Project of the Southeast Fellowship. Our key worker reports favorable results.

THE COMING CRISIS.

By Rev. S. Q. Helfenstein, D. D.

When time has run its earthly span,
When has come the Son of man,
Who before Him then will stand
In the Judgment, awful, grand?
Who will hear His "Come ye blessed,"
Who H's dreaded "Depart ye cursed?"
Who on His right hand will be placed,
Who on His left hand will be traced?
Who to the heavenly Home will go?
Who to the awful depths below?
Who will sing Redemption's song,
With the glad, angelic throng?
Who a three-fold crown will wear,
Who with Christ His throne will share?
Who will eat of life's fair tree,
And forevermore be free?
Those whose robes are clean and white
Will live forever in the Light.

held the latter part of June. We feel our time was spent to a great advantage.

The fourth Sunday night in October we have planned to visit two or three "Shut-Ins" and worship with them, as we did last winter and spring.

Two of our Auxiliary members have gone to college—Morris Collier to Elon and Ruth Snow to Bridgewater.

We have enjoyed using the new Pilgrim Hymnals purchased in the spring. We feel that they have meant much to the enrichment of our services. Should anyone be interested in using our plan in soliciting for them we shall be glad to tell you about it, for we feel it was a successful one.

We have an active organization, and with our new officers we hope to do greater things.

WHAT SHALL WE DO WHEN TROUBLE COMES?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR OCTOBER 15, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: John 14: 1;

I Peter 5: 6-11.

Daily Readings—

Monday—Flee to God—Ps. 46: 1-3.

Tuesday—Resort to Prayer—James 5: 13-16.

Wednesday—Trust in the Good Shepherd—Ps. 23.

Thursday—Accept Christ's Invitation—Matt. 11: 23-30.

Friday—Take It to Jesus—Mark 6: 29-31.

Saturday—Seek God's Will—Luke 22: 29-44.

Trouble is a burden which is borne by millions of people. There are many who do not know what to do under its burden. Some say that God does not care or He would not allow us to be troubled. Others say trouble comes as a result of sin.

Let a period be devoted to the discussion of "What causes most of the troubles of the world?" To these suggestions add your own ideas. Many troubles arise because of foolish adventures. Prejudices cause trouble. Other common causes are selfishness, unforgiving spirit, physical weakness, laziness, procrastination, inability to follow orders, inability to get along with other people, etc.

Let various persons tell how God by various means has given them strength and courage to meet life's troubles.

Topics for Talks—

1. Realize trouble is normal.
2. Prepare for troubles.
3. Seek expert advice.

We seldom hear of the tragedy in the life of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. One day Mrs. Longfellow accidentally set her dress on fire. All efforts to extinguish the flames were futile. She died. This broken-hearted man sat down in his poor motherless home to fill up the sad, vacant hours. His immortal translation of Dante is the result.

Study the ways different men meet unexpected trouble: some take the way of suicide which solves nothing, but rather increases the burden and trouble of their family; some curse God because they have been in little touch with Him; others are too broken to do anything. Still others refuse to let disaster discourage. Christians have the example of Christ who lived in the midst of trouble constantly but was unafraid.

Suggested Hymns—

"Onward, Christian Soldiers."

"A Mighty Fortress Is Our God."

"O Jesus, I Have Promised."

REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

THE FORERUNNER OF THE KING.

LESSON II—OCTOBER 8, 1939.

GOLDEN TEXT: Make ye ready the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.—Matt. 3:3.

LESSON: Matthew 3.

A Promised Man.

God had promised that he would send one who would prepare the way for the coming of his Son. Long centuries before Isaiah had said, "the voice of one crying in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight." And God always keeps his promises. Thus it was that in the fullness of time God sent not only his Son, as Paul says, but he sent John the Baptist to prepare the way for his Son. There are given to us in the Scriptures exceeding great and precious promises. God is able and is eager to fulfill his promises if through faith we claim them, and through obedience we put ourselves in position to receive them. There was a man sent from God whose name was John.

A Prepared Man.

John was a prepared man. For years he had been living in the out-of-the-way places, a wild rugged section of Judea bordering on the Dead Sea. He lived close to nature, and as a son of nature he lived close to nature's God. Out of times of silence and meditation he came to a fuller understanding of the character and purpose of God. Like Moses, like Paul, and like Jesus himself, John went to school with God in the school of solitude and silence. There is still point in the words of the inspired writer, "Be still, and know that I am God." John came prepared to tell men about God, because John himself had had first hand experience of God. Ministers, Sunday school teachers, and all Christian workers can not give that which they do not have. Our primary need is to know God, whom to know aright, as Jesus said, is life eternal.

A Plain Living Man.

Matthew says that John "had his raiment of camel's hair and a leathern girdle about his loins; and his meat was locusts and wild honey." It is just another way of saying that John lived a sane and simple life. He had a rugged constitution and this rugged constitution was due to his sensible way of living. Plain food, fresh air, wholesome exercise and plenty of sleep were factors that helped to make him strong—it gave him a strong body and steady nerves. There have been those who have accomplished great things in the world in spite of poor health, but every sensible man ought to live a sane and simple life, both for the sake of his efficiency and because his body is a temple of God. Plain living may be just as much of a man's religion as prolonged prayers.

A Plain Spoken Man.

In the fullness of time John began his ministry. He appears on the scene from the first as a preacher of power. Because he had seen the face of God he was not afraid of the face of man. The simple theme of his preaching was repentance—a change of mind, a change of thought, a change of purpose. The basis of this repentance was the fact that all men were sinners, that the kingdom of heaven was at hand, and that men were not prepared to enter into that kingdom until they had repented of their sins, and through faith had entered into that kingdom. The word kingdom, of course, emphasized a sovereign. The word heaven emphasizes the spiritual aspect of that new order. John did not come proclaiming a material or political kingdom that would be a rival to the Roman government, but he did come proclaiming that God was going to set up a kingdom based upon love, spiritual allegiance to God, a realm of life in which God's will was to be done on earth as it was in heaven.

John said that repentance must find expression in conduct. If the thing were genuine within it would have visible results without. "Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance." John insisted that what a man believes should find expression in action. He put in other words what Jesus meant when he said, "By their fruits shall ye know them."

This man John did not trim down his message. When the Pharisees and Sadducees, who represented the most religious minded and the most politically powerful groups of his day, came to him, he rather bluntly referred to them as "a generation of vipers" and inferred that they had come to him because they were scared of the judgment to come. He had the same message for them that he had for the poor and influential people—repent. He bluntly told them that it was folly for them to depend upon their religious inheritance. The fact that they were the descendants of Abraham was of no avail unless they had Abraham's faith and Abraham's character. God was laying the axe to the root of the trees. Trees that were unfruitful would be cut down and cast away. One wonders if the world today does not need more of this type of preaching. We need a message that will pierce through the veneer of our pride and self-righteousness and make us feel very keenly a sense of sin and the inadequacy of our own lives.

The Herald of a King.

John thought of himself as a herald of a king. Just as the kings of that day sent forth their heralds to proclaim by trumpet and by voice that royalty was about to appear just so did John, with a voice that sounded like a trumpet, announce to Israel that the long expected king was about to come. He helped to create the atmosphere in which Jesus began his public ministry.

The One Who Baptized.

We call him John the Baptist. The Greek word means, the one who came baptizing. Water has always been a symbol of cleansing. The Jews used it in their ceremonies. John therefore adopted it and made it a characteristic of his ministry. The act itself had no merit in itself, but it was an outward symbol of inward grace. The man who professed to be cleansed from within submitted to this rite and thus bore witness to his faith. Today as then this beautiful act is a symbol and a sacrament. Nothing can be more impressive if the rite is administered to those in whose lives the inner experience has become real.

An Humble Man.

John looms up a majestic figure in history's role of heroes. Jesus himself said that he was a great man. But like every other great man he was a humble man. Indeed his humility is inspiring. He himself bore witness that he was not worthy to bear the shoes of his Master or to unloose the latchet of the shoes, and on one occasion he said, "He must increase and I must decrease." In proportion, as we see the beauty and the dignity of Christ, will we feel the sense of our own limitations and feel a sense of true humility.

"Conformity to Christ is also the one thing which will make us useful to Him here. Should we not covet it more—seek it more—and by the grace of His Spirit attain it more? In its fulness, it will be the final inheritance of all those who love God, who are called according to His purpose. In evergrowing measure, it can be ours, here and now."

MONDAY.

"GOD'S SIMPLE RULE."

"And what doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with the Lord."—Micah 6: 6.

This rule, this plumbline, this level of character is thought of as applying to individuals. Actually it applies to statesmen and the course of governments as well. We would be far better off if it were applied to all human relations.

Prayer—Our Father in heaven, we pray for peace and pass on. Make us more in earnest. Give us a passion for righteousness and justice everywhere. Thy will be done in us." Amen.

TUESDAY.

"THE CHRISTIAN'S SOLACE."

"All things work together for good to them that love God."—Rom. 8: 28.

The Christian, above all others, may find real solace when misfortune comes. Others go down under it. True they cannot always see the reason for some things. But it is sufficient to him to know that there is a reason and that undoubtedly it is for the best.

For instance, you think lots of your dog. He has a habit of running after autos. You whip him every time he does. He may not understand why you whip him. But you know something he does not, that death is on the road and that his safety is in staying away. If he could know your purpose he would know that the whipping was through your love.

Prayer—Our Father, we pray Thee for more faith and more trust in Thy certainty to make everything well. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"HEART TROUBLE."

"The life of the flesh is in the blood."—Lev. 17: 11.

The ancients knew the life of the flesh, though they did not know how it is, we know a little of how it is. We have learned the function of blood cells and their relation to disease and health, and science is alert to conserve that function in order to give the best life.

One thing we have not learned so well, that is that the basis—foundation—of all true science is God. Some assumptions of science may not agree with His Word, but truth—the enduring truth—speaks God's Word, and all discoveries seem to confirm more and more the sacred truths of the Scripture.

The life of the flesh is the blood. So the life of the soul is Jesus. This is also hard to learn.

Prayer—Our Father, we pray for consecration of ourselves to Thy truth as it is in Jesus. We would have the Christ life, His light, and His love. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"LIFE'S PARADOXES."

"And the goings out of it shall be at the Salt Sea: This shall be your land."—Num. 34: 12.

Prophecy is being fulfilled. Developments about the Dead Sea, we are told, have made it a place so healthful that no physician or nurse is necessary. They say that "The Dead Sea is a sea of life." "salubrions, with no sunstroke or other climatic ills." The place of death turned to life—a startling paradox.

Even so is it with life. Most dreaded experiences often turn out very happy ones—blessings untold. The trouble is within us.

Prayer—O Lord, Thou art turning the desert places of the world to fertile places, be Thou in us and make our souls barren places rich in Thee. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"THE POSSESSIONS OF ALL."

"God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy."—I Tim. 6: 17, 19.

There was a time when only the wealthy could have some of the better things of life. Now, some of these things are the possession of all. Once, only the wealthy could have great music in their homes. Now every one with a radio may have grand organ, grand opera, symphony, and all else in the music world just for the turning of a little knob. Science has made the luxury of the millionaire the common blessing of all. So the libraries, so the sunrises and the sunsets; so the music of trees and the beauty of flowers; so the song of mothers and the laughter of children; and so the peace of God in the soul.

Prayer—Our Father, we thank Thee that Thou hast so richly endowed life. Give us the soul to enjoy it all, and be at peace with Thee. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"THE WORLD'S GREATEST PROBLEM."

"Let this mind be in you, which was also in Jesus Christ."—Phil. 2: 5.

This is what he said, "I'd give my right eye to see him blind in both." How diabolical! Yes, that is the spirit we often see in the minds of people—cherishing anger in their souls.

This is the anti-thesis of Christ, who, when reviled, reviled not again; who taught the principle of the "second mile" and "turning the other cheek."

The remedy to this evil is the mind of Christ in us. And this is the world's greatest problem, to supplant envy, fear, jealousy, greed and revenge with the Spirit of Christ.

Prayer—O Lord, how evil we must appear in Thy sight. Forgive us and cleanse us from faults. Fill us with the Christ Spirit. Amen.

"MAINTAIN THE SPIRITUAL GLOW."

(ROMANS 12: 11.)

In the October issue of The Upper Room a clergyman by the name of Ralph M. Pierce writes a thought-provoking experience. He says, "As I stepped into a church kitchen to congratulate the cooks after a great banquet, I ran across an empty match box. On its side was printed this legend: "Treated to Prevent After-Glow."

"At once I was convinced that this was good doctrine for matches but poor philosophy for a life. The use of a match is to strike a light and then die out at once for safety. But the use of a life is to strike a light which will never die out.

"The cares of the world, the burden of wealth or poverty, the falling into evil companionship, the tendency to temporize or occasionally neglect spiritual culture—these are the solutions of life which, if we allow them to be poured upon us, will stop the after-glow of spiritual insight and moral strength.

"A living faith, a present-day experience of Christ, and an abiding fellowship with God is the one way out and up from all life's failures." In short, Mr. Pierce is speaking of faith, friendship and fellowship. When these three things are operating in our lives they help to "maintain the spiritual glow," to keep us "fervent in spirit."

I.

A living faith—yes—not a dead faith. If a glowing fire has died out, not even a spark left, only ashes remain which can never be made alive again but may be scattered to the four winds. However, if such a fire is fed constantly and evenly with good fuel it will keep a glowing flame, giving warmth and cheer to those who gather about. Such is the difference between a living and a dead faith.

It is a good thing to possess an aggressive, living faith, but it will blast like an ear of corn which gathers too much food and water from the soil if it is not cultivated. With whom, then, is such a faith to be shared? The majority of Christian believers would say God and man. A living faith in a living God is worth more than all silver and gold. A living faith in living men is worth more than the pearl of great price.

Faith in God in days like these protects us from all harm, all inward and outward enemies. To live above the cares, burdens, fears, and evils of our time is not the aim of faithful Christians. To live a Godly life amid them is our goal. Paul, with whom we meditate today, never shunned anything that would be detrimental to the cause of Christ or the progress of humanity. By faith he lived, worked and died for God the Father, Christ the Son and the Holy Spirit. He did more than that. He gave himself in service to his fellowmen in whom he also believed wholeheartedly. He maintained the spiritual glow. His reward was what he calls the peace that passeth all understanding.

Such peace is sought by Christians in all lands. Faith in God is not enough. It must be expressed by our willingness to share with others this faith. It is shown by practicing the Golden Rule, by going the "second mile," by playing the Good Samaritan, by sympathizing with and ministering to the sick, the maimed, the halt and the blind regardless of race, color or creed. And that is not enough. We must count all personality of whatever station as sacred and precious in the eyes of God. That is the faith of a Grenfell, a Schweitzer, a Kagawa. It is living, active, aggressive. It brings the only lasting peace there is to men where so-called peace is lacking. It is written on the tablets of the heart and, therefore, cannot be scrapped by tearing up pieces of paper and making meaningless proclamations.

II.

In order to maintain the spiritual glow all Christians must become better acquainted with the ever-present friendliness of Christ. You say that is a large order. Agreed! Such has been done and can be done again if men are willing to attempt the impossible. An inexhaustible list of those who have done much more could be made. It is necessary only to call attention to a great, growing crowd of witnesses of whom Christ is the spiritual leader. To the twelve disciples of many stations he was a real friend in body, mind and spirit. After he had gone they began to understand what he really meant when he called them friends. They, then, knew what it meant to experience Christ daily and tell the world about it. Their friendship for humanity was expressed by helping the needy in the name of him who is above every name. They, too, might have sung, "What a Friend We Have in Jesus." Even though Dr. Hertzler, author of The Horse and Buggy Doctor had little use for the clergy and institutionalized religion, he was a real Christian friend at heart and by practice. He never refused medical aid to those in pain regardless of whether they were scoundrels or gentlemen, mere women or ladies, rich or poor.

That is active Christian experience. A religion of the heart is the first essential but worth little unless it becomes a religion of action. To be a friend of the oppressed in the face of possible persecution is real Christianity of the red-blooded type. It takes much more courage to be a Christian that it does to be an army general, a gangster, or an airplane pilot.

III.

A glowing religion is evidence that the life of such a man or woman is on fire with God. Like the Psalmist they cannot escape his presence wherever they go. It means that an abiding fellowship with God is being maintained by constantly tapping the available spiritual resources. Numberless volumes of poetry, biography, fiction and most certainly the choice portions of the Scriptures are available on every hand to guide us in the practice of the presence of God. Listen to these lines of Robert Mont-

"THE CART BEFORE THE HORSE."

"Every man's work shall be made manifest."—I Cor. 3:13.

An architect once said, "It is the first rule of architecture never construct an ornament, but always ornament a construction." Says Dr. William J. Ellis, "That principle strikes at the whole business of seeming without being; of pretense and bluff, of affections without virtue.

Construction is character. Ornament is grace. Grace without goodness is hypocrisy and despicable. Goodness is a charm in itself, but when it is seasoned with the ornament of grace in Jesus, it is perfect.

Prayer—O Lord, make us real, make us sound, make us true, loving and obedient. Amen.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The months of October, November, and December have been set aside by the Southern Convention as Christian Orphanage months. During these months the churches and Sunday schools are expected to make a special effort in behalf of the Christian Orphanage and its needs. During the month of October the churches will be getting ready to make their annual report to Conference and will be busy getting up the balance due on Conference Apportionments. I truly hope all the churches in all the Conferences will make a special effort to raise all their Conference Apportionments and go to Conference as a "Banner" church. That will be fine. The Christian Orphanage needs the amount due on the Conference Apportionments and we truly hope all the churches and Sunday schools will mail the amount due direct to the Christian Orphanage as we are very much in need.

During the months of November and December the special annual Thanksgiving offering will be taken. It will count on your Conference Apportionments for next Conference year. We are counting on all the churches to do their best at this coming Thanksgiving season. The Christian Orphanage will need or have to have by December 31 the sum of $9,775.90 in order to reach its budget, or it will go in debt. I know you love your orphanage too well to see it go in debt. This amount should be raised through the balance due on Conference Apportionments and the Thanksgiving offerings. Let everybody put their shoulders to the wheel and do their best. I feel sure that we will reach our goal at the end of the year with flying colors. We are counting on you. You have never failed us when we were in need and we know you will not fail us now.

GATES COUNTY PASTORATE.

Recent letters from Dr. C. Rexford Raymond, who for the past year has been pastor of our churches in Gates County, N. C., indicate that he has been busily engaged in revival meetings and other forward steps in his three churches. He had expected Rev. Julius Shepherd to aid him in the musical program and Mr. Shepherd was on the way to begin the work when he was taken with his fatal illness. Dr. Raymond and his people went ahead with their services unaided.

At Eure the attendance increased daily until Friday night when the church was packed with people and some could not get in. Most of the attendants were church members, but thirteen were added to the membership of Eure Christian Church. A handsome purse was given to the preacher and a contribution was made to the pianist and sexton for their services.

Members were elected to church membership on Friday night, baptized on Saturday, and the formal reception of church members was held on Sunday. Dr. Raymond gave certificates of baptism and membership to those received into the church.

At Oak Grove considerable physical preparation had been made for the revival. This included an outside bulletin board, toilets, installation of electric lights, and the purchasing of new hymnals. Eleven persons were elected to membership and eight were baptized. Certificates were given to the new members.

The report of the revival at Sunbury has not yet reached THE CHRISTIAN SUN office. After that meeting, Dr. Raymond was to take two week's rest in his home at Southern Pines, N. C., where he is the pastor emeritus of the Church of the Wide Fellowship.

CORRECTING AN ERROR.

Pardon us Brother Editor, but one wonders from what erroneous source, or record, the idea was picked up and printed on the front page of last week's CHRISTIAN SUN that Elon College opened its doors to students in 1889. Errors will creep into history, but it is regrettable that this one is printed in our good CHRISTIAN SUN. In large headlines we have "1889 Elon College Golden Anniversary 1939" and under this headline we have this statement made with the picture of the original building, "It was in this building that Elon College began in 1889." As Thomas Carlyle would say, "This is most veritably not true." Elon College never opened its doors for the reception of students until September, 1890. I am not guessing at this, nor depending upon my memory. My college diploma from Wake Forest, where I graduated in the spring of 1890, is before me and just before graduation I received a letter from Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., who had been elected President of the College which was to open soon, inviting me, since I was a member of the Christian Church, to become a member of the faculty of Elon to teach Latin and Greek. I replied that my decision was to accept, but would visit the college soon after my graduation. This I did in the summer of 1890 and found that the college building was far from complete, but that workmen were very busy and that whether the building was finished or not, school would open in it in September, 1890. The building was not completed in September, but was enough so to permit students to have class rooms and some rooms for dormitory in the building. I am sure all of the original members of the faculty and all the living students of the first year, 1890-91 will gladly verify this statement, and that the college opened for students in September, 1890.

Yours for keeping history straight,
J. O. ATKINSON.

Marriages

PITTS-WILLOUGHBY.

On September 23, 1939, Mr. Olin B. Pitts, Jr., and Miss Lillie Willoughby took the vows of holy wedlock at 6 P. M., at the home of the bridegroom's pastor. Only a few intimate friends were present.

Immediately following the ceremony they motored to the home of the bridegroom's parents, where a sumptuous meal awaited them.

Mr. and Mrs. Pitts will make their home in Burlington, N. C., where the bride has spent the major part of her life. Both are well known and highly esteemed in Burlington.

May a long, prosperous and peaceful life be theirs to enjoy is the wish of their many friends.

In Memoriam

WEBB.

Whereas, our Heavenly Father has deemed it best to call to the Great Beyond our brother, James M. Webb, on June 6, 1939; and whereas we can realize to some extent the grief of the family in the loss of such a life, be it resolved:

1. That while we mourn the loss of him, we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

2. That while New Lebanon Church, Reidsville, N. C., has lost a loyal member, we feel that our loss is his eternal gain.

3. That we extend our sympathy to the family and hold in remembrance his faithfulness as a Christian.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, to "The Christian Sun" for publication, and that a copy be placed on the New Lebanon Church records.

Respectfully submitted,

JESSIE R. SHARPE,
POLLY ANNA MOORE,
Mrs. J. J. SHARPE,
Committee.

gomery on "The Omnipresence of the Deity."

Lord of all being! where can fancy fly,
To what far realms, unmeasured by Thine eye?

Where can we hide beneath Thy blazing sun,
Where dwell'st Thou not, the boundless, viewless One?

Shall guilt crouch down within the cavern's gloom

And quivering, groaning, meditate her doom?
Or scale the mountains, where the whirlwinds rest

And in the night-blast cool her fiery breast?
Within the cavern-gloom Thine eye can see
The sky-clad mountains lift their heads to Thee.

Thy Spirit rides upon the thunder-storms
Dark'ning the skies into terrific forms!
Beams in the light'ning, rocks upon the seas,
Rears in the blast, and whispers in the breeze;

In calm and storm, in heaven and earth
Thou art

Trace but Thy words—they bring Thee to the heart!

The fulness of Thy presence who can see?

That is to say, the fellowship or presence of God is inescapable. Whether we catch it up and glowingly share it, or spurn it, no one can deny its existence. Fellowship was not alien to the Psalmist. Remember: "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord, who made heaven and earth." A ride about the countryside in this section arouses a consciousness of the Creator God in the same sense. The rolling mantle of lakes, valleys and hills is eternal assurance of his handiwork. It is wonderful. It is beyond compare. God is felt here. God is seen there. One cannot escape him. That, it seems, is fellowship with God.

It, however, may become fellowship with man when we meet him where he is and lift him economically, ethically and spiritually. Paul was right when he wrote the Roman Christians, "Let your love be a real thing, with a loathing for evil and a bent for what is good. Put affection into your love for the brotherhood; be forward to honor one another; never let your zeal flag; maintain the spiritual glow; serve the Lord; let your hope be a joy to you; be steadfast in trouble, attend to prayer, contribute to needy saints, make a practice of hospitality. Bless those who make a practice of persecuting you; bless them instead of cursing them. Rejoice with those who rejoice, and weep with those who weep. Keep in harmony with one another; instead of being ambitious, associate with humble folk; never be self-conceited. Never pay back evil for evil to anyone; aim to be above reproach in the eyes of all; be at peace with all men, if possible, so far as that depends on you. Never revenge yourselves, beloved, but let the wrath of God have its way; for it is written, Vengeance is mine, I will exact a requittal—the Lord has said it. No, if your enemy is hungry, feed him, if he is thirsty, give him drink; for in this way you will make him feel a burning sense of shame. Never let evil get the better of you; get the better of evil by doing good."

FIRST CHURCH, NORFOLK, VA.

The First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va., held its annual business meeting on September 13, at which time officers for the coming year were elected. Rev. John H. Knight is pastor. Officers and committee chairmen are as follows: Secretary, J. Aubrey Hall; Treasurer, Miss Fannie May Pierce; Auditor, Willis H. Bell, Sr.; Superintendent, Church School, C. E. Warrington; Assistant Superintendent, Paul S. Kagey; Organist, Miss Virginia Granger; Chorister, Mrs. W. J. Spence; Custodian, Bert L. Eason; Chairman, Finance Committee, J. D. Howard, Sr.; Chief Usher, W. J. Thomas; Chairman, Music Committee, Mrs. B. L. Eason; Chairman, Relief Committee, Mrs. C. A. Marwitz; Church Reporter, J. Darian Howard, Jr. These officers are to be installed on the first Sunday in October, with a special service conducted by the pastor.

The Stephen Barrett Men's Bible Class has as its motto, "United We Stand, Divided We Fall" and the new president is J. M. Jones, Jr. This class has recently greatly increased in activity and numbers.

Shine On Christian Sun

By MRS. H. E. ROBERTSON.

Shine on, CHRISTIAN SUN!
Send out your cheerful rays,
Brighten homes where'er you go
And fill our hearts with praise.

Shine on, CHRISTIAN SUN!
Beam down on through the years
For where the clouds of sorrow are
You dry away the tears.

Shine on, CHRISTIAN SUN!
And be a guiding light
To lead us on that we may find
The pathways that are right.

Shine on, CHRISTIAN SUN!
Grow flowers along the way
That they may help some suffering soul
Find peace and joy each day.

Shine on, CHRISTIAN SUN!
As you have done of old
Bring us messages of Christ
The truths we may enfold.

Shine on, CHRISTIAN SUN!
Be near where we may roam
'Til God has said, "Your work is done"
And called his children home.

"Our only rule of faith and practice."

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

Rev. W. J. Edwards of High Point, N. C., has moved to Route 2, Ramseur, N. C. The Rev. Mr. Edwards is anxious to have some church work during the coming year, and is willing to move to the field.

Please look at the label on your CHRISTIAN SUN and see what date is printed thereon. If it does not say "11-1-39" or a later date, it is time you were sending your subscription to the office at Elon College, N. C.

Remember that you still have an opportunity to hear Miss Ruth Isabel Seabury at the Burlington Christian Church on Friday morning at ten o'clock and on Friday evening and Sunday evening at eight o'clock.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN regrets that it was in error in a recent statement to the effect that Mrs. Lena Farrar had made her home with Col. and Mrs. J. E. West in Suffolk. She lived with her only daughter, Mrs. J. C. Costen, in Roanoke, Va.

Mt. Olivet (G) Church is sending a pastoral letter and summary of church news for the past Conference Year to the members of the church who cannot attend regularly. Rev. M. W. Mann is the pastor of this church in the Valley of Virginia.

Waverly (Va.) Christian Church invites all former members and pastors to attend the Homecoming Services on next Sunday at the church. Rev. J. L. Foster of Elon College, N. C., will deliver the main address. Dinner will be served by the ladies of the church.

October has been set aside as Church Loyalty Month. We are asking the members of the church to enter into a covenant with God to attend, if possible, the services of worship during the month. Those who attend will be given a card on which to register their attendance. A record will be kept, and an Honor Roll will be published at the end of the month. Attendance at services of worship is both a privilege and a duty. Your presence or absence makes a difference. Will you not try to be faithful in this important matter during the coming year?—Christian Temple Bulletin, Norfolk, Va.

THORSBY INSTITUTE NEWS.

Thorsby Institute opened the 13th of September with a very good enrollment. Two new teachers have been added to the faculty, Miss Ethel Thompson, science teacher and Miss Alice Burr, music teacher. Mr. V. H. Sutlive, who has been teaching at Thorsby Institute for nine years and who was to be registrar this year, was elected to the position of railway mail clerk, which necessitated his giving up his registrar's place. His headquarters for the present will be in Birmingham at the Terminal Station. He will be greatly missed.

THE TIE IS BROKEN.

Jacob Joshua Faison and his wife celebrated their fifty-ninth wedding anniversary on August 17, 1939. At that time Mr. Faison had been a member of Spring Hill Christian Church near Waverly, Va., for fifty-four years, and had led the singing there for about fifty-five years. He was a deacon of the church for thirty-nine years, and was superintendent of the Sunday school for several years.

On October 4, 1939, life slipped quietly from the tired body, and the tie that held him to wife, family, and church was forever broken so far as this earth is concerned.

On Friday night at 7:30 at Helen Jenkins Hall the Ladies Guild of Thorsby gave their annual reception for Thorsby Institute pupils and teachers and patrons of the school. There was a program, and games and refreshments were enjoyed by those present.

Rev. Hubert A. Bahr, who has been pastor of the Thorsby Congregational Church since March 1, left Thorsby on September 25 to take up his studies at Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn. Rev. John B. Gonzales, D. D., the retired superintendent of Christian and Congregational Churches in Kansas, arrived in Thorsby on September 27 to take up his work as pastor of the church. Rev. Mr. Gonzales was born in Iowa and attended Grinnell Academy and College. In 1892 he entered the Christian Workers Training School, which was later affiliated with Hartford Seminary under the corporate name of the School of Religious Education under the Hartford Foundation. He has served pastorates in Michigan, Louisiana, Missouri and Texas, as missionary superintendent of Texas, Louisiana and Arkansas, in Y. M. C. A. work and as president of the Texas Christian Endeavor Union. For the past twenty years or more he has worked as Superintendent in Kansas.

HOW LITTLE ARE WE DOING?

There is one minister serving several of our rural churches with a total membership of 329, many of whom are non-residents, representing a total of 189 homes. There are fourteen of this number taking THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The minister is one of them. This group of churches sacrificed to the extent that they raised for Conference Apportionments and pastor's salary the magnificent sum of nine hundred and twenty-eight dollars last year. There are of this total membership ninety-seven persons working for regular salaries averaging more than $50.00 per month, which would amount to about $60,000 annually. There are forty of the above members who are farmers, and most of this number represent heads of families and just what their annual income is one cannot estimate accurately. It is safe to estimate the annual income of the above 329 members to be as much as $75,000. The pastor and officials of the above mentioned churches should be ashamed of themselves.

One thinks it will help every pastor and layman if they will take time to "dust off" the Annual and do some figuring.

HOME-COMING AT HAW RIVER.

The Haw River (N. C.) Christian Church extends a cordial invitation to all former members and pastors to attend the Homecoming Services to be held next Sunday, October 15. The new pastor, Rev. Duane Vore, will preach at the eleven o'clock hour. There will be dinner on the grounds. One feature of the afternoon service will be the Christian Orphanage Singing Class, which will have charge of the program at 2:30.

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor

DR. HARWARD.

Illness in recent years kept Dr. W. D. Harward out of the active ministry and the councils of the Church. For a long time he was not able to preach or otherwise serve the church in a large way. Those who knew him intimately and those who had the privilege of visiting in his home at Wakefield or Dendron, Va., were blessed by his faith and kindness. His confident trust in God and his gracious smile will long be remembered by those who knew him well. The Christian Church, and particularly the Eastern Virginia Conference, is the richer because of having had in its ministry and in its fellowship a man of such deep piety and Christian zeal.

When death came to him on Monday of last week, it was no monster to be feared, but rather a friend who came as a liberator. The suffering body no longer holds his triumphant spirit. For those who remain, Dr. Harward is now a memory—and a memory that lifts one toward the spiritual realm in which he dwelt and now dwells.

FINAL PREPARATIONS FOR CONFERENCE.

Within a few weeks our Annual Conferences begin. The first is in Eastern Virginia. Western North Carolina Conference, North Carolina and Virginia Conference, and the Eastern North Carolina Conference follow in succession, week after week. Dr. Samuel H. Leger of North China will be the missionary speaker at all of the Conferences. His speciality is rural work and laymen's training. Undoubtedly our Conferences will be greatly benefited by his addresses.

The Conferences are composed of delegates from the local churches. Every church is entitled to representatives and should covet the privilege of having a full delegation present for all sessions of the Conference. Whatever business is transacted will either help or hinder the local churches. The selection of delegates is important. Men, women, and young people should be represented—and intelligently represented. Those who attend should report back to the local churches the business that was transacted and something of the inspiration that was gained.

The money sent to Conference will aid the progress of the Kingdom of God here on earth. If all the churches send all their apportionments, the Kingdom can progress. If any church fails, the Kingdom will be hindered. Now is the time for us to increase our contributions, so the church can stand up forthright and make clear its message to mankind.

This is an appeal to pastors, deacons, and other church leaders to see to it that delegates attend all sessions of the Conference, that complete and accurate reports of the year's work be made to Conference, and that all Apportionments be met in full. This is not a mere pious wish. It is an absolute necessity. Less than this will mean the crippling of our church and the slowing down of the coming of the Kingdom of God. Those who pray "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth" should back up their prayer by the support of the enterprise that helps to establish God's Kingdom here among men. To do less than this makes us feel a bit hypocritical in the center of our souls. We need courageous faith and earnest endeavor in a time like this. Be sure that your church is ready for Conference.

CHURCH FINANCES AND THE CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

Some of our churches have already made their financial canvass for the new year. Others are in the process. And still others will not make any canvass. Far too many of our churches are in the latter group. Some people think that money has little or nothing to do with religion, and that less said about it in church or in church relations, the better. This idea seems to be exactly the opposite of the teachings of Jesus, for it appears from the records in the Gospels that He said more about money (wealth) than about any other one topic.

It takes money to run the church. It takes a great deal of money to run the church. It is quite easy to see that those who contribute most liberally are among the most spiritually-minded people in the church. If a man's pocketbook does not get converted, there are likely to be occasions when there are indications that his disposition is not altogether lovely.

Those who really love the Church of God are anxious to support it. They believe in it, because it believes in them. The love of God constrains them to love the church, and love must of necessity give. It cannot withhold and still be love. The individual who sits down with a committee to plan the finances of the church for the coming year is therefore doing a spiritual service, because he is planning for the expression of love on the part of the people in the support of the church. Those who canvass the church members and friends for money for the church are doing a spiritual service, for they are opening the channels through which love may express itself in service for humanity and the development of the church. They are not beggars. They are evangelists.

For the sake of the spiritual development of our church members, if for no other reason, it is very important that every church formulate a financial program, solicit the membership for funds with which to support the church, and in every possible way interest the people of the community in financially underwriting the expense of the local church and its work which reaches around the world. Church finance is an expression of religious experience and may be a tremendous aid in the development of spiritual reality.

"There is a simple test by which it is said we can tell good people from bad. If a smile improves a man's face he is a good man. If a smile disfigures his face he is a bad man."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Dr. Willie D. Harward, son of the late George W. and Mrs. Margaret Harward, was born near Durham, N. C., December 7, 1870. He died suddenly at his home in Dendron, Va., Monday morning, October 2, at the age of sixty-eight years, nine months and twenty-five days. He was stricken by paralysis, while in a service at Antioch Christian Church, twelve years and nine months to a day before he died. He did not fully recover from this stroke but was able to serve a pastoral charge until six years ago. He is survived by his wife Mrs. Mollie Barrett Harward; one son, W. Eugene Harward; and two grand children of Washington, D. C.

Dr. Harward graduated from Elon College in 1896, and from the University of North Carolina, in 1897. He was ordained in 1895. During his college days and until November, 1901, he served several churches in North Carolina. He came to the Eastern Virginia Conference for the Conference year of 1902, and remained until 1909, when he accepted a call to the Christian Church in Madrid, Iowa, where he remained until 1911, when he accepted a call to the Newport News Christian Church. He remained in the Eastern Virginia Conference until his death. He served the following churches in the Eastern Virginia Conference during his ministry: Antioch, Burton's Grove, Isle of Wight, Mt. Carmel, Centerville, Emporia, Petersburg (Mission), Dendron, Union (Surry), New Lebanon, Newport News, Lambert's Point, Rosemont, Windsor, Wakefield, and Elm Avenue (Portsmouth).

The funeral service was conducted in Dendron Christian Church, the following ministers taking part: Revs. B. H. Watkins, T. Fred Wright, John G. Truitt, J. F. Morgan, R. E. Brittle, and the writer. Burial was in the cemetery at Antioch Church, near Windsor, Va.

Dr. Harward was an honor student in college and was recognized as a young man of deep piety by his fellow students. He was respected for his faithful work and consistent life. He maintained that reputation in his record as a minister. His personal life and great faith made a deep impression upon those who knew him best. After his death one of his neighbors said: "It was a benediction to have him and his wife in our midst." Of a mystic temperament, he found great joy in spiritual meditation upon the Word of God and the glory of His abundant grace. The Bible was a precious Book to his mind and heart. It was a source of strength for his soul. He stood firmly upon the precious promises, trusting in Jesus Christ and the guidance of the Holy Spirit, when the way was not always clear.

Perhaps his affliction was the greatest test of his faith. It was a disappointment to him when he was compelled to give up his pastoral work. He prayed daily for a return of health. He waited nearly thirteen years before health returned. He entered into rest—and perfect living—where there is no sickness and no death. In that transition he found an answer to his prayer. It came in God's way. And who knows better than our Father how to answer our prayer? Patience in affliction and submission to a Higher Will may be more impressive than a sermon in the pulpit.

Yes, health came to him in the morning. "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." A glad morning for the man of God. It was sorrowful for his dear companion and the other members of the family. The night may be dark, dreary and discouraging. But it will end. And the morning will bring new light and a bright, happy day. Faith rewarded. Hopes realized. No more weakness. No unsteady steps. No faltering speech. "Absent from the body; present with the Lord." What a beautiful home-going for the servant of God!

FUNCTIONS OF A CHURCH COLLEGE.

Elon College is not a church related institution—it is a church college. It was founded by the church, guided by the church, and has been supported by the church, her alumni, and the friends of higher education throughout its fifty years of continuous service to the youth of church and state. It was founded for the purpose of training for the ministry and Christian service, but from the day of its opening fifty years ago, its appeal has been universal and its enrollment has been without restriction. Young people from all walks of life and with ambition for all avenues of human opportunity have been counted among her students and are today numbered among her alumni.

The founders and supporters of Elon College have been diligent in their efforts to provide the best of opportunities in the field of higher education for those who seek training on her campus. Her equipment is adequate and inspiring. Her faculty is as good as can be secured with limited means. Every professor is a specialist in his field, made so by training and experience. Every possible care has been taken in building her curriculum. Wishes and needs of the students as well as requirements of positions and the professions have been taken into consideration in providing the course of studies for Elon students.

In the creation of man, it seemed a part of wisdom to endow him with spiritual tendencies and abilities. It is the function of a church college not simply to give to the student the best in cultural and scientific training but to seek to enrich and develop his spiritual nature. It is the spiritual powers of man that must become his directing force if he is to be a beneficent asset to his day and generation.

At Elon College every effort is made to conserve the courtesy, good manners, and good behavior acquired by home surroundings and in addition to add to these accomplishments on the campus, in the classroom, in dining halls, in social functions, and in all college opportunities. The college graduate of today needs not only to have a knowledge of what has been written but an understanding of what is expected and required in society. In short, it is the function of the church college to develop the whole of life that it may make its maximum contribution to society.

The Evolution of Elon College

By W. E. MACCLENNY.

[Address given on Founder's Day at Elon College, September 14, 1939.]

The founders and early leaders of the Christian Church in the South did not realize the value of education, as many of them were not highly educated, and others were not at all acquainted with classical learning, nor with Bible history. They thought that the matter of education should be left to gentlemen, and that it was not a part of the task of the minister to impart secular instruction. Many believed that if a man was called to preach that the Spirit would give him words and thought ready made to use on every occasion. They interpreted this as the meaning of Matthew 10:19 which read, "But when they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak, for it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak." Many of the ministers did not prepare their sermons, but as they went into the pulpit whatever came to them, they said. This was the sentiment of many, and therefore the young ministers were not encouraged to prepare for their work by getting a liberal education before starting on their career.

So far as we have been able to find, there was no effort made along educational lines in the Christian Churches of the South before the year 1810, when the division took place at Pine Stake in Orange County, Va., over the subject of water baptism. Therefore many of the ministers, having good memories would commit to memory a few sermons prepared by a better informed minister, and in this way would accumulate a stock of sermons which he would preach on different occasions, but his stock would soon be exhausted and he would have to seek new fields in order to get a hearing.

A few years after that time, 1810, Alexander Campbell, the founder of the Disciples of Christ, came on the scene of action and being a trained man, many of the churches that had been founded by the ministers of the Christian Church went over to that body and are still called Christians practically all over the United States.

At first, all schools that were used for the training of young ministers were private schools conducted by members of the Christian Church, often ministers, and they were very glad to get patronage of the church people, and the influence of the Conference behind their schools. It is peculiar, but wherever we have found one of these old classical academies in the early days, the influence of that has been stamped on the community and it in some cases has lasted to the present day.

In Southeastern Virginia, where the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference is located, we have found a school being taught in the neighborhood of Holy Neck Christian Church as early as 1820 by one James Arnold, and the next year Rev. Benjamin Bullock, the pastor of that church, was conducting a school in the same locality, and many prominent men of the county attended it. He was followed by others among whom we mention James M. Bailey, Kenna Chapman, James Babb, James Perry, and as late as 1831 Blake B. B. Baker was teaching in the community. A few years later Willis Holland was teaching near there and was the teacher of Rev. Robert H. Holland, who was one of the best writers the church has produced. While we have not been able to trace the educational interests in that old community for some years, the community decided to establish a female seminary in 1859 to be known as Holy Neck Seminary, and it flourished until the war of 1861-65, when it was closed, and it did not open up as a girls' school after the war, but was run for some years as a school for boys, and it was taught by ministers of the Christian Church, Rev. C. A. Apple and, perhaps others. Rev. W. B. Wellons in 1852 was conducting a female school at his home in Suffolk, Va. This also closed during the war, but was reopened for a few terms after the war, until the Suffolk Collegiate Institute was established. In the meantime, 1870, Rev. C. A. Apple was teaching a classical school at Level Green on the Holland highway where the Acorn Inn now stands. This was under the patronage of the Christian Church, Col. Wm. Eley no doubt having a good part in its establishment, as it was on his plantation. To this many boys who afterwards became prominent went, among them Coy. E. E. Holland and others. In 1870 Rev. Daniel A. Long was teaching a private school at Antioch Christian Church in Rockingham County, Va., and there was an academy in the Cypress Chapel community. By 1872 all of these efforts had been consolidated and the Suffolk Collegiate Institute was established and became the educational center of the Christians in Eastern Virginia, and many from North Carolina were sent there for their education. This opened in January, 1872, but the charter was not procured until March 4, 1872. In January, 1879, Prof. P. J. Kernodle became the principal of the Institute. After Dr. W. W. Staley began his work as pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church, a theological department was established at the Suffolk Collegiate Institute in 1886, and he was the teacher for several years. This went on under the management of Prof. Kernodle until about 1896, when it closed its doors as a church school. During later years there was a private school conducted in the building. When that ceased to be a school of the Christian Church, Elon College was going and the church's interest had been concentrated there.

This takes about all of the educational influence in Eastern Virginia that we have been able to locate, yet one other must be mentioned. In my research in the history of the Christian Church, it was a mystery why so many of the leading men of the Christian Church came from Southampton County, Va., viz.: Revs. Burwell Barrett, Mills Barrett, Stephen S. Barrett, W. B. Wellons, James W. Wellon, Murdock W. Butler, John T. Kitchen and others, yet when looked into it was found that there was old Millfield Academy in that county and it was at a place where its influence permeated that very section from whence these men came, and it has been concluded that it was through the influence of that old classical academy, which was attended by one President of the United States, had its influence also on the members of the Christian Church in that county. When Elon College was established all of the educational interest of the Christians in Eastern Virginia was transferred there, and as the public schools became more proficient the needs for the private schools disappeared. Rev. M. W. Butler was conducting a high school at Waverly, Va., about this time.

We will now take up the thread of educational interest among the Christians in North Carolina. We will mention a few of the early ones before taking up the main taproot of the educational system of the Christians in the South.

As early as 1826 Rev. Daniel W. Kerr established the Wake Forest Pleasant Grove Academy situated on the Oxford road about twelve miles north of Raleigh and was the principal. It may be that the present Wake Forest College is an outgrowth of the old academy. Twelve years later he

There is one fine thing about life—we are always thinking that tomorrow will be brighter and better. Were it not for this optimistic attitude, the days would not only be long but they would be dull and drab.

Many things apparently have worked against the Anniversary Campaign. The threat of war always is disturbing to our economic condition and makes us less willing to part with what we have. As a direct result of the war, the tobacco markets have closed. They open tomorrow, the tenth. The closing of tobacco markets at this period of the year puts a definite stop to anticipated money circulation. When the farmers receive their pay, they then are able to pay their obligations. When they do not receive their pay, it becomes utterly impossible for them to meet their obligations. A large part of the Elon students and of Elon supporters are affected directly by the farm and the sale of farm products. However, we are still moving ahead and are confidently expecting to reach our goal before 1940 has closed. In the meantime, won't you please send your subscription to the Golden Anniversary Club or payment on your pledge already made? We are greatly in need of funds. We want to curtail further our debt. We are happy to report the following memberships for the week. May we have the privilege of reporting yours in next week's paper, please?

EVOLUTION OF ELON COLLEGE.

 was principal of Junto Academy, formerly called Mt. Pleasant, which was incorporated in 1838. This school was only about three hundred yards from Mt. Zion Christian Church in Orange County, N. C., and in it were taught Latin, Greek, and English literature, in all, four or five different languages. He ran this school until about 1849 at that place, when he moved it to Pittsboro, N. C., and continued to teach until his death, May 15, 1850. In the meantime he had established THE CHRISTIAN SUN in 1844

The next man that we might mention is Rev. John R. Holt who taught a school at New Providence Church in 1842 and 1844, and then at his home until 1850. His school appeared to be at a place called Snow Camp in 1848 and when the town of Graham was laid out he moved his school to the town and he was one of the men who very much aided in the founding of Graham Institute. His school was located on the lot where the Graham Christian Church stood in later years. (As early as 1850 the North Carolina and Virginia Conference appointed E. F. Watson, John Trollinger, C. F. Faucette, Pleasant A. Holt and Alfred Apple trustees of Graham Institute.) When the Graham Institute was built, Rev. A. G. Anderson, a man of scholarly attainments, having graduated from Chapel Hill in 1834, was associated with him for many years. Legend has it that Rev. A. G. Anderson taught school on the site of old Trinity College before it was established there. The Institute was formally opened July 7, 1852, with Rev. John R. Holt as principal and Wm. H. Eley as assistant. Rev. John R. Holt retired from Graham Institute to Chatham County, N. C., where he taught the New Hope Academy for some years, and later he removed to Hank's Chapel near Pittsboro, N. C., where he remained until about 1866 when he moved with his family to the vicinity of Moffitt's Mills in Randolph County and became principal of Shiloh Academy, where he taught until his death, March 22, 1871.

In 1852 Alexander Wilson was conducting a young men's school at Burnt Shop, now Melville, and Dr. E. F. Watson had a girl's school at his home near Stony Creek, which closed at the beginning of the war of 1861-65, after serving the community for fifteen years.

Rev. Wm. S. Long had been preaching and teaching in Halifax County, Va., during the war of 1861-65, and in the latter year he moved to Graham and opened a school which prospered until 1869, and to him the Christian Church in the South is more indebted than to any other man for the establishment of Elon College.

We have tried to trace the sprouts that came up until Elon College was established. There were other ministers of the Christian Church who were conducting high or private schools at that time, among whom we mention Rev. W. G. Clements at Morrisville, N. C.; Rev. Jeremiah W.

Holt in Alamance County, N. C.; and others.

We now take up the main taproot of the founding of Elon College, in North Carolina. At what has been known as New Providence near Graham, N. C., there was an old log schoolhouse with a brick floor which served as a school house, literary society hall, and as a church for the ministers of the Christian Church. There is no record as to when it was built, but Daniel C. Turrentine was teaching there in 1792; he was followed by James Mullholland, and Abel, John and Benjamin Rainey also taught at that place; Joe Thomas in 1812, then came Jerry Whidbee, Jonathan Worth, who was later Governor of North Carolina; W. F. Bason, C. F. Faucette, John Mebane, Leonard Prather and John Steele Turrentine about 1824. Samuel Turrentine and Wm. Holt Turrentine also taught there. As said before, Rev. John R. Holt taught there in 1842. Then came John Swift and Edwin W. Beale, and they were followed by Archibald Ray.

The school was then reorganized and Rev. W. H. Dougherty became principal and Joseph King was professor of Greek, with Prof. Dougherty's two daughters, Belle and Mary as assistants. In 1859 it was incorporated as Graham College, and W. H. Dougherty became President. It was conducted in that way for some years and they gave it up, and then two men named Brem and Bray took charge, and conducted it until the war broke out and they gave it up and went to war. The college was in debt and was put up during September, 1863, and sold to satisfy the claim due B. F. Roney, and it was bought in by Henry J. B. Clark for $4,200.00, and he afterwards sold it to Mrs. Mary Harden who sold it to Dr. Wm. S. Long. The money after paying the debts of the College was invested in Confederate bonds and when the war was over they were worthless.

The North Carolina legislature of 1859 appointed Alfred Isley, John Faucette, P. R. Harden, Bennett Hayzell, and Willis Sellars in coporators of Graham College; and appointed W. H. Dougherty, Thomas J. Fowler, Peter R. Harden, Bennett Hayzell, John Faucette, Wm. H. Faucette, Alfred Moring, William B. Wellons, Thomas J. Kilby, Robert H. Holland, Edward C. Riddiek, Meredith H. Watkins, Jubilee Smith, Jas. Minnis and John Walker as Trustees of Graham College for fifty years, who were to be known as "The Trustees of Graham College."

HOME-COMING AT PLEASANT RIDGE.

The annual Homecoming Service will be held at Pleasant Ridge Church, Guilford County, N. C., on Sunday, October 15. A very interesting program is in the making. All former members and pastors are invited to be with us on this occasion. The few members who remain in the community are making a great effort to entertain all who come.

The order has been placed for new pews and they are promised before the above date.

G. H. VEAZEY,
Pastor.

"To desire the same things and reject the same things, constitutes true friendship."

EVANGELISM.

Not infrequently we see in the papers and magazines of the religious press an earnest plea for world-wide evangelism. These pleas seem so timely, so worthwhile and so very needful. Evangelism, however, does not come merely by wishing for it, or writing about it. There are those who yet believe that "mass" evangelism as represented and exemplified in the preaching and teaching of the late lamented Rev. Billy Sunday is the only kind of evangelism. And before his day by the beloved and internationally known evangelist, Rev. D. L. Moody. The former did his preaching, but as far as we know did not leave an organization, or successors, to carry on his work. On the other hand Rev. Dwight L. Moody was a real prophet and organized institutions, schools and colleges that would carry on educational evangelism, as well as mass evangelism. The result is that from the schools that Moody founded there go out every year scores of those who believe in, teach and practice mass evangelism, and then scores, if not hundreds, of those who teach and preach educational evangelism—getting hold of the youth and teaching them about the life of the Christ and His power to save to the uttermost. So from Moody's schools there go missionaries to the uttermost parts and throughout our own home land carrying the message of hope and love and life. What a prophet indeed this man Moody was, foreseeing a day when people would demand the where and the why and the whither. And how he did set himself to the task of preparing his followers, or rather the followers of his Lord, for our day. There are so many approaches to the Infinite and so many methods of revealing Him to the world that no one communion can say, "I know we are right, and I know equally well you are wrong." Some of the most intolerant people of the beliefs and views of others are those who profess to be themselves "the-more-holy-than-thou" sort. God's mercy and loving kindness are abundant and through the revelation of His Son our Lord gives opportunity to one and all who will believe and put into practice John 3:16: "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on Him shall not perish, but should have everlasting life."

Denominations are making an effort under God through faith in Him to come together in a more tolerant mood and attitude and may God hasten that good day when all who accept Him as Savior and Redeemer shall be one in Him.

There are many Sunday schools and churches just as able as the above named to take and send in a monthly offering for missions, and many others as our reports show from week to week are doing so and yet we have many churches that send no offering for missions. The pastors of these churches seem indifferent to world-wide evangelization and sharing with those less favored than ourselves the gospel of our Lord. There are yet pastors amongst us who seem to think that their one business is to "preach the gospel" to those who come to hear them and when they have done this their task is ended. Of course, if these pastors for the most part will consult the records they will find that their churches are about the same size in membership as they were ten or fifteen years ago. These pastors have never organized a Woman's Missionary Society, or have done little else, if anything, to make a missionary minded congregation. Surely, with war clouds lowering over the nations these pastors will get busy in trying to have a part in exalting the Prince of Peace that He shall have sway and dominion, so that a permanent peace shall come to a distraught world. We are grateful for every dollar sent in for missions and wish with all our heart that all our Sunday schools would have and take an active part in the missionary work.

Gratefully yours,
J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

THE EFFECT OF WAR ON THE REFUGEE PROBLEM.

By DR. HENRY SMITH LEIPER.

The incalculable results of the lightning strokes of the European war stagger the imagination. But in the immediate foreground there are some clear details which ought to be observed by all people of good-will. While it may bring ultimate changes for the better in their status, the refugees from Germany are in the present hour perhaps the most to be pitied of any war's victims. They are caught everywhere as by an inexorable fate. In the torrent of troubled waters they seem likely to be overwhelmed.

Their hope may well be placed in the response of the many fortunate people who are not involved in the war and yet who feel that they should do something to help when civilization is being subjected to the most terrible attack in history.

Not many questions concerning the exact status of the refugee can be answered authoritatively at the moment. How many are there now outside of Germany? Can they remain where they are for the present? How many will be interned simply because they are Germans living in lands now at war with their homeland? Will Hitler's invitation to many expelled professional persons to return and aid Germany win the war find a response? Will the number of refugees go on increasing now that so many frontiers are sealed by war? What about the refugees now in America on visitor's visas? Where can they go when their leave to visit our land expires?

To most of such questions the only honest answer is—we don't know yet. However there are, as has been intimated, some known facts which are in themselves ample basis for continued work on behalf of the refugees. We do know that eleven thousand, three hundred Christians arriving from Germany had by October, 1939, registered with the American Committee for Christian Refugees in New York. We do know that they are pleading for help, thronging the offices daily. Some require immediate necessities of life. Many have temporary means of existence and only need help in finding a new home and means of livelihood. We do know that in Holland, Switzerland, Belgium, England and France our cooperative agencies are still trying to serve the refugees. We do know that in Shanghai, China, as well as in other far-off places there are growing communities of refugees looking desperately for aid. Shall they look to America in vain?

Whether or not more refugees can come to our shores, these who are here constitute an opportunity for friendly service which ought strongly to appeal to Americans who would like to do something about the menace of Hitlerism. Here are people who have been his direct victims. Many of them need not have left home had they been willing to submit to his ideas and his orders. At the risk of life itself they have opposed him. What more fitting thing than that they should now find comfort and help at the hands of those whose opposition to Hitlerism has cost them nothing? And what better time than the Thanksgiving season for the practical expression of our gratitude for our own liberty and peace through a generous gesture of friendship toward them. It is hoped that a widespread response will be made to the appeal of the American Christian Committee whose ability to extend help depends necessarily upon the financial support of the American Christian public.

EASTERN VIRGINIA YOUNG PEOPLES MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The annual session of the Eastern Virginia Young People's Missionary Conference was held on last Friday evening at South Norfolk Christian Church. The main address was given by Dr. W. B. O'Neill, pastor of the Holland Christian Church, who spoke about his recent trip to Ireland, and the present world situation. Miss Dorothy Truitt of Greensboro, N. C., member of the executive committee of the National Pilgrim Fellowship and newly elected member of the Southern Convention Mission Board, made a brief talk. Miss Tora Rudd of Burlington, N. C., young people's superintendent of the Southern Convention Woman's Mission Board, was also present. We mention the above three, since their names did not appear on the program printed last week on this page.

Twenty-one churches were represented at this meeting by 190 young people. According to the report of the treasurer of the Eastern Virginia's Woman's Missionary Conference, Mrs. E. R. Bryant, the young people turned in $726.62 during the past year, which—we are sorry to say—is a decrease of nearly $100.00 from the preceding year.

Officers elected for the coming year are: Dorothy Williams, president, Franklin; Louise Baker, vice-president, Newport News; Christine Armistead, secretary, Portsmouth; Jane Harcastle, assistant secretary, Norfolk.

NORTH CAROLINA PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP TO MEET.

The officers of the North Carolina Pilgrim Fellowship, which was formed last year at Liberty Vance Church, are planning for a meeting of all our young people in the state of North Carolina to be held October 21-22 at Elon College. As last year, the meeting will begin on Saturday afternoon and close Sunday noon. Delegates will be entertained overnight in the homes of the members of the Elon Community Church. The program will appear on this page next week—but put the dates on your calendar and be planning to come,

LEISURE TIME ACTIVITIES.

The young people in every church ought to have some social times together, times of good fellowship and fun, times of working together for the purpose of entertaining others—such as in giving a play, times of working together for the purpose of helping others—such as some community project. The Board of Christian Education, Elon College, N. C., can loan you any of the following books and pamphlets to aid you in your search for things to do as a group during your leisure moments.

The Church at Play—Richardson. A book which takes up the whole recreational program of a church, and gives specific things to do with each group during their leisure time—from sponsoring a Boy Scout troop to games to play at socials.

The Life of the Party—Menaker and Folsom. An attractive booklet containing old and new games which will liven up your socials.

Photography for Fun—Strong. A splendid booklet for the amateur who has photography as his hobby.

Recreation and Personal Development—Harbin. A pamphlet written especially for church young people in an effort to give them the right perspective on leisure time activities and ways for using these hours to the best of one's ability.

Follow the Dramatic Instinct—Ferris. A book giving the various types of dramatic presentation possible in the church, the ages for which they are best suited, and the methods by which they can be given in your church.

Youth and Dramatics—Overton. The pamphlet gives the general principles covering dramatic productions, the times when they can be most effectively applied in the local church, lists of plays suitable for production in the churches, and specific techniques for producing them.

FROM THE "DOWN SOUTH NEWS."

Dr. F. P. Ensminger, genial superintendent of Tennessee, Alabama, Kentucky, and West Florida, is editor of Down South News, a new state paper, which is now combined with the Missionary Herald. This attractive little forty-eight-page paper sells for 25c per year. From the current issue is gleaned the following items of interest to readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN;

"Rev. and Mrs. E. H. Rainey of Evarts, Ky., had a full summer with four Student Summer Service workers in the new parsonage and an extensive program of Daily Vacation Church Schools enrolling 1,229 in week-day activities. Allowing for duplications, there were over 1,000 different youths and children reached. There were 265 adult visitors. Richard Peterson of Alabama and Ray Jones of Connecticut were at work nine weeks. Miss June McKnight of Evarts gave six weeks in voluntary help. Miss Frances O'Dell of Pilgrim Church, Chattanooga, Tenn., gave up weeks of vacation for the good cause. A wife and a high school student both arranged their daily work so as to play the piano in the vacation schools.

"The Evarts Church (Ky.) had a second visit from Rev. O. D. Poythress of South Norfolk, Va. As a result of his meeting, fifteen more members have united with the church, making a total of over seventy additions this year.

"The Kentucky Conference has its annual meeting at Evarts, October 20-22. On Friday night, October 20, Dr. Oscar Maurer, Moderator of our Churches in the United States, will give the address.

"Rev. Ruth F. Sergeant came from her church in Cleveland, Ohio, for a four-day visit at her former church in Stearns, Ky.

"The Tennessee Conference plans to have its annual meeting at First Church, Memphis, October 16-18. Dr. Oscar Maurer will be a speaker.

"Miss Dorothy French of Chattanooga, Tenn., was one of the leaders at Southern Union College, Wadley, Ala., last summer."

SYMPATHY.

I was sitting in my room after school. Everything was quiet. Suddenly, a car scraped the gravel just outside the window. Through my body went something resembling an electric shock. There awoke within me a realization of the fear that the people in distant lands must feel in this time of war: agony must result from each strange and unknown noise; wonder must result with each sure breath; misery must result from each look at an innocent baby; horror must result when eyes of young manhood contact; thankfulness must result from each new day. For just a few minutes my mind pictured those people who are so real and yet so far away. There is a necessity for faith and strength outside one's self. The peace we need is secured only from God.

THE TEMPTATION OF JESUS.

LESSON III—OCTOBER 15, 1939.

GOLDEN TEXT: For we have . . . one that hath been in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin.—Hebrews 4:15.

LESSON: Matthew 4.

Several things might be said by way of introduction to this story of the temptation of Jesus. First of all the report must have come from Jesus himself. No one else was present. It is quite likely that at some appropriate time he must have told his disciples about his experience and thus given to them, as the account in the gospels give to us, a little deeper insight into the Master's inner life.

In the second place the temptation was very real. Jesus faced an actual temptation; he had to choose. And he could have chosen otherwise. He was the Son of God, and he was the Son of man. His character was not given to him; it was achieved.

In the third place the fact that Jesus was tempted brings him that much closer to us, makes it possible for him to understand our situation when we are tempted, and enables him to help us in the hour of temptation. The scripture says that he was tempted in all points like as we are, and says therefore that he shall be able to help us when we are tempted, graciously inviting us to come to him that we might find help in time of trouble and temptation. Christ was not someone far removed from human life who knew nothing about our own temptations and trials. He can sympathize with us, because in the true meaning of the word, sympathy, he can "feel with us," or "suffer with us."

Eternal Vigilance, the Price of the Soul.

It may seem a strange thing that Christ's temptation came immediately following the great spiritual experiences at his baptism. On that occasion the heavens had been opened, the Holy Spirit descended upon him, and a voice from heaven declared that he was God's Son in whom God was well pleased. And then we have the words, "Then was Jesus led up of the spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil." This is in keeping with the facts of life. Every spiritual privilege has its spiritual perils. The moment of victory is often the most dangerous moment. There is always a danger of a let-down. There is danger of a false sense of security. There is a danger of a lack of vigilance. Eternal vigilance is the price of the soul. The devil never sleeps. Jesus himself said that we are to "watch and pray lest we enter into temptation." The hymn writer says, "My soul, be on thy guard." Let every man and woman be alert always against the subtle of temptation of the devil.

The First Temptation.

The devil always attacks us at our weakest points, or at the most strategic places. Jesus had been fasting for a long time. Naturally he was hungry. The devil therefore makes his first point of attack at this sector. It is rather significant that he begins by trying to raise a doubt, or a question, in Jesus' mind. "If thou be the Son of God" he says. We can hardly get the significance of these words. Just previously the voice from heaven had declared that Jesus was the Father's beloved Son. Yet here he was hungry and even facing starvation in the wilderness. It seems so incongruous that the devil mockingly says "if you really are the Son of God there is no need for you to go hungry; if you are God's son you have special power; why not use this power and make yourself some bread, even from these stones which lie round about?" This temptation may be interpreted in two ways. It may have been a temptation for Jesus to use his power for selfish purposes, or it may have been a temptation to make his appeal to the people on the basis of what he could give them. There were many hungry and many poverty stricken people in the land in Jesus' day. What a following he could have had if he had used his miraculous powers to provide food for the hungry and material things for the poor! Workers in mission fields, especially in India and China, know the danger in what is called being a "rice Christian." But Jesus made it very clear that his kingdom was not of this world. He did not come primarily to feed men's bodies with the physical bread but to give to their spirits the Bread of Life. In any event we see here his refusal, a refusal which became a principle of his ministry; namely, that he would not use his God-given powers for his own selfish purposes, or for getting a hearing from the people.

The Second Temptation.

The second temptation of Jesus was just as subtle. It was only natural that Jesus wanted a hearing for his message. It would probably be difficult to get a wide hearing if he adopted a policy of itinerant teacher or preacher, going up and down the land speaking to small groups or to individuals wherever he found them. The devil suggests therefore that he resort to the spectacular. He suggested that if he climbed to the pinnacle of the temple some day when the great crowd was at the feast and jumped from its dizzy heights to the valley below, it would be easy to convince not only the people, but the Pharisees and priests that he was the Son of God, and Messiah. He adroitly justified this temptation by actually quoting scripture to the effect that God had promised to take care of him. But the devil is a liar from the beginning, and he quoted not the truth but a half truth. Jesus instinctively saw through the sinister designs. He knew the truer and deeper meaning of the scripture and he very quickly and very emphatically reminded the devil that one was not to tempt Almighty God, that one was not to presume upon him, that one was not to take risks unless one was in harmony with the divine will. It is one thing to incur risks when in harmony with the known will of God; it is quite another thing to assume risks for one's own selfish purposes. It is the old principle so stoutly defended by so many people that "The end justifies the means."

The Third Temptation.

The devil is a rather persistent fellow. Defeated on two battle fronts he turns once again, with what in a way was his best offensive. With a magnificent gesture he shows Jesus in a minute's time the kingdoms of the world, and offers them unto him at a seemingly cheap price. "All of these things will I give thee" says he "if thou wilt fall down and worship me," pay me homage, do me reverence, acknowledge my sovereignty. Now, of course, the one thing that Jesus wanted above everything else was to claim the kingdoms of the world for his Heavenly Father. This was the passion of his heart and the program of his ministry. It was for this high end that he gave himself, and it was for this that he told his disciples to pray. Here it seemed as if it could be had almost for the asking. All that he had to do was to compromise for the time being his ideals, and divide his loyalty. But Jesus again instinctively saw through the ruse. It is the old temptation to choose the easy way, to take the short cut, to avoid the way of sacrifice. It was not the Father's way, and Jesus knew it. If he had chosen this way he could have saved himself—there would have been no

"A CUP OF TEA."

"Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward."—Matt. 10: 42.

A cup of tea proffered a dear mother, broken hearted over the loss of her idolized son, was indeed wordless sympathy, offered by one whose sympathies were but an effort to bind up the broken-hearted with the fibre of her own heart (not God's). But later through the persuasive presence of the Holy Spirit, this stricken one came to see that a wordless cup of tea is a token of kindness and love. As the white pennant from the mast-head of the vessel in the harbor indicates the master is aboard so small deeds of love indicate God's presence.

Prayer—Our Father, teach us to know the meanings of kindness, love, and to find Thee in everything and everyone. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"MAN THE LIFE BOATS."

"Be ye also ready for at such hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."—Matt. 24: 44.

"Man the life boats" was a call that was broadcast over the ship this afternoon. Every one, a thousand people or more, ran to the "top side" to see what was happening. It was the Pan American Clipper that had just passed us headed for Guam. It was returning dead ahead flying low. The officer of the deck fearing there was trouble had rightly made the call. The boats were manned and ready to give aid. But it was only a gesture of recognition and pleasure. It sailed around us low, crossed our bow and sailed away again for its destination.

The ship's organization requires that the life boat crews and every one on board be ready for any emergency, and they are. Frequent drills with a designated place for each one makes them so.

Fidelity to duty, constant vigilance for danger, persistent guard of our temptation are cardinal principles of the teachings of our Lord. But we are not so careful about these things as we are about our readiness for emergencies at sea.

Prayer—O Lord, make our souls strong, and our ears keen to catch not only the calls but the faintest whispers of the Master's commands. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"I'VE LEARNED A LESSON."

"Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, even as God also in Christ forgave you."—Eph. 4: 32.

"Let brotherly love continue. Be not forgetful to entertain strangers: for thereby some have entertained angels unawares."—Heb. 13: 12.

A lady said to me, "Chaplain, I've learned a lesson." "Well, what?" I said. "Well, there is a certain person," she said, "whom I have disliked, and toward whom I have felt rather unkindly. Today I needed a friend and this person turned up to be the only one who could do me the favor at this time. I am ashamed of myself and I hope the Lord will forgive me."

If every one who confesses to be a Christian would make himself a friend to others, there would soon be no ill will and every one would be worth something to every one else.

Prayer—Our Father, it is not much to give a kind thought and a gentle word. Forgive us our faults and help us to dedicate ourselves to the upward climb of others. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"THERE ARE OTHER PEOPLE."

"Let us go into the next town."—Mark 1: 38.

It is Tuesday, June 20, 1939, 7: 00 A. M. We are coming into the port of Guam. The history of Guam dates back to Magellan, 1521, thirty years after Columbus sailed into the West Indies. One hundred and fifty years later Spanish missionaries came and the islands were named Marianas after the Queen of Spain. The present population are a yellow race called Chamorro, a mixture of Spanish, Mexican and Philippino races.

They are an agricultural people. They raise corn, taro, pigs, chickens, cocoanut from which copra is made and exported, mustard, pumpkin, greens, cabbage, yams, beans, tomatoes, breadfruit, papaya, avocados, oranges, limes, grapefruit, and coffee.

This Island belongs to the United States and we are here just for a day to bring and to take away navy personnel.

The word we need is, "There are other people." As Wesley Boyd of the "Upper Room" says, "We often become wrapped up in ourselves and unconscious selfishness blinds us to the fact that there are others, who have a place in this world, who work like we do, and whose need may be greater."

Prayer—Say the Lord's Prayer.

FRIDAY.

"HOMES ENSHRINED."

"And the fire of the altar shall be burning in it."—Lev. 6: 9.

While driving through the island of Guam the other evening, we observed at each nepa house a lighted altar and shrine. About this altar were gathered the family, after supper, singing the songs of the church and saying prayers. We were told that these quaint people have a special season called "The Novena." Each family builds an altar either inside or outside the house and there they worship almighty God. These altars are but temporary, but nevertheless they who observe this feast have a permanent altar there where they worship al-

OUR PREACHER FOR THIS WEEK IS
REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.,
SUFFOLK, VIRGINIA.

HE ONLY IS OUR STRENGTH.

"The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid?"—Psalm 27: 1.

How we marvel at the strength seen in many people who have great burdens to bear! They seem to take their loads and, like some mighty giant, carry them right along. They are strong people. They may have failing physical strength, but nevertheless they carry heavy burdens. They do not seem to think their own burdens are much, but rather are seeking some way to help somebody else. There is something divine about that. Jesus hanging on the cross with more pain and sorrow than mere death, cried out in prayer for forgiveness for those who were putting him to death and had time to lift the burden of guilt and sin from another likewise suffering death. Death is not the greatest burden one may bear. The load of unrequited sin, the load of guilt, the load of everlasting regret is far greater than death.

Take thou thy burden thus
Into thy hands and lay it at His feet;
And, whether it be sorrow or defeat
Or pain or sin or care,
Just leave it calmly there.

Not one amongst us would accuse Paul of being a coward, or complainer, or an exaggerator of his own burdens, but for the comforting and strengthening of his church at Corinth he writes: "There was given me a thorn in the flesh." Some sickness, some affliction, some pain that was costing him much, or else Paul would never have mentioned it, Paul called it "The messenger of Satan, to buffet me," and continued, "for this thing I sought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me." Paul was not a complainer, but here was something either very painful, bothersome, or burdensome; he wished it taken out of his way, healed, or helped, or lifted. He took it to the Lord in prayer. Three times he went to God in prayer that it might depart from him.

And Paul says, "He said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee." And as he reflected across the years on his unanswered prayer, he adds: "For my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me . . . for when I am weak then am I strong."

And it will make the bearer calm and strong;
Thy burden is God's gift,
Yet, lest it press too heavily and long,
He says, Cast it on Me,
And it shall easy be.

"Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me . . . for my yoke is easy and my burden is light."

David says, "The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?" And he might have added, "of what shall I be afraid?" There is the secret of Jesus on the cross. There is the secret of the strength of men and women who bear heavy burdens like mighty giants: "The Lord is my strength." Are you bearing some heavy burden? Have the Lord for your strength.

But in this congregation there may be many young people who have never felt an ache or pain. They are not thinking of burdens to bear, but things to do, achievements to make, goals to reach, victories to win. And so are we all thinking of these things. Well, here, too, we see people who do things. Some of you young people may think for instance that Moses is a long ways off. And if I should illustrate what I am about to say by him, you would probably think he is too far away. But I am not so sure but the direction to Moses is farther in the future than in past history; in other words it may be a long time since he laid down his laws and writings, but it may be a still longer time before the builders of a new world will have one that will keep them. Which is to say that even Moses is quite up-to-date! He did things! He was one of the world's leaders, and is. He was a law-giver, a leader, and a lover of his fellowmen. He made achievements, he reached goals, he won victories. He was born of a slave mother. He was reared in a queen's palace. He renounced it all for the burdens of his enslaved brothers. Thirty centuries and more have passed and yet his name is better known today than the heads of many modern governments. What made him such a man? Let us ask him: "The Lord is my strength, and my mighty God. That means they keep themselves alive to God, and the Spirit of God alive to them. What a lesson for us.

Prayer—Our Father, we pray for the gift of the spirit to keep the altars aglow in our hearts every day. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"TIME'S BLACKEST NIGHT."
"They . . . took Him."—Mark 14: 46.

That was the blackest night in the history of the universe. It was the church of the Living God laying hands on the Son of God and doing away with Him. This dark night was epitomized by our Lord in the parable of the vineyard let to the husbandman (Matt. 21: 33-46), a parable of the rejection of the Son.

It seemed that evil had triumphed. But it only seemed so. Really it was the triumph of righteousness. The victim is victorious. We live because He died. Our parable says that that which has been rejected has become the head of the corner. Therefore the Kingdom of God is given to them who bring forth fruits.

Prayer—O Lord, our God, we believe that it is true that by the suffering of Thy Son we have pardon peace and power. Help us to be loyal to our salvation. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"TOO NEAR THE SURFACE."
"I will not deny Thee."—Mark 14: 31.

The most of us are like Peter, and Peter had much that was like the most of us; that is he was impulsive, emotional, boastful, self-confident and independent. All these attributes are on the surface or so close to the surface that action by them is often misguided and devastating. Under impulse, like him, when he swore he would never forsake Christ and also when he denied the Lord, we make vows of fidelity without the power of heart behind it, and we fall faithless when we do not intend to do so. This is the reason Solomon said "Keep thy heart with all diligence." This is the most important thing in life, because we need heart control of our emotions and impulses. This is the reason Jesus said "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven."

Prayer—O Lord, our Father, we thank Thee through Jesus for mercy and forgiveness. O Lord, forgive us our faithlessness and keep us pure and clean. Amen.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The Singing Class has been busy each week-end for a number of weeks. On the first Sunday we visited Brother Dollar's church at Carolina. The audience seemed very interested and apparently enjoyed the children's message. They have a very nice little church there and a congregation of interested people. We want to congratulate Mr. Dollar and his good wife for the fine work they are doing there.

The second Sunday we visited Liberty (Vance) Church in the morning where the children rendered their program. The good women had prepared a bountiful lunch for us and if the people enjoyed the children's message as much as they enjoyed their lunch, I feel sure we will be invited to come back again next year. In the afternoon we visited Fuller's Chapel and the children presented their message to a very appreciative audience. These good people insisted on our taking supper with them as we did several years ago when we were there, but we had already accepted an invitation to go to Henderson Church and had to decline. We had several children in our Singing Class who very vividly remembered the fine reception we received there several years ago when we gave a program there. The good ladies in our Henderson Church had made arrangements to entertain us for supper and it was done in a very fine way. The children enjoyed it immensely and spoke about the good things they had to eat. The children put on their program at 7:30 that night in our Henderson Church and had a fine audience.

Miss Erie Laine, my assistant, who has trained the class has often cautioned the children about eating too much before they sing, but I think she is now fully convinced that it doesn't interfere with their singing.

We had a fine day with these three churches and enjoyed every minute of it. May God continue to richly bless them.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

cross—but he could not have saved the world. Any conquest of men's hearts which he would make must come by the long, hard and slow way of self-sacrifice. This was the Father's will, and he had come into the world to do his Father's will. There was to be no moral compromise; there were no short cuts; there was no easy way. We must love God first, and we must worship only him.

For a Season.

Luke says that after the third temptation the devil departed from him, but significantly he says, for a reason. In this dramatic story we see the policy which Jesus accepted for himself as concerning his ministry. He settled once and for all the plans by which he should be governed. The devil was defeated at all points. But we may be sure that again and again during his ministry Jesus had to face these temptations, perhaps in disguised form, but with subtle power none the less. It is well for a man or a woman and for every young person to go in solitude and in the quiet of his own life to determine the ideals by which he shall live. It helps tremendously to have definite goals and definite policies, for again and again in life the battle must be fought in every-day experience.

Help in the Time of Temptation.

It is rather significant that Jesus met the temptations of the devil by quoting scripture. This does not mean that the mere quoting of scripture has any magic value. But it does mean that those who have hid the word of God in their hearts, as the Psalmist says, those whose inner lives have been fed upon the word, are the better equipped to meet the tempter. The word of God is "the sword of the spirit."

It is also significant that Matthew says "Angels came and ministered unto him." After all, he had not fought the battle alone. God will not suffer us to be tempted above that which we are able to bear, but will with the temptation also provide means for escape. Here is written out in a dramatic way the great truth that victory over today's temptation makes it easier for us to win tomorrow's battle. "Thus we go from strength to strength."

INSTITUTES ON EVANGELISM.

The Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life, under the direction of Dr. F. L. Fagley, will conduct four institutes on Evangelism in the Southern Convention during November. The first of these is to be at Suffolk on November 20, which is the date of the Eastern Virginia ministers meeting. The second will be held the next day in Raleigh with the Congregational-Christian Negro ministers in North Carolina and Virginia. The third will be in connection with the Eastern North Carolina Conference at Turner's Chapel on November 22, and the fourth at Elon College on November 23.

Dr. Boynton Merrill and Dr. Fagley will be the leaders of these institutes. It is hoped that all preachers will plan to be present at one or the other of these meetings. There is no charge and the lunch will be free. Similar institutes are being held all over the country this fall.

Marriages

ROBERTSON-NEAL.

Miss Mary Magdalene Neal of Belews Creek, N. C., and Mr. Paul Gail Robertson of Pine Hall, N. C., were united in marriage on September 20, 1939, in Belews Creek Congregational-Christian Church, with the bride's pastor officiating.

The altar was decorated with ferns and cut flowers. Preceding the ceremony a musical program was rendered by Miss Dorothy Lewis, cousin of the bride. Miss Louise Neal, sister of the bride, sang "Because." The bride and groom entered the church together.

Mrs. Robertson is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Neal, Belews Creek. She is a graduate of Walkertown High School, and holds a position in Winston-Salem. Mr. Robertson is a son of Mr. and Mrs. James M. Robertson of Pine Hall, and is connected in business in Madison.

After a trip to points of interest in western North Carolina, Mr. and Mrs. Robertson will be at home in Walnut Cove.

In Memoriam

MORRIS.

Barbara Ann Morris, daughter of Walter and Rosa Fletcher Morris, passed to the spirit land Saturday morning, September 23, 1939, at the age of six years, eleven months and two days. Barbara Ann was a lovely child, the youngest in the home and loved devotedly by all. Besides father and mother there are two brothers, Clarence and Louis, and two sisters, Mary and Louise.

Following an attack of croup diphtheria developed. Everything was done that loving hearts and a skilled physician could do, but Jesus took her to be with him.

The funeral and burial were at North Fork Cemetery, conducted by the writer. The sympathy of the entire community was shown by the large number in attendance.

An abundance of beautiful flowers were placed about the grave. These were expressive of her beautiful and innocent life. "In heaven their angels do always behold the face of the Father." C. E. NEWMAN.

EVOLUTION OF ELON COLLEGE.

On the 27th day of May, 1859, John Harden deeded to the above trustees of Graham College the land on which the building stood consisting of 5.7 acres for $142.50.

It appeared in 1863 that educational interests in the Christian Church, South, were at an end, but in 1865, Rev. Wm. S. Long, who had been teaching in Halifax County, Va., during the war, opened a high school in Graham, N. C. This school prospered and in 1869 he purchased the entire property of what had once constituted the Graham College. The buildings had been used as a tobacco factory. These buildings were renovated and repainted and the school took on more vitality.

In 1872 Rev. D. A. Long became associated with the principal and in 1875 purchased the property and secured its incorporation as Graham Normal College. In 1883 he was elected president of Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio, and Rev. Wm. S. Long succeeded to the presidency of Graham Normal College. The influence and prestige of this institution increased continually and many prominent men in Church and State went out from its walls.

The institution continued in this way until 1887 when the interests of the Christians in Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama were being brought closer together and the leaders believed that the time was ripe to launch a college for the Christians in the South, as it had been agitated from year to year in the various Conferences and in the General Southern Christian Convention. While the friends of this movement were few in number, they were zealous and persistent.

Finally in 1887, June 10, the Committee on Schools and Colleges of the General Southern Convention leased the Graham Normal College property and elected a faculty, consisting of Rev. Wm. S. Long, president; with Professors J. U. Newman, Captain S. A. Hollemon, and H. J. Stockard. The institution was called Graham College and began its work in September, 1887.

song, he is become my salvation." (Ex. 15:2.) And when John had a vision of that new heaven and new earth they were still singing the "song of Moses and the Lamb!" "And they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb saying, Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty, and just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints." Have you things to do, achievements to make, goals to reach, victories to win? Remember when his disciples marvelled at the strength and endurance of Jesus he replied, "I have meat to eat that ye know not of." Micah said of Jesus: "He shall stand and feed in the strength of the Lord . . . He shall be great unto the ends of the earth." (Micah 5:4.) Must you do things? Paul says, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." (Phil. 4:13.)

Yes, there are burdens to bear; things to do; but, perhaps, more important still, there are persons to be! "He shall feed in the strength of the Lord . . . He shall be great." What you are speaks louder than what you say, for your deeds indicate ultimately what you are, and what you do is but your thinking put into action, "for as he thinketh in his heart, so is he." (Prov. 23:7.) It is this communion with God that brings development of the best powers within one. It is the worship of God that strengthens the inner-man, and makes us able to bear, and do, and be. "He only is our strength."

"I am a believer in the fundamental doctrines of Christianity."

PROCLAMATION OF American Rediscovery Week

OCTOBER 8 to 14, 1939.

WHEREAS the United States of America was founded for the solemn purpose of assuring to all men their equal and unalienable rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness;

WHEREAS the Constitution of these United States was established to promote the general welfare and to secure the blessings of liberty to its inhabitants;

WHEREAS the American people fought and suffered long and bloody wars to secure the equal protection of the laws to all persons, so that now these rights form the very bone and sinew of their national life and history;

WHEREAS these rights are once again being challenged by powerful foes of equality and liberty, both at home and abroad:

through attempts to deny man's right to express his opinions freely and to share in the choice of his government, through the dissemination of false racial theories which deny the equality of man's birthright and set man against man according to the color of his skin or the name of his grandfather, through attempts to deny to the foreign born and aliens the equal protection of the laws which the Constitution guarantees them, and further through attempts to single out these groups for harsh and inequitable treatment as a stepping stone to the destruction of the traditional immunities of all persons; and

WHEREAS these attacks on the common rights of the people subvert all that has been most treasured in the history of America—indeed, do so in the very name of American patriotism,

BE IT THEREFORE PROCLAIMED that the anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus and the week in which it falls be established as a Week for the Rediscovery of America and of those rights which from the beginning of its history have made its name the symbol of liberty.

Let this Week be the occasion for celebrating and reaffirming the principles of American Democracy, in a solemn resolve to secure for all the inhabitants of these United States the necessary conditions for life itself: liberty and equal rights for all, regardless of color, creed, political conviction, or national origin.

YOUR CALL

By REV. ROBERT ARMSTER WHITTEN.

The Lord is calling men today
Just as He called St. Paul of old,
To follow where He leads the way,
And for our Christ be just as bold.

You may be waiting for a call
For some heroic task to do
And never hear God speak at all
About the job He has for you.

There are lots of little things to do;
Most every day some lowly work
Which, left undone, will injure you
Because the Master's call you shirk.

He wants your life, your love, your heart.
He calls for these in accent sweet.
He calls you now to do your part
That He may make your life complete.

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

Rev. O. D. Poythress of South Norfolk, Va., is assisting Rev. J. L. Neese in a revival meeting at the Christian Church in Reidsville, N. C.

Rev. W. C. Hook of Washington, D. C., was the preacher at Henderson Christian Church on last Sunday. Rev. O. A. Elmore was a recent preacher at the Henderson Church.

Members of the Piedmont Ministerial Association met in the Burlington Christian Church on Monday of last week and heard Miss Ruth Isabel Seabury in her regular morning address and in a discussion group for the ministers.

Miss Margaret Earp, daughter of Rev. B. J. Earp, recently fell and dislocated her hip. Her father says that she is in quite serious condition. She was teaching in Edneyville, N. C. High School. THE CHRISTIAN SUN wishes for her a speedy recovery.

Several young pastors are wanting copies of the Government and Principles of the Christian Church. This is out of print. If any individual is willing to sell an old copy, the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN will be glad to receive it and sell it to one who is anxious to get a copy. Books should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Elon College, N. C., along with a letter stating the price desired.

Moderator G. D. Hunt reports a fine Conference at Langdale, Ala. He regrets that the Superintendent of the Orphanage and the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN were not among those present. The next session is to be held with Rock Springs Church, Randolph County, Ala. Officers for the new year are: G. D. Hunt, Moderator; J. D. Dollar, Vice-Moderator; J. W. Payne, Treasurer; and P. F. Baird, Secretary.

Rev. J. E. McCauley, who has recently resigned as pastor of First Church, Richmond, Va., says that the Richmond Church had the best year since he has been its pastor. More members were added, the attendance was the largest, and the contributions from the mass of the members was the greatest. Conference Apportionments were all in hand the first of October, with some to spare. Pastor and people are to be congratulated.

The pastor, Rev. Duane Vore, reports a fine series of meetings in the Haw River Christian Church each evening last week. One person joined the church on confession of faith. On last Sunday three hundred were present for the Homecoming Service at this church. While many former members were present, the church regrets that no former pastors were there. A fine dinner and the Christian Orphanage Singing Class added much to the day's program.

was largely attended and the program was excellent. Mrs. J. Monroe Harris, president of the Southern Convention Woman's Mission Board, and other ladies from Eastern Virginia were appreciated visitors. Mrs. J. H. Lightbourne, president, was absent on account of the death of an aunt who had lived in her home for several years. THE CHRISTIAN SUN joins with the Missionary Conference in extending sympathy to Mrs. Lightbourne.

Conference committees are now busy getting ready for the coming Conference sessions. Churches are actively engaged in completing their year's work. It is hoped that reports will indicate real progress all along the line.

Coming Conferences:

November 1-3—Easter Virginia—South Norfolk, Va.

November 8-9—Wester North Carolina—Brown's Chapel, Hemp, N. C.

November 14-16—North Carolina & Virginia—Bethlehem Church, Altamahaw, N. C.

November 21-22—Eastern North Carolina—Turner's Chapel, Sanford, N. C.

RECEIVED FOR SUPERANNUATION.

The last session of the Southern Convention voted to request the churches to take a special offering at each communion service for Superannuation. This seems most appropriate and several churches have adopted the plan. Since our last report we have received for Superannuation the following for which we are indeed grateful, since these funds serve such a very appropriate and unselfish cause:

First, Norfolk, Va.	$ 3.96
Burton's Grove, Wakefield, Va. .	2.00

AMERICAN BOARD MEETING.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions will meet in St. Louis, Mo., October 24-26 for its 130th annual session. Representatives on this board from the Southern Convention are: Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Dr. H. S. Hardecastle, Rev. F. C. Lester, Dr. J. H. Lightbourne, Mrs. C. F. Rush, Mrs. W. R. Sellars, Dr. L. E. Smith, and Col. J. E. West. The American Board meets this year in connection with the Midwest Regional Convention. Leaders for this session are among the best to be found in America and several outstanding people from the mission fields.

"Who gives a trifle meanly is meaner than the trifle."

NORTH CAROLINA WOMAN'S CONFERENCE.

Most of the ministers in North Carolina considered it part of their duty and privilege to be among the large crowd of delegates to the recent session of the North Carolina Conference of Woman's Missionary Societies. The program was well planned and executed. Mrs. C. H. Rowland presided with her usual dignity. Business was transacted rapidly. The program was completed before the day was done, and the extra time was well used by Miss Seabury at the request of the delegates. Reports showed that interested women and young people are busy in trying to establish a friendly relationship with peoples around the world and are trying to share their Christian experience with those who know not the Christ. Income from the women's societies was slightly less than last year, but young people had made an increase in their contributions. The goal for the coming year stands as before even though the Conference has not yet attained it. The difference between the contributions and the goal, says Miss Seabury, means the ability of the denominations to send new missionaries to the field.

TRAINING SCHOOLS FOR LEADERS.

The Board of Christian Education is anxious to cooperate with the churches in training leaders. The Board will furnish teachers for any church or group of churches that will get together a group of people who want to do some study in the field of leadership education.

The venture at Burlington, N. C., last week was considered to be successful even though the attendance was far too small. The faculty was as good as can be secured. Several of the churches in that area supported the school beautifully, but nearly half of the churches in the area did not send representatives. Those who attended were delighted with the work accomplished, and are gone back to their churches with renewed zeal to do educational work in the field of religion.

Those interested in setting up training schools should write to the Promotional Secretary at Elon College, N. C., who has this work in charge. As the Chinese Christians said about their Passion Play last year as bombs fell from the air: "There never has been a time when the people need the message more than now." Trained church leaders are badly needed for our day. The only way to get them is to train them.

THE MEASURE OF A MINISTER.

The success or failure of a minister is the kind of church he develops. He may be an eloquent preacher, but if the preaching does not make a church the preacher has failed. A jolly good fellow may make many friends and receive compliments on being a good mixer, but if that friendship does not result in a strong, friendly church the compliments are misplaced. The pastor may be a good executive and succeed in erecting a fine building, but unless there is a well-built church to worship and work in the building, the efforts of the business executive have gone for naught.

Those who succeed in the ministry of the church are those who succeed in building around Jesus Christ a group of people who seek to do the will of God daily. Loyalties tied to the minister are soon broken and are not worthy of the Gospel, but loyalties to Jesus build the Church, which is the body of Christ. The business of the minister is to train a group of Christian people in service. He must find ways to secure growth in grace. Far too many "babes in Christ" are thrown out on the world to live or die as best they can. They need nurture, and training. It is the business of the minister to see that they have placed about them those things that will cause growth in Christian personality. And this growth certainly must bring together a group of people who are willing to cooperate with others in bringing to earth the kingdom of God.

If a church is increasing in membership, financial contributions, service to the community, interest in the denomination and the ecumenical church, and is developing trained leadership, then the minister may rightly feel that he is succeeding. If the contrary is true, it is time for the minister to consider becoming a new man, or seek a new field. The growth of the church is the measure of the minister. That growth means much more than the number of names added to the roll.

THANKSGIVING AND CHRISTMAS PROGRAMS.

It is time that the Thanksgiving and Christmas programs for the churches were getting under way. This year the churches will need to decide when they will observe Thanksgiving since some of the states will not follow the President in changing the date to a week earlier than usual. It will be tragic for the fine day of Thanksgiving to be lost in a political skirmish. But whenever you may decide to hold the service, be sure that adequate preparation is made so the service will really lead people to express their gratitude to the Giver of all good gifts.

Christmas is one of the two big Church festivals. For it much preparation should be made. The business world has almost covered it over with gadgets, cards, and trade. But the Church must maintain its hold on the celebration of the birth of its Lord. We cannot give the day over to the business and pleasure. Beginning now with real work the churches can plan programs so the people in the community can get the message of the coming of Christ to earth. Surely this year every church and community should hear the music and message of the Christmas season. Think of some new, fascinating, and emphatic method of presenting the old story of the Birthday of our Christ. Begin early to work on your plans, and then follow through until Christmas lives in the hearts of the people.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The mail this week brought a number of urgent appeals to approve the present Neutrality Law of the United States. "Write letters to your Congressmen" was the advice of these appeals, "and tell them to oppose a repeal of the present law." Evidently such appeals went out to many other ministers. One may seriously ask: "Why deluge the ministers with appeals to support any political propaganda?"

This neutrality question is not easily decided. It cannot be dismissed with a simple "yes" or "no." It is too intricate and complex for the average layman or minister of the gospel. Of course everyone in this country, at least, wishes for the United States to keep out of this European War. At first thought the easiest way to stay out of the war is to remain neutral. Maybe so, but who knows? Many people think of the profit in the present law, for neutrality may be more profitable to certain groups than the suggested substitute.

For example thousands of tons of scrap iron have been shipped from Norfolk during the past five years. Much of this has gone to Japan and other nations now at war. It has been quite a profitable business. And still it goes on. Is that neutrality? In the name of neutrality it is possible to give much assistance to all the combatants engaged in war; and it is possible to help one to the detriment of the other.

The present wars should open the eyes of all Americans to something more important than neutrality or the repeal of neutrality laws. For a number of years insidious propaganda has been broadcast in our fair land, seeking to uproot the very foundations of our freedom and set up a new social order. The ministers have been used in this propaganda in many ways, if they were inclined to be responsive. Every attack upon Capitalism reveals the motive of this leadership. Some of the slogans are: "Equal opportunity for all," "better distribution of wealth," "social equality," "taxing the rich," "relieving the poor," etc. There are very innocent sounding slogans. Therein lies the danger.

When Nazism through Hitler came to power in Germany its slogans were innocent sounding and quite impressive to the masses. Capitalism was held up as the nightmare of the common people. "The State should control wealth—and the people should have freedom from idleness and poverty." These plausible statements caught the imagination of war-burdened masses. But did Nazism end war? Does Communism and Socialism mean peace? The present world situation is an answer to the question. These political movements have come to pass where they take over smaller governments over-night, without going to the trouble to declare war.

America has been too liberal with un-American propaganda in the past. In a land of free speech it is permissible to speak as one thinks. But there is no power to enforce the radical views of the public forum upon the suffering people who listen. The hearer has the right to reject the message, and that right should be more rigidly exercised. Capitalism has its weakness and its dangers. And this is true of all the other economic and social movements of the present time. There is no panacea, outside the teachings and Spirit of Jesus Christ, for our present social ills.

This is the time to return to the Bible, to Christian Churches, to Jesus Christ. Closed Bibles and empty churches may spell disaster for any race and any nation. There should be no neutrality for Christian people when might seeks to destroy right. Find the right and support that is a safe and sane course.

I. W. JOHNSON.

THE TASK OF EDUCATION.

The human mind is inquisitive. It not only wants to know what has been done but why and how it happened. The system of education is the answer to this inquisitiveness. Those who have been taught are brought together that they may teach the untaught. A trained mind and a directed personality are essential to individual freedom and collective advancement. It is true that where there is no vision the people perish, but it is equally true that where there is no information there can be no intelligent personal freedom. The bonds of ignorance are the most treacherous and dogged. It is more difficult to free a starved mind than it is to set at liberty one who may be bound by chains and fetters. The school, the church, and democracy are interdependent. Autocratic procedure on the part of either becomes a menace to the others. So long as all are free to act, free to serve with due regard to each, the lines of opportunity are distinct, and the fruits of each are of benefit to all. When a school becomes destructively dogmatic, the freedom of church and state is endangered. When a government becomes excessively autocratic, the principles of democracy in religion and government are definitely on trial. Those who teach in either sphere are charged with untold responsibilities. The individual is the product of what he has been taught and the extended shadow of his preceptor.

In these chaotic days, the task of education could hardly be more hazardous. Upon the educational procedure of our time hinges the future of our government and of our religion. In matters of government, the dignity of the individual must be emphasized. He must be made conscious of his worth to his country and of his own dependence upon his fellow citizens, that if his lot in life is to be improved, the station of his neighbor must likewise be advanced. We do not rise at the expense of others but on the minds and hearts of others. When people are free to act politically, they automatically enjoy freedom in religion.

In matters of religion, the divinity of the individual must be recognized. This does not mean that man is God, but that he is the son of God in the sense that we are all children of the Most High. It is the task of those who teach in the field of religion to direct those who are taught in their individual urge to find for themselves the way of life. The Word, which is God, is the end of all our searching. We need to be taught in our spiritual quests, but man must have absolute freedom in his soul's quests for things that matter. It is undoubtedly the task of all education to enrich the mind and to develop personality. These ends are reached through careful instructions, the purpose of which is to help the individual discover the real self and arouse his potential powers to achieve the highest good of which he is capable.

PLEASANT RIDGE (RANDOLPH).

The final quarterly conference of Pleasant Ridge Christian Church was held Saturday evening, September 23, 1939, with the pastor, Rev. J. F. Apple, presiding.

This being the last business meeting of the Conference Year, and consequently the most important, we were encouraged by the increased number of members present and the spirit manifested.

Before the business session our pastor delivered, as he always does, a very inspiring message, thus helping us to realize that we should ask divine guidance in transacting the business of the church. In nearing the end of another year, we are happy to say that we feel that it has been a most successful year for Pleasant Ridge, both spiritually and financially. The treasurer's report showed the pastor's salary paid in full and the conference assessment practically all in the treasury.

It is with regret that we must report the loss of three, and probably more, of our substantial and enthusiastic members—all of whom held important offices in our Sunday school. These are going to unite with the Christian Church being organized at Asheboro. In the business session an expression of thanks was tendered these members—Sybrant Pell, superintendent; Mrs. Sybrant Pell, pianist; and Hubert Beane, teacher—for their loyalty to this church. In their going we bid them Godspeed and pray that they may be of as much service in their new church as they have been in Pleasant Ridge.

This being the time for the election of officers for the ensuing year, we're glad to state that in addition to the standing offices held by different members of the church, there were a number of new committees and officers chosen, thus giving more people work to do in the church. This, of course, was due to the forethought of our pastor. Among the new committees appointed was one which we feel sure will be of much value to the church—THE CHRISTIAN SUN committee. The duty of this committee is to solicit subscriptions (new or renewal) to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and we feel confident that we will reach our quota.

Another important business item at this time was the calling of a pastor for the coming year. We are indeed happy to say that our pastor, Rev. J. F. Apple, who has been with us six years, was unanimously re-elected. In thinking back over these years that he has been with us, we are reminded of the Scripture which we read in the 10th chapter of John, where it speaks of Christ the good Shepherd. Truly, Mr. Apple has proven himself by his works and we feel that these years of continued service and leadership have won for him the love and confidence of his people as nothing else could possibly have done. We are indeed thankful to have him with us again.

On the following morning at eleven o'clock Bro. Apple filled his regular appointment. His subject was "The Principles and Government of the Christian Church." I wish that I were able to give a summary of this helpful and inspiring sermon, but find that I cannot do it justice. Suffice it to say that those who were fortunate enough to have heard it understand more fully the principles upon which the Christian Church was founded and the ideals for which it stands.

MRS. O. C. BROWNE.

SERVING THROUGH THE COMMUNITY FUND.

Today, when inhumanity and hatred infest so many lands, it more than ever is incumbent upon every American, and especially every good Christian, to remember that he is, in reality, his brother's keeper.

It is peculiarly appropriate that while in other parts of the world the mobilization of vast numbers is taking place for the purposes of slaughter and destruction, in our own country is occurring a mobilization of a totally different kind. At this season in more than 500 of the larger cities of our country men and women are mobilizing for their annual campaign for funds to wage war on the three great foes of society: crime, poverty, and disease, and to establish and strengthen the forces of health, security and morality.

In America these campaigns are for the purpose of feeding and clothing the destitute, giving care and protection to neglected and helpless children, carrying relief and encouragement to families broken by trouble and sickness, providing boys and girls with healthful recreation amid safe and moral environments, and finding work for the unemployed and the handicapped. These campaigns are conducted by one central organization, usually called the Community Fund or Chest, and enrolled in the ranks of those participating in them are thousands of social-minded, humane men and women, who for weeks give their labors voluntarily to the help of their less fortunate neighbors and fellow-citizens.

The slogan for many of these campaigns is, "Good Americans are Good Neighbors." This is a true statement; neighborliness was an outstanding characteristic of our pioneer days and it has not been lost in our complex and crowded present. Our habit of volunteer cooperation for mutual help is the American way of recognizing our obligations to each other—"by the people, for the people."

Federal help through social security laws has done much in recent years, but it is necessarily limited, especially in character, and must be supplemented by private assistants. Every community must bridge the gap between public help, which provides only the bare necessities of life, and private aid, which furnishes relief for which the government is unfitted—nursing and medical care in the homes and care for unmarried mothers, recreational opportunities that prevent delinquency, and scores of other personal and imperative services necessary for community health and welfare.

Public relief usually comes after sickness and idleness have created need; but Community Fund agencies not only relieve need but work to prevent sickness, idleness, and crime by removing their causes. Just as the medical profession uses preventive and restrictive measures to eradicate and stop the spread of physical diseases, so the social welfare agencies fight the growth of moral and mental, as well as bodily, ailments through the application of antidotes of character building activities, participation by youth in healthy recreations, educational classes, and rehabilitation of the older and handicapped among the idle.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University, has declared, "The service of human beings to their fellows is the highest and finest mark of a civilized people." Excellent opportunity to participate in such service is given in the active support of the Community Fund organizations.

A LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

The following covenant comes from the sick-bed of one of our ministers. His daughter writes that he has been very ill, but is slowly improving. His letter says that he was converted at the age of twelve and for quite a while served the Lord with zeal, but later entered the business world. He thinks the hand of affliction has been laid on him because he has not been faithful:

"Therefore, I covenant that if God will return me back home, I will offer one day of prayer for the salvation of souls. I will also use every effort and opportunity that he gives or shows me to personally lead men to Christ, Savior of Men. I desire to do everything possible that his name might be praised and men saved. If my life is spared, you will hear from me again. May the Lord help you and all Christian people to do their best.

"Your brother in the Lord's service,
"ELISHA BRADSHAW,"

The Evolution of Elon College

By W. E. MACCLENNY.

[Address given on Founder's Day at Elon College, September 14, 1939.]

(Concluded from last week.)

The General Southern Convention met in extraordinary session at New Providence, Graham, N. C., September 11, 12, 13 and 14, 1888, and endorsed the action of the Committee on Schools and Colleges.

Rev. W. W. Staley was president and called the meeting to order. The following were present from the North Carolina and Virginia Conference: Ministers—W. G. Clements, Wm. S. Long, J. W. Holt, M. L. Hurley and J. W. Wellons. Laymen—J. C. Holt, P. R. Harden, J. W. Harden, C. S. Hollemon, F. O. Moring and J. A. Turrentine. Eastern Virginia Conference: Ministers—W. W. Staley, J. P. Barrett. Laymen—David MacClenny. Rev. C. J. Jones and Rev. J. J. Summerbell from the American Christian Convention were visitors and were invited to seats as deliberative members. The minutes of this Convention show that it was not unanimous in sentiment for the college.

Every army has been built around one leader, every business institution that we have known in the business world has been built around one personality, even today every football team is built around a leader if it is successful. This Convention had as its key man, or leader, Rev. Wm. S. Long, who offered the report on schools and colleges. (See minutes.)

This was a well-planned session of the body, and although it was an extraordinary session, yet its influence has been felt wherever the Christian Church, South, is known.

Let us look at the location. It was at the seat of the Graham Institute and Graham College, of ante-bellum days, and of Dr. Wm. S. Long's high school just after the war and the Graham Normal College. It was some distance from Suffolk and the Suffolk Collegiate Institute, the next best school patronized by the Christians at that time.

But let us look at the men who composed the body for they were the real founders of the College. In the chair sat Rev. W. W. Staley, a former student under Dr. Wm. S. Long, who had been his benefactor in youth. He was one of the most diplomatic men that the Christian Church has produced, and he had the art of pouring oil on troubled waters at any place or time. He was also one of the best trained men in the Convention.

Rev. W. G. Clements, as a young man, followed General R. E. Lee, and when he had lost an arm in the service of his country near where the great gun known as "Long Tom" was captured, and the war was over, he returned to his native hearth and volunteered in the army of the Lord and was faithful, organizing many churches and teaching school to make a living, and later was editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and a trustee of the College to the day of his death.

Rev. Jeremiah W. Holt was prominent in his Conference and in the General Convention, was a preacher and writer of ability, and was at times a teacher.

M. L. Hurley, a student of Dr. Wm. S. Long's school, and one of the most fluent speakers the Convention has yet produced. A planner with much executive ability.

J. W. Wellons, brother of Dr. Wm. B. Wellons, the great southern leader, a man with vision and discerning in judgment and with a touch of his brother's executive ability.

Dr. J. Pressley Barrett, a man of education and of a spiritual type, a great writer and editor of the church paper, a man of broad vision, a planner and an executive. A preacher having power over people with his voice as well as his pen.

To these were added as visitors from the American Christian Convention, Revs. C. J. Jones and J. J. Summerbell, who were invited to seats as deliberative members of the Convention. Also Dr. W. T. Herndon, a descendant of Rev. James O'Kelly, was present, and invited to a seat as a deliberative member.

Rev. C. J. Jones was one, if not the best minister, from the North who ever visited the South. A man of liberal education, broad outlook, and with a magnetism that drew men to him and held them. A Biblical scholar, a pulpit orator, and a fine organizer. Our Norfolk work is due in great part to him.

Rev. J. J. Summerbell, a great Bible student and thinker, and pulpit orator.

Dr. Wm. T. Herndon, a physician and a minister as well as being a man of affairs, and he was later to become the financial agent of the college in some of its darkest days. He was a man of ability.

Laymen J. C. Holt and P. R. Harden, both men from the most substantial stock of old Orange and the new Alamance. Consecrated men who loved the principles of the Christian Church and wanted to see a College for the denomination.

C. S. Hollemon, one of the most consecrated laymen, met by me while a student here, and who was deeply interested in the welfare of his beloved Church.

F. O. Moring, a faithful Confederate soldier in youth as well as a Christian, a descendant of Rev. James O'Kelly, the great leader. He was a business man of vision and a leader in the civic, business and religious life of Raleigh, and he represented his Conference often in the General Convention, South.

J. A. Turrentine, a native of this section, a Confederate soldier and active in the religious life of the Christian Church from his youth up.

David MacClenny, from Eastern Virginia Conference, a man whose soul was in his Church and its welfare.

It was on the shoulders of these men that the task of establishing a college fell on the 11, 12, 13, and 14 days of September, 1888. The first thing they did was to hear from the places that were bidding for the location of the proposed College. The following offers were made: Greensboro, ten acres of land conditionally and $400.00; Gibsonville, forty acres of land and $4,100.00; Mill Point, $4,300.00, including forty or fifty acres of land; Burlington, $4,642.50; Graham, $1,500.00 in cash.

On the morning of the fourth day of the Convention, or September 14, 1888, the day which we are now celebrating, they met and elected a board of trustees for the proposed College: (1) For two years—E. A. Moffitt, Asheboro, N. C.; J. M. Smith, Milton, N. C.; J. H. Harden, Big Falls, N. C.; F. O. Moring, Raleigh, N. C.; S. P. Read, Palmer Springs, Va. (2) For four years—E. T. Pearce, News Ferry, Va.; Willis J. Lee, Norfolk, Va.; P. J. Kernodle, Suffolk, Va.; Jesse F. West, Waverly, Va.; Edward E. Holland, Suffolk, Va. (3) For six years—Rev. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Va.; Rev. J. W. Wellons, Franklinton, N. C.; Rev. W. S. Long, Graham, N. C.; Dr. G. S. Watson, Union Ridge, N. C.; M. L. Hurley, Franklin, Va.

A provisional board for the College was then appointed to get the College to going as follows: W. S. Long, president; J. P. Barrett, secretary; F. O. Moring, treasurer; J. H. Harden and G. S. Watson. Again the offers were made for the location of the College at various locations.

Mr. J. A. Long spoke for Graham, offering $2,760.00 unconditionally (meaning anywhere in Graham) and $250.00 conditional on the college remaining where it was and further that Rev. P. R. Harden offered a donation of four acres of land beside the present location.

Mr. J. A. Turrentine spoke for Burlington, offering $5,260.00.

It was then resolved the question of the location of the College be referred to the Provisional Board, with instructions to visit, as a body, each place seeking the College, with full power to choose or select, and that all necessary expenses of the Board in discharging said duty be allowed. Rev. J. P. Barrett was elected agent of the College.

Rev. J. P. Barrett could not accept the place as financial agent of the College owing to the press of other duties, and Dr. W. S. Long was appointed in his place.

The Provisional Board visited all the places making offers for the location of the proposed College, and on December 20, 1888, under a tree still standing, decided to locate it at Mill Point the present Elon College, the twenty-five-acre campus being given by Hon. W. H. Trollinger, Haw River, N. C., and twenty-three other acres and $4,000.00 in cash being given by the citizens of the rural community then surrounding the site.

Dr. Wm. S. Long was chosen President as well as Financial Agent and at once set to work at his task. The first cash donation to the College was by Mr. J. P. Bland, Pittsboro, N. C., while Dr. Wm. S. Long, himself, had the distinction of making the first subscription. The first public appeal for funds for the institution was made at Berea Christian Church, Nansmond County, Va., and resulted in the raising of $636.05, of which Deacon Willis J. Lee, who was a trustee from the beginning to the day of his death, and who was always generous towards the College, gave $250.00.

The General Assembly of North Carolina chartered the College March 11, 1889. May 7 of that year the first shovel full of dirt was removed for the foundation, and thirteen days later the first brick was laid with appropriate ceremonies. The President's daughter, Lizzie, laid the first brick. The College opened its doors for students on September 2, 1890.

During the time from September 14, 1888, to September 2, 1890, were hard years on the President of the College. I have heard him say in an address on the founding of the College that three times he carried the boards to cover the unfinished walls, when the money had given out, and he would then have to start a fresh campaign for funds.

We wish to stop a moment and look at the men chosen by the Convention of 1888 for the first trustees of the College and when it is looked at carefully it will be seen that those men had good judgment.

We have already mentioned Dr. W. S. Long, J. W. Wellons, W. W. Staley, M. L. Hurley and F. O. Moring. Then comes Dr. G. S. Watson, a true friend of the college for life. Mr. E. T. Pierce of News Ferry, a staunch friend of the College and a man of affairs. Captain Willis J. Lee, an ex-Confederate soldier, and a man of affairs, and whose heart was in the principles of the Christian Church. A lover of humanity. He bore the name of Moses in his community, and only recently have I learned whence the nickname came. In the hard winters of 1892-93 and 94 and 95, he fed all of his hands both on water and on land from his store, and even when the boats could not run, he sent a wagon train to Portsmouth to get provisions for his large retinue, and owing to the fact that they felt that he had saved them from starvation, they called him "Moses." Dr. P. J. Kernodle, the principal of the Suffolk Collegiate Institute for years, later a professor in the college, and still later publisher of THE CHRISTIAN SUN to the day of his death. Jesse F. West, then a rising young lawyer, soon to become a judge of the county court, later a judge of the Circuit Court, and finally appointed to the Supreme Court of Appeals in Virginia. E. E. Holland, prominent lawyer and bank president, served in United States Congress for ten years after having served in the State Senate for several terms and today he is candidate for reelection to that body without opposition. E. A. Moffitt, a prominent member of the Christian Church, as were J. H. Harden and S. P. Read, a man of affairs and a member of the Virginia Legislature for some time.

There are two other men whom I cannot refrain from mentioning as part of the founders. Mr. Trollinger who made the brick for the administration building and the east dormitory, and Mr. John A. Mills once a prominent lumberman and an officer in the General Convention. He furnished the lumber for the building, so I have been told, and it was good lumber. It reminds one of the builders of the ancient colonial churches in Virginia, that were of such good workmanship. It was said that they were afraid that they would be punished in this world if they put in poor materials or poor work, and then when the time came for them to sing the death song, that they would be held up by St. Peter in the world to come.

These were the founders of Elon College, and without them there perhaps would have been no Elon College, for many years, but they started to work with a vim, and Dr. Long, having many contacts with the prominent men of the Church of that day visited the churches and raised money enough to get it under way. It was a hard struggle, and many were the discouragements met, but they kept on with the work until the doors of the College were opened for students, though it was a rough way at first, but the work was started and what we have today is due to their efforts and sacrifices.

We have assembled here today to do homage to the men who fifty-one years ago planned and laid the foundations for the Elon College that we have today, and may their work not be forgotten, but may each generation rise up and call them blessed for verily their works do follow them, since they served their day and generation well, and most of them have been gathered to their fathers.

OFFERINGS FOR THE COLLEGE.

A number of our Sunday schools and churches continue to take advantage of these pre-conference days that they may meet their conference apportionments in full. Some of our churches have wrought well so far as the college is concerned. The entire amounts that they were apportioned for the college have been raised and sent in. Others have done well, and still others have not done quite so well. There is yet plenty of time to do our full share in the support of our church and her institutions. Every individual and every church should earnestly strive to raise the entire amount asked for.

The following Sunday schools and churches have sent in contributions during the week:

THE WOMEN'S CONFERENCE.

From all reports of those who attended the outstanding event of our church life in North Carolina the past week was that of the State Women's Conference, meeting in Twenty-Seventh Annual Session. The Secretary of the Conference, Mrs. H. D. Lambeth, makes the report in detail elsewhere in this issue. From these various reports one can but be amazed that while many pastors are interested and see to it that their churches have Missionary Societies there are yet pastors, not a few, who have never organized a Missionary Society as far as records show and seem indifferent to this great spiritual task that the women are undertaking and the real work that the churches are doing. This seems the more amazing since these good women are working at the very heart and center of that which the church is trying to do.

Some twenty-five, or thirty, pastors in the North Carolina Conferences showed their interest by attending the State Conference last week, but there were others, not a few, who were absent and their names do not appear as being connected with any work of the Women's Conference in their churches. Some day, no doubt, they will come to realize the great work the good women are doing and the world vision that they have, and the world task that they are undertaking in the name and for the sake of their Lord. Here is hoping that day is not far distant and that very soon every church of the State and of the Convention will have its Missionary Society. We are fully aware that the kingdom of heaven is like the leaven which has small beginning, but results in the manifestation of great power. Some of us will remember when there was not even one Missionary Society in all our Convention, but that day is long since past and the glorious work goes on and will go on, since through the sharing of the gospel with others the kingdom of this earth must and will become the kingdom of our Lord and His Christ.

THE WOMEN'S MISSIONARY MEETING.

The Ingram Christian Church, near Paces, Va., a member of the North Carolina Women's Conference, was packed to capacity with some two hundred and seventy-five delegates and interested visitors when the Twenty-Seventh Annual Session of the North Carolina Conference of Women's Societies met at 10 A. M., Tuesday, October 10.

In the absence of the President, Mrs. J. H. Lightbourne, Burlington, N. C., who could not be present owing to the death of a near relative, Mrs. C. H. Rowland, a former President of the Conference, presided. The theme of the Conference was "That they may all be one." Rev. B. J. Earp, pastor of the hostess church, made the welcome and offered the invocation. Reports from the districts were made as follows: Alamance, Mrs. J. D. Strader, Burlington; Durham-Wake, Mrs. A. P. Robinson; Randolph, Mrs. Hugh York; Chatham - Lee - Moore, Mrs. R. L. Ross; Guilford, Miss Frankye Marshall; Vance - Warren, Mrs. E. M. Carter; and Halifax, Mrs. B. J. Earp.

By request Rev. F. C. Lester introduced to the Conference the visiting ministers, some twenty-five in number, and also the following distinguished visitors: Mrs. J. M. Harris, Norfolk, Va., President of the Women's Southern Christian Convention; Mrs. B. D. Jones, Holland, Va., second Vice-President; Mrs. W. V. Leathers, Suffolk, Va.; Mrs. Clarence Eley, Norfolk, Va.; and Mrs. John G. Truitt, Suffolk, Va., past President of the Southern Convention.

Mrs. S. C. Harrell, Durham, made report on mission literature. The past presidents of the Conference were recognized as follows: Mesdames L. L. Vaughan, C. H. Rowland, S. C. Harrell, O. H. Paris. A tribute was made by Mrs. W. R. Sellars to the memory of the late Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Burlington, who was at one time president of the Conference.

Mrs. Paul D. Rudd, Reidsville, (herself the daughter of a missionary, Miss Alice Barrett, daughter of our beloved Rev. D. P. Barrett of Puerto Rico) reported on the Standard of Excellence and to each society that had reached the Standard a certificate was given. These societies were as follows: Palm Street, Greensboro; Winston - Salem; First, Greensboro; Henderson, Ramseur and Elon College. Chairmen of committees appointed and who later made reports were: Resolutions, Mrs. H. W. Elder; Recommendations, Mrs. O. H. Paris; Finance, the Conference Treasurer, Mrs. C. H. Stephenson, Raleigh, who reported that she had received from the societies for the Conference the past year, $3,882.19; Nominations, Mrs. E. M. Carter; and Place, Mrs. R. J. Kernodle.

The morning devotion and report of superintendent of Spiritual Life was given by Mrs. W. R. Sellars, Burlington.

The principal address of the day was given by Miss Ruth Isabel Seabury, Home Department Secretary, American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Miss Seabury has traveled extensively and gave graphic descriptions of what she saw and learned in Turkey and also in India, presenting in a vivid manner living pictures of conditions in those countries. Miss Seabury also brought to the Conference a vivid realization of what the great Madras Conference meant to the world community.

Special music was rendered by Mrs. W. N. Huff of Burlington, who sang "The Good Shepherd." The morning session was closed with invocation by Rev. C. E. Newman. The hostess church served a bountiful and delicious picnic lunch.

The afternoon session, beginning at 1:30, was called to order by Mrs. Rowland, and Rev. O. D. Poythress of South Norfolk, Va., sang a solo. Those appearing on the afternoon program were Rev. J. Howard Smith, who gave the invocation, and a paper, entitled, "One Leader One People" by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, which paper was read by Mrs. Mattie Cox Parker. Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, Greensboro, spoke on her recent trip to Northfield. Departmental reports were made by Mrs. Wisseman, Mrs. M. W. Hook, and Miss Margaret Alston.

Officers elected for the incoming year are: President, Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, Greensboro; First Vice-President, Mrs. D. E. Mitchell, Reidsville; Secretary, Mrs. H. D. Lambeth, Elon College; Treasurer, Miss Susie D. Allen, Raleigh. The following Superintendents were elected: Cradle Roll, Mrs. G. W. Putnam, Raleigh; Young People, Mrs. J. H. Lightbourne, Burlington; and Literature, Mrs. S. C. Harrell, Durham.

In a candle light service Miss Margaret Alston, Henderson, gave a memorial to those who had died during the past year and Mrs. W. N. Huff and Miss Susie Allen sang "Abide With Me."

Many new societies were organized during the past year. The invitation to meet for the Twenty-Eighth Annual Conference in 1940 at Liberty Church (Vance County) was accepted. All present seemed to feel that the Twenty-Seventh Annual Session was the best yet.

MRS. H. D. LAMBETH,
Secretary.

Pilgrim Fellowship

"Youth at Work in the Church"

Emily Carleton Lester, Editor

MISS SEABURY AIDS YOUNG PEOPLE.

Those who know Miss Ruth Isabel Seabury of Boston, Mass., only as a leader in the mission field don't know the whole story. She has many and varied interests—although most of them are connected in some way with the Church. One of her major interests is young people's work. She was the counselor for the group of young people at Lakeside which planned for the first national organization of our Pilgrim Fellowship, and is an adult member of the United Christian Movement. Those who were at Rockford remember what a splendid adviser she was to the leaders of our Pilgrim Fellowship as they made plans for the coming years.

At Elon.

While in North Carolina, Miss Seabury spent one day on the campus at Elon College. She was scheduled to speak in chapel—and when that was over the students clamored for more. For the next two hours she met a large group of students—indeed, the "Little Chapel" was practically filled—and talked with them concerning everything from personal worship to war. In the afternoon Miss Seabury had personal conferences with individual students—and they came so "fast and furiously" that she said later she never had time to really finish talking with any of them. That evening she met with leaders of the Student Christian Association.

At Burlington.

Miss Seabury's class on Personal Religious Living at the Upper Alamanee Training School was attended by a large group—and always there were young people eager to hear her discuss matters of their personal devotional life, its development and worth. One evening she was the guest of honor at a young people's supper for the Burlington group, where she appeared in the costume of a native of India and spoke in an interesting—as always—manner.

China Friendship Project.

Those who listened to Miss Seabury in the evening sessions at Burlington wished to make some contribution as an expression of their appreciation of her splendid inspirational and informative talks. On Friday evening an offering—amounting to more than $40.00—was taken and given to Miss Seabury to use for any project she wished. The young people present were especially thrilled when she announced that it would go to aid the China Friendship Project of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship. In telling the group about the plan to purchase the land and building need-

HOME.

Home never seemed so dear and sweet to me
The grassy lawn, each friendly shelting tree
The flowers I love more lovely seem to be,
Since I came home.

Loved faces smile upon me O so dear!
And willing feet attend upon me here,
Such tender hands are always ready near;
Since I came home.

Four cool smooth walls, a clean white narrow bed,
Skilled stranger hands and quiet feet that sped
In ministry—and yet when all is said
I longed for home.

Sometimes we grow familiar with the things
That bless our lives like guardian angel wings;
Dear Lord, I thank Thee with a heart that sings
For home, sweet home.

—Mildred M. North.

ed for a training center in Tientsin, China, she said that in doing this she was "killing three birds with one stone." In the first place, the money would go to help that most needy and worthy country—China. In the second place, she wanted to do something to help the young people, for in helping them we are building the church of tomorrow. In the third place, she wanted to do something to encourage the Church of Christ in China, which is going through such a terrific struggle just now. And so—she felt that the China Friendship Project united all three of these aims in one.

The young people wish to express their appreciation to Miss Seabury for her help and inspiration while she was in our area, and hope that she will be able to return soon.

NORTH CAROLINA MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

In comparing the report of the treasurer of the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference for last year with the one for the year before, we find that the young people's missionary societies made a gain during the past year in the amount of money raised. We congratulate them on this additional amount turned in—nearly thirty-five dollars—and hope that during the coming year as much more will be added. This is especially encouraging since the total amount raised by all the missionary groups in North Carolina showed a decline, while the young people increased the amount they gave. They appreciate the work of Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, who has been young people's superintendent for several years, and welcome Mrs. J. H. Lightbourne as their new superintendent.

THE SANCTITY OF HOME.

A Christian home should be heaven begun on earth. It will be if it is the abode of warm and loving hearts. Serene but inspiring is the household which thinks, rejoices, and sorrows together; whose personalities are all melted down by divine grace, uniting them in love. "A lamp," said Robert McCheyne, the great Scottish preacher, "is a very small thing, and it burns calmly, and without noise, and it giveth light unto all that are in the house." So there are great but quite influences which, like the flame of a sacred lamp, fill many a home with light and fragrance. A soft, deep carpet not only diffuses a look of ample comfort, it deadens many a creaking sound; so is the peace of a Christian home. A strong curtain wards off the summer heat and the wintry winds; so a sweet family fellowship is a shield protecting all the members. A soft pillow may make some forget their misery, and a tired mind soon forgets its cares in the delight of a comfortable Christian home. Its influence is like the fresh evening breeze at the close of a burning day. There would be fewer aching hearts if there were more Christian homes. When you turn your face homeward think of Jesus and heaven. Our Lord raised three persons from the dead. One was an only son; another, an only daughter; the third, an only brother. Whenever he entered a home he sanctified it with peace and radiant life. Make sure that Jesus is in the sacred presence of your home.—Watchman-Examiner.

THE CITIZENS OF THE KINGDOM.

LESSON IV—OCTOBER 22, 1939.

TEXT: Even so let your light shine before men; that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father, who is in heaven.—Matt. 5: 16.

LESSON: Matthew 5: 1-16.

The Platform of the Kingdom.

Jesus is beginning his public ministry. He wants people to know for what he stands, what he hopes to do, and those who can best help him to do it. In what we know as the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus sets forth in plain and in picturesque language the character and the conduct of the citizens of the kingdom which he had come to establish. It is interesting to note in passing that the world's greatest sermon was not delivered in a great cathedral or in a stately church, but out in the open air on a mountain side. There was no ornate pulpit and no cushioned pews. The setting was altogether informal, but the effect must have been profound beyond words.

A Strange Way to Begin.

Jesus began his sermon with a word which is translated "blessed." It just as well might be translated "happy." Is not this significant? Does it not signify that at the heart of the religion of Jesus there are wells of joy which time and circumstance cannot touch or exhaust. Here at the beginning of his ministry, in describing the character of the citizens of his kingdom, he begins his sermon with the words, "Blessed are ye, or, "Happy are ye." And at the end of his ministry we find Jesus telling his disciples that he can give to them "the joy which the world can neither give, nor take away." We Christians have made all too little of the element of joy in our religion. Jesus did not mean, of course, that we should never have trials or troubles, sorrows or suffering. Nor did he mean that we should have a blind and bland optimism, or superficial "Pollyannaism." He did mean, however, that in the lives of those who loved and trusted God, and who did not depend upon outside circumstances or material things, there could be deep and perennial springs of a rich, sustaining joy.

It is also worth noting that Jesus insists that happiness does not depend upon where a man is or what he has, but upon the possession of certain qualities of mind and heart, upon certain attitudes toward life and toward others. Furthermore, happiness is not the objective of life but a product of the right kind of life. A man can be happy although he may not have much. On the other hand, a man may have ever so much and still not be happy.

Character of the Citizens of the Kingdom.

"Blessed are the poor in spirit: for their's is the kingdom of heaven." Those who have a sense of their need, those who are not self-sufficient or self-complacent, those who have a sense of unworthiness and insufficiency—to these belong the kingdom of heaven; that is, the world of spiritual values. The smug, self-satisfied, self-complacent, bigoted, intolerant man or woman has no part in this kingdom of God. May it not be that Jesus put this beatitude first because it was so important a factor in entrance into the kingdom?

"Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted." Those who have the capacities to feel sorry, those who have a sense of their sin, those who are able to enter sympathetically into the experience of others, those who are able to take upon themselves the sins and sorrows and sufferings of others, those whose hearts are kept sensitive and tender to the needs of others—these not only are members of the kingdom but into their lives there comes an inflow of strength, for the word, comfort, comes from a word, the root meaning of which is strength and power. Christ's men and women should strive, by all means, to keep their hearts and consciences sensitive and tender to every spiritual impulse.

"Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." Those who are humble, who have a sense of their own limitations, who realize that their lives and their powers have been derived, who avoid false pride and undue self-importance, who are willing to think more of their duties than to assert their rights—these people shall inherit the earth. This does not mean, of course, that they will own all the land on the face of the globe. It does mean, however, that the future belongs not to the aggressive, domineering, ruthless man or nation, but to those who embody and who express the spirit of genuine meekness and the spirit of service.

"Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled." Those who have a great desire to know more about God, to embody more of his character, to express more of his spirit, those who strive after a richer, fuller life, those who pursue a flying goal, who think of life in terms of growth, development and progress—these shall find satisfaction not only in the ultimate achievement of their goals but in the pursuit thereof. The man who thinks he has attained the goal, or who has exhausted the ideal is mistaken about the essential nature of the religion of Jesus. The best comment on this beatitude is perhaps the words of Paul who, after many years in the Christian life and near the close of a very fruitful ministry, declared that he had not yet attained but that he was still pressing toward the goal.

Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy." Those who put themselves in the other fellow's place, those who deal with their fellow men not on the basis of stern justice but of kindness and mercy, those who try to take into consideration the factors which enter into a man's follies and failures, those who try to do unto others as they would have others do unto them—these people shall receive mercy. To be sure this does not mean that the mercy of God is an arbitrary thing, a thing which men can buy by their good works. It does mean, however, that the spirit of mercy toward others in the heart of a man makes it possible for the spirit of God to manifest itself in more gracious and generous ways than in the heart of the man who is careless and callous in his relationship with others.

"Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." The words, "pure in heart," mean more than mere cleanness in mind and in heart. It is not directed primarily against the seventh commandment, although that is included in the larger meaning. The root idea of the words means sincerity of purpose, undivided allegiance, lack of adulteration, and the absence of alloy. Those who give themselves unreservedly and undetermined, in singleness of devotion, shall find and shall see God. Purity of imagination, purity of affection, purity of will, as well as purity of thought, are all included in this beatitude which holds one of the major secrets of the happy life.

"Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God." Those who not only have the spirit of peace in their hearts but who make peace between others, those whose lives exert an influence toward cooperation and understanding and good will—these are the true sons of God. The impact and the output of their lives is such that they are mes-

"A PRAYER THOUGHT."

"When thou prayest enter into thy closet."—Matt. 6: 6.

"Prayer involves far more than we ordinarily think—a certain necessary relation between the soul and God. The condition of prayer is personal; it looks to character. How this rebukes our ordinary slipshod notions of what it is to pray! God's mere-seat is no mere stall set by the vulgar roadside, where every careless passer-by may put an easy hand out to snatch any glittering blessing that catches his eye. It stands in the holiest of holies. We can come to it only through veils and by altars of purification. To enter into it, we must enter into God."—Phillips Brooks.

Prayer—Let him who reads this enter through the veil into his courts of blessedness and praise. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"GARBAGE."

"Where the carcass is, there will the eagles be."—Matt. 24: 28.

In Moffatt's version we read "where the body lies there will be the vultures." Every mouth says—"wherever the dead body is, there will the vultures flock together."

We were spending a while one evening on the after part of the recreational deck. The men below were throwing over the stern the garbage from the evening meal. Hundreds of sea gulls were following us. They would settle upon the water and struggle with one another for this refuse.

We were reminded of the words of Jesus—our text—those who in the judgment He does not know are cast out. Their highly sentiments, their plan, their faith, their love, their hope, their character, their souls, suffer the pains of the final condemnation of God and are banished from His presence into the darkness unutterable.

Prayer—Our Father, we realize that refuse is good for nothing. We realize that life may be spent uselessly and fit for nothing but to be lost and as refuse. Forbid that we shall slip, but that we may have something to offer Thee when we are called. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"GOD UNFORGOTTEN."

"Enter ye in by the narrow gate; for wide is the gate . . . that leadeth to destruction . . . and narrow is the gate . . . that leadeth into life."—Matt. 7: 13, 14.

By some natural law man tends to destruction. By ease, satisfaction, customs of the world, refined evil influences, letting oneself go without check or stay, and on downy beds he winds up with the vultures.

The Townsend plan is basically wrong because it aims at certain worldly security which is always dangerous to spiritual experience, and most uncertain. If it ever becomes a law, it will bring ruin. In such an orgy of receiving and spending and the acquiring ease, God will be forgotten.

Prayer—O, our Father, whatever our lot, poverty or plenty, thine be the glory. O God, save us from forgetting Thee. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"THE WORLD AT YOUR FEET."

"He bringeth them up into a high mountain . . . and was transfigured before them . . . and Peter said unto Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here."—Matt. 17: 1-4.

William Lyons Phelps is quoted as saying (in part), "as we advance in years we really grow happier, if we live intelligently. To say that youth is happier than maturity is like saying that the view from the bottom of the tower is better than the view from the top.

"To live abundantly is like climbing a mountain, as we ascend, the view widens immensely; the horizon is pushed farther away . . . when we reach the summit, it is as if we had the world at our feet."

The Christian life is just that way. Misfortunes, sickness and sorrow may curtail our happiness. And yet, from the peak of an ever increasing spiritual enrichment, there is a view that supercedes suffering, where glowing love makes glad and impels praise.

Prayer—O Lord, our Father, increase our faith, increase our vision, enrich our souls, and make us glad in Jesus Christ. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"VAPOR TURNED TO SUNLIGHT."

"For what is your life? It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away."—James 4: 14.

It is four o'clock in the afternoon, near Hawaii. I am lying flat on my back on the top deck taking a sunbath. Patches of flaky snow-white clouds drift across the sky toward the receding sun. As they reach the area of the sun they vanish completely leaving an open clear blue sky.

It seems a nice time to quote James, also Jesus, "they are like grass that groweth up; in the morning it flourisheth; in the evening it is cut down and withereth, for here have we no continuing city."

Lesson: Though we be but vapor, let us discharge our humblest functions. Though but a fleeting cloud, there is a presence which departs never, which will move before us till we disappear in His glorious light. Then our lives will be a part of Him shining on forever for others coming on.

OUR PREACHER FOR THIS WEEK IS
DR. CORNELIUS HOWARD PATTON,
SECRETARY EMERITUS OF AMERICAN BOARD.

HELPING BY PRAYER.

"Ye also helping together by prayer for us, that for the gift bestowed upon us by the means of many persons thanks may be given by many on our behalf."—II Corinthian 1:11.

I want to make an appeal, as earnestly, as simply, as directly as I know how, for more prayer on the part of Congregational-Christian people in behalf of the missionaries we are sending to foreign lands, and for those who are working for us in the more difficult parts of our country—indeed, for all the persons and agencies involved in this great missionary task. They sorely need the help that comes through prayer; I believe they crave it; and I am positive our plans in their behalf are halted because of the sad lack of intercessory petition in so many of our churches. I am not speaking at random, but as the result of more than forty years spent in the Congregational ministry, twenty-five of these as a secretary of the American Board. I know many of our pastors feel as I do on the subject. I have talked with them personally and in groups; and always the feeling is the same—"Oh, for a revival of intercessory prayer!"

I believe the time has come for us to take steps in the direction of making our prayers more inclusive, more personal, and above all, more abundant.

It would be simply going back to the practice of the Apostles, a rediscovering of the secret of power in the early Church.

Who was it that urged the humble and far from perfect members of the Corinthian Church to help him out by prayer, who held that his gift of thought, of utterance, of practical judgment, of spiritual power, was dependent upon their remembering him stately in prayer, and who affirmed that, as a result of their cooperative intercession, multitudes in Corinth and elsewhere were thanking God for the blessings they had received? It was St. Paul, the missionary. The most talented member of the Apostolic group, the ablest man of his age, we find him daily, hourly, depending upon the petitions of his faithful friends.

The statement I have quoted from one of St. Paul's Corinthian letters was not an exceptional thing. You will find it paralleled in every epistle he wrote. It represents possibly the deepest anxiety of his heart. He could count upon Christ; could he count upon his fellow disciples? Once in a time of anxiety, he wrote: "Rally round me by praying to God for me." (Rom. 15:30. Moffatt.)

That is exactly the way many of our missionaries feel today. And what response do they get from the average heart, from the average church?

I am going to be bold enough to offer two practical suggestions, by way, possibly, of helping to correct this lack in the life of the Church.

I.

Let us begin with our public worship. St. Paul's appeal was to the Church as a whole. The appeal of our missionaries comes to us as organized bodies which have sent them out and which, by official declaration, stand pledged to their support. Let us look at that word. It is from two Latin words, sub—"under" and portare—"to carry." You support a thing when you carry it on your arms, get under it, put the strength of your body at its disposal. Such is the figure. It has come to apply primarily to support of a financial nature, and that is well. We need to use it in that way. Although we are pledged to the support of our missionaries and their work through our gifts, the plain, unvarnished fact we must face as a fellowship of churches is that we are not supporting them in any adequate way. For several years we have been falling off in our giving.

FAMILY ALTAR.

Prayer—Our Father, grow into us the power to do all the good that we can as we pass this day, carrying Christ's spirit unto all others. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"THERE THEY GO."

"All ye that pass by behold and see."—Lam. 1:12.

Many a loved old friend has slipped across the line during the recent few years. Out of sight across the seas from us, there they go, underneath the sod they are placed to await the resurrection morn. One by one they pass, leaving none but God as our stay. It will be only by our hold on Him that we are enabled to keep our hold on them and their memory. Thanks to God that as we grow older we love more and God seems closer. It is wonderful to spend a whole life for Jesus.

Prayer—Our Father, in Thee we live and move and have our being. To Thee we look for abiding in the future. Forbid anything taking us away from Thee, but we would come closer to Thee till we shall abide with Thee forever. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"I SAW THE HOLY CITY."

"And he shewed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God."

"And the city was of pure gold, like unto clear glass."

"And I saw no temple therein: for the Lord God almighty and the lamb are the temple of it."—Rev. 21:10, 11, 18, 22.

And that is just what we have seen tonight in one of the most magnificent sunsets we ever witnessed. We are in the South Pacific, the whole western half of the dome of the sky was aglow. The lower strata formations produced by heat ray presented a shore line and a grand view of forest, fields, and landscapes. Just where the sun was setting, the shore line dipped into the sea in steep cliff formations. And a city was there—a city of mansions like jasper stone, clear as a crystal, and streets of gold. And the city glistened as of fiery gold. Even the cliffs were solid fire. Am I drawing upon my imagination? Perhaps. Yet our shipmates agree that it was true. It was most amazing to all of us.

The suggestion is heavenly. It is symbolic of the Celestial City which is the source of light and glory to all mankind. Its translucence transmits the light of life and they which are written in the Lamb's book of life shall enter therein leaving their uncleanness this side of that beautiful city, for nothing shall enter there that defileth.

Prayer—Our Father, we pray that with an eye of faith we may walk in this life, in integrity, in purity, in sympathy, and in tenderness, and in these represent thine own attributes, till we shall reach our glory and be like Jesus our Savior. Amen.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The writer and the Singing Class visited our Haw River Church last Sunday afternoon and put on our program at 2:30. We are always happy to visit our Haw River Church. The writer was in business there thirty or forty years ago and was living there when the church was built. We have always held in high esteem the band of loyal and faithful members who worked and sacrificed to build the church. Their good influence seems to have been handed down to those who followed after them because it is one of the most loyal churches we have in the conference today. They are splendid people who are interested in all the departments of the church.

On Sunday evening we visited our Durham Church and put on our program at 7:30. Dr. Harrell was out of town, and Brother Perry had charge of the services. We realize that Dr. Harrell has a most excellent assistant to take charge when he is away. The church was filled to its capacity with an appreciative audience. After the service the good women of the church served the Singing Class with refreshments which they enjoyed very much. The Durham people certainly are kind and hospitable. When one visits the people there, he no longer wonders why Dr. Harrell continues to be their pastor. It is a working church, loyal to all the interests of the church.

Thanksgiving will soon be here. It is the season of the year that ought to make us all happy when we look back over the year and count one by one the blessings the Lord has given us. When the Thanksgiving offering is taken in your church for the Christian Orphanage to help feed and clothe nearly one hundred little children who are dependent on you for home, food, and clothes, won't you be as liberal as you possibly can. They are looking to you for food, clothing, and care. You won't fail them, will you?

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,

sengers of ambassadors of reconciliation. They bring harmony into the discorded features in human life. How badly such men and women are needed in our present world! Happy indeed is the man or nation who makes peace.

"Blessed are they which have been persecuted for righteousness' sake. . . . Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake." The thing seems unbelievable—that a man should be happy, or a man is pleased, when he is persecuted, when he is reviled, when men say all manner of evil against him. But, of course, Jesus adds, when men do this against you falsely. But the record bears Jesus out, for some of the most radiant men and women in the world have suffered for Christ. Stephen, whose face shone like an angel's while he was being stoned to death, is typical of a great host of men and women, young men and maidens who have had the courage of their convictions and who were willing to pay any price, even the price of death itself, and who died with a strange light in their eyes and a strange glow on their faces. Again and again Christians have gone out to die, their faces aglow with triumph and with songs upon their lips.

Conduct of the Citizens of the Kingdom.

Jesus said "Ye are the salt of the earth . . ." "Let us begin with this commonplace saying, Salt keeps things from going rotten. It sweetens, it seasons, it preserves things. In this simple and homely illustration, Jesus summed up one of the main functions of his followers, or citizens of the kingdom. Christians are the saving element in society. They keep it from going rotten. They are seasoning, savoring, saving features in the home, in business, in industry, in politics, in recreation, in every realm of social life.

"Ye are the light of the world." Light has many functions. It guides, it cheers, it heals, it cleanses, it illumines. Here again Jesus has put in a few words of one syllable another phase of the mission of his followers. They are to help to light up the universe, to guide men and women into a finer way of life, to heal the spiritual sores of the world, to bring light and cheer to those who sit in the shadow of a great darkness, and to give life itself; and, as usual, Jesus insisted that a man's religion find expression in action. Because we are the light of the world, we are to let our light shine.

HOPE MILLS CHURCH NEWS.

The First Congregational-Christian Church of Hope Mills, N. C., had communion service on Sunday night, October 2, conducted by Rev. F. C. Lester of Elon College, N. C. At the same service Miss Alice Tolar was received into the membership of the church and baptized.

After the service a business meeting was held. It was voted by the members of the church to seek admission into the Eastern North Carolina Conference, which meets at Turner's Chapel, near Sanford, N. C., in November. The three delegates elected to attend Conference are: John S. Ray, Elmer Cubbreth, and Claude Smith.

SUN'S PULPIT.

We have been saying to these partners of ours, "Don't expect from us well-to-do American Christians what you need. We have too much else on our hands."

But is financial support all? Is it the principal thing? St. Paul, we gather, experienced no anxiety over finances when he knew his church members were on their knees every day with him in mind. It was the praying Philippian Church which once and again sent to him in his need. We shall not solve this problem of missionary support until we do the more vital thing—until we get under our missionaries by earnest and unremitting prayer.

Do you engage in that sort of prayer in your church? Do you consider your missionaries to be "projects," or partners? I know a church which prints the names of several missionaries on its calendar, and, according to the report of a member, not once in all the Sundays of the year are these missionaries referred to in the prayers offered from the pulpit. Undoubtedly the minister of that church is a noble, spiritually-minded man, but he just doesn't think of those missionaries of his. One dislikes to dwell upon the implications of that fact. I am confident, however, this is not a typical case. Undoubtedly many of our pastors bear our missionaries on their hearts when they lead the petitions of the congregation.

There are those who think nothing is more needed for the enrichment of worship than the restoration of intercessory prayer. The Protestant Episcopal Church provides for the matter by requiring the use of a ritual which is rich in the element of intercession and which contains beautiful collects for those engaged in the work of the Church. In many Scottish churches the old custom prevails of dividing the general prayer into two parts—the Prayer of Thanksgiving and the Prayer of Intercession. In a prominent Presbyterian church in New York, the same custom prevails, and needless to say, this church is famous for its missionary zeal. But whether by means of a special prayer or not, we must see to it that the element of intercession is given its proper place in public worship, and that the missionaries are "well remembered" before God. It is my observation that when this is done no part of the service, certainly no part of the general prayer, receives such close and sympathetic attention from the people. Our people are ready; many of them are anxious to be "helping together by prayer" those who represent them on the mission field, if the minister will only give them the chance.

God save us from becoming self-centered in our worship!

II

My other suggestion relates to our private devotions. I think every Christian should have a prayer-list, if not on paper, then one written on the tablets of the heart; and on this list there should be a place for the men and women who literally have obeyed the Great Command. Surely this does not need to be argued. It should be one of our highest privileges as partners with them and with their Lord.

I favor explicitness in this matter—the use of names and circumstances of life. I like that word sent out from Jerusalem by the International Missionary Council in 1928, closing with an appeal for definiteness in prayer: "Since God has called us to share in his creative power, and since our desire is an element in the creation of the world tomorrow, and since his continual challenge to us is 'Desire of me'—'What wilt thou?'—it is our duty to formulate our specific desires."

Whether or not our churches are moved to give larger place to prayer for missions and missionaries, as individual Christians we can save the day by following a course which includes in its sweep the entire missionary body at home and abroad. To a large extent the bringing about of a revival of prayer is in our hands.

God save us from selfishness in our prayers!

The subject has a broader application. It suggests the solution of the deepest need of the Church. The consensus among thoughtful observers is that our Protestant churches just now are in precarious position. At the very time when they are called upon to face the secularistic wave which is sweeping over the world, they find themselves uncertain in their thinking and lacking in the convictions and loyalties which arise from vital Christian experience. No massing of statistics or wishful interpretation of painful facts can blind our eyes to the gravity of the situation. The problem is too vast for discussion—even for statement—here, but let me close this appeal for prayer made from the missionary angle, by a quotation from a recent book by Dr. W. E. Orchard, the distinguished Congregational preacher of London. In his "The Present Crisis of Religion," Dr. Orchard reaches this searching conclusion: "Nothing," he says, "can be done for our generation until its overvaluation of externals is redressed by a discovery and higher estimate of the interior values which mystical experience can reveal. Only those who have appreciated, even if merely the more accessible treasures of prayer, can imagine the peace, the joy, and the strength that is here laid up for all who will pay the price."

"You may never reach perfection, but if you keep on reaching for it some day it will reach you."

A Minister's Prayer for Himself

By CLARENCE A. VINCENT, D. D.

Emerson once wrote, "What you are speaks so loudly that I cannot hear what you say." I am deeply concerned with what the minister of my church is. Other things are important, but the most important is his example.

Example.

Is he sincerely loyal to Jesus Christ. You must not expect him to be perfect, for he is human as you are. But is he sincerely trying to live as Jesus did? Is he unselfish, or does he seek his own? Does he seek first the kingdom of God? Is it his passion to minister wisely to his people, or does he expect them to minister to him? Is he cheerful? Optimistic? Or is he fault-finding and pessimistic? Is he a pulpit scold, or a messenger of cheer? I pray above everything else that he may be an honest, sincere, though incomplete, pattern of the Master.

"Example is always more efficacious than precept."

Appreciation.

I also want him to appreciate the good qualities, the burdens, the struggles and the needs of the congregation. I pray for him a genuine sympathy and a quick sight for opportunities to help his people. I wish that all would feel free to come to him for help and advice. He should not pry into difficulties, but share in sympathy and suggestion. In twenty visitors who came to a minister's study one afternoon, three stand out in memory: A young man who had started on a voluptuous life. The minister shocked him and at least prayed with him. It changed his life. He united with the church, married a beautiful girl, and has been a worthy husband and father. A wife and husband, about to separate. A searching talk and a prayer, and a united family. A drunkard came in despair. The minister walked him around the streets until he was sober, went with him to his home, and with his family kneeling with them, prayed. The result, a steady and valuable man and citizen.

Christian love

"Is the secret sympathy
The silver link, the silken tie,
Which heart to heart and mind to mind
In body and in soul can bind."

Sermons.

I pray for the pastor of my church that he, in these tragic days, may preach the "Changeless messages of the Church." Paul wrote, "It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." Not foolish preaching, I fear there is too much of that kind, but the foolishness of preaching. To trust to unseen forces—faith and love, kindness and justice—in the presence of greed, to speak such spiritual and moral and social realities in the noise of belching cannons, seems futile, but it is in this way that wrong is uprooted and right becomes the life of humanity. Christ crucified, risen, and alive evermore to give power to his followers and to make effective their deeds and messages is the hope of civilization. "God is love," Jesus saves from sin "and is the light and life of the world," the New Testament as the thoroughly tested record of the life and teachings of Jesus and his immediate disciples, the cooperation of the all-Christian forces in world work, a government of the people, for the people, and by the people, religious and civil freedom, free schools, the final triumph of the kingdom of God and a heaven of love and active service—these are the things that it is important to preach.

Courage.

I pray for my minister that he may have courage to follow Jesus, to proclaim these essentials, and to face the problems of the world and the needs of his congregation unflinchingly. Thus will he help you by his example and teaching to face life valiantly and cheerfully.

Myself.

The minister for whom I pray is myself.

"Our only rule of
faith and practice."

Suggestions for Prayer on Reformation Sunday, October 29, 1939

The meaning of the day for all the churches whose traditional or spiritual history stems from Europe makes it eminently fitting to make it one of special consideration of the critical situation of the Christian Churches of Europe.

Let us remember in private prayer as well as in public worship the profound anxiety and distress into which millions of our fellow-Christians in Europe are now plunged, Catholic and Orthodox as well as Evangelical.

Since prayer may be the only way in which we can speak to the Christians of Germany, Czechoslovakia, Poland and Russia—let us intercede for them and for those who govern over them.

Scattered throughout the Continent are small evangelical fellowships not yet strong enough to stand alone. Some can be reached by our help if we are but willing to give it, others can be reached only through intercession. Let us pray that their witness may not be lost to us, that they be comforted and strengthened and that the day of their complete liberation may come.

The Protestants of France are a steadfast and heroic minority who are again facing an overwhelming task with lowered manpower and depreciated resources. No Christian fellowship looks back upon a nobler history. The influence of the million Huguenots of France has reached to the ends of the earth. In praying that God may protect and preserve them, we are praying for the preservation of a heritage which is in great measure part of our own.

We should not forget to mention in our prayers the Waldensian Church of Italy, the forerunner of all the evangelical churches, one of the great martyr churches of religious history, looking forward courageously to a future overcast by doubt and uneasiness.

Let us keep in mind the tragic fact that of all the religious groups affected by the war, none will feel the ruthlessness of oppression more quickly than the Jews, whose spiritual heritage underlines our own.—Central Bureau for Relief of Evangelical Churches of Europe.

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

Rev. W. J. Andes is to be the preacher at the Elon College Community Church on next Sunday.

The Eastern Virginia Conference will be in session at the South Norfolk Christian Church on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of next week.

Our Richmond Church was filled to capacity on last Friday when the women of Eastern Virginia met to make their reports and to plan for the year.

Rev. J. F. Morgan and his people at Rosemont say that Rev. John H. Knight is a good preacher. The Rev. Mr. Knight recently conducted revival services in the Rosemont Church.

A hundred and twenty people from Norfolk and vicinity went to the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference in Richmond last week by chartered busses. Dr. Hardcastle is said to have been a charming conductor.

Rev. and Mrs. F. C. Lester are this week attending the 130th Annual Session of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in St. Louis, Mo. Mr. Lester is a member of the Prudential Committee of that Board.

Civic leaders of Burlington, N. C., are sponsoring a campaign for the Elon College Golden Anniversary. There is to be a parade in that city next Saturday morning. All alumni and friends of the college are invited to join in the march.

Rev. John R. Chapman, pastor of the Asheville (N. C.) Congregational Church has accepted a call in Massachusetts. He will begin his new work November 1. We regret to lose him in the Southern Convention where he has made many friends.

A Congregational-Christian Church is to be organized at Asheboro, N. C., on next Sunday morning at eleven o'clock in the Park Street School building. Rev. A. Lanson Granger, Jr., is the pastor of this group. All who are interested in this church are invited to be present for the organizational service.

WINSTON-SALEM.

It was our pleasure to have with us in a week's meeting at Winston-Salem the Rev. Robert Lee House, Portsmouth, Va. The pastor began the meetings on the second Sunday night and Rev. Mr. House arrived for the meeting on Monday night. The audience was small to begin with but it increased in interest and attendance with every service held. Mr. House won the hearts of our people from the start with his fearless, practical and Biblical messages. Not one word of criticism was heard about his sermons or methods of conducting the services. The church was stirred to action, not being merely pleased with the sermons. A meeting of personal workers was held on Wednesday night. The pastor had prepared a list of prospective members which was added to by the workers. Assignments were made of the prospects not merely to last during the meeting but to be continued, if not won, after the close of the meeting.

Rev. House also conducted morning devotions each morning over Station WSJS. These messages served not only to advertise the meetings but many favorable comments were made about these broadcasts. The consecrations made during the meeting were significant and hopeful of much renewed interest. Much encouragement was received from the many visits made by the pastor and Brother House. One person confessed Christ and will be received into church the coming Sunday. We are confident of still further results from this meeting with the follow-up work that will be carried on by the pastor and personal workers. We can heartily commend Brother House as a sane, forceful and practical evangelistic preacher.

CHINA MISSIONARY TO SPEAK.

Often the rattle of machine guns, the roar of cannon and the bark of rifles sounded as Dr. Samuel H. Leger, just back from Peiping, North China, went about his work under the American Board of Foreign Missions as a specialist in religious education and rural church work.

In Fenchow, North China, Dr. Leger went through air raids and the taking of the city by the Japanese army. He worked in establishing refugee camps for women and children on the mission compound. There were 1,200 refugees with 400 more in the Fenchow Mission Hospital. In addition he helped promote literacy classes, Bible classes, and other educational projects to help the refugees.

Later, on leaving Shansi, Dr. Leger, as Secretary of Religious Education under the North China Kung Li Hui (our denominational group), did religious education work throughout North China Congregational-Christian circles. "It was our lot to live and see and try to help in one of the major tragedies of our century," he says. In the spring Dr. Leger was asked to give a series of lectures on the rural church, rural sociology and rural construction at Fukien Christian University, formerly of Foochow but now in Shaowu.

For several years Dr. Leger was Secretary of Religious Education under the Church of Christ in China with headquarters in Shanghai. He has a grasp of the problems in the rural church among students and among Chinese Christian laymen and lay women such as few men possess. He speaks Chinese fluently and has lived close to the people during his country tours.

Dr. Leger was born in Kansas and is an alumnus of Washburn College with an M. A. and Ph. D. from Columbia University and a B. D. from Union Seminary. He enlisted for service in China in 1917 and has worked in Foochow, Shanghai, Peiping and Tientsin. Because he has traveled so widely and has been on the spot when things have happened during the past ten years, Dr. Leger is particularly well able to bring an up-to-date message and to interpret it sympathetically.

Dr. Leger is to speak at all of our Conferences.

ALL ARE NEEDED.

"That man is not fit to hold office in the church."
 "That woman talks too much to be a good member of the church."
 "That organization is no good."

Such statements can sometimes be heard here and there among church people. Of course no one is ever perfect, and certainly organizations are imperfect. But the fact still remains that the church is big enough to use people of many varieties, and even blundering organizations may aid the coming of the Kingdom of righteousness.

There is so much that needs to be done for the benefit of the world today that all who will do anything whatever to aid the work of the church are badly needed. There is room for all who believe in the Christ and are willing to serve him in any way whatsoever. All of us are not enough.

In our church we need to make many adjustments in organization so the work can move forward more smoothly. But that certainly does not mean that any part of the body should be discarded. All of it can contribute to the success of the work.

There are far too many denominations of those who claim to be Christian. We welcome the merging of denominational groups and the modern use of the word "ecumenical" (universal) in connection with the church. But if some people can express their religion through ceremonies while others find religion at its best when they become hysterical, then let each in his own way worship the holy God who made us all. There are not enough to render honor to His holy name.

Jesus would not let the disciples destroy those who would not follow with them. On the contrary he welcomed any service which non-conformists might render. "He that is not against us, is for us."

"HOLD THAT LINE."

Those who attend football games are familiar with that saying. When one team is pushing steadily down the field towards the goal posts, the cheering section of the team on the defensive breaks into a steady sing-song: "Hold that line, hold that line, hold that line." And quite often this rhythmic determination going from hundreds on the side lines takes hold of the players, and they do hold the line; they may even push the opponents backwards.

The time has come in our mission work that those who are not members of the Board should join in that steady, rhythmic, determined refrain: "Hold that line." For ten years we have been on the defensive. We have called home hundreds of missionaries. We have closed schools and left young struggling churches standing helpless and alone. We have reduced the salary of missionaries, and reduced the other aids given them. The frontier of our church has been steadily pushed back towards the home base. Even now when opportunities for service have multiplied many fold we still are on the defensive.

The American Board meeting in St. Louis, Mo., this week faces the necessity of further reductions in its work. To some of us it seems that to curtail further simply means defeat.

The income for the Mission Board of the Southern Convention was slightly less the past year than it was the year before. Most of the difference was from the incomes of Woman's Missionary Societies. The total loss was but little, but it shows the direction in which we are going. There must be some new stimulus, some new vision, some new enthusiasm.

As I write there seems to come to me the steady throb of a thousand voices of men, women, and young people saying to those responsible for our missionary work: "Hold that line, hold that line, hold that line."

It is now time for us to move forward. We can, we should, and we will. One way to do it is for every Sunday school, every church, and every young people's society to begin planning and giving right now for the world-wide program of the church. Of course the missionary societies will plan for an increase the coming year because of the increased needs.

LAST CALL FOR EASTERN VIRGINIA CHURCHES.

When the next issue of this paper comes from the press the Eastern Virginia Conference of Congregational and Christian Churches will be in session at South Norfolk Christian Church. It will be too late then to ask the churches to give the final touch to the report, to be sure that all funds are sent in for the support of our work as requested, and that all delegates and many other interested people attend the sessions of Conference. That urgent request is now made.

The Conference sessions will be worth attending. Business of much importance will be transacted. The reports will show our weakness and strength. Many of the leaders of the Conference will be heard with pleasure and profit. Dr. Samuel Leger will be there to give recent news of our work in China. Two young ministers are to be ordained. The young people will share in the program. All who can reasonably do so should be among those present.

Last call for the Eastern Virginia Conference for 1939. All pastors present, all churches reported and represented by delegates, all apportionments paid in full! This is the kind of a Conference Eastern Virginia can be.

DON'T FORGET THE "SUN."

Each church has been asked to secure a certain number of paid up subscriptions to "The Christian Sun." This is the only thing that the Conference asks the churches to do directly for their own members. Will your church bless your church by making your church a reading church?

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The pastors and laymen of the Eastern Virginia Conference are looking forward to the meeting of the next session at South Norfolk Christian Church, Wednesday to Friday, November 1-3, 1939. Pastors, church secretaries and standing committees are busy putting the finishing touches on their reports. Reports to the Annual Conference are very important and should be given very careful consideration. All reports should be typewritten if possible. Letter size paper should be used and duplicate copies of all reports of committees should be filed with the Conference secretary.

Out of more than twenty-five years experience as Conference secretary, this writer can emphasize the importance of neatness and accuracy in preparing church reports, showing the statistics for the past year. Statistics should be carefully tabulated and the addition should be accurate, showing correct totals. Every church secretary is furnished two report blanks, one for filing and the other to be sent to Conference. If the local secretary does not wish to file a duplicate copy, the extra blank makes it possible to have a neat copy for submitting to Conference, if for any reason, one blank is blotted or spoiled.

Attendance upon the sessions of Conference (all of them if you please) should be the aim of every pastor and delegate. Ministers and delegates should be in place when the first session is called to order. And it is a good rule to be on hand when the benediction is pronounced at the closing session. Sickness or death should be the only excuse for any minister to be absent from any session of his Conference. Other engagements should be deferred or cancelled. "November 1-3 is the time for my Annual Conference at South Norfolk, and I should be there, the Lord willing"—that is the attitude members of Conference should take in this matter.

The Conference in North Carolina will meet in November. The above statements should apply to every Conference within the Southern Convention. The Annual Conference is the most effective means of promoting the various agencies of the church. The Southern Convention in recent years has taken over, or attempted to take over, much of the work that should be done through the Annual Conference. The pastor is the key man to any promotional work in the local church. Executive officers may send out tons of printed and mimeographed matter, but much of it will never become effective unless, and until, the local pastor is enlisted in active support of the various church enterprises. The personal touch, in any program is the best method of approach. No minister can afford to miss any opportunity for personal fellowship with the other members of the Annual Conference.

In the Annual Conference opportunity should be afforded for helpful counsel and full discussion of church problems. But it should be a mountain-top experience, rich in spiritual fellowship for all who attend. There is a time and a place for argument and general discussion when presented in the spirit of Christ. But above all this ministers who have been struggling with their tasks for a year need a season of relaxation and spiritual invigoration. It will be a rich treat for all who come under the influence of such a Conference. The Eastern Virginia Conference should set a high standard in spiritual excellence in the next session at South Norfolk. Do not miss this session.

ELON COLLEGE GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY CAMPAIGN.

The Alamance County section of our campaign is getting under way in real earnest. Two weeks ago the Burlington Chamber of Commerce voted to cooperate with the college in endeavoring to raise $50,000 within Alamance County as its share of the present indebtedness of Elon College of $134,000. The Chamber of Commerce voted to make this campaign one of its major projects for the year. The organization is being completed this week. Solicitations will begin as soon as the organization is completed. Mr. H. H. Dillard is General Chairman; the Chamber of Commerce serves as Secretary and general clearing house for the campaign; Mr. R. W. Barnwell of Barnwell Brothers Trucking Company is treasurer; Mr. Jack Austin, motion picture director of Burlington, is chairman of the publicity committee; Dr. James H. Lightbourne of Burlington is chairman of the speakers committee; and Mr. G. C. Somers of Somers & Garrison Real Estate and Insurance Co. is chairman of the initial gifts committee.

Forty-seven of the leading business men of Burlington and vicinity have agreed to serve on the initial gifts committee. Nearly two hundred citizens of Burlington and Alamance County have agreed to serve on the general committee, which means that more than two hundred responsible citizens of Alamance County have agreed to give their time and service in an effort to serve Elon College that the institution may be cleared of its debts. This means much to the campaign and is most heartening to all who are interested in the same.

The executive committee and the initial gifts committee will hold a joint meeting Tuesday evening, October 24, at seven o'clock. Dr. Howard E. Rondthaler, President of Salem College will be the speaker. A joint meeting of the executive committee, the initial gifts committee, and the general committee will be held at Elon College, Thursday evening, October 26, at seven o'clock. The faculty, student body, and alumni will stage a parade through the main streets of Burlington on Saturday morning at ten o'clock. Following these meetings and demonstrations, the workers will begin the canvass. We hope to complete this canvass within ten to fifteen days.

The campaign is beginning in earnest as it should. I am confident that the county will raise the goal set. I am equally confident that the church, alumni, and friends outside the county will be able to raise the remaining $84,000 which will clear the college of its debts. The administration is most grateful for the interest and cooperation upon the part of our friends in Alamance County and elsewhere. We have the opportunity of clearing our college of its debts, and I am sure that we will all be delighted to take advantage of this opportunity that our dreams for years may really come true. Make sure that you do your part, and your neighbor will do his.

A TRIP TO THE HILLS.

Recently the pastor of the mountain churches was accompanied by his daughter, Jo Earp, and by Florence Smith and Vera Geringer to these mission points. It was indeed a rare treat and an educational experience—the trip alone was well worth the time, not to mention the scenes and realities which so vividly imprint themselves upon one's mind and heart.

We had favorable weather on our trip going and enjoyed several calls with the pastor. Everywhere we were cordially received. We stopped on one of the hilltops to visit the grave of one who perhaps has contributed more by her Christian life and her influence for good toward the success of the mission than any other one person. I have reference to the late Victoria Edwards. The marker presented by friends of the Southern Convention, is a fitting memorial to her and her unwavering faith in him.

Sunday greeted us with cool, rainy weather. It seemed that one could reach out and almost touch the white, fleecy clouds as they sailed across the rugged mountain tops. Attendance was fair; those present received spiritual guidance in an appreciative manner. The influence of the workers in the hills will live on; and, coupled with the all-inspiring work of a crucified Savior, who can dare doubt the results?

During the progress of the service at Elk's Spur we were happily surprised by the arrival of the Junior class of Ingram Church, along with Mrs. G. C. Satterfield, their teacher, and Mr. Satterfield. At the end of the service, Mrs. Satterfield, in behalf of her class, presented a lovely communion plate matching the trays which had previously been presented to the mountain churches by Mr. L. E. Carlton. The pastor formally accepted the gift for the mission and introduced the visitors.

A delightful picnic lunch and social hour was enjoyed at the parsonage before accompanying the pastor to further services.

Apparently there is less interest shown at Ivy Hill than either of the other churches. There is no church building here, but services are held in Ivy Hill School. To one who has never visited the hills, it is impossible for me to try to convey the intangible something which gets next to one. No, everything is not beautiful—we ran face to face into utter poverty, greed, unhappiness, un-Christian ways. There are wonderful possibilities in the hills, if we only have faith to see them!

There seems to be much interest at Rocky Ford. It evidently has the most members. There we found people anxious to hear his word taught. The pastor and people covet our prayers and whole-hearted cooperation. If we as church members could sincerely pray with the Psalmist, "Let the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer" what a difference there would be in his church and his world!

VERA GERRINGER.

ALABAMA CHURCH HAS SUCCESSFUL YEAR.

The membership of the church has undergone a slight gain. The church has lost three members—two by death and one by letter. Twelve members were gained making a total membership of 382.

The church comes to the end of the year without debts. The church has paid its conference apportionment, pastor's salary, building improvements, and all other current expenses for the year. The total value of church property at present is $18,500.00.

The first unit of a set of plans for completely remodeling the church building has just been finished. During the past six weeks the pastor and the men of the church have remodeled the entire front of the place of worship. The pulpit has been torn away in part and a curved front built of beautiful grained wood stained to match the furniture of the church. The choir loft has also been rebuilt with an elevation for the chairs, and an arrangement of the ceiling curved and concealing the lights.

Eighteen very nice choir chairs have been installed. A modernistically designed piano contributes to the plan to make this place of worship more beautiful.

The church has more than sixty subscribers to Down South News and a number of subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

The Sunday school report is also encouraging. There are twelve classes with a total enrollment of 200. There are twenty-four officers and teachers. The total Sunday school offering for the year was $203.42

The Sunday School Council has had regular meetings to discuss plans for conducting the school. One new class, composed of boys, has been organized.

A Vacation Bible School sponsored by the Sunday school and conducted by our teachers enrolled 135 children this summer. Miss Marguerite Davison, extension worker for this area, conducted a teacher training class for our teachers and officers this summer with a total of twenty in attendance.

The Primary Department has been reorganized with Miss Hassie Grey as superintendent. An extra piano has been secured for this department.

The men's and women's classes have raised a substantial amount which has been dedicated to the purpose of building a boys classroom in the basement of the church.

The young people's class has bought and paid for the eighteen choir chairs which add so much to the appearance of the church. This class has also contributed to the purchase of the new piano and for other causes in the church.

Rev. Lawrence L. Stanley was unanimously re-elected as pastor of our church for the coming year.

ARTHUR H. DAILEY.

HAPPY HOME.

At the October meeting of the Missionary Society of Happy Home Church, Rev. and Mrs. F. C. Lester were visitors. Rev. Mr. Lester brought to us some of the situations on the mission field, and explained where a portion of the dime we drop in each month goes. He used a map in pointing out the different places. Being a newly organized group, we found this to be very educational. Both he and Mrs. Lester urged us to attend the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference at Ingram, Va., October 10.

Nine of our members attended the Conference. After hearing Miss Seabury and other good speakers, we have caught a clearer vision of the task before us. We feel that already it has enriched our Christian lives to do our bit to help to make our Congregational-Christian religious efforts world-wide, thus helping to promote peace in other lands.

Under the direction of our pastor, Rev. W. J. Andes, the young people have formed an organization. A new class has also been organized in the Sunday school. It is composed of young people of high school age. Miss Ruth Stephens is the teacher.

It has dawned upon us that as in life, so in the church, the busier we are, the happier we may be.

The Singing Class from the Elon Orphanage will sing at Happy Home on Sunday night, October 29.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Paul Kinston is one of three children. He has a brother and sister older than he is. They were children of tenant farmers and not blessed with a great deal of this world's goods. Paul lost his father and mother and he and his brother and sister were left alone in the world with no home. They were sent to live with an aunt who took them in. But soon after they were located there her mule had a stroke and the aunt was no longer able to care for them. Friends appealed to the Christian Orphanage to take them.

If Paul had come to your home and asked you for shelter and something to eat, do you think you could have turned him away. Look at his little innocent face. Solemn as a judge. Then, too, Paul is a fine little fellow. He is universally loved by the entire orphanage family. His little brother and sister are fine, too.

Are you glad that the Congregational-Christian denomination has a home for little children like Paul and his brother and sister. Then, doesn't it make you happy to have an opportunity to give something through your church or Sunday school? Or, if you wish, you can mail us a check, as a personal gift—to help give Paul a chance.

Thanksgiving will soon be here. It is a time we should all feel free-hearted and be willing to give, that children who are dependent and homeless, may have a chance as other boys and girls. Open your heart at Thanksgiving and be liberal when the Thanksgiving offering is taken in your church.

Our financial report this week carries us over the eleventh rung in our financial ladder. We still have $8,673.73 to raise and just two months to raise it. Will you be liberal-hearted and faithful, and see that we reach our goal?

A REAL NEED.

We are hearing much about the need to get people to attend church these days. We are told that if one-fourth of the church membership is present at any regular service it is about the average. There is another side to this picture. There is a real need for consecrated preachers, pastors who are willing to consecrate their efforts and their time to the ministry. We have churches now that are demanding the services of consecrated ministers, but it seems that they are not to be found easily. It would seem that the ministry would appeal and while it is gratifying that many of our young ministers are better preparing themselves by taking post graduate work in Divinity Schools the demand is greater than the supply. No work comforts the heart and gives satisfaction to the life that the ministry does, nor is there any calling, or vocation, that offers such a field of opportunity and service, not only for humanity, but in the name and for the sake of our Lord.

Our Promotional Secretary, Rev. F. C. Lester, Elon College, N. C., makes it a part, in fact the first part, of his varied services to try to bring together pastorless churches and churchless pastors, but he finds it a most difficult task because we are lacking in the field of ministers suited and adapted to the work of the church. Here is a field of anxiety and concern and here is hoping that the day is not far distant when a supply of suitable, consecrated, self-sacrificing ministers will be available to the churches.

The above is acknowledged with deepest gratitude. We heartily thank everyone who had a part in making the contributions. Elon Church helped wonderfully in sending in the balance of its apportionment. The demands are so deserving that we find ourselves filled with anxiety on the one hand and with gratitude on the other, our anxiety being that demands shall be met and our gratitude for the willingness on the part of many to meet these demands.

Sincerely and gratefully,

ANNUAL REPORT OF RANDOLPH DISTRICT MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

BISCOE.

Fifteen members on roll, five of whom are active. Clothing was sent to the orphanage at Easter. A shower was given to four women in need. Three dollars was given to a preacher in need. Eleven dollars and five cents was sent in to treasurer. For our study we have used the Bible and read articles from THE CHRISTIAN SUN. We are endeavoring to be led by the spirit of the Lord in our work.

MRS. W. C. MARTIN, Pres.
MRS. O. H. LAMBERT, Sec'y.

ETHER.

Number of members on roll, fifteen. Twelve monthly meetings were held in homes this year. Eight dresses were sent to the orphanage at Easter. Sent in $13.46 for apportionment. Raised $40.16 which was used in home church.

MRS. EVERETTE FREEMAN,
Secretary.

PARK'S CROSS ROADS.

Number of members on roll, thirty. New members, four. One member lost by death. We have more than reached our goal. Gave a shower to a family who lost their home and all their property by fire. Delegates were sent to District Rally and to Woman's Missionary Convention at Elon. Twelve monthly meetings were held.

For study we used Philippians with "The Radiant Heart" as a help, also two mission books, "The Church Takes Root in India" and "The American City and Its Church." Great benefit was received from this year's study. A public service was held. We tried very hard to reach the "Standard of Excellence."

Aside from our missionary work, we give annually much more to our local church in service and funds through our Ladies Aid, holding meetings jointly.

MRS. W. M. DORSETT, Pres.
MRS. W. M. COX, Sec'y.

PLEASANT RIDGE.

Number of members on roll, twenty-one. Owing to death of former president, this society was not reorganized until the middle of the year. Meetings have been held once a month since then. Average attendance, eleven. Full apportionment of $10.00 met.

Representatives were sent to District Rally. For study, we used Philippians with "The Radiant Heart" as help, "The Church Takes Root in India," and literature sent from Elon. Young people constitute a large part of this society, but they hope to have a society of their own next year.

MRS. O. C. BROWN, Pres.
MRS. T. L. HODGIN, Sec'y.

RAMSEUR.

We have twenty-three members enrolled and held twelve monthly meetings in the homes of the members. Eight new members were added during the year.

The Bible study for the year was the book of Philippians and was taught by Mrs. I. H. Foust. One calendar opening and one mite box opening were held during the year, which helped us to reach our apportionment. The treasurer reported $56.16 raised during the year.

The society was well represented at the North Carolina Conference held at Park's Cross Roads. A delegation of members attended the Woman's Missionary Convention in April at Elon, N. C. The District Rally met in the Ramseur Church, with a perfect attendance from our own society.

All the requirements in the Standard of Excellence were met this year. The officers for the coming year are: President, Mrs. I. H. (Continued on page 15.)

PROGRAM FOR WOMEN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETIES FOR NOVEMBER.
(A THANKOFFERING SERVICE.)

"INTO ALL THE WORLD."

[This "Thankoffering Service" is issued by the Missions Council of Congregational and Christian Churches. It is suggested that you ask your members to bring this copy of "The Christian Sun" to the missionary meeting, so your society will be able to use the responsive readings. At the request of Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, president, the Missions office has sent a copy of this service to the president of every Missionary Society in North Carolina. A resolution passed at the recent North Carolina Woman's Conference was to the effect that the thankoffering received at the November meetings be used to help build the proposed church in Asheboro, N. C.]

HYMN—"Jesus Shall Reign."

RESPONSIVE READING—"Where Is My Country?"

QUESTIONER—Where is "my country?" Who has decreed that "my country" shall include only a geographical area bounded by the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans, Canada and Mexico? Who has decreed that "my country" shall embrace only those men, institutions, and events which lie between the year 1492 and the present?

RESPONSE—Where Isaiah lifted up his voice for human justice, there is my country.

Where Plato announced the reality of the spiritual, there is my country.

Where Jesus offered his life for man, there is my country.

Where St. Francis lived the compassionate life, there is my country.

Where Shakespeare swept the human scene into his dramas, there is my country.

Where Luther struck for the liberty of the soul, there is my country.

QUESTIONER—Who draws these little lines, limiting my allegiance by accidents of time and space?

RESPONSE—Where Gandhi lifts a swordless fight for freedom, there is my country.

Where Schweitzer heals the bodies of black men, there is my country.

Where Kagawa champions the under-privileged, there is my country.

Where brave men stand firm against barbarism, there is my country.

QUESTIONER—Where is my country and who are its enemies?

RESPONSE—Wherever men and women lift the flag of justice, or of beauty, or of freedom, or of truth, or of peace, or of fellowship, there is my country. Who enslaves men in body for the sake of gain, or in mind for the sake of power, who tramples on other's rights, who closes the doors of opportunity, who serves the dark gods of superstition and prejudice, who turns his eyes toward the past, who denies to others the privileges he desires for himself—he is the enemy of my country. God help me to protect my country against all enemies.

SILENT PRAYER WITH HYMN RESPONSE—"O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee" (one verse).

CANDLE LIGHTING RITUAL—For people of all continents—Asia, Africa, Europe, South America and North America.

[Five candles are placed an equal distance apart on a table at center front of room. Five "students" stand behind the candles, and two "readers" stand at left and right of group. As the music of "In Christ There Is No East or West" is played, all take their places. First "student" carries a lighted candle.]

UNISON SINGING—First two stanzas of hymn, "In Christ There Is No East or West."

FIRST READER—"This is my commandment that ye love one another as I have loved you. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one for another."

SECOND READER—For Asia:

He walks no more along the Syrian road
Yet where a dim pagoda's haunting spire
Hides crumbling gods and dying altar fire,
A people old in burdens, race, and pride
Have found a brother walking by their side.

FIRST STUDENT—(Lighting a candle for "Asia"): Behold I light the candle of Love for Asia. May we keep this flame brightly shining within our hearts.

A moment of meditation with musical "Amen."

SECOND READER—For Africa:

He sits no more beside Samaria's well;
Yet where a thousand far-off fountains spring
From jungle silence, wondering mothers bring
The children of a dark, bewildered race
Unto a Friend with kindly, dusky face.

SECOND STUDENT—(Lighting a candle for Africa): Behold I light a candle of Love for Africa. May we keep this flame brightly shining within our hearts.

A moment of meditation with musical "Amen."

SECOND READER—For Europe:

He guardeth not Jerusalem against the foe;
But oh, the wings of tenderness he folds
About war-torn, bloody Europe. He holds Aloft a banner marked for love and peace
And speaks as one who comforts, to bid their struggles cease.

THIRD STUDENT—(Lighting a candle for Europe): Behold, I light the candle of Love for Europe. May we keep this flame brightly shining within our hearts.

A moment of meditation with musical "Amen."

SECOND READER—For South America:

He goes not evermore into dark Gethsemane;
But, still, today climbs mountain tops to pray
Bearing his cross upon an Andes way;
He points through darkness and through night
By his living Presence—to a higher light.

FOURTH STUDENT—(Lighting a candle for South America): Behold, I light the candle of Love for South America. May we keep this flame brightly shining within our hearts.

A moment of meditation with musical "Amen."

SECOND READER—For North America:

He hears no more Judean children crying
as he goes;
Yet midst the millions in skyscraper cities
He walks, and seeing hungry children pities
Them. He hears the cries of hunger, cold and fear
As he companions those who dry their tears.

FIFTH STUDENT—(Lighting a candle for North America): Behold, I light the candle of Love for North America. May we keep this flame brightly shining within our hearts.

A moment of meditation with musical "Amen."

FIRST READER—"Behold, I set before thee an open door and no man can shut it. The Tabernacle of God is with men and he will dwell with them and they shall be his people and God, himself, shall dwell with them and be their God."

UNISON SINGING—(Group rises): Last stanza of hymn—"In Christ There Is No East or West."

Readers and students return to their places.

PRAYER IN UNISON—Master and Lord, teach us to love our fellowmen

With the love that shall be thy love breaking into the world through us.

Illumine our souls with a knowledge of thy divine beauty and truth

That shall fill us with joy and peace.

Make us messengers of thy grace, ambassadors of God among men.

Make us doorways through which thou thyself mayest enter freely into thy world. Amen.

OFFERING.

PRAYER FOR CONSECRATION.

HYMN—"We Thank Thee, Lord, Thy Paths of Service Lead."

Pilgrim Fellowship

"Youth at Work in the Church"

Emily Carleton Lester, Editor

EASTERN VIRGINIA PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

Conference.

The Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship is to have charge of the evening session of Conference on Thursday, November 2, at 7:30, in the South Norfolk Christian Church. The theme will be: "China Calls! Pilgrim Fellowship Answers." Dr. Samuel H. Leger, who has just returned to this country from China where he is one of our missionaries, will be the main speaker. Each church in Eastern Virginia is urged to have a delegation of young people present.

Special Meetings.

While Dr. Leger is in Eastern Virginia, the young people are hoping to have him speak to them several times. Plans are not yet complete, but it is hoped to have a meeting of the young people in the Norfolk area in Norfolk, on Friday evening, November 3. Another meeting for groups in the Suffolk area is tentatively planned for November 4 or 5. This will give our young people an opportunity to talk with a real-live-honest-to-goodness missionary, who has just returned from the "firing line." Do not miss this opportunity to hear him.

Bulletin.

Charles E. Heath, Jr., president of the Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship, has just issued a bulletin, telling news of that area. We quote from it: "The young people of the Newport News Church recently 'retreated' to a lovely spot on the York River to play and plan their work for the new year. The 'gang' spent Saturday night in two cabins provided by a friend of the church. Much was accomplished and the boys and girls were on time for Sunday school on Sunday morning."

Departure and Arrival.

Miss Frances Everett of Holland, Va., delegate from the Southeast to Rockford, and long-time officer of the Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship as well as a very active member of her local church, has begun her study in the field of religious education at Hartford Seminary in Connecticut. Frances was the chairman of the Southeast Mission Committee which planned and is sponsoring the China Friendship Project. . . . Miss Edna Fulcher has returned, after a year's absence in Elon College, to her home in Eastern Virginia. Edna is busily engaged at the Christian Temple, Norfolk, but will have time to help the young people in their activities throughout the Conference.

NORTH CAROLINA MEETING POSTPONED.

The meeting of the North Carolina Pilgrim Fellowship, which was to have been held at Elon College, on last week-end, was postponed indefinitely. The officers are sorry that this seemed necessary, and hope that notices of the postponement reached everyone planning to attend. It is hoped that plans can be perfected for a meeting in the not-too-far-distant future.

SPECIAL PROGRAMS.

If your young people's group has not yet planned a special program for Armistice Sunday, November 12, it is not too late to do so. The Board of Christian Education, Elon College, N. C., can furnish you with some materials for this occasion—including a brief dramatic sketch by Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein which can be produced with very little scenery or practice, but which is very effective.

Thanksgiving should mean some special services in your young people's group. Some young people's groups sponsor early morning prayer services of praise and thanksgiving out-of-doors or in their churches. The young people at Elon College give up their breakfast on that day and the money it would have cost goes to the Christian Orphanage. Prepare a program for this day that will express the true spirit of Thanksgiving. Write the Board of Christian Education for help.

One request has already come to the above mentioned Board for Christmas materials. If you want to have a good program, it should be planned in advanced. Make this a memorable Christmas in your church, because of the things you do to make it so,

MUST WE HAVE WAR?

(ARMISTICE SUNDAY.)

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR NOVEMBER 5, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: James 3:13; 4:2.

Daily Readings—

Monday—War Is Born of Deceit—Prov. 12:17-22.

Tuesday—A Wholesale Slaughter—II Chron. 13:14-19.

Wednesday—Desolations Attending War—Mark 13:7-13.

Thursday—"War Is Hell"—I Sam. 31:1-10.

Friday—The Promise of Peace—Isaiah 2:1-5.

Saturday—Admonition to Pursue Peace—Rom. 14:16-19.

As long as conditions which bring war to pass exist in the world it should be clear that we shall have war. These are some of the things which cause war: economic rivalry between nations; the strong desire of nations to be economically self-sufficient; jealousy; nationalism; feelings of racial superiority; the exploitation of weak nations by strong nations; the disregard of treaties and agreements, etc.

If war is ever to be eliminated, these conditions which bring war about must be eliminated. Nations and their rulers must subordinate selfish rivalries and ambitions to a common desire for universal peace and a deep concern for the welfare of all mankind.

Let various members tell what they would like to do for peace.

In the midst of mobilized armies, keep the Christians demobilized. Avoid hatred and bitterness toward any man.

Use peace plays and pageants to make lasting impressions for peace. Hold prayer meetings and services of worship given over to the theme of world peace. Arrange for public forums, panel discussions, and speeches in the church in the interest of peace.

Short talks may be made on the following: (1) War refutes every ideal that Jesus sought to teach to the human race; (2) It is an outright denial of every ordinary human right; (3) It is wrong not only because of the sins out of which it grows, but also because of the sins that follow in its wake.

Suggested Hymns—

"O God, the Rock of Ages."

"O Zion, Haste."

"America."

BEVERAGE ALCOHOL AND SOCIAL PROGRESS.

(INTERNATIONAL TEMPERANCE SUNDAY.)

LESSON V—OCTOBER 29, 1939.

TEXT: Know ye not that the unrighteousness shall not inherit the Kingdom of God?—I Cor. 6: 9.

LESSON: Micah 2: 9-11; Luke 21: 29-31, 34-36; I Cor. 6: 9-11.

The Sunday school lesson today deals with beverage alcohol and social progress. It so happens that today is International Temperance Sunday. Thus the title and the day are very happily related one to the other. And as has so often been said in these notes the matter of whether one takes a drink or leaves it alone is not simply a personal matter. The liquor traffic has tremendous social consequences. One can not understand the condemnation which the Bible brings upon drunkenness and self-indulgence, and intemperance, unless it is seen against the background of its larger social implication.

The Kingdom of God and Social Progress.

The central theme of Jesus' ministry and his message was the kingdom of heaven. It should be understood at the very beginning that when Jesus used the term, the kingdom of heaven, he was not referring to heaven as a place, the city with golden streets, the house of many mansions eternal in the heavens. He was talking about a spiritual order, a society of men and women, boys and girls, who were united in allegiance to him as king, and who sought to do his will on earth even as it was done in heaven. The kingdom was both a present fact, and a future goal. It was already in the world, but it was far from being universal. One of the figures which Jesus used to illustrate the kingdom was a grain of mustard seed, which although very small became one of the largest of herbs, in fact a great tree. Whatever else the kingdom of heaven may mean it does mean a social order which is based on the principles and the spirit of Jesus. This kingdom of God was to be central in the religion of Jesus. Men were to seek it first, they were to pray for its coming, and they were to sacrifice in its behalf.

The kingdom of God involves social progress. It involves the progressive realization of the ideas of Jesus in social life. What place does beverage alcohol have then in the kingdom of God? Can it be justified in terms of the ideal of Jesus? It seems to the writer of these notes that beverage alcohol and the liquor traffic stand condemned on at least three points when considered in the light of the ideals of the kingdom. In the first place, it puts profits above personality, money before men, gain before goodness, cash before character. It would be too much to say that there are not high-minded men, and good men, involved in the liquor traffic. But it is a cold and brutal fact that those who make and those who distribute beverage alcohol are concerned more about profits than they are about persons. The liquor traffic degrades human personality, it robs men and women of their will power, it leads them into all kinds of excesses, it breaks up the sanctity of homes, impairs physical health, dulls and blights spiritual sensibilities. It would not be true, of course, to say that it does this in every case. And it would not be true to say that it always works the dire consequences which have been listed above. But let the record speak for itself. Whatever other argument may be made in behalf of liquor it can hardly be said that it dignifies or ennobles the mind or the human heart, that it develops character, that it increases efficiency, or that it stimulates the spiritual sensibilities of the soul. The liquor traffic has no place in the kingdom of God because of what it does essentially to human personality.

Again the liquor traffic stands condemned because it is a denial of everything which Jesus embodied in his ideal of the kingdom of God. It is not only an enemy to the individual, but in essence it is an enemy of society. It corrupts social life as well as individual character. The record of its lawlessness, of its political intrigue, of its defiance of commonly accepted standards, of its dishonest and dishonorable methods, and of its general aptitude toward society and the social institution, is against it. Think of the tragedy that it has worked in homes in which it has been used not only to excess but even more moderately. Think of the corrupt city government which it has produced and fostered. Think of the defiance of law which it has encouraged. Think of the diversion of funds from legitimate and constructive purposes to self-indulgence and licentiousness and lawlessness. One needs to keep in mind the fact that the liquor problem is as much a social problem as it is a personal problem. One can hardly be accused of being a fanatic when he states that the liquor traffic can be made to fit in with the principles and the ideals of the kingdom and the spirit of Jesus. One feels that it is one of the evils like slavery which has kept mankind in bondage to false ideals, but which is ultimately doomed because it is a denial of the purposes and love of God. And every Christian and member of the church ought to use his personal influence and his personal example against the liquor traffic, because it denies in practice the thing which he professes as an ideal.

The Kingdom of God and Worldliness.

It is a mistake to think of an international temperance lesson simply in terms of the liquor problem. The lesson includes scriptures which are a warning against a more inclusive form of worldliness. Paul calls attention that all unrighteousness is excluded from the Kingdom of God. He presents a long list of types of men who have no part in the spiritual social order which we call the kingdom of God. They are ugly words which he uses—fornicators, idolators, adulterers, effeminate abusers of themselves with men, thieves, covetous, drunkards, revilers, extortioners—these shall not inherit the kingdom of God. In short all worldliness is an enemy to the spiritual life. Let every man beware lest in condemning a man because he is a drunkard he condemns himself because he is something just as bad.

Worldliness and the Grace of God.

Paul reminds his Corinthian readers that at one time they belonged in the classification listed above. But by the grace of God through faith in Jesus Christ they had been saved, they had been sanctified, they had been justified. God is able to save unto the uttermost those who come unto him through faith in Christ. By his grace we become creatures. No man is beyond his redemptive grace. Let ministers and Sunday school teachers proclaim again and again the grace of God as manifested in Christ and his redemptive love.

MONDAY.

"A DEPRESSION HOPE."

"I have left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which not bowed unto Baal."—I Kings 19:18.

We think we live in a Godless age, that His children have forsaken their covenant, deserted the altars of the home and the church, and that all are growing selfish and sufficient, till, like Elijah, the few faithful ones feel that they, even they only, remain to serve God.

We are deeply impressed with something different. In many lands the number of earnest, Spiritually-minded people is vastly increasing. The desire for transformation of society into Christ's way is growing. A greater force is mustering for a New Day in Christ. Will you join us?

Prayer—O Lord, we wait for the baring of Thine arm to make right that which is wrong. Help us to enlist. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"ATTENTION!!!"

"Great peace have they that love Thy law and nothing shall offend Thee."—Psalm 119:165.

After twelve days at sea we stopped at Guam. We had a rare afternoon and evening. Hundreds of us sought refreshment and recreation. Some touring the Island sight-seeing, some roaming the streets of Agana, some frequenting the shops, some quaffing at the bars and some swinging at the dance. We found our joy in the home of the Chaplain of the station who is doing a marvelous work in education of the natives and preaching Christ to the American population.

One memory outstanding. At eventide, when it was time for young Paul, Jr., to retire, all were called to evening prayer, and young Paul himself closed the series with his own leadership. That was an abode of peace and inspiration. "Great peace have they that love Thy law." Let us not neglect devotions in our home.

Prayer—O Lord, lift up the level of our thinking where we may find Thee. May the fellowship of one another breathe into our souls the pure air of Thy Spirit through Jesus. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"A HOME IN GOD."

"Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations."—Psalm 90:1.

Many pleasant reflections are called up in our visit to the America homes in Guam. Hundreds of visits to other Godly homes in all countries come trooping through our brain. They all reflect the center, not only of life's ambitions and activities, but also the pure joys and loves, and liberties of man's existence.

In like maner the Christian finds that dwelling in the Lord through Christ is a sufficiency in love, joy and peace. Life in His presence is a reality. Security and satisfaction are found in Him, because of the consciousness that our lives are "hid with Christ in Him"

"Hiding in Thee!
Hiding in Thee,
Thou blest rock of ages
I'm hiding in Thee."

Prayer—O Lord, Thou art our dwelling place, and to Thee this day our spirits turn—Be Thou all things that we need, and make us all that a true child should be. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"GOD'S PERSONAL CARE."

"He careth for you."—I Peter 5:7.

In the Southern Pacific every day brings us a most gorgeous sunset. They are such an inspiration one cannot restrain the impulse to tell it. We have just watched the most beautiful one we ever saw.

He who paints the skies with such ever changing beauty and loveliness keeps the swirling spheres in space, and holds the mighty seas in the hollow of His hand, displays His greatest love and care for individual persons. We would marvel more that He marks the sparrow's fall, that he feels your and my sorrow. William T. Ellis says, "That is why Jesus called Him 'Father.'" God's greatness is in His goodness. He promises us that goodness. Let us try for it.

Prayer—Our Father, teach us how to cast our care, yea, ourselves on Thee. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"HOW WE FORGET."

"Consider the lilies of the field . . . Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."—Matt. 6:28, 29.

"The firmament showeth his handiwork."—Psalm 19:1.

"How excellent is Thy name in all the earth."—Psalm 8:9.

In our mad rush at things, in the confusions and uncertainties of life, we often forget to see beauty and glory of our surroundings, the richness of the gardens, the beauty of the fields, the magnificence of the hills, the weathered loveliness of the eternal rocks, and even the sunset glory. Nevertheless, they are eternal silent witnesses of Him.

Likewise, our soul rushes on and forgets something. There lies in the background of life scenes of peace and quiet, loveliness and rest, and all for the turning and looking—all for the asking.

Prayer—O Lord, save us from thoughtlessness and forgetfulness of the rich and beautiful things of life that are about us. In them help us to see Thee. Amen.

WHAT HAS THE CHURCH OF CHRIST TO DO WITH THIS WAR?

"The fruit of righteousness is sown in peace for those that make peace."—James 3:18.

It is not a religious or "Holy War." It has not sprung from any conflict between churches or from any act of religious leaders. It has come rather, we think, out of unrestrained lust for power. It is a good verification of James 4:1, 2—"Whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts which war in your members. Ye lust and have not; ye kill and desire to have and cannot obtain." Then you go out after it with blood in your eye determined to have. Because the other fellow refuses to give up his own, there is war. That is a plain statement that war is the determination of the have-nots to have.

When the World War of 1914 broke out there was an international world conference of religious men just getting under way at Constance, Germany. It was broken up at once and I well remember the dismay and despair expressed by many of its members at the breakdown of civilization that had occurred. Many felt it was the collapse of Christianity which they thought should have prevented such a war. It had seemed to many that civilized countries had arrived at the state when permanent peace and prosperity was just upon the horizon. It is different this time. The nations are moving into war after years of world-wide depression from which they have not fully recovered. There have been repeated outbreaks of fighting and downright aggression in different parts of the world. The great plan of keeping the peace of the world through the League of Nations has not been working. Nationalism, both political and economic, has been growing more and more intense. Wars have been carried on without the name of war, but none the less devastating. An atmosphere of fear and suspicion has permeated the world; many nations were suffering from a war of nerves before this war broke out. It was a state of fever from which old-time physicians thought there was no relief except by blood-letting.

Now while the Christian religion has suffered much in these late years and has even been expelled or repressed in some countries, yet it is a remarkable fact that in these late days the Christian Churches almost alone among modern institutions have been showing marked evidences of unity. The word "ecumenical" has come into use again after many centuries to describe great governments toward Christian unity on the part of churches of nearly every type on every continent. To name but three of them within the last two years, there was the Conference on Life and Work at Oxford, England; the Conference on Faith and Order at Edinburgh, Scotland; and the Missionary Conference at Madras, India. These represented practically all Protestant Churches, and the Greek Catholic as well (except at Madras). There is also a Universal Council of Churches and the World Alliance for International Friendship through the churches. Out of these has come already a World Council of Churches, slowly coming into permanence.

The significant thing for us is that this World Council of Churches effected a gathering of thirty-four persons only this last July in the heart of Europe to express, if possible, the mind of the Church on the imperative question of war and peace in the time of an international crisis. The leaders of the Christian Church in all lands have not been blind to the fatal drift of modern society towards chaos. The men (including two women) were not mere ecclesiastics, detached observers, or irresponsible idealists; some of them had had official connection with the Hague Conference, with the Versailles Peace Conference, with the Hague Court, with the Reparations Commission, the Lima Conference, with tariff boards and International Red Cross. Many of them had been at the three conferences first mentioned. They represented Anglican, Baptist, Congregational-Christian, Episcopal, Lutheran, Methodist, Eastern Orthodox, Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, and the Roman Catholic Church in the person of two laymen. They came from Europe, America and Eastern Asia. All understood English, nearly all spoke it fluently. It was a time of

SATURDAY.

"THE BIRTH OF SOVEREIGNTY."

"Why do heathens rage?"

"Yet have I set my king upon my Holy hill."

"I will declare the decree."—Read Psalm 8.

Chaplain R. R. Marken, of the Fourth Regiment of Marines in Shanghai, preached to a theatre full of people, Sunday, July 2, on "The Birth of a Nation." In the course of his discourse he said that out of the Revolution a new structure in human rights was created and that righteousness at any cost is better than peace at any price.

This is a turbulent world today. All nations are touched with the threat and the fever of war. But we like to hope throughout the hopelessness of it all that the long view means progress. These are days of terrible pangs, but we hope with pangs of something newer and better for humanity.

Prayer—Our Father, midst these turbulent times, give unto us the heaven of Christian ideals, human rights, and man's more glorious being. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"THE HIGHEST ARTISTRY."

"Stir into flame the gift of God that is in Thee."—II Tim. 1:6.

One nation of people excels all others in artistry; the artistry of the hands—the Chinese. Over 4000,000,000 of them earn their existence with their hands. Their carvings of wood, ivory and stone; their weavings of rugs, tapestries and silks; their embroidery, lacework, point viennese, china-ware, glazing and china-painting is the world's finest work of this kind. Nothing in the world compares with it. The Chinese have another excellence: peace, contentment, and brotherly love. They do not know how to war and after these millions of years they have nothing to war with.

Comment—Into every task and into every life it is possible to put artistry. There are myriads of cooks but few who put art in preparing food.

There is an art that but few excel too well in, the art of loving, of giving, making peace, being long-suffering, of gentleness, meekness, and courtesy.

Prayer—Dear Father, whose plans for us all excel our ambitions, help us to study these things more and become genuine artists in these trials of Thy Kingdom. Amen.

SUN'S PULPIT.

great tension in Europe as war drew on apace. Yet all these were bound together by a greater loyalty than that of any one nation—they were all of one fellowship in Christ. Says one of its members: "Although we were in the midst of a war psychology which enveloped us like a fog of poison gas, yet in the end Christian forbearance and a deep resolve to speak and to hear the truth in love, and the determination not to fail the Christian cause, held us together." A meeting like this and their action seems to me a long advance over the Christian situation and the lack of action twenty-five years ago.

Here are some of the conclusions of this strategic body on the strategy of peace. They dealt with the human element in both political and economical relations. First of all, political power, they said, must be exercised with a full sense of responsibility to men and nations. The strong state must consider the weaker and in economic relations there must be equality of opportunity. In place of the supremacy of any nation or race or class, Christian principles mean the recognition of the sovereignty of God and the brotherhood of man. For this end there needs to be an international community in place of the present international anarchy. The people of every state need a conscience which recognizes the rights of other people as well as their own. Hence there is needed for all nations an organization to prevent international violence and to make justice effective between nations, to make the rules of neighborliness between states equal to those between individuals. This is to say that peace is secure between nations who have sown the seed of righteousness. The peace makers are those who do the right thing by their neighbors. In a Christian world this will become the rule of nations also. As the principal questions at issue between nations are economic, an international Christianity must call for economic justice both within the national community and between them (such communities). Every nation should have the right to live according to its own policies, but without destroying the same freedom in another nation. And within a nation its own people should not be regarded as machines for production, but as responsible human agents.

"The Church is the leaven by which Christ transforms the life of society and the nations." This was affirmed by the Council at Oxford and reaffirmed last summer. When Jesus said, "Ye are the light of the world" to his disciples, he expected them to bring that light to bear with transforming power upon all the relations of men. The Church was not to be hid in a corner and be ashamed of itself. "A city set on a hill," he added, "cannot be hid." The truth of Christ is to provide the moral light by which men may walk, not to destroy, but to minister to one another. The Church has been too much afraid of "the powers that be" to perform its true function for the world. It is to be like salt to make the world a wholesome place to live in. Therefore economic problems are to be studied from the point of view of Christian brotherhood. This is imperative for the peace of the world. The Church is the true "International." God only is absolute and has the sole right to claim unconditional loyalty.

The trouble in the world now is the minor absolutism of rulers who regard any disloyalty to themselves, even in word or thought, as treason to the state. The claims of God are belittled or ignored. This is illustrated by an incident reported from Russia where a textbook for the schools printed the word God with a capital letter. The whole edition of a million books was ordered sent back to the printer to have that capital "G" reduced to a small "g." And the scholars had to wait until it was done.

The basis of the Christian gospel is that the world is a living organism created by the will of God; if living it is growing, changing in the direction of the preservation of human rights and the attainment of human happiness. The Christian Church cannot see the body of humanity torn to pieces and pass by on the other side. It cannot tolerate usurpers in the place of absolute authority wreaking destruction by unlimited force, robbing men of conscience and reducing their own people to slavery of mind and body.

The Church, therefore, has a great Evangel for the nations. Its gospel is "love your enemies." It believes that in Christ alone the deepest divisions between men can be overcome. Its foreign missionary work is an indispensable contribution to the creation of an international fellowship. The Church has a mission now to the nations who have suppressed it. The Church cannot accept the counsels of despair; to do so would be to deny its faith and lead the way to chaos. It cannot lend itself to the propaganda of hate. When there is war it should minister to the prisoners of war and to the victims of the war's devastation. It should realize that the blame and sin of war can never be due to one person alone.

If the Church has come first to realize the fact, the growing fact, of human solidarity, of a universal community, then must Christians cultivate good will continually, and especially awaken and establish brotherly relations between churches of different nations. We should keep in touch across the frontiers of human society. We must realize that any injustice is a barrier to peace whether at home or abroad. We must wait upon God for daily guidance and "expect great things of God" in human affairs. These are some of the suggestions for Christians made in this Council in July.

On every side in these days we hear definite confessions of our need of God in our practically godless lives. A great financial statistician like Roger Babson repeatedly calls for a genuine revival of religion as the one imperative need of American life. Spiritual rearmament is the word of many: Ex-President Hoover says what the world needs is "a return to sanity and a moral and spiritual rearmament." Governor Saltonstall of Massachusetts says that "inner discipline of ourselves and obedience to God must replace moral anarchy and selfishness." The Queen of the Netherlands calls for "moral rearmament to avoid decay and collapse and to get on the upgrade again." Secretary Hull declares that "our own country urgently needs a moral and spiritual awakening."

The reality and vitality of religion is evident among those who think and feel. It is the Spirit of God moving on the waters. It is time to give God the right of way in human life.

In Memoriam

BEANE.

Brother Ernest Beane was called to his reward on June 30, 1939. In his passing Pleasant Ridge Christian Church has lost a faithful member, who had served efficiently both as superintendent of the Sunday school and as a deacon. We desire to record our sorrow in his passing and also to express our appreciation for his life of service among us.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to God's will.
2. That we extend our sympathy to his family and point them to God, our Father, who doeth all things well.
3. That a copy of these resolutions be recorded in our minutes, a copy sent to the family, and a copy sent to "The Christian Sun" and to our County papers.

CREEKMORE.

Mrs. Syreptia Creekmore left us for the Beyond early Thursday morning, October 12, 1939, at the age of eighty-nine years. She was a member of Berea (Norfolk) Christian Church for more than sixty years. She leaves one son, two grandchildren, and a host of friends. Sister Creekmore was an invalid, keeping her bed most of the time for the past three or four years. Yet, she was always patient, quiet, reserved and faithful in her Master's service. So sweet was her manner that it was a benediction to visit her.

Her funeral was conducted at her church by her pastor, Rev. Joe French. Rev. J. F. Morgan sang, "What a Friend We Have in Jesus" and "Asleep in Jesus." Quite a crowd attended the funeral. She was buried in Berea Cemetery.

May the Lord comfort those who mourn.
M. W. HOLLOWELL.

BROOKS.

Mrs. Nora Law Brooks, wife of Thomas A. Brooks, passed away about 1 P. M., on October 3, 1939, after an illness of five months. She was forty-seven years of age.

Surviving are her husband; two sons and two daughters, Wesley Walsa of San Diego, Calif.; Winston Thomas, Miss Hazel Belle and Miss Norris Ray, all of Lynchburg, Va.

Funeral services were conducted at the First Congregational-Christian Church, Lynchburg, Va., by her pastor, Rev. J. Howard Smith, assisted by Rev. J. W. Marsh of the Forest Methodist Church.

May the Father lend His comfort to the bereaved.

J. HOWARD SMITH,

POWELL.

Whereas, on March 2, 1939, our Heavenly Father in His great wisdom called from our midst our friend and neighbor, Rufus H. Powell, and

Whereas, we realize that in the loss of a faithful companion and father, and as the shadows of sorrow hover near and bring grief to this family:

Now be it resolved:

1. That, while we mourn his loss, we must bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well.
2. That, while Oak Grove Church has lost a loyal member, and the community has lost a loyal neighbor, we feel that this loss will be his gain.
3. That we extend to the bereaved family our sympathy, and that we ever hold his friendship in warm remembrance.
4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to "The Christian Sun" for publication, and a copy be spread upon the minutes of Oak Grove Church.

Respectfully submitted,
Mrs. ETHEL PARKER,
G. EMORY ROUNTREE,
H. V. BEAMON,
Committee.

GERRINGER.

Mr. Andrew D. Gerringer was born October 20, 1868, in Orange County, N. C., and died on September 1, 1939. On March 7, 1889, he married Miss Ida Cummings, and to this union were born Holt R., Gilbert W., Vera, and one daughter who preceded her father in death.

He was a charter member and deacon of Monticello Christian Church. Later he transferred his membership to Hine's Chapel, where he was a loyal and faithful member and deacon until his death.

He was interested in every phase of Conference life, zealous for his convictions, courageous in his faith, and loyal in his support. He always attended the Annual Conference.

Funeral services were held in Apple's Chapel Church and his body was laid to rest in the church cemetery. Officiating ministers were: Rev. C. L. Moody, Rev. W. E. Wisseman, and the writer.

May God comfort the bereaved family.

RAMSEUR—YOUNG PEOPLE.

The young people's society of Ramseur Christian Church is composed of twenty-two members, all of whom are usually present at every meeting. The meetings are held monthly in the homes. After the program we have socials during which games are played and refreshments are served.

Our money is raised by free will offerings, and we met our goal for this year. Interest in our society is increasing, and under the direction of our two capable sponsors we hope to make our society the best possible.

MARY LEE CRAVEN,
Secretary.

PARK'S CROSS ROADS—YOUNG PEOPLE.

Our young people's society was organized at Park's Cross Roads in August, 1938. The first Sunday of each month was set aside for our meetings. We have grown from twenty-five members to forty. We collected $6.00 last year, and sent $12.91 to the treasurer this year.

Program materials were prepared by a program committee and we did not use any study books.

Who is there who can always see the shadow of the cross falling upon his banking account? Who is there who has the mark of the nails and the print of the spear in his plans and life, his love and devotion and daily program of intercession? Who is there who has heard the word of Jesus and is quietly, obediently, every day, as He has told you and me, taking up his cross to follow Him?"

The Church Year

By AUBREY C. TODD.

What to Do in November:

To know what to do is one-third of the task completed. The majority of us spend as much time deciding on subjects and plans as we do in completing the plans. In that case, November should be an easy and busy month for us. The theme for each Sunday has already been designated, and we have long been thinking of the special days that are coming.

The first Sunday in November is Commemoration Sunday, at which time is celebrated the commemoration of all the faithful departed. "Let us now praise famous men." Some of the older churches will want to remember great men and women who have helped in the work of the churches. The newer churches will recognize famous men of the Universal Church.

The second Sunday in the month is Armistice Sunday. Pray for peace. The best way that God answers prayer is by using the prayer to influence lives. It is in such services as these that God calls men and women to lead the world to a better day. A litany of remembrance and dedication for this service is published in the October "Missionary Herald." Copies of this litany may be secured from the Missions Council for one dollar per hundred.

The third Sunday has been designated by the Laymen's Missionary Movement as Men and Missions Sunday. It is customary on this day to have the men in the church assist in conducting the services. If there are not men in your church who are accustomed to speaking in public, it may be that one of them will read the Scripture or lead in prayer, or a quartet can be arranged. This service has two advantages. It gives the layman an active part and recognition in the main service of the church. It also has the advantage of identifying the men of the church with the missionary movement, which has been carried on largely by the women.

The last Sunday in the month is Thanksgiving Sunday. It has the advantage of coming between the new and traditional dates for Thanksgiving, so regardless of when your members celebrate the day, you will get both the traditionalists and the moderns. It is customary that the Thanksgiving offering be given to the Orphanage. In addition to the services at the church, some ministers have the commendable habit of furnishing literature to their members to be used on Thanksgiving Day in their home devotions.

That takes care of the Sundays, but there is still a great deal more to be done in November. For example, there are the conferences; reports to be completed, apportionments to be filled, delegates to be elected. Ministers should not forget the retreats that are to be held this month. Then there is the matter of Advent and Christmastide. Don't wait until December to make your plans for these. Begin now, and make this Christmas one that will live in the hearts of your people.

VOL. XCI. RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1939. No. 44.

A Mighty Fortress Is Our God

A mighty fortress is our God,
A bulwark never failing;
Our helper he, amid the flood
Of mortal ills prevailing.
For still our ancient foe
Doth seek to work us woe;
His craft and power are great;
And armed with cruel hate,
On earth is not his equal.

Did we in our own strength confide,
Our striving would be losing;
Were not the right man on our side,
The man of God's own choosing.
Dost ask who that may be?
Christ Jesus, it is he,
Lord Sabaoth his name,
From age to age the same,
And he must win the battle.

And though this world, with devils filled,
Should threaten to undo us;
We will not fear, for God hath willed
His truth to triumph through us.
The prince of darkness grim,
We tremble not for him;
His rage we can endure,
For lo, his doom is sure,
One little word shall fell him.

That word above all earthly powers,
No thanks to them, abideth;
The Spirit and the gifts are ours
Through him who with us sideth;
Let goods and kindred go,
This mortal life also;
The body they may kill;
God's truth abideth still,
His kingdom is forever.

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

Amelia Christian Church, near Clayton, N. C., held its annual Harvest Day on October 25. There was a service at eleven o'clock, picnic dinner on the grounds, and then a sale of all kinds of country produce in the afternoon. Rev. R. T. Grissom is the pastor of this church.

Chaplain H. E. Rountree, U. S. Navy, author editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN's Quiet Hour page for the past eighteen years, who has been an ambulant patient at the Naval Hospital, San Diego, Calif., for the past six weeks, underwent an operation Wednesday, the first of November. It is reported that he is doing well.

Have you looked at the date on the label of your paper recently? It will save the office of THE CHRISTIAN SUN much time and money if you will send in your renewal subscription without having to be reminded about it in the form of a letter. If your label does not read 12-1-39, or later, it is time you sent your renewal to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Elon College, N. C. Your cooperation in this matter will be greatly appreciated.

Do you read the programs of Conferences, women's meetings, and reports of local groups from parts of the country other than the ones in your own area? Often you will find in these programs new ideas and new plans which would benefit us if we would adapt them to our own use. There is a danger of "doing the same old thing in the same old way" until it becomes boring and does not inspire us to go onward and upward—even in our church affairs.

IMPROVEMENTS AT NOON DAY.

I began my new Conference year's work at Noon Day Christian Church (Alabama) on the fourth Sunday in October. We had a very fine service and a splendid attendance.

The Sunday school here is taking on new life and interest, due largely to the progressive ideas of Prof. Deloach, agricultural teacher of New Hope High School, who is the fine superintendent of our Sunday school. A Sunday School Council has been organized and their first meeting resulted in the submission of plans for the betterment of the church and Sunday school. The following suggestions were all adopted: (1) That the hour of meeting be changed from 10:00 A. M. to 9:45 A. M. (2) That the pianist play a prelude at the time of the assembling of the people. (3) That the deacons employ someone to keep the church in order, and that this janitor be required to have the church clean and comfortable one hour before the assembling of the people. In my judgment, these are marks of improvement. Also, on each Sunday morning one of the classes will have charge of the devotional service, which is a very inspiring method.

Noon Day Church is situated in one of the most prosperous sections of Randolph County, surrounded by a

A more loyal and hospitable people I have never seen. We are expecting great things from God, for we are undertaking great things for God at Noon Day.

BOOKS NEEDED.

Franklinton Christian College should have a library. Anyone desiring to give theological or religious books to a worthy and needy cause should send them to Rev. Robert L. House, c/o Rev. J. P. Mangnum, Franklinton, N. C.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

The annual session of the Western North Carolina Conference will meet on November 8-9, at Brown's Chapel Christian Church. The church is located five miles west of Hemp on the Norfolk Southern Railroad. It is eight miles east of Star and twelve miles south of Seagrove. Perhaps the best route for people coming from points north, east, or south of Hemp is to come through there.

NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

The North Carolina and Virginia Conference will meet with Bethlehem Christian Church, Altamahaw, N. C., on November 14, 15, and 16. Those who wish entertainment at night will please notify Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, Route 4, Burlington, N. C., or the church secretary, Mr. Clyde Iseley, at the same address.

Not a little is said in Scripture of the angelic realm. We hear the morning stars singing their maiden song, and we take shelter from the flashing of their silver wings. Rank upon rank they rise, angels and arch-angels, cherubim and seraphim, principalities and powers, authorities and dominions, thrones, and countless dignities unnamed, of intelligence vast, of strength incredible, of wisdom profound, and of powers amazing. Yet "far above all" there is seated a Man with the print of the nails in His hands and feet. Above them all, the mighty power of God has exalted and enthroned the Christ. The once crucified One, rising from the grave, passed through and beyond all successive ranks of angelic powers, until there was no grandeur which He had not left behind."

"We make a mistake in trying always to clear ourselves; we should be wiser to go straight on, humbly doing the next thing, and leaving God to vindicate us. 'He shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noon-day.' There may come hours in our lives when we shall be misunderstood, falsely accused. At such times it is very difficult not to act on the policy of the men around us in the world. They at once appeal to law and force and public opinion. But the believer takes his case into a higher court, and lays it before his God."

METHODIST PROTESTANT HERALD VALEDICTORY.

On October 26, 1939, our highly esteemed neighbor, the Methodist Protestant-Herald, published in Greensboro, N. C., sang its swan song and passed into history. For forty-five years this church paper of the Methodist Protestants in North Carolina has contributed to the growth of that Church and to the religious development of North Carolina.

The merger of Methodism made it seem unwise for the "Herald" and the "Christian Advocate," both printed in the same city, to continue. It was agreed by those in charge that the "Herald" would be discontinued and that its constituency should be served by the larger, and to be developed, "Christian Advocate." In this way most of the values of the "Herald" will be conserved and the united Church of Methodists will be efficiently served.

"The Christian Sun" is among those who feel keenly the departure of an old and worthy friend and companion, and rejoices with them in the hope that the new dawn will prove to be a brighter day for Methodists in North Carolina, and hence a brighter day for all the people of that good state.

DO WE WANT A CHURCH PAPER?

The title of this article is not a rhetorical question. It is a very serious matter that demands an answer. The passing of our contemporary makes us consider our lease on life. And very frankly, that lease is none too sure. At present the pulse-beat is slow and weak. There are symptoms that seem to be dangerous. The difficulty of getting new subscribers, the ease with which some say, "Stop my paper," and the very small income from subscriptions are all danger signals. And there are others.

But there are also encouraging signs of life and vitality. Letters come to the office occasionally from those who have read the paper for half a century or more who speak with affection and appreciation of "The Christian Sun." Sunday school teachers say the notes on the lesson are worth the price of the paper. Missionary societies use the paper for their publicity purposes. Many young people's societies depend upon the paper for materials, and so do some missionary societies. Church leaders here and there sometimes say some very kind things about our paper. These and other things show that "The Christian Sun" is far from dead, and indicate that it should have a very healthy and happy future. For ninety-five years its light has shined in the homes of our people. There is no reason why it should cease now.

If the paper is to continue to live and bless our homes, the churches must get behind it and see that the paper gets into the homes of our people. The response to this necessity will answer the question: Do we want a church paper in the Southern Convention?

THE AMERICAN BOARD.

For a hundred and thirty times the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions has met in annual session. This writer had the honor of being among those present in St. Louis last week. From the four corners of the earth men and women came to consider the work of our Church around the world. Japanese and Chinese occupied the same platform and spoke with great earnestness concerning the Church of Christ in their countries and in others. Missionaries told of the progress of the Church in Africa, India, Mexico, Turkey, Syria, Greece, and the Philippines. World travelers presented glimpses of the ecumenical Church, the Christian Church, around the world. Strong pleas were made for the brotherhood of mankind—the kind of brotherhood that crosses races and nations and binds together all those who love the Lord Christ and seek to do His will. In such a meeting one feels the tug at the heart of men in need everywhere. Japanese soldiers committing suicide rather than fight their friends, five hospitals in China with only three doctors, thousands of Outcastes in India standing at the door of the Church pleading for membership, a church in Africa with 4,000 members and 3,000 others in preparation for membership whose missionary pastor is soon to retire and none to take his place, these and other such scenes were portrayed and must stare one in the face both night and day until something can be done to aid the progress of the Church.

What are we doing about such conditions? Is this Church of ours really trying to meet such opportunities and to minister in the name of Christ where the call is greatest? Do we radiate the love of Christ so it shines to the far places of the earth with attractive brilliance? Do the people in our churches really pray and work and give for the salvation of the world in which we must make our home for years to come?

Not much! Last year we contributed an average of fifty cents per member for the Christian Church outside of America. We called home eleven missionaries more than we sent to the fields that are begging for help. We let our missionaries who are in China do the best they can to feed thousands of refugees from war and flood while they work on reduced salaries and with reduced budgets and helpers.

The picture of our foreign missionary work sadly indicates a growing selfishness on the part of our church people in America at a time when the chances to help and to win the world are greatly multiplied. Churches across the country erect new buildings, lay new carpets, and increase salaries for themselves while they deliberately ask for decreased apportionments for missionary work, or else simply let the matter slide without serious consideration.

In the face of these two astounding facts—tremendous opportunities and decreas- (Continued on page 6.)

SUFFOLK LETTER.

"It would be a shame on the nation and a disgrace to the pulpit to make war on flies and mosquitoes and leave the saloon and the brothel." So wrote the late Dr. W. W. Staley in 1914. These words were delivered in an address to ministers. Twenty-five years ago the church was involved in the war on flies, mosquitoes, the saloon, and the brothel. The saloon and the brothel were voted out. Under the guise of "control" the liquor traffic has been re-established, under state and national protection, and it is a long, long way to temperance and sobriety.

The flies and the mosquitoes are with us yet. They carry their deadly trail of disease germs into the kitchen, the nursery, the living room, the office and the workshop. People have learned to screen their homes to safeguard the health of the community. Under the direction of science the breeding places of flies and mosquitoes have been revealed, and modern methods of ridding the community of these pests have been applied to this problem.

Flies and mosquitoes are such little things. Many people remember the time when they were considered harmless, although very annoying. Doors and windows were not screened against them. They were endured as a necessary nuisance, but not regarded as dangerous to health; yet it was admitted that they were not conducive to happiness. When the idea was advanced that flies carried typhoid fever germs, and mosquitoes were the carriers of malaria and yellow fever, as well as some other diseases, the public was skeptical and critical. But science proved its case and war was declared on these little pests. It would be considered foolish to return to the old method of letting flies and mosquitoes have the freedom of our homes and places of business. Education on public sentiment has changed the mind and attitude of the people towards flies and mosquitoes.

Forty years ago, when the ladies wore dresses which trailed the floors and sidewalks, it was a custom to spit on the floors of churches, schools, theatres and other public buildings, and to use the sidewalks of public streets for the same purpose. Many a beautiful dress was ruined by filthy tobacco juice and germ-laden expectoration. Science and religion joined hands in this field and war was declared upon this dangerous habit. Of course people—some members of churches—became angry when the first signs, "Please Do Not Spit On the Floor" appeared. Custodians of churches and other public buildings no longer have to empty "spittoons" and scrub the floors to remove the marks of such a dangerous habit.

Are there any other habits, generally accepted as essential to freedom, liberty and happiness, which should be scientifically investigated and removed from our daily life? Has not science deliberately and clearly discovered and declared that alcohol is a poison? In the name of health, is it not true that the habitual use of alcohol as a beverage, leaves its trail of shattered nerves, weakened wills and lowered resistance to disease? Is there any physical reason why social occasions are not considered up to date, unless an opportunity is given to take a drink? Is it not possible that the present boost in the use of alcohol liquors, as a beverage, is due in part to the desire of the dealers to make easy profits? What would happen if raising flies and mosquitoes were as profitable as making and selling intoxicating beverages? There is a need for frank, unbiased study of many of our present social problems, and when guided by the light of Divine revelation, great changes may come to pass in our modern life. Public opinion has not made its last and final change.

ELON'S OPPORTUNITY.

More than fifty years ago the Christian Church in the South was contending for a first-class four-year college in which her young people together with other young people were to be trained in the field of higher education in a thoroughly Christian environment. The contention resulted in the founding of Elon College, Elon College, N. C. The church was not strong either numerically or financially, but it did have a consecrated determination. The college was built. The church contributed freely and generously. Friends of Christian higher education congratulated the church on its vision and purpose and joined with it in the support of the college.

Elon has always maintained a high standard of scholarship, placing major emphasis upon character and Christian teachings. Like many church colleges, it has been greatly handicapped because of the lack of funds. It has had periods, of course, in which it had sufficient money to expand modestly. Running through its entire life, however, has been the ever consciousness of the lack of adequate funds with which to pursue its vision and accomplish its purpose. During the past decade her debts have been painfully burdensome—a beautiful plant, splendidly equipped, but lacking in funds to provide the type of instruction and conveniences expected by the better type of high school graduate throughout the country. The drift in the financial affairs of the college since 1935 has been decidedly for improvement. The student body has increased at an unusual rate. The spirit of good will and cooperation has increased even more favorably. Today the college enjoys a patronage from the church and outside our own denomination that she has not enjoyed for some time.

Alamance County and Burlington, our home communities, are promising to come to the help of the college. The Burlington Chamber of Commerce in cooperation with the college authorities is now conducting a campaign to raise $50,000 for the college. The campaign has gotten off to a good start and promises to reach its goal. This new effort on the part of the home surroundings of the college presents to it a golden opportunity.

Considering past experiences in such campaigns, it would seem safe to say that when Alamance County contributes $50,000 toward this debt retirement campaign, the remainder of the church in and out of North Carolina and other friends will generously contribute to the remaining $84,000. Through the combined efforts of the church, the alumni, and friends of the institution, Elon College certainly has within its grasp an opportunity that it has not known before. With its present plant, cooperation and support from off the campus, free of debt, the future of the college would be inspiring. I know that there are literally hundreds and thousands of people who would be willing to do their share to the full if they knew positively that their contributions would pay the last dollar of indebtedness. In light of Elon's opportunity comes a golden opportunity to the churches of our Convention. With the support of outside sources, we are able without embarrassment to do for our institution that which we have longed to see done.

Many have been the prayers offered for Elon College. Many who have prayed for her success and future

LITTLE CREEK.

The roof has been completed and the floor laid in our new church at Little Creek, Va. We will soon have the entire building enclosed. The church is grateful to Col. J. E. West and all others who have taken part in helping to start a church where it is so vitally needed.

Rev. O. D. Poythress of South Norfolk, aided me in a two weeks' revival. Rev. J. F. Morgan and Rev. John Knight each gave us one service. The people appreciated their help. The spirit of the meeting was great from the first service. We had thirteen conversions, many re-dedications, and eight were received into full fellowship.

Elon College Golden Anniversary

GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY CLUB.

The club has had but little to say during the past weeks. Today it opens its mouth and begins to speak again.

Alamance County has been asked to raise as its share in this debt retirement campaign $50,000. The Burlington Chamber of Commerce has accepted the challenge, formed an organization, and is today in cooperation with the college conducting a county-wide campaign to secure $50,000 for the college in cash and subscriptions. The campaign is supposed to begin today, Monday.

Tuesday night of last week the General Committee, the Executive Committee, and the Initial Gifts Committee had a very inspiring meeting at the college. Thursday night the general soliciting committee composed of Burlington and other communities in the county met at the college for instructions and an inspirational meeting. At this meeting it was announced that even though the date for the beginning of the campaign for funds had not arrived, approximately $6,000 had already been pledged. The ones of us who are conducting the campaign feel in our own hearts that this effort will succeed. The following subscriptions have been made:

D. R. Fonville,

Burlington, N. C.	$ 1,000.00
Dr. C. W. McPherson,
Burlington, N. C.	1,000.00
C. A. Lea,
Burlington, N. C.	1,000.00
L. E. Smith,
Elon College, N. C.,
(Less $250 previously reported)	1,000.00
Cliff Elder,
Burlington, N. C.
(Less $50 previously reported)	500.00
C. G. Somers,
Burlington, N. C.	500.00
Herbert Coble,
Burlington, N. C.	100.00

Total for week	$ 4,800.00
Previously reported	21,100.00

Grand total $25,900.00

A number of contributions under $50 have been made. These will be reported together with others at the proper time.

have long since gone to their reward. Many who have had the college and its interests on their hearts in their private and public devotions are still with us. This is our opportunity to help answer the prayers of those who have gone and our own prayers. I cannot feel that any will neglect this opportunity but that together we shall reach the goals set for our college. Together we shall succeed, and together we shall celebrate the victory.

EDITORIAL.

ing missionary giving—the American Board balanced its budget, commissioned two fine young people for China, and set out in search of sixty other young people to fill the gaps in the ranks of our Church around the world. A great Board that has done a great work is with great courage looking to the future. It is our high privilege to share in this world-wide program.

“The work of salvation was a gradual and progressive work, although, in one aspect of it, it was instantaneous act, but the growth of the plant is progressive. We are not to be disheartened because we do not see every step of this progress. God is looking after the bearing of the fruit; God is seeing that we are growing in grace, and in the knowledge of God our Savior; and the more we grow in grace the more will we be conscious of our self-insufficiency, of our own nothingness.”

“A root set in the finest soil, in the best climate, and blessed with all that sun and air and rain can do for it, is not in so sure a way of its growth to perfection, as every man may be, whose spirit aspires after all that which God is ready and infinitely desirous to give him. For the sun meets not the springing bud that stretches towards him with half that certainty, as God, the source of all good, communicates Himself to the soul that longs to partake of Him.

“Recreation is intended to the mind as whetting is to the scythe, to sharpen on the edge of it, which otherwise would grow dull and blunt—as good no scythe as no edge.”

A LETTER FROM AN INDIAN TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER."

To the Editor of "The Indian Social Reformer"—Sir,

Together with many another college young man, I have for long been influenced by what you write and imply to be the correct attitude to the Britisher, Christian missions, Rajahs, etc.

Several years ago, something however happened that began to change my mind with regard to the correctness of your reasoning and information in some instances. While practicing at the court house one evening, a doctor friend began looking me over rather closely and said that I looked as though I had leprosy and should be examined. This I did, and his diagnosis was found to be correct. For a long time no one seemed to realize that anything was wrong, or at least said nothing about it. Then my patches rather suddenly began to grow, and I was looked at askance by my friends and practically put out of the house by my relatives.

Upon inquiry I was told that the best Leper Asylums were in the hands of Christian missions. To go to one of these "proselytizing factories," however, did not appeal to me at all after all that you had written about missions. Not having any other place to go to, I was almost forced to take refuge there however.

Entering this leper settlement out in the district was an experience that I will never forget. I was given a neat little house with two rooms. There was running water, septic tank, and everything else that was necessary. The very day I arrived the doctor came to see me. Quite contrary to my expectation he did not say anything about being a Christian, nor did he ever after during the whole time I was there. The effect of his visit will ever remain. He was a young European that reminded me of an incarnation. His English was faultless and for an hour he took time to talk to me about everything under the sun. His kindness, his sympathy, his understanding, his humility, his joy and his clear-cut answers to all my anxious questions, left no doubt in my mind but that this was a man who knew what he was talking about. During my stay there I was to see that governments from different parts of the world were sending their experts to this young man in order to learn from him. He received enough offers for big jobs during the course of the year to make any plain human being envious, and yet in spite of it all, he remained here with us lepers where he was getting a mere pittance, even feeding us at times from his own kitchen.

I had heard that there was also a European nurse in the settlement, but some days passed before I had my first interview with her. And the way this happened was peculiar. One morning quite early a young lady came in, talked to me for a short time, and then put her hand on my shoulder saying, "Don't worry, you will be all right in two years." When I complained about a sore she opened the bandage with her own hands, and had a look. I realized that she was no ordinary nurse, but it was not until that evening that I found out that she was the European nurse. When I realized that this young lady had

LIFE'S NEW DAWN.

O love that lights the eastern sky
And shrouds the evening rest,
From out whose hand the swallows fly,
Within whose heart they nest!

O life, content beneath the blue!
Or, if God will, the gray,
Then tranquil yet, still light breaks through
To melt the mist away!

O death that sails so close to shore
At twilight! From my gate
I scan the darkening sea once more,
And for its message wait.

What lies beyond the afterglow?
To life's new dawn how far?
As if an answer, spoken low,
Love lights the evening star.

—Louise F. Benson.

done what none of my relatives would do, tears came to my eyes.

There was a beautiful church in the settlement, but I had decided to keep my distance. Many a Sunday morning I had stood at the door listening to the singing and other music, but had vowed never to be caught in this "proselyting net." Yet one beautiful morning I assured myself that there would be nothing wrong in going in and having a look. I went and in some ways was conquered. Everyone was so reverent, the church so beautiful, and the service positively touching. The speaker spoke about finding your life by losing it. If anyone ever had a right to speak about this aspect of life was sure that these missionaries had. I thought of what had happened to that little laughing nurse. When I first knew her she was a plump little thing, but before the hot season was over, she looked like a faded rose. Looking at all the maggot-infected leprous sores had turned her stomach and for weeks she could not eat. At times she sank down while at work from sheer faintness. When we asked her what was wrong she smiled and said "Nothing." Many a time her leper friends united to pray to God for her. She stuck to her post, and finally conquered, but only after a terrible struggle.

Now I am home again well and hearty. Just by looking at me no one would suspect what happened to me, but the experiences at this Christian Leper Asylum will ever remain a blessed memory. At heart I am a Christian. I do not suppose it would be possible to be anything else after the experience I have had.

You will now understand why it is that I can no more joyfully assent when you throw mud at Christian movements; in fact it pains me, and I cannot help but offer a silent prayer for you whenever I find these bitter remarks made in ignorance. Purity and sacrifice and kindness cannot be eradicated by covering them with impurity, unkindness and unloveliness.

Yours, etc.,

P. GHOSE.

—From Missionary Review of the World.

"There is something in the universe which is on the side of decency, honor and good will; something which is urging men on to see the wisdom of replacing greed and cruelty by an orderly and just society; something which increasingly arouses the conscience of the world against war and pushes on toward an organized and peaceful world. That something is God! We live in a day of a new revelation coming to men in terms of these great social goals and ideals. God did not say all He had to say day before yesterday; He is saying new and greater things today as He calls on men to write new codes of social welfare and replace the crude and cruel disorder of the past with better civilization built on human values and obedient to the moral law. Men are saying that we are in the midst of a great revolution. The religious truth is that we are in the midst of a great revelation, if our eyes are not too blind to see and our ears too deaf to hear!"

"Some say they can worship God everywhere, in the fields as well as in the church. You can see the sky everywhere, but in an observatory you get a view of the firmament you get nowhere else, with special instruments under trained men."

THE ELON CAMPAIGN.

Elon College is now in its fiftieth annual session, having opened its doors for students in September, 1890, and it will, therefore, celebrate the Fiftieth Anniversary of its opening with the close of the present scholastic year in the spring of 1940. We have come a long way during this period of nearly a half century and that a great work has been done for the world and Christianity through the institution no one can deny. Dr. L. E. Smith, President, and his associates are now making a determined, not to say desperate, effort to clear the college of all its indebtedness in order that it may face the future with brighter prospect and promises for even greater service to humanity and the kingdom of righteousness in the years to come. It is natural to suppose that since the college during these now nearly fifty years has touched life, so many hundred lives in fact, at so many angles that it has made unfriends, not to say enemies, and those who are indifferent. What individual is there of us, having rendered service for fifty years has not himself often been misunderstood and misinterpreted and thus failed to make friends where his desire was really to do the best possible thing at the time and to make rather than unmake friends? However, in the light of the marvelous contribution that our Elon College has made to the cause of righteousness through the church, state and community we, all of us, can well afford to lay aside any meager prejudice that we may have had, or misunderstanding, or misinterpretation, and do at least our bit in joining the host of those who are determined if possible, by the grace of God, to clear our institution of indebtedness in celebration of its Golden Anniversary, or the completion of its fifty years of service.

At this writing Alamance County through many interested citizens is making a most commendable effort to raise and contribute to the college $50,000 as an expression of gratitude for what Elon has done and is doing for Burlington and for the County. Dr. Smith and his associates feel that if the citizens of this County will contribute $50,000, as now seems likely, the remainder of the total indebtedness of $134,000 will be contributed by alumni, and friends of the college in the churches throughout our Southern Convention, which sponsored the college and whose property the college is. When Elon opened its doors in 1890 it was reported that we had only one college graduate as pastor in any church of the Convention, namely, the late lamented Dr. W. W. Staley, who had been educated at Trinity College. Now these college graduates, nearly all of them Elon College graduates, occupy the majority of the pulpits throughout the Convention and the tendency is at present that those who graduate from the college as ministers go on for further work of preparation for the ministry. If one will take a college catalogue or one of our Christian Annuals and simply go over the list of those whose lives have been touched, benefited and blessed by the college one will be convinced that by and large it has made a contribution to the church and humanity worthy of our support and our contributions. It is indeed gratifying that so many are expressing a willingness and the expectation to contribute at least $50, one dollar for each year of the life of the college, by the time it celebrates the close of its fiftieth year next spring. Some, of course, should and will give more than $50, but practicing a little self-denial most of us who so desire can at least give $50, and every dollar will now help in this definite and determined effort, a most commendable one, on the part of the present administration.

Here's for dear "Ole Elon." As a good Quaker friend of ours used to say, "With all thy faults, I love thee still."

AN INTERESTING LETTER.

As is generally known our good women in their Missionary Societies have what they are pleased to call a Thankoffering for some project each year. The program for this Thankoffering Service was printed in last week's CHRISTIAN SUN and no doubt many societies will use the same. The women have voted this year that whatever funds are given in this Thankoffering Service, and at the meeting in which the Thankoffering program is put on, shall go to our proposed Asheboro, N. C., church, which is now in process of organization and building under the pastoral leadership of Rev. Lanson Granger. In this connection we submit a most interesting letter, which is as follows, and fully explains:

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

I read the letter which you wrote Mrs. Freeman relative to a Thankoffering, which is to be made by the various societies during the month of November to the Asheboro Church. This letter was discussed to some extent in our Sunday school yesterday and the men of the community say they want a part in building the church. They are not willing they say that the women get all the credit for this important work, therefore they challenged the women and agreed to give one dollar for every dollar which the society raises. Of course the challenge was accepted and the battle will soon be on.

We men believe that there are like groups in our various churches who would welcome the opportunity to challenge the good women if they are given the opportunity of doing so.

Yours truly,
W. H. FREEMAN,
Ether, N. C.

The check from the Woman's Board relieves a pressing demand and need this week and we are indeed grateful to the good women and to all the others who had a part in making donations to our mission cause. There is possibly no cause, enterprise, or institution of the church for which as much prayer is needed and is offered as the missionary enterprise. The writer was reading a letter recently from Dr. Fred Field Goodsell, our General Secretary for Foreign Missions, in which he pointed out the fact that there were groups gathering daily to pray to our Heavenly Father earnestly to guide them in our mission work and was reciting the fact that petitions were coming from the foreign field urging the people at home who had made contributions for missions to pray for our missionaries that they may be faithful, loyal and true in this time of stress and strain.

Gratefully,
J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

HOME MISSIONS AND WINSTON-SALEM, OR A UNITED CHURCH IN A TWIN CITY.

The United Congregational-Christian Church of Winston-Salem is a unique church. Communicants from wide areas of occupation and location fellowship together. Those with both Congregational and Christian background cooperate in the building of the present program. The tolerant principles and united spirit of the church has begun to attract representatives of other communions.

While this church is located in a lovely, peaceful section (Ardmore) of the Camel City, it does not take its cue from this patron animal saint. Rather than being slow as a camel, the church has made rapid progress during its brief history. Its membership and strength are greater already than some churches many years older.

The Mission Board has invested wisely at Winston-Salem. This is a great and growing city, located within an area of Christian Churches. The Church has an indispensable witness. It is blessed by the dominant influence and ennobling tradition of this Moravian city. The ability of its pastor has been recognized by civic leaders, and Dr. Jay is now serving his second term as president of the Parent Teachers Association. Mission work is heroic work, whether at home or a broad. Now the years of greatest struggle are over. Painstaking pastoral work has accumulated a growing list of contacts from which will come added strength to the church in the coming days.

I enjoyed a week of rich fellowship in evangelistic work with pastor and people. I rejoice in their achievements and trust that their present happy relationship may continue to bear fruit through many years of grace and harvest.

ROBERT LEE HOUSE.

INGRAM MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Ingram (Va.) Missionary Society held its first monthly meeting of the new year recently with Mrs. G. I. Satterfield, our newly elected president, presiding. A note of enthusiasm ran through the whole society, due perhaps to the meeting of the State Conference with us this month.

Six new subscriptions were secured for the Missionary Herald.

Our next meeting will be held in the home of our president. Mrs. Joe Dunn will be in charge of program based on our mission study book. After her program we will observe our Thankoffering Service, "Into All the World," at which time a special offering will be taken for our Ashboro work.

Things seem to be moving nicely with our church. We are preparing for Conference. We are very sad because of sickness in our ranks. One of our faithful deacons, Mr. Willie Whitlow, had to go to the sanitarium. He is missed very much.

MRS. B. J. EARP.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF THE GOSPEL OF JOHN.

By AUBREY C. TODD.

The Women's Missionary Societies will soon begin a new year of work. They have chosen for special study the Gospel of John. It is especially as an introduction to this study that this article is written. To get the most out of a book one should know something about the author, the purpose for which he wrote, and the age in which he wrote. One should ever keep these things in mind when reading the Gospel of John in order to understand it.

Scholars are fairly well agreed that this gospel was written by the veteran John of Ephesus, mentioned by Polycarp. The Catholic Church ascribes this gospel to the Apostle John, in order that it might be said that the book was written by one of the disciples. This theory is not at all consistent with the evidence pointing to the early martyrdom of the Apostle John, as given by Papias. It is also improbable that the son of Zebedee wrote this gospel since he was an Aramaic speaking fisherman of Galilee, whereas the gospel is written in Greek. Furthermore, there is no hint of such authorship until the third century.

The purpose of the gospel is plainly stated by the author: "But these are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name." The purpose is religious and not theological or historical. If the book is taken literally as a mere compendium of historical facts concerning Jesus, the reader is due for disappointment. For example, the cleansing of the Temple is recorded in the second chapter, but if the author had intended to give a chronologically correct account he would have put this incident in the last week of Jesus' ministry. Every illustration and every sermon in the gospel is given for the specific purpose of showing that Jesus is the Christ and that in him is life.

The advanced state of the church as recorded in this gospel, and the testimony of Papias, make it logical to assume that the gospel was written about 140 A. D. At this time Christianity was severing ties with Judaism and making a strong appeal to the Greeks. There were also many Jews who believed that John the Baptist was Messiah rather than Jesus. For a satisfying understanding of the book, these three classes should be constantly kept in mind: the ortho-

Pilgrim Fellowship

"Youth at Work in the Church"

Emily Carleton Lester, Editor

Reports coming from New England are to the effect that Miss Pattie Lee Coghill is, as usual, making a "hit" with the "Yankees." She has spent the month of October "speechifying" up there. Young people in Georgia and Florida will welcome her back to the "fold."

Do you take the Pilgrim Highroad? It is our denominational magazine, published monthly, for young people, containing material for Sunday school, young people's society, missionary society, and stories and articles for general use. Incidentally, Ye Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is the writer of the Christian Endeavor notes in the November Highroad.

The National Pilgrim Fellowship officers met in New York the last of September to make plans for the coming year. "Dot" Truitt of Greensboro, N. C., was our representative at this meeting. She reports that Dr. Henry David Gray, new director of young people's work for our denomination, is fine. You will be interested in knowing that he is planning to come to this area in January or February.

Young people are planning a program for one of the evening sessions at each of the Conferences. Rev. Samuel H. Leger of North China, will be the featured speaker. Dr. Leger was at the meeting in St. Louis and those of us who met him liked his appearance immensely. He is a "flowery" speaker, but "just folks" like the rest of us. He has worked with young people, for religious education, layman's training, and rural work have been his spheres of action. He is just back from China and so can give you up-to-the-minute news on the situation over there. Come to hear him at Conference and at special young people's meetings in your area.

Did you know that the number of missionaries we have now on the foreign field is the same number as the Congregationalists had in 1885? Did you know that our foreign mission board, the American Board, is planning to send out seventy-five new missionaries in the next five years? If you could hear the stories—five hospitals in north China with only three doctors; a missionary retiring in Africa who has a church membership of 4,000, with 3,000 in classes preparing for church membership, and no one to take his place; thousands of outcasts in India turning to Christianity—you would yearn to be able to do something "over there." Why not think seriously about foreign missionary work? You are needed.

Miss Margaret Earp, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. B. J. Earp, is in a hospital in Asheville, N. C., recuperating from a serious accident. She fell eighteen feet through a roof, smashing her left hip and pelvic bone and will have to be in the hospital for six weeks. Rev. John Chapman of our Asheville church and some of his young people have been to see Margaret. Rev. and Mrs. F. C. Lester found her in good spirits and full of hope and courage when they visited with her for a few moments last week. Many of our young people have known Margaret at the Summer Conferences at Elon, as well as during her college years there. We are sure that she will appreciate hearing from you. Take it upon yourself to send her a card, at least. Her address is Room 405, Biltmore Memorial Hospital, Asheville, N. C.

We wish that all of you might have gone to the meeting of the American Board in St. Louis last week. One of the highlights was the young people's supper where two hundred and fifty young people of the Middle West came together for fellowship and inspiration. Speakers included Miss Lillian Pickett, missionary to India; Rev. Earle Ballou, missionary to China; and Stanley Conover, one of our representatives at the World Conference of Christian Youth held in Amsterdam last summer. Walter Staves, president of the National Pilgrim Fellowship, was there, as were such old friends as Miss Lucy Eldredge, Miss Ruth Seabury, and Miss Priscilla Chase. You will be interested in knowing that Miss Chase is now the Director of Religious Education for our churches in the state of Ohio.

SCRIPTURE: Amos 8: 4-7;
James 2: 15-17.

Daily Readings—

Monday—Blessedness of the Benefactor—Psalm 41: 1-3.

Tuesday—Impartiality Advised—James 2: 1-5.

Wednesday—Continual Evidence of Poverty—Mark 14: 3-7.

Thursday—Miserly Rich vs. Miserably Poor—Luke 18: 18-23.

Friday—Love of Money, Cause of Poverty—I Tim. 6: 6-10.

Saturday—Christian Socialism, the Solution—Acts 4: 32-35.

Challenge to Thought.

According to a survey, in 1929 one-fourth of the people of our country were living in slums, or in shacks which should have been torn down. More than one-third of the homes in towns and cities, and nearly four-fifths of those in our villages, had no sanitation or running water. In 1936 the American Federation of Labor reported that between ten and fifteen million American families were living below a minimum health standard. This means that at least fifty million men, women, and children are barely existing in the richest country on earth.

Our country is producing enough for each person to have the necessities of life. Yet want and privation exist in millions of cases because of our unequal distribution of wealth, and our faulty system of consumption of goods. One per cent of the families at the top of the economic scale receive as much as forty-two per cent of the families at the bottom.

Short talks may be made on the causes of poverty:

1. Poverty is caused by war and its aftermath.
2. Poverty is caused by high tariffs which restrict the free flow of trade.
3. Unemployment is caused when machines do the work of men. One man and a machine may do the work of one hundred men.
4. Poverty is caused by human greed.

Things for Christians to Do—

- (1) Study economics, (2) Study the matter of stewardship of money, (3) Stewardship of responsibility, (4) Support the well-meaning employer in his efforts to improve working conditions and raise wage levels.

Questions for General Discussion—

1. What about the standards of living in your community? Could they be improved?

2. What about the standards of RIGHTEOUSNESS IN THE KINGDOM.

(FOR ARMISTICE SUNDAY.)

LESSON VI—NOVEMBER 5, 1939.

TEXT: Ye therefore shall be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect.

—Matthew 5: 48.

SCRIPTURE LESSON: Matthew 5: 17; 6: 18.

The lesson in full covers entirely too much ground to be included within the space of these notes. I shall comment therefore only upon the verses as printed in the text: Matthew 5: 17-20, 38-45; 6: 1-4.

Christ and the Law.

Jesus himself said that he did not come to destroy the law but to fulfill the law. Put in another way it might be said that he came to fill the law full. He put new meaning into it; he made it a matter of spirit rather than of letter. He put the emphasis upon the inner thought, inner attitude, inner motive, rather than upon the outward act. He emphasized the fact that there were certain moral and spiritual laws which were eternal. "Heaven and earth might pass away"—material things might pass away, but the principles of God will abide forever.

Jesus makes an interesting comment upon the relationship between doing and teaching the law. He puts in other words what Emerson puts in the words. "What you are makes such a noise that I can not hear what you say." Jesus says whosoever shall do and teach them—in the very doing of them he teaches them. On the other hand he said that whosoever shall break one of these commandments, and shall teach men so, that is, no matter what a man's profession may be in regard to the things of religion, his conduct is the ultimate test.

Jesus illustrates the supremacy of the spirit of the law over the letter of the law by drawing the contrast between these two in several fields of conduct. For instance, he said that murder does not consist simply in the outward act of violence, such as in taking a club and beating a man to death, taking a knife and stabbing him, but in having the spirit of anger, bitterness, hatred, or unwillingness to forgive in the heart. The same principle holds true in regard to adultery. It is not simply the act itself which Jesus condemns, although of course he did condemn this, for he believed in the sacredness and the sanctity of the home and the marriage relationship—but Jesus condemned the evil imagination, the impure thought, the spirit of lust within the heart. Once again the principle finds illustration in the matter of taking oaths. Jesus insists that a man's words ought to be taken at its face value, a man's no ought to mean no and a man's yes ought to mean yes. A man's word ought to be good, or better than his bond. One of the most searching messages of Jesus is to be found in this section in which he deals with the letter and the spirit of the law.

Righteousness That Exceeds.

Jesus said that unless the righteousness of the citizens of the kingdom of heaven exceeded the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees we should in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven. Strange words indeed! The Scribes and Pharisees were the most righteous people in the whole land in Jesus' day. They kept every jot and tittle of the law and they performed punctiliously every detail of religious ceremony and religious services. They belonged to the "religious four hundred." But their righteousness was internal, exclusive, cold, practically untouched by the emotions, and was primarily a matter of the head rather than of the heart. Jesus on the other hand insisted that true righteousness came from within. It was a matter of a man's inner spirit, of his attitude, of his response to the divine friendship. A truly righteous man is one who has such inward integrity of character that his outward acts will express sincerity and reality.

The Law of Like, and the Law of Love.

The emphasis in the Old Testament was on what might be called the law of like. It was summed up the saying, "An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth." To be sure this marked an advance over that stage in cultivation where a man might take a head for an eye or a hand or a foot for a tooth. But Jesus insisted that such a spirit had no place in the heart of the members of his kingdom. He insisted that the law of love must take the place of the law of like. Jesus knew that hate would beget hate, that bitterness would beget bitterness, that two wrongs would never make a right. In one of the most amazing utterances that ever came from the lips of man he said that we are to love our enemies, that we are to pray for them that persecute us, that we are to do to them that hate us, that we are to return good for evil. On the surface these things would seem like an impossible and impractical ideal. They seem so out of place in our modern world. People say that it simply will not work. As a matter of fact, it is the only thing that will work. Only love can conquer hate, only right can ultimately prevail over wrong. Only sacrifice can conquer selfishness.

The Second Mile.

Jesus said, "Whosoever shall compel thee to go one mile go with him two." This figure of speech was familiar to his hearers. It suggested a hated Roman soldier laying hold upon some Jewish citizen and compelling him to carry his burden for a mile, or to go on an errand of such distance. How strange it seemed to tell his hearers that if they were made to go one mile they were to go two! Here again men say that Jesus was an impractical idealist, but here again truth and practical experience are on the side of Jesus. Only those who are willing to do more than is required of them, only those who transform duties into privileges find the real meaning and the real joy of life. Only the man who does what he has to do with a grudging spirit, does it growlingly, revelliously, is bound by the hardest of drudgery. But the man who does it willingly and does it beyond what is demanded has found the secret of life, and most effectively illustrates the spirit of the kingdom.

Jesus, of course, recognized that giving had a place in the kingdom of God and in the life of citizens of that kingdom. There can be no real living without giving. There can be no growth without giving. But God is concerned far more with the spirit in which a man gives in the amount which he gives. Giving is not to be done for show. It is to be the outward expression of an inward spirit of gratitude and the recognition of God's stewardship. Jesus puts it in figurative language when he says that a man's left hand is not to know what his right hand does. A man's giving is to be done in secret as unto God, and God who sees in secret will reward him openly.

"That they may be sons of your father who is in heaven." Here is the heart of the whole matter. We are to live at our best, and we are to serve at our best, not because of fear and not primarily because of reward but primarily because we are sons and daughters of a loving heavenly Father. We are to embody His character and express His spirit in all the relationships of life. Because we are sons of the king we ought to live royal and princely lives. Because we have so freely received from our Father who is in heaven we ought as freely to give to His children who are upon earth.

MONDAY.

"TWENTY-ONE GUNS."

"This do in remembrance of me."
—Luke 22:19.

Throughout the history of the Navy it has been the custom for major ships on the Fourth of July to fire a national salute of twenty-one guns in memory of America's greatest blessing—"The Declaration of Independence." Wherever a ship may be, at home, in a foreign port, or on the high seas, this salute is rendered. Today (July 4, 1939) we are in China's Yellow Sea. At high noon attention was sounded and the guns fired—just a gesture, but a memory.

Beneath the thought is the fact of a God-given achievement, and with the thought is the fact that humanity was once set free by Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and today He is our only Savior. Daily and hourly throughout all eternity we need to be reminded of this supreme truth.

Prayer—O Lord, lift Thou up our living and our thinking by constant memories of our Savior, in whom we abide. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"CHINA'S BROKEN WALL."

"The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all."—Isa. 53:6.

At Chinwangtao we look to the north fifteen miles away, and we see the Great Wall of China as it rises from the sea shore up the mountain in the beginning of its line for over 1,000 miles.

This wall is one of the great wonders and marvels of the world. It was built to protect China from enemies ages ago. For the past many years it has been thought no longer necessary. Therefore it has been neglected and now it is tumbling down in places. What an anomaly—at a time when enemies are taking them, who also regard this wall as nothing, and devastation and destruction stalk the nation.

However, it seems to be true that an unnecessary tumbling down wall is the symbol of sinlessness. G. Matheson has aptly put it: "What is sinlessness? It is perfect unselfishness," says he. "And what is perfect unselfishness? It is the breaking of the partition between my life and other lives." So Christ broke down the wall between Him and humanity. He made us one. He made our lives a part of His. He identified our bodies with His. He did this by taking upon Himself "the iniquity of us all." What a blessed world if this were true of nations, and all walls were a true symbol of unity and brotherhood.

Prayer—Our Father, we are terrible in our sinfulness. Jesus, forgive us and banish us from all sin that we may be perfectly blameless. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"WHAT IS IT WORTH?"

"What is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"—Matt. 16:26.

There is a popular song of a few years ago which meant a lot. It included the words:

"Not where you are,
But what you are."

What is the Bible, God and Jesus worth to us when we would know what to do or which way to go?

What is the Bible, God and Jesus worth when tempted in hours of sorrow or calamity, in death?

Back of that what is the Bible, God and Jesus worth in character, not in the getting of riches, not in having pleasure. For if we got everything in the world and have no worth in us, what is it worth? We live in mind and heart, and, if the mind and heart is a hovel, a hovel it is, even though it be in a palace.

Prayer—O Lord, our Father, in Thee we live and move and have our being. Grant unto us the riches of Thy Grace. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"WITHOUT GOD."

"Having no hope and without God in the world."—Eph. 2:12.

These are sad words. They speak the tragedy of the ages. Paul says the condition of one into whose life Christ has come, but who has turned away from Him, is as bad as it was before He came.

The bewilderment of humanity about the Lord, heaven, hell, right and wrong, justice, peace, trust and mistrust, the insidious self-sufficiency, the love, is all due to trying to get along without God."

The supreme need of man, your supreme need, my supreme need, is a new heart in which human nature is replaced by divine nature, and to supply that need the presence of God within is absolutely indispensable. When God is in the soul one sees himself as he is and not as he imagines himself to be.

Prayer—O Lord, our Father, Thou art hope. Help us to trust Thee and not fear. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"MY MOST VITAL QUESTIONS."

"What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"—Matt. 16:26.

Am I trying to get along without God?

What is the Bible to me?
How much of His Spirit do I have?
How much partnership with Him do I feel?

How much do I feel the constant need of watching myself?

Can I afford to treat God and religion with indifference?

What does the presence of God mean to me when I want to know what to do and what not to do. When

HOW TO DEAL WITH TROUBLE.

"Let not your heart be troubled."—John 14: 27.

Trouble is a very real element in life; no life is immune. It is no disgrace to have troubles, but it is a disgrace to allow those troubles to master you. Jesus admonished his followers to drive trouble from their hearts, or at least to rise above it. Belief in God and in Jesus Christ is the greatest antidote to trouble.

There are different admonitions given to us as we journey along through life relative to the attitude we should take toward trouble. Some say just to ignore your trouble, but peace and victory do not come in that way. The soul rebels against the idea of dealing with trouble by trying like an ostrich to blind oneself to realities. Others say to "forget it." It may be possible to forget for a moment some minor ache of the body, but you can't do that way with an aching heart. Others say to drown your trouble in reckless living, go where the lights dazzle with brightness, where the sound of music is loud, and where merry voices ring in laughter and glee. While others say to insulate your life against trouble by a carefree attitude of indifference, so that no lightning shock of disappointment or dismay can touch you. Still others say to run away from your trouble, evade it, dodge it. But you can't always do it. Sometimes duty calls one right into trouble. The Christian refuses to run away from trouble if such means to run away from duty. Contentment of heart does not come in that way, but rather a greater trouble usually awaits the person who tries to dodge trouble at the price of honor. The Christian, though he abhors trouble, will follow duty right into the midst of trouble rather than to be unfaithful to Christ, for he believes that every call of duty is the call of his Master Lord.

A proper understanding of what trouble is and of its effect upon one's life is essential in order for a person to live the life that drives trouble from the heart. Each person thinks his troubles are especially grievous to be born. Trouble is the conflict between one's desires and one's circumstances of life. Most troubles come as a result of one's life not being in harmony with God. But trouble comes not alone to the guilty but also to the innocent who have to live in a world with the guilty. The righteous have to suffer for the unrighteous.

Jesus admonished his followers to exercise such faith in God's love and power that they would be bigger than any trouble that could come to them. No earthly trouble can daunt the life that is in fellowship with Christ. Trouble can be driven from the heart, by inviting the spirit of the triumphant Christ into our lives. Faith in Christ, and living the good life gives power to meet whatever life may have in store.

A proper attitude toward other people helps to drive trouble from our own hearts and to keep it from entering the hearts of others. People who cherish hatred, suspicion, jealousy, spite, envy, ill-will, and contempt toward others will find that such an attitude generates trouble for them. One can drive trouble from the heart by loving instead of hating, by exercising confidence instead of suspicion, by cherishing good-will instead of ill-will, and by cooperation instead of opposition. To hate another is to invite trouble into one's own soul. Hatred hurts the hater more than it hurts the one hated.

The Christian is not so much concerned about driving trouble from his own heart as he is about driving trouble from the heart of humanity. He sincerely seeks never to bring any trouble into any other heart. He rejoices in God and in life in spite of his troubles. The secret of so many troubles is half-heartedness of life—an unwillingness to take up one's cross and follow Christ enthusiastically.

FAMILY ALTAR.

I am tempted? When calamity comes? When death comes?

What is God to me in the making of character?

If I had everything in the world and still had no value in me, what would I amount to?

The supreme purpose of living is a character that measures with the character of God. How much can I believe this?

Prayer—(Pray as you feel.)

SATURDAY.

"BETTER THAN MOTION PICTURES."

"Endure hardness . . . as a good soldier of Jesus Christ."—Heb. 2: 3.

The fields of grain and gardens of flowers, the woods, the hills, the hill-sides, the swamps, the lakes, a boat, the lichens, the moss, the homes along the way, the people and their customs, the community store, and a thousand things of nature which God has given us, all suggest triumphs over adverse conditions. They all present variety of form and color of exquisite interest and beauty.

Even so is thy life. Life is not made worthwhile by comforts, ease and "canned" entertainment. The greatest are made from the great out-of-doors, in hard circumstance, by being a part of nature's universe. From this beauty of character is a reality.

Prayer—Our Father, some of us are like hothouse plants, or a tender garden plant. Some are like lichens on the rock. Make us stalwart in faith, unselfishness, and give us beauty of character. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"GOD MARCHES ON."

"Whose voice shook the earth . . . I shake . . . also heaven . . . signifyeth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain."—Heb. 12: 26, 27.

The nations are greatly concerned about the course of a few who are seeking expansion and, by force or otherwise, acquire defenseless people. Other nations are strongly protesting. This protest dramatically reveals that public opinion progresses. A generation or so ago the great nations were aggressors, and there was but little protest. That sort of thing is a closed chapter in history. For instance, slavery is gone, after thousands of years of respectability. Polygamy went. We war against alcohol and narcotics. Peace is the popular passion. The rights of man are more considered. Is it not the progress of God?

Prayer—Our Father, we thank Thee for the progress of Thy Kingdom and for the triumph of Thy truth. Amen.

"All human discoveries seem to be made only for the purpose of confirming more and more strongly the truths contained in the sacred Scriptures."

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

"And a little child shall lead them." Who is it that does not love a little child? Who is it that can turn a cold shoulder to a little child? Who is it that can deny the pathetic appeal of a little innocent child? Out of all my life's experience I have met only one mother who did not love her child. The writer well remembers thirty years ago a family lived across the street who had one little girl. The father was a kind father, and loved his little child, but the mother said she hated her. Not only did she hate her own child but she hated all children. The writer has often wondered what became of the little girl that had to grow under such conditions.

"And a little child shall lead them." The little girl whose picture appears on this page is a member of the Christian Orphanage family. Her name is "Nell." Her father died two years ago. She appeals to you and to every member of the Congregational-Christian Church to make it possible for the Christian Orphanage to reach its goal through the Thanksgiving offering in your church and Sunday school this Thanksgiving season by making your offering as large as possible. Will you deny her appeal? We still lack $8,561.10 to reach it. We have till December 31 to reach it. She and nearly one hundred other are dependent on you. We have faith enough in you to believe you will not fail us.

The Christian Orphanage Singing Class had a very happy visit Sunday afternoon at Liberty Church in Virginia, where Rev. Charlie Newman is pastor. They gave their message to a filled house. They then went to Happy Home Church and gave their message at 7:30. The good women had prepared lunch for them at Liberty Church and the ladies also gave them supper at Happy Home Church. The house was filled at Happy Home Church and seemed to enjoy the children's message very much.

INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF THE GOSPEL OF JOHN.

dox Jews, the Greeks, and the followers of the Baptists.

Some of the outstanding characteristics of the Gospel of John, which make it different from the other gospels are the emphasis upon the historical Jesus as the source of Christian religion; the use of symbolism; the resemblance to the teachings of Paul; hostility toward Gnosticism; and the author's unique idea of the church. It is interesting to notice the author's play upon the words "life," "light," and "loyalty."

In studying this gospel be sure to use up-to-date commentaries and reference books. Intensive and prolonged study has been made of this gospel by outstanding scholars, and their findings are to be respected. Two valuable books are E. J. Goodspeed's The Story of the New Testament, in which the Gospel of John takes up not more than a dozen pages; and E. F. Scott's The Historical and Religious Value of the Fourth Gospel, which is a thorough introduction in very brief compass. If a larger bibliography or a list of more critical books is desired, the Promotional Secretary or the writer of this article will be glad to offer suggestions.

Let us remember that the beneficent Creator has given us all a moral sense to be enlightened and elevated, intellectual powers to be continually exercised and invigorated, social affections to be developed and refined, and religious aspirations to be cherished and purified; that all these faculties and affections are given to enable us to secure our own happiness and promote that of others; and that he who shall most assiduously and perseveringly improve them, in humble dependence on the Divine protection and guidance and with motives of the most extensive benevolence, will be most honored, most happy, and most beloved in this life, and best prepared to appear in the presence of the great Author of them all, and await His gracious behests for a life that commences beyond the bounds of mortal vision and activity.—Seward.

In Memoriam

NORFLEET.

We, the Missionary Society of Holy Neck Christian Church, wish to pay tribute to the memory of Mrs. Willie E. Norfleet who passed away July 2, 1939.

In her passing we have lost a noble Christian character and a faithful member.

Be it resolved:

1. Though we feel keenly the loss of her sweet presence in our midst, we are grateful she lived among us as a true friend and fellow member; her quiet goodness was an inspiration to all who knew her.

2. That we hold in loving remembrance her fine Christian service.

3. That our heartfelt sympathy be extended to her family and commend them to God whose grace is sufficient in the hour of trouble.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to "The Christian Sun" for publication, and a copy be entered on the records of our society.

Mrs. HARVEY WORRELL,
 Mrs. ARNOLD SLATER,
 Mrs. C. A. PILAND,
 Committee.

CARTER.

Rev. C. W. Carter was born in 1869 and died in 1939. Bro. Carter joined the Christian Church when a young man and was faithful until death. He was an ordained minister and did a fine work in the Alabama Conference. He was president of the Conference more than once. He was a man of deep conviction, great energy, determined purpose, and consecration. His piety led him to self-deial and to abundant labors for the Church and his Lord and Master. He was a devoted, loyal, gospel preacher, true to his conviction of truth as he saw it. He was a great believer in good Christian literature. He was a subscriber to and reader of "The Christian Sun" for forty-eight years. We, of this Conference, shall see his face no more in our earthly councils, nor hear his voice in our earthly deliberations pleading for the great cause of Christ and his Church, but we, who have known him, labored with him and loved him, believe that there remaineth a rest unto the people of God and that he has entered into his rest in that house not made with hands, eternal and in the heavens and we, if faithful, shall meet him on a brighter and better shore saved by grace.

The Rev. John D. Dollar was in charge of the funeral service. A large number of preachers were present. Many of his friends from the churches where he had served as pastor attended the service.

Be it resolved by this assembly now in Conference:

1. That a good man has fallen. A brave and true citizen, friend, and Christian has gone from our midst.

2. That the brotherhood feels keenly its loss and expresses its profoudest sympathies for the family.

3. That we record his memory in the historical archives of our church by embodying this article in the minutes of the Conference, and that a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Rev. H. M. GRAY,
 Mrs. V. E. KITCHENS,

 East Alabama Association.

HUNT.

"How well she fell asleep!

Like some great river widening toward the sea;
 Calmly and grandly, silently and deep,
 Her life joined eternity."

It has pleased Almighty God in his wisdom and mercy to remove from our midst our dearly beloved sister, Mrs. G. D. Hunt, who departed this life Sunday, February 26, 1939, at her home in the Double Head Community.

She was married to Rev. G. D. Hunt on December 25, 1893, and died in the sixty-seventh year of her life.

Mrs. Hunt was always a devoted Christian. She joined the Church in her early life and remained faithful to it until her death. She rejoiced in all its victories and mourned over its failures.

She was devotedly attached to her husband and her home and loved her children and her friends as it was possible for her to love them. Mrs. Hunt was a true and trusted helpmate to her husband and was ever thoughtful of the sick and ready to lend a helping hand to the needy. In her short useful life she had a host of friends, as was so well attested by the multitude who attended the funeral services.

Mrs. Hunt's body lay in state from Sunday until Thursday afternoon, when it was buried in the cemetery at Antioch Christian Church, Chambers County. Rev. J. D. Dollar, pastor of Langdale Christian Church, and Rev. T. E. Steely, pastor of First Baptist Church, Roanoke, Ala., had charge of the funeral. Great and wonderful was the expression of sympathy and abundant and beautiful were the flowers.

She was the mother of four living children, two boys and two girls. One son, George Staley, is a minister of the same faith and order as his saintly mother.

Verily a good woman has gone to her reward and this Conference has a vacant chair in its circle. Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That in the death of our beloved sister and friend, we have lost a faithful co-worker and the husband a genial companion.

2. That we give public expression of sorrow, because of her death.

3. That a copy of the memoir be recorded in the minutes of this Conference and a copy sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Rev. H. M. GRAY,
 Mrs. V. E. KITCHENS,
 Committee.

The Christian Orphanage

Offers a Home to Homeless Boys and Girls

There is a double opportunity offered to those who contribute to the Christian Orphanage at Elon College during the Thanksgiving period.

First, there is the opportunity to make children—boys and girls, who might, except for this institution, be homeless and in want—to make children happy and conscious of the fact that there is a reason for real Thanksgiving.

Second, there is the opportunity for sharing and its effect on the one who shares of his means with others. Surely, as the Thanksgiving time approaches, there can be no greater joy than that which comes to one who makes another happy. What an opportunity for one to grow in grace and goodness.

Two great opportunities, indeed, are offered you as this Thanksgiving approaches. Do not pass them by.

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

"The preacher is not a lash to whip the people for their sins, but a candle to show them the way." Find this in an article in this paper.

Virginia missionary women are requested to join with North Carolina women in making a Thank-Offering for our new church in Asheboro, N. C. See editorial on "Woman's Board."

What church in North Carolina has paid its Conference Apportionments and pastor's salary in full for the last twenty-one years? You will find the answer in an article in this paper.

The North Carolina and Virginia Conference will meet Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of next week at Bethlehem Christian Church, Altamahaw, N. C. The Western North Carolina Conference is in session this week at Brown's Chapel.

The success of our Boards during the coming year will depend greatly on the amount of money sent in as Conference Apportionments. If you want the work to succeed, then be sure that your church does all that it is asked to do—and more, if possible.

The schedule of Dr. Erwin L. Shaver of Boston, Mass., will be found in the editorials. It is expected that Dr. Samuel H. Leger of China will speak to those especially interested in missions at the same time. Get a big crowd from your church to hear these fine leaders.

Why not make a financial canvass in your church and try to get every member to contribute regularly during the next Conference year? "Financing Our Church in 1940" is a little book prepared by our Boards to aid you. Each minister has a copy. The Promotional Secretary will count it a privilege to aid you.

Rev. J. Frank Apple of Elon College, N. C., spent the week of October 29-November 3 at Hope Mills, N. C., conducting a revival meeting at the newly organized Congregational-Christian Church there. He reports a fine meeting, friendly people, and an opportunity for pastoral leadership there. Four members were received into the church at the close of the meeting.

RECENT EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

Being secretary of a Conference was a new experience to me. While I have always known that it would take work to keep up with forty-four church reports and forty-four checks and see that the several amounts were apportioned to the several enterprises of the church, I did not realize that it was as much work as it is. Our former secretary of the Eastern Virginia Conference did it with so much ease, apparently, that it did not look like a difficult task. But Dr. I. W. Johnson had done it for twenty-nine years, and he could tell you before a Conference session began what it would look like when it ended. He was of invaluable help to me in the recent session.

The recent session was one of harmonious spirit, progressive outlook, and conveniently and hospitably housed in the beautiful South Norfolk Church. Rev. J. F. Morgan kept right in line with his predecessors in the excellent way in which he presided. He had good training under the most capable leaders who had preceded him. Under the leadership of Col. J. E. West our large rural constituency of twenty-three churches came in for good consideration under the Home Mission Committee's report, which Col. J. E. West, chairman, discussed, and which was spoken to by two addresses by capable rural pastors, Revs. Arnold Slater and H. E. Crutchfield. The Conference can be proud of its rural churches, of the Home Mission Committee, and most all of the fine leadership of our rural pastors.

The Conference session reached a high point in the ordaining of two well-trained young men to the gospel ministry, Revs. A. Lanson Granger, Jr., and Aubrey C. Todd. But others will tell you about the several unusually fine addresses, I meant only to give you a list of committees the president appointed to carry out the work of the Conference during the present year. It is hoped that each of these committees under the leadership of the chairmen will take very seriously their work, and be able to bring in reports of work done at the next session of Conference. Record, not speeches, is what we desire in the reports!

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

The Eastern Virginia Conference of Congregational and Christian Churches met in its 129th annual session in South Norfolk Christian Church on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of last week. Reports seemed to indicate a slight increase in membership, but a probable decrease in giving to benevolences.

The high point of the Conference was on the first night when A. Lanson Granger, Jr., and Aubrey C. Todd were ordained to the gospel ministry. The church was filled with people. Aubrey was in his home church and Lanson was about a mile from his home church. Hope Chapel, a little mission in Norfolk where these two men have served, came out in full force, including adults, young people, and children. The ordaining presbytery carried through an impressive ordination service.

The young people had the second night, at which time Charles Heath, Jr., presided and several young people took part on the program. The address of that evening was given by Dr. Samuel H. Leger, one of our missionaries to China.

The Conference program was composed largely of reports and addresses on the reports. No new type of work was undertaken. One new church, Little Creek, was admitted to the Conference.

Dr. Kenneth Cornwell of Allentown, Pa., a minister of the Methodist Church, and Rev. Sam N. Hurst of Driver, Va., a minister of the Baptist Church, were admitted to the Conference as ordained elders. Transfers were given for Rev. J. E. McCauley and Aubrey C. Todd to the Eastern North Carolina Conference, Rev. A. Lanson Granger, Jr., to the Western North Carolina Conference, and Rev. Herbert G. Council, Jr., to the Connecticut Conference.

Missionary aid was granted to South Norfolk, Wakefield pastorate, Dendron pastorate, and Richmond.

The South Norfolk people entertained with fine Virginia hospitality. It was pleasant to be with this group of Christian leaders.

THE WOMAN'S MISSION BOARD.

The Woman's Mission Board of the Southern Convention met at Norlina, N. C., on last Saturday and transacted considerable business in the interest of their work. The Standard of Excellence for the new year is approximately the same as that for last year. Plans for the preparation and distribution of literature were made. Programs are to be printed in "The Christian Sun" monthly.

One important decision was a request for all missionary societies to join with those in North Carolina in making a Thank-Offering for our church in Asheboro. Societies in Virginia will please take notice and, if they so desire, will specify their Thank-Offering as a gift to Asheboro. This is to count on the regular apportionment.

By vote the Board requested the Southern Convention, through the Mission Board, to try, if possible, to reduce the amount the Mission Board is pay on the expense of "The Christian Sun" editor and Promotional Secretary's office. The Board also expressed its hope that a better understanding and finer cooperation can be reached relative to young people's work.

One fine forward step was to plan for a meeting of officers from all women's societies at Elon College next June. The plans are not yet perfected, but it is expected to have probably three nights of inspiration and two solid days of work in the field of Missions, with excellent leadership.

These good women put in a hard day of work in the interest of missions and one can easily believe that out of such effort will come a growing interest in worldwide Christian activity.

DENOMINATIONAL LEADERSHIP.

The Southern Convention is very fortunate to have for its four Annual Conferences meeting in November an outstanding missionary of our church. Dr. Samuel H. Leger has served us in China since 1917. He has been in all of our missions there and knows from first-hand the work our church is undertaking in China. As a religious education secretary he has cooperated with other denominations in this field of work and is very familiar with the whole Christian program in China. The people in Eastern Virginia were delighted with his addresses and it is hoped that all who can will plan to hear him, both at the other Conferences and in the special groups which may meet from time to time. The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions makes this contribution to us.

Dr. Erwin L. Shaver, director of Leadership Education, will be with us all next week. He is to speak in Reidsville on Monday night, at the Conference sessions; at Elon College, Thursday morning, at Chapel; at or near Ramseur on Tuesday night; at Youngsville on Thursday night; and at Haw River on Friday night. Dr. Shaver will tell us how to use the Program of Progress in our churches. Pastors, Sunday school officers and teachers, and other church leaders should be among those present when Dr. Shaver speaks. Deacons and finance committees and treasurers may find helpful suggestions. The Home Boards of the Congregational and Christian Church furnish the services of Dr. Shaver. The Southern Convention hereby expresses its appreciation for this fine cooperation of our Church Boards.

ATTEND CONFERENCE.

Whether you are a delegate to Conference or not, you are invited to attend the sessions of your Conference. Of course all delegates are expected to be present and share in the discussions and votes. The work of the Conference is the work of the churches. You will find it profitable to attend and share in Conference.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Forty years ago today (November 3) the writer was ordained to the Christian ministry. On that day, in Waverly Christian Church, Drs. N. G. Newman, J. Pressly Barrett and W. W. Staley constituted the Presbytery and laid their hands upon my hand. Rev. L. L. Lassiter of Suffolk, Va., bowed at the same altar, and received the approval of the church to be an Elder.

Today, in the closing moments of the Eastern Virginia Conference, in South Norfolk Christian Church, Dr. H. S. Hardeastle presented to the writer a two-pound box of delicious candy as a token of the love and goodwill of the ministers of the Conference. That beautiful gift and the kind, complimentary presentation speech of Dr. Hardeastle, came as a distinct surprise, and was received with deep gratitude. The fellowship of the ministers of the Conference is rich and sincere in goodwill. The monthly meeting, in a conference for study and exchange of ideas, has made a distinct contribution to the churches as well as to the ministers. There is an understanding and a mutual confidence among these men of God. It is a joy to be associated with such a fine group of brethren who seek to promote the work of the kingdom.

The recent session of the Eastern Virginia Conference missed the face and genial fellowship of Dr. Marna S. Poulson of Portsmouth, Va. A call at his home, after the close of the Conference, today, found him in good spirits with returning strength. A heart ailment has made it necessary for him to rest since last January, and until recent weeks he has been confined to his home, after leaving the hospital. He is again able to preach with a time limit of fifteen minutes. He said the people are pleased with this limitation, but those who have heard Dr. Poulson know that he has the happy faculty of holding the interest of a congregation for a longer period than fifteen minutes. His many friends in Congregational and Christian Churches wish for him complete recovery.

The 1939 session of the Conference at South Norfolk was well attended. The reports of the various committees were well prepared. And the addresses were of an unusually high order. The high mark of interest and spiritual impression was on Wednesday evening. The evening was set apart for the ordination of two fine young ministers: Revs. A. Lanson Granger, Jr. a member of the First Church, Norfolk, Va.; and Aubrey C. Todd a member of the South Norfolk Church. The ordination sermon was preached by Dr. H. S. Hardeastle. Prayer by the writer. The Charge by Dr. John G. Truitt. Presentation of the Bible by Rev. O. D. Poythress. Rev. J. F. Morgan, President, was Chairman of the Ordaining Presbytery. A large congregation, many of

NOT IN VAIN THE DISTANCE BEACONS.

Not in vain the distance beacons,
Forward, forward, let us range,
Let the great world spin forever
Down the ringing grooves of change.

See the vision of the world
And all the wonder that shall be,
Hear the war drum throb no longer,
See the battle flags all fur'd,

The Federation of the World.

O, we see the crescent promise
Of man's spirit has not set;
Ancient founts of inspiration them friends of these young men, increased the spiritual appeal of the service by a deep interest and friendly spirit. It was a great occasion, rich in the consciousness of the Divine Presence.

The reports of the churches showed an increase in membership over the preceding year. But a financial statement indicated a decrease in the amount of money contributed to the various Conference Apportionments. A final check on this had not been made at the close of Conference, because of the difficulty of interpreting the New Report Blank prepared by the officers of the Southern Convention. As far as the Eastern Virginia Conference is concerned this Report Blank is very unsatisfactory and confusing. It was voted to petition the next session of the Convention to revise the Report Blank.

Two ministers were admitted to the Conference by transfer: Rev. Sam N. Hurst, Driver, Va., from the Baptist Church, and Dr. Kenneth Cornwell, Allentown, Pa., from the Methodist Church. These ministers are capable and are ready to enter upon pastoral work at the call of the church.

COOPERATION.

By the united efforts of the church and the friends of Christian Education, Elon College was founded. For fifty years she has prosecuted her program of instruction. Literally thousands of young people have been blessed by the intelligent touch of her hand. In the various professions and almost all walks of life are those who rise up today and call her blessed. With gratitude they remember the instruction and inspiration and the forbearance of Alma Mater. Constantly we are meeting those who recount the consideration and leniency on the part of Elon College that made it possible for them to secure an education by which they have been able to earn for themselves not only a living but respect of their fellow man and high places of service in church and state.

In all phases of church endeavor, cooperation is essential. It could not, however, be more essential than in the educational work of the church through Elon College. The college is the child of the church. In the beginning it was dependent upon the church. Today it cannot live without its nurture, and it should not live separate and apart from the church. Today, as much or more than ever, Elon College needs the cooperative support of her combined constituency.

At present the Burlington Chamber of Commerce in cooperation with the officials of the college and alumni is conducting a campaign in Alamance County to raise as the county's share $50,000 to be applied on the college's debt. All who are interested in Elon's present and future are most appreciative of this cooperation and help on the part of the City of Burlington and the County of Alamance.

The cooperation and help of the church, alumni, and friends outside of the county at this particular time will mean more than at any other possible moment. Throughout the major part of the college's existence, it has been handicapped with the terrible weight of debt. We now have an opportunity to break these treacherous fetters. The citizens of Alamance County cannot do this alone.

The American Churches and European War

By GEORGE E. BUTTRICK, D. D.

President of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.
(Radio Address given over N. B. C. on September 8, 1939.)

The war still beggars belief. We had trusted, despised all dark omens, that the sanity, if not the reverence, of rulers and peoples would have recoiled from blood-letting. But war has come, and the end is "not yet." We in America cannot live apart. If we could and did we would despise ourselves. In prayer and compassion we intercede from the stricken family of mankind that the light of God may soon break upon us again and the pity of God heal us. But, despite all deep distress, we are not in despair. For the truth and love of God are not in eclipse except as we have turned away from Him to live in our own shadow. Christ has not failed; we have failed Him. The world is chaotic and disconsolate just because we have failed Him. Power politics and the quest for secular security are poor substitutes for His wisdom. But as soon as we turn again He is there in all light and grace.

The duty of our Protestant Churches in this tragic time is not far to seek.

First, we shall do well to keep unbroken our worldwide Christian fellowship. War's hatreds must not sever the bonds by which Christians everywhere are bound to one another and to God. It is a cheering fact that in these recent years, when nations have been hostile and sundered, the Christian Churches have held world conferences (which nations have not held) and that there Christians from all lands have met in instant mutual trust. We must keep these bonds: they are the true girding of mankind. If Christ is Truth, as we firmly believe, He cannot be merely parochial or national Truth: He is Truth for the world, and all men are truly one in Him.

Second, America Protestantism must lead the nation to repent, forbear, forgive, and in every word and work of reconciliation. The command of Christ still holds that we should "love one another." This does not mean ever that we should condone evil, but rather that we should renounce evil. It means that we should resist propaganda and refuse all hatred—a requirement resting especially on ministers, since their utterance is credited to the whole church, and may, if it is violent or unseemingly, bring the cause of Christ into disrepute. It means—this command that we "love one another"—that we acknowledge our sins, for politics of power and possession are not one nation's monopoly but the whole world's virus of guilty disease. It means that we strive to understand the history and divergent viewpoint and peculiar difficulties of every land. It means that we try to find and face the causes of war which lie deeper far than the immediate occasions of war.

LITANY FOR THE NATION AND THE WORLD.

Eternal Lord and Righteous Judge, who hast gathered our people into a great nation and endowed us with the blessings of liberty, receive our prayers of penitence and confession. From the secret power and open shame of national sins, from all dishonesty and civic corruption, from injustice, cruelty and the spirit of violence—

Good Lord deliver us.

From blindness of heart and narrowness of mind, from pride, vainglory and hypocrisy, from envy, hatred and malice and all uncharitableness—

Good Lord deliver us.

From misuse of our freedom, from disrespect for law, from violation of our honor, from strife of class with class, from prejudice of race or nation—

Good Lord deliver us.

From covetousness which is idolatry, from the selfish love of power, from trust in earthly riches, from luxury and self-indulgence—

Good Lord deliver us.

From pursuit of idle pleasures, from impurity which defiles the temple of the Holy Spirit; from intemperance which is the mother of sorrow and crime—

Good Lord deliver us.

Remember not, Lord, our offences nor the offences of our forefathers. Deepen the root of our life in righteousness that we may bring forth the fruits of repentance. Make us equal to our high trusts, reverent in the use of freedom, just in the exercise of power, generous in the protection of the weak. Let it be known among us Thou hastest robbery for burnt offering, that the gains of industry may be all upright and the use of wealth considerate. May wisdom and knowledge be the stability of our times and our deepest trust be in Thee, the Lord of Nations and the King of Kings, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

It means that we should be charitable in judgment, cleaving meanwhile to the right, and that we should be resolute in goodwill.

Third, American Protestantism must enter into the fellowship of suffering with the millions on both sides of every battle line. We should abhor profiteering, especially profiteering in arms and blood, and hold any government renegade that does not try effectively to curb it. Instead we should seek to lighten the world's tragic burden. I find myself wishing that our churches might find some clearcut means to minister to the prisoners of war, to discourage reprisals, to comfort refugees everywhere, and by reconstruction units to rebuild shattered homes and cities. Ships at sea listen every half-hour for any SOS and are required to respond, whatever the nationality of the ship in peril, whatever the nationality of the ship which hears the call. If our churches could thus respond through practical service and the spirit of goodwill we could look back on this conflict unashamed. That would be an "entanglement" consonant with our best destiny and for which all mankind would bless us.

Fourth, our American Protestantism will do well to strengthen our government's purpose to keep us out of war. But our motives must be clear. It is very easy to be neutral from base motives. We must be neutral from high and costly motives: not for physical safety, not in the attempt to maintain an impossible isolation from world problems, assuredly not for commercial gain, but rather because we know war is futile and because we are eager through reconciliation to build a kindlier world. Let us remind ourselves constantly that war has been proved futile. Twenty-five years ago we tried by means of war to "make the world safe for democracy." Now the world tries once more to cure hate by means of hate, to mend killing by multiplied killing. Twenty-five years hence our children may be fighting against other coercions, bred of the hatreds and poverties of war, different only in name from present coercions, unless a worthier spirit and a nobler planning enter world affairs. Let us remain neutral, not selfishly, but as a people dedicated to that "magnificent obsession" of a kindlier world. Humbly penitent for our share in the world's guilt and suffering, staunchly maintaining those civil liberties vouchsafed to all under our Constitution, unperjured by propaganda or profiteering, let us keep peace in this land where men of all lands live in comradeship so that we may bring peace to all mankind.

Fifth, we can pray. True prayer is not a last resort. It is not an escape. It is not a plea for security. It is a beseeching that God's compassionate will may be done among men. It is a spiritual force stronger than all armies. It is a healing serum injected into the one body of mankind of which all nations are members and of which Christ is the Head. Quietly it overcomes areas of dark infection and disease. It is the antidote of hate and the overcoming of violence. Our worship during these critical

OFFERINGS FOR THE COLLEGE.

We are glad that our friends of the Sunday schools and churches have not forgotten us. We are now coming into the Thanksgiving season. It is a most inviting time to express our gratitude in material assistance to individuals and institutions whom we love and appreciate.

Elon College is grateful for every contribution, however large or small. These remittances on the part of the Sunday schools may be counted on conference apportionments. It is a fine opportunity for the Sunday schools to help with these church obligations. If ministers, Sunday school superintendents, and all could really know for themselves the needs of the college and the experiences through which the college passes constantly, there would be no difficulty in raising the entire amount asked of the churches by the conferences for the college. We appreciate every contribution.

We do not want them to do it alone. The constituency of the college outside of the county cannot reach this coveted goal without the help of Alamance County. The citizens of the county do not wish them to. We all recognize each other's responsibilities and opportunities. Together we consider our task and together we are able to perform it. In the name of success, let no one falter. The college faces a brighter day and the opportunity of a great service to church and state.

A LETTER TO YOU FROM MARGARET EARP.

Biltmore Hospital,
Asheville, N. C.,
October 31, 1939.

Dear CHRISTIAN SUN Readers:

Little did I realize on the night of October 12, when I slipped through a certain tin roof, that it was an incident to let me find out how many kind people there are in the world. I couldn't possibly answer all the nice cards you've sent me, so I decided to thank you all through our church how I happened to have my accident. As a matter of fact, I was trying to climb into the window of my school room. During this very unladylike procedure, the tin roof gave way and I fell eighteen feet to the basement. The results proved to be a broken hip which will keep me in Biltmore for eight weeks.

This place is perfectly beautiful. Just three miles out from Asheville, it presents a splendid view of the surrounding mountains. And I think I have discovered the secret of why God made all sunrises and sunsets different! Until two days ago there was a tree of pure gold outside my window. The bluebirds and redbirds must have their permanent homes here at the hospital. Not only is the scenery excellent, but also the people are very friendly. I have met such charming people whom I might have missed had not the path of my life run in this direction.

Someone sent me this poem which has been such a comfort to me that I wish to pass it on to you:

Defeat may serve as well as victory
To shake the soul and let the glory out.
When the great oak is straining in the wind,
The boughs drink in new beauty, and the trunk

HISTORY OF MT. ZION CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

Prepared by ZEB H. LYNCH.

[Read at Home-Coming Service on May 14, 1939.]

Mt. Zion Christian Church was organized in 1832 by Rev. Thomas Reeves with these twenty-one charter members: Thomas Reeves, John Walker, John Paul, John G. Walker, Robert Walker, Duke D. Reeves, Thomas Lynch, Joseph Hamilton, Calvin Hamilton, Cyrus Reeves, Samuel Hartgroves, Martha Reeves, Jane Walker, Winneford Reeves, Charlotte Walker, Eliza Reeves, Anna DeBrulla, Polly Walker Elizabeth Hamilton, Susan Hamilton, and Sarah Hartgroves.

According to the deed dated May 9, 1833, between Thomas Reeves of the first part, Thomas Lynch and John Walker, Commissioners of the church, there seems to have been two and one-half acres of land in the beginning. (There are now seven and one-half acres.)

According to records no one joined the church from 1832 to 1840. The next members on the roll were Rev. Robert G. Tinnin and Celia J. Tinnin. In 1841 eleven joined the church, among them the Rev. Daniel W. Kerr, who three years later—1844—founded THE CHRISTIAN SUN about one-half mile from Mt. Zion. It is hoped that Conference will meet with us in 1944 and unveil a proposed marker on this site at that time. Conference met with us on the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of our church in 1932.

It seems that the church in its infancy turned out quite a few ministers; the first ten years of the church's life show that four ministers held their membership here, namely, Thomas Reeves, John G. Walker, Robert G. Tinnin, and Daniel W. Kerr.

It seems that the church enjoyed a steady growth from 1840 to 1861. According to records, in 1861 there were 122 members on roll. For ten years, including the period of the Civil War, 1861 to 1871, there are no records. The last minutes recorded before the Civil War were dated the second Saturday in September, 1861. The first minutes after the Civil War were dated November 7, 1871.

The present house was built in 1899, the Sunday school rooms were built in 1933, and considerable improvements were made last year, including painting the church, remodeling the choir and Sunday school rooms, installation of electric lights, and a new circulator.

Pastors who have served the church are: 1832-1859—Thomas Reeves, Jas,

A. Turner, John G. Walker, Robert G. Tinnin and Daniel W. Kerr; 1859—A. G. Anderson; 1871—E. W. Beale; 1873—M. L. Hurley; 1877—J. W. Pinnix; 1879—W. W. Staley; 1883—S. B. Clapp; 1885—A. G. Anderson; 1887—James L. Foster; 1889—J. W. Holt, J. W. Fonville, P. H. Fleming; 1891—J. W. Fonville; 1892—W. C. Wicker, J. U. Newman; 1893—W. J. Lane; 1896—W. D. Warward; 1897—Thomas W. Strowd; 1899—C. H. Rowland; 1900—T. B. Dawson; 1902—W. T. Walters; 1904—A. F. Isley; 1909—Thomas W. Strowd; 1915—A. F. Isley; 1916—J. F. Apple; 1925—T. Fred Wright; 1926—H. E. Crutchfield; 1930, to the present time—J. F. Apple.

The following have been secretaries: Thomas W. Lindsey, William H. Crisp, William Lynch, John Lynch, Mrs. W. N. Tate, Mrs. Pattie O. V. White, Mrs. Mary Bradley, Julius Pace, G. F. Carden, G. P. Strayhorn, C. E. McAdams, and Zeb H. Lynch.

The present Board of Deacons is composed of Julius Pace, David Smith, Calip Sharpe, Gattis Carden, Zeb H. Lynch. The present Trustees are Julius Pace, I. T. McAdams, Zeb H. Lynch. The Treasurer is Miss Georgia Bradley.

Through the generosity and benevolence of the late A. W. Tinnin, son of Rev. Robert G. Tinnin, our church was left an endowment of $5,000, the interest of which is used for benevolent purposes only. He also left $5,000 endowment to the cemetery, the interest of same to be used for its beautification and upkeep.

It would not be fitting to let this Memorial Service pass and not mention a few of the faithful members who have "gone on." Among them are J. B. Richmond, Jno. M. Workman, A. A. Lynch, Jos. M. Byrd, Levi McAdams, Jasper Fitch, and Jno. M. Carden. Also the church has been blessed with some faithful women who proved they were spiritual leaders. The few I mention from memory are Mrs. Mary Bradley, who served the church as secretary for twenty-eight consecutive years (1888-1916); Mrs. W. N. Tate, daughter of the Rev. Robt. G. Tinnin and wife of the late Dr. W. N. Tate; and Mrs. Pattie O. V. White, who were also secretaries of the church.

This Mother's Day would not be complete without mentioning a few mothers who have been so faithful and are still with us. The oldest member of our church from the standpoint of membership is Mrs. W. M. Ward who joined this church November 12, 1876. She is still one of our most regular attendants after sixty-three years of active service. Next, I might mention Mrs. Nannie L. Hawkins, who came to this church from Union Christian Church, Virgilina, Va., in 1904, with a combined membership in both churches of over sixty-five years. She is one of the most consecrated members that any church ever had. Although she has been handicapped by living some twelve or fifteen miles from the church, she has always been a regular attendant and has always shown great interest in the welfare of the church. There are still others that we might mention, but lack of time does not permit.

Our present pastor has served the church longer than any of his predecessors. He came to us in 1915, while still a student at Elon College, and served until 1924. He was called back again in 1929 and is still with us, making a total of nearly twenty years of service. The growth of the church has not been spasmodic, but steady and constructive under his leadership. When he first came to us the church had only thirty-nine members. The enrollment at present is 155. Also extensive improvements have been made to the church under his pastorate.

In my twenty-one years of membership here, most of which has been in an official capacity, I cannot recall from memory a time when the church failed to raise its Conference Apportionments and pastor's salary, and many times has gone beyond.

As far as is known there are descendants of only two charter members among the present enrollment: Mrs. Ione (Walker) Kernodle—five of the twenty-one charter members were Walkers. Fourteen members of the Lynch family hold their membership here, all descendants of Thomas Lynch. I do not wish to be boastful, but it makes me feel very proud to know that some member of the Lynch family has served this church in an official capacity continuously, five generations, from its organization until the present time.

NEW CHURCHES.

The Eastern Virginia Conference received a new church, and the other three conferences will each receive application for the membership of a new church. Four new churches in one year is better than our average for many long years. The Promotional Secretary hopes that his efforts had something to do with this progress.

"The multitude which does not reduce itself to unity is confusion."

CONFERENCE TIME.

This is an exceedingly important and epoch making period in our churches of the Southern Convention, because the church, delegates and pastors, are coming together in the various Conferences to talk and discuss their problems and lay plans for the future. The very word "Conference" is significant and its meaning should not be ignored. It is derived from two Latin words: con, meaning with, and fer, meaning to bear, or to share, thus indicating that the object of a Conference from the very derivation of the word itself means a coming together of the brethren to bear with each other the burdens of each, and to share with each other for the sake of counsel and advice, the burdens and problems of each other. One naturally indulges the hope that as the delegates and pastors go up to Conference they experience that which the Psalmist expressed: "We took sweet counsel together, and walked unto the house of God in company."—(Psalms 55:14.) Opinions may differ and views on various subjects, but he is indeed to be pitied rather than censured as a pastor, or delegate, who fails to attend his Conference, or attending, gives himself to eriticism and objection rather than to counsel and to the sharing of the views and opinions with others. Of course, there are differences of opinions in church matters as in other matters, but by taking sweet counsel together in the house of God as we offer in annual Conference every pastor and every delegate may and should learn something that will be of infinite worth to himself, or herself. Pastors and delegates do well to learn that no one individual, however learned and cultured, knows it all, or can solve every problem of the church. The church is many in its approach to the world and in its dealing with the world, because it is made up of individuals whose opinions and beliefs often vary; but this is no excuse for turning one's back on the Conference, or disregarding its decisions and deliberations. The Annual Conference is in fact the great school of learning, one of far reaching import and he who will not learn in the Conference and from the Conference is in his own light and his church will sooner, or later, suffer the consequences. Of course, there are pastors of the "holier than thou" type, who feel, or seem to feel, that they have a monopoly on truth and that they should go counter to, and in an opposite direction from, their Conference and the brethren and churches that compose it. It should be borne in mind that the Conference has furnished them a church, or churches, with congregations formed

AH, WHAT A SOUND.

Ah, what a sound! The infinte fierce chorus,
The cries of agony, the endless groan,
Which, through the ages that have gone before us,
In long reverberations reach our own.

The tumult of each sacked and burning village;
The shout that ev'ry pray'r for mercy drowns;
The soldiers' revels in the midst of pillage;
The wail of famine in beleaguered towns.

Down the dark future, through long generations,
The echoing sounds grow fainter and then cease;
And like a bell, with solemn, sweet vibrations,
I hear once more the voice of Christ say,
"Peace!"

Peace! and no longer from its brazen portals
The blast of God's great organ shakes the skies!
But beautiful as songs of the immortals,
The holy melodies of love arise.

—Henry W. Longfellow.

largely by the work and influence of the Conference; that others have labored and they have been permitted to enjoy the fruits of this labor even though themselves doing little, if anything, to improve the value, worth and merit of the fruits which they themselves received from the labor of others.

So as at this Conference season as we go up to the house of God we should take sweet counsel together, not seeking to censure, or to be censured, but willing to offer opinions, and suggestions, and willing to take the opinions and suggestions of others that are equally worthwhile. We should bear in mind, as this writer has often said before, that God is Infinite, and we poor mortals are finite, and He has provided many ways and avenues of approach to Himself. One may be approaching by one avenue, another by another and yet both may be equally near to Him, who laid down for us the wide and quite inclusive program and platform of John 3:16, "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but should have everlasting life." It also may help us to remember the truth contained in the little couplet:

He called me skeptie, heretic, a thing to flout,
And so he drew a circle and left me out;
But love and I had the wit to win,
We drew a circle and took him in.

In this connection there is a very meaningful Scripture in the book of Revelation, chapter 21:13, which speaks of the approaches to the city of God, the new Jerusalem, which all of us have, or should have, the hope to enter some day. The verse in question reads: "On the east were three gates; and on the north three gates; and on the south three gates; and on the west three gates." This indicates that there are approaches to the city of God sufficient for all to enter who believe and accept the word of God as a sufficient rule of faith and practice. May our Heavenly Father help everyone of us as we go about our daily tasks, whatever our views of the church may be, to realize that there are gates on all sides of the city of God and that by the grace of God we each who trust Him may enter through one of these gates.

SMALL BEGINNINGS THAT BRING LARGE RESULTS.

The Gospel of Christ Changes Lives of Men and Creates Christian Groups in Northern Manchukuo.

"Let me leave my things here," I asked of the poor innkeeper in his dirty, unkept place, opened for patrons coming to this new town up on the northern plains of Manchuria, "until," I continued, "a few minutes may be had to go out into the village and see if there are any Christians in your town."

A genial Chinese kindly helped me off the train and carried some of my bedding, books and tracts across the wide open space between the railway station and the village. "I know of a Christian here," he said.

As I moved down the edge of the village we walked right into the Christian to whom he had referred; but he was a poor specimen as a follower of the Lord Jesus. Lean, shabbily dressed and dirty, he gave every appearance of being an opium smoker. When I told him who I was he grasped my hand with what strength he had and exclaimed: "This is the mercy of the Lord!" He explained that he had been hoping for some time that a missionary, or other spiritual leader, come to give him strength.

"I have been," he said with moistened eyes, "a follower of the Lord for years, and enjoyed advantages which should have meant the living of a worthy life; but I have fallen by the wayside and have dishonored my Lord. Please forgive me, pastor, and ask forgiveness of God! Since you have now come, we shall go into the house and visit together." He had just borrowed a neighbor's donkey and cart and was going out for clay to repair the crude stove on which the family's food is cooked.

This man, Mr. Wen, is the postmaster of the village. He has a wife and three children. The house was dirty and unkept; so were the children. I could smell opium, but the smell was not necessary, for those of us who have lived among these people any length of time can readily discern addicts of this terrible drug. Mr. Wen soon opened up his heart. We prayed together. He asked the Lord for forgiveness. "I am helpless and hopeless," he said. "My lungs are in bad shape. If I could only give up this awful drug, here in this high, dry climate there would be hope of my recovery. It was for this that I moved away from my old associates in the south and came to his new place, but I am so weak!" He begged again that I pray for him, and urge that I plan to come often to visit him and the village.

We went out on the streets, visited in the places of business, small shops, sold some scriptures, and then had a pleasant time of fellowship with the school teacher. He consented to my preaching to the pupils and others at the school house in the afternoon.

On my next visit more scriptures were sold and tracts distributed. The school was closed, but we met in the home of Mr. Wen. Some had become interested in becoming Christians. An evangelist, a Mr. Chang, then went to the place for a few days and I met him there. Five more were baptized in a lake nearby. The little group of believers agreed to pay $3.00 a month on his salary and all traveling expenses if Chang would come once a month. Later, Miss Liu, the Bible woman at Angangshi, and Evangelist Chang conducted a week's special meetings. They were allowed to speak in the school and visited in the homes. Many were greatly helped. By this time Wen and his wife had given up opium. As there was no suitable place for meetings, the Christians decided that a house should be built, we in Harbin making a small loan to supplement their contributions. Materials have now been bought and building of the little meeting place is going forward.

Since Mr. Wen reconsecrated himself to the Lord, his wife has become a Christian. They have cleaned up their children and their home, and have taken a new lease on life. He has been made head of the Concordia Association of the village. On my list he expressed thanks in tears for having saved his child from death, he claimed, because of medicine and canned milk sent, and for the spiritual blessing that has come to him and his wife. A reading class has been opened in their home to help those who are unable to read the Bible.

After a day spent in preaching, distributing tracts and selling scriptures, we came together for the evening service. This lasted far into the night, for there were many things about which to talk, including final arrangements for obtaining a lot and erecting the building. There were enquirers to be examined. By the time we could celebrate the Lord's Supper, and for the first time, midnight had arrived. It was an impressive service: there at this little home, in the quiet hours of the night. All that could be heard in the cool spring night were the clear voices of wild ducks, geese, swan and other fowl on their spring flight to the northern reaches of Manchuria and Siberia for nesting and the bringing in of new life in the world. It was Easter. We were reminded of the new life which Christ brings now and at all times to those who trust Him.

ASHEBORO CHURCH ORGANIZED.

On Sunday morning, October 29, the new Congregational-Christian Church at Asheboro, N. C., was organized with thirty charter members. The pastor, Rev. A. Lanson Granger, Jr., preached on "What Is the Church For?" Rev. F. C. Lester, Promotional Secretary, who had helped in the organization of the church, had charge of the communion service. H. V. Cox and Rev. T. J. Green, pastors in the Western North Carolina Conference, assisted in this service. The service for taking the members into this new church was well-planned and very impressive.

On the first Sunday in November the Sunday school was organized with forty-nine present. The Sunday school offering, amounting to more than seven ($7.00) dollars, is an indication of the whole-hearted interest of the children and parents.

Plans are under way for the purchase of a choice corner building lot which will cost $2,000. Anyone interested in the success of this church who would like to back up that interest by the "purchase" of a "front foot" of this lot for twenty dollars, will please communicate with the pastor, Rev. A. Lanson Granger, Asheboro, N. C. More than $1,000 has been pledged, and $700 of it paid for this purpose.

This church is beginning under auspicious circumstances—in a growing city, surrounded by Christian Church many of whose members are moving to Asheboro to make their homes, composed of charter members who are willing to work and sacrifice for their church, and led by a minister who is consecrated and who is well-trained. THE CHRISTIAN SUN wishes it every success in its work for Christ.

AMERICAN CHURCHES.

times should acknowledge the kinship of all nations; our churches should be filled with the Spirit of Him who is the world's peace; our altars should be places of earnest and unremitting intercession. This is the nobler energy for lack of which the world is arid and torn. Let us pray and pray again in home, in business, in church; and let us then strive to live more nearly as we pray. Thus, "may the God of peace lead us into all peace."

NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

On next Wednesday night, November 15, the North Carolina and Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship has charge of the evening session of Conference. The officers met at Elon College on November 5, and a good program is planned. Dr. Samuel H. Leger, missionary from North China who has just returned to this country, will deliver the main address. He is worth hearing. All young people in all of our churches in this Conference are urged to come to Bethlehem Christian Church, Altamahaw, N. C., for the service beginning at 7:30 P. M., on Wednesday.

Your officers promise you that this meeting will be held. Some of you may be discouraged about planning to attend another meeting for fear it may be called off at the last minute. Although this has happened in several instances, when it seemed impossible to do anything else, you are assured that the young people will conduct this meeting and that all of you are urged to come. Show your interest in the young people's work of your Conference by being present and bringing others with you.

NEW GROUP ORGANIZED.

The young people of Hank's Chapel Christian Church met on October 20, 1939, for the purpose of forming a permanent organization. Rev. W. J. Andes, their pastor who is active in Conference young people's work, was present to help them.

The following officers were chosen: Earl Farrel, president; William Dan White, vice-president; Allie Mae Farrell, secretary; Bernice Riddle, treasurer; Layton Denson, Ruby Farrell, Burwell Pelly, program committee; Margaret White, pianist; Elizabeth Farrell, Leonard Poe, Warren Farrell, social committee; Mr. and Mrs. Tommie Farrell, Mr. and Mrs. Glen White, counselors.

We are glad to learn of the organization of this new young people's group in the Western North Carolina Conference. We pray that they may enjoy fellowship with each other as they work for Christ and His Church.

SPECIAL MEETINGS.

Young people in North Carolina are requested to watch for announcements by their Sunday school superintendents on next Sunday morning concerning special meetings to be held in different areas in this state with Dr. S. H. Leger of North China and Dr. E. L. Shaver of Boston, Mass., director of religious education for our denomination.

GOD OF THE NATIONS, NEAR AND FAR.

God of the nations, near and far,
Ruler of all mankind,
Bless thou thy people as they strive
The paths of peace to find.

The clash of arms still shakes the sky,
King battles still with king;
Wild thro' the frightened air of night
The bloody tocsins ring.

But clearer far the friendly speech
Of scientists and seers,
The wise debate of statesmen and
The shouts of pioneers.

And stronger far the clasped hands
Of labor's teeming throngs,
Who is a hundred tongues repeat
Their common creeds and songs.

O Father! from the curse of war
We pray thee give release,
And speed, oh, speed the blessed day
Of justice, love, and peace.

HANK'S CHAPEL.

The final quarterly conference of Hank's Chapel Christian Church was held on Saturday, October 21, 1939, with the pastor, Rev. W. J. Andes, presiding. This has been one of the most successful years for Hank's Chapel, both spiritually and financially. Two months ago the church called Rev. W. J. Andes for another year. He has done some great work in the church. He is wholly devoted to his church work. He has truly gained the confidence of his people. The church is looking forward to an even greater year ahead.

Following is the report for the year's work: paid pastor in full; Conference Apportionment paid in full; orphanage, $90.46; missions,

In world opinion the United States stands condemned as a nation of gangsters and racketeers, where criminals are glorified more or less as heroes, and given aid by those who hold political office. Crime will continue to be a major problem with us as long as the conditions which produce criminals are permitted to exist. Some of these conditions may be described as follows:

1. Badly managed homes.—Family quarrels, self-indulgent parents, low moral standards, drunkenness, lack of sympathy and understanding. Carelessness in handling delicate problems of child nurture—these and other similar conditions in homes sometimes turn young people toward immorality and crime.

2. Bad companions.—In many places it is easy for young people to choose companions with low moral standards and engage with them in escapades which are against the law. Criminal gangs are thus formed and criminal careers are fostered.

3. Poverty.—It is poverty, more than anything else, which gives rise to environmental conditions out of which our criminals come.

4. Corruption in Government.—Political corruption is not only the result of criminal manipulation; in itself it is a primary cause of crime.

5. Underneath all causes of crime lies the fact of sin.

Find what the church can do in its neighborhood on one or more of the following:

1. Provide a place to play, with supervision, for a boy's gang.

2. Make the Christian Endeavor more attractive for all in the community.

3. Make the Sunday school classes effective agencies for recruiting boys and girls for the church and the Christian way of life.

Closing Topic: "The joy we find in righteous conduct."

Suggested Hymns—

"Come, Thou Almighty King."

"Holy Spirit, Truth Divine."

"Yield Not to Temptation."

PUTTING GOD'S KINGDOM FIRST.

LESSON VII—NOVEMBER 12, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Matthew 6: 19-34.

TEXT: Seek ye first his kingdom, and his righteousness.—Matthew 6: 33.

Putting First Things First.

Jesus had a true sense of value. He always saw things in their proper perspective. He could take the far look and see through things, and see things through. He, therefore, declared that the primary law for members and citizens of the Kingdom of God was "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness . . ." By the Kingdom of God Jesus meant the reign, or rule, of God on earth. He told his disciples that they were to pray that God's will might be done on earth as it was being done in heaven. He said that men were to organize their lives around this principle. He said that its interests were supreme—that men were to put it first, that they were actively to seek it, that they were to deny themselves in behalf of it. As always, Jesus was positive rather than merely negative. He did not call upon his followers merely to give up things, but he suggested that they should be so devoted to some great ideal that they would organize all of their life around it. We need to be reminded again and again that Jesus said we are to seek the Kingdom of God first. All of us perhaps intend to seek it at one time or another. But too often we put other things first. We make the seeking of the Kingdom secondary to our own desires, our own pleasures, our own profit. Jesus insists that we should seek the Kingdom of God first.

Citizens of the Kingdom and Material Things.

If the citizen of the kingdom makes it the first law of his life to seek first the kingdom, then certain results will follow. There will be a change in his attitude toward things, and there will be a change in his attitude toward the circumstances of life. For instance, Jesus said that the citizen of the kingdom should not be interested primarily in material things. In Jesus' thinking the world and the material things of the world were good. They had their proper place. Indeed they were very definitely related to the coming of the kingdom of God. But they were secondary to the kingdom itself. They were means to an end, not an end in themselves. Therefore, men were not to lay up for themselves treasures upon earth but were rather to seek first the spiritual values of the kingdom, and were to make their material possessions help toward bringing in this kingdom. On another occasion Jesus said that a man's life did not consist in the abundance of things that he possessed. The true measure of life was in certain qualities of mind and heart, in certain attitudes toward life, toward others and toward God. There were values which were above time and circumstance. Man was to be rich toward God before he tried to be rich toward gold. Jesus warned his followers against the danger of earthly treasures. There was always a danger that they would come between a man and God. "Where thy treasure is there will thy heart be also."

The Citizens of the Kingdom and Moral Insight.

Jesus suggests that if a man gives himself wholeheartedly to seeking first the kingdom of God and its righteousness he will also have new light on the problems of conduct. Drawing an analogy from life, he says that when a man's eye is single or healthy the whole body is full of light; that is, the man sees clearly. But if the eye is evil or diseased one's life is full of darkness. The best corrective against warped judgment, faulty perspective, wrong outlooks, distorted vision is to seek first the kingdom of God, to give one's self with devotion to following such light as he has, to obeying such truth as he knows.

Jesus goes on to point out that no man can serve two masters acceptably. The man who makes mammon, or material things, his master can not acceptably serve God. The man who makes God his objective will not be the servant of mammon; he will be its master.

The Citizens of the Kingdom and Worry.

Once more Jesus said that if a man seeks first the kingdom of God and its righteousness he need not worry, in the sense of being distracted or distraught, or living under strain and stress. In a way that should shame those of us who are anxious and worried and troubled about so many things. Jesus points out in simple and in beautiful language that it is all so useless, and even worse, that it amounts to what is a sin against God. God takes care of the birds of the air. Would not a loving heavenly Father show as much concern for his children? It might be pointed out here, however, that God feeds the birds through the cooperation of the birds themselves. God puts food for the birds in the world, but the birds have to seek it and secure it for themselves. A man has no right to ask God to do anything for him that he can do for himself. But the principle holds good that if a man gives himself wholeheartedly to seeking first the kingdom of God and its righteousness God will provide for him. "Depend upon it, God's work done in God's way will never lack God's supplies."

In like manner Jesus says that much of the anxiety about clothes or what one shall wear, which is so characteristic of so many people, men as well as women, is unjustifiable and useless. Here again Jesus draws a parable from nature. No man, not even Solomon himself, could dress in such a gorgeous costume as characterized the humble lily or field flower of Jesus' day. And yet this flower was but for a day as it were. If God bestowed so much thought and care upon clothing that was so comparatively worthless would he not see to it that his children had something to wear?

And finally Jesus showed the folly and futility of worrying about what tomorrow might bring. Why be anxious about the morrow, said Jesus. Today brings its own problems, its own demands and also its own supplies and resources. One can not meet the demands of today if he is anxious and worried about tomorrow. Nor can he meet tomorrow's problems and worries today. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof," said Jesus. Take every day as it comes, do the very best that you can, and trust God for tomorrow. But in another way Jesus would say that life is like a great bundle of sticks. No man is strong enough to carry them all at one time. But if we carry them one at a time we can eventually carry the whole bundle. Life based on a simple and sincere faith that this is a friendly and trustworthy universe takes the fretfulness and useless anxiety out of life. The man who loves God and seeks to make God king over all that he is and all that he has can face life without fear.

"I have known what it was to walk the streets with nothing in my pocket, with debts hanging over my head and with nothing to do." Thus did Ramsey McDonald describe his early life, his struggling days, when unable to afford tea, he drank hot water. Regarding his philosophy of living, he once said that the test of life was whether a man could spend his leisure alone. "If he wants someone with him, he has not obtained mastery over himself."

MONDAY.

"YOU SMILE AND THE ANGELS SING."

"A cheerful heart is good medicine and hath a continual feast."—Prov. 17: 22; 15: 15.

Our caption today is taken from a recent popular song. When one said "There is a gospel in popular song," in a great many instances he was right. Unquestionably there is no music to a lot of this swing stuff, but frequently sentiment like the above is expressed in them. If popular song has soul value it will be found in such as this:

I find when I smile on other folks
In a friendly sort of way,
It makes them smile
In a friendly style
And I just feel good all day.
While the folks that smile on that smile of mine
May smile on somebody, too,
And will spread the style
Of a friendly smile
And that somebody may be you.

Prayer—O Lord, our Lord, our flesh is weak, our moods seize us and drive us wrong. God forbid, and make our hearts to dominate our bodies. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"THE WRONG DEMAND ON LIFE."

"Father, give me."—Luke 15: 12.

"Give me" has been called "the prodigal's pass word." "Make me" is the penitent's pass word. The prodigal began his life with "Give me," he spent his life in the vain search—the getting of that which he thought he wanted. It was all for self and his "pass word" was "Give me." When life played false to him and all was gone, "Give me" would no longer do. Something said to him "Make me." From that time on he found his soul. In his humility he was willing to be made a hired servant. But that was not the function of his father. The function of a father is to make his son a man.

So our God awaits our prayer to "make us."

Prayer—Our Father, forgive our follies and make us men of Thine own image. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"IN THE HEAD OR IN THE HEART?"

"He had satisfied God, and apart from faith it is impossible to satisfy Him."—Heb. 11: 5, 6.

According to our prayers many are looking to God to satisfy us. That is the wrong emphasis. We should so live as to bring joy and satisfaction to God. The difference is that, with one, God lives in the head only. With the other, God is in the heart. It is only in the heart that we can satisfy Him.

Prayer—Our Father, in the name of Jesus, we beg that we may live so close to Thee that we may be conscious of Thy presence in our hearts. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"SUDDEN SALVATION IMPOSSIBLE."

"In the evening time it shall be light."—Zech. 14: 7.

We are told of an old man who, being observed to be happy, was asked how he obtained it. In reply, he pointed to the fine trees and the luscious fruit of his orchard, and said, "I have them because I planted them in my youth."

Christian character, usefulness, and happiness, along with all life's blessings, are the fruit of planting and cultivating. Even the salvation of a death-bed repentance can be only the beginning of the good life. The song "Empty Handed" admits the offering of a fruitless and useless life.

Prayer—Our Father, draw us to Thee in a way that we shall begin now and live a life that will please Thee. In the name of Jesus we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"GO ON TO IT."

"Let us go on in to perfection."—Heb. 6: 1.

Perfection is not born, it is made. And it is made, as expressed by Paul, by "Pressing on toward the mark of the prize of the high calling in Jesus Christ—just go on to it. Frank P. Culver says, the question is not "Are you perfect?" but "Do you want to be?" We cannot choose to be. We can only choose the direction toward our ideals—everything is achieved that way. Christian character is no exception.

Prayer—Our Father in heaven, grant unto us the vision of the man we ought to be, give us the desire to be, and make us strong to strive faithfully for it. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"THE SUPREME AMBITION."

"Show us the Father, and it sufficeth us."—John 14: 8.

This was all Philip desired. It was enough. Though we have no record of the sequel, what Jesus said to him in reply must have revealed the Father. We do not see how he could miss, for there He was in person—in Jesus Himself.

We wish we could see Jesus as Philip saw Him. Yet in being able to see Him spiritually and thus be inspired to perfection is a far greater blessing than Philip's privilege, yea more, it is given to us to live in a way that others may see God in us. Do they? The answer determines the destiny.

Prayer—Our Father, we are poor specimens of the Christ life—O Holy Spirit, help our weakness and day by day may we gain in grace in Him. Amen.

"THE STANDARDS OF TEACHING."

SCRIPTURE: Mark 6:1-13.

[The following sermon in the field of religious education was given at the Dan River District meeting at Liberty (Va.) Church, on October 29, 1939.—Editor.]

There is a responsibility as well as a joy and privilege in teaching. In a certain university the question "Who contributed most to your personal development up to the present time?" was asked several hundred students. Their answers reflect the tremendous responsibility resting upon the shoulders of Sunday school teachers, ministers, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., and Scout leaders, for they were the ones named as making the greatest contribution; not the dance hall operators, bar keepers, and movie managers. We should be most concerned in making our teaching the very best possible. There are at least three important steps in successful teaching.

I.

A teacher should know his or her pupils. This may sound trite, but ask yourself the question, "Do I really know and understand the problems and home life of my pupils?" I dare say there are Sunday school teachers who have never been into the homes of some of their pupils. They see only one influence in the lives of the problem children. A sympathetic and helpful teaching ministry will not come about unless we know our pupils. Too many of us are moving and thinking in a different world, with no deep concern and love for those we teach.

During the last selection for the Pope of the Roman Catholic Church the following story was circulated. A freshman went into the office of the Chaplain of a southern university and during the interview the subject of the election of the Pope was mentioned. Whereupon the student said to the Chaplain, "You know, these Catholics are getting control of everything. To my knowledge this is the third time a Catholic has been elected Pope." It is reported that a group of college students on a Bible examination stated that Sodom and Gomorrah were man and wife like Dan and Beersheba. Ridiculous!—But no worse than the knowledge some of our teachers have of their pupil's interests and problems.

No two of the twelve disciples were taught alike. Jesus understood their individual weaknesses, and because he knew and loved his disciples, they grew into strength. They were literally loved into sainthood. It becomes our duty as teachers and preachers to love our children into Christ-likenesses. Someone has said, "When we plant for a year, we plant a grain; when we plant for centuries, we plant trees; and when we plant for eternity, we plant ideas." We are dealing with great ideas, and this idea of Jesus is the greatest ever conceived. We should know our pupils in order to help them grow from weakness to strength.

II.

Secondly, we should believe what we teach. A writer in a book on Mexico described an old lady kneeling in church saying her "Hail Mary" and adds, "She didn't believe, but among Catholics even the skeptical are courteous." God forbid that we teachers should go through the motion of being courteous, teaching what we don't believe. There is a story that a metropolitan pastor invited a famous actor to read the Twenty-Third Psalm in a morning service. It was done with clearness and beauty. The audience was spell-bound but when the actor finished he said, "I know the words, but your pastor knows the Shepherd." It is necessary for us to know the Shepherd and to believe in that Shepherd before we can teach.

One of the outstanding statements made by Albert Edward Day in his Yale Lectures on Preaching was, "The preacher is not a lash to whip the people for their sins, but a candle to show them the way." Believe in order to show our pupils the way. Our teaching should be a light—how the world needs that light today!

III.

Finally, a teacher should bring the pupils to a decision concerning Christ. That is the purpose of the church. What kind of teaching is it that fails to do this? There are hundreds of boys and girls passing through the Sunday school who are forever lost to the church primarily because much of our teaching has failed to bring a decision concerning Christ. Do our teachers encourage the pupils to unite with the church? Someone has said that the Sunday school is a training school for church membership. Why is it, then, that thousands who pass right out of Sunday school, never remaining for the church service, have not learned this?

Henry Ward Beecher once heard a sermon on "The Simplicity of Jesus." Afterwards when asked how he liked it, he replied, "There was no simplicity and very little Jesus in it." Too much of our teaching can be characterized in just that manner. The main business of the church is to proclaim Jesus Christ, Savior of the world. Early Christianity spread by the message being spoken from one heart to another. We awaken our pupils' interest but fail to call for a conviction.

How many of the Sunday school teachers who taught you as a child emphasized the fact that Jesus Savior was primary reason for all teaching and preaching? How many tried to bring you to a decision concerning Jesus?

Conclusion.

During the career of the great Dr. Charles Spurgeon in England, an American visited an English friend in London. He expressed a desire to hear Dr. Spurgeon and one Sunday morning the two went to the service. It was a powerful sermon. As they were walking home in silence and meditation, the Englishman finally asked the American how he liked the preacher. He answered: "To tell you the truth, I was not thinking so much of Spurgeon as I was of his Master." Oh, that is great preaching and teaching. To have our pupils see beyond us and recognize the Master, is the test of good teaching!

"WHY GO TO CHURCH?"

"We have this treasure in earthen vessels."—II. Cor. 4:7.

Why go to church? Because we are earthen vessels and need it. Because of spiritual association and friendships. Because we need continually to re-appraise ourselves in spiritual values. Because we need to overcome our moods by actualities. Because we need the medium of the congregation to express our love and affections. Because we need to make righteousness, which is the Kingdom of God, first in our desires.

Prayer—Our Father, we are sorry for our sins. We repent of our neglect of the church. We crave Thy Spirit forever. Move upon our hearts to be ever with Thine. Amen.

The Orphanage
 CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The chilly weather of the coming winter is here. The children in the orphanage need clothes, shoes, coats, and many other articles of clothing. It is a good time for the good women of our church to come to the aid of the little children here. It has always seemed to me that mothers of our church should be very much in-ever got out of giving was in paying for the keep of a child here years ago soon after the orphanage was opened. I could hardly wait for the first of the month to come to mail my check. It was lots of pleasure to do it. It will be a pleasure to you if you will but try it.

At this Thanksgiving season when the offering is taken in your church won't you help swell the offering so you will feel happy about it and feel a pardonable pride that your church did something to feel proud of. We are depending on you.

POTATO DIGGING TIME.

Thirty little boys picked up 800 bushels of sweet potatoes in two days' time and packed them in bushel crates. The larger boys ploughed them out and hauled them to the potato storage house, where they are cured.

terested in our little children here. Just being a mother to a motherless child is noble. The fathers should be interested in being a father to a fatherless child, too.

Then the young women should be interested. How about being a big sister to a girl in the orphanage. Don't you think it would be lots of pleasure to you? How about the young men? Did you every try to be a big brother to some boy and pal with him? Did you not get a real pleasure out of it? How about being a big brother to some child here? It will be lots of fun—the greatest joy I are in Thee and that alone can lead any people into the commonwealth of the age to be.

The Singing Class had a very pleasant visit to Big Oak and Flint Hill Church last Sunday. Both churches had a house full of people. The good women at Big Oak Church served lunch for the children, which was highly enjoyed. The children gave their program there at 11:00 and at Flint Hill at 2:30. The people certainly were appreciative and seemed to enjoy the children's message. Make your plans for the Thanksgiving offering in your church and Sunday school, and then work your plans.

We pray for Africa, long time the dark continent over whose vast and mighty reaches the light has begun to rise. May her peoples be protected from plunder of greed and of the sword, and may their minds be enlightened with the light of truth and their hands and feet unshackled into the liberty of the sons of God.

Almighty God, King of kings and Lord of lords, from whom proceed all power and dominion in heaven and in earth, most heartily we beseech Thee to look with favor upon our own well-beloved land. Grant unto the President of the United States, the Governor of this State, and all others in authority, the spirit of wisdom, goodness and truth, and so rule in their hearts and bless their endeavors that law and order, justice and peace may everywhere prevail. Take from our hearts and lips, every frantic boast and foolish word. Make us strong and great in Thy fear in the love of righteousness, so that being blessed of Thee we may become a blessing to all nations, and have part in the establishment of the commonwealth of man, and of Thine abiding Kingdom of righteousness, the fruits of which shall be love and joy and peace forever. Amen.—(Adapted from W. Charter Piggott of England; also from Book of Common Worship.)

A Prayer for the Nation

[These prayers were used by Dr. Rockwell Harmon Potter, President of the American Board, at the recent meeting of that Board in St. Louis, Missouri.—Editor.]

O God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, our only Savior, the Prince of Peace, from whom proceed all power and dominion in heaven and on earth and who hast made of one blood all nations of men; we beseech Thee to hear us in our prayers of intercession:

That it may please Thee to bless the President of the United States and all others who bear authority, giving them the spirit of wisdom, goodness and truth; and so rule in their hearts that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and true piety may be established among men for all generations;

We beseech Thee to hear us, Good Lord that it may please Thee to guide the deliberations of Congress, so assisting them with Thy Holy Spirit that they, remembering whose ministers they are, and on what high and holy mission they have been sent, may lay aside every weight of prejudice and with humility and sincerity study to perfect the way of peace;

That it may please Thee so to dispose the leaders of the nations that the burden of armaments shall be lifted from the peoples and Thine ancient word be fulfilled that men shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more;

That it may please Thee to give the stronger races the graces of humility and good will, that they may use their gifts for the service of their weaker brethren without arrogance or conceit;

That it may please Thee to unite the nations of the world in valiant endeavor against famine, poverty and disease;

O Thou King, eternal, immortal, invisible, Thou only wise God, our Savior, hasten, we beseech Thee, the coming of Thy kingdom upon the earth, and draw the whole world of mankind into willing obedience to Thy blessed reign. Cast out all the evil things which cause wars and fightings among us, and let Thy Spirit rule the hearts of men in righteousness and love. Restore that which is desolate, cause the wilderness to rejoice, and make glad the city with Thy law. Fulfill the desires and hopes of the peoples, consummate the Brotherhood of Man and bring in the peace of Thy Righteous Kingdom, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Prayer for the Nations of the Earth

O God who art the Father of all men everywhere, we bow in prayer for the nations of the earth. None is clean before Thee, for all have sinned and come short of Thy glory. Yet in Thy mercy look upon us, overcoming the evil, confirming that which is righteous, and saving us all.

We pray for England, mother of our speech, of our liberties and our very life. For the good and heroic men of her past, for all in her history that have been free and honorable and righteous, we give Thee thanks, and especially that it has been given unto her, with her ancient trust in Thee, for the sake of us and of all men, to defend and maintain the right. Continue her strength in power, we pray, that she may ever serve the welfare of the world and the kingdom of Thy righteousness.

We pray for France, fair among the nations and our sister of many sorrows. We remember her past glories and pray Thee for her spiritual renewal. Guide Thou her statesmen and the body of her people into the humility and forbearance, the justice and integrity of her ancient faith.

We give Thee thanks for Italy, great in her ancient history, rich in her gifts of beauty and art, that her pleasant places have been preserved for us and for all men. Direct Thou her rulers into the meekness that alone makes great, unto the justice that alone gives peace.

We pray for Russia, that has come out of the night of bondage into days of storm. Before Thee we remember her primitive faith and the ancient church established in her midst. For her martyrs and exiles, who under tyranny have struggled for liberty, we give Thee praise, and we beseech Thee to guide her out of prejudice, passion and plunder into unity and concord—righteousness and peace.

For the nations of the devastated lands we pray, giving Thee thanks for their courage and bravery, praying that their faith and devotion may be upheld until their liberties that have been stolen are returned, and beseeching Thee that they may have their place in the commonwealth of the world.

We pray for the nation of Germany. We have sat at the feet of her wise men, and rejoiced in the spell and the splendor of her music and her art. We pray that the dominion over her of the sword may be broken, and for the full deliverance of her people from every bondage of evil into the liberty of those who do Thy commandments and walk in the ways of peace.

We pray for the peoples of Asia. For India, and her myriads of men, that their ancient insights may avail now to seek and find the truth. For China, and her multitudes, that her ancient cultures may be cleansed and preserved to bear witness among men to the worth of reverence, obedience and diligence. For Japan, that the red hand of violence may not destroy her—that she may give her great loyalties at least to that righteousness and love, that grace and truth that (Turn back to page 15.)

REV. AND MRS. E. WALTER SMITH.

At the recent session of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions held in St. Louis, Missouri, the Rev. and Mrs. E. Walter Smith were commissioned for service in our Foochow Mission, China. They are graduates of Duke University and are now studying at Union Theological Seminary, New York City. They will sail next summer. Mr. Smith is a native of Tennessee and Mrs. Smith is from Florida.

These two charming young people are part of the seventy-five which the Congregational-Christian Church expects to send to the Mission Fields within a period of five years. Any young person within the Southern Convention interested in being one of the seventy-five should talk with the Mission Secretary or the Promotional Secretary, both of whom are hoping that our area may furnish its quota.

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

Ministers will please remember the Institutes on Evangelism to be held next week. The schedule was in last week's CHRISTIAN SUN.

The Eastern North Carolina Conference will meet with the Turner's Chapel Christian Church, near Sanford, N. C., on Tuesday and Wednesday of next week.

The Thanksgiving Proclamation, found elsewhere in this paper, by the Moderator of our churches is printed with the hope that it will be used in all of our churches on Thanksgiving Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy A. Larriek and Miss Elsie Mathews of Winchester, Va., were pleasant visitors at Elon College on Saturday of last week. Mr. Larriek is the president of the Valley of Virginia Conference.

The North Carolina and Virginia Conference is holding its 114th annual session at Bethlehem Christian Church, Altamahaw, N. C., this week. Business of the Conference is supposed to end on Thursday at noon.

Dr. Kenneth Cornwell, who recently joined the Eastern Virginia Conference, was the guest speaker at our Richmond Church last Sunday. The congregation was the largest in several weeks and Dr. Cornwell was well received.

Secretaries of churches in the Conferences that have met have not been very successful in filling out report blanks. It is hoped that the others will do better, for the reports are very important. This matter deserves the attention of the pastors.

Attendance at the monthly meeting of the ministers at Elon College last Monday was larger than usual. Dr. Erwin L. Shaver, of Boston, Mass., spoke on modern trends in religious education. Dr. Samuel H. Leger of China told of religious education there.

Mr. Kenneth Register, a member of Grace's Chapel Christian Church, near Sanford, N. C., was licensed by the Western North Carolina Conference last Wednesday to preach the gospel. A group of churches in and near Biseoe asked him to become their pastor. Mr. Register is a junior in Elon College.

Thirteen of the thirty members of our new Asheboro Church were present on Wednesday night of last week when that church was admitted into membership in the Western North Carolina Conference. Rev. A. Lan-son Granger, Jr., is pastor. The Conference voted to give most of its home mission money to this church and asked the churches to make special offerings for the work in Asheboro.

Dr. Erwin L. Shaver and Dr. Samuel H. Leger are visiting churches in North Carolina this week. They will be at Youngsville on Thursday night and at Haw River on Friday night. Pastors, church officials, Sunday school officers and teachers, young people, members of missionary societies, and all who are interested in church work will certainly want to hear these two fine speakers. All churches in those areas are urged to be represented.

Although complete arrangements have not been made, it is expected that Dr. Samuel H. Leger, one of our missionaries from China, will speak in the Valley of Virginia next Sunday. It is expected that he will be at Linville for the eleven o'clock service, at Mt. Olivet (R) at two-thirty o'clock, and at Leaksville at seven-thirty o'clock. Dr. Leger gives a fine report of our work in China and all who can do so will certainly be rewarded by hearing him. Listen for announcement in your Sunday school next Sunday morning.

MEDITATIONS ON ARMISTICE EVENING.

Today is the twenty-first anniversary of the armistice that stopped fighting in the first world war. Babies born on that day of 1918 are now citizens. They are ready to serve their nation. To some of us the years are few and short since the bells rang, whistles blew, and the world went wild with joy because war had ceased. But a new generation has come to maturity, and another world war is in process.

Our country is still maintaining its supposed neutrality. Our guns are not belching forth fire and smoke and death. The flower of our manhood is not yet required to leave the family fireside to become targets for those who are commanded to kill their brothers whom they have never seen. America is still at peace.

Nations that were bled white twenty years ago are now letting blood again. The young men have come to take the place of those killed then, and a new destruction of life and property goes on in Europe and Asia. The war to end war failed. So have all wars. The lessons of 1914-1918 have soon been forgotten. Even our peaceful America is piling up armaments and preparing her men for the conflict which likely lies ahead. Our supplies go to those in the conflict. Especially shameful is our part in the Japanese attempt to subject China. Without the scrap iron, gasoline, and other supplies which our country furnishes, the war would end in Asia and the Chinese would be free again. But we sell old junk for desired cash, and Chinese die by the thousands because of it. Will we ever value human life as being superior to money? When?

But there are hopeful signs being written across the pages of history. Christians around the world are building personal friendships that are not easily broken. The church is telling of the Prince of Peace with new sincerity and devotion. Multitudes of young people are saying that war is sin and they will have no part in it. Nations are not so eager to declare war as once they were. The world may yet learn enough common sense to live in peace.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

The sixty-ninth annual session of the Western North Carolina Conference of Congregational and Christian Churches was held with the Brown's Chapel Christian Church last week. The program was practically that listed in a recent issue of this paper. President Brady preached a fine sermon, presided with dignity, and directed the transaction of business with dispatch. Committees usually presented reports that were accepted, but the Conference on occasion expressed its opinion concerning these reports by making changes.

At least two important steps were made. By unanimous vote the Conference expressed its opinion that all who accept the pastorates of churches should be licensed before accepting the churches. This matter was emphasized in several reports. The churches will certainly take this vote of the Conference seriously, and so will those who aspire to places of leadership in the ministry. Only so can the church progress with high standards.

The other step forward was to adopt a financial plan in keeping with the other conferences of the Southern Convention. This means that in the future all money sent to the enterprises of the church, except the money sent by missionary societies, will count on Conference Apportionments. This will save considerable confusion, and will permit the churches to know exactly how much they give to the various enterprises. The schedule of Apportionments is far from the ideal, as all recognize, but it is a step in the right direction. When the churches have thought through the present Apportionments and have sought to reach the present standard, then they can instruct the Conference committee so that it can do a much better job next year.

Brown's Chapel did itself proud in entertaining. The big table on the church lawn was loaded with good things to eat, and the homes offered kind hospitality to all who would remain over-night.

ADVERTISE THE CHURCH.

"Give me an idea for an editorial," said the editor to a young minister recently.

"Advertise the church" came back the quick reply.

On the main corner in cities, midway of city blocks, on the main highways, and at the end of the trail stand the churches. Some of them with spires and windows pointing heavenward, some of them square like a box, but all of them filled on occasion with sweet music, sincere prayer, and earnest exhortation to live the good life—our churches should be known to all who pass by.

In the cities lights illumine places of business and of pleasure, but the churches are usually dark or lighted only with a small bulb that has no chance to shine like "a city set on a hill." The young minister asks: "Why shouldn't the church glow with inviting light, and flickering messages of love and invitation?" Well, why not? Are we ashamed?

The newspapers tell the story of every murder, theft, and evil of every kind, but seldom does the church display its message to those who seek knowledge in the daily paper. Have we no message to give? Is the work of the church less important than the speech of a politician or the development of real estate by a business concern? Isn't there something that the church could do to make its message clear to a bewildered world and do it in the realm of dignified advertising?

Perhaps some day our colleges will train people to advertise the church as it teaches other important professional activities. Young ministers may in the years to come study the fine art of advertising as well as the making and delivering of sermons. If they do, they will find it very rewarding and the world will see a new day dawning for the influence of the church will be greatly multiplied.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The question was asked in the recent session of the Eastern Virginia Conference: "Why was there an apparent decrease in the amount raised for Conference Apportionments during the present year?" Preachers will ask questions; and here is always some person who will boldly undertake to answer them. One answer, which was challenged, offered two explanations: First, a serious shortage in the cotton crop; second, a tendency in certain areas to a growing individualistic attitude on the part of ministers and churches.

For more than fifty years Dr. W. W. Staley was recognized as the outstanding leader in the Southern Convention. More than any other minister in his day he emphasized the importance of loyalty to the cause. He gave his time and talents to the kingdom of God. And he taught the church to which he ministered the broader field of giving and service. "A minister does not preach to make a living for himself, but he lives and labors to extend the kingdom of God," expressed his personal relation to his task as a pastor. Many ministers and churches caught the spirit of this great preacher and endorsed the challenge to support the legislation of the Convention and Conferences.

Since the union of the Congregational and Christian Churches some ministers and churches have been moving in the direction of acting independently of the Southern Convention as a legislative body, on the ground that it has served its day and is no longer needed, except as a promotional body. Individual churches and ministers are independent in our Convention, but they are also dependent upon close cooperation, if steady growth is desired. The churches of Virginia and North Carolina are not lacking in loyalty to the General Council because they are guided chiefly by the legislation of the Convention and the several Conferences. Cooperation and organic unity make it possible to render much more efficient service to the denominational activities.

A few years ago many pastors and churches took pride in reporting all Conference Apportionments paid in full. It may be that this spirit still exists, but it has lost its emphasis on the Conference floor. Conference Apportionments should be equalized on the basis of ability to pay, and there should be a united, concerted effort to raise the various amounts in full, not for the sake of public recognition, but for the promotion of the kingdom of God. This feature should not be regarded as a tax burden, but a precious opportunity for glorious service. The promotion of the financial obligations and opportunities of the churches should begin in the first month of the new year. It is tragic and almost fatal to wait until the last month.

Denominational loyalty should also express itself in other ways. The book, issued by the Southern Convention, entitled, "Principles and Government" should be used as a guide in Conference organization, church procedure, funerals, marriages, communion services, ordination of deacons, licensure and ordination of candidates for the ministry. Individual taste may prefer to substitute other forms and ceremonies. This book, it may be admitted, is not the final word in such matters. And it may be also admitted that the individual taste, or opinion, of people who prefer a substitute is not the last word in efficiency. The church governing body should determine vital methods of procedure and once determined, they should be observed. The Convention is the source of our authority and its actions should be seriously and faithfully supported and sustained, or repealed.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

The Western North Carolina Conference of Congregational and Christian Churches met in annual session Wednesday and Thursday, November 8 and 9, with Brown's Chapel Church, Rev. E. Carl Brady, pastor. This is one of the older churches of the conference and entertained the conference in a very excellent way. The conference was well attended, and the spirit was excellent. A large number of visitors from other conferences were present. Rev. E. C. Brady is President of the conference and delivered a very timely sermon as his annual message to his co-laborers. It was an earnest appeal for right living and cooperative efforts on the part of the church that the church might receive the fulfillment of the promise of the baptism of the Holy Spirit.

Dr. Samuel H. Leger, missionary on furlough from China, was present as a representative of the American Board and spoke most helpfully regarding our work in China as affected by the war, and emphasized the need for cooperation and support of the church's interest in China.

The usual reports from departments and committees were made, indicating improved conditions throughout the conference and an increased interest in the affairs of the church. As usual, there were pessimistic notes sounded, but on the whole there was a forward looking spirit and were evidences of increased activities in practically all fields.

I understand that new buildings are to be erected by different congregations within the conference. The organization of the new church in Asheboro with Rev. A. Lanson Grainger as organizer and pastor, is a most hopeful undertaking. The work in Asheboro is beginning in a most encouraging way. This is an effort to resurrect and reorganize the church that we had in Asheboro years ago and to enlist members of the Christian Church elsewhere now living in the city. Asheboro is the largest town in Randolph County, is the county seat, and is a rapidly growing city. There are great possibilities for the Christian Church in this section.

The churches and Sunday schools of the conference are giving increased support to Elon College, which is greatly appreciated. The present officers of the conference were re-elected for the ensuing year.

Our divine Lord will supply both oil and cleansing to make us shine brightly and be useful if we will but ask Him."

"The only gift is a portion of thyself. . . . Therefore the poet brings his poem; the shepherd, his lamb; the farmer, corn; the miner, a gem; the sailor, coral and shells; the painter, his picture; the girl, a handkerchief of her own sewing."

"Christ was the first true democrat that ever breathed, as the old dramatist Dekkar said he was the first true gentleman."

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN.

Our good women have chosen as the subject for their devotionals in opening their Missionary Societies, "Witnessing." The subject is based on the Book of John, the Fourth Gospel. Dr. Robert E. Speer has called this Book of John the greatest book ever written. Many will agree with Dr. Speer.

It all seems folly and out of place to go into the subject of when and by whom this Fourth Gospel was written. The internal evidence is all there that the beloved disciple himself wrote the book, and to dispute or question its authorship doesn't get one anywhere. It is all on a level of those learned critics who claim that Lord Bacon, who was a very learned man, wrote Shakespeare, since it was known fact that Shakespeare did not have the necessary learning, according to the critics, to write Shakespeare. Well, the world has Shakespeare and has benefited accordingly, and the world has the Fourth Gospel and has benefited accordingly.

A genuine genius has always been too much for the critics, and leaving these critics for the time being to worry among themselves, it is sufficient for us to know that John wrote John. There is the Fourth Gospel, and from beginning to end it is a gospel of love, which love all would, or should, be willing to give witness to, who may read this Book.

The writer's advice to the good women of our Societies, who are to use the book in their devotional studies, would be to take the book as it stands and accept it as coming from the pen of John, the beloved disciple, who so magnified and exalted the word and works of his Lord and Master, and said in the closing verse of his wonderful book, "And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they would be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written."

The book the women have adopted for their devotionals in their Societies is entitled, "Studies in Witnessing—In the Gospel by John," a book prepared by Mrs. S. H. Askew. There are ten studies, or chapters, in all; the first five being called the Major Studies, and the second five "Extended Studies." Thus the women have ten studies if they choose to use one each for ten months, and we urgently advise that they do so. As an introduction to these studies the book advises that every member of the Society read at once the entire Gospel of John and re-read it occasionally to keep the meaning fresh in mind.

The subject of study number one is "The Witness of God in Jesus"; study two, "The Witness of Jesus as the Word of God," and so on. We urge that each Society provide itself with a copy of this book and that the same be given a month ahead to the one chosen to lead the devotionals in the opening of the Society. No one can go through this little volume without realizing that it is worth many times its price, which price we note is twenty-five cents per copy.

This, of course, is not to be confused in any way with the Mission Study Book of the Society, the title of that book is "Through Tragedy to Triumph: the World Church in the World Crisis," by Basil Mathews. This latter book may be obtained from our office for the price of sixty cents, copy of which should be in every Society, or can be ordered directly from the publisher, Missions Council of Congregational and Christian Churches, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

NEGROES AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

It may not be generally known amongst CHRISTIAN SUN readers that the Negroes in our midst have their Women's Foreign Missionary Societies, very much as we ourselves do, and also that they publish regularly a missionary magazine, named for the first missionary sent out to Liberia by that group, the Lott Carey Herald, which publication is now in its twenty-eighth year. The magazine is published "in the interest of missions," and the copy before me now has to do especially with the foreign work as carried on by their Women's Missionary Societies. They have their Women's Societies, their Young People's Societies, etc., very much as we ourselves do, and it is worth noting that the men, too, have an active part. This writer was indeed surprised to note that their Societies in North Carolina for the month of September, 1939, raised and sent in to their treasurer, $642.04.

The copy of the Lott Carey Herald fell, by accident, into the writer's hands and tells of the annual meeting of their convention, and carries the address by the president of that body, Dr. A. L. James. I confess that I have not seen in many a day a better worded and more significant utterance in the matter of missions than that by this Negro president. I think CHRISTIAN SUN readers will agree with me in two particulars: First, that it is doubtful if any of the ministers in our own churches of white people have expressed any better the dynamic of missions than has this Negro. Secondly, if we white people would give in proportion to our income like the Negroes do for

NEWS AND VIEWS

FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH. BURLINGTON, N. C.

As the Conference year closes indications are that the Burlington Church has raised in full the apportionments for the year; in fact, that the receipts of last year both for missionary and benevolent giving and for current expenses have been exceeded. For particular causes it has been a close call, but for certain other causes a modest margin is realized.

The goal in evangelism established by the Convention has not been reached. This goal would require a net gain of fifteen and our net gain is only thirteen. Over the years the Burlington Church more than realizes this goal, for through the years the church has realized a steady growth, larger on some years than on others.

Recently the trustees purchased on authority of the church two twenty-five foot lots adjoining the church property on the west. This is valuable property and only after negotiations were the trustees able to secure it for $3,000.00, half of which purchase price was immediately paid. This additional fifty feet of property gives the church seventy feet in the clear to the west, thus providing room for future expansion, immediate grounds for recreational and fellowship activities and assurance against too close neighbors. This last week the trustees were authorized to install stokers for the two boilers of the church heating system. This, too, will prove a very splendid addition to our church equipment.

Through the gift of a friend a Unitype statuary bronze copper bulletin board supported on art iron standards and carrying the name of the church in pearlite opal letters will be placed on the corner lawn. Then all those who pass by may learn the building is The First Christian Church, Congregational-Christian.

During the second week in October a School of Leadership Education was held in our church under the auspices of the Upper Alamance Fellowship of Churches. Classes were offered in specialization courses, the Bible and problems in personal Christian living. A strong faculty was secured for the school and each member served faithfully and capably throughout a strenuous week. It was composed of Mrs. J. L. Foster, Miss Ruth I. Seabury, Rev. J. Frank Apple, Rev. W. M. Stevens, and Prof. Merton French of Elon College.

Contemporary with the school the Burlington Church presented Miss Seabury in a week's series of morning and evening addresses based on the findings of and Miss Seabury's experience at the Madras Conference and the general work of the church in this perplexed world of today. It the Burlington Chamber of Commerce is engaged in a campaign to raise fifty thousand dollars in the county toward the liquidation of the indebtedness. When the receipts are all in we feel safe in prophesying it will be found that the membership of our church has given loyally, for already over five thousand of the twelve thousand subscribed has been secured from our members.

We are very proud of our three choirs—the adult, the young people's and the junior. The young people's choir provides the music each fourth Sunday night and on other special occasions. The junior choir is heard on each second Sunday morning and on special occasions. The adult choir stands by faithfully and efficiently every Sunday. Recently the adult choir was heard in a service of favorite anthems and it proved one of the most enjoyed and most spiritual services of the Conference year.

Our Burlington Church does not have any one large organization of young people, but our young people are active in the general work of the church and can be found everywhere in our program. Under Miss Rudd the effort has been to develop leadership and initiative and to include the young people in the whole program and very fine results have been obtained in this direction. We believe Burlington young people have been active in and for every youth program within our Conference and within the Convention.

You will have to pardon such a long epistle from our church, but is the only one for the year, we believe.

DAN RIVER DISTRICT.

Another fifth Sunday! That means of course a meeting of the Dan River District.

When we arrived at Liberty many people were on the church lawn, the day being a beautiful sunshiny one; soon we were greeted by the smiling face of Mrs. Bray who invited us into a nice, warm, comfortable church which was very inviting.

Soon the meeting was called to order by the president. Liberty Choir sang several numbers beautifully for us. Since the pastor, Rev. C. E. Newman, was absent because of a funeral, Supt. C. D. Johnston led the opening prayer. Miss Margaret Tuck of the Liberty Church gave, in her pleasant manner, a warm welcome to her church. Mr. Talbert of the Pleasant Grove Church gave the response.

Before the orphanage program, Mr. Johnston gave a brief talk, stating this was his first visit to Liberty. The program the children rendered held us spellbound for quite a while. I think many silent prayers went up to God for the children, Miss Lane, and Mr. Johnston. The people in this district are so proud of the progress the orphanage is making. An offering was taken amounting to $34.14.

The roll call showed six Sunday school superintendents present; with only seven churches in the District, I think this is wonderful. The attendance banner went to Ingram Church. Virgilina Church invited the next rally to meet with her.

The closing message was brought by Rev. J. Howard Smith of our Lynchburg Church, his subject being "Standards of Teaching." Mr. Smith was at his best and made those of us who are Sunday school teachers more fully appreciate our opportunity to present Christ to our classes.

We were delighted to have as visitors Rev. and Mrs. H. E. Crutchfield and family.

As we journeyed homeward we could not help but think what a pleasant afternoon we had spent with Liberty Church. If it is God's will we hope to meet with Virgilina at our next meeting. I think these rallies are proving very beneficial in this District and each one proves to be better than the last.

MRS. B. J. EARP.

NEW LEBANON, N. C.

The work of our church has been running smoothly this year. We have missed our faithful superintendent of the Sunday school, W. T. Moore, who has been unable to attend services regularly on account of ill health. The assistant, J. I. Sharpe, has been loyal. Rally Day was observed the third Sunday in October.

At our revival our pastor, Rev. J. L. Neese, was ably assisted by his son, Rev. J. Everette Neese of Henderson, N. C. The attendance was good and he brought us helpful and inspiring messages which were as food for hungry souls. Our church was greatly strengthened and several professed faith in Christ. We hope to have him come our way again.

At our quarterly conference in August our pastor brought us sad news when he told us that he thought it best to resign at the close of this conference year, so that our church would feel free to join a group of churches. Our Promotional Secretary, Rev. F. C. Lester, has been working on the formation of this group for some time.

It is with deep regret that we give up Brother Neese, who has proven himself by his works. He has served our church and community faithfully and efficiently. In thinking back over these eight years he has been with us, we say that he truly has been a good shepherd. We cannot express in words what it has meant to have as our leader one so fully consecrated to the work of his Heavenly Father. We feel that these years of continued service and leadership have won for him the love and confidence of our church and surrounding community as nothing else could have done. As he leaves us, we are praying that he may ever be as "clay in the potter's hand" ready for any task the Master has for him, ever ready to say, "Here am I."

BOOKS FOR ADVENT READING.

By REV. JOHN H. KNIGHT,
Norfolk, Virginia.

The informed Christian knows what he believes. There are certain important and fundamental truths which are basic to Christianity, and apart from which Christian experience cannot exist. Would you be "rooted and grounded in the faith?" (Eph. 3:17). Then it is essential that you should possess an intelligent understanding of the great intellectual concepts which make our religion, not one among many religions, but the supreme revelation of God in Christ.

One of the best ways of getting a full-orbed view of the grand sweep of revealed truth is to follow the Liturgical Year. If a pastor does this in his preaching, he is not apt to be a "hobby rider," nor will the complaint of over-emphasis on any one phase of Scriptural truth be heard of him.

The Christian Year treats of Christianity as being what it most surely is, a historical religion. The Christian Year treats the Bible as an authentic and valid record of these historical facts. In the cyclic observance of the Christian Year, Advent, and Lent, Christmas and Easter stand out as living witnesses to some of the

THE SALARY SITUATION.

By DR. MARK A. DAWBER.

[Contributed by Rev. R. D. Coulter, New Market, Virginia.]

There is little hope for a more vital church unless we can anticipate some drastic change that will make possible a more equitable salary basis and look toward a definite minimum for qualified men. The church in general is having much to say about the injustice and inequality in the economic structure in general. Pastors of large city churches receiving the big salaries are usually the men who lead out in this indictment of our social order, but who have failed to deal with these same problems that exist within the institution of the church itself. Some of the most glaring social and economic inequalities obtain in the ministry. This has not only created conditions of poverty with all its consequences in the homes of the poorly paid pastors, but a more serious problem has resulted. There is a widening gulf developing between the pastors. The unbrotherliness, the lack of unity, the manipulation to get appointments—all of these unlovely things now depriving us of the full joy of our ministry are rooted in this unjust and inequitable salary situation. Is it any wonder that many well educated men of the ministry are embracing communism? Where else is there a light of hope on the economic horizon?

These vast differences in salaries, one group living in comparative luxury and asserting the influence, and another group living in what amounts to abject poverty and unable to call their souls their own—what chance is there to preach the gospel of Jesus in a ministry so lacking in the essential spirit and purpose of that gospel? What hope is there that the world will take any notice of our preachments on social righteousness and economic justice when the ministry itself is so penetrated with these same sins? "Physician heal thyself" is the answer we receive.

The responsibility to remedy this situation lies heavy upon the ministry and church heads. A ministry existing on such conditions of salary range was a grand week and the harvest will be garnered over the years.

Our Woman's Missionary Society has, from time to time, considered asking that its thousand dollar apportionment be lowered. It has not quite been reached for several years. But this last Monday the pastor visited the society and just before the meeting was called to order he asked, "Will you raise the apportionment this year?" The ladies first said,

"We will try," but when he raised his right eyebrow at them they said, "We will." And they will for they are that kind of Christian ladies.

Right now Elon College through such as now exist is impotent to deal with the problems of modern society. We are not pleading for equality. Under the differing conditions of the work in a land so vast as ours there can be no such thing as a flat equality. But equity there must be if the church is to continue, and to have any real influence in the nations' life.

We are making the following suggestions as our major factors that should be included in the consideration of this problem:

1. A survey of churches and parishes looking toward such consolidation that will make possible the largest amount of self-support.

2. Some drastic action in the denominational bodies to deal with inefficiency on the part of both pastors and churches.

3. Sliding scale assessments on churches to provide opportunity for the strong churches to share in an equitable salary program.

4. Sliding scale assessments on pastors to enable them to share in an equitable salary program.

Then there is the central pooling plan that has been presented from time to time by Dr. Warren H. Wilson.

Of course, this problem is by no means confined to the rural church, but it is primarily one of rural concern. Until something is done in a more universal and far-reaching way to adjust this salary situation, we shall not get very far in discussing other programs for rural church success.

BIG NEWS FOR THE NEXT WEEK.

(near Sanford, N. C.). Dr. Leger will be one of the speakers. Institute on Evangelism at First Congregational Church, Raleigh, N. C., for Negroes.

WEDNESDAY—Eastern North Carolina Conference at Turner's Chapel. Dr. Fagley and Dr. Merrill will be among the speakers.

THURSDAY—Institute on Evangelism at Elon College with Dr. Fagley and Dr. Merrill as leaders.

Leaders of our churches will certainly want to hear these excellent speakers as they present the work of our churches around the world. They are all specialists in their field. Please see that your church people know of the meetings and that as many as possible are present for them.

NEGROES AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

missions, we would not be long in having missionaries to proclaim the gospel of peace throughout all the nations.

Dr. James chose as his subject, "Missionary Activity, the Imperative Expression of a Regenerated Heart." I cannot forego quoting as briefly as I may from this most excellent address:

"When we consider the missionary character of the ministry of Jesus, and note the fact that the New Testament is a volume of missionary literature, we are at once convinced that Missionary Activity is the Imperative Expression of a Regenerated Heart. Someone has very wisely said that no man was ever convinced with any momentous truth without feeling within himself the power as well as the desire to communicate it.

"Bishop Wilberforce is reported as having said, 'If my faith be false, I ought to change it; whereas if it be true, I am bound to propagate it.' To those who have heard the voice of God, who have become susceptible to his influence, who have felt the dynamic influence of his divine personality, the impulse to carry the good news to those who know him not, is inevitable. It is a serious indictment of one's religious experience for him to reserve for his own selfish interest that which he claims to be the most valuable thing in the world. God is not a national deity, he is the loving Father of all mankind, and the world can see him best through the message and the person of Jesus Christ, his Son, and the testimony of the lives of men and women whom he has redeemed by his blood and saved by his grace.

"Let us not overlook the fact that missionary activity is not merely an expression of the heart, but an expression of the regenerated heart. An expression made under the spell of a compelling force. The soul of redeemed man longs to give vent to its feelings, and Christ has commanded it, both in the mysterious plan of regeneration and finally in the great commission. In Romans, 10th chapter, we are taught that 'If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus and shall believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved.' Eternal salvation is here offered as a reward for expressing to the world our faith in Christ. With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, but with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. It is necessary to believe, but to believe only is not sufficient,

We are required to believe so thoroughly and so deeply, so firmly and so gratefully, that we will not hold our peace; the joy of our belief in him must burst forth into praise and confession, that the world may know that the heart has been regenerated. And so essential is it that provision should be made for this expression of our regeneration that Christ in his infinite wisdom has given to the world this marvelous system of Missions, and he emphasized its importance by the great commission from Mt. Olivet's lofty summits before he ascended, as he said, 'Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and Lo, I am with you always even unto the end of the world.'

"Those who are regenerated are not only seized with a passion for God and his glory that will not be satisfied until expressed, but they are inspired with a divine command to give expression to their faith in the Christ, both as individuals and as organized groups. Hence our Missionary organizations. The reason for the Lott Carey Baptist Foreign Mission Society, organized forty-two years ago, is bound up in the fact Christ has ordained it, that through Missionary channels the regenerated heart should have an opportunity of expression."

PROGRAM FOR WOMEN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY FOR DECEMBER, 1939.

Arranged by MRS. O. H. PARIS.

[Adapted from "Christmas Lights in Many Lands," by Mrs. Andrew Todd Taylor.]

THE SETTING.

On the wall hangs a large map of the world. Fastened to each country or area considered is a long red ribbon. On a table below the map stands a small evergreen tree trimmed only with tiny electric lights, each bulb screwed loosely so as to remain unlighted. [If not practical to use electric lights, red candles may be used, arranged around the table in holders.] Arrange an illuminated star just over the map by fastening a box covered with silver paper over a light bulb. Cut a good-sized star in the lid and paste thin white paper over this cut out. The star is unlighted at the beginning of service. Soft music of old Christmas carols.

LEADER: "We are approaching the Birthday of our Lord. As we think of what his coming into human life has meant to us, let us give him thanks."

HYMNS: "Joy to the World."
"It Came Upon the Midnight Clear."

SCRIPTURE READING; Luke 2: 8-20.

THREE SHORT PRAYERS: For ourselves, that we may make Christ more at home in our own hearts; for those who have lighted the Christmas candles in dark places; for those who, for the first time, may open their hearts to the Christ Child.

HYMN: "As With Gladness Men of Old." (During this song the light in the star is turned on.)

A VOICE: (Person unseen.)

"And there were shepherds in the same country abiding in the field and keeping watch by night over their flock." We are women around the world—abiding in homes, schools, offices, hospitals. And many things are ours to do. How can we use these busy days before Christmas to make ready again for the simple, glorious message of a Saviour who is Christ the Lord? We can look up often from our household tasks, our desks, our books, our work of the day, and see God in the world about us, in sunshine, in rain, in trees, in quiet places, and in crowded streets.

We can face days joyfully, welcoming new friendships, new knowledge; new experiences of every kind, whatever of change or adjustment they may mean, searching for the Christ-like way of meeting them all. We can have maps of the world on the walls of our homes and the thought of the world in our hearts. Then when the "good tidings of great joy" come again to us and to all people at Christmas time, we can, and we will, go even unto Bethlehem from all parts of the world and find God's gift and make Him ours.

We will offer Him, simply and in love, our most precious gift, the gift of our selves. And He, who knows the joy of giving, will share that joy with us. So like the shepherds we will go on from the Christmas season into a glad New Year; like the shepherds, glorifying and praising God for all the things which we have seen and heard.

LEADER:

And so we will soon again light the Christmas candles in our homes! Once more the lovely story will be told to little children! Once more the joy which comes from giving and sharing will be ours! Let us not forget that all around the earth the Birthday of our King will be kept. To many the story is new, the joy is fresh. How do they keep this festival?

FIRST SPEAKER:

It was Christmas Day in Japan. Preparations had begun weeks before when the postman had brought our Christmas box from America. After a glance at its generous supply of goodies we set to work and filled twenty-five net stockings which had been embroidered with yarn. Then out into the back lane we went to invite the children who lived there to a Christmas party. As we counted, we felt confident that the twenty-five socks would be sufficient.

When the hour for the festivities arrived, the number of children who trooped in, leaving their shoes Japanese fashion in the vestibule, was amazingly large. As soon as they were all in and games started, someone slipped to the vestibule to count the shoes. There could be no mistaking the number—there were forty pairs. An emergency crew was put to work popping corn, emptying cookie jars, and the like, so that no one would be disappointed.

It was thrilling to tell the Christmas story to the children who heard it for the first time. They sat so still, and their eyes got big with wonder. Then when the beautiful story was finished, the lights were turned off and only the lights of the Christmas tree were lighted, with a big star at the top.

When it was all over, the fun and the stories, and each child had scrambled into his own shoes, there was the bag of American goodies for each one to carry home to share with the family. In each child's heart there was an old story to share, too.

I light the Christmas candle for the children in Japan.

(Speaker takes ribbon pinned to Japan on map, attaches it to a bulb on the tree and screws on the light. If candles are used, she attaches ribbon to candle and lights. Each speaker, in turn, does likewise.)

SECOND SPEAKER:

It is Christmas Day in the Near East. There is a sacred hush in the homes, for it is a holy day, not a holiday there. Some are still worshipping in their churches, where many have been since midnight in a special service—reading the Bible nativity stories, praying, chanting, and celebrating high mass. There is no mysterious Santa Claus, no Christmas tree, no anxious rush to have presents ready. In some homes there may be a miniature representation in small figures of the manger in the stable, the shepherds with their sheep and the magi on their camels, with which the children are quietly playing.

New Year is the season of festivity. It is ushered in with street singing and dancing. Open house is kept, with a table loaded with nuts and delicious dried fruits ever-ready for guests. As you may imagine, Mohammedans do not have a Christmas, but for Christians in the Near East, Christmas is a holy day.

Let me light a candle in the Near East for the Birthday of our King.

THIRD SPEAKER:

It was Christmas Day in South Africa. Our native Christmas tree was very successful. The church was packed—children hanging on the windows outside. The whole alcove back of the pulpit was full of more than fifty chickens, baskets of tomatoes, jars of honey, even legs of meat wrapped in newspapers. On the tree were hung the bright-colored little books which had been made for the women of the mothers' group—recipe books in the native language. There had been wrapped up more than one hundred packages for native families. These all came from boxes from America.

My candle shows the light of the Christ Child in South Africa.

FOURTH SPEAKER:

Come with me to China, and let us see how the Chinese celebrate Christmas. No weeks of shopping in sparkling stores. No bustle of Christmas giving. What can Christmas be like, you ask? The Chinese Christians in Dionglah celebrate their Christmas with a Christmas offering and Christmas pageants. A beautiful worship service of pageantry and song, ending with the Christmas offering is always held Christmas Sunday morning, and in the afternoon or evening is the pageant for the townspeople.

Two weeks before Christmas the pastor sends to all who attend the church a Christmas greeting and with the greeting an envelope for their offering. The envelopes are brought to the morning service. And part of the worship is to lay the gift there before the manger. How the children look forward to this! How proudly they clutch their envelopes and how tenderly do they lay them down.

Then in the evening at the other service the aim is to present the Christmas story so that these people who do not know its meaning will come to know why we celebrate Christmas. The story is told so simply and so beautifully that those who have heard it over and over are thrilled with its message and doubly thrilled as they look about at the faces of those who are hearing it for the first time.

Let my candle represent the True Light in China.

FIFTH SPEAKER:

It was Christmas Day in India! The first faint streak of dawn began to show in the eastern sky. Old Sakubai stirred. "Are you coming, are you coming to the town of Bethlehem? With the angels, will you sing the song of victory?" The words of the sweet Marathi hymn came to Sakubai's ears faintly as the last band of carol singers passed on down the street to their homes. All night long she had been hearing them—from far, from near, different bands, all about the city. Early in the evening when she had first begun her Christmas cooking, it was girls from the girls school who passed by on their way to the hospital to sing for the patients there. They had stopped in front of her door and had sung for her and she had gone out and given them Christmas sweets.

At two o'clock in the morning as she finished her big pile of sweet cakes, the carollers were still going by her house. Her grandsons, two stalwart lads, came rushing home from their singing, carrying the little brass clappers which they had been using all night long to accompany their singing.

It was eleven o'clock and the church bell had been ringing for some time. Sakubai and the two boys hurried out and joined the crowds moving toward the city. What a crowd there was in church today! Why were all these people here? They surely had not come to get something! No, on Christmas Day one did not come to church to get! One came to give! As Sakubai looked about the crowded congregation, she could see that every one, even the little children, had something in their hands. Some were clutching copper coins—some had handfuls of grain, others had eggs which they were going to put on the table at the time of the great offering. There were even roosters in baskets. Yes, indeed, one would be ashamed to come to the Christmas service without something to give! Sakubai thought with thankfulness of the silver pieces that she and her two boys had to give.

The benches were full, but still the people moved over cheerfully until every bench was bulging with occupants. Babies cried and crawled about the floor, children ran up and down the aisles, the roosters in the baskets crowded and cackled, but the Christmas service went joyfully on. Speaker after speaker stood up in the pulpit and talked to the eager crowd. Carol after carol rose in great swelling sounds until the very rafters of the church rang, and the message of Christmas went out on a great tide of song to the far corners of the listening city. "Christmas, the Christian's Day!" said the Hindu merchant in a nearby shop. "Joy to the world, the Lord is come," so sang the tired, happy Christians in the crowded church.

And so this candle that I light is a symbol of the Christ who illumines India, too.

LEADER:

These tiny, lighted candles and ribbons marking areas and lands to which we have brought light, are only a portion of the little lights glowing around the world because you and I have tried to share our Child of the Manger with those in darkness. Let us rejoice that the light spreads. May it cover the whole earth.

CLOSING PRAYER:

Almighty God, who by the birth of Thy Son hast given us a great light to dawn upon our darkness, grant, we pray Thee, that in His light we may see light. Let the light of Christ search our souls and scatter our darkness. Let it shine more and more throughout the world unto the perfect day; and give us grace while we have the light, that we may be the Children of Light. Amen.

(Note: Christmas stories taken from December, 1937, issue of "Envelope Series." Others may be found in same issue.)

Did you ever stop to think, when you read a list of salaries ranging upward from $100,000, what became of them. The taxpayer is the chief beneficiary, for few, indeed, of these financial giants retain half their pay. The larger part goes to support the government and thus reduces your tax burden and mine. Why not then mingle a little gratitude with our envy whenever we read that Chairman This or President That received remuneration for his services measured by six figures?—Adapted.

"Youth at Work in the Church"

Emily Carleton Lester, Editor

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

The young people of Western North Carolina had charge of the program on Wednesday night of last week at the Conference held at Brown's Chapel, near Hemp, N. C. Mr. Sybrant Pell of Asheboro, president of the Pilgrim Fellowship, presided. The Pleasant Hill young people, under the direction of Mr. Henry Overman, presented a play about China—"The Color Line." Mr. Pell explained about the Pilgrim Fellowship project in China and an offering amounting to more than seven dollars was received for this work. Dr. Samuel H. Leger of North China talked to the group about our work in that country and about present conditions there.

CHINA FRIENDSHIP PROJECT.

Program materials concerning China have been sent out to each young people's group in the Southeast—that is, to each young people's group where a key-worker is known. If no one in your group received this excellent series of programs worked out by Mrs. Robert Lee House, please write to Frances Foster, 614 Arlington Street, Greensboro, N. C., and she will be glad to furnish you with them. It is hoped that each young people's group will use these programs—and will take an offering for the young people's project at the conclusion of them.

We have been asked to make this a matter of sacrifice. You know that it is to be over and above all that we are now doing for missions in our young people's societies. We all have and use things that are not necessities. Can't we give up something and share with the young people of China?

We have learned from Dr. Leger that this "lay training"—for which the land and buildings we are expecting to purchase are to be used—is the hope of the rural church in China. One pastor for a whole county—imagine what that would be like. No other churches of any other denomination in that area. You can imagine that he could not do all the work that was needed in each of the villages. Thus it is so important that the young men and women in those villages can be trained to lead Sunday schools, to lead prayer meeting groups, to teach, to lead in singing hymns, and to do other things which we think of the minister directing. With this building in Tientsin, China, it is hoped that many hundred young people can be brought there each year to learn of those things which will help the development of the Christian life among the people of their villages.

If a young people's group does get some money for this fine purpose, you are asked to send it to your Conference treasure, telling him from what church it comes. He, in turn, will send it on to the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship treasurer, Roland Allgood, in Norfolk, Va.

A GEM.

By Rev. S. Q. Helfenstein, D. D.

A thought dropped down from heights above,
A Gem secured from depths below:
Its worth is prized by men of thought,
Who value Truth just as they ought;
Its power is felt by hearts renewed,
Who strive eternal life to win;
They walk the path with tears bedewed,
God's Heavenly Home to enter in.

PLAY WRITING CONTEST.

Would you be interested in writing a play? Why not try it?

The Greater New York Federation of Churches announces its annual playwriting contest. The plays submitted must be one-act dramas especially designed for church production by children, young people or adults. They may be Biblical, historical (based on the lives of the saints or heroes) or modern plays but they must give expression to Christian conviction and faith in the face of modern problems. The writer of the best one-act play will receive two hundred ($200.00) dollars; lesser amounts will be presented to the writers of the next best plays. This contest will close on April 15, 1940. Those interested in further details may write the Board of Christian Education, Elon College, N. C., for more information.

USING OUR PRIVILEGES.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR NOVEMBER 26, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: II Corinthians 9: 6-15.
(THANKSGIVING.)

Daily Readings—

Monday—Privilege of Abiding Trust—
Psalm 34: 1-10.
Tuesday—Privilege of Ceasless Prayer
—I Thess. 5: 16-18.
Wednesday—Privilege of Divine Fellowship—
I John 1: 3-7.
Thursday—Privilege of Liberal Giving
—Acts 20: 35; Luke 6: 38.
Friday—Privilege of God-Given Talents
—Matt. 25: 14-18.
Saturday—Privilege of Gladsome Service—
Psalm 100.

Thanksgiving is a time not only for recounting the blessings and privileges that God gives us to enjoy and being grateful for them, but especially for reconsecrating them and ourselves in Christ's service.

Use some definite part or all of the service as a consecration service. The Christian World has a good program.

Give each member an opportunity to make remarks on "one privilege for which I am especially thankful."

In the New Testament terms, "We are bought with a price." We belong to Christ and Christ belongs to God. Our thankfulness takes in this great Christian truth, and our lives should be expressive of it. When they are, our thanksgiving becomes thanksgiving and life becomes a sacrament. In sacramental living we do not give God a part of what we have, we give Him ourselves. We consecrate to His glory our all.

For General Discussion—

1. How can we better use the privilege of a home and family?
2. How can we better use the privilege of having friends?
3. How can we better use the privilege of recreation and play life?
4. How can we better use the privilege of worship?

Suggested Hymns—

"Praise the Lord, Ye Saints Adore Him."

"There's a Wideness in God's Love."

"Joyful, Joyful, We Adore Thee."

It would be fine if, at the close of this service, each individual present place an offering upon the altar for some needy family or purpose.

S. E. M.

Our church at Albemarle, N. C., has recently closed a revival meeting in which there were many reconsecrations and nine additions to the church. The pastor, Rev. O. A. Elmore, did the preaching. Pastor Elmore reports a good year in Albemarle.

WARNINGS AND PROMISES.

LESSON VIII—NOVEMBER 19, 1939.

TEXT: As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.—Luke 6:31.

SCRIPTURE: Matthew 7:1-14.

One needs to be reminded occasionally that there are difficulties in the Christian life as well as rewards. Although the great word in the New Testament is grace, there is a place for effort, and self control, and self discipline. In today's lesson Jesus sounds some warnings as well as gives some promises.

Judging Other Folks.

"Judge not that ye be not judged, for with what judgment ye judge ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again." Jesus does not mean, of course, that we should not have judges in our courts, or that we should not form judgments or hold opinions of our own. What he does condemn is the habit of fault finding, of the undue critical spirit, of censoriousness, of harsh condemnation of others. He points out the fact that if we thus judge others we actually condemn ourselves.

As a matter of fact, we are not in position to judge others. We do not know all of the forces that enter into their lives and which have influence in their decisions. We do not know the handicaps under which they labor. When we set ourselves up as self-appointed judges, we usurp the place of God himself.

The Mote and the Beam.

Jesus had a keen sense of humor. He shows how a man who has a large beam or a large plank in his own eye is trying to remove a tiny speck from the eye of his fellowman. Jesus suggests as a matter of practical, common sense that the man ought to get the beam out of his own eye before he attempts to take the speck out of the eye of his fellowman. How prone we are to see the faults of others while we are blind to our own faults? To be sure we are not to be blind to the faults of others, and there are times and occasions when a kind, sympathetic word of criticism is in order. Paul says that if a man be overtaken in a fault those who are spiritual are to restore such a man in the spirit of meekness, considering ourselves lest we also should be tempted. Perhaps nothing is needed more than the spirit of self-criticism and self-judgment, so that we might be in a better position to help others.

The Value of Persistence.

"Ask and it shall be given you; seek and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you." Thus does Jesus put a premium upon prayer and upon the pursuit of spiritual goals and ideals. But it is significant that Jesus used the Greek words which embodied the idea of continuance, tenacity, and persistence. Translated literally these words would mean—If you keep on asking, it shall be given you; if you keep on seeking you shall find; if you keep on knocking it shall be opened unto you. We need to emphasize this phrase, or aspect, of prayer. As a matter of fact the average person thinks of prayer as a particular act or in terms of an isolated request. But prayer really is the whole bent and purpose and spirit of life. God does not and God can not give us everything we want simply for the asking. Some of his blessings can be given only to that heart which by constancy and consistence shows that it is prepared to receive the divine blessing, but there is great encouragement in these words of Jesus to all those who diligently seek to find God, to all those who are poor in spirit, to all those who hunger and thirst after righteousness.

A Father—Plus.

Jesus illustrates the above-named principle in a very human story. He reminds his hearers that even though they are limited in their knowledge and limited in their love, even though they may be evil in the sense that sometimes they do wrong, that they covet the best for their children and as far as possible give it to them. If this be true of our earthly fathers, how much more is it true of our Heavenly Father. Luke says that God will give the holy spirit to them that ask him. Jesus would have us understand that the giving or withholding in answer to prayer is based not only upon the love of God but upon the wisdom of God. God is not an indulgent grandfather or a soft-hearted father, but he is wisdom and love combined. He knows what is best for us. He is eager to give us the best. And if we continue to ask him, he will give us good things.

The Golden Rule.

"All things therefore whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even also unto them; for this is the law and the prophets." Several hundred years before Christ was born, a great Chinese teacher announced a certain kind of golden rule. He said that we are not to do unto another what we would not have the other do unto us. That is, of course, a high ideal of conduct. David Harem rather shrewdly said that the best workable definition of the Golden Rule was to do unto the other fellow as he would like to do to us, only do it first. But Jesus said that the law of the kingdom was for one to do unto others as he would have others do unto him. It is another instance of the fact that Jesus came not to destroy but to fulfill. The application of what we call the Golden Rule would practically solve all the problems, both personal and social, in our modern world.

The Two Gates, and the Two Ways.

Jesus talks about two ways, one that is narrow and the one that is broad. The one leads unto destruction; the other leads unto life. He talks about two gates which afford an entrance into these two ways of life. The one gate is straight and narrow; the other gate is wide. This seems like a strange saying to many, but wrapped up in this illustration is a profound and abiding truth. Physical health and athletic prowess come by self-discipline and by rigid training. Intellectual ability comes by strenuous and strict discipline of the mind. The artist in sculpture, in paint, or in music never achieves success by scattering efforts, but rather by rigid discipline and by persistent self-control and practice. So it is in the spiritual life. The road of least resistance leads to disintegration and destruction.

It is only by discipline that one reaches the spiritual heights. Needless to say man does have some measure of freedom. John Oxenham has put this great truth in poetic form as follows:

To every man there openeth a way,
a way, and ways
The high soul climbs the high way
And the low soul gropes the low
And in between on the misty flats,
The rest drift to and fro,
But to every man there openeth a high way and a low
And every man decideth the way his soul shall go.

"To whatever worlds He carries our souls when they shall pass out of these imprisoning bodies, in those worlds these souls of ours shall find themselves part of the same great Temple; for it belongs not to this earth alone. There can be no end of the universe where God is, to which that growing Temple does not reach—the Temple of a creation to be wrought at last into a perfect utterance of God by a perfect obedience to God."

MONDAY.

"OFF CENTER."

"I am determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and Him crucified."—I. Cor. 2:2.

This is a statement of Paul's central controlling and abiding center of life.

The great fly-wheel of the engine driving the mill was revolving with immense power, driving every wheel in the mill smoothly and without vibration. Suddenly there was vibration, something had gone wrong, and, before the power could be shut off, it broke and wrecked the mill, throwing a section of its rim a hundred yards away burying it in the ground.

When the life revolves around Jesus as its center, in perfect balance, there is great power. But when another center is chosen, ultimately it wrecks the life. Christianity has suffered from off-center Christians more than from sinful people.

Prayer—O Lord Jesus, be Thou our center in this and every day. Help us to gather every straying thought and wayward affection and bring them into conformity to Thy will. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"THE MOST SEARCHING PASSAGE."

"If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His."—Rom. 8:9.

This is the most searching passage in God's Word. It summons into the consciousness the temper, the character, the love, the gentleness, the fairness, the consideration of others, of our Lord Jesus Christ, and says that unless one has somewhat of these characteristics, he is lost.

Prayer—O Lord, help us to live this day and all other days in a way that those who see us may behold something of Thy goodness and beauty is us. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"CHECKING HEART THROBS."

"Hate the evil and love the good."—Amos 5:15.

We become like what we love. Character is determined by what we love. "Out of the heart are the issues of life."

We check our children's school cards to determine their standing. Checking our heart-throbs (loves) is more important. What we love is infinitely more important than what we learn.

Prayer—Our Father, "We need Thee every hour." Help us to discipline our affection, and have communion with Thee forever. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"DRINK IT ALL."

"He that will, let him take the water of life freely."—Rev. 22:7.

Quoting from the "Upper Room":

"A little boy, one of seven children, met with an accident, and through the kindness of some friends was taken to the hospital. He came from a lowly home where hunger was seldom quite satisfied. The glass of milk was only partly full or, if full, shared by two of the children. After the little lad was made as comfortable as possible in his hospital bed, a nurse brought him a large glass of milk. He looked at it longingly and then, with the memory of many experiences of sharing with the other children, said, "How deep shall I drink?" The nurse with her eyes shining and a lump in her throat said, "Drink it all."

How deep shall I drink of God's goodness? Drink it all. There is yet as much as there was before.

Prayer—Our Father, Spring of Everlasting Life, we come to Thee. Help us to drink of Thee and find satisfaction in Thy love and power. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"MY RICHES."

"That good thing, which was committed unto Thee keep through the Holy Spirit."—II Tim. 1:14.

A prolific writer in Spiritual Values has said:

"The business world recognizes such intangible values as personal integrity and good-will. Men who are poor in this world's goods can still lay claim to value. Each one of us has some good thing that has been entrusted to us; some special virtue that gives unusual power. Whatever the good deposit, it must be cherished and guarded if it is to be preserved; but guarded, not by being hoarded, but by being used."

What Paul clung to all his life is entrusted to all Christians. That was the Spirit of Christ.

Prayer—O Lord, may we, too, be the embodiment of the goodness that dwells in Jesus our Savior. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"SELF PRAISE."

"Let not thy right hand know what thy left hand doeth."—Matt. 6:3.

It has been said, "There is no limit to that which a man can do if he does not care who gets the credit. The individual who seeks praise will do little to deserve it. Happiness eludes the one who actively pursues it."

Said Paul, "Not he that commendeth himself, is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth."

Prayer—Our Father, take our selfishness out of us. We would have place in righteousness on this earth and in Thy Kingdom hereafter we dedicate our lives to Thee, this day and forever, that we may be acceptable in Thy sight. Amen.

OUR PREACHER THIS WEEK IS
REV. W. J. ANDES
OF DURHAM, NORTH CAROLINA

BUILDING A CHRISTIAN FAITH.

[This sermon was delivered over Station WDNC on October 19, 1939, as one of the programs sponsored by the School of Religion of Duke University.—Editor.]

SCRIPTURE: Hebrews 11:1-10.

All of us are makers of history, but not all of us are builders of history. Sometimes there is a vast difference between makers of history and builders of history. There is the story that Nero played his fiddle while the city of Rome was devoured in flames. If this is a fact, Nero made history, but he did not build history. Napoleon, who swept his armies across Europe, made history, but he did not build it. A frenzied mob may lay waste in a single night the life-work of a builder of history. How true this is in war. We are certainly living in days of history-making, but one cannot see how they are history-building.

The builders of history have been those who have constantly been adding some one thing to the uplift of civilization and of humanity. These builders have gone into places where, unhindered by the presence of material consideration, they sought the presence of the Great Eternal, and thereby gained everlasting truth. These builders of history have built within themselves what we might call a "Christian Faith."

Abraham was one of these builders of history, who built a Christian Faith. Led by God out of Haran into Canaan, Abraham began to cultivate the consciousness of the presence of the Almighty God. In Genesis 12:7 we read, "There builded he an altar unto the Lord." Always did he build an altar to the Lord before he erected his tent. The writer of the Hebrews, writing of Abraham, said that "he went out, not knowing whither he went. . . . For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose maker and builder is God." Abraham's altar was a crude and rough one, but his faith was alive and sensitive as he endeavored to know his Lord and to do his will.

Abraham's faith had a meaning for himself. He trusted in God completely and felt God's assurance and blessing. The more he responded to God, the more certain he was of God. As the days went by new altars were erected, altars that marked an advance in his walk toward God. His character was built upon the exercise of his faith. As he met enemies in strange lands, he had to have faith in his God to leave the wells which he had dug and move on to a new place. Quarrels between his herdsmen and Lot's herdsmen were not pleasing to him; and he took what Lot did not want. He became known as the Father of the Faithful. A Christian Faith he had; for he looked for a world whose builder and maker is God. Was not his Christian Faith, in a measure, helping to build history?

Abraham's Christian Faith made possible those spiritual forees, peculiar as they may be, which ultimately bring to pass the Kingdom of God on earth. For it is the faithful that shall build this Kingdom. In Revelation 17:14 we read that "the Lamb shall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords and King of kings: and they that are with him are called, and chosen and faithful." It is upon the Christian faith of such men as Abraham and Peter that the Kingdom of God is being built against which the gates of hell shall not prevail. One day the prayer of the true Christian, "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," will be realized as a reality. It is a civilization which will be shot through and through with the Spirit and with the Presence of the Christ. It will be truly a Christian civilization.

For this to be realized, our present history will have to be more than made, it will have to be built. And it can only be built by such powers as are seen in the Christian Faith of Abraham, and exercised by all of us. Here we see faith in right and in justice. Here is an unswerving belief in the eternal goodness of God; for God is the highest possible Good and would give this goodness to man. Here is a desire and a longing for the things which are not only temporal, but which are eternal. It is the filling of that inner urge to find and to know God. It is the lingering of Christ in the hearts of men. The force of love becomes the most powerful force in all of the universe. God is love; this God, this love, is put first in the hearts of men.

These powers are in Christians, especially. It is their special task to build history, not simply to make it. This is a great ideal toward which we are striving. It can only be reached by a Christian faith such as that of Abraham. It was for this faith that Christ gave His life. This faith is made more forceful when we realize that Christ rose again. Life triumphed over death. This Christian faith is not only worth living for; it is worth dying for. It is a faith that ultimately draws all men to God, into the brotherhood of men and the Fatherhood of God. Make your faith a leaven that leaveneth the whole lump.

Would you simply be a maker of history as you go about your daily life? Or would you be a builder of history? If a builder, then look for a "city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." If a builder, then a faith in the Christ who said, and is still saying, "Fear not, I have overcome the world." If a builder of history, then a builder of your own life for eternity. Such lives the world desperately needs.

WE WOULD BE BUILDING.

(Written by P. E. Dietz for United Christian Youth Movement.)

We would be building; temples still undone
O'er crumbling walls their crosses scarcely lift;

Waiting till love can raise the broken stone,
And hearts creative bridge the human rift;
We would be building, Master, let thy plan
Reveal the life that God would give to man.

SUNDAY.

"FOR JESUS' SAKE."

"If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it."—John 14:14.

Our prayer, our work, our all, are to be in His name. If asked really and truly in His name, we will be more careful what we ask. Do you think so? When we are conscious of conforming to God's will, we are careful to try to determine what His will is; then we find that there are some things we cannot ask for. On the other hand there are some things we ask for more freely, for there are some things of Him we know are freely ours. Thus, "In the name of Jesus" is a state of spiritual consciousness.

Prayer—Our Father, help us to remember that Thou art waiting to bestow upon us better things than those which we ask—O help us to depend on Thee. Amen.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Our financial report climbs slowly, but we keep climbing. It is hard work to climb—if you do not believe it try it and be convinced.

I saw a boy put on a demonstration of a flat-footed dance one time in a faith. It takes divine guidance. It takes friends to cheer us each day. If our income falls we cannot cut the children's food or clothes, as we feel that we live on as little as it is possible to make out with now. Then when we have misfortune and have quite an extra expense that we had not looked for in the beginning of the year, it eats up our bank account and it gives us lots of worry trying to make one dollar go as far as two.

play. He put all he had in it. When he had finished he looked over the audience and said, "You may not think so, but this is hard work." You may not think when we start out the first of the year with a goal of twenty thousand dollars to reach by the end of the year that it is a hard task, but it is. It is a mental strain until the twenty thousand has been reached. It takes work. It takes

If the churches would meet the amount apportioned for the orphanage it would not be so bad, but one Conference has already fallen short by $1,750.00. How are we going to meet that loss? One Conference raised its apportionments in full. Two more are to hold annual sessions. We hope that they will come up in full.

Our only hope is that all the churches will raise a liberal Thanks-

In Memoriam

FAISON.

On October 5, 1939, our Heavenly Father in His great wisdom called from our midst our friend and neighbor, J. J. Faison. In his passing Spring Hill Church has lost a faithful member, who served us long and efficiently as song leader, deacon, and superintendent of the Sunday school.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That, while we mourn his loss, we must bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well.
2. That we extend to the bereaved family our sympathy, and that we ever hold his friendship in warm remembrance.
3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to "The Christian Sun" for publication, and a copy be recorded in the minutes of Spring Hill Church, greatest doctrines of the Christian faith, and to the trustworthiness of Thee Book, which is not filled with "cunningly devised fables" (I Peter 1:16), but which is altogether worthy of making its claims on our intellects as being "our only rule of faith and practice."

Viva D. Scudder in her book, The Social Teachings of the Christian Year says, "In the flow of the Christian seasons, Christian experience is revealed as a living thing based on historic facts."

Christmas has its appeal to the intellect as well as to the emotions. It is well then, that we should cultivate the mind during Advent season, so that we may properly understand the tremendous implications of the Doctrine of the Incarnation for the human race.

The following books are recommended that we might approach Christmas-tide with minds aglow with a fresh appreciation of the Eternal Word who dwelt among us. (John 1:14).

Progressive Unfolding of the Messianic Hope, by J. A. Huffman. Doran Co., New York City.

Biblical Archeology, by L. Berkhof. Zondervan Publishing House, Grand Rapids, Mich.

The Christian Year, by R. Calkins.

Guide for Christian Year—Seminar on Worship.

And Thou Shalt Call His Name, by G. M. Gibson.

The last three books are publications of our Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City, and single copies may be had for the asking.

Teach us to build; upon the solid rock
We set the dream that hardens into deed, Ribbed with the steel that time and change
 both mock,
The unfailing purpose of our noblest creed;
Teach us to build, O Master, lend us sight
To see the towers gleaming in the light.

O keep us building, Master may our hands
N'er falter when the dream is in our hearts,
When to our ears there come divine commands
And all the pride of sinful will departs;
We build with Thee, O great enduring worth
Until the Heavenly Kingdom comes on earth.

 peace,
Where hate rules, let me bring love,
Where malice, forgiveness,
Where disputes, reconciliation,
Where error, truth,
Where doubt, belief,
Where despair, hope,
Where darkness, Thy light,
Where sorrow, joy.
O Master, let me strive more to comfort than to be comforted,
To understand others than to be understood,
To love others, more than to be loved!
For he who gives, receives,
He who forgets himself, finds,
He who forgives, receives forgiveness,
And dying, we rise again to eternal life.

And thus, O Lord, may our life be an instrument in thy hands as we attempt to build thy kingdom here on earth. Strengthen our faith in this world as that which thou hast made and now sustain. May our faith in Thee be increased until we know that Thou art our Father and that we are Thy children; and knowing, we may live accordingly. Grant us eternal faith that we may not simply make history, but that we shall build eternal history. May Thy Kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Amen.

To The Congregational and Christian Churches of the United States of America

Pious usage and civil precedent unite in designating a season in November wherein the people of this nation may fittingly express their gratitude to Almighty God. To the members of the Congregational and Christian Churches such a season ought to be of particular significance, because they are the direct inheritors of the Pilgrim Spirit.

Wherewith Shall We Come Before the Lord?

WITH THANKSGIVING—Thanksgiving for the goodly fruits of the earth and sea, so bountiful that no one need go unfed; for earnest efforts to make these blessings available to all in justice and brotherliness; for freedom of movement and speech and worship; for twenty years of education in peace; for the great body of American youth whose mind is set against the methods of war; for the growing sense of the underlying unity of Christendom, deeper than race or caste or nationality; for the awakening interest of young parents in the religious education of their children in Home and Church; for the Spirit of God working silently and unceasingly in the hearts and minds of men, so that even in their sinful and violent deeds they are aware of Him. Let us come before the Lord with Thanksgiving.

Wherewith Shall We Come Before the Lord?

WITH PENITENCE—Penitence for our share in the world's guilt and misery; for unwisdom born of selfishness, deliberate or unconscious, causing hunger and want in city and country alike when there are food and raiment for all; for economic shortsightedness filling the land with unemployment; for stubbornness and hatred still frustrating the reconciliation of industry and labor; for the growth of racial prejudice; for sinful dalliance with the temptation to profit in pecuniary ways by the distress in Europe and Asia; for extravagance and intemperance in the face of human need; for faithless disregard of the eternal Commandments of God. Let us come before the Lord with Penitence.

Wherewith Shall We Come Before the Lord?

WITH OFFERINGS—An offering of ourselves to our Heavenly Father in humility and sincerity; of the best part of ourselves instead of the leavings; of our time, thought and skill to the service of His Kingdom; of our substance to the more adequate support of the Church, which seeks to incarnate the spirit of His Son. Let us come before the Lord in this season of Thanksgiving and in our Every Member Canvass with an offering of ourselves and our means so much more sacrificial and willing than it has been in these past self-centered years, that the empty pools will be filled to the brim and the parched fields of the Church's endeavor be made fruitful and glad. Thus shall we in a measure fulfill what the Lord doth require of us—to do just and love mercy and walk humbly with our God.

Come, Ye Thankful People, Come

Come, ye thankful people, come,
Raise the song of harvest home:
All is safely gathered in
Ere the winter storms begin;
God, our Maker, doth provide
For our wants to be supplied;
Come to God's own temple, come,
Raise the song of harvest home.

All the blessings of the field,
All the stores the gardens yield;
All the fruits in full supply,
Ripened 'neath the summer sky;
All that spring with bounteous hand
Scatters o'er the smiling land;
All that lib'ral autumn pours
From her rich o'erflowing stores.

These to thee, our God, we owe,
Source whence all our blessings flow;
And for these our souls shall raise
Grateful vows and solemn praise.
Come, then, thankful people, come,
Raise the song of harvest home;
Come to God's own temple, come,
Raise the song of harvest home.

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

Our church at Holland, Va., held a revival meeting last week with the pastor, Dr. Will B. O'Neill, doing the preaching.

Our new church at Gibsonville, N. C., is in the midst of a revival meeting this week. Rev. Harold Lowman is the pastor.

Rev. J. Edward Kirby, a former pastor of our United Church in Raleigh, N. C., died in Memphis, Tenn., last week.

The Wakefield Christian Church will dedicate its new Sunday school addition on the second Sunday in December at the eleven o'clock service.

The annual meeting of the Eastern Virginia Christian Missionary Association will be held at Waverly Christian Church on Tuesday, December 5. It is hoped that every church will have members of the association present.

Dr. Samuel H. Leger, our visiting missionary from China, spoke in our church in Danville, Va., last Sunday morning, at that church's mission in Blair, Va., in the afternoon, and at Salem Chapel, near Walnut Cove, N. C., that night.

The Promotional Secretary was disappointed in being unable to visit the Valley of Virginia last week-end. The doctor ordered him to bed on account of a cold. This was the reason why Dr. Leger did not speak in the Valley last Sunday.

Rev. Elisha Bradshaw died at his home in Walters, Va., on Sunday night, November 12, and was buried on the following Tuesday. Rev. H. E. Crutchfield officiated at the funeral, assisted by Dr. J. G. Truitt and Dr. I. W. Johnson. Brother Bradshaw served several churches in North Carolina and Virginia, including our mountain mission work.

MONUMENT TO BE UNVEILED.

On next Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock the Eastern Virginia Conference will unveil a monument to the memory of the late Rev. Mills B. Barrett at the cemetery near Ivor, Va. Rev. J. F. Morgan of Norfolk, president of the Conference, will be in charge of the service.

MEMBERS OF LIBERTY (VANCE) SURPRISE PASTOR.

On Friday evening, November 3, while our incoming pastor, Rev. J. E. McCauley and his family were quietly seated in the parsonage, quite a number of the members of Liberty (Vance) Church were gathering over at the church. When about fifteen cars had arrived, the people all drove across the road to the parsonage. When the first car arrived it began blowing, then all the car horns were blown at one time. The porch light was switched on and the preacher rushed out expecting a wedding party. But instead he met men, women, and children carrying packages of all sizes and shapes, for the Missionary Society and the church, were pounding their new pastor.

After the guests were all seated, C. O. Eaves was asked to say a few words in regard to the purpose of the meeting. He told in a very brief way that the meeting had been planned to express one word, welcome—first, a welcome into the church as our new pastor, and a welcome into all activities of the church; second, a welcome into the community and into all of its activities, and last, but not least, a welcome into the homes of the community. With this welcome Mr. Eaves urged that Mr. McCauley and family might feel free at all times to visit any homes of the community and to call on the church members for any assistance they might need. Then in a few words (although they meant much) Mr. McCauley expressed appreciation from the entire family, for the hearty welcome which had been given them, for the many nice gifts they had received and for the splendid cooperation they had had since being in the community.

Mr. and Mrs. McCauley made the statement that they had never known of a preacher having such an experience as Mr. McCauley had. The good people had filled his pantry almost brimming full before he was even pastor of their church.

The ladies of the missionary society served refreshments, consisting of fruits and home-made candies which were enjoyed by all present.

THANKS WITH GIVING.

Thanksgiving season is with us again. By proclamations of leaders in Church and State the people of our country are called together for a day of public thanksgiving. This year there will be confusion as to date because some states will follow the leadership of the President and celebrate a week earlier than usual, and other states will keep to the last Thursday in November. The date matters little. The thanksgiving to the Giver means much.

Gratitude is an essential to happy living. Those who always take and never return thanks lose their happiness by substituting selfishness. Those who are careful to return thanks find joy growing out of the recognition that most good things are given to us and are not deserved.

Because words are cheap, it is well to add giving to the thanks. It is the custom of our churches in this area to give an offering to the Christian Orphanage at the Thanksgiving season. Ninety boys and girls are now in our home there. They are dependent upon the members of our churches for the things they need. We have given them a home. They look to us for food, clothes, and training. The offering we make at our Thanksgiving service will help to give these fine young people a home.

The women of North Carolina decided that their special offering at Thanksgiving should go to Asheboro for the new church there. The offering will count on the Apportionment, but should be sent in and designated for this special work.

If our offering this year is in proportion to the reasons we have for gratitude to God, the Orphanage at Elon College, N. C., and the new church at Asheboro, N. C., will be greatly blessed. And so will the members of our churches who really express their thanks by giving.

OUR CHURCH HOME FOR CHILDREN.

The editor wants to add a very sincere word in favor of a large offering for our Orphanage this Thanksgiving season. Mr. Charles D. Johnston is as good a man as we have in our church, and is a real father to the children in our church home for children. We have buildings and equipment so real work can be done in caring for those who have no home. The institution is a going concern. Those who visit at the Orphanage are pleased with the work being done. The children receive the kind of training that makes them good citizens. The Church needs to express its love for those who are in distress. There are more calls on our church home than we can take care of, but we have nearly a hundred in the family at present.

It takes money to run a home of ninety to a hundred children. Our home is economically run, and adequately supplies the needs of those who must call it their home. This year our churches have been urged to give largely to other important causes. Our college is now demanding our attention for a very important matter, but in the midst of this call we must still hear the cry of little children. Unless we reach the quota set for our orphanage, the deficit will mean the turning away of some boys and girls who should have a home supplied by our church. When you bow your head in thanksgiving to the Father of us all, please remember those children who are now in and should soon be in our church home for children. Then follow the good impulse and give for their benefit.

In the Conference Apportionments listed in our "Annual" there is an amount designated for the orphanage. This is to give the churches some idea of the amount that is needed in order to carry on this phase of our church work. The claims of little children should be presented to all the members of all our churches. A gift equal to a day's wage is none too much to give. Pastors, Sunday school superintendents, teachers, and all church leaders should certainly see that the needs of our orphanage are presented to all the members, and that all are given an opportunity to express their love by a liberal offering.

NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

Detailed report of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference session held last week at Bethlehem will necessarily come later. The session was reasonably well attended for the first two days. Dr. E. L. Shaver of Boston, director of leadership education for our church, and Dr. S. H. Leger of China, made fine contributions to the Conference. Two men were licensed to preach and another licentiate was received into membership. Rev. Melvin Dollar was ordained to the gospel ministry. Conference voted to make the Home Mission Committee responsible for organizing pastorates. Apportionments for the new year are the same as for the past year except in a very few cases. The church at Gibsonville was received into membership. Altogether it was a good conference.

REPORTS FOR NEXT YEAR.

In each of our conferences, committees have been appointed. A year hence they will be called on to report. Will those reports be whatever the chairman may happen to think of about the time Conference convenes, or will they really report work accomplished through the year? Now is the time for the committees to decide the type of report to be made.

Now is also the time for churches to make plans for the coming year's work. Decide how much work is to be done, plan for its accomplishment, and then get the membership to plan for the payment of whatever is to be done. Any church needing help in making such plans will find the Promotional Secretary a willing helper.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It is difficult to understand why the term Fundamentalist should be used in contrast with Modernist. For there is nothing in the former word to indicate that one is "ancient" because certain religious doctrines, or interpretations of doctrines, are regarded as fundamental. And it is not reasonable to suppose that all "modernistic" interpretations are new. The age of scholasticism witnessed the rise and development of practically all the essential terms in the so-called systems called "Fundamentalism" and "Modernism."

It is a temptation for young theological students to discard the old systems and accept the interpretations labelled "Modern." This tendency arises out of a desire to be up-to-date. Yet people who dislike "the old" live in an old world, dwell in houses made from old clay, wood and stone, eat food raised by the heat and light of an old sun, drink water a thousand years old. If there is no place in life for "the old," why not seek some other sources—new sources—for sustaining our physical life? Nothing should be discarded because it is old, or accepted as a final truth because it is new. Other considerations of greater importance should determine the selection of our creeds and the basis of our faith in religion.

Christianity is a progressive religion. It looks to the future with open mind, but cherishes the past with heart-searching devotion. The Bible is an old Book. But its truth, in its ever-revealing beauty, is as fresh as the light of this day. A new book is inviting and a new view of truth is challenging to the mind. New interpretations of God do not change Him, or relegate Him to some antique shop, as a relic of by-gone days. If these interpretations are based on truth, they magnify Him.

Old books and new books should remain in a well-chosen library. Old people and young people live together in the home and they should work together in the church. There is no compartment in the Bible marked, "For Old People Only," and there is no division set aside for young people alone. One group should supplement the other and should be open-minded toward the other. This does not mean that young people shall always remain in the presence of the older people, in the home, in social life, or in the church. Parlors are furnished for young and old; church pews have added beauty and increased value when they are occupied by all the members of a family—including the small children. The real pastor delights to look upon the faces of the children when he delivers a sermon in church. They may not understand all he says, but they can understand his love for them, if it is genuine.

Old people and young people, old books and new books, ancient theology and modern discovery, all have a place in Christianity, both in the pulpit and in the pew. And the wise student will welcome the opportunity to give fair consideration to all sources of information and revelation, discarding the false in every field, and accepting the truth with consecrated mind and heart. Old, living trees of the forest add a new ring of growth every year, and this part of the tree is as young and as new as the seedling from last year's acorn. People should grow, as they go about the Master's business, in favor with God and man.

I. W. JOHNSON.

MEMORIAL GIVING.

As Christian men and women we constitute the church and are members of our respective communities. A community is necessary, of course, if there is to be a church. A church bears certain definite responsibilities to the community of which it is a part. Its responsibilities do not stop with its immediate community but widen to the ends of the earth. The responsibilities of both community and church belong to every individual. It is impossible to shirk either or both. They claim our thought, our abilities, and our earnings. Everyone is indebted to a certain extent to the sources of his opportunities and achievements. The meeting of evident obligations merits approval but not necessarily an excess of praise. When one exceeds usual expectations and steps beyond the bounds of recognized duty, he is justly recognized and exalted for unusual virtues. The things that we do which we would like to be remembered are often times forgotten. That which we do for others actuated by an impelling sense of duty and privilege often abides for all time as a memorial of unselfishness and unexpected generosity.

The day when Christ stood by the treasury, and it was a day of offerings, people gave out of their abundance. Their gifts were gratefully received. But the one who received recognition and whose gift became for her an eternal memorial gave not out of her wealth but out of her poverty. While others cast in much, she cast in but two mites, but the Judge of the occasion declared that she had given more than all in that she had given her living.

Some people have an idea that they build for themselves a memorial by accumulations over a lifetime. It is worthy to live honorably and to accumulate honestly, but with all our living and all our accumulating, that which we lay up is counted only in dollars and cents, desirably but timely. Man does not belong to time entirely. His inheritance is eternal. What he does with what he earns makes for him a place in the world. Men have dug out of the earth and out of the material resources of the world's vast fortunes, and with those fortunes have hewn out in human memories and in human societies beneficial memorials that go on for all time blessing humanity and the world.

Standing on Elon campus are buildings, beautiful in structure, convenient in appointments, which daily aid young men and young women in their search for truth, in their endeavor to find more clearly the way of life, and in their persistent efforts to lay hold of eternal principles by which they shall live and serve throughout life's short day. The donors of these buildings have long since ceased to serve. Their voices have been hushed, and they no longer are permitted to see as once they saw. Nevertheless, they live here with their earnings. They have hewn out for themselves memorials in the minds and hearts of young people, and all who come after them will be reminded in gratitude and will remember with increasing joy the memorials that have been created here by gifts.

We cannot all give buildings, we cannot all give largely, but we all can give, and with the gifts of life; that is, the gifts of thought, of abilities, and of means. If actuated by unselfishness and devout motives, we will build for ourselves and for the world memorials that will go on blessing humanity after we shall have ceased to serve. Memorials that we create by holding either change or perish with the passing years. Memorials that we create by giving are permanent, and they multiply in service and blessing with every passing day. There is a danger in holding. You cannot easily

"THE GOSPEL OF GLOOM."

There seem to be ministers in some of the pulpits of our church and of other churches who are persuaded from the signs of the times and their study of the Bible that they should preach what may be termed "the gospel of gloom." This is at present a war torn world and there is chaos and confusion in thought and conduct. A recent writer in one of our national magazines taking note of this tendency on the part of some ministers, said that he had made a study of conditions as they obtained in New York, which some are pleased to call the "Sodom" of our day. The writer states that his investigation showed that for every night club, which is supposed to register the evil of that great city, there were eight churches—eight times as many churches as night clubs. Moreover, said this writer, the attendance at church on any Sunday in New York was so far beyond the attendance at the night clubs that there was hardly a comparison to be made.

We are living in a sin cursed and war torn world, but this does not mean that the gospel of gloom has triumphed, or will triumph. Our Lord will not be defated and he preached always the gospel of good cheer—the gospel of triumph and victory. John 16:33, "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."

Then amid the persecution that constantly followed him, Luke tells us in Acts 23:11, that in one of the darkest hours of Paul's persecution, "The Lord stood by him, and said, Be of good cheer."

There is no pessimistic note in the preaching of our Lord, or in the life and teachings of Paul and the other Biblical writers.

In this connection it seems most appropriate to note that the young people of today, thousands and thousands of them, are taking interest in church service and church attendance as they have not in times past. In order to be specific, while I am writing these very lines, Rev. John G. Truitt, D. D., pastor of our Suffolk Church, notes in his "Bulletin" for November 19 that "Our young people are undertaking a worthy task, that of seeing each member of the church, and asking them to join in an effort to increase our church attendance. To this end these young people have had a covenant card printed and have divided the city into sections and are to canvass every section of their city to get these covenant cards signed by young and old to attend at least one regular church service every Sunday from now until Easter." This, not only seems to your writer a noble undertaking, but an indication of the spirit of the times in which we live. The world about us needs comfort and strength and courage for the tasks that confront them day by day through the week and on this account they naturally turn to the church service and the worship of Almighty God.

The fact is that "the gospel of gloom" doesn't seem to get us anywhere and the congregations who hear this gospel from Sunday to Sunday are not likely to increase in numbers, since it does little to give courage, or increase faith, to think, to feel and to constantly hear that the churches are on the decline. Possibly, the churches that have preachers who preach such a gospel find that their congregations are decreasing. Do we not need in this time when the war clouds lower and the world is torn with bitterness and strife to remind ourselves again and again that despite all that can be said, or done, there is one organization in our midst that is going to win out, namely, the church of the living God, founded by him, who said, "Be of good cheer for I have overcome the world?" And then this same great teacher added later, "Go ye, therefore, into all the world, teaching whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo! I am with you even unto the end."

CHRISTIAN UNITY AND WORLD MISSIONS.

By REV. ROY D. COULTER.

Wherever Congregational-Christian people gather in conference this month, they are compelled to address themselves to a world situation that becomes increasingly threatening. They can no longer accept their Christian obligations peaceably with the sense of satisfaction that they are "not as other men are." This type of Christian devotion is wholly inadequate to meet the needs of the present hour. With our good reports to Conference we forget the crying need of souls in other lands. And we are too satisfied with a report that reads something given to Missions. The time has come when the world is demanding, in the language of St. James: "Show me thy faith by thy works."

It has been increasingly evident to all of us during this last tragic year that the Church which Christ designed to be the regenerative agency in human society has largely failed of its purpose because of our narrow and insular views regarding Missions. Perhaps quite unconsciously we have become intolerant and lacking in the spirit of Christian charity. A divided or competitive church is utterly incapable of meeting the critical issues that face us today. The forces

Elon College Golden Anniversary

I am sure that our friends will be interested to know that the Burlington and Alamance County campaign for Elon College Golden Anniversary Fund is progressing fairly well but not as well as we had hoped. The weather has been unfavorable and the "laborers" have been few. To date we have in cash and pledges from the Alamance County Campaign approximately $16,000. This amount has been contributed by less than seventy-five individuals. There are others who will give as generously as any who have been reported. There are many others who will make similar gifts. It is a question of getting to the people personally with information about the college and an appeal for assistance. We plan to push the campaign to completion just as quickly as possible. Time is passing, and commencement will soon be in sight.

While we are working here in Alamance County, it is hoped that the ones of you who have not contributed may encourage us by sending in your contribution or pledge from outside of the county. Now is the time to help Elon College. She faces an opportunity—an opportunity that constitutes a real crisis. She is depending on her friends. Her friends are the only ones to come to her assistance. We are depending on you. May we hear from you?

The following is received. We are not reporting in this connection gifts or pledges less than $50. The smaller gifts that have been received in the Alamance County campaign amount to approximately $400.00. We are all grateful for these responses and will be grateful for your cooperation.

CONFERENCE APPORTIONMENTS.

The college wishes to express its appreciation to Sunday schools and churches for the offerings so freely contributed for the support of the college through the year. The offerings sent to the college preceding the meeting of annual conferences have been slightly more than last year. However, the offerings sent to the conferences; that is, the conferences that have met; are considerably less than last year. One conference in particular, and that one of our larger conferences, sent to conference something like $600.00 less than last year. The offerings from the churches and Sunday schools from this particular conference sent to the college preceding the annual session, while increased over last year, the increase was not sufficient to take care of the loss in the offerings for the college sent to conference. Therefore, the college will receive some $400.00 less from this particular conference than last year. The discouraging feature about this conference is that the amount contributed to the college has been gradually decreasing year by year. This is to be deplored in light of the college's increased needs and the increase in contributions to the other agencies of the church.

It might seem advisable for the church to take counsel concerning its future program and leadership. In the meanwhile, the college toils on to the best of its ability, mindful all the while that it is a part of the church, escape it. Listen to money as it speaks,

Dug from the mountain side, washed in the glen,
Servant am I, or the master of men.
Steal me, I curse you:
Earn me, I bless you:
Grasp me and hold me, a fiend will possess you.
Lie for me, die for me,
Count me, take me,
Angel or devil, I am what you make me.

There is a blessing in giving. You cannot well refuse it. In the long ago the prophet stood up and said, "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

THANKS FOR THE ORPHANAGE.

Thanksgiving is a good time to give thanks for our Christian Orphanage. It is one of the best managed of our institutions. We can be proud of the men and women who make up the board of trustees of the orphanage, and of Brother Charlie Johnston, its congenial, Christian business-man superintendent. He loves young people and children whether they be in the orphanage or out. He wants to help somebody, and especially young people. When I was in Elon College working my way through I was his student-pastor at Graham. One mid-winter semester my brother and I did not have enough cash to matriculate us both. I confided in Brother Johnston and he most graciously helped me along, which I promptly repaid in money, but I can never forget the kindness, and how it helped at that time. That is characteristic of the Christian statesman we have at the head of our orphanage. He has the good faculty of friendship and love. It counts.

This summer we had living next door to the Suffolk Christian Church two fine church children. Their dear grandmother had given nine years of her life for them, rearing them, feeding and clothing them, out of her penury, and the help of her friends. She came down with a dread disease and had to be placed in the hospital, with no sign of appreciable improvement. What was to become of her granddaughter, and her grandson? I thought of the orphanage, and wrote Brother Johnston, with the result that today they are both there gaining in strength, weight, and outlook on life. God has been good to them and answered the poor grandmother's prayer that they be taken care of.

Let us put it this way: Our churches from time to time have children left as it were on their doorsteps to be taken care of, we get together and build a home for them, and equip it to take care of our needy children, and then we, as Sunday schools and churches, send our gifts regularly to the superintendent for its upkeep.

Perehance others see our good work and having this world's goods, delight in helping along so fine a work, and thus the institution grows in helpfulness and usefulness. And then on Thanksgiving our churches and Sunday schools show their thanks for the orphanage by making a special contribution to it. Such offerings should not lessen our other giving. It should open our minds and hearts to the wider giving which as Christians we should delight to do. I hope anything I lay in the offering plate for Bernice and Milton Benton, my two little friends in the Christian Orphanage, will not lessen my gifts to my church, or my college, or to the missionary work of my church. I hope it will make me a better Christian and help me to give more liberally.

ASHEVILLE CHURCH AS SEEN FROM A HOSPITAL.

Dear CHRISTIAN SUN Readers:

There is a wide-awake Congregational Church here in Asheville. Mr. Chapman, the former pastor, left the church a few days ago for a new pastorate at his home town in the North. But before he left, he dropped by to see me. The next time Mr. Chapman came, he brought one of the laymen with him. That was the beginning of my friendship with a church, about which I formerly knew nothing, and which I now feel is as near as if I had attended it.

One afternoon, a group of young people came in to chat awhile. There were several boys and girls of the high school age. One tall enthusiastic boy said that he was the leader of the young people's society. They drop by frequently now on their way home from school. Sometimes one or two come; sometimes a larger number. Usually they bring someone whom I have not met before. Then one afternoon, the young people's adviser stopped by and introduced herself. She is a very intelligent woman who types book manuscripts and knows lots about the inside of books. She has lived, and the account of her honest living is written on her face. She wisely lets the young ones come to her for help instead of forcing herself upon them.

On still another day, the mother of the tall enthusiastic boy visited me. Recently, the women have had a "Jack Horner Supper." This was a

CHRISTIAN UNITY AND WORLD MISSIONS.

that are arrayed us are consolidated and determined, and a divided church is incapable of meeting them with any degree of success. Christ's great prayer before His crucifixion expressed His supreme desire concerning His followers in the memorable words: "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me."

Through the long centuries the church at large has failed to fulfill this supreme demand of its Lord. We have been more concerned about our pride of ceremonies than we have in pressing the high claims of our Lord for the world's salvation. Unity is infinitely greater than uniformity. The latter is not desired or desirable. We are witnessing today a recrudescence of the spirit of bigotry and intolerance throughout the world, and it is taking on a form that is gravely threatening. The very fundamentals of our faith are being threatened in certain places and a superman or supermen are being substituted for God Himself.

Here in America the churches of every name represent a mighty force and this force, if it could speak with one voice against the prevailing evils of the hour, would be irresistible. It is high time that we who have pledged loyalty to Christ should press His claims with all insistence upon a world that has lost not only its sense of confidence in its own genius but its faith in the saving power of Christ. Great world conferences participated in by representatives of the Christian church have put forth notable papers expressive of a sincere desire for the closer knitting of the ties of a cooperating comradeship. These ecumenical conferences are very valuable and we should be deeply thankful for them, but after all the years of conference, unity on the one great command of our Lord, world missions, still seems to be an unfulfilled dream.

Let us believe that progress has been made, but not enough to accomplish the ends of unity. Even in this day we still have men and women members who do not believe in missions. The insular point of view stubbornly refuses to yield, even in the face of a crisis. The church needs to be "stabbed broad awake." Men and women of small minds, who refuse to recognize the gravity of the situation, must be aroused from their supine indifference and be willing to face conditions and make sacrifices that involve cherished traditions. Something other than traditions and ceremonial practices is involved. It is the immediate and future influence of the church. Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin says that the time has come to stop talking and do something. Multitudes share his feeling. Think in terms of Jesus Christ who died for the salvation of the world. A church is demanded today that has one all-consuming passion—a passion to serve Him who alone can save the world. And your zeal in this respect will be measured by your sacrifice—your gifts to Him.

SUFFOLK YOUNG PEOPLE SPONSOR CAMPAIGN.

The young people of the Suffolk Christian Church, Suffolk, Va., are sponsoring a Go-To-Church campaign. They are undertaking to see each member of the church, asking that he or she sign the following pledge: "Believing it is both a duty and a privilege to attend church, and grateful for the influence and blessings of the church, I promise to attend at least one of its regular morning or evening services from now until Easter unless hindered by something over which I have no control." These pledges are printed in duplicate, one going to the church and the other to be kept by the person signing.

The young people of Suffolk are to be congratulated in being interested in something which will help the church as a whole, and not just concentrate on one particular phase of church work to the exclusion of its other important functions.

NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

The North Carolina and Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship had charge of the Conference session on Wednesday night, November 15, at Bethlehem Christian Church. The president, Miss Elberta Murray, presided. The Burlington young people furnished the worship program. Miss Frances Foster, president of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship, presented the aims and plans of the Pilgrim Fellowship, emphasizing the present China Friendship Project. Dr. Samuel H. Leger of North China spoke on the subject of Layman's Training, which seems to fill a very vital need in China today. You know, of course, that the money of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship project is to be used for the purpose of purchasing land and buildings for use in this type of work.

CHRISTMAS GIFT FOR CHINA.

Remember that it is hoped that all young people will participate in the China Friendship Project. Your money should be in by Christmas, for we want to have this as our Christmas gift for the young people of China.

MATERIALS FOR CHRISTMAS.

If your young people's group is planning to give a Christmas program, do not wait until the last minute to get your materials for it. Many of our groups are already working on these programs, and the rest should begin as soon as Thanksgiving is over. The Board of Christian Education, Elon College, N. C., can furnish you with materials. Be specific with your requests.

"Yuletide in Many Lands" is a splendid book for Sunday school teachers to use in their classes, or for a young people's group to use in learning about Christmas customs in other countries, as well as furnishing them with a collection of Christmas pictures and poems. It is a fine gift, also, for children or young people. It may be ordered from the Board of Christian Education, Elon College, N. C., or from Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass., for 25c.

THANKSGIVING SERVICE.

The young people of the Burton's Grove Christian Church are sponsoring a Thanksgiving Service in their church on Thursday night, November 30, at 7:30 o'clock. If you live nearby and are having no such service in your church, join with them.

"INTO ALL THE WORLD."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR DECEMBER 3, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Mark 16:14-20.

Daily Readings—

Monday—Sowing and Reaping—Psalm 126: 5, 6.

Tuesday—Preparing the Way—Luke 10: 1-11.

Wednesday—Persecution the Driving Force—Acts 8: 1, 4; 11: 19-21.

Thursday—Consecrated as Missionaries—Acts 13: 1-5.

Friday—Gifts for Christian Service—Eph. 4: 7, 8, 11-13.

Saturday—Glory of God's Messengers—Isa. 52: 7-10.

Since we are to spend three successive weeks studying missions, those responsible for the program in the Christian society should write to Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, Elon College, N. C., for literature on missions. Rev. F. C. Lester, Elon College, N. C., will send six booklets dealing with China, etc., for 25 cents.

In this topic we are considering the why of Christian missions. It is true that the missionary challenge of the New Testament was given to a small group of men in a small region adjacent to the eastern end of the Mediterranean Sea, but the message has something in it which cannot be kept within geographical bounds. In Jesus' message the field is "all the world."

This is a small world today in which we have dealings with people in all parts of it in business, finance, art and music. In these phases of life our outlook reaches to the ends of the earth. It is important for us to see that religion, too, gives us an outlook and responsibility which embraces all the world.

Short Talks May Be Made On—

1. The authority for missions is Jesus.

2. The extent of missions, "Into all the world."

3. The motive of missions, to restore to Christ.

4. The agency is the believing church.

If possible have some missionary speak to your society. Study some book on missions or have someone review a book dealing with the problem of missions.

Suggested Hymns—

"Awake, O Christian."

"From All the Dark Places."

"Send the Light."

THE WORKS OF THE MESSIAH.

LESSON IX.—NOVEMBER 26, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Matthew 8 and 9.

TEXT: Jesus of Nazareth . . . went about doing good.—Acts 10: 38.

In the past few lessons we have been thinking of Jesus as a master teacher. In today's lesson we see him as a miracle worker. Within the brief compass of these two chapters for today's lesson we see him healing a man of leprosy, healing the palsied servant of the centurion, restoring Peter's wife's mother, bringing health to the multitude which lay in the streets, calming the stormy sea, casting demons, delivering a paralytic from his affliction and forgiving his sin, raising the ruler's daughter from the dead, healing the woman with an issue of blood, giving sight to two blind men, and delivering a man who was dumb from a demon.

Even a casual reading of these two chapters shows that Jesus was a superhuman man. It shows him in his mastery both over the forces of nature over diseases of the body, and diseases of the mind as well as of the heart. Some people are greatly troubled about the problem of miracles in the New Testament. But when one thinks of Jesus as the Son of God, reflects upon the written record which has been left us, and upon his continuing influence in our modern world, it is not difficult to believe that he could do things which are beyond the ordinary activities of an ordinary man. One is not to think of miracles as a breaking of God's law or setting it aside, but rather of transcending it. Jesus simply knew and used laws above and beyond that which we have discovered. He was not only a speaker of greater words; he was a doer of great deeds. Needless to say, we shall not be able to discuss in detail all of the material contained in today's lesson. We shall simply discuss the high lights as printed.

Jesus and the Fevers of Life.

At the end of a busy day Jesus came into the home of Simon Peter where he found Peter's wife's mother sick of a fever. He came to her, touched her hand, and the fever left her. Immediately she arose and ministered unto him. Here we see Christ concerned and compassionated for people, with the power of the personal touch and his mystery over disease. Here we see also a portrayal of how as his touch we can be healed of many of the fevers of life. We are fretful and fevered, weary and worried, and often all because we have not felt his touch upon our lives. He can calm our restlessness and bring healing to our spirits.

The Cost of Friendship With the Master.

As Jesus started to leave for another section a Scribe stepped up and glibly told him that he would follow him wherever he went. But Jesus always played fair with men. He did not want anybody to think of discipleship as a pleasure jaunt, or as an excursion. He immediately and rather bluntly told the man that discipleship to him would cost something. The foxes had dens in which to live, the birds of the heavens had nests, but the Son of man had nowhere to lay his head. In that particular case discipleship meant poverty, and self denial of the comforts of the home and home life.

Another man stepped up and said that he would like to go with Jesus but that he must first go home and bury his father. Jesus replied rather bluntly, it seems to us, "Follow me; leave the dead to bury their dead." Jesus does not mean, of course, that we should not pay our tribute of respect to the dead, but in this parabolic way he is condemning a long list of acts by which people allow the dead hand of the past to keep them from the duties of the present and the plans of the future.

Jesus and the Strength of Life.

On their way across the Sea of Galilee Jesus and his disciples were overtaken by one of the severe storms to which that lovely body of water was so often subject. Matthew refers to it as a great tempest and his account suggests that the huge waves were breaking completely over the boat. During all of the confusion, however, Jesus was asleep in the stern of the boat. In their desperation they awoke him saying "Save Lord; we perish." Quietly he arose, rebuked the wind and the sea, and, says Matthew, "There was a great calm." At the time he also rebuked his disciples, chiding them on their lack of faith.

There are some who raise questions about this incident as a historic fact. May it not be, however, that God thus showed in time and in the person of his Son that he was ruler over the forces of nature, and that ultimately they did his bidding. Beyond this fact, however, there is the spiritual truth that in the stresses and storms of life Jesus can speak calm to the souls of men. Jesus before he left his disciples he told them that in the world they were to have tribulation, but he also told them that he was leaving them his peace, and he bade them be of good cheer for in spite of all the tribulation, they could have that peace which passeth all understanding.

The Religion of Jesus and the Whole of Man.

Is there any unifying factor in this seeming disconnected series of events which the lesson committee has selected for today's lesson? On the surface it appears like a hodge-podge of isolated incidents, a kind of crazy quilt of strange and seemingly unexplainable incidents. But as one looks closer he finds a deeper meaning and a common unity in the lesson. Here for instance is evidence of God's concern for the bodies of men. If Jesus was a revelation of God do we not see in his concern for people who were sick and in the record of his miracles of healing a very clear indication of the premium which God puts upon health? Disease is abnormal; disease is not the will of God. And every physician, every hospital, every agency concerned with the health of children and grown-ups is but an expression of the effort of God to bring healing to a sick world.

But Jesus was concerned not only with healing the bodies of men; he also healed the minds of men. We read again and again in the Gospels of how he cast out demons and evil spirits. In most cases these people were suffering from what we now call functional diseases. Their bodies were suffering from the strange quirks which their minds had played upon them. Modern physicians, modern psychologists, and modern psychiatrists are discovering more and more the close and intimate relation between health of body and health of mind. And it is a significant thing that in practically every case these men bear witness to the fact that the great healing factor in these functional diseases and mental upsets is religion.

But beyond this Jesus dealt with the souls of men. He saw that often at that root of bodily and mental ills there was sin. And ultimately his goal was "to cure the souls." In this field he is supreme. Only He can bind up the broken in heart and give health of spirit.

MONDAY.

"DAILY PRAYER."

"Ye that are the Lord's remembrances, take ye no rest, and give Him no rest, till He establish . . . praise in the earth."—Isa. 62: 6, 7.

The reasons for daily prayer are: To cultivate the conscious presence of God in the life; to hold fellowship and communion with Him; to maintain an abiding attitude of trustful dependence upon Him; to learn to "Wait patiently" for Him; to fix the working life in harmony with His will; to gather strength for body and mind; to gather spiritual power from Him; to catch the vision of cooperation with Him; to receive heavenly energy for service, which is the essence of the kingdom; to gather from Him that power fatal to all powers of sin.

Perhaps out of your own experience you can find other reasons which you know. Add them up and pray as your heart feels. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"DAILY THANKSGIVING."

"Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."—Eph. 5: 20.

A time and a season of special thanksgiving is wise and necessary. But as there are imperative reasons for daily prayer, so there are imperative reasons for daily thanksgiving. We need to thank God for life and what it furnishes us; for God's goodness and care; for our kinship with Him; for the pure affection that He has inspired; for His mercy in forgiving our sins; for the snares we have escaped; for the protection we have received; for His comforts in sorrows; for confidence in the future; to bring our gratitude into His presence; to bring ourselves into a sense of His goodness; that we, like the Psalmist, may have a daily reminder that He is the Father and the Father of all mercies, in sickness and in health, in misfortunes and in poverty. O, can it be so? "Taste and see that the Lord is good."

Prayer—In prayer, let God's spirit move upon you and let your soul go out to Him in thanksgiving for all these and so many more blessings. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"THANKSGIVING INCLUSIONS."

"For all things"—Eph. 5: 20.

Thankfulness includes perpetual longing to do His will; an absorbing desire not to offend Him; a passionate love for other people; desire to allay the ills of others; peace and contentment during fitful times; acknowledging the blessing and fragrance of the good in all things; for opportunities and our use of them; for elementary endowments and ordinary mercies; for commonplace benefits; peace and quiet of soul found in Him. It includes worship. It is one of the highest forms of worship. It prevents moods, moroseness, and doubts. It fosters hope. Paul says that half of our worries would melt away if we would sing songs of praise. It raises the temperature of the Spirit. A grateful person is a loveable person. That goes for God.

Count your many blessings,
Name them one by one,
Count your many blessings,
See what God hath done,
Count your many blessings,
Name them one by one,
And it will surprise you,
What the Lord hath done.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

LESSON: Read Psalm 103: 1-5;
also 116: 12-14.

For our Thanksgiving thoughts today let us try to find a reason for believing every line of the above text. But few of us are ever adequately thankful for what we receive. Usually things are taken as a matter of course, and his benefits are forgotten. Let us contemplate all the proofs of His mercies that we can possibly sum up in our lives.

But there is an unusual thought for us, and that is, there are hosts of His children whose impoverishments are so dire that they feel deserted. Their sufferings are so great that they cannot realize His blessings. The clouds of their lives are so dark that they cannot see Him in their world. What can they be thankful for? How can they be thankful?

They can be thankful for their education and civil rights; good parents and benefactors never to be forgotten; for sunlit rooms and faithful physicians in sickness; for the faithfulness of warm friends and helping hands in times of need. Yea, the most unfortunate almost forget their calamity and pain when they count their blessings.

There was a poor broken-hearted widow. The good husband and father had passed away suddenly and left her destitute. When her pastor entered her room of sorrow her first words were, "Thank God that he was a good husband and father. That is a rich heritage for my children."

There is another instance. An old man in his eightieth year, walked to church, approaching the pastor as he was entering the church, he said, "I want you to pray that prayer about giving thanks this morning. I am eighty years old today and I would like to thank God for all his mercies." This old man, we are told, lived in a small room. His income was seventy cents a week. He had no relatives and but few friends. He was feeble and infirm and had to use sticks to get along; and yet he was not only content but he was happy. He, not long after, died, and his last words were, "I am not dying in darkness, I am dying in the light of life."

NOTE: If you cannot join the thankful folk at the church today, have a season of thanksgiving at your home altar.

 REV. JOHN H. KNIGHT

THE PLACE OF REPAIR.

TEXT: "The Lord will be the place of repair of his people."—Joel 3:16.

One of the outstanding things that was noticed at the Edinburg Conference of Faith and Order, held in 1937, was the intense emphasis that the Western, and especially the American churches, placed on organization and activity. Marked was the contrast between these and the Eastern churches, whose emphasis was upon worship, devotion and the adoration of God.

Many of our churches have lost their sense of the presence of God because they have conceived of the Christian's task in terms of fervid activity. We are cumbered with much serving. In our haste to "be busy in the service of the Lord," we have unfortunately forgotten a more necessary factor of Christian experience, and that is how to know God and to ascertain His will. How can we make Him known, until we first know Him ourselves? To attempt to spread the truth of God without first having known Him is to be but blind leaders of the blind. Doubtless this sad condition explains the present lack of power that is all too prevalent among the evangelical churches of the day.

Of course, there is a definite joy that comes in service—a satisfaction that the Christian receives in engaging in multiplied activities in Jesus' name. But my plea this day is for the realization of a deeper joy, and that we might set aside that which is good for that which is best.

The prophet Joel knew the secret of successful spiritual living. None were more active than he in going up and down the land of Israel, reproving sin and admonishing to righteousness. But he also knew the necessity, if so be that he was to speak the message of God, of waiting on the Lord in quietness, meditation and prayer. So he said, "The Lord will be the place of repair of His people."

The Christian today needs a place of repair. When we realize that the Lord himself is that place of repair, we can take heart. We may lack strength for life's tests and ordeals, but there is One who is Strength itself, and if we have communion with Him, He imparts to us His strength. (Hab. 3:19.) We may lack courage, but in communion with Him we hear His voice, "Be of good cheer, it is I, be not afraid." (Matt. 14:27.) We may lack wisdom, but in the place of prayer it shall be given unto you "what ye ought to say." (Luke 12:12.)

The Christian needs a place of repair in order that he may guard against the restless dissatisfaction and uncertainty which prevails among the peoples of this modern civilization. Many men and women today know nothing of interior quietness and spiritual peace. But the Christian has access to a place of repair where the storms of the soul may be calmed by the Divine Presence. The Christian, alone among the millions of mankind, has harmony within and a deep abiding sense of God's Presence and Power.

Let us then, Christian believers, as the dark clouds of Divine judgment settle down over this sin-cursed world, make constant use of the place of repair.

Place of repair: O blessed place of refuge!
 How gladly will I come to meet Him there,
 To cease awhile from all the joy of service,
 To find a deeper joy with Him to share.

Place of repair: for tired brain and body,
 How much I need that place just out of sight,

Where only He can talk and be beside me,
 Until again made strong by His great might.

Place of repair: when trials press upon me
 And God permits the unexpected test,
 'Tis there I learn some lesson sweet and precious,
 As simply on His faithfulness I rest.

Place of repair: the place to take my sorrow,
 The thing that hurts, and would be hard to bear,

But somehow in the secret place I'm finding
 That all the hurt is healed since He is there.

Place of repair: to wait for fresh endowment,
 I silently with Him alone would stay Until He speaks again, and says "Go forward
 To help some other sheep to find the way."

Place of repair: O trusting place most hallowed,
 The Lord Himself is just that place to me,
 His grace, His strength, His glory, and His triumph, Himself alone my all sufficiency.

"NATIONAL CHRISTIAN IDEALS."

"Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord."—Ps. 33:12.

During his administration President Roosevelt has made some striking declarations regarding Christianity. One of them is, "An order of society which rejects religion, democracy, and international good faith has no place within it for the ideals of the Prince of Peace. The United States rejects such an ordering and preserves its ancient Faith." We wish that the meaning of such a declaration were carried into all the actions of the various groups of society as a means of settling our internal and national problems.

Prayer—Our Father, only Thou through Thy Son Jesus Christ can help us. Give us the power to be true children of God every day and everywhere. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"WHAT IS GOD?"

"God is love."—I John 4:8.

Every bud on greening bough,
 Every breeze that passes,
 Every flower in garden nook,
 All the swaying grasses,
 Every little satin leaf,
 Every shrub and vine,
 Every moth and butterfly,
 All the stars that shiue,
 Every deep-voiced waterfall,
 Every cloud above,
 Every purple-crested hill
 Whisper, "God is love."

Prayer—Our Father, in Thy love may we find life, find ourselves, and find Thee. By Thy love may we live for Thee, for our fellowman, and for self and eternal glory. Amen.

SUNDAY.

WHAT CALVARY MEANS.

"I die daily."—I Cor. 15:31.

"The longer we meditate upon Calvary, the more it becomes the center from which radiate all true living and serving:

To the cross we bring our sins to be pardoned,
 Our weaknesses to be strengthened,
 Our sorrows and joys to be sanctified,
 Our sicknesses to be healed,
 Our needs to be supplied,
 Our ambitions and hopes to be purified,
 Ourselves to be transformed.'

"From the cross we take our life for its living:

Our light for life's darkness,
 Our wisdom for life's problems,
 Our strength for life's service,
 Our comfort for life's sorrows,
 Our message for the lost,
 Our love for Christ and the world."

Signs of the Times.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

At this Thanksgiving season you are going to have the privilege of showing your interest, your sympathy and your love for the fatherless and motherless who are members of the Christian Orphanage family.

The Thanksgiving offering will be taken in your church and Sunday school and you will have the opportunity to make your offering. Are you going open your heart and make such a liberal offering that you will feel that it was worthy of you? Let it be in keeping with the many blessings that the Lord has given you throughout the year.

We must raise between now and January 1 the sum of $7,429.10 to reach our goal. Ask yourself this question and be perfectly honest with yourself and your conscience. "Have I done my part by the Christian Orphanage this year?" If your answer is "yes" then your conscience will be at peace. If your answer is "no" then don't you think you had better get your conscience clear and at ease?

new type supper for me; maybe you, too, would be interested. Jack was in the corner in front of a big paper pie. There were streamers running from the pie. Each person pulled a streamer and found out what price he must pay for his supper. The prices varied only a penny or so.

This week the men are giving a supper for which they do all the planning. The only thing I can imagine men cooking is a hot dog supper. But there'll be a big crowd just to see. Wouldn't it be great if more of the men went in for dish washing and standing over the stove?

Two of the college girls dashed in one afternoon. Mr. Chapman taught at the Normal while here.

There used to be only a handful of people at Asheville's Congregational Church, but now they speak of the membership as near the hundred mark. I am sure that the growth will continue where such interesting people are working together.

Incidentally, I am very excited over being promoted! No, I haven't visited the church yet, but my doctor has allowed me to sit in a wheel chair. And the world looks wonderful. And, too, in three more weeks the cast comes off. Time flies by when you're going home for Christmas.

The Church Year

By REV. AUBREY C. TODD.

Things To Do In December:

The first four Sundays in December are the Sundays in Advent. These days before Christmas are used by the church to prepare the people for adequate apprehension of that incomparable event of the Word made flesh. The traditional use of this season has been to meditate on the thought of the Second Advent of our Lord. There is great importance in apocalyptic prophecy which might well be used in our time, such as the truth of Christ as the Judge of the world.

If this trend of thought does not seem advisable, there are many other ways in which this season may be used to advantage. The themes "The Character of Christ" and "The Work of the Church" have been used by many churches. John Schroeder suggests that we think on the theme, "Jesus and Ourselves." His pamphlet, "Preaching in Advent," may be secured from the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City. Other suggestions are to use material from the Gospels surrounding the story of the Nativity, or use the prophecies of the Old Testament. Regardless of the theme chosen, there should be a definite approach to the fact of the Incarnation. Christmas Day will have a deeper meaning for our people if they are prepared beforehand.

If a series of related services and sermons are not desired, it would be well to observe the second Sunday in Advent as Forefather's Day. It would be especially appropriate in our Christian Churches to review the founding and establishing of the Congregational Church, regarding which most of our people are unformed. Fagley's booklet on the history of the Congregational Church may be used as a basis for this study. A copy of it may be borrowed from the Board of Christian Education, Elon College, N. C.

Universal Bible Sunday is usually observed on the second Sunday in December, but may be moved earlier or later. Materials for this observance may be obtained from the American Bible Society, Richmond, Va.

The fourth Sunday in Advent should be used for the climaxing service of the season, unless a service has been planned for Christmas Day. At this time emphasis should be placed on the beautiful symbolism and poetry surrounding the Nativity story; the song of the angels, the Virgin Mother, the Magnificent and the Benedictus. At least one service during this season should be devoted to the meaning of the Incarnation for our present generation. Many of our churches will follow the suggestion of our Board of Superannuation and take an offering for Ministerial Relief on Christmas Sunday.

The last Sunday in December is the last day of the year. There need not be any serious falling off of attendance the Sunday after Christmas, if this service is well-planned. Evaluating the activities of the past year and looking forward into the coming year is the note to be emphasized on this day. It should be a time when every member of the church is given the opportunity to reconsecrate his life to the service of God. This is an opportune time for the celebration of Holy Communion. If a "watch-night" service is planned, it would be well to close the service with Holy Communion.

Of course, the Epiphany season rightfully belongs in next month's article, but I mention it here in order to remind you that preparations should begin early. The joy and happiness of Christmas should not end abruptly with the New Year. The Epiphany, which commemorates the visit of the magi, is one way of continuing this spirit. If your church has been in the habit of having a candle-lighting service at Christmas, I suggest that you save it for Epiphany.

faith and practice."

The Larger Stewardship

After the death of the noted Scotch missionary, Dr. Barclay, the following covenant was found among his papers. He had written it at the age of sixteen and had signed it on his birthday each year until his death at the age of eighty-five. During all the years of their married life, Mrs. Barclay had also signed the covenant:

A COVENANT.

"This day do I, with the utmost solemnity, surrender myself to Thee. I renounce all former lords that have had dominion over me, and I consecrate to Thee all that I am and all that I have—the faculties of my mind, the members of my body, my worldly possessions, my time, and my influence over others—all to be used entirely for Thy glory and resolutely employed in obedience to Thy commands, as long as Thou continuest me in life.

"To Thy direction also I resign myself, to be disposed of by Thee in such a manner as Thou in Thy infinite wisdom shalt judge most subservient to the purpose of Thy glory.

"To Thee I leave the management of all events, and say without reserve 'Not my will, but Thine be done.'"

This kind of stewardship today would make our churches new and would bring new joy to the hearts of our people. As a matter of simple fact we are entirely dependent upon God. It is well to recognize it.

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

Don't forget the Christian Association meeting at Waverly, Va., on next Tuesday.

Rev. J. F. Apple has accepted a call to the Christian Church in Henderson, N. C., and will begin work there on next Sunday.

Rev. M. W. Mann has retired from the pastorate of our churches in the Valley of Virginia, and has accepted a Methodist pastorate near Covington, Va.

Rev. E. E. Martz of Durham, N. C., preached at Apple's Chapel and Hine's Chapel last Sunday. He will speak at Hine's Chapel next Sunday morning.

Rev. F. E. Church, a student in Duke College, preached at Mt. Bethel and Kallam Grove on last Sunday. He will speak in that new pastorate next Sunday.

Our readers will be glad to learn that Chaplain H. E. Rountree, who underwent an operation recently, at the San Diego Naval Hospital, has sufficiently recovered to return home.

The college choir will render the Messiah in the Whitley auditorium at Elon College, N. C., on next Sunday evening. This is a regular feature of the Christmas celebration by the college.

The Board of Christian Education is furnishing sample materials for Christmas programs to many churches and church leaders. Be sure that your church plans for a beautiful Birthday celebration for Jesus.

Be sure that your church and Sunday school make a liberal offering for our orphanage at the Thanksgiving season. You will never regret that but you will be very unhappy if the children in the orphanage have no blessing from your church.

We are delighted to present a Children's Page this week with the hope of making this a regular feature of the paper. THE CHRISTIAN SUN is very grateful to Mrs. Aubrey C. Todd for undertaking this fine work. She is the wife of our minister at Sanford, N. C. She has had special training in children's work at Chicago Theological Seminary, and has worked with children in numerous places.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING ABOUT THE "ANNUITY FUND?"

At the recent session of the Eastern Virginia Conference, the report of the Committee on Superannuation was adopted without a dissenting vote. In this report was a recommendation to the various churches of our conference. Does any lay-delegate outside of those on the committee know what this recommendation to which the writer refers was? If you do, have you taken up the matter with the finance committee of your church? And if you have not, then why not?

The recommendation was that the churches seek to encourage their pastors to make application for membership in the "Annuity Fund." But this recommendation went further than that, it asked that the churches interest themselves to the extent of providing at least one-half of the first year's membership fee (an amount equal to 3 per cent of the pastor's salary). And it went still one step further: it asked that this action be taken before the first of the year—a Christmas Gift for your pastor, so to speak.

Seriously, brother layman, will you not see that your church does take action on this most important question within the immediate future. It is not to say that you will be called upon each year to help with the membership fee, for after the first year of membership, there is an endowment fund that cares for from eighty to ninety per cent of the entire cost. If you will put your shoulder to the wheel just this one time, you will not have to do this job again till you call another pastor—and even then he may already be a member—let's hope that he will.

It is not just to your pastor's advantage, but it is for the good of the church itself. One knows that a pastor who knows that his old age is provided for and that there will be no cause for fear, can give himself more wholeheartedly to the work for which he is called. There is that much human, even in a preacher.

See that your finance committee takes care of this job now. If there are questions regarding the necessary procedure, it is possible that your preacher may have already become enough interested to have informed himself. Or if you do not want to ask him, the undersigned will be glad to assist you to the extent of his ability.

Let's try to have one-hundred per cent of our ministers of the Eastern Virginia Conference enrolled in the "Annuity Fund" this year.

Sincerely yours,

J. T. KERNODLE, Chairman,
Committee on Superannuation
of Eastern Virginia
Conference.

"A nation builded by 'mud slinging' principles will crumble to ashes in the burning sunlight of God's presence."

THANKSGIVING DAY.

The first page of "The United States News" for this week deals largely with Thanksgiving Days. A pictogram shows a turkey standing on the map of the states that celebrated Thanksgiving last week according to the suggestion of the President, another turkey standing on the map of the states that stick to the customary last Thursday in November, and still another turkey standing on the map of the three states that celebrate both days. The first paragraph in the article makes this interesting statement:

"Not since Julius Caesar, in the year 46 B. C., and Pope Gregory XIII, in 1582, began playing with days and weeks has there been such excitement and confusion over the calendar as there was last Thursday when 81,473,000 devoured Thanksgiving turkeys, while 8,099,000 more devoured the first of two turkeys, and the remaining 39,685,00 devoured not at all but tightened their belts waiting for November 30."

As was to have been expected, most of New England stuck to the old date and a good part of the far west went to the new. Maine, Colorado, and Texas tried to please everybody by observing both days. Gov. Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts is quoted as saying that Thanksgiving Day is set apart to give thanks to God, "and not for the inauguration of Christmas shopping." This is an important matter to remember.

PREPARING FOR CHRISTMAS.

It is expected that this year will go far beyond other years in the purchase of material things for Christmas. Economists are prophesying, merchants are buying and advertising, and the whole economic scheme is being geared to a high pitch for buying and selling between now and the time of the celebration of the Birth of a Babe in Bethlehem nineteen centuries ago. Strangely enough, there is no record that the One whose Birthday is to be celebrated ever bought or sold anything. Stranger still, most of the things sold in preparation for the Birthday celebration will have nothing whatsoever to do with the life or teachings of the Nazarene.

The greater the sales pressure in the economic world, the harder it will be to make effective the message of the real Christmas. People who are too busy buying and selling will hardly hear the music of angels floating across God's good earth. It will be difficult for them even to share in any Christmas program presented by the church. For those who invest the increased income in things for themselves and gifts for each other there will be little chance to contribute to the needy and to share in the world-wide program of the Church.

"The Christian Sun" would urge upon its readers to take time now, before the grand rush begins, to settle it in your minds that you will have time to take your offering of self, service, and sacrifice to the place where wise men worship the Christ who was a Babe in a manger. Let nothing steal from you the joy of giving and living in the spirit of the Christ Child. The message of Jesus, the message of God's love, the message of Christmas is of far more value than all the profits that can possibly be made from commerce at Christmas time. It is our business to see to it that the message is made known. Nothing can excuse us from that responsibility.

There is an abundance of materials to help. The Bible tells the simple stories. Christmas carols are abundant. Poets and prose writers have vied with each other in trying to portray the meaning of the Incarnation. Music, art, drama, and pageantry aid in making vivid the gospel story. Our Board of Christian Education and all church publishing houses can aid in supplying at small cost or no cost materials with which to work. The main point is to get busy with plans that will insure your own refilling with Christmas joy and doing your part in making clear to others just what the coming of Jesus to earth means to you. Prepare now to celebrate the Birthday of our Savior.

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

Turner's Chapel Church and Pastor R. T. Grissom were gracious and generous hosts to the Eastern North Carolina Conference last week. Many of those who remained over night could be heard singing the praises of their hosts.

The officers had planned for a busy session. President Neese presided with ease and dignity. Business moved smoothly. Reports from the churches showed progress. First Congregational-Christian Church of Hope Mills was received into the Conference. A committee was appointed to further study the financial interests of the Conference and the churches. Cecil Thomas, a member of Shallow Well Church and a Sophomore in Elon College, and M. L. Grissom, Jr., brother of R. T. and W. A. Grissom, were licensed to preach. J. C. Cummings was continued for the present as an acting elder. The Franklinton Pastorate is to be aided for two years with the hope that it will develop to where it can go alone.

The Conference was very fortunate to have as guest speakers Dr. Samuel H. Leger of China; Dr. Boynton C. Merrill of Massachusetts; and Dr. F. H. Fagley of New York. All three speakers were excellent, and their contribution was sufficient to make any conference great.

Goodness and intelligence are not the same thing. A minister may be good, but unless he prepares his sermons, his prayers, and his services of worship, his work will not indicate a high degree of intelligence.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The ministers of the Eastern Virginia Conference in the Monthly Ministers Association held in Suffolk Christian Church, Monday, November 20, had the rare privilege of a discussion of Worship, under the direction of Dr. F. L. Fagley of New York; Dr. Boynton Merrill of Newton, Mass.; and Dr. H. S. Hardeastle, Norfolk, Va.

Dr. Merrill was the leader in two discussion periods. In the morning session he delivered a fine address on Worship—in the regular church service. In the afternoon session he discussed "Worship for Children." Dr. Hardeastle presented a very helpful worship program, illustrating a model type for any worship period. Dr. Fagley interspersed the regular program by introducing an informal discussion of the general topic for study.

Two interesting facts were presented in connection with the church of which Dr. Merrill is the progressive and beloved pastor. First, there is no Sunday school session for adults in his church; second, children under fifteen years of age do not attend the regular church service. In the work of his church a special service for children from two and one-half years of age to four is conducted regularly by the pastor. Regular services are also planned and conducted for children above these ages. But this is the beginning of worship services under the direction of the pastor of the church. These services have become an important factor in the life of Second Congregational Church of Newton, Mass. The pastor is planning to encourage the children to attend the regular church service, but thinks it will require at least ten years to make this plan effective in that church.

It is encouraging to observe the increasing emphasis of preparing definite worship services for the church. People in different sections require a service adapted to their taste and spiritual needs. Every minister cannot hope to be equal to Dr. Merrill in preparing and conducting a worship service. There is no standardized type of worship service, which can be used effectively in every congregation. The tendency of the present time is to use a service similar to the forms used in the Episcopal Church, or other Liturgical Churches. In some churches this type is acceptable. In all churches the services should be carefully prepared.

The preparation includes the selection of hymns, Scripture readings and the preparation of prayers, if the Prayer Book is not used. All this should be under the careful direction of the minister, or person in charge of the service. If the minister fails to supervise the selection of hymns some very disturbing situation may arise. Such a situation arose in the experience of the young Methodist friend of the writer who was conducting a revival meeting in a country church in Virginia. The young evangelist brought his sermon to a great climax, and at the close, turned to the young organist and requested a hymn of invitation. Imagine the disappointment when the young organist began playing, with much enthusiasm, the hymn: "My Country 'Tis of Thee." Nothing could have been more distracting to the minister, or disturbing to the service. At the end of the first stanza the minister pronounced the benediction.

The ministers of the Eastern Virginia Conference were well pleased with the program last Monday. It was an inspiration to all who attended. Such a Conference means much to the ministers and it should bring untold blessings to the churches of the Conference. "They that worship God must worship Him in spirit and in truth." That is a guide. There is the field of our greatest need. People who attend church should have a sense of the Divine Presence. The sermon, the music, the prayers—all mean little if God is left out of the program. God should be supreme. "The Lord is in His holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before Him." I. W. JOHNSON.

WBIG operates with an increased power of 5,000 watts by day and 1,000 watts by night. With this increased power, it is able to reach with its programs the states of North and South Carolina, Virginia, and parts of Tennessee and West Virginia.

The college has been assigned as its time for broadcast Wednesday of each week, 10:00 to 10:30 P. M., at which time the Music Department of the college will provide the programs. From 2:00 to 2:15 on Tuesday of each week, the literary departments of the college will provide the program. These periods have been assigned the college, and the college may use the same in any legitimate way it may wish to publicize the institution or to make appeals for support. It is certainly generous and public spirited on the part of Major Ridge of Greensboro, to make available such opportunities for the college. I am sure that the trustees, the church, the alumni, and the friends of the college everywhere will not only be appreciative of these courtesies but will be glad for the opportunity of receiving these programs.

I wish that the readers of this paper would drop a card to Major Edney Ridge, WBIG, Greensboro, N. C., and express their appreciation of this most unusual courtesy. We shall be glad, of course, if you will listen in on our programs.

The first broadcast in the series was made Wednesday night of last week from 10:00 to 10:30. Professors Pratt and Moore gave a program of two piano selections. It was a very fine program, and I am sure it was well received by our new radio audience.

In the first broadcast for the literary departments of the college, the writer will speak Tuesday afternoon of this week and will in that first address set forth certain facts and the high purposes of Elon College. He will also acquaint our radio audience with our anniversary celebration and certain goals which we hope to reach by Commencement, 1940.

Don't forget to tune in Tuesdays, 2:00 to 2:15 P. M., and Wednesdays, 10:00 to 10:30 P. M.

CONTRASTS AND SIMILARITIES IN HUMAN NATURE AND CUSTOMS.

Sitting on the train here today en route to an out mission station I was just thinking of the contrasts which one sees here as compared with customs in the West.

Among Chinese sitting around me with whom I had talked were "Mr. Yellow," "Mr. Unity," and others. How strange, I thought, such names would sound to our folks in the West! But, again, thought I, what peculiar names we have! They are even more so than the Chinese. How the Chinese would laugh, should we tell them the meaning of some of our surnames. Among those that come to mind are "Mr. Brickhouse," "Mr. Woodhouse," the "Halls," the "Hogs," the "Masons," the "Carpenters," the "Walkers," the "Cooks," the "Turnipseeds," etc. I looked down at a copy of the "Biblical Recorder," which I was reading. There were letters expressing appreciation of work done by the leader of evangelistic meetings at Meredith College. Note the signature! I take them all, and as they come: "Anna M. Baker," "Charles E. Brewer," "Gretchen Fanny," "Lettie Smoak," "Juanita Stainbaek!"

But during these nearly thirty years out here I have been more impressed with the similarities than the contrasts. The Chinese also have "Whites," "Blacks," "Browns," etc. It is true that they eat with chopsticks, serve sweets first, eat vegetables for breakfast, sleep on hard heated brick beds, and their language, both written and spoken, is terribly different to ours. But human nature is the same the world over. These people do not only have the same diseases we have, but, unfortunately, commit the same sins. For this reason they need the same Savior.

A pastor was introducing the writer at prayermeeting in Virginia when the folks became so amused that they almost broke up the "meetin'." They were examining a large clear picture of Chinese Christians, the countenances of whom were so strikingly similar to people they knew that it really amused them.

To God all hearts are dark with sin until cleansed by the blood of Christ, for "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." Satan uses various methods to deceive many out here, as elsewhere. There are those who believe they will be saved simply by refraining from the use of wine and tobacco. The head of a "Virtue Society" was offended when I insisted that all men are sinners. He spoke out in meeting and said: "I have never sinned." When asked if he had ever lied, cursed, or gambled, he exclaimed: "Who would regard lying or cursing a sin!" I could readily see that he was an opium smoker but saved some embarrassment by not questioning him regarding this.

Many, however, do realize that they are sinners. This poor old sinner had probably been complimented so often for a few things he had done as "merit"—burning incense and paper—that his pride had gotten the best of him and he had deceived himself. The average Chinese acknowledges that he is a sinner, but they have to be

The 1940 Week of Prayer for the Churches

PLANNED BY FEDERAL COUNCIL

Program by DR. SPEER.

Each year during the first full week of January, there is the world-wide observance of the Week of Prayer. Next year the dates are January 8-14. All churches, except those of the Roman Catholic faith, join in this observance.

The series of topics for next year has been written by Dr. Robert E. Speer at the request of the Department of Evangelism of the Federal Council. The theme about which the daily topics are written is, "The Acknowledgment of the Lordship of Jesus Christ Over the Whole of Life." The daily topics under this general theme deal with the individual, the home, the church, the school, our secular life, the community, and the nations.

During the Week of Prayer and afterwards the churches will be requested to enroll every Christian possible in a World Fellowship of Prayer. In Great Britain over two million have been enrolled in a fellowship and have been praying for definite things unitedly and simultaneously.

Many communities hold union prayer services in some of the centrally located buildings. In other communities these union prayer services are rotated from one church to another. Where it does not seem possible for union daily services of two or more churches, then it is advisable for individual churches to go ahead with plans for the observance of the week.

Prayer is needed now if ever when the lights are going out all over the world. The darkness seems more impenetrable than ever before because it is a projection not only of a slaughter of war, but also of a world upheaval. Strange yeasting forces are disturbing the world order and bringing fear and insecurity to men's minds.

How can the Church gird herself for this testing day? Primarily through prayer, for prayer at its best is the effective identification of the individual or the group with a God of Power. Only the power of God can steady us in this crisis, make love the victor over hate, and enable us to believe in and work for a new order grounded on love and justice.

We are all challenged to make this Week of Prayer the spiritual mobilization hour of all our Christian forces.

The Week of Prayer booklets may be ordered from the Department of Evangelism of the Federal Council, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y., at the rate of 5c per single copy; $2.00 per 100; $9.00 per 500 or more, postpaid.

reminded of this. Still others are unsatisfied with their trust in heathen gods and customs and long for something more stable. We are glad that the "Way, the Truth, and the Life" is becoming a reality to many. We are made to rejoice in, and marvel at, the great change that takes place in the hearts, lives, attitudes and hopes of these people when they become Christians.

No less than 2,500 have been baptized on this field these past fifteen years—464 last year. Hundreds of others accepted the Lord during the Chinese New Year meetings this spring. A large group was baptized at Harbin recently. Many others are awaiting baptism at the outstations.

Word comes of the abundant harvest of souls in many parts of China. We missionaries along with those who support the work should praise God, take courage and go forward as never before in these momentous days, when the Lord's return seems so near.

A CHRISTMAS GIFT SUGGESTION.

Yesterday a good layman handed the editor a check for three CHRISTIAN SUN subscriptions. These are to be gifts to those who may want the paper and cannot subscribe. There are many shut-ins, older people, and others who are not financially able to pay the necessary two dollars to get the church paper. You may know some of them. And you may know some families with growing children who should read THE CHRISTIAN SUN. It could happen that your pastor is not a subscriber, and certainly he would appreciate a gift from you even if it merely extended the time for another year. There are Sunday school superintendents and teachers who try to get along without the church paper. Why not select one or more of your friends and give them gifts that will last through the year? What finer gift could you give than the regular visits of your church paper?

The School of Mountain and Lake

By DR. ERWIN L. SHAVER.

There are schools of wood and brick and stone,
The best that men can build;
There are schools with books and maps and desks,
With eager pupils filled;
There are schools whose teachers are noble souls,
Who teach for teaching's sake;
But the greatest school man e'er has known,
Was the school of mountain and lake.

No costly building reared of men
Was the home of this wonderful school;
The books and maps were nature's own,
The lakes and the mountains cool.
Where God revealed His love for men
In the beauty of plain and sea,
There wrought the Master of love and life
That mankind might be free.

No great schoolmaster ever taught
The truths of life so clearly;
No more effective leader of men
Than He who loved them dearly.
On mountain side or by the lake,
On heated plain or village street,
Where'er this Teacher found a need,
He rendered service meet.

The Pupils in this school of love,
Who came at the Master's call,
Were humble folk but yearned to know
The will of God for all.
Three years they traveled side by side
With their Friend and Elder Brother,
Learning the lessons He had to teach
That men might love each other.

Not in sages' books were these lessons found,
Nor yet in His spoken word;
But the Incarnate God, the Servant Christ,
They saw rather than heard.
And as they fellowshiped with Him,
And shared in service splendid,
There came to them the truth, the way
To live as God intended.

Then by and by He sent them forth
To follow in His train,
And further learn the deeper truth
That the price of serving is pain,
Thus learning by loving they went their way,
Crossing the highway and plain,
Lifting the hearts of men to God,
Finding in love their gain.

Oh, let me teach the truth of life
In the most effective way;
And let me live the life I teach
In the presence of God each day.
Oh, let me learn as did the twelve
To teach for mankind's sake;
And let me learn as well as they
In the school of mountain and lake.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Dear Boys and Girls:

The editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN has asked me to write a page for you in each week's CHRISTIAN SUN. This page is to be just for you! I hope that you will enjoy reading it. I was once a little girl just like some of you; one day I told my smaller sister that when I got to be a "lady" like our teacher that I was going to write stories for children. I dearly loved stories when I was small, and I suppose that was why I wanted to write them some day. I had forgotten about telling my sister that until your editor asked me to write this page for you. Now I think that I shall try to live out that dream of my little girlhood and write some stories for you to read in this Children's Page of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

I suppose that I know many of you. Did I not meet you when I was teaching in Vacation Church Schools in Georgia, North Carolina and Virginia? Do you remember some of the stories that I told you in our School? There were some which you liked so much that you asked me to tell them again. Perhaps there will be some stories on this page, during the weeks to come, which you will want to keep. Would you like to make a scrap-book in which you can paste stories, poems and prayers which you find on this page so that you may keep them? Just as we used to make scrap-books in our Church Schools when I was "Miss Dorothy" or "Miss Grigsby." Some day you might find a story in THE CHRISTIAN SUN about you; because I think you did some things which other boys and girls would like to read about.

Would one of you like to write a story or poem or prayer for this page some time? If you do, send it to me at 6 South Third Street, Sanford, N. C. Will you write to me and tell me what you would like to have in this page? If you like to read the page will you tell about that; if you do not like the page, write and tell me that, too. Your CHRISTIAN SUN editor, Mr. Lester, wants this page just for you and wants you to like and enjoy it. I shall do my best to make it interesting and helpful for you.

With best wishes and prayers for all boys and girls who may read this page.

Sincerely, your friend,

DOROTHY TODD.

THE CHILDREN'S MINISTER.

This past week I met a very interesting minister who called himself the Children's Minister of his church as well as the minister of their parents. I thought that perhaps you would like to know about him and would like to hear a story that he told about one of the boys in his church. This minister is Dr. Boynton Merrill, from Massachusetts. Dr. Merrill has a very beautiful church, and opening off from the church auditorium is the Children's Church; a lovely little chapel for the children. There Dr. Merrill has worship services for the boys and girls of his church. Boys and girls help him with the services. Boys and girls kneel on the little blue cushions on the floor in front of their little chairs and pray to their heavenly Father with Dr. Merrill. Would you like to have a corner just for you in your church? A place where your minister can have such services for you? Tell your minister that you would and help him and your parents to make one for you in your church.

One day Dr. Merrill was busy in his study when suddenly the door was thrown open and in came a nine-year-old boy. The boy was breathing hard and there were tears of anger and hurt in his eyes. His hands and face were dirty and his hair was rumpled up.

"Dr. Merrill, I am in trouble! I need help!"

"What is the trouble, Tom? Tell me about it."

"Dr. Merrill, there were a gang of us boys playing on the lawn over in front of Mr. Randall's house and one of the boys threw a green apple. The apple hit one of the front windows of Mr. Randall's house. Mr. Randall came running out. The other boys had run away but he caught me. He said that I broke his window. I told him that I did not. Then he called me a liar. I told him that I was not a liar but he said that I was. Dr. Merrill, I may do some things which are wrong but I am not a liar and I will not have anyone think that I am! What can I do about it?"

Then Dr. Merrill told Tom to go home and wash his face and hands, put on his Cub Scout suit, brush his hair and to wait for Mr. Randall to come home from work.

"About fifteen minutes after he has come home, you go over to his house and knock on his front door. When he comes to the door don't stand on the porch or in the hall, but walk right into his best room and sit down. When Mr. Randall comes in and sits down you say, 'Mr. Randall, I have come to tell you that I did not break your window. I told you the truth, and I am not a liar.'" So Tom went home and did as Mr. Merrill had told him to do.

The next day Tom came to see Dr. Merrill. "Dr. Merrill, it worked! I went home and did just as you told me. Mr. Randall came to the door, but he did not ask me in, so I walked in just as you told me to do. After I told him what you said for me to tell him, Mr. Randall said that I was not a liar!—and he begged my pardon. I told him that I would see the other boys and that we would pay for his window. Everything is fixed up now, Dr. Merrill, and, Gee! am I glad."

"THE BIBLE A JEW BOOK."

Germany seems to be going a long way in its Nazi program and in its determination to rid that nation of the Jews, or render them powerless. The News-Herald gives the statement to its readers and the public that Germany through its official spokesman has issued a decree forbidding book stores in Germany to carry copies of the Bible for sale. If any customer is daring enough to leave his name at the book store with request that a copy of the Bible be ordered he can secure it, but with what consequences it is not stated. The minister of propaganda states his reason for this decision as follows: "The reason for this order is that the Bible is a Jew book," that it "teaches peace instead of extolling war," and that it is "detrimental to the teaching of national socialism. "Thus Germany moves on her pagan way."

It may be added that is not only dangerous for Germany, but for any nation, or any individual, to ban the Bible. It has proven itself worthy of acceptance. It has a larger sale in any one year than any book published, though of course this may not indicate that all who buy read it. While it is the most helpful Book in the world, possibly no book has been so widely misused and abused. This seems to be the fate of every contribution for the betterment of mankind made to our world. Some prove one thing and some another by it, depending largely upon the mind and the background of the interpreter. Yet with the aid of faithful preachers and Sunday school teachers it has made a contribution to mankind second to no book ever published. Someone has said that if one will carry one's prejudices with him as he reads the Bible he can prove by it anything he wishes. Such seems by and large to be practically true. However, this Book still stands as the Word of God and as this column has often repeated the approaches to the Infinite are so varied and boundless that we may expect varied interpretations of this marvelous and wonderful Book. The moral of our story is, if it has a moral, that everyone should read the Bible for himself, or for herself, and should do so with an open mind, seeking to find the message that the Bible has for him, or her. It has been said that in other so-called sacred books we have stories of man's search for God; but in the Bible a record of God seeking to find a place in the mind and heart of man. "We love Him," says this Book, "because He first loved us." This marvelous Book opens with the statement, "In the beginning God." If in the beginning of the day; in the beginning of a task; in the beginning of a journey we as individuals, or as a nation, put God first there is hope and assurance of safety and salvation.

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN.

ARTICLE II.

By AUBREY C. TODD.

The Purpose of These Articles—

Since the publication of the article, "An Introduction to the Gospel of John," a surprisingly large number of questions and requests for further information have come to the writer of that article and to the office of the Promotional Secretary. Because it would require a great deal of time to send this information to individuals, it has been decided that a better plan would be to print monthly articles in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. This does not mean that individual questions will go unanswered; therefore, if at any time during the publication of these articles questions arise, feel free to send them in. It is very encouraging to find that there are so many who are interested in such a critical study. It is a sign that we are beginning to realize that we must go to the Bible with our whole minds as well as our whole hearts.

Regarding the Author—

The last article caused many questions to arise regarding the authorship of the Fourth Gospel. It is necessary that the one who presents these studies to the societies have definite ideas concerning the author, in order that the purpose of the book be clearly understood, but it is better if such controversial questions be kept out of the meetings. In answer to questions coming in from those who have been taught that the son of Zebedee wrote this book, the following suggestions might be of help.

1. The Beloved Disciple lived in Jerusalem when a youth, as clearly shown in the 19th chapter. He took the Mother of Jesus into his home in that same "hour." John, the son of Zebedee, could not have been this person, because he was a Galilean.

2. The Beloved Disciple was a young man, as pictured in the 20th chapter. John of Zebedee was an elderly man.

3. The disciple who leaned on the bosom of Jesus at the Last Supper could have been one outside the Twelve. Mark 14:20 suggests that someone outside the Twelve might be present. In that verse, Jesus says, "It is one of the Twelve." If an outsider had not been present, he would have said simply, "It is one of you."

4. The Gospel makes no claim to have been written by the Apostle.

5. Outside the Gospel there is no hint of such authorship until the third century.

6. The Gospel is Greek in language and thought.

7. The character of the son of Zebedee (Mark 3:17, Luke 9:51-56, Mark 9:38, Mark 10) does not harmonize with the Johannine picture of the "beloved disciple."

8. Historical evidence indicates the martyrdom of the son of Zebedee before 70 A. D.

9. All available evidence points to John, the beloved disciple of Jesus, the minister of the Christian Church at Ephesus, as the author of this book.

Further Study—

The limited library of the writer of this article will not permit him to lend books to all who have asked for them, but the few books that he has will be passed around as rapidly as possible. It is suggested that books be borrowed from school and city libraries when possible. The pamphlet, "Studies in Witness—In the Gospel of John," by Mrs. S. H. Askew, costs only 25c and will be found helpful, although it is not of a critical nature. For a clear and simple presentation of a critical nature, there is none better than the handbook, "The Gospel of John" by B. W. Robinson. It may be purchased from the Macmillan Co. for $1.50. Other modern and scholarly presentations are "The Gospel of John" by E. J. Goodspeed, "The Historical and Religious Value of the Fourth Gospel" by E. F. Scott (Pilgrim Press, 40c), "The Ephesian Gospel" by Percy Gardner, "A Short Introduction to the Gospels" by E. D. Burton.

For the December Meeting—

It would be well if all the studies for your missionary societies be selected from passages teaching the brotherhood of all men. There is no better selection for your Christmas meeting than the story of the Incarnation as found in the Prologue to the Gospel, John 1:1-5. In this prologue John is attempting to win the attention of his Ephesian congregation to a gospel of Jewish origin. It is merely a religious lesson, and should be presented in your missionary groups as such. Let your thoughts center around the idea that God is an invisible spirit, and that this spirit entered into Jesus and through Jesus revealed God as beneficent love.

MONEY AND MISSIONS TODAY.

These are difficult days for many Christian enterprises. Almost every missionary society reports a deficiency of from $100,000 to $500,000. The need is greater than ever—for new workers, for equipment, for relief of sufferers in war areas, for the training and support of Christian workers in mission lands. Germany and some other lands are not permitting money to be sent out of their countries, and as a result many missionaries are stranded and work is crippled materially. Twice as much money is spent in America for war machinery as for religion, education and peace combined. Great Britain is taking 37% of all income for taxes to pay for war and self-defense. In North America taxes are increasing while in many lines business is declining. There is a serious lack of money given for church support and for evangelical work. Appeals increase but responses decrease. Even Christians seem to think that, in view of present disturbed conditions in Asia and Europe, the effort to proclaim the Gospel of Christ throughout the world must be curtailed.

Do we not need to readjust our sense of values and to reconsider our responsibilities? There is no lack of money—at least in America. The National Committee for Religion and Welfare Recovery reports that our national income rose from over forty billion dollars in 1932 to nearly seventy-two billion in 1937—an increase of more than 79%. During the same period gifts to twenty-five large evangelical denominations, for all purposes, decreased from nearly $399,000,000 to about $315,000,000, a decrease of over 21%. But at the same time there seems to be no lack of money for the moving picture shows, for baseball and football contests, and for cosmetics, alcoholic drinks and tobacco and luxuries—many of them harmful. Two league baseball games brought in over $600,000 in gate money. More than twice as much is spent for intoxicants as for church support and more is burned up in tobacco than is given for religion and education together. As one result crime costs us fifteen times as much as we give for Christian enterprises.

It is true that most of this lavish expenditure is by those who have no real interest in Christ's program for the world—but not all of it. How many of us are as careful about expenditures for pleasure and luxuries as we are in our giving to God's work? Are not many Christian parents more ready to give their children money for a movie or ice cream than for missions? Is not self-indulgence more appealing to most of us than is sacrifice for the work of Christ? The average church member gives $13.00 a year for all forms of Christian activity sponsored by the churches. How much do we average for gifts for non-essentials?—Missionary Review of the World.

"Youth at Work in the Church"

Emily Carleton Lester, Editor

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA YOUNG PEOPLE.

The evening session of the Eastern North Carolina Conference was in charge of the young people, with Mrs. Brookston Eaves, president of the Pilgrim Fellowship in that area, presiding. As the worship service the young people of the host church, Turner's Chapel, presented a play concerning the Cross and its connection with everyday life under the direction of Mrs. Ross. After Mrs. Eaves had told something of the plans of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship in raising money for a Layman's Training Center in Tientsin, China, Dr. Samuel H. Leger, missionary from China, spoke. He discussed the meaning and importance of this work with lay people in China. An offering was taken to be used for this project.

SHALLOW FORD PRESENTS UNIQUE THANKSGIVING PROGRAM.

The Shallow Ford Christian Endeavor deserves to be complimented for several recent achievements. In the first place, this group won the attendance banner at the District Christian Endeavor Rally held last week at Graham Providence Church. In the second place, they also came away with the Singing Banner that night, for having the best choir in the singing contest. And in the third place, they presented a lovely Thanksgiving program on last Sunday night.

The platform of the church was transformed into a beautiful altar by means of flowers, ferns, white sheets, and candles. For one-half hour the eighty people present were led in their worship by young people who lit the candles, read from the Scriptures concerning praise and thanksgiving to God, and brought to the altar symbols of the many things for which we have to be thankful—worship, education, our country, our work, our daily food. Heartfelt sentence prayers and soft music also brought about a worshipful spirit on the part of the people. Following the Thanksgiving worship service, Rev. F. C. Lester spoke to the group. An expression of Thanksgiving was made in the form of an offering amounting to more than $12.00 for the young people of China. Sam Barber is the president of this active society and Dot Sutton is the chairman of the committee planning this splendid program.

PRAYER FROM A YOUNG HEART.

Oh, God, who brought the harvest with its plenty,

Who filled the fields with shining seas of grain;

Let us, who are the younger generation,
Do something to relieve this sad world's pain.

Give us the courage to be real crusaders,
Give us the faith to conquer each new task,

Give us the strength to smile, despite disaster—

Father in Heaven, this is what we ask!

Oh, God, who brought the harvest with its showers

Of vivid fruit, in russet and in gold,
Show us that pride may still be resignation;

Lend us your wisdom for we are not old
And life has taught us little . . . May your spirit

Be close beside us as we kneel and pray—
Father in Heaven, use us to your glory,
We ask you this upon Thanksgiving Day.

"TEACHING, PREACHING, HEALING."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR DECEMBER 10, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Matthew 4: 23-25.

Daily Readings—

Monday—The Teaching Commission—
Matthew 28: 19, 20.

Tuesday—The Teaching Ministry—Acts
18: 24-28.

Wednesday—Jesus Heals a "Foreigner"
—Mark 7: 24-30.

Thursday—The Sick Healed—Acts 5:
12-16.

Friday—Paul, a Preacher to Gentiles—
Ephesians 3: 1-9.

Saturday—"Preach the Word"—II Tim othy 4: 1-5.

This topic deals with the how of Christian Missions. The words of the topic are taken from Matthew 4: 23, "And Jesus went about . . . teaching . . . and preaching . . . and healing." These three participles aptly describe the three principal kinds of activity in which Christian missionaries are engaged. They are doing what Jesus did "in the days of His flesh,"

Let someone be responsible to find out and report to the society what contribution our missionaries are making to other people through their teaching. Another should report on the part done through preaching. And a third person should make a report on the work done by medical missionaries.

A general discussion should follow these reports. You should know how many missionaries the American Board (our denominational foreign mission board) supports and something about the general activities of missionaries.

Dr. Samuel H. Leger, a missionary on furlough from Peiping, China, has spoken at a number of places within the bounds of the Southern Convention during the past few weeks. Those who heard him should lead a discussion on his work in China.

For Further Discussion—

1. How does the work of the medical missionary differ from the work of the missionary teacher? From the missionary preacher?

2. Is one as important as the other? Why?

3. Do we need each of them in our missionary fields today?

When having this program on missions, it might be a good opportunity for your group to take a special offering for the China Friendship Project of the young people in all our churches throughout the Southeast. The money is to go for the purchase of land and buildings in Tientsin, China, to be used as a place where our missionaries can train hundreds of young people each year to go back to their home communities and carry out the three phases of work we have been discussing. They will learn ways to teach the villagers to read so they can study the Bible, how to preach short sermons and to carry on evangelistic work in villages other than their own, and how to improve the health of their people through learning about hygiene and sanitation. Special program materials on this subject may be secured by writing Miss Frances Foster, 614 Arlington Street, Greensboro, N. C.

Free booklets describing the work of our foreign mission board may be secured by writing the Board of Christian Education, Elon College, N. C.

Suggested Hymns—

"Savior, Teach Me Day by Day."

"Rescue the Perishing."

"We've a Story to Tell to the Nations."

SPREADING THE GOOD NEWS.

LESSON X—DECEMBER 3, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Matthew 10.

TEXT: He that heareth, let him say, Come.—Rev. 22:17.

How many sided was the character and the activities of Jesus? In the opening chapters of Matthew we saw him as a great teacher. In last Sunday's lesson we saw him as a great physician and doer of mighty works. In today's lesson we see him in another role, as the trainer of men.

We often overlook this aspect of the ministry of Jesus. We think of him as the great teacher and preacher speaking to multitudes. We remember him as the worker of miracles, and the great physician. We overlook the fact that perhaps the most effective work he did was the training of the twelve. In quite an obscure way Jesus spent a great deal of his time and lavished a great deal of attention on these humble men, seeking to make known to them his truth and seeking to impart to them his spirit, so that after he was gone they could carry on his work. In like manner the most effective work which a minister or a Sunday school teacher does is not with large crowds or in great mass movements, but with small groups, and even with individuals.

"These Twelve."

"And when he had called unto him his twelve disciples, he gave them power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness and all manner of diseases." What a motley array of men they were—men of all temperaments and dispositions, men from the humble walks of life, men without wealth, without social prestige, without formal education, without political power, without religion in the generally used sense of that term in Jesus' day. They were not the most promising material in the world. They certainly were not saints with halos about their heads. They were just ordinary "run of the mine" men. But they were the best Jesus could find, and they had these important characteristics: they were willing to forsake all to follow him; they were willing to learn; they remembered that he loved them. After all these are the important things. Jesus took these men, and in the short space of perhaps two and one-half years he welded them into a little group that went out and turned the world upside down. The story of what these twelve men did—in fact, only eleven of them stood the ultimate test—is one of the most thrilling and amazing stories in all history.

Learning to Do By Doing.

Jesus never read a book on psychology, but he was a master psychologist. He knew what was in men, and he knew how to bring the best out of men. He knew that one learns by doing. Therefore, in spite of the fact that they were far from being well trained and were quite unprepared to do what ultimately he wanted them to do, he sent them forth on a mission of preaching and of healing. He thus acted upon a principle which is now recognized as the soundest principle in education. One learns to do by doing. A boy learns to play ball by playing ball. A young woman learns to cook by cooking. A teacher learns to teach by teaching. A minister learns to preach by preaching. We can learn to win men for Christ only by going out and trying to win them. The fatal lack in so much of our religion is the lack of action. We do not know as much as we ought to know because we are not willing to do as much as we can.

A Venture of Faith.

Back of all of the instructions and the directions which Jesus gave his disciples, such as providing neither gold nor silver for their purses, no script for their journey, neither two coats, nor shoes, etc., was the fact that it was a venture of faith. They were to remember by experience that those who undertake to do God's work in God's way can count upon God's help. They were to find confirmation of the fact that when they sought first his kingdom and his righteousness the things which they needed would be added unto them. They were to remember that when they set about to do his will they were to have his power. He did not camouflage the situation. He told them frankly that they were going forth as sheep in the midst of wolves. He told them to beware of men; that is, to face frankly the limitations of human nature. He told them that they might experience hardship, and even persecution. But they were not to be afraid. Like good soldiers who had received a command from their leader, they were to go forth, nothing doubting; they were to endure hardship; they were to be faithful even unto death.

An Anecdote of Fear.

In spite of the fact that they were to suffer hardship and persecution, they were not afraid. That is, they were not to be afraid of those who could kill the body but were not able to kill the soul. But they were to fear him who was able to destroy both soul and body. There are sinister spiritual forces at work in the world which can harm men. Every man is to keep his soul on guard lest these unseen forces work their destruction in his own inner life.

The Value of a Man.

As a means of beginning confidence and faith in the hearts of his disciples, Jesus calls attention to the fact that God takes care even of the birds. Even so an insignificant thing as the sparrow does not fall to the ground without the knowledge of God. How much more valuable is a man than a bird, or a sheep, said Jesus. Indeed, man is the most prized possession in all the universe. Therefore, even at the hour of persecution and trial they were to remember that they were within the father's care, and that he would not abandon them in their hour of persecution and suffering.

Christ, the Divider of Men.

We think of Christ as a Prince of Peace, then the peacemaker, and so he is. But he is also the great divider of men. He himself said that he came not to bring peace but a sword. He does not mean that he came to promote warfare. As a matter of fact, he stands against war, because it is a denial of his law of love. But he did mean that as he stood before men they would be sharply divided from one another by their attitude toward and their relationship with him. Men have to choose whether they will be for or against Christ. And this choice often makes a sharp division even in the members of the family circle. "A man's foes shall be they of his own household"—thus does Jesus show that even the members of a man's family may keep him from living at his best or keep him from offering more allegiance to Christ as Lord and Savior.

Christ First.

Jesus very frankly says that men must love him first, before love of son for father and mother, the love of father and mother for their children must come love to Christ. In other words, Christ must be the Lord of life. All lesser loves must be made secondary to our love for him. Of course, this means that when one loves Christ supremely his love for others is thereby purified and strengthened.

In conclusion, Jesus asserts that if a man seeks to save his life, if he lives for self, if he thinks only of self, he loses his life. On the other hand the

“REPENTANCE ESSENTIAL.”
 “And Peter went out, and wept bitterly.”—Luke 22: 6.

Peter, though guilty of denying his Lord, still had a heart affluent with love. The mere look of his Master drove him inward where his spirit was warmed. Judas went out and it was night. Peter went out, found himself, repented and it was day. That one act changed his whole life. He became the Father of the Apostolic Church, and the Church of all time.

The great error of today is that penitence is seen nowhere. There is change of heart nowhere. Humanity seems self-sufficient. “Its eye-lids are sewn together and its ears are stuffed with cement,” says Paul Claudel, and we do not like to see humanity’s sufferings. Even regimented charities and securities tend to make man a soulless automaton. So long as this situation obtains there will be no repentance.

We must see our sins. We must be weeping over them. The nations of the world need weeping over their sins. That is the only hope. Said Woodrow Wilson, “Our civilization cannot survive materially unless it be redeemed spiritually.”

Prayer—Our Heavenly Father, convict us of our sins, and help us; and help men everywhere to repent of wrongs committed against Thee and against their fellowmen. Forgive us, and forgive them. Amen.

TUESDAY.

“WHAT MAKES THE BIBLE PRECIOUS?”

“These are they which testify of me.”—John 5: 39.

Answer: The living presence in it, no other book in the world produces a sense of divine nearness. Read it. It is easy to neglect it. Business and the world’s affairs crowd it out if we are not persistent with ourselves not to neglect it. It is also easy to continue reading it, for as we read, that Divine Something about it holds us and makes us want to keep on.

Prayer—O Lord, grant us joy in Thy Word evermore, that we by it may embrace and ever hold fast the blessed hope of everlasting life. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

“THE LOST BIBLE.”

“Being born again by the Word of God.”—I Peter 1: 23.

The realization of God in our lives is lost, we are afraid, to too great an extent. Nothing will restore that realization but an honest devout reading of the Bible.

We search the world for truth;
 We seek the good, the pure, the beautiful,
 And, weary seekers of the best,
 We come back from our quest
 To find that all the sages saw
 Is in the Book our mothers read.

—John G. Whittier.

Prayer—O Lord God, give us our Savior, who is our salvation. Amen.

THURSDAY.

“DO YOU MEAN IT?”

“Forgive us our debts, as we forgive.”—Matt. 6: 12.

A conscientious Saul once said, “I am afraid of the Lord’s Prayer.” Rather shocking at first. But if one thinks seriously, it is not so shocking. For instance, when we say “Forgive us, etc. . . .” that means, as Bishop Cushman puts it “Father grant to me that measure of forgiveness that I am willing to extend to my personal enemies.” Are we willing to say this to God?

I do not know why as I pass by,
 With careless gaze and hardened eye,
 Something within me starts to die!
 But that is so, I know, I know.

Prayer—Say the Lord’s Prayer, and let its meaning seep into your soul.

FRIDAY.

“A PERSONAL GOD.”

“Give us this day our daily bread.”
 Matt. 6: 11.

A family of a different nationality moved in next door. One day the neighbor handed a plate of cake over the back fence to the newcomers. A week later they handed some hot rolls. Returning the dishes over the back fence, the stranger said, “I like your cooking — but — couldn’t you come over and sit with me sometime?”

Mere faith and moral righteousness is not enough. It takes fellowship.

Come sit at the feet of the Master
 And listen as Mary of old!
 Most wonderful visions of glory,
 The Master to thee will unfold.

Prayer—Eternal God, teach us how to give of ourselves to the Master, to our neighbors, and to the world for good. Amen.

SATURDAY.

“MATERIAL SECURITY—RESULT.”

“Lean not upon thine own understanding.”—Psalm 3: 5.

It is a fact that cannot be successfully contradicted that times of danger or extreme emergency bring us to our knees. Generally one prays most when he realizes his dependence upon God.

We are told of a Major in the Army who told his Chaplain that he prayed without ceasing on the battle field, and that was the last time he had prayed.

Material security induces self-dependence and thoughtlessness of God. Dependence upon God is a spiritual thing and must be cultivated until prayer lives, not because there is danger, but because one is incurably spiritual. The spirit of daily gratitude, and the taking hold of God’s willingness, is the power. Amen.

TAKING JESUS SERIOUSLY.

"If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me."—Luke 9:23.

People who take Jesus seriously are the only people qualified to comment on the "Jesus Way of Life." The reason that the church has been handicapped in its mission of redemption is the fact that so many of its members have not taken Jesus seriously.

All people who take Jesus seriously appreciate the important place that prayer had in their Master's life, and they themselves follow him in the practice of prayer. No person has a right to say he is a disciple of Jesus who is not on praying relationship with Jesus' Heavenly Father, God. We can hardly understand how people can live in God's world and breathe God's air and enjoy the many benefits of God's providence as guests in his Universe, and fail to talk to him in prayer.

People who take Jesus seriously are sincere in their profession of faith in Christ as the Savior of their lives and of the world, and they sincerely seek to lead the good life. Insincerity in religion is blasphemous! Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick recently declared, "Christianity is supposed to be a builder of character, but too many of those who call themselves 'Christian' give the lie to what we say." The greatest enemies to the church are not those outside the church who deny the fact of God, the truth of the Bible, the power of faith and the value of religion, but those within the church who are supposed to believe in prayer but never pray; those who are supposed to love the church, but never give it a helping hand; those who claim to be disciples of Jesus, but do not take him seriously and whose lives direct people away from Christ and his church.

People who take Jesus seriously are anxious to support the church which bears his name. They are anxious to support the Kingdom enterprises with offerings according to their ability. Our offerings to God are not measured by the size of our gift, but by what we have left. The widow's mite was the largest gift dropped into the treasury, not because of its intrinsic value but because of the love that prompted the gift. Out of her poverty, she gave her all. The small gift to the Lord that expresses a great love means more to him than the large gift which expresses little love.

People who take Jesus seriously are anxious to attend Divine Worship on the Lord's Day if physically able. The only hope for the salvation of modern society rests with people who take Jesus seriously.

Mr. W. H. Baldwin, president of the Long Island Railroad, in days when tunnels were being built under the Hudson River and East River into New York City, was talking with a neighbor on a ferry one morning as they were going to their offices in the city. Mr. Baldwin was responsible for the idea of building the first tunnel under the river. The neighbor said to Mr. Baldwin, "Won't it be fine when the tunnels are finished, and we can ride right into the city on the train?" "Yes," replied Mr. Baldwin, "but for my part I would rather live now while the tunnels are being built, and have a part in making them possible." So people who take Jesus seriously would rather have a worthy part in building a better world today than merely having the privilege of living in a better world tomorrow.

It is one thing to think about the new day which the world should have, else the day that is now will become eternal night. It is one thing to think about the security of life in a new day; it is one thing to think about the new day when crime shall be abolished, when laws shall be respected, when justice shall triumph, when individual rights shall be respected and guarded and when social welfare shall be paramount; it is one thing to think about the new day when honesty shall prevail in business and in politics, when the Golden Rule shall take precedence over the rule of gold—the day when righteousness shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea; it is one thing to think about the new day when peace among men shall prevail throughout the world—but it is a far greater thing to have a worthy part in ushering in that new day which, please God, must dawn.

The heart-call of those who take

Jesus seriously, those who really want to know and to do his will—those who really want to follow him—is expressed in the lines of the hymn which most of our fathers and mothers sang when we were children:

Jesus, Savior, pilot me
Over life's tempestuous sea;
Unknown waves before me roll
Hiding rock and treacherous shoal
Chart and compass come from Thee
Jesus, Savior, pilot me.

If any man would follow Jesus, he must seek to pray as Jesus prayed; he must seek to love as Jesus loved; he must seek to serve as Jesus served. He must forget his own whims and fancies, and instead of seeking an easy way, he must be willing and glad to take the hard way when that is Jesus' way. Instead of reaching for a crutch on which to lean as he trudges along life's road, he must take up a cross to carry. "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily and follow me." It is like saying, "If any man takes me seriously and really desires to be my disciple, let him pick up his tools and set to work at my task of building a better world under the guidance and help of God, the Author of life and the supreme Architect of the Universe."

FAMILY ALTAR.

SUNDAY.

"ONE WOMAN'S WAY."

"When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee."—Isa. 43:1-7.

As old as humanity is the story of a brave young widow, whose affluent home was broken up by the death of a fine husband. Now she is supporting her family by her own labors.

But, she moves among her friends in quiet confidence and cheerfulness, reserves her grief for the solitude of her own heart. She tries to fill the role of both father and mother to her children.

She imparts something to everybody. Religiously, she is a radiant soul in any gathering. In life, she is a gallant soldier of the Lord. God is with her.

Prayer—We thank Thee, Father, for all brave spirits, widows, bereaved parents, orphaned children, who live victoriously and joyously in Thy strength. Amen.

"Those persons who have a cinch here, are not so sure of one here-after."

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Our financial report this week carries us up one more rung in our ladder. We have reached $13,218.50. We still lack $6,781.50. Will we reach the goal? When we close our books the first of January, the story will be told. At this writing we are more than a thousand dollars short of what we were last year at this time. Are you going to make your Thanksgiving Offering liberal enough to make this up? The Congregational-Christian Church should easily contribute $20,000.00 to help support the orphanage. Other denominations contribute freely and gladly to support their orphanages. One orphanage in North Carolina received from its churches in North Carolina alone the sum of one hundred and fifty-two thousand dollars in the year 1938. That denomination considers its orphanage a big asset to the denomination. Let us open our hearts at this Thanksgiving Season and do big things for our orphanage.

In Memoriam

HEFFINGTON.

On July 15, 1939, our Heavenly Father called from among us our beloved member, Mrs. Rebecca Heffington. We realize we have lost a faithful member. His will was always her desire. She was steadfast and "always abounding in the work of the Lord."

Whereas, in her death, we have lost a loyal, true, Christian member, therefore, be it resolved:

- 1. That we give thanks to God for the great blessings of her life.
2. That our loss is her eternal gain, and we bow in humble submission to His will.
3. That we extend to her family our deepest sympathy.
4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family, one spread on the minutes of the Berea Christian Church, the Woman's Missionary Society, the Ladies Benevolent and Social Union, and one sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Mrs. W. B. WARRINGTON, Mrs. R. T. BRADFORD, Committee.

BALLARD.

Mabel Estelle Ballard, wife of Shelby T. Ballard, departed this earthly life on September 10, 1939, at the First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va. Mrs. Ballard had been in ill health for some years, but was always faithful to the services of the church, attending whenever she was able. She was a former member of First Church choir, and was prominent in other phases of the church's work.

Born in Washington, D. C., in 1899, Mrs. Ballard came to Norfolk as a girl, and with her parents became a member of First Church, Norfolk. Throughout her long illness she was sustained by a living faith in the beauties of Christ, her Savior.

The last rites were held at the church on September 12, with her pastor, the Rev. John H. Knight officiating. Assisting were the Rev. F. C. Lester, former pastor, and the Rev. Beecher Rhodes, local Baptist pastor.

Mrs. Ballard is survived by her husband; a little daughter, Betty Anne; her mother, Mrs. G. B. Randolph; two sisters, Mrs. Joseph Haynes of Norfolk; and Mrs. G. R. Clayton of Silver Springs, Md.; and a brother, Ernest Moulden of Norfolk.

"And I heard a voice from Heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them." (Rev. 14: 13.)

KAGEY.

The First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va., has suffered a great loss in the tragic passing of Mrs. Bettie Swank Kagey, wife of Jacob Solomon Kagey, deacon of the church.

Mrs. Kagey was born on January 1, 1866, in Rockingham County, and moved to Norfolk with her husband in 1912. They have been active church workers in the First Christian Church since that time.

In celebration of their fiftieth wedding anniversary, Mr. and Mrs. Kagey went to their old home in the Valley to visit relatives. It was there that after reviewing the events of a long life spent in the service of her Lord she heard the final summons.

Our church will miss her faithful attendance and her constant spirit of prayer. Our loss is heaven's gain.

The funeral service was held in Singers Glen United Brethren Church, on September 10, with the Rev. M. W. Mann, pastor of Antioch Christian Church, officiating. Burial was at the family cemetery in Rockingham County.

"In my Father's house are many mansions. If it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." John 14: 2, 3.)

Rev. JOHN H. KNIGHT, Pastor.

MORRIS.

Mrs. Milinda Marshall Morris, widow of the late Mr. Layton Morris, was born August 18, 1880, and passed to the great beyond on November 11, 1939.

Mrs. Morris united with the Mt. Olivet Congregational-Christian Church in early girlhood and remained faithful and loyal to her church until death. She was active in her church work, always willing to do her best. She will be remembered by the many kind deeds to those around her.

She leaves to mourn their loss one daughter, Clarice; four sons, Vernon, Elphis, Wilbur and Fred; two grandchildren, Lola and Glenn Morris; two sisters, Mrs. Josie Vernon and Mrs. George Ed Morris; three brothers, John, Andrew and Robert Marshall.

Funeral services were conducted on November 13, 1939, by the writer. B. J. EARP.

The Call of a Hundred Children

AN EDITORIAL

If one hundred children who have no parental care or home in which to live were to pass by you with outstretched hands and pleading voices, you would certainly make a liberal contribution. These boys and girls are in our Church Home at what we call the Christian Orphanage at Elon College, North Carolina. Their needs are just as great as they would be if they could pass by each individual who is a member of the Church and ask for the things they need.

In fact, we have taken them into our Church Home and have promised to feed, clothe and train them. They are now our Church children. Your church delegates to Conference elected delegates to the Southern Convention who, in turn, elected the officials of the Christian Orphanage. These representatives have pledged for you and your church the necessary support so that the Orphanage can render the needed service.

When the calls are so numerous and so pressing as they are in our day, it can easily happen that we harden our hearts to such an extent that even our obligations are not met. It would be cruel, indeed, to take these children into our home and then to fail to supply their needs. The Church must not be cruel. The Church must be considerate, kind and generous.

If every church within the bounds of the Southern Convention will make a special Thanksgiving Offering for the benefit of the Christian Orphanage, the boys and girls in our Church Home will be well cared for. But if only a few of the churches make such an offering, Mr. Johnston and his co-workers at the Orphanage will face the necessity of turning away some of those who plead for home and opportunities. Our good Superintendent Johnston is anxiously awaiting the response of our churches. The Christian Sun believes that he will not be disappointed, and to this end appeals to every reader not only to respond personally but to see that the Sunday schools and churches do likewise.

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

The Eastern Virginia Christian Missionary Association met at Waverly on Tuesday of this week.

Rev. Sam N. Hurst of Driver, Va., has recently preached on the Dendron field. This pastorate has had no minister since the first of the year.

Rev. Robert Lee House of Portsmouth, Va., has accepted a call to the First Congregational - Christian Church of Richmond. Mr. House will come to Richmond on February 1.

Rev. Cecil Thomas conducted service for the church at Morrisville, N. C., the first Sunday in December. He preaches at Center Grove, near Pittsboro, N. C., on the second Sunday afternoon.

Their many friends will learn with interest of the announcement by President and Mrs. L. E. Smith of the engagement of their daughter, Rebecca, to Mr. William Frederick Wild of Detroit, Mich.

Rev. Melvin Dollar, a student in the Seminary of Duke University and pastor of Carolina, Concord and Bethel Churches, has recently accepted a call to serve Mt. Zion Christian Church, near Mebane, N. C.

Rev. Kenneth Register preached at Pleasant Hill Christian Church, near Liberty, N. C., last Sunday. Rev. J. C. Cummings and Rev. T. E. Cross are to preach there December 17 and January 7, respectively.

Rev. J. F. Apple began his ministry at Henderson, N. C., last Sunday, with fine audiences at both morning and evening services. Neighboring churches shared in the evening service. He will move his family to Henderson this week.

On last Sunday the Promotional Secretary preached at Mt. Bethel and Kallam Grove Churches, and met with the pastoral committee of the Bethany Pastorate. Rev. F. E. Church will serve three of these churches for a while, at least.

The Wakefield, Va., Christian Church will dedicate Sunday school rooms on next Sunday morning. Rev. F. C. Lester will assist the pastor. Rev. B. H. Watkins in this service. Mr. Lester will also be with Mr. Watkins at Barrett's Church on that afternoon.

There were fifty-nine people in the month-old Sunday school in Asheboro, N. C., last Sunday. Their offering amounted to nearly fifteen dollars. About fifty people attended the morning worship service, and their contribution was almost twenty-five dollars. Several members of the church and Sunday school will give to the church the amount usually spent for Christmas presents. The finance committee is conducting a thorough canvass—there are thirty members of the church, thirty pledges have been received and others will be received.

TO CELEBRATE GOLDEN WEDDING.

On December 10, 1939, Mr. and Mrs. D. B. White of Pittsboro, N. C., will celebrate their Golden Wedding Anniversary. Mr. and Mrs. White were united in marriage at the home of Mr. Tom Petty of Pittsboro, who was magistrate at that time. Since 1889 they have lived in the Pittsboro vicinity and have been faithful attendants of the Hank's Chapel Christian Church. Mrs. White united with the church fifty-three years ago, while Rev. Atlas Boone was pastor. Mr. White united with the church sixty years ago while Rev. William Long was pastor.

Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. White. At the present time all are living near the home of their parents. Mr. and Mrs. White have faithfully reared their children in the Christian Church and they are some of the leaders of the Hank's Chapel Church.

Mrs. White has been afflicted for thirteen years and has not walked in ten years. For three years she was able to move on crutches but she is now confined to her bed. Mr. White has been sick and confined to his home for two years. Through their affliction they have portrayed the spirit of Christ in bringing cheer to those who seen them.

Open House will be held from 2:00 to 5:00 P. M. on Sunday, December 10, in honor of their Golden Wedding Anniversary. Friends and relatives are invited to the home of Mr. and Mrs. White at this time. A brief communion service will be administered at 4:30 P. M. by their pastor, Rev. W. J. Andes.

THANKS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Publishing a paper like this for a group the size of the Southern Convention is a very difficult job. Sometimes it seems to be almost impossible. Some months the income from subscribers is very low. At such times the workers on the paper get quite low in spirit, and fears that this reflected in the paper itself even though effort is put forth to keep the "Sun" shining when darkness is within.

November brought real sunshine to the office of this paper. The income from subscribers was larger than it had been for any month since the campaign in the spring of last year. There are still quite a large number of subscribers who are a bit behind with their payments, but the tide has turned in favor of paying in advance. If the eighty who were due to pay on December 1, and those who will be due on January 1, will kindly remember the church paper when they are dividing their Christmas joy, the paper may be able to start the New Year with real sunshine.

"The Christian Sun" wishes to thank very sincerely all those who have made recent payments on their subscriptions—and all who will respond this month with renewals. Christmas gift subscriptions will make your church friends happy, and will help your church paper to serve more effectively. Thank you for reading this, and thank you more for doing your best.

OUR CHRISTMAS OFFERING.

The ministers who have served our churches and find themselves unable to continue to do the service of the ministry need, and richly deserve, aid from the churches. We would not turn out old horses to die without care or food. Neither can we allow our ministers to suffer for necessities even though they may not be able to serve effectively.

Sometimes these ministers leave widows and orphans with little chance to get the things they need for happy living. The heart of the church must beat in harmony with the members of the family of those who have served our churches. According to the Bible, religion must busy itself with the needs of widows and orphans.

It is the request of Convention and Conferences that churches make an offering at Christmas and Communion Sundays for the benefit of these ministers who can no longer earn, their widows and orphans. This is the kind of "special" that people like. It really is an offering of love, for we love those who minister, or have ministered, to us in the things that relate to religion. The amount asked from each church (this can be found in the apportionment table in the Annual) is very small. Every church should make adequate plans for raising this amount, probably at Christmas. It should be sent to Dr. J. O. Atkinson at Elon College, N. C. Our money in the Southern Convention is handled by our own Board of Superannuation, and is not sent to the denominational board in New York City.

BEING A PASTOR.

There are several young fellows becoming pastors in our group this fall. They enter a new field of endeavor, and take upon themselves great responsibilities. Most of them have doubtless felt a call to preach, and would say just that. But now they have accepted a work that means much more than just preaching. They are to be the minister for their people, the shepherd of their people, the counselor of their people, the executive of an organization, the agent of a denomination, and a servant through whom God brings His kingdom to earth. No small job, this!

Preaching is important. No man has a right to go into the pulpit to represent the Christ until he has made the best possible preparation. The people look up at him for him to feed them. Their minds need information and their hearts need courage. The soul must be purified in the presence of God. The man of God should be sure that he has a message from God before he speaks.

But preaching is only one part of the minister's work. The pastor of a church should know his people like a shepherd knows his sheep. He can call them by name, and know their characteristics. He will gain this information by seeing them where they live, work, and play. No man can be a pastor unless he knows his people. He will never know them just by seeing them at church. Visiting is a very necessary part of being a pastor. No man has a right to take the money of church members for being their pastor unless he comes to know their needs by sharing everyday experiences with them.

A pastor is responsible for leading the people but has no authority to tell them what to do. His authority comes not from his position but from his wisdom and grace. If he is wise, if he is good (and good for something), then he will have authority among those who know him. His position will be secure because of his worth. He is responsible for directing the thinking and activity of his people. He must train them in service, set standards for living, and secure their cooperation in doing the work that will make the world God's Kingdom.

These ministers become pastors of churches that are already established. They inherit buildings, memberships, and programs of work. They are to take these gifts and make progress. The denomination has sent them out to cultivate the field and to bring back returns. No man has a right to separate himself from the vine (the church of which he is a part) and try to run his church as one man's show. He is part of the larger unit, and so is his church. A minister is the servant of the church and the Christ.

Freedom of thought and freedom of conscience—the twin liberties that are most precious to civilized man—without which no civilization is worthy the name, are children of the Bible.—John A. Mackay.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

On Sunday, November 26, 1939, a marker was unveiled in a private cemetery, near Ivor, Va., to the memory of the late Rev. Mills B. Barrett. Rev. J. F. Morgan, president of the Eastern Virginia Conference, presided. Two hymns—"Faith of Our Fathers" and "Blest Be the Tie That Binds" were sung. Prayer was offered by Rev. B. H. Watkins. An address on the life and work of the deceased minister was delivered by Mr. W. E. McClenny of Suffolk, Va. Benediction by Rev. H. E. Crutchfield.

Rev. M. B. Barrett was the son of the late Rev. Mills Barrett and his wife, Sarah Smith Barrett. He was a grandson of the late Rev. Burwell Barrett. He was born in Norfolk County, Va., September 6, 1828. He was twice married. He first married Mrs. Lucretia Virginia Zills of Sussex County, March 31, 1847, when he was only nineteen years old. He began preaching the same year. His first wife died September 3, 1862, leaving several children. He married Mrs. Adrianna L. Summerell, March 3, 1863, and settled near Ivor, Va., where he resided until his death, April 14, 1891. He went fishing on the day of his death. Upon his return from the fish pond he ate a hearty meal and immediately became violently ill. He lived only a few hours and the exact cause of his death was not determined.

He was ordained October 31, 1850, at Antioch Church, near Windsor, Va., and the ordination sermon was preached by Rev. Isaac N. Walter of Ohio. He served Barrett's, Spring Hill, Union, Liberty Spring, Windsor, and Mt. Carmel Churches, possibly others. He was pastor of Mt. Carmel from the date of its organization, in 1871, until his death. He traveled extensively in his earlier years, doing successful work as an evangelist. During his entire ministry he was frequently called upon to assist other pastors in evangelistic services.

He served on many important Committees in the Eastern Virginia Conference in addition to serving six years as president of the Conference. He was also prominent in the development of the Southern Convention. He served churches also in Georgia and Alabama during his younger years, before locating as pastor of Providence in Norfolk County.

He enlisted in the Confederate Army during the Civil War, as a Private in Company F, 12th Virginia Regiment of Infantry, known as Huger's Grays commanded by Captain Everard M. Field. It is said that he received an appointment as a Chaplain—but the records are not clear on this point. The marker erected and unveiled was secured from the Quartermaster Department, U. S. A., by the assistance of Mr. W. E. McClenny and Rev. B. H. Watkins, and was placed because of his service in the Confederate Army.

Very few of the active workers in the Eastern Virginia Conference today remember Rev. Barrett. The writer heard his last sermon at Mt. Carmel Church, preached on the first Sunday in April, 1891. His subject was "Heaven." What a timely topic for his last appearance in the church which he organized twenty years before his death, and where he labored so effectively. He was sixty-two years old at that time. He had a ruddy complexion, flashing brown eyes and a strong face. His convictions were deep and firmly fixed. He preached extemporaneously, and usually for an hour. One of his favorite texts in a revival meeting was John 3:16. The words "so loved" were indelibly impressed upon those who heard him. He could be as gentle as a child and as calm as a waveless lake. But when aroused and deeply stirred, his eyes flashed with enthusiasm and his impressive voice moved great congregations. His reading of an ordinary hymn was more impressive than the best sermons of an ordinary preacher. He was a pioneer, without much education, but few ministers in the Southern Convention surpassed him as a preacher of the Gospel. One wishes that every age might have more of his ability and kind. Such a preacher would be a great power today.

A RADIO ADDRESS.

DELIVERED OVER STATION WBIG.

By DR. L. E. SMITH.

Elon College recognizes with gratitude the courtesy of Major Edney Ridge of Greensboro in making it possible for the college to have two regular weekly broadcasting periods for programs of interest concerning Elon College and its work. From 10:00 to 10:30 Wednesday evening of each week, the Music Department will provide a program. From 2:00 to 2:15 on Tuesday of each week, the literary departments of the college will have the program.

Major Ridge is a native of Greensboro and for the past twenty years has been a leading spirit in the rapid development of that city. It has been his task to find the news of the world and give it first through the press as editor and second over the air to the citizens of Greensboro and to inquiring minds far and near. WBIG has been and is a significant factor in the development of the social, political, religious, and economic life of the Piedmont section of North Carolina. It is affiliated with the Columbia Broadcasting System and daily favors its patrons with varied and instructive programs.

The services of this station have recently been greatly extended by the building of a new broadcasting station located on the Guilford Battleground Road but a short distance from the city, in which is installed the newest and most modern equipment for broadcasting services; and further, under the authority of the Federal Communications Commission at Washington, the power of the station has been increased to 5,000 watts by day and 1,000 watts by night. With this improved and increased power, WBIG ranks as one of the best regional stations in the country.

President Roosevelt in an address at Chapel Hill last year declared North Carolina to be one of the best balanced states in the union. He was referring to her crop rotation, her variety of farm products, her industrial organizations, her political and educational life. The Piedmont region is one of the most rapidly developing sections of this country. Greensboro, an industrial and progressive city filled with educational and cultural advantages, is located in the heart of the Piedmont section of North Carolina. Taking a radius of fifty miles with Greensboro as the hub, this is the richest and most prosperous section of equal size south of Baltimore. We manufacture more hosiery, more cigarettes, market more tobacco, purchase more automobiles, buy more life insurance, employ more labor, and pay better wages than any other similar section in the South.

Elon College is located in Alamance County surrounded by prosperous and progressive communities. With Gibsonville to the west, Altamahaw and Ossippee to the north, Burlington and Graham to the east, and the wide open country to the south extending toward Alamance, she could hardly wish more in the way of location. Gibsonville, Altamahaw, and Ossippee are progressive textile centers. Graham is the county seat of

FOR THE CHILDREN

REUBEN BAR-BARUCH.

Reuben Bar-Baruch means the son of Baruch. Reuben was a boy who lived in the land where Jesus lived. Reuben was nine years old. He lived with his father, Baruch, and his mother, Esther, and his brother and sister. Reuben and his brother went to school every day except the Sabbath. His school was held in the church, or synagogue, and the minister of the church was his teacher. Reuben called the minister of his church, Rabbi Joseph. Rabbi Joseph told Reuben many interesting stories about how God made the world, and other stories about Reuben's people, the Jews. Reuben and his brother loved to tell their parents and their sister the stories they had learned at school. Reuben was older than his brother, and could read from the books of his people the things that his teacher had told him.

One day the rabbi told the boys about the wonderful way in which God had made the world and all of the things in it. Reuben thought it a very beautiful story and could hardly wait to tell it to the rest of the family. After they had eaten supper and washed the dishes, they all went up to the roof of the house. It had been a hot day and the roof seemed much cooler than the room down stairs. As soon as every one had found a seat, Reuben began his story.

"In the beginning," began Reuben, "there was no living thing anywhere at all. Everything was topsy-turvy. Then our Father in heaven spoke and everything began to work in order. All the stars and the sun and the moon began to shine in the heavens."

"Look," said Reuben's mother, "the stars have come out since we have been up here. It is just as if the heavenly Father had spoken the words tonight, and the stars obeyed him."

"Please let us sleep on the roof tonight, so we might look at the stars," begged little Leah, Reuben's sister.

"Why, of course, you may," said mother, "if you will go below and get your own mats."

The three children hurried down the steps, got their mats, and hurried back to the roof. Reuben did not tell any more of his story that night. They just lay still on their mats and looked at the stars. Before they went to sleep Mother knelt near them and prayed with them this prayer:

"Thanks be to the Father for his good world, for the sun, and moon, and stars. May all his children love him for the beautiful world he has given them."

Then, without another word being said, the three children closed their eyes and went to sleep under the stars.

SOMETHING TO DO.

This winter, when everything outside is cold and bare, you will want to see the flowers and the green grass again. Wouldn't it be good if we could have something growing in the house? Of course, Mother will have her own potted plants in the house, but I'm sure you'd like to have your own. You can still find some live grasses and mosses under the leaves. Why not get some and arrange them in a box or bowl. Then you can watch them grow all winter. Remember to keep them watered and to put them in the sunshine on warm days.

Now, let me tell you a lovely way to fix some bulbs, so that you can have them in time for Christmas. Get a large sponge, the kind you use for your bath, and cut holes in it just large enough to slip the bulbs in. Put the sponge and bulbs in a bowl and put them away in a dark place until they have sprouted. When they begin growing put them in the light. Please keep them watered yourself, and don't depend on Mother to do it. Now, the idea of the sponge is, so that you can have a nice green base for the flowers. Before the flowers are ready to bloom, sprinkle the sponge with grass seed. Then when the blossoms come you will have a sponge that is covered with grass. Don't you think a bowl of flowers like that would make a fine Christmas present to give to a friend?

AN IMPORTANT LETTER.

The following paragraphs are taken from a very interesting and appealing letter. Your editor visited our church and school at Pleasant Hill recently and was delighted with the fine work that is being accomplished. He hopes that others will join with him in making some contribution in response to the following call:

"Sturdy and simple clothing of all kinds for all school ages is needed—coats, sweaters, overalls or long pants, shirts, dresses, underclothes, stockings, and especially, shoes. Boys' things are badly needed. Christmas gifts may be any kind of toys or playthings, dolls, doll furniture or clothes, games, good children's books; any gifts for boys and girls from babyhood to about fourteen years.

"One of the things most needed is money with which to buy shoes. It is getting cold in the mountains; frost lies thick over everything these mornings. Yet children have been coming to school barefooted. One wonders how they endure it. Teachers furnish us the sizes of the children most urgently needing shoes. Those are bought at wholesale from a great manufacturer. Another appealing need for money to buy the "treat" of oranges, nuts, and candy that will make the boys and girls feel that Santa has really arrived.

"We are deeply grateful for the generosity of friends that have made this work possible in the past and shall be happy if you or your friends can help in the Christmas activities this year. Some organizations to which you belong might find it a particularly joyous project to gather, repair, and send playthings or clothes.

"Please address all shipments to the writer, parcel post to Pleasant Hill, Tenn.; freight and express to Crossville, Tenn.

Sincerely yours,

EDWIN E. WHITE, Minister,
Pleasant Hill Community Church,"

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN.

No doubt many who read the article in last week's CHRISTIAN SUN on the Gospel of John by our good brother, Rev. Aubrey C. Todd, were amused, if not amazed, at the so-called proof that our good brother tried to present that the beloved disciple did not write the Fourth Gospel. The always reassuring fact about such articles is that the writers of them really mean no harm and have the best of intentions. They just get that way, our young men do, as a rule, who go to Theological Seminaries, and can't seem to help it, but they live it down in a few years and then are as much amused, or amazed, at their writings as others of us now are who have reached maturer years. The Gospel of John needs no apology, or defense, in fact not even a word of criticism from good Brother Todd, or from myself, or any CHRISTIAN SUN reader. The Gospel of John stands for itself, and anyone who views it with a critical eye to reflect its authorship is doing that which Gladstone of England said of those who tried to overthrow the Bible, namely; "They were blasting at the Rock of Ages."

How unless, not to say how silly, it is for anyone to try to establish the fact that someone wrote the Gospel of John three, or four hundred years after the time of Christ. From the opening to the closing verses of this wonderful Gospel all the internal evidence is there that none other than the beloved disciple could have given to the world such an exalted view and revelation of the Messiah. Love is always revealing and John seemed to see, even more deeply than the other disciples did, the very heart of the Master and revealed Him as being one with the Father and as the one who promised that the Holy Spirit should come. In other words, the beloved disciple understood the full depth and meaning of the trinity, Father, Son and Holy Ghost, the three in one, and the one in three.

This writer recalls hearing several years ago one of the greatest Bible scholars and teachers he ever listened to, and one of international fame, say that "No book of the Bible had been attacked and criticized quite as much as the Gospel of John. The reason for this," said this distinguished scholar, "was that this Gospel went to the very heart and foundation of the Christian faith and that if it could be overthrown, or faith in the gospel, by critical students could be undermined, then it would be easy to overthrow any other gospel, or any part of the Bible."

Another amazing thing about good Brother Todd's article is that students recently out of Seminary think they have some very new things in mind and that they are really giving something new to the public. Now this writer heard practically all of these things when he was in Seminary more than forty years ago. One day he went to the teacher and asked him why he said so many things calculated to upset minds and the faith of his students. His reply was that he wanted to get us to thinking some on our own account and that if we would be honest with ourselves we would come around all right in due time and could give good grounds for the faith that we had on our own account. I have found it even so.

There is one other fact so well established that it should be helpful to our good brother and to all of us. When a student in Harvard, Professor Josiah Royce, the ablest philosopher I ever knew, said on class one day, "Young men when you get hold of an hypothesis, or a theory, that works, hold on to it until you get another that works better and gives more satisfaction." I recall his illustration: "The fool has said in his heart there is no God." "Now, Dr. Royce continued, "no body but a fool would have said that, because the thought, the hypothesis that there is a great and all-wise God has worked with millions through the ages and gives comfort and consolation to those who accept Him thus, and believe Him." In other words the hypothesis that God is, and that He lives and loves, is one that works. Now applying the same line of thought to the Gospel of John, through the ages millions have believed and do now believe that the Fourth Gospel was written by the beloved disciple, and that it could not have been written by any other person. Such belief has strengthened our faith and given a firmer foundation on which to stand and we will not give up this faith until we have a better hypothesis, or theory, on which to work and to found our foundation. The assertion that the writer of the Fourth Gospel lived some three, or four hundred years after Christ not only fails to carry us anywhere, but it fails to explain the wonders, the glory and really the miracle of this great book. If one wished any testimony to these things one can find it in the the twenty-first chapter of John, which reads as follows: "This is the disciple which testified of these things, and wrote these things: and we know that his testimony is true."

May I close with a petition to our good women that, as they study the Book of John for their devotionals in their Missionary Societies the coming months, they seek to find the real witness that this Gospel establishes, that Jesus Christ is the Son of the Living God, and that it is their privilege and our privilege to bear witness even as John in his Gospel bore witness. I suggest, if suggestions are allowed, that instead of studying in their devotionals to disprove the authenticity of the book they keep in their minds the testimony, John 3:16: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but should have everlasting life."

MEMBERS TOGETHER IN CHRIST.

By OSCAR E. MAURER.

Moderator of the General Council.

The Church is not a religious club nor a mutual improvement society, but the fellowship of salvation, the living Body of Christ.

Local congregations must be organized by human beings, but they should not consider themselves to be detached units without any vivid sense of belonging to the world-wide, corporate body of Christ. The Church is not just a bright idea which came to the apostles. It is more than a convenient organization. The Church is a Divine Idea.

The Church is the extension in time of the Incarnation. As God was in Christ, reconciling the world to himself, so God is in the Church, the Body of Christ, continuing his work of reconciliation. Christ is the head of the Body. The Church is the eyes, the ears, the lips, the hands and feet, to do the will of God in seeking and saving those who are lost.

When people are received into the membership of the Church they should realize that they are becoming part of a spiritual body which is supernatural, which is above nationality or race or class—a body whose mission is to carry forward the work of Christ.

Church membership is not a matter of one-sided choice on our part—like joining a useful society. "Ye have not chosen me," said Jesus, "but I have chosen you and appointed you that ye should bear fruit." Church membership is a triangular relationship in which the three factors are God, your fellowmen and yourself. We will not sacrifice our freedom by schooling ourselves in this larger concept of the nature of the Church. Rather will we find the freedom which comes from a fellowship bearing the mark of eternity.—Missionary Herald.

REGIONAL MISSIONARY MEETINGS.

The great Regional Missionary meetings held in St. Louis and Waterbury have spoken on this point strongly and unequivocally. Yet each brought out the truth that after all, our giving depends upon our godliness.

In the St. Louis findings we read this: "The urgently-prayed-for increase in giving will, we believe, be attained, not by artificial standards of advance or by goals of attainment, good in themselves, but by a systematic study and reemphasis of the principles and practices of Christian Stewardship."

At Waterbury—in the realization that there are 10,000 villages in America still without churches and 30,000 churches without pastors, and "great cities presenting complex social problems of over-crowding, insecurity, and organized lawlessness"—the members of the Meeting covenanted with one another and with God to do their utmost to bear witness to their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, to reconsecrate what they had and were to the maintenance and increase of our Christian service, and to return to their churches earnestly seeking additional support for our colleagues.—Missionary Herald.

THE CRUELTY OF BANDITS.

After Suffering at the Hands of Bandits in Manchuria a Chinese Finds Salvation of Soul and Restoration of Sight.

At a meeting out at one of the distant outstations of the North Manchuria field we were caused to rejoice in hearing of the spiritual and physical blessing that had come to a dear old brother Swen.

For ten years he was unable to see well enough to get about, but during the special meetings held by Evangelist Chang and the Bible woman, Miss Liu, at Yantungtven the Lord restored sight to him. He asked that I walk with him to a village some distance away on my recent visit to this place in order that his friends and relatives there might hear the gospel. Again and again he reminded us of God's goodness as he was able to place his feet squarely in the footprints at muddy places in the road. How he rejoiced, too, in the Light that has come into his heart!

This man has endured over the years much suffering: not however, for Christ's sake, but because of the cruelty of terrible bandits, for so many years a curse in Manchuria. He told us of how he had been in charge of five hundred workmen when the Chinese Eastern Railway was being built some thirty years ago here in North Manchuria, and how at that time he heard the gospel from a Christian laborer for the first time. But he was not saved until many years later, when Evangelist Chang and Miss Liu came. He asked the Lord to restore his sight as a proof that his sins had been forgiven, for, he said, his sight had left him because of anger, and for ten years he has been led about.

His story of how the bandits mistreated him is typical of many that we hear. He fell into the hands of these outlaws twice while in charge of the drying of brine for the making of government salt. The first bandits carried him away, beat him terribly and demanded a ransom which was given. The second time he rebuked the bandit leader, reminding him of the unreasonableness of his demands and of the great hindrance he and his followers were to the people's welfare. "We will listen to no such words," answered the leader, "for such are detrimental to the morale of my followers. I shall now take your life."

Swen persuaded the leader that since what he was after was money, he would give all he had to save his life. The salt works were completely burned. Swen's people had to sell all their property for his redemption. When he returned to his village and found how poverty-stricken all were now on his account, he was overcome with grief and anger, for his property and theirs, now gone, represented the work and savings of a lifetime. This indignation and sorrow caused him to lose his sight.

Surely no human beings in all the world claiming a semblance of civilization are so cruel as the bandits of North China and Manchuria. Many of them seem no longer human. We are glad to say that we can now visit some places which previously were altogether unsafe. Many of the soldiers were as bad as the bandits. As one rides the trains in the region visited, one's heart is made sad as he looks out upon villages once built by poor, but honest, farmers who worked hard to erect their mud houses and walls to protect them; but these villages were later destroyed either by bandits or by retreating soldiers. However the binding of souls by the evil one here is greater than that of cruel bandits, for he is indeed a hard taskmaster. Praise be to God that the Lord Jesus has paid the ransom, that we are truly "bought with a price!" Many are coming to know the Redeemer, in the trust of Whom there is eternal life.

"Youth at Work in the Church"

Emily Carleton Lester, Editor

"MISS LUCY" IN HOSPITAL.

Word has been received that Miss Lucy Eldredge, director of young people's work for our denomination, had an appendectomy at the Miami Valley Hospital, Dayton, Ohio, on Thanksgiving Day, November 23. Many of the people—young and old—in this area know her affectionately as "Miss Lucy" for she did religious education work in the Southern Convention after attending Elon College. We are sure that many of you will want to remember her with a card or a note—her home address is 121 Marathon Avenue, Dayton, Ohio.

The young people of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship take this means of expressing their love and interest for Miss Eldredge and send best wishes for a speedy recovery.

CHRISTMAS IS COMING.

There are many things which young people's groups can do to help others at Christmas. Many of these suggestions you use, others you have heard over and over, probably none of them will be new to you. Yet it is surprising how few of our church groups help others at Christmas. It is not too late to plan some of these activities next Sunday, using as many people as possible in carrying out the plans you make.

Singing Carols.

Have you ever sung carols, not just in your own church services, but for the benefit of others? Many young people's groups go out "caroling" on Christmas Eve, pausing outside the homes of sick and shut-in people to sing for them the lovely Christmas hymns. This year Christmas Eve comes on Sunday night, which seems even more appropriate for this type of thing than usual. Or a young people's group will go to an old people's home, a jail, or a hospital and sing for the unfortunates there—perhaps even put on a whole Christmas program, with poetry, songs, and prayers. Of course, you will want to make arrangements with the people in charge of such institutions so that you will come at a convenient time and give them the most helpful type of program possible.

Gifts for Others.

Many churches have "White Christmas" programs. That is, the climax to their Christmas program in their church comes with the bringing of gifts wrapped in white paper to the manger, or the tree, or the altar, depending on the type of program presented. In larger communities these gifts of canned food, toys, etc., are given to the city welfare groups for distribution, so that one family will not get several baskets and another none. However, in rural areas the gifts brought to the church will be packed in baskets and distributed to the needy people in the community by the church people.

Sometimes a class in the Sunday school will plan for filling a basket for some particular family they know about. Sometimes classes will have Christmas parties and exchange gifts—and then instead of keeping them they will send them to the Orphanage for Christmas presents for the children there. Occasionally we find a Sunday school which secures the names of the children in our Orphanage and each person in that school is responsible for seeing that one or more of the children in our Church Home receive a present. One group found that there were no white children in that community who would fail to have a Christmas tree. So they gave a Christmas party for the tiny colored children. They said that the looks of wonder and awe in the eyes of the children when they saw "Santa Claus" was enough to repay them for their efforts!

For Your Church.

There are many things you will want to do for your church and for people in your church. If no one else is responsible, see that an offering is taken in your church at your Christmas service for our aged ministers, their widows, and orphans. There is no better time of the year than this to make this love gift for those who have served the church.

Present a program in your church that is really worshipful and really carries with it the message of Jesus. There is still time to secure materials for programs from the Board of Christian Education, Elon College, N. C.

OUR PART IN THE MISSIONARY ENTERPRISE.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR DECEMBER 17, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Rom. 10: 8-15.

Daily Readings—

Monday—Study Paul's Journeys—Acts 13: 4, 5; 15: 36-41; 18: 23.

Tuesday—Pray for More Laborers—Matt. 9: 35-38.

Wednesday—Broadcast Substance—Ecc. 11: 1, 2, 6.

Thursday—Abound in the Grace of Giving—II Cor. 8: 7-15.

Friday—Pray for Missionaries—Eph. 6: 18, 19.

Saturday—Lay All On the Altar—Rom. 12: 1, 2.

The three topics which deal with missions are varied enough to avoid unnecessary repetition. If you have made the proper approach your interest in missions has surely increased. By this time you are asking yourself what part you should have in the missionary enterprise.

Here are a few things you may discuss in open meeting:

1. Does your Sunday school make a contribution once a month to missions?

2. Does the church take a special offering once or more during the mission period (March, April, May, and June)?

3. Does the young people's class present interesting programs and pageants monthly to help educate people in missions?

4. A young people's missionary society is interesting. Do you have one? Organize; get busy.

"Our Part In Missions"—What May We Do?

1. Promote the study of the missionary work which is carried on by our church and denomination.

2. Promote the study of the history of missions.

3. Promote generous giving to the missionary projects in which our church is interested.

4. Secure from our mission boards literature for distribution among the people of the local church.

5. Arrange missionary meetings in which missionaries speak.

6. Dr. Leger stated at the Eastern North Carolina Conference that at the present "not a single missionary from this area (the Southern Convention) was in China. Pray that some young people may choose China as a field of labor.

It is necessary to have a strong supporting group at home if we expect the missionary enterprise to succeed. Let us do our part regardless of what it may be.

REACTIONS TO THE GOOD NEWS.

LESSON XI.—DECEMBER 10, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Matthew 11 and 12.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."—Matt. 11: 28-30.

A Doubting John.

We often refer to a person as a "doubting Thomas," but we sometimes overlook the fact that John the Baptist, who himself had proclaimed the coming of Jesus, and who had pointed him out as the Lamb of God who should take away the sins of the world, himself became a doubter. To be sure, John had been east in prison because he had dared to denounce the king for his wickedness. His inactivity of itself brought on doubt and discouragement. But there was another factor in the situation—Jesus was not meeting John's expectations of what the Messiah should be doing. John, with many other Jews of his day, thought that the Messiah would overthrow the Roman rule and would establish the reign of righteousness. Jesus had done neither and gave no evidence that he was going to do them. John therefore fell into the slough of doubt and despair.

It is difficult for men who have been active to keep up their spirits when they are forced to withdraw from active life. Again, many people are very much disappointed in religion and even begin to doubt God and Jesus when things do not always turn out the way they think they ought to turn out. John's action, however, is significant. He sent directly to Jesus his doubts. The answer of Jesus is also very significant. He simply calls John's attention to the things which he is doing—darkened eyes were being flooded with light by his touch, lame limbs were undoubtedly strengthened, lepers were cleansed, deaf ears heard the voice of the Son of God and their own loved ones, and even the dead were being brought back to life.

Jesus' claim to the Messiahship does not rest upon spectacular works, but upon the healing, illuminating, radiating touch of his spirit in all the phases of human life. He is the One who should come. We need not look for another. He is the Christ, God's anointed. Those who still look for the coming of the Messiah are doomed to disappointment, for he is already come.

Sulky Children.

I have a member of my church who says, "Folks are the funniest people in the world." After all is said and done, folks are peculiar. They are now, and they were in Jesus' day. With a deliberate touch of irony and satire, and also with a touch of humor, Jesus likens the people of his day to sulky children playing in the market place. When one group wants to play "funeral," the other group wants to play "wedding." But when the first group wants to play "wedding," the other group wants to play "funeral." In other words, Jesus suggests that you can never satisfy some people. They criticized John the Baptist because he lived apart from men, because he was rather ascetic, because he took no part in the common experiences of social life and fellowship. But when Jesus came entering into those wholesome, innocent experiences of social fellowship, they criticized him. Jesus says that wisdom is justified by her works. He made no apology for or defense of his action. He always tried to do what he thought was the will of God, and then he did not pay any attention to what folks might think.

Judgment According to Opportunity.

In a striking paragraph Jesus calls attention to the fact that the judgments of God, while true and righteous altogether, are perhaps better because they are just and righteous altogether and are according to opportunity and enlightenment. He frankly said that in the judgment day Chorazin and Bethsaida would come to dire woe and that their judgment would be more severe and their punishment more exacting than that of Tyre and Sidon, because they had had superior opportunities and advantages. He had spoken his matchless words and performed his amazing miracles in these cities, and they had remained unmoved and indifferent. So much the more, therefore, would they be liable to the divine judgment.

Unto whosoever much is given of whom will much be required. He who sins deliberately will receive a greater punishment than he who sins through ignorance. In like manner did Jesus condemn Capernaum; for much of his time and many of his mighty works had been done in this bustling city. Here again for the most part the city had been indifferent and unresponsive. Greatness was passing by, and they did not recognize it. God had drawn men in the flesh, and they did not respond to his love. These are serious and solemn words. Those of us who live in a Christian nation, who come from Christian homes, who have superior opportunities and advantages will be judged more seriously than those of lesser privileges and of lesser light.

The Secret of the Lord.

The Psalmist, years before, had said, "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him." Jesus puts it in another way when he says, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou didst hide these things from the wise and understanding, and didst reveal them unto babes: yea, Father, for so it was well-pleasing in thy sight." There is a place, of course, for the head in religion. Jesus himself said that we should love God with all our mind. But the organ of spiritual knowledge is not the head, but the heart. Many things are hidden from those who are wise in their own conceits, those who with their heads try to find out God, while many things are revealed to those who are humble in spirit, contrite and obedient in heart.

It is a fact that there are humble Negroes working in Christian homes who know more of the grace of God and who have an intimacy with him which often times their more cultured and more intelligent masters and mistresses do not have. Now, as in Jesus' day, the secret of the Lord is with them that fear him. The child-like mind and the child-like heart are the prerequisites for the true and saving knowledge of God in Christ.

The Burden Bearer.

Standing before the multitude, Jesus invited to come unto him all that labored and were heavy laden, and promised to give them rest. These words have come down through the centuries a source of comfort and courage to all those who had burdens grievous to be borne, and they have found confirmation again and again in the lives of those who in simple terms have taken Jesus at his word. This passage, by the way, is the only incident in which Jesus calls attention to a quality of his character. He nowhere calls attention to the fact that he is wise, or that he is powerful, or that he is unselfish, but on this occasion he does distinctly say that he is humble—"for I am meek and lowly in heart."

He also suggests that we are to find rest in working with him, if we take his yoke upon us, if we learn to work with him, if we set ourselves to tasks with his help—it is time that we find rest unto our souls, for his yoke is easy and his burden is light.

MONDAY.

"LET YOUR LIGHT SHINE."

"Be ye perfect, even as your Father which is in Heaven is perfect."—Matt. 5:48.

A writer to the "Upper Room" gives us a story of an artist looking at the sunset and painting a word picture of the beautiful spectacle, to the delight of his guest. The maid who was serving them begged permission to run and get her mother to see the sunset. "Why?" said he, "She has seen many a sunset." "Oh, no," said she. "I have lived here all my life and I never saw the sunset until you came, and I want my mother to see it."

There are many who will never see Christ until you make Him real.

Prayer—O Lord, Thou art our light. Make us light that we shall see Christ and know Him. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"THE CHRISTIAN LABORATORY."

"When they were come out of the synagogue, they entered into the house."—Mark 1:27.

Christian experience is a story of church to home. It is a story of the presence of God translated into home life. If we can live Christians at home, it is likely that we will live Christians everywhere else. Let us make our homes the center of Christian living, and our church the center of Christian worship and service.

Prayer—Our Father, bless our homes, and make them little heavens on earth where love dwells, and where the world learns peace. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"IDLE WORDS."

"Every idle word that men shall speak they shall give an account thereof."—Matt. 12:36.

What are idle words? They are thoughtless and ill advised speech. Our speech should always be "seasoned with salt," the Word says. If we are careful enough to make certain of certain fundamentals in our speech, perhaps we will have less idle speech. Before speaking let us ask, "Is it true?" "Is it kind?" "Is it necessary?" "Will it hurt?" Kindness and courtesy are kingly. Says the old adage "Be careful of whom you speak, to whom you speak, how, when and where."

Prayer—O Lord, our Lord, may we speak today with truth, courage, and faith, as one who must give an account of Thee. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"SOMETHING FORGOTTEN."

"Beware . . . lest when thou . . . has built a goodly home, and dwelt therein; . . . thine heart be lifted up, and thou forget the Lord thy God."—Duet. 8:11, 14.

People generally are not interested in religion because they do not feel the need of it. Possessions and comforts tend to make one self-sufficient. The bulwarks of religion are important to the man who knows that he is not self-sufficient. But few people know this. It is appalling to note the self-sufficiency of people today. We have multiplied material conveniences and left our homes destitute of spiritual life. "The task of Christian people today," says Paul Barton, "is to restore the home."

Prayer—O Master, who didst sanctify and grace the home with Thy presence, be present in our home. Help us to put Christ here always. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"LOOKING IN THE WRONG PLACE."

"Ye will not come to me that ye might have life."—Matt. 5:10.

The most of us want to be something that we are not. We look everywhere for that something and fail. We are looking in the wrong place.

Robert Browning said, "The Truth is within us. It takes no rise from untoward things. There is an inmost center in us all, where truth abides in fullness and to know consists in opening a way for its escape, rather than effecting an entry for its reality from without." Religion gets the best we have in us out.

Prayer—Our Father, we seem so useless. Reveal to us the inner values of soul life, and may we never be content with doing less than our best. Be Thou our companion this day. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"SEEING ANGELS."

"And I saw another angel . . . preach unto them that dwell on earth."—Rev. 14:6.

One of the blessings of Christ in every day life is, seeing God's angels everywhere. He who sees God's angels knows the reality of spiritual things.

Wherever we see the signs of God in the world, we see His angels; and only the pure in heart can thus see. Nevertheless this is the hope of the world.

Prayer—Our Father, open Thou our eyes that we may behold the wondrous things of Thy Law, and of this Thy world. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"IS HE?"

"Lo, I am with you."—Matt. 28:20.

Prayerfully read the gospels and ask yourselves the question, "How does Christ look?" "If He is with me, how do I know it?" Phillips Brooks said, "He is here. I know him. He knows me. It is the realist thing in the world." No doubt Brooks did so know God. If he did, so can we. But do we so know Him?

Day by day as we go to meditation and prayer, let us try to see Him, and realize His presence. Undoubtedly He will become more real if we do and we will find love, joy and peace flowing through our hearts.

Prayer—Our Father, touch our blind souls until we see Thee, feel Thee and know Thee. Amen.

OUR PREACHER FOR THIS WEEK IS
DR. JOHN G. TRUITT,
SUFFOLK, VA.

PROPER PREACHING.

"Spake he the word unto them as they were able to hear it."—
Mark 4:33.

Here is one of the finest of all lessons on proper preaching. I delight to study it, to think about it, to pray over it, and to hope that eventually I may be able to reach forward to it as a goal. It is, like the preaching of Jesus, so easily understood that it would seem that comment on it is unnecessary. "He spake the word unto them as they were able to hear it." There is nothing strange or unusual about that. The unusualness was in the method, and the message. His words were so simple. His illustrations were so definite, so near, so touchable, such a part of their everyday experiences. He and his followers were holding converse. It was like seed falling on soft, fertile, alive soil. "Behold, there went out a sower to sow." "Wayside," "fowls of the air," "no depth of earth," "stony ground," "thorns," "good ground." The listener must have been saying, "Which am I?" They did, you know, once say right in the middle of his speech: "Lord, is it I?"

Again, is a candle brought to be put under a bushel? or a bed? How illuminating! In some situations it might sound ludicrous: Is a candle brought to be put under a bed! but not when Jesus asked it in one of his kind of sermons. A man sows . . . sleeps . . . the seed springs up . . . after that the full corn in the ear! He putteth forth the sickle, harvest is come! Or take the mustard seed. "And with many such parables he spake the word unto them as they were able to hear it."

I.—"As they were able to hear it."

He considered his hearers. They were together as friends, and anyway you may put it the Lord's knowledge was great. But he spake to them in the very way and manner in which they could understand it. He considered his hearers. Their understanding, their training, their environment, their experiences, their needs, their comfort, and their future possibilities. "As they were able," to hear, to do, to be, and to become! "And all the multitude resorted unto him and he taught them." Other circumstances eventually separated him from his tremendous congregations, not his teachings, or the people's desire to hear—the common people heard him gladly—but the situations involved in the final purpose of his life. He was so considerate of his hearers. I wonder if we consider our hearers as we ought. Again, and again, I try in my mind, to be the man or the boy, out there in the pew. How about the woman in the pew with almost no dinner at home in her kitchen, or in her pantry! How about the man who had a miserable business week just past, or the other man with no work at all! How about the fellow who intended to do nobly and did just the opposite! How about the little girl wondering how much more there is of the stream of words to which her mother is trying to get her to "sit up, dear, and listen." How different many of our sermons would be if we considered our hearers.

II.—"Unto them . . ."

Pleasantly, sincerely, helpfully, unto them he spoke. There was no having somebody away out yonder in mind, and giving vent to some problem hopelessly insolvable with the present distance between. There was no coming up behind, nor obliquely made references. How unkind such, and how insincere! These people right here with me are my friends, and more than anything in all the world, I want to help them, shines right through the messages of Jesus.

Once when I was lamenting the fact that so many people did not come to church, my good friend, Dr. L. E. Smith said: "When I am preaching I never worry about the folks who aren't present, but I am concerned about doing the best I can with the ones who are there. They have come, and it is my business for the present to take care of them." It is inspiring to preach to a large congregation, and it is hard to preach to a number of almost empty pews. I have a chance to experience both myself every Sunday! But I do believe those things did not affect Jesus. A sermon that was mightier than any one of us ever has, or ever can preach, was a sermon of his delivered to one person only, in which are the words, "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldst have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water." He had all, but he could be given help by human hands! Yes, I find sermons delivered by Jesus to vast multitudes, and when I read them I think they are greatest; and then again I find sermons delivered to one, or only a very few, and I think they are greatest. So I gather that he was not affected by the size of his congregation, but rather was he considerate of the size of their understanding. "To them as they were able to hear it" he spake!

To them, thus, he spake because, on the basis of their understanding it, he expected them to do it. He looked expectantly for results. If he said to Levi, follow me, he meant it to be understood and done. My dear mother used to say to me when I was an eighteen year old public school teacher, and was trying to get the school board to do this or that, or the pupils to do this or that, "Use all patience in making it plain to them, and when they understand it they will do it." Ah! how right she was! Although she had never dealt with a school board, and had never seen inside a book on psychology, nor read "Getting Along with People," she knew a thing or two, for she had been the people! She so often looked back at me across the fence and saw me from her side of the fence, and in that way she was able to see herself from my side of the fence. She got me to do things! So many people fail at that point. They are trained and capable, but they can never get the other fellow's point of view. Remember that when you read: "He looked on them with compassion."

III.—"Spake He the Word."

Not words, but the word. I am not sure I know just how to handle this point, but I know that Jesus had some things in mind that he knew, and he spake them. He considered his message. I do not find any rambling, any rationalizing, any doubt, any guess-work, nor any verbosity. "The word" was the content of his message about the Kingdom of God. He experienced the fellowship with the Father which he desired others to know. He acted on the principles he set forth.

His was a message of cheer in uncheering situations; a message of life, and life abundant; a message of forgiveness in love, from God to man, and love from man to God. He was the Word. His life and his words were one. And the two were in perfect harmony with the heavenly Father, so that he could say, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." He knew God and revealed him, simply, effectively, earnestly. His was proper preaching.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

I know you are always interested in our financial reports at this period of the year. I know you are interested in our reaching the goal for the year. You will notice that we climbed up another thousand dollars this week. To reach our goal of twenty thousand dollars for the year (and the Good Lord knows that is small enough), we will have to get more speed on offerings.

For twenty-three years the writer has been setting goals and has called on the churches and Sunday schools and friends to help us reach them. All these twenty-three years you have been generous in your giving and have always seen to it that we reached it. At this writing chances of reaching the goal look a little dark. However, you have never failed us in the past and I know you are not going to let us down now when we need you so badly. We have all confidence in you and fully believe you will see to it that we reach the goal.

The children had a real happy Thanksgiving. The good women from several of our churches sent a coop of chickens for their Thanksgiving dinner. The ladies who have charge of the cooking saw to it that they all had plenty to satisfy their hunger. Everyone seemed to enjoy the day and feel very grateful to those who made it possible for them to have a good Thanksgiving chicken dinner.

To reach our goal we must have $5,691.45 by the first of January, 1940. If you will do your part, we will reach it.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

are glad to have them back. Perhaps this will take the form of a party in their honor.

Give your Sunday school teachers and your minister gifts in the form of something which will help them to develop spiritually and will result in more effective church work. Why not some form of religious literature, perhaps a subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN or some other periodical which will come to them throughout the year. THE ELON CAMPUS.

sensation of Handel's "Messiah" took place in the college auditorium. This is an annual affair and the college choir takes pride in striving to make each performance better than the preceding one. The soloists this year were: Helen Maddock, soprano; Eleanor Edwards, alto; Thomas Edwards, tenor; and Walter Vasser, bass. Mr. and Mrs. Edwards are members of the music department faculty at Elon.

In cooperation with leaders in Alamance County, our college expects to put on the finest Concert Series ever to be presented on our campus. Foremost in the series will be the tenor, Nino Martini, who will appear in Whitley Auditorium on February 14. Along with Col. Lindberg, Leopold Stokowski, and Admiral Byrd, he has received the Columbia Medal as "the man, who more clearly than other individual, symbolizes that artistic perfection whereby radio lives and grows." He is the only singer ever to receive this medal for distinguished contribution to the radio art.

Along with the new professors and students who have found their way to our campus, we find, too, a new course—Aeronautics. This class is progressing rapidly. Soon flying lessons will begin at the Burlington airport, where each student will receive thirty minutes of flying instructions a week. The laboratory which is now in process will contain such things as wind tunnels, model airplanes, and all necessary mechanics for flying and navigation.

Each year the American Universities and Colleges Association selects from the senior class those students who have distinguished themselves as leading personalities on each school campus in the country. Those chosen from Elon for inclusion in "Who's Who in American Colleges" are Duane Vore, Frances Bean, Curtis Jones, Flo Wray, Wes Holland, and June Leath. Hats off to these students! We hope that they will continue to be successful.

The campus is in an uproar! Well, why not? The Christmas holidays begin in about a week, and that's the talk of the campus—especially among the freshmen. They look forward to it with great enthusiasm, for it is quite a novelty to them. Those of us who have been here for a couple of years look forward to it with less enthusiasm—but as a couple of week's rest from the weariness of books.

With this I leave you all, hoping that the coming of Yule Season will be a very happy and prosperous one. May God bless you all.

JESUS AND MONEY

A LAYMAN'S MESSAGE

By GARDNER LATTIMER,
Columbus, Ohio.

"Where Your Treasure Is There Your Heart Is Also---Jesus"

A newspaper reporter interviewing Kagawa, the great Japanese Christian leader, asked the secret of his power and influence. Kagawa smiled and with a characteristic shrug of his shoulders offered no answer.

Later in the day one who had heard him speak repeatedly to overflow audiences offered this opinion of the secret of his power. "Kagawa takes Jesus seriously."

And how does Kagawa "take Jesus Seriously" in the matter of money? Although his income from royalties on his writings exceeds ten thousand ($10,000.00) dollars a year, he spends less than six hundred ($600.00) dollars a year on himself and his family, which consists of his wife and three children.

Kagawa goes farther than the "separated portion." With him everything spent for himself or his family must pass the test of whether such expenditure will do more for the Kingdom of God than if spent on needy individuals or worthy causes suffering for lack of adequate support.

A Typical Church Member.

A typical American church member in a mid-western city, with a four thousand dollar income is spending twenty-five dollars a month for a new automobile, another twenty-five dollars a month to run it for pleasure, not for business, five dollars a month for a new mechanical refrigerator, and better than five dollars a month for tobacco, and other luxuries in proportion. He is trustee of his Congregational-Christian Church and gives one dollar a week for the current budget and ten cents a week for benevolences—just about as much for the church as for tobacco. And that man is typical. He is typical. He is satisfied that he is doing his share, for he knows that many with equal ability do not give that much.

Another man who had an income one year during the twenties of over forty thousand dollars gave away ten thousand dollars and was acclaimed a benefactor. Now he says he realizes that no man can be true to Christian principles and spend even ten thousand dollars for himself and his family. He is convinced of the soundness of Sherwood Eddy's proposal that "we subject the money we spend for ourselves and our families to the test of whether such expenditures will do more for the Kingdom of God than if spent for the needy children of our communities or the worthy causes languishing for lack of support."

The Work to Be Done.

The needs of the world require the unselfish devotion of those who would take Jesus seriously. If even a substantial minority of church members would accept the principles of Stewardship of time and money, the whole trend of our times could be changed in a decade.

Setting aside as a beginning, a minimum of ten per cent of our income and ten per cent of our time for Kingdom building projects would solve the problem of current expense budgets in our churches. It would send missionaries back to their stations to continue their life service with the home churches behind them in a way which would multiply their effectiveness many times.

Such a sharing would enable us to minister in a more Christlike way to under-privileged childhood the world around and to ease the distress of the sick and the sorrowing. The workers who represent us would have their hands free to do the work for which we have sent them.

Then, too, opportunity would be afforded to support fundamental programs seeking to remove the causes of our economic and social maladjustments. Organizations for world peace would be able to develop wholesome public opinion effectively as to critical situations constantly arising. Adult education could be organized to meet selfish propaganda. Improved race relations could be cultivated. Better understanding between city and country, employer and laborer, could be fostered.

Most important of all, acceptance of Stewardship principles by even a substantial minority in our churches would release a spiritual power and give to the people a joy which can come only through sharing time, talents and material possessions.

When Will Even a FEW of Us Begin to Take Jesus Seriously?

O Come, Immanuel, Our King

O come, Immanuel, our King,
Thy law of love establishing;
The nations for Thine advent pine:
Come, claim their fealty, Lord divine.

O come, Thou Wisdom from on high,
Attuning all things, far and nigh,
Beneath Thy firm and gentle sway:
Come, teach us understanding's way.

O come, fair Sunrise, passing bright,
And usher in the day of right;
To darkened minds bring vision clear,
And banish every deathly fear.

O come, Desire of nations, trust
Thyself to man, the child of dust;
Thou art the precious Cornerstone,
Whereon all souls are built in one.

OUR WORK AND WORKERS

Rev. J. S. Johnson of Dendron, Va., began work as pastor of the First Congregational Church at Waverly, Ill., on December 1.

Dr. Samuel H. Leger and Dr. Erwin L. Shaver report having enjoyed their recent visits to the Southern Convention area, and send greetings to friends.

Rev. Cecil Thomas, a Sophomore at Elon College and a licentiate of the Eastern North Carolina Conference, has accepted a call to Morrisville (N. C.) Christian Church for this Conference year.

Remember the offering for Superannuation in your church on Christmas Sunday. Make a gift of love at this season for our aged ministers, their widows, and orphans.

When Georgia celebrated Thanksgiving, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill was in Florida. When Florida celebrated she was in Georgia. Result: Miss Coghill had no turkey dinner at Thanksgiving. Such is the life of a church worker in a divided world!

Mrs. S. A. Holleman, daughter of Dr. Will Long, first president of Elon College, and wife of Prof. S. A. Holleman, a member of the original faculty of Elon College, passed away in High Point, N. C., on December 2, 1939, after a long illness. She was buried in the family plot at Providence Christian Church, Graham, N. C.

Friends of Dr. Milo J. Sweet, 3011 15th Avenue, Chattanooga, Tenn., will be sorry to learn that he fell and injured his knee severely while on his way to church several weeks ago. At last report he was still in the hospital and progress was slow. Many of our people will remember Mr. and Mrs. Sweet, for they lived at Elon College for several years when Dr. Sweet was pastor-at-large in this area.

The Fourth Annual North Carolina Convocation of Churches will be held in Greensboro, N. C., on January 16-18. This is an inter-denominational meeting with splendid leadership. The vital theme this year is "The Witness of the Church in a Perilous World." More detailed announcements will appear in a later issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, but plan now to take the opportunity of sharing in this fine meeting.

The Advent services at the Suffolk Christian Church are carrying out the following topics: December 3—"Worthy to Receive Glory and Honor;" December 10—"Jesus, the Great Prophet;" December 17—"Jesus, the Great High-Priest;" December 24—"Jesus, the King of Love;" and December 31—"Jesus, the Great Savior." At the service on December 3, three young people joined the

ROBERT WHITTEN PUBLISHES POEMS.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN rejoices to learn of the progress of our ministers and churches. It is particularly gratified when some one does an outstanding piece of work.

In this class is Rev. R. A. Whitten of Winchester, Va., who has just recently brought from the press a volume of his own poems. Along Life's Way is the interesting title. The little volume of a hundred pages is filled with fine thoughts to be treasured and lived. The first lines are:

Let me live today by life's high road
Where my fellowman struggles along
When he is discouraged because of his load
Let me cheer him along with a song.

In the foreword, Dr. Henry Russell Stafford, pastor of Old South Church in Boston, says: "I have found in his verses such treasures of the inner man, glinting in God's own sunshine, that I crave a wide reading for these lyrics, not simply because Mr. Whitten deserves a hearing, but chiefly because no reader can peruse his lines without profit."

Anyone interested in purchasing a copy can do so by sending one dollar to the author at his home in Winchester, Va. Church workers interested in making some money for the church may be interested in his proposition to Ladies Aid Societies, etc., for the sale of the book.

NEESE MOVES TO MASSACHUSETTS.

[The following article was unavoidably delayed in publication, and is used now not only to tell of the work of Mr. Neese, but to remind us that many of our young ministers are going north and only a few return. We need to find the reason.—Editor.]

On September 27, 1939, Rev. J. Everett Neese moved from Henderson, N. C., to West Boxford, Mass., where he became pastor of Second Congregational Church. Since November, 1936, Mr. Neese and his wife and daughter, Carolyn, had made their home in Henderson where he served as pastor of First Christian Church.

During this time the parsonage debt was paid, the building repaired and painted inside and out, the lawn improved and shrubbery planted, and the church building repaired and painted. A young people's class was organized by Mrs. Neese, and young people's work improved. Forty-nine members were added to the church.

Mr. Neese was active in community affairs such as parent-teacher associations, fraternal orders, and all religious groups. For two years he held a special service annually for the local football squad, at which time the High School Choral Club furnished music and the church was filled to capacity.

In the Eastern North Carolina Conference he was closely related to the Pilgrim Fellowship, was for two years president of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, and held important offices in the Conference such as assistant secretary, vice-president, and then acting president. For two years he was historian of the Conference.

With a busy schedule in the local church and conference, Mr. Neese still found time to hold twenty revival meetings with 202 professions of Christian faith, share in the work of the Southern Convention, work with young people in the Southeast and study in the School of Religion of Duke University. He is now studying at Andover-Newton Theological School where he expects to receive the Bachelor of Divinity degree.

OUR SUPPLY OF MINISTERS.

It now appears that all the churches within the Southern Convention can have pastoral service during the coming year. There are a few places where no call has yet been issued, but there seem to be enough men to fill the places. Some of them we are having to bring from other areas of the Church. And some are coming from other denominations.

It will doubtless do us good to receive the new inspiration of those who have worked in other areas and in other denominations. But this tendency, if long continued, will completely change the type of churches we have. In the years that are gone, the fervor of the churches led to the decision of its young men to enter the ministry of the Church, and most of our pastors came from our own churches. They were schooled in the thought, the ideals, and the life of Christian Church homes and church programs. They went out to preach, and to build like churches.

In more recent years a change has taken place, or perhaps it is more nearly correct to say that now a change is taking place. The churches are demanding more from their pastors. They want better trained men, and they want pastoral service rather than just preaching. They want the minister to serve fewer churches and do more constructive work for the community. This means that we need more men, and better trained men. This has left some ministers without work, and has sent the younger generation to the seminaries in search of more learning.

When these younger men finish their school work, they do not always return to the native heath for church work. Why? From the standpoint of the Southern Convention there are three noticeable reasons:

In the first place, our churches change pastors in the fall and the students graduate in the spring. The student cannot wait until fall for work and especially when he is not sure that he will find any then. Two good men have recently been lost to us largely for this reason. It will pay the churches to look ahead for possible graduates before making their call in the fall.

Secondly, our salary scale is too low. A seminary graduate has spent seven years in preparation. Most of them are heavily in debt. Many churches across the country pay much more than we do hereabouts. State Superintendents visit the seminaries in search of good men. We have good men. The call comes to a church that pays a good salary. There is only one choice. The Southern Convention stands to lose many of its best young men unless we raise our salary scale.

The third reason we are likely to lose good young men is a bit more difficult to catalogue, but is none the less effective. It is often felt rather than seen. It is our attempt to keep out of our group any new idea or method of work. Our forms and ceremonies are not classic, they do not go back to the early centuries, but they are very definite. We seem to want no one to disturb our thinking, or to start anything new. The one who does will find pressure coming from many directions, and unless he is very courageous he will soon yield to the call to go where he can express himself without facing so many difficulties.

These are three very great reasons why our Southern Convention is destined to suffer the loss of many of its younger ministers unless those who are the Church in this area find a way to change conditions. All of these difficulties can be overcome. It may take quite a while to do it, but if we want to do so, we can. We can supply all our churches with well-trained men. We must.

NOW FOR YOUR CRITICISM.

Unless the above editorial strikes fire and your editor gets a response he will be greatly disappointed. Write your letter and tell him what you think while you are still "hot under the collar." Out of the heat there may come light. It is light that we need, for we are now definitely in the dark. Unless we can produce ministers to fill our pulpits, train them, and then give them places to work, our churches are headed for greater trouble than we have yet seen.

If we can discover, and we can, fine young people in our churches who will take the needed training for ministerial service, if we can open to them churches that will pay a living wage, and we can, and if we will give them freedom to lead as they are trained to do under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, if we have the will to do these things, the years that lie ahead will find our churches developing and our Church moving forward without apology.

OUR TORN WORLD.

If the Roman world of Jesus' day needed the Incarnation of God in man, the world in which we live needs it none the less. We are now reading the beautiful stories in Matthew and Luke of the coming of the Christ, and we are reading of human destruction on a scale not known when Caesar threw men into the arena for lions to devour.

The body of humanity writhes in pain in our day. Suffering Japan brings death to millions in China. Starving Russians fight friendly Finns. Hungry Germans grab food and supplies from wherever they can get them without regard to the suffering entailed. Disfranchised and depressed classes in America suffer want with but few to hear their cry.

There is no wailing wall in Jerusalem for the Jews of today. Their cries go up to God from every land, and their wailing mingles with that of all nations, races, and clans. Surely their cry is heard by Him who was born in Bethlehem's manger.

When Christmas comes, God will walk the earth again. And when God comes permanently into human experience, Christmas will last forever.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Eastern Virginia Christian Missionary Association met in 48th annual session on Tuesday, December 5, 1939, in Waverly Christian Church. Rev. Jesse H. Dollar, president, called the Association to order. Rev. Robert Lee House was recording secretary and Rev. Joe French was financial secretary. About seventy-five delegates and visitors attended the session. The report of the financial secretary indicated that sixteen churches were represented by memberships, which was four less than last year. In 1938 the funds received from membership dues amounted to $1,034.00; in 1939 the amount reported was $930.00. Twelve new members were received in 1938, amounting to $99.00; and for that year the memberships not renewed amounted to $95.00. This year ten new memberships were paid in, amounting to $80.00, and eighteen former members failed to pay dues amounting to $155.00. Eleven new members were pledged for payment in 1940.

Appropriations were made by the approval of the report of the committee on plans, to First Church, Richmond; Little Creek and South Norfolk Churches. Two inspirational addresses were made: one by Rev. B. H. Watkins on "The Needs for Missionary Work in the Eastern Virginia Conference," and the other by Rev. W. H. Garman on "The Opportunities for Missionary Work." Both of these addresses were excellent, and were appreciated by the audience. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: president, Rev. Jesse H. Dollar; vice-president, Rev. T. Fred Wright; recording secretary, Miss Edna Fulcher; financial secretary, Rev. Joe A. French; treasurer, Mr. James C. Jones, Holland, Va.

A motion was offered to change the time of the meeting from December to September, but action was deferred until the meeting of the next session.

One may well inquire: Why are only sixteen of the forty-four churches of the Conference represented in the membership of this Association? Again, one asks: Why are so many of the ministers of the Conference not actively interested, as members, in the Association? Is it not possible for every pastor to be a member, and every church to have an additional membership in the Association? The enlistment of every church, as members, would increase the income next year $260.00, and the securing of one additional membership of $10.00 each in the churches already supporting the Association would increase the total income another $160.00. This total increase, if raised, would be $420.00. Surely this growth is possible.

The Missionary Association confines its work exclusively to home mission work—or the assistance of churches already organized within the Eastern Virginia Conference. Its primary purpose was to establish new churches. In recent years it has departed, in some respects, from that objective, and the major part of the annual contributions has been appropriated to assist churches already established, but needing financial assistance. This should not dampen the enthusiasm, or weaken the support of present or prospective members of the Association. It has done a good work in the past, and it should be continued. The membership should be increased. The annual income should be at least $2,000.00. This amount could be wisely used in building up weak churches, in reducing church debts, in supplementing small salaries, and in establishing new churches.

There should be united support of the Association by ministers, Sunday school superintendents, teachers of organized Sunday school classes and leaders of young people's organizations. Pilgrim Fellowship would find this work a field for profitable investment of time and money. Put this in the program and budget of your local churches for 1940.

WHAT PLACE CHRIST?

Nearly two thousand years ago Christ was born. At this season of the year we celebrate that joyful event. Believers in Him tell with joy and hope the story of His birth. The whole world joins in the singing of the devotion and faith in Him expressed in song by those who knew Him. There are few things written more beautiful or more sublime than the Christmas carols. They are more universally sung than any other songs. Believers and non-believers alike listen intently. The non-Christian world joins with Christian nations in the observance of Christmas. All correspondence and records today bear dates recognizing His birth. This is in the year of our Lord 1939.

Christ has found a place in the minds of men and women everywhere, and in a certain sense He has found a place in the minds of all men, regardless of class or color, creed or dogma, but how many hearts have made room for Him? He may enter the mind of a man, and the man may live as he has always lived, but if He enters the heart of a man, the life is changed and the fruits of that life are changed. His mind becomes the mind of Christ, and in his life he challenges the world with the revolutionary principles upon which the life of Christ in the flesh was lived. The individual in whose heart Christ has found an abiding place will endeavor to visit the sick, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, care for the needy, and save the lost.

The greatest miracle of the ages takes place in the heart where Christ lives. The world does not understand Him. It never has. The church is constituted by those who have so received Christ. The task of Christian people today is to give Christ to the world. If the world really and truly possessed Christ, the ills of the world would be cured, and the hurt of mankind everywhere would be healed. There would be no occasion for wars. He is the Prince of Peace, and peace would rule supreme in the councils of the nations. Material out of which swords are made profitably be used for implements with which to till the fields. Laborers that build battleships, torpedo boats, and cannons, might be employed to build merchant marines so that food and clothing might be carried to nations in need. Men huddled into training camps, crowded into trenches behind the battle lines, or marching into battle, might be in their homes with their families providing the necessities and comforts of life and adding their song of joy to the chorus of those who sing, "Peace, and on earth good will toward men."

GOOD USE OF BULLETINS.

Rev. Joe A. French, pastor of Berea (Norfolk) and Ocean View, has been doing some fine work with his weekly bulletins. On September 3, when he spoke to the young people on "The Four-Fold Life," the front of the bulletin carried a cross at the ends of which were these words: "Stand Tall," "Think Tall," "Smile Tall," and "Live Tall." The program included Pilgrim Fellowship Purpose, and some good poetry for young people.

Another time the bulletin carried the names of all the church members. (Continued on page 13.)

A MESSAGE FROM THE NEW ENGLAND REGIONAL MEETING.

[This meeting was held in conjunction with the Annual Meeting of the Board of Home Missions, Waterbury, Conn., October 28-30, 1939.—Editor.]

During these days in Waterbury we have experienced a new awareness of the desperate need of our world for the practical manifold expression of the Christian Gospel. We are thinking of foreign lands, the indescribable suffering of China's distressed millions, pathetically appealing for shelter and food. In our own land there are areas of great need—10,000 villages without churches, 30,000 villages without pastors, great cities presenting complex social problems of overcrowding, insecurity and organized lawlessness, where minority groups are denied equal opportunities, and where the churches of Christ are not measuring up to the challenge of the task before them.

We feel that this situation should be the subject of most earnest study and prayer, and we are confident that deeper understanding of these great human needs and fuller consecration to our tasks will immediately be reflected in greatly increased support of all our Christian work, through the State Conferences, the Home Boards and the American Board.

We know that many individuals and churches are already giving liberally, and that some have made considerable advances in this respect in recent years. But there is a great gap between the worldwide need and the service we render. In the face of this discrepancy we are humbled and penitent. We can and must adopt much higher goals, in order that the entire Christian enterprise may be adequately supported.

We call upon all who have felt this challenge, so ably presented to us by the speakers on this program, to dedicate themselves to proclaim this truth by word and example.

COVENANT.

Therefore, we, the members of this 7th New England Regional Meeting, in the presence of God, covenant with one another and with God, that we will do our utmost to bear witness to our faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

We pledge again our loyal support to the officers and other servants of our mission boards.

We reconsecrate what we have and what we are to the maintenance and increase of our Christian service.

We return to our churches earnestly seeking additional support of our colleagues that together we may serve our generation more effectively in the spirit of our Master.

A MESSAGE FROM THE MID-WEST REGIONAL MEETING.

[This meeting was held in conjunction with the Annual Meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, St. Louis, Mo., October 24-26, 1939.—Editor.]

The Mid-West Regional Committee stands convinced that the time has now come to advance toward a fuller response to the challenge of world need. It regards the proposals of the American Board, the Board of Home Missions and the State Conferences as being modest and reasonable as they set forth to strengthen Christian efforts in difficult places in our nation and around the world.

There is ample evidence on every hand that Christianity has that which our chaotic society needs. Its only weakness is found in its advocates who often lack zeal and urgency in spreading the gospel of Christ.

The times demand self-searching and humble commitment to the

SOMEDAY I'LL UNDERSTAND.

I know no harm can come to me
In God's kind providence;
The clouds must disappear when touched
By his omnipotence.

Tho now the waves of life are stirred
And tossed by storm and strife—
Someday my spirit will be clothed
With all abundant life.

Someday I'll understand it all
The heartache and the rod;
God's all revealing light will show
The goodness of my God.

—Vivien M. Ogden.

Christ's cause in an age of confusion. The response of many Christians to the urgencies of a spiritually hungry world brings them to a more vigorous industry in providing the money required for a more adequate witness of a saving faith.

Congregational and Christian Churches are aware of this responsibility to the world in this hour and will respond, we believe, to the challenge given them. As a part of that response the total gifts to missions must be increased all over the country $500,000 next year. This increase could be secured by lifting the average gift per member from $1.40 to a minimum of $2.00.

The Mid-West Regional Committee, therefore, recommends that the churches of this region in sincere appreciation of this background of need and their resources to meet this need make every effort to bring the level of giving up higher in 1940 by encouraging every church to reach a minimum contribution on the apportionment of $2.00 per member. If those churches above that minimum will hold their positions without decreasing, or advance as much as they are able, and other reach this minimum, sufficient funds will be secured to guarantee the fulfillment of the measure of our responsibility. Churches, we trust, will be approached by the state superintendents and apportionment committees with sympathetic understanding of local problems but with a complete report from the Boards concerning the work needing to be done so that their instincts to share with their Lord the world's burden will lead them to consecrated stewardship.

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

According to the church reports made to the Eastern Virginia Conference, we have on roll 10,220 members, an increase of 227 members over last year. To make this net increase, 613 members were received into the churches of the Conference during the year. The average attendance at the main church worship service was 77.3. The smallest average was eighteen persons present, and the largest was 285 average at the morning worship service. The Sunday schools of the Conference enrolled 6,990. The young people's societies enrolled 1,295. Our churches paid to Convention and Conference funds $7,849.67; to foreign missions, $4,188.79; to Elon College, $2,759.05; to the orphanage, $3,495.73; and to other benevolent enterprises, $2,628.83. This makes a total of $20,922.07 paid by the churches of the Eastern Virginia Conference for Missions and Benevolences. This includes the moneys raised by the Woman's Conference, which amounted to $4,856.55. The same churches paid home expenses of their local churches to the sum of $95,704.73, and they are possessing of property valued at $1,227,450.00. If churches reported accurately last year and the preceding year, they raised for all purposes $9,894.28 more this past year than the previous year. The net gain in membership for the 1938 Conference year was ninety-seven members, and for the 1939 Conference year it was 227 members. It would seem that our Conference moved forward in the year just past. Let us set to work to be sure that it does even better this year.

Dear Friends:

Our financial report this week carries us above the fifteenth rung in our financial ladder for the year.

We still lack $4,767.43 of being to our goal of $20,000.00. I give these figures from week to week so you may know what progress we are making toward reaching our goal. It is going to take quite an effort to reach it and we want to appeal to you to help us reach it.

If your church has already met its Conference Apportionment and you would like to make a special personal donation to help us reach it, it certainly would be kind of you to do it.

We are very much interested in reaching the goal, because it takes money to buy food and clothes for nearly one hundred children. I know you do not want them to go hungry. Neither do you want me to let them shiver in the cold because of lack of warm comfortable clothing.

We have on our desk at this time urgent appeals from three mothers to take their children because they cannot make enough to keep them. We have the room and could take them if our financial conditions would permit. From the information I have in hand they are worthy cases. Shall we say no? The children suffer for the lack of food and comfortable clothes and the church misses the joy of helping them. Heaven is full of rich blessings for all of us. We miss them because we do not comply with the requirements to get them. The joy of life comes from helping others. The most lasting investment you can make is in some worthy boy or girl.

That is the writer's experience. Thirty-five years ago the writer had the pleasure of assisting a young boy and a young girl through school. I have watched them all these years with a real joy in my heart. Both have made good and both hold splendid positions where they can serve mankind. Strange to say, after more than thirty years I received a real sweet letter from each of them in the last few weeks, telling me how much they appreciated the assistance I rendered them more than thirty years ago. The writer made a wise investment.

Our great joy in this work is in taking dependent boys and girls, training them until they reach maturity, and then see the girls go out as secretaries or nurses and the boys take places of trust and make good.

SOUND ADVICE TO THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH IN TIME OF WAR.

The Methodist Recorder, London, in an editorial says:

"In spite of the earnest prayers of statesmen, the dread calamity of war has come upon the world. It seems almost incredible that such a mad crime can have happened at this stage in the world's history. Nearly three thousand years ago a great prophet, living in a warlike age, saw the vision of the day when weapons of war should be changed into instruments of industry, and all nations should "walk in the light of the Lord." But still this vision tarries. Many have seen it and have saluted it from afar, but today, at first sight, its realization seems farther off than ever.

We trust that during the dark and difficult days ahead the Christian Church will attend to its own proper work, namely, Christian witness, consolation and succor. The church's first task is to keep alive the Christian faith and to administer to men its rich resources. We must not let the world forget that the ultimate judge of the nations is God. "He shall judge among the nations." God is still on the throne of the universe; the government is upon His shoulders. He has not abdicated and will not abdicate His Sovereignty. In the long run the issues of the conflict will be determined by the invisible battalions. Our supreme concern must therefore be to learn and to do the will of God. "O house of Jacob, come ye. Let us walk in the light of the Lord." We have walked by our own light long enough. We have often followed the light of pride and selfishness and passion, and it has led us into mires and swamps. Let us try walking in the

HENDERSON CHURCH INSTALLS NEW MINISTER.

On Sunday evening, December 3, the Henderson (N. C.) Christian Church welcomed their new pastor, Rev. J. Frank Apple, to the church and community. Rev. S. E. Madren of Franklinton, N. C., presided during the installation service and gave the charge to the minister and to the congregation. Rev. J. E. McCauley, pastor at Liberty (Vance), offered the prayer.

The pastors of the First Baptist, Presbyterian, First Methodist, and Christ Methodist Churches were present and welcomed Mr. Apple to Henderson on behalf of their congregations. Rev. E. M. Powell, a member of our Henderson Church, gave the welcome address on the part of the church and received Mr. and Mrs. Apple into the church, pending receipt of their letters.

The evening message was given by Rev. Mr. Apple, who used as his subject, "God Speaks Today."

The church was filled to its capacity—even the Sunday school rooms were filled—for the impressive service of welcome and installation. THE CHRISTIAN SUN wishes for the Henderson Church, under the leadership of Rev. and Mrs. Apple, an ever-growing sphere of service.

REUBEN BAR-BARUCH.

"What is this fruit I hold in my hand?" asked Rabbi Joseph.

"A pomegranate," shouted the boys together.

The boys were seated cross-legged on the floor in front of their teacher. They did not have chairs as you have in your school. Samuel, who was only six years old, sat as close to his brother, Reuben, as possible. He wondered why the teacher was talking about pomegranates this morning. Of course, he knew what pomegranates were. All the boys knew. They had picked many of them and eaten them as they played or walked along the road.

"Do you know what is inside this pomegranate?" asked the teacher.

"Many seeds," answered Tobit, one of Reuben's friends, for it seemed to Tobit that pomegranates were just about all seeds.

"There are many seeds," said Rabbi Joseph, "so that we might have more pomegranates. That is the way God planned for things to grow on the earth. But, once there were no living things on the earth, and God caused the waters and the mud to come alive with many tiny plants." Then the teacher continued to tell the beautiful story of the time when things first began to grow on the earth.

When Reuben and Samuel walked home that day it seemed as if they saw every flower and tree and weed along the way. Samuel was for ever running to see what kind of seeds were on the weeds. It seemed as if all living things were lovelier since Rabbi Joseph had begun talking about them.

"Say, Samuel," began Reuben, as they neared their house, "I've got a swell plan for tomorrow. Want to hear it?"

"But we have to go to school tomorrow," said Samuel.

"Oh, no, we don't. Tomorrow is a holiday. Don't you remember that Rabbi Joseph told us it would be the Feast of Lights?"

So Reuben explained his plan to Samuel, and was just finishing when their little sister, Leah, saw them and started to meet them.

A LETTER FOR YOU.

Dear Children:

Would you like for me to tell you of some boys and girls that I know? I promise you I will do that every week, if you will promise to write to me some times and let me know some of the things that you do. And perhaps I can write a letter about you.

I want to tell you today about some boys and girls I taught in the Beginner's Sunday School Class in Tampa, Fla. They were dear little boys and girls and I loved every one of them. They would tell me about the things they did every week. One Sunday just before Christmas they had many things to talk about.

Emily told us about her mother, who had gone to the hospital where she was going to get a sure enough live baby for a Christmas present. Emily was glad she was going to have a little baby at her house, but she was lonesome for her mother. And she and her nurse didn't get along half as nicely as she did with her mother.

WHEN ONE IS A MOTHER.

So many little socks to mend,
So many curls to brush,
So many lullabys to sing
When falls the twilight hush.

So many little prayers to hear,
And clothes to put away,
But mother gives thanks every night,
For tasks like these, each day.

—Winifred Catherine Marshall.

Ruth told us about her grandfather going all the way to Jacksonville to visit during the Christmas holidays. She missed him very much and wanted him to hurry and come back. In fact, it seemed as if everybody was sad on this day. So I suggested we sing.

Of course, every body wanted to sing a Christmas song, so I taught them a new song. Would you like to know what it was? Well, here it is, and I hope you like it as well as they did:

Under the stars one holy night,
A little baby was born;
Over his head a star shone bright,
And glistened 'til the morn.
And wise men came from far away,
And shepherds wandered where he lay;
Upon his lowly bed of hay,
Under the stars one night.

Under the stars this holy night,
We wait for him once more;
And strive to see that glorious sight,
The shepherds saw of yore.
O baby, born in Bethlehem,
Come to us, as you came to them;
And crown us with love's diadem,
Under the stars tonight!

Silliman University, Dumaguete, Negroes, Philippine Islands.

Here is the Silliman University Song. It was originally written to a well-known Princeton tune, but it can be sung to the tune of "Silver Threads Among the Gold":

1.

Where the white sands and the coral
Kiss the dark blue southern seas
And the palm trees tall and stately Wave their branches in the breeze
Stands a college we all honor
In our hearts without a peer
Silliman, our Alma Mater,
Ever lovely, ever dear.

Chorus:

Loyal sons are we of Silliman
Here's a cheer, boys—three times three
Silliman, our Alma Mater,
Silliman beside the sea.

2.

Happy years of school and college,
Gliding swiftly as a dream
When the things of life and beauty
Are more nearly what they seem
Winning victories in the classroom
On the court, the track, the field
Still we work for Dear Old Silliman
Her honor bright to shield.

3.

When we leave the halls of Silliman
Roam the world o'er, near and far Still the faith and truth she gave us
Will remain our guiding star;
Or in high place or in lowly,
Fortune sends us joy or pain,
To the love for Dear Old Silliman
Loyal will we e'er remain.

For the closing prayer read a poem prayer written by one of the graduates of Silliman Institute:

My Lord, when evil thoughts and pleasures vain
Allure and lead me astray;
When greed of gold, or love of power spoil me,
Make me remain
A victim of eternal wrath;
Or when some doubts, great tests and bitter tears
So cloud my hope that, heedless to thy call,

THE CHRISTMAS OFFERING.

By vote of the Convention and all the Conferences, it is urged that at the service of the church nearest Christmas an offering shall be taken, every cent of which is to go to the support of our disabled ministers and the widows of deceased ministers, these good women having shared through the years the self-denial made necessary by the small salaries received by their husbands. It is naturally presumed that the pastors will give the people of their congregation an opportunity of expressing their gratitude in this way. It is really "a debt of honor" that we owe these ministers and widows, and certainly there is no more fitting time when we may express this gratitude than at the Christmas Season. While we are making our gifts, numerous and more or less costly, to those from whom we expect gifts, let us also remember this debt of honor to make a gift to carry real Christmas cheer to those who have been such a blessing to us and have done so much for the church and for the kingdom of righteousness. The writer feels quite sure that all our active ministers, who are yet blessed with strength, health and vigor, and permitted, by the grace of God, to go ahead with their work will count it a pleasure and a privilege to take this offering.

I am writing in behalf of our Board of Superannuation appointed by the Convention to distribute these funds where the need seems imperative and where help will carry real cheer and comfort.

Gratefully and sincerely,

J. O. ATKINSON, Chairman,
Board of Superannuation.

The above is acknowledged with deep gratitude. All who contributed may have the consolation of knowing that their gift was made out of love to their Lord, who finding one woman sufficiently devoted to him to pour out an offering, a precious box of ointment, on him, began to talk immediately in terms of a world-wide gospel, "Whosoever in all the world this gospel shall be preached, this that this woman hath done shall be told as a memorial of her." Our mission money is given out of love and devotion to our Lord that His name may be glorified in the earth, and that His saving love may be made known to those less favored than ourselves.

MISS DOROTHY WILLIAMS.

AN HOUR IN THE PHILIPPINES.

HYMN—"Lead On, O King Eternal."

CALL TO WORSHIP—

God hath not promised
Skies always blue;
Flower-strewn pathways
All our lives through,
God hath not promised
Sun without rain,
Joy without sorrow,
Peace without pain.

But God hath promised
Strength for the day,
Rest for the labor,
Light for the way,
Grace for the trials,
Help from above
Unfailing sympathy,
Undying love.

—Annie Johnson Flint.

I grope alone with weakened faith
 Through fears—
 Save me! Guide me!
 With Thee I shall not fall.

For whence is lasting strength and power divine
 If not from Thee? The light that can lead me
 Through darkest paths
 To victory's realm is Thine.
 So guide me through,
 From doubting make me free.
 Then neither blighted hopes nor death's afflict
 Can make me shudder; with Thee I walk aright.

AMEN.

NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA
 CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Financial Secretary.

At the time of the meeting of the Christian Missionary Association in annual session, the financial secretary was requested to keep his books open for further membership receipts for the year 1938-39. The secretary has complied with this request and while there are still 1938-39 membership dues unpaid he feels his report should be made and filed. Necessarily this report has been audited and accepted in part only.

Memberships.

The following churches have no memberships: Albemarle, Asheville, Bethel, Carolina, Concord, Danville, Elk Spur, Haw River, Hebron, Hopedale, Howard's Chapel, Ivy Hill, Kallam Grove, Lebanon, Liberty, Lynchburg, Monticello, Mt. Bethel, Mt. Zion, New Hope, Pleasant Grove, Pleasant Ridge, Rocky Ford, Shallow Ford, Tryon—twenty-five churches.

Following are the other churches with the number of membership in each: Apple's Chapel, 5; Belews Creek, 1; Berea, 1 for 1937-38; Bethlehem, 2 and 2 for 1937-38; Burlington, 26; Durham, 4; Elon College, 5; Greensboro, First, 6; Greensboro, Palm Street, 3; Happy Home, 1; Hines Chapel, 4 and 3 for 1937-38; Ingram, 2; Long's Chapel, 1; New Lebanon, 1 and 1 for 1937-38; Reidsville, 5; Salem Chapel, 3; Union, N. C., 1; Union, Va., 1; Winston-Salem, 2; Pastorate One, 1. Total membership—81.

The poem on the front page is one of the Advent Hymns found in an excellent new hymnal compiled by Dr. Henry Hallam Tweedy, professor in the Divinity School of Yale University. The hymnal is entitled "Christian Worship and Praise."

I pity no man because he has to work. If he is worth his salt he will work. I envy the man who has a work worth doing and does it well.—
Theodore Roosevelt.

THE GOLDEN YEARS.

Old age hath yet his honor and his toil;
 Death closes all; but something ere the end,
 Some work of noble note, may yet be done.
 Tho' much be taken, much abides; and tho'
 We are not now that strength which in old days
 Moved earth and heaven; that which we are, we are;
 One equal temper of heroic hearts,
 Made weak by time and fate, but strong in will
 To strive, to seek, to find and not to yield.

—Tennyson.

THE VETERANS OF THE CROSS.

Those men and women who have built our churches, blessed our homes, buried our dead, and called our souls to life—those beloved ministers and their loyal wives who have served faithfully as God has given them opportunity—those fine friends of ours whose faces now are shrouded with fragrant memories, those Veterans of the Cross await our Christmas Offering of love.

When the golden glow of eventide settles over those who now serve the Church, when the fires of life burn low for those who now are aflame, when you who live in the morning see the sunset surely coming or feel the after-glow of twilight-time, you may need the loving remembrance of those who are leaders then. If so, it will be a consolation to know that you shared with other Veterans of the Cross in the days of your activity.

Let every church honor itself by making a Christmas Offering of love for those who have served the Church and now must look to it for aid.

Churches and members of the Southern Convention will send their money to Dr. J. O. Atkinson at Elon College, N. C., who is chairman of our Committee on Superannuation. Others will send their gifts to the Ministerial Relief Division of the Board of Home Missions in New York City.

"Youth at Work in the Church"

Emily Carleton Lester, Editor

HAVE YOU MADE YOUR GIFT FOR CHINA?

Here and there reports are coming in of money for the young people's project in Tientsin, China. We hear that the young people in the Valley of Virginia have turned in about seventy ($70.00) dollars, that in Alabama and Tennessee they are organized for definite work on the project, that in Eastern Virginia they are "sacrificing" for this cause, that the Georgia young people are seriously at work, and that young people's groups in North Carolina have secured money for this worthy project.

Where to Send It.

We wonder if all the money has been turned in. The money raised by your young people's society, or given by you as an individual, should go to the Pilgrim Fellowship Treasurer in your conference—who will, in turn, send it to the Treasurer of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship. Specify the name of your church, as an accurate record should be kept. In case you don't know who your treasurer is, here is the list: Alabama—Lois Dollar, Shawmut, Ala.; Florida—James Foster, Winter Park, Fla.; Georgia—Woodrow James, Pearson, Ga.; Kentucky—Peggy Powell, Stearns, Ky.; Eastern North Carolina—Odell Arnold, Bunn, N. C.; Western North Carolina—William Dan White, Pittsboro, N. C.; North Carolina and Virginia—Sam Barber, Route 2, Elon College, N. C.; Tennessee—Shirley Hassler, c/o Miss Marguerite Davison, Thorsby, Ala.; Eastern Virginia—Emily Harrell, R. F. D., Suffolk, Va.; Valley of Virginia—Raymond Andes, Route 4, Harrisonburg, Va. Southeast Treasurer—Roland Allgood, 1414 West 27th Street, Norfolk, Va.

Program Materials.

We wonder if all of you have used programs on China in your young people's meetings. The program materials are fine. If no one in your group received a copy, please write to Frances Foster, 614 Arlington Street, Greensboro, N. C., and she will be glad to send you one.

Who Should Make This Gift?

We wonder if you have taken it upon yourself to see that something is done in your church for this fine cause . . . to provide a place for young people in the Tientsin region of North China to go for training along religious lines. It will mean much to you and your group if you will sacrifice—really give up—something for this. There is no more appropriate time than Christmas to make such a gift to the young people of another race on another side of the world. If you are interested, but not connected with any young people's organization in a church, send your gift of love for the young people of China—and as an indication of your interest in our young people in the Southeast—to the above mentioned treasurer of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship. No matter how small it is, it will be helpful. The sacrificial gifts of all the young people and any interested adults in our churches are eagerly sought and will be greatly appreciated.

MT. CARMEL YOUNG PEOPLE APPRECIATE LEADER.

In many churches the success of the young people's group depends largely on their faithful leader. Mt. Carmel Christian Church, near Walters, Va., has recently lost a member who was always a friend of the young people and anxious to help them. They write the following:

We, as members of the Young People's Missionary Society, regret the loss of our faithful and loyal leader, Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, who died at his home in Walters, Va., on Sunday, November 12, 1939.

He was our dependable leader for four years and we shall miss his guidance. The Bible was a precious book to his mind and heart. It was a source of strength to his soul. He stood firmly upon the precious promises, trusting in Jesus Christ and the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

"GOOD TIDINGS OF GREAT JOY."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC
FOR DECEMBER 24, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Luke 2:1-11.

(A CHRISTMAS PROGRAM.)

Daily Readings—

Monday—Joy of Knowing God—John 14:7-11.

Tuesday—Joy of Salvation—John 3:16, 17.

Wednesday—Joy of Adoption—Rom. 8:14-17.

Thursday—Joy of Brotherhood—Matt. 23:8-10.

Friday—Joy of a Divine Mediator—1 Tim. 2:3-6.

Saturday—Joy of Hope of Eternity—Titus 3:4-7.

May this Christmas be a day that will, indeed bring to memory "Good tidings of great joy." The birth of Christ was the happiest event in human history. The fact that Jesus became the Light of the world stirs in our hearts the emotion of deep and abiding joy.

Christmas has become so commercialized in America until we hardly recognize it as a religious festival. Certain religious groups do, but the mass of people do not. The vast majority of those who keep Christmas year after year do not have the proper regard for Him whom the day is supposed to honor. In the midst of all that goes on in the name of Christmas it is easy for us to lose sight of the true meaning and purpose of this altogether holy day, and turn it into a secular holiday.

Plan a public program or give a pageant which will deepen the Christian conception of the meaning of Christmas.

Sing Christmas carols. Let a group go caroling in the community. This will bring joy to heart of the aged and infirm.

Give the history and story of such Christmas hymns as "Silent Night." Then sing the hymn. Have "echo" singing. Have Christmas Eve night candle light service.

Prepare baskets or gifts for the underprivileged in your community.

S. E. M.

We, the members of Mt. Carmel Young People's Missionary Society, will hold in our memories a deep respect for his faithful work with us.

MASON HOLLAND,
Secretary.

We hope that the Mt. Carmel group will be able to find another consecrated leader who will lead them "onward and upward" during the coming years.

PARABLES OF THE KINGDOM.

LESSON XII—DECEMBER 17, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Matthew 13:1-53.

GOLDEN TEXT: Incline your ear, and come unto me; hear, and your soul shall live.—Isaiah 55:3.

Jesus Was the World's Supreme Story Teller.

This was probably one reason why the common people heard him gladly. He spoke in simple, picturesque, graphic language, and he put great spiritual mysteries in simple every day speech. In many instances he put them in story form, such as the story of the Prodigal Son or the story of the Good Samaritan. In today's lesson we have a series of such stories, or parables, by which Jesus illustrates various phases of the Kingdom of God. The word "parable" comes from a Greek word, "paraballo," which means "to put one thing by the side of another for the sake of comparison." In these parables, Jesus tells an earthly story with a heavenly meaning.

The Important Business of Hearing.

In what we call the Parable of the Sower, but which might more correctly be called the Parable of the Soils, Jesus emphasizes the importance and the responsibility of hearing. In a few swift and deft strokes he paints a picture of a man going out to sow some seed. Some fell on the hard-beaten path, some fell in shallow ground, some fell in rich ground but in ground which was heavily overgrown with thorns and weeds, while some fell on good ground. When called upon to give an interpretation of this parable, Jesus said the different types of soil represented different types of hearers—the stolid hearer, the sentimental hearer, the sordid hearer, and the sincere hearer. In every instance the sower is the same and the seed is the same. The difference is in the soil, in the heart of the hearers. It is significant to note also that even the seed which fell on the good ground did not bring forth always the same quantity—some was an hundredfold, some thirtyfold. This story emphasizes not only the importance of how one hears, and the response which one makes to the truth, but also our responsibility for sowing the seed. We are not responsible for the harvest, but we are responsible for sowing the seed. It is God who gives the increase.

Large Things From Small Beginnings.

In the story of the mustard seed, Jesus shows how even from small beginnings great things may come. There is a proverb to the effect, "Mighty oaks from little acorns grow." The growth of the kingdom of God illustrates this in a very striking way. Beginning with a humble Galilean peasant who had the kingdom of God in his own heart, the movement has grown until now in every nation of the world his gospel is preached, his church is established, and the things of the spirit are given recognition. Let no one therefore despise the day of small beginnings, either as concerning goodness in his own life or in the lives of others, as concerning the little church or the little Sunday school class to which he belongs, or as concerning the movements of righteousness in which he believes and to which he would give himself.

The Kingdom of God As a Power to Transform Things.

Several interpretations have been given to the story about the kingdom of God being likened unto leaven, or yeast. So great a scholar as Dr. G. Campbell Morgan believes that leaven is a symbol of evil. But there are others who believe that Jesus was thus putting in a graphic and vivid way how the kingdom as a silent, invisible, powerful, pervasive factor, slowly and gradually transforms either the individual, or the society into which it is introduced.

The Supreme Value of the Kingdom.

Jesus told two stories which emphasized the supreme value of the kingdom of Heaven. The first was about a man who while working in the field discovered a buried treasure. Out of sheer joy he sold all that he had and bought the field so that he might possess the treasure. The second story was about a merchantman who loved fine jewels and who found one that was surpassingly beautiful and precious. He sold all his other jewels and bought this one of great price.

It is to be noticed that there is this difference between the two stories. In the first case the man stumbled upon it. In the second instance the man was deliberately seeking it. Here again is a parable of life. Some men stumble, as it were by accident, into the Kingdom. But God uses them, and perhaps in some moment of silence, or through some great experience he makes himself known to them. Then they discover him to be life's supreme value. On the other hand, there are those who set themselves definitely upon the quest of the highest. With sincerity and persistence they give themselves diligently to seeking him who is also seeking them. As they find him they also find him precious unto their souls, life's highest and most supreme value.

The Kingdom of God a Divider of Men.

In a final story Jesus emphasizes again the final separation of the good from the evil. He does this by referring to a commonplace experience in the lives of those who heard him. Again and again they had seen the fishermen casting their nets into the Sea of Galilee, carefully hauling it to shore with its load of fishes of all kinds, and then sitting down and carefully sorting the good fish from the bad. Thus, said Jesus, would it be in the final judgment, at the end of the world. Ordinary life is such a mixture of good and evil that it is difficult, indeed it is impossible, for mere human beings to make the distinction. But at the great day of judgment, when the hearts of all men shall be revealed, this distinction will stand forth in sharp contrast. One ought to think soberly about the very frank way in which Jesus talked about this final division of men. Again and again in his teachings he referred to the wheat and the tares, the good and the evil, the light and the darkness, everlasting life and everlasting punishment. And it is significant that as he finished this group of stories he said, "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

ADVICE TO THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

light of the Lord. If only, during these coming days of strife, the nations would give Christianity a fair and honest trial, what a transformation we should see. It is not enough to defeat Germany in the field. By God's grace we must do that; but even more important is it to exorcise the evil spirit from Germany's heart and from our own hearts.

There is a patriotism that is sub-Christian, and there is a patriotism that is Christian. To seek selfishly our own national interests, regardless of those of other peoples, is to violate the spirit of Christ. But to see in our country the means whereby we may serve the whole human race—that is to share the patriotism of Jesus."

"Human nature is so constituted, that all see and judge better in the affairs of other men than in their own."

MONDAY.

"AN OBJECT OF CHRISTIANITY."

"Ye are the salt of the earth."—
Matt. 5:13.

It is natural that our influence has a seasoning effect on our environment. It is natural to spread that which is within one to whatever one touches. If it is evil, what hope is there? If it is good, what happiness there is!

It is a boon beyond measure to live in a house in a neighborhood where only wholesome, decent, friendly and God-fearing standards grow. The blessing is beyond comprehension.

This truth is an impelling challenge to all parents and to every home. What chance has a child brought up amidst profanity, drunkenness, ill-speech and harshness, dishonesty and criticism of neighbors? The writer sees a lot of this. The Christian home is God's hope for the world. This hope challenges the Church today.

Prayer—O Bountiful Father, save us from the poison of sin. Rule Thou our homes, and lives. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"A FRESH REDEEMER."

"By His stripes we are healed."—
Isa. 53:5.

The fifty-third chapter of Isaiah brings us into a fresh baptism of the graciousness and loveliness of the sufferings of our Savior. It is a satisfying comprehension of the deep things of our religion. It embraces the consideration of salvation by grace. It is a marvelous thing that a sinner can be saved by grace.

I have not much to give Thee, Lord,
For the great love that made Thee mine;
I have not much to give Thee, Lord,
But all I have is Thine.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"UNNECESSARY WHIMPERINGS."

"I put away childish things."—
I Cor. 13:11.

As we sail the Southern Seas, we have on board about twenty-five children from one to twelve months of age. These are children of officers and enlisted men's families. There are a great many types, of course, and they furnish a good cross-section of family life and child nature.

Jackie's toy auto got broken. He wept about it. In fact he "raised Cain," as we say, and made it miserable for everybody, by his whimperings. He had another auto but he wanted this one.

In the little child we have a picture of the perversity of adults—grieving, complaining, whining over trifles, petty worryings; it means that we simply have not grown up. If we must fret, let it be over something worthwhile.

Prayer—Our Father, forgive us for the sin of gloom and unhappiness we shed about us over trifles. Teach us, O Holy Spirit, how to forget the trifles and put emphasis on the important things. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth."—James 3:4.

It was only a match but it destroyed a widow's wheatfield. The horror and the enormity of the sin needs no description to an intelligent mind.

Such are the insidious habits of life. Hidden thoughts, unclean imagination, vengeful purposes, unholy desires, may all seem very small and insignificantly harmless; but in the divorce courts, juvenile courts, prisons, unhappy homes, in the crimes committed we see the deadly conflagrations of soul that have started from so small a thing.

Prayer—O Lord, deliver us from these hidden sins, though so small, that they threaten our souls. Help us to keep our hearts with all diligence. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"A CHRISTIAN'S LIBERTY."

"Every man that striveth for the Mastery is temperate in all things."—
I. Cor. 9:25.

Paul's Christian liberty was, that any abuse of that liberty is an offense to others and annuls the good that one may try to do. He who would be holy must live by the laws of holiness and not by his own standard of what pleases him. "He who waits at the altar must be partakers of the altar." Christianity sets one free indeed; free from the law because he does right without the law; free from guilt of sin, because he has no intentional guilt. Though free from men, says Paul, yet one must make himself not better than others, but the servant of all. Sinners cannot be won to Christ by hypocrisy; only by honest and true Christian living; and that takes a lot of self-denial.

Prayer—Our Father, baptize us with the Holy Spirit and make us willing to live sincere Christians. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"REMEMBER THE FUTURE."

"Remember the Lord thy God."—
Deut. 8:11-20.

We recently celebrated Armistice Day. What did it mean to you? What, in your opinion, does the celebration mean to most of the people?

First of all, Armistice Day is a memory. It brings to mind the unforgettable sacrifice of brave and loyal manhood of our country, from which loss and damages of that sacrifice they have not recovered; and it admonishes us to do our part to recover from that damage.

It also admonishes us of the preciousness of peace and invokes a sort of life that abolishes war. This can be done only by personal dedication to do our part in the great struggle

OUR PREACHER FOR THIS WEEK IS
REV. T. FRED WRIGHT,
WAVERLY, VA.

READY FOR THE FEAST.

“What think ye, that he will not come to the feast?—John 11: 56.

As we approach Christmas and hear the Christmas story, we think too much about the stable where Jesus was born, and not enough about the inn where he was refused entrance. There was no room in the inn. It was filled with good people, comfortably fixed, respectable people who had paid for their lodging. Their conversation was according to their interest. They were unaware of the great event taking place in their midst. They missed a great opportunity. Jesus might have been born in the inn, in a room made vacant by some who cared. Joseph and Mary and Jesus found no place in the comfortable inn. They could sleep with cattle.

The text comes from a period many years later. There was a crowd in Jerusalem for the Passover feast. The discussion turns to Jesus of Nazareth. Will he come to the feast? He has come on other years, but will he come this time? What think ye? Do you suppose that anyone had invited him? Had any scribe, Pharisee, or Sadducee sent him word that they would like for him to be sure to come to the feast?

This year at Christmas time there will be feasts in thousands of homes where Jesus will not even be mentioned. Many friends will be invited, Christmas cards and expensive presents will abound, but Jesus will not be invited. He will not be wanted. Some of these homes will contain members of our churches. But what think ye, will Jesus come to the feast?

The Christmas spirit may be there, but not the spirit of Christ. “Spirits” are often used at Christmas time, but such “spirits” do not invite the spirit of Jesus, and those who drink the “spirits” do not want the Master to attend their feast.

Perhaps it is not sinful to commercialize Christmas. But what a pity to miss the things that would come with the presence of Jesus at the feast! Money and pleasure can never take the place of that divine presence that might have been in the inn on the first Christmas, and that can be in your home and mine at every Christmas feast.

“If a child asks for bread, will we give him a stone?” If he asks for Christmas, will we give him Santa Claus? We are celebrating a Birthday. Let us not forget the honored guest. What a pity that Christ has so little part in our everyday living.

Religion is two-fold. On the one side man is reaching up in search of God. We call that faith. On the other side, God is reaching down to help man. We call that Grace. The true meaning of Christmas is that God at Bethlehem revealed himself and his love to man.

There are three words that stand out in the drama of the Incarnation.

The first is love. Without love Christmas has no meaning. The heart of Christmas is love.

The second word is sacrifice. What did God hope to gain by giving his Son. What did Jesus hope to gain by coming? Nothing. It was an act of sacrifice.

The third word is service. Jesus came to seek and to save, to give sight to the blind, and to lift up the fallen. He came not to be ministered unto, but to minister.

Christmas is a challenge. It challenges us to love, sacrifice, and serve. God came to earth in human flesh and put meaning into these words. We are to follow the example of Christ.

It may seem strange that no one ever asks us at Christmas, “What did you give?” Instead the question is, “What did you get?” We do not say, “Did you give anyone a nice Christmas?” We do say, “Did you have a nice Christ?” Christmas challenges us to deny ourselves and to meet the needs of others.

What think ye, will Christ come to the feast, to the party, to your home, to your heart at Christmas this year? What think ye?

GOOD USE OF BULLETINS.

Another program is a consecration service for church school workers. This bulletin contains the list of officers for the church, Sunday school, and all church-related organizations.

At the end of the Conference year the bulletin not only carries a fine message on stewardship, but gives the pastor's report, from which these sentences are taken: “During the year your pastor prepared and preached 102 sermons; made 1,306 pastoral calls; posted 1,289 pieces of mail to church people; distributed 3,391 pieces of religious literature; attended 112 group meetings other than regular Sunday services; drove his car more than 10,000 miles doing pastoral work; received 13 members into the church; performed four marriage ceremonies; and conducted nine funerals. . . . You have shared in the work by making it possible for your pastor to give his time and energy in the service of the church.”

Such use of mimeographed bulletins is certainly helpful. The Promotional Secretary will gladly aid churches that do not have such bulletins in getting started to use them. The cost is probably less than you think. They tone up the service of worship, put into permanent form the history of the church as it is being made, show what preparation has been made for the service of worship, and make it possible for the message of the church to bless those who were not in the service (shut-ins and absentees should always be sent a bulletin).

FAMILY ALTAR.

for a world that shall be ruled by righteousness and brotherhood.

Prayer—O Lord, Thou art able to make the most of the world praise Thee, rule Thou our hearts, and make us a part of Thy Kingdom to come. Amen.

SUNDAY.

“READY PRAYER.”

“Continuing instant in prayer.”—I Cor. 12: 12.

Did it ever occur to you that one cannot pray instantly, and do well, without having back of him a well disciplined life of prayer?

Peter sinking in the water with no time for formal petition, could only throw up his hands and cry for help. But Peter had in his soul a prayer-life that continued in an emergency.

To such a one prayer is an involuntary turning of the spirit of the Father. It is attitude. It is a slant of soul. It is a life lived daily Godward. Thus we pray when we go about our work as well as when we are on our knees. Without this continued living sort of prayer life the soul starves and goes dry. Such a one has but a dry well to draw from in an emergency.

Prayer—O Lord, all our expectations are in Thee. Whatever we do, we would keep the windows of our soul open toward Thee always. Amen.

Marriages

AYSUCUE-WHEELER.

Friends will learn with surprised interest of the wedding of Miss Elizabeth May Wheeler and Mr. Marvin Ayscue, which has been announced only recently.

The wedding was solemnized June 5, 1937, at the parsonage of Rev. W. L. Burks, Methodist minister, at Boydton, Va. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Nannie Gordon of Henderson, N. C., while the groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Ayscue of Epsom. After a delayed wedding trip the couple will make their home with the groom's parents.

In Memoriam

COOPER.

Linwood Cooper was born near Franklin, in Southampton County, Va., August 27, 1903, and died September 16, 1939. He joined the Sunday school and Franklin Christian Church when a boy and remained a faithful member until his death.

Brother Cooper lived in Franklin practically all his life, and was a very industrious man, a good plumber, devoted to his loved ones, kind-hearted and generous, and an excellent neighbor. He leaves to mourn his departure a mother, wife and daughter and two sisters besides a host of friends, who are deprived of his fellowship.

Therefore, be it resolved:

That we extend our sympathy to his loved ones.

That a copy of these resolutions be recorded on the minutes, a copy be sent to the family, and a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

BRINKLEY.

On August 1, 1939, the death angel bore away from our midst one of our beloved friends, and neighbor, Mrs. Ida Brinkley. She was a loyal member of Cypress Chapel Christian Church and Ladies' Aid Society, a consecrated Sunday school and church worker. She was one who was ever ready to lend a helping hand to the needy in the community. She was a true friend who always went about her task with a smile, a devoted wife and mother. We commend her example of faith and love for Christ's works to all who knew and loved her.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we deeply mourn the loss of this dear friend and member of the Ladies' Aid Society, but being assured that our loss is heaven's gain we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

2. That we extend anew our deepest sympathy and love to her family, and commend them to Christ who alone can bind up broken hearts.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy spread on the minutes of this society, and a copy sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Respectfully submitted,

Mrs. CLARENCE BUNCH,
Mrs. G. C. MANN,
Mrs. FRANK HARRELL,
Mrs. F. E. PARKER,

BYRD.

On November 30, 1939, Mr. O. T. Byrd of Suffolk, Va., was hit by an automobile. He died of his injuries on Sunday, December 3, 1939. He is survived by his widow; two daughters, Mrs. J. W. Brinkley of Suffolk and Mrs. J. H. Duke of Nausemond County; one son, Delaney C.; two grandchildren; his mother, Mrs. A. T. Byrd of Suffolk; three sisters, Mrs. O. L. Holland of Suffolk and Mrs. James Bonds and Mrs. Frank Spady of Portsmouth; two brothers, N. H. Byrd of Chuckatuck and J. A. Byrd of Suffolk.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer Tuesday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock. May the God of all mercies bless and keep those left behind.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

CORBITT.

Damasens Christian Church, Sunbury, N. C., during its more than one hundred years of history has rarely lost a more valued and esteemed member than Deacon J. Richard Corbitt who died after a long illness on August 25, 1939.

His place in the affectionate regard and esteem of the church and community was manifested by the multitude of friends who came long distances through an incessant downpour of rain to assemble at the church to do him honor on the day of the funeral.

He leaves to mourn their loss his widow, Pearl; three sons, Fletcher, Russell and Otis; two brothers, J. Benjamin Corbitt of Hertford, N. C. and John E. Corbitt of Sunbury; a sister, Mrs. D. S. Rountree of Drum Hill; two half-brothers, Otho L. Corbitt of Miami, Fla. and H. E. Corbitt of Newport News, Va.; two half-sisters, Mrs. Irvine Howell of Hilton Village, Va. and Miss Gladys Corbitt of Richmond, Va.; besides a large group of nephews, nieces, and other relatives.

The memorial service at the church was in charge of his pastor, the Rev. C. Rexford Raymond, assisted by his former pastor, the Rev. J. M. Roberts of Windsor, Va., and his warm personal friend, the Rev. O. D. Poythress of South Norfolk, Va.

funeral service was conducted at the church by Rev. M. W. Mann.

She was a daughter of William Perry Byrd and Catherine Burkholder Byrd. She is survived by one sister, Miss Maggie Byrd, and a brother, Joseph Byrd, both of Harrisonburg, Va.

Mrs. Henton was of retiring and unassuming disposition and will be missed by her many friends, especially the members of Antioch Christian Church, for she was always eager to help her church in any way possible.

JONES.

Mrs. Sarah Jane Williamson Jones, 78, a member of Nausemond (Va.) County's oldest families, died December 1, 1939. She is survived by her daughter, with whom she made her home, Mrs. Jack R. Shryer, Suffolk, Va.; four grandchildren, Sarah, Robert, James, and Jane Jones, of Denver, Colo.; and a half-brother, Paul Hosier, of Mississippi.

Mrs. Jones was for many years a faithful member of the Suffolk Christian Church. Her funeral was conducted by her pastor, assisted by the Rev. H. N. Tucker, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Suffolk.

JOHN G. TRUITT,

BRADSHAW.

It is with deep sorrow that we, the members of the Woman's Missionary Society of Mt. Carmel (Va.) Christian Church, record the passing of our much loved member, Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, on November 12, 1939.

Mr. Bradshaw was an honorary member of our society, and was loyal to it as long as the Lord permitted, always willing to help in anything pertaining to the church and missions.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we are grateful for what his life has meant to us, for the peaceful, kind, and happy life that seemed to be his.

2. That we realize that God doeth all things well, and while we mourn the loss of one who has meant much to his church, home, and community, we bow in humble submission to His divine will.

3. That we extend to his wife and family our deepest sympathy, realizing that they have lost a good, kind, and loving husband and father.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, one sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication, and a copy be entered on the records of our society.

EDWARDS.

Brother George Washington Edwards, Fancy Gap, Va., was found dead in bed on

GEORGE WASHINGTON EDWARDS.

November 24, 1939, at the age of 81. His body was laid to rest the next day, beside that of his daughter "Victoria of the Hills," after services had been conducted at the Elk Spur Church by Rev. C. D. Crouch of the Moravian Church.

"Wash," as he was called in the local community, was a deacon of the Elk Spur Church and loved his church and pastor very much. His widow, Jane, two daughters, and five sons survive him. He worked hard the day before he died and seemed to have passed away quietly in his sleep. He will be missed by his community, church, relatives and friends. May the love of Jesus comfort the bereaved.

B. J. EARP, Pastor.

VINCENT.

John Edward Vincent, 83, one of Suffolk's prominent citizens, a loyal and devoted member of the Suffolk Christian Church, died December 1, 1939. He is survived by two daughters, Mrs. E. E. Rawlings, Capron, Va., and Miss Elizabeth Vincent, Suffolk; three sons, John A., Suffolk; William S., Baltimore; and Harvey L., Washington; two grandchildren, William V. Rawlings and Mrs. Darden W. Jones of Franklin; five sisters, Mrs. E. P. Lankford, Mrs. T. E. Williams, and Mrs. E. P. Downing, Salisbury, Md.; and Mrs. M. V. Bounds and Mrs. John R. Wycle, Weldon, N. C.

Brother Vincent was known, honored, and loved as one of the noble men of his community, both in Suffolk and in the Holy Neck Community where he lived many years. Funeral services were conducted by his pastor, the writer, and Rev. A. L. Franklin of the Methodist Church.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
 Pastor.

LOTZIA.

On Monday, November 27, 1939, Mrs. Eudora C. Jones Lotzia, 90 years of age, was called to her heavenly reward. Mrs. Lotzia was born in the city of Suffolk, Va., and lived here more than seventy years. She was at the time of her death the oldest member of the Suffolk Christian Church. Praises of her life, and her labors in her church are many by the older members of the congregation, who so well remember the active and leading part she took in the work of the church. She died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. M. L. Lect, Norfolk, Va.

Her funeral was conducted in Suffolk on November 29, 1939, by her former pastor, Rev. H. S. Hardeastle, and the writer.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
 Pastor.

BARKER.

Brother J. Manley Barker died on November 1, 1939. He was a faithful member of the Bible Class of the First Christian Church, High Point, N. C., as long as his health would permit him to attend. We miss his presence, but we know that those who doeth all things well are with God. We miss him greatly, but we hope to meet him in that beautiful home on high some day. Although our class is sad because of his passing, he left a lot of love and sunshine to brighten up our way as we think of him. We are thankful to have had such a member in our class.

THANKSGIVING SUNRISE SERVICE.

The young people's missionary society of Cypress Chapel Christian Church, near Suffolk, Va., held a sunrise service on Thanksgiving morning. Thirty-five of the forty members were present to give thanks to God as the sun rose on that day. Their pastor, Rev. R. E. Brittle, gave an appropriate talk, they sang Thanksgiving songs, and they gave thanks to God in prayer. Each young person was asked to bring fruit as a gift for others. As a result eight baskets were packed and sent to sick and shut-in people in the community. Mrs. W. L. Harrell is the superintendent of this young people's society.

His Name

WONDERFUL

Wonderful! Wonderful!
Ring out the Name, O Christmas chimes!
Wonderful! Wonderful!
Echo the word to farthest climes!
May the splendor of this great Name
Shine and glow with a mighty flame,
Filling thy life with its glorious rays,
Filling thy spirit with Christmas praise.

COUNSELLOR

Mist and cloud and darkness veil the wintry
hour,
But the sun dispels them with his rising power.
Mist and cloud and darkness often dim thy day,
But a Christmas glory shines upon thy way.
May the Lord of Christmas, Counsellor and Friend,
Light thy desert pathway even to the end.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE

O Name of beauty and of calm!
O Name of rest and balm,
Of exquisite delight,
And yet of sovereignty and might!
Let it make music in thy heart today,
And bid thee go rejoicing on thy way;
For Jesus is thy Peace, thy Prince of Peace, Whose reign within thy heart shall evermore increase.

—Frances R. Havergal.

THE MIGHTY GOD

The Christmas bells proclaim
His glorious Name,
"The mighty God!"
God manifest indeed,
And yet the woman's Seed,
To whom we sing
All glory, praise, and laud!
Divinest Lord and King.

THE EVERLASTING FATHER

O Name of gentlest grace,
O Name of strength and might,
Meeting the heart-need of our orphaned race
With tenderest delight!
Our Everlasting Father! This is He
Who came in deep humility
A little Child to be!

THE CHRISTMAS MESSAGE FOR TODAY.

Christmas is a challenge to our thinking. Business and pleasure may claim our attention through most of the year, but when Christmas comes there are new (yet old) questions that come to our minds.

Religionists have thought on these things for centuries and have not come to a unanimous conclusion about many of them. All of us must give some thought to things that are above and beyond us. The wise thing for each of us is to accept the values that come to us from antiquity, whether we can answer all the queries raised or not. Use all the intellect you have, then follow the gleam by faith.

The world into which Jesus came was much like our own. Economically, some people had too much, and many had not enough. Politically, Rome ruled much of the world and held multitudes in subjection. Religiously, people kept to forms and ceremonies, but thought little of human values. Law stood far above love in the minds of men and of nations. God was far away and entered but little into the affairs of men.

God Becomes Man.

In the Gospel of St. John we are told that the Word (meaning Jesus) became flesh. This philosophy found in the first chapter of the Fourth Gospel falls strangely upon the ears of those who have never heard of Christmas or the Christian Church, but it has in it the wisdom of God and the music of angels for those who know and believe the Christmas story and the life of Him who was born of Mary in Bethlehem the night the shepherds came to see the new-born Redeemer. Unless God comes into human flesh and shares in human problems, God has little place in the thought and conduct of men. If God is far removed and cares not what happens to us, then we know Him not and love Him not.

But Christmas tells us that God has come to earth in human flesh. He walked among men, and was known of them. He was the light that shineth unto the perfect day. He was the friend who brought joy to those who sought Him. He was the life that all men should live. Whatever Jesus was in the days of his flesh, He is now. And He is more than that to all who love Him.

A Saviour Is Born.

When Dr. Luke gathered the facts and wrote down the things that were surely believed among the followers of Jesus, he told the marvelous story of shepherds watching their flocks by night, of angels speaking and singing, and of a visit to Bethlehem where they found the Babe in a manger, just as the angel had said. For nearly two thousand years people have told, read, and re-told that beautiful story. About a manger crib multitudes have gathered annually to sing praises to the Father (God) and the Son (Jesus), and have gone back to their places of business with rejoicing hearts.

They have found a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord. It is salvation that brings real joy to the human heart. It is salvation that we need, and that our world needs. We need to be lifted out of our narrow, warped, sinful selves into the bigger beings that God intended us to be. Nations need to renounce war and selfishness not merely by signing a paper, but by all the processes of government. Those who are responsible for the leadership of the Church need to be saved from narrow views and personal ambitions. We all need to find a Redeemer who lifts us up into the presence of the God who lives in human flesh.

Christmas tells us in music and story of the redeeming love of the eternal God whose Son came to earth and made for us Christmas.

Wise Men Worship.

The second chapter of the Gospel according to St. Matthew tells of wise men of the East journeying far to find the Babe of Bethlehem to whom they presented offerings costly and sweet as part of their worship. Wise men worshipped Christ at his birth, and wise men still worship Him.

When we have done our best with our philosophy we cannot explain all about flowers, man, or God. When we have done our best with our lives, we bring them into the presence of God in Christ and leave them there. With songs of praise, with service sacrificial, and with offerings costly, we worship our Redeemer and Lord.

Into a world of conflict, of doubt, of despair, and of death, comes the quiet Christmas message. Silently the dawn breaks, beauty lights the eastern sky, music sings in the hearts of men, and those who are wise leave their selfishness and find renewal in the presence of the Christ Child who was both man and God.

The Christmas message is exactly what the world needs today. Man is too little, ignorant and selfish, to live without God. We need the Incarnation. We need to be redeemed, to be purified, to be saved by the power of God's grace. And we need to know that wisdom leads us to the place of worship. All of this is the message of Christmas, and the need of our world. This is the way for the fulfillment of the hope of the human heart and the message of the angel who spoke for God: "Peace on earth, good will to men."

THANK YOU, ONE AND ALL.

This good year will soon close. With these lines your editor completes his job until the New Year begins. There will be no paper issued next week. The workers all take holiday and join with you in celebrating the Birthday we all love.

The past year has not been perfect. But there is much for which we are devoutly grateful. Thanks to all who have had a part in making this paper, and our Church. God bless you every one. May your Christmas be happy and your New Year bright.

Christmas, a Holy Day.

By I. W. JOHNSON, D. D

Christmas is a great holiday. It should be a great religious festival. Childhood welcomes the day; middle life should honor its significance and respect its history. It commemorates the birth of a Child. On that day the Lord Jesus Christ should be crowned King of kings and Lord of all the earth. Christmas Carols and great Anthems of Praise are a sacrilege when offered in the name of an ordinary child of human parents. The Child Jesus is either an idol or the Lord. In the lowly manger He was as Divine as when He hung upon the cross. Lifted from the bed of straw He was the Son of God as truly as when He arose from the dead. He did not become the Son of God by a process of growth, education and development, He was—and He is—the Son of God by birth.

Christmas should not humanize Jesus; it should magnify His Divinity. Jesus was more than the Son of a Jewess; He was the Son of a Man. He was more than a Son of God; He was the Son of God, the only Begotten of the Father. God was watching that stable while that mother was in travail, comforted and encouraged by Joseph, her devoted husband. The angelic choir was waiting for that first cry of this Holy Child. Suddenly the Judean hills echoed a new song. Such a song had not been heard on earth by human ears. Sweet harmony, beautiful words significant message! The world was tired of war-cry, glittering swords, sharpened spears and flying javelins. It is weary of war today. Then humanity wanted peace. Today people desire rest from conflict. In the stillness of that historic night the message came: "Fear not: for, behold, I bring unto you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." And then this heavenly "Call to Worship" was followed by "a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

Is that story the poetic creation of ignorant minds under the spell of mystic, religious enthusiasm? Bethlehem was a city, located in a part of Palestine well known, even in this far distant day. The land was real, the city was real, the shepherds were real, the Child was real, the words were real. We have everything, in that event, except a picture of the angels and a record of the tune to which these words were sung. Nothing could be more convincing that this story is based upon fact, and not upon fancy. The record is satisfying to

ALL MY HEART THIS NIGHT REJOICES.

All my heart this night rejoices,
As I hear, far and near,
Sweetest angel voices;
"Christ is born," their choirs are singing,
Till the air everywhere
Now with joy is ringing.

Hark! a voice from yonder manger,
Soft and sweet, doth entreat,
"Flee from woe and danger;
Brethren, come; from all doth grieve you
You are freed; all you need
I will surely give you."

Come, then, let us hasten yonder;
Here let us all, great and small
Kneel in awe and wonder.
Love Him who with love is yearning;
Hail the Star, that from far
Bright with hope is burning.

Thee, dear Lord, with heed I'll cherish,
Live to Thee, and with Thee
Dying, shall not perish;
But shall dwell with Thee forever,
Far on high, in the joy
That can alter never.

—Paul Gerhardt, 1656.

clear minds and believing hearts. Jesus was born. The angels did sing. The shepherds and the wise men saw Him. They worshipped Him. Parents and children, old age and youth, should unite in songs of praise and exchange of gifts, if they believe in Him, and should open their hearts to let Him reign as Lord and Master of all life.

Do not rob children of the joy of Santa Claus, when such a spirit opens their hearts to appreciate the gift of God, when Jesus came as a little Child. Santa Claus, when properly understood, is the personification of

A YOUNG MINISTER LOOKS AT CHRISTMAS.

By DUANE VORE.

Christmas has become a time of giving and receiving gifts. We have permitted ourselves to make it a time of commercialized merry-making, buying and selling. Haven't we forgotten the admonition to place "first things first?"

Christmas should be a time of thought, thought not of what we have done for others but thought of what others have done for us. It should be a time in which a clear vision shows us the importance of brotherhood, peace and love. It should be a time when all men strive to make more useful the teachings and laws of the Master, rather than a time when men seek to place others in subjection to their power. Christmas should be a time when men think not of duty, but of opportunities to do good, to bring joy, to act kindly. Christmas should be a time of giving—not just the giving of material gifts, but the giving of self to make a better world, as God himself gave His Son on a Christmas long ago. This is what Christmas should be for Christian men; a time in which they know the Master more closely than ever before and allow their lives to be ruled completely by Him.

Perhaps some would say, "But how are we to make Christmas mean this?" We have seen one example of absolute consecration and dedication of a life, that of the Master Himself. Ours can never be as complete as His, but at this Christmas season let us make one gift, that of our lives to His guidance and care. Let us dedicate and consecrate our lives to His service. We will be placing "first things first." We will then be making Christmas truly a time of birth, the coming of Christ in our own lives.

good cheer, liberal giving and happy living. Jesus can make children happy. He wants them to sing and play. He wants them to love Him, more than they love Santa Claus and the gifts they receive at Christmas. Put more of Christ in our Christmas cheer and festivity. Keep out the bad and bring in the good. It is not a time for revelry, but rejoicing and praise. It is a Holy Day.

Children's Page

Dear Friends :

Last year at this time I was having great fun with my Primary boys and girls in Chicago. Their church was very large and as beautiful as it was big. My boys and girls were children of Chicago's wealthier parents. But they were not spoiled and they were having as much fun as I. We were getting ready for Christmas!

In another part of the city was a Neighborhood House where poor boys and girls went to Sunday school and church. Most of my boys and girls had visited that House. They had seen the little boys and girls who came there to learn about Jesus. So when we asked our boys and girls what they wanted to do for Christmas they said that they wanted to help the boys and girls at the Neighborhood House to have a happy Christmas. We teachers visited the teachers in the House and talked with them about what our boys and girls wished to do. They gave us the names and ages of all the boys and girls in the children's department. We told them that we would see that each boy and girl would get a gift that Christmas.

Three weeks before Christmas our boys and girls had brought toys, books, dolls, skates, and almost every kind of a gift that you could think of, which they had been given on other Christmas days. On each package we put a slip of paper telling what was in the package and the age of the boy or girl who would like a gift like that.

About this time last year we all met at the church one afternoon after school. Some of the boys wrote names on the cards. Other boys punched holes in the cards to put the string through so that it could be tied with ribbon to each gift. Girls were busy sticking Christmas greetings on one end of the cards. We finished the cards that afternoon. Then two other afternoons we came back and wrapped the gifts in white tissue paper and tied them up with bright colored ribbon. Some of the boys and girls could wrap up the gifts so nicely. I could not do as well as they. When our gifts were all ready to take to the Neighborhood House they looked lovely. But we were sorry that the work was all finished because it had given us so much joy to work together on those gifts which were to help others to find happiness at Christmas.

Now may I wish for each boy and girl who reads this page a very happy Christmas? I shall write you again on the first week in the New Year—So until then, as Tiny Tim said, "God bless you every one."

Away in a manger, no crib for His bed,
The little Lord Jesus lay down His sweet head,
The stars in the bright sky looked down where He lay—
The little Lord Jesus asleep on the hay.

big road that led to the city, and she had said that she would fix a lunch for him. Of course, Samuel was going with him, but before they could go they must watch their father light the first candle for Judas Maccabeus. He would light one each day until eight candles were burning.

As they sat down for breakfast, Baruch, Reuben's father, lit the candle. Then he read from the Bible. He read in the book of the Maccabees how the great Judas had led his people in battle and won back their Temple that had been taken from them. Then he asked the children if they had questions they wanted answered. He always let each of the children ask one question.

"Why don't we have the Temple now?" asked Reuben.

"Because it was not God's plan," their father answered. "Our people thought that Judas was the Messiah who would give to us our Kingdom, but he was not and that which he won for us was taken again."

Leah wanted to know why her father had to light so many candles. She asked her question before Samuel had a chance. Father always let Samuel ask his question before Leah. But, Father answered Leah's question by reading these words from the fourth chapter of the book he had read from: "And Judas ordained that the days of the dedication of the altar should be the space of eight days."

Samuel wanted to know if they would ever have another Temple.

"We may some day," replied Baruch. "That is, when the great and true King comes to us."

After breakfast Reuben and Samuel started their long walk to the hill beside the big road. As they walked they thought about the day when the true King would come to his people.

THE MOST BEAUTIFUL CHRISTMAS STORY.

This writer trusts that at this Christmas season all CHRISTIAN SUN readers will enjoy the pleasure and privilege of reading the most beautiful Christmas story ever written. I refer, of course, to the story given us in Luke, the Third Gospel, second chapter, eight to twentieth verses included. Almost every tongue and nation now has its Christmas carols, but no carol ever written equals this one by Luke, the faithful physician. The fact is, as readers generally know, this story of the Advent and Nativity by Luke has been the inspiration of most of the Christmas carols that the world now has, and that we get from various sources. We do not quote what Luke says, trusting and believing that sometime during the Christmas period CHRISTIAN SUN readers of their own accord will turn to this wonderful message about the first Christmas, telling as it does of the beginning of Christmas and the birth of the Child, who has given us Christmas and all the good things and great joy that the Christmas Season brings to us.

And then to give us further joy and satisfaction we should turn to the wonderful words of the Prophet Isaiah written several hundred years before the first Christmas Day and the birth of the Christ Child. I refer to that passage in Isaiah found in the second chapter beginning with the third verse: "For out of Zion shall go forth the law and the word of Jehovah from Jerusalem. He will judge between the nations and will decide concerning many peoples; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." At this time when the world is up-set with war and the rumors of war and many nations are engaged in bitter conflicts that result in death and untold destruction of property, it is well for us to comfort ourselves with the words of the prophet as we remember Christmas and the beginning of Christmas.

The good Book tells us that "A little child shall lead them." Well, a little child is leading us, for none but children can put on such a holiday and festive occasion and happy period as that of Christmas. It is the children's season, for it was a Child, the birth of a Child, that instituted Christmas, and its influence has broadened as the years pass. More and more people celebrate Christmas year after year and this is because it is the celebration of the birth of a Child, a Child whose life, very humble indeed in its origin, here on earth, has had and is having, as we have pointed out before, more influence on the lives of men and women than all the armies and all the navies of all the nations on earth combined. Christmas is the period of the merry prattle of childhood and the effort on the part of adults to make children happy. Those homes will have the happiest Christmas in which there are children and in which homes an effort is made unselfishly to make the children happy. The brilliant lights of the Christmas tree in millions of homes will delight the gaze of children and the gifts on the Christmas tree for the children will carry joy and happiness to millions of happy children. All of this we shall bear in mind has grown out of the story told by Luke and others of the brilliant star that the shepherds on Judean hills saw on the first Christmas Eve, and the story so beautifully told of the Wise Men coming from the far East to inquire into the mystery of the star and to make their offerings in answer to this mystery of gold, frankincense and myrrh. Our hearts will be warmed and rejoiced afresh by reading again the story that has grown in interest, in pageantry and in power through the centuries.

A Merry, Merry Christmas to all who may chance to see these lines.

Christians at Christmas

By LEONARD M. OUTERBRIDGE.

"For there is born to you this day in the city of David a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord."

Journeying swiftly, silently, through the long hours of darkness, the Three Magi of the East traveled twelve nights under the quiet stars.

"And they came into the house and saw the young child with Mary his mother and they fell down and worshipped him; and opening their treasures they offered unto him gifts."

What shall we give this Christmas? Christians turn the world upside down to give gifts to one another. The joy and gladness of it all is like the warm sunshine upon a glorious garden. Yet, too much of our giving is really very selfish. We give generously to those who we expect will give to us, and often give sparingly or not at all to those unlikely to think of us. Thus we make a travesty of Christmas.

But Jesus said, "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the angels with him . . . before him shall be gathered all the nations. . . . Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, 'Come, ye blessed of my father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was hungry, and ye gave me to eat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in, naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me' . . ."

On birthdays it is customary to give to the loved one whose birthday it is, a gift. Christmas is the birthday of our Lord. We can only give to him as we give to others. Gifts to missions are gifts of love in the name of Christ the Lord, giving healing to the suffering, comfort to the sorrowing, courage to the heavily laden, and peace to the anxious. Loving even the unlovely for the sake of what they might become if only God's love could be shed upon their lives is ever the ministry of Christ's Church. Christmas will be even more joyous if we give gifts that are creative of joy to others, who, through our gifts, may discover the Christ Child as their Lord.

CHRISTMAS CUSTOMS AND TRADITIONS.

[Adapted from "Christmas—An Anthology of Literature and Art."]

ICELAND.

Since there are not many trees in Iceland, the people there make their own Christmas trees by tying the branches of a cedar-like shrub onto a skeleton tree made of poles. Prune cake and bread fried in mutton tallow are special delicacies for Christmas.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA.

In countries like Czechoslovakia and Poland, what have been Christmas customs may this year be only traditions that can no longer be followed. One custom of this country was for a girl to place a twig of cherry blossom in water on December 4. If it blossomed by Christmas Eve, she would be married during the next year! Between Advent and Christmas Eve, the women and girls make feather beds. On Christmas Day there is a ceremony or song or saying for almost every hour. On Christmas Eve one of the customs is to set tiny candles in nut-shells floating in a pan of water. The person whose candle stands up and burns the longest is going to have the happiest and longest life. The day after Christmas is the day for carol singing, from house to house. On January 6, the "Three Kings" sing carols in the streets, stop at their friends' homes and bless them, and leave their initials on the door.

POLAND.

The celebrations in Poland center almost entirely around Christ's birth. From every home you will hear ancient carols—dating back to the fifteenth century—being sung on Christmas Eve. These were originally sung by priests and their choir boys among the villages, and have been memorized by the people.

FRANCE.

In some sections of France, on December 4, grains of wheat are placed on water in plates. These are put in a sunny place. If the grain sprouts and grows well, there will be a plentiful harvest, it is believed. They also believe that the twelve days before Christmas foretell the weather for the twelve months to come.

The whole family will take part in bringing in the yule-log, which is usually taken from a fruit-bearing tree, often an olive. If you are able to get a log which will last from Christmas Eve to New Year's Day evening, that is best. This log is revered, cut down, brought to the house, placed in the fireplace with care,

Most French homes will have a "ereche," a word which is becoming familiar in this country now. That is, they will have a miniature manger, with all the figures associated with it. On Christmas Eve candles are lighted around it.

SPAIN.

Spaniards never go to bed before twelve o'clock on Christmas Eve. Every person is supposed to do at least one good deed on that day. After the "Cock-Crow Mass," when the Babe's birth is celebrated, the people go out into the streets and make merry the rest of the night. It is believed that the Virgin will bless every home in

WHAT MAKES CHRISTMAS.

It was not the angels' singing
Gave the Christmas thought,
Not the precious gold incense
By the Wise Men brought;

Not the shining Star that led them
On their unknown way;
'Twas the Christ within the manger
Made the Christmas Day.

So 'tis not the tree and presents
Make OUR Christmas Day,
'Tis not what we get that counts,
But—what we give away.

'Tis the joy of loving service
Makes the glad hours bright,
Thinking first of others' pleasure,
Self put out of sight.

We need never mourn that Christmas
Comes but once a year,
Since the blessedness of giving
Brings the Christmas cheer.

If we keep the Christmas spirit
In our hearts always,
Through the whole year we can make it
Christmas every day.

—Annie Johnson Flint.

which she finds a picture of her Son on Christmas Eve. On January 6, the children place their shoes filled with straw, for the horses, on their balconies, expecting that the "Wise Men" will fill them, in turn, with sweets.

ENGLAND.

In England we find customs much the same as ours—Christmas trees, Christmas cards, gifts, and a family dinner on Christmas Day. Also there is carol singing on Christmas Eve. They, like the French, have the tradition of a yule-log, lit on Christmas Eve and kept burning, if possible, until New Year's Day. In England, as in many other countries, the festivities connected with Christmas last until "Twelfth Night" in commemoration of the visit of the Wise Men and the giving of the Gospel to the Gentiles.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The children are all looking forward to Christmas. Of course, they are looking forward with expectation of being remembered by "Old Santa." It takes a lot of time and work to check and double check to see that each child is remembered and no one disappointed. When a package is sent in with a child's name on it, we do not open it, but give it to the child whose name appears on the package. We then try to see to it that all the children get as near an equal number of presents as possible.

We do our best to see to it that all are made happy, so they can enjoy the Christmas season. They are also looking forward to a Christmas dinner with chicken and cranberry sauce. The good women have always made it possible for the children to have a good dinner on Christmas day, and the ladies who have charge of the dinner see how nice and inviting they can make it.

Our good friends always send in candy, oranges and apples to help us in making the children happy. You may not realize it, but the greatest joy you will have this Christmas will not be in what you receive, but what you give to make others happy. A little toy will make a little boy happy. It need not be a costly toy.

Just to be remembered at Christmas brings happiness. It is a time when every girl and boy should remember father and mother (if living) with some little gift, so they will feel that they are not forgotten. It may not be a costly gift. The joy comes to them from being remembered.

But let us all remember, in all our joy and happiness during the Christmas season, that the birth of Jesus made it possible. When the Wise Men found the Christ Child they fell down and worshipped Him. Let us not forget to worship Him.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

NOTE.—As the last form of this Christmas issue goes to press, we learn from its good superintendent that the Orphanage has raised $18,113.12 to date. This means that it is still short of its goal of $20,000.00 by an amount $1,886.88. In order to reach that goal, this amount must be in the superintendent's hands before January 1, 1940. Surely our people will not "let the Orphanage down" at this Christmas season.

THE PRINTER.

How Far to Bethlehem?

"How far is it to Bethlehem town?"
Just over erusalem hills adown,
Past lovely Rachel's white-domed tomb—
Sweet shrine of motherhood's young doom.

It isn't far to Bethlehem town—
Just over the dusty roads adown,
Past Wise Men's well, still offering
Cool draughts from welcome wayside spring;
Past shepherds with their flutes of reed
That charm the woolly sheep they lead;
Past boys with kites on hilltops flying,
And soon you're there where Bethlehem's lying.
Sunned white and sweet on olived slopes,
Gold-lighted still with Judah's hopes.

And so we find the Shepherd's field
And plain that gave rich Boaz yield;
And look where Herod's villa stood.
We thrill that earthly parenthood
Could foster Christ who was all-good;
And thrill that Bethlehem town today
Looks down on Christian homes that pray.

It isn't far to Bethlehem town!
It's anywhere that Christ comes down
And finds in people's friendly face
A welcome and abiding place.
The road to Bethlehem runs right through
The homes of folks like me and you.

—Madeleine S. Miller.

Brightest and Best of the Sons.

Brightest and best of the sons of the morning
Dawn on our darkness and lend us thine aid;
Star of the East, the horizon adorning,
Guide where our infant Redeemer is laid.

Cold on His cradle the dewdrops are shining,
Low lies His head with the beasts of the stall;
Angels adore Him in slumber reclining,
Maker, and Monarch, and Savior of all.

Say, shall we yield Him, in costly devotion,
Odors of Edom, and offerings divine,
Gems of the mountain, and pearls of the ocean,
Myrrh from the forest, or gold from the mine?

Vainly we offer each ample oblation,
Vainly with gifts would His favor secure;
Richer by far is the heart's adoration,
Dearer to God are the prayers of the poor.

—Reginald Heber, 1811.

A Christmas Prayer.

My son rejoices in his gifts.
I would not check his childish mirth;
But give him, Lord, the grace to feel
Sweet reverence for his Savior's birth

I have a duty, Lord, to him
To make of this a sacred day.
My son may learn to keep it so,
But I must show him first the way.

As he grows tall, my little son,
I pray that he may always care
To lay aside his worldly gifts,
And greet Christ's birthday with a prayer.

—Alice Cowles Morris.

St. Nicholas

By the Late S.

Many of life's finest souls are hidden from our eyes or lost in recesses of the past. Some individuals sheltered themselves behind benevolent deeds. Others existed so remotely or obscurely that we knew them only by the continuous beneficence flowing from their careers. Saints who taught the great to mingle with the lowly, the wise with the simple, the rich with the poor, seldom received the homage the felicitous men offered to poets, statesmen, kings. Their reign is an invisible dominion; they distribute God's gifts throughout the earth. To them we owe the defeat of tyranny and cruelty, the freshness and fragrance of peace and will. Their hearts leapt like flames to greet the Christ. They shared riches of His grace with the needy and the desolate.

Such a saint was Nicholas, bishop of Myra, whose day of celebration dates from December 6, 326 A. D. His various names indicate the spaciousness of his influence. In Latin, Sanctus Nicolaus; in Italian, San Nicola or Nicola di Bari; in Germany, Der Heilige Nicolaus, or Niklas; in Dutch, St. Nicholaas or Niclaes; in English, plain St. Nicholas; and here in America we have come to call him good old Santa Claus. He is the patron saint of children, especially schoolboys, of portionless maidens, of sailors, travelers and merchants. He is also the protector against thieves and robbers, by robbery or violence, the chief national hero of Russia, the patron of the city of Venice, of Freiburg and of numerous other towns and cities, particularly those located on the coast, seaports and places engaged in commerce. His knightly knighthood had its St. George and chivalry its St. James, serfhood had its St. Nicholas. He is emphatically the leader of democracy, the joyous champion of the people, the bourgeois "holy one" invoked by the peaceable citizen, the laborer who toils for his daily bread, by the merchant trading from shore to shore, by the mariner venturing on stormy sea. The captive, the prisoner, and the slave in many lands beyond our own, unite with the orphan and the widow in his praise.

Effigies of St. Nicholas, that benign ecclesiastic, with his embroidered robes glittering with gold and jewels, his mitre, crozier and three attendant youths, meet one at every turn in some of the countries mentioned. The saint in the calendar has so many churches, chapels and altars dedicated to him. He is honored as the representative of humanism rather than nationalism and as the directing personality of the Yuletide Feast.

It is useless to attempt the historical verification of his career. His life is as famous as his origin is unrevealed. Many of the accounts given of him are mainly legendary. Yet beneath them is the usual core of truth. The bishop bearing his name and venerable for his piety and generosity was loved and esteemed in the Eastern Church during the sixth century. He is claimed that this bishop held the see of Myra during the reign of the Roman emperor, Diocletian; that he had been a wealthy young man many years before this. Marriageable maidens who cast coy glances at Patra's young patrician received no encouragement from him. After much reflection he entered the ministry, was ordained a priest. He gave his substance to the poor, his service to the people, his life to his God. In furtherance of piety he made a voyage to the Holy Land during which a violent storm arose. The ship's master implored his help, whereupon he prayed so effectively that the raging waves were stayed.

On returning from Palestine, St. Nicholas transferred his residence to Myra where he pursued a retired life of humility and service. But the devotion of the devout were on him and when the bishop of the city died they insisted

New World

ADMAN, D. D.

He should be elected to succeed him. Time would fail to tell of the deeds of his episcopate; how he fed the hungry, saved Myra from famine, rescued its innocent citizens from unjust penalties. Yet none of these achievements could defend him against the anger of reviving Paganism. Politicians plotted; the populace gave vent to its passions, and men fought like beasts. Meanwhile the bishop tended his flock and communed with the Good Shepherd. When a drunken reveller asked him in what he found contentment during such troubled days, he answered, "I have the peace of the happiness." "What is that?" inquired a cynical bystander. "The peace that comes of joyous giving," replied St. Nicholas; whereupon the politicians protested that he was mad.

One does not have to reconstruct at length the details of his career. It can be clearly understood that no one of his high rank could be a holy man under Diocletian without exposing himself to the tyrant's vengeance. The despotic Romans supported the emperor's reprisals. Hence arose the persecutions in every town and city: "The Christians to the lions!" The jails were crowded with them: the public concourses were lit up at night with their glowing bodies. We who sit in quiet and safety awaiting Christmas as the day of the King of kings cannot easily apprehend the terrible persecutions which Nero, Domitian and Diocletian inflicted on our spiritual ancestors. They died to make us free in a larger liberty than our political charters have bestowed. St. Nicholas is numbered among them. He became, as we know, Bishop of Myra, because his brethren recognized his superior character. His fortune was placed at their disposal for the spread of the faith and the relief of the poor. Henceforth he trod a path beset by countless dangers. The majority of his countrymen would have been glad to hear of his death. When it overtook him he was remote from all earthly cares. Freed in soul by his privations and sufferings he calmly awaited the call of his Master.

Probably not all the youngsters who hang up their stockings on Christmas eve and reluctantly march off to bed to dream of fairylands filled with reindeers and the jingle of the sleighbells know that the well-fed man whose scarlet and befurred coat and baggy pants are in evidence on December is the modern representative of an ancient bishop of the Eastern Church. His outlines are well nigh lost in the mists of antiquity, but Santa is very much alive and the spirit of that beloved bishop could find no finer embodiment.

Before the last change in his name, travelers invoked his protection and started on their journey. When he hitches up for his annual trip he is accompanied by more invocations than the recording angel could gather up. He could gather up into one great supplication all the faith, prayer and devotion lavished on Santa's yearly trip they might transform the world's sins and selfish living.

The mere mention of his name thrills one's heart. December is as important as May when Santa is near. In his presence everlasting Spring reigns with never withering flowers. Let us have done with the useless arguments about forbidding him to visit us. Before we imitate those Roman soldiers and turn our guns on venerable Santa, what about ignorance, prejudice, hate, lies. Why not give them a short shrift? Why not have a thorough house cleaning inside as well as outside? Then he will be doubly pleased and the Christ he subserves shall see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied.

Come, My Heart, Canst Thou Not Hear It.

Come, my heart, canst thou not hear it,
Mid the tumult of thy days?
Catch the old sweet song of angels,
Join thy voice to swell their praise!
Hast thou never shared the blessing,
Never known kind Heaven's gift?
Bethlehem thy Savior cradled!
Heart of mine, a song uplift.

First to hear were watching shepherds,
Sore afraid that winter's night;
Soon their Bethlehem's low manger
Changed the song to wondrous sight!
Ever since, all they who hear it
Find a Savior where they dwell;
Sing it, heart! Who knows what toilers
Thou the Christward way shalt tell!

Long ago the angels vanished,
But their song is sounding still!
Millions now with hope are singing,
"Peace on earth, to men good will."
Sing, my heart! Tho' peace may tarry,
Sing good will mid human strife!
Till that old sweet song of angels
Shall attune to heav'n our life.

—William Allen Knight, 1915.

In the Lonely Midnight.

In the lonely midnight, on the wintry hill,
Shepherds heard the angels singing, "Peace, goodwill."
Listen, O ye weary, to the angels' song,
Unto you the tidings of great joy belong.

Though in David's city angels sing no more,
Love makes angel music on earth's darkest shore;
Though no heavenly glory meet your wondering eyes;
Love can make your dwelling bright as paradise.

Though the child of Mary, sent from heaven on high,
In His manger cradle may no longer lie,
Love is King forever, though the proud world scorn;
If ye truly seek Him, Christ your King is born.

—Theodore C. Williams.

A Christmas Prayer.

By Mrs. J. EVERETT NEESE

O God, this prayer I breathe to Thee
At this Yuletide make men to see
The folly of their greed for pomp and power on earth.

Instill within their sinful hearts
The message of that Holy birth.

May peace on earth, good will to men
Be heralded over all the world, and then,
O God, make foolish hate and war to cease,
Make all men everywhere to long for peace.

Help me, hear God, to catch the gleam of
His bright star,
And to Him, as men of old brought royal gifts afar

May I remember a rugged cross and give myself anew.

May His own words be heard this day,
"My peace I leave with you."

MY CHRISTMAS WISH FOR YOU.

I wish it were possible for me to send greetings to each of you personally. How much I would like to know each young person who reads this page!—but that is impossible. Therefore I am taking this opportunity of sending my greetings and best wishes to all of you.

My Christmas wish for you is that you will be able to recapture some of that spirit of God which is represented in His gift to the world in the form of the Babe of Bethlehem.

This may be done in many ways. Some of you will find it in service to others. As you make others happier, whether it be by singing carols, by a gift, or by a smiling "Merry Christmas," you will know some of the joy which was expressed in the gift of a Babe long ago. Others will take some time out for meditation—whether it be in church, on a walk through the woods, or alone in your room on Christmas Eve or Christmas morning—and will seek to discover the true meaning of Christmas in your own lives, throughout the year that lies ahead. And still others will find through fellowship that realization of the "brotherhood of man" which leads to the "fatherhood of God." Whatever your method may be, I trust that you will sincerely try to express the true spirit of Christmas in a way that will grow and develop through the coming year.

EMILY CARLETON LESTER.

DON'T FORGET.

By the time this paper comes out, many of you will have your preparations for the outward expression of your Christmas spirit completed. However, just this word—don't forget those people whom others may neglect. Remember those who serve you, as well as those who will give you a lovely present. Remember the needy in your community as well as your friends. Remember those who are in the hospital or at home sick, or homesick. (This list might well include Margaret Earp, Biltmore Hospital, Asheville, N. C., and Miss Lucy Eldredge, 121 Marathon Ave., Dayton, Ohio.) Remember those who have helped and inspired you, even though you do not personally know them. (Such a list might include Dr. Samuel H. Leger, 108 East College Street, Oberlin, Ohio.)

THE SPIRIT OF CHRISTMAS.

However many times it may have been said before: The season of joy and gaiety which is Christmas does seem to bring with it this year a keener realization of its deepest significance! On this anniversary of the coming of the Prince of Peace, we can but look upon our world with dismay and remorse—and yet with that same faith in humanity which characterizes His life and ministry. In celebrating any anniversary we always seem to catch at least a bit of

A CHRISTMAS PRAYER.

Oh, blessed day, which giv'st the eternal lie
To self and sense, and all the brute within;
Oh, come to us, amid this war of life;
To hall and hovel come: to all who toil,
In senate, shop or study; and to those
Who sundered by the wastes of half a world,
Ill-warned, and sorely tempted, ever face
Nature's brute powers, and men unmanned to brutes.

Come to them, blest and blessing, Christmas Day.

Tell them once more the tale of Bethlehem;
The kneeling shepherds, and the Babe Divine;
And keep them men indeed, fair Christmas Day. —Charles Kingsley.

the same feeling that first made it an occasion worth remembering. And it seems that we most nearly recapture the spirit of the event when we most nearly re-enact that spirit.

So at this Christmas season—out of love for our fellowmen and with gratitude for our own increasing opportunities for knowledge of "life abundant"—let us every one have some part in the China Friendship Project of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship. Through this gift of a Laymen's Training Center to the Kang Wei Lu Church in Tientsin, China, we believe that we are making some contribution to a World Christian Community of peace and good will.

Send your gift to your Conference Pilgrim Fellowship Treasurer, who in turn will send it to the Treasurer of the Southeast Pilgrim Fellowship.

CHRISTMAS GREETINGS.

For nearly two years I have endeavored to write the Christian Endeavor Notes for this page. During this time I have had the joy of knowing that I have been making contacts with young lives, many of whom I do not know, but whom I count as my friends. I want to be of service to you in your Christian Endeavor. If you have suggestions to make, I will appreciate your writing me.

Let me express Christmas greetings to all who read this column. May this Christmas bring much happiness and joy to your life. You have a great opportunity in sharing this Christmas spirit with the aged, the infirm, the unfortunate, the underprivileged, and many others. May the spirit of the Christ, whose birthday we celebrate, possess your life and make you radiant in His service.

HOW HAVE WE USED THE YEAR?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR
DECEMBER 31, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Matthew 25:31-46.

Daily Readings—

Monday—Walking in the Way of Wisdom—Prov. 3:13-24.

Tuesday—Following in Footsteps of Faith—Heb. 11:32-40.

Wednesday—Growing in Grace and Goodness—Eph. 4:11-16.

Thursday—Living the Life of Love—Rom. 13:8-14.

Friday—Pursuing Profitable Practices—I Peter 4:7-11.

Saturday—Serving the Saviour Sincerely—Col. 3:23-24.

This program can be made a very worth while one if it is properly planned. You may want to plan a "Watch Party"—if so, fine. But you should also plan an inspirational program in which you will discuss the topic for consideration.

Let us make an inventory of what the past year has meant—its opportunities and how they have been used, or neglected, etc.

Have someone talk on Dr. Fosdick's statement, "Not so much what life brings to us in her hands as what we bring to life in our spirits, makes the difference between people."

For Discussion.

No one ever finds life worth living; one must always make life worth living.

When a person has faith in Jesus Christ and what he represents, a spirit is born in him which makes life worth living.

The things that happen to us are not as important as the spirit with which we meet them. S. E. M.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

Merry Christmas and Happy New Year

As Editor of the Notes on the Sunday School Lesson, I take this means of expressing to my readers, to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and to our larger Church fellowship my best wishes for a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. May the Christmas Season bring into your homes and into your hearts a deep and rich sense of His peace and joy. And may the New Year bring you a stimulus to growth, an opportunity for service, and an abundance of the things that make life truly rich.

May I add a word of thanks for the many expressions of appreciation which come to me from time to time from the users of my Notes. I shall try to make them better and more useful during the coming year.

THE CHILD AND THE KINGDOM.

(CHRISTMAS LESSON.)

DECEMBER 24, 1939.

SCRIPTURE: Matthew 1:18-25: 18: 1-14; 19: 13-15.

GOLDEN TEXT: "A little child shall lead them."—Isaiah 11: 6.

The lesson for the Sunday before Christmas has a most appropriate title—"The Child and the Kingdom." The lesson committee should consider not only the birthday of Jesus, but perhaps also two incidents in the life of Jesus which show the high regard which he had for children and the central place which they had in his teachings concerning the kingdom.

A Baby's Birthday Changed the Calendar.

There are some people who find it difficult to accept, or not possible to understand, many of the things which are recorded in connection with the coming of Jesus. There are to be sure many strange and many mysterious things in the story—an angel appearing unto the mother, a child being born without a human father, angels appearing in the skies and singing songs to humble shepherds on the hillside, a heavenly host singing a hallelujah chorus, a strange star appearing in the sky and wise men from a distant country making a long journey to find the one whose birth it seemed to signify.

All of these things seem strange and mysterious in our modern world and in our materialistic-spirited age, but if the Gospel records are all trustworthy they are an integral part of a historic record. And they are to be interpreted in the light of the One who came, and in the later record of his words and works. Because Jesus was the Son of God as well as the Son of Man, we might well accept all of these stories, poetic as they may be, as the attempt of the inspired writers to put into human language things which after all cannot well be said in mere words.

Shepherds there were who in the field by night

Kept watch, not wisting that a chorus bright
Of angels would to them the news convey—
The dawning of the world's most potent day.

Countless the nights of darkness and of fear
The world has watched through, but the message clear

Of prophets, martyrs, saints, of poets brought
The healing word for which it blindly sought.

Visions from God—through men must come the word.

Till the whole earth to action deeply stirred
From war and dread and hatred wins release,
And hails once more as King the Prince of Peace.

—Helen Wicand Cole.

There is one sober fact that cannot be pushed aside. The very date at the head of these notes is a silent tribute to the influence and power of that babe who was born in Bethlehem. The calendar of the world is based upon whether things happened before or since he was born. We say that Christmas will come this year on Monday, December 25, 1939. We are thus saying that it has been 1939 years since Jesus was born in Bethlehem. That is something to think about.

The lesson for today comes from Matthew's Gospel. Matthew writes from the story of Joseph, and we do not have the fascinating story of the prophecies concerning the coming of Jesus and the beautiful and poetic description of the event itself as recorded in Luke. Matthew tells of how an angel appeared unto Joseph in his confusion and extremity and made known to him the fact that Mary, his espoused wife, was to give birth to the Saviour of the world, who had been conceived by the Holy Spirit of God himself. He dismisses the actual birth with one sentence. But in keeping with the general character of his book, he shows how all of this was in accordance with ancient prophesy. The story as recorded in Luke is too familiar to need repetition here. But every Christian would do well to read again and again these stories as recorded in Matthew and in Luke.

The Word Became Flesh.

The significant thing to be kept in mind in the Christmas story is that through this baby God took upon himself human form. In Christ God himself came down to dwell among men. Through Christ the invisible God was made known. In Christ we see the character and purpose of God drawn out in flesh and blood. This after all is the supreme miracle, and this after all gives Christmas its abiding spiritual significance.

The Child in the Midst.

On one occasion the disciples came to Jesus and asked him who was greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven. With his uncanny insight, which was so characteristic of the Master, he placed the child in the midst of the group and said that whosoever should humble himself as a little child was greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven. Furthermore, Jesus said that unless a man became converted and became as a little child he should in no wise enter into the Kingdom of Heaven.

Jesus put the child in the midst. That is where the child belongs. Home life and the life of the community should center in its children. Jesus identifies himself with children and he issues a solemn warning against those who would do anything which would cause a child to stumble.

One of the greatest contributions which Christianity has made to civilization has been the new value and the new status which it has given to childhood. Christ has lifted womanhood to new levels. And practically all of the movements and the institutions which are devoted to the training and care of children are the result of His influence in the world.

Jesus and the Children.

On one occasion they brought little children unto Jesus that he should lay his hands on them and bless them. The disciples thought that the Master was too busy with so called weightier matters to be bothered with children. As a matter of fact they over-

"THE HEAVENLY STAIRWAY."

"And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."—John 12:32.

Our caption is the title of a book written by Paul B. Kern. In this book he sets forth the growth of creative processes in which he states that from the beginning "God set His hand to the task of building a universe that should eventuate at last in Godlike personalities." Slowly thereby we have grown from the primitive and bestial to a higher order of men and good will. We have thus grown not by our own power or desire, but by our untoward power of a Supreme Being advancing us toward the good, the beautiful and the true. That power is God.

In this process of development He sent His Son into the world as a visible representative of Himself, and as an example for us that His plan of goodness, beauty and truth, might be consummated. Jesus, with the Father and with heaven in Him, touching the eternity which the Father hath hidden in his heart, has given man the lift and set his feet on the climbing stairway from earth to heaven. Thus Christ's coming is indeed the supreme step in God's dealings with man, by which the lesser man, in "earth's sorrows, must pass, his weakness turn to strength, and God's dream come true."

It is the Christian's high privilege to begin a season of worship, holy celebrations, and merry-making, in honor, esteem, and devotion to Him the Author of our faith; and by whom we are made God-like.

Prayer—O Lord, our Father, in the name of Jesus Thy Son and our Savior, we bow at the beginning of this week to offer ourselves to Thee in sincerity and truth; to make us Thine own acceptable in Thy sight. In all our doings may we honor Thee. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"THE MUSIC OF THE STAIRWAY."

"When He, the spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth: . . . and He will show you things to come."—John 16:13.

The high that proved too high, the heroic for earth too hard,
The passion that left the ground to lose itself in the sky,
Are music sent up to God by the lover and the bard;
Enough that He heard it once: we shall hear it by and by.

(Author Unknown.)

Prayer—Our Father in Heaven and yet with us on earth, we pray for Thy strength with us to lift up daily with the loveliness of the Christ life, until we shall abide with Thee at the end in perfect bliss and celestial good. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"THE KING ENTERS."

"Behold your King."—John 19:14.
"He gave gifts unto men."—Eph. 4:8.

The earth is resonant with the praises of heavenly choirs. Let us hope that it is with more of the Spirit of the living God than ever before. After all, the glory of His Wisdom, beauty and goodness, depends on us. The power of His Spirit in us to lift us up more and more on the "Golden Stairway," follows our appreciation of His love. The wells of joy which we so often pray for and look for, come only after we receive His Spirit and give ourselves in tender ministries to our fellowmen. He gave Himself. What have we given?

Today our King is with us. Shall we see Him, the Lord of life? Not unless we cherish, with tender prayers and loving touch, His own life; and dedicate our lives to His lifting up the "Golden Stairway" of service.

Prayer—O Lord, our Lord, have mercy upon our unworthy souls. Forgive us of all our sins, and make us Thy humble servants, to serve Christ and Thee forever. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"THE KING ENTERS."

"And she brought forth her first born . . . and the angels of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone around them . . . and they said . . . unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord."—Luke 2:7, 11.

How silently, how silently, the wondrous gift is given!
So God imparts to human hearts the blessings of His heaven.
No ears may hear His coming, but in this world of sin,
Where meek souls will receive Him still,
The dear Christ enters in.
—Phillips Brooks.

Prayer—Father, we pray that we may see the King now and always, and may we understand Him in ways we have never seen before. We pray that our lives may be ever be a revelation of Thy love. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"HE SHALL REIGN."

"The Kingdoms of this world are become the Kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ; and He shall reign forever and ever."—Rev. 11:15.

We fear that the Christ does not reign yet. Hate, fear, lawlessness and violence seems to reign. And it is worse nowhere than where the song of the Angels was first heard. The Christian's message seems strongly out of tune with the sounds of the world today.

Nevertheless, through it all and in spite of it all, God is prosecuting His plan for lifting us out of the mire. The influence of Jesus must grow. There must be an awakening sense of His Spirit in all the turmoil. The way is dark, indeed: but the strug-

"The Christmas Spirit."

A Sermon by Prof. D. J. BOWDEN of Elon College.

[Preached at Elon College on December 10, 1939, the last Sunday before the Christmas vacation.]

Our text as stated in the message of John the Baptist, is found in the third chapter of Luke: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord;" and in the same breath allow me to announce that there are only twelve more shopping days before Christmas, and that gift specials may be found in all the stores, both large and small. If these two subjects seem not to fit together, is because our own ideals and practices are not consistent. For while we speak of Christmas as a celebration of the birth of our Savior, our "Preparation for the coming of the Lord" is largely a matter of buying and selling, of haste and worry about material things. American business has "prepared the way." Shop windows are filled with beautiful and attractive things to buy. Our cities' streets are flooded with lights of red, of blue, of green, of yellow, and everyone has a long shopping list.

Hence, whether rightly or wrongly, "twelve more shopping days 'till Christmas" appears to have a real bearing upon our Scripture for the morning. We are reminded of the story of the little girl whose parents, being ultra-modern, hesitated to send little Mary to Sunday school for fear she might learn something which was not true; but the Christmas season came. Mary was five or six years old and the mother felt that surely Mary should know the Christmas stories for their beauty if for nothing else. And so she dressed her little girl in her prettiest clothes; Daddy took her to Sunday school, and went back to bring her home. Little Mary was most enthusiastic in telling her mother of the stories she had learned and in describing the visit of the shepherds said, "And Mother, when they opened the door of the barn, what do you guess they saw?" The mother, not wanting to spoil the story, said, "I don't know, Mary, what did they find?" "Oh, Mother, they saw the cutest little baby Chrysler." Many of us are more concerned about "baby Chryslers" than about the baby Christ! Christmas has become a season of gift giving and celebration, and whereas gifts originally were a means of expressing, between friends, their mutual confidence, mutual love and understanding, they are too often conceived now, not as means to this end, but as an end in themselves. You know some people, perhaps, who prefer either through carelessness or through intention, to spell Christmas "Xmas" which again, it seems to me, is pathetically expressive of our modern Christmas spirit in which Christ is often omitted.

"Prepare ye the way of the Lord." What preparations have you made for Christmas? Think a moment . . . and the first things that pop into your mind probably are your unfinished shopping list, your decorations, and the wrapping and mailing which always goes with Christmas. Yes, it is natural that we give attention to these things; and our immediate thought is that in all this material preparation we pre-suppose a spirit of love behind it and within it, and yet, this is too often a weak rationalism. The Christmas season has become institutionalized and commercialized to the point that we are so busy with material things that we forget to be kind. You who are students will soon be leaving Love's Offering.

What shall I bring Thee, O little Stranger,
Cradled with straw in a Judean manger?

No gold nor myrrh, nor incense rare
Have I, dear Babe, with Thee to share;
But Thou dost treasure the gift I bring,
My heart, love's dearest offering.

for your vacation at home, with the so-called Christmas spirit of joy and anticipation, and at the same time enthusiasm and haste. But do you even pause to say to the bus driver or to the trainman, "Merry Christmas?" Are we not so busy expressing the Christmas spirit in material things that we forget to express the real Christmas spirit? Christmas has become an institution and it is thereby in danger of losing its real meaning.

In our celebration, therefore, we often unthinkingly reject the Christ. I asked one of our ministerial students this morning what he would preach about today, and he said he was presenting the story of the rich young ruler rejecting Christ. It dawned upon me that here, too, was a point for my sermon; for not only did the rich young ruler reject Christ, but those in his own home town rejected him also. Those in Nazareth who knew Him best, who had been associated with Him for years, rejected Him. Is it not true that those of us who have inherited Christmas as a celebration, those of us who supposedly know Christ best, are most likely to overlook the significance of this glorious season? In the current issue of the Christian Century (December 6) a Jewish rabbi says, "Thank God for Christmas . . . for years I denounced with all the oratorical fervor and fury at my command this celebration of Christmas by my own people. . . (but) I no longer censure my people because of it. I concede that a Christmas Jew may be a good Jew, that he is drawn by a cheer and love in Christmas which have made it a day open to all creeds, and colors and races. I say then, as a rabbi, thank God for Christmas! May it, in the spirit of its Judeo-Christian founder, bring forth in ever fuller measure the love that is hidden away in the hearts of men." This Jewish rabbi has discovered the real meaning of the Christmas season, as an expression of the spirit of love. Shall we who are Christians reject Jesus because of our familiarity with Him? He was rejected again, you recall, in Jerusalem, having been tried before Pontius Pilot. "Whom shall I release gles of the good must be towards the light. It will be, if we will do our part.

"BETTER THAN CAROLS."

"Good tidings of great joy."—
Luke 2:10.

We have heard of a Christmas service where there were no speculative carols sung. The songs were positive affirmations of the birth and life of Jesus our Lord.

There is something about Christmas that permits no doubt of His truth. Life itself seems to affirm Him as the source of all true joys.

Prayer—O Loving Father, we praise Thy Holy Name for the great fact of Jesus and Thy eternal plans in Him to eventuate at last mankind into God-likeness. Help us to be numbered as Thy true disciples. Amen.

unto you?" and they cried, "Barabbas." Then they might have gone on to say, "He is a man after our own hearts, he knows the worth of the dollar, he has been around, he's one that knows how to have a good time. Give us Barabbas." Again, is not our Christmas celebration too often spent in company with Barabbas rather than with Christ?

"Prepare ye the way of the Lord," but not with material gifts alone. John the Baptist came from the desert crying, "Prepare ye," but he was not wrapped in scarlet robes nor did he present expensive gifts. He came in simple garb but in a spirit of devotion and dedication. The city of Bethlehem prepared no royal birthplace for the King, and the shepherds who came brought no shining gifts. It was a simple worship of the Christ Child. The three wise men? Yes, they came bringing gold and frankincense and myrrh, but have you heard the story of the other wise man? Henry VanDyke tells the gripping story of a fourth man, a native of Persia, who, with his three friends knew of the prophecy of Daniel, and who planned to come with them, when the star was sighted, to Judea. It was the evening before the star was destined to appear when he called together other friends in his community and told them of his mission, asking them to accompany him and the three Magi from another land. "I have sold my house and my possessions," he said, "and bought these three jewels: a sapphire, a ruby, and a pearl, to give them as tributes to the King." And from his girdle he drew forth three gems. "One blue as a fragment of the night's sky, one redder than a ray of sunrise, and one as pure as the peak of a snow mountain at twilight." But not one of his friends would accompany him. He must ride alone, a ten-day journey to the temple beyond Babylon where he was to join "The Three Wise Men." Ten days he rode, and as night fell he entered the walls of Babylon. As they moved slowly through the dark streets of the city, his horse suddenly was frightened and Artabon, our "other wise man," saw lying there in the shadows the form of a man. Dismounting, he found a Jew unconscious and hot with a raging fever. Should he stay and minister unto him or press on, for his friends would not wait beyond midnight of this tenth day. Resolving to nurse the fallen man to consciousness, he remained and the midnight hour was nearly past when he resumed his journey.

Dawn was just breaking across the hills when he approached the temple, and in the early dawn he read the note which was left for him: "We shall expect you to follow us across the desert," but Artabon had no caravan, only a horse weary with ten days' hard riding. He must return, therefore, to Babylon and there, by selling his sapphire "blue as a fragment of the night sky," he was able to prepare for the journey. Arriving in Bethlehem at nightfall he wandered through streets. The men had left the village and the streets were empty. Before an open door, he heard a mother singing to her babe, and he paused. Perhaps here was the King whom he sought, but no, the mother told him of three rich travelers from the east who, several days before, had come and gone, and of Mary and Joseph fleeing with their babe; some said to Egypt. Suddenly there was a furor in the streets and women cried, "They are killing our babies." Artabon stepped hurriedly to the door and there he stood while the mother crouched in the corner hiding her infant child. "I am all alone in this place," said Artabon to an approaching soldier, "and I am waiting to give this jewel to the prudent captain who will leave me in peace." The captain's eyes glistened. He placed the ruby in the folds of his garment and departed. Only the pearl remained. Twice, now, Artabon had sacrificed his precious jewels prepared for the King, that human lives might be saved.

We find him some time later in Egypt still seeking the King, and for years he wandered through Alexandria, back to Jerusalem, back to Egypt; and finally we see him as an old man, gray of hair and feeble, entering into Jerusalem. It was the time of the Passover. Vast throngs were moving in one direction. "Do you not know," they said to him, "that on Golgotha there are executions today? Two robbers and a third who calls himself the Son of God and the King of the Jews." "Ah," he thought, "it is He for whom I have sought all these years. Even now, perhaps, I may purchase his freedom with my one remaining treasure." But hardly had the thought come to his mind when there called to him a young girl being dragged through the streets by Macedonian soldiers. "Have pity on me," she cried, "I am of your religion. My father, a merchant, is dead, and I am seized to be sold as a slave."

Artabon trembled. Twice he had sacrificed for man that which he had prepared for God. Placing the pearl in the hands of a soldier he said, "This is thy ransom, daughter, it is the last of my treasures which I kept for the King." While he spoke the earth trembled, the heavens became dark and the walls of the houses shook. A tile shaken loose from the roof of a building struck Artabon, and he fell dying with his head resting on the shoulder of the young girl. She heard him say quietly, "Not so, My Lord: For when saw I thee an hungered and fed thee? Or thirsty, and gave thee drink? When saw I thee a stranger, and took thee in? Or naked, and clothed thee? When saw I thee sick or in prison, and came unto thee? Three and thirty years have I looked for thee; but I have never seen thy face, nor ministered to thee, my King." There was a pause and then she seemed to hear a voice gently in reply: "Verily I say unto thee, Inasmuch as thou hast done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, thou hast done it unto me."

His journey was ended. The Other Wise Man had found the King.

INTERESTING PEOPLE

Biltmore Hospital, Asheville, N. C.,
Sunday, December 10, 1939.

Dear CHRISTIAN SUN Readers:

The other day a woman ran in to see me. Her eyes were kind, but showed that suffering had played an important part in her life. She hadn't long to stay, she said.

From her purse she took out a small box and opened it for me. Half hidden beneath the soft white cotton lay a small pin, shaped like a heart with a lily of the valley design inside. I looked up at her and waited eagerly for the story: "After my husband's death I continued to wear a string of pearls which he had given me. Although styles changed, the pearls were always in style because they had a meaning—they were sacred." Once more I looked down at the box, and I realized that this pin contained one of those sacred pearls. But her story had not ended. "Every woman should have a pearl in her life," she told me. Her eyes became moist, and then she hurried away. Long after she was gone, her words lingered in my mind. "Every life should have a pearl!" And then it came to me that those words held something much deeper than is realized by merely hearing them repeated.

Another interesting person came my way recently. She is a very charming brown-eyed girl who is a supervisor at a hospital in Asheville. One of the young ministers of our denomination told her I was here. Our CHRISTIAN SUN readers will be delighted to know that she is easy to like, and her personality would certainly be an addition to our number, should the young minister change his mind about being a bachelor.

Mr. M. J. W. White visited me not so long ago. He certainly is young looking to be telling that he is actually in his eighties. I do hope that every father is as proud of his family as Mr. White is. I shall remember this visit as one of the happier hours I have spent in the hospital.

Oh! How could I forget that spry little lady whom I met through THE CHRISTIAN SUN? She used to work with the churches of the Eastern Conference, but now she is here in Asheville. She is a very intelligent conversationalist; constantly recalling Elon happenings and quoting directly from THE SUN. She recounts many things which the usual person easily forgets.

The joke seems to be on me about where Santa Claus will come this year! Thanksgiving, my mother laughed and said, "We'll be back, if you are still here!" My father wisely predicted that my holiday would be spent at Biltmore. Youth is impatient. At Thanksgiving time, it seemed ages till Christmas. I knew that by Christmas time I'd be at home and almost have forgotten my hospital episode. But my reckless imagination ran wild! Surely, the doctor knows what Christmas at home would mean to me; he would not prolong my stay were it not necessary.

Selfishly, I had forgotten that many other people will also be compelled to spend their holiday season within the hospital—cannot the spirit of Christmas prevail here as well as elsewhere? Perhaps those of us who are to be away from our homes will come to have a better understanding and a deeper appreciation of Christ who made possible the wonderful Christmas time!

looked the fact that Jesus had so often tried to impress upon them—that there was nothing in the world more important than a little child. Jesus appears to great advantage in many instances in the Gospel stories. But there is no occasion when he reaches more sublime heights than when he stoops and takes children into his arms, lays his hands on them and blesses them. Here is revealed one of the major concerns and major endeavors of the human race—that of bringing into the lives of children a consciousness of divine love and to awaken on their parts a response to that love.

" . . . I have always thought of Christmas . . . as a good time; a kind, forgiving, charitable, pleasant time; the only time I know of in the long calendar year, when men and women seem by one consent to open their shut-up hearts freely and to think of people below them as if they really were fellow-passengers to the grave, and not another race of creatures bound on other journeys. And therefore, Uncle, though it never put a scrap of gold or silver in my pocket, I believe it has done me good, and will do me good; and I say, God bless it."—Scrooge's Nephew, in Dickens' immortal Christmas Carol.

Our next issue will be dated January 4, 1940. At that time we shall be delighted to come to your home with a message of courage for the New Year. Until then, in the words of Dicken's immortal Tiny Tim, "God bless us, every one!"

BELLS

By C. B. RIDDLE.

During the Christmas and New Year seasons no sound is more familiar than that of bells. They express cheerful thoughts for old and young, rich and poor, and make music that speaks a universal language. Bells are known and used by every nation and tribe.

Symbolized in literature, mythology, music and art, bells have rung in new chapters in history, as in the case of the Liberty Bell. Unaware that the sounding of bells was a signal for their massacre, 8,000 Frenchmen in the thirteenth century listened to the ringing of Sicilian vespers before being put to death, and in the sixteenth century, bells in France cried out the beginning of the Huguenots' slaughter.

Bells have been in use for various purposes since the remotest days of antiquity. Aaron and the high priest in Jewish ceremonies used them in camp and garrison, and the Romans announced by bells the hour for the famous baths. In the early days of England, when timepieces were few, bells were used to signal the time of day for villagers. The use of bells as musical instruments was in the service of the medieval church, but the organ displaced them.

France introduced church bells about 550 A. D., Greece in the ninth century, and Switzerland and Germany in the eleventh century. Christianity has carried bells into all parts of the world. Early settlers in the New World equipped their churches with bells, and the bell is still an important part of the equipment of most houses of worship.

The early manufacture of bells is sometimes attributed to Tubal-Cain's artifice, mentioned in Genesis 4: 22, but this is only a surmise. Bells are known to have been made, centuries before the Christian era, in Asia, Europe, and the Americas. King David, dancing before the Ark in his rejoicing, was accompanied by tinkling bells, and ancient Ninevah, when excavated, yielded up strings of small castmetal bells.

Bell-making is an ancient art. In the most famous bell foundry in the world, located in Croydon, England, the artisans are descendants from families of bell founders. There is probably nothing which requires more patient skill and craftsmanship than the molding and finishing of a bell, and it is the small bell which is the most troublesome.

Russia made the largest bells of history. It began casting in the sixteenth century, and before the next there were said to have been more than 5,000 bells in Moscow alone. Russia's largest bell weighed 128 tons. However, the anti-religious procedures of the Soviet Government have ruined many churches and their bells—some of them melted for their bronze; others sold. So the land that once overwhelmingly loved bells now sweeps them out.

Time was when bells brought terror to the hearts of the people of The Netherlands, warning them of the approach of invaders or that a dyke had broken. Ships now plow through choppy seas while their masters listen to the sound of bell bouys which warn of danger.

Bells are recognized in Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar," Longfellow's "Bells of San Blas," Milton's "Il Penseroso" and "Comus," Shakespeare's "The Tempest," in Grey's "Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard," Poe's "The Bells," Brethart's "The Angelus," Kipling's "Bell Buoy," and Thorp's "Curfew Shall Not Ring Tonight."

Paul Revere, who on the night of April 18, 1775, waited on the Charlestown shore, "booted and spurred and ready to ride" from Boston to Concord so that the Minute Men could be warned of the advancing British, was a member of the society of bell ringers, then popular in New England. Christ Church, of which Revere was a member, still retains its official bell ringer.

The carillon had its beginning in Antwerp about 1480 and has developed throughout the world. A church in Worcester, Mass., was the first in the United States to use the carillon. The first concert was given in 1922.

There are fewer than 250 carillons in the world, and approximately thirty of these are in the United States. The best known carillon in this country is the Singing Tower at Mountain Lake, Fla., built by the late Edward W. Bok as a gift to his adopted country, and in honor of his parents. The tower, constructed of Georgia pink marble and coquina stone of Florida, rises to a height of 205 feet, and its seventy-one bells vary in weight from seventeen pounds to eleven tons. It was dedicated in February, 1929, by the late President Coolidge who accepted the gift in the name of the American people.

During Christmas and in the New Year season, bells vibrate their messages of goodwill and breathe their spirit of peace on earth. The tones of bells are heard around the world and enjoyed by rich and poor.
