Youth at Work in the Church

MAX VESTAL, Box 792, Elon College, N. C.

ELON Y. P. CONFERENCE.

1. Two registration blanks for the Elon College Young People's Conference to be held June 29 to July 5, were sent to each pastor and Sunday school superintendent a few days ago. Write for additional ones if you need them. Timothy Chang and Jose Debuet will be present at all of these camps and conferences. In fact, we feel that the programs this year are unusually fine. Early registrations will be greatly appreciated.

2. Would any of you like to have Jose Dabuet for a visit in your church and community for a day or two any time between June 13-24? If so, let me know at your earliest convenience.

3. A check for this year's contribution to Jose's expenses arrived this week from a church in Eastern North Carolina and one from a church in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. It would be fine if others of you could make a contribution as soon as possible if you have not done so this year. Eastern North Carolina contributions should be sent to: Miss Hilda Grey Johnson, RFD No. 2, Clayton, N. C.; North Carolina and Virginia to: Miss Mary Wissemann, 315 N. Edgeworth St., Greensboro, N. C.; and Western North Carolina to: Miss Frances Sanders, RFD No. 1, Pittsboro, N. C. This will be greatly appreciated.

4. Rev. and Mrs. J. L. Neese will be at Moonelon all summer and it is hoped that many of our church groups (not individuals) will come for meetings or picnics there. Write Dr. W. T. Scott, Elon College, N. C. for a permit and be sure to state the date which you wish to come.

You will be interested to know that Philip Mann, President of the Southern Convention Youth Fellowship; and Curtis Young, President of the North Carolina and Virginia Youth Fellowship; will represent us at the meeting of the National Council of Pilgrim Fellowship at Claremont California, June 25-July 2.

A happy and worthwhile summer to you all.

Sincerely,

PATTIE LEE COGHILL.

GETS FELLOWSHIP.

Nancy Pritchett of Brown Summit had received a six-month traveling fellowship which is to take her to Germany in June as a representative of the North Carolina 4-II program under sponsorship of the International Farm Youth Exchange. The Women's College student will be one of a number of American young people receiving fellowships. A biology major, she had been an outstanding 4-H leader since her high school days. She has won numerous state and national awards, including a $300 scholarship at a national meeting in Chicago.

Nancy is a member of Apple's Chapel Church and has been active in our Congregational Christian student group at W. C. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Fran Pritchett. She attended Monticello High School.

RELAX WITH MAX.

Here's one for any of you who may be thinking about getting married.

The old Puritans had these quaint rules for the selection of a good wife:

A good wife should be like three things, which three things she should not be like. She should be like a snail to keep within her house; but should not be like a snail to carry all she has on her back. She should be like an echo, to answer when she is called; but she should not be like an echo, always to have the last word. She should be like a town clock, always keeping time with regularity; but she should not be like a town clock, speaking so loud as to be heard all over the town.—India Digest.

Girls, if your boyfriend ever calls you a snail, an echo, or a clock, you won't know whether it's a compliment or not, will you?

Page Painter and I went in to the Burlington Church for supper last Sunday evening. The Durham Youth Fellowship was being entertained by the Burlington group. This was a very fine meeting in their very beautiful new educational building. Many of our churches are now building new Sunday school rooms, etc. All of us at the Southern Convention meeting admired their new building at Durham. This new building is an indication of the new life that is in our churches. Have you noticed, too, that all of these building churches have active Youth Fellowships.

A good farmer is known by his good, well-cared-for fields and not necessarily by his front lawn. Neither is a Christian known by the front he puts up, but by the Christian works he does.

Well, I'm back on the farm now. Hope that only a few of the hayseeds fall into this.

You didn't go to church last Sunday? That's bad. If you don't go next Sunday, that's inexcusable.

MISSION INSTITUTE AT HARTFORD.

Under the provision of a recent grant from the Carnegie Foundation, The Kennedy School of Missions, Hartford, Connecticut, was host over Memorial Day (May 29-31) to a study conference involving members of its faculty and a guest list of 36 Muslim area experts.

The subject was "Islam at Mid-Century" and the group considered the Christian obligation in contemporary Mohammedan areas.

The Kennedy School is one of four that make up the Hartford Seminary Foundation, an interdenominational university center of religious studies, with work entirely on the graduate level. According to President Russell Henry Stafford of The Foundation, this Kennedy School conference and others like it are a means of increasing "the efficiency of our service to the major Protestant Foreign Mission Boards in this country and Canada, and several in Europe, which regularly use our facilities for preparing their serious career candidates for high efficiency in their fields, and for directing their experienced missionaries on furlough in research projects bearing upon the areas in which they serve." Over 60 Mission Boards have sent appointees to Hartford.

In the free discussion session, typical questions considered were: Where, and to what extent, can Christians and Muslims find common ground for action, theological study and worship?; How should the continuing Christian missionary obligation to Islam understand its own past?

THE SIN OF GREED.

LESSON XII—JUNE 22, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Thou shalt not covet."—Exodus 20: 17.

LESSON: Exodus 20: 17; Luke 12: 13-21, 29-34.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 15.

Last, But Not Least.

The Commandment, "Thou shalt not covet," is the last of the Ten Commandments; but it is not the least. Indeed, it is second only to the First Commandment—"Thou shalt have no other gods before me," and in a sense stands on a par with even that great Commandment. It is the most direct threat to this Commandment. Covetousness threatens the supremacy of God, it puts things ahead of God.

Furthermore, here is a commandment which deals with the inner spirit. We have seen how, generally speaking, the Ten Commandments deal with the act, as opposed to the teachings of Jesus, which deal with the spirit. But this Commandment is all of one piece with the teachings of Jesus. It goes behind the outward act to the inner spirit. One does not have to commit an act to break this commandment; he has only to have the spirit of covetousness.

A Nasty Thing.

Covetousness is a nasty thing. The Bible shows again and again how by setting our hearts upon that which is another's we degrade ourselves. Time and again it links covetousness with uncleanness. Paul knew what a nasty thing covetousness is—he puts it with fornication, uncleanness, passion, evil desire. He says, "No fornicator, nor unclean person, nor covetous man." The desire to possess and enjoy that which is another's—and that is what covetousness is—is the same dirty desire, whether its object be another man's wife, or his possessions, or his fortune, or his reputation, or his business.

Furthermore, Paul knew full well, how this commandment went deeper than any of the other commandments. It was the searching character of this commandment that made it play such a significant role in his religious experience. He could listen to the other commandments with untroubled conscience, but this one probed deep into his conscience, and left him writhing. He thought he was reasonably successful with the other commandments, but with this one, well sin "wrought in me all manner of coveting," he writes. And it was his inability to deal successfully with this commandment that made him conscious of his need of Christ to save him from this sin.

An Unnamed Sin.

This sin of covetousness, this nasty sin, how often do you head it mentioned? How often do you hear it condemned? When was the last time you heard a sermon against it? It seems to be the sin we are afraid to mention. We say all kinds of bad things about men, or we brand them with bad names, liars, thieves, gluttons, adulterers, prostitutes, etc., but we seldom say they are covetous. And yet it is the commonest of sins. There are none of us who are not guilty of this sin in one way or another. It may be an unnamed sin, but it is a universal sin.

What's Wrong With Covetousness?

Covetousness, as used in this lesson, means inordinate, or unlawful, desire. It is the hankering after that which belongs to another, but to which we have no right. It is also to desire more than one needs. It is to put the secular above the spiritual. It puts gain above God. It is to be concerned more with material values than with human values.

And like all wrong things, it has its penalties. It kills contentment. The covetous man tends to fix his gaze on what he does not have rather than upon what he has. It makes a man feverish, fretful and wretched. Again, covetousness leads to wrong-doing. It is a fountain from which there flows many a poisonous stream. Covetousness leads to lying, to stealing, to adultery, to bearing false witness, even to murder. Worse still, covetousness is idolatry—the Bible itself says so. And as idolatry, it kills the finer things of life. The fact that the wages of sin is death is nowhere more plainly spelled out than in what happens to the spirit of the man who is covetous.

Danger.

Jesus knew the perils of covetousness. "Take heed and beware of cov-etousness," he says, both in words and in substance, again and again. He saw the subtle danger of covetousness and the serious damage of covetousness. Material things were perilous stuff. Where a man's treasure was, there was his heart also likely to be. He had a particular concern for rich folks. He knew how hard it was for them to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven.

Thou Shalt Covet.

"Thou shalt not covet anything that is thy neighbor's." Covetousness in the sense of inordinate or unlawful desire, is forbidden. But there is a covetousness that is encouraged. Or to put it better, men are urged to covet some things. Paul puts it thus: "But covet earnestly the best gifts." All of the finest and best things of life, purity and truth, and honesty, and faith and hope and love, and humility and patience, and goodness—these and a hundred other things are to be coveted, to be greatly desired, to be sought after. Jesus was saying this is another way, when he said, "Blessed are they which hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled."

"Wherein sin does abound, grace does much more abound." One can conquer covetousness by refusing to fix one's attention on the forbidden. A man must refuse to look longingly at that which he cannot have. But even this negative way of dealing with covetousness has its limitations. One must learn to fix his attention, not on what is forbidden, but on what is permitted, by the expulsive power of a new affection. Inasmuch as covetousness is a thing of the inner life, the inner life must be set right. The only sure way is through a commitment to Jesus Christ. This is the victory which overcometh covetousness.

MEDITATIONS ON FAMILY LIFE.

fail in the transmission of character we have dishonored them and disgraced ourselves. Of this you may be sure, the joy and honor which may come to you as parents will not be measured half so much by the material successes of your children as by the character which has been nurtured in their lives.

This is not to say that parents alone are responsible for the behavior of their children, but I suspect we have far more to do with what our children become than we may ever suspect. A certain teacher was perplexed because one of her pupils used very profane language, and used it quite naturally. There wasn't very much she could do about it because that child learned it at home. The language we use, the clothes we wear, the thoughts we think, the habits we acquire are all largely traceable to the patterns we found at home. We are shaping the tomorrows of our children by the way we are living in our homes today. May I plead that you seize every opportunity to shape the thought and spirit of your children, for the days are fleeting and one morning, not so far away, you will awake to find them out of reach and your influence spent.

Let me plead also that you undertake all the duties of a good parent personally, and that you not shift these duties on to other people or agencies. I heard a parent the other day blaming the school because her child had bad manners. Someone else may blame the church because some boys or girl is immoral. Another mother loses the affection of her child having turned over the rearing of that child to a nurse that she might be free for more important social obligations than the drudgery of child rearing. The school, the church, the tutor, the nurse, may each do a job and have a place, but no one of them or all of them can do the job of the parents. None can give a child the affection that feeds its very life save the mother and father. To transmit that love we must live with our children, play, work, talk with them across the months and the years they share our dwellings.

Somehow we must give them a faith to live by. No this cannot be delegated to the pastor or Sunday school teacher. It is the privilege of the parents to plant and nurture in the lives of their children. It is trite to say we cannot give them what we haven't got. I was calling in the home of a young mother one day and she said she wanted her little girl to go to Sunday school because she wanted her to have a faith in God—something that she herself never had found. My heart went out to that little child, for the odds were mightily against her.

Parents and children can sing together, read the scriptures together, pray together, share their problems

Have You Read?

THE ECUMENICAL MOVEMENT, by the Leonard Hodgson, D. D., The University Press, The University of the South, Sewanne, Tennessee, 1951, 50 pp.)

The three lectures cover the development of ecumenical thought and organization from 1910 to 1950 in a lively manner and with significant interpretation. Final "reflection":

"We are witnessing the opening of a new period in Church history . . . what constitutes the novelty is not the particular form of organization which has appeared in the World Council, but the new type of interest in one another which has grown up in our divided Churches. The fact that the Holy Spirit has moved together, and above all establish a basis of understanding so that no matter what the problem, it will be a fit subject for discussion in the family circle in an atmosphere of mutual respect and freedom. Bring, don't send, your children to Sunday school and church. Your very presence speaks volumes to your child. It shows that for you religion is important, important enough to take your time as well as the time of your child, I notice that when children get in high school, those who drop away from Sunday school and church are usually those whose parents do not bother to attend.

No, I can offer no method of character building which carries with it a warranty guarantee. But of this I am sure. As parents we have the biggest job in all the world. It is the most important job in all the world. It is training our children in the way they should go, that when they are old they shall not depart from it. It is our job, not someone else's. But it is a task, the successful execution of which will bring the greatest, possible satisfaction to us as individuals and in the long run be of the greatest service to our communities and to the world.

the Churches to feel this interest and to seek to devise forms of organization in which it can find expression is the underlying reality of the whole Ecumenical Movement. . . .

"That the great need of the Ecumenical Movement at the moment is that it should be more fully shared in by the general membership of our various Churches. I have spoken of the growth in mutual understanding that can only come by personal intercourse. . . . It is only through personal intercourse that one begins to learn what other ways of holding and practising the Christian faith look like and feel like from within. It is only by learning that, one can begin to understand them. And it is only by growth in such understanding that we can begin to find the way to that Church unity for which we hope and pray. . . ."

RUFUS SPEAKS TO OUR TIME. An Anthology, Edited by Harry Emerson Fosdick. The Macmillan Company, New York. $4.00.

Rufus Jones was a recognized spokesman for the Quakers. He was a representative of one of the most dynamic and virile religious groups in Christendom. During his long and robust ministry he redeemed the time by teaching, lecturing, preaching and writing.

Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick has gone over his voluminous writings with the fine-tooth comb of a mature and devoted scholarship, selecting thirteen chapters which reflect the clarity and range of Rufus Jones' thinking.

There are many reasons for studying Rufus Jones. He was a philosopher, a theologian, a reformer, an apostle of the Inner Light. One finds in his writings the authentic spark of inspiration and revelation. Our generation had best study him, lest the mystic become extinct.

Dr. Fosdick has rendered a fine service by compiling and commending these writings. Here are two great names linked together. In his succinct introduction Dr. Fosdick says: "I understand what one of his students meant when he said, 'He lighted my candle.'" Well, anyone who helped light such a prophetic candle as Harry Emerson Fosdick deserves wide and careful reading. Here then are chapters with penetrating insights into the meaning of God, Science, Conscience, Prayer, Mysticism, Church, Quakers, Immortality.

The Orphanage
 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

You will miss four of our children who are no longer at the Orphanage. Their friends and classes should take notice. They are: Janet Beers, Clarence ("Corky") Williams, Lewis Simpson, and Margaret Simpson. We are very proud of each of these children. They have made good records here. Janet is working with Western Electric, Burlington, N. C.; Corky Williams is employed in an A & P super market, Wilmington, N. C.; and the two Simpson children are returned to their mother who has re-established her home in Burlington. We have done well by each of these and they have done well in the training and home which has been given them. I wish to thank all—and there are many—who have done them special favors.

Last Sunday we gave our children's program in two churches: Liberty (Vance) and Mt. Auburn. The people were generous in both these fine churches. We had dinner at Liberty (Vance), and gave our program in the afternoon at Mt. Auburn, after the program we were shown the Bugg Island dam basin and the dam itself and given picnic supper. The children and their helpers were all thrilled at the sights. I christened two babies at Liberty (Vance) for the minister there, one of our finest young ministers who is as yet only a licensiate, Warren Matthews. I invited both these churches, as I do everywhere to come visit us one Sunday, bring along a picnic lunch, and see all our children and the improvements being made.

I hope our women will come July 8 to the School of Missions at Elon, and that they will visit the Orphanage. The women are doing so much for the children here. And they are collecting coupons of all kinds for our help. We wish them to see firsthand what it is all about.

Fayetteville Church came to see us early this week: Rev. Kenneth Lindner and Mrs. Lindner and three of their ladies. They took one of our children home with them for a week's vacation, and when they bring her back they have engaged to take a little boy for a week. There are so many friends asking for children for vacation we have to divide in some cases their two weeks into one week at a place. People are so good to these children and all of us here are trying to teach them to appreciate it. That is one of our easiest jobs, because they have such nice times.

Since I began this letter a representative of one of our neighboring firms walked in and presented a $300.00 check to the Orphanage, as a designated gift. It is to be used as a part of the Johnston Hall improvements.

I wish you could see our wheat and oat crop. It looks good, and I do hope we shall be able to harvest it in good condition. Sometimes we have a wet season at harvest time and since grain is allowed to get so ripe now days before it is harvested we suffered some loss on it year before last.

Now let me thank you again for the good report this week. When you realize it takes a little more than a thousand dollars per week the year round you can easily see why we are glad to hear from every Sunday school and every friend often. I am very happy with this report and appreciate it more than I can tell you.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

LAYMEN MEET IN THIRD BIENNIAL SESSION.

Following is a report of the third biennial session of The Laymen's Fellowship, held at Durham, N. C., April 29, 1952:

Over 200 Laymen of the Southern Convention met in the dining hall of the education building of the Christian Church in Durham for a banquet meeting. A very interesting program was prepared by our chairman, Mr. Geo. Colclough. Those taking part on the program were Mr. Walter A. Graham, our National director, and Dr. Vere V. Loper of Berkley, California, the Moderator of our General Council, who conducted a very impressive installation service.

In the bussiness session there were three matters that were discussed and voted, which need to be called to the attention of all the laymen of the Convention:

1. Permission of the Southern Convention was asked to raise $25,000 for the physical development of Moonelon. This request was granted by the Convention and the necessary organization was set up to do the job. Many of our laymen have had the opportunity to see this property, which has been given to our denomination by Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Sellars, and feel that we should improve it so that our church and its agencies will be able to use it. When this property is developed it will be a Convention Center for Young People's Conferences, Laymen's Meetings, etc.

2. It was voted to have a mid-winter meeting at Elon College.

3. The Recommendation for Finances was that each member of the Laymen's Fellowship pay to their conference treasurer $1.00 per year, of which 50c is to be sent to the treasurer of the Southern Convention Laymen's Fellowship.

The following officers were installed for the coming biennium:

W. B. Williams, chairman, 1253 24th St., Newport News, Va.

J. Earl Danieleley, vice-chairman, 17-B Glen Lenox, Chapel Hill, N. C.

S. H. Pell, secretary-treasurer, Rt. 1, Ramseur, N. C.

ton, Mass. and Cleveland, Ohio. Of particular interest and helpfulness has been his recent study of our Congregational Christian Churches in the Southeast.

In the "Appreciation" which recently was spread upon the records of The Board of Home Missions, Dr. Sanderson was praised for his "technical skill and wide experience" as well as for his "gift of keen insight" and interpretive ability along with "a literary excellence that has in many respects been unmatched." Dr. Sanderson, said the Appreciation, "has helped us to see our inadequacies, to strengthen our established work, and to behold unmet opportunities."

At the Midwinter meeting of the Missions Council in Cleveland last January, Dr. Sanderson declared that we live today "in the time of Great Migration"; that Americans are not only more numerous but they have been moving about in such large numbers that "scatteration" has become a part of our national problem. He said: "If we build shopping centers and erect television aerials and leave out our church sites and let people grow up in easy, pagan secularism, we shall by no means be a missionary church. The time will come when Iron Curtains will have crumbled or will have been battered down. The time will come when we will be sending a host of technicians to serve as colleagues for the leaders of the younger churches overseas. We shall do this only if we have strong new churches at the home base where millions of migrant Americans happen to be living at the time."

culture Building, Raleigh. "We want to help the man when he is in distress and down and out. Let us not take this program lightly. It is a Christian thing for Americans to do for persons when they are in need and in distress," he went on to say. "Let us not get tired of well doing," he urged.

Rev. Jeff L. Norris, pastor of the Macedonia Lutheran Church, Burlington, reporting on conditions overseas as he saw them in Germany and Austria, said: "Housing and living conditions are beyond description. Men, women and children are literally stacked on top of each other. The church agencies seek to meet such conditions by feeding the refugees, setting up homes for the aged and orphanages for the children. They look to Americans who can give them a measure of peace in their plight."

State CROP Chairman, L. Y. Balentine, Commissioner of Agriculture, presided. Organization and campaign plans were outlined by the State Director, Rev. Carl R. Key, Durham. A goal of 69 earloads of farm commodities such as peanuts, corn, wheat, soy beans, milk and cotton, was adopted. Sixty counties will be worked intensively and the others given opportunity to organize. The committee was especially interested in the following figures presented by Mr. Key: the amount of food required to feed one refugee every day for a whole year—4 bushels of wheat—one-half of bread; 100 pounds of fluid milk—one and one-half glasses of reconstituted milk; 2 bushels of soy beans—3 bowls of soyflake cereal; 2 bushels of corn—1 large bowl of relief cereal; each 25 pounds of raw cotton—27 shirts or 625 medical bandages, or 125 vests; and a 100 lb. bag of peanuts—one ounce of peanut butter a day for a year.

Young Missionaries Will be Commissioned

AT THE GENERAL COUNCIL
THURSDAY EVENING, JUNE 19
IN CONSECRATION SERVICE
BY THE AMERICAN BOARD

Missionary at Work in Turkey

A NUMBER of newly appointed missionaries will participate in the American Board Consecration Service at Claremont on Tuesday evening, June 19. This service will include the usual processional of flags and Board representatives.

The speaker at this evening program will be Mr. Kiyoshi Togasaki, editor and publisher of the Nippon Times, the English-language newspaper in Tokyo. Mr. Togasaki was born in San Francisco and graduated from the University of California. He is the chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Japan International Christian University.

Miss Martha Lee Dunbar, of Chico, California, and for the past three years a teacher of English in the Junior High School of Oroville, California, has been appointed for three years of service in Turkey, as a teacher of English and Science.

Miss Carol Elizabeth Egly, who is graduating from Pomona College, Claremont, California, this month, has also been appointed for a three-year term as a teacher of English in Turkey. Miss Egly expects to sail for her new work in the Near East around August 15. She will be assigned to the American Collegiate Institute at Izmir, Turkey, founded in 1877 by the American Board. This school stands on an olive and pine tree covered hill overlooking the city which is known best by Bible students as Smyrna. Its student body is made up chiefly of Turkish girls from middle-class homes, although it has some 50 scholarship students.

Mrs. Mattie Compton Claiborne of Berkeley, California, has been appointed a teacher of Home Economics and Science for three years in the American Collegiate Institute. Some of the fruits of her sociological studies are found in her book, "A Study of 109 Juvenile Delinquents of Alameda County." She is a member of the American Association of University Women; the League of Women Voters; the Berkeley Health and Visiting Nurses Association, and the Berkeley Interracial Committee.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Donn Kesselheim of Buena Vista, Colorado, have been appointed for a five-year term in the American College at Tarsus, Turkey. A World War II veteran, Mr. Kesselheim served with the United States Navy in the Radio Material School, specializing in radio, radar and sonar. Right now he is teaching in the Colorado State Reformatory in Buena Vista, Colorado. The American School at Tarsus, Turkey, where the Kesselheims will teach, was founded by the American Board in 1887, and some 200 Turkish boys between the ages of 12 and 20 are given there, not only thorough grounding in the three R's in preparation for business or entrance into institutions of higher learning, but in character building.

Miss Helen Louise Morgan, a member of the faculty of Macalester College, St. Paul, Minnesota, has been appointed for a three-year term as a teacher of English in Turkey. Miss Morgan, who expects to sail overseas around August 15, will teach in the American Academy for Girls in Scutari, which is a suburb of Istanbul. The American Academy, a spot made bright in history by Florence Nightingale, is on the Asiatic side of the Bosphorus, where Asia and Europe meet face to face, and the cultures of the east and west mingle.

Don't Quit!

When things go wrong, as they sometimes will;
When the road you're trudging seems all uphill;
When the funds are low, and the debts are high,
And you want to smile, but you have to sigh;
When care is pressing you down a bit,
Rest if you must, but don't you quit.

Life is queer with its twists and turns,
As everyone of us sometimes learns,
And many a failure turns about,
When he might have won had he stuck it out.
So don't give up, though the pace seems slow;
You may succeed with another blow.

Often the goal is nearer than
It seems to a faint and faltering man;
Often the struggler has given up
When he might have captured the victor's cup;
And he learned too late, when the night slipped down,
How close he had been to the golden crown.

Success is failure turned inside out,
The silver tint of the clouds of doubt,
And you never can tell how close you are;
It may be near when it seems afar.
So stick to the fight when you're hardest hit;
It's when things seem worst that you mustn't quit.

News Flashes

Rev. Ernest F. Brickhouse, pastor of our Hopewell, Virginia, Church, was a visitor at the publishing office this week.

The Hopewell, Virginia, Church had a home-coming service on last Sunday, June 15. Rev. D. D. Nash, former pastor of the church gave a history of the church. Several charter members were present for the occasion.

There will be no CHRISTIAN SUN published on June 26. However, the July 3 issue will be put in the mails early, as the office of publication will be closed from Friday afternoon, June 27, to Monday, July 7.

The General Council is in session at Claremont, California, this week. The Southern Convention is well represented by laymen and women as well as ministers. Interesting happenings at the council will be given space in coming issues of THE SUN.

REVIVAL AT MT. AUBURN.

The revival meeting at Mr. Auburn Congregational Christian Church will be held beginning first Sunday in July and lasting through the second Sunday. The Rev. J. U. Fogleman will conduct the services.

The public is invited.

MRS. EUGENE WILSON,
Church Secretary.

W. N. C. LAYMEN'S RALLY.

A Conference-Wide Rally of Laymen will be held at the Town Hall, Ramseur, N. C., on Saturday, June 28, at 7:00 p. m. This will be a supper meeting of Laymen, the meal will be furnished by the Pleasant Ridge Christian Church Ladies for a minimum charge.

We are planning a program of fellowship, music and inspiration. This will be an important meeting as there will be a report made of the Southern Convention Meeting of Laymen held at Durham recently. We would like to have all the men of our churches to be present regardless of whether there is an organized Laymen's Fellowship in the local church or not. We have had some new groups to organize since our last meeting at Liberty. This is most encouraging.

Let's see what will be reported June 28 at Ramseur. There is still time to get started, how about it?

Mr. J. Earl Danielly, of Chapel Hill, will be the guest speaker. Mr. Danielly is vice-president of the Southern Convention Laymen and an outstanding layman.

A good meal, good fellowship, good quartet, plenty of group singing; what else could be added to make for a better evening than all this, plus your presence. Be sure to come.

SYBRANT PELL,

TIMOTHY S. CHANG.

People of the Southern Convention will be happy to know that Timothy Chang has just received his Bachelor of Science Degree in Poultry from North Carolina State College, Raleigh, North Carolina. He graduated June 8, 1952, with high honors and won a scholarship to Ohio State University for graduate work in Poultry.

Timothy received his Bachelor of Divinity Degree at Duke Divinity School, Duke University, Durham, North Carolina, in 1951 and made a good record for himself there also.

Last summer Timothy worked with a Young People's Caravan visiting churches within the Southern Convention and was very widely acclaimed for his good personality and helpfulness. This summer Timothy will work part of the time in our Summer Camps and Conferences and everyone will want to see him and congratulate him on his achievement. Congratulations, Timothy, from the Southern Convention. We are proud of you!

THE NEW PARSONAGE AT HANK'S CHAPEL

HANK'S CHAPEL PARSONAGE.

Rev. and Mrs. R. T. Grissom are happy in the new parsonage at Hank's Chapel. The corner stone was laid May 20, 1950. Now the parsonage is complete with eight rooms, two baths, a breeze-way and garage. The church is proud of the new and modern parsonage, for it brings to them for the first time in the history of the church a resident pastor. The next thing on the agenda for the church is the addition of Sunday school rooms and a modern heating plant.

CONGREGATIONAL SEMINARY ELECTS PRESIDENT.

Bangor Theological Seminary in Maine has just elected as its new President, 39-year old Frederick W. Whittaker, Ph.D., product of the "Bangor Plan" of theological education which provides an opportunity for mature men to pursue both college and seminary studies for the Christian ministry after experience in other vocations.

Dr. Whittaker entered the Seminary in 1939 after ten years in the business world. He leaves the post of Waldo Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Dean of Students at Bangor to take this new responsibility of leadership being the second alumnus chosen for this office.

Dr. Whittaker has been active in denominational affairs, serving as a member of the Committee on Free Church Polity and Unity of the General Council, a member of the Social Action Committee of the Maine Conference and chairman of the Ministerial Standing Committee of Penobscot Association of Congregational Christian Churches. He will take over his new post as president of Bangor Theological Seminary, the oldest school of its kind in New England, on July 1.

Labor and trouble one can always get through alone, but it takes two to be glad.—Ibsen.

DEATH BY ACCIDENT CLAIMS FORMER MISSIONARY AND MOTHER OF SOUTHERN CONVENTION MINISTER.

Mrs. Elmer W. Galt, who with her husband was made an Emeritus Missionary, May 13 after 42 years in North China, died in Shenandoah, Iowa, Sunday evening, May 18 following an automobile accident.

Funeral services were held Wednesday, May 21 in Shenandoah with interment in the Cummings lot at Tabor, Iowa, following committal services.

Born in Tabor, Iowa, Mrs. Galt was a graduate of Tabor College, B. A., Class of 1904 and taught five years before marrying Rev. Elmer W. Galt.

Mrs. Galt began her service under the American Board in China in 1910 a year after her marriage. Except for periods of temporary absence from the field Mr. and Mrs. Galt were stalwart members of the North China Mission from this date until retirement.

From 1941 to 1946 Mrs. Galt was in the United States because of World War II. Then she went back to China and served with her husband until 1951 including nearly two years in Peking after it was taken over by the Communist Government.

The Galts returned home from China by an indirect route visiting their daughter Mrs. R. D. Modak in Bombay, India, and also their son Rev. Ralph M. Galt in Virginia.

Mrs. Galt leaves her husband Rev. Elmer W. Galt, two daughters Miss Edith J. Galt, M. N., temporarily on the staff of Western Reserve School of Nursing and Mrs. R. D. Modak of Bombay, India, and a son Rev. Ralph M. Galt, who recently came to the Shenrock Parish in the Virginia Valley Conference.

The following telegram was sent from Boston headquarters:

"The American Board and your many friends both here and in China extend heartfelt sympathy to you and family in the sudden passing of Altie to that better land. We are grateful to the Heavenly Father for her wonderful and sacrificial life, devoted to his work in China and America."

CHURCH-RELATED COLLEGE HONORS MISSIONARY.

Rev. Darley Downs, Congregational Christian missionary under the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in Japan since 1919, was recently awarded the degree of D. D. honoris causa by Olivet College, Olivet, Michigan.

Mr. Downs, who is en route back to Japan where he served as Executive Secretary of the Council of Cooperation and Inter-Board Missionary Field Committee, is a graduate of Denver University and Union Theological Seminary.

In the citation accompanying the honorary degree Mr. Downs was described as "a distinguished missionary interpreter of Christianity to the Japanese people, and a representative of the American people in terms of practical good will in the Orient in war and peace for over 30 years."

Mr. Downs served in many capacities in Japan including the directorship for many years of a language school in Tokyo. When World War II forced him from Japan he was transferred by the American Board to Dansalan, Philippine Islands for temporary service. Here he was interned by the Japanese for two and one-half years being in three different camps including the infamous Los Banos in which, because of his skill in the use of the Japanese language, he acted as interpreter and liaison person winning the life-long gratitude of his fellow prisoners and saving many lives by his calmness and intelligent work.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

ROADSIDE MEDITATIONS

On this trip to California, our car, a modern miracle of highway performance, becomes our portable parsonage. Oh yes, we decided not to take the kitchen stove, but it is amazing the items of necessity and convenience which can be included in a motor trip. Every state has developed remarkable provisions for the ever-growing caravan.

Driving across the United States is an exhilarating experience. After driving from state to state, one comes to a new understanding and appreciation of this vast, virile and versatile stronghold of democracy.

Faith is just as necessary as gasoline on a motor trip. The passengers, even the back-seat drivers, must have some faith in the driver. The driver puts his trust in the road-map, the manufacturers of his mechanical mobile, as well as the filling-station operator. The modern highway is a monument to faith and a proving ground for democracy.

Considerable wisdom can be gleaned from the roadside class room. Burma Shave reminds its passing classes that "substitutes can do more harm than a city fellow on a farm." And it is worth many miles of travel to find such an honest statement as this: "Welcome to Stanton, Texas, home of 3,000 friendly people, and a few old sore-heads!" Vary the figures a bit, and this might be an appropriate sign for our churches.

Browsing with the General Council's Executive Committee

A Digest has been made of the main considerations and actions of the Executive Committee of the General Council for the biennium. This Digest is in the hands of all delegates to the General Council, but there are items of concern for our entire constituency. A cursory browsing arrested attention on these points.

You will be pleased to learn that the Committee on Denominational History was commended for its endeavors to establish an historical society and was requested to take into consideration the need for maintaining the study of Christian as well as Congregational history. It is gratifying to know that the committee is endeavoring to carry out this mandate. In the light of this directive, it is imperative that we exercise greater care in developing and preserving denominational data in the Historical Room at Elon College. Copies of The Christian Sun are on file at the Congregational Library in Boston. One major effort of the committee is to stress the value of anniversary celebrations, with emphasis and remembrance of the life and labor which have gone into the organization and the building up of the Church and the long usefulness of its ministry through the years.

Widespread interest should greet the announcement that the Scottish Congregational Union has issued an invitation and the next meeting of the International Congregational Council will be held in the historic city of St. Andrews, June 20-29, 1953. According to the schedule for the nomination of delegates, the Province of the South will be entitled to three. The last meeting of the Council, it will be remembered, was held at Wellesley College.

There are a growing number of elderly people in our churches which we dare not evade. Consequently, the Board of Home Missions has accepted the Executive Committee's invitation to sponsor a study of gerontological concerns within our fellowship. Dr. Samuel Kincheloe of Chicago Theological Seminary is leading the preliminary survey committee. The editor is planning to devote an issue of The Sun during the summer to this problem.

It will be interesting to note the outcome of the vote that the officers of the General Council be instructed to canvass its employees to determine how many of such employees concur in the desire to be covered by the insurance system established by Title II of the Social Security Act. A poll of our ministers is being taken by the Annuity Fund and the Department of Ministry to determine what percentage prefer to be under Federal Social Security coverage.

The Executive Committee keeps an open door to all representatives of our fellowship who have a grievance or a proposal. Considerable attention was given during the biennium to the problems of the Council for Social Action and the Committee on Free Church and Polity.

The editor helped nominate this important committee and has, therefore, a double interest in their proceedings. The indications are that they have acted regularly and wisely.

"Islamic Revival in Turkey"

A Digest of a Report in "International Affairs," for January, 1952

By PROFESSOR BERNARD LEWIS

After outlining the three different policies pursued by Turkey since the nineteenth century—that of pan-Islamism, Ottomanism, and pan-Turkism, which were tried successively and abandoned or modified as the basis of empire or nation, Dr. Lewis states, that "the Turkish Republic, while rejecting the wider claims of pan-Turkism, adopted the Turkish nation as the basis of identity of the Turkish" lay state, in which "religion, though not actually suppressed, was made a strictly private affair." The secularist reforms of Ataturk included "the abolition of the fez and disappearance of the veil, the change of the alphabet, the adoption of the Gregorian calendar and of Sunday as the official day of rest, the taking over the evkaf (religious endowments) by the state, the restriction and then prohibition of religious education, the adoption of European civil and penal codes in place of the reformed Islamic law of the preceding period, the reduction and eventual elimination of the power of the religious hierarchy of the ulema," and the dissolution and banning of tarikas, the great dervish brotherhoods, the impounding of their assets, and the prohibition by law of their holding of prayer-meetings.

But in spite of the secularization of the state in terms of the separation of Islam from it, "in some respects the participation of the non-Muslims in the public life of Turkey actually decreased after the establishment of the Republic, although their legal status on paper was higher than ever before. Certain forms of discrimination—for example, non-Muslims were called up for military service but did not bear arms and were not commissioned, while the number of non-Muslims in the civil service dwindled rapidly. . . . Significantly, religion still appeared on identity cards and other official documents."

The revival is characterized by the display of Arabic texts on the walls in cafes, shops, taxis, and other public places, as well as their open sale in the streets; and ever-increasing scale of the publication of religious books and pamphlets; the reappearance of old gentlemen with beards and berets, both symbols of a special interest in religion, in many places; a considerable increase in mosque attendance; a sharp rise in the number of pilgrimages to Mecca, and the increased attention given to them in the popular press, though discouraged by the government; the many signs of a resurgence of the tarikas, which had gone underground throughout the Republican era, in spite of the repressive measures of the government against them.

The revival has gone beyond the stage of private and public manifestation of religious experience and worship, and introduced changes in the status of the secular state created by Kemal Ataturk. Early in 1949 religion was re-introduced in Turkish schools, as an optional subject. In October of the same year the Faculty of Theology was reopened as a department in the state university, to promote the study of Islam on the level of higher education. In October of the following year, 1950, religious education was made compulsory for the fourth and fifth grades in the primary schools, though provision was made for parents who wished to have their children exempted from the study of religion, to do so. Other legal measures in 1950 in the interest of religion were: the permission of the recitation of the call to prayer in Arabic, which had been banned earlier in favor of Turkish; and the introduction of the reading of the Koran three times a week into the Turkish State Radio program.

At present the religious forces associated with these changes are demanding for the return of the evkaf to the Department of Religious Affairs, which, when granted will greatly increase the power of the survivors of the ulema, the body of the learned doctors of Moslem religion and law in Turkey. Since the establishment of the Republic the Department had come to represent a shrunken remnant of the office of the Sheikh-ul-Islam and the Ministries of Sheriat and Evkaf. If the revival continues to grow in strength and momentum at the present rate, says Dr. Lewis, it is not impossible that even such reforms may be endangered as relate to the restoration of the evkaf, the resurgence of the tarikas, the return to the Arabic alphabet, and the repeal of the social legislation since the founding of the Republic.

The revival of Islam in Turkey has also taken the form of anti-Christian, anti-missionary, anti-American, anti-Western, and a pro-fascist turn. In 1940 a group of religious-minded Turks, led by Eshref Edib, who in the Young Turk era had been editor of the Sebil-ur-Reshad, a Moslem periodical, protested vehemently against the previous year's decision of the Turkish Ministry of Education to publish a new, revised Turkish edition of the Encyclopedia of Islam. They charged that this work was not really an encyclopedia of Islam but against Islam, the work of Christian missionaries, aimed at least in part in helping missionaries in their proselytizing efforts and undermining the basis of the Mohammedan faith. Actually, the Encyclopedia was a great international cooperative enterprise prepared by a group of European Orientalists, and containing the best scholarship could offer in Islamic studies at the time it was published. The articles that were out of date were to be revised or re-written by Turkish scholars, many new articles were to be added, and the whole work kept on the same high level of scholarship as the original publication. The opposition carried on its criticisms and attack first through letters and articles in the Turkish press, and then in a periodical which they themselves published. The following year, in 1941, they started the publication of Türk İslam Ansiklopedisi, a rival work of their own, written from a strictly Muslim point of view. "Each fascicule of their encyclopediod was accompanied by a magazine supplement containing violent and often scurrilous criticisms of the current fascicules of the other encyclopedia" which were meanwhile being issued by the Ministry.

One of the three major groups of periodical publications "has been well described as 'Boulevard Fascism with religious coloring matter,'" says Professor Lewis. The outstanding example, he says, is Buyuk Doghu (Great Orient), "a rather scurrilous periodical . . . edited by the poet Necib Kisakurek." It is "clericalist, nationalist, and royalist, and appears to be a Turkish calk on the Action Française." This, as well as the third major group of publications, is of particular interest to Armenians. The latter group consists of journals with intellectual pretensions, one of which, the Sebil-ur-Reshad, "purports to be a revival of the journal of the same name published under the

By REV. HENRY E. ROBINSON

III—"WHAT CHILDREN CAN CONTRIBUTE TO THE HOME.

In the first place each child born into our homes is a living miracle. It is a new creation which is the gift of God. Before the child, parents stand in awe and wonder scarcely believing that so great a gift from God is possible. I shall never forget the feeling I had the first time I became a father. It was a strange new feeling composed of an admixture of pride, responsibility, and joy. The first gift the child brings to the home is a sense of wonder—wonder inspired by God through the gift of new life. This gift of wonder we should never lose. It is close akin to awe and reverence. It is peculiar to the human race. No other creature possesses it.

The second gift the child brings to the home is close akin to the first, it is growth. What a thrill parents experience when the baby takes its first step or says its first word. Soon it gains full use of its body and talks almost like an adult. Then comes school and college—how great the progress of the mind. John begins to do examples in math that stump the old man. Mary brings home a stylish dress made in home economics that makes men sit up and take notice. All along the line we watch with just pride the growth of our offspring—growth of body and mind. Then in a hard test of character we see a boy or girl choose the hard right over the easy wrong. A great satisfaction comes to the heart of that parent for here is growth of spirit, the highest growth of all. The child may not realize that he makes so rich a gift to the home, but parents would rather have the fruits of character in their children than silver and gold.

Children can bring to the home the gift of courtesy. There is, indeed, no rule or law that demands that courtesy be a part of the home. Yet courtesy lifts life to a higher plane. It turns life from existence to a thing of respect and beauty. It reflects the culture and tradition which we feel should result from centuries of living together. I recall once going up a mountain side for an Easter sunrise service. The young people all rushed on ahead to see who could reach the summit first. Trudging up the mountain path was an elderly woman unassisted. She was the faithful superintendent of the little village Sunday school. Somehow that service lost its spirit of worship when the simple courtesies of life were overlooked. With little acts of remembrance embracing the simple courtesies—the acts given—not demanded—children can bring great joy to the home and begin then and there to lay the foundations for a happy and prosperous home of their own.

Children that are normal and happy bring a natural enthusiasm into the home which parents weighed down by the cares of life are apt to lose. A little child with a simple toy radiates joy and gladness beyond our belief oftentimes. Have you seen the face of a boy who has made his first bird house or soapbox derby? That enthusiasm shed abroad is contagious. It is a real contribution to the life of the home that should be seized as a pearl of great price.

Children and youth are by nature optimists. They look on the future with great hope and anticipation. We adults are prone to see the future in terms of forebodings, doubt, strife, and fear. Youth looks at the future with an invincible belief that the world of tomorrow will be better than that of today. We of this generation with two world wars and a major depression to our credit have left much to be desired. If youth can bring to this tired old world the spirit of hope and optimism, they have made a rich contribution which will leave the world better for their having come to it. There is an old argument underway as to whether the homes of today are better than the homes of yesterday. If our homes today are better, it is because the youth of yesterday were optimistic about the future. If the homes of tomorrow are better than the homes of today it may well be because of this indomitable spirit of optimism which youth brings to the environment.

Wonder, growth, courtesy, optimism, vision are rich gifts which are truly real though they must be classed among the unseen values in our homes. Our children bring these values to our homes. Let us not discount them or sell them short. What a drab and dreary world this would be without the sense of wonder, the mystery of growth, the lift of courtesy, the invigoration of optimism and enthusiasm!

Their children can make a final contribution, which while of a very material nature, certainly should not be overlooked. The opportunity to make this contribution usually comes in the mature years when our parents have reached old age and their care and comforts become the responsibility of their children. There is no law of the state that demands that children care for their parents. Because of this many shirk this duty and let the state or local welfare agency do what it can for the aged. I fell in conversation with a verily lonely old gentleman in a rest home. I asked him if he had a family. Yes, he said, "but they never come to see me anymore." There he was left by his own children, to die almost unmourned. In contrast to such thoughtlessness and ingratitude I want to pay the highest tribute to the many homes that have been opened to receive aged relatives in their time of need. Often that is done at not only expense of money, but cost in time, effort, and energy. The daily schedule of such homes is rearranged and altered to meet the needs of these elderly folk. Surely God will richly reward those who by time, money and effort contribute to the happiness of their kindred by these acts of unselfishness. Surely this is obedience to the fifth commandment: Honor thy father and thy mother.

AMERICAN BOARD COMMISSIONS BIBLE TRANSLATOR.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Loomis of Belmont, Massachusetts, have just been appointed as career missionaries in the South Seas by the American Board. Mr. Loomis will specialize in Bible translation work in the Micronesian Islands to which they hope to sail in late June or early July.

After he finished college Mr. Loomis began the study of Russian because of his interest in the Siberian Tribes and then took up graduate work in anthropology. His master's thesis is on "Value Systems and Their Manifestations in a Paleo-Arctic Siberian Tribe."

His interests in college were wide. He went in for wrestling, orchestra, Chapel choir and Bible translation. He was a Hi-C Club leader and church school teacher as well as head of a "Foreign Mission Fellowship."

The Loomises were commissioned at a service held in Park Street Church, Boston, on Sunday, June 1.

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

VACANT ROOMS.

On October 18, 1911 Miss Ella Brunk and I were married. In September, 1912 we entered Princeton Theological Seminary, Princeton, N. J. In September, 1913, in addition to my work at the Seminary, I entered Princeton University and matriculated for the Master's degree. In May, 1915, I was graduated from the Seminary and that year was awarded the Master of Arts degree from the University. In May, 1925, I returned to the seminary for my class reunion. With this one exception, neither Mrs. Smith nor I had been back on the campus of either the University or the Seminary.

On May 31, 1952, we returned to the Seminary and University, not for a class reunion or particularly to see old friends, but to see the Seminary and University and to walk some of the paths that we walked 37 years ago. A lot can happen in 37 years. There are only two professors living who taught in the Seminary during our stay there. They were both present and we were delighted to see them. There were only four members of the class of 1915 present. It was interesting and somewhat alarming what time trekking over 37 years will do for an individual.

On Monday morning—Alumni Day—I walked across the Seminary grounds, strolled into Stuart Hall where the classrooms are. There was no one in the building, that I saw. I walked into all the classrooms in which I sat for lectures and instruction. As I stood alone in these empty rooms it did not seem that I was alone. Those who taught me years ago seemed to be present. The rooms echoed with their voices as they enunciated historical facts, philosophical truths, and Christian principles by which we were to be guided during the future years of our lives. Of course, I did not see these eminent instructors of years past with my natural eyes, nevertheless, they were present and still speaking.

Those days meant much to me. My years at Princeton Seminary have been an inspiration from that day to this, and have meant much to those whom I have served in the pastorate, in congregations, in conferences, and on the campus of Elon College. After all, empty rooms do speak. Their voices will not be silenced. I know now about how some of the Elon College graduates feel when they, after many years, return to find only the grounds and buildings that are familiar. After all, the true alumnus is not devoted simply to the individuals, class, and college mates, but his devotion is to the institution that is permanent and abiding—dedicated to the education of those who seek its campus and halls of instruction in preparation for the greater things of life.

My return visit to Princeton gives me a new appreciation of Elon College. My hopes for its future are heightened and my ambitions for its continued growth is increased. May God bless those who have attended Elon College and guide those who should that they may enter as the years pass.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

President Smith is attending the meeting of The General Council of Congregational Christian Churches in Claremont, California, and will be gone until the latter part of June. He asked me to send a record of all offerings received on apportionment for the college while he is away to THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

I should like to add this extra word. Sunday, June 29 is another fifth Sunday, and this gives our Sunday schools and churches an opportunity to express their interest in the college. Since Dr. Smith is away I think it would be fine indeed if we would welcome him home with a generous report of offerings received on this fifth Sunday. It will be a great encouragement to him, and Elon College needs your support during these summer months. Thank you for your cooperation.

THE SUSTAINING FUND.

To further express the interest of the church in Elon College during these trying days and economic stress the Convention, in biennial session at Durham, North Carolina, on May 1, 1952, voted to continue the Sustaining Fund for Elon College during the ensuing biennium. During these years of threatening war the government has, out of necessity, resorted to the "draft" to insure necessary personnel in all branches of military preparation and operation to carry on the Korean War and safeguard our country from any possible invasion or aggression.

This action of our government has taken, and is continuing to take, students enrolled in Elon College and many of high school level before entering college. Elon College operates quite largely on income from students. When our students are drafted the college sustains a loss—economic and otherwise. The members of the church, alumni and friends of the college everywhere should realize these facts and since they do not have to go to camp or to war should count it a privilege to contribute to help make up the loss sustained by the college.

These are the facts that caused the Convention to establish the Sustaining Fund for the college. In the Convention action each church is asked to receive an amount equal to $1 per member annually for the college. Under the new regulation enacted these contributions are to be sent to the Convention Office, Elon College, North Carolina. The Convention is to receive all such offerings, give credit to the church making the offering, and forward directly to the Elon College Business Office.

It is needless to say again that Elon College needs this support from the church very badly during these summer months. We do have summer school but all that the summer school is expected to do is to pay its own way. Regular salary checks, necessary bills, and the purchase of coal for the ensuing winter all must be met during the summer months. If the churches would please come to the rescue through the Sustaining Fund now it would be of double value to the college. It is hoped that pastor and people will heed this appeal and respond as generously as they possibly can.

Reports on Christian Work In Latin American Lands

By DR. PHILIP JONES, Associate Secretary
The World Council of Christian Education

Dr. Jones reports on a recent visit to five Latin American countries, during which time he attended the third Congress of Latin American Evangelical Youth.

Brazil has a vigorous and rapidly growing Protestant minority. The cooperative work centers in the Confederation of Evangelical Churches, which has a paid staff of five executives. In this it is unique; no other country in South America has even one fulltime paid staff member. This lack is one of the greatest deterrents to the advancement of the work the churches can do together.

One of the staff members of the Confederation is the Rev. Eldo Caldeira de Andrade, secretary of the Council of Religious Education. The annual rally day of the Sunday schools produced an offering of 100,000 crubeiros (U. S. $3,450.00) for the work. Sample copies of the best published Christian Education materials are being sent to several members of the Christian Council in Portuguese West Africa and Portuguese East Africa, with the hope that some of them might be suitable for use in these lands. Portuguese is, of course, the language of Brazil as well.

Argentina is a country with an active and aggressive Protestant community, which does its cooperative work through the Confederation of Evangelical Churches of the River Plate, with Dr. Jorge Wenzel as its half-time executive secretary. It has a Council of Christian Education, with Mr. Paul Andress giving one-third of his time as its secretary. He had done the most effective job in South America of distributing "Pictures for Children Everywhere." Every church has a set. This Council, too, has done a unique job with the commission reports from the Toronto World Institute on Christian Education; popularizing them and translating them into Spanish for the use of local churches.

This part of South America is fortunate in have an exceptional good seminary in the Union Theological Seminary in Buenos Aires, which serves several denominations and several countries. Its courses in religious education are excellent. It is just beginning in religious education to help persons in the hinterland.

Uruguay, one of the smallest of South American countries, is also recognized as the most democratic and socially progressive, with a high level of education. These national qualities are reflected in the work of the evangelical churches. Their Christian education programs and youth work are of high quality, against a background of pervasive secularism. Christian literature is of a high order. Two Uruguayan periodicals are known all over Latin America: "La Idea," the journal of the Federation of Evangelical Youth of Uruguay, and "Aree Iris," a children's magazine of exceptional quality.

To Study American Chinese Churches

The first study of its kind on Chinese Christian churches in this country and the communities they serve is being made this summer for the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A. The study will be followed by a national conference, the first in this country, of Chinese pastors and interested church executives.

The survey, sponsored by the National Council's Departments of the Urban Church, of Racial and Cultural Relations and of Research and Survey, will be made by the Rev. Dr. Peter Y. F. Shih, on leave from his job as pastor of the Chinese Christian Church of New England, in Boston Mass.

Dr. Shih, a graduate of Nanking Theological Seminary and former dean of West China Union Theological Seminary, will work on the study from now until September, visiting nearly fifty Chinese churches in 25 U. S. cities from New England to California.

About half the churches to be surveyed are in California. The cities to be visited include Tucson, Ariz.; in California, Bakersfield, Berkeley,

In Chile, cooperative Christian work suffers from the fact that it has to be carried on in the spare time of extremely busy people. Although there is an Evangelical Council, it does not yet make the contribution that the Confederations make in the great countries of the east coast. The Rev. Pedro Zottele, the Council's President, gives active leadership to many other endeavors of cooperative work in Chile.

I was present at the annual meeting of the National Evangelical Council in Peru. This is a remarkably representative body which is doing a far reaching job of Christian cooperation in that country. Much of its fine spirit is due to the splendid leadership given by Dr. Herbert Money, its secretary. Dr. Money is also the Vice-Director of the Peruvian Bible Institute: he and his wife are both on its teaching staff. This Institute has recently moved into two splendid new buildings which they hope are only the beginning. The Institute, like the Council, is a cooperative venture of a number of Christian bodies working in Peru, and is the bright hope for trained leadership of the Church there.

Locke, Los Angeles, Oakland, Sacramento, San Diego, San Francisco and San Mateo; Washington, D. C.; Augusta, Ga.; Chicago, Ill.; New Orleans, La.; Baltimore, Md.; Boston, Mass.; Detroit, Mich.; New York City; Cleveland, O.; Portland, Ore.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Houston and San Antonio, Texas; Norfolk, Va.; and Seattle, Wash.

Pointing out that there are more than 100,000 Chinese in this country, of whom about 3,000 are Christians, Dr. Shih said the main purpose of the survey is to determine how the work of the Chinese Christian churches can be strengthened and expanded in the communities they serve, and how they can be more effectively related to the larger communities.

A noted scholar in Chinese history and classical literature, Dr. Shih has been pastor for the past five years of the inter-racial and undenominational Chinese Christian Church of New England, in Boston.

After his graduation from the seminary in Nanking, he was for three years pastor of the largest Christian church in Hangchow, preaching to

DR. REULING TO BE AT SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

"Recent political developments in Africa have increased the already great sense of frustration under which most Africans labor. The present temper of the African people is such that if they are deprived of the Christian leadership which they need and for which they are asking, they can easily become a menace to themselves and the rest of the world," says Dr. John A. Reuling, Secretary for Africa and Mexico of the American Board. Dr. Reuling will lead the Foreign Mission Study at the School of Missions to be held at Elon College, July 8-11.

Dr. Reuling has made two extensive executive tours of Africa since 1946 and one to Mexico in the spring of 1951.

During his visit to Africa Dr. Reuling did earnest research into the conditions and problems of Portuguese West Africa, Southern Rhodesia and the Union of South Africa. He saw the results of the current scramble by world powers for military bases, for agricultural and mineral products to be used in peacetime industries, or for war preparation which has caused a tremendous economic boom in most countries in Africa.

"The financial benefits of this boom, however, have been non-existent as far as the Africans are concerned. There is more and more demand for their labor and the devices for forcing them to work are many, ranging from outright conscription to expropriation of their lands. The price of basic articles of food and clothing has increased greatly but the wages that they receive remain in many cases at pre-war levels or from 15 to 20 cent a day depending upon the particular country."

Because he is a layman, Dr. Reuling's message appeals to the man in the pew. He is a member of the National Committee of our Laymen's Fellowship. For 12 years he was an educator among the Bantus of South Africa serving on the faculty of Adams College, called the "Hamp-ton of South Africa."

When in 1941 the health of his two children, both born in Africa, made return to Africa impossible, Dr. Reuling was called to the presidency of Northland College, Wisconsin, where he served with distinction through the difficult war years. But his heart was still in Africa and when asked to become Secretary for Africa by the American Board he accepted the call.

MR. AND MRS. MAURICE BLUM

MEET THE BLUMS.

Our newest representatives in Mexico are an interesting couple, Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Blum. They were appointed as missionaries in January, 1951, to do educational work in Guadajajara, Mexico, for a term of three

In 1946 he made his first administrative journey back to the field and his second in 1949.

Nebraska born, Dr. Reuling spent his early life in Wisconsin and was educated at Michigan State College and Cornell University. Both in America and in Africa he was active in the Boy Scout movement and founded several troops among the Bantu boys. For over 10 years he was Commissioner of the Coastal District of Natal and assisted in numerous Gilwell Training Courses for Scoutmasters.

In spite of the disheartening economic and political situation, many African leaders are hopeful for the future, says Dr. Reuling. They are particularly desirous that the Christian forces of the outside world will help them gain knowledge of the skills which the Twentieth Century demands. These will aid them in solving their own problems.

"Almost without exception African leaders ask for the aid of churches rather than secular agencies," says Dr. Reuling. "Having proved to their own satisfaction that mere knowledge without spiritual and moral stiffening is self-destruction. If world Christian forces rally to assist and lead the Africans in their development they have the possibility of making a tremendous contribution to World peace."

years. Both of them are members of the Society of Friends.

Maurice Blum has an interesting background. He came from a Jewish family with a French, German, Polish and Rumanian heritage. Although

A new and eloquent ambassador for the Navajo Indian will soon be making the rounds of motion picture theatres across the country. Even before its world premiere in New York City on February 20, the film, "Navajo," was accorded the distinction of an award at the Edinburgh Festival of Arts; Parents' Magazine commended it as a top-ranking family picture; and it was cited by the Protestant Film Council as "a valuable contribution to understanding as well as an artistic production."

Like its spiritual antecedent, "The Quiet One," "Navajo" takes its audience into the mind and heart of a small boy. Little Son of the Hunter is played by Francis Kee Teller, an eight-year-old Navajo, just now rounding out his second month at the government school at Chinle, Arizona, where the film was made. His own mother and sisters and his grandfather share the spotlight with him; the only professional actor in the cast is the producer, Hall Bartlett, twenty-eight year old Yale graduate and Navy veteran, who doubles as the teacher in the government school. Yet there is not the faintest touch of exploitation of the Navajo. The story is handled with consistent taste, dignity and fidelity to Navajo history, tradition and culture.

Why does Little Son of the Hunter hate and fear the white man? Why does he resist learning the white man's tongue? The answer emerges as the audience watches him tend his sheep on the weirdly beautiful mesa; hears his foster grandfather, Gray Singer, the Medicine Man, tell him of the brave resistance of their people against Kit Carson and the white man's army; follows him over cliffs and into canyons haunted by spirits of Navajo dead.

There is no human villain in the picture. The antagonist is the conflict of two cultures. The story of the child caught between them, of his final realization that the white man is his friend, is told with credibility and compassion.

Asked to define ways in which the church today may best serve Indian needs, Dillon Myer, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, suggested to the Division of Home Missions at Buck Hill Falls in December that the church help to find foster homes for the 8,000 Indian orphans and children of broken homes. Perhaps this honest documentary picture of the Navajo today may stimulate church groups to some practical steps in accordance with Mr. Myer's suggestion.

I was in Navajo country in 1940 and am having that privilege again. Their hogans are interesting, their costumes fascinating, but many are their troubles. Perhaps this film will help bring the relief described.

EVERY CHILD A PARENT'S PROBLEM.

By LELI MUNSSELL.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Every child has his own special disposition, which he must be helped so to govern as to bring about the highest good under each set of circumstances. In this sense every child is a problem to his parents. The wise parent recognizes this fact and tries to act upon it.

Said a father, "I can never be thankful enough that I recognized the difference in my three boys when they were very young. The eldest could be governed through his affections; the middle one had to be controlled by firm discipline; the youngest could be reasoned with." But it is never as easy as this, and there is danger in making any such sweeping decision. Each child requires day-by-day study, and the parent should be ready in every case to meet the need of the moment.

Helen and her sister, Blanche, were quite different. Helen—overflowing with self-confidence—was always attempting something new. One evening, after she had been especially trying all day, her mother said, "Helen, you have been so troublesome I don't know what to do with you."

Helen was thoughtful for a moment, then she answered, "I believe I'd leave it with God."

Her mother repressed a smile, but she decided there might be something to the child's advice. She did leave it to God, by way of earnest prayer. An idea came, which she at first feared might be attended by risk, but she tried it. In a "secret" confidential talk with Helen she suggested that she help Blanche to do things—Blanche, who was always holding back, because she had no self-assurance.

That was a task exactly to Helen's liking. She set about it with energy. She coaxed and cajoled and pushed Blanches into doing things that Blanche had said she couldn't do. Sometimes these projects were not exactly prim and proper, but her mother seldom made any objection. Helen was finding an outlet for her bounding energy, and Blanche was definitely gaining in self-reliance; moreover, Mother was winning Helen's confidence. Helen began making occasions for "secret" talks with her mother about some of her plans, and that gave a chance to advise, approve, or reject.

Mother became sure of the benefit to Blanche one morning when a group of children were in the back yard entertaining one another with their favorite pastime of "true-story telling." Blanche never had been able to bring herself to take part in this, and that morning, as usual, she declared she had nothing to tell.

Helen called her to one side. "Yes, you had a good story," she said. Tell them about the baby robin that fell from his nest and how we climbed up and put it back, and how the mother bird scolded and then came back and fed it." Thus prompted, Blanche went back and told the story and received not only generous applause but a big boost to her ego.

Then there were the brothers, Howard and Ralph. "Howard was always sure he was right," said his mother. "At first, the only way you could convince him he was wrong about anything was to let him find it out for himself. Sometimes this caused him to feel deeply humiliated, sometimes he was even hurt; but I knew he was learning his lesson, and so I let him go his way. Ralph, on the other hand, was too unsure of himself—always wanting me to decide for him. I had to push him out, gently but firmly, and make him decide for himself. I really used the same technique in each case, but for difference reasons."

Two children are seldom exactly alike in temperament. The alert parents will always be awake to the varying manifestations of each disposition and, so, always ready to give the needed help.

UCYM PLANNING CONFERENCE.

June 29 to July 5 are important dates for the United Christian Youth Movement. They cover the Southeastern Regional Planning Conference which is to be held at Lincoln Academy, Near Gastonia, N. C.

There are three reasons given why the young folk of all denominations will want to be represented at this conference. They are:

1. The planning of follow-up programs to the "Call," like Youth Evangelism and Weekend Work Camps.
2. Developing better leadership for carrying on the work.
3. The enjoying of Christian fellowship and fun.

The regional conference covers ten Southeastern States, and representatives are expected from each of these states. The Congregational Christian Churches of North Carolina are asked to have at least five representatives present, and those of Virginia should be as well represented at this meeting.

The total cost of attending the conference will be around $34.00, as follows: Registration, $7.50; Room and board, $16.50, and books and incidentals, $10.00.

We would suggest that since Supt. Scott and Miss Pattie Lee Coghil are both at Claremont attending the General Council, those desiring further information regarding this meeting contact Miss Catherine Wike, the president of the Christian Youth Council of North Carolina, Box 6637, College Station, Durham, N. C.

YOUTH GROUP WILL CONDUCT WORSHIP SERVICE WHILE PASTOR IS AT COUNCIL.

Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, pastor of our Richmond Church, left Richmond on Sunday evening, making the trip to Claremont by airplane that he might reach there in time to participate in the pre-council meeting of the Committee on Free Church Polity and Unity, of which he is the chairman of the Southeast Panel. He will also attend the pre-council Seminar on Evangelism and Spiritual Life.

The Youth Fellowship of the Richmond Church will have charge of the worship service on General Council Sunday, June 22, the pastor having written the sermon and prayers for the service.

Dr. Helfenstein expects to return by plane in time for the Fellowship Dinner and the quarterly conference of the church on Friday evening, June 27.

WAKE CHAPEL BAPTISM.

The Wake Chapel Congregational Christian Church was the scene for the baptism of 35 persons, Sunday afternoon, June 8. Rev. Fred Register, pastor of Wake Chapel, Amelia, and Plymouth Churches, conducted the service. Many of those receiving the sacred sacrament were young people. Below is the total group, some of whom found it impossible to attend this service. These will be baptized at a later date.

By Profession of Faith: C. T. Pugh, Mildred Jones, Fay Jones, Mrs. Jarvis Stephenson, Virginia Wade, Ernestine Wade, Claiborn Wilson, Mrs. Benson Cotton, Mrs. Hursel Dean, Judie Pleasant, Nackie Blanehard, Linwood Daniel, Ashley Hall, Blyde Cannady, Jerry Mills, Newell Garrison, Jimmy Stephenson, Sarah Cannady, Cynthia Stephenson, Jane Grace Stephenson, Phil Jones, Ella Wayne Russum, Tom Tyndall, Fay Tunstall, Ellis Cook Powell, Kenneth Powell, Peggie Beckwith, Patsy Beckwith, Kitty Lane Johnson, Melinda Powell, Dickie Powell.

RELAX WITH MAX.

I was very happy to visit in our Amelia and Plymouth Churches a couple of Sundays ago. The people were most kind, and I hope my sermons weren't too unpleasant. Rev. Fred Register and I were graciously received into the home of Mr. John Jones for lunch. While there the following incident happened:

Little Johnny Jones, age seven, was drawing pictures to entertain Fred and me after we had finished our very fine dinner. He handed one of his drawings over to Fred, and the following conversation ensued:

Fred: "Say, this is pretty good. What do you call it?"

Johnny: "That's a mule in a barn."

Fred: "Is that right? Where's the mule?"

Johnny: "You can't see him; he's in the barn." (Johnny pointed to the door in the side of the building he had drawn.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

CHRIST'S NEW COMMANDMENT

LESSON XIII—JUNE 29, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; even as I have loved you, that ye also love one another."—John 13:34.

LESSON: Mark 12:28-34; John 13:34, 35; John 15:10-14.

DEVOTIONAL READING: I John 4:7-21.

This scribe thought he had Jesus. He could hardly have asked a question that was packed with more dynamite than the question, "What commandment is the first of all?" There were hundreds of laws and prohibitions, some called "weighty" and some called "light." Jesus could easily have made a mistake. Which indeed, of all the laws or commandments was the first, or greatest, which stood at the head of the list?

Without a moment's hesitation Jesus replied, in effect, "The first, the highest, the greatest commandment is Love God." Love him with all your mind, your heart, your soul, your strength. That is not only the first commandment, it is the foundation of all the other commandments. Obedience to law is meaningful only as it is obedience based on love. On this law are based all the other laws as well as the teachings of the prophets.

Second in importance is the law Love Your Neighbor, love him as you love yourself. And of course Jesus used the word neighbor in its widest and most inclusive sense. All the commandments and laws are fulfilled in the law of love. Love is the fulfilling of the law. Indeed men do not need more laws, but more love. Men do not need restraint from without, but a right spirit within.

"There is no other commandment greater than these." None more greatly needed than these. And none more grievously broken than these. The fact is, my friends that we do not love God and we do not love our fellowman. Our greatest lack is a lack of love. Love would transform the world. Love never fails. We need to learn how to love if we are really to live.

This command to love, takes in a lot of territory, and includes a lot of people. Kirby Page suggests a partial list as follows: "Negro children at play, for of such is the Kingdom of heaven; a white mother nursing her child as God yearneth over his children. A Mexican laborer along the railroad tracks. A son of God who delivers your milk. Your brother, the mail carrier. Your sister across the counter. Your kinderman, the traffic officer. The quarreling couple across the court. Your competitor down the street. The agitator who threatens your security. A young girl drinking at the bar. A cripple on the sidewalk with his pencils. A fire-truck driver clanging his warnings. The nun in her somber garb. A venerable old man. A murderer. A gossip with her whisperings and insinuations. The person you most fear." And the list could be prolonged indefinitely.

This matter of loving our fellowmen is not an elective in the school of Jesus; it is a required subject. "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; even as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." It is high, most of us cannot attain it. We can only pray that God will teach us how to love one another.

And more. Love is the badge of discipleship. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another." Not whether a man is a member of the church or not, not how often he attends services, not how much he gives to worthy causes, not whether he says his prayers, or does good works, but does he love, is the supreme question. Love for one's fellowmen is the badge of discipleship. True followers or disciples of Christ are identified by the spirit of love which they have for one another and for all men. Christ claims us as his own when we love our neighbor and obey his commandments.

Obedience to his commandments is another test of our love for him. "If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments." And thus we shall abide in his love. Thus, too, shall we find an inexpressible joy, a joy that shall be made full.

This love is practical. It is not always, indeed seldom dramatic. It does not make the headlines. But it manifests itself every day on every village street, in little deeds never reported and often soon forgotten. To love as Christ loved is to let our love be a practical thing and not a mere sentimental thing. Love talks by doing, and does instead of merely talking.

The world needs nothing more than love. Think what a difference it would make in the homes of our nation if love found expression in the home. Think what a difference it would make if the spirit of love found expression in all our racial differences, or in the relations between groups and classes. What a changed world this would be if nations were governed by the spirit of love and good will in their attitudes toward, and their dealings with each other. The world is dying, and going to pieces for lack of love. There is only one force or factor powerful enough to save us. It is the love of God shed abroad in the hearts of statesmen, scientists, teachers, politicians, capitalists, workmen, and churchmen, and in the hearts of every one of us.

his family was a fairly devout Jewish one with high ethical standards, the boy early in his teen years felt something lacking in his spiritual concept of life and God. His search for this ended after high school, college, and four years in army life, with an acceptance of the Christian faith.

Mrs. Blum was Clementina Martinez, born in Victoria, Tomanlips, Mexico. She was educated at the Normal School at Mexico City and at the University of Mexico there, and also did work at Wilmington College in Ohio. There she met her future husband, for he is also a graduate of Wilmington College.

Both of them have teaching experience—Mrs. Blum in Mexico as well as in the United States. They are being supported by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and the West Coast of Mexico Commission of the Congregational Conference of South California and the Southwest—quite a mouthful if they have to report in terms of such names!

We shall be interested to watch this unusual couple at work in Mexico in an area where more missionaries are desperately needed.

AN OPEN LETTER TO CHURCH MEMBERS WHO DRINK.

Dear Fellow Church Member:

I have to write this letter as this subject has been on my heart for many a year, and I am writing it in a spirit of prayer and humility. It has been prompted by conversations with hundreds of ministers and laymen. It is mentioned at every young people's meeting where the Problem of Alcohol is discussed.

It is my observation that social drinking is increasing among church members in many denominations. Our pastors are burdened by this fact. They report that it is doing something to church members who drink. It either neutralizes their witness as Christians or makes them tolerant and complacent about the alcohol problem, and their zeal for the Kingdom is diminished. Some of them write me letters stating that, the idea of total abstinence from all alcoholic beverages as a sound Christian practice is unrealistic, that moderation should be the goal, and that only excessive drinking or drunkenness is wrong.

I believe they fail to see the fallacy of this argument. If moderation were the cure for the alcohol problem, there would not be six million problem drinkers, including four million alcoholics. These unfortunate people say that they would like to drink moderately; but it has been demonstrated that they have to have more than good advice before they can stand on their feet again.

Another observation is, that the majority of drinking-church members are unaware of the nature of alcohol. Beer, wine and whiskey contain ethyl alcohol. A bottle of beer, a glass of wine, or a shot of whiskey contain approximately the same amount of alcohol; it goes quickly into the blood and is pumped through the heart to the brain, where it acts as an anesthetic in small amounts—giving the drinker a false feeling of well being. In larger amounts it acts as a narcotic. Once in the blood, nothing can stop it from acting upon the brain. No human being, no matter what his status is, can prevent himself from becoming drunk if enough alcohol gets into the blood, or can keep his brain cells that give him reason, judgement, conscience and self-control from being affected. Alcohol is a depressant. It treats church members exactly like non-church members when it gets into their blood. Some people are very susceptible to alcohol and cannot control their drinking.

There is no way to ascertain beforehand who these people are.

I am also convinced that those who are engaged in the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages are definitely gunning for church members. They know that there are 35 million people of drinking age who do not drink. They are willing to spend tens of millions dollars annually for newspaper, magazine, radio and television advertisements to influence these non-drinkers to drink.

The so-called social drinking church member gives the liquor interests great encouragement. They know that these people will not interfere with their business, will not write letters to their Legislators, or promote a local option campaign. They say—(the liquor interests) "you must be wrong about total abstinence as a sound Christian practice because many of your church members use our products." They realize that the drinking church member is their best advertisement.

These same interests deplore drinking among young people, yet they beam their ads., to make drinking so attractive, that young people will break the law to obtain beverages and become "Men of Distinction." Our youth are greatly influenced by the adult church member who drinks.

Do we not believe that every church member has a witness to make for Christ. Truly are we not "our brothers' keeper?" Are we not advised to be not conformed to this world. Is not the word of God still our guide and rule for living? "By their fruits ye shall know them." The Christian law of brotherhood is, "It is food not to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor to do anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak."

My concern is that our witness be from a clear brain and a pure heart.

Respectfully yours,
WAYNE W. WOMER,
Executive Secretary, Virginia Church Temperance Council, Inc.

ISLAMIC REVIVAL IN TURKEY.

ous Affairs" of the present government.

The situation developing in Turkey is quite serious because, says Dr. Lewis, Islam is too firmly entrenched in the emotional, social and cultural life of the Turkish people. Although there is obvious opposition in university circles to the rising tide of clerical reaction in the land, their dislike of the present form and leadership of the movement "should not mislead us into thinking that they have done with Islam itself. . . . In the civil service, in the army, and even in parliament piety is fashionable, and while by no means all favor the full program of the reactionaries, many feel that both for moral and political reasons some restoration of Islamic belief and practice is necessary for the health of the Turkish people. . . . Perhaps one of the strongest elements supporting the revival is the class known in Turkey as the esnaf—the artisans and small shopkeepers in the towns. They are generally very fanatical, and, like the peasants, many of them are connected with one or another of the tarikas."

The leaders of the religious revival "are mainly men of the older generation, survivors from the Young Turk period," (the generation which introduced the theory and practice of genocide in modern times, from whom the Nazis got their inspiration to liquidate entire peoples and nations.) Some of the members of the present ruling party "have lent their support to far-reaching demands for a complete reversal of the Kemalist reforms." In fact, no political party in Turkey today could dare to ignore the movement, "perhaps even to oppose it."

There are those among the intellectuals who would allay our fears of the ominous significance of the present for the future, but Dr. Lewis believes the basis of the revival is too deeply entrenched in Turkish character and culture to be lightly brushed aside. "After a century of Westernization, Turkey has undergone immense changes—greater than any outside observer had thought possible. But the deepest Islamic roots of Turkish life and culture are still alive, and the ultimate identity of Turk and Muslim in Turkey is still unchallenged." And while the path the revival will take is still not clear, it is plain that "if simple reaction has its way, much of the work of the last century will be undone, and Turkey will slip back into the darkness from which she has painfully emerged." Dr. Lewis concludes with the hope that this may not be the path that the revival will take. But on the basis of all the facts he has presented and their incontrovertible implications for the future, it is obvious that the hope expressed by him is a rhetorical device and not a reflection of a hope-inspiring situation.

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

The Rev. and Mrs. Ralph M. Galt, New Market, Virginia, are having two of our boys—Billy Proctor and Charles Ward, visit them for two week's vacation. What good times they will have with these friends and their children! What a beautiful country and what sights they will see. How different it will be to sit down three times a day in a family circle, yes, and be a part of a real family! They will help do the chores, for they are good little workers. They have been asking me now every day or two when do we go. I am going up to Timber Ridge for their home-coming services, and will drop them off at New Market. For the trip over the week end I am taking John Crumpler and Richard Bridges, both to let them see the country and to have somebody to come back with me Monday. They are excited, too, about their trip. It takes so little to make a child happy, and I am never happier than when I am making somebody else happy.

Big news this week is that a good Burlington citizen very graciously remembered the Orphanage in his will in the amount of $1,000.00. He was a good Methodist and left also a bequest to the Methodist Orphanage. It was such a generous thing to do and is so greatly needed. This generous Christian was Mr. M. B. Smith. I shall greatly miss him every Monday evening at the Burlington Rotary club. He was always so wholesome and kind it was an inspiration to see him. He served his community, his church and his family well, and many enterprises will yet be blessed by the good life he lived.

Mrs. Nancy Whitt, one of our most efficient matrons, is a patient at the Alamance County Hospital. She has had a major operation, and is at this time getting along fine. Many of you will remember her as the house mother at the Baby Home. If you wish to mail her a get well card send it to the Orphanage, and we shall see that she gets it promptly.

What a good report we have for you this week! So many people have been so kind. I am sure everyone of them have been happy in all they have done. We are in need of this good help as we are running on a hand-to-mouth basis with no surplus and it keeps us stepping. But these children have not suffered for anything, and I do not believe they will have to. They have done nothing that causes them to be placed in the predicament they find themselves in. At least they are giving us a chance to show sheer unselfishness and human kindness, and so many people are doing it right along.

Roy Black made an exceptionally good record last week at Camp Crabtree. He was elected the best all-around boy, and also the best athlete at camp. Well, why shouldn't he? He makes top grades in school, and he is just as fine a fellow as his freckles and cheeks of tan will let him be! It seems to me that in so many ways every child here has a chance to develop the best there is in them. May our heavenly Father help us to see that they develop in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man. Again I thank you everyone for your generous help.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

GRAHAM.

Whereas God, in his infinite love has called home our sister and co-worker, Mrs. Mollie Thompson Graham;

We as a church and individuals desire to record our appreciation and sorrow in our loss.

Therefore, Be it resolved:

1. That Union Christian Church, of which she was a most loyal and faithful member, has lost one for whom it deply mourns.

2. That we extend our warm sympathy and earnest prayers to each member of her family.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, one be placed on our church records, and one sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

Respectfully submitted,
 Mrs. LESSIE LEE ALDRIDGE,
 Mrs. KENNETH REGISTER,
 Mrs. WILLIAM BOWLAND,
 Committee.

SOUTHEAST VISUAL AIDS WORKSHOP HELD.

By ERNEST J. ARNOLD.

The Southeastern Regional Audio-Visual Workshop held on the Emory Campus May 5-9 was pronounced a complete success. The attendance was larger than anticipated, all expenses were paid with a balance placed in reserve, and a unanimous request, made by all participants, for a second such event in 1953.

The Workshop was more than a meeting to consider the resources in the Audio-Visual field. That it was a religious experience was attested by a director of Christian Education from Louisiana who expressed "the fervent hope that the National Council of Churches conduct another Audio-Visual Workshop in the South again next year." Continuing, she said: "I personally felt the one just concluded a most rewarding one. While I fully expected 'to get the facts,' I am far more grateful for the spiritual uplift and the broadening fellowship experiences."

The Workshop considered such problems as use and sources of motion pictures, graphic materials, and radio recordings and how to produce visual materials in the individual churches. A premiere demonstration was given of the first 16mm filmstrip projector. Several hunderd Audio-Visual aids were previewed and demonstrations were made of all visual aids equipment. A special feature of the five-day program consisted of field trips to Television Stations, Film Libraries and production centers for recorded radio programs.

Leadership credit cards offered by the National Council of Churches were awarded the majority of the delegates.

more than a thousand people every Sunday. From 1935-1939, he was in this country and in Canada, studying as a missionary fellow at Union Theological Seminary in New York City, and speaking to American audiences as a Chinese missionary to America under the sponsorship of the World Fellowship for Christian Evangelism. He returned to the U. S. in 1947.

Although a few surveys have been made of Chinese churches or of foreign language churches in single denominations, church leaders believe this to be the first comprehensive study made of Chinese Christian churches in the U. S. They include Baptist, Methodist, Reformed, Congregational Christian, Evangelical, Presbyterian, Lutheran, Church of the Nazarene, Protestant Episcopal and a number of interdenominational and undenominational churches.

You May Share--Now!

June 10, 1952

Dear Friends:

We all appreciate the fact that the freedom and development of western nations came to us through the spiritual heritage of our forefathers. The basis of religious, political and economic freedom lies in the Judaeo-Christian teachings, tradition and development. We seek first, as we have been taught, the Kingdom of God and its righteousness, but these other things are added unto us.

We cannot give the spiritual basis of life to others, or preserve it for ourselves, except through the teachings of the Gospel, both here and abroad. If we keep unto ourselves our faith and our freedom, both will wither and die on the vine. Christianity lives by growing.

Your missionaries carry out the spirit of the Great Commission by telling the world about Christ and by healing the sick, enlightening the ignorant and helping all sorts and conditions of men with the myriad problems of living in this, or any other, age.

Missionaries are the one group in the world who are spreading the Christian Gospel and way of life. Men and women of other lands are, through the service of the missionaries, being led by the spirit of Jesus Christ to become part of the world fellowship of Christians through whom human brotherhood will be strengthened. These missionaries and those who learn from them are the builders of the Kingdom of God.

You may share in this great Christian effort through your American Board. The contributions you make enable your missionaries to carry on this splendid work.

We trust that you will be as generous as you can possibly be.

Cordially yours,

DAVID McKEITH, Jr.,
Executive Vice-President.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JULY 3, 1952

NUMBER 26

New Moderator of the General Council

DR. ROBERT CASHMAN

A layman is elected Moderator of the General Council every other biennium. The person chosen for the next two years is an administrator, churchman and professor. A specialist in church efficiency, he will strengthen the lay forces of our churches and outline a more effective program for our heterogenous organizations.

The Moderator, Dr. Robert Cashman, is an official of the Bryn Mawr Community Church of Chicago, with nearly 3,000 members.

Dr. Cashman sends the following message to readers of THE SUN:

As we face the great opportunities before us in the coming biennium, let us strengthen our churches for greater service to our communities. Yours may not be a wealthy church, but it can be a healthy church if it continues to grow in numbers and in spiritual power.

The program of every church should include not only a preaching and pastoral ministry, but a strong organization of the laymen whose promotional and administrative talents will be used generously to undergird the spiritual program of the church. This will include finance, publicity, the care of properties, organization and good public relations in every department of endeavor.

We cannot separate our financial responsibilities from the spiritual interests of the church, any more than we can separate the body from the soul. Both must work together for the glory of God and service to our fellow man.

In a spirit of renewed consecration, therefore, let us go forward with vision, courage and perseverance to solve the problems before us, and thereby help to bring the world to Christ in this generation.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN hails the new Moderator and eagerly awaits his visit to The Southern Convention.

News Flashes

We wish for each of our readers a safe, happy and glorious Fourth of July.

Congratulations to the First Church of Greensboro, N. C. which occupied its new structure for the first time on Sunday, June 22. The consecration service was held at 3:00 p. m. and open house was observed 4-7 p. m. Dr. W. E. Wisseman is the minister.

LONG'S CHAPEL.

A successful Daily Vacation Bible School was conducted at Long's Chapel from June 2 to 6 each afternoon. Highly creditable work was accomplished by the boys and girls with a most commendable program being presented on Sunday morning, June 8. Teachers and helpers included: Rev. and Mrs. E. J. Clawson, Mrs. Elton Rudd, Mrs. Harvey Squires, Mrs. John Foster, Mrs. Hugh Foster, and Mrs. J. T. Fonville.

LEADERSHIP AT VIRGINIA.

In a recent election in the town of Virginia, Virginia, the mayor and the six councilmen elected are active churchmen. The mayor and four of the six councilmen are members of Union Congregational Christian Church of Virginia. Mr. G. W. Pollard, mayor is Chairman of the Board of Deacons, member of the Official Board, and Secretary-Treasurer of the Sunday school of Union Church. The councilmen who are members of Union are: R. W. Glascock, Treasurer of the Official Board; C. B. Wilkins, Financial Secretary and member of the Official Board; Maurice Daniel, member of Official Board, and E. A. Tuck, though not serving at the present is an official capacity, is a faithful supporter of his church.

A member of one of the other local churches jocularly says that to hold an office in the town of Virginia one has to be a democrat and a member of the Christian Church. We are glad that our church does furnish a part of the Christian leadership for the civil offices.

Our hearts rejoice that the mayor and the councilmen of Virginia are churchmen and active in their local churches. Would to God this fact were true all over our country!

ECUMENICAL LEADER HEADS MISSION COUNCIL.

Rev. Henry Smith Leiper, M. A., D. D. of New York City, internationally known churchman, has just been elected Minister and Executive Secretary of the Missions Council of Congregational Christian Churches and will assume his new duties on September 1.

Born in Belmar, New Jersey and educated at Amherst College, Union Seminary and Columbia University, Dr. Leiper has been an "Ambassador-at-large" from the churches of America, travelling extensively in both the Orient and Occident and at times practically commuting between the U. S. A. and Europe. In 1951 he went to New Zealand and Australia at the invitation of church leaders there. He was one of the leaders in setting up the interdenominational overseas relief program of the Protestant churches during World War II.

DR. ROBERT CASHMAN—MODERATOR.

Dr. Robert Cashman was born in Sioux Falls, South Dakota, in 1886. After and education in public schools and five years in business, he was called to Chicago in 1908 to work with the International Sunday School Association.

On January 1, 1923, Dr. Cashman was elected Business Manager of the Chicago Theological Seminary. A year later, he helped launch a $1,000,000 campaign in the Middle West for much-needed buildings and endowment. This project was successfully completed at the end of three years.

Dr. Cashman originated a course for ministers on the Business Administration of the Church, out of which grew the writing of two books, The Business Administration of a Church and The Finances of a Church (Harper & Bros.), and the publication of numerous articles in religious magazines on practical phases of a minister's duties. He was honored with a Doctor of Laws degree by Bradley University in 1950.

RURAL PASTOR GETS HIS "WINGS."

The Rev. Harold Heckman will fly, not with the wings of an angel, but in a new Piper plane to serve members of his far-flung mountain parish.

It formerly took Mr. Heckman, a Congregational Christian and the only pastor in Powder River County, southeastern Montana, as long as a whole day to perform a marriage ceremony, including his travel time.

The plane was purchased by the Montana Conference with the help of the Board of Home Missions after the needs of the parish were surveyed by the Town and Country Department directed by Dr. Thomas A. Tripp.

Station B-U-S { Claremont } Reporting

By MARTIN T. GARREN

From the Southern Convention 74 persons traveled by bus from Burlington, North Carolina, to Claremont, California, for the meeting of the General Council.

This party, at times, felt that it was emulating the pioneers of covered-wagon days, particularly when a tire on one of the buses blew out on an unpaved road in Arizona, and again when the busses were forced to ford a stream, also in Arizona, because the bridge across the stream was unsafe. Later, however, when the members of this cross-country company were forced to open their bags to prove that they were not carrying Japanese beetles into California, they realized that these are modern times. Actually they had all been thankful before that for the modern convenience of the air conditioning on the buses, especially when they stopped at a service station in the desert region and saw the thermometer in the shade registering 116 degrees.

Except for necessary travel late at night occasioned by a late departure from Burlington and slight motor trouble enroute, most of the people on this westward trek thoroughly enjoyed themselves. There were some inconveniences attendant to the difficulties of feeding and housing such a large group, but everyone took these irritations in stride.

There was much good fellowship on the trip. Many of the people formed new friendships, and all gained a new respect for the problems and trials of others. All in all, most of the members of the party considered the trip one of the high adventures of their lives.

The two buses on which this group traveled, left Burlington on the morning of Wednesday, June 11. That night the group stopped in LaGrange, Georgia. Thursday night found the party in Ruston, Louisiana, and Friday night was spent in Snyder, Texas. On Saturday the group stopped in El Paso, Texas, and made a trip across the border to Jurez, Mexico. Sunday night was spent in Flagstaff, Arizona. From there the trip to Grand Canyon was made, and the group stayed at the auto court at Grand Canyon. On Tuesday night the somewhat travel-weary party arrived at Claremont. The delegates to the General Council, along with several interested in the workings of the Council, stayed at Pomona College; while the others went on into Los Angeles.

The memories of the trip are many. It would be difficult to enumerate all of the high spots. There were the incidents like finding the dude ranch in Arizona which was recently described in Life magazine. Here many of the group ate while a tire was being changed. Most of the group were glad to have the side trip to Mexico, but they were depressed by what they saw. The varying scenery across the country and the changing modes of living were of great interest to everyone. The fine hospitality received everywhere was a source of pleasant surprise to all. The bigness of Texas and the grandeur of Arizona's Grand Canyon, with its changing colors at sunrise and sunset, will long be remembered, as will the bleakness of the desert. The daily worship services and vesper services were an inspiration to everyone.

All on the trip were lavish in their praise of Miss Coghill, who did a tremendous job in organizing, promoting and directing the tour. It is impossible to state the extent of the hard work she put in to make the trip possible. Everyone on the buses, however, knows now that her patience is inexhaustible.

There was much praise, too, for the skill and patience of the two drivers. They performed a difficult job exceedingly well.

Those on Bus No. 1, were:

- Miss Marian Foust, Reidsville, N. C.
- Rev. J. E. McCauley, Waverly, Va.

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

CAROLINA to CALIFORNIA

Our tour of 3,000 miles across country confirms the truth oft repeated in song, "This is my Father's World." No state is without its peculiar interest, charm and variety. And, it may be added, no state is without glaring imperfections. But even the desert is teeming with animal if not human life, and the variety of cacti offer rare specimens of beauty and hardihood.

The goal of our westward tour was California, "The land of the lemon and the home of the nut." California is a big state, the second largest in the nation, 770 miles long and an average of 375 miles wide. It is chock-full of interesting places to see and things to do. San Diego County, for instance, is as large as the state of Connecticut. Imperial Valley is a superb example of modern engineering. The great All-American Canal carries the Colorado River into the Valley and a desert-land lying 49 feet below sea-level is transformed by irrigation into a vast agricultural empire.

What about our churches in California? The Conference of Southern California boasts 144 churches with 45,000 members. The largest church has 4,513 members with an annual budget of $232,600. The Northern California Conference has 100 churches with 30,000 members. These conferences are progressive and alert, and many new churches are being established in both conferences.

Weather. To pass through the Mojave Desert into coastal California has been likened unto the transition from Purgatory to Glory. It is certain that those who have experienced the rigors of the desert will henceforth be more appreciative of the salubrious weather which they normally enjoy. Of course California makes the fatastic claim that they enjoy all four seasons of the year every day during the summer: spring in the morning, summer at noon, fall in the evening and winter at night. What a climate!

REFLECTIONS on the GENERAL COUNCIL

The General Council is the official body representing 5,620 churches with 1,241,477 members. Its biennial session is therefore no inconsequential matter. We had seven momentous days at Claremont.

A Pre-Council Spiritual Life Mission was held by the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life. The commission presented Dr. John S. Whale as the Mission preacher. This British Congregationalist devoted considerable time to an emphasis on the power of the Holy Spirit as an illuminating, controlling, empowering and transforming experience. Then the entire Council fellowship was divided into residential units, each designated by the name of a New Testament Church, with a pastor in charge of each Church.

There have been many memorable services. Who could forget theologian Whale preaching earnestly and energetically in his shirtsleeves? The Kawaihahao Church of Honolulu, Hawaii, brought color, charm and an unusually fine example of a capella singing to the evening sessions. A dramatic presentation—"The Albany Convention of 1852, or Aid to Our Feeble Churches at the West"—highlighted the emphasis on church building. Incidentally, one might reflect on what would have happened if Congregationalists had placed equal emphasis on building churches in the South and the West. Victoria Booth Demarest ably represented the women as she cried out against the male monopoly and domination of the ministry.

The Merger. A resolution that the General Council "continue to look forward to a united fellowship of the E and R and the C C communions" was passed by a vote of 964 to 55. The resolution provides for the setting up of a joint group of officers of the two churches for the drafting of a proposed constitution. The resolution proposed that the discussions on the Merger be continued but stipulated that no action be taken pending the final judgement of the New York Court of Appeals. In addition, it stated that no action would be taken "which would in any way conflict with the due process of law or jeopardize the rights and standing of the General Council in the eyes of the law."

Reasonable safeguards are provided in the stipulation that in the preparation of the constitution "every effort be made to preserve all the spiritual and temporal freedoms and rights now possessed by the individuals, churches, associations, conferences and boards of this communion." A consulting relationship is to be maintained with the Committee on Free Church Polity and Unity.

The discussions on the Merger were tempered by Christian restraint. Moderator Vere V. Loper exercised the finest example of churchmanship in presiding. The ecumenical outlook is most heartening.

The Council of Social Action. There has been considerable debate, all of a chastened nature, on the Council for Social Action. Final action has not been taken on the Social Action issue at this writing.

Pilgrim Place. One of the interesting sidelights of the Claremont Council was the visit to Pilgrim Place, a suburban community for re- (Continued on page 15)

Along These Trails

Address of the Retiring Council Moderator

VERE V. LOPER

The Moderator followed many trails. When hurried, he has gone by air. When there was the rare luxury of leisure, he has gone by land. All means of travel were so dependable that he has been late to only one meeting and missed none of the more than one hundred addresses given as Moderator. . . .

Let us not pause too long over outward details which do not necessarily indicate more than the fact that the Moderator has been a talkative tramp. Most important has been the high opportunity for him to know the spirit of our million and a quarter people. The most significant impression gained has been that they are frequently traveling along the trails of God. The realization of Divine Presence in their midst is important as a memory of one man, but it is of the highest significance for our guidance in these climactic days of our General Council. May we talk with Him at Claremont along the trails where our people have been accustomed to find Him.

I.—On the Trail of Humility.

On the trail of humility there is God. Our people have walked this trail. The humblest among us regrets much that has been said and done. The memory of scenes where fellowship failed haunts our hearts. In the quietness of inner chambers, many of us have prayed, "God, be merciful to me a sinner."

This spirit of humility must be carried into these General Council days. If we are truly seeking to follow God's paths of humility, we will enter the road ahead on our knees. If we suffer under the illusion that God makes us judges to condemn His people, we will need to pause in prayer for humility before we proceed further. When we are tempted to condemn another, we will hear ancient words, "Let him that is without guilt among you cast the first stone." If anyone among us believes that he is worthy of that role, I have not found himself in myself or in another.

Even if we believe that our alarm about each other is justified at times, God does not depend upon us to hurl thunderbolts from Mt. Olympus to overwhelm the forces of evil. The most important fact about evil is that it is self-destructive. God's foes accomplish their own ruin, given time and free rein. Attempting to hasten the destruction unduly, we plunge off the main roads into a trackless wilderness of ill will, controversy and standards, taken from the weakness of opponents instead of from the love of God.

Our business is to stand at our full height against the greatness of God. Measured thus, we see how far short of the divine stature we fall. Then, with eyes freed from the blindness of a censorious spirit, we shall see God's earth at its noblest, and because we see it, we shall inherit it. We shall resolutely refuse to be drawn from the main road into a wilderness where men, blinded by malice, lead friend and foe alike into the pit of annihilation. The danger is always real that a warrior shall be a Don Quixote when he imagines himself to be a Sir Galahad. We will keep our perspective and possess that greater world reserved for the meek if we walk in humility with God. God needs us, but this does not mean that we are giants by whom alone the world can be saved.

II.—Fellowship Within Diversity.

The Moderator has found a second trail among our people, where God can be discerned in fellowship within our denomination maintained in spite of differences. Long have we boasted that the basis of our unity in Congregational Christian Churches is that we do not think alike. We are proud that both conservatives and liberals can belong to our fellowship if they willingly give to others the same liberty which they themselves enjoy. Expecting that all stay within the basic heritage of historic Christianity as found in the Bible, we allow our people to choose between alternative interpretations of Christ and Christian life. The liberty of the individual in religious thought also extends to his right to formulate his own outlook on social issues. We balance this with his obligation to honor the convictions—theological, social and political—of other sincere, intelligent Christians, even if they are unacceptable to him.

Meanwhile, with only local incidents, we have gone forward on this basis for nearly one hundred and fifty years without any serious disturbances within our fellowship. Other denominations have had serious disharmonies. Churches were split by slavery. They were torn apart by different interpretations of Biblical truth. Some major denominations have been in constant strife. During this time, perhaps some of us have felt complacent over the troubles of others. Our theme was, "It can't happen here."

The simple truth is that it has happened here. We are coming into this national gathering of our Church with sharp differences of opinion on two subjects—the merger and the Council for Social Action. In short, the time of testing has come. The eyes of a million and a quarter of our own people are upon us. The eyes of America will be on us. And since America and its churches are so basic to the welfare of all peoples, the eyes of the world are upon us. Can we prove true to our boasting—Fellowship Within Diversity? Are we able to face squarely the issues which divide and still maintain fundamental good will? Can we state objectively and in good feeling our points of view, refuse to answer any violent word in kind, take our votes, and gracefully accept majority rule in loyal adherence to our particular form of government? . . .

Demanding tasks confront our Church today. We have a gospel to preach which the world desperately needs. We have suddenly awakened to the fact that there are 70,000,000 Americans who have no church home in their respective communities, and

"When Christ Had His Chance."

By REV. THEODORE K. VOGLER, D. D.

A Sermon

June 22, 1952

TEXT: "And the Lord said, Whereunto then shall I liken the men of this generation? and to what are they like? They are like unto children sitting in the marketplace, and calling one to another, and saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned to you, and ye have not wept."—Luke 7: 31, 32.

By his own admission Christ had a poor chance with his own generation. An effective barrier to his message was a certain childishness, a tired indifference, an insensitiveness to the great issues of life and death. A generation of children, Jesus said, who could neither laugh nor cry; feel neither high joy, nor deep sorrow.

It is my proposal that Christ has a far better chance with this generation than he had with his own. Beneath the surface, our time is deeply serious. We are not childish. Almost overnight, we were forced to grow up and are tragically aware of the burning issues of life and death, or time and eternity.

Suddenly, rudely, we were called from our childish games, our trivial pursuits and pleasures by the sight of an ugly, dirty, grey mushroom cloud and a following shock wave. Suddenly we have become aware that life is a serious business.

Note some characteristics of this generation which seem to me to open an unprecedented opportunity for Christ. For one thing, this generation is terribly frightened. Mingled with our joy in meeting together in this California paradise, is the lurking, sinister realization that we live in the darkest period of all recorded history. Not only is there war and world-shattering revolution; not only the anti-Christ of Communism, with a religion passionately held and hideously practiced; not only terrible cruelty, incredible tyranny and slavery, and unspeakable human misery. Over all hangs an apocalyptic terror, with possibilities of a cataclysm comparable to the coming of a new ice age, or one of molten glass.

Nor can we console ourselves, says the great Albert Schweitzer, that just one more civilization may be going; that a new one will blossom in its place; that earth has in reserve, unused, gifted peoples to carry on the spiritual life. The whole earth is diseased. All must perish together.

Of course we are frightened. But this need not be bad. You and I know that fear can be a positive force in our lives. It can move us to action. Indeed, the hope of the world lies with those persons who, realistically aware of this darkness, call for a light. In this darkness there is a Light. Now Christ has his chance!

One notes in this generation, not hysteria, not paralyzing fear, though there may be some; not reckless abandon, "let us eat, drink and be merry," though there may be some of that. Rather one notes a profound wistfulness and longing, a spiritual hunger for God and the things of God. Like old John Cotton on his death bed . . . "Draw the curtains," he whispered, "and leave me alone. I would speak awhile with the King." Such is the mature mood and temper of our time. Now Christ has his chance.

Again, Christ has his chance in the widespread feeling of disgust and shame that we live in a world that has fallen to such a deplorable estate. During the first world war, Dr. L. P. Jacks confessed that he could not escape the feeling that he stood in the presence of a colossal stupidity. That is the way every sensitive person feels today. Dr. McGiffert of Chicago tells the story of the "Kicking Machine." At a county fair not long ago he noticed the most popular concession. Crowds of persons were paying money for a good swift kick! Such a feeling of self-reproach and guilt is really a mark of spiritual sensitivity, which is an indispensable condition of our salvation. Now Christ has his chance to be in truth a personal Saviour. A Saviour from an overwhelming, devastating sense of guilt which bedevils our days and makes our nights hideous, driving men to a thousand kinds of dope as they seek release.

Nor can any of us escape this need of divine forgiveness. We all live in this diseased society. It is my dark damnation and yours that we do. We all must bear the shame and the guilt. And who among us is good enough to forgive the rest of us? "Where is the good Atlas; strong enough to carry the burden of the sin of this world?" asks Dr. Buttrick. There is only one. We need a blood transfusion from a perfectly healthy man. Now Christ has his chance. How suddenly we need the Great Physician to heal the deep hurts of the soul. The Christ's healing shadow falls like a benediction upon our tired world. His mercy is like the snow, covering old scars; his gentleness is like music through the night to tortured spirits. "I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions and will not remember thy sins. Go, and sin no more." Without an individual and collective confession of sin and guilt, an orienting of our lives in a new, divine direction, there is no way out of this darkness. No Christ has his chance.

Further, Christ has his chance in the midst of the world's vast misery, its "giant agony." Christ comes into our world today, as once he came into his own—into a world where life was cheap and bread was dear, into a world of poverty and hunger and disease; a world of tyranny and slavery and terrible suffering. And a world of restless, seething social discontent. Into that world stepped the greatest human heart that men had ever known. He had compassion on the multitude. He healed and fed and comforted and blessed. The Magdalenes bathed his feet with their tears. Hardened men were touched to generosity. He gave to poor, forgotten souls a new sense of personal validity. He exalted man as a child of God.

Christ took note also of the revolutionary discontent of his time. He declared that he had come to deliver the captives of slavery and injustice. He lifted men's eyes to a new social order of justice and righteousness, of human rights and a decent standard of living where there was "bread enough and to spare." He spoke words of flaming condemnation upon those who would compromise with human rights. He spoke atomic words of judgment upon men and nations who were heedless of his truth.

Christ comes to this world today to heal, to free, to comfort and to bless. Yet, where is he to be found today, if not at the center of social unrest, where men seek deliverance from political and economic bondage? Where, if not in Korea and India and Afri-

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

WHAT IS A CHRISTIAN COLLEGE?

For more than a year, the Commission on Christian Higher Education of the National Council of Churches has been conducting a detailed study of the church-related colleges of America. "What is a Christian College?" with particular reference to the nature and role of the Christian college in mid Twentieth Century America," is the question raised. Under the directorship of Dr. Raymond F. McLain, this study has developed into a research project carried on by a large number of colleges throughout the country. Reports from the various study groups are sent to all the participating local committees. A faculty committee at Elon College has taken part in this project. Following the questions and plan set forth in the Study Guide, the committee has met each week for reports and discussion.

From the reports sent in by numerous study groups, it is quite evident that throughout the nation there is a general awareness that the church-related college is essential to our American Democracy as well as to the life of our churches. Many thoughtful persons realize, at the same time, that those institutions are confronted by critical problems. What course of action should be adopted by the Christian colleges? In what direction should they develop? Should they yield to the pressure of secular life and develop their programs along the lines of the tax-supported institutions of higher learning or should they seek to exert a more positive Christian influence? There appears to be general agreement among education leaders that the church-related college should place a stronger emphasis upon religion and character development, and that they ought to stress the liberal arts type of educational program.

The faculty committee at Elon felt that a strong effort should be made to secure students from among the youthful leaders of our local churches. Of course, students otherwise qualified for college entrance would not be excluded or discouraged. It is to be hoped that many who come to the campuses without any definite Christian commitment may be turned in that direction during their college days. Yet, a vigorous "cell of committed persons" is needed to set the pattern of campus life and to act as leaven for the entire student body. When the ratio of students indifferent to religion reaches a certain point, the effectiveness of the Christian college program falls off rapidly.

Discussion of the question "What is a Christian College?" also brought some other facts into focus. The striking similarities between the college and the local church became especially prominent. Education, training in citizenship and churchmanship, developing skill in human relationship, the understanding of social conditions and institutions, personal, counseling, and worship, all these are primary functions carried on both by local churches and by the college. Can it be that we have been emphasizing overmuch the difference between our local churches and the college when we should have been stressing their similarities? At any rate, if we are to emphasize the ethical and religious aspects of life on the college campus, the relationship between the local churches and the college needs to become more articulate. Our faculty committee may set forth the meaning and objectives of the Christian college, but without the cooperation of the churches the program is doomed to failure.

The Elon Committee on "What is a Christian College?" will continue its study throughout the next school year. Suggestions and opinions from readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN will be appreciated by members of the committee. Tell us what you think a Christian college should be and do. Your thoughts and your interest will help the committee in its study. Kindly address correspondence to:

HEADS MISSION COUNCIL.

The Missions Council of Congregational Christian Churches, of which Dr. Leiper in his new work will become the leader, is the official joint body of the Congregational Christian Churches for educating their constituency on matters of home and foreign missions and raising funds for their support. It includes the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; The Board of Home Missions and the council for Social Action.

In 1946 at the request of the Indian Government, he joined the commission to study famine conditions in India and earlier worked with the China International Famine Commission.

From 1918 to 1922 Dr. Leiper served as a missionary of the American Board of Foreign Missions in North China and just prior to that he worked with the Student Volunteer Movement in the U. S. A.

During World War I Dr. Leiper was with the Army YMCA in Siberia, even then seeing the Russian Revolution developing from the inside, and he became keenly aware of the conditions which produce such a movement and the dangers of totalitarianism into which the people may be carried when they repudiate spiritual concerns and become rooted in materialism. In like manner he saw Japanese Militarism and Germany's Hitlerism developing.

As an author Dr. Leiper has written or edited 19 books including "Blind Spots," "The Ghost of Caesar Walks," "Christ's Way and the World's" and "Pilgrimage to Amsterdam."

For many years Dr. Leiper was active in his own denomination, the Congregational Christian Churches, serving for six years as Editorial Secretary of the Commission on Missions, which preceded the Missions Council; as Associate Secretary of the American Missionary Association from 1923 to 27 and for three years as Associate Editor of the Congregationalist now called Advance, the national magazine of the Congregational Christian denomination. He was also Editor of Potter's Wheel, a denominational missionary publication.

MEET THE STANTONS.

Some say that the Colegio El Pacifico (Pacific School) located on a high bluff, overlooking the sea at Mazatlan, Mexico, is the most beautiful of any of our mission schools. In this school and in this town our missionaries, Lawrence and Constance Stanton, and their three young children live and work.

Larry and Connie Stanton have been working in Mexico since 1945. They were originally sent by the Pilworking in camps which he organized. He also teaches in the Colegio Pacifico, helps with the services of the local church and teaches in the Sunday school.

With three small children to care for, Connie has plenty to occupy herself at home. However, she is very active in the work of the local church, and their home is a center for many kinds of Christian activities.

Our work in Mexico needed desperately just the kind of young couple grim Fellowship of our denomination, for they had grown up in that group and become acquainted through it. Larry served as president of the Southwest Conference, and Connie was a leader in Montana and in the national set-up.

MR. AND MRS. LAWRENCE STANTON

Larry is Texas born and educated. After being in business for a while, he decided he wanted to do Christian work. He then went to Chicago Theological Seminary and later decided for foreign service. This decision was helped along by summer experiences with the Mexican churches of Southern California. He and Connie were married in 1942, while they were both students at Chicago. They went to Mexico in 1945.

Larry works with the young people of our whole mission, editing an interdenominational magazine, conducting religious emphasis institutes, and Larry and Connie are. Young people's work has developed tremendously since they arrived on the field. We have an opportunity in Mexico today that is very great—and one of the ways of meeting it is through the Stantons.

"MEXICAN CHRISTIANS."

By CONSTANCE STANTON.

Because of the early influence of American missionaries, church services and church life are very similar to those in the United States. Except for language, most foreign visitors to our services feel at home.

We are impressed by the quality of conviction we find in the members who have recently become evangelicals, in the wholehearted singing, and in the ability of the lay members to pray publicly and to take part in the services. The preaching is based, generally, on literal interpretation of the Bible, on the vivid experience of discovering Christ, and on conviction of sin. Church members are known for their honesty, freedom from vices and sense of responsibility, and are sought after for their trustworthiness. It is beautiful to see how the knowledge of Christ changes lives. "Since he became a Christian, he is a changed man," is an expression often heard.

Among the children and grandchildren of "first-generation" Christians, there are the same problems of indifference as are found elsewhere. We are reminded forcefully that the Christian faith is not passed on from generation to generation, but must be discovered anew by each person, by each generation. The churches constantly seek to quicken the life and spirit of the members and to awaken the desire to know Christ directly, especially among the young people and children. Their fathers faced the subtle and persistent taunt of "traitor" and other name-calling and often social ostracism because they had become evangelicals (Protestants). The children and young people today face this same thing. It is not easy to be a Protestant in Mexico!

A BOMB EXPLODED.

By LAWRENCE STANTON.

A memorable episode of the life of our church in Mexico will always be that night when a dynamite bomb was thrown into the church yard of one of our churches during the service. It was the closing service of the four-day annual church meeting in Acaponeta, Nayarit. All of our pastors were present, and many of our lay-workers. Arturo Villalobos had brought a 25-voice choir from Mazatlan. Margarita Wright and I were there. The church was full to overcrowding. The closing sermon was being preached by the executive secretary of the National Protestant Interdenominational Council of Mexico, Roman Torres. Those of us who were inside heard the explosion as though the bomb had hit the roof. A few rose from their seats as if to leave. Pastor Torres saw the danger of a panic and with perfect calm motioned everyone to arise and sing "Onward, Christian Soldiers." The familiar words of that hymn lifted the spirits of all of us and we were able to continue the service to its natural conclusion with the calm and reverence that the worship of God requires.

Outside, the story was different.

One of the members of the church had been standing outside, because there were rumors of the possibility of some such occurrence. In a Roman Catholic Convention that was held three weeks before in the same town the theme, "In Defense of the Faith," was discussed. Word got around that the Protestant church was to be bombed. This member of the church was "on guard" for anything that might occur. When he saw the bomb land a few feet away, he picked it up to throw it away from the church building. As he did so, the bomb exploded and three of his fingers were blown off. The wife of the pastor suffered even more. Her five children were asleep in the pastor's cottage next to the church. The fright caused a very severe nervous shock.

The city and state authorities were notified, and the neighbor family that was responsible was called to account for this occurrence. Soon afterward, the mother of this Roman Catholic family was taken very ill. The pastor of our church, being a practical physician, saw the need of bandages and other supplies, which he furnished without charge and in the spirit of Christian brotherhood. He held no bitterness in his heart for those who had been the cause of great suffering in his family.

Here is the Christian spirit in action. Here is the need . . . and the answer. Here is ignorance, hatred and fear. And here is Christ's answer: the knowledge and practice of forgiving love. It is a great jump that has to be made from intolerance and hatred to an ever-giving love, but the Christian gospel makes it a reality in the lives of our valiant Protestants in Mexico.

ALONG THESE TRAILS.

we are at the bottom of the list among major denominations in meeting this condition through effective evangelism. We are in the midst of one of the great mass migrations of human history, displacing peoples by the millions. A paramount question facing this Council is—do we have the statesmanship to follow this new generation of migrants with churches in their new locations? We have a great body of children and youth coming up in our churches and in the slums of America. They demand our best. Millions are hungry, without shelter, without country. We must build spiritual defenses against a spreading iron curtain. These defenses are men won to Christ and gathered into our churches. Such bulwarks alone have any chance to remain today in such sections as China to defend high values when communists have taken over. We have a World Church to build to help make life in One World possible. We have undertaken our share of the world task of Christianity today and have called it Our Christian World Mission. It is a tremendous undertaking, and we must hold the line in the sector assigned to us on the world front. . . .

III.—Growing Unity.

A third trail along which God moves with our people is that of growing unity of life and effort between the various denominations. The ecumenical movement is at full tide, and God is in it. The most thrilling experience of these two years for the Moderator was the signing of the document which gave our Churches membership in the National Council of Churches. At long last Protestantism in America has a united voice. As 4,000, on behalf of the 31,000,000 Protestant Americans, prayed for world peace, it seemed that "the Lord God whispered, 'these things shall be, these things shall be.'" The union of Protestant effort in the National Council is the high point of many movements by which God is drawing us together to meet the needs of our world.

Our denomination has been caught in some of those great main streams of God moving through history. In all these we have risen splendidly to our opportunities. We have finally struck a snag in one relatively small item in the total business of guiding the ecumenical church. In our present situation our people have faith that God will show us the best way to express our desire for church unity—if we send our "soul into the earth and through the clouds to find it!"

Meanwhile, it will be our determination to find and walk with God on the paths of increasing unity in the Church of His Son. We shall learn not to take ourselves too seriously—knowing that we are but one of the countless generations which rise up before Him on this earth. We shall soon depart from this scene to abide with Him within vaster horizons. At times, we have missed the trail of him who prayed "that they may be one." In any consideration we give to the merger at this Council, each of us may well pause to pray, "Not my will but thine be done."

IV.—Building the Kingdom.

A fourth trail along which God has been found in company with his people has been when we have been at our job of building the Kingdom of God on earth. . . .

God can be found in an impressive world-wide church program to meet the tragic needs of unfortunate people. Much in the life of our fellowship at every level represents our efforts to create a more just, beautiful and happy world. We can hear again and again the Living Christ commenting on our service to children, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these, ye did it unto me." Anything the Council for Social Action does in this vast humanitarian enterprise is only one link in a chain of Christian service which helps to hold the world together. It is a link in a chain, however, and not a dispensable gadget.

A doubt has arisen in many minds as to whether this segment in our total enterprise has departed from the ways in which our people can walk together with God in the building of His Kingdom on earth. It is not the function of the Moderator to interpret the nature and scope of the Council for Social Action; to defend or to attack it. The problem of all is to see how it can be strengthened in its power to lead our people in Kingdom building. . . .

We have long been fellow workers with God. Since the days of the Pilgrims, we have raised up many a prophet who applied the message of Jesus Christ to education, political democracy, to slavery, agriculture, industry, race relations, and to world peace. Our problem in the long perspective of the generations is the adjustment of one relatively recent piece of machinery—the Council for Social Action—to do its job more effectively. We have spent all too much time in the past tinkering with machinery. My earliest recollection of General Council is the needless conduct of business which was shifting our ecclesiastical and social machinery so it would do the job better. I am desperately afraid that with my last ecclesiastical breath I may hear a church mechanic rise to say, "I move, sir, that we amend the constitution." I agree that this must be done from time to time, and presently with the Council for Social Action.

But forgive me if I long for that impossible Utopia when we come together solely to take a square look at

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Boys and Girls:

Happy Fourth Day of July to all!

Those of us who have recently crossed our great country to the West Coast are aware of the vastness and greatness of our land. We have seen its beauty and its sores. But we have been proud when we saw Old Glory flying in the breeze which was in nearly every town through which we traveled.

After we had completed our stay in Mexico, in the state of Baja, and were returning to the States, we stopped at the customs house. The Mexican guard and then the American immigration officer asked us, "What is the country of your birth?" Never was I happier to answer: "A native of the United States!" With those magical words we passed through the barrier and drove free into our glorious land. As we crossed the barrier we could look below into the immigration waiting room and see dozens of mothers with infants and small children waiting to see if they could enter the Promised Land of the States. I am afraid many of them were turned away.

One Sunday we heard Dr. Sidney Berry of England speak. Dr. Berry is the secretary of the international Congregational Council. He described in a very amusing way arriving in Chicago one hot Fourth and seeing the demonstrations and display of American Independence. "An experience for an Englishman," he said.

Those of us who were fortunate enough to be born in Tidewater Virginia have been able to stand at the foot of the great monument at Yorktown which marks the spot that Lord Cornwallis surrendered to General Washington. It is indeed a sacred spot.

There is hardly a town in our nation that has not stood in some way in the fight for freedom. It still goes on. Some towns fight dirty politics, others money-mad school boards, would-be dictators, some must fight pagan inroad and others need to wake up their communities!

We will be able to shoot fireworks (safely I hope) eat cream from the freezer and picnic in freedom so long as we work to keep our country free.

There are ways in which boys and girls can help too.

Be proud of your community, work to keep it clean, make it a friendly place. Go to school and to church. Learn to live as a good citizen.

We have had a wonderful trip to California and have seen many new and interesting things. I asked Jonathan, the oldest of our trio, if he would give me an account of the trip and I am writing it down for you. Here's his story:

We had to pack. Mr. Griffin came and brought us his air cooler it was in my mother's window. She had to pull the cord on it often. We slept in a different place every night. When we got to Texas we saw oil well and cowboys. Once we saw a palmino horse. We stopped to get gas and the man grabbed part of his jack and began hitting something. It was a chicken snake he said. It was longer than my mother. We went to Old Mexico and then to New Mexico. In Old Mexico we saw Mexicans and Indians. We got on a zebra cart and wore Mexican hats. Horned toads and rats ran over the road in the desert. At San Diego Zoo we saw the gila monsters that live in the desert. You say the "g" like "h." It is a heela monster.

Sunday we went to church in Los Angeles. We liked the choirs. Now we stay in the same cottage every night. We go to day camp at the church (Claremont Community) every morning. Harry Lester is in my room. His sisters are here. The bus came from North Carolina. We knew about it and saw some of our friends: Mrs. Williams, Dr. Newman and Pattie Lee. Mr. McCauley was on it too.

People are nice here (Claremont). A boy gave my sister, Andrea Lee, a lei. (The strings of flowers that Hawaiians make and wear). We will go home next week. We will go to Yellowstone. They have geysers. We read about them in Jack and Jill that Aunt Mamie gave Andrea Lee.

ca? There, where the dead hand of feudalism holds millions in subjection. Where, if not in those strange lands, among the friendly people of the Middle East, of whom Justice Douglas has written so movingly and tenderly?

Christ is in the United Nations and in the Congress, standing beside every statesman who can discern the signs of the times, the awful portent of this world revolution.

Christ is with our missionaries as they feed and heal and bless and lead.

Finally, Christ has his chance to give back to this world a God worthy of man's deep, innate religiousness, man's capacity to love, to serve, to die for his deity. You and I well know that Communism is man's other religion. Man is incurably religious. If man does not serve a good god, he will serve an evil one. What this diseased world needs is a decent God.

One God and Father of all, and all men one family, to offset our dangerous nationalisms. A God who cares for man, who is aware of man's disappointments and dreams and social aspirations. A God who feels and suffers with man; who lives in this narrow valley of our humanity, who, as the old Greeks believed, would be found dying on some city street. A God to combat the false promises of Communism above human rights. And a God who will triumph at last over all evil, against whom the gates of hell shall not prevail.

Years ago Dr. Fosdick told us that the word God is a picture frame. The quality of the picture depends on the quality of the portrait the frame encloses. What poor, unworthy portraits have gone into that old frame. In our time we have seen the face of Hitler, and now the face of Stalin.

Into that frame Jesus once put a portrait of wonder and glory. There has never been any other to compare with it.

Christ must be put back into that old frame again, or we are lost. He is the only physician for our sick world. He is the only rock on which this sinking society can find firm footing. Without him our planet will slip into an abyss of dreadful night. This may sound like pessimism to some. It is not meant to be. This is the shining hour for Christ and his church. On our side is a generation which has literally been driven upon God. If we are wise we will face out time with the ringing words of the New Testament: "There is no name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved, except the name of Christ." Let us give Christ his chance.

JUNIOR AND JUNIOR HIGH CAMPS SUCCESS.

The North Carolina Junior High Camp was a great success under the fine leadership of Rev. and Mrs. Baxter Twiddy. The Twiddys had many able helpers. Jose Dabuet's crafts class made a cross and worship table for the camp. Classes on Africa were taught by Frances Saunders, Nancy Shankle, and Ruth Dunn. Classes on The Story of the Church were taught by John Truitt, Jr., Warren Matthews, and Bill Tolley. The head counselors were Mrs. Twiddy and Thomas Madren. Vespers were led by Ruth Dunn and the Worship Class. They were assisted by the choir under the direction of Mrs. Twiddy. The following speakers spoke at the evening services: Warren Matthews, Bill Tolley, John Truitt, Timothy Chang, Baxter Twiddy, and Jose Dabuet. The high peak of the camp was a World Friendship Banquet on Friday night with decorations from five or six countries of the world, and address by Rev. Jose Dabuet, followed by the Communion Service led by Rev. Dabuet and Baxter Twiddy. There were 53 campers present. The campers presented a love offering to Jose Dabuet.

One hundred persons shared in the Junior Camp, and others were turned away. All those present had a wonderful time. Rev. Richard L. Jackson was the director of this camp, assisted by Rev. Walstein Snyder, Mrs. Carl Key, Mrs. Thomas D. Sutton, Frances Sanders, Nancy Shankle, Rebecca Mann, Sally Winn, Anne Farrel, Warren Matthews, Jose Dabuet, Bill Tolley, and Timothy Chang. The theme of the week's activities was "Discoveries in God's World."

YOUTH FELLOWSHIPERS GO TO CALIFORNIA.

Seventy-four people left on the trip to California to attend the General Council on June 11. The young people attending were: Petie Trollinger, Burlington; Sonny Coghill, Fuller's Chapel; Mildred Ann Carter, Holland; Mary Frances York, Liberty; Carolyn Ellis, Chapel Hill; Jane Ms-

Cauley, Reidsville and Waverly; Marian Foust, Reidsville; James Madren, Fancy Gap. Counselors with the group were Mrs. Carl Wallace, Mrs. W. B. Williams, Rev. Lanson Granger, Rev. Silas Madren, and Pattie Lee Coghill.

Rev. and Mrs. W. P. Smith, of Haw River, are driving Philip Mann, Cypress Chapel, Virginia, President of the Southern Convention Youth Fellowship; and Curtis Young, Durham, N. C., President of the North Carolina and Virginia Youth Fellowship, to the National Council of Pilgrim Fellowship at Pomona College, Claremont, California, June 25-July 2.

David Crowle, President of the Penn. Pilgrim Fellowship and a rising senior at Elon College, drove with his mother to attend both the General Council and the National Council of Pilgrim Fellowship as a delegate from his home state.

WHO WILL BE THE NEXT?

The Pilgrim Fellowship of the Durham Congregational Christian Church was the first group to send a contribution to the Korean Rehabilitation Project of CROP. Two weeks ago this group turned over $5.00 to the North Carolina State CROP Director, the Rev. Carl R. Key. Thanks for this response to the "Call to Quick Action."

This "Call" is still urgent. Who will be the next?

Six hundred dozen "hatching eggs" have been placed for hatching in South Korea. A shipment of "pigs" was sent June 1, it was announced recently. "Goats" will be sent for placement in Korea as soon as funds are available.

Remember this special "Call" for help in "Rehabilitation!"

RELAX WITH MAX.

I always like to receive mail. This week I received a very nice letter from Mrs. Annie Staley Calboun, Suffolk. Thank you very much, Mrs. Calboun, for the jokes on this page.

* * *

Schoolteacher: "This makes the fifth time I have punished you this week. What have you to say?"

Youth: "I am glad it's Friday."

* * *

A very little boy came home dejected from his first day at school.

"Ain't goin' tomorrow," he said. Why not, dear?"

"Well, I can't read'n' I can't write and they won't let me talk—so what's the use?"

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

IN THE TIME OF THE JUDGES.

LESSON I—JULY 6, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord.—Psalm 33: 12.

LESSON: Judges 2: 8-17, 21, 25.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Deuteronomy 30: 15-20.

An Old Soldier Fades Away.

An old soldier finally faded away. He had had a colorful career. Born as a slave in Egypt he had risen by virtue of character and ability and single-mindedness to the position of commander-in-chief of the Hebrew people. He was forty years of age when he joined the Exodus from Egypt, and served at that time as assistant to Moses the great leader of the Hebrew people. When Moses died, Joshua became the leader of the tribes. He was essentially a soldier. His work was war, and he did it well. His strength was singleness of purpose. He allowed nothing to swerve him from his purpose of driving the Canaanites out of the Promised Land. He did not complete his work before he died but he compiled a great record, and he led his people in a large-scale conquest of the land. Unlike so many people, he knew when to retire and to elevate younger men to positions for guiding the ship of state. And finally at the ripe age of one hundred and ten years, he died, or "faded away" and was buried in the "family burying ground" with his fathers. His character and his career were eloquent witness to the significance of his name "Jehovah is help."

A New Generation Comes On the Scene.

"And also all that generation were gathered unto their fathers; and there arose another generation after them, that knew not Jehovah, nor yet the work that he had wrought for Israel." One by one, Joshua's contemporaries passed from the scene, until, like the old Confederate soldiers, they were gone. A new generation came on the scene. And the writer of the biblical story prepares us for what is to come with the short and simple and significant statement, "there arose another generation after them, that knew not Jehovah, nor yet the work that he had wrought for Israel." Did the older generation fail to teach the young generation about God and about his gracious providence in their national history, and about the goodly heritage into which they had entered? Or had the new generation refused to give heed unto the older generation and gone its own care-free, pleasure-loving way? We do not know. But we do know what happened because a nation forgot God, and forgot his place and his providence in their national life. The story of Judges is the answer. And it is the answer not only to what happened to Israel, but what has happened, and what will happen to every people who forget God and who have only a materialistic and secular way of life. Let our nation allow only one generation to grow up without knowing God and his place in the national life, and we are on the road to decline and destruction. The highways of history are dotted with the wrecks of the nations that forgot God. It can happen to America. It will happen to America if we forget God, if we do not train our children to know and to obey God.

Following the Gods of the People.

"And they forsook Jehovah, the God of their fathers, who brought them out of the land of Egypt, and followed other gods, of the gods of the people that were round about them, and bowed down themselves to them." These people knew that in a special sense they were "the covenant people," that God had called them for a special purpose, that they were to give him supreme loyalty. But he was a God of high moral standards and exacting ethical demands. They were surrounded on every side by the gods of the Canaanites, gods which offered luxury and ease and license and even licentiousness. It was a subtle temptation. And a strong one, too strong for these people as a whole to resist. They forsook Jehovah—in spite of all that he had done for them—and went after other gods. It is so easy to follow the crowd. It is so easy to worship the gods of the people. It is hard to meet the exacting demands of the religion of Jesus.

Into the Hands of the Spoilers.

"And Jehovah delivered them into the hands of the spoilers that despoiled them, "and he sold them into the hands of their enemies round about." Not vindictively, not in spite—in fact it broke his heart to do this. He did it only as a last resort. But there is law in the spiritual world as well as in the natural world. When nations forget God they pay the penalty for their sin. The wages of sin is death, for a nation as well as for an individual. God himself cannot set aside his laws in their operation. If nations persist in forgetting God, in organizing life without God, they eventually and inevitably suffer for their sins.

Delivers, But no Deliverance.

"And Jehovah raised up judges, who saved them out of the hands of those that despoiled them. And yet they harkened not unto their judges, for they played the harlot after other gods, and bowed themselves down unto them." These "judges" were not primarily judges in our sense of the word, but natural leaders, strong men and women, courageous, aggressive, high-handed. They would rally a tribe or group of tribes against the common enemy, and for a season get respite from the enemies. These men were no saints. They were not models for American young people to follow, that is except in a few cases. But they were men and women of God, men and women who under God could help the Israelites. But then, as now, people really did not want to be saved. The people harkened not to their judges. How little heed do people today give to their moral and spiritual leaders.

The Mercy of God.

The story of Judges is a cycle—apostasy, chastening (by God for their own good), penitence, and deliverance. Here we see man's proneness to sin, here we see God's unfailing mercy. Here we see the peril and penalty of trifling with God, and the unsearchable riches to be found in following him.

Doing That Which Is Right in Our Own Eyes.

"Every man did that which was right in his own eyes." What anarchy resulted! Think of a society in which every man did that which was right in his own eyes! It is only as men recognize a higher moral law, only as they submit themselves to law, that they find true freedom. We have too much emphasis upon "self expression" today. Our modern world needs discipline, restraint, self-control, obedience to God's law.

DEBORAH, A WOMAN OF COURAGE.

LESSON II—JULY 13, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: Be strong and of good courage; be not affrighted, neither be thou dismayed; for the Lord thy God is with thee, withersoever thou goest.—Joshua 1:9.

LESSON: Judges 4: 1-10, 13-16, 5: 1-7.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 33: 12-22.

Time Out of Joint.

The Israelites were having a hard time. They were under the power of an oppressor, Jabin, king of Canaan. He had a capable and cruel general named Sisera who had not only a large army, but a large number of armored chariots. He was the scourge of the land. The main highways were untraveled—the Israelites dared not use them, and the people walked through the bypaths and byways. Many of them left their village homes and went up into the mountains to escape the ravages of this army of occupation. And it seemed as if there was little that the Israelites could do about the matter. There was not a spear or a shield among forty thousand of them. The odds were prohibitive against them and the ease seemed hopeless. One thing was sure: if anything was to be done somebody with courage and faith and the power to inspire others must arise and give dynamic leadership to the disunited and disheartened people.

A Woman In a Man's World.

Remember, this was a man's world. Women did not count for much in that land and in that time. That is, not in a public way. They were to be seen, and not heard. In fact they were not to be seen too much, they were to stay at home and tend to household duties. It was a man's world.

But there lived in Israel a "woman who was different." Her name was Deborah. She was a strange combination of practical wisdom and prophetic and poetic temperament. By her character and her ability she became a "judge" over Israel.

Deborah was also a woman of spiritual insight and sensitive spirit. She felt that Israel could do something about getting freedom from bondage if only the right man could be found to unite the divided tribes and weld them into a fighting unit. God evidently revealed unto her that a man named Barak was just the man. He seemed to have the "know how" but he lacked the fire and the dynamic spirit of aggressive leadership. Enter Deborah. She sent for Barak and told him what the Lord had burned into her mind and heart. She touched the spark in the man's life that set him ablaze. He consented to assume the leadership of the men of Israel and to pit his outnumbered army against the armed hosts of Sisera—provided that Deborah would go with him. Her presence was worth more than a whole regiment of soldiers. Deborah had physical courage as well as spiritual insight, and she said "I will surely go with thee . . . and she arose and went with Barak to Kedesh." Here was no ordinary woman.

Deborah was not the last woman to give the lie to the belief that this is a man's world. There are many of them in the honor rolls of history. To mention only a few: Mary of Bethlehem gave us Jesus Christ. Lydia gave us the first church in Europe. Clara Barton gave us the American Red Cross. Florence Nightingale gave us the modern nurse. Marie Curie gave us radium. Frances E. Williard gave us temperance. Harriet Beecher Stowe gave us Uncle Tom's Cabin. A woman is in charge of the minting of United States money, and a modern Deborah, Ann Rosenberg is Assistant Secretary of Defense. A man's world . . . ?

God Is Not Always on the Side of the Biggest Army.

Napoleon is once said to have remarked something to the effect that God is always on the side of the largest army. He was wrong, as he himself later learned. Quite frequently God is with minorities and with the smaller of two armies. One could hardly think of a more unequal situation than the one when the ten thousand ill-equipped and untrained Israelites faced the great host of Sisera's army, well armed, and also boasting nine hundred iron chariots, which were the modern equivalent of our huge tanks, comparatively speaking. But when the battle was over the Israelites were in complete mastery of the field, and the great army of Sisera was totally wiped out, and the captain himself was ignominiously (and treacherously) killed by a woman, a member of a tribe supposedly neutral.

There are intangibles and imponderables in war as elsewhere. Morale and maneuvers also count heavily. Sisera's hosts were drawn up in battle array on the great plain of Esdraelon, where they could maneuver easily and use their chariots. The Israelites were on the slopes of Mt. Tabor, among the trees, where the chariots could not get at them. Furthermore there came a heavy and sudden thunderstorm with rain, hail, and wind, and that spelled catastrophe for the Canaanites. For not only did the rain and the hail blind them as it beat in their faces, but the rain swelled the river Kishon until it became a raging torrent in which both horses and men floundered helplessly, and they became easy prey to the Israelites dashing madly and courageously down the hillside. The jig was up for the Canaanites. They were wiped out.

All's Fair In War—Or Is It?

Modern man has tried to make rules for the game of war, but is its difficult, if not impossible to make men abide by the rules in time of war. According to the code of morality in that day, Sisera should have been safe in the home of Jael, the Kenite. She belonged to a neutral tribe, and furthermore he had partaken of her hospitality—he had eaten in her home. But when absolutely worn out by the wear and tear of battle he fell asleep in her home, she took a large tent stake and drove it through his temple, pinning him to the ground, and killing him instantly. War does strange things to even the best of people sometimes. One of the tragedies of war is not simply that it kills the bodies of men and women and even children, but that it kills so many of the finer sensibilities of people.

Attention Women!

Our world needs women like Deborah, women of practical commonsense, spiritual insight, courage and faith. We need such women in church and state. Thank God we have some great women leaders in these realms of life in America. But let us not forget that we need women like Deborah in the home too. After all that is one of the most effective places in which a woman can serve her day and generation and God himself. Let them establish Christian homes, let them train children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, let them inspire their husbands and sweethearts and children with high ideals and burning enthusiasm. Let them dedicate their abilities and their energies to the cause of Christ and the church. The hand that rocks the cradle may not rule the world, but it wields a potent influence on those who do rule the world.

The Orphanage
 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

On that fourth Sunday how do you receive the Orphanage offering? Why do you not pick out one of the four articles that you have received during the month and read it? Why not tell your Sunday school that each Sunday school in the Southern Convention is asked to make a monthly offering for the support of the homeless children here? We have to remember these children for many things here—especially do we remember them three times every day with a good meal. Could you not remember them once each month? A fifty cent piece, or a quarter of a dollar, or even a dime dropped in an offering plate each month would help.

Now, for instance, in this report each of the five Conferences are represented. And they have sent a total of $317.44.

Since I make this report each week, if all the Sunday schools received the monthly offering there would be forty-nine, instead of ten, listed each week. Now you can study the report each week and you will find Sunday schools in the list representing all the types of needs of their local churches—such as new building obligations, special funds being raised for special needs, and churches with definite budget systems adopted in the local church—all of these problems and yet they manage to receive a monthly offering for the Orphanage. I am not trying to argue you into making monthly offerings, but I am making you a mighty good suggestion, and asking you in all humility for the sake of these eighty children to give the folks at Sunday school, once each month, a chance to make an offering to the Orphanage. The Sunday schools which do it are happy and progressive, and successful.

We sent by parcel post this week to the Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co. 18, 100 coupons counted into packs of 100 each. It takes a lot of work to separate, sort, count, label that many coupons, but a very few of us around here are afraid of work, and when we get a check for close to $100.00 for them we shall feel that you and your neighbors have helped us a lot by collecting and mailing these coupons to us. Please keep them coming. We can get more out of them than you can as special rates are made to orphanages. We have not mailed our General Mills coupons yet, as we do not have as many of them. Just keep all your coupons and send them to us, and we shall be most appreciative.

I am sorry to have to talk so much "shop" in this letter, but is is because I need your help. Now let me tell you about C. A. and Billy. They are two of our boys who are with Les- ters and Francis Galt, who live on the highway between New Market, and Luray, Va., with their "preacher parents." These boys—all four of them—are having fun. Our two are seeing the beautiful valley and mountains, and climbing the big cherry trees in the Galt's backyard. It is so kind of this busy pastor and his wife to take a little time to make their two sons and our two orphanage boys happy.

When I took them up there I carried two others with me for the trip, and what a good time they had. Friday, Saturday, Sunday, Monday we were on the trip, and were entertained in such lovely homes. I spoke at a home-coming service at Timber Ridge, and had such a good time. It made me happy to see so many of my good friends and to make new friends, also to see how well behaved our two boys were everywhere we were entertained.

But my space is up. Thank you. Come to see us, and do not forget to take a monthly offering for the Orphanage.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

REFLECTIONS ON THE GENERAL COUNCIL.

tired missionaries and Christian workers. Here is a delightful plot of 28 acres with 79 buildings and 185 retired servants of Christ. The tour was conducted by resident guides, distinguished in their Pilgrim attire. There was Leonard J. Christian, for instance, who had given nearly 50 years of service in China, had spoken in our Southern Convention churches, now giving a lift to weary pilgrims with his autoette. Congregational ministers in the present resident body have served 167 parishes in 31 different states, an estimated total of more than 1,000 years. This seems to be an ideal arrangement for pensioners or annuitants. Some live in apartment-type dormitories while others reside in their own homes. Why not have comparable arrangements on the East Coast?

Missions. One of the impressive services of the Council was the commissioning service for young recruits. Following the flags of many lands were the returned missionaries who had served Christ with their lives in distant lands. What are the impelling motives in the life of a young missionary? Our back page article gives the sobering answer.

Dr. F. C. Lester has served on the Prudential Committee of the American Board. The Rev. Henry Robinson is serving currently. The report of this Committee stresses three things. The first is that the major concern wherever our work is carried on must be the centrality of the Church as a creative Christian fellowship. Institutional work has a way of being absorbed by governments. Churches have a way of continuing to live and grow in adverse times. Second, the abundant life that the gospel promises lays upon every board the necessity of maintaining institutional work of a high order. In Turkey, where no church is possible, the institutional work must be of such a nature that the people of that country are mindful that in their midst are those whose lives and deeds are bearing a witness through the power of Christ. The final principle to which the Committee is committed is the strengthening of national or indigenous leadership. There can be no strong church unless there are also consecrated, well-trained natives to assume roles of leadership. They conclude: "Each time the American Board takes another step in turning over important work to national leaders, each time a bright young Christian is sent to school for further study, each time a mission takes steps toward its own self-support, we are seeing one of the relentless forward steps that must be taken by those who would follow in His train."

ALONG THESE TRAILS.

the needs of immortal souls in our world; to build a program and organization to meet that need, and to seek His aid in fulfilling the magnificent opportunities He has opened to us. May we not give our finest abilities to those opportunities which will be presented to us in this Council. This may be the beginning or the end of the Dark Ages on this globe. Let us not whine about the evil, but set ourselves squarely to being the channels of God for its redemption, then darkness may begin to fade into light. Our opportunities are magnificent. It remains for us to join Him who is the Lord of History as well as the Father of men, and do what one denomination, one State conference, one parish church, one consecrated Christian can do to translate our Christian faith into a more Christian civilization.

IV.—The Trail of Worship.

A fifth trail along which we discern God to be present most vividly is that of worship. The question at this point is not the trail along which we travel but Him with whom we go. Sometimes the way is a road to Emmaus in which we find ourselves traveling a road, as did two ancient men in the company of the Living Christ. Thus we are led to the discovery that our Master is not a dead leader, but a living Lord. Our church is gathered around Him. He is in our midst. He has been formed in us. We have become His body. Two heroic Arctic explorers, pushing further and further into the frozen North, confessed, "We felt a third Presence with us." We have had this experience also. It is not limited to worship in the formal sense. Where God is and we respond in adoration to Him, worship is. . . .

Our people have known the Presence in the Communion. They are praying that we shall have the miracle happen here. It can and will, if all our prayers are added to their petitions. When it happens, we who come from the churches will become a Church for these days together, feeling the benediction of His Presence drawing us together in the most intimate fellowship which Christians can know. He promised, "Lo, I am with you always." We call now for the fulfillment of that promise.

As we approach the Communion table, we are not alone. We walk the ways of the Lord in memory of the servants of God of yesterday. We walk it in aspiration that as we are one with our Lord in this Communion, so we shall remain one with Him and each other in all that shall concern us in these days together. We would go back to a million and a quarter people who have a high stake in these days, and be able to report to them, "We found the trails along which God has walked with our people, and on those trails we have felt His Presence and have tried to do His will."

STATION B-U-S (CLAREMONT REPORTING.

Mrs. W. E. Wissemann of Greensboro, Dr. W. Millard Stevens of Norfolk, and Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein of Richmond, enjoyed a trip by air to Claremont.

President L. E. Smith and Superintendent W. T. Scott came by train.

The F. C. Lesters of Asheboro and W. P. Smith of Haw River, drove across the country, as did the R. L. House family of Southern Pines.

The Southern Convention was well represented at the Claremont Council.

Among the Negro delegates were: Rev. William Lake of Burlington, F. A. Hargett and J. T. Stanley of Greensboro, and J. D. Farrow of Newport News.

The MEANING of Our MISSION

By REV. PAUL F. PRUITT

Missionary Elect to the Philippines

This is Our Mission—that in a world where people are so dependent upon economic resources, we shall not be found dumb, with no Christian directives to give. God save us from equating our faith with any one economic system. But God save us, also from failing to apply the good news of Christ to our economics in ways that will give guidance to our perplexed world. In the lands where your missionaries go, this may mean some differences in the approach of man's economic needs than we have been willing to take up to the present. This is one of Christ's greatest challenges in the areas where we are going. It is a difficult challenge; for the gospel of an eternal Lord includes much more than a man's economic status. But in spite of the difficulty involved, we shall attempt to speak a prophetic Christian message. This is Our Mission.

Our Mission is also one of brotherhood. It will possibly sound trite to use the same words here we constantly speak from our pulpits and echo in our publications. But it is so much a part of our mission and the reason for our becoming missionaries, it should be said. The fundamental doctrine of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man takes more concrete expression when one begins working with those of a different skin color than his own. It is a joy for those of us whom someone has termed the colorless people to personally extend the right hand of Christian fellowship to our brethren of another color. Don't underestimate the importance of both talking and practicing brotherhood among the races in your churches, colleges and summer youth conferences. Such belief and action in the past has played a major role in our decision to implement our world-wide concern through the mission movement. The message of Christian brotherhood must have a witness wherever we go. For wherever men offend, hurt, or kill, brotherhood is denied. Wherever the races of mankind dwell in creative endeavor and practice Christian unity, brotherhood is established.

Your missionaries go to expand Christian fellowship and to make its existing units more effective. This is Our Mission.

We Go to Establish New Churches. We do so because we are convinced that the salvation of mankind is in Christian fellowship. It has been for us. It can be for others. We go with a sense of urgency. For a score of strong ideologies ignore this fellowship and that for which it stands. They may offer fellowship; but it is a community of believers without an eternal purpose. We will attempt to establish an eternally real fellowship. For all men of all nations need to be in Christian fellowship. Only then can they experience life really abundantly.

We Go to Make the Existing Fellowship Stronger. We will do so by helping to train pastors, teachers and lay workers in our younger churches. We will take some of the skills we have learned in our more highly developed churches in this country. These, we trust, will be helpful. But we will take something more important than these acquired skills. That will be your concern for the people we serve. Your loving gifts that make the mission enterprise possible. Your prayers that keep our tasks ever pointed towards God. Your confidence in us, your representatives, which gives us freedom in doing what we feel best in given decisions. And your devotion and dedication to your own church fellowship. We will speak of that devotion as an example. But they will know of your devotion to the Church of Christ whether we speak of it or not.

We are proud to be a part of the greatest organization on earth—greatest because it extends to all peoples a relevant good news—the gospel of Jesus Christ—a good news of hope for man's economic plight, a good news of men being children of one common Father, God, and therefore all brothers; the good news of salvation in fellowship with the followers of Jesus This is Our Mission.

Ground Breaking at Rosemont Church

L. to r.: Chas L. Richardson, chairman of the Official Board; Rev. Melvin Dollar, pastor, and E. F. Caldwell, chairman of Building Committee, turning the first spadeful of earth.

On June 22, the Rosemont Christian Church of Norfolk, Virginia, had a ground breaking service for the extension of the religious education plant and the remodeling of the church auditorium. This service was held immediately after the morning worship. This extension program includes the addition of 16 class rooms, two rest rooms, a ladies' lounge, a kitchen and furnace room. The addition is to be a two-story brick structure, 50 by 78 feet, matching the present building. This project also includes the enlarging of the social hall, and enlarging and remodeling the church auditorium. The construction has already been begun and it is hoped that it will be completed by the end of this year. These improvements are expected to cost approximately $80,000.00.

News Flashes

The Executive Board of the Southern Convention will meet at Henderson, North Carolina, on Thursday morning, July 17, at 10 o'clock.

Rev. David W. Shepherd has resigned as the superintendent of the Southeast Convention to accept a pastorate at Chipley, Georgia.

Rev. Robert A. Whitten of Winchester, Virginia, gave the charge to the candidate in the service of ordination for Henry V. Harman, in the Westmorland Church of Washington, on June 1.

From Walter A. Graham: "Congratulations upon an excellent report of the Claremont General Council in your July 3 issue which has just been received and read quite thoroughly with much interest."

Would you like to have a picture of the delegation of the Southern Convention in Durham. If so, you may get one by addressing Mr. Rell Clements, Jr., 410 Davis Street, Fayetteville, N. C. The cost is $1.00.

EASTERN VIRGINIA PASTOR IS MINISTER OF THE YEAR.

The Rev. R. E. Brittle, of Route 1, Suffolk, Virginia has been named by The Progressive Farmer the "Rural Minister of the Year" for 1952. Mr. Brittle, former president of the Eastern Virginia Conference of Congregational Christian Churches, is the pastor of the Bethlehem Christian Church, once a part-time church, now full-time and one of the largest rural churches in the entire South.

He will receive, in connection with the award, a scholarship to the Town and Country School for Ministers from Candler School of Theology, Emory University, Atlanta, Georgia. The school is in session from July 29 to August 14.

Mr. Brittle was cited for "effective leadership for a quarter of a century in one parish, for developing small churches into full-time churches, for a ministry related to the needs of all the people in a rural community, and for working with Negro rural families as well as white families."

He was noted for "the way he helps farmers with their crops; inoculates and doctors livestock free of charge; slaughters, cuts and salts meats; encourages patronage of health clinics, and encourages beautification and improvement of homes and property."

AMELIA CHRISTIAN CHURCH HOLDS REVIVAL.

The Amelia Christian Church, near Clayton, North Carolina, had a wonderful blessing during our revival services, held the week of June 22-27. There were seven young people who accepted Christ as their personal Saviour, and two young men who moved their membership from other churches. Many of us received real inspiration from each person's forward steps, but we all admired particularly one man's step: his wife was a member here, and without any home discussion, he left his church by way of transfer. We think it is wonderful when young people, especially, will work for Christ together in a church.

We must give recognition to our minister who, through careful preparation and continuous prayer helped to make our meeting merit the name—revival, for we all feel that many souls were wonderfully revived. Rev. Fred P. Register is a well-deserving minister, who wants no praise for himself. Nor have we forgotten the man whom all the children always look forward to seeing, for he gives them an opportunity to just sing and sing. Their heart-lifting singing was an inspiration to the adults. We all know that each song has a new meaning when Mr. Joe Stephenson leads us in our singing, and we enjoy it so much. His son, Billy, and his daughter, Nancy, assisted him.

You may recall the terrific heat-wave we had during the week, but then we realize that just an hour or so a day in church is a very little thing in our glorification of Christian living.

We hope your church will have a real revival, just as we had, and we know that you can if you will be constant in prayer, have faith, and work together for the purpose of spreading Christianity.

MARY JOHNSON,
Reporter.

SUMMER ACTIVITIES IN OUR REIDSVILLE CHURCH.

In spite of the summer heat, things continue at a merry pace at the Reidsville, North Carolina, Church. The week immediately following the close of public schools, our Daily Vacation

Bible School was held. Mrs. Humphries was again the director of the school this year, and her fine faculty of twenty-four teachers participated in the service of dedication the Sunday preceding the Bible School at the eleven o'clock service. There were several new features of the school this year. The attendance went to 160.

Very recently the new scout hut of the church, which is just behind the parsonage, has been put into active use. With it, activities and interest have increased in our scouting program since the boys have come into their new home.

On Sunday, June 15, before a packed church, our pastor administered the sacrament of holy baptism to 22, and received into the fellowship of the church 17 new members.

Reidsville is fortunate in having a beautiful public swimming pool, and many of the classes and organizations of the church have taken advantage of this pool on these hot days by going there for a cooling swim and staying for a picnic supper.

Starting on Sunday, June 29, Rev. Mr. Humphries invited four visiting ministers to speak at the evening hour of worship. They are Rev. William Ratcheford of the Ruffin Methodist Church, Rev. Kenneth Rigister of the Union Ridge Church, Rev. Donald Meyers of the First Baptist Church of Reidsville, and Rev. Fred Allred of Summerfield.

The Young People's Missionary Society of the church has recently provided communion cup holders for the main auditorium of the church, and only last Sunday, new hymnals were placed in the church. months, and summer hasn't as yet hurt the attendance of the worship service or the Sunday school.

During the month of May all the churches of the City of Reidsville participated in a campaign to increase Sunday school attendance. Our church adopted as its slogan, "Win someone for Christ. Come to Sunday school and stay for church." When the month of May was over, figures showed the attendance at the Reidsville church averaged 422 for Sunday school and as many or more for morning church service. This was higher by one hundred than any other of the Reidsville churches.

Already plans for fall activities are under way, which include our fall revival, with Rev. Fred Register conducting it, and our Rally Day.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND DEFENSE.

One of the perplexing questions of the current scene is just how much the mobilization of the military forces of the nation is affecting our public schools. This is, indeed, a problem of vital concern to the welfare of the country and of the children of the country.

Dr. Willard E. Givens, executive secretary of the National Education Association, calls for greater participation by our citizens on school matters. He states: "We must have more and better prepared teachers; we must have buildings adequate to house our pupils, and we must continue the adjustment of our educational program to the needs of young people who are growing up in an anxious age. To do these things, we must have the understanding and support of the American people."

Dr. Ray C. Maul, research associate of the N. E. A.'s Commission on Teacher Education and Professional Standards, says that the good school of yesterday is not good enough today. The children of today, he reasons, must be prepared to meet greater and more involved problems when they become adults.

Some of the problems which school boards, school administrators and teachers face today involve such difficulties as abnormally large classes, dual and even triple sessions of the school day, staffs that are inadequately trained and lacking in experience, low salaries and, by no means least, unreasonable attacks by those who are far from friendly, if not actively hostile, to the public schools.

The New York Times has been making a nation-wide survey of the public schools and, in its issue of January 20, 1952, Dr. Benjamin Fine, its educational editor, reports factors both unfavorable and favorable. He reports that the war in Korea has left its impact on our schools. Defense programs, naturally and properly, receive priority listing for materials and equipment. However, he states that "frequently education is placed fairly low down on the priority scale; some communities still do not recognize the importance of the free public schools in helping to win the ideological war."

Following World War II, the public became aroused and realized that something must be done to overcome the ground lost during the war years. Considerable effort was made to help strengthen the public schools. The war closed in 1946, and four years later a noticeable change for the better had taken place. But, during the past year and a half, the schools have found the going not so smooth and they have had to fight to retain what they had won, as well as to try to obtain necessary improvements.

The survey made by The New York Times revealed that more than 800,000 children of elementary school age were added to the public school rolls in the past school year, and that the increase will be at the rate of 1,000,000 per year. There is also a teacher shortage throughout the country, except in New York City where the need has been supplied, although this does not apply to high school teachers.

School authorities are hopeful that they will be allocated enough steel to keep up with the demand for new school buildings, in addition to catching up on the backlog on school building programs.

One of the most encouraging factors is the increased interest in schools taken by citizens groups. Taken by and large, over the country, more than 5,000 such groups have been formed. The National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools is doing a splendid work in encouraging and strengthening the formation and development of citizens groups to give intelligent aid to the public schools. It already has more than 1,600 such groups with which it works in close cooperation.

One of the unpleasant facts to record is a concerted attack now being made against the public schools in some sections of the country. The tragic fact is that this concerted attack appears to be well financed.

However, the fact that citizens groups over the country are showing an increased interest in our public

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

The GENERAL COUNCIL in RETROSPECT

Be it hereinafter known to all concerned that the writer is happy to be safely back from the 6,880 mile jaunt to California. After sampling 17 beds of various sizes and degrees of comfort, he is quite content to go for an extended season without returning to "West-Way," "Cozy Corner," or "King's Rest."

Everyone should make at least one visit relatively early in life to the desert and its environs; then he could know the full joy and satisfaction of seeing green fields, mountains with foliage, rivers with flowing water and trees large enough to provide shade. How greatly we are blessed here in the Southland with water, fruit and vegetable! Call out the adjectives, for it is indeed a land flowing with milk and honey, a land of delectable mountains and fertile plains, a land with the basic potentialities for a sound economy and an impressive stewardship.

The holding of a National Council is quite a major achievement. It is a staggering task for the entertaining group. Claremont went "all out" to entertain the Council, and yet some delegates had to walk great distances from dormitories to boarding facilities and Council sessions. Two delegates died during the meeting, and the Rev. Allen Hackett of St. Louis was seriously injured on his return trip.

It was generally agreed that the even-tempered spirit of this Council was due largely to the skill and spiritual impact of the Moderator, Vere V. Loper. Dr. Rockwell Harmon Potter stated that he was moderator when the Council did not have to be moderated. This Council was charged with rather intense feelings, especially concerning the Council for Social Action and the Merger. The Moderator insisted that any criticism of personalities should be restrained and that gloating applause after a winning vote should not be indulged. This kind of presiding, which is the real test of a moderator, saved the day at Claremont. Dr. Sidney Berry of England referred to the Council as "Congregationalism at its best."

The Council for Social Action came in for a round of solid criticism. There was some agitation to cut denominational support. We may give space in a subsequent issue to a more detailed account of the Social Action issue. Suffice it to say now that a Committee of Review has been created and the Council was given the green light at Claremont. The Council disclaimed the "Profit-Motive Resolution" of 1934, which described "our present competitive profit-seeking economy" as "increasingly self-destructive" and called for the "abolition of the system responsible for those destructive elements in our common life." The Claremont Council recorded its conviction that "no economic system embodies the perfect will of God; that every economic order must be evaluated and its practices judged in the light of the Christian Gospel." Then it went on to declare that "it is our Christian responsibility not only to bring Christ to the individual, but also to bring his teachings to bear on the corporate problems of our society."

Two of the most interesting features of every Council are the speeches of nomination for the moderator and the invitations for the next session. Dean Liston Pope invited the 1954 Council to Yale University. Superintendent Albert Coe extended an invitation for Massachusetts. Dr. Thomas Anderson spoke for Atlanta and the South. The Council has met in the Northeast, the North and South West Coast, and in the Mid-West, but never in the South. Harvard and Yale invitations notwithstanding, it is time for the Council to lift up the light of its countenance upon the South.

GOODBYE CLAREMONT,
HAIL, ATLANTA!

WORSHIPING in OTHER CHURCHES

One of the privileges of this trip to California was that of visiting and worshiping in other churches. We visited the First Congregational Church in Los Angeles on Choir Recognition Sunday, and were happy to participate in such a worship service. Here multiple choirs are developed and exalted music, befitting the church, is produced.

Worship in architecturally unique Oneata Church was a novel experience. This church has many interesting features. Its summer program is worthy of at-ention. Under the supervision of the minister, Dr. Henry David Gray, the church has sent a deputation of its young people to Europe and Asia this summer.

On our return trip we worshipped at the First Plymouth Church of Denver, Colorado. Dr. Loper was minister here before going to California, and Governor Sweet, late moderator, was a member of this church.

Such varied worship experiences give pause for meditation and orientation, and offer needed perspective for the home task.

"Let Us Rise Up and Build"

An Address in Observance of the One Hundredth Anniversary of the Albany Convention, and the Founding of the Congregational Church Building Society

By TRUMAN B. DOUGLASS, Executive Vice-President
The Board of Home Missions

"And they said: Let us rise up and build. So they strengthened their hands for the good work."

—Nehemiah 2:18.

My theme is given in the Book of Nehemiah. The setting of the quotation seems appropriate by contrast rather than by resemblance to any thing in our situation. It was spoken of an ancient city, Jerusalem, lying in ruin and desolation. Our American cities are not ruined and desolate; they are quick with driving life, and they continue to thrust their soaring towers into the heavens. It was spoken of a nation reduced to a shattered remnant. No invader has torn from us our families and kindred and carried them into captivity. It was spoken of a community undefended against an encompassing foe. We may be imperilled, but we are not defenseless. It was spoken of a people "in great affliction and reproach." Among the peoples of the earth our lot is far from affliction, and when there is reproach it is construed as being prompted by envy and fear of our gigantic wealth and power. Why, then, are we to rise up and build, and pray that our hands may be strengthened for the good work?

I.

1. The first is the plain fact that except for the events we have reviewed this evening we should not be meeting as a General Council in this place. We are here as beneficiaries of the Home Mission enterprise. Except for this missionary conviction and the organized program of home missions, the Congregational Christian fellowship would have remained a narrowly regional denomination, limited mainly in the northeastern quarter of the United States. This is not hyperbole; it is simple fact. In several of the State Conferences west of the Mississippi not a single church of our order exists today that has not at some time received aid from the Church Building Society, and in all of them the unaided churches would be a very small minority. We present as a vital and effective fellowship in every part of our nation today only because some of our forebears with missionary urgency in their hearts, went to their knees to inquire concerning God's will and their own duty, and then said to one another, "Let us rise up and build."

2. The second fact to which I call attention is the continuing incredible dynamism of American life—and the consequent question as to whether the churches of this nation can produce answering vitalities to meet it. The statistics of population growth are familiar to all of us and I shall not weary you by reciting them. If the figures, running into many millions, are difficult to comprehend, let us put the matter this way: The nation is growing at the rate of one and one-half new Claremonts every day, three hundred and sixty-five days a year—and will continue at this pace for the next decade. A new city of 7,500 people every twenty-four hours—the magnitude of the expansive thrust of this nation's life. Here is one other statistic which rather staggered me. The number of babies born into American homes during the past six years is equal to all the people in California, Oregon, Washington, Montana, Idaho, Nevada, Arizona,

Wyoming, Utah, Colorado, New Mexico and Louisiana.

3. A third fact is the extraordinary going and coming of the American people—their migrations and their settlement in new places. For the ministry and mission of our churches the question of How Many people there are is frequently secondary to the question of Where they are. Here we confront movements and surges of such magnitude that they are really beyond the power of our minds to grasp.

Out of all the complex statistics and graphs portraying the growth and movement of the American people, one fact emerges which is of paramount importance for this Council. It may be simply stated. Judged by current standards of accessibility, more people in America today are beyond the reach of existing churches than in any time in our history. There are more clearly definable communities and neighborhoods which are now without churches than at any time since this nation was founded.

In the days when our fathers gathered at Albany, the existence of communities bereft of the preaching of the Gospel and the means for the Christian instruction of children and youth was cause for missionary concern and action. Is it so with us today?

II.

Against this background of facts and their implications, let us inquire about our own stewardship of the Gospel and the Church's life and witness. With what measure or resoluteness and responsibility are we pressing the Christian mission in a nation which, by its very dynamism, is continually moving beyond the reach of established agencies for the communication of Christian faith and life?

Where, actually do we stand? In terms of new churches organized and built, and the amount of money spent for this purpose, we are certainly some distance from the top. And we shall continue to be—ever against the numerical superiority of some of our sister-denominations.

Yet in many of the most basic tasks involved in meeting the Christian needs of our changing, growing nation, the Congregational Christian fellowship has an honorable and distinguished record. No denomination has done more developing and articulating the principles of sound Protestant strategy and advance. The fundamental field studies by which

IV.—“HOW BIG CAN PARENTS BE?”

Many times during the course of a maturing family's history, parents are called upon to stretch their generosity, their understanding, their patience and their hearts. Times come when they say, “We have gone as far as we can go. We have to draw the line somewhere.” How big can parents be? How big should they be in their efforts to direct the course of their children away from the known hazards and pitfalls of life?

Adolescence is unquestionably the most trying age through which an individual passes. It is trying to the adolescent, and it is trying to the family. So often, there is just no explaining the actions or the thinking of teen-agers. But parents, have you stopped to consider that your little boy and your little girl are turning from children into adults, that new and strange impulses are surging through their bodies, that they are faced with a cold and unfeeling world into which they are soon to be thrust, that that world with its heavy burdens and problems was not of their making, but of ours? Little wonder that at times our adolescents do very strange things. They have unfamiliar pressures upon them which call for bigness in terms of understanding, patience and love.

How big can parents be when it comes to letting their children go? In a former parish which I served, there was a family of a father and three daughters. This father coveted his daughters for himself. They belonged to him. He intended to keep them, and keep them he did. Every suitor was discouraged, to put it mildly. Social events and outside contacts were held to a minimum. Finally, the father died and left three maiden sisters with little indeed to look forward to in terms of a normal life. Another family I knew had four daughters. In this instance, it was a strong-willed mother who put on a scene and practically threatened any one of her daughters who suggested marriage and the establishing of a home of her own. If such attitudes were merely illigical, it wouldn't matter, but actually they are tragic for those whose lives are cramped and limited by such selfishness. One of the hardest lessons which parents must learn and which these parents refused to learn, is that a home is created to be broken up. This is the very nature of things, and to hold children by willful selfishness in the home beyond the normal and natural time is a colossal injustice and thwarts every natural right and instinct of a young adult. One may argue that it is up to the child to break away. But actually, how unfair it is to ask the child to choose between the parents he loves and his future home. No, parents must be big—big enough to not only see their own family circle break, but to rejoice that the family joys they have known will be multiplied in the experience of their own offspring. The cycle of single life, marriage, parenthood, and grandparenthood, can then be realized. In this latter and final state a whole new set of experiences bring new joy and new riches into family life. These gifts strangely enough can only come when we let our children go, and to let go the most precious things we have requires that parents be big.

Another area of family relationships which requires bigness is that of the choice of our children's vocations. I have heard of parents choosing the vocation of a child when it is born, designating for that child a career in law, medicine, or the church. I have heard parents boast of such foresight, as if it were strangely predestined by God. It may be possible to do this in rare instances, but I have a feeling that many more careers are broken than made by parents making an uncompromising choice for their children. The trouble is that parents wish to project themselves in the careers of their children. It is purely a matter of selfish pride. A certain family came to my attention in which a young man came home from a very moving summer conference experience and announced that he had decided to go into the ministry. The mother and father looked at each other and said, “Perhaps he will get over it.” This family was a Christian family. Both parents held responsible positions in the church, but their religion did not go so deep as to give up a son to proclaiming the gospel of Christ. Let someone else do that. Each of us knows instances of children being literally forced into some occupation which they dislike and for which by temperament they are unsuited. Parents surely must be big enough to allow their children a full measure of freedom in choosing a life work. Guide, counsel and encourage your child along the paths of his natural aptitudes. But compel, coerce—never.

In spite of our plans, our prayers, our training, our counsel, children will make mistakes. Sometimes those mistakes are big ones, mistakes that bring shame and disgrace upon them and upon their families. How hollow and profitless are the words, “I told you so.” How easy it is to close the door and shut out him who has fallen. Sometimes it becomes necessary to do even that for the good of the child, in order to bring him to his senses. But that door can never be closed permanently. It was a similar instance which Jesus had in mind when he told the story of the prodigal son. It hurt that father beyond description to see his son throw his life away. But the thoughts and prayers of that father continued to go out for the boy wherever he was. The father had a glorious surprise one day when the son returned, but the son had an even greater surprise to find that his own father had so big a heart. If you are having a hard time forgiving some member of your family, remember that God has already shown a bigger heart than any one of us can ever imagine in the gift of his Son on our behalf.

Parents, have big hearts toward your children—big hearts as they grow up, big hearts as they go out, big hearts as they choose their work, and big hearts when they make mistakes, and you will find your heart growing instead of shrinking.

FIFTY YEARS OF MISSIONARY PUBLICATION.

The missionary education movement, now in its fiftieth year, has reached a record high in sales of missionary education books and materials. This was the report presented to the Board of Managers of the Joint Commission on Missionary Education of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U. S. A. at their annual meeting.

In addition to hearing plans for the movement's Golden Anniversary celebration this year, more than 150 denominational executives at the meeting were told that sales of pamphlets, books, and other materials on home and foreign missions rose to a record

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

The Young People's Summer Conference was in session at the College last week. There were 100 young people here. Rev. Henry Robinson of Burlington was the dean. They had a good corps of instructors and had a good conference.

* * *

The Woman's School of Missions of the Southern Convention is in session this week, beginning Tuesday morning. Mrs. W. B. Williams is the president. The program promises to be an unusual one.

* * *

Elon College is delighted to serve the Church in conferences, missions and schools. It is always a pleasure to have representatives of the different organizations in the Church on our campus.

* * *

Summer school at the College is in progress. Two hundred, twelve students are enrolled. The first six weeks closes July 18. The second six weeks will begin immediately. A full curriculum is offered.

* * *

The usual summer cleaning, painting and repairs are in progress. We shall have the campus ship-shape for the opening on September 2. The enrollment of students for 1952-53 continues quite steadily. The number enrolled is quite a bit larger than a year ago. We still have rooms in the dormitories and invite additional applications.

REPORT OF THE DEAN TO THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

Campus Morale. The national and international situation continues to be reflected in our campus atmosphere, and the uncertainty and insecurity which became so apparent a year ago have become a "normal" part of our living. Fewer boys have left school to enter the armed forces, however, because the draft policy has become stabilized. We may, perhaps, lose a large number to the selective service during the summer.

Academic work has been maintained at a higher level than that of last year, the number of students dismissed for unsatisfactory achievement being reduced about fifty percent.

Student attitudes have been comparatively good throughout the current year. There have been no rowdy demonstrations, such as those which have characterized the campuses of numerous colleges and universities in recent months, and such demonstrations are looked upon by the majority of our students with disfavor and disdain. The Messick Trophy for good sportsmanship, awarded by the Student Council of the North State Conference, was held this year by the Elon Student Body.

Student Government. The number of disciplinary problems also continues to decrease. Student government has functioned smoothly, under good leadership; and the honor system, now entering its fourth year, continues to gain support as a tradition.

Prospects for next year are equally promising. The dormitory councils, in particular, are much improved. These new councils, which have been in office only about three weeks, are already showing a determination to warrant the respect of all students, through fair but effective controls. The Administration is heartened by the increasing strength and prestige of these student governing bodies and their growing willingness to accept responsibility.

Religious Atmosphere. The religious atmosphere on the campus is strengthened by an active Student Christian Association. This group worked faithfully during the year, and an especially effective meeting of the leaders for next year has been held. The response in this meeting was enthusiastic and constructive, and promises continued growth in religious spirit and loyalty.

Types of Academic Activity. In addition to the traditional liberal arts program, the College embarked, two or three years ago, on a program of evening adult education. This continues to serve the community, with an average attendance of between 50 and 75 adults each term. A second phase of diversification took the form of a night class for veterans who are employed during the day. This course began in July of last year, meeting three hours each night, five nights per week. It continues to hold the interest of these men who are determined to obtain college training in spite of the necessity of a full-time work schedule. A training course for supervisors at the Western Electric plant constitutes a third phase of our varied program. This course, in which each of 156 supervisors received 36 hours of instruction in economics, cost accounting, company organization, labor-management relations, human relations, social psychology, industrial psychology, etc., was given on the college campus during the winter months.

Research. While several faculty members have carried on research in conjunction with their teaching duties this year, others have been granted leaves of absence that they might devote their full time to study. Among these are Professor Douglass and Professor Hunter, who were away during the winter and spring quarters respectively on grants from the Ford Foundation; Professor Colley, who was out one quarter for study in the Library of Congress; Professor Pierce, who attended the University of North Carolina Graduate School one quarter; and Professor Danieley, who has been at the University of North Carolina for the past two years. The last three named are completing work for the Doctor of Philosophy degree.

High School Day. The annual High School Day has now become a tradition on the Elon Campus, in which students and faculty cooperate to welcome and entertain seniors from sixty or more high schools. The College is host, on that day, to nearly 1,500 prospective college students, many of whom have expressed an interest in attending Elon College. We look forward to a good year next year, and hope that a large number of these young people will be with us.

REPORT OF MEMOIRS COMMITTEE OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF ELON COLLEGE.

Elon College and its Board of Trustees have suffered a distinct loss in the death of Trustee J. A. Kimball. Mr. Kimball was elected a member of the Board of Trustees in 1934. He accepted his trusteeship as a sacred responsibility and found a keen delight in rendering service in that capacity. As long as his health and strength permitted, he attended faithfully the sessions of the Board. His genial spirit, his ready wit and his

RECRUITS FOR AFRICA.

By DOROTHY P. CUSHING.

Miss Mary Willard Hurlbut of Sedalia, Missouri, Congregational Christian educator among the Ovimbundu of West Africa, under the American Board flew back to her work on June 16 by Pan American airlines from New York.

Miss Hurlbut has charge of the educational work in the whole American Board mission area, which includes some 237 village schools, 9 regional schools and the Pierce Memorial School at Elende. On her last furlough, people in the Congregational Christian churches of America gave her a jeep which has been a great help in covering the wide area under her care.

Since Miss Hurlbut has to teach in Portuguese, the official tongue in Africa, converse informally in Umbundu, the native tongue, and is an American and well-equipped in her own mother tongue, she is really "tri-lingual."

"The school work is growing, and in many villages the people are building adobe schools and dormitories as well as houses for the teachers. There are always more children wanting an education than can be taken in," says Miss Hurlbut.

There is such a great demand for books, especially the Bible, that it is difficult to keep enough on hand. At regional church meetings held from 50 to 100 miles from the American Board mission headquarters, boxes of books are sent, but there are never enough to meet the demand. Some of the people come from three to five days journey on foot to buy the book for which they have been saving up their money.

Robert Ashley McGowan, M. D., Navy veteran of the Korean War, has just been appointed for service in Africa as a career medical missionary under the American Board.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. Orr B. McGowan of Eugene, Oregon, Dr. McGowan completed his Navy service on June 1, with a hitch at the Philadelphia Naval Hospital. It is expected that he will serve at one of the three possible hospitals in the Angola Mission, and he hopes to sail for Portugal in September.

Before Dr. McGowan can take up his practice in any of these missionary medical institutions, he has before him a year of language study in Portugal learning Portuguese, the official tongue in Angola and another year of study of Umbundu, the native tongue in Africa.

Dr. McGowan is married, his wife being the former Phyllis Terry of Washington, D. C. They have two children, Robert Ashley, Jr., age 3, and Barbara Lois, age 2.

The churches of the Southern Convention support and, in many instances, are assisted by the Board of Home Missions. The Mission Board of the Southern Convention and the National Board of Home Missions cooperate in church building and in church extension.

The new president of the Board, elected at Claremont, is Howard Stone Anderson, minister of the Congregational Church, Scarsdale, New York. Dr. Anderson comes to this important position just as the Board is undertaking to raise four and one-half million dollars for church building.

For ten years Dr. Anderson was the minister of First Church of Washington, D. C.

Active in the Board of Home Missions for many years, Dr. Anderson has been a member of its Executive Committee, chairman of its Committee on Polity and Planning, and also its Christian Education Divisional Committee. He has been a member of the Pilgrim Press, Divisional Committee; the City Work Committee and the Budget Committee.

He was at one time a member of the General Commission on Army and Navy Chaplains and a member of the Commission on Evangelism of the General Council.

In 1927, Dr. Anderson married Miss Marlowe Addy, one time professor in Kindergarten and Primary Methods in the University of Omaha, herself an ordained minister and the past president of the Women State Presidents of the Congregational Christian Churches.

The Board of Home Missions works not only in the continental United States, but in Puerto Rico. It is well known for its modern pioneering program in race relations, radio, work on college campuses and in organizing new churches in high potential areas and strengthening existing churches in strategic areas.

IMPORTANT!!!

To Southern Convention Friends:

Those of you who have been faithfully reading the Riggs's letters know that they were not content to live in a large mission compound, but have felt called to move into a remote Indian village where they believe they can best serve their people. Such a move requires much courage and a great deal of hardship, as they will live in a native house and adopt as many of the customs and living standards of the people as possible.

A recent letter from Mrs. Riggs indicates that one of the biggest problems they face will be taking care of their two children. The solution would be a kerosene-burning refrigerator. The milk for the children and supplies could be kept for more than a few hours at a time in the humid tropical climate. In addition, there are many kinds of medicines that Ed Riggs needs constantly, which require refrigeration—so a refrigerator would serve a double purpose.

If there are individuals or groups that would like to contribute to such a project, please send your check to the Mission Board, Elon College, N. C., and mark it "Ed Riggs Refrigerator Fund."

IN APPRECIATION OF PATTIE LEE.

The seventy-two people who made the bus trip to the General Council in Claremont, California, had a rare treat, indeed. It is a great privilege to attend the General Council of our Congregational Christian Churches, and it is a real opportunity to have, also, a sight-seeing trip to California. All this was made possible by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, who dreamed up this trip, planned it, worked it out, and saw it through.

Those who took the trip are indeed indebted to Pattie Lee for the privilege of going at so cheap a rate, and those of us who had to stay at home are indebted to her because we were so well represented from the Southern Convention. I am sure that Californians and other westerners were well-impressed by the size and quality of our delegation. I am sure that those who went from the Southern Convention realized what a great and important organization they are a part of.

I must say, "Three cheers for Pattie Lee!" although that is not adequate. Pattie Lee is certainly a person who lives for others, and this trip is just one of many things she is always doing so that others may participate in the work of the church and enjoy its benefits. We thank you, Pattie Lee, very sincerely, for giving your time and efforts to promote this trip to California. No one could know any better than you that when you invest in people, the dividends really pay off.

HOME AGAIN!

To women, "home again" has a special meaning. After a trip such as ours to the General Council, it means unpacking, washing clothes, cleaning the house—but it also means a return to that intangible "something" which makes family life worth while. Out on the open road for a trip is fun—attending a great meeting is thrilling—seeing relatives and old friends is satisfying—but still the return home is a joy and a delight.

The Lester family had a wonderful trip. Leaving Asheboro on June 2, we went to South Dakota, where we visited relatives. En route, we went into the capitals of Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois and Iowa. South Dakota gave us a chance to see the Badlands, the Rushmore Memorial carvings on a great mountainside, a buffalo steak dinner at the game lodge where President Coolidge spent one summer, and the Black Hills, with

VICTORIA BOOTH DEMOREST SPEAKING.

"Not every woman who has children is a real mother—any old cat can have kittens!"

"The home should be a partnership built on romantic love, filled with devotion to the children, and consecrated to God."

"The home is the first seat of government, the first school, and the first church."

"If children do not learn to obey law and authority at home, they are not liable to make good citizens."

"Children learn most important lessons in the home—the meaning of honor, courage, truth, self-discipline, justice, purity and love."

"I would rather have an ignorant devil than an educated one—the ignorant one might steal a ride on a boxcar, but the educated one would steal the whole railroad!"

An educated Christian is of more value than an ignorant one—the more you know, the more good you can do with your knowledge."

"We need more women ministers—their spiritual ministry is especially important to other women."

their great gold mine, memories of gold-rush days and many young deer roaming the woods and roads.

From South Dakota we crossed the Big Horn Mountains, where we saw our first snow—and slid down huge banks of it, for we found it icy. A day and a night were spent in Yellowstone National Park, where the hot springs, geysers and many wonders of nature amazed us, and where the mama bears and the baby bears delighted us by coming up to beg for food.

Salt Lake City gave us an opportunity to see the great Mormon Choir practicing. The salt flats were a sight to behold. Reno had no special attraction for us except a place to spend the night!

In Berkeley, we visited relatives again, and attended our big church, where at the second Sunday morning service more than one thousand people heard their pastor, the Moderator of the General Council, preach.

San Francisco meant a cable-car ride, a visit to Fisherman's Wharf, Telegraph Hill, the Presidio and the nearby John Muir Forest of "big trees."

And then came the General Council at Claremont, about which you have already read much in the pages of THE SUN. It was a wonderful meeting, with a great spirit—and a huge attendance.

Our trip home was a straight one, except for a side-trip to the Grand Canyon, which impressed us far more than we had expected, after all the sights we had seen. We also saw the Petrified Forest—where the trees, surprisingly enough to all of us except Elizabeth who had studied about them in school, were lying down!

And the finish of the trip, with a chance to see the great Indian drama at Cherokee, "Unto These Hills," and to find Lynn Cashion from our Sanford Church and Elon College, taking the part of Andrew Jackson, was a fine one.

All in all, it was a great trip—but one of the nicest parts of it is to be home again. Come to see us!

LADIES' NIGHT.

The Sunday evening service at the General Council was "Ladies' Night." Mrs. Pearl Hemingway of New Jersey, national woman's president, presided. Presidents of the state woman's fellowships, including our own Mrs. W. B. Williams, participated in the dedication of the "Woman's Gift," of which our Thank Offering is a part. This interpretive service of dedication was shared by the woman's chorus from Hawaii and the rhythmic choir of the Oneonta Congregational Christian Church, directed by Mrs. Henry David Gray. The soloist was Mrs. Helen Palmer Fisk, creator of this new type of Christian worship, and daughter of a former moderator, Dr. Albert Palmer.

Miss Margaret Hargrove, new secretary of Woman's Work, introduced Mrs. Victoria Booth Demorest, granddaughter of the founder of the Salvation Army.

Mrs. Demorest is quite a commanding woman, in appearance, in voice and in message. She spoke on "Women in the Home, the Church and the

A Page for Our Children

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Boys and Girls:

It may be that you have seen moving pictures in the feature section of the newsreel about the famous shows given by the animals of the St. Louis Zoo. We are zoo fans in our family, and we go to any and all; but we are agreed that St. Louis is tops! The lions give a performance every day, the elephants and, best of all, the chimpanzees. The chimpanzee is the average-sized monkey most suitable for training, and the show they give at 3.30 every afternoon packs a lot of wallop.

There is a sizeable troop, with their trainers. Among the outstanding performers were Opie, Ollie and little Poncho. The announcer told us that Poncho, who is still very young, shows unusual intelligence and skill in performance. He does! and every child present longed to take him home for "my own."

Among the tricks and acts were motorcycle riding with many a serious crack-up, for the agile monkeys skim over the top of the cycles if they see a crash coming. There were uni-wheels, those difficult to ride one-wheel bikes, and a small ear race.

Oldsters liked the pair that came out dressed for the occasion and rode merrily in a miniature version of a Maxwell car. When it sputtered and died, the male leapt to the crank, and after a few turns had the little machine running again.

Never-to-be-forgotten was the skill and cooperation between the ponies and the chimpanzees, when the ponies ran in a circle while the monkeys climbed to high tables and came off and onto the backs of the ponies in perfect rhythm. Little Poncho could jump from the back of one pony, somersault on a trapeze and land on the back of a second pony.

We had the feeling that good will existed between these monkey and their trainers. The little performers seemed to enjoy the show as much as the audience. Between acts, they lay back, scratched themselves and gave monkey grins!

It was a grand show for children and their parents, but it taught a lesson, too. If mere monkeys from God's far-away green jungle could be trained to give such marvelous feats, how much more could God's children be trained. We never learn all we can, nor teach our children to reach their full capacities. Training takes time, persistence and patience. But if monkeys can learn, so can boys and girls.

The grand show ended with musical numbers which were colorful enough, but musically chaotic. It seemed symbolic of some of our teaching and training. We have the tools, we go through the motions, but less than harmony comes out.

Ponder the powers of training and teaching and learning, dear friend.

SELF-DISCIPLINE.

By BERTHA YOUNKIN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

When the Thomases moved into the new house in the suburb at the edge of the city, they took Grandfather Thomas to live with them. He spent much of his time fixing toys for the children in the neighborhood, and he often compared his early childhood with that of the modern child.

"The trouble is," he complained one day, "nobody seems to be teaching children any self-discipline these days. I've been looking through your books on child care and don't find anything about it."

Martha Thomas was placing her youngest in his play pen. "But that is the whole idea behind our modern methods of discipline," she answered. "We try to explain to children why we insist on certain things, so that when they are older they will do the right thing naturally."

"Humph!" said Grandfather, who hated to lose an argument. "You mean that's what you do! And I'm not saying you and some of these other young mothers who come here aren't doing the right thing. I'm talking about people like that young lady across the street!" He nodded in the direction of a smart new car just pulling out of the driveway. "There she goes, riding off to her bridge club, leaving her two youngsters in charge of the most ignorant girl to whom I ever talked! There'll be plenty of other mothers gadding all over town, never caring what their children are learning from cheap hired help—or no help at all!"

Martha rocked a little harder as she worked on her mending. "Well, I expect there have always been mothers like that around."

"No so many in my day!" Grandfather averred stoutly. "My mother was brought up to know the meaning of self-discipline, and so were the children! There wasn't any choice!"

Martha's lips twitched, and she gave the old man a teasing look. "I didn't realize they taught self-discipline in your day! I thought people then believed in that old 'Spare the rod and spoil the child' adage!"

"They didn't have to teach it in my day!" Grandfather said indignantly. "If you didn't labor and put aside the products of your labor, you starved! Even city folks worked harder than than country folks do today! Children in those days saw a lot of their parents. They saw them working hard for far-off goals and they profited by their examples!"

"And today?" asked Martha, listening more carefully.

"Today, if you want something you can't afford, you go down and 'charge it'! Even the Government—

Martha broke in to keep Grandfather off his hottest subject. "What can we do about self-discipline?"

Grandfather brightened. He often thought it a pity that now he had time to give advice to everyone, no one had time to listen.

"The trouble is," he began, "lots of folks don't take on any more responsibilities as parents than if they were a family of monkeys. Their children just aren't going to learn about self-discipline until they learn to give up some things for the sake of other things. A bright youngster soon learns that he can't have his cake and eat it too, and often he learns it because he can't depend on his parents. But that's learning the hard way, the unhappy way. Folks like you, Martha, and that child study club you belong to, ought to talk up self-discipline, with the idea of 'selling' it like you would any other good idea."

"I believe that you have something there, Grandfather," said Martha. "Schools ought to make use of the expression, and we ought to use it frequently ourselves. A youngster should at least have heard of it by the time he is old enough to drive the family car and go to parties—and he should know what it means."

"Self-discipline is the backbone of success," Grandfather declared. "All children, not just yours, ought to know it!"

THE THIRD WORLD CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIAN YOUTH.

Thirty-one young people from America will sit down with youth of 56 countries in Kottayam, Travancore, India, on December 11 to 25, 1952, to wrestle with some of the basic problems of our age.

Together with 300 youth from all sections of the world, they will study the Bible, discuss the nature of the Christian Church and its meaning for this day, and examine world problems and Asian problems, attempting to understand the ways in which Christians must understand them and act upon them. They will work and study as one universal body of Christian youth. "Christ the Answer"—"God was in Christ Reconciling the World unto Himself," has been chosen for the theme for the conference.

The American delegates are already preparing themselves for the conference by gathering information on the Church at home and abroad, on America and her national and foreign policies, and on Asia with her perplexing problems. They will leave from the States in time to visit some of the churches and mission fields in the Middle East and in India. On their return, the American delegates will travel in teams with youth from other countries to share with Christians around the world the impact of the conference on their thoughts and on their lives.

Kottayam has been chosen as the site for the conference, for in Asia, youth are squarely faced with many of the most pressing problems of our age. They are in the midst of a battleground of "isms." Here communism, nationalism, totalitarianism, and many strong non-Christian religions are competing for the allegiance of youth. Now, more than ever, the Christian youth of the younger Asian churches need support, confidence and strength from the Christian youth of the world. Kottayam is located on the southwest tip of the sub-continent of India and can be considered a central meeting ground for all of the youth of Asia.

Since the conference site is in Asia, the larger number of the delegates will be Asians themselves. Their way of stating and knowing the Christian faith will set the tone for the meeting. Their problems will illustrate the world's problems. Asia is no longer the changeless East. It has today the power to play a decisive role in world affairs and to put enormous weight on the side of either catastrophe or peace.

The American youth who attend this conference will see new economic systems being painfully evolved, a struggle which is bringing hopes to many, but which is also good soil for injustices and economic and political exploitations. They will see a section of the world in which the growth of the Church in its contribution of leadership to the Christian movement and to the world Christian enterprise has been such that it is now a missionary force instead of a mission field.

This is a meeting that has a long history behind it. The first Christian Youth Conference was called for Amsterdam, Holland, July, 1939, and the second for Oslo, Norway, July, 1947. This conference is being called in the name of the World Christian Youth Commission, an organ created as a new instrument of cooperation, by the World Alliance of the Young Men's Christian Association, the World's Young Women's Christian Association, the World's Student Christian Federation, and the World Council of Christian Education.

The problems of this conference are the problems which the Church all over the world faces today. It needs the thoughts and prayers of Christians throughout all of America.

high of $366,000 in 1951, compared to $279,000 the year before.

The commission, under its imprint of Friendship Press, publishes books, plays, pamphlets, guides, maps and pictures for home and foreign mission study by church groups of all ages.

"If all the books printed in 1951 by the Joint Commission were stacked on top of each other," Dr. Franklin D. Cogswell, general director of the commission, told the board members, "they would reach as high as Pike's Peak—with enough left over for two stacks as high as the Empire State Building."

To accommodate its expanded operations, Dr. Cogswell said, the Commission has moved to larger quarters at 247 Fourth Avenue, New York.

The Commission last year produced a movie, "Wings to the Word," and this year will make available for use, "Challenge of Africa," on foreign missions, and on the home mission theme of human rights, "We Hold These Truths."

We can do anything we want to do if we stick to it long enough.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

FOLLOWING GOD'S PURPOSE.

LESSON III—JULY 20, 1952.

LESSON: Judges 6:11-17, 25-27; 8:22-23.

MEMORY VERSE: Go in this thy might, and thou shalt save Israel . . . : have not I sent thee?—Judges 6:14.

It was the same old story—the Israelites were ever learning, and never coming to the knowledge of the truth. They would get into trouble because of their meanness or their sinfulness; God would raise up a “judge” to deliver them; they would “reform” and promise to do better, and then they would fall back into their old ways again. The record in Judges sounds like a cracked Victrola record, playing the same thing over and over again. And that is the story of the average person—the cycle of sin and backsliding, punishment, remorse, repentance, forgiveness, healing, and then forgetfulness; and the same old thing over again. So many of us are ever learning and never coming into the knowledge of the truth.

Ruthless Raiders.

The Midianites were ruthless raiders. Wild, cruel, unscrupulous and greedy, they made life miserable for the Israelites. The people lived in dens which they had made in the mountains, in caves and in rude forts which they had made here and there. From these, they went out to tend their crops. The Midianites were smart—they waited till the crops were ready for the harvest, and then they descended like a swarm of grasshoppers, cleaning up everything before them. “And Israel was greatly impoverished because of the Midianites.” There are many countries and sections in Europe that can read this verse with an understanding heart—their lands have been ravaged by the Communist hordes. And so can China and the Chinese people.

“A Call for Mr. Gideon.”

As is usually the case, the answer to the problem was to be found in a man. God usually matches a man against the hour. Long before a crisis arises, God has been preparing a man to fulfill his purpose. In this case, it was Gideon. Like so many of God's men, he came from an obscure place and from an humble family background. But God made it plain that it was Gideon who was to deliver the Israelites from the hands of the marauding Midianites. While he was doing some threshing in a secret place to keep the enemy from knowing what he was doing, God called this man and commissioned him to deliver his people. “Go in this thy might, and thou shalt save Israel from the hand of the Midianites: have not I sent thee?”

Making Excuses.

Like so many of us, Gideon began to make excuses when the call came. “Wherewith shall I save Israel? Behold my family is poor in Manasseh, and I am least in my father's house.” Well, what of it? Even an humble man can do great things if he becomes a part of God's purpose, and if he dedicates such as he has and is to God's service. One's ability counts for much, but consecration counts for far more. God can use largely those who are willing to be used by him. “Surely I will be with thee, and thou shalt smite the Midianites as one man,” said the Lord. That is the important thing. When a man sets out to do the will of God, he can count on the resources of God. God empowers those whom he calls.

The Red Badge of Courage.

This fellow Gideon did a very brave thing, he built an altar unto God. It took courage to do that—he was living in the midst of a people who were serving Baal, a heathen God. Furthermore, he threw down the altar of his father and cut down the grove of trees in which it was located, and he built his altar on the place on which his father's altar had stood and sacrificed one of his father's bullocks on Jehovah's altar. It takes courage to be a Christian today. To be sure, one is seldom tested, at least in America, as were the Christians in the movie, Quo Vadis. But it takes red courage and raw courage for one to haul his flag to the mast in the presence of his fellowmen and of his family, and to declare his faith, not simply with his lips, but with his way of life to declare his faith in Christ. It is so easy to follow the crowd—when in Rome, to do as the Romans do—but to worship God in a society which has become largely secular and even pagan, well that is not so easy.

By Their Fruits—Put It to the Test.

The friends of Joash, Gideon's father, wanted the old man to do something about this outrage. The idea of cutting down the sacred grove and tearing down the altar of Baal!!! Better put this young upstart out of the way! But Joash had a little common sense. His loyalty to Baal had not completely blinded him to the truth. He took a very sensible and practical view of the thing. “If he be a god, let him plead against him (Gideon), because he hath cast down his altar.” There you have the case for Christianity. Put it to the test, measure its influence and its results with any and all other religious faiths. Look at its fruits. We do not have to defend Christianity. We need only to embody it and to express it in action. It can defend itself. Its fruits commend it. All the other gods of the people are futile and false gods—the Living God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, he alone is God.

Psychological Warfare

God uses a little psychology on the Midianites. One of them had a strange dream. A loaf of bread came tumbling into camp, and knocked tents pell mell. It seemed a symbol of what was to happen. It struck fear into the hearts of the Midianite host. It was the ancient counterpart of the modern “war of nerves”—psychological warfare.

Selective Service.

When Gideon called for volunteers, he got an amazing response. Thirty-two thousand men volunteered. It was too many, and he gave those who were fearful and afraid the privilege of going back home; and twenty-two thousand took advantage of the proposition. But the ten thousand who remained were still too many, far too many, and by a smart “aptitude” test Gideon reduced his army to a mere three hundred men. But three hundred alert, well-trained, disciplined men were better than a hundred times that many undisciplined, fearful men. And with this handful of men, and with nothing but lamps and pitchers and trumpets, Gideon put to flight and destroyed the vast army of the Midianites. “The sword of the Lord and of Gideon!” God and Gideon!

all major Protestant bodies are now guided, and the projecting of these studies in concrete programs of Protestant effort—these are in extraordinary degree the work of the Congregationalists. No denomination has toiled more faithfully or more effectively for the observance of standards of efficiency and economy in the work of Protestant church extension. No denomination has a better record of sound planning and efficient execution of its church extension program. Among the new churches organized during the last ten years by the cooperation of the State Conference and the Board of Home Missions, the proportion brought through the perilous first months to a position of strength and self-reliance is very nearly one-hundred percent. Within this past generation we have made two major efforts, providing nearly seven million dollars, for the securing of our ministerial retirement annuities. We have sustained, by individual and corporate gifts, a distinguished family of educational and humanitarian institutions in this country and other lands. We answered the call laid upon us by the suffering of victims of war and disaster. Now we are called to take up again the central task of a missionary, evangelical faith and purpose. It is the task of establishing and strengthening of the Church in places where our brethren are without it.

III.

Why are we to undertake this task? First of all, because we are Congregational Christians. We believe that basic organ of God's purpose and of the Christian movement in the world is the gathered and living congregation of the Church of Jesus Christ.

The outreach of our mission across the world, the penetration of the Christian faith and spirit into the ways of our common life and its influence upon the character of our society, the sustaining of our liberties—which nowhere in the world have been long maintained apart from the Christian view of man—all these depend on actual, concrete, worshiping, living churches. They will not be accomplished by humanitarian uplift societies or organizations for the promotion of generalized good will, important as these are in their place.

These things are secure only where the living Word of God is open and declared, where men are brought consciously under His judgment and mercy, where their common life in the light of the Cross enables them to look upon one another through the love of Christ, and where they are saved from self-worship and enmity and anarchy and despair, as they receive into their hearts, in the fellowship of the Church, the gift of God's great redemption.

NEWS OF ELON COLLEGE.

sound judgment made a valuable contribution to the work of the Board.

Deacon Kimball was a Christian churchman in the finest sense of that term. His adult life was spent as a member of Mt. Auburn Christian Church. Christian convictions were the foundation of his life. He was vitally interested in every activity of the local church; but his loyalty and service extended to every phase of kingdom work. His death on February 23, 1952, closed the earthly phase of his career; but his good works will live long in the lives of those who were influenced by the spirit that he was, and in the institutions which he loyally supported. Among those institutions Elon College was in the forefront.

It has been the generally accepted policy that the Committee on Memoirs should memorialize only those who were officially connected with the Board of Trustees; but in the death of Mrs. Elizabeth Moring Boone, Elon College lost a friend who was most certainly semi-officially connected with the Board of Trustees. Mrs. Boone was an alumna of the Class of 1895. As the wife of Dr. W. H. Boone, the chairman of this Board, and as a loyal member of the Durham Congregational Christian Church, her loyalty to and interest in Elon College were as unflinching as they could have been had she been a member of the Board of Trustees. Her death occurred on March 31, 1952.

We, your Committee on Memoirs, offer the following resolutions:

Be it resolved that the Board of Trustees of Elon College record its sincere appreciation of the life and labors of Trustee J. A. Kimball, and our sense of loss occasioned by his death; and that these resolutions be spread upon the Minutes of the Board and a copy sent to the family of the deceased.

Be it resolved that the Board of Trustees of Elon College record its deep appreciation of the exemplary life of Mrs. W. H. Boone, and extend to her family its deep sympathy in their loss, and that these resolutions be spread upon the Minutes of the Board and a copy sent to the family.

THE SUSTAINING FUND.

This is an appeal to the churches of the Southern Convention. Due to unusual conditions and circumstances confronting our College, the Convention authorized a special fund to be paid by the churches to assist our College in these critical days. This is not a distress appeal or an announcement of a pending crisis, but it is a simple statement of facts. With a reduced enrollment, which automatically means reduced funds for current needs, our College finds itself facing financial requirements and current bills without sufficient funds to meet the same. A number of our churches have paid their sustaining fund money—$1 per member of enrollment, and the college is most grateful. Others have included the Sustaining Fund in their current budgets, which is greatly appreciated. Others have committed themselves to do what they can; and still others have made no commitment. If the churches that have put the Sustaining Fund in their budget could send at least a part of the money now, and if others could send a contribution, it would be of great assistance to our College in facing a predicament that it has not faced before in ten years.

Brother laymen, if you read this note in your church paper, won't you please speak to your pastor and your finance committee about it and see if something can't be done to help relieve the situation? The college does need your help and expresses its appreciation for your assistance.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

There are few people in our church who realize the extent of the growth of our College. Too many of us continue to think of it as a very small college requiring a very modest budget. When the writer was a student at Elon College, there were fewer than 200 students. When he graduated in 1910, there were only eleven

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Close to a hundred teen-agers from the Youth Conference being held this week on our College campus, visited the Orphanage immediately after supper one evening. What a fine group of young people they were! I met them on the steps of Johnston Hall, explained to them what the Orphanage is doing, told them of our children, our physical equipment and our hopes for the future. Their dean, Rev. Henry E. Robinson, and other adult leaders were with them. At the conclusion of my talk, they dispersed into the three main buildings and about the campus. They saw the children and their matrons, and were pleased with what they saw, although I detected a note of pathos in their conversations as they envisioned the tragedy in the lives of these children which made it necessary for them to come here.

At the close of their tour of the campus and buildings, they met on the spot where the Holt Memorial Chapel is to be built and held their regular evening service. How sweet those vespers were! Their songs, their readings and their prayers were so appropriate. The little children gathered near and sat quietly on the grass with them. They have been taught to feel proud of their "home," and to welcome friends to their buildings and to their campus.

Some day they will take their places along side our lovely visitors, and they will do well, too.

I hope the young people will visit us again next summer and worship in our new chapel. I watched one of our boys listening so intently to their program of worship. I wondered just what was going on in his mind.

Oats? Yes, 2,100 bushels of them! Wheat? Yes, more than 2,000 bushels of wheat. It took stepping to harvest it all, and it was a sight worth seeing, to see the adult workers and these boys each at his post and each doing a most commendable job. Several days they went back into the harvest field after they had had their six o'clock supper. But they were happy, and the fact that they were really helping gave them a certain sense of joy. In fact, I am of the opinion that helping is calculated to bring happiness.

Let me thank you for your help. I have told you about how fine these children are, and now I want everyone who reads this letter—and there are all too few who subscribe to THE CHRISTIAN SUN—to know how good I think you are to help us as you do. For instance, John E. Smith, Greensboro, has just sent us 372 boxes of shoe polish! How about that? And each of these boxes is so designed as to hold both white and brown polish. Now, if we can just get the children to use it wisely, it will do a very great amount of good—for the shoes will not only look better, but they will wear so much longer.

July, August and September, these are the "leanest" months of the year. If you are thinking of doing something good for us, it would come in well during either of these months. I can assure you that in spite of all we are getting and all we are doing for ourselves, we are running behind.

Thanks for the nice vacations you are giving our children, and thanks, too, for the clothing you are sending them. All your help is greatly appreciated. Remember to come to see us.

The benediction was given by the beloved Bertha McClintock, retired secretary for our women's work, and also an ordained minister.

All in all, it was an impressive service—worship in word and song and rhythm, and an authoritative message from a great woman.

in the graduating class, and when commencement came, there were fewer than 150 students on the campus. When the writer came back as president of the College in 1931 there were fewer than 200 students enrolled, and faculty salaries were exceedingly low. The total enrollment for the current year exceeds 650; and there are 42 members on the faculty, with a total budget of approximately $400,000. This means that $35,000 monthly is required to meet current needs. Ours is a great college and it is a privilege to give support to a growing institution.

The Convention has indicated in its apportionment table the amount that each church should contribute to Elon College annually; and many of our churches could and should exceed the apportionment to make sure that the full amount apportioned—$15,000—would be received by the College. If the total should be given by 200 churches, they still would not contribute enough to pay two weeks expenses of the college. This will give you an idea of the task that the administration faces each month.

"LOVE in the CHRISTIAN FAITH"

By DR. DANIEL D. WILLIAMS

Associate Professor of Theology, Chicago Theological Seminary

LECTURE I.—"THE FORM OF THE GOSPEL"

CHRISTIANITY brings a new and revolutionary doctrine of love into human life. All human love is transformed by it. Christianity established a new form of marriage, gave society a new ethical standard, the love of the neighbour, and brought to mankind a new conception of God's love.

This new conception of love comes to its climax in the life, teaching and death of Jesus. The Christ comes as the Servant of all. This brings a new meaning into all human love. Christianity does not reject natural and human love. Love of men and women, love of the homeland, love of high values, are all part of the goodness of life. But they must be transformed by the sacrificial spirit of Christian love if they are not to become corrupt and destructive.

Love in the Christian Gospel is personal service given freely and sacrificially to all persons. It is universal. It subordinates all differences of race or class to the principal of brotherhood. It extends even to the enemy. It calls for service to every human need.

In modern times the tradition of romantic love has been separated from the Christian spirit. We are adrift on an ocean of sentimental romanticism about love and marriage. The home founded on nothing but romantic emotion is insecure. The Christian Gospel shows the way to the transformation and salvation of the marriage relation.

Christian love reaches its profoundest depth in the knowledge that God offers forgiveness to sinful man. God accepts man in the midst of his evil, and creates a new and reconciled life through the power of his spirit expressed in the self-giving of Christ.

The love which Christianity proclaims is not a new law. It is a spirit which transcends all law. Christianity is opposed to all legalistic definitions of the good. It is not a moralistic faith, but a moral faith in which the moral good is transformed by the spirit of freedom and love.

Men are created for a life of love in all its dimensions; but love has become perverted from its true meaning and power. Only the Christian Gospel of love as service and forgiveness can restore the emotional and spiritual health of humanity.

Ninety-five senior young people and 18 teachers and counselors participated in the Young People's Conference at Elon College the first week in this month. The mornings were spent in class. Afternoon visits were made to the MoonElon lake. Faculty members and counselors included: Dr. H. S. Hardcastle, Rev. and Mrs. Frank Ratzell, Rev. James H. Lightbourne, Jr., Rev. Carl Wallace, Rev. Arthur Detwiler, Rev. Earl Farrell, Rev. and Mrs. Baxter Twiddy and Bill Tolley. Many of the young people are planning to return next summer. Some will enter full-time Christian service.

News Flashes

The Executive Board of the Southern Convention is meeting today at the Vance Hotel, Henderson, N. C.

Rev. Henry E. Robinson is assisting Rev. Mark Andes in revival services this week at Virgilina, Virginia.

Rev. W. W. Snyder received a new member at Beverly Hills Church in Burlington on Sunday, bringing the total membership in this new church to 35.

The managing editor has received notice of the coming marriage of Miss Jennie Lee Bradford, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Russell T. Bradford of Nansemond County, Virginia, to Mr. Bernard Whitehead Godwin, Jr., of Suffolk, Virginia. The wedding will on Thursday, July 31, at 6 o'clock, at Town Point, Nansemond County.

Mr. Robert Edward Newman, son of Mr. Howard Newman of Washington, D. C., and grandson of Deacon J. H. Newman of our Richmond, Va., Church was injured severely in a truck accident in Mississippi, and died at 6:30 Tuesday morning. Robert is survived by his wife and two small children. Our deepest sympathy goes to the Newman family.

Between eight and ten thousand Lutherans will take official part in sessions of the Assembly of the Lutheran World Federation at Hannover, Germany, from July 25 to August 3. Sixty to eighty thousand persons are expected to participate in several huge outdoor rallies. The Lutheran Youth Conference will meet simultaneously with the Assembly.

Rev. Henry V. Harmon is the new pastor of Timber Ridge Church in the Valley of Virginia Conference. Mr. Harman, in addition to his work at Timber Ridge, will serve as pastor-at-large in the Valley Conference. He is a native of Washington, D. C., and is a graduate of Yale Divinity School. Mrs. Harman is a native of Georgia. Mr. and Mrs. Harman are now living in the Timber Ridge parsonage at High View, West Virginia.

Rev and Mrs. R. E. Brittle, Rev. and Mrs. J. E. McCauley, Rev. and Mrs. Jesse H. Dollar, and Rev. H. S. Harcastle were the representatives of the Southern Convention last week at the Rural Pastor's Conference at V. P. I., Blacksburg, Virginia. Dr. Harcastle reports that it was a very successful school, and that they were sharers in many good things while at the conference. It has already been reported in these columns that Rev. Mr. Brittle was singled out for a special award while at the conference.

Prospects for union of three largest Presbyterian bodies moved forward a step when the General Assemblies of both the Presbyterian (U. S.) and the United Presbyterian Church decided to work toward united programs in evangelism, stewardship, pulpit exchange and the provision of chaplains for the armed forces. A similar plan had previously been ratified by the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. The three churches hope to have a plan of union ready for consideration at their General Assemblies next year.

The General Board of the National Council of Churches has approved of plans for setting up a religious program for visitors to United States national parks. Seminary students will conduct preaching services on Sunday, vesper services during the week, and other religious activities in Yellowstone Park this summer. The program will be extended to other parks each year until all are covered. Last year there were more than 12,500,000 visitors to the 28 national parks. Few had any church help in providing religious programs either for visitors or park employees.

The United Board for Christian Colleges in China has taken the first step toward a Christian college for Formosa, by appropriating $50,000 for preparatory steps and earmarking $200,000 towards a plant if preliminary developments are satisfactory. The trustees say the college is planned to serve all the people of Formosa, whatever their origins or situation. The plan is to keep it on a modest scale as to plant and budget, to make the educational program not an automatic copying of past educational methods, but an attempt to meet the needs and aspirations of the Christian community on Formosa in as fresh and imaginative pattern as possible.

THE SUN's deepest sympathy goes to the family of Rev. Joseph E. McCauley of Waverly, Virginia, in the untimely loss of his eldest daughter, Jane, who died at 6 o'clock, the morning of Saturday, July 12. Jane had not been sick, and her passing was a great shock to family and friends. A graduate of Elon College, she had for the past two years been teaching at Reidsville, North Carolina. She was at home in Waverly, having recently returned from the meeting of the General Council at Claremont. Funeral services were held at the Waverly Church on last Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, with Dr. Jesse H. Dollar in charge. The church was packed, and there was a large crowd on the outside who could not gain admittance. The many flowers bore testimony to the deep esteem in which she was held. Surviving, besides her father and mother, are two brothers, J. Franklin and Larry, and one sister Geraldine.

W. T. SCOTT, JR., WEDS MISS MARY LOUISE DUNHAM.

The First Congregational Church in Wellesley Hills, Mass., was the setting on Saturday afternoon, June 28, at 3 o'clock for the marriage of Miss Mary Louise Dunham, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Atwood Packard Dunham of 31 Livermore Road, Wellesley Hills, to William Tate Scott, Jr., son of Dr. and Mrs. William Tate Scott of Elon College, North Carolina.

The double ring ceremony was performed by Dr. Robert I Blakesley, the pastor of the church. The bride was given in marriage by her father. Mrs. Louis L. Woodward, Jr., of Wellesley Hills, twin sister of the bride, was matron of honor. The bridesmaids were Misses Lois Cotton Scott, sister of the groom; Nancy Gay of Brockton, Mass., a cousin of the bride; Diane Fiske of Cranston, R. I., and Anne Hardman of Smithfield, R. I. Dr. William T. Scott of Elon College was best man for his son; and the ushers were Atwood P. Dunham, Jr., of Wellesley Hills, brother of the bride; James A. Scott of Elon College, brother of the groom; Thomas Kolar of Norwich, N. Y., and William MacLauren Hall of New Haven, Conn.

After the wedding reception in the garden of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Scott left for a wedding trip to New Hampshire. The couple will reside in Norwich, N. Y. during the summer months, where Mr. Scott is assistant pastor at the First Congregational Church. In September they will go to New Haven, Conn., where Mr. Scott will receive his degree from Yale Divinity School in June, 1953

IT STARTS AND ENDS WITH THE INDIVIDUAL.

The leaders of the world, in the state, in the community and in the church, seek largely to work with the masses. But such efforts, as we can see, are not successful. If the world is to have peace, if our state and communities are to be prosperous, and if the church is to be what God would have it be, then we must deal with the problem as Christ would have us work. With the individual is the place to start.

If the world is to have peace, then the individual must be at peace with his neighbor. Jesus would have each of us feed our enemies, if they hunger. He would have us do good to those who persecute us and despitefully use us, and pray for them.

No community or state can be what God would have it be until all are doing unto others whatsoever they would have done unto themselves. We should not have the attitude that the laws of God and man are for others and not for us. Some are sorry for the wrongs they have done—others are sorry only because they were caught.

Among God's people, the church, the individual is important. Everyone who is saved in heaven at last will be saved because he has complied with God's commandments. Because that individual is the salt of the earth, the light of the world, and the faithful servant that Christ would have him be.

In the worship of the church, it is a matter of individual participation. To get the benefit, the individual must sing, pray, commune, study and give. If there is to be a quietness in the services the individual must be quiet. No other person can worship for you. Just as no other person can go to heaven for you, no one can take your place in the services of God.

If we are lost, it will be our fault. God will not be responsible, because he gave his Son for us. He is not willing that any should perish but that all should come to repentance. Jesus will not be responsible because he gave his life for us. He took our place, the innocent dying for the guilty. The Holy Spirit will not be responsible because he made known God's will for us.

The prime responsibility of every individual in this life is to prepare for the life to come, so that he might have a home in that city wherein dwelleth righteousness.—L. E. Cranford in Gospel Advocate.

PRESIDENT OF NIPPON TIMES RECEIVES AWARD.

George Togasaki, the president and publisher of the English language daily, The Nippon Times, was presented with a distinguished service award by the Japan International Christian University Foundation in New York City on Fridal morning, July 11.

Mr. Togasaki was also a speaker at our General Council in Claremont.

The citation, pointing out Mr. Togasaki's service to Christian democracy in Japan, and his work as the chairman of the International Christian University Board of Trustees, was read by Dr. Stanley I. Stuber, executive secretary of the Foundation.

The citation follows:

"As president and publisher of The Nippon Times, the largest English language daily newspaper in Japan, Mr. Togasaki holds a place of leadership in the new democratic Japan. Called upon constantly for counsel, serving on many important committees, raising his voice day by day in the cause of Christian democracy, he has won for himself the admiration and respect of all those concerned with great causes.

"As chairman of the Board of Trustees of the new International Christian University in Japan he has been instrumental in establishing one of the most promising factors for the creation of future democratic leaders in his country. For this, and his other distinguished services, we present to him from the Japan International Christian University Foundation this special award of accomplishment."

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

PAGING THE PIONEER

America cannot soon forget the days of the pioneers. History is replete with the story of the Pilgrims on the one hand and the pioneers on the other. These will remain great chapters in the annals of our country.

Travelers through the West instinctively anticipate a glimpse of the glorified past, but the days of the old pioneer are gone forever. To be sure the nostalgic story is recreated in song, story and movie, thereby enabling the sentimental to relive that notorious era.

Hats off, all hats off to those sturdy pioneers who endured the hardships and deprivations of the West, who scaled the mountains, swam the rivers and founded the cities of a new and promising civilization. Their names will be remembered as long as there are hero-worshippers.

Now it is a truism to say that our age calls for pioneers of a new order and a new day, but we must keep on saying it. Individuals and organizations can manifest the pioneering spirit. The pioneers of today may have neither horse, pistol nor covered wagon; but he has knowledge, spirit and a technique. He may work in a laboratory or he may be a business executive.

We need pioneers in religion, in the church. Stop to think of it, some churches are pioneering in the use of new architectural patterns, new programs and ways of religious education. Perhaps this is the time and place to do some pioneering in race relations, in social action. Surely the spirit of the pioneer is needed today on the mission field. The will and the willingness to pioneer is a requisite to progress.

MINTON

No, this is not an obituary. It is a brief and inadequate tribute to a faithful servant of the church who has reached retirement.

Wilson P. Minton has been a denominational "wheel-horse" of the finest calibre. His pastoral leadership became evident during his ministry at the First Christian Church in Goshen, Indiana. Then he was called by his denomination to serve as Secretary of Missions. He helped to arouse and develop the missionary conscience of the Christian Church. Many of us read his articles regularly in the beloved Herald of Gospel Liberty. He traveled widely and visited many of our mission stations.

Following the Merger, Dr. Minton served for a season with the Missions Council, then became Superintendent of the Pennsylvania State Conference of Congregational Christian Churches. He has succeeded in bringing diversified groups, which include foreign-speaking churches, into a remarkably homogeneous group. He developed the Hartman Homestead Conference Center at Milroy, and has been a valuable member of the Superintendents' Conference.

Dr. Minton richly deserves his retirement. He has traveled and labored incessantly for the church. We trust that he will have many happy years of retirement, time for relaxation and rest, time to enjoy his favorite hobbies (if he has any), and further opportunities to witness for Christ and His Eternal Mission. Who knows, he might write occasionally for The Sun.

Dr. Minton will be ably succeeded by the Rev. Cleon Swartz, a product of the Christian Church and a graduate of Defiance College, who has had an unusually fine pastorate at Elkhart, Indiana.

Africa: Continent in Transition

A Report on the North American Assembly on African Affairs

By WILLIAM W. CLEMES

The most persistent fact to emerge from the ten day North American Assembly on African Affairs held the latter part of June at Wittenburg College in Ohio, is that Africa is emerging rapidly as the most critical mission field anywhere in the world.

Long regarded by some as a kind of "second-class" field for missionary endeavor, Africa as presented at the conference was shown as a continent torn by a combination of highly explosive forces, yet potentially a more promising field for Christianity than any overseas land.

The conference was the most representative gathering of its kind yet held. It was arranged by the African Committee of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A., of which Dr. Emory Ross, noted African missionary and author, is executive secretary. Dr. John A. Rueling, committee chairman, and executive for Africa and Latin America of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions of the Congregational Christian Churches, Boston, presided.

The frightening conflicts and clash of ideas today represented in African life were well illustrated by the composition of the Assembly's 300 delegates. Trying to find a common ground of understanding were missionaries from Catholic-dominated Mozambique and Angola; from the British colonies where Moslem, Catholic and Protestant can freely propagate his faith, and from the Union of South Africa where a church-blessed government pursues a policy of racism and oppression.

Also on hand were representatives from the United States State Department and the United Nations; 40 Africans from 13 countries south of the Sahara, and official delegations from Great Britain, France, Portugal, Belgium and Liberia. The diverse pattern Europe has stitched into the fabric of African life was revealed in all of its confusion, complexity and conflict.

The key issues raised at the Assembly involved the role of race in Africa's social, religious and political life; economic pressures and changes; the challenge of resurgent movements for independence to the colonial political structure; the rivalry of various religions; the clash of democratic and communist ideologies and the place of the Church and missions in all this changing African scene.

The Conflict of Race.

While race served as the topic for only one panel, it cropped up in practically every discussion. As one delegate expressed it: "Color in Africa colors every problem."

Speakers on the formal panel disagreed on the importance of race as the underlying cause of Africa's political and social problems, as did a number of the delegates.

In general, the representatives of the governments and the European missionaries took the attitude that race had been vastly over estimated as primary to African problems, while the American missionaries and African delegates were inclined to lend a great deal more weight to the issue.

Mr. G. R. Katongole of Uganda, a journalism student at Syracuse University, attributed racial tensions in South Africa largely to the whites.

"In the early days, the black man accepted the Gospel from the white man without question," he explained. "Then the brothers of the man who had brought the Bible came to the Cape, took away the land from the black man and imposed many restrictions upon his freedom.

"Now our young men are saying to the people: 'Give the white man back his Bible and let him give us back our land.'

"We are not fighting the white man because of his race but because of what he has done."

Independence Vs. Colonialism.

Since, with the exception of Liberia and Ethiopia, every country south of the Sahara is administered by a European power or under indigenous European domination, the issue of colonialism came under intense discussion.

As in the case of the race issue, delegates were divided on the benefits of colonial rule and showed a sharp difference of opinion on the rate of progress necessary for the achievement of independence.

The most vigorous spokesman for the colonial policies practiced in Africa were former governors general of Belgian Congo and Mozambique.

Dr. Jose Nunes de Oliveira of Mozambique, and now inspector general of overseas administration for Portugal, lauded the efforts of his home government to raise economic and cultural standards in the two Portuguese territories. He said the Portuguese constitution "expressly repels racial distinction," but said the same document did draw a line between "citizens and natives, that is to say, civilized and non-civilized."

One of the sharpest criticisms of colonial rule came from the Rev. Geo. W. Carpenter, an American missionary to the Belgian Congo, who insisted that no matter how enlightened colonial rule proved to be in terms of human welfare, "it was no substitute for freedom."

"No material benefits, no schemes for better housing or health or education or higher wages can be permanently satisfying," he said. For this reason recent steps in the direction of self-government in African colonies have a much greater psychological importance.

"The grant of French citizenship to the inhabitants of French Equatorial Africa may not have affected their material welfare, but it makes them definitely the envy of the Congolese across the river, where no corresponding steps have been taken."

Religious Group Conflicts.

One of the Assembly's paramount concerns was with the conflicts precipitated by rival religions in Africa. Panel discussions and background papers revealed how evangelical Christianity is faced on many fronts with entrenched Islam, aggressive Roman Catholicism, especially when allied with government, and native African animism.

Speakers on all of these religions emphasized the grave threats these groups constitute to the spread of Protestant Christianity. At the same time, however, appeals were made for a reduction of religious tensions and conflicts, especially between Protestants and Roman Catholics.

Dr. Emory Ross contended that "any healing of differences" between the two Christian groups would not only contribute to world peace and understanding, but would be of inestimable advantage in the presentation of the Gospel in Africa.

The Rev. Reid F. Shields, a United Presbyterian missionary of Khartoum, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, reported that Islam, fired by a nationalistic zeal, had broken out of the traditional

Meditations on Family Life

V.—"IN APPRECIATION OF MATURITY."

In the past ten or fifteen years a rediscovery of the values of old age has been made. Slowly but steadily a literature is being produced on the psychology of the aged. Our churches are giving more attention to their older members after practically forgetting them in the all-out effort to capture the young people. The last war and its attendant defense effort put a premium on man power. Industry began hiring older people and discovered that what they lacked in physical energy they more than compensated for in experience, dependability and mature judgment. We are awakening to realize that the best teachers of the very young are grandmothers and grandfathers who have slowed their pace enough to have the time for stories, talks, games and just old-fashioned companionship. Many of you can think back a moment to a time when grandmother was living with you. Some of us learned more about the Bible and religion from her than we did from anyone else. One of the finest influences a home with small children can have, is the tender, understanding, patient, elevated presence of an older Christian person who has had time to catch a true perspective of life and persists in putting first things first.

Some people have the erroneous notion that the new is valuable, and that the old is worthless. This idea is valid when applied to perishables. It is wholly wrong when applied to enduring qualities such as character.

One American advertiser uses a slogan: "Some things can't be hurried." I'm not sure about its application to this particular product, but I am sure about its truth as it refers to character.

There are qualities in which youth excel: enthusiasm, vivacity, care-free courage, general optimism and self-confidence. The years do something to such laudable characteristics to remove them from the superficial plane to the more sturdy levels of maturity. Enthusiasm becomes confidence, vivacity becomes endurance, care-free courage becomes valor born of suffering, general optimism becomes faith, and self-confidence gives way to the belief that we are strong as we are used of God and receive strength to do his will.

A pastor must deal with all ages. A youth of eighteen differs mightily from a person of seventy-five. Because superficial impressions give to the former the air of strength and promise and to the latter the atmosphere of weakness and decay, people often are led to accept such impressions as valid. Even churches say to their pastors, let the old folks take care of themselves, they will soon die anyway. Such counsel is indeed a mistake. Older people, in terms of maturity, counsel, experience and character, have what youth can only gain by the passing of the years.

Older people have much to give in their own way. Often as a pastor I feel the buoyancy of prayers that are offered in my behalf. I don't know in which of the above groups the praying is done, but I strongly suspect it is done by the people of mature spirits. I sometimes am confused or perplexed and seek not only counsel but sympathy and understanding. I don't go to youth for these. Once in a while I need fellowship. In such hours, games, picnics, lively discussions of current events, are not the food for which I hunger. I get what I am looking for from people of maturity—because they alone have what I need. There may come a day when disease, accident or calamity may strike me down. I may have to call for help—not money, housing or food—but help for a faltering heart. I believe I know the people through whom God would give me that help. It would come from people of mature experience who have faced moments of equal difficulty and have come through with a triumphant faith.

Because I believe these statements to be true, I can honestly say to people of old age who despair because of failing health or enforced inactivity, God has need of you. You have that which younger folk have not attained: Christian fortitude and character wrought by years of righteous living.

When older people can be assured of their usefulness and importance—at least their potential importance—then life regains its meaning and purpose and the inevitable frailties of the increasing years must give up the center of the stage and play a minor part.

Our elders have probably made mistakes, they have no doubt at times been too conservative or even reactionary. Sometimes they have been slow to change certain ideas which were formed in another generation. But after all this has been said, let us remember that many a pitfall and stumbling-block has been cleared away by them to make our pathway easier and straighter.

By way of conclusion I would bring you this little poem which has meant much to me and has contributed to my appreciation of those who have gone on before in law, medicine, education and religion, and have made the world so much richer for their presence.

THE BRIDGE BUILDER.

An old man going a lone highway,
Came in the evening cold and gray
To a chasm vast and deep and wide.
The old man crossed in the twilight dim,
The sullen stream had no fears for him,
But he stopped when safe on the other side
And built a bridge to span the tide.
"Old man," said a fellow pilgrim near,
"You are wasting your strength with building here.
Your journey will end with the ending day,
You never again will cross this way,
You've crossed the chasm deep and wide,
Why build this bridge at even tide?"
The builder lifted his old grey head,
"Good friend, in the path I have come," he said,
"There followeth after me today,
A youth whose feet must pass this way.
This chasm which has been as nought to me
To that fair-haired youth might a pitfall be.
He, too, must cross in the twilight dim;
Good friend, I am building the bridge for him."

The Central Committee on Missions of the Council of Churches in Indonesia met at Djakarta from May 20-21 and studied aspects of the missionary task in that country. Results of that study and consultation will be submitted to the member churches of the National Council of Churches in Indonesia and also to those churches and boards of missions abroad, which are partners in the missionary enterprise. Attention was given to those subjects which concern the missionary obligation of the Church, in preparation for the meeting of the International Missionary Council during this month in Willingen, Germany.

There are three modes of bearing the ills of life: by indifference, which is the most common; by philosophy, which is the most ostentatious; and by religion, which is the most effective.—Colton.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Miss Sadie Virginia Fonville, deceased, of Burlington, North Carolina, left a bequest of $5,000 to Elon College to be added to the permanent funds of the college. The executor, Mr. D. R. Fonville, a brother of Miss Fonville, has paid this bequest, thus adding to the endowment funds of the college. This is a fine example, which could be followed by many of our friends in all sections of our church. Bequests to Elon College are deducible for income tax purposes, which means that the gift would be of little cost to the estate.

The School of Missions, conducted by the Woman's Missionary Convention of the Southern Convention, was held at the college last week, with more than 100 enrolled, and with more than 80 ladies living on the campus. Those in charge were enthusiastic about the school and report a fine session.

* * *

Advanced enrollment of students for 1952-53 is continuing with a degree of satisfaction. We still have rooms for dormitory students. We trust and pray that some of these rooms may be filled by young men and young women from the homes of our own church.

* * *

Miss Joanna Jones, a faithful and loyal member of the Christian Church in Graham, N. C., will observe her 92nd birthday, Thursday, July 17. Miss Jones is donating some valuable antiques to the college. This is an example that might be followed by others.

* * *

The second term of summer school begins on July 21. Anyone wishing to improve his teaching certificate or increase his credits in the undergraduate field is invited to send in application for acceptance at any time prior to the date of opening.

* * *

Mrs. Rebecca Wild and her four children of Detroit, Michigan, are visiting her parents, Dr. and Mrs. L. E. Smith. Mrs. Wild is a graduate of Elon College, Class of 1936.

CONGRESSMAN JUDD TO SPEAK AT ELON COLLEGE

Prior to World War II Elon College observed Founder's Day on September 16, for three consecutive years. The first was in honor of Dr. William Samuel Long, founder and first president of the college. Addresses were delivered extolling the courage of Dr. Long in founding the college in view of the meager strength of the church in the Southern Convention.

The next year, the Founder's Day program centered around Dr. William Wesley Staley, second president of the college, who served as non-resident president from 1894 to 1905. Dr. Staley continued to serve his church in Suffolk, Virginia, and he served the college as president without salary.

The next year, Founder's Day was observed and the program was in honor of Dr. Emmett Leonidas Moffitt, the third president of the college, who served from 1905 to 1911. Speakers on the program emphasized the achievements under Dr. Moffitt's leadership. It was during these years the West Dormitory and the power house were erected, which afforded modern conveniences, heat and water and lights for the college buildings and residents in the community.

It has been proposed that we observe Founder's Day this year, September 16, and that the morning program be dedicated to the memory and the achievements of Dr. William Allen Harper, the fourth president of the college, who served from 1911 to 1931, and that the final organizational meeting for the Two and One Half Million Dollar Campaign be held at 2:00 in the afternoon, with Congressman Walter Judd as the speaker.

A committee from the campaign organization, the alumni organization and the young people's organization will meet jointly to arrange the program in detail. The plan shall be to complete the campaign organization down to and including the local community in which we have churches, alumni and friends. When this campaign shall have been completed in detail, there will be not only hundreds but thousands of individuals united in this great effort for the college.

It isn't a question of whether or not we can raise the money, but the question is whether or not we can arouse the interest and secure the cooperation of the members of the church, the alumni and friends who are engaged in business, industry and manufacturing. If we do the work, cooperatively and conscientiously, there will be no question about the results.

We are sure that all of us will agree that no one of our entire united church would come as near interesting all of our people as will Congressman Judd. He has spoken at different places in Virginia and North Carolina. He has spoken at the college on three different occasions. Everywhere Dr. Judd speaks, there are crowds of individuals to hear him, and they listen attentively and enthusiastically.

The announcement of this program is being made at this time in order that all the friends of Elon College may know about the program and plan to attend. The college will provide lunch for those who come and entertainment overnight for those who desire it.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The strain on the finances of the college is lessened appreciably during the regular term of the college by paying the faculty salaries on a 12-months basis instead of a 9-months basis, but when we reach the summer months and must meet regular salary payments as well as summer school salaries in addition to the regular expenses, the strain on the finances of the college is intensified to an uncomfortable degree. It is granted that money is not so easily secured by our churches during the summer months, yet it would be of great assistance to the college if our Sunday schools and churches could find it possible to cooperate with the college by receiving offerings and forwarding the same to the college.

In a budget of $25,000 a month, it would seem that $3 or $30 from a local church would amount to but little. But suppose 200 churches would send $30 each. The total would be a sizeable sum and would help the college meet a difficult situation. As one Sunday school, why don't you try it with the hope that other schools will join you? It is a pleasure to be a

ELON PROFESSOR GIVES FIRST ACCOUNT OF AFRICAN TOUR.

"Education, health and roads are our nation's major program." President Tubman of Liberia told Mrs. Sloan and me, as we drank ginger ale with him in the executive mansion in Monrovia. Tubman, who has served one eight-year term, has recently been inaugurated for a new term of four years. He told me he does not intend to run again.

Visits with President Tubman and Secretary of State Dennis gave us a picture of the political hopes of this little republic which feels very close to the United States. Liberia is a good place for an American to start getting acquainted with Africa. The official language is English and the currency is the American dollar (not in imitation, but actual American dollar bills, quarters, dimes). We felt at home after having talked French and francs a day in Paris and interpreting Portuguese words and coins another day in Lisbon.

Liberia was founded about 125 years ago as an American attempt to solve our slave problem—send the slaves back to Africa. Very few went, but they soon created a government patterned after that of the United States. The flag resembles ours except that it has but one star. The salute to the flag is similar to ours, while "My Country, 'Tis of Thee" refers to Liberia.

Liberia's first president was an ex-slave born in Norfolk, Va. Soon conflicts with local tribes developed, but numerous African groups came under control of the settlers. Although the French took away a large number of them, 29 tribes each speaking its own language, live in Liberia. Marriages between the settlers and the natives are breaking down the differences. The blood of both groups runs in the veins of President Tubman and of other leaders.

Liberia owes much to Christian missionaries, who are mostly American. Practically all schools in the nation are conducted by missions, although out of this enterprise has grown a small national university, the only school in Liberia giving work on what we should call a college level. "College" out side of the United States generally means high school. We had the privilege of addressing the students of the two best "colleges" in the nation. Mulenberg, a Lutheran school 35 miles in the interior from Monrovia, and the College of West Africa, a Methodist school in the capital. The latter is now controlled by a local board of directors of which the Secretary of State is president.

We also visited Booker Washington Institute, developed by American missions, and now becoming the industrial and agricultural department of the University. Some of the instructors are graduates of Tuskegee Institute in Alabama.

Our American "Point Four" program had its birth in Liberia. An American missionary pointed out the possibilities to President Roosevelt, who started some phases of the work as a pilot project several years before President Truman made his "Point Four" proposal. It was here, too, that former Secretary of State Stettinius began his ill-fated world service program by forming the Liberian Company. Very little of the money ever got out of America. However, the Point Four program appears to be on a solid foundation, developing respect and friendship for the United States. Dollars spent in this program do far, far more to counteract Communism than does money spent in armaments.

The biggest single private enterprise in Liberia is also American, the Firestone Rubber plantations. All rubber used in Firestone tires is produced here. Both Poles and English started rubber plantations here before the first world war, but lost them during the war. Twenty-five years ago Firestone bought up these plantations and developed numerous other ones. It is continuing to plant more rubber trees, employ more people and install more processing machinery. Its foreign employees, mostly American, live in a "swank" community, complete with beautiful houses, a golf course and a Coca Cola bottling works.

But the most lasting enterprise in Liberia is that of Christianity. Practically all the top government officials are church members, but they may not all be good Christians. Sunday morning I addressed a group of soldiers, mostly from the Loma tribe, of course through a translator. Later in the morning, Mrs. Sloan and I both talked to a congregation of Kru Christians, with our addresses translated by the pastor. Much still needs to be done for the tribes in the hinterland. The Bible has been translated into only a few of the 29 languages. Many of the people are beginning to read and must have the Bible.

We can tell North Carolina and Virginia people much more about Liberia when we start giving lectures in September.

W. W. SLOAN.

MANY NEW ACTIVITIES OF CHINA COLLEGE BOARD.

The United Board of Christian Colleges in China in New York, has made appropriations for the year 1952-53 totaling nearly a million dollars for various services under the following three main headings:

Services in Asia—

Visiting professorships and scholarships for Chinese teachers and students in other Christian colleges in Asia.

English language project in the Chinese schools of Malaya.

Christian hostels and student centers in Formosa and Singapore.

Aid to strategic projects in home economics and vocational training at Silliman University,

Aid to agricultural education in Southeast Asia.

Encouragement of the proposed Indonesia Christian University.

Continuing help to Ch'ung Chi College in Hong Kong.

First steps in meeting the need for a Christian college in Formosa.

Services in North America—

Fellowships to build up a reservoir of trained Christian leadership.

Job-placement for Chinese men and women who have finished their studies.

Spiritual ministry to strengthen and sustain Chinese students and alumni.

Research and Publication—

Critical studies of the achievements and failures of the China Colleges in terms of Christian values.

Literature program directed at overseas Chinese in Southeast Asia.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING?

No report, item, or idea has come to me from any woman's society for several weeks. What are you doing these days? Some of our societies take "vacations" in the summertime, but I do not think that is the general rule.

Have you had an outdoor vesper service, a picnic, a special program of any kind? Have any of your women participated in extra activities, like vacation Bible school, Lord's Acre projects, the trip to California, or the School of Missions? Ask some of them to write about these experiences. I do not know their names, so you who read this page will have to be the ones to ask others to help.

No doubt every person who writes regularly for THE SUN has had someone say to him or her, "I read your page of THE SUN first every week." That is a pleasant and gratifying experience, of course, but it will not be said again of me unless you help me with the page! We need firsthand accounts of happenings in your local societies to make this page of interest to our women. How about a little help?

THE SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

For the first time that I can remember, I did not participate in the entire School of Missions, but could only be there for parts of two days. I deeply regret the circumstances that made this so. However, in the time I was there I found out that the attendance was good, the spirit of fellowship fine, the courses excellent and the school very much worthwhile.

On Wednesday, which by no means gives the final picture, there were 61 who were staying at the college for full-time and a total of 134 had registered. We shall hope to have a complete report of the school from officials ere long.

Mrs. John G. Truitt made an excellent chairman (or should we say, chairwoman?) and seemed to have everything "under control." Mrs. George Colelough and Mrs. J. H. Booth of Elon College saw that people were housed and made to feel at home. Mrs. Harry Nelson of Winchester, Virginia, was the dining-room hostess.

We were made conscious of the needs of the world and of our own country in particular in the field of Human Rights in the class taught by Mrs. Charles E. Bingham of Westfield, New Jersey. Dr. John A. Reuling, secretary of the American Board for Africa, brought us information about Africa in general and our missions there. Miss Lucy Steele, professor of Bible at Peace College, Raleigh, again made the women study --no small achievement!--and taught them a great deal about Colossians.

The afternoon sessions were practical beyond measure. Both Mrs. R. L. Jackson and Miss Lelia Anderson gave the women ideas that were extremely usable in their local societies, both as to program content and methods.

The evening programs were varied and excellent. Miss Lucy Steele spoke on "The Home." Jose Dabuet spoke on "World Friendship." One evening was devoted to visual education.

All in all, it was a good school--just ask someone who went!

HELPS FOR BIBLE STUDY.

There is in the packet a booklet entitled, "Christ in You," which will be used by our women in their study of Colossians this year. Miss Lucy Steele listed four other books which she thought were very essential for a thorough "study." Happily, three of them are general books which can be used through the years and not just in connection with the study of Colossians.

- They are:
- The Revised Standard Version of the New Testament.* ($2.00.)
- Letters to Young Churches*, by Phillips. ($2.50.)
- A Protestant Manifesto*, by Garrison. ($2.75.)
- Colossians*, by Erdman. ($1.50.)

Any of these may be ordered from Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Mass.

The first-named, you no doubt know about, and I hope have access to. The companion volumes of the Old Testament will be ready for purchase by September 30. Letters to Young Churches contains the letters of the New Testament put into modern day speech--and so clearly translated that I have seen sleepy congregations literally "sit up and take notice" when the minister read the scripture from this book! Miss Steele especially recommends it for use in connection with Colossians. The third book tells us what Protestants believe--and do you know, if someone outside any church should ask you, or if a Roman Catholic should ask you? Miss Steele believes it is important for each of us to own such a source book. The volume on Colossians is a small book written in concordance form, with an explanation of each section of Colossians. It is a scholarly book and one to use in connection with others, not as the main book to study.

If you feel that the purchase of these books is expensive--so are most things worth while. Perhaps your Sunday school or church library could purchase them for the use of the entire group. Let us take seriously these suggestions of Miss Steele for study this year.

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Boys and Girls:

There will be reports of the School of Missions, I know. It was good to see some of your mothers and to hear that you liked and read this page!

One of the teachers was Miss Leila Anderson, and she was telling us about the "Station Wagon." Her story follows:

THE STATION WAGON COMES TO TOWN.

All was hustle and bustle in Jimmie's and Jane's church in Centertown. In the big room downstairs, tables were being set and the cards made by Jimmie's junior class representing churches, were being placed. After school Jane's primary class would bring flowers.

Off in a corner of the dining room, the planning committee was meeting to see that all was ready for the big afternoon and evening. Jimmie and Jane had heard a lot about what the committee had been doing. In fact, he had asked for this afternoon off months ago, when he first knew the station wagon was coming to town.

Jimmie's Dad is speaking. Let's listen. He says, "Yes, I think every thing is ready. We've done it just as we planned at our meeting of the six churches, when we talked with the three people who are coming with the station wagon." He looks at a piece of paper in his hand and continues: "Bob, Mary and I will be on the welcoming committee here to introduce our guests to the people on this list who will come in turn for half-hour visits. Let's see. Yes, that is right, the three guests can each talk with four people from 2 to 4 p. m., if we are good time-keepers so no one stays overtime. Then at 4 p. m., Miss Anderson will have her demonstration class, with the teachers observing; and Bob and I will take the other two guests to call on these people who could not leave their homes and businesses. Well, it's one-thirty, and they should be here soon. The station wagon is a perfect machine and I know that they will not be late."

Now, let's go to the schoolhouse and take a look in on Jimmie and Jane. Jane is having trouble in keeping at her reading lesson. She thinks of the flowers she will help to gather after school. She knows they will be the loveliest flowers that the church has ever had. Then she thinks of the fun of having the whole church eat together. Of course, there will be speeches that she won't understand, but afterwards, Mr. Jones, her teacher, has promised that there will be games for the children while the grownups have committee meetings. Then will come the pictures. She is especially excited about them. For many Sundays her class brought money to help boys and girls in a place called India to have a church like theirs. She doesn't know where India is, but that does not matter to her. She wants to see pictures of boys and girls like those she helped. Daddy says they will find out what the money does their church sends away.

Jimmie, too, is having trouble studying. He is thinking ahead to the demonstration class. He isn't sure what such a class is; but his teachers, Mr. and Mrs. Brown, said that Miss Anderson would have charge and would have interesting things from the station wagon to show and talk about. He hopes his class will have a good time, but also that the church will be proud of them. Then he thinks of the tiny churches he helped make for place cards. Perhaps Miss Anderson will tell them about the churches she has visited. The minister said last Sunday that she has traveled all over the country and knows a lot about churches. Jimmie has some questions to ask her.

Just then Jimmie hears a car. He looks out the window and sees it—the station wagon. How that motor does purr, and the outside of the car is as beautiful as its picture, only more so. Is he proud as he reads on the side of the machine, "Congregational Christian Churches." He thinks, "That's us, going around in the station wagon." You see, his class worked many Saturdays to get some money to help buy the station wagon. They set a goal and figured that they at least bought one of the tires. He remembers with much pleasure the chart they made, on which they marked their progress to buy the tire.

Well, that's the story. Do you like it, boys and girls? The only trouble is that the story is not true. There isn't any shiny station wagon labeled "Congregational Christian Churches," going around to visit places like Centertown. But there can be, if daddies and mothers and boys and girls will help to buy it. Would you like to help make this story come true? If so, send your gift to Dr. William F. Frazier, treasurer, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y. Mark it for "Authorized Special—Christian Education Station Wagon." Perhaps you can buy the tail light, or the steering wheel, or even a tire.

NOBODY TO LOOK AFTER HER BUT A CHILD.

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Hurry up, Patty! Your cereal is getting cold! How many times have I told you not to go outdoors before you've had your breakfast? You're the slowest child I ever saw!"

The cross words summoned my four-year-old neighbor from her delighted inspection of a pair of robins getting a drink at the sprinkler that had been set up in a corner of the courtyard at the apartment house where I live. From the open window of the dining nook where I sat at breakfast, I watched the tiny girl turn away from her bird friends and trudge slowly up the steps and into the apartment across the court.

No sooner was she out of sight than the unpleasant voice came again. "Stop right where you are, Patty Moreland, and take off those muddy shoes! And look at your dress—all wet and muddy, too! Here, climb up into your high chair. I don't care if your cereal is cold when you are such a naughty girl!"

By this time I wished heartily that the open windows of an apartment did not make one such an inadvertent listener to the voices of close neighbors.

The next thing I heard was the thud of a cup hitting the floor and another sharp tirade. "Now look at what you've done! Spilled milk all over everything! How can you be so clumsy? You're just going back to bed until you can behave yourself!"

A wailing child was carried away before her mother's harsh chiding had ceased.

Norma Moreland and her daughter were newcomers in the Fenway A-

RELAX WITH MAX.

As Mr. Kernodle pointed out last week, this does not mean to relax all the time. For the last two weeks, I have held up the copy of this page until the last minute waiting for news that I know is happening. This leaves the publisher wondering if anything is coming in at all. Is it? Are you young people interested?

A traveling salesman, holed up in a small Canadian town by a bad snow storm, wired his firm: "Stranded here due to storm. Telegraph instructions." This reply came: "Start summer vacation immediately."

Why is it that some people spend most of their time chocking the "hope that springs eternal in the human breast?"

A contestant best wins an argument by making friends with his opposition.

Mrs. Clyde Fields left some touching reminders for her husband when she left for California. On the note pad in the kitchen were these words: 1. Water the flowers on Tuesday and Saturday. 2. Be sure to close the doors when you leave home.

YOUTH RALLY AT UNION GROVE.

On Sunday afternoon, June 29, at 3 o'clock, the Union Grove Congregational Christian Church was host to the Western North Carolina Youth Fellowship Fifth Sunday Rally.

The opening worship of the afternoon was led by the young people from Hanks' Chapel. One of the most interesting parts of the program was a debate. The question debated was, "Should, or Should Not a Christian Go to War?" Debaters were Max Vestal and Clyde Fields, Jr., affirmative and Clem Shankle and Winfred Bray, negative. The judges selected the negative team as winners by a vote of two to one.

During the business session, officers were nominated for the coming year. The election will be held at the next Rally.

A picnic supper was enjoyed on the lawn of the church. Recreation was led by Bill Simmons.

Thomas Madren, a ministerial student at Elon College, led the evening worship, after which the young people of Union Grove Church presented a play entitled, "The Lost Church."

The next rally will be held at the Hanks' Chapel Church near Pittsboro, the fifth Sunday in August.

SUFFOLK BIBLE SCHOOL.

The Suffolk Christian Church had a very successful week of Bible School this year. The school was held from June 9th to 13th, each day from 9 to 11:30 a. m. There were 155 children enrolled (27 Cradle Roll, 42 Beginners, 55 Primary, 31 Juniors) with 26 workers and the writer as the director.

The theme for the week was, "Our Church." The activities were projects which were related to the church in some way. The Judson Keystone Series material was used throughout the school.

The departments had a party on Friday morning, and Friday night the closing program was given and promotion certificates were presented to the children who had been present every day or had missed only one day.

EASTERN CAROLINA SUNDAY SCHOOL MEETING.

The Annual Sunday School Convention of the Eastern North Carolina Conference met on June 25, 1952, at Auburn Christian Church, Auburn, N. C.

The president, Rev. Fred P. Register, called the convention to order. The hymn, "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," was sung, and Rev. J.

Frank Apple led the opening prayer. Official words of welcome were given by Mr. J. C. Caudle, the superintendent of Auburn Sunday School.

The morning worship service was led by the Junior Class of the New Hope Sunday School, and the afternoon worship service was led by the Young People of the Sanford Sunday School.

The highlight of the day was an address by Dr. Stanley C. Harrell of Durham, on the subject, "Who Are We?" Dr. Harrell gave a brief history of the organization of our church and some of its fundamental beliefs. He urged that we put our faith to work and learn to work together in peace and love.

The discussion periods proved interesting and helpful. Miss Dorothy Foltz, director of Religious Education in the Sanford Church, lead one group in "Methods in Teaching," and Mr. Register lead the other group in "Aims, Purposes and Goals of the Sunday School."

Our Philippine student, Jose Dabuet, was well received when he told something of the Sunday school movement in his native islands.

Mr. J. Lee Lassiter, Jr., superintendent of the Henderson Sunday School, also spoke in the afternoon on "What My Sunday School Means to Me."

Brief reports on outstanding progress made during the past year were given by representatives of the twenty-nine Sunday schools in attendance. Many reported building projects underway and increased interest in the Sunday school work. There were approximately 150 delegates and visitors present in spite of the 104-degree temperature, and everyone enjoyed the convention.

The Chapel Hill Sunday School won the attendance banner—Mr. E. W. Neville's record is only seven Sundays missed during the past forty-two years. Since Mr. Neville was the guiding spirit behind the banner giving many years ago, and this is the first time Chapel Hill has won the banner, this honor seemed indeed fitting.

Lee's Chapel won the progress banner.

The following officers were elected: Rev. Carl Wallace, president; Mr. J. Lee Lassiter, Jr., vice-president; Miss Lenelle Fuller, secretary, and Mr. K. G. Weldon, treasurer.

An invitation was tendered by Fuller's Chapel for the 1953 convention.

GOD PREPARES A LEADER.

LESSON IV—JULY 27, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: "And the child Samuel grew on and was in favor with the Lord and also with men."
--I Samuel 2: 26.

LESSON: I Samuel 1: 20, 24-28; 3: 1, 16-21; 4: 1.

A Wanted Child.

Samuel came into a home where he was wanted, and where he was welcomed. So eager was his mother for a child that she made a vow that if God would bless the home with a baby boy, she would dedicate him to the service of the Lord all the days of his life. He was a child of prayer. And he was regarded as a sacred stewardship from God.

All too many homes today do not want children, and children are not welcome in many homes. Due to fear or selfishness many young people deliberately avoid parenthood. They thus fail to fulfill the biological (and divine) function of the family, and also deny themselves of one of life's most blessed privileges and joys—parenthood. There are exceptions, of course, but generally speaking a home is not complete without children.

Even where there are children in the home, parents often fail to see that these children constitute a sacred trust or stewardship. Children are a gift from God, a trust from God to be nurtured and trained and dedicated to God.

A Promising Child.

Samuel's mother kept her vow. As soon as she had weaned him—an event which was much later in a child's life than in our times—she took him up to Shiloh and "brought him into the house of the Lord" . . . "and the child did minister unto the Lord before Eli, the priest." He probably ran errands or assisted in a small way in the work involved in the ritual of worship at Shiloh. But he did well what he had to do. And he developed rapidly—"and the child Samuel grew on, and was in favor both with the Lord and also with men." To do well what one does is to be able to do better. And to grow in favor with God is to grow in favor with people. It soon became evident to all who knew the lad that he was a marked lad. The folks felt that that boy was going places.

A Child Hears God's Voice.

We do not know exactly how old Samuel was when God spoke to him, but he was very young. The still small voice came to him one night when he was asleep. He did not know what it was all about. He did not even know that it was God who was calling him—he thought it was Eli, the old priest. But there was a readiness of response that was significant. "Here am I," he said, not once, but twice and thrice. And when he went to Eli the third time, the old man told him it was God himself who was calling him. And even more eagerly the lad responded with an earnestness and eagerness that stamps him as one who is fitted for God's work.

God still speaks to and calls children and young people. Who dare set limits to the age at which God speaks to boys and girls! Like Samuel, to be sure, sometimes an older person has to help a child or young person to understand, or to interpret the call. But many a faithful and fruitful Christian can testify to the fact that God called him as a child, even before he was old enough "to know what it was all about." And because there was a response in his childish heart, and because there was a kindly and friendly interpreter in the person of a parent, or pastor, or friend, the child found an experience of the grace of God, and found God's will for his life.

A Child Courageously Does God's Will.

Samuel was on the spot, on a hot spot. God told him that he was going to "judge Eli's house forever for the iniquity which he knoweth," and "that the iniquity of his house shall not be purged with sacrifice nor offering forever." How do you suppose the lad felt the next morning when Eli asked him what the Lord had said unto him? He really was on the spot! But this lad had courage, moral and spiritual courage. He told Eli everything God had told him, and "he hid not anything."

It is easy to tell people what they want to hear. It is not so easy to tell them what they need to hear. It takes courage to speak and to preach the truth. It takes real courage for a man to tell folks what God sometimes tells him to say.

Furthermore, many times, when folks ask us for our "honest opinion," they really do not want it. And they resent it if we give it!

A Chosen Leader.

Emerson once said something to the effect that if you want to train a child, you must begin with its grandparents. A crisis was coming to the fortunes of the Hebrew people. A leader was needed. But God was at work. And when the hour struck, the man arrived. The child Samuel, conceived in prayer, consecrated in infancy, and conditioned in religious deductable for income tax purposes, forth and led the people into new discoveries of, and new adventures with God.

CONTINENT IN TRANSITION.

"erescent" countries and was sweeping in a wide arc across Africa.

Islam, he said, is reaping a host of converts because of its sure-fire appeals to brotherhood and equality, its easy system of morality, and its enhanced prestige throughout the Near East.

The difficulties Christianity has in making inroads on Islam, he said, is illustrated by the example of the Sudanese government, which prohibits a Moslem from becoming a Christian "without permission from the government."

"As a result," he said, "there are many persons who consider themselves to be Christians, but who have never been baptized. The new constitution grants 'religious liberty,' but that is interpreted to mean that anyone has the freedom to practice the religion of his parents, but not to change his religion."

The State and Education.

In the light of the heated controversy in this country over the principal of church and state separation, it was interesting to note the practically unanimous approval by speakers and delegates of the wisdom of government subsidies for mission-sponsored schools.

Four speakers on this subject were of the opinion that government subsidies for both educational and medical work had not served to inhibit religious instruction.

As described by the Rt. Rev. Bravid W. Harris, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Liberia, the entire educational system in that country is conducted "on a partnership basis," with the government largely supplying the money, and missions the personnel. In no instance has the government interfered with religious instruction, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, the bishop said. "In fact," he added, "the government of Liberia is determined to base its educational system on Christianity."

Communism in Africa.

The absence of any alarmist sentiments on the threat of Communism to Africa came as a rather surprising note, especially to the American delegates who have heard the menace described from most every conceivable quarter.

The prevailing views appeared to be that where Communism exists in Africa, the movement is not principally Moscow inspired, but finds its source in the hunger, suffering and despair of subject people.

"We know the cure for Communism—and that is the removal of the conditions that breed Communism," said one South African speaker. "The cure is simply—just apply Christian principles to conditions as they arise in Africa."

"Western fear of Communism in Africa seems to be largely a matter of bad conscience on the part of the people who have not done what they know they should have done," said Prof. Matthews. "Communism is not coming to South Africa. We know that for Russia to control Africa would only be an exchange of one form of imperialism for another. If the western powers would give Africa the best of democracy to the fullest extent, Communism could make no headway."

Assembly Recommendations and Resolutions.

1. Race Relations. The race problem which has bedeviled every other problem of African life was dealt with from the standpoint of both the Church and society. The Assembly adopted a position as unalterably opposed to the policy of apartheid, a form of extreme racial segregation officially approved in the Union of South Africa. This policy, which has the blessing of the Dutch Reformed Church (in South Africa) was condemned as "contrary to the teachings of Christ and to the expansion of the Kingdom of God." The Assembly resolution appealed to church leaders to strive for the complete elimination of racial segregation whether found in the Church or in society.

Missionaries being sent to Africa in areas with large white populations should receive special instruction from their church boards to help them avoid "falling into 'colonial' habits and patterns of thought," the recommendation added.

The primary duty of such missionaries, it concluded, is to establish deep and spiritually-based friendly relations with as many Africans as is possible on a basis of complete equality."

2. Colonial Policy. A number of the resolutions were critical of colonial practices in vogue in various sections of Africa. For example, one resolution called for a scrupulous adherence to "the rights of the African majority" in any proposed plan of federation.

3. Education. The Assembly's recommendations on education took the view that while the bulk of education is undertaken by missions, the governments should be encouraged to take over more and more at the secondary and primary school level.

Should government assume more educational functions, the recommendation reasoned, the Church would be free to concentrate on special educational projects. For example, it was pointed out that in the Belgian Congo, "it seems clear that lay secondary, vocational and professional schools will not be provided in sufficient numbers. It is, therefore, incumbent on Protestant missions to intensify their efforts in this field."

"The primary objective of Christian schools is evangelism through education," the resolution stated. "All workers in Christian education at all levels should be ever vigilant that education should be thoroughly Christian, without at the same time violating the basic freedom of religion which is the right of all people."

4. Literary Campaign. The Assembly adopted a proposal to organize a wide-scale literary program, aimed at the eradication of illiteracy in Africa and to swell the volume of Christian literature for the growing number of literate populations.

Each mission board with work in Africa was urged to designate at least one full-time worker in the literary field to make the campaign a success. Christian councils were urged to gear into the effort by hiring trained personnel, and to have available an adequate supply of literary materials and an efficient system of distribution. For the actual writing job, it was suggested that Africans be employed wherever possible.

5. Church Authority. The Assembly, mindful of recent events in China, urged that church authority be turned over to African nationals as rapidly as possible. A suggested schedule for such a process should be worked out, the recommendation stated, adding that "in many cases Africans are better prepared for authority than missions presently may think."

6. The Statement by Nationals. One of the most suggestive documents to receive the Assembly's attention was a "memorandum" prepared by 40 African delegates, who represented 13 countries south of the Sahara. While not formally adopted by the Assembly, the statement clearly reflected the thinking of the African delegates on the role of the Church in political, economic and social affairs. The statement asked that "freely chosen representatives" of the African people be allowed to take part in all national and international bodies dealing with African problems.

The document made an appeal to the churches throughout the world to help mobilize public opinion in an effort to eliminate "the evil effects of the present political, religious and other divisions imposed on the African people."

To carry out needed political reforms and correct economic injustices it was urged that the United Nations and its specialized agencies be fully utilized. In addition, it was suggested that Christian Councils in Africa appoint "investigating committees" to present "the real facts of such economic, political and social changes which might tend to threaten the welfare, peace and security of the African people and of the world at large."

Warning against the subordination of African interests to the mutual security program of Europe and the United States, the document said: "Whatever changes are contemplated and instituted should give deep consideration to the life, welfare, wishes and aspirations of the African peoples and not merely to the interests of the administering authorities and other foreign economic and political interests operating in Africa."

The statement concluded with an expression of gratitude for North Americans and Europeans who have worked in the best interests of Africa and voiced the hope, which reflected the feelings of the entire Assembly, that "they will continue to work with us as we try to find a way of life founded upon the truths and teachings of our Lord Jesus Christ."

The Orphanage
 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

I have been real interested in the Vacation Bible School which Miss Foster, with the aid of some of the matrons, is conducting this week and till Wednesday of next week. It is sweet to hear the children all together, and in their different groups also, singing their songs. It is good to see them gathered in some lovely place listening to the stories or actively participating in the lessons. All work and no play, or all play and no work—either is bad. But when to some work and play, there is added some study and worship, little children feel happy and growing. It is so interesting to see them grow into joyous, happy children with visions of "being somebody."

Lately, I have been impressed with the number of our friends who have come to see the children here, and to take them for a week's visit in their homes. This is good for the child. Also I have been very much pleased with the number of people who have been sending us the very best type of outgrown clothing, notice I do not say outworn. Many packages have had new dresses in them, and new trousers and shirts, as well as other needed gifts. There is a growing interest. It is because for so many the children are not "just orphanage children," but rather they are Mary, or Billy, or Jimmy. You have seen them, seen their eager sweet faces, heard them talk and laugh, and you have learned to know them and think of them as individuals.

Too, I have been impressed with the number of people who are saving and sending coupons. It takes a large number of them to amount to much, but when everyone saves a few and it is added up, it means something. Coupons should be collected by women's groups and brought together and mailed as printed matter. But we are delighted to have them tucked in a letter or a package. We want them and can redeem many of them at a better rate because we are an orphanage. So please continue to help us there.

The School of Missions brought a large number of women to Elon this week. We were so glad to have them visit the orphanage. One afternoon they all got together and came over at 4:30. I greeted them on the front porch, welcomed them and told them something of our hopes and our needs. They made their own ways into whatever buildings they desired to see, and I believe they were pleased with what they saw. At least I know so many of them as good friends, that I know they would look with sympathetic appreciation on all that is being done here for these children.

There is a joy in winning the love and faith of a child who has known the loneliness of having no one who cared. This is a real service rendered by all of us as we give a sense of security and love to these girls and boys. We cannot measure its meaning. None of us are seeking special rewards. We all want to do unselfishly and without any desire of being "paid back" what we can to help these needy ones. Your response to their needs is evidence of your kindness and generosity. Thank you very much.

BOONE.

In memory of Mrs. Elizabeth Moring Boone who passed away on March 31, 1952, the members of the Durham Congregational Christian Church offer the following resolutions:

That we keep in remembrance her wise and enthusiastic leadership, her Christian teachings, her courage and generosity.

That her high ideals of devotion to Christ, service to humanity, gentleness and sincerity which were inherent in her character, serve as guides and inspiration for each of us.

That the influence of her noble character continue to radiate in our church and community.

Mrs. R. J. KERNODLE,
Mrs. ROBERT S. SMITH.

FOR OUR CHILDREN.

partments. They had left their home in a suburban acreage and had moved to smaller quarters to await the return of Patty's father from overseas service.

After that morning I noticed that there were many days when Norma was unreasonably cross with Patty, while on other days she petted and praised the child unduly. The little girl began to lose her look of rosy health and was becoming restless and irritable.

Knowing that the routine of their lives had been drastically upset by the father's absence, I invited the two of them over for some meals in an effort to relieve their loneliness and in the hope that a way might be found to show the mother how much harm her erratic conduct was doing to her child.

To my great relief, the situation was changed by a visit from Norma's mother. Norma told me about it herself.

"I'm a better mother since Patty's grandmother came to see us," she declared. "You might be interested, Miss Malory, since your library work makes child welfare your chief interest, in hearing about how Mother called my attention to my mistakes. She recalled a time, long ago, when my eldest brother was a baby and my father was overseas—just as Patty's father is now.

"Our family had a forthright friend whose lack of tact was balanced by an excess of neighborly kindness. Mother understood Mrs. Neiman, and accepted her blunt speeches with equanimity. One day, Mother told me, when there had been no letters from my father for a long time, she was worried and unhappy and needlessly cross to my brother. Mrs. Neiman listen to his crying until she could bear it no longer. She rushed across the two lawns and greeted Mother with a sharp rebuke, 'Poor little fellow!' she exclaimed. 'No father—no mother—nobody to look after him but a child!'

"I can't imagine my even-tempered mother ever being unfair to anyone, but she insisted that she had been so much absorbed in her unhappiness that she had been childishly unreasonable with her baby son.

"I couldn't help seeing myself in Mother's story, and I asked her if she hadn't been thinking of me when she told it. She smiled and admitted that she had noticed that I was somewhat unjust to Patty. I'm watching myself, now, Miss Mallory. I'm trying my best not to let my unhappiness become reflected in my attitude toward my child. I want to give Patty the confidence that comes with a stability such as we had in our home when her father was with us, so that she and I will both be ready, when he comes home, for the happy companionship the three of us have always shared."

"LOVE in the CHRISTIAN FAITH"

By DR. DANIEL D. WILLIAMS

LECTURE II.—"THE CROSS AND THE SELF"

THE GREATEST PARADOX in the Christian Gospel is that we must lose life in order to find it. In Jesus, God has revealed his own spirit as that which freely gives of itself for the sake of man. Only in the radical sacrifice of our self-centered will can there be true peace and fulfillment of our restless spirits.

The sacrificial teaching of Christianity is its supreme challenge to our complacent way of life. At the same time Christianity is opposed to all philosophies of life which deny the worth of the individual person. It is opposed to Buddhism which seeks the good in an escape from the self. It is opposed to communism which crushes the self in the social body. Christianity sees the good of life in the community of mutual service among men who are both free and responsible to one another.

Protestant Christianity brings the sacrificial spirit into the daily life of the Christian through its doctrine of vocation. Every Christian is called to serve with his special talents in the situation in which he finds himself. He is called to fill a particular role in the society. He is also called to transform the society so that all may realize a fuller life. Protestants have taken this high conception of the calling too lightly and have almost lost its true significance. Yet it is at the very center of the Protestant faith.

The spirit of sacrificial love in Christianity shows us not how good we are, but how self-centered we are. If the cross did not reveal God's forgiveness for our sin as well as the purity of his holiness we could not stand before him. The Christian life begins in humility, and relies more on God's goodness than upon any human achievement.

The Church and Politics

By REV. DUANE VORE

TWO OF THE BIGGEST SHOWS on earth are held in July at four-year intervals. This year T. V. as well as radio has given us a better insight into what goes on at these shows than many of us have ever had before. To my mind it raises a question that is real and vital to our personal as well as to our national welfare.

As one watches the proceedings of a national political convention, there comes the impression of the tremendous hidden powers that seek to control the outcome of political action. Pressure of various kinds is brought to bear, and end results in both parties are determined by the coalition of the interests of the parties.

For a long time there has been the feeling that the church had no place in the arena of power politics. With that belief I concur, but it goes too far. Truly the church as an organization ought not to enter the field of politics, but the concepts of Christian character, Christian practice and Christian planning certainly should determine the choice both of nominees and of elected representatives. If ever the rule of God is to be more perfectly represented in the world of men, that rule must be present in local, state and national government as well as in the individual part.

It is not the business of the church to pick a man and ask that you support him. It is the business of the church to insist upon personal recognition of responsibility as Christian citizen; to urge you to go to the polls and vote, but above all to urge you to measure candidates not by political expediency but by Christian concepts of character.

Neither political party is completely good nor completely bad. Both will have men of real strength and purpose to present. Personally I hope that as Christian citizens we will measure the stature of the candidates and act upon our sense of Christian principle as we look forward to our choice of government in the weeks ahead.

News Flashes

Dr. L. E. Smith was in Eastern Virginia this week in the interest of Elon College.

Dr. F. C. Lester is assisting Rev. W. T. Madren in a revival meeting this week at Flint Hill (R) Church.

The Board of Publications met in Suffolk on Wednesday of this week. A very constructive meeting was held.

Superintendent Scott was in Eastern Virginia the first of this week and expects to be in the Valley of Virginia the latter part of the week.

The parsonage of our Southern Pines Church was painted while the minister (our editor) and his family were attending the General Council.

Dr. Stanley C. Harrell of Durham, N. C., spoke on "What We Christians Believe," at the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention which met Bethlehem Christian Church, Suffolk, on Tuesday of this week.

Mr. H. S. Harcastle, Jr. and Miss Mary Ann Reece were married on last Saturday evening, July 19, at her home in Woodland, N. C. They will make their home in Portsmouth, Va. Hardy, Jr., is a graduate of V. P. I., and is now working in the Mechanical Division of the Department of Designing of the Norfolk Navy Yard. Mrs. Harcastle is a graduate of Guilford College, and expects to teach in the Portsmouth School System. Our heartiest congratulations and our best wishes to these two young people.

A fine revival meeting was conducted at the Asheboro Congregational Christian Church last week with Rev. Fred P. Register doing the preaching and Mr. Joe Stephenson leading the singing and serving as soloist. Both men are from Wake Chapel. The pastor, Dr. F. C. Lester, was especially pleased with the many people present from nearby Congregational Christian Churches. The church was full every evening, with as many as 60 children present for the song service.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The presence of four visitors highlighted the annual session of the Western North Carolina Sunday School Convention when it met at Pleasant Ridge Christian Church on Tuesday, July 15. Dr. W. T. Scott gave an address on "Our Denomination," Dr. L. E. Smith spoke concerning our Elon College, Rev. Fred P. Register led the group discussion on "Aims and Purposes of the Sunday School," and Mr. Joe Stephenson was the song leader and soloist.

Mr. W. W. Thomas of Seagrove, president, and Mrs. Orva Brown of Asheboro, secretary-treasurer, had done such good jobs that they were re-elected. Ralph Riddle of Hank's Chapel is to serve as vice-president, and Mrs. Jack Shoffner of Liberty as assistant secretary-treasurer.

The opening worship was conducted by the Hank's Chapel Young People, the youth choir of Pleasant Ridge furnished music, and the closing worship was led by Rev. W. T. Madren. Bill Simmons led a discussion group on young people's work, and Mrs. F. C. Lester a group on children's work.

The Pleasant Ridge Church served a bountiful picnic dinner in their new upstairs dining room to the 190 people counted by the secretary—and probably to many local people who were not in the session at "counting time."

Reports from the various Sunday schools showed a feeling of optimism and progress. Spoon's Chapel won the banner for the largest per cent of its membership attending the Convention. Pleasant Ridge was cited for its attainment of the ten goals for Sunday schools set up by the Convention at its last session.

The resolutions included one of thanks to Miss Pattie Lee Coghill and Miss Ruth Dunn for their untiring efforts in behalf of the Convention during the year and regret that they could not be present.

MRS. F. C. LESTER,
Press Committee.

THE HIGH COST OF DYING.

These days we hear much about the high cost of living. The war has increased the price of essential things.

It doesn't take much figuring these days to convince one that it costs no small sum for one to die, that is if you want to be put away in style. Families own a burial plot in a cemetery. The price paid includes cost of upkeep which requires the services of men for mowing, planting flowers, etc. On the average large cemetery there are burials practically every day, which requires the services of grave diggers. The price of that kind of work is high.

Bill Davidson, in Colliers of May 19, 1951, discusses this problem at length. I quote: "In Boston, in 1829, an undertaker named Martin Smith rendered a complete funeral bill to one Sam H. Hewes for $8.00. A few weeks ago a New York undertaker named John G. Drabik similarly rendered his bill to Mrs. Catherine Kubis for burying her husband, an impoverished immigrant tenant-house janitor. The bill was for $843.00. While the cost of living has increased 374 per cent in the last century, the cost of dying has increased as much as 10,000 per cent." It isn't uncommon for relatives of the deceased to go to court to protect themselves from exorbitant charges of undertakers and cemetery owners. Bereaved relatives are taken advantage of because they are in no mood to shop around. Many undertakers figure their charges to fit the estate of the deceased. They work together. They hike prices, levy hidden charges, urge expensive funerals. They tailor the bill to fit the amount of the deceased's insurance policies. The majority of the undertakers and casket-makers are honest. They have the respect of the community in which they live. They work hand in hand with the churches and the ministers. They are prominent citizens. They do much for charity. No one knows the exact cost of a casket except the manufacturer who makes it. The writer knows something about this. I was once an undertaker. Expensive funerals seem to have almost become the American way of life. The amount the family spends is an index to their love and appreciation of the deceased.

Seventy-five years ago there were no expensive funerals, except among very prominent families or high government officials. There were no large community cemeteries. When a person died in the country, the coffin was made in a carpenter shop and the burial was in the family grave-yard. There were no expensive hearses. The grave was dug by neighbors. The body was carried in a wagon. The funeral was preached later at the church of the deceased. No fine funerals, no ceremonies. Our Saviour was buried in a borrowed tomb.

S. M. SMITH.

SAFER VEHICLES RESULT FROM ENGINEERING PROGRESS.

Safety is a basic consideration in the design and manufacture of every part in a motor vehicle.

Engineers know that any machine must be mechanically sound and dependable or it is unsafe. Knowledge of this fact underlies the meticulous care and precision that goes into all phases of automobile, truck and bus production.

Each part, down to the smallest bolt is engineered and built for heavier duty than it needs to perform. This built-in margin of safety helps account for the fact that mechanical failure in properly maintained vehicles is rarely a cause of accidents today.

The inherent qualities that make a motor vehicle safe to operate are sound engineering, good materials and careful workmanship. And, as vehicles improve in performance and durability, safety is served correspondingly.

While improved vehicle quality has not been the only factor responsible, the traffic fatality rate in the United States has been declining steadily since the 1930's. The rate is determined on the basis of vehicle miles traveled.

It has even been indicated statistically that the motor vehicle's safety record, on this basis, has been much better than that of the horse.

But, statistical comparisons only measure progress; they do not make it. Far from being complacent and satisfied with the record of highway safety, the automotive industry is anxious to improve it.

It has introduced new developments in design which improve driver vision, simplify controls and increase riding comfort. These and many other features of the modern automobile, truck or bus, such as reduced noise and vibration, relieve the driver of distractions, allowing him to concentrate more fully on the road ahead.

The accelerating ability of motor vehicles has been greatly increased in recent years, providing another important safety margin. This, as well as engine economy, is a primary aim of the higher power being built in new engines.

Acceleration is one of the three controls the driver has over his vehicle. The others are steering and braking. Ability to accelerate rapidly in the middle speed ranges is a particularly important advantage. By enabling the driver to pass more quickly, for instance, it reduces the time during which he is exposed to danger in the line of opposing traffic.

Contrary to common belief, higher horsepower ratings have not materially increased the average top speed of automobiles. Although average horsepower has risen about 20 per cent in the past 15 years, average top speed is about the same.

Driver vision is steadily being improved by body designers through the application of wider windshield and window areas; tinted, heat-absorbing glass; slimmer front corner posts, positioned out of the forward line of vision; improved windshield wipers; and better positioning of the steering wheels, front seats and rear view mirrors.

Breaking systems are being made more efficient through utilization of new processes and materials. Brake performance also has been increased through changes in the distribution of weight between front and rear wheels. The car of today can stop about three times as fast as its ancestor of 1935.

For years, motor vehicle lighting has been of uniform high quality. Refinements, however, continue to be made, particularly in the balance between brightness and the angles at which headlights are directed.

Better steering and suspension systems, along with generally lower centers of gravity, have increased road stability and handling ease.

But even the safest vehicle becomes unsafe in the hands of an unsafe driver. And no amount of care in the engineering and design of cars, trucks and buses can overcome the hazards of traffic congestion and inadequate streets or highways.—Automobile Facts.

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Selecting and Sifting the News

One of the non-spectacular tasks of an editor is that of reading religious news releases from week to week to determine which are relevant and which are irrelevant. Many of them are consigned to file 13—the large, editorial waste-basket!

After selecting those that seem to have some denominational relevance, for that seems to be the unavoidable criterion, then there remains the gentle art of deletion to bring them within the limits of publication.

Sunday school has made the headlines recently. Nearly 100,000 children and teachers marched in the one hundred twenty-third Anniversary Day Parade marking the founding of the Brooklyn Sunday School Union. Public schools throughout the borough were closed to allow the youngsters, representing some 300 Protestant Sunday Schools, to participate in the impressive parade, which included hundreds of decorated floats. Other cities might profitably take a leaf from the notebook of the Brooklyn Union.

"Folding churches" are being used by Methodists of Melbourne, Australia. Measuring 30 feet by 18 feet, they accommodate 80 persons, and are used for church services, Sunday school and any other church requirements where permanent church buildings do not exist. When the congregations build permanent churches, these folding buildings will be dismantled and re-erected in a matter of hours wherever a new church is being established. Each one will eventually serve at least five or six districts. Has this plan been used in America? Here is a possible or partial solution of our problems of church extension. A conference or convention could begin with one unit and, if successful, add other units.

Interesting suggestions are coming from the pew as well as the pulpit. Note this: National tithing as "a Christian approach to world peace" was suggested by Albert Whitehouse, director of District 25, United Steel Workers of America, C. I. O., as 2,000 Quaker delegates from all over the nation, attended the biennial Friends General Conference at Cape May, New Jersey. He said that tithing our national income for international welfare would give 30 billion dollars annually, or "more in one year than we have ever spent to help our fellowman." He concluded: "If this tithe were distributed through Point Four under the guidance of the United Nations, we would achieve peace with God's blessings."

Now here is another idea that is gaining widespread attention and agitation. Members of Congress were urged by the Augustana Lutheran Church to make ministers of religion eligible for federal old age insurance. The aim of Social Security in the United States, it was pointed out, is to provide necessary benefits for American citizens, "among whom ministers are obviously included." Exclusion of ministers from the provisions of the Social Security Act as amended in 1950, it was said further, was based on "the pretext that including them would violate the principle of the separation of Church and State." On the contrary, the Synod declared, the denial to ministers of privileges of Old Age and Survivors Insurance "would seem to be both discrimination against them as citizens and actually a refutation of the principle of separation of Church and State." Augustana is the second Lutheran body to take a stand in favor of social security for the clergy, a proposal which is currently one of the controversial issues in church circles. The Evangelical Lutheran Church took similar action at its twentieth biennial convention which was held in Minneapolis earlier in June.

The Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., at its General Assembly in New York in May, became the first Protestant denomination to urge social security coverage for ministers. It was closely followed by the American Unitarian Association and the Evangelical Lutheran Church, and several other groups are also considering action in favor of such coverage.

Tomorrow's Goals

A Council Message

By DR. DAVID McKEITH

For some years the officers of the American Board have had to come before the annual meeting to report a deficit or barely balanced books. The stringent financial situation has almost beclouded the reports of the great or going work continued even under restrictions and handicaps. Today, the treasurer reports no deficit. The deficit of $110,000 reported in 1949 and the further deficit of $42,000 in 1950 have been wiped out and the Board today is in a favorable financial position.

A factor in this, of course, has been the closing of the work in China. Of our China missionaries 33 have been transferred to other mission fields. Their salaries and expenses continue. Twenty-six have returned to the United States and are now retired. Five are on furlough. Other positions have been found by 28. Six are on leave, and these, we hope, will soon return to active service with the American Board.

It is evident then that the so-called savings from China are not as great as many have thought.

When we faced the deficits of 1949 and 1950, the Prudential Committee and staff immediately set to work to curtail current expenses. This was done by not sending missionary replacements or new missionaries to the field. In 1930, we had 649 missionaries under the American Board; in 1950, 387, and today we have 354.

However, financially, our house is now in order, and we have turned our attention to future policy and program. While these are never lost sight of, yet in a period of financial curtailment it is obvious they do not receive major attention.

The foreign policy of the American Board is changing and must further change if we are to meet the special needs of the world today and tomorrow. The basic purpose of the Board remains as stated in its charter, which was granted by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in 1812: "Propagating the gospel in heathen lands, by supporting the missionaries and diffusing a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures." In the by-laws of the Board, this same purpose is expressed in more acceptable language: "To propagate the gospel among unevangelical nations and communities, by means of preachers, teachers, Bible readers, other helpers and the press."

For many years we have leaned heavily on those two words, "other helpers," for the work of evangelization has been greatly assisted by doctors, nurses, social workers, agricultural specialists and others.

Though its fundamental purpose has remained unchanged, the foreign policy of the American Board has changed through the years to meet changing situations. Time and again the American Board has pioneered, not only in new areas but in new types of work. That pioneering has not been lost. Today we have a new approach in the Mission of Fellowship to the churches of Europe so ably carried forward by Howard and Elsie Schomer. Others have adopted both our title and our approach.

When additional funds become available, it is always difficult to decide whether to launch out into new fields of endeavor which are constantly calling for our help and are so important, or to strengthen the present on-going work, though to do so may seem less dramatic but no less important.

In our so-called regular work, new methods, new approaches to old tasks are being adopted.

The pioneering of Dick and Dr. Mildred Keithahn in simple living close to the heart of Indian Village life has been exceedingly helpful. Out of their experience and the experience of others, and from their council, new methods of approach to the masses of India are being found.

Roy Phillips and his wife have pioneered in the development of the Jan Hofmeyr School of Social Work in Johannesburg, South Africa, and they have been leaders, too, in the whole field of race relationships in that country so torn with racial tension and strife.

Others of our missionaries, in village health work, in the field of agriculture and in other areas, are pioneering—finding new methods of meeting the spiritual and human needs of people.

This spirit of pioneering must be encouraged wherever it is carried on, as in the instances referred to, in close cooperation with or under the guidance of national leaders. While instances may not have been dramatized, for often the work is not dramatic, though no less vital, yet in these recent years there have been important new tasks undertaken by your missionaries—they are still pioneers.

As the Foreign Policy Committee proceeded in its study, two very basic thoughts developed: One, that we should at once turn our attention more aggressively to the development of national leadership. The other, that we must undergird the life of the church. Neither of these policies are new, but they do have in them elements which call for definite advance.

One of the lessons learned from the recent experiences in China is that there must be strong Christian leaders in every land, capable of taking over the complete supervision and conduct of the Christian enterprise in all its outreach. We have been training national leaders—this has been the policy of your Board and of most of the other missionary boards for some time. The plan must be greatly accelerated, however. Knowing the temper of the times, we are well aware that foreigners from any other land may not long be acceptable in either institutional or church life. In our schools in the United States, we want American teachers, we expect to have American doctors in our hospitals, we prefer American preachers in our pulpits.

In other lands, as the people gain a sense of nationhood, they too want their teachers, their doctors, their pastors. This, in a measure, is as it should be. Christians must face the fact that the work of our missionaries

Landscape Artist Presents Painting To Negro Baptist Church

There will be a service of especial interest at the Gilfield Baptist Church (Colored), located on the highway, approximately one mile south of Ivor, Virginia, on Sunday, August 10, 1952, at 1:30 p. m.

The feature event of this service will be the presentation and unveiling of an oil painting of the church, which was painted by Mr. Walter Rawls of Jacksonville, Florida.

The picture being presented to Gilfield Church is a product of the cultural traditions of the "Old South." The artist and his family were born in this area, and although business opportunities called him to live in other states, still his deep ties to this, his native section which he knew as a boy, cannot be severed.

Walter Cecil Rawls was born on a farm one mile west of Ivor, Virginia, on a sun drenched June 13, 1895. In a state still bearing the deep scars of mortal battle, he grew up and attended school much as other boys. Before he was of school age, he was crippled by a strange sickness which we now know as "Poliomyelitis" or Infantile Paralysis. However, with an undaunted spirit which shows itself even now, while a boy he walked on his crutches over one mile of sand roads to the one-room school house which stood across the road from the present school building in Ivor. At times he used his goat-drawn sulky which his father and family gave him to make the trip to school and back. Since he was handicapped, he spent a lot of time in his own front yard and he enjoyed watching the people who rode and walked by the farm. One of his earliest recollections is of standing at the fence chatting with the friendly colored folks, dressed in their Sunday best, on their way to Gilfield Church and of having these folks tell him of their songs and meetings.

Mr. Rawls moved to Suffolk at the age of eleven. The public schools in Suffolk did not specialize in art studies; in fact, they did not teach art at all, so Mr. Rawls went to work in the evenings cranking a motion picture machine to earn money for private art lessons. His family gave him all the help they could and encouraged his talent. He entered several art competitions and won the blue ribbon for first prize in each competition he entered.

He had decided upon a lifetime career in art, but soon found that artists tended to be lean and hungry, and money for further art lessons was exceedingly hard to come by. Recognizing the fact that if he wished to continue his art lessons, he would be compelled to earn a living in another field, Mr. Rawls became interested in banking and became a general partner of J. Walter Hosier of Suffolk.

Necessarily neglecting his art and painting only during his spare time, he nevertheless developed into one of America's best landscape artists. He paints scenes mostly of historical interest.

He accepted a position in New York and from there moved to St. Louis, where he opened his own offices devoted to investments.

As a tribute to his achievements in the business world and his devoted philanthropic work for Elon College, Mr. Rawls was honored by Elon College with the degree of Doctor of Business Science, the first degree of this kind ever bestowed upon anyone by that college. The honor recognized his accomplishments in many fields, such as that of bank executive, steamship and railroad president, member of the boards of directors of many companies, resident manager of a large investment firm, as well as the successful operation of his own business for many years.

From his experience in cranking an early motion picture projector at night to earn funds to pay for his art lessons, Mr. Rawls over twenty years ago developed and manufactured one of the first commercial television receivers ever made in America. While he was many years ahead of his times in this development, which was never a profitable venture, yet this experience made it possible for him to become very successful and wealthy in his knowledge of investments in the television industry.

Mr. Rawls' humanitarian interests have included a five-year term as chairman of the St. Louis and St. Louis County Chapter of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, during which time was effected the establishment of the first isolation unit for infantile paralysis in a St. Louis hospital. He has served as the chairman of the Board of Trustees of Pilgrim Congregational Church in St. Louis, the largest Congregational Christian Church in Missouri.

After 42 years of an active business career, Mr. Rawls has now retired, and lives in Jacksonville, Florida, with his wife, the former Ella Freeman of Gates, North Carolina, and devotes his time to oil painting and looking after his personal investments. He has two sons, Lt. (jg) Thompson T. Rawls, who is in the Medical Corps of the U. S. Navy, and who was formerly on the staff at Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minnesota, and Lt. Walter C. Rawls, Jr., who is now in foreign service with the U. S. Army.

Mr. Rawls has never forgotten the traditional "good will" reputation of this section of the country and the many good friends of his father and mother. He has given much time to painting a beautiful picture in oil of the Gilfield Church and grounds, to present to the congregation of Gilfield, to share his success with the people who encouraged him so much when he was a boy.

His paintings hang in many schools, colleges, churches and public buildings of the east and middle western states.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

IT IS OUR RESPONSIBILITY.

We live in an age when too few accept responsibility. We have learned to look to our government, locally, state and federal, to do for us many of the things our forefathers did for themselves. We expect our government to tell us the number of hours we should work per week and certainly the minimum wage we should receive if not the exact wage. The same tendency to rely upon our government and relieve us of all responsibility in making our way in the world has led us to take the same attitude in relation to our church and the institutions it supports.

We are interested in all the institutions of our church, but feel that none other has the overall importance in the growth and development of the Congregational Christian Church in the South as Elon College. Elon College is our responsibility. We cannot afford to shirk this responsibility. Those who have been charged with the a few years, will be alumni and they College have not always done that which pleased us. Yet, that does not relieve us of our responsibility. We must be willing to forgive, forget and work for an institution of higher learning representing our church in the South that meets our ideals.

What does Elon College need? First of all, Elon College needs the loyal support of those who have enjoyed and benefited directly by having had the privilege of studying on her campus. Before the first building was erected at Elon College, members of our church sacrificed to give of their meager means, because they had a vision of a greater and more influential institution in our area.

The writer enrolled at Elon College as a student in 1920. For more than forty years thousands had given that I might have the opportunity of attending a Christian College. It is true that I could have gone to other Christian Colleges, but Elon College was my choice, and in making my choice I accepted certain responsibilities. Certainly, chief among those responsibilities is that of loyalty to my alma mater.

Elon College needs some money. Few of us can give substantial financial aid to our alma mater, but, if each of us will do the very best we can, the total will be sufficient to solve the financial problems of Elon College. With the solving of the financial problems will come new and modern buildings, adequate endowment, scholarships and loan funds that will meet the requirements of our generation.

Elon College needs students. This problem, too, would be solved if all Elon College alumni would send their own children and use their influence to send other qualified boys and girls to our alma mater. The quality and character of the student body in 1952 will determine to a great extent the type of institution Elon College will be twenty-five years from now.

Elon College needs a strong faculty. It is not enough to have a qualified faculty with 25 per cent turn over annually. Today's students, within a few years will be alumni and they will judge their alma mater by the instructors under whom they studied as students. It is our responsibility to help Elon College pay sufficient salaries to keep well qualified instructors year after year and eliminate the present rate of resignation.

Elon College is our responsibility. For the most of us it is the only college we can claim as ours. Let us take pride in our college, accept our responsibility and help make Elon College that which we have dreamed she might be.

GEO. D. COLCLOUGH.

THE CHURCH'S PROGRAM.

Long years ago a group of people preferred to call themselves Christian, exclusive of any and all other sectarian names. They bound themselves together with the bond of affection and the cords of responsibility. They recognized that the true mission of the church was the redemption of the world and the salvation of man. To accomplish its mission it realized that it had a two-fold responsibility—one to evangelize, to acquaint individuals with the church, to publish the good tidings of salvation to the ends of the earth. They knew that man was to be the instrument and that God could only save men through man, that the more efficient the man was, the more capable and more fruitful his life would be. Their responsibility was not only to carry the good news to the ends of the earth but to prepare the men themselves. To be sure, they must be taught by the Spirit but a trained mind and a developed personality would be more effective in the hands of the Spirit than the untrained and undeveloped. To make sure of the effectiveness of their program they needed a training school, a college in which the messengers of the gospel might be prepared—not only those who would preach, but those who would lead in the local church. The church, their church, few in number and limited in means, felt unequal to the task. However, because of their love for their church and the brightness of the vision they yielded to the demands of the times and built Elon College.

They were unwilling to leave the joyful task of training workers for the Kingdom to the state or other denominations. They assumed the responsibility of building a college. They were impelled and compelled in the matter of Christian work to take the dual responsibility of evangelism and education. They were unwilling to presume that if they would build churches that someone else would train the ministers and the Christian workers. The church in that far away day had the dual responsibility. The church in these modern days has the same responsibilities. No denomination can face God in this day in which we live with a clear conscience and a satisfaction of a duty well done that does not take its full responsibility for the evangelization of the world, which includes preachers, missionaries, messengers, and the responsibility for the training and preparation of the ones who are to evangelize.

It is a joy on the part of any church to feel that it has met its full responsibility and has not depended on someone else to carry a part of the load that it should be carrying itself. It is a fine thing to erect church buildings. May the Lord bless us and help us to build them in abundance, but it is neither churchmanship nor Christian statesmanship to wash our hands of the responsibility of training and preparing those who are to carry the burdens of the Kingdom and proclaim the gospel to the ends of the earth.

We of the Congregational Christian Church in the Southern Convention have dedicated ourselves to this two-fold task. Our forefathers before us blazed the way. We of today cannot afford to take our hands from the plow and turn backward. These re-

THE GOLD COAST and NIGERIA

{ *Dr. Sloan Continues
His Report on Africa* }

II—THE GOLD COAST.

The Gold Coast will no longer be only a name to Mrs. Sloan and me. It will stand out in our minds as one of the most progressive parts of the British Empire, with tremendous possibilities for the future. For more than a year, the Gold Coast has been largely self-governing. It has as its own Prime Minister, Dr. Kwame Nkrumah. Seven of the ten members of the cabinet are Africans.

On former trips we have visited Asia and felt with many that the future of the world lies in Asia, but now we wonder if the future may not lie in Africa. Africa probably has fewer traditions to throw off, fewer drastic changes to make to fit into the family of nations. Africa certainly has room for an expanding population, but India, China, Japan and Southeastern Asia are so thickly crowded that sufficient food for their people will always be a tremendously pressing problem.

We were at Accra, the capital of the Gold Coast, on the Queen's birthday, a stuffy, formal program in the English tradition. All the English were out in gala attire. The salutes, the ritual, seem far from real life. During the hour's program, the audience stood six times for the playing of "God Save the Queen." The British certainly give God a lot of instructions. The native chiefs, with their monstrous, multi-colored umbrellas carried by servants, were much more picturesque.

But the most interesting part was the great crowd of average Africans who surged about Dr. Nkrumah's car with their cries of adulation. One cry repeatedly heard was "Great King."

We had hoped to have a conference with the Prime Minister, as we had had with President Tubman of Liberia, but the British Secretary of State for Colonies had just arrived from London and was meeting with the entire cabinet morning, noon and night, for several days. Dr. Nkrumah sent word he wanted to talk with us if he could get away from the conferences,

We were also sent word of a great rally of the People's Party Convention, the party in power; that Nkrumah would address it and then talk to us. We were both asked to address the rally of 4,000 Africans. We were the only pale faces present. It was an experience to stand before this crowd as they raised their hands in unison, shouting "Freedom" and "Complete self-government now." It was announced from time to time that Dr. Nkrumah was still in conference with the British delegation. It was finally announced that he would be unable to attend the rally.

Fortunately, there has already developed in the Gold Coast a healthy opposition party. When the head of this group, Dr. Busia, professor of Sociology at Achimota University, heard that we were to talk matters over with Dr. Nkrumah, he asked to have a conference with us. He greatly appreciates what Dr. Nkrumah has done, but fears too rapid progress, the danger of the government getting into the hands of untrained people, and possible dictatorship.

Here is the new Africa, eager, determined, able, but far from perfect. The program may be too fast. Certainly mistakes will occur, but these people will succeed with their own government more quickly than our forefathers did.

The man who introduced us to the Gold Coast represents Africa to us, Mr. J. C. Hagan. His youngest son is now a student at the State College of Washington and is known to Mrs. Sloan's mother. Mr. Hagan is sixty years old and suffers of diabetes, but he met us at the Accra airport at 3.00 a. m. and took us to our hotel. He had written us a beautiful letter in English. He is a bookkeeper in the office of University College at Achimota. He lives in a house not unlike ours at Elon College. It was at his home that we became acquainted with several African dishes.

The greatest factor in the progress of the Gold Coast is the church. It has been responsible for the most of the schools of the nation. When we learned that we could not get plane reservations to leave Accra on Saturday as we had planned, Mr. Hagan immediately contacted the Methodist church officials, who invited me to preach in the Wesley Church on Sunday morning and the Freeman Church that night. These are purely African churches. Of the 2,000 people at the morning service, there were but two other white people. There were no other whites among the 500 attending the evening service.

The clergy insisted upon dressing me up in a clerical collar and preaching gown. Both services were extremely ritualistic. The morning service, held in a beautiful red-stone building, was two hours in length.

Earlier in the week, I had met with the Accra ministers, Presbyterian, Anglican, Methodist and Salvation Army. These African gentlemen impressed me as the most thoughtful, considerate group of clergy I had ever met. With their help, the Gold Coast will go far.

III—NIGERIA.

An eight-passenger plane skimmed over French territory and landed us at Lagos, the capital of Nigeria. This service belongs to WAAC, which is not a woman soldier, but the West Africa Airways Corporation. Its symbol is the flying elephant, as the symbol of Mobilgas is the flying horse.

We think of Nigeria and the Gold Coast together, both British possessions, but with 30,000,000 people, the population of Nigeria is six times that of the Gold Coast. In area it is about the size of the United States east of the Mississippi. This size, with many more tribes and languages makes for less unity and therefore less progress than the Gold Coast has, but even here progress is rapid. A larger percentage of government positions are held by Europeans, although the majority of the cabinet posts are held by Africans.

Some of you may have heard the broadcast of the interview I had with the Minister or Secretary of Labor of the Nigerian government. He is typical of many of the leaders of the new Africa, able, intelligent, progressive. He had his education in the Baptist academy at Lagos and at Oxford University.

Extreme tribal differences and jealousies make cooperation difficult, but as people move to the cities, such as the port of Lagos with 300,000 people, or the ancient native city of Ibadan 120 miles in the interior with 350,000,

AFRICA SPEAKS.

Dr. John Reuling, says Pattie Lee C'oghill, knows more about Africa than any other person in the United States, with the possible exception of one person. That is saying a great deal. How fortunate we are to have this former missionary to Africa, this former college president in the States, as our eminent secretary of the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions for Africa.

At the School of Missions, Dr. Reuling gave out a great many facts, both about the continent in general and our missions in particular. A few of these ideas are repeated for the benefit of those who did not get to go, and who want to have some of them for use in connection with the study of Africa next year.

One of the most startling is this: There are more Christians in Africa, south of the Sahara (this does not include Egypt and the other "Mediterranean" regions) than in all the other so-called "mission lands" put together—some 22,000,000 of them!

We are nearer the west coast of Africa than people there are to Africans on the farthest side of that continent.

Our industries are dependent to a large extent on Africa for such raw materials as uranium, tinplate, copper, chrome, chocolate, wool and many other products—not forgetting diamonds and gold.

All the local pastors of our churches in Africa are supported by the Africans—we pay not one penny for this.

South Africa Mission.

Our South African churches are entirely self-supporting—the local churches, school fees, missionary work in Mozambique. There we have 10,000 members and 8,000 "inquirers."

Our Board is supposed to train the ministers—and for that we have one man who runs a three-year theological school, mimeographing his own teaching materials, etc. Adams College is now deeded to a local board, but we have two missionaries on the staff. Inanda Seminary for Girls has about half the missionary teachers it needs.

In Johannesburg we have three "trouble shooting" missionaries, to help the local pastors and churches when called on for aid. One missionary works directly with the miners and has eleven local pastors who work with him. One is Miss Corinne Nordquist, who does religious education work, and from whom there is a letter in the packet.

We have heard a great deal about the Jan Hofmeyr School of Social Service, where Ray Phillips is the missionary-director. Well, out of a budget of $125,000 we pay one-half of Mr. Phillips' salary, and he has to raise the rest locally, so we cannot claim too much glory for the great work it does!

The eighteen missionaries in South Africa have a $3,000 a year total work fund for expenses from us.

In Rhodesia we have 2,000 members and six local pastors. Here is located Mt. Silinda School and a hospital and circuit of day schools. The church there supports 120 African teachers, and we furnish one missionary supervisor.

This "mission" is unique in that the form used elsewhere in our missionary work for supervision has been discarded and a more democratic one substituted. Ordinarily, our missionaries in a certain geographical area form a "mission" which makes the important decisions concerning the church work there. In Rhodesia, however, we now have a "mission council" which includes not only the missionaries, but the local pastors and representative lay men and women who vote on Board affairs—vacations, asking for new missionaries, salaries, etc. This may set the pattern for our missions around the world.

Angola Mission.

There are no denominations, as we know them, in Angola, Portuguese West Africa. There, where Canadians, Baptists of the English variety, Methodists and others work in areas separate from ours, all are members of "The Church of Christ."

This is a part of Portugal, and, therefore, Roman Catholicism is the state church. For instance, every Roman priest has power from the government of performing marriage ceremonies. But if a couple wants to be married by a Protestant minister, they must first have a civil marriage performed by a magistrate—perhaps six days walk from their own home—who may keep them waiting around for a day or two while he gets around to doing it, and then have the church ceremony when they get back home.

Here free labor is 30 cents a day for a man, 6 cents a day for a woman, and 3 cents a day for a child—with prices much higher than here for everything except the locally raised products. However, much of the labor is "forced labor," which is practically slavery. At the end of four years of such work—which all must give at fifteen years of age—a man will get $12 "take home pay."

In spite of all this, our church of 40,000 members is completely self-supporting. Here there are no public schools, but the church has 2,000 of them. Furthermore, they sent money to Greek refugees through Church World Service and send missionaries to the coast where their men are in forced labor camps. Through a number of years the churches have been putting aside pennies for medical education for someone who would some day go to study and come back to them to serve. That boy is now ready to start his medical education in Portugal.

Imagine a church scene where 2,000 stand up and pledge to give one-tenth of their earnings to the church, or where a large group promises to give one day's pay out of six. That is a common scene in this mission where Carl Dilles, the Henry McDowell's and others are at work, guiding the local ministers, helping in the schools and in other ways undergirding the work the African church is doing.

A Church Member.

To become a church member in Africa is not a simple matter. It takes consecration, faith and hard work. This is the process:

An uneducated African will go to his pastor and tell him that he would like to be a follower of Christ. He will first be taught to read and write—not an easy thing for an adult. Then for two or three years, he will go to school at night, where he will be taught Bible by a deacon or deaconess. Then he will face the congregation of his church—the biggest church of our denomination in Africa—and be examined by the minister and deacons. Among the questions are these:

1. Have you brought another to Christ, and who is it?

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Boys and Girls:

We have been having very hot weather. Hot weather seems to go with Sunday School Conventions, and Eastern Virginia's was last Tuesday at Bethlehem. As long as I can remember, it has been a very hot day, but the fellowship, good food and the speaking usually makes up for the heat.

There have been some accounts in the newspaper of a large Sunday school parade which the children of Brooklyn, New York, held recently. Each church had its teachers and pupils marching by departments, and there were over 50,000 of them. It must have been a very thrilling sight to behold—boys and girls and teachers, flags and banners. Think how many there were.

Some small communities hold D. V. B. S. parades before schools open, during or at the conclusion. In one town there were three churches, and all cooperated in the school and parade. Onlookers can be assured that there are boys and girls who believe in God and Jesus and who study about them.

Nearly a hundred Negro boys and girls enjoyed a D. V. B. S. at Franklinton Center last week. Two of our national workers, Miss Anderson and Miss Eastman, were present to show teachers the proper teaching methods and to help the boys and girls to have a useful church school experience.

Newport News Church School was having its school the same week.

Let's have some reports from your church about schools. What have you been doing? Nothing? That is what we will think if you do not let us hear.

ENJOY IT YOURSELF, MOTHER.

By MABEL-RUTH JACKSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Hippety, scratch,
To the garden patch,
And pull some radishes!"

So sang Mother merrily, pointing at my brother, Timmy. And away went Timmy, chuckling, to come back presently with some small pink radishes, which he washed very carefully before giving them to mother.

"Sandra, honey, pick up your toys and put your dolly's clothes away," Mother said to my little sister.

"Oh, Mother, sing it, like you did to Timmy, begged Sandra.

"Well-uh—" began Mother, "how's this?"

Bubble, bubble,

Little trouble

For Miss Sandra Hubbard

To put toys in the cupboard!"

"Miss Sandra Hubbard, Miss Sandra Hubbard," repeated Sandra, giggling at the new surname as she put her playthings away.

"Oh," sighed my friend, Elsa, wistfully, as she helped me to make my bed, "I wish my mother would have as good a time as your mother does."

Elsa and Johnnie, children of a neighbor, had come to spend the day with us, and they were enjoying the busy pleasant confusion of our getting ready for the picnic that Mother had planned.

"We beg and beg, when we want a picnic," Elsa went on, "then Mother finally says 'A-all ri-ight.' But she won't leave the house till all the work is done; and she does it all herself, because she thinks we can't do it well enough, and then it's so late we don't have much time left to enjoy ourselves. If I ask her to let something go, she says, 'Suppose there should be an accident or anything to make outsiders come in, and my house was not clean and orderly, I'd feel so ashamed I'd never get over it.'"

"Oh," I said inadequately, trying to think what it would be like if our mother behaved that way.

"Mother doesn't smile or sing; she just looks worried to death," continued Elsa. Then she added loyally, "Oh, I do love Mother very much. She's so good and does so much for us, but—well, I wish—I wish she wouldn't work so hard and would be happy, like your mother is."

This made me think. I had always taken it for granted that our mother was as she was—gay and eager seeming to have the same good time that we children had. When we were going out on a jaunt of some kind, Mother would assign to each one of us something to do about the house while she made the sandwiches, mixed the lemonade, and packed the rest of the "eats" for our out-of-doors meal.

Small children, even when they are doing their best, are not very efficient, so, of course, the house did not look spick and span on those occasions. But we thought it did, and Mother did not disabuse us. She praised each one and sang and laughed and hustled, and what a holiday spirit we were in when we started off! It makes me feel good even now to remember it.

If Elsa and Johnnie's mother had only realized what a difference zest and shared eager anticipation make, surely she would not have been so concerned about what "people might think." She would have known how much more important it is that children should think joyful thoughts and have happy times—with precious memories to follow.

responsibilities are ours. They are great, but not greater than the One who placed the responsibilities upon us. It is not resources that we lack. It is faith and consecration that we need. May we assume joyfully the responsibility of a full program necessary for the progress of the church and the coming of the Kingdom.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

A few days ago, I heard a businessman say, "Business seems to be improving." There may not be as much in the usual business transaction today as in the immediate past, but in most instances there is plenty of business. This morning, Friday, I was in the National Bank of Burlington, and the cashier said to me, "It is surprising how good collections are." Really, people seem to have more money today than a year ago. I wonder if these instances are typical of business in other sections? Are we coming out of the recession and headed toward better times again?

If our church people are prospered, as a rule they will contribute to their church program and their denominational responsibilities. Practically all church-related colleges are badly in need of funds. Elon College is no exception. The months of July and August are our hardest months. We

YOUTH CONFERENCE AT PURDUE UNIVERSITY.

The role of Christian youth in politics, in labor and management, and in raising United States moral standards are among the topics to be discussed at the fourth quadrennial Christian Youth Conference of North America, to be held August 25-30, on the campus of Purdue University.

The meeting is sponsored by the United Christian Youth Movement of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A.

During the five-day convention some 2,000 young people and their adult leaders from all parts of the United States will try to discover how better to apply the message of Christianity to their own lives and to problems facing the United States today.

The young delegates, of high school and college age, will represent youth fellowships of more than 30 denominations, as well as state councils of churches affiliated with the UCYM, and other youth-serving agencies.

Among the prominent speakers to address the youthful delegation will be Senator Estes Kefauver of Tennessee; Senator Wayne Morse of Oregon; John Ramsey, staff member of the national C. I. O., Atlanta, Georgia, and Miss Majorie Penney, director of Fellowship House in Philadelphia.

Other conference speakers include Rev. Charles Templeton, National Council of Churches evangelist; Dr. James Robinson, pastor of the Church of the Master, Presbyterian, New York City, and Dr. Gerald E. Knoff, executive secretary of the National Council's Division of Christian Education.

The convention will open on August 25 with a pageant, "This Moment," dealing with cooperative youth work, and will close with a religious drama on the Purdue Music Hall stage, in which the young actors will interpret Christian fellowship.

W. C. C. WORKCAMPERS OFF TO EUROPE.

Twenty-two World Council of Churches Youth Department workcampers from 13 states sailed on June 10, on the S. S. Nelly, departing from New York. This was the first contingent of 75 young people from the churches of the United States who will be serving overseas in this program during the coming months. Forty-five more sailed from Montreal the following week.

This first contingent will participate in 13 workcamps in Europe. They will be building church buildings, youth centers, remodeling an old people's home, digging drainage canals for a college, reconstructing a center for youth and adults in a mining community in northern France, renovating and doing reconstruction work at the Hubertus Evangelical Hospital in Berlin, and in an apprentice home at Evangelists Training School in Germany. These young people will each be given from four to six weeks of hard, manual labor in order to meet a need which would not otherwise be met. In addition to the manual work, the workcamp programs will involve service to the community in home visits, participation in church services, recreation programs and vacation church schools for children.

AUSTRALIAN YOUTH TO EVALUATE INFLUENCE OF CHURCH.

A debate on whether or not the influence of the Christian Church is declining will be a part of the program of a nation-wide assembly of Lutheran youth in Australia scheduled to take place in Tanunda, South Australia, September 19-23.

The assembly, which meets under the theme, "Life Through the Living Word," will be open to an unlimited number of delegates from all parts of Australia, interested in subjects that have been treated in the Lutheran World Federation's study document on Youth and Students.

Lectures will be given in Tanunda on subjects such as: The Predicament of Modern Youth; Youth's Responsibility to the Word; Youth's Responsibility to the Church, and the Church's Responsibility to Youth, as well as Youth's Responsibility to the World.

There will also be Bible study and an open forum for debate.

RELAX WITH MAX.

The people in Asheboro, both young and old, certainly appreciate having Rev. Fred P. Register and Mr. Joe Stephenson to conduct their revival. This was a week of inspiration in the Asheboro Church. Hope you young people will remember that you don't need to be old to need Christ. You may be strong as Charles Atlas, wise as a college sophomore, and rich as Little Abner; but you still lack that certain something that can make your life really worthwhile.

Young Harry: "Well, Uncle, as a matter of fact, I'm the only one who has a bicycle at present."

Some people think it is terrible because they can't understand all about God. I'm surely glad they can't. They'd probably go into business for themselves.

CALIFORNIA STUDENTS LEAVE ON VISIT TO INDIA.

Eleven students from the University of California at Los Angeles, inspired by the Rev. Dr. James H. Robinson, pastor of the Church of the Master, New York City, to do something about improving India-American relations, are on their way to India. They will spend eight weeks in a good will tour of Indian Universities telling Indian students about life in the United States and learning of Indian problems at first hand. The group is interfaith and interracial, with Roman Catholics, Protestants, Greek Orthodox, Jews and Mormons participating. Both whites and Negroes are among the delegation.

The idea for the journey grew out of student discussions during a visit of Dr. Robinson to the campus early this year. Dr. Robinson, who has just returned from a round-the-world speaking tour to students of ten countries under the sponsorship of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church (U. S. A.), has urged that young people be sent from this country to India to help create

Samuel, Judge and Prophet.

LESSON V—AUGUST 3, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Direct your hearts unto the Lord, and serve him only."—I Samuel 7:3.

LESSON: I Samuel 7:5-17.

DEVOTIONAL READING: PROV. 3:1-12.

A Day of Penitence and Fasting.

The Israelites had sinned against their God. They had worshipped false gods of Baalim and Ashtaroth. And things had not been going well with them. They never do, when a nation turns its back on God. To be sure, there may be material prosperity and material progress. But eventually and inevitably things have a way of back-firing when a nation forgets God and worships false gods. The Israelites knew that they did not have God's blessing upon them, even though they were receiving his blessings. Life was empty, hearts were hungry, religion was meaningless.

And then Samuel called Israel to repentance. He bade them put away their strange gods and to turn again to the Lord. He called them together in a great assembly for a day of prayer and fasting. He interceded in their behalf and helped them to see the folly and the sinfulness of their ways. In a symbolic ceremony, in which he poured out water representing the pouring out of their hearts in repentance, the people renounced their false gods and Samuel assured them of the Divine forgiveness.

One wonders what might happen if we had a day of national prayer and fasting, a day that was observed nationally, a day when the people of our nation, of all races and religions, humbled themselves before God, confessed their sins, fasted, prayed and turned from the false gods that so many of them worship. We have tried about everything else in this country—it might help to try that. No telling what might happen if we did this, did this sincerely, did this humbly, did it as a nation.

Samuel as Priest.

Samuel was a priest in the sense that he represented God to the people and brought the people to God. To be sure, not in a formal and elaborate way, not by any official action on the part of a religious hierarchy. But he had the gift and the genius for acting as the mediator between God and man. It is an important function. Protestants believe, of course, in the "priesthood of believers," that is that every man can have direct access to God. The fact is, however, that many people need somebody to help them in this delicate matter. The parish minister, the pastor of every church, ought to be a priest unto his people, the one who introduces them to, and intercedes for them before God. This priestly function is not emphasized enough in our Protestant Church. In reacting to the abuses of the priesthood, we have lost many of the values of the priestly function.

Samuel as Prophet.

A boy once defined a prophet as "a man who gets to know what God is thinking." It is not a bad definition. He is a man who speaks for God, because he knows that God has spoken to him. And because he knows what God is thinking, he often is able to foretell what God is going to do. But a prophet is not primarily a glorified "fortune teller," a "crystal ball gazer." A prophet is one who can say, "Thus saith the Lord," because his sensitive mind and heart have understood what God has said.

Samuel as Judge.

Like many of the others mentioned in the book of Judges, Samuel was also a "judge." He was the last, and by all odds the greatest of the "judges." Whereas the majority of them were simply "strong men" in a military sense, Samuel ruled by the strength of character. "He judged Israel." He was a glorified Circuit Court, going from one city of Israel to another, to sit as a judge and to render verdicts, which because of his wisdom, his impartiality and his unquestioned integrity of character, were accepted by the people as authoritative and final.

Samuel as a Man of God.

The source of Samuel's influence and power as a leader was his stirring character. He was a man of God. His supreme loyalty was to God, and to God he gave ungrudging obedience. In a land in which so many of his fellowmen were serving the false gods, Samuel builded an altar and worshipped the Lord. He constantly reminded his people that loyalty to God, who had blessed them so often and so bountifully in the past, was the only hope of the nation. He was one of the strongest and the best and the ablest leaders of Israel. Public office was to him a public trust. And patriotism and religion for him were almost synonymous terms. We need more leaders in America today of Samuel's stature, of his faith, of his spirit of sacrifice.

TOMORROW'S GOALS.

and their problems will change very greatly in these next years. Because National Mission Boards no longer send missionaries as such to sections of our own country, we have not lost interest in national mission boards, nor has their work decreased. Rather it has changed and greatly increased, and the demands are greater than ever.

So in the foreign field—the work will be indigenously, but as Christians in other lands develop and extend their work and the church grows, the demands for help from us will be greater than ever.

To prepare for this change which is quickly coming upon us, we should have at least a half-million dollars to help further the training of national Christian leaders. We must be financially able to pick young men and young women of other countries in their high school years and assure them of their education for specific tasks. Today we have a young man who wants to be a Christian doctor in Angola. He must attend college and medical school in Portugal. How can a pastor in Angola financially aid his son through such a long period? We must be able to do so. How else can we staff our Christian hospitals in that land? We must have a far-sighted program of leadership training. At least one missionary's salary a year must go into the training of that young man.

Multiply this one instance by all the types of national leaders needed—nurses, teachers, doctors, pastors, social workers, agricultural specialists—then multiply by the number of countries where the American Board has responsibility and then by the number of communities in these countries where the needs are immediate, and you have some conception of the tremendous proportions of our task in the training of national leadership.

Here lies the front line of defense of a free world. How blind we are!

The second emphasis recommended by your Foreign Board of Commissioners is a bit more intangible but, when its implications are understood, it will be recognized as equally important. Though a group of the followers of Jesus Christ can be found in every country of the world, yet in many lands it is a minority group and in most instances a very small and weak minority group. Christians have always been as leaven. Once planted Christianity grows, though at times it appears to grow exceedingly slowly.

The field of mass communications is vital, and we must in the world church, through united effort, do more in radio and visual aids and other mass media. Our own contribution as a denomination is exceptional so far as personnel is concerned. Ronald Brodges, Everett Parker, Alex Ferguson, Dr. Laubach, are giving outstanding leadership and service. Financially, our contribution has been embarrassingly small. I see no way this can be altered under present circumstances, but surely circumstances can be altered if we seriously believe in our Christian mission to the world.

Your executive officers and Prudential Committee have felt that at the moment we could make a contribution to this task of approaching the masses by making funds available for the preparation of simple tracts.

Our own missionaries, Dr. and Mrs. Frank Laubach, have been doing a great work in the field of literacy. But when people are taught to read simple texts—what shall they read? We have presses in Angola, India, the Philippines—with financial help these presses can publish these tracts.

The Board has allocated another $50,000 for this work which will be carried on in cooperation with the Department of Literature and Literacy of the Division of Foreign Missions of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A., and in close cooperation with the National Council of the Churches in other lands. The aim is to strengthen the Christian Church and extend its influence.

As an aside, I should report that Dr. and Mrs. Laubach have been loaned to World Literacy, Inc., and for the next year at least will be conducting a vast literacy program in India, adequately financed by American Foundations and in full cooperation with the government of India.

We believe we can undergird the life of the churches in the countries where we serve by making available to them further funds for use in the fields of agricultural extension and village health work. These details are still to be worked out. But, again, a sum of $25,000 has been set aside for further pioneering work in these areas.

I have not touched on building needs—they are ever before us, pressing upon us for action. Your Foreign Department Committee up to the present time has not reached any firm conclusion in this regard. However, we do have to face the issue at once. Some building is going forward. Thanks to the interest of Dr. Harold West of Indianapolis and the contributions of many friends and foundations, we can proceed at once to build the men's dormitories at Silliman College of Theology. All the funds are not in hand, but we feel certain they will be. Dean Jim McKinley has returned to the field and we trust this building will be ready for occupancy by July 1, 1953.

Buildings are needed in so many places—a chapel at Inanda Seminary for girls in South Africa, a building at Lady Doak College in India, dormitories for our Near East schools—a religious center at Doshisha University in Japan, and assistance to churches in constructing the needed places of worship—help in the building of parish houses for the new work with young people which is so important and growing so rapidly. The needs are too great to completely enumerate. The American Board must look to the establishment of funds of substantial size, several million dollars, as loan and grant funds for our world church and its extension.

To be financially in a sound position as we are—that is, to have curtailed our regular work so that we are not faced annually with a current deficit, is sound; to have a forward looking foreign policy which stretches our imagination, and places great demands upon us, is important—but these are not enough. Money, plans, buildings, are of value only as they assist that major purpose of reaching the peoples of the world with the gospel of Jesus Christ. Our work is in vain unless men and women are brought into relationship with Him.

To have this sense of mission, we must have a deep spiritual life. Toward this end the International Missionary Council holds a world conference in Willingen, Germany, this summer out of which we hope will come a theme and a movement for a major world Christian emphasis in 1953.

The implications here are tremendous—the spiritual revitalization of our churches through a renewed sense of mission—a recommitment of individuals to Jesus Christ—and all that implies in personal life, in social life, in national and international relations. Such a spiritual movement begins with you.

What implications, too, for the life of the world! Here is the true basis for peace—a world fellowship of love and understanding which transcends national or racial lines. It is the fulfillment of the hope of Jesus "that they may all be one as thou art in me,"—a spiritual oneness—"That the world may know." This should not be just an emphasis for 1953. It must be a continued emphasis.

It is well that we have this device to assist us—to call us back to our sense of mission and unity.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

2. Have you given of your time and your money to the church freely?
3. Have you lived in peace and harmony and love with your relatives, friends and neighbors?

And then the congregation has a chance to indicate if they think the prospective member has answered correctly. If someone thinks not, he has to study and work some more before being received into the active membership of the church.

How do you think our qualifications for church membership "stack up" against these? Do you not think it would be a good thing if our prospective members were required to do Bible study and practice Christian living? It is certainly worth thinking about.

* * * * *

Christian women can and must rise to meet the agonizing need presented by the world situation, by: (1) rising above denominational barriers and becoming members of one Church of Christ throughout the world; (2) uncompromisingly standing for peace and good will; (3) doing even more to help refugees, and (4) ourselves having a new birth of real faith.—Victoria Booth Demorest.

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Thank you for making this good report. I like to visualize the men, the women and the children in Sunday schools making an offering for the Orphanage. The people at Hope Mills passed the offering plate for the Orphanage, result $28.00. The folks at Robert Lee House's home church, Pope's Chapel, circulated the news through their classes that it was "Orphanage Sunday," result $21.00. So we could go, right down the the list of the fourteen Sunday schools in this report.

Sunday school is a pretty picture. Little children, dressed so prettily, prondly walking in with the lessons and their offerings. Juniors, boys and girls, equally fine, although I have heard somewhere that boys are made of "snips and snails and puppy-dog tails," romping up to their doors and suddenly remembering to quiet down, as they shuffle through the doors into their room or department. Here is the hope of the church. Or see the young people—teen-agers and over; or the women's classes and the men's. Take it all in all, there is one of earth's best pictures—men, women, young people and children making their heaven-blessed way into Sunday school.

The singing, the responsive readings, the prayers, and even the "pep" talks—and then the lesson. I have seen it all, from the time I was a member of the little boys' class in Mt. Bethel Sunday School, Rockingham County, North Carolina, until I was the watcher from the pastor's study window where I saw several hundred trooping in. God bless the Sunday school, the superintendent and officers, the teachers and pupils; and may they remember that it is more blessed to give than to receive, and have a real joy in sharing with every enterprise of our church.

Here, too, we are teaching children the joy of Sunday school. Every Sunday they go forth to their classes as pretty and fresh as you please. To the eleven o'clock hour of worship they go, too. And they are happy to go, although, so far as their own parents are concerned, "they walk alone." But they hold on to us, and love us, and we love them and help them in return. Did you notice that I said "We," that is, I mean you, and you, and you, everyone who has a share in our churches has a share in this home for these children.

Faithfulness is a secret of success in anything. Faithfully following through on every duty, every kindness and every opportunity to serve, adds up. Negligence tears down and subtracts. Wouldn't it be wonderful to have at the end of every task, or day, the ancient, honored words: "Thou hast been faithful." It is a good goal to strive toward, and there is good success in it.

Thank you for all your faithfulness toward this institution and these boys and girls.

OATES.

Arthur C. Oates, 77 prominent lumberman, orchardist and farmer, and one of the foremost citizens of the Winchester area, departed this life June 2, at the Winchester Memorial Hospital.

Mr. Oates was born in Hampshire County, West Virginia, on August 22, 1874, and for over 60 years was a member of the Timber Ridge Congregational Christian Church of High View, West Virginia. He was also for many years a member of the County Commission of Hampshire County. At the time of his death he was president of the Western Frederick Bank at Gore, Virginia, a director of the Green Chemical Company, and a director of the Virginia Storage Company. He was one of the original organizers and a present director of the Virginia Livestock Auction Market. He was also a member of the Lions Club the Elks Club and the Roush Fire Company of Winchester. He had extensive real estate holdings in Winchester, Frederick County and Hampshire County, West Virginia. He was active in church and civic work, with a keen interest in the affairs of Timber Ridge Church.

Funeral services were held at Timber Ridge Congregational Christian Church and final rites were conducted by Rev. Roy D. Coulter, former pastor of the church.

HOOK.

Loy H. Hook was born near Edinburgh, Virginia, in the Old Fort Valley, December 20, 1884. He died at his home near Winchester, June 5, 1952, age 67 years. He was a farmer and a contractor in timber all of his life.

The deceased is survived by his widow, Mrs. Kathleen Sherman Hook, one son, Lester Hook, and two daughters, Mrs. Bennie Johnson and Mrs. Ross Spellman, and several grandchildren.

The deceased became a Christian early in his youth and united with the Timber Ridge Church, where he held membership at the time of his death. Funeral services were conducted by Revs. Dan Spaid and Robert A. Whitten, Saturday afternoon, June 7, in the presence of a large congregation of loved ones and friends. The body was laid to rest in the church cemetery.

Mr. Hook was a great sufferer for many months before his death. His unquestioning faith continued a source of strength to the end of his earthly pilgrimage. He was faithful and loyal to his church and was known as a Christian. We may well say: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

ROBT. A. WHITTEN.

KELLY.

We, the members of the Maggie I Moran Missionary Society of Shallowwell Congregational Christian Church, wish to pay a loving tribute to the memory of our beloved member, Mrs. Florence Riddle Kelly, wife of Mr. Jesse Kelly, whom God in his infinite wisdom took from our midst on April 28, 1952.

In her passing our society has lost a very beloved and most beautiful Christian character. Until her illness, the society did not have a more faithful member, and a life of loyal service and devotion has now been taken from our midst.

Mrs. Kelly's life was characterized by deep sympathy and understanding. She was a kind and loving wife and mother, and her inspiring influence will always remain with her family. Her pleasant smile, her friendly disposition and her cooperative Christian spirit will long be missed by her many friends and loved ones at Shallowwell.

Therefore, be it resolved:

First, that we thank God for her life and devotion to our society; and Second, that we mourn her loss and extend our deepest sympathy to her husband and family.

Mrs. H. S. CLARK,

MISSIONS AT HOME AND ABROAD.

and their children go to the same schools and learn English, unity slowly develops. Education is still largely in the hands of Christian schools, although in the north, followers of Mohammed dominate with their limited Moslem schools.

I drove up to Ibadan with two young women, Baptist missionaries new to the country. It was my first experience at the wheel of a right-hand drive car driving on the left side of the road. The left-handed gear-shift was the most disturbing factor. I went to Ibadan to see four things: the countryside, the headquarters of the Southern Baptist mission, a truly native city and the new University of Nigeria.

The last was the most interesting, with its ultra-modern dormitories—I wish we had some of them at Elon College. The university, a purely Nigerian institution, plans a great medical department with an 800-bed hospital. The university will also have a school of theology which some day may be somewhat like Duke's. Nigerians have grave doubts about our denominations—Why Baptists? Why Methodists? If Christianity is Christian, why is it divided?

A major contribution to Nigerian Christianity is that established by our Southern Baptists. We met some representatives from North Carolina. The Church Missionary Society, representing the Church of England, has a larger work than do the Baptists. The British Methodists have about as much activity in Nigeria as do the Baptists.

Mrs. Sloan and I had a good interview with the pastor of the First Baptist Church of Lagos, who this year is president of the Nigerian Baptist Association. We recorded our visit with him, but the cost of sending the tape to Burlington by air mail was $7.40, so I am afraid we cannot do much of that. We both enjoyed participating in the Wednesday evening meeting at the Baptist church. I doubt if many churches in North Carolina or Virginia had a larger attendance.

A rapidly increasing number of students from West Africa are securing their college or advanced education in Great Britain or the United States. A young man who heard us speak at the prayer meeting brought us a lengthy letter the next morning begging us to help him secure a scholarship to an American school. There are many such opportunities for American people to help the progress of Africa and at the same time help our own people get a world understanding.

do need the help of our churches and Sunday schools so very badly.

Has your church paid its Sustaining Fund? Could it possibly send a contribution within the month of July, or the early days of August? Have you paid your conference apportionment in full? If not, an additional payment would be of tremendous assistance. When faculty salaries, grocery bills and light bills confront you, it is most embarrassing if you are unable to meet them. The churches and Sunday schools of our Convention have been most generous to the college and their generosity is greatly appreciated.

"LOVE in the CHRISTIAN FAITH"

By DR. DANIEL D. WILLIAMS

Associate Professor of Theology, Chicago Theological Seminary

LECTURE III.—"CHRISTIAN LOVE AND SOCIAL JUSTICE."

THE SPIRIT OF CHRISTIANITY is betrayed if love is regarded as a substitute for justice. Christian love cannot be understood apart from the righteousness of God, and his righteousness implies justice in society. Love which does not seek justice for the neighbor is mere sentimentality.

Christianity brings a new standard of justice in human affairs. It believes in the potential worth of every man, and in the need of all men to live in brotherhood with one another. The Christian is never satisfied with social orders which separate one group from another, or which allow the powerful to exploit the weak. The only just society, from a Christian point of view, is that which allows the maximum opportunity for growing human fellowship. Christianity rejects a barren uniformity such as that declared by Communism; but it also rejects an extreme individualism, which denies that the individual has obligations toward the use of his power, wealth and talents for the service of the whole community. Wealth is both an individual and a social product. Property rights protect personality, but property rights are finally subject to the claim of God, who wills that the earth's abundance shall serve the good of all people.

Christianity recognizes that the men who define justice and enforce it are men who are prone to injustice. Restraint on all human power is a Christian principle; for power wielded by sinful man is a threat to the good of the social order.

The Christian Gospel calls the Church and every Christian to wage an unceasing campaign against the evils of society which corrupt, brutalize and violate the dignity of human persons. At the same time, it calls all men to a repentant confession of their shared guilt for those evils. One authentic evidence of Christian love is to seek justice for the neighbor, and the neighbor is Everyman.

What Can I Do to Help Our College?

ELON HAS THE FACILITIES TO PROVIDE OUR RELIGIOUS LEADERSHIP

THE EXECUTIVE BOARD of the Southern Convention in session at Henderson on July 17 faced this question fairly and squarely. There was no disposition to evade the question or to shift the responsibility to someone else. The Board voted unanimously, requesting the pastors of the churches to interest the young people of our church, and the homes of our church, in Elon College. When a student enters Elon College he makes a great contribution to himself and to his church. His tuition and fees go to Elon College instead of to some other school, and this is of tremendous assistance to the college. He also makes a contribution to his denomination—the church that has administered to his religious life and spiritual guidance. He makes a contribution to himself in that he becomes a vital part of his denomination, thereby increasing his affection and multiplying his interest. Together pastors, parents and young people all, let us rise and patronize our college. If we do not, certainly no one else will.

News Flashes

Superintendent Wm. T. Scott delivered the sermon and had charge of the dedication service for the new church building at Mt. Gilead, in the Eastern North Carolina Conference on Sunday, July 20,

The Beverly Hills Church, Burlington, N. C., Rev. Walstein Snyder, pastor, held its Vacation Bible School from July 14-23. There was an enrollment of 81, with an average attendance of 55. Mr. William P. Tolley was the director of the school.

Dr. Will B. O'Neill, pastor of our Sanford, North Carolina, Congregational Christian Church, announces the following pulpit exchanges for the month of August: August 3, Dr. F. C. Lester; 10, Dr. Stanley C. Harrell; 17, Dr. Robert Lee House; and 24, Rev. Richard L. Jackson.

The pulpit at our Winchester, Va., Church, Rev. Robert A. Whitten, pastor, was filled on Sunday morning, July 27, by Superintendent Wm. T. Scott. The Winchester Church is at the present time engaged in their stewardship campaign, with special emphasis on tithing. A goodly number of the members of the church have indicated their desire to enter into the tithing covenant. Mr. Whitten is to be congratulated on this forward step.

Dr. Stanley I. Stuber, executive secretary of the Japan International Christian University Foundation, is the editor of a new book entitled "The Christian Reader," published by the Association Press. It is the September selection of the Religious Book Club. A collection of devotional material, from Christ to Walter Rauschenbush, it has been in process of construction over a period of some twenty years. Other books by Dr. Stuber include "The Living Water," "How We Got Our Denominations," "Treasury of the Christian Faith," and "Public Relations Manual for Churches."

Consider Establishing Church.

A group of approximately 45 people assembled at Glenco School, Alamance County, North Carolina, on Sunday afternoon, July 20, for the purpose of considering the possibility of establishing a new church in the Lakeview Community, between Burlington and Union Ridge. Mr. C. R. Faucette, a member of our First Church, Burlington, has donated a beautiful building lot as a prospect for the establishment of the work. There was a splendid group of young people in attendance for the first meeting on July 20, and a real eagerness for the establishment of a Sunday school and church in that community was evident. John G. Truitt, Jr., a ministerial student at Elon College, has made a survey of the community and was in charge of the meeting. He is to be congratulated on the splendid beginning of this work.

Rosemont Church to Observe Golden Anniversary.

On Sunday, August 10, Rosemont Christian Church will observe its golden anniversary.

Dr. Warren H. Denison, a former pastor of the church, will speak at the morning service on "The Contributions of the Past." Rev. Melvin Dollar, pastor, will follow Dr. Denison's address with a message on "The Challenge of the Future." Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Superintendent of the Southern Convention, will preside at the dedication service, which will conclude the morning service. The senior choir will render special music for this service.

There will be an afternoon service, beginning at 3 o'clock. At this service there will be a series of short talks by Dr. Denison, Dr. Scott, Dr. I. W. Johnson and Mrs. J. F. Morgan, widow of the late Rev. J. F. Morgan. The youth choir will render the special music for the afternoon service.

There will be a social hour following the afternoon program. Refreshments will be served in the social hall. It is hoped that many will renew old acquaintances at this time.

All former ministers, members and friends of Rosemont Church are invited to attend the services.

Timber Ridge Remembered in Oates Will.

Timber Ridge Christian Church, in the Virginia Valley Conference was the beneficiary of a large bequest recently. Mr. Arthur C. Oates, prominent citizen of Winchester, Virginia, and a member of the Timber Ridge Church for over 60 years, provided in his will for a trust fund for the church of $20,000.00, to be administered by the trustees for the upkeep of the church property and the cemetery. In addition to the trust fund, he left $5,000.00 for the support and upkeep of the church and $1,000.00 for the upkeep of the parsonage. He also remembered Bethel Church at Trone, Capon Chapel and Shiloh Church, leaving each of these bequests of $500.00.

A New University Is Dedicated

The dedication of the new International Christian University in Japan was of particular interest and concern to Christian people in many nations. As indicated by those in attendance, it was also of great importance to Japan and several other governments. Because it meant the beginning of the greatest of all interdenominational postwar projects, it caught the imagination of those who believe in international peace and goodwill.

The International Christian University is primarily an educational institution. While the dedication on April 29 was a religious service, everything pointed toward the actual opening of the University in April, 1953. The Language Institute, which was opened the day before, was a forerunner of this event.

Impressive Service.

Japanese leaders, both those of the church and of the government were delighted with the progress which has been made on the ICU campus (just outside Tokyo) during the past year. They had invested nearly a half million dollars in the project and were anxious to see something started.

H. I. H. Princess Chiehibu, sister-in-law of the Emperor, was present and emphasized the fact that ICU was being dedicated on the very day when Japan had regained her freedom.

Governor Hisato Ichimada of the Bank of Japan, who was chairman of the fund drive in Japan, pointed out the contribution which he was sure ICU would make not only to his country, but to the whole world.

Dr. Franklin Clark Fry, representing the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A., spoke on the theme, "Ecumenical Church and the University of Tomorrow." Dr. John A. MacLean of Richmond, Virginia, gave the prayer of dedication, and Dr. John Coventry Smith and Dr. Stanley I. Stuber spoke in behalf of the sponsors and the Foundation.

A most solemn moment occurred when Mrs. Ralph E. Diffendorfer made a gracious and impressive response to the memory of her husband, the first president of the Japan International Christian University Foundation.

President Hachiro Yuasa, after several short speeches by representatives of General Matthew Ridgeway and governments, responded in behalf of the University. The following is a brief summary of his address:

"University of Tomorrow."

Dr. Yuasa told the 450 invited guests, who had gathered in the beautiful student lounge on the fourth floor of the University Hall:

"It is with a deep sense of infinite gratitude—gratitude to God and men, that I stand before you in this solemn hour of dedication of the ICU campus, buildings and program. This is indeed a new day for the International Christian University-to-be as well as a new day for Japan. In the past, both talked much, promised much, expected much. Deservedly, both have suffered disillusionment, defeat, frustration. Today we turn a new page in our annals of progress. No longer do we entertain any illusion as to easy success or quick progress. With chastened realism, we face resolutely the manifold difficulties still ahead of us. With disciplined confidence, we pray for divine guidance and dedicate ourselves to do his will and not ours.

"ICU is fundamentally a university of tomorrow. Conceived in the spirit of Christian brotherhood, born out of tragedies of war, and dedicated to the proposition that truth and truth alone shall make men and nations free, ICU aspires to make its due contributions for the realization of a Christian and a democratic way of life in a New Japan and in a New Asia, by

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Board Schedules Building Fund Campaign

The Southern Convention, in biennial session at Durham, approved the proposal to raise a substantial amount on the National Church Building Fund Campaign, and authorized its Executive Committee to implement the vote "in whatever ways it may deem wise and necessary to assure the success of the undertaking.

The Executive Committee met in Henderson on July 17 and voted to accept a quota of $135,000, with the provision that the $50,000 already authorized for Home Missions, be a part of the total. In view of the fact that the two and a half million dollar campaign for Elon has already begun, it was decided that the College Campaign would take precedence until March 1, 1953, at which time the Church Building Fund Campaign will begin in the Convention.

Mr. William K. Newman is our area director. We are linked with other states along the East Coast: New York, $385,000; Connecticut, $475,000; Middle Atlantic, $150,000; Pennsylvania, $60,000; Puerto Rico, $8,000. Total for the area, $1,213,000.

For important background material on this campaign, read "Let Us Rise Up and Build," by Truman Douglass, in our July 10 issue.

Kaleidoscopic Journalism

There are many emphases in our Church Paper from week to week. Generous space has been given in recent weeks to a presentation of General Council material. We have brought the heart of the Council messages to our readers during recent weeks. We believe this is an important service. . . . It was a pleasure to publish the fine series of articles on Family Life, just concluded, by Rev. Henry E. Robinson. Be sure and file them for future reference, study or discussion. . . . Those of you who have particular interest in Africa appreciate the report on the African Conference by William Cledes, Pattie Lee Coghill's resume of Dr. Reuling's messages, and the first-hand reporting by Dr. Sloan. These are distinctive services of religious journalism.

Now we turn to a new emphasis. We are told that The Sun helped bring Elon College into existence. Perhaps we can give it additional help just now. This issue turns the spotlight of attention on Elon, its present needs and opportunities. Please note. We can help. The Convention's Executive Board voted unanimously to set 700 students as our official goal for Elon.

Release the Elon Sustaining Fund!

Do you know a high school graduate who should or might enter college this fall? Perhaps there is such a person in your family, neighborhood or church. There are young people who have not decided to enter college. Some feel that a college education is not important; while others feel that they cannot afford it.

Here is an opportunity to be of service. Have a talk with this prospective college student. Discuss the lasting advantages of a college education. Emphasize the fact that this is one of the most crucial decisions of a lifetime, that it is one to be made in faith and prayer. It is not too late. Arrangements can be made. Every ambitious youth can secure a college education.

Then, talk in terms of a specific college. Get a catalogue of Elon College. Study it and find out what your church college offers. Talk in terms of vocation. Stress the importance of attending a church related college. A host of blessings flow from a right decision.

If you are able to persuade a young person to enter Elon this fall, it will give you a thrill. It will be one of the great experiences of your life. You will then be eager to talk to other young people. Try it! Write to young friends at a distance.

In addition to the benefits which the young person will experience, Elon itself will be blessed. Students are essential to the life and vitality of an educational institution. Elon can operate with maximum efficiency only when it has a maximum enrollment. Let us engage now in a concerted effort to push the enrollment at Elon to 700, and thus release the Sustaining Fund for building purposes. Give this job priority on your schedule and engage in this labor of love for your church college. We can do the job, but there is no time to lose.

A Problem That Must Be Faced

(A GUEST EDITORIAL BY PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH)

Go where you will in the Southern Convention for any kind of church meeting, and you will find Elon College students or graduates in the meeting and usually in charge. This is evidence that the college is contributing to the church and is building itself into the very life of the church. This was the purpose of the founders of the college, and it is gratifying to realize that their hopes are being realized in their church today.

To build a church is more than erecting a house of worship. The church is built in the minds and hearts of the people. The house of meeting is only a place of worship. When you build a church, it must be built out of men, women and children; communicants who are compatible in their beliefs, agreeable in their responsibilities and cooperative in their total efforts. In order for a church to have a constituency of this character the communicants must have similar experiences in instruction, in training and in cooperative efforts.

During the public school experiences of our children, as a rule, we have them in our homes and in our churches. They are under our supervision. The influence in the home and in the church has a tendency to make them a part of the church. The influence of the public schools may have a tendency to be away from the church, but that tendency is overcome by the influence of the home, the Sunday school and the church. When the sons and daughters of our church reach college age they advance into a crucial atmosphere; an atmosphere that bids fare to influence their thinking, their convictions, and to mold their character. Friendship, habits and decisions that are made in a college career become lasting and are potent factors in determining the life of the individual student. These philosophical truths are vitally related to the individual student and should be considered by the parents and children carefully.

We of the Christian Church believe in our church, believe in its teachings, its plans and its purposes.

If we are really serious about building our church we should realize how important it is that the young people of our congregations stay in touch with their church not only through their graded and high school days but through their college years. In that way they become and remain a part of the church that gave them birth into the kingdom and spiritual nurture through adolescent years.

Of course, there is a financial side to this invitation and insistence that our own young people attend our own college. If we could have enrolled in Elon College 700 "full pay" students, we would have no difficulty with our current budget. This certainly is a worthy goal and a possible result, indeed a probable result, if the pastors, officials and adult members of our church would concentrate their efforts and dedicate themselves to influencing their sons and daughters to attend Elon College.

But there is another side of attending our own college, and this other side is spiritual and churchly. In our college we endeavor to emphasize spiritual values and at the same time instruct in churchmanship that will make the church more intelligent, more appealing and more convincing in its services to the society of which it is a part. This resolution on the part of the Executive Board of the Southern Convention calling for our pastors and church officials to dedicate themselves to this worthy and essential task should be received favorably by our church as a whole and be the means of a new awakening among our church people to the real values of Elon College and the privileges it offers to our young people as well as to all others. This is the hope and the prayer that our church as a whole will take this resolution seriously and rise up in earnest to do something about it.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Beginning with this issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, at the suggestion of the editor, Dr. Robert Lee House, our churches, ministers, officials and laymen are urged to exert every legitimate effort to induce young people of our church who are ready for college to enroll in Elon. Read the editorial and other contributions on this subject.

The second and final term of summer school is under way. The enrollment is 183, which is higher than first anticipated. Summer school will close August 22. There will be 30 graduates. Commencement will be held Friday evening at 8 o'clock. Dr. L. E. Spikes, Superintendent of City Schools of Burlington, North Carolina, will be the commencement speaker. Fall term begins on September 2, at 8 o'clock. Present indications are that the enrollment for 1952-53 will equal, if not exceed, the enrollment for 1951-52.

A number of draftees have been released from the Korean War. Elon has had two applications from Korean G. I.'s. Perhaps our friends could be of assistance by recommending Elon College to prospective students.

In late spring, Elon College students expressed an earnest desire to have a television set for the benefit of all students. Groups of students pledged themselves to work to help raise the money to pay for the set. Neese-Shoffner Furniture Company of Burlington, North Carolina, offered to sell a television set to the college at cost. The set was purchased and is making a real contribution to the morale of the student body. We are sure that all interested will be happy to know that Elon College students have this opportunity. It is an educational opportunity.

Professor John West of the Elon College English Department, Professor Brashear of the Business Department, Professor J. L. Pierce of the Physical Education Department, Professor Fletcher Moore, Head of the Music Department, and Professor John Westmoreland, instructor in the Music Department, are all doing special work in leading universities of our country, better preparing themselves for their teaching responsibilities in the college. They are to be commended and congratulated.

* * *

Through the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Sellars, members of our Burlington Church, the Southern Convention is now the owner and director of Moonelon. Moonelon is located within a very short distance of the college. The donors specified that college students should have the privilege of swimming in the pool and otherwise enjoying this resort. Elon students appreciate this privilege. The Convention is in the process of developing the lake and the grounds as a convention center. It deserves and should receive enthusiastic support from our churches.

We Christians and Our College.

The leaders among our Christian Churches in the Southern Convention have always had progressive ideas and high ideals. Their visions have swept them far beyond their conscious abilities. They knew that to build a denomination worth while that it would be necessary to train denominational leaders and church officials, and that it was a privilege as well as a responsibility of the church to do this training. Our people have always been unwilling to leave the matter of educational training to someone else. They felt, and feel today that this is a privilege that should not be left to others.

Today, as a church, we face the necessity of undergirding our college financially. As our forefathers faced the responsibility of founding the college, so today, we face the responsibility of supporting it, and supporting it adequately that as an institution of higher learning it may take its place in the field of Christian higher education with the best of our church related colleges. If the rank and file of our church did not falter in 1890, so let every one of us make sure today that we shall not falter or fail in 1952. This is not only a responsibility but a privilege that should be taken with joy, and joyful expectancy.

Apportionment Giving.

No man lives to himself; no man can dissociate himself from his community responsibilities or from his church obligations. The matter of religion is an individual affair and the matter of support for religion is a personal affair. Yet, we are necessarily and naturally grouped together and, as members of a group, we have our individual and personal obligations. For one of the group to fail means that the whole group will fail unless others come forward to make up for the losses sustained by the unfaithful one.

As a church, we built Elon College. As a church, it is our responsibility to support Elon College. Our numbers have increased greatly. With the increase in numbers has come the increase in responsibilities. If every individual will do his share and do it promptly, there will be no waiting and no fear as to what the results will be. No one wants to be dissociated from the group, and no one should want to be dissociated from the responsibility that belongs to the group. If every individual member in every individual church would contribute as he should for the support of his church and her institutions, Elon College, as well as other organizations, would be adequately provided for. No one would be the poorer, but we, individually and severally, would be richer and happier. There is no joy that surpasses the joy arising from a consciousness of a duty well done and an obligation completely performed. Elon College needs your help.

We are all ready to pay our share of the huge costs necessary for defense against Communism and to maintain essential good government—but we must not tolerate throwing away our money through unnecessary expenditures. When we insist that the government stop its wild spending, in that instant we shall have stripped a future government of the power to endanger American principles and ideals.—R. A. Stillbaugh.

Our Young People Are Enrolling at Elon College

MISS MARY GRAHAM WISSEMAN

Miss Mary Graham Wisseman, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. W. E. Wisseman of Greensboro, North Carolina, will enter Elon College on September 2, as a member of the freshman class. Miss Wisseman has made an excellent record in high school and is looking forward to a college career with much anticipation. She will be a third-generation student at Elon College. Her grandfather and her grandmother, Dr. and Mrs. C. H. Rowland, were both graduates of Elon College. Her mother, who was Miss Graham Rowland, is also a graduate of Elon. It is gratifying to have this succession of students enrolled in our college.

MR. CURTIS YOUNG

Miss Betsy Johnson, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Johnson of Fuquay Springs, North Carolina, will enter Elon College in September as a member of the freshman class. Miss Johnson is a graduate of high school at Fuquay Springs. She has made an excellent record in high school and comes to Elon College highly recommended by her principal and instructors in high school. Her father, Mr. J. Harold Johnson, is a graduate of Elon College and a member of the Board of Trustees of the college.

MISS BETSY JOHNSON

Curtis Young of Durham, North Carolina, is an honor graduate of Durham High School. Mr. Young is to enter Elon College in September as a ministerial student. He has a good personality and the ability to get along with people individually and in groups. We need more like him to offer themselves for the gospel ministry in our church.

* * *

Miss Joann Newman, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. J. B. Newman of Burlington, North Carolina, will enter Elon College in September as a member of the freshman class. Miss Newman is a graduate of the Walter Williams High School, in Burlington, having made an excellent record as a student and a member of that student body. She is a third-generation student from the maternal side of her family. Her mother, who was Miss Ann Rawls before her marriage to Dr. Newman, graduated from Elon. Mrs. Newman is the daughter of Mrs. J. E. Rawls and the late Dr. Rawls of Suffolk, Virginia, who were both students of Elon College.

* * *

Miss Lois Scott, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. William T. Scott, will enter Elon on September 2 as a member of the freshman class. Miss Scott is a graduate of Elon High School with an excellent record as a student and as a campus leader in high school. Dr. Scott is Superintendent of the Southern Convention, and he and Mrs. Scott are both graduates of Elon.

IV--The Sloans Visit Albert Schweitzer

{ *Dr. Sloan Continues
His Report on Africa* }

A native woman carrying a kerosene lantern has just boarded our plane at Port Gentil as we go to the southern edge of French Equatorial Africa. This is symbolic of the grand mixture of the old and the new we find in Africa. No wonder the Africans do not know what to make of life. A generation ago they had to walk any place they wanted to go and carried everything on their heads. I haven't seen a horse or a donkey in West Africa. Now, landing fields carved out of the bush enable the African to eliminate distance.

The two greatest experiences I had looked forward to in this entire trip are now in the past. The first was the Cameroun, a region belonging to Germany until after the First World War. The League of Nations turned this over to France as a mandate. France is determined to keep it. Therefore, France is doing more for the Cameroun than for any of her actual possessions, but assistance in raising the standards and self-respect of the Africans is far inferior to that of the British.

Elat is the place that stands out in my mind. I was reared on a knowledge of Elat. The first foreign missionary I ever saw was Mrs. Good of Elat. Mrs. Good was an American Indian reared in a white family. As a young woman she married a Presbyterian minister, and the two of them came to Elat as pioneer missionaries. Their son also spent his life here, but is now retired and living in my home town in the United States.

At one time the largest Presbyterian church in the world was at Elat. Members lived as much as a hundred miles away and walked from time to time to communion services. As the work developed, numerous other churches were organized from the Elat church. The present building seats 3,500 people. When the African drum in the "bell tower" talked its message that could be heard many miles, I was one of those who heeded its invitation to come to worship God. While I was at this service. Mrs. Sloan attended a Junior Church using up-to-date methods.

The Elat hospital, to which people are carried hundreds of miles, has about 400 patients, but from the standpoint of our hospitals is crude and is terribly crowded. Patients' families come along to cook and care for the sick. They sleep under the bed or wherever they can find space to curl up on the floor. The Presbyterian leprosarium, 45 miles south of Elat, has but one physician who, with his trained-nurse wife, takes complete care of 1,200 lepers, who build their own mud houses and tend their own gardens.

The Cameroun Christian College at Libamba, being developed by the Presbyterian and French Protestant missions, with extensive government support, will fill a great need. At present, all students must go abroad to get college training. A good concrete-block class-room building will be ready in October, when Freshman college work will be offered. All educational work in the Cameroun is in the French language. Students are required to pass the same examinations given in France.

Our second mountain-top experience was our visit with the world's best known physician, Dr. Albert Schweitzer, at his hospital 18 miles south of the equator. This man, who has been given the world's highest honors in music, philosophy and theology, as well as in tropical medicine, has been listed as one of the greatest men of the twentieth century. Of the four men who commonly head this list, Gandhi, Kagawa, Schweitzer and Einstein, we have now been guests of all but the last in their homes.

We first met Dr. Schweitzer on a path where in mason's apron he was directing the breaking up of stones for use in the footings of a new building. Africans cannot understand why the hands of a surgeon and musician are used to do the work of a mason and carpenter.

The oil strike in the States, though over by the time we left New York, is still interrupting plane schedules. We discovered about 6:30 p. m. that the only assurance we had of getting away from Lambarene for several days was to take an early morning plane back across the equator, which connects with a south-bound plane from Paris.

This cut down our time with Dr. Schweitzer. We had lunch and dinner and the evening with him. He begged us to stay at least two weeks. After he had played Bach (about whom he is the world's greatest authority) and Mendelssohn on his famous moisture-proof piano with organ pedals, we bid the seventy-seven-year-old genius good night and good bye in our best French and German. He says he speaks no English, but I noticed that he sometimes answered my questions before they were translated. Mrs. Sloan conversed with him in French, but I am ashamed of my poor French grammar and generally depend upon translation, sometimes into French, sometimes into German.

To my surprise, as we were eating our breakfast at 5:00 a. m., an hour before daylight, Dr. Schweitzer walked into the room. He wanted to see us off safely and went with us to the river bank where we boarded a canoe whose three paddlers took us to town, where we met the motor launch belonging to the airline. Yesterday we went to Dr. Schweitzer's hospital in a canoe carved out of a log. That again is Africa—the airplane and the dugout canoe; the witch doctor and Dr. Schweitzer.

MISSIONARY SECRETARY RECOMMENDS PICTURE ON AFRICA.

As I travel around I receive many inquiries about the film version of Alan Paton's moving story of South Africa, "Cry, The Beloved Country." This has now been produced and is available for showing in the United States.

I have seen the film three times, twice in a commercial movie house in Boston, and again at a complementary showing given by United Artists Corporation, who are the producers, at the recent North American Assembly on African Affairs, which was held in Springfield, Ohio.

The film is very well done, is faithful to Alan Paton's book—as a matter of fact he cooperated in its production—and from both the documentary and artistic viewpoints is well worth seeing. The audience at the African

AN APPRECIATION.

Our short stay at Elon College for our recent School of Missions was so very pleasant and worthwhile, that we would like to say, "Thank you, Elon, and those who made the school possible, for letting us share in the preparation of our coming year's work."

We overheard this remark one day going to lunch, "No college in any of our states has finer teachers, or more interested people than the School of Missions at Elon College." We think so, too.

ADVENTURE AT ELON.

We do not have to wonder abroad or in high places to find adventure. It is to be found in religious experiences within our own denomination, in our own church. Such an adventure was the experience of three women of the Fellowship of Bayview Congregational Christian Church, of Norfolk, Va., who attended the recent school of Missions at Elon College.

Mrs. Bert Haskett, outgoing president; Mrs. L. D. Albert, incoming president, and Mrs. Oline Scott, who went to see what it was all about, all had a grand time. The speakers were unusually good, especially Miss Luey Steele, who could have talked right on through lunch period. It was truly a pleasure to meet face to face Timothy Chang and to see Jose Dabuet. It certainly brought our foreign missions closer home. The children of the orphanage were very appealing. Who could deny the inspiration that all received from the vesper services by the water at Moon-elon.

All three of us came home inspired to work a little harder and do a little more for the college, the orphanage, and the Christian world in general.

REGISTRATIONS AT THE SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

Two weeks ago, on this page, we had a writeup concerning the School of Missions. Last week the page was devoted to quotations from Dr. Reuling, one of the teachers. Now Mrs. John G. Truitt, the chairman, has sent us the report of the registrar, Mrs. J. H. Booth, which gives us the official picture of how many came and where they came from.

The total number attending the School of Missions was 153, with 135 coming from churches in the Convention, 8 from other denominations and 10 guest leaders. Of these, 64 stayed in the dormitories, while the remainder came in for the sessions from nearby churches.

The 135 from our churches were divided as follows:

North Carolina and Virginia: 66 people from 19 churches: Apples' Chapel, Bethel, Beverly Hills, Chapel Hill, Durham, Burlington First, Elon College, Gibsonville, Kallam Grove, Lebanon, Monticello, Mt. Bethel, New Lebanon, Greensboro First, Palm Street, Liberty, Reidsville, Union Ridge and Union (Va.).

Eastern Virginia: 39 people from 11 churches: Bay View, Bethlehem, Dendron, Franklin, Christian Temple, Holy Neek, Liberty Spring, Newport News, Windsor, South Norfolk, Suffolk.

Eastern North Carolina: 14 people from 5 churches: Amelia, Church of Wide Fellowship, Henderson, Wake Chapel, Louisburg.

Valley of Virginia: 9 people from 1 church: Winehester.

Western North Carolina: 7 people from 3 churches: Asheboro, High Point, Ramseur.

A NICE LETTER.

Every once in a while I hear from Mrs. L. W. Stagg, historian of the Southern Convention women, a member of Christian Temple, and one of the sisters of the Newman family, which has been so important in the Southern Convention—three brothers having been ministers and one sister a minister's wife.

Mrs. Stagg is one of those kindly souls who always has a good word for those who try to work for their church. She is also a very well informed person about all kinds of church affairs,

A recent letter—which she did not intend for publication—has some ideas that I would like to share with you. She says she has heard Mrs. Demarest, whose speech at the General Council I had reported on this page, many times and thinks she is a great woman.

She told of a recent visit with her brother, Dr. N. G. Newman, when he had told her of his trip to California and the General Council. This part will interest many of you: "He said he felt as well when he reached home as when he started."

She finished by saying that she thought the mission quiz which we had for a time on this page was well worthwhile. We promise to resume that feature soon, "Miss Lilly," and thank you for your kind words.

PALM STREET'S ACHIEVEMENTS.

The missionary society of our Palm Street Church in Greensboro has achieved all the goals for this year's work. We have also gone the second mile in some instances.

We have organized a Junior society, and to see them learning from our mission study books is a joy. We are proud of the work being done by our children. They have made an offering to missions, sent a package to the migrants and sent a gift to Larry Jones, who was a member of our Sunday school and who is now at the orphanage at Elon College.

We have had some outstanding speakers for our book reviews and regular meetings, such as Miss Anderson, Miss Pattie Lee Coghil, Mrs. Carl Wallae and Mrs. F. C. Lester. At our book review, "We Americans: North and South," we had as our guests the women of the Greensboro, First Church, and of Calvary.

For the first time in the history of our church, we were the host to our district rally. The Greensboro-Burlington Districts met at our church on March 28, 1952.

We have accomplished a few things for which we are thankful. Our prayer is that we shall be able to do even more in the coming year.

REPORTER.

Whatever the faults of our government—we, primarily, are to blame because our government is us. We, the people, chose it at the polls, or by not going to the polls, we let it be chosen for us. If we as a government do foolish things, we have only ourselves to blame, and we are the only ones who can stop it.—Stilbaugh.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Young Friends:

Mrs. House has gone to be with her Mother, who is quite ill. I am very glad to write for her this week, for she has not had a moment to write. I think she has been quite faithful in writing and the Editor, as well as the children appreciates her column.

As you grow older, I hope that you will read other pages in your church paper. By and by, you will be active in Pilgrim Fellowship and will read the Young People's Page. Now I suspect that some of you read the Orphanage Page. As you begin to think of going to college, you will read the page about Elon College. You have my permission to read the Editorial Page!

We had the picture of Robert Cashman, the new Moderator of our Congregational Christian Churches, on the front page recently. Did you notice that? He wrote saying that he was interested not only in page one, but also in pages 2-16. Wasn't that nice? That is the kind of readers we like to have, the kind of readers I hope you all will be.

Are you learning many new and interesting things this summer? This is the time to learn new hobbies, read the books you like, and do things you do not have time to do during school. Perhaps some of you are making and saving money for school or church.

Good wishes to all our young readers.

THE EDITOR.

"SAY IT AGAIN!"

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Today, young people when paid a compliment often reply, "Say it again!" The expression is used facetiously, but, there is no doubt about it, words of praise are much enjoyed.

We all hunger for approbation. How lovely it is when a child has learned to be expressively appreciative of others, has learned to pay a compliment with grace and naturalness.

I was swimming with two pretty mothers and their children. Bobby, a blond lad with a talent for saying the right thing at the right time, ducked under the water as his mother's friend, Marion, came swimming by his side. Then up he bobbed, a smile on his bronzed, freckled face. "Boy!" he exclaimed. "You're a graceful swimmer, Aunt Marion! But," he interrupted himself, looking in his mother's direction, "you can't beat my mother!" As I was leaving, I told our young escort, "I always enjoy you, Bobby!" Quick as a flash, he replied, "I always enjoy you, Aunt Helen."

Seven-year-old Carol said to her grandmother, "Grandmother, the back of your neck looks like a girl's!" Her grandmother beamed with pleasure; the "back of her neck" had been her pride for many years. Hadn't Grandfather told her a dozen times, "You have a hairline like Elsie Ferguson's, my dear."

Whether Carol's mother had taught her to be observing and graciously complimentary, or whether the child had taken her cue from Grandfather, or whether she was naturally gifted that way, I never knew. But a compliment like this unusual one, showing an awareness of other's pleasing characteristics, is bound to give a glow of satisfaction.

A neighbor relates that the first month of her marriage she began trying to make a good impression on her father-in-law. Having no parents of her own, she looked forward to his attention and affection. Upon his first visit to their apartment, she rode miles to secure special flowers for the table—the greenhouse ones being too expensive. She cooked "Father's" favorite meals. She had the apartment glistening and, best of all, a loving, hospitable welcome for the honored guest. His only comment during the visit was, "I'm disappointed in your apartment." Yet the apartment building was one of the most attractive in our town, and the apartment itself matches my neighbor's personality—warm, gracious and colorful.

For years she persisted in her quest for a small token of appreciation or love from her father-in-law. "Finally," she admits, "I gave up expecting outward signs—he had never learned to give them—and I contented myself with my fondness for him and my belief that after all he really liked me. Once, and only once, did the dear man ever pay me a compliment. He said one day, 'You make good coffee, Kathryn.'"

In some instances whole families are missing much pleasure that costs nothing. If Mother and Dad use gentle, affectionate voices in speaking to each other, frequently expressing appreciation, the children will learn the same lovely, dividend-paying habit.

I remember telling my own beautiful and talented mother a hundred times, "If I were to order a mother for anyone, I'd ask for a duplicate of you!" How happy I am, now that I no longer have her to love and enjoy, that I expressed myself in this way. To my dad I exclaimed, time after time, as he came into the living room, "My, Daddy, but you're handsome!" I'm glad I said it again and again.

"The Story of Robin Hood."

Chosen by the Protestant Motion Picture Council as the "Picture of the Month," this magnificent production brings to the screen the legendary exploits of "Robin Hood and his merrie men" in a new version of romance and adventure. Light and rollicking, this all-live-action film, produced by Walt Disney and released by RKO portrays fine sentiments and unflinching courage.

During the absence of Richard Lion Heart who was fighting in the Crusades, his treacherous brother King John and his accomplice, the Sheriff of Nottingham, oppressed the people, gathered unjust taxes for personal gain and planned to usurp the throne. Robert Fitzooth (nicknamed Robin Hood) and the men who joined him, faithful to Richard, harassed the miscreants and by a ruse finally gathered from the plunderers gold needed to ransom their king after his imprisonment in Germany. Conflict between the selfish King John and his cohorts, and the generous (but equally violent) outlawed followers of King Richard, makes a fascinating twelfth century story. Robin Hood triumphs and is made Earl of Locksley. He is also awarded the hand of his childhood sweetheart, Lady Marian.

The story is told in quaint ballad style by Elton Hayes, famous English ballad singer, who as a minstrel recounts the adventures of Robin and ties action and legend together. The characters are depicted as we had imagined them to be: Richard Todd, a fearless and adventurous Robin; Jo-

Want to Bike with Europeans In U. S. This Summer?

This summer 40 young Americans, aged 17 and up, will have the privilege of hosteling in New York and New England or in Pennsylvania with from 50 to 60 Europeans from Sweden, France, Holland, Germany and England. The trips will take place during the periods: August 12 to 25, August 16 to September 4, and August 23 to September 6. Americans can join the trips for the two week periods or for three-day weekends. Cost of the two weeks trip will be about $35 to $40. Tentative itineraries are: No. 1—New York City-Morristown, New Jersey; Princeton, New Jersey; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (Gladwyne Hostel); Elverson, Bowmansville, Brickerville, Campbelltown, Denver, Geigertown, Chester Springs, Philadelphia-New York City. No. 2—New York City-Boat to West Point, Newburgh, Hyde Park, Pine Plains, Sheffield (Mass.), Lennox, Westfield, Springfield, Amherst, East Colrain, Sunderland, Windsor, Yourktown Heights, White Plains-New York City.

The aim of this special project, in which the AYH and the Experiment in International Living is cooperating, is to help Europeans see more of the United States and get more closely acquainted with our country and Americans. These trips will give Americans a chance to return hospitality shown Americans abroad.

The plans call for visits to private homes, institutions, social centers, city offices, museums, etc., along the route. The groups will accept hospitality from service clubs such as Rotary or Kiwanis, granges, churches, etc., when suitable arrangements can be made.

Each American tripper is encouraged to secure the loan of a bike for a European traveling companion, but this is not required. Americans who cannot tour with these groups may contribute to the bike rental and hospitality fund (entrance to museums, etc.) for our guests from overseas.

Those interested in this project should write immediately to AYH National Headquarters, 6 East 39th Street, New York City for further information.

Relax With Max.

Haven's been able to relax much for the last couple of weeks, with all this hot weather and the two big political conventions. This first opportunity that we have had to look in upon these conventions should make all of us think. It should make us aware of the necessity of Christian citizens, both young and old, to take a larger share in our government.

Ingenious Techniques Safeguard Quality of Automotive Products.

Quality control systems in automotive plants are designed to keep every production process at a peak of efficiency and precision.

The object of these techniques is to anticipate possible production defects and to correct them before they result in waste and faulty products.

Years ago, the quality of manufactured goods was guarded largely by hit or miss methods. Inspection was the principal tool, and it was used simply as a means of sorting out defective finished products to prevent them from reaching the market.

In automotive plants today, quality is controlled all along the line, through every fabricating or assembly process.

Using special procedures, precision gages and other devices, quality control experts keep a constant watch on the three variables in all production operations—the material, the machine and the operator.

Periodic checks indicate when any of the variables need correction. If no corrections are required, production is "in control."

More than 12,000 applications of precision gages are used in making a modern automobile, and at almost every step in the processing of each part, some type of inspection occurs.

In addition to checks by regular inspectors, each employee personally inspects the parts he is producing.

Such strict vigilance is necessary in the production of today's complex motor car, which contains more than 5,000 precision parts.

Each part must conform to rigid specifications as to size, smoothness, strength and other qualities.

Many parts fit together with such hairline exactness that their dimensions cannot vary as much as one ten-thousandth of an inch.

Quality of materials is controlled in many ways. In one plant, for example, a special magnetic device detects flaws in steel forgings that are invisible to the naked eye. By discovering a poor forging immediately, rather than at some later stage of processing, no further production time and effort is wasted on it.

Statistical techniques are used by many automotive firms to keep machines in control. The most minute indications of tool wear are recorded and charted. By studying the charts, quality-control experts can predict when tools will need replacement, allowing new tools to be installed before the machine's accuracy is impaired.

This permits adjustments to be made before a single bad piece of work is turned out.

In some operations, precision gages and automatic controls enable production machines to correct their own mistakes.

In another phase of statistical quality control, large charts are placed along the production lines where they can be seen by employees.

On these, quality control technicians continually enter data indicating the quality rating of the work passing through each process. From a quick glance at a chart, the machine

THE BEGINNING OF THE KINGDOM.

LESSON VI—AUGUST 10, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: "The Lord will not forsake his people for his great name's sake, because it hath pleased the Lord to make you a people unto himself."—I Samuel 12: 22.

LESSON: I Samuel 9: 1-2; 10: 24-27; 13: 5-7; 19-22.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 106: 1-5.

A Disorganized and Discouraged People.

The Israelites seemed hopelessly divided. Each tribe was more or less going its own way. There was no unity. And there was no leader. Samuel's sons, who followed him as "judges" of Israel were inefficient, corrupt and immoral. The people soon saw that these men, Joel and Abiah could not help them. And they needed help.

The Philistines were making life miserable for the Israelites. They had overrun the country and had defeated the divided tribes. Furthermore, they had seen to it that there was no danger of an armed uprising among the Israelites. They did not allow any smith to practice his trade throughout the land, and except for files with which to sharpen their farming tools, the Israelites had nothing with which, or from which, to fashion any weapons of war. They hid themselves in caves and thickets and in dens, in the rocks, and in pits that they had dug. Things looked hopeless—the people were disarmed, disorganized and discouraged. Some one was really needed to rally the people, to serve as a leader, to bring unity out of chaos.

A Demand for a King.

The people asked for a king. They wanted to be like the other nations. At first Samuel demurred, in fact he protested. He felt that it was an act of disloyalty and disobedience to God. But God made it known to him that it must be so, and Samuel lent himself to the divine will. He showed a fine spirit in yielding to the decision which he personally did not approve. And he became God's instrument in selecting and anointing Saul, the first king of Israel. It was a part of the divine plan for Israel. The nation could not fulfill its mission unless it was united and unless it could develop its natural life so that eventually through it and from it should come the Messiah, Christ. To be sure, the kingdom would have its limitations and its price. That was a part of the discipline of the nation for its divine mission.

Gentlemen, the King!

The honor of being the first king of Israel fell to a young man named Saul. In those days when people wanted an imposing figure for a king, he filled the bill admirably. He stood head and shoulders above the average Israelite, a big, strong, handsome fellow, tremendously impressive and imposing. He was not only tall and handsome, he was fearless and brave. And he was very modest, a strange contrast or combination of character. His father was a "mighty man of valor," and Saul had inherited something of his father's spirit.

At the beginning of his reign, Saul looked every inch a king. As we shall see in next Sunday's lesson, he came to a sorry end, and did not live up to his promise as a youth. But even at that, he did a great work for Israel, for it was he who united the tribes, led them to victory over the Philistines and established the kingdom. The important thing to be remembered is that Saul was the best man God could find in all Israel at that time. God cannot wait for perfect leaders; he has to take what he can get. The disciples of Jesus did not have halos around their heads, or wings on their bodies; they had distinctive limitations. But they were the best material that Jesus could find, and he used them to his glory.

The story of how Saul was selected as king is an interesting one. He never dreamed that he was to be king, and he demurred when it was suggested that he was to be the king. Hollywood could hardly have thought up a better plot than this. He and a servant set out to find his father's asses, which had wandered away. They sought in vain, and finally in despair it was suggested that they go into a certain town where there was a man referred to as a "seer," who could tell them how to find the lost animals. The "seer" was, of course, Samuel. And God had revealed unto Samuel that this fine, young fellow was the Lord's choice as his anointed. In a simple, and secret service, later repeated publicly and before the people, Saul was anointed as king, and accepted by the people. That is, with the exception of a few soreheads who wanted nothing to do with him. Saul showed unusual self restraint for those days, by overlooking the snub. Even today dictators do not spare those who disagree with them.

Victory and Union.

No details are given as to how the great victory over the Philistines was accomplished. Somehow or other, however, these people, numerous in number and well-armed, were defeated by the Israelites, inferior in numbers and almost unarmed except with rude weapons, and driven from the borders of the land. One of the factors in the victory was the inspiring leadership of Saul. Then, too, the Israelites were fighting for home and families. And they felt that God was with them. Morale often makes up for lack of materials when the big test comes.

The Lesson Up to Date.

Like Israel, America faces a difficult and even a critical situation. There are powerful and ruthless forces arrayed against us from without. And there are divisions and disunity within. The times call for strong and stout-hearted leadership, and for national unity. As these "Notes" are being written, one political party has already selected its standard-bearer as candidate for the Presidency, and the other party is in process of doing the same thing. Who knows but what one of these men has come into the Kingdom for such a time as this! As to which one he will be none of us can tell at this time. But one thing is sure, every qualified American citizen should cast his vote in the coming election. And furthermore, he should give attention to the matter of the members of Congress who are to be elected this fall. It is important and desirable that we have a good and great President. It is just as desirable that we have a wise and good Congress. And between the two there must be unity of purpose even if there is not uniformity of thought. Our ultimate security and safety do not depend upon our material resources and military might. We must have them, of course, in this kind of world. But now, as of old, the strength of the nation is in the character of its citizens and in its devotion to God and its obedience to his will. America must be good if she is to be great. God alone is her refuge and strength.

NEW UNIVERSITY DEDICATED.

training new leaders through international and intercultural cooperation.

"In a cardinal sense, ICU is a symbol of tomorrow's world—a world of responsible freedom, democratic enlightenment and creative sharing. Our appreciation of the potential significance and value of ICU for the world of tomorrow makes those of us directly connected with it at once both proud and humble—proud because of the supreme privilege of sharing this great adventure with God; humble because of our inadequacies to fulfill the overwhelming responsibilities. What will help to sustain us in the crucial years of struggle to come is our faith in eternal God to whom nothing is impossible, our trust in the continued and increased support of our ecumenical friends, and finally our devotion to this major pioneering venture for a new world."

Forty-five Per Cent Christian.

Pointing up all that Dr. Yuasa declared was the fact of the actual opening of the Language Institute on the previous day. Two thousand students had applied for applications. There were 402 who took the examinations. Of those 75 were selected. They were carefully and critically chosen among those who had the best academic records. They came from all four of the Japanese main islands and from twenty-four prefectures. Two of them were from Korea and one from China. Their families represented a cross-section of Japanese society—financially, educationally and occupationally. Of the total 45 per cent are Christians. This is an unusually high percentage for a college community in Japan, and speaks highly of the work which has been done by the Christian missionaries. The 1-4 ratio of women to men is said to be the highest in any co-educational institution of higher learning in Japan.

The Language Institute is for the purpose of training carefully selected students in English, particularly oral English. The faculty has been well chosen for this purpose and new and scientific equipment has been provided. The institute, besides having the day school, has evening classes for teachers, business and government employees.

Looking Toward the Future.

The opening of the Language Institute and the dedication of the campus and University Hall represented the signal for advancement, along an entirely new creative channel, into a bright future of service. ICU will have a liberal arts college of about 600 students, and a graduate body of 400. The emphasis, however, will be placed on the graduate level. Here leaders will be trained for tomorrow, not only for Japan but also for the entire Far East. For it must be remembered that while ICU is located in Japan, it is to be, both in its student body and faculty, truly international. In every sense the new International Christian University is a school of tomorrow. It is being developed with a pioneering spirit at its very heart, and with the purpose of being of outstanding service to the cause of Christian democracy in the Far East.

RECOMMENDS PICTURE ON AFRICA.

Assembly—a most critical group because most of the 350 members have had extensive African experience, and a large number were themselves Africans—was ungrudging in its praise.

Because of the fact that the coming year is assigned to Africa study in the churches, and because of the fact that Africa is becoming of increasing importance to the United States, as well as from the point of view of general interest, I would urge every one of you to see it whenever possible.

While this film is quite able to stand on its own merits with any reasonably intelligent theatre audience, it does not have the mass appeal of strictly entertainment pictures. Therefore I am sure that it is not out of place for me to ask you to cooperate with United Artists Corporation, who have produced it with commendable courage, in seeing that it gets the widest possible showing. There are undoubtedly thousands in every city who would very much like to see this picture, if it would only be exhibited in their locality.

May I, therefore, suggest that you request a showing. You will be doing yourself and your community a distinct favor if it results in "Cry, The Beloved Country" being shown in a theatre near you.

JOHN A. REULING.

MISSIONARY RESUMES WORK IN AFRICA.

Mrs. Lawrence Wallace Henderson of Tacoma, Washington, young Congregational Christian missionary of the American Board in West Central Africa, is sailing back to her work on Thursday, July 30, on the SS Tatse (Barbed Line) from New York to Lobito (West Central Africa) with her three children, Nancy Lucille 6, Kathleen May 5, and David Noel 1½, born in Africa. She will join her husband, Rev. Lawrence Wallace Henderson, who returned to his post on June 23.

Mrs. Henderson and her husband have just completed their first furlough in the United States, following five years of work among the Ovimbundu people. They will continue to make their home at Lobito, the principal port city of Angola, where Mr. Henderson has responsibility for the African pastors and teachers spread out over a territory of 100 miles.

COUNTIES ORGANIZE FOR RELIEF.

The Executive Board of North Carolina Christian Rural Overseas Program met in Greensboro recently for the first Progress Report of the State Director, the Rev. Carl R. Key of Durham, in the organization of the state for the collection of commodities for overseas relief.

The director has secured and trained one area assistant who has been assigned 12 counties in the southeastern part of the state and 14 district supervisors who have been assigned three and four counties each. Mr. Key will supervise two districts comprising six counties—Durham, Person and Granville; Bertie, Beaufort and Martin Counties.

Four counties, Duplin, Samson, Durham and Franklin, are organized. Twelve other organizing meetings have been scheduled. Five county chairmen have been secured and five publicity chairmen.

A letter has been addressed to county agents, county school superintendents, grange masters and a selected list of ministers in 21 other counties than those to be organized by supervisors.

The fall meeting of the State CROP Committee is set for October 16 at the Agriculture Building in Raleigh.

The Orphanage
 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

"How do you know when your day is over?" asked a friend of mine.

It is never fully over. One day lapses into another. Last night, while listening to a radio program, my telephone rang. A ten-year-old boy was not doing so well as a result of a "dog fall" in a boys' wrestle. Over to his room I went, found him suffering from shock and a considerable bump on the head. Off to the hospital for a check-up and instructions from the physician.

The radio program was fun; but it was not half as satisfying as feeling that one was being of real service to a boy who needed a friend. As I waited in the emergency room, ten o'clock at night, while the examination was going on, I thought of you who are joining together to make possible loving care and help for these children. Just this week I saw a report of a man who had left considerable money to orphan homes in the midwest. How good it would be if our orphanage could be so remembered. The hurt boy is getting along fine this morning, but last night for a while he was giving us a bit of real concern.

This coming Sunday, our entire orphanage family is invited to attend home-coming at Pleasant Hill, Rev. M. A. Pollard, pastor, for their 11:00 o'clock service, and to remain for a picnic dinner. We have engaged a bus and some automobiles, and we expect to accept their gracious invitation in full force. This is a most generous thing for Pleasant Hill to do, and we appreciate it very much.

First Sunday in September, we shall take a children's program to our Sanford Church, Dr. Will B. O'Neill, pastor, for the 11:00 o'clock service; and to Shallow Well, nearby, Rev. Will Wood, pastor, where we shall give a program at the 10:00 o'clock Sunday school hour. The orphanage has many good friends in these churches, and we are thankful.

Fifth Sunday in August is our big home-coming day here at the orphanage. There will be a meeting of the Home-Coming Society, and a dinner for all returning "children" and their families, and all visitors and friends. We look forward to this occasion with great anticipation. We wish that everyone who reads these lines would try to help us get all former members of the orphanage family here that day. Let us know their addresses. Tell them about this announcement. Urge them to attend. You are welcome to come, too, but please let us know a week before in order that we may prepare lunch for everybody.

This is your institution. Let us hear from you; and let us show you what is being done here.

Thanks for this week's good report.

In Memoriam

McNEILL.

The members of the Maggie I. Moran Missionary Society of Shallow Well Congregational Christian Church wish to pay a loving tribute to the memory of our beloved member, Mrs. Mattie McNeil.

God in his infinite wisdom took her from our midst on June 4, 1952. She was granted a long and useful life, having lived to the age of 86 years.

In her passing our society has lost a very beloved and most beautiful Christian character. Her life was an example of loyalty and service, of friendship and understanding, to all who came in contact with her.

Her husband, having preceded her to the grave several years ago, left her with a large family of children, who have loved, protected and cherished her as she traveled the last miles of her long journey home.

Her friendly smile and cheerful word will long be missed by her many loved ones and friends at Shallow Well. Her life of beautiful and cheerful service should inspire and draw us closer to God.

Therefore, be it resolved:

First, that we thank God for her life and her devotion to our society.

Second, that we mourn her loss and extend our deepest sympathy to her family.

Mrs. H. S. CLARK,
Mrs. W. A. THOMAS,
Mrs. J. C. THOMAS,
Committee.

Dr. Smith Speaks at Asheboro.

The Asheboro, North Carolina, Church was pleased to have Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College, as a visitor on July 20. Dr. Smith spoke concerning the $1,500,000.00 fund needed for Elon College, and challenged this church to do its part. He also assisted the pastor, Dr. F. C. Lester, in the communion service. Dr. Smith called attention to the fact that the organist, Mrs. J. G. Vestal, an ushur, Dalton Harper, and the pastor were graduates of Elon, while the choir director, Wayne Vestal, and a member of the choir, Jimmy Flynt, were students at Elon. Another member of the Asheboro church, and a student at Elon College, was preaching his first sermon as the interim pastor at Spoon's Chapel.

Rev. Henry V. Harman Installed Pastor at Timber Ridge.

Sunday afternoon, July 27, was a significant time for our Timber Ridge Church and the Virginia Valley Central Conference. At that time the installation service for Rev. Henry V. Harman, new pastor of the Timber Ridge Church, was held. Mr. Harman's position while serving as the pastor of Timber Ridge will also be an associate in the Virginia Valley Central Conference work, serving as pastor at large. This venture is a cooperative one between the Timber Ridge Church, our National Board of Home Missions, and the Mission Board of the Southern Convention, with the support of the Valley Conference. Participating in the installation service were: Walton E. Brill, Secretary of Timber Ridge Church; Dr. Phillip G. Scott, minister of Mr. Harman's home church—Westmoreland Congregational Christian of Washington, D. C.; Rev. E. J. Rohart, Rev. Ralph M. Galt, Rev. S. E. Madren and Mrs. Fred Oates. Rev. R. A. Whitten presided over the service, and Superintendent Wm. T. Scott delivered the sermon. A good number were in attendance for this important event in the life of our Timber Ridge Church and the Valley Conference.

University of Marburg Honors Dr. Latourette.

The University of Marburg, the oldest Protestant university in the world, has conferred the degree of Doctor of the Science of Religion upon Dr. Kenneth Scott Latouritte, professor of Missions and Oriental History at Yale University.

The occasion for this high honor was a reception held by the faculty of the university for the 200 delegates attending the Enlarged Meeting of the International Missionary Council at Willingen, Germany. The delegates gathered in the Hall of Knights inside the old Marburg Castle, where some 3,000 people were waiting. The castle has recently been turned over to the university for the training of students in the study of missions and comparative religions.

After a special number had been sung by the student choir, the delegates were welcomed by the Rector of the university, Professor Theodore Siegfried, and by Dr. Alfred Benninghoff, the Dean of the Theological Faculty. Dr. John A. Mackay, the president of the International Missionary Council, then spoke on behalf of the delegates.

Following this brief ceremony, Dr. Siegfried then called on Dr. Latourette to come forward and conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of the Science of Religion. The honor came as a complete surprise to Dr. Latourette, and he found it difficult to speak as he sought to express his thanks.

"With all my heart I thank you for this high honor," said Dr. La-tourette. "This gesture on your part represents the common tie that we have in Christ. A tie that continues between Christian countries so recently separated by war."

The remarks of Dr. Latourette were greeted with thunderous applause. The University of Marburg was founded in 1527 by Philip of Hesse, ten years after Martin Luther had nailed his theses to the church door in Wittenburg. It is the oldest Protestant university in the world. Four bus loads of delegates arrived at Marburg late Sunday afternoon, after spending the afternoon visiting four of the annual missionary festivals held in different towns in Central Germany.

This is an element on the human side of quality control, to which automotive firms attach great importance. The aim is to give every worker individual responsibility for the final quality of the product, which is in itself the greatest assurance of high quality. Quality control experts feel that techniques and devices alone do not make a good product. The men and women who run the machines and actually perform the many precision jobs involved in modern manufacturing process, first must have pride in their own performance.

In addition to creating better products, modern quality control methods also increase output and cut waste.

One company reported that it reduced production costs by $10-million since adding statistical techniques to its list of quality controls.—Automobile Facts.

"LOVE in the CHRISTIAN FAITH"

By DR. DANIEL D. WILLIAMS

Associate Professor of Theology, Chicago Theological Seminary

LECTURE IV.—"THE MINISTRY OF RECONCILIATION" (Final)

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH has a supreme opportunity to bring a redeeming faith to men. Christianity rejects the philosophy of modern existentialism, which says that man is a miserable being, alone in the universe, living out his brief career with no ultimate hope. Christianity also rejects the idea that man is such a good and wise being that with a little help from God he can make a paradise on earth. Man is created in the image of God and he is a sinner. Only the Christian faith with its full recognition of both these truths can restore sanity to the human spirit.

The church should adopt a many-sided strategy. It must preach to individuals and work on social problems. It must offer a genuine and powerful worship and it must meet human needs with practical service. In all things it should hold up the Gospel of God's forgiving love in Jesus Christ.

The church can prove the power of the Gospel by showing the fruits of the spirit of reconciliation in its own life. The divisions of men into groups and classes have too often been reflected in the divisions in the church. A Christian church is one body in Christ. There is no place in it for racial, class or other distinctions. A divided Christendom can bring hope to a divided world by showing that differences between Christian denominations can be dealt with in mutual understanding and love.

The worship of the church ought to satisfy the hunger of men for God. Christian worship is the proclamation in preaching and sacrament of the truth of God's redeeming grace. In a Christian service of worship each participant should know that he has been brought anew to face the final issues of life as they affect him.

Christian faith is not an escape into sentimental romanticism. It rejects man's boasting of his own goodness, just as it rejects cynical despair. Christians are not passive in the face of evil; but they know the greatest evil is the self-satisfied pride in the human heart.

The love of God which judges and redeems all life is the abiding reality at the heart of all things. It is the high office of the church to be the main channel through which God's love becomes personally available to men.

Magnify the Ministry

From "The Report of the Convention Committ on the Ministry"

BUT THE LABORERS are few." This clause describes the situation in our churches with respect to ministerial leadership. Our need for ministers has become critical. But that is not all; the number of candidates in the process of training is entirely inadequate even to maintain the present supply. In short, unless we can double the number of recruits to the ministry, it can hardly be hoped that the present condition will improve. Your Convention Committee on the Ministry would be remiss if it failed to call attention to this crisis that threatens our churches. Many communities are prepared and anxious to employ full-time pastoral service, but qualified ministers are not available. The tendency is for the more favored communities to attract the men that are available and to leave the less fortunate churches without pastoral leadership. How can the opening of new churches be urged or justified when there are not sufficient pastors to care for the present ones?

Certainly the time has come for us to give voice to the prayer of Jesus, "that the Lord of the harvest send forth laborers unto the harvest." To pray this prayer, however, is not simply to utter a wish. Jesus did not merely wish that he had leaders. Rather, his prayer expressed a concern about which he did something. What if our prayer for laborers should likewise express a concern. What if we should become determined to do something about it? How might this concern over the supply of pastors be translated into terms of action? Here are some suggestions your committee wishes to present:

1. Determine to make your own minister a greater religious leader. Is it not an established fact that great churches bring out the qualities of greatness that are in their pastors? This rather typical confession is made in an article, "My Fifty Years in the Ministry," by Leon H. Austin, in The Minister's Quarterly: "They made me what I became . . . and I was certainly immeasurably greater mentally and spiritually at the end of those twelve years than when I came to them." Young people impressed by the figure of their own minister and the way he is supported by his people can hardly escape the suggestion to consider the ministry as a life's work.

2. Present the ministry as a calling to young people upon every possible occasion. (One Sunday a quarter might be profitably devoted to a discussion of the minister and his task.)

3. Cultivate the acquaintance of possible recruits, and provide them with contacts that will deepen their interest in and understanding of the Gospel Ministry.

4. Make available to young people books and other literature which interpret the work of the ministry.

5. Strive toward a wholesome and tranquil local church life. Who could estimate the number of young people who have been dissuaded from their purpose to become ministers by unfortunate experiences of pettiness and strife in their own churches?

6. Anything which magnifies the importance of the church and its ministry can be relied upon to help answer the prayer for "laborers unto the harvest."

News Flashes

We regret that we have no later news regarding Dr. L. E. Smith's condition at the time of going to press. We wish for him a speedy recovery.

Dr. W. H. Denison called the office of THE SUN in passing through Richmond. Despite his 82 years, Dr. Denison is one of the young and progressive men of our denomination.

From the editor of our Sunday School Lesson page, Dr. H. S. Hardcastle comes the following: "Mary, and Jane and little Elizabeth, who have been with us since Hardy's wedding, and I will leave on Monday morning for Schenectady, New York, where we will spend a week or more visiting J. B. and Jane. From there, Mary and I will go on to Toronto, Canada, to visit Mary's brother and family for a few days. We will be gone for perhaps three weeks in all. Needless to say we are looking forward to the trip with keen delight." Good traveling to you, Hardy. THE SUN's best wishes go with you.

Union Christian Church Holds Reception for New Minister.

The Union Christian Church at Hunterdale held a lovely reception for the new minister and his family following the evening service on August 3. The Rev. and Mrs. Clyde L. Fields and their 15 year old son, Clyde, Jr., were honored by members of the church and visitors. Over a hundred people gathered on the lawn of the church for an informal reception.

The serving table was beautifully lighted with candles, and guests were served punch, cake and peanuts. Mrs. Maude Scott, Mrs. S. M. Joyner, Mrs. J. G. Joyner, Mrs. Bill O'Brien, Mrs. Edgar Blythe and Mrs. Vernard Scott presided at the punch bowls and were assisted by ladies of the church.

Mrs. Larry Overby, president of the Women's Work, presented the Fields family with a lovely silver bowl on behalf of the church. Various expressions of good-will and welcome were expressed by many of the members of the church.

Union Christian Church of Hunterdale is happy to have our new pastor and family. They came to us from Pleasant Ridge Parish near Ramseur, North Carolina. We are looking forward to our work together for Christ and his Church.

Attention, Tarheel Preachers!

Several hundred rural ministers are expected to mingle with their farming parishioners at the 1952 Farm and Home Week, to be held at North Carolina State College, Raleigh, August 18-21. Our Congregational Christian rural churches should be well represented.

Along with farm leaders, the ministers will take part in the program and attend classes and discussions on rural church work. In some cases, laymen will bring their pastors, in others, pastors will help their members to get there.

One of the highlights for ministers and church lay leaders will come on Tuesday evening, August 19, when Wheeler McMillen, editor of Farm Journal and Pathfinder will speak on "The Rural Church and Community Life." He will be introduced by Dr. James H. Hilton, dean of the State College of Agriculture.

Special music will be rendered by the Beech Grove Methodist Church choir of Craven County. Following McMillen's address, a program in church recreation will be conducted by Lonnie Powell of the North Carolina Recreation Commission.

On Wednesday morning, August 20, a session will be held on "Examples of Effective Rural Church Work." The Rev. O. V. Caudill, the consultant on church building for the Presbyterian Synod of North Carolina, will discuss "Church Building." Dr. R. E. Earp of Selma will speak on "Financing the Church's Program"; the Rev. Wilson Nesbit, secretary of Town and Country Work for the Western North Carolina Methodist Conference, will relate examples of "Town and Country Cooperation"; and the Rev. Garland Hendricks, head of the Department of Rural Church and Community Development at Gardner-Webb College, will discuss "Extending the Influence of the Rural Church Through Education." A 4-H Club member will speak on "The 4-H Sunday Program."

Discussing the attendance of rural ministers at Farm and Home Week, which is traditionally a meeting of farm men and women, one pastor said it should do pastors much good to mingle with their farm flock and find out what is going on in agriculture and homemaking.

The North Carolina Rural Church Institute, Inc., of which L. R. Rarrill, State 4-H Club leader, is president, is responsible for the rural church part of the Farm and Home Week program. Directors of the institute will hold a meeting on Tuesday afternoon during the week.

Report of the Laymen's Fellowship of the Southern Convention.

The third Sunday in October of each year has been observed as Laymen's Sunday throughout the Southern Convention. Our churches have been very co-operative and, in most cases, laymen have conducted either the morning or evening service on Laymen's Sunday.

In January, 1951, we had a special meeting of the laymen in the Convention with every conference represented and approximately 600 in attendance at Elon College. This was a very inspirational and beneficial meeting for our men.

Many area conferences or group meetings of laymen have been held during the past biennium. We appreciate the encouragement given our laymen by our ministers and we are grateful for the fine leadership we have had in our local churches and conferences.

At each annual meeting of the conferences and of the Convention, time has been allotted for presentation of the work of the Laymen's Fellowship. We are grateful to our conference presidents and officials for this recognition and opportunity of presenting or work to them.

Many fine things have been done by the Laymen's Fellowship of the Southern Convention, and many more worthwhile projects can and will be undertaken during the next few years. There is a great field of service and a great need for our laymen to be active in the local church, which will have its influence on the entire program of the Southern Convention.

At the biennial session of the Laymen's Fellowship held in Durham on April 29, the following officers were elected for the 1952-54 biennium:

Chairman—W. B. Williams, 1253 24th St., Newport News, Va.

Vice-Chairman—Prof. J. E. Danieley, 17-B Glen-Lennox, Chapel Hill, N. C.

Secretary-Treasurer — S. H. Pell, R. 1, Ramseur, N. C.

The following recommendations of the Laymen's Council were adopted, and they are presented to the Convention for its endorsement:

- 1. Moonelon—(1) That the Laymen's Fellowship of the Southern Convention undertake the development of the physical equipment of "Moonelon" as a Convention Center for Young People's Conferences, Laymen's Meetings, Women's Meetings, Elon College Students, Orphanage Children, and for any other Church group of the Southern Convention.

(2) That the Laymen's Fellowship ask permission of the Convention to sponsor a campaign to raise $25,000 for this purpose, and that the Laymen's Council be authorized to set up such organization as necessary to raise the funds.

- 2. Insurance for Pastors—That we commend officials of the Convention in effecting the Group Insurance Plan for Pastors and their dependents, and urge all churches to pay their share of the insurance, that our ministers may be protected.

- 3. Elon College Sustaining Fund—That we heartily endorse the action of the Southern Convention in setting up the Sustaining Fund for Elon College, and urge our churches to make an earnest effort during the College Period to raise in full the Sustaining Fund of $1.00 per member during the Conference Year; and that men's classes, clubs and other organizations in the local churches lend their assistance in this worthy undertaking.

- 4. Meetings—That a Convention-Wide Meeting be held annually in the mid-winter at Elon College; and that regional and conference meetings be held regularly.

- 5. Finances — That an operating budget for the Laymen's Fellowship of the Convention be set up, and in order that this might be done, we further recommend that each local layman pay to his local church Laymen's Fel-

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

POLITICS, SPORTS and MISSIONS

There has been news a-plenty during recent weeks. The eyes of the nation were riveted on Chicago for two exciting weeks. Democracy is still very much alive. Through the miracle of television, many American citizens had their first opportunity to see and hear a National Convention in action. As a result of these two conventions, we certainly have a better informed citizenry. The masses of people become personality conscious, politically conscious.

But things have been happening elsewhere. For one thing, sports history was being made at the Olympic games at Helsinki, Finland. Americans read with pride that Bob Mathias of California (an American) won the Olympic decathlon, shattering his own world record for this supreme test of all-around athletic prowess. Some of us heard Parson Bob Richards speak at a Kiwanis meeting in Claremont, then noted that he set an Olympic pole vault record of 14 ft. 11.14 in. Horace Ashenfelter, steeplechase winner, was the first American in 44 years to win an Olympic race of more than 800 meters. Americans acquitted themselves handsomely at this international contest.

Elsewhere in this issue will be found an account of the Missionary Conference in Willingen, Germany. It must have been a memorable conference. The Ecumenical Press Service gives an opportunity for the editor to do a bit of gleaning in that distant field.

Dr. John A. Mackay of Princeton is chairman of the International Missionary Council. Here is a statement from his message worth quoting: "Jesus not only provided a message to the world; He has provided a mission, too." We do well to remember that the two are inseparable.

Another speaker was Canon Max Warren of the Church of England. He dwelt on the theme, "Christ and History." Said he: "We must accept history as bridging us to the past. We accept history as being part of God's dominion, and therefore we know that events are not out of hand. We also accept our technological society, but the Church has not discerned the kind of mission with which to meet this technological society." This seems to be the problem of the Church and Missions today. The Canon concluded: "Our people are wedded to the past. We have to help them forward out of ignorance to a new period of faith. The Church is always becoming what is not yet. We must start reviewing our attitudes, and three important aspects of that review lie with youth, theological colleges, missionary literature and Christian literature."

One can easily imagine a quickening of interest when the Reverend C. P. Charles, secretary of the Burma Christian Council, called upon Christian people in the West to recognize the new situation that exists in the world today: "The West can no longer look upon us in the East as 'heathendom' and upon themselves as 'Christendom,'" Mr. Charles said. "You in the West are living in a post-Christian society, and you are as much in need of Christianity as my people are."

He went on to state that churches in the West ought to be willing to use the services of Nationals from the East as they carry on their evangelistic work in a pagan society. When Christians come from the lands of the Younger Churches to America, Great Britain and Europe for study, they should be used. "Do not use us just for missionary talks in your churches," he said, "but let us work in a particular spot. We could bear our Christian witness in your slums, your industrial centers, among the migrants in the South, in the universities, or in unevangelized areas." Why not?

The Golden Anniversary of Christian Education

Back here in America at Silver Bay, New York, where the Missionary Education movement came into being in July, 1902, nearly 600 ministers, Sunday school teachers, missionaries and others marked the movement's Golden Anniversary at the annual Conference on the Christian World Mission.

The record number of delegates, from more than a dozen denominations and nine countries, honored the movement's past and its founders; absorbed information and techniques for current missionary education programs, and heard plans for the future of the Joint Commission on Missionary Education.

Delegates were reminded of the growth of the movement, from the single conference at Silver Bay, to six, including Boulder, Colo., Asilomar, Calif., Chatauqua, N. Y., Northfield, Mass. and Lake Forest, Ill., and the expansion of its publishing activities from the first fifty-cent reprint of "The Price of Africa," to the half-million books and numberless pamphlets, teachers' guides, maps and other materials published last year by the Joint Commission on Missionary Education. They also heard some of the hopes of the future, like the new missionary map of the world, the first in two decades, which will be undertaken if the movement's $100,000 revolving fund is completed.

Dr. James H. Robinson, pastor of New York City's

Church of the Master, who visited countries around the world on a trip sponsored by the Presbyterian, U. S. A., Board of Foreign Missions, described the achievements of missionary enterprise in terms of education, the status of women, health and medical training, which have influenced not only Christians in other countries but also "millions of others who have not yet found it wise or helpful to accept our way of life."

His suggestions were reported as follows:

1. Recruiting new missionaries, "tough-minded, dedicated and alert," from virtually untapped sources, among young Negro Christians and from wealthy prep schools and colleges;
2. Greater emphasis on evangelism, health services, education and agricultural aid in rural areas and industrial evangelism "on the docks, in the factories and the foundaries";
3. More rapid nationalization of mission churches and increased emphasis on partnership between missionaries and national Christians—it is apparent "we can no longer justify the compound wall around the mission station."
4. Staff members on U. S. Foreign Mission Boards from the Far East and Africa "who could help guide, direct and advise in the light of what is happening in their home countries."

Germany is Host to World Missionary Conference

In the lovely green valley of the Waldeck country of Germany, the International Missionary Council has had its fifth world consultation on the world mission of the Christian Church. A hundred miles east of Cologne, Willingen extended the traditional German hospitality, the delegates being welcomed with flowers provided by the people of Willingen. The village Lutheran church was redesigned in cool grey and green to match the complexion of the Waldeck country with its fir-clothed slopes and valley floors. The friendly, smiling faces of the Willingen children have brightened the conference comings and goings, and representatives of Korea, Burma, Thailand, Indonesia, Ceylon, India, the Gold Coast, and South Africa, mingled with representatives of the Scandinavian countries, France, Switzerland, Britain and America.

There have been 200 participants from 50 different countries, and the conference throughout has been aware of the richness of the ecumenical movement. The World Council of Churches has been represented and also the Christian groups not normally cooperating with ecumenical agencies.

That the conference had special significance for the German missionary movement and the German churches was obvious by the warmth of welcome accorded to the delegations by such distinguished leaders as Dr. Walter Freytag and Dr. Kary Kartenstein, and by the most delightful visit to the University of Marburg, where one of the delegates, Professor Kenneth Latourett, was honored with an honorary doctorate.

The German churches sent two leading bishops, Dr. Otto Dibelius and Dr. Hans Lilje, to preach, and at an informal meeting, Dr. Martin Niemöller spoke. The memory of the three impressive Communion services according to the Lutheran, Anglican and Reformed rites will long remain with the delegates. The deep-toned village bell ringing over the lovely valley on Sunday morning, the solemn Communion services and the sense of fellowship in Christ all contributed to the re-affirmation at Willigen of the unalterable purposes of God in his world.

For one delegate these personal impressions—which are in no sense official—were further deepened by a sense of the frustrations of our time, and the almost baffled bravery of the Christian forces as they face the world. The chastened optimism of Whitby 1847 gave place to a dedicated decision to again challenge the demonic forces of our time with all of our human resources, but above all with a reinvigorated conviction that the victory is already Christ's if we are but obedient and faithful.

The call to Mission and Unity may well be the chief fact about Willigen 1952. Groupe One declared that "through the ecumenical movement God is drawing his people together in order that he may enable us to discern yet more clearly the contradictions in our message and the barriers to unity which are also hindrances to effective witness in a divided world." Group I also emphasized that "our word is not one of retreat but of advance." The challenge to communism was sounded, and Christian forces were warned that "evangelization in a world strategy must also include the evangelization of communism."

Willingen sounded the note of World Mission—"every inhabited area of the world. No place is too far or too near for the exercise of the mission. Every group of Christians in the world today is surrounded by people who deny or do not know the Christian message."

In an honest attempt to face once more the real life of the Indigenous Church, Willingen looked again at the foreignness of the Church in many lands, and made a brave attempt to find an equivalent for the word foreign when it is connected with the word missionary.

The challenge of Bishop James Newbigin that Willingen should give a lead in recovering missionary initiative was most actively taken up by the conference, and both "younger" and "older" churches (unhappy jargon!) resolved once again to face the ecclesiastical and the administrative problems connected with it. In the same creative spirit, Group III made the bold suggestion that the I. M. C. should "explore the possibility of the formation of international, interracial and interdenominational teams composed of missionaries from both younger and older churches to work on new strategic frontiers." Group V listed instances of the new pioneering.

A recovered initiative and new missionaries to witness in a revolutionary world—that resounding Willigen note comes out in Group IV, where the call is made for "an increasing flow of Christian men and women to go out across the world as laymen in business, industry and government." Switzerland is taking the lead in planning a training center for such groups. "The day of missions as we have known them is at an end." This sentence of Canon Max Warren gave the conference a key to much of its thinking, and helped it to face the practical meaning of such a sentence in action by churches and missions, and in the revolution needed

The Pipe Organ Teaches

By J. EARL DANIELEY

This Sermon was preached in the United Church, Chapel Hill, July 6, 1952 the first Sunday the newly purchased Pipe Organ was in use

About three o'clock on the afternoon of Tuesday, June 24, a large truck backed across our churchyard and up to the newly constructed entrance. In that truck were more than one thousand parts of a pipe organ which we had purchased from Lewis & Hitchcock of Washington, D. C. There were eight of us who worked for more than two hours to unload the truck. There were pipes, relays, chests, motors, console, connections, and many other parts; it seemed impossible that all of this could ever be assembled into a useful instrument. Mr. Smith of the Washington Company and Jerry Schultz of our community went to work immediately. They worked night and day. Mr. Lewis, vice-president of the company, joined the workers on July 1, and all together they kept up the rapid pace. Finally, late in the afternoon of July 4, the work was completed; the organ had been completely assembled.

As chairman of the organ committee, I came by often during this time. Many of the days I came by several times to check with the men; to do some of the necessary jobs; to see to it that the congregation fulfilled its obligations to these men. I learned much about the construction of the organ; I saw something of the complexity, the intricateness of the mechanism, and the delicate work that is required. However, I think that I learned some spiritual lessons which were more important to me—some lessons which I think are directly applicable to our Christian living . . . things that we as church members need to know. Let's look at some of these things which I learned—things that I have been thinking during the past week.

1. I mentioned all of the different parts of the organ: 461 pipes, the console, the motors, the chests and various other items. In the truck, all of these parts were of little use as a musical instrument. After we had piled them in the church, it was still impossible to obtain music from them. The pipes would be of no value to us in the basement; the console would be out of place in the balcony; we would certainly not want the motor here in the sanctuary. Every single item had its place, and it had to be there if it was to be of value. I think that there is a lesson here for us: there is a place for each person as well as for each part of the organ. If we are to be useful, we need to be in our respective places. Everyone has a job to do; to be effective we need to be in our places doing our jobs.

2. Let's now assume that all the parts are in their respective places. But we immediately realize that the job is not complete by any means. Electrical connections must be made. Although everything is in place, the current must be on so that the motor will operate the blower; so that the keys will actuate the proper electromagnet which will in turn allow air to enter the pipes. There are literally hundreds of connections to be made and the important thing is that all of these had to be made before the instrument could be said to be in proper condition. There seems to be a lesson here: although we are in our place, we need to be in contact with God, we need the current of his love pulsating through us if we expect to function properly as Christians. There are some who think that they can be just as good Christians at home, but the pipe organ teaches that we need contact! contact with others of our fellowship and with God. Only when we are "in harness" do we accomplish the most for our Master.

3. After all the various parts of the organ had been put in the proper places and after every connection had been made, there were still several things that had to be done. One of these remaining jobs was a real lesson in humility. The seventh verse of the fourteenth chapter of the Gospel according to St. Luke contains these words, "For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." In the fourth chapter of James we find this passage of scripture, "God resisteth the proud but giveth grace to the humble . . . humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord and he shall life you up." Before any adjustments had been made, you might press one of the keys and the sound issuing from the pipe could hardly be heard; pressing the one next to it, however, might cause that pipe to blast forth with great intensity. Now it occurred to me that here in this organ we have "introverts" and "extroverts" among the pipes. The organ builder would not allow that. He humbled those proud boastful pipes that were so loud; he exalted those bashful pipes which could hardly be heard. The result was that after the "voicing of the pipes" had been completed, each of the pipes can be depended upon to play with the same intensity. I think here the pipe organ is teaching us to be humble; we need to realize that we are all equal in God's sight. The proud and the boastful are of little value to the Church; we need to work with all other Christians everywhere—real humility and real cooperation.

4. After the voicing had been completed, the next step interested me very much and I think it was most instructive. Some of those pipes were almost human. If you pressed a certain key, the first sound that you heard was a kind of squeaking sound, a squeal, or a growl. The organ builder calls such a pipe a "barking pipe." After this initial sound the tone which came from the pipe was perfect. I thought to myself—this is really like a lot of church members—so many of us, when asked to do something come forth first with a squeal, a growl or a gripe. We have so much to do, we have already served so faithfully, we have so little time, etc. It is amazing to know the number of "barks" (excuses) that church members can and do give. After this initial gripe, however, most of us will fall in and do the job which

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Dr. L. E. Smith, on the advice of his physician and surgeon, entered Alamance General Hospital on Sunday morning, August 3, at 8 o'clock, for a major operation on Monday.

* * *

Rains in Alamance County have changed the atmosphere, refreshed our citizens, and revived hopes for crops and a measured prosperity.

* * *

Student applications for entrance in Elon College in September continue slowly but with a degree of satisfaction. We need your cooperation that every available space at the college for students may be filled for 1952-53,

* * *

The college is planning to observe Founder's Day on September 16, with addresses at 11:00 a. m. and 2:00 p. m. Please mark this date and plan to be present.

* * *

Plans for the establishment of a foundation of North Carolina church related colleges is under consideration by the officials of the North Carolina Council of Church Related Colleges, presidents and representatives of the various member colleges.

* * *

Mr. George D. Colclough, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, Burlington, N. C., was elected Governor of Rotary District No. 278 recently. Mr Colclough is at present on vacation, but during his vacation will visit a number of clubs in his district. The Governor is required to visit every club in his district during his term of office.

Professor J. W. Barney of the English Department, who entered Alamance General Hospital on July 29 for a major operation on the following Monday, is improving satisfactorily. His physician expressed himself as well satisfied with Mr. Barney's condition.

A meeting in the interest of the Two and One Half Million Dollar Campaign for the college was held in our new church at Beverly Hills, Burlington, on Thursday, July 31. Rev. Walstein Snyder is the pastor of the church. Dr. F. C. Lester, of Asheboro, is chairman of the central district of North Carolina, which includes Burlington; was present and addressed the group. Dr. Lester is doing a good service for the campaign and for the college.

The Two and One Half Million Dollar Campaign for Elon College.

Any kind of undertaking involving thousands of individuals and requiring large sums of money depends, to a great extent, upon an efficient organization with sufficient personnel to reach the entire constituency involved. Such an organization must include individuals who are recognized leaders from all sections of the territory included.

To secure an amount equal to the $1,330,000 needed to complete the Two and One Half Million Dollar Campaign Fund it will be necessary to organize the total constituency; inform and inspire the individuals constituting the organization to do the work and make the appeal. For the past months the writer has been driving constantly in the states of Virginia and North Carolina, contacting pastors and laymen in the interest of this organization and of the campaign. Group meetings have been held in Suffolk and Norfolk, Virginia, and in Fuquay Springs, Burlington and Asheboro, North Carolina.

The Southern Convention is an extensive territory to cover. When you include the alumni living in these states the task is increased. There is a definite limitation to what one individual can do. The president of the college is directed by the Board of Trustees to conduct this campaign. We are necessarily dependent upon the pastors of our churches to assume responsibility for the organization in their given communities. The state officers will be glad to cooperate and give guidance to any one who may desire assistance. Millard Stevens is the General Chairman, Duane Vore is the Chairman of Virginia, and D. George Colclough is Chairman of North Carolina.

State divisions are divided into areas. It is the plan of the organization to completely organize local communities, which calls for one committeeman for each ten individuals. Thus when the organization shall have been completed, more than 3,000 committeemen will have been included.

It is the hope and prayer of us all that there shall be a hearty response to this plan for the college.

Definite plans are under way to observe Founder's Day at the college on September 16. The morning program will be in honor of Dr. William Allen Harper, fourth president of the college, and the great work he did for the college. Dr. Howard S. Hardcastle of Chuckatuck, Virginia, will be the speaker. At 2 o'clock in the afternoon there will be a great rally of the Elon College campaign organization and others with Congressman Walter Judd as speaker.

As a part of this service, the campaign to secure an additional $1,330,000 will be formally launched. The members of the Board of Trustees of Elon College, Trustees of the Elon College Foundation, the officers of the Convention organization, and one tenth of the entire membership will be cordially and earnestly invited to come to the college on September 16 for the morning and afternoon services. The college will serve a complementary lunch and will provide entertainment overnight for all those who desire it.

Elon College Alumnus Promoted.

Mr. William H. Maness, Class of 1938, was one of the most popular students in Elon College during his college days. He was a football enthusiast, but Coach Walker said that he was not physically big enough to be a member of the team. However, he was made manager of the football team and was popular with all the athletes. Bill, as we knew him, was a good student, cooperative in all campus affairs. After his graduation from Elon College, he attended Wake Forest College and graduated in law from Stetson University in Deland, Florida. Following graduation he settled in Jacksonville, Florida. The following article appeared recently in the Burlington paper and other daily papers:

"The law firm of Ragland, Kurz and Layton in Jacksonville, Florida, have announced the admission of William H. Manes, Jacksonville attorney, as a member of the firm. This law firm was originally established in 1906 by Col. W. E. Kay, under the name of Kay, Doggett & Smith, and has occupied offices in Suite 608, Consolidated Building, continuously since

V--The Sloans Visit Harriet Summerville

{ Dr. Sloan Continues His Report on Africa }

"The lettuce died because of the cold," our hostess' kitchen girl reported yesterday morning. This certainly sounded strange for July, but we are south of the equator, where it is now winter, and where water swirls down a drain cock clock-wise instead of counter clock-wise.

Most of our travel on this 30,000-mile trip is by plane, but just now we are crossing the African continent by train, from Lobito on the Atlantic coast to Elizabethville in the Belgian Congo. It is a four-day trip.

The first fourth of the trip was split into two parts to visit two Congregational Christian missions. Yesterday morning we left the second mission. This afternoon we shall reach the Angola-Belgian Congo border. We should reach Elizabethville on Tuesday, about our farthest point from home. After a short trip south into Northern Rhodesia, we fly north.

Because the trains are crowded and terribly dusty we decided to splurge and travel first class to the border. We have a comfortable compartment to ourselves, but we cannot keep away from the constant dust and the smoke of our wood-burning engine. Every hour or so we stop to fill the tender with eucalyptus wood which the railway grows along the less barren parts of its right of way. We are on a desert plateau nearly a mile above sea level.

No one else on the train knows English. We have picked up a number of useful Umbundu expressions and Mrs. Sloan has learned considerable Portuguese. When these fail, we resort to French or Spanish and get along. After our train-boy had scooped some of the dust off our seats, he smiled broadly when we thanked him in three languages.

Today completes two weeks in Angola—our police permit is for fifteen days. This is a large part of our trip to be spent in a nation with fewer people than North Carolina, but Angola is one of our major objectives, for here is located the mission work of the Congregational Christian denomination. Fortunately, denominations are largely unknown here. All missions work together except the Roman Catholic and the Seventh Day Adventist.

Dondi, where we have been the past four days, is a good example of co-operation, for it is a joint enterprise of the United Church of Canada and our Congregational Christian denomination. The United Church has two other mission centers in Angola and the Congregational Christians five, but Dondi is the national center.

Here is a mission much like Elinde, with its church, middle school, hospital (small, but the best we have seen in Africa), leper colony and agricultural work. Fortunately, in the leper village is a young African leper who has developed a great interest in flowers. He has made the village a place of beauty. His petunias are a mass of color any North Carolina home would be proud to have. He gave us seeds we hope will grow at Elon College.

Young people from all over Angola come to Dondi to Curry Institute, an advanced school for boys, and to Means School for girls. One part of Curry is the Bible and theological school. Curry is fortunate in its African music teacher. His choir gave a concert for Mrs. Sloan and me, singing some of the world's best choral music in both Umbundu and Portuguese. Here is a man of whom any school could be proud. Although English is not used in Angola, he translated two addresses for me with absolutely no hesitation or grasping for words.

As in the other two schools, the students wanted Mrs. Sloan to say a few words in Spanish to discover how much of a sister language they could understand. At both Curry and Means, she taught the students a Spanish song. Later we heard groups of students singing it.

Means School is of especial interest to us, for here our hostess, Harriet Summerville, is head of the religious education department. Miss Summerville's salary comes from the Reidsville Congregational Christian Church. She is an excellent investment. I wish other churches would take enough interest in Jesus' last command that they would support a missionary of their own.

Miss Summerville, a young woman in her second term in Angola, is the salt of the earth. She and a young Portuguese woman make their home together and give their students an example of how happy a Christian home can be. One of the bright spots in this home is Rita, an African youngster twenty months old. When her mother died of tuberculosis, Rita was so emancipated she could not move her arms or cry aloud. Now she is a cheerful, healthy baby. I hope we get some good pictures of her as well as of Miss Summerville.

Bus Reflections.

By MRS. CARL WALLACE.

On Wednesday, June 11, seventy-four excited people from the Southern Convention boarded two Carolina Trailway buses and turned their thoughts toward California and the General Council. Although the men were outnumbered six to one, the women who made the trip felt that they were well chaperoned, because each bus had three ministers who watched over the flock.

To say that the trip out and back was fun, is putting it mildly. One man was surprised to see his wife looking as fresh when she returned as when she left. This was due partly to the new air-conditioned buses and partly to the many jokes and pranks that took place each day. Dr. Newman, our chaplain, was overheard in Clairmont when he said he was looking forward to getting back on the bus.

Carolina Trailways Company would probably be surprised to know just what their buses can be used for. There were a few times during the fifteen days spent traveling that we had to run a hospital. But that posed no problem because at once our patient was put to bed on the back seat and given a bit of everybody's medicine. We were often surprised that the patient survived.

Our very efficient beauty shop offered facials and massages along with excellent hostess service. If one back home could have tuned in, he would have heard "The Breakfast Club," which went on the air each afternoon after lunch. We sang folk songs for hours, and one little gray-haired lady did her good deed for the day when she did an Irish jig to keep the driver awake.

One afternoon, when we stopped in a small Texas town to refresh, all 74 of us crowded into the one drugstore. One fountain girl, after catching her breath, said that she thought the insane asylum had turned the inmates out. Everywhere we went we attracted attention, not because we looked like inmates from an asylum, but because of our number and because we appeared to be having a good time,

Our delegation was given a write-up in the Claremont local paper.

Because Pattie Lee had done such a wonderful job of planning our trip

OUR DAY.

By Eleanor Wheless.

The telephone rings each morning at six
To say it's time for us to wake up, and fix.
Some move quickly, while others lag.
And act as if they can hardly drag.
But after our coffee and lively chatter
Leaving that place doesn't seem to matter,
Except for Avery and Lanson and Martin,
Who work and sweat a-packing for startin'.

Our minimum luggage so carefully planned
Has doubled and tripled since our trip began.
None could resist that silly bric-a-brac,
So with all that junk we go struggling back.
Then Dr. Newman, at the head of the bus,
Asks God's blessing upon all of us;
Then off we go to a fine new start.
My, we are chipper and merry of heart!

We talk and we sing, every faculty employ,
For this is something we all enjoy.
We have the feeling each lovely day
That we never again will pass this way.
Pattie's determined that we shall see
Ev'ry wonderful scene there could possibly be.
So with mountains and caverns and canyons and lakes,

There's hardly the time that all this takes.

We always grow hungry at each meal time,
But seem to spend hours just standing in line.
No place we stop is ever quite ready
To serve us with more than spuds and spaghetti.

After we eat, we settle down quiet;
Even Sonny and Pattie could never deny it.
That nice quiet rest which is quite in style,
When we're not heard from for many a long mile.

Then we wake of a sudden all rested and new Hoping against hope we've missed never a view.

For each new marvel in this mighty West
Seems to our wond'ring eyes to be really best.
Then the day is over, and as twilight falls
We grow rather quiet, and then someone calls
For our voices in hymns to be raised
To our God above in thanksgiving and praise.

But our greatest problem comes where we lodge;

When Pattie and Martin and the manager in charge

Settle down by the desk and by 2's and 4's,
Bed us down in our rooms in rows.
But we sleep quite well, tho' the hours be few,
For we've grown accustomed to this schedule new.

and because she worked so hard each day to see that everything ran smoothly, we wanted to do something to show our gratitude. Knowing it was impossible to pay her in dollars and cents, we decided to give her a keepsake gift—a beautiful Hamilton watch, and we hope, as she wears it, she will remember that we all love "the little woman in the shoe, who had so many children she didn't know what to do."

Not all our day on the bus was spent in pranks and fun. Each morning before beginning the day's travel, Dr. Newman prayed God's blessings on us; and each evening at twilight, we settled down to hymn time, when any one who felt in the mood led us in an old familiar hymn. On the two Sundays that we traveled, our ministers held worship services for us.

There are always a few talented people in a group of this size: thus Carolyn Ellis of Chapel Hill added much to our worship services with her beautiful and impressive rendition of "The Lord's Prayer" and other hymns. We had a poet, too, and because Mrs. Eleanor Wheless did such a wonderful job of putting our day into poetry, I offer it to you.

Isle of Wight Uses Talents.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Isle of Wight Christian Church has had a very good year. We have been able to meet all requirements, contribute to several projects, both home and foreign, and add money to our building fund. We have secured new members and reinstated former members. Our mission study books were reviewed by three of our own members.

All the money we raised, was raised among our local people. We did not serve suppers, put on entertainments, etc., this year, but decided we would try our own talents. These are some of the projects done by individual members: Cleaning brass for friends and neighbors, cake making, serving lunch to welfare workers, making dish towels from feed bags, making baby clothes, serving lunch to construction workers.

We hope as we prepare to enter a new year of work that we will be able to accomplish even greater work for our Lord and Master.

Convention Treasurer's Report

The following is the Quarterly Report of the Treasurer of the Woman's Missionary Convention of the Southern Convention of Congregational (Continued on preceding page.)

A Page for Our Children

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Boys and Girls:

Again this week, Mrs. House is unable to furnish her material for your page, and she asked the managing editor if he would find a story for you. Here is one we hope you will like. It is called—

"The One Who Was Brave"

"Elton Tilton is just the bravest boy you ever saw, mother," said Winfred. "One day a big dog came along with his tongue hanging out, and we all thought he was mad and scrambled over the fence; but Elton walked right along as calm as ever. He says he isn't afraid of bears or tramps or anything. I wish I were as brave as Elton, but I'm afraid I never will be."

"I heard a story about two boys the other day," said his mother, "and I thought one of them was very, very brave. They went to school together, and one day they thought it would be great fun to hide a frog in the teacher's desk; but the frog tipped over an ink bottle and spoiled a number of examination papers and other things, and the teacher was very angry. He asked the guilty boy to own his fault like a man and take the punishment he deserved. He put him upon his honor, you see. Well, the older boy, who found the frog and first thought of the joke, sat still in his seat without a blush; but the little boy, though he trembled with fear, went to the desk before the whole school and owned his fault. And he sat for an hour on the dunce's stool, a target for fifty pairs of eyes."

"O, Mother," cried Winfred, "I was so ashamed! I'll never do anything so mean again as long as I live. How did you know?"

"I heard two boys talking about it as I rode in the bus. I was proud of my boy, Winfred; and I pitied Elton Tilton's mother, for I said to myself: 'My boy was brave, but her boy was a coward.'"

"Why, I never thought that was being brave!" said Winfred.—Erch.

Stop! Look! Listen!

By JANET T. VAN OSDEL.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

When Lou Mason was making one of her famous cakes she was oblivious to all else, even to her children. One afternoon, as she measured cake ingredients, four-year-old Bert ran in, gasping, "Dicky—!" followed by a jumble of words. Lou had given up trying to understand Bert's speech, but had she glanced at his troubled face now, she must have stopped everything to listen. Instead, she said, "I'm busy! Run away!"

"Dicky—," persisted Bert.

"Bert!" Lou stamped her foot.

Bert vanished!

As Lou carefully placed the cake in the oven, six-year-old Susan rushed in from school, exclaiming, "Mother, Bert says Dicky's run away—to stay! He punched Bert's nose and he was scared!"

"So that's what Bert tried to tell me," sighed Lou, hastening to the road.

Susan and Bert followed.

"Which way did he go?" asked Lou.

Bert pointed. No sturdy three-year-old was in sight.

The three sped down the road, until Susan cried, "There's his blanket!" There was a rosy blur ahead.

"On the edge of the drainage ditch," moaned Lou. "God, don't let him be drowned, please!"

They found Dicky, wedged face downward in the ditch. Lou tried to reach him but failed. Susan, wearing boots, jumped into the deep, narrow ditch and seized his shoulders, but she could not budge him. Then Bert leaped in at Dicky's head, placed his hands under him and pushed upward until Dicky, dazed, gasping, dripping dirty water, struggled upright.

"He's alive!" sobbed Lou, while practical Susan wiped his face with an end of the blanket.

Between his mother and sister, Dicky plodded homeward, with Bert carrying the blanket, following.

Suddenly Dicky demanded, "Is Snubby and my perfume gone?"

Bert happily unrolled the blanket, displaying a battered, broken-nosed doll and a fancy bottle of pink liquid.

"Oh," sighed Dicky, smiling. Then he touched Bert's bruised nose and said, "I'm sorry, Bert!"

As they neared home, Susan exclaimed, "Something's burning!"

"My prize cake," said Lou. "And I don't even care!"

After a hot bath Dicky was tucked into bed with Snubby and his perfume. Lou soon brought in some hot chocolate with marshmallows. As the family were drinking it, she said, "Never run away again, Dicky! Never!"

"It's nicer here than away," sighed Dicky.

"Nicer than a dirty ditch, anyhow!" giggled Susan.

Alone that evening, Lou reviewed the day. "Bert is definitely not stupid," she decided. "I know that after seeing him save Dicky. I've shamed him because he is so far behind Dicky in learning to talk, whereas I should have been helping him. From now on his speech shall be my major job. I'll drill him (1) in shaping his lips for sounds that require the lips; (2) in placing his tongue near or against his teeth for sounds needing that adjustment; (3) in repeating a word until he masters it; (4) in enunciating long words, syllable by syllable; (5) in give-and-take conversations twice a day. And always I'll stop to listen when he has something to say!"

Three months later, when Bert's father returned from a prolonged trip, his son gave him a big surprise. Approaching him with a picture, the boy asked, "You know what animal this is, Daddy?"

Mr. Mason stared in amazement at the child who so recently could utter scarcely an intelligible word. Then, sensing the eagerness in the bright brown eyes meeting his own, he said, "You tell me!"

"That is a hip-po-pot-a-mus!" proudly pronounced Bert.

"You've said a mouthful, Son, and perfectly!" praised his father. "How is it that you talk so well now?"

"Oh, I just learned how," Bert answered casually. Mother listens to me now, and we talk lots."

When Thomas Aquinas visited in Rome and was shown the gorgeousness of the papal palace, the pope, it is said, remarked to him: "Well, Thomas, the church in our day can not say, 'Silver and gold have I none.'" "No," replied Aquinas, "neither can it say, 'In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk.'" Ah! how often has it been the case, that when the church has been increased in riches and worldly wisdom, she has correspondingly decreased in spiritual power and piety.—Rev. C. Perrin.

Youth at Work in the Church

MAX VESTAL, Box 792, Elon College, N. C.

A Letter from Curtis Young.

Hello Everyone:

It sure is good to be home after attending the General Council for a week and the National Pilgrim Fellowship Council for an additional week, but we have our work cut out for us during the approaching year.

The immediate task before us is that our foreign student, Jose Dabuet, is returning to the Philippines the last of August. Although we had hoped he would remain for two years, he feels that he is needed at home.

Don't you think it would be nice if we could give him a going-away present? While talking to him a few days ago, he mentioned that his home church needs about 80 hymnals. I know he would rather have something for his church than for himself. If you approve of this suggestion, take a special offering in your group and send a check for the amount to me. I will turn it over to Pattie Lee Coghill, who says she will be glad to take care of them for me.

This is something you can do if you like, and if you don't like, O. K. Why not let your group decide? If you feel you want to help out in getting hymnals for Jose, do your best to have your check to me by August 11.

I am looking forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

CURTIS YOUNG.

In Appreciation of Timothy Chang.

Rev. J. Taylor Stanley, superintendent of the District of the Southeast (Negro) of Greensboro, North Carolina, has written the following to Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, in appreciation of the work done by Timothy Chang this summer:

"I am writing to express my personal appreciation for the help Timothy Chang gave in our July Summer Conference at Franklinton. He was such a great help in so many ways, serving equally well in class room, worship services, recreation and special conference activities. He won a place in the hearts of all of us, young and old.

"You will be interested to know that we had the largest attendance we have ever had at Franklinton. One hundred thirty registered for the conference. There were one hundred two in Bible School. There were several day students and visitors. Everything was overloaded, but we had no break downs, and no serious problems or complaints.

"Again, thanks to you for Timothy's part in making this one of our best Summer Conferences."

Relax with Max.

Certainly hope that some of you young people who attended the Pilgrim Fellowship Council in California will give us all a report of the goings on out there. I'll be happy to make this column shorter for any news they or you may have. I've been planning a series called "Know Your Officers," which would give interesting information about our newly elected Youth Fellowship officers. Would you like this? If so, I'll continue to pester these overly modest officers for this information.

Willingen has stood quite clearly for Church and Mission. The outgoing thrust of the mission is part of the given life of the Church. Willingen has most distinctively brought the missionary agencies within the orbit of the ecumenical movement—the "little ship on the stormy sea" has been the symbol of the conference. Willingen has confronted East and West with the continued judgment of God, and reaffirmed our unity in Christ and our faith in his victory and reign, come what may in our world,

Effective Preaching Includes Counseling.

By WILLIAM E. HULME.

"How can I get my people to come to me with their problems?" Many pastors are asking this question. They feel like doctors who are waiting for someone to walk into the office. How can pastors encourage their people to come for help?

People who have serious problems are usually ashamed of having them. So long as they think they can handle things themselves they probably will not come—particularly if they are not accustomed to seeking help. Even when they are desperate they still may stay away. The pastor, therefore, must take every opportunity to make it easier for them. As his people see and hear him each Sunday in the pulpit they form a large part of their opinion of him as a counselor. How can he use his sermon as a stepping stone to his counseling.

The sermon that moves people to come to their pastor with their problems is a sermon that comes to grips with these problems. When his preaching is helpful to them they feel encouraged to come to him for counseling. What then are the essential characteristics of this kind of preaching?

1. Theological Stability. In spite of many evidences to the contrary, the church is still the house of God. From early times congregations have confessed their faith in God as a part of the church service. The confession of faith evolved through the centuries as people felt the need for greater clarity in their religious beliefs. There is a psychological need for theology: it satisfies the demand of the intellect for a definite structure and it is the mind's way of getting hold of religion.

Theology is not to be confused with a technical theological terminology, nor with the complicated doctrinal minutiae, nor with a bigoted dogmatism. The psychological need for theology is the need for clarity in regard to the fundamentals of belief. The preacher who is consistently vague in theology is neglecting the need of his people for a faith that can be defined.

The omission of theology from the sermon may be the result of a conflict in the preacher's mind. His seminary training may have removed him from the religious beliefs of his congregation. He may be reluctant to

The Tragedy of Saul.

LESSON VII—AUGUST 17, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: "To obey is better than to sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."—I Samuel 15: 22.

LESSON: I Samuel 13: 8-13, 15, 17-22; 18: 6-9; 31: 3-4.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 1.

A Promising Young Man.

As was pointed out in last Sunday's lesson, Saul was a promising young man. Few biblical characters have shown more promise in their youth than this young man. He was a physical giant, standing head and shoulders above his fellow Israelites. He was modest, courageous, magnanimous and friendly. He displayed fine powers of leadership, and became a rallying point for the divided tribes, welding them into a more or less compact nation, which overcame their enemies and secured independence. And for some time he ruled in an efficient and constructive way. He might have been one of the great characters of the Bible.

A Tragic Old Age.

It is difficult to believe that this promising young man was the man who, at the end of a disastrous battle, fell on his own sword and killed himself! But it was the same man. He who began life with so much promise of success, ended it as a suicide. There are few more tragic figures than this man as he comes to the end of his career. The tragedy of it all is that it did not have to be. He brought about his own downfall. Like so many others, he conquered others, but he could not conquer himself. He ruled others, but he did not rule himself. His failure was not due to outward circumstances, but to inner weakness.

The Reasons Why.

Many factors entered into Saul's tragic failure. Impatience was one of them. Like so many young men, or older men for that matter, Saul was in too much of a hurry. When Samuel did not appear at the appointed time, Saul could not wait, and did not wait. He forthwith proceeded to offer sacrifice. We Americans are too impatient in many things. A layman visited his minister in his study one morning and found the minister greatly agitated and restless. "What is the matter?" asked the layman. The minister replied, "I am in an awful hurry, but God is not." We try to force the divine hand. Nations revert to war instead of taking the long slow way to peace. Couples rush off to the divorce courts instead of being patient. Young people drop out of school before completing their courses because of impatience. And many people fail in their Christian experience because they have to follow the long, slow way of discipline instead of becoming good by leaps and bounds.

Closely related to Saul's impatience, was his disobedience. He disobeyed the known will of God. He did what he knew was wrong, even though he knew it was wrong.

Offering the sacrifice was in itself a good thing, it would seem. But it was an act of disobedience. He refused to obey the instructions of God as made known through God's representative, Samuel. Alas for the man who deliberately disobeys the will of God, however that will is revealed to him. And God's voice often comes to us through his messengers, his prophets and preachers and teachers. If a man does not follow the light which he has, the light becomes to him darkness. Obedience is better than sacrifice and worship.

Pride and love of applause were also fatal defects in the character of Saul. Like so many folks, both big and little, power and success went to his head. As a great Englishman once said, "Power corrupts, and absolute power absolutely corrupts." Saul got a swelled head. He became vain. He sought popular favor. He got to the place where he thought he could get along without God. He degenerated into a politician instead of acting as a statesman. Pride goeth before a fall.

Then came jealousy. Enter this green-eyed monster, and the man was doomed. He had in his service a young man named David, who had distinguished himself on the field of battle. When the conquering armies returned home, some poet, lacking in tact, and stark stupid, composed a song in which he called attention to the fact that while Saul had slain his thousands, David had slain his tens of thousands. That was too much for the king, already jealous of the young man whom he knew was destined to inherit his throne. He became insanely jealous and tried, on more than one occasion, to kill David. It was the inevitable circle at work. More and more, as Saul realized his own failure, he became bitter and vindictive toward those who were succeeding. His jealousy blinded him and drove him on to one excess after another. There is perhaps no more deadly emotion than jealousy, unless it is hate. And hate breeds jealousy, and jealousy breeds more hate. Jealousy is a notorious killer. It is the Number One Murderer of human life.

"Sin, When It Hath Run Its Course . . ."

The thing did not happen all at once. This good man did not go wrong all at once. Men seldom if ever do. A minister once said, "You sometimes hear of a good man gone wrong. That is not strictly the case. It is rather the case of a bad man being found out." Many a big, sturdy tree which has withstood the ravages of time and the storms and stresses of life has succumbed to the inner and unseen ravages of tiny insects, and has toppled to destruction, many times to the surprise of those who thought they knew it best. So it is with men. Every man has within him potential forces of destruction. Slowly, inevitably, inexorably they are at work in him. Only as his inner life is made pure and strong by the power of Christ can he be saved from disaster.

A Word of Appreciation.

We need not blind our eyes to the faults of Saul. Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our instruction. But neither need we blind our eyes to his virtues. He united Israel, taught her to protect herself, won battles against powerful foes, threw off the Philistine yoke and lifted Israel to a new high place among the nations. He opened ways to commerce. Best of all he laid in the minds of the Israelites the foundation of a high democratic ideal of kingship, which the tyrants of luxury, Solomon and Ahab, could not dislodge. He laid great foundations, he built a kingdom, even though he destroyed himself. Even as we throw a mantle over his defects, let us honor him for his virtues.

THE PIPE ORGAN TEACHES.

we have been asked to do. "Barking" is not permitted in the organ, it would destroy the beauty of the music. In God's great church, such gripping and growling is discordant; it destroys something of the beauty of the church. We should count it a privilege to serve God! we should respond immediately!

5. After all the other adjustments were made and the "barking pipes" had been adjusted to remove the discord, the organ had to be tuned. Mr. Lewis Potter, well-known organist of Winston-Salem and Mrs. Jackson's father, was of tremendous assistance in this operation. This business of tuning the organ involves two things: first, each pipe has to be in tune with the other pipes in the same rank, and, second, each rank of pipes needs to be in tune with the other ranks of pipes so that when the organist chooses to play the "full organ" there is harmony and beauty. Now it seems to me that the organ can be likened to the Church. This church might be considered a rank of pipes in God's great pipe organ, with each member a pipe in that rank. Each of us then needs to be in harmony with all the rest of us.

Tuning the organ is fairly easy; I had thought that it would be extremely difficult. . . . I had thought that you would need to have a perfect sense of pitch. The way it is done, however, is somewhat different from what I had assumed. If you depress middle C and the C which is one octave higher and the pipes play as if only one pipe is playing, then they are in tune with each other; if they are not in tune there is a lot of vibration, a kind of rumbling. Here then, most certainly, is another lesson from the pipe organ. In the church where men and women are not in harmony, there is a lot of unnecessary vibration, rumbling, mumbling and discord. We need to be in complete harmony with the other members of our local congregation. When we are thus in harmony, the pipes in one rank of God's great pipe organ are in tune and are ready to make the music of Christian service.

But this is not all of the job of tuning; we have already noted that each rank of pipes needs to be in tune with all of the other different ranks. Here, it seems to me, is the ecumenical lesson of the organ. God's great organ contains Baptist pipes, Congregational Christian pipes, Lutheran pipes, Methodist pipes, Presbyterian pipes, and others representing each of the other denominations. All of these must be in tune with each other within their own group, but we all need to be in tune so that there is no discord when different denominations are called upon to serve together. We need to work together, to share what we have in common, and to understand and appreciate our differences. There is no place in the great pipe organ of the universe for a rank of pipes, no matter what denomination it is, which insists upon dominating the music, which insists that it is better than all the rest and that, therefore, it should constantly be in the forefront.

In this church we have a pipe organ; it is a good instrument; it is well-adjusted; it is in good tune; we hear beautiful music from it. God has a great pipe organ; each of us represents a pipe in this great instrument. If we are to be of maximum service, we need to be in our place doing our job, we need to be connected with God and our local fellowship, we need to be humble but to be confident in our faith, we need to serve without discord or gripe, we need to be in tune with all the other members of our church and to cooperate fully with Christians of all denominations. The music of God's pipe organ is Christian service to God and man; when we do our part the Master Organist can use us so that the Church of Christ, the organ of the universe, gives forth music that is full of harmony, beauty and majesty—thus the Kingdom of God will come upon earth and the will of God will be done.

Apportionment Giving.

It frequently happens that interested individuals feel that small contributions to a great cause requiring large sums of money amount to little or nothing. Too often we overlook the fact that many of the great fortunes of this country have been created by a multiplicity of small sales with small profits.

Elon College is not dependent on large gifts for its support. True, it would be happy to have large gifts, and many of them, but in the final analysis the college is dependent on gifts, however large or small, from the individuals of its constituency—church members and alumni.

There are some 40,000 who should be interested directly in Elon College. Small contributions weekly, daily or monthly, from these individuals, all of them, would relieve the financial situation at Elon College, and put our institution on a safe and sound financial footing. No one need give an amount that would inconvenience them, but certainly no one would want to give a small amount that would embarrass them. Let everyone make his contribution according to his ability and according to his prosperity that the Lord made possible for him. The college is most appreciative of every kind thought and generous gift.

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Last week I told you that we were going to Pleasant Hill for the morning worship to be followed by dinner on the church lawn. Well, we went—a bus load, two automobile loads and a pick-up truck load. When they presented me for my talk, I had the children, matrons and Mr. Wagoner join me upon the pulpit. Of course, it over-ran the pulpit; but it was a pretty sight to see all these children and their helpers together in that old rural church. I told the congregation a few things about some of the people they saw there, and then I asked them to return to their seats. The people were generous in every way. They gave us $287.18, a dinner that met all requirements and enough cantaloupes for all to have a goodly share when back home at the orphanage.

This week we mailed 16,000 coupons to Colgate-Palm Olive-Peet Co., and we must have about that many to mail to General Mills. Thanks for your collecting of these coupons. It would help us a great deal if you sorted and counter them into packs of 100 before you mailed them. If you do not have a hundred, send what you do have. What kind? Any kind. Thanks.

Do you know anyone who lived for any time at the Christian Orphanage? Please find out if they are on our mailing list for our Monthly Calendar and for notice of our Annual Home-Coming Day—August 31. We desire that every person who has lived here return on that fifth Sunday in August. It is to be their day. They are to bring their families and show them what and where the orphanage is, and tell them of those yesterdays. They are to see the improvements. They are to catch the vision which grows here for bringing this institution into line with other such homes. They are to, and will, renew their appreciation of what this home meant to them. Therefore, I am asking you to help us get word to everyone that they are wanted here August 31.

This coming Sunday I am to preach in the college chapel, the next Sunday at the new First Congregational Christian Church of Greensboro, and the third Sunday in the new Front Street Methodist Church in Burlington.

Last week I spoke at a dinner meeting of the Men's Brotherhood of the First Evangelical and Reformed Church of Burlington, and a supper meeting of the Burlington Exchange Club “Pouting” is probably not as pretty a word as I would like to use, but it expresses what a teen-ager can do when some little counsel runs counter to his wishes. It is something we see very little of here on our campus, but it does show up occasionally. Two things are used to erase the pout, a little further explanation and kindly counsel calculated to bring a smile, and time. Those two things, properly applied, can put almost any pout to rout. I notice that when any child here realizes that we have a sincere desire to furnish the most happiness possible without interfering with the rights of others, there is full and proper cooperation.

Thanks for the nice report hereto attached.

EFFECTIVE PREACHING INCLUDES COUNSELING.

bring these differences to the attention of his people, particularly since their beliefs are usually more in line with the historical and confessional standards of his denomination. He may evade the issue entirely or try to conceal it by carefully choosing his words so that each hearer may draw his own interpretation from them. His purpose in preaching, then, is more to create an impression upon the minds of his people than to convey a meaning to them.

People who listen to preaching of this kind for very long will suspect the truth. If they have problems they will be even more disturbed. Anything that makes them dubious concerning the pastor's beliefs undermines their confidence in their own beliefs. I am not saying that pastors should preach what they do not believe; I am saying that this preaching in a theological vacuum is leaving unsatisfied the soul's hunger for religious truth.

It is essential that the counselor establish rapport with his counselee. The pastor initiates this relationship from the pulpit when he shows his people that he understands them. He must know human nature.

Understanding Human Nature. Before he can understand his people he must understand himself. This may be a difficult thing to do. Before he can understand himself he must be honest with himself, and his role as a minister is not conducive to such objectivity—he is a professional example of Christian living; and he may become so conscious of this picture of himself that anything counter to it is rationalized or ignored. He deals with difficult people—the neurotics in the woman's society and the reactionaries on the church council—and can easily get involved in ego-squabbles.

A study of psychology should help him understand himself. If he learns from science the functional pattern of the human personality, he learns also to recognize this pattern in himself and others. He grows sensitive to the psychological clues that interpret human behavior and is better able to describe the workings of human nature to his people. In doing this, it is advisable not to use psychological terminology; congregations want a pastor, not a psychologist.

The Bible itself is a textbook in human nature. It is also the preacher's textbook for sermons. If he has done a conscientious job in the study of his text he can scarcely help but show a knowledge of human nature. The fundamentals of the psychology of personality were in the third chapter of Genesis long before they were discovered by the psychologists; and this analysis of the human personality runs throughout the Scriptures. When the preacher accurately describes human nature, each of his hearers will think he is talking directly to him. The people know he knows how they feel.

Personal Religion. People with problems come to church to seek help from religion. They are most likely to get this help from sermons that apply religion to the inner life. Sermons on social action have their vital place, but it is the sermon on personal religion that moves people to ask counseling.

According to the psychology of religion, religion is man's response to a Creator of values in which the Creator himself is recognized as the supreme value. The man in the pew wants first of all to lay hold on God.

In the course of facing a problem people often lose their personal religion. The large role that guilt plays in human problems is responsible for this. Subconsciously they feel they have offended God and that he wants little or nothing to do with them. They may even believe that this damage to their personal religion is the basis of their problem. . . .

Moving in a circle where God is taken for granted, the pastor will have to remind himself that there will be doubters among his hearers, that they are often people with problems, and that basically their problem is the guilt which has separated them from God. In his sermons he should seek not only to stimulate belief in God but also to eliminate this barrier to belief. Guilt is a religious problem. The heart of the Christian gospel is its solution. As the pastor tries to make this forgiveness effective in the lives of his hearers he is preaching personal religion in its essence.

Ring of Sincerity. Several years ago when I needed the assurance of faith I heard Peter Marshall preach. I left his church helped not only by what he said but also by the sincerity with which he said it. It is from the preacher's own experiences in the spiritual life that he learns to make religion practical. "I believed, therefore have I spoken."

The pastor's sermons reflect his private devotional life. The time he spends with God is a blessing not only to himself but to his people. It is in communion with God that he receives the spiritual vitality that enables him to preach with conviction. No man can keep company with Christ without being transfigured. . . .

It is when he feels spiritually inadequate that he may try to assume a religious air. Because he is behaving unnaturally he lacks the spontaneity of sincerity. . . . Without realizing it he may even espouse some noble cause partly as an escape from his conflict. While this cause may be worthy of his ministerial energies, if he is using it in any way to substitute for the deficiency in his own personal relationship with God, his preaching will be of little help to people with problems.

"Invitive" Attitude. What in counseling is called approachability, in the pulpit can be called an "invitive" attitude. An analysis of this attitude reveals three ingredients: humility, tolerance and humanliness.

If the minister is harsh and unbending in his condemnation of the enemy, his people will be wary in approaching him with their own problems. Feeling that their particular situation is inexcusable, they will see in any intolerance a frightening possibility that he might be intolerant with them also.

Although he should be wise, the preacher can sound too wise. Good as a minister is supposed to be, he can give the impression of being too good. If his preaching reveals a man extremely clever, whose emotions are always under perfect control and who knows all the answers, he may seem to his people to be far above their level. Their feelings of inferiority accentuated, they may feel too inadequate even to approach him. . . .

The preacher is sharing with his people his insights into and understanding of the mind and purpose of God. He is not preaching at them. His sermon should move the troubled soul to say, "I think I can talk to a man like that."

Preaching and counseling must work together if either is to meet the needs of the congregation. Preaching alone cannot give the specific clarification that the interchange of conversation in the counseling relationship can effect. Nor can it always reach the more serious and deep-seated problems. Counseling alone would be too time-consuming a method to meet all the personal problems of the parish. Preaching and counseling need each other.—The Pulpit.

Progress Among Rural Churches

From "The Report of the Convention Committee on Rural Church"

IF WE MEAN by rural church, a church which is located outside city limits, the Southern Convention still has a great number of them. But if we mean by rural church, a church whose membership is made up strictly of rural people, then there are very few of these existing in our convention today.

Most of our so-called rural churches today are more of a "fringe" church than rural. That is, in most of our country churches there is an overlapping of city and rural people in almost every one of them. And the trend of things today is pointing toward more and more of this type of church. Even though great numbers of rural people have gone to the cities and towns to work, they continue to support their local home church, and since there is a tendency on the part of many people today to go back to the country to build their homes, the future of the rural church is more hopeful than ever before.

Because of this fact, making possible a stronger financial program, promising progress and growth of better trained leadership are being centered in these churches. The sharp contrast between the country "parson" and the city minister, as far as professional training and experience are concerned, is not nearly so marked as it once was. The majority of our rural churches today have seminary trained men serving as pastors, and some of them even have skilled religious education directors. So neither the rural minister nor the rural church have to take a back seat any longer in the vital affairs of the church at large. The rural church and its hard-working, well directed membership are coming into their own.

Just a brief look around our convention will bear out everything we have said. Almost every leading rural church, or group of churches, has a modern, up-to-date parsonage for its minister and his family. New churches, new educational buildings, re-worked structures, modern equipment and furnishings are not exceptions any longer in the rural field. They are the order of the day. These modern plants, with well-trained leadership, teachers, officers, ministers, alike, are not only equal to a lot of our city churches, but in many respects are far better; and they are doing just as good a job, if not better, in their total programs.

The rural church as a member-recruiting center for city churches is just about a thing of the past. The rural church is winning new members to Christ all right, and it is giving these members better training than they have ever had before, and the really encouraging thing about this is that these members are staying with the rural church. They are staying with it because few other churches anywhere have anything better to offer. They are participating and prosperous in a spiritual fellowship. The matter of distance between the rural member and his church is no longer an obstacle. With modern means of transportation and good roads leading to most of our rural churches, attendance in the Sunday school and church services is better than ever, and is increasing every year.

"BEFORE" and "AFTER" at UNION GROVE

On highway 13 not many miles east of Seagrove, North Carolina, stands the Union Grove Christian Church. It has stood there seventy-seven years as a silent witness to the faith of people in the living God. The bodies of many who shared in erecting the first building now lie in the cemetery hard-by. Their monument is greater than the stones that tell names and dates, for the faith they had lives on in their children and grand children.

Those who pass that way can see that the church is still alive. The greatly improved building is a witness to that living faith. Under the leadership of the Rev. Clyde L. Fields, the remodeling of the church was completed, and the building dedicated on May 4, 1952, with the sermon for the occasion by Dr. F. C. Lester, president of the Western North Carolina Conference.

News Flashes

Elia Ann, daughter of Rev and Mrs. Walstein Snyder, was born on July 27 at the Alamance County Hospital. Congratulations to this ministerial family.

Read the address, "Why a Church School?" by Floyd A. Turner, president of the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention, in this issue. It will be well worth while.

Rev. and Mrs. W. L. Wood of Sanford, N. C., have reached their summer bungalow on the Delaware river at Long Eddy, N. Y., and are enjoying a well-earned vacation.

The Laymen's Fellowship of our Winston-Salem Church on Tuesday night, July 8, had a supper meeting and among other things they planned their program for the year to include five meetings a year of the men of the church, a father-son banquet, ladies' night, and agreed to make a contribution of $50.00 to the development of our Convention Assembly (Moon-elon).

Mr. A. H. McIver of Sanford conducted the morning worship service at Eutaw Church, Fayetteville, N. C., August 10. Rev. R. L. House spoke at the evening service. Representatives of our Hope Mills and Southern Pines churches were present. The minister, Rev. K. M. Lindner, who is a chaplain with the rank of captain in the Reserve Officers Corps, has been away for two weeks training at Camp Jackson, S. C.

Our Youngest Church Helps Start Another Church

Three weeks ago a new work was started in the Lakeview Community, between Burlington and Union Ridge. Approximately 50 residents of that community have indicated their interest in this new work begun under the leadership of John G. Truitt, Jr., ministerial student at Elon College. The first contribution to the building fund of this new church came from our new church, Beverly Hills, in Burlington. This young church has made an offering of $50.00 towards this building fund. Congratulations to Rev. W. W. Snyder, pastor, and his people of Beverly Hills Church in their vision and desire to help other communities have new churches. Our older and more established churches may well learn a lesson from Beverly Hills. When the Lord said, "He that loses his life for my sake shall save it," he was talking to the corporate membership of the churches as well as to individuals.

WM. T. SCOTT.

Oldest Member of Richmond Church Passes

On the morning of her birthday at about 3 o'clock God sent his messenger to summon home the oldest living member of the First Church of Richmond.

Mrs. Eudora Covington Pierce was born on August 13, 1869, and on yesterday, just 83 years later she slipped away to join her husband, Artie E. Pierce who had preceded her several years ago. Both were charter members of the First Church, and Mr. Pierce, at the time of his death was the chairman of the building committee of the church. He lived to see the first draft of the plans for the church.

During the intervening years, Mrs. Pierce has been, in good times and bad, an immovable "pillar" of her church. And there have been times when her encouragement was sorely needed. It was always forthcoming. Even in her later days she has been one of its most faithful members.

Funeral services will be held at the church at the corner of Grove Avenue and Sheppard Street on Friday morning at 10 o'clock, and the services will be concluded at four o'clock Friday afternoon at Pleasant Grove Christian Church, near Vernon Hill, Virginia. Interment will be in the church cemetery.

The entire church membership will join in the sorrow of her son Edgar and her daughter Janie, who survive her; and we wish for them the comfort that only God can give in this time of grief.

J. T. KERNODLE.

Activities at Hines Chapel and Monticello

Hines Chapel Church has just complete an extensive improvement program costing the church more than $5,000.00. The entire building was renovated both inside and out. A new heating system was installed, which can be used for auxiliary air-conditioning in the summer.

The church school has grown beyond the present facilities, and plans are being considered for a religious education building. For the past three months the average attendance was 115. At the present time there is a very active Pilgrim Fellowship that meets twice a month on Sunday nights.

The Summer Vacation Season in Sanford

Despite vacation season and the terrific hot weather, Sanford has carried a full church program and scheduled extra activities receiving excellent response...

A successful two-week Vacation Church School was held June 6 to 20 which ended with a picnic on Friday, the last day at noon, at the Recreational Park.

A youth group has been reorganized for Junior High and Senior High young people. This group has written a play centering around the theme of the foreign mission study on "Mexico."

Plans are in the making to begin a church library which will add greatly to the facilities of the church. Books for teachers, pupils, and parents are to be included.

The Church School has undergone considerable recognition. A beautiful new nursery has recently been made available for children 1 to 3 years, and the previous nursery was redecorated for the Kindergarten or for the 4- and 5-year-olds.

A Junior Choir has been organized with Mrs. Ed Bender as director and Misses Sybil Kelly and Patricia Proctor as accompanists.

It has indeed been a rich and fruitful experience working in the Sanford Church this summer in the field of Religious Education and as was previously mentioned I would like for more churches in our Southern Convention to place more emphasis on Religious Education...

DOROTHY FOLTZ, Director of Religious Education.

Women to Meet

The Executive Board of the Woman's Missionary Convention will hold its semi-annual meeting at the Hotel Warren, in Warrenton, N. C., on Thursday, September 9, beginning at 10:30 o'clock.

Each member of the board is urgently requested to be present.

MRS. W. B. WILLIAMS, President.

External things and opportunities so abound in American life that, instead of nurturing the true source of happiness, we tend to make it a direct aim. So we end in looking for happiness in possession of the external—in money, a good time, somebody to lean on, and so on.

—John Dewey.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church. 2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church. 3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice. 4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership. 5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Look Away, Look Away, to Sweden!

Have you ever heard of Lund, Sweden? Well, don't feel too badly about it. Neither had the editor. Shame on him!

Christian people cannot ignore geography. The outward thrust of the Church makes us study maps. And now the ecumenical movement, about which we are rightly hearing more and more, forces us to brush up on our knowledge of world geography. God, we must remember, "so loved the world."

The big item in religious news just now is the fact that the Third World Conference on Faith and Order is meeting at Lund, August 15-28.

Now few, if any, of you are attending this Conference. Who knows, some of you globe-trotting, convention-attending people may attend the fourth or fifth World Conference on Faith and Order. At any rate, we can get a bird's-eye view or, better still, a God's-eye view of this historic Conference.

American delegates representing the Congregational Christian Churches are Dr. Douglas Horton, Prof. Robert Calhoun, Dr. Paul Macy, Prof. Mivear, Prof. Daniel J. Williams and Prof. Hugh Vernon White.

In the historic cathedral town of Lund, the Conference brings together some 250 delegates representing most of the 158 member churches of the World Council, and their divergent theological viewpoints. They come from about forty countries, including some within the Soviet orbit. Among the 250 delegates and the additional invited consultants are a goodly proportion of the world's most distinguished church leaders.

The concern of the Lund Conference, as the term "Faith and Order" implies, is to examine the problems that stand in the way of full unity between the churches in the ecumenical framework, and to ask what can be done to get back on the road to that goal. Considerable progress has already been made in this direction during the past decades. The move toward organic union within the various branches of the same "confession" is exemplified by present negotiations between different branches of the Lutheran Church, or between the Presbyterian, U.S.A., U.S., and United churches. There have been over 35 organic unions of churches since the Lausanne Conference on Faith and Order in 1927, and over 100 since 1900.

Union of another sort (not organic) is exemplified by the growth of the local and national councils of churches in various countries, and especially by the work of the World Council of Churches and the International Missionary Council.

In the previous World Faith and Order Conferences, held in 1927 and 1937, unexpectedly large areas of agreement on theological matters were apparent, and it has been possible to suggest ways toward resolving some real differences.

But such suggestions can only be reported back to the churches for such action as they see fit. The conference is not for the purpose of taking actions, its leaders point out. Nor is it a "marriage bureau between denominations." No one should be disappointed, they insist, that divisions which have developed during the past thousand years cannot be healed in two weeks! What the conference is going to do is to try to explore the differences that have caused divisions between the churches in the past and seek to suggest ways in which these differences can be reconciled. But action is in the hands of the churches themselves.

The first World Conference on Faith and Order met at Lausanne, Switzerland, in August, 1927, the first time all major branches of the Christian Church (except the Roman Catholic) met for such a purpose since the historic division of the eastern and western churches in 1054. The second World Conference on Faith and Order, held at Edinburgh in 1937, brought together delegates of 122 churches from 43 countries. At this meeting the Faith and Order movement joined with the parallel Life and Work movement of the churches, to set up a provisional committee for the World Council of Churches. When the World Council of Churches was officially constituted at Amsterdam in 1948, the Faith and Order movement became the Commission on Faith and Order of the World Council of Churches. The Lund Conference will be the first world gathering of the Faith and Order group under this new status.

Three theological commissions, whose reports will form the basis of the main discussions, were appointed as a result of the Second World Conference in 1937. These are:

1. The Nature of the Church, under the leadership of Rev. Dr. R. Newton Flew, England; Prof. K. E. Skydsgaard, Denmark; Dean Clarence T. Craig, U. S. A.; Rev. Canon Kenneth Riches, England.

What, the theologians will ask themselves, are the conceptions of the Church held by the different families of churches—Anglican, Orthodox, Reformed, Free Church, for instance—and what differences in these conceptions are keeping the churches apart? Would mutual understanding lead to wider areas of agreement? And to what degree does basic agreement on essential matters already exist?

2. Ways of Worship, under the leadership of Dr. W. Staehlin, Germany; Pastor Dr. H. Asmussen, Germany; Pastor W. Vos, Holland.

What forms of worship are so much a part of each communion's life that to give them up would seem to be synonymous with asking the communicant members to actually change their religion? And which ones are expendable in the cause of increased spiritual unity with the Church as a whole?

3. Intercommunion, under the leadership of Rev. Prof. D. W. Baillie, Scotland; Prof. H. S. Alivisatos, Greece; Rev. Prof. John Marsh, England.

Above all, what are the reasons why it is not possible for members of all churches to join together in the act of Holy Communion? In this respect it is notable that Archbishop Y. T. Brilioth of Sweden, chairman of the Faith and Order Commission and presiding officer at the Conference, will officiate at a service at Holy Communion at the historic Lund Cathedral, conducted by the Church of Sweden (Lutheran), in which that church invites all delegates to participate.

At every point in the discussion, the participants are asked also to consider a new note, which has never been adequately considered at such a theological conference. This "new note" has to do with the cultural and social (non-theological) factors which enter directly into the making of Church history, and which, it is felt, are major influences in bringing about or perpetuating differences between churches or accelerating church unity. A recent report upon this subject, distributed by the Commission on Faith and Order, which will receive considerable attention at the Lund Conference, concludes:

"In the present time, the greatest threat of new schisms lies in the passionate adherence to political ideologies and national or racial loyalties. We must be particularly vigilant to see how these affect our present Christian fellowship and our hopes of unity. As members of churches, we all too often simply reflect the prejudices of the society around us, instead of transcending them. . . . Traditional positions, forms and institutions which have become dear to us, must be recognized as questionable and may have to be given up or changed. We must be particularly attentive to the insights of sociology, psychology, economics, and all sciences which bring a legitimate criticism to bear upon our Christian institutions in their human and historical limitations."

the gospel of the Son of God. That gospel was in the Bible, and in the Bible only. I felt much as Mary must have felt when she exclaimed, "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him." (John 20:13.)

What was I to do? What could I do? I blundered along in darkness, in doubt, in misgivings and almost in despair. As I look back across the years today, five things take shape in my mind as constituting my response to my bewilderment:

(1) I kept my mouth shut. I didn't run around blabbing out to everyone I saw the confusion and chaos that were in my soul.

(2) I prayed. I tried to tell God all about it in the belief that he would hear and help.

(3) I listened with all the ears and with all the mind that I could command.

(4) I worked as hard as ever did the traditional Trojan. My grades were generally between 95 and 100.

(5) I waited patiently, believing that help would come from somewhere and in some way. Nor did I have to wait too long.

While I was in this awful plight, a friend—a college mate—from Iredell County was sick in his room. On Sunday afternoon I walked leisurely over to this young man's room. He was in bed with malaria. I lay down on his bed beside him. We talked quietly and leisurely about all sorts of things. Without any special objective the conversation drifted into the subject of evolution. As we talked my friend made this observation: "Cullom, evolution doesn't worry me as it does some of the fellows. There isn't a word in the Bible about God's method of making the world. The Bible is only responsible for the fact that God did it. It really gives me a much simpler and more sensible conception of God to think of him as working patiently and persistently through the ages to bring the universe into existence than it does to think of him as working after the manner of the cheap magician to do so."

I may have put into the mouth of my friend something of my own later reflection, but he gave me the heart of what I have said. He had no thought, surely, of how much his observation was to mean to me, nor did I realize at the time that that moment would be looked back to in after years as one of the critical moments of my life. But the more I thought about it and the more I acted on the clue

God's Method of Creation

By DR. W. R. CULLOM

Wake Forest College

A letter came to me a day or so ago from a man in another state asking several questions about the doctrine of evolution. Two of my papers dealing with vital matters in the field of religion were sent to him. Along with these papers went a letter promising to write out and send to the brother an account of my early struggle with the question of evolution. It is in fulfilling this promise that this paper is prepared and sent forth on its mission.

As far as I can recall, I had never heard the word evolution when I entered Wake Forest College as a student in 1886. Darwin's revolutionary book, The Origin of Species, had been published in 1859, twenty-seven years before I came to college. News and information did not spread as rapidly then as they do today. When I entered college the better informed students were then just beginning to feel the impact of the new teaching. The Bible was to me at that time about as sacred as was its Author. This Book came in one solid lump, as it were, from the very throne of God and was given, word for word, to men who wrote it down verbatim et literatim et punctuatim as it came from God's lips. With a soul and a life set in the concepts of such an attitude as this, Darwin's theories began to be heard. If what was falling on my ears had any basis of fact and reality in it, my Bible was gone. At least so it appeared to me.

To say that I was miserable in the inner parts does not begin to suggest the anguish of my soul. Here I was, a young minister entering college with a view to getting ready to preach

WHY A CHURCH SCHOOL?

By FLOYD A. TURNER, President
Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention

The church school exists to accomplish the purposes of the church. It aims to make intelligent and devoted Christians of all who attend and all who should attend. It aims to accomplish the will of God in a modern world. Nothing in life is more important than this. No community cause deserves such consecration of thought and energy and time.

The Purpose.

The unique function of the church is in the realm of religion—the Christian religion, religion that changes life. The child needs to know that there is a God, that life and love are gifts of God, and that God wants him to live a happy and helpful life. He learns to depend upon God, to love God, and to do God's will. He needs to have a growing joy in being part of the fellowship of the church and helping the church do its work.

When he enters the period of youth he is faced with difficult choices and decisions. If he has developed a Christian attitude and habits, has committed himself to the purposes which bind Christians together within the church, and is given sound advice by friendly and trusted adults, he will grow into a rugged Christian. Without religion, he may easily make a wreck of his entire life.

Men and women carry heavy burdens and are beset by trials and temptations. They need a courage, wisdom and strength greater than their own. If they are to leave a better world than that into which they came, their faith and experience of the Christian religion must increase throughout their lives.

If Christ's church is to fulfill its divine mission, they must continue eagerly in the process of Christian education.

Christian education tries to help young and old to understand what it means to be a Christian, and to choose to be Christian. It also helps them to become useful members of the church, to live and witness as Christians should and to work with others in and through the church, so that God's will shall be done more and more everywhere on earth. This is another way of saying that the aim of Christian education is to make Christians, to build up the church, and to Christianize the social order.

Relationships are as important as ideas. People do not listen simply by being told certain facts or by grasping certain ideas. It is important to memorize passages of scripture, statements of faith and codes of ethics; but memorization is not learning. Nothing is learned until it changes the thinking and living of a person. Ideas are very important. They are so basic that we have a larger task than that of having pupils say them back to us. Because we are concerned with learning, we cannot be content until true ideas change the thinking and conduct of our people. So it is that we are always trying to do two things: make clear Christian facts and ideas, and get them transformed into Christian action. We teach as much by actions as by words. What is done is as important as what is said. The way in which a thing is done is as important as what is done. Religion is both taught and caught. We teach the Christian religion by our Christian relationships with other people.

Home and Church Cooperation.

One of the hardest and most needed undertakings is that of helping parents understand how important religious education is, and to see how they can help their children in the homes. We should try to bring them into a relationship with the church that will assure the cooperation of the home and church in the Christian nurture of the children.

An annual letter to parents may carry recommendations of booklets for use in the family and point out how the "Sunday School Papers" which the children bring home may be the very best means of teaching religion in the home.

The adult classes may study the subject of home religion for at least enough time to enlighten the parents on how best to cooperate on this important job, which is after all their own responsibility. Young adult groups certainly need to include this subject in their programs. This may be the emphasis during certain seasonal studies.

Reaching the Unreached.

Half of the people of America receive no religious instruction. How does this apply to our communities? Do we do all we can to reach those who do not attend any church school?

Do we encourage our children to invite others to come?

Social Responsibility.

With young people and adults, serious study of social conditions and needs should be undertaken, particularly of those situations about which the members of the church can do something constructive. There may be some who still insist that "the church should stick to the gospel"; and so it should. There is a close relationship between Bible study and social action, and any earnest study as directly to the need of a redeemed of the prophets and of Jesus will lead society as it does to the emphasis on personal salvation. Social studies in the church begin with faith in God and with commitment to his will, as revealed in Jesus, and such studies seek to discover what Christians must do to help fashion the kind of world God desires.

The church program should be to awaken an awareness of concern about cruel and unjust social conditions upon the part of church people, to help them all to understand the causes of these evils, and to bring to light the teachings of Christianity that have a bearing upon contemporary problems. The program should also be to examine the various proposals for the elimination of social injustice and to test them all by Christian principles, to discover how members of the church, individually and collectively, may best work for social justice and righteousness, and to unite Christians of the community and elsewhere in an effort to right the wrongs of society.

Our missionary program is based on Christ's teachings of faith, salvation, healing and social justice. Every church is a part of a larger fellowship, and has missionary responsibilities beyond its parish as well as to its community. A strong missionary program does more to promote the good will of mankind than any other way in which we could expend our efforts and our means.

Faith.

The Christian Church is bound together by the faith of its members. It is a faith which comes down through the ages, yet one which each person must make uniquely his own. There are various verbal expressions of that faith. The covenants and creeds of the churches of our fellowship are not all alike. Persons within a church would state their deepest beliefs in different ways. Yet within

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

ELON COLLEGE TWO and ONE HALF MILLION DOLLAR CAMPAIGN

Statement of Needs and Plan of Organization

September 16, 1952, 11 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Speakers

CONGRESSMAN WALTER JUDD
DR. HOWARD S. HADCATSLE

Elon College was founded in 1890 by the Christian Church. It was founded by the church, for the young people of the church, and young people who might desire superior advantages in higher education under moral and religious influences.

The founding fathers were wiser than they thought. Their vision was limited, but their hopes were universal and eternal. Elon College has had its difficulties and faced forbidding obstacles, but even so its progress has been steady and decisive.

Standing at the beginning of its 63rd year, it finds itself in favorable condition. At present it has $492,000 endowment, book value; real value is considerably more. In addition, it has $326,000 in invested funds, making a total of more than $800,000 in invested funds from which the college receives more than $50,000 annually for current needs.

The college's facilities for instructional purposes are first class. Its dormitories are old and their facilities are not modern. The dining room was destroyed by fire in 1942. We are preparing and serving meals to students and faculty members in temporary buildings which are far from satisfactory.

The college and the churches in the Southern Convention have authorized a campaign for Two and One Half Million Dollars. Of this amount there has been secured in cash and pledges $1,170,000. The authorities of the church and the college propose to intensify this campaign with special services on Tuesday, September 16, with the hope of securing the total amount by March 1, 1953 if possible. The church, the alumni, friends, business and industry are being asked to contribute this amount in cash and pledges. Pledges may be paid in equal installments over a period of five years. This is not a church campaign only, but certainly the church is to be the major factor in contributing and soliciting funds. The territory in which there are churches or alumni has been divided into divisions and areas with quotas assigned as follows:

I.—Virginia Division—$600,000.

- A. Eastern Va. District, $480,000.
  1. Norfolk Area, $165,000.
  2. Suffolk-Franklin, $240,000.
  3. Windsor-Richmond, $72,000.
- B. Valley Va. District, $96,000.
  1. Winchester Area, $24,000.
  2. Luray-Leaksville, $24,000.
  3. Harrisonburg-New Market, $48,000.

II—N. C. Division—$900,000.

- A. Eastern District, $300,000.
  1. Durham-Sanford-So. Pines Area, $120,000.
  2. Fuquay Spgs. Area, $60,000.
  3. Raleigh Area, $48,000.
  4. Henderson Area, $96,000.
- B. Central District, $588,000.
  1. Burlington Area, $300,000.
  2. Greensboro Area, $150,000.
  3. Asheboro-Liberty, $150,000.
  4. Winston-Salem, $15,000.
  5. Virgilina-Halifax, $50,000.
- C. Western District, $12,000.
  1. Ashville-Tryon Area, $12,000.

Local Organization.

1. Church—One committeeman for each 10 church members.
2. Alumni—One committeeman for each 10 alumni.
3. Adequate committeemen to solicit friends, foundations and corporations.
4. Adequate committeemen for business, manufacturing and industry.
5. Memorials and Bequests—lawyers, bankers, trust officers and pastors.

Sources.

1. Church membership.
2. Elon Alumni.
3. Friends, foundations, corporations.
4. Business, manufacturing, industry.
5. Memorials and bequests.

In authorizing this campaign and determining these goals, the church and the college were aware that there were other campaigns for funds; that many local churches have erected new buildings, improved and added to existing buildings, and otherwise increased their local budgets. At the same time, the Convention and the Trustees of the college were aware of the value of Elon College to the denomination and the general cause of Christian higher education, and of its contribution to the church in many ways. They also were faced with the fact that in the light of advancing conditions that it was imperative that definite steps be taken to provide Elon College with modern and adequate facilities and a larger endowment, if the college were to continue to attract and hold the young people of our own church, and of other churches, who go to college.

This campaign is not just another campaign, but it is a campaign authorized because of existing needs and absolute necessity. When you think of the goal of this campaign, don't think of it in totals, but think of it from the standpoint of the individual contributor. We realize that it is inadvisable to mention minimum contributions, but if every member of the church would contribute only 2 cents a day for five years, we would have one and a quarter million dollars. Then, if you add the Elon College Alumni, we would have $1,400,000 plus. Of course, every individual member will not contribute, but many individuals will contribute much more than 2 cents a day. We need 3,000 workers. If we had 3,000 people who are interested who would contact 10 other individuals with information concerning Elon College and an earnest appeal, we would raise one and one half million dollars without difficulty, and sooner than we had hoped.

The officials of the church, the college and the alumni are in the process of forming an organization that will carry this appeal to every individual member, to foundations, to business and industry. This organization must be completed by September 10. On September 16, the organization, including officials, pastors and committeemen for local churches, are invited to hold its initial meeting at Elon College to participate in Founder's Day exercises and launching of the campaign. Services will be held at 11 o'clock and 2 o'clock in the afternoon. The morning service will center around Dr. William Allen Harper, fourth president of the college, who

VI.--Dr. Sloan Tells of the Out-Standing Mission Work in Angola

"Coo-coo, coo-coo," replied a house full of Africans as I greeted them at church this morning in my best Umbundu. How did they get my number so quickly? Fortunately, they did not consider me crazy, but were giving me a very polite greeting in return for my attempt to speak their language.

Angola, or Portuguese West Africa, is the objective of our visit to Africa, for here is the mission work of our Congregational Christian denomination. We landed by plane last Sunday morning at the capital, Luanda, in the north-western corner of Angola, where the Methodists have good work. It was nearly noon by the time we had made peace with the Angola police and found the Methodist mission, but Methodists are not slow. Before the day was over, they had me speaking, through a translator, to three different church groups.

Monday morning, we flew to Lobito, which has the best harbor in Africa. Once more I discovered that justice always catches up. Last October, Pattie Lee Coghill hurried to our house at Elon College, saying, "You have to speak on Latin America to the Congregational Christian women of North Carolina tomorrow and of Eastern Virginia Thursday. A missionary from Africa was to have been the main speaker, but she is in the hospital." When we arrived at the Lobito mission house, we found that the only American there was this missionary, Mary Hurlbut, who had arrived from America a few days before. We planned to leave Lobito the next day. The African pastor said, "We want our people to meet you, so I will get some of our young folks together tonight." When we reached the church, we found 300 people waiting to greet us. This is where justice caught up, for the woman for whom I had spoken at home had to translate addresses for both of us.

We came on an all night train ride to the Elende mission at Cuma, where students of the schools had a reception for us. One of the teachers read a welcome in the official language, Portuguese, in which I was called "your excellency." Mrs. Sloan has been making a study of similarities between Portuguese and Spanish. To the delight of all, she gave a reply in Portuguese. The church service, however, is in Umbundu, so to keep up with my wife, I had a sentence in Umbundu worked out with which to preface my sermon on this morning. The congregation not only called "Coo-coo," but applauded me.

Elende is a great place up in the mountains. It is winter here, but we are only 700 miles south of the equator, so the temperature does not change greatly. The elevation, 3,000 feet, makes the climate pleasant, although it gets hot in the sun in the middle of the day.

We have taken a lot of pictures here, which should be useful in talks next fall and winter. We have visited numerous African villages, and once we drove as far as we could by jeep and then walked up a mountain a couple of miles to see a pagan drumming and dance. Many of the people would be quite drunk and sensual by dark as well as worn out by their constant dancing.

Christian work here is extremely effective. In this mission area which has a radius of 125 miles are 342 Christian villages, each with its little church and often an elementary school. Each village has a leader or catechist. Seven African pastors supervise this work, which has 5,400 church members. If a member gets drunk, takes part in a pagan dance, or otherwise goes astray, he is suspended from membership. If, in the presence of the church, he seeks God's forgiveness and behaves himself for a year, he is restored to membership.

The organized church is but one factor of mission work here. All of the schools for Africans are church schools, and most of the medical work for Africans is furnished by the church. But a big part as any is the agriculture and industrial work. A very few Africans have enough to eat, and the death rate is high. But much is being done here to introduce new methods. Plows are being made and oxen grown. But with the average wage for labor in the nation at ten and a half cents a day, a plow is an expensive thing. With almost no animals, there is very little fertilizer. The usual plan has been to raise a crop for three or four years, until the land will produce no more, then to clear off another space. The introduction of green manure crops—velvet beans are most successful—is slowly changing this.

Two weeks ago, we met an American psychologist who has been teaching Africans. He has discovered what some people already knew, that Africans have the same amount of intelligence as Americans. Most of them have lacked opportunity. I wish you could meet some of the Africans who have had an opportunity. We had a two hour interview with the local pastor who translated my sermon this morning. He is brilliant and would be an asset to any college faculty. Of course he uses Portuguese as readily as his own Umbundu. Years ago, he decided to learn English. Today he is as fluent in it as I am. His son has been in an Angola school for Portuguese the past year and has proved to be a top student in his class. Next week he sails for Portugal to study medicine, with the expectation of eventually being on the mission staff.

The old Greek story says that the great hero of the Trojan War, Achilles, was dipped while he was yet a child in the waters of the Styx by his mother, Thetis, in order to make him invulnerable. And the result of that plunge was that every part of Achilles' body was proof against wounds with the exception of the heel by which his mother held him, and which had not been submerged in the water. For many years, as a result, Achilles escaped unhurt, but at last the poisoned arrow of the Trojan Paris found the weak spot and inflicted the death wound there. So sin and temptation attack us where we are weakest. They appeal to our inclinations, our passions, our lusts; they find out the weak spot.—J. D. Jones.

The happiest people on earth are those who have contributed something to the welfare of others. "To do a good act every day is sure to keep the grumps away." The man who fashioned this homely rhyme told the truth, even though he might have framed it in a more pleasant fashion—Holleman.

Greetings from a Far-off Friend

One of the fine things about Dr. and Mrs. W. W. Sloan, professors at Elon College, is their interest in missions as expressed in their visits to the lands to be studied each year. Some of us might have the desire, but not be in a situation where we could make that desire come true; others might have the time and money, but see no point in visiting mission areas in other countries. Happily for us the right combination is found among the right people—for from Elon College they can easily go to many of our churches to tell about their experiences.

Here are excerpts from a personal letter from Mrs. Sloan (written on July 19 in Khartoum, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan), who found time on a trip to write to friends at home—something that not all of us do!

"Greetings from the hottest spot we have found this summer! Temperature was 109 the day we arrived. We are now leaving Khartoum and will be in our fifteenth African country for this trip, Egypt, tonight. . . .

"We have seen all kinds of missions and we have found things really very much in accordance with the study book version of the church work in Africa. The two study books we have read are: Africans on Safari (before we left home) and African Heritage, which we picked up in the New York office and have read on our trip.

"We spent four enjoyable days, over the Fourth of July, with Harriet Summerville at Dondi Station in Portuguese, Angola. As you know, she is supported by the Reidsville Church. We also gathered a great deal of information from Mary Hurlbut at Elende in Angola. She is the speaker Mr. Sloan had to pinch-hit for at the fall meeting of the North Carolina women, also the Eastern Virginia group, last year. Little did he expect to meet her in Africa! Well, she had to pinch-hit for us by translating three addresses, and that when she was just back, herself, from a year's furlough. Her pupils seemed overjoyed to see her again, and we understood why as we came to know her."

We have enjoyed reports from Africa by Mr. and Mrs. Sloan, and I am sure you have been happy to read this note from her. We shall be interested to know if they were still in Egypt when the recent military developments there occurred.

Plan now to invite the Sloans—singly or together—to report on their African visit to your society, as we study that great continent next year.

Appreciation of Rhythmic Choir

As chairman of our program committee of the Winston-Salem Church and a voting delegate to the General Council, I want to say a few words of praise and appreciation, educationally and otherwise, about the trip to California.

I was one of the fortunate 72 who went by chartered bus. If you do not know Pattie Lee Coghill, please get acquainted with her at once. She will tell you (with authority) about roadside stands and cultured worms. We tried to show our esteem and appreciation for her untiring planning, even on the road during the trip, by giving her a Hamilton watch.

The Rhythmic Choir presenting "The Lord's Prayer" as a devotional interested me at the Council meeting. Margaret Palmer Fisk supervised this. It is a choir of creative movement and design, interpreting religious ideas and moods. It is not only an ancient way to worship, but also a Christian art.

Paul reminds us (I Cor. 19, 20) that we should glorify God in our bodies as well as in spirits. I Timothy 2:8 and Psalms 149 and 150 express the feeling that to praise the Lord in the dance is a way of complete spiritual exaltation.

Margaret Fisk has studied the history of religious dancing from early civilization to the present day, both in professional and non-professional fields.

We have been using art channels of sculpture, painting, and poetry, why not use this beautiful expression through the art of design and movement, the rhythmic solo or choir, too? Those who are interested can write Mrs. Chester B. Fisk, 54 College Street, New Hanover, New Hampshire.

Good luck to you in this new field of religious expression.

MAYNIE FLYNT NEAL.

"Club 23"

What a good idea realized can do to make a closer fellowship, with better understanding, improved church relations, and greater unity, has been proved by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill when she saw her idea for a tour to Washington, D. C., New York City, the United Nations, and other points of interest, materialize.

Twenty-two women from the Southern Convention, coming from all parts of North Carolina and Virginia, made this tour under Pattie Lee's planning and supervision in April, 1951. She is the founder of the resulting club, known as "Club 23." As president of the club I have developed very sincere friendships with the other members, and so has Virginia Mason, secretary.

Have you noticed the activities and teamwork of this group of church women since they made this tour together? Last year in May at the Woman's Convention in Norfolk eight were present, with five participating on the program. At the June, 1951, School of Missions at Elon College, nine were enrolled and all took an active part in the various activities of the school.

When the passenger list was completed for the California trip, the names of the following members were listed: Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Mrs. Carl Wallace, Mrs. Clyde Fields, Mrs. Eleanor Wheless, Mrs. Ben McIntyre, Mrs. Edward Bresko, Miss Virginia Mason, and Mrs. H. F. Nelson. The Club definitely was an asset on this tour, their contribution to the entertainment and promotion of better fellowship being outstanding. In fact, they do take credit for being indirectly responsible for making the tour possible.

Now again at the School of Missions, which began only four days after the return of the California trip, the following members of "Club 23" were enrolled: Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Mrs. Carl Wallace, Mrs. Ed Chilton, Mrs. M. M. Joyner, Miss Virginia Mason, Mrs. O. H. Paris, Mrs. Mack Welch, Mrs. Claudia McCollum, Mrs. Allen Piland, Mrs. Eleanor Wheless, Mrs. C. N. Harris and Mrs. H. F. Nelson, and again you found this group busy.

The founder of this Club must be

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Boys and Girls:

Since you have been told by the Editor and the Managing Editor that I have been in Newport News because of my mother's illness, I will tell you something about the wonderful view from her window. The hospital faces the James River just where it becomes Hampton Roads, leading into the Bay and on to the Ocean. Directly across is Norfolk with its great Naval Base, to the right is the Boat Harbor from which the ferry boats leave frequently to take passengers to Pine Beach on the Norfolk side. The white ferries glide easily across the water, bucking the tide and currents.

To the far left is Old Point with the Hotel as an outstanding landmark. On clear days the outlines of the steamboat that goes to Washington may be seen, especially the smoke that pours from her funnels.

Norfolk is the home base for the Atlantic Fleet and there are always one or two or three ships in, but at present there are several landing craft, destroyers, and the other evening the great battleship, Missouri, came in and dropped anchor near two aircraft carriers. At night they may be seen giving blinker signals from ship to shore and from ship to ship.

There are other ships in the harbor, too, and boats. Do you know the difference? A boat is a little craft and a ship is big and capable of going to sea. There are colliers that carry coal, freighters and other vessels, some at anchor, others passing through the channel on their way to far ports. Newport News is one of our country's leading ports and many ships, American and foreign, come to load and unload. Do you remember valiant Capt. Carlson of the Flying Enterprise? He comes to town with his ship every month. French, English, and Japanese flags have been aloft the rigging this past week.

The tides come and go, they ebb and flow. Boys and girls come with friends or parents at low tide to walk out on the flats and look for crabs. It is great fun to catch them. Sail boats flash by in the wind and other times are becalmed. Last week a lovely little sailing boat of the kind known as a "buckeye" stayed off shore all week. At night her owners sailed into the Bay but morning always found her snug in shore, now she is gone.

Ships are always "she." The battleship Missouri that I mentioned was built at the shipyards here. Her sailors affectionately call her the "Old Lady" or "The Mighty Mo." Not long ago she was stuck in the mud in the mudflats off Buckroe and was quite disgraced, but she is proud-looking as she rides the waves now.

Our foremost passenger ship, the United States, was built here, too. She is a beautiful, trim ship and the fastest in the world. Many townspeople watched her in the River and the Daily Press used two-inch headlines to herald her successful crossing.

I shall tell you some more about the sea—its inhabitants and ships—at another time.

The Habit of Saving

By LUCIA MALLORY.

"Don't you think it would be all right for me to lend Bruce the money to buy a kodak, Mother?"

I was spending the two weeks of my summer vacation at my sister Doris' country home, and it was my nephew, Tom Trask, who had asked that eager question. He had come out to the shady side porch, where his mother and I sat sewing.

Somewhat to my surprise, Doris lifted a sober face to her son before she replied, "You have already given your little brother the use of your bicycle so that he can ride to the neighbors' homes and earn money mowing lawns this summer, Tom. Now, he needs your help in learning the proper balance between saving and spending. If Bruce had saved part of what he had earned, he would be able to buy a kodak for himself."

"But Bruce is so little, Mother, and the camping trip he's going to take with Jack Cameron's family means so much to him," Tom protested. "A kodak would give him a record of all their good times. Couldn't he begin saving and pay me back after he comes home?"

"That is the attitude of people who never start saving money, Tom," Doris cautioned. "Do you remember the old man who came to us looking for work early in the summer?"

"You mean the one who sat around, chirping like a grasshopper about all the places to which he had been and the work he had done, and then when Father gave him a job thinning beets, he lasted only two days?" Tom inquired.

"Yes, the poor fellow worked just long enough to earn a few dollars and go on to the next place, carrying all of his possessions in a shabby suitcase," Doris replied. "You would not want Bruce to be like that, would you?"

"Of course not, Mother," Tom agreed, "but that just—doesn't seem possible!"

"I know it doesn't, Son," Doris continued, "but such an aimless existence can be the lot of any person who has never formed the habit of saving money. Work does seem to have more purpose if one can see something tangible that his earnings have purchased. That's why I've offered no serious objection when Bruce has wanted to buy equipment for the camping trip our friends have invited him to share. I did suggest to him that it might be well to save some of his money for future needs, but Bruce hasn't been able to see beyond his immediate desire. Wanting a kodak and not having the money to purchase it will show him how valuable a savings account can be."

It was Tom's turn to look thoughtful. "I understand now, Mother," he declared, "and I'm glad that you and Father have shown me how to save money. I couldn't see college ahead if I hadn't put into a savings account part of the money I'd earned raising thoroughbred calves. You wouldn't mind, though," he added whimsically, "if I gave Bruce a few cents to take along for spending money, would you?"

Doris smiled. "Oh, no, Tom; your father and I will probably do that, too, but Bruce should wait for the kodak and films until he has saved his own money to buy them."

The next time I visited my sister's home, I found out how helpful her plan for Bruce had proved. My little nephew greeted me happily and then brought his new kodak to show me.

"I'd like to take your picture while you're here, Aunt Lucia," he told me. "I bought my kodak with my own money! Now I'm saving for the things I'll need to make a darkroom, so I can learn to finish my own pictures. There's a room in the basement Mother says I may use, and Tom's going to help me to fix it up when he comes home from college."

Antioch (Randolph) Youth

The young people at Antioch (R) Church in the Western North Carolina Conference are doing a fine job since organizing their youth fellowship. The group meets on the first and third Sunday evenings of each month and is having good attendance and splendid cooperation.

Organized on June 8, with twenty-one members, the group elected Mrs. Doris Cox as president; Mrs. Clyde Asbill, vice-president; and Miss Stella Caviness as secretary and treasurer. On the fifth Sunday of June, Antioch attended the W. N. C. Youth Rally at the Union Grove Church. Here they won the attendance trophy, which is given for the greatest percentage of members present. Antioch had 86 per cent. We all enjoyed this meeting and are looking forward to being at Hank's Chapel the fifth Sunday in August.

This reporter and pastor would like to urge all young people to take part in the work of their own church and to attend the Youth Rallies when they are held in their conference.

Norfolk Youth Have a Hayride

The Pilgrim Fellowship of the First Christian Church of Norfolk recently held a hayride and an outdoor Vesper Service at Chesapeake Beach. About fifty young people left the church at 6:30 and went by truck to the beach. The worship service was held on a sand dune facing the ocean with Rev. Charles C. Thomas in charge. Mrs. James Armbruster, Choir Director, led the hymns and Lewis Gwin read the scriptures. The Rev. W. E. Wilson, Jr., a student for the Methodist Ministry at Duke University, was guest speaker for the service. His topic was: "What Makes Us Christian?" After the benediction, the young people opened their picnic lunches and, later, enjoyed a refreshing swim.

This was one of several hayrides which the young people have enjoyed this summer. These outings are made possible through the generosity of Mr. Owen L. Dowdy, who furnishes and drives the truck.

Junior Choir Added at Berkley Church

The children of the Berkley Church of Norfolk have organized a Junior Choir under the direction of Mrs. James Ambruster, director of music. The new choral group is a fine addition to the church and is doing excellent work. The people look forward to the one Sunday each month when they know the Junior Choir will bring a special touch to the worship service.

At a recent meeting, the group organized and elected the following officers for the coming year: Hartwell Stephenson, president; Susan Martell, vice-president; Norella Nethercutt, secretary, and Martha Stuart Long, treasurer.

In June, Mrs. Ambruster and some of the choir members' parents treated the group to an outdoor party and hotdog roast. About twenty-five attended and had a wonderful time.

Young People's Society of New Lebanon Church

The young people of the New Lebanon Christian Church presented a public program last Christmas. They also presented the same program in the Dendron Church.

At Easter, they gave an inspiring pantomime.

More recently they gave a fellowship supper at the home of Mrs. John Savage and enjoyed a social hour.

A life membership has been sent in in honor of Mr. O. V. Coekes, who is our oldest member.

For our friendship project we sent a box of clothing to the Philippine Islands.

As we pick up our papers each day and see pictures of the badly damaged crops throughout our country, I wonder if we shouldn't get down on our knees and thank God for what He has given us and has allowed us to keep.

It certainly is good to see the faces of some of the finest young people in

DAVID BECOMES KING

LESSON VIII—AUGUST 24, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart."—I Samuel 16: 7.

LESSON TEXT: I Samuel 18: 1-5; 14-16; 22: 1-2; II Samuel 5: 1-5.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 21: 1-7.

He was only a shepherd lad, the youngest of several brothers. But God had already laid His hand upon him as the one who should follow Saul as king. The story of how God's plans unfolded and how His purpose was fulfilled is a dramatic one. The story of David makes interesting—and instructive reading. As has so often been the case, God was in "the hidden years" preparing one who should stand in the breach at a critical time and become a saviour of the people.

A Shepherd Lad.

We meet him first as a young man, a shepherd lad, the youngest of several brothers. One after another the sons of Jesse his father passed before the discerning eye of Samuel the prophet of God appointed to find and anoint a successor to Saul, already repudiated by the Lord. These young men were fine looking fellows, any one of them apparently good timber for a king. But none of them was the divinely chosen one. And when, in response to Samuel's inquiry as to whether these were all the sons of Jesse, David was summoned from the field where he was tending the sheep, Samuel knew that this was the king-to-be. He forthwith set him apart in a private ceremony until the time when he should be anointed publicly.

At the Royal Court.

In due time the young man came to the attention of Saul. He was summoned to the royal court and made a member of the king's retinue. He soon made a reputation for himself. He was a fine looking lad, with a ruddy complexion, and he had a fine spirit. He was industrious, and he behaved himself "wisely" according to the records. It soon became evident that he was no ordinary fellow, and in due time it was made known that it was he who was to succeed the easy way. Through the years he think that David came to be king instead of Saul as King. But let no one be being disciplined and trained for his royal mission, and he was willing to pay the price.

An Immortal Friendship.

Saul had a son, Jonathan. According to the custom of that day, Jonathan would succeed his father on the throne. And yet here was a young man, an outsider, who had been picked for that office. It was only natural that Saul would resent this. Any normal father would have wanted his son to fall heir to the throne. It did not help any, of course, in Saul's case for he was of a jealous nature. He determined that this young upstart should not become king, and on more than one occasion he tried to kill David. He would have done it, too, if it had not been for the agility of David himself, and for the unique friendship of his son for the young man who was to take his place on the throne. There is nothing to surpass this friendship in all literature.

Jonathan interceded for David before his father, informed David of Saul's designs against him, protected him from Saul's wrath, and even gave him his own royal garments, and gladly recognized David as the heir apparent to the throne. It was the expression of a great soul, and of friendship at its highest. David recognized the grandeur of this, and the souls of these two young men were knit together as one. "Jonathan and David"—these are synonymous words for friendship at its best.

A Magnanimous Spirit.

It was a friendship between royal spirits. We have already seen what manner of man Jonathan was—his attitude toward the young man who was to have the coveted place that belonged to him. But this young man David also had a royal spirit. On several occasions, he had in his power, and at his mercy, the man who had tried on several occasions to kill him. What would the ordinary man do, especially in that day with its rough and ready standards, if he had the one who had tried to kill him in his power? What would a lot of folks do today in a case like that? Well, David was made of royal stuff. He spared the life of his enemy. He was magnanimous, he was willing to wait patiently for the unfolding of the divine plan, he believed that vengeance belonged to the Lord, and he was willing to leave it to the Lord to repay. He fulfilled in his life the words of his royal offspring who said, "Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you."

Gentlemen, the King!

The king was dead, dead at his own hand. God's hour had struck, and the time had come for a new king to take the throne. There was no doubt as to who that king was. He was the unanimous choice of all the people. Apparently there were no dissenting voices. By his natural ability, by his training, by his conduct, by his spirit, David had shown his fitness for the high office. And when he was anointed at Hebron it was one of the happiest and most enthusiastic ceremonies in the history of Israel. The people saw clearly that this young man had been called by Jehovah to be the shepherd of his people in Israel.

It was the beginning of a long and brilliant reign, lasting for forty years in all. We shall see in succeeding lessons how David united the tribes, established government, enlarged the borders of Israel, subdued enemies, and promoted religion. The Hebrews used his reign as a touchstone for succeeding reigns. The kingdom under David was in many ways the high water mark of Jewish history as a nation.

brought into my mind that Sunday afternoon, the clearer and the more satisfying it became to me. By the time I came to Wake Forest to teach Bible, in 1896, the evolutionary hypothesis was about as much a part of my working framework as was the Copernican theory of the relationship between the earth and the sun.

In teaching the first chapter of Genesis, I must have had numberless students to read the first verse of that chapter a dozen times over and over again before I could get them respectively to see that there was not a syllable there about method. When they came to see this, like myself, they rejoiced exceedingly. I have had men come to me after years of service out

A Brief History of Union Grove Christian Church

Union Grove Christian Church was organized on September 22, 1866. The date of the first church building is indefinite. A motion was made on November 6, 1875, to complete the church building then under construction. The church was 32 feet by 48 feet. The Sunday school was organized on March 16, 1889, with E. C. Phillips as the first superintendent. The first church conference was held on September 14, 1867. Rev. J. S. Lawrence was the pastor. Officers were John A. Scott, secretary; Ira C. Brown, collector, and Eli Brown, treasurer. Deacons were S. H. Way and Adam Brown. Standing committees were S. H. Way, B. S. Scott and Alfred Brown.

According to certain records, the following were charter members: Collin Scott, Tommy G. Craven, Benjamin S. Scott, William W. Lawrence, R. F. Brown, Adam Brown, Eli C. Brown, William Brown, S. H. Way, Alfred B. Brown, John S. Lawrence, Daniel C. Brown, Ira C. Brown, S. L. Craven, F. M. Wiggins, J. M. Luck, Stephen Lowdermilk, Betsy Scott, Mrs. T. G. Craven, Cynthia Scott, Mrs. Adam Brown, Rebecca Brown, Polly Brown, Sally Way, Lydia Brown, Lutittia Brown, Mrs. F. M. Wiggins, Lovinie Brown, A. J. Craven, Nancy Luck and John Scott.

The pastors of the church include the following: Revs. J. S. Lawrence, 1866-70; John R. Holt, 1870-71; W. R. Brown, 1871-; P. P. Humble, 1874-76; local preachers, 1876-80; W. R. Brown, 1880; S. H. Way, 1881; local preachers, 1881-90; J. W. Patton, 1890-94; P. T. Way, 1895-97; J. S. Lawrence, 1897-99; M. E. Hammer, 1900-02; C. C. Peele, 1903; J. R. Comer, 1904-05; R. L. Williamson, 1906-07; J. ven, R. F. Brown, E. H. Byrd, C. A. Byrd, M. J. Brown and T. F. Brown.

In 1938 four Sunday school rooms were built and certain other repairs made. In 1948 the interior of the church was remodeled, with new pews and a new carpet added. The bills were all paid on completion of the project.

In 1951-52 the church and Sunday school were brick-veneered, a vestibule was added, repairs and painting done to the exterior, and stained glass windows were given as memorial gifts. Other windows are ordered. The Sunday school rooms have all been painted in pastel colors. A pulpit lamp and a vacuum cleaner have been added as gifts. Certain improvements to the grounds and cemetery have added to the beauty of the church. Plans are under way to purchase a new piano. Some $5,000 has been spent, and all bills are paid.

GOD'S METHOD OF CREATION.

in the world to tell me of what my little device meant to them. It is so easy for one to read his own notions into his interpretation of the Bible. It is not only easy to do this, but it is really very difficult to keep from doing so. It is a sign of a happy maturity when one can look about him in the world and see what he really sees. That maturity becomes rich, fertile and fruitful when one can enlarge his vision by the use of the microscope, telescope or any other device, and still see what he sees and rejoice in the assurance that as the great Apostle Paul expresses it, there is "One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." (Ephesians 4: 6.) When a man reaches this state, he is ready for anything that may come.

But my paper is long enough. Let me close with five reflections:

(1) In the depths of my soul it is clear to me that God answered the prayer of the disturbed boy preacher back at Wake Forest in the late 1880's.

(2) It became clear to me then and has become much more so all through the years that the Bible is a book on religion and not on science. If we wish to know science, nature is an open book to everybody. Let each one open his eyes and look for himself.

(3) As I have shared the experience related above with others, I have reason to believe that God has used it to help them.

(4) In the world upheaval in the midst of which all men find themselves today many, very many, are as confused as I was in my early college days. May the friend who wrote me this week and as many others as may read my story find help from God in doing so.

(5) And let us all keep in mind that our acceptance with God is not dependent on knowing or not knowing his method of creation, or on any other question of science, but on our acceptance of Jesus, his Son, as Saviour and Lord, and on the measure of our faithfulness in following him.

WHY A CHURCH SCHOOL.

this diversity of expression there is a unity of faith. Certain truths are commonly believed by Christians generally.—truths concerning God, Jesus Christ, the Bible, the church prayer, sin and salvation, human duty and destiny, and eternal life.

Belief cannot be called faith unless it is active. It is more than intellectual assent to an idea. It involves the commitment of will; it is something one lives. Faith decides the best and worth of life.

The sincerity with which church members practice their Christian faith determines whether that church is a club or a company of disciples witnessing to and working for the cause for which Jesus gave his life.

What primary children learn of prayer through its practice and interpretation will not be all there is to know about prayer, but it should be entirely true. It is vain to try to acquaint the youngest children with the difficult words of theology, but they can understand what the love of God means. They can comprehend prayer as an act of gratitude toward God. They can be taught what acts are right and what are wrong, and why this is true.

Personal Commitment and Church Membership.

Too often this has been regarded as the concern of the pastor only. First, it is important that children be thought of as "Children of the Church" from the time they are born into church homes. Second, it should be the aim of the church to lead every member of the school to a definite decision for the Christian life.

How we may help do this is a matter for thoughtful discussion with the pastor.

The Orphanage
 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Although the rains are too late for our corn, they are making our pastures and our hay fields turn green. We are very thankful for the rains. The dry weather killed out much of the alfalfa and lespedeza, while the weeds seemed to survive and grow a little, so now that rains have come, the weeds will just about take our hay fields. We have been blessed at that more than some of our neighbors, who have had to feed hay during the past weeks. Our pastures have done better than that.

Yesterday, Mr. Wagoner and some of the matrons, with the help of some of the older girls and boys, canned more than 500 gallons of peaches. Those peaches were perfect, or well nigh so, and I am sure they will help a great deal when the sleet is on the ground this winter. It would be well if we had four or five times that many. When we get our new food storage and cold storage rooms, along with a modern in-doors place for preparing food, we shall be able to do a better job. Save a place in your thinking for an absolutely needed kitchen and dining room building.

How about that $80.00 check from the Hendrieskons away out yonder in Kansas! How about that check for $30.00 from Mrs. L. S. Hollowell of Suffolk! How about that children's visit offering from Pleasant Hill for $287! How about Miss Kennedy's gift of $30.00! All those other donations are wonderful, from the Sunday schools and from individuals. Wish you could read the letters, know the friends, and share the joy of hearing from these people. Whether the donation has been one dollar or many of them, they have brought real help, and are greatly appreciated.

What a good visit Virginia Black and Marie Proctor had to our good friends in Newport News! They came back home so happy and with many interesting reports on their week's stay. Virginia Black, Ann Kinch and Doris Ward are three girls who expect to graduate this coming year in the Elon Consolidated High School. They are good helpers here at the orphanage and we are very proud of each of them. One boy is in the graduating class, David Haith. He is another one of whom we are very proud. He is a good worker, can do anything which comes to hand here, and he exerts a good influence on all of the boys. We are counting on each of these youths doing well when they leave here. They are looking forward to further training, and we are doing our best to prepare them.

Let me remind you again that I need your help in getting all our former children and their families back here August 31 for Home Coming. If you read these lines and know of a boy or girl who was reared in the orphanage, for one year or ten, or more or less, tell them the date of the Home Coming and ask them to attend. Better still, do as some others have done, send us their names and addresses.

Our friends, too, are welcome to come that day, if they let us know before hand that they are coming in order that we may have the right amount of food for free dinner for all. This is a day for rejoicing in the fine advantages which your Christian Orphanage has been able to give.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
 Superintendent.

served for twenty years. Dr. H. S. Hardeastle, Chuckatuck, Virginia, will be the speaker. The launching service for the campaign will be at 2 o'clock, with Congressman Walter Judd as the speaker.

Every pastor, every alumnus, every member of every committee and every member of the Board of Trustees of the college is personally invited, and it is hoped that everyone who possibly can will be present. There will be no solicitation of funds at this meeting. All attending are invited to be guests of the college for lunch.

Elon College is our college. It is worthy of our support. Let no one refuse to work or to contribute.

Probable Enrollment, Elon Student Body for 1952-53

The number of students who enroll in Elon College for the ensuing college year has been, and still is, a big question. In the recent meeting of the Executive Board of the Southern Convention, the statement was made that if we had an enrollment of 700 paying students at Elon College we could balance our budget with the present outside income—that is, income from endowment and invested funds. Dr. Robert Lee House suggested that the church put on a campaign to secure the 700 students for Elon, thus releasing the Sustaining Fund for other purposes. This would be possible, but an enrollment short of 700 would leave the college in the red currently without the assistance of the Sustaining Fund.

At present we have 266 new students definitely accepted, which is very good. We have 50 former students who have reserved rooms and paid their room reservation fee. We have 257 former students that are expected to return, which makes a total of 573 students.

Dr. House has submitted the name of a prospective student from his church. We are corresponding with her. If every church in the Southern Convention would determine to secure one additional student for Elon in September, we would have the required number. This is a possibility, and indeed it would be a reality if every church would set itself to the task with a determination to succeed in this effort. The time is short, but we do have a few more weeks. School opens September 2.

Apportionment Giving

The robin does not build his nest in a day, nor does the honey bee make his comb and fill it with honey in a week, but by constantly working day in and day out, the robin's nest is eventually completed and the bee's comb is filled with honey. The church did not build Elon College in a day. In fact, it is not completed and perhaps it will not be completed for years to come, but everlastingly at it we shall day by day strengthen the college and make it a greater institution of higher learning to which the sons and daughters of the homes of our churches and of other churches may come in search of knowledge and preparation for life.

These weekly offerings seem small, and they are, but even so, the amounts that come in help tremendously. Let every one make sure that his interest is expressed in this substantial and helpful work.

Presiden L. E. Smith Improving

As was announced last week, President L. E. Smith of Elon College underwent a major operation at Alamance Hospital, Burlington, N. C., on Monday, August 11. Latest reports are that Dr. Smith is recovering satisfactorily. It is expected that he will be in the hospital two or three weeks.

This is a very important time in the life of the college, and Dr. Smith's absence from the work call upon all of us to assist the college in every way possible. You can help by seeking to enlist students for the fall term which opens in early September; by supporting the Sustaining Fund of $1.00 per member, and by urging a large attendance at the Elon College Founder's Day program on September 16.

WM. T. SCOTT.

ACTIVITIES AT HINES CHAPEL AND MONTICELLO.

The revival was a great success, which was conducted the first week in June. There were ten new members added to the church membership. Rev. Melvin Dollar was the visiting minister.

Also, during the first week in June, the Vacation Bible School was held. Although this was the first one in the history of the church, it was a big success. There were seventy-five on roll, and fifty-five received certificates of perfect attendance.

Since Easter, the church has had a worship service every Sunday morning. Previously, there had been only two services a month. But now, the pastor preaches at eleven o'clock on the first and third Sundays, and at ten o'clock on the second and fourth Sundays. (The pastor also preaches at Monticello the second and fourth Sunday mornings.) By increasing the worship services, the interest has increased, and consequently, the attendance has done likewise.

Monticello Church is looking forward with great interest and anticipation for a church improvement program. The church school has increased steadily until it holds around one hundred. They, too, have increased the number of worship services. In addition to two Sunday morning services, there is a service on each third Sunday night. There have been eight additions to the membership during this year.

The Pilgrim Fellowship was organized in January of this year and meets twice a month on Sunday evenings. It is certainly a joy to watch these Junior Hi's at work.

A very devout Christian woman, the late Mrs. Tora Rudd McKinney, willed the Monticello Church a large portion of her estate, amounting to $34,661.78, to be used for the improvement of the church and cemetery. It is not the purpose of the church to use this fine gift as a crutch, but as a wing. Plans are being made for the improvement of the church.

The pastor of Hines Chapel and Monticello is Rev. Julius Rice.

Mountain-Top Observations

By PAULINE DENNIS

Rosemont Christian Church, South Norfolk, Virginia

"I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help."—Psalm 121: 1.

Taking a vacation in the mountains is really nothing unusual. Many people do just that each year. But as we grow older, such a vacation seems to mean more and to stand out more vividly in our memory. We realize that these "taken for granted" blessings serve to make life happier and more pleasant. Few have enjoyed a more relaxing, exhilarating week than our recent mountain vacation.

As we approached the mountains, my first observation was the massiveness of them. Only a few miles back, they had appeared to be veiled in lavender, gray and blue. In all their greatness I realized I was so very small and insignificant. I felt lost in their height and rolling miles of length.

As we climbed the mountain gradually, the air became purer and cooler and more refreshing. The curved, daring road seemed to beckon us on. As we rounded each curve, there awaited for us an entirely new view of God's beauty. Little naked earth could be seen. Everywhere we could see the stately trees. Their coolness was inviting. I could not help but feel a purer existence. Always I feel that God, somehow, is nearer when I'm high up in the mountains. My mind seems to turn to purer thinking. Who can go up in the hills and not feel a closer fellowship with the heavenly realms?

At sunset, from a peak on the mountain, you realize how beautiful the world below you some three to four thousand feet can be. You watch a tired, hot earth below cooled by the lowering of the sun. The valley seems to be wrapped with a shawl of brilliant yellow, then amber and finally a gorgeous red, streaked with black and pale yellow. What you see is what the artist has always tried to duplicate. I thought as I watched this beautiful sight that all of it was being done as a spectacular drama would be presented. There was perfect timing, curtain time, and an attentive audience. As we and others watched, there was a speechless silence of genuine reverence. Who dares speak in the very presence of God? Surely God was ushering the world into a quiet, peaceful rest.

Then another wonder to behold! The caverns declared the glory of God in their own particular way! As we were guided through the aisles of this underground beauty, this thought came to me: Whether down under the hills or high up above the valley, if it is the work of God, beauty is everywhere. Even God himself is everywhere. He never fails to give us beautiful things to enjoy; we may fail to recognize them, but if we turn to him to find them, the supply is inexhaustable. Yes, I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help.

Healing Hands Reach Out . . .

Today healing hands of doctors and nurses, ministers, priests and rabbis, are reaching out to the far corners of the world—to China and India; to Palestine and Alaska; to many sections of our own land. Yes, even to Russia! These representatives of American churches and synagogues are ministering to millions who are sick—sick not just physically, but in mind and spirit as well. They are helping America and the world find or regain that faith in God, in the spiritual values of life, which are vitally essential to peace and happiness.

Your regular attendance and support of your church will help the work of these healing hands!

News Flashes

Let us know what your church is doing.

Rev. Bill Simmons of Asheboro is preaching at Grace's Chapel near Sanford.

The North Carolina Rural Church Institute is being held at State College in Raleigh this week.

The Junior Choir of The Church of Wide Fellowship in Southern Pines sang Sunday evening at Hope Mills.

Have you submitted a name for the Elon freshman class this fall? Forward the name promptly or send for a catalog. Help boost the student enrollment to 700.

The revival in the Spoon's Chapel Church began August 17, with an all-day service, and is scheduled to continue throughout the week. Rev. Max Vestal, interim pastor, is doing the preaching, assisted by Dr. F. C. Lester on Sunday afternoon and by Rev. B. H. Lowdermilk on Monday and Tuesday evenings.

The revival will begin at the Pleasant Ridge Church, near Ramseur, August 24, with Dr. F. C. Lester as guest preacher. The Sunday service will be an all-day affair, with "dinner on the ground." There will be services each evening throughout the week. Rev. Max Vestal, interim pastor, urges any and all to come and worship during these services.

Rev. Cecil Thomas of First Church, Norfolk, writes: "Radio Station WTAR sponsors a five-minute program each weekday evening at 7:25 which they call 'Prayer for Peace.' A layman is invited to read a prayer of one minute for peace and the rest of the time is taken with organ music. Five of our young men were on this program last week: Lewis Gwin, George Dewey Simmons, Jr., Edward Bryant, Owen Dowdy and James Armbruster. The men were thrilled to be able to be on the radio and proud that they could represent our church. The problem was not, who can I get to go, but who will have the honor of going to represent us? It was a thrill for all of us to be a part of this."

First Church, Portsmouth Calls Pastor

Rev. W. P. Smith of Haw River has accepted a call to the First Christian Church of Portsmouth, Virginia, where he will succeed the late Rev. W. Stanley Carne. He will assume the Portsmouth pastorate on September 1.

Mr. Smith is a native of Goldsboro, a graduate of Wake Forest College and the Duke Divinity School. He was assistant pastor at First Church, Burlington, before coming to Haw River three years ago. Under his leadership the Haw River Church acquired a new parsonage and emerged from a student pastorate to a full-time parish.

To Avoid Mistakes in India

The Indian Committee of the National Council of Churches' Division of Foreign Missions has issued a statement urging that the Indian Church and mission boards take immediate action to avoid some of the mistakes made in China during the pre-Communist period. Among the recommendations were: (1) That the transfer of church property into the hands of Indian Christians be speeded up and that a strong native leadership be developed in the Church. (2) That a large-scale program be undertaken for the production and widespread distribution of literature showing the basic differences between Christian and Communist doctrine. (3) That an "all-out effort" be made to educate public opinion in America in a more friendly and understanding attitude towards India. (4) That the churches in this country stress the need for a wider application of Point Four programs to India. (5) That "able, influential and high-minded Americans" be sent on good will missions to India to help foster understanding of India's problems upon their return to the U. S. (6) That missionaries experiment in simple living. It was suggested that large missionary residences be converted into institutions, and that single missionaries be placed on a salary scale on a par with natives. (7) That increased emphasis be placed upon "rural work" and Christian responsibility in economic and political affairs.

Executive Committee of Western Carolina Conference Meets

The Executive Committee of the Western North Carolina Conference met on Thursday August 14, and transacted the following business:

Sybrant H. Pell was selected to represent the conference on the Southern Convention committee for the campaign of the Building Society. Plans were made for the co-operation of the conference in this matter.

Rev. W. T. Madren was appointed to fill the vacancy as chairman of the Committee on Stewardship and Apportionment.

The president, F. C. Lester; the secretary, M. A. Pollard; the chairman of the Committee on Stewardship and Apportionment, W. T. Madren, and R. T. Grissom, were chosen as the committee for the Elon College Sustaining Fund.

Tentative plans for the conference session, to be held November 5-6, were made. It is hoped that Dr. Ray Gibbons of the Council for Social Action, Rev. and Mrs. Richard L. Jackson, William K. Newman and Martin Garren will be guest speakers.

Plans were also made for two area rallies for the people of the Western North Carolina Conference on September 14 and 21 to provide time for committee meetings report on things to be done in the local churches before conference, and to work up enthusiasm for doing these things.

Western Laymen to Meet

The Laymen's Fellowship of the Western North Carolina Conference will be meeting at the Albemarle Congregational Christian Church, August 30th, beginning at 7:00 o'clock. We urge all the laymen and their pastors to be present for this meeting. This will be an entirely new program, so don't miss it.

The host church is planning to feed all those who come barbecued chicken for a very reasonable price. Be sure to send your name to Mr. Ardell Simmons, 219 East Street, Albemarle, N. C., so your plate will be waiting for you.

The program will consist of group and special singing, a worship service and a special laymen's movie, "More for Peace." Your presence will make the program complete.

S. H. PELL,
Chairman.

Beverly Hills Church Playground

To date the Beverly Hills Church has had, in addition to its regular church program, a very active playground. It is felt by the minister, Rev. W. W. Snyder, and the playground director Bill Tolley, that the playground has added much to the overall program of the church.

To the present time the playground has the following equipment and possibilities: badminton, volley ball, basket ball, softball, croquet, seesaws, swings, horseshoes, and a sandbox. Within the week a slide will be added to the present equipment. This slide is being constructed entirely by the laymen's fellowship, a group of men interested in the playground and also a group of men who make use of the playground for their own fellowship "get togethers." Within the next few months a tennis court will also be added.

We have been most fortunate this summer in being able to use Moonelon for swimming parties. The playground has had average swimming parties of 40 and over. Since the closing of Moonelon the group has been going to Troxler's Lake on the Reidsville Highway.

The playground has also sponsored family evening swims. The families have greatly enjoyed these swims and the church has felt their good effect

The Beverly Hills Church, in conjunction with the playground, sponsored a Vacation Church School from July 14-23. The playground was a significant part of the Vacation School in the fact that it helped correlate the importance of recreation with the study of the Church, the curriculum of the Vacation Church School. The Vacation Church School had an en-

Better and Wider Stewardship is the Answer

A meeting of the Board of Publications was just concluded. Superintendent Wm. T. Scott, President L. E. Smith and the editor sat down for lunch. The trio continued talking shop." We have a big job ahead, all agreed. How can we succeed in raising the remainder of the two and a half million dollars for Elon College, then raise $130,000 for the Church Building Campaign, in addition to our usual obligations? What do you say? How can we do it? Do you have reports, suggestions?

The editor does not claim to have all the answers and is not a financial wizard. Some of the answers become obvious as we move from step to step in these two campaigns. Meanwhile, a few preliminary observations may be made.

Faith will be necessary. Lack of faith cuts the nerve of effort, of stewardship activity. Enthusiasm will be necessary, for enthusiasm engenders enthusiasm. Imagination will be necessary to devise ways and means of accomplishing the task. Faith, enthusiasm and imagination can do the impossible.

There should be a renewed and sustained emphasis on tithing throughout our churches. The church that dares tithe will realize the truth of the Master's promise: "Greater things than these shall ye do." We have tinkered with the tithe long enough. We need to institute it and implement it.

We need a new crop of pioneers or adventurers in the realm of stewardship. Individuals and churches must come up with the answers and demonstrate how the job can be done. Do you have unusually successful stewardship plans to report?

Our traditional patterns of stewardship are inadequate. The minister can do something about it by adding new members. The income of the average church can be increased by 50% by the use of legitimate projects--the Lord's Acre plan, for example. Members of a youth class are making money for a project by working in tobacco during their vacation. Another is planning to pick cotton during spare time this fall. Opportunities abound. Wages are high. Can we not turn these opportunities into stewardship achievements?

We must tackle stewardship at all levels. No gift is unimportant. One gift leads to another. But we must develop stewardship on the higher as well as the lower levels. The First Congregational Church of Los Angeles, California, is currently observing its 85th Anniversary. One avowed aim of the celebration is the securing of 85 new wills naming the church as a beneficiary. This effort is made without apology-- and with success. The idea is not copyrighted, so you are free to try it. More of our people should be doing for their churches what Mrs. Tora Rudd McKinney did for Monticello, and what Mr. Arthur Oates did for Timber Ridge.

Much could be accomplished if we could schedule a stewardship institute and an every member canvass in all of our churches throughout the Convention. Stewardship must be organized as well as theorized.

In this connection, it is most interesting to note that the best methods of securing financial gifts from corporations and individuals for non-profit organizations will be discussed at Cincinnati, Ohio, December 15 and 16 by some 500 fund-raising officials of churches, colleges, universities and social institutions, financial and legal experts.

Heading the list of speakers are J. K. Lasser, certified public accountant of New York City and author of "How Tax Laws Make Giving to Charity Easier"; F. Emerson Andrews of the Russell Sage Foundation, New York City, and author of "Philanthropic Giving" and "Corporation Giving"; Charles P. Taft, attorney, Cincinnati, and George A. Huggins, actuary counsel, Philadelphia.

The purpose of the conference, sponsored by the National Council of Churches' Department of Stewardship and Benevolence, is to bring the best technical skill and professional knowledge to those engaged in fund-raising work for churches, hospitals, educational institutions and other non-profit organizations. The Southern Convention should be represented at this meeting.

Additional speakers and their topics include: Ross McCain, moderator of the Presbyterian Church, U. S., and retired president of Agnes Scott College, Decatur, Ga., "Seeing Our Promotional Job from a Christian Perspective"; Gilbert Darlington, treasurer of American Bible Society, "Annuity Policies and Administration"; and James K. Quay, vice-president Princeton Theological Seminary, "Experiences in Approaching Foundations."

Specific subjects to come under discussion include the importance of voluntarily-supported institutions in a democracy, trends in corporation giving since 1945, and motives and tax questions in giving.

Among others who will take part in the program are Charles A. Wonacott, philanthropic consultant, Hanover Bank, New York City, and former treasurer, Board of National Missions, Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.; James Whitney, assistant treasurer, Protestant Episcopal Church, New York City; Mrs. Wilmer Shields Rich, American Foundations Information Service, New York City; Albert G. Parker, president of Hanover College, Hanover, Ind., and James G. Patton, Jr., executive secretary of the General Council of the Presbyterian Church, U. S., Decatur, Ga., and the chairman of the National Council's Department of Stewardship and Benevolence.

H. Spenses Minnich, the financial representative of the Church of the Brethren, Elgin, Ill., and chairman of the Committee on Wills and Special Gifts of the Department of Stewardship and Benevolence, has been chosen to act as chairman of the conference.

Christian Stewardship is defined by the National Council as "the practice of systematic and proportionate giving of time, abilities and material possessions based upon the conviction that these are a trust from God to be used in his service for the benefit of all mankind in grateful acknowledgement of Christ's redeeming love."

NEW SUPPORT for the CHURCHES

By KARL QUIMBY, Field Cultivation Secretary Methodist Board of Missions

The United Church Canvass is really a new idea whose time is come. Briefly stated, it is an attempt on the part of a group of churches in a given community to raise their annual budgets simultaneously. This explanation is so simple that it fails to convey the far-reaching possibilities of the movement.

This most hopeful movement is based on fundamental principles. The first is that all churches need and merit added funds for the expansion of their program. But this fact, important though it is has little news value. There is no community-wide news appeal in a single church raising its annual budget. Can you imagine anything more routine and uninspiring? But when all the churches, or at least a majority of them in any region start to do it together, that becomes headline news. When the churches, working together, plan the campaign on a wider and more ambitious basis, that too is encouraging news and the public is avid for it. There are many laymen who have almost given up hope of ever seeing any form of church union realized. Consequently when they find that in the United Church Canvass it is possible to experience a greater degree of cooperation, and that the churches already have a plan and program, they respond with marked enthusiasm. It is inspiring good news to them.

The second principle is that the heart of the United Church Canvass is found in the word United! The inner genius of this movement is to have the churches do whatever they do together, that is, simultaneously! There is one difficult hurdle here. It is the dead hand of custom—the way it has always been done. But this can be overcome, in fact is being overcome rapidly. Long experience has found that the month of November is the best time of the entire year for raising funds. Already the fiscal year of many denominations has been changed to correspond to the calendar year. Hence November is the ideal time for them to promote their every-member canvasses. But it is exceedingly difficult for any church to shift its canvass period. A survey revealed that the largest number of churches conducted their fund-raising efforts in November. The second group came in March. But several denominations have shifted from the spring to the fall period in order, in part, that they may secure full advantage of this united Church Canvass program in their community. Among the denominations which have shifted to the calendar year and the fall canvass period should be listed the Presbyterian Church U. S. A. and the United Presbyterians. The Southern Presbyterians have arranged to make the shift in 1953. The Evangelical and United Brethren church is shifting to the fall period, and the American Baptists have the matter under consideration. The Disciples are about evenly divided between the fall and spring periods for their canvasses. The Methodists and the American Baptists are about the only major denominations not having their canvass in the fall. When this movement has gained a little more prestige, then all the major church groups will be taking their canvasses in the fall. At that time it will be comparatively easy to arrange a series of nation-wide appeals which will urge every citizen to reinforce the church or synagogue of his choice. That day is coming more rapidly than many now think.

Third, you will note that this united approach makes a small but very important shift in the nature of the financial appeal. It is no longer just to get money to support the church, pay the minister and have enough for fuel and perhaps a contribution to missions. The entire basis is shifted from that of maintaining individual churches to the strengthening of the spiritual foundations of community life. It is an attempt to recover the vital religious heritage which came to this country in the beginning. No man wants to live in a churchless community. The approach based on community need makes a powerful appeal to every responsible citizen. Every man wants a better religious experience for his children than he himself had.

Fourth, this is a day when all kinds of appeals are made through the newspapers, advertising and over the radio and television. Any arrangement whereby we can get the appeal of religion and the institutions of religion in the public press and over the latest means of communication—that is a distinct gain. The world has too many dictators and powerful fanatical leaders. The character molding influences need and merit reinforcement. This is the time for sober and serious challenge in behalf of the higher things of life. This is what the United Church Canvass does. When it is community-wide, and when all the churches participate in some manner, it is easily possible for the editor of the local paper to give a "spread" to the appeal of the churches, and to carry in the column the story of the achievements of the churches, and often an editorial can intensify the appeal of a community-wide basis while the same cultivation is being promoted in each local church.

Five, this United Canvass represents the latest development in church finance. It is the technique of the future. Some can remember when the Duplex envelope first came into general usage, supplementing the old fashioned method of pew renting. About the same time came the idea of having once a year a canvass of every member of the church, instead of depending entirely on the offerings of those who attended on Sunday. This latter placed a disproportionate amount of the total financial load on a loyal few. The every member canvass, now an established part of the program of nearly all our churches, marked a distinct step forward. The United Church Canvass represents

Our Lord's Stewardship

SCRIPTURE: John 17.

The last act of a stewardship is a report, an accounting, a balance sheet of what was delivered over to the steward and what the steward did with the Master's investment. Every steward must make such an accounting, for the essence of stewardship is: the steward is responsible to a Master. He is always answerable to his Master for his handling of what his Master has given him.

This responsibility of accounting is characteristic of all stewards, and there came a time even in the life of our Lord when he made such an accounting to God, his Father. The prayer recorded for us in the seventeenth chapter of John is, in many respects, an account of his stewardship.

Jesus lived out his life in a consciousness of doing the will of God. Not only in Gethsemane, but in every moment he prayed, "Not my will but thine be done." He was not come to do his own will, but "the will of him who sent me."

After a life of constant dependence on the power of God and a seeking to do the will of God, he began to see the shadow of a cross falling across his path. At length he saw that cross just a few hours away, and after a farewell talk with his disciples, he went away for a few minutes of prayer before Judas would be arriving with the officers of the law.

He had come unto his own, but his own had received him not. He had loved Jerusalem and wept over it. He would be crucified just outside of Jerusalem. His family considered him smitten of God and afflicted. His disciples were ambitious and cowardly. His life was nearly at an end. What could he report for his stewardship? He had much to report, and all history is a vindication of his stewardship.

1. Work. "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." What was the work of our Lord? He described it as "the Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted; to preach deliverance to the captive, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised; to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." Yes, within the brief span of three years, he had done that, and magnificently, too, but those three years did not exhaust the world's need for him. How was it that his work was finished? Perhaps his work was finished in that the meaning of God in a human life was clearly, uniquely and perfectly manifested. No matter how long he had lived, nothing would have added to the quality of his life. Perhaps he had finished his work in another sense: in the training of the twelve. In reporting his stewardship, he naturally turned to his disciples.

2. Men. "I have manifested thy name unto the men which thou gavest me out of the world." Throughout this prayer, Jesus seems to be putting the hope of his cause upon the disciples: "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word." How could our Lord have had such confidence in such men as Peter, the denier, or Thomas, the doubter? Would God's eternal and gracious purposes be dependent on the trustworthiness of such slender reeds, such earthen vessels? Apparently Jesus believed such to be the case. Did he not know them? Certainly, he knew them, for he said, "While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name; those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition." Jesus knew even then that Peter would become a rock, that Thomas would pray, "My Lord and my God," and that Judas would sell him for thirty pieces of silver. How was it that Jesus was not able to "keep" Judas? When Judas is called a "son of perdition," the better translation is "son of loss." The word for loss is that for squandering, wasting, killing needlessly, losing. Judas is a son of waste. He was lost because he did not rightly handle the precious things entrusted to him. The possibility of a Judas is always present in every band of Christ's followers. To a certain extent this Judas, this selling of our Lord for some lesser good, is present in everyone of us. Jesus did not fail in his stewardship in manifesting God's name unto Judas, but Judas did fail in the stewardship entrusted to him. What did Jesus do with the men God gave him?

3. Words. "For I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me." Jesus taught, not like the scribes or Pharisees, but as one having authority. The word authority in Greek means "out of being." Jesus' authority did not come from academic training or religious ordination or institutional backing. His authority was in his own person, out of what he was. In a special sense, he was the Word of God himself. In this stewardship prayer, Jesus praises God that the words given by him did not fall on deaf ears, but "they have received them and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didst send me." The disciples had learned that which Jesus tried to teach them:

"This is the life eternal: that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

Into the lives of those who discover God speaking in Jesus Christ there comes a glory, not unlike that which Moses discovered on Mount Sinai.

4. Glory. "And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them." Could Jesus, in the shadow of the cross speak of glory given by God? In a few moments, he would be forsaken by his followers, scourged, spit upon, mocked and crucified. Wherein was the glory of which he was so sure? Not in any outward, human, worldly sense, to be sure. But in his deepest of hearts he had the inward consciousness of knowing and doing the will of God. That is glory. But there was another kind of glory which Christ cherished: the glory of faithful and fruitful disciples: "I am glorified in them." Because of his absolute love for his disciples, Jesus prayed:

"Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory which thou hast given me."

Jesus knew that they would need a vision of his glory, because they were soon to see his degradation. He knew they were soon to be separated from him for a little while. He therefore prayed that they might be with him forever.

Thus did Jesus give an account of his stewardship: "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do. . . . I have manifested thy name unto the men which thou gavest me out of the world. . . . For I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me. . . . And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them."

Church Members, What of the Morrow?

Elon College has a future as well as a past. The trouble with too many of us is that too often we are counting losses instead of dreaming dreams. The college has built itself into the lives of the people and into the heart of the church. Its future depends on how completely the members of the church will build themselves into the college, and the church itself becomes more definitely a part of the college. Too often we think of those who seem not to be interested and who give no support and overlook those who are interested and who give support.

The other day I was talking with an "old timer" who wished for the good old days when the church supported the college by patronage and money. Little did he realize that then the enrollment of the college was fewer than 200. Today more of our church people contribute to the college than ever before in its history. They are contributing through Conference Apportionments in a sizeable amount. They are contributing through the Sustaining Fund which has been of great help to the college. They are contributing through the Two and One Half Million Dollar Campaign Fund, and have also contributed, though modestly, to the permanent funds of the college. It is regretful, to be sure, that more of our people do not express an interest in the college, do not contribute to its support, and do not make donations to the funds that we are now securing.

It is also most regretful that many of the members of our church who are financially able to pay for the education of their sons and daughters, send them elsewhere to college. Perhaps in the coming days, when the college shall have more completely proven its worth and efficiency, even such good members will give their patronage to their collegee.

Conditions are not too favorable to conduct a campaign to secure a comparatively large sum for the college, but this fact should not in any way lessen our interest in the campaign or our determination to press on until the goal is reached. By cooperation, determination, generosity and consecration the job can and will be done.

Let no one forget September 16. Let everyone plan to be present.

Have You Sent the Name of Your Prospective Student?

We have made some gains in our prospective enrollment for 1952-1953 since our last report:

New Students—To date there are 232 new students definitely accepted, with fees paid. There are 50 applications from new students that are incomplete (it is not likely that this number will enroll).

Upperclassmen—150 upperclassmen have signed up for rooms. There are 156 former non-dormitory students expected to return. These are day students and we cannot tell much about them till they come for registration. This makes a total of 601 students, but in all probability there will be at least 50 of these who will not enroll. There will be some other applications. It looks now as if the actual enrollment will fall short of 600 unless the pastors of all our churches busy themselves to get at least one person each to enter Elon College in September.

Apportionment Giving

The days come, the weeks pass, the months multiply, and the year is gone before we realize it. There are so many things that we have honestly planned to do that we seem never able to get to, and the things that must be done before the year closes pile up on our doorsteps at the same time. No doubt there were many of our Sunday schools and churches at the beginning of the conference year who were determined to meet their conference obligations monthly. They were sincere and honest in their resolves, but with too many of our churches things happen that prevent this proposed achievement. Now we have passed the half-way mark. We are pushing on toward the end of the conference year. It is not too late to pay your apportionment for the college. Next week will be a wonderful time and your contribution could never be made at a time when the college needed it more. Your cooperation and help are always appreciated.

Arthur Gray Goes to Talladega

Dr. Arthur Gray of Chicago, pastor of the Church of the Good Shepherd and Chairman of the Executive Committee of the General Council has just been elected to the Presidency of Talladega College and will take over his new office on September 1. Talladega was founded in 1867 by the American Missionary Association, now a Division of the Board of Home Missions. The Church of the Good Shepherd is the largest Negro Congregational Church in the U. S. A. During Dr. Gray's pastorate it has raised $285,000 for current and capital purposes and is free of debt.

Report from Rev. George M. Tally's Pastorate

At Christian Chapel a heating system is being installed and electric lights have been installed.

At Christian Light new pews have been added, the church has been painted on the inside, a bulletin board has been erected, pulpit furniture has been purchased and a heating system is being installed. Prospects are bright for new Sunday School rooms.

Moore's Union—new pews have been added, a new floor has been placed in the church auditorium, pulpit furniture has been installed and a woman's missionary society has been organized.

Lebanon—painted the pews and a bulletin board has been installed.

Mt. Pleasant—has sanded and varnished the floors.

Pleasant Hill Church has been painted, pulpit has been repaired, and carpet added.

Brother Tally has a fine record of improving church property or the churches he serves. He is a faithful pastor and his churches are making an effort to take their place in the Conference and Convention fellowship and service.

VII.--Dr. Sloan Reports from Belgian Congo

"Find out if that story about the Belgian Congo in the June Reader's Digest is true," several people suggested before we left Elon College. We now have had two visits in what is here called Congo Belge and can state that the magazine report is basically correct, although exaggerated.

The author evidently was taken about by the Belgians, who had him see what they wanted him to see. But all with whom I have talked, including a number of British, agree that the Belgians are now doing a better job in their colonial program in Africa than any other European nation. To get that from a Britisher is a real compliment to the Belgians. The author said he saw no slums or shanty towns. Evidently he was steered away from them, for they exist, although probably none is worse than those within sight of the capitol dome in Washington, D. C.

Africans are deserting the bush for the cities—200,000 to Leopoldville and half as many to Elizabethville. There are less than ten per cent as many white people in each city. The smaller cities we visited are growing even more rapidly. This means that cities are modern, clean and booming. It also develops problems for the African people, for, as with all country people, adjusting to city life is difficult. Tribal customs and authority disappear. New languages and ways of living must be learned.

The Christian program must also move to the city to keep pace with these changes. We attended a mid-week service in Elizabethville in a new steel and concrete building. Several hundred people took every seat in the room. The sermon was given in one African language and translated into another.

The government is recognizing the great value of Protestant missions and, for the time being, is very generous in its financial aid to schools and medical work. Although the laws are so worded as definitely to favor the Roman Catholics, the Romans have as yet very few schools or clinics that come up to government specifications. The government itself has set up a great many clinics and maternity centers, but is having trouble getting the Africans to patronize them, although the mission health centers are crowded. Harshness, disinterest and cruelty on the part of the staff on the one hand, and Christian kindness, respect and helpful explanation on the other hand, explains the difference.

A paternalistic attitude, imprisoning those who refuse to raise their own food or keep a job and forbidding Africans from purchasing strong liquor or seeing certain movies, may be necessary, but is at times resented. Possibly some natives need to be treated as children, but many have learned all the knowledge and skills of the Europeans and naturally wish to be treated as the Europeans.

The Belgians do insist that the Africans be respected. One military man was fined for calling a servant an imbecile. His argument that he had been called the same thing in the army was not accepted.

The Belgians at one time were very cruel and unsuccessful. They have drastically reversed their policy and are showing wisdom.

They will doubtless continue to adjust to new conditions. However, the Belgian government is beginning to fear it has something bigger than it can handle. Consequently thousands of soldiers are being brought from Belgium. I do not know how these were kept hidden from the author of the Reader's Digest report.

As to the movies, not only Africans are forbidden to see certain films, but children too. Every movie ad carries the statement—in French of course—"children admitted" or that "children not admitted." The latter occurs more frequently than the former.

The Belgian Congo is a place to watch, for it is the source of much of our uranium and copper as well as large amounts of manganese, cobalt, tin and zinc. It probably has the world's richest mineral deposits. Of course, Russia would like these minerals and can be depended upon to cause any trouble in the Congo she can. It is essential that we cooperate with Belgium and especially with the major agency in the Congo dedicated to helping people secure an abundant life, Christian missions.

Congregational Missionary Educator Passes

Dr. J. Kingsley Birge, Congregational Christian educationalist under the American Board and a recognized authority on English-Turkish literature and Turkish history and language died on Thursday, August 14, in Istanbul, Turkey.

Dr. Birge, who was born in Bristol, Connecticut, March 4, 1888, was at work on a special project financed by the Rockefeller Foundation involving a study of the historic backgrounds of the Turkish Republic. He had been released by the American Board from his usual duties for three years (1951-1953) to engage in research and study under the Rockefeller Foundation in Turkish history, including social, political and ideological phases.

As head of the American Board Publication Department in Istanbul, Dr. Birge in 1950 saw the completion after 12 years of work of a publication of a revision of the famous Redhouse English-Turkish Dictionary. He was known in international scholastic circles as the author of several books, one of the most outstanding being a "Guide to Turkish Area Studies," published by the American Council of Learned Societies and considered an invaluable source of basic facts about Turkey.

He also wrote "The Bektashi Order of Dervishes" and many thoughtful articles on Turkey, particularly from the historical angle and on the period between the two World Wars.

Dr. Birge was a graduate of Yale University, Class of 1909, B. A.; the Hartford Theological Seminary, 1913, B. D., and Kennedy School of Missions, 1935, Ph. D.

Young Missionaries Sail

Ten American teachers slated for three years service in Turkey and Syria under the American Board, representing the Congregational Christian Churches of the U. S. A., sailed on Friday, August 15, from New York on the S. S. Independence.

In the group were native sons and daughters of Tennessee, California, Wisconsin, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, Iowa, Illinois, Massachusetts and New Jersey. Several are from this year's crop of young teachers and others are experienced educators. The American Board has been cooperating with Turkey through its fine schools for many years and first went to that country in 1820.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

Who Is This Person?

From the clues given below, see if you can guess who this person is. Try it out on your family, or your Woman's Society, and see how few statements it will take them to guess the person's identity.

1. She majored in religious education at Elon College.

2. She worked for the Board of Christian Education in the Southern Convention, holding Bible Schools, etc.

3. She attended Boston University.

4. She says she cannot write for publication, but she probably has the biggest personal correspondence of any person in our area.

5. She was hospitalized in Lebanon with a "children's disease" several years ago.

6. She made a trip to India as a member of a deputation from our Missions Council.

7. She has attended more young people's conferences than you could shake a stick at.

8. She knows intimately more people in our denomination than any other person in the Southern Convention—and I dare anyone to challenge this statement!

9. She thinks she is quite a farmer and raises cultured worms as a hobby.

10. She has no children of her own, but "oodles" of nieces and nephews whom she adores and helps.

11. She has been a national secretary with our Missions Council, with headquarters in New York.

12. She has a reputation for being one of the most appealing speakers the South has ever sent north.

13. She is responsible for the fine woman's literature packet.

14. She works with Sunday school superintendents.

15. She cooperates with ministers in planning leadership training, missions institutes, officers' retreats, etc.

16. She is now the educational secretary of the Southern Convention.

17. She has much more work to do than she can possibly get done.

18. She sponsored the bus trips to the United Nations and to California.

19. She is more appreciated by the people of our churches than she will ever realize.

20. She is probably the best-loved person in the Southern Convention.

Who is she?

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, of course!

Men "Make" the Women's Page

How nice it is for the women to aid and abet the men when they plan something for the church—often the men are the "chanceurs" or the ones who put up the cash for the women's activities! And it is nice to have this process reversed.

From Mrs. Raymond Stroug, member of our church in Chapel Hill, N. C., comes this interesting item:

"On Wednesday night, July 23, the men of the church (who have their own fellowship) had an old fashioned ice cream social on the lawn behind the church. Most of the wives had baked cakes for them and the men supplied home made ice cream. The event was well attended and everything was sold. They cleared between forty and fifty dollars, which will be given to the church's redecoration fund. All the women were very proud of them. We thought they had a very novel way of raising money, with everybody having a good time."

Fine Report from Shelton Memorial

The Missionary Society of Shelton Memorial Church, Portsmouth, Virginia, holds regular meetings each month, using the program as outlined in the Year Book. Our meetings are well attended. We enjoy a social hour at our informal luncheon.

We observed World Community Day, World Day of Prayer and May Fellowship Day, working with our United Council of Church Women on these occasions. Mrs. Frank Lewis, our devotional leader, is the new president of the Council of Church Women of Portsmouth.

In May we observed Fellowship Day by organizing the churches of the city into groups, and each group entertained the service men in our midst, providing refreshments and entertainment. The young women of the community were most cooperative in assisting us.

Our two groups, the Young Women's Guild and the Senior Missionary Society and Guild, gave a reception in June for our new minister, Rev. Thomas Britton, and Mrs. Britton. Many ministers and their wives from Norfolk and Portsmouth were among the guests.

We've had the two recommended books reviewed at open meetings.

We have sponsored a child at Elon Christian Orphanage during the year. We have also sent a large package of clothing and household goods to the Migrant Center at Richmond, Va.

At Christmas we had our annual bazaar and food sale jointly with the young women's group. It proved well worth our time and effort.

We hope to attain bigger and better things in our Lord's work during the coming year.

MARY T. SHAFER,
President.

YOUNG MISSIONARIES SAIL.

This group of ten teachers has just completed a four-day briefing and orientation conference with American Board officials in Boston.

The group includes the following:

Miss Martha Jean Potter of Greenwood, Mass., Middlebury College, Class of 1952; Miss Helen Louise Morgan, Washington, D. C., Assistant Professor of Spanish, Macalester College, St. Paul, Minnesota, and Miss Marie McGinnis, Garrison, N. Dakota, principal of Garrison High School, assigned to the American academy for Girls in Scutari, Turkey.

Miss Edith M. Marken of Cambridge, Mass., teacher of journalism, Boston University, Suffolk University and Endicott, Jr., College, assigned to the Aleppo High School for Girls, Aleppo, Syria.

Miss Ruth C. Sowter of Ridgeway, N. J., of the faculty of Northfield School for Girls, Northfield, Mass.; Miss Carol Elizabeth Egly of Riverside, Calif., Pomona College, Class of 1952; Mrs. Mattie Compton Claiborne of Berkeley, Calif., social worker and home economics teacher, and Miss Martha Lee Dunbar, of Chico, Calif., teacher at Oroville, Calif., Junior High School, assigned to the American Collegiate Institute, Izmir, Turkey.

Ralph A. Meyering, Turkey-born son of a former Turkey missionary, of Mankato, Minn., State Teachers College, 1952, and William Barns Mathews, Jr., of Urbana, Ill., Carleton College, Northfield, Minn., son of Rev. and Mrs. William B. Mathews, assigned to the American Boys School of Talas, Turkey.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Boys and Girls:

As summer comes to a close, the last of the Sunday school picnics are being held. Have you had yours yet? I have heard about a few this summer. The day after I came to Virginia, our church at Hope Mills held theirs at a nearby lake, and from all reports had a glorious time.

A few weeks ago, my son joined the busload of youngsters and oldsters who went from the Newport News Church to Buckroe Beach for their picnic. Lots of people went in their own cars, but the bus was full. The next week a note from my daughters who have been staying in the country, told me that they had gone to Ocean View for the Cypress Chapel picnic, and just last week I saw Dr. N. G. Newman, who had been to Buckroe with the Oakland picnic bunch.

Sunday school picnics are grand affairs. People smell the good food, the air from the water (better if it is salty!), and they relax with their friends as the young people enjoy the carnival attractions.

It put me in mind of some picnics twenty years ago that the Newport News Church had. The street car tracks ran along the street next to the church, and promptly at 11 a. m. two or three cars would pull up and stop. The conductor had to switch the trolley and keep an eye on the restless children eager to be first on and sit by a window—and to get such a long ride free! It is at least 15 miles and quite a treat by train or trolley. Once the eager youngsters had climbed aboard, the grown-ups boarded. Always the last one was my grandmother, who was the Sunday school treasurer, and who came waving the check to pay for the trip. Then we would be ready to go. As often as possible, the street car company sent the old-fashioned open, summer-type cars, and the boys and girls could lean out, giggle, call and shout at passersby.

What a trip—on through Newport News, into Hampton and on until we smelled the salt air and every child wiggled with anxiety to be out and about his play. Once there, there was a mighty scramble and a rush for the merry-go-round house, the very same horses on which many of the mothers and fathers had ridden in their childhood. The merry tunes and rings for a free ride lured many.

Later on there was swimming, wading or bathing. The surf is rarely rough at Buckroe, and little folk can look for shells, roll and squirm without too much tossing. Those who have never felt the worry and care erasing warmth of the ocean's salt have missed one of God's greatest blessings.

A ride on the ferris wheel, a glance at the distorted mirrors, a fortune told, or a ride on the roller coaster for the very daring, put all in the right frame of appetite. There would be plenty of fried chicken, country ham, potato salad, lemonade, cake and watermelon.

Right full, one watched the twinkling lights of the concessions and enjoyed the cool evening breeze. Ere long the trolleys came, and tired and sleepy children climbed aboard—all thankful for the Christian Church Sunday School that gave them such a magical day and every year. (One day a year was about all the church, children and parents could stand!) On the way home there were whirly-gigs and birds, and banners to be waved out of the windows. Finally all were home and safe in bed, and the arolleys went back to their barns.

"There Is No Other Way"

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

When we recall our younger days, do we remember the spankings, the scoldings, the exhortations, as helping us to comprehend what would be best for us to do and be? No, it is rather our parents' examples, their gentle admonitions, the wisdom they taught us in one or two kind, helpful, almost casual sentences that come to mind. Bringing their philosophies into everyday conversation and living carried more weight than high-tensioned "don'ts" and stern commands.

But what about those parents who forget their children are liable to become minature reflections of themselves? Of what are parents thinking—or are they thinking?—when they make such statements as the one I recently overheard: "Jon, stop lying to me! You can't out-lie me, no matter how hard you try!" One of the most brilliant women in the country said this to her child. This mother writes interviews, columns, profiles, and she records events at the United Nations meetings. There is no denying her fine ability, BUT she is not a farseeing parent.

So, reader friend, if you're not a college graduate, don't worry too much. Often, the self-educated dad and mother with common sense and the understanding of children, gained from careful reading and observation, are miles ahead of some parents with a Master's degree or even a Ph. D., when it comes to rearing their little ones.

Another college graduate related before a group of friends, in a half-amused, I thought - nothing - of - it manner, "Sam doesn't like to deliver his papers! Last week he dumped them on a vacant lot across the street."

My dad frequently commented, "Children must be taught the fundamentals!" It isn't fair to the child to be offhand about actions which, if continued, will develop lowered standards of behavior.

One of my associates in volunteer work taught in two of the most fashionable and expensive private schools in the country. Numbers of her scholars, she said, told her with "smart-aleek" pride of having stolen things from the five-and-ten-cent stores. Pray, what kind of "entertainment" is this in which children from some of the upper-bracket homes are indulging?

As she said, the trend for years among a considerable proportion of young people of every financial group has been, "Anything you can get away with is all right!" What a sad state of affairs it is when the world, including our wonderful U. S. A., must have an element in it which causes it to become less and less stable, when corruption is rampant in wide circles, when we find bribery accepted by certain politicians and top athletes, and cheating is not unknown even in some of our finest educational institutions.

We must get back to our good old traditions, teaching "first things first" to all of our children—the commonplace decencies, high principles and ideals, and the fine spiritual values. Let us, those of us who have let the dust collect on the family Bible, wipe it off and make its reading a day-in, day-out habit.

Youth at Work in the Church

MAX VESTAL. Box 792. Elon College, N. C.

Youth Rally at Hank's Chapel

The Western North Carolina Conference Youth Fellowship will meet at Hank's Chapel Christian Church on Sunday, August 31, beginning at 2:30 o'clock.

A well planned and important program has been arranged for your enjoyment.

It is also time to elect the officers for the coming year. So you can see that your presence is necessary.

We have a wonderful evening program planned. Everyone please be present, and have a large representation from your church.

Do not forget to bring a well-filled basket, so we can all have a picnic for supper, together.

We will be looking for all the young people of the Western North Carolina Conference.

Remember, a wonderful Christian fellowship with the young people at Hank's Chapel!

DOLAN TALBERT,
Vice-President.

Monticello PF'ers Have Banquet

The Pilgrim Fellowship of Monticello Church gave a banquet in honor of their parents on Friday night, July 25, at the club house. Miss Rita Roach served as mistress of ceremonies. The speaker for the occasion was Curtis Young, North Carolina and Virginia P. F. president. Curtis gave us some valuable information concerning the National Council and the Pilgrim Fellowship Conference which he attended recently in California. Curtis is the new chairman of the Faith Commission for the National Pilgrim Fellowship.

There were 16 Fellowshipippers and 24 parents present for the banquet.

The Monticello Junior Hi P. F. was organized in January of this year, and we meet twice a month on Sunday evenings in the homes of the members. Since there is no other young people's organization in our community, we invite young people of other denominations to join us. At present four Methodists and two Lutherans are among our members.

Thus far this year, we have had as our guest speakers, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Jose Dabnet and Curtis Young. We had five delegates at the North Carolina and Virginia P. F. Conference at Apple's Chapel, four attended the Southern Convention Conference at Elon College, and ten attended the week-end camp at Camp New Hope.

Rev. and Mrs. Julius Rice serve as our counsellors.

Tribute to Youth Counsellor

On Monday morning, July 14, we were saddened to hear of the death of one of our most faithful members and friends, Leo Hinson. He had been seriously ill during the past few weeks due to a heart condition.

Leo was thirty-eight years old; a member of the First Church at Albemarle; a Mason, belonging to the local Lodge No. 348. He had three children; Mrs. Dolan Talbert, and Jerry and Lana of the home.

Leo was very interested in the church and took an active part in it, especially with the Young People, serving as adult counsellor. He was, also co-teacher of the Young Men's Bible Class.

We are sure all of the young people of the Western North Carolina Conference will miss him, especially at the Rallies, as he always gave his full support in helping in any way he could.

As we look back over the time we have known him, in serving and in working for the glory of God, we can say it was a good life; in harmony with his Maker, who has called him on to glory to receive the reward which is his.

Relax With Max

Your officers will be meeting on September 13-14 to plan the activities for the coming year. Share your ideas with them so that they may make plans for the best year yet. Your officers were not elected to dictate to you, but to serve you. Tell them what you want to see done—and then help them do it!

A clergyman who had set his heart on a war-memorial cross of stone in his churchyard, knew that "practical" men like to prove their superiority over—well, the cloth. So, at a church meeting, he first dropped a hint that of course it was too late to do anything about a war memorial now. At once an angry objector said it was a crying scandal that nothing had been done and the sooner they got on with the job, the better. Gracefully yielding, the parson suggested some neat little memento inside the church.

"Inside!" stormed a parishoner. "Half the village won't see it there. We'll have something in the churchyard!"

"Well, well," replied the cleric, "What about some sort of wooden plaque on the wall?"

"Wood!" came a retort. "We will want something permanent—something in stone."

"Not a cross, of course," the vicar said hesitatingly. He was drowned out by a counsellor who opined that there couldn't be a better symbol of sacrifice and peace than a cross.

"All right," conceded the parson, and cheerfully surrendered to the meeting. That night he wrote to an architect friend: "Please proceed with the order I sent you last week."

Licensure Service for Bill Simmons

A service for the licensure of Bill Simmons was held in his home church at Albemarle, N. C., on Sunday, August 17, with the pastor of the church, Rev. Thomas D. Sutton, in charge. An interesting feature of the worship service was a solo by Mrs. Bill Simmons, "If I have Wounded Any Soul Today."

The sermon was preached by Dr. F. C. Lester, pastor of the Asheboro Church, who used Paul's instructions to Timothy as the basis for his remarks.

Dr. Lester also performed the act of licensure in his capacity as president of the Western North Carolina Conference. He asked both Mr. and Mrs. Simmons to come forward for this part of the service, the prayer of dedication including the work of both of them.

Mr. Simmons has been called as pastor of Pleasant Grove Church during the coming year, and he and his family expect to move into the new parsonage there soon. He is now serving as supply at Grace's Chapel Church and is attending Elon College.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

The Reign of David

LESSON IX—AUGUST 31, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: "As for God, his way is perfect; the word of the Lord is tried; he is a shield unto all them that take refuge in him."—II Samuel 22:31.

LESSON: II Samuel 5:6-10; 8:13-18.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 72:1-7.

This is not the kind of lesson that is easy to make interesting. It is for the most part historical and not the most interesting history at that. But it does have value in that it illustrates some of the qualities that made David a great and a good king. And the qualities of religion and wise statesmanship that characterized David are greatly needed in our leaders today.

The Capital of the Nation is Moved.

When David became king, Hebron was the seat of government. It was far to the south and well off the center of the nation. As such, it was ill-suited to serve as capital of the nation. A better place, indeed an almost ideal spot was Jerusalem, further to the north. It was the city of the Jebusites, and had never been conquered by Joshua or any of the other Israelite leaders. It was located on a high hill or mountain and was strongly fortified. It lay as a dagger at the heart of the Hebrew nation, a constant threat to its safety and security. Both from a strategic and a political standpoint, it was desirable and imperative that the city be taken.

But that posed a problem. Its natural location made it well-nigh impregnable. In addition, it had been strongly fortified. And it was manned by well-trained, war-like soldiers, courageous and resourceful. In fact, it was so strong and well-guarded that its inhabitants boasted that the lame and the feeble could defend it against any attackers. They taunted David and his army with this sneer. But they had not reckoned with the resourcefulness and the courage of David and his large army. "Nevertheless, David took the stronghold of Zion"—thus reads the record, a mere line. We know none of the details, whether the city was taken by storm, by stealth or by siege. The important thing is that the city was taken. And David established himself in a forti-capital of the united nation. He fled part of the city and made it the called that part of the city in which he lived "the City of David." Later the whole city was referred to by this name.

Jerusalem—what a magic name to the Hebrews. It became the political and the religious capital of the nation. It figured prominently in the life and history of the nation for many centuries. And even today it is the embodiment of the religious idealism of the Jewish people.

The King Grows in Stature.

"And David waxed greater and greater; for Jehovah, the God of hosts was with him." As was shown in a previous lesson, David had great native ability. And he had consecration. Thus the man grew in moral and spiritual stature. He grew in influence, in ability, in power and in grace. It was evident that God was with him. It was also evident that he was with God. He and God were a great team working together. The times and the place help to make the man. The reward of work well done is the ability to do more and better work.

The King is Not Only Great, He Is Good.

Power did not seem to spoil David. He "executed justice and righteousness unto all the people." He was as good and kind as he was strong and powerful. He was concerned not only with justice but also with righteousness. He was a statesman and not simply a politician. And the people came to love him, to trust him, to follow him.

The Kingdom Grows.

David not only united the nation within, he extended its borders. There were a lot of accounts to settle with neighboring nations that had treated Israel disdainfully and cruelly. One by one, David led expeditions against these nations, defeating them, and restoring the larger borders of Israel. Both his foreign and his domestic policy were characterized by sound wisdom and appropriate action.

Orderly Government Takes Form

David was a great organizer. He delegated authority to others, and thus not only freed himself from many details, but also developed leadership in others. He appointed Joab commander in chief of all the armies. He appointed a "Secretary of State." He appointed priests to look after the spiritual interests of the people. He made Seraiah a scribe, and thus saw to it that records were kept of official actions. As a result of his ability as an organizer, Israel became a close-knit unit, held together by a fine spirit of unity.

Wanted—Modern Davids!

As one studies the life of this great and good king, it becomes evident that there was in him a great earnestness and desire to do God's will. He accepted public office as a public trust and he sought to serve God by serving the people. He showed wisdom, magnanimity, a sense of justice and a passion for righteousness. He was a statesman of the highest order. Our modern world needs more Davids in high positions in the life of the nations.

NEW SUPPORT for CHURCHES.

another advance which is a natural for these times. We have been slow in learning that it costs more today to support a church than it did even twenty years ago. Yet multitudes of people are still giving about the same as they used to give. The government has recognized the changing situation and has increased the amount they are willing to exempt from taxation—lifting the amount from 15 per cent to 20 per cent deductible before taxes.

This step on the part of Government emphasizes an important point. The nation expects and wants every citizen to take part in the general welfare of the nation and promote it. It is a glorious privilege, but it is also a sacred right. The very moment the principle of voluntarism passes from American life, the whole nation will suffer a severe blow. Think of the hospitals, the community chests, the Red Cross and a thousand other agencies, which derive their total support from the free gifts of the American people! It is that which makes this nation great. The people are conscious of the public welfare and happy to contribute to its support. The greater use that is made of this principle of voluntarism, the less need there will be for government subsidies and other forms of state support with the undesirable control which goes with it. Through the principle of voluntarism we purchase and preserve our freedom. The vital institutions of American life do not belong to government. They belong to the people, and the church is perhaps the most important of them all. They look to government because of the failure of the American citizen to adequately maintain the religious and charitable institutions of mercy and service!

Here then is the explanation of the philosophy and the motivation which lies behind this United Church Canvass movement. Two questions remain. First—how does it work in a local community, and secondly—what are the results. Does it actually accomplish what is expected?

Take the way it works! In a United Church Canvass each church prepares its own budget, enlists its own workers and administers its own resources. There should be a central supervisory committee composed of representatives of the participating churches. The strength of the committee depends on the solid backing of laymen.

What are the results! Often the results are in direct proportion to the energy and skill which the local committees put into the effort. The community-wide publicity and appeal will not produce much unless there is local and community cooperation. To be effective, the general promotion must be geared into local situations until each church feels the lift and the dynamic of united action.

Perhaps the best way to tell of the results is to give a few reports direct from the communities themselves. Take New Britain, Connecticut, as a starter. In this community seventeen churches cooperated, and secured in 1951 an increase of 11 per cent over the previous year. This gave these seventeen churches a total of $27,941 in new money. One church—St. John's Evangelical Lutheran—reported a total in pledges of $22,184, or 127 per cent of its goal. A small church—the Kensington Congregational—with a budget of $6,275, raised 108 per cent—the largest amount ever secured in the history of that church. These significant gains were made possible through the united approach and the information and inspiration such a program develops. There were 76 radio announcements; 15 newspaper advertisements, plus 20 news articles; cards in local buses, and a special display in the bank window. Through the use of these methods and working through these new channels the entire community felt the impact and the influence of the Christian faith. Not only were added funds secured, but the whole idea of the Christian Church was made central in the thinking of the people and in the life of the community. This is the finest evangelism of which we know.

The United Church Canvass invests the budget with new meaning. It is more than a goal to be attained, it is a tool to be used. It is far more than collecting dollars; it is a powerful force which strengthens the Christian faith everywhere.

Another result of this United Canvass is to show every one where he or she may take hold and have a part in promoting the Kingdom of God.

Everyone welcomes the opportunity to do something, but many are confused and fail to know where to pitch in, yet they have a very important place in the total success. Bonaro Overstreet puts it this way:

You say the little efforts that I make
Will do no good;
They never will prevail
To tip the hovering scale
When justice hangs in balance.

I don't think
I ever thought they would.
But I am prejudiced beyond debate
In favor of my right to choose which side Shall feel the stubborn ounces of my weight.

"Having Gifts . . . Use Them"

God, the Creator, with lavish hand has endowed every man, woman and child with gifts. And as the chapter, Romans 12:6, from which the title is taken points out, these gifts differ one from another.

The very possession of gifts carries the responsibility to use them according to the will of the donor. Gratitude should express itself in stewardship . . . "if prophecy, in proportion to our faith; if service, in our serving; he who teaches, in his teaching; he who exhorts, in his exhortation; he who contributes, in liberality; he who gives aid, with zeal; he who does acts of mercy, with cheerfulness." Paul goes on to speak of other gifts: affection, honor, hope, patience, prayer and hospitality.

What lessons can modern Christians draw from this wonderful chapter? The primary truth is that we all have gifts of one kind or another. Second, we are to put these gifts to use. No matter how talented a musician or an artist may be of what possible significance is his talent if he does not use it? Similarly, though a Christian have many of the virtues the apostle mentions, they amount to little unless he practices them.

Paul is contending for a religion that works. Faithful stewardship implies not only being entrusted with gifts, but employing them. Let us suppose that the gift of teaching is yours. Are you using it for God as a faithful steward? Or are you "too busy" to take a class.

One man—Dr. Frank Laubach—has helped 60,000,000 people learn to read by his "each one, teach one" method. He is a luminous illustration of what it is to be a Christian steward. Having a gift he used it!

The World Needs Such Gifts.

Paul deals with so many gifts in this chapter that selection of a few for special consideration is difficult. How greatly today's world stands in need of affection! How many lonely persons are in need of your stewardship of it. How the world would feel the impact if all Christians would take seriously their stewardship of prayer. How many foreign students—indeed, American students—need the gift of hospitality. How many displaced persons would feel new courage and hope if Christian homes were open to them.

"Having gifts . . . use them." List the gifts with which God has enriched you—gifts of spirit, mind and heart; gifts of home and talents. Then weigh the use that you are making of each. Will you hear the words some day, "Well done, good and faithful servant enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."—Helen Kingsbury Wallace.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

Dorothy Thompson writes, "We can't teach morals without religion." On my way to church, I walked past a handsome blond lad of three summers. "Are you going to Sunday school?" I asked.

His eyes smiled as he answered, "Oh, yes!"

"And what do you learn in Sunday school?"

"About God!"

Yes, we must teach our boys and girls about God, about the good life with the fine dividends it pays in a clear conscience, and the right to look life in the face and say, "I'm living up to the best of my understanding."

And, mind you, Mother, Dad, we can do it by being and doing those worthwhile things ourselves. There is no other way.

The Orphanage
 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

We sell our extra milk to the Mellville Dairy in Burlington. This week they paid us for our July deliveries in silver dollars. It was really a sack of money—six hundred and one silver dollars! and four dimes and three pennies—$601.43. We are real proud to think that during the very dry month of July we were able to supply the orphanage family daily with good fresh milk and have that much left over. Garner Hilliard, a boy raised here, is the manager of the dairy, and he does a good job. The boys who help him like him very much.

This summer, we have had two girls to become graduate nurses, and another whom we claim. They are Louise Currin, Dorothy West and Betty Gene Wagoner. Betty Gene is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Wagoner, and she was born and reared in the Wagoner home here on our campus. Mrs. Wagoner was the former Eugenia Hilliard, who was reared here. So you can see why we are all proud of Betty as well as of Louise and Dorothy. Have you time to read this little line of verse I wrote for them?

There they go in single file,
 So young and bright and steady,
 Uniform and cap in style
 With heart and hand quite ready;
 Trained in knowledge and in skill,
 And given proper rating,
 Ready now to tend the ill,
 Where'er the call is waiting.

Through the weeks and months and years
 They've faithful been in training,
 Overcoming doubts and fears,
 And to their posts remaining
 All day long and late at night,
 And oft with empty purses—
 But now they march in starchy white,
 God bless these noble nurses!

This Sunday, a Sunday school class of 18 members will have dinner right in our dining room with the children and matrons. It is a good idea, if it works all right. Little difficult to add that many to an already crowded dining room. And, too, it gives a bit of concern to the one who has charge of plaming and preparing the dinner.

Monday night following the Jay Cees of Burlington will have their regular supper meeting in our dining room, after the children have had theirs. This fine organization of young fellows has done good things for us this spring and summer, and they are going to pay for their supper besides.

This Sunday afternoon the church at Chapel Hill will pay our community a visit—the college, the orphanage and Moonelon. And the fifth Sunday in August is our Home Coming day, when we hope former children of this home and their families will pay us a visit.

What a good report we have this week from twelve Sunday schools! Thank you everyone. There are 76 children here now, and five applications have been received this week. The children here are individuals, with their little wants, their own needs, and their desire for individual understanding and friendship. They are folks, singly and separately, and have their own personalities. Please think of them not only as a group, but as individuals, for such they are.

Weekday Religious Education Teachers to Meet

Seventy-five Virginia week-day Bible teachers will assemble at Bridgewater College on August 27 for a seven-day training session immediately prior to the opening of their schools.

The Department of Christian Education of the Virginia Council of Churches is sponsoring the conference. For the past eighteen years, this organization has often held its annual institute on the Bridgewater College campus. Local religious education councils will sponsor the attendance of the teachers.

The week-long program will include religious addresses a workshop, discussion sessions, and a consecration service for all the teachers, and an orientation period during the first two days for the beginning teachers.

Miss Ethel Smither, of Richmond; Dr. Julian Price Love, of Louisville, Ky.; and the Rev. and McCabe of Harrisonburg, will be the principal speakers.

Miss Smither, an author and consultant in the field of Christian education, will conduct a three-day workshop on "Creative Bible Teaching."

She is well-known as the author of The Use of the Bible With Children and The Picture Book of Palestine. The first is a textbook for teacher of children; the second, a popular volume which children themselves enjoy reading.

Dr. Love, professor of Biblical theology at Louisville Presbyterian Seminary, will make one of the major addresses of the conference; and the Rev. Mr. McCabe rector of Emmanuel Episcopal Church, Harrisonburg, will give the sermon at the closing consecration service.

Discussion sessions among the teachers will comprise a large part of the conference. Methods of teaching and unit planning will be among the topics considered.

Presiding at a number of the discussion sessions will be Miss Florence Hawes, of Mt. Sidney, president of the Virginia Weekday Religious Education Teachers' Association.

The Virginia teachers will come from some 18 states. They are members of approximately a dozen denominations, and hold degrees from nearly fifty colleges and seminaries. All are college graduates, with majors in the field of religion; and many have done graduate study also.

Fifty-five are returning teachers; twenty will be giving Bible instruction to Virginia children for the first time this fall.

Also attending the conference will be several weekday Bible teachers who teach in nearby states where no similar yearly training sessions are provided.

In addition to Miss Hawes, teachers just completing the first half of a two-year term as officers of the Virginia Weekday Religious Education Teachers' Association include Miss Mildred Mundy, of Harrisonburg, vice-president; Miss Nova Beane, of Rockymount, secretary; and Miss Laura Norwood, of Covington, treasurer.

The now-vacant post of editor of the association's twice-yearly "Newsletter" will be filled at the meeting.

Weekday religious education in Virginia was begun in 1929 in two counties: Arlington and Rockingham.

This year's teachers will give Bible instruction in 38 of Virginia's 99 counties. They will teach more than 50,000 children each week this session.

In places in Virginia where the Bible instruction is offered, an average of 97 per cent of the parents enroll their children in the classes.

Bible teaching in Virginia's schools is sponsored interdenominationally by local church people through local councils of religious education.

Are Church Members Making Christian Wills?

"Our Christian Stewardship is based on the conviction that our material possessions are 'a trust from God, to be used in His service for the benefit of all mankind, in grateful acknowledgment of Christ's redeeming love.' To stewards, then, the making of a will is a Christian matter, the business of the Lord, our God. They will use these possessions for Him, share them with Him and His work through their tithes and offerings, and also will think ahead to the future and provide for a careful continuing of this work through provisions in their wills. Legacies can help largely to carry our Church through times of need."

Some one has well said, "A loving steward is the motive for making our wills Christian."

Members of our church are encouraged to leave money in their wills to carry on some work which they have found to be especially worthy of their financial support, to which they have contributed some of their money. Your money is you, and it is able to continue to let you work—if you give thought now to your last word and testament.

The Commission can supply you with excellent leaflets for distribution to your congregation. Order conservatively so there may be no waste. Attorney John W. Cooper's article, "Making a Christian Will" has been in large demand in many denominations.—The E. & R. Standard.

rollment of 81 with an average attendance of 54. Teachers and other leaders were as follows: Mrs. Jimmy Ferguson, Mrs. Jimmy Faulkner, Mrs. Stanley Arwood, Mrs. Howard McKinney, Mrs. Melvin Smith, Mrs. Maynard Miles, Mrs. Manley Hurdle, Mrs. C. M. Mann, Miss Graee Lynch, Miss Mary Ann Hodge, Miss Billie Wagner, Rev. W. W. Snyder and Bill Tolley. The school had its climax program at 11:00 A. M., July 23.

The playground is open five hours daily plus Tuesday and Thursday evenings. The daily hours are devoted particularly to the children of the community and the evening hours are devoted to family recreation.

The Beverly Hills Church playground is a tremendous asset to the Beverly Hills community. The important factor throughout the playground program has not been that its benefactors be members of the church or the church school, but that they be inhabitants of the Beverly Hills community. The community members showed their appreciation of such a program vocally as well as materially when they donated the entire sum for the building of the slide previously mentioned. The Beverly Hills community members also express their appreciation by attending and visiting our church and church school. From time to time the comment is heard to the effect that the community appreciates the fact that we of the Beverly Hills Church are interested in building the Beverly Hills Congregational Christian Church.

BILL TOLLEY.

An old potter, who was shaping the clay into the desired shape by his hands, was asked by a visitor: "Why don't you have machinery to do that?" The old man replied: "We have tried all kinds of machinery and failed; somehow it needs the human touch." God has work that can not be done by machinery.—H. F. Sayles.

EVANGELISM in the NEW DAY

CONVENTION STEWARDSHIP REPORT

Jesse H. Dollar, Chairman

The need for courageous action on the part of individual Christians, and the Church at large, has never been more apparent than now. As the greatest danger to our national life and progress is not from without, but from internal weaknesses, so, the greatest danger to the Church of Christ is that those of us who have its welfare in our grasp may fail to see the urgency of the times and adopt the attitude that we are doing as well as usual. We know, however, that the "usual" or "average" progress of the church is not a good criterion. The "average" is far below what the Christian conscience should accept as being even a reasonable portion of our duty and privilege.

During the closing biennium there has been a noticeable increase in the practice of the Stewardship Life. Many individuals have shown concern and have given of their time and substance that the Convention program might keep its stride forward. These individuals are members of local churches, and their influence at home has strengthened the home base. If we can continue to bring forth the fruits of Stewardship Living, we shall have less need to worry about Stewardship Giving, but few things bring forth a stronger desire for Christian Living than the job resulting from Christian Giving.

More churches, each year, are making better plans for their financial obligations and opportunities. They are, one by one, getting down to the serious business of planning budgets and holding institutes for the training of their canvassers, and are conducting successful every-member canvasses. But the process needs to be speeded up. While we are showing yearly increases in our gifts to all purposes, the average church is giving not more than half what it could, and would give if proper methods of Stewardship education were made available to it. Not to develop this potential in the thirty-five thousand members of the churches of our Convention is to willfully continue our plea of poverty and fail to give the support to our program of advancement and extension they so richly deserve.

1. As the best and wisest means to this desired end, we recommend the Convention, at its 1952 session, take seriously the proposal of the Finance Committee that a Secretary of Stewardship and Evangelism be elected and put on the field to give full time to the development of our spiritual lives and financial resources. Such a move would speed up the present gains in finances, and would be a means of restoring the spirit of Evangelism to our churches. That this evangelistic note needs to be restored is evidenced by the static situation which has concerned us for years, when the population of the area served by the churches of the Convention has grown by thousands, and our membership has increased only by dozens—often showing a decrease.

2. The Stewardship Clinics for ministers sponsored last fall by the Convention and your Commission on Stewardship proved a great help to the local churches and pastors. We recommend that these efforts be continued, and that pastors be urged to procure expert leadership to conduct Stewardship Institutes in every local church in the Convention, and to take full advantage of the abundance of good literature for a year-round program of Stewardship education in all types of churches.

3. Knowing that a great reservoir of untapped strength lies dormant in the laymen of the churches of the Convention, we recommend that the Laymen's Fellowship of the Southern Convention be asked to sponsor training institutes for the laymen in the five conferences of the Convention, challenging them with the need for their services and showing them a systematic way by which their talents and money can be used for the strengthening of their local church programs, and for the wider needs of the Fellowship.

4. Since Stewardship Living and Giving, like acceptance of Christ as one's personal Saviour, must begin with the individual, we recommend that each member of every church examine his own attitudes and actions in the light of his abilities and opportunities to be of greater service to his local church, and through it to the larger interests of the Convention and the world-wide fellowship of the churches as they seek to meet the needs of mankind for Christ.

News Flashes

Over the Labor Day week--end be sure to drive safely. "The life you save may be your own."

Mr. Earl Danieley spoke at the Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines, Sunday.

The Virgilina pastorate gave their pastor, Rev. Mark W. Andes, a vacation during August.

Mrs. Nellie Joyner is promoting SUN subscriptions in Union Church, Hunterdale, Franklin, Virginia.

Mr. L. Roy Kyle, Sunday school superintendent, has secured a number of new subscriptions to THE SUN at Hope Mills.

We regret to learn that Dr. C. E. Newman is a patient in the South Boston Hospital. We hope for him an early recovery.

Dr. Duane Vore is the guest speaker at Liberty Spring Church in the Eastern Virginia Conference this week. He is assisting Dr. Jesse H. Dollar in revival services.

We are sorry that the excellent article, "Our Lord's Stewardship," which appeared in last week's issue was credited incorrectly to Rev. T. K. Thomas, when it should have been credited to Rev. Thomas K. Thompson.

Belated congratulations to Rev. Duane Vore, chairman of the Board of Publications, and Mrs. Vore upon the arrival on July 26, at Suffolk, Virginia, of Rebecca Jane Vore. We wish for parents and daughter much happiness.

The young adult class of Union Congregational Christian Church, at Virgilina, Virginia, arranged a morning service at the church on Sunday, August 10, at 11 o'clock. The committee in charge: S. Reams Long, Mrs. William Tuck and the teacher, Mrs. G. W. Pollard.

Rev. Silas E. Madren of Elkton, Virginia, is a patient in the University Hospital, Charlottesville, Virginia. He entered the hospital on August 13 for treatment and an operation. Mr. Madren is one of our most faithful pastors, being the minister of Mt. Olivet (G), Mt. Olivet (R) and Bethel churches. We wish for him a speedy recovery.

Funeral services for Mrs. T. G. Hyatt, mother of Mrs. R. L. House, were conducted on Sunday afternoon in Newport News, by Rev. A. Lanson Granger. We are sure that our readers will join the staff of THE SUN in extending our deepest sympathy to Mrs. House and also to our editor in their bereavement.

The Hunterdale Church, Franklin, Virginia, went to the Y. M. C. A. Camp at Bayview for their annual picnic on August 20. This is an excellent place for children to enjoy the water. The Sunday school group went in cars and took a picnic lunch, spending the whole day. Mr. Norman Lankford, Sunday school superintendent, was in charge of the outing.

Rev. and Mrs. J. L. Neese have returned to Bradenton, Florida, where they will spend the winter at the Bradenton Trailer Park. Mr. Neese was our director at Moonelon during the past summer, where he did excellent work in helping to make facilities of our Convention Assembly grounds available for use by our various church groups. Mr. Neese was for many years a faithful pastor in the Southern Convention, but due to ill health, retired from active service. They are a great inspiration to all of us.

Kiwanians Push Sunday School Attendance

"Remember, no one will ever get peeved at you if you ask them to go to Sunday school with you."

This is one of the random thoughts thrown out by the Kiwanis Church Appreciation Committee of the Rocky Mount, North Carolina, Club in its "plan for action" to stimulate Sunday school attendance over a period closed recently. The campaign, inaugurated by the committee and carried out by every Sunday school in the city, extended over a period of six months and resulted in amazing stimulation in attendance. Chairman Jasper L. Cummings was actively on the necks of every Sunday school superintendent in the community during the six months' period.

The plan for action started with a meeting of the superintendents of the Sunday schools and was actively supported by the local Ministerial Association. Each Sunday school was asked to cooperate. They furnished the committee with names of Sunday school teachers and other personnel.

Promotion ideas and other information which would help attendance were mailed or delivered in person to the heads of the different groups. These promotion ideas took the form of information bulletins, slogans, radio announcements, and newspaper advertising. Members of the local Kiwanis Club welcomed the chance

Moonelon in Great Demand During Summer of 1952

Approximately 3,000 individuals used the facilities of our Convention Assembly Grounds (Moonelon), located about a half mile from Elon College during the summer just past. Among those using the facilities were the North Carolina and Virginia ministers and their wives, college students, Scout troops from our Burlington as well as other churches, youth groups from Burlington, Union Ridge, Beverly Hills, Elon, Apple's Chapel; the Women of the School of Missions; women's groups from Apple's Chapel, Union Ridge and other churches; Sunday school picnics from Haw River, Shallow Ford, Gibsonville, Palm Street, Bethlehem and others; Junior Deacons from Bethlehem and the Junior Board of our Durham Church.

In September the Youth Fellowship Retreats will be held for several different groups. Many other smaller groups used the facilities not mentioned above, and we are greatly gratified at the generous use these facilities had during the summer.

Rev. J. L. Neese served as director during the summer, and we are very grateful to him for the good services he rendered there. The swimming pool was a great attraction, but we really need a filterer in order to make the maximum use of the swimming pool. The grounds were beautified and the road was improved. The wide use of Moonelon this summer bears witness to the need and usefulness of this Convention Assembly Grounds. Plans are now being made for erecting one or more buildings before next summer, and it is hoped that several cottages or cabins may also be constructed. There can be a wide use of these facilities and they can be a great blessing to our entire fellowship.

The Laymen's Fellowship of the Southern Convention has undertaken a campaign to raise $25,000 for the erection of these improvements on our lovely Convention Assembly Grounds property. Several churches have already responded with gifts, and we are hoping that many others will do so this fall. As soon as funds are available, construction will be begun on one or more buildings. At the present time we have a picnic shelter, a lodge with several rooms and a caretaker's house. Your response to the need of Moonelon will be greatly appreciated. A generous contribution from our churches for this project will result in a place of which we all of our church may be proud. Send your contribution to Moonelon to the Southern Convention Office, Elon College, North Carolina.

New Church Organized in North Carolina

Sunday, August 24, was an inspiring day. It was our privilege to be present for the Sunday school and church services of a new congregation in the Lakeview section, half way between Burlington and Union Ridge.

Rev. John G. Truitt, Jr., ministerial student at Elon College, made a survey of this community some weeks ago, and since Sunday, July 20, has been having services in the Glencoe School. Attendance at both the Sunday school and the church service has been so gratifying and the people have been so eager for a church, that a charter membership list was opened at the morning service on August 24. The Sunday school had 70 in attendance, and the church service had 80 in attendance, which represents a substantial increase for each Sunday since the beginning of services of this new congregation. There were

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

SEVEN HUNDRED . . .

It is the eleventh hour, but there is just time to get your new student for Elon, to help push the student body to the 700 goal. Too late to correspond, you must use your telephone, call long distance, or get in your car and dash over to have a heart-to-heart talk with that young high school graduate who should enter Elon College next week. Hurry! Hurry! Hurry!

HOMECOMING OR HOME GOING . . .

Big doings and carryings on are in the making for the Christian Orphanage this week end. Whether they chase or barbecue the greased pig, there will be plenty of excitement, plenty of food, fellowship and oratory. Don't miss it. All roads lead to the orphanage. Congratulations and Godspeed to Superintendent Truitt and the entire Christian Orphanage family.

TURN ON THE LIGHT . . .

We make electricity the servant of religion inside the church; why not on the outside also? More of our churches are getting the luminous idea. "Let there be light"; yes, on the outside as well as on the inside of the church.

Congratulations to the "Teen Agers" of Union Church, Franklin, who sponsored the floodlighting of the church and grounds. Visit this church at Hunterdale on some of your nocturnal tours. Drive down to Second Church, Norfolk, at night and see how light not only makes the church visible, but also enhances its appearance.

And what is that striking lighted tower in Park Place? The Christian Temple, to be sure. "Let your light so shine."

CHURCH, FARM AND HOME . . .

Farm and Home Week was observed at North Carolina State College last week. Courses in Agronomy, Sewing, Marketing, Herbs, Handicraft, Recreation, Music and Machinery were offered. More than 500 people shared in this creative week's program.

Tuesday and Wednesday were Rural Church Days. Wheeler McMillan, Editor of Pathfinder, came down from Philadelphia to speak on "The Rural Church and Community Life." He emphasized the importance of laying the proper physical foundation for the spiritual. He urged the rural churches to produce their own leadership, to "provide an environment of tolerance for their mistakes and of applause for their victories."

The Beech Grove Methodist Church choir demonstrated the fact that a rural church with 100 members (89 active) can have good music. Lonnie Powell led the group in the kind of exhilarating recreation all rural churches should be enjoying.

Minister, layman, housewife, plan now to attend Farm and Home Week next year.

BACK FROM GERMANY . . .

We carried an article in our August 7 issue about the missionary meeting in progress in Welling, Germany. Now we are pleased to have a first-hand report of that meeting by Raymond Dudley, India Secretary of the American Board.

In addition to his own report and evaluation, Mr. Dudley enclosed a report of the group on "Reshaping the Pattern of Missionary Activity." Even if we had the space to publish this important report, it probably would not be advisable, for we are told that people do not read long articles. Too Bad! The editor has therefore read the report twice and will call attention to a few of the more important emphases. Briefly, they urge flexibility in the use of resources, the interchange of missionaries among younger churches, greater use of unmarried short-term missionaries, step-up allowance for literacy work (which includes distribution of Scriptures); re-examination of present institutions, the utilization of retired missionaries in the training of nationals; develop wider sense of vocation, and utilize the newer means of communication.

Whither Missions?

By RAMOND A. DUDLEY

Since it was my privilege to attend, along with about 200 others, the meetings arranged by the International Missionary Council at Willingen, Germany, from July 5 to 24th, this is my effort to share with you some of the experiences and insights of the gathering.

1. Willingen is a town of 2,000, located in a valley 1,800 feet above sea level in the American Zone of West Germany about 125 miles north of Frankfurt. It is a pleasure resort both summer and winter, with fine facilities for skiing. There is provision for entertaining guests both in small hotels and private homes. Forty-five percent of the present population is made up of refugees from East Germany.

To welcome this conference the local people partially rebuilt their hall and decorated it with flowers from their homes. They repaired their church and installed a new organ. The little hotels and various other buildings were neatly marked with a plate bearing the key letter and a cross. A post office was opened in the hall and a special edition of stamps was issued. The local band played for us, and several German students were present throughout to help in business affairs and to act as interpreters. Most of all the people welcomed us with friendly greetings and kindly acts which cause one to pause and think. Can these be the people with whom we fought two deadly wars?

This was the first ecumenical gathering of the sort to be held in Germany, and it was a gesture of good will. They permitted the conference to be conducted on their own soil in the English language throughout, with provision for interpretation where necessary. The German churches raised $5,000 toward the general expenses of the conference, requesting that it be used toward the cost of bringing delegates who could not meet their own costs.

2. Missionary Festival. On the first Sunday we were taken in buses to a village missionary festival where 3,000 people assembled in a grove. The local band led the music and a public address system enabled several nationals to bring their message. Rev. Henry Jeyaraj Daniel spoke on behalf of India and he did it well. Some of the people were in their traditional costumes which changes with the church year and the marital status. The costumes go deep in the culture of these Christian people, and they represent a high degree of artistic skill. One regrets that they are passing. We were shown a Bible that Luther himself gave to the congregation in this village.

Later we went to Marburg, which is the seat of the oldest Protestant University in the world. Assembled in the ancient castle hall where the knights formerly gathered, we witnessed the ceremony when Dr. Kenneth Latourette received an honorary degree—a total surprise to him. I went into the room where Luther and Zwingli had their historic debate. Just at dark we attended service in the great cathedral which is 700 years old.

3. The Day in Which We Live.—The stark fact is that a relatively small number of people (mostly in the West) control half the world's food supplies; while vast numbers of people (mostly in the East) are underfed. And this situation is getting worse, not better.

The absence of the Chinese delegation reminded us that a third of the world is under communism which is vividly aware of such inequalities and professes to have a program to meet them.

What is the Christian program? Are Christian people and Christian nations prepared to accept the sacrifices the situation demands, and to think through and carry out a program consonant with the Christian principle of Love which Christ incarnated?

4. Theological Issues. The Continentals, and they take theology seriously, are theologians. They are partly responsible for the "liberalism" which has prevailed in America, for its roots go back to German thought. Now their characteristic emphasis is eschatology—a doctrine of the last and final things, involving a theory of history. This emphasis grows in part out of two terrible wars and intense suffering, which we in America can scarcely comprehend. Further, they are close to the communists who have a neat theory of history (and a practical program) which has as its doctrine of last things, the classless society and the fading away of the state. To a slightly less degree the British Christians are thinking in the same terms as the Continentals. Those who organized the conference provided for a series of addresses in the evenings on "The Commission," "The Holy Spirit," "The Christian Hope," etc. Also theological matters entered largely into the discussion groups.

The Americans, and I believe the nationals, would prefer to think more in terms of the needs of the world as ascertained through a study of world conditions in the light of Christ's message. Yet under the circumstances the Americans did not wish to press their outlook too far.

These two characteristic emphases are not irreconcilable, and each corrects the other. But in practice it is difficult to conduct such a conference so that both groups will feel that satisfactory progress has been made, and significant and compelling conclusions reached.

We Americans may be very certain that in the next five years eschatology will bulk large in ecumenical gatherings and it will probably gain an increasing influence in American thought. One able man told me that the progress in eschatological thought will depend largely upon whether world conditions induce hope or despair.

5. Every Church a Mission, Every Christian a Missionary. Growing in part out of the theological studies, there is a strong insistence that every Christian is bound to share his riches in Christ with others—where he is and throughout the world. There is also an insistence that the church of the mission field is the agency to evangelize. The church in each land must not merely maintain itself, but it has an inescapable mission to represent Christ to those roundabout. Christians of one land can help those of other lands in this task, but it must be so done as not to undercut the obligation of each Christian and each Church to witness. The church must be a powerhouse to win Christians, not merely a storehouse to preserve Christians. If this principle is taken seriously it is revolutionary, and it would basically modify Christian work in India.

Practical questions emerge. How should we use resources of men and money now devoted largely to maintaining the church, to make possible a strong outreach through the church to non-Christians? How can we develop voluntary service? How can we help professional men and men in Government service to render their

Rosemont Church, Norfolk, Virginia Celebrates Golden Anniversary

By LOWRINE HALSTEAD, Church Secretary

Sunday, August 10, 1952, was a memorable day for the congregation of Rosemont Christian Church. At that time we celebrated our Golden Anniversary—fifty years of continual growth and service.

Rosemont was organized August 14, 1902, by the Reverend J. Pressley Barrett, who at that time was pastor of the Memorial Christian Temple. John L. Gibson and his wife, charter members of the church, gave the land for the erection of the first building, which was a small frame structure.

Prior to organization of the church, arrangements were made to hold prayer meetings in Portlock School, which was then a one-room frame building. Later, a store building was rented for Sunday afternoons. This was used until our first church building was erected. The second church was built in 1915, during the time Rev. D. A. Keys was pastor. We are now in our third building, which was constructed in 1931 during the pastorate of Rev. J. Frank Morgan.

The ministers who have served us throughout the fifty years, in order of their pastorates, are the Revs. John W. Harrell, J. William Barrett, William Daniel Harward, Christopher C. Ryan, McDaniel Howsare, D. A. Keys, Warren H. Denison, G. O. Lankford, Walter C. Hook, Benjamin Franklin Black, Joseph F. Morgan, Howard Scott Hardeastle, Herbert G. Council, Jr., I. W. Johnson (supply pastor), and Melvin Dollar, our present minister.

Rev. J. F. Morgan served us eighteen years, eleven months, a longer period of time than any other minister. It was during his ministry that our present parsonage was built and the pipe organ and air conditioning were installed in the church.

On the occasion of our fiftieth anniversary, the sanctuary was beautifully decorated with a number of arrangements of lovely yellow flowers. To further carry out the idea of the golden anniversary, all the ushers, speakers and people who have been members of the church fifty years wore yellow rosebud boutonnières. There were 318 people present for the morning worship service.

The two guest speakers of the morning were Dr. Warren H. Denison of Grinnell, Iowa, and Dr. William T.

Scott of Elon College, North Carolina. Dr. Denison was our seventh minister, serving from November, 1916, to March, 1917. Although now a man of 82 years, he is still very active and busy about the Lord's work. He spoke on "The Contributions of the Past." He paid tribute to the growth of God's church as an agency for good in the world. His plea was for a continued love and loyalty to the church and better stewardship on the part of its members.

Dr. Scott, Superintendent of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, was the other guest speaker of the morning. A special building fund offering was taken during the service, and Dr. Scott had charge of the dedication of our money and the redication or ourselves for greater service to our Master and church. The members were asked to give the equivalent of fifty pennies, nickels, dimes, quarters or dollars, as a golden anniversary gift to the church. The special cash offering amounted to $3,033.53. Included in this total was the children's offering presented in their church banks, which amounted to $145.74.

Mr. Dollar, our pastor, spoke on "The Challenge to the Future." He threw out the challenge that we dare not do less than our forefathers, but more for God and his kingdom, since we now have greater opportunities for service because of modern inventions and conveniences.

Another feature of our morning service was the presentation of a brief history of the church by Mr. Charles Cherry. At this time he recognized the living charter members and those who have been on the church roll for fifty years. Out of the original fifteen charter members, there are only three living now. Mr. and Mrs. O. S. Mills, who have given long years of devotion and service to the church, and Mr. Thomas O. Morrison, who now lives in New York. The four other members who were honored for 50 years of service were Mrs. Fannie Morrison Herbert, Mrs. Mamie Gibson Sawyer, Mrs. Mary Rowland and Mr. H. R. Morrison, Sr.

We were happy to receive seven new members in the church during the morning worship service. Those who became members on our Golden Anniversary were Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Edwards, Mr. F. T. Etheridge, Miss Mary Perry, Mr. E. L. Harrell, Mrs. Ray Fentress and Mrs. W. R. Skelly.

The senior choir rendered two very lovely numbers during the morning service: "Let Mount Zion Rejoice" and "The Lord's Prayer," which was sung as the benediction. Mrs. Royal Gallup, director of the choir, sang "My Prayer for Rosemont." The words to this song were composed by Mrs. Mary Booth and the music by Mrs. Eliabeth Goforth, the organist of the church.

There was an afternoon service with 181 present. Mrs. Goforth rendered some lovely organ selections at the beginning of this meeting. Other special musical numbers were rendered by Mr. Edward Drinkard and the Youth Choir. At this meeting the fifty-year members were given an opportunity to speak from their hearts as to what Rosemont had meant to them.

The four guest speakers for the afternoon were Dr. Denison, Dr. Scott, Mrs. J. F. Morgan, widow of the late Rev. Mr. Morgan, and Dr. I. W. Johnson. All four of these speakers brought inspiring messages which we shall long remember.

Dr. Johnson concluded the afternoon meeting with a memorial service for the twelve charter members who have passed on. A special tribute was paid to Mrs. Gertrude Bondurant, who died less than a month before the Golden Anniversary. Dr. Johnson commented that the lives of these people could best be summed up in three words: love, loyalty and liberality.

Immediately following the afternoon service, there was a social hour in the social hall. It, too, was beautifully decorated in keeping with the Golden Anniversary idea. There was a large birthday cake for Rosemont which was cut by Mr. Mary Rowland, a fifty-year member.

During this hour, piano music was rendered by Miss Mary Ellen Hollowell. Special vocal selections were rendered by Mr. and Mrs. Ray Morrison and by the church quartet composed of Messrs. J. N. Hollowell, Jennings Richardson, Ray Morrison and Bill Neill.

Rev. Melvin Dollar has been our pastor since March of this year. During the five months he has been with us, our church has been experiencing a rebirth. We have taken on a new sense of loyalty, cooperation and serv-

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Elon College Summer Commencement

For the third time in the history of Elon College, a summer school commencement was held on Friday evening, August 23, at 8 o'clock. Thirty-one students were awarded the Bachelor of Arts Degree. There were no certificates or diplomas of any kind awarded. Fred Sahlmann, a graduate of Elon College, was at the organ; and Miss Judith Ingram of Greensboro sang. Dr. William T. Scott, Superintendent of the Southern Convention, offered the prayer. Rev. Walstein W. Snyder, President of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, presented the Bible to members of the Senior Class, awarding the Bible to the President of the graduating class in person, and instructing other members to go to the President's Office to receive their copy of the Bible.

Dr. L. E. Spikes, Superintendent of City Schools of Burlington, North Carolina, delivered the literary address. He spoke of the part that man has played in progress of human history, and at the conclusion of his address, he gave personal observations and personal experiences. It was a very interesting dissertation on man's progress as recorded in history. A more detailed report of this address will appear in next week's CHRISTIAN SUN. At the conclusion of the exercises, President Smith, as is customary, gave his parting words to the graduates and pronounced the benediction. The exercises were well attended and a very fine program was executed.

The following were candidates for the Degree of Bachelor of Arts:

Arthur Downing Upshaw Addison, III; Ireni Thoumaras Autry, Helen Hayes Bland, Joseph Neese Bowman, Branch Bragg, Jr. Joseph Eugene Bryson, Edna Lois Burke, Charles Lindbergh Burrus, Virginia Louise Davis, Charles Dewey Bickerson, Betty Jo Dillard, Max Voorhees Drake, Carroll Ellington, Clegg Miller Foster, Ralph Lee Foushee, Cecil Erskin Garber, Jr.; Ellen Baker Garner, Edward Carney Hackney, Evelyn Miller Kemp, Sarah Price Kemp, Richard Henry Lee, Jr.; Beulah Morton Miller, David Allen Mondy, Parks Harry Norman, Jr.; Ralph Waldo Norwood,

President Smith's Message to the Summer Session Class of 1952

As I bring you these last words before you leave this building, this chapel, this college, I would like to speak to you as one of you, for I have been here during your entire stay on our campus. In a real sense I am one of you. I have been with you in your failures and successes, defeats and triumphs. I know something of what you face now—a country that is torn politically, industrially, religiously, embarrassed financially, and in constant dread of ruthless destruction by atomic warfare. We all share this unfortunate heritage.

We, of ourselves and within ourselves, are unable to cope with these situations. Your years in college have wrought wonders for you; have increased your information, quickened your intellect, given you poise and multiplied your confidence; but, even so, you are not sufficient within yourselves. If you are to be victorious in these difficult struggles, help must come from outside yourselves. Your help, my help, our help is in God. May we together be given wisdom, ability, courage and power sufficient to cope with the complex and dangerous situations in which we find ourselves. May the God of Grace give us victory and bring peace to all mankind.

Prospective Enrollment—1952-53

Brother pastor and church official, have you really done your part?

Have you sent in the name and address of your prospective student?

Opening date is nearing. There is not much time left. School opens on September 2. Some faithful and determined efforts will work wonders in these last few days. Elon College is depending upon you to do your best.

The prospective enrollment is improving somewhat. To date, 261 new students have completed their registrations and have been accepted. We have an additional 47 who have made application for admission, but have not completed their registration. 159 upperclassmen have reserved their rooms. 156 former dormitory students have not reserved rooms, but it is hoped that the majority of them will return. This makes a total of 623 students who have made application to Elon College for admission or who have enrolled the previous year. Present indications are that we shall enroll somewhere near 600 regular college students. That leaves us still 100 short.

Apportionment Giving

The churches of the Southern Convention have done a very good part by the college this summer, even though the college is assigned fifth Sundays only on which the churches are asked to contribute to the college. There has not been a week during the summer that we did not receive something from one or more churches.

The contributions have not been large, but they have been helpful. From the standpoint of the number of churches contributing, we came near missing this week, but our good friends of Rosemont sent us $200 and the good friends of Moore Union sent us $12. Think of what the offering would have been if the other 198 churches in the Convention had each sent an offering. However, the college is most grateful for these offerings and continues to look forward to the week when every church and Sunday school in the Convention will send something. When that happens, it will be a red letter day sure enough, and happen it may! Let us hope and perhaps it shall be a reality.

VIII.--The Sloans and the King Leave Egypt!

The king and we left Egypt the same hour today. We had an advantage: he was forced to flee and we were not. However, we did travel with royalty; the only other passengers on the little plane that brought us to the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan were a Jordan prince and his friend.

Three governments the first three days we were in Egypt and a fourth before we got away kept the Democratic convention completely off the front pages. Now that we are in Jerusalem we can write about Egypt. In Egypt the army has taken complete control of the government and all mail is subject to censor.

We have now visited fifteen African nations in the past two months. This afternoon we bid farewell to Africa. We left Cairo, the capital of Egypt, with its streets of tanks and military trucks, soldiers and guns. We flew over the western branch of the Red Sea at the place the Suez Canal enters the Sea and possibly within sight of where Moses led the Israelites out of Egypt.

To avoid flying over the Jewish state of Israel we crossed the Sinai Desert to the northeast tip of the Red Sea where Solomon had his harbors and refineries. By the way, from the plane the Red Sea looked a brilliant blue. We then turned north through the Arabah to the Dead Sea and flew to the north end of it and back west to Jerusalem. From the Red Sea to the Dead Sea took Moses forty years. We did it in an hour.

We are living within a block of non-man's-land between Jordan and Israel. I wish I could now condense all we have learned about Africa. The political upheaval we have been living in the past week in Egypt is typical of all Africa—people are sure they do not want what they have, but they are not sure what they do want. The finger of Russia can be noted at times, but all Russia can do just now is to speed up the revolution, make it come sooner but with dangerously indefinite aims.

I have developed a greater sympathy for Great Britain than I ever had before. The cockiness of the British away from home has in the past "got my goat," but they have done much to modernize or westernize many parts of the world.

But Britain's control is declining rapidly. Mrs. Sloan and I saw this in India, Ceylon, Burma and Malaya fourteen years. This time we find it in Africa. Not only have the Dutch all authority in South Africa, but Northern and Southern Rhodesia and Uganda are demanding that they become a commonwealth somewhat like Canada. The Gold Coast has secured a large degree of independence and Nigeria with more complicated problems is demanding the same. In Eritria we found the British army and government officials planning to pull out completely September first, while in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan the English are leaving although no one knows whether the Sudan will be independent or be absorbed by Egypt. I have come to feel that Egyptian control would be the worse of two definite evils.

Now comes the Egyptian situation. Britain has done great things for Egypt as she has done for many other parts of Africa. In theory Egypt is completely independent of Britain save for some control of the Suez Canal, but in the last hundred years practically all of Egypt's success has been due to Great Britain. Egyptian leaders know this, but they are largely corrupt and use Britain as a whipping boy.

Some Egyptians, including the now ex-king, are extremely wealthy, whereas the average Egyptian gets but a few cents a day. This cannot last. However, the tendency of the wealthy is to stir up hatred of the British, with the hope that they themselves can enjoy their luxuries a few years more.

Numerous British and some other foreigners were killed in the riots of last January. Shepherd's and Victoria Hotels and various foreign business places were burned down. Many building skeletons and rubble piles are still seen in the heart of Cairo.

The present rebellion, led by the army, is against the corrupt Egyptian leaders, but many foreign people living in Egypt are again in terror lest the wrath be turned against them.

The United States used to be respected and loved by the Egyptians and other peoples of the Middle East, but our supporting of the division of Palestine which makes seven to eight hundred thousand Arabs homeless refugees, and our support of oppressive acts of the French have made America despised by most of the people of the Arab world. We could have taken Britain's place of leadership, but we have lost it. The void resulting is an open invitation to Russia. While worrying about Russia in the Far East or Europe we are inviting Russia into the Middle East. We have failed to be Christian in the very part of the world in which Christianity was born. This is one of history's tragedies. Vigorous Christian missions and Christian relief work can help atone for some of our sins.

Word From Dr. Laubach

A four-point program of financial aid, technical skills, land reform and vocational training was urged for the critical countries of Asia and the near east by the noted Congregational missionary educator, Dr. Frank Laubach, just returned from India, Pakistan, Malaya and the Philippines.

Addressing a group of top newspaper and magazine writers and executives in New York, Dr. Laubach, whose mass-literacy training has helped millions of the world's people to read their own languages, asked the group to help educate the American people to the need for aiding "Asia's hungry millions."

"For the first time in history," he said, "we as a nation are truly Christian in our world outlook. If and when we get by this period without dropping bombs, we shall see that the one new constructive fact of our time was our conscience for every race and color and language on the face of the earth."

He urged the need for Western financial aid and technical skills to prove that we believe "the day of white exploitation is gone."

"We have got to live down the white man's past," he said, "and we can only prove it with deeds."

He urged land reform to lighten the "wretched lot" of Asian tenant farmers and vocational training he said, because, liberal arts training now available in the east leaves students unprepared for earning a living and therefore he was particularly concerned with the needs of India,

With Emphasis on Missions

A Micronesian Dinner

The women of our First Church, Greensboro, had their first supper meeting in their new church on August 18, in the form of a Micronesian "birthday party." Mrs. Orva Brown and Mrs. F. C. Lester from Asheboro were among the privileged guests.

The tables looked lovely, with Micronesian place mats from our denomination, dried flower arrangements in large shells, and smaller sea shells scattered along the tables. At each place was a candy replica of the sailing ship, "Morning Star."

The menu consisted of things one might have eaten in the islands—chicken a la king, whole tomatoes, banana salad with grated cocanut, peas, and a lemon-lime drink.

Mrs. Bill Duncan was in charge of the program, which was presented between courses. It included the singing of two hymns in the Kusaian dialect. Mrs. J. D. Cordle told of "The Land of Micronesia," Mrs. Billy Weisner of "Our Missionaries to Micronesia," Mrs. Wallace Truitt of "The Good Ships, The Morning Stars," and Mrs. Vernon Somers of "Leaders Among the Micronesians."

Because this year is the 100th anniversary of our missionary work in the Micronesian Islands, a beautiful three-tiered cake with "100" on top was a part of the dessert course.

Mrs. Duncan read a letter which she had written to "King John of Kusaie," telling of the women's interest in the Christians on the islands and of the meeting in Greensboro. This was passed around for each one to sign. The program closed with a prayer by the pastor's wife, Mrs. W. E. Wisseman.

Following a brief business session, Mrs. Martin Garren presented a number of Life Memberships. Then she paid tribute to the fine work of the president, Mrs. H. G. Ballinger, as she had led in the transition from the old church to the new with all that had entailed. Each member of the Auxiliary had written a note of appreciation to Mrs. Ballinger and these were presented as a surprise gift by Mrs. Garren.

A beautiful church, an excellent program, a delicious meal, fine fellowship—what more could one ask?

International Supper

Dorothy Jackson, our minister's wife in Chapel Hill, is full of novel ideas. On Thursday night, July 24, one of them blossomed into a big success.

There are several foreign students at the University of North Carolina here and she thought it would be nice if we, as members of the church, got to know them better. We planned a supper with Ram Singh, Rabiab Vachananda, John Chu, and our own Timothy Chang as guests of honor and, as it turned out, chief cooks. I might mention also that John and Peg Riebel helped Dorothy, both in planning and carrying through the idea. John is assistant secretary of the YMCA on the campus; he and Peg are wonderful young people.

But getting back to the supper. One couple in our church took one of the foreign students into their homes and he or she (Rabiab is a girl!) cooked a foreign dish. The list of needed items had been given to the hostess earlier. Then everybody took themselves and the food to Mrs. Jimmy Ellis' lovely back yard and had a wonderful time sampling everything. The Jacksons prepared the rice, enough for everybody, and the Riebels' responsibility was enough to drink for everybody.

All the menus sound good, but I like the one prepared by Rabiab. Here is that recipe:

Fried Vegetables, Sweet and Sour.

- 6 Green Peppers
- 1 Medium Onion
- 4 Tomatoes
- 1 Breast of Chicken
- 1 Clove of Garlic
- 3 tablespoons Soya Bean Sauce
- 1 tablespoon Sugar
- 1 tablespoon Vinegar
- 2 tablespoons Flour
- Shortening

PROCEDURE—Cut chicken and green vegetables into small pieces. Chop garlic and brown in a pan with shortening. Add chicken and stir-fry 'til well cooked. Add all vegetables except tomatoes; stir thoroughly. When almost done add sugar and vinegar. Dissolve 1 tablespoon of flour in small amount of water; put in pan, stir; then add tomatoes. Turn it over for a few minutes; take from fire and serve hot with rice.

In addition to the above, there was "Do-Piazi-Curry," "Mixed Brocade" (genuine chop-suey), and "Purple Herb Soup" (seaweed, if you please!). All the recipes have been written down and we will be happy to trade them (using good old housewife terminology).

Ram Singh is from India, where he was born. He is now a graduate student here in Sociology. He also attended Allahabad University and Yale Divinity School. He holds four degrees, B.A., M.A., B.D., and S.J.M.

Rabiab Vachananda is from Thailand and knows an awful lot about the history of her country. She has been here for a little more than a year and in June, 1952, was awarded a Certificate in Public Health.

John Chu is Chinese and he and Timothy prepared the Chop-Suey.

Do You Have A Constitution?

Does your society have a constitution—a set of rules by which you "run the works"? If so, please send a copy to the editor of this page.

Every now and then we are asked about a constitution for a new society, or for an old society that does not have one. We think it would be a good idea to print some sample constitutions that are actually in use by societies in our area, or at least to give the main ideas from them.

So, if your society has a constitution, will you please see that a copy is sent to Mrs. F. C. Lester, 840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, North Carolina. Thank you!

Watch Dogs

There are in every community and every church watchdogs, who feel called upon to keep their eyes on others and growl. They are always the first to hear of anything wrong. Vultures are always the first to smell carrion. They are self-appointed detectives. I lay this down as a rule without exception, that those people who have the most faults themselves are the most merciless in their watching of others. From scalp of head to soles of feet, they are full of jealousies, of hypercriticism. They spend their life hunting for muskrats and mud turtles, instead of hunting for rocky mountains and eagles. They look at their neighbor's imperfection through a microscope, and look at their own through a telescope upside-down.—T. DeWitt Talmadge.

Know Your Ancestors

Dear Boys and Girls:

One of the favorite pranks of older boys is to have a youngster open his mouth, then peer down his throat and exclaim, "Ah, you have ancestors!" This, of course, would greatly frighten the boy or girl.

All people have ancestors, people from whom they have descended. But some do not know who their ancestors are. In some instances it may be a frightening experience to learn whom one's ancestors are. Usually it is a satisfying experience. Ancestors, you see, are not a disease.

Do you know who your ancestors were? How far back can you trace them? Ask your mother and father to help you. Here is a good way to study biography and history—your own. You will have fun. Why not try drawing a family tree?

Dr. N. G. Newman, for instance, can trace his ancestry back to the great William Pitt of England. That is worth knowing! A member of my church in Southern Pines, Mrs. R. L. Sugg, can trace her ancestors back to the Mayflower. Richard Warren was one of the 41 men on the Mayflower. When this historic ship landed at Plymouth Rock in November, 1620, the passengers entered into a written covenant called The Mayflower Compact. It begins with the well-known expression, "In the name of God, Amen!" This covenant had a great influence on the government of the United States and of the Congregational Church.

Although your ancestors may not have come to this country on the Mayflower, they are worth knowing about. Look them up!

Unconscious Teachers

By M. LOUISE C. HASTINGS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association

"Oh dear, there comes Mrs. Sampson! I'm not going to see her. Mary, go to the door and tell Mrs. Sampson that I have gone to town." Mary does as she is told, and in so doing she has learned that Mother thinks it is all right to tell the lady what is not true.

"Johnny, take this box of crackers back to the store and get another box. Don't tell the storekeeper that you played ball with it," says another mother. "Just say the crackers were all broken and that I don't want them." And Johnny has learned to play a dishonest trick—to take unfair advantage of the grocer.

A third mother is talking over the telephone. "I'm so sorry I can't come. I feel badly, and I'm all tired out. I'm going to spend the afternoon in bed." She puts down the telephone, turns to the children and says, "Now scamper. Put on your coats. We're going to Grandma's just as soon as I can bring the car out." And her children have learned that to get out of an undesirable situation, it is quite proper to lie.

Not one of these mothers thinks that she is giving her children lessons in telling untruths. If we should tell either one of them that she had provided firsthand examples of untruthfulness, she would argue that she never did such a thing in her life.

Children learn from observation, from listening to conversations and in many other ways. To do as Mother does is the highest ambition of the child. It is so strange that some mothers do not realize what closely-followed examples they are. We mothers really make or mar the characters of our children every day, every hour—do we not?

Many times a day explanations are necessary in order to have clear understandings. "We always trade at Jordan's," said Mary Ann. "We don't have to pay money for anything there." Mary Ann has never been told of a charge account.

Lucy watches her mother go into the self-service store and take goods off the shelves, put them into her push-basket and move on. So Lucy walks around, sees a rosy apple and takes one, finds the candy counter and helps herself. When they reach home, Mother empties her bag of groceries on the table and Lucy empties her pockets. If Mother is understanding, she will explain and they will go back with Lucy's chosen gatherings and pay for them or else return them. What Lucy has done is not stealing, and parents must be careful not to label such behavior stealing.

It is not a phase that need alarm us. A child does what she sees her mother do, and if she sees her mother take things off the shelves in a store, explanation must be given. They are necessary; otherwise, unpleasant experiences may follow. The child of today has many problems to meet that are different from those that perplexed the children of forty years ago. The "help yourself" stores provide some of them.

We influence our children continually. How careful we should be with our conversations! Children love to listen, and we never know when they may be "listening-in" to our offhand remarks, out bits of criticism, or gossip, or decided opinions that we so frequently express in no uncertain terms.

Nancy and Jean live with Grandmother while Mother works. Grandmother is very opinionated, and it is enlightening to observe those children—both under nine years of age—taking in what Grandmother says. They watch her, fascinated, and at times they are scared when she gives vent to her ideas and indignations.

Everybody we meet influences us to some extent. And we ourselves are are passing along influences. Let us ever be on guard to offset and combat any wrong influence in our own homes!

ROSEMONT CHURCH GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY.

ice for our church and its work. The average attendance at both morning and evening worship services has more than doubled. Under his leadership, primary and junior choirs have been organized, and each has a part in the morning worship service. The youth choir has been reorganized and now furnishes music every other Sunday night.

Besides the seven new members taken into the church on our Golden Anniversary, thirty other members have joined since our new pastor has been with us. We are delighted with this increase in our membership.

On the morning of June 22, we had the ground-breaking ceremony for the extension of our religious education plant and the remodeling of the church sanctuary, at which time the greatest building program the church has ever undertaken was launched.

We have every reason to believe that the next fifty years will be just as pleasant and prosperous for Rosemont as were the past fifty years.

Two Weeks at Camp?

Dear Max:

My friend, Jerry Daeke, and I attended camp at Elon this summer and conferred with many other campers on the matter of two weeks of camp in '53. We all agreed that two weeks would be preferable to one.

Two weeks would raise the cost of camp considerably, but it would be worth it by allowing the campers to take one set of classes the first week and then take another set the next week.

We would like for you to print this letter so that the parents and young people who read your page will realize the need and opportunities that would be given in a two-week camp.

My friend and I enjoyed camp this past summer, but both agreed that two weeks would have been better, so that we could have taken all of the classes offered.

Thank you so much for reading our letter.

Sincerely,

JIMMY HATCH.

Hunterdale Young People

The Young People of the Hunterdale Church recently sponsored a lawn party to raise funds for their many activities. Pies, cakes, candy, ice cream, watermelons and other things were sold.

A part of the party was the awarding of prizes to the winner of the Baby Contest sponsored by the Young People. Master Warren Simmons was first, and little Miss Dale Scott was second. Warren was awarded a loving cup at the morning service on August 17 as winner of first place. $108 was taken during the party.

The Teen Agers have placed flood lights on the grounds and bought some records for the Tower Chimes recently.

Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Blythe are the adult leaders of the youth work in the Hunterdale Church.

Union Grove Class Visits Orphanage

A group of 24 persons from the young adults Sunday school class of Union Grove Church, along with the supply pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. Winfred Bray, paid a visit to the Elon Orphanage last Sunday. On arrival we were greeted by the superintendent, Dr. John G. Truitt, and directed to the dining room for lunch. Here we enjoyed the fine food and fellowship with the children and matrons. After lunch we were divided into groups and directed around the grounds and through the dormitories. Everything was found in top order, which made us more thankful for the fine leadership of Dr. Truitt and the other fine workers at the orphanage.

The idea of the trip came from the class and its teacher, Mrs. Coy Coble. The orphanage is kept in good condition, but it still needs our best support. It is so easy for us out here to forget these fine boys and girls. We believe that a group from your church will be benefitted by paying a visit to the orphanage just as our class was benefitted. Everyone was made to feel at home, and we were given the opportunity of getting better acquainted with the fine girls and boys there. We feel that we understand their needs better now than before. Let me again suggest that your church group contact Dr. Truitt for this same type of visit.

WINFRED BRAY,

Pastor.

New Minister Recovering from Operation

Avery Brown, a member of the Biblical class of the Western North Carolina Conference, underwent a major operation in the Randolph Hospital on August 19. I am sure that he would appreciate a visit or a card from anyone who wishes to remember him. Cards should be addressed to him at Route 1, Seagrove, N. C.. Also, please do not forget him in your prayers.

Brother Brown is a member of the Antioch (R) Congregational Christian Church of the Western N. C. Conference. He was admitted to the Biblical class of the conference last fall and is following a course of study for the ministry. He is to be commended for his fine work. Since that time he has delivered 46 sermons and is doing a great work in our churches.

I pray that God will send us more students for this field of work. We have a great need in our churches today for more ministers.

Pastor, Antioch.

Relax With Max

It's just about time for school to start again. Wonder if we couldn't do just a little better than we did last year?

* * *

One Sunday morning I watched a man who was standing beside a car directing his wife in parking it. She finally succeeded, after giving adjacent ears a thorough banging, and thereupon the man got into the car and drove away. But a little later they were back, and the whole thing began over again. This time the man noticed my interest.

"Teaching my wife to park," he explained. "We come down by the church Sundays because the owners of these cars are sure to be inside for an hour."

A member of the Cornell University faculty, noted for his tact, was awakened recently at 4 a.m. by his telephone. "Your dog is barking and keeping me awake," said an irate woman's voice.

The professor thanked her and hung his phone up. The following morning at four, the woman's phone rang. "Madam," said the professor, "I have no dog."

Hope all you young people in the Western North Carolina Conference will be at Hank's Chapel Church, Pittsboro, August 31, for the regular Fifth Sunday Rally. A fine program is planned for you.

NEW CHURCH ORGANIZED IN NORTH CAROLINA.

17 signers of the charter membership list, and others are expected to become charter members the coming Sunday.

A beautiful lot for building has been donated by Mr. C. R. Faucette, a member of our First Church, Burlington. The lot is located on a corner overlooking a growing community. The residents of the community, for the most part, are young married couples with small children. Mr. Truitt is to be commended for the good work he has done, and we expect great things from our new Lakeview Community Church.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

Love

David's son, Absalom, sought to usurp the throne. He led a revolt against David and tried to kill him. David fled for his life. Of course the revolt had to be put down, and in the process Absalom was killed. Incidentally that which was his chief pride became his downfall—as he rode along his beautiful hair of which he was so proud and vain caught in the bough of a tree under which he rode and as he hung suspended there David's men caught him and killed him. In spite of the fact that his son was a renegade and a revolutionist, and in spite of the fact that he tried to kill his father, David loved him, longed for him, mourned for him. In an impassioned outburst he said that he would gladly have died in his son's place. It is a poor father who does not weep even over a criminal son. Here was a great king who was first of all a loving father. Perhaps he did not always love wisely, but he loved greatly.

Magnanimity

Shimei, the man who boldly and blatantly cursed David the king and who threw stones at him, realized the injustice of his charges, and the gravity of his action. He comes to David in penitence and asks his forgiveness. He admits his guilt, makes no excuses for himself, and seeks pardon, not even asking for clemency. David's men suggest retaliation—they are so angry that they want to execute the man. But David was of generous and magnanimous spirit, and freely forgives the man. He nowhere shows his greatness to better advantage than as a king, to say nothing of as a man, freely forgiving one who had done him wrong, and done it unjustly. Alas, that this spirit of magnanimity, this willingness to forgive, this refusal to hold grievances and grudges is so often lacking in people, in otherwise good people, in even professing Christians! And yet if we do not forgive others their trespasses against us God cannot forgive us our trespasses. We must forgive, or not be forgiven.

Integrity

One other incident is included in this lesson. There was a plague in the land, devastating in its effect upon the people. David was instructed by the prophet Gad, his seer, to purchase the threshing floor of one Arunah, and to build an altar, and to offer sacrifice unto the Lord. Arunah generously and graciously offers to give the bit of real estate to David, but David would have none of it. As he said, he refused to offer unto the Lord

A Humble and Great-Hearted Leader

LESSON X—SEPTEMBER 7, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me."—Psalm 51:10.

LESSON: II Samuel 12:1-7, 13-15; 16:5-10; 18:32-33; 19:18-20; 24:24.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 51:1-17.

Candid Camera Shots

Photographers, amateur and professional, snap what they call "Candid Camera Shots". They take pictures of people in informal poses and in unguarded moments. No posing is done. The photographer catches the subject in a pose he likes or wants and clicks the shutter and you have the picture showing things just as they are—candid camera shots.

Today's lesson is a series of such "candid camera shots" of King David. He did not pose for them, he did not know they were being taken, he never dreamed they would be preserved in a book that would be seen and read thousands of years later. They are all the more valuable because this is the case. They give us an insight into the life and heart of this great king. They reveal a man of royal character and spiritual stature. Let us take a look at the man as revealed by them. They are all the more remarkable in the light of the times in which the man lived.

Penitence

The background of the first picture is not too attractive. Indeed it is repulsive. While walking about on the raised terrace of his royal home one day David saw a beautiful woman in the act of bathing. Exercising his royal prerogative he sent for the woman and lay with her. She later informed him that she was with child by him. That posed a problem for the guilty king, but he thought he was good at solving problems. He sent for Uriah, the woman's husband, who was in the field of battle and gave him a few days "leave of absence" to be at home with his wife. That would take care of the situation—at least David thought it would. But Uriah refused to enjoy the comforts of home while his men endured the rigors of life in the field of battle. The king was stymied. But not for long. He sent Uriah back into the area of fighting and had him put at the most dangerous spot, where he was struck down and killed. Then David sent for Bathsheba and took her for his wife. That was that, it was as easy as that. That was the end of the matter. Or was it? Unfortunately for David it was not the end of the matter. The record says that "the thing which David had done displeased the Lord." A man's sin finds him out. God is not mocked.

God sent his rugged old prophet, Nathan, to rebuke David for his sins. The man was adroit. Instead of blasting David with a withering barrage, he told a story. It was a mirror in which the king saw himself, and saw himself as a miserable coward and a gross sinner. And in true penitence David said words which it is hard for men to say "I have sinned." We make all kinds of excuses, we blame everything and everybody, but we are loath to admit that we are sinners. But David, a king, humbled himself, confessed his sin showed true penitence for his sin. No bluster, no attempt to cover his sin with double talk, just penitence and confession. It shows us something of the moral and spiritual stature of the man. If we say that we have no sin, we lie and say not the truth, and we also deceive ourselves. But if we confess our sins he is faithful and just or righteous to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

Patience and Self-Control

As David—remember he was king—was riding abroad one day a man named Shimei met him and began to curse him and to throw stones at him. One of David's attendants suggested that David have the man's head cut off right then and there. If David had been like the kings of that day he would have acted on the man's advice. But he was too big for that. He refused to use his unlimited powers so ruthlessly. He does not fly into a rage when he is criticized, he accepts criticism for what it is worth and goes on his way. He is willing to leave vengeance unto the Lord. It is the action of a great-hearted man and a worthy king.

that which cost him nothing. So often, and indeed as a rule, we offer to God that which costs us nothing, or but little. And because it costs little it means little. Furthermore David showed wisdom in refusing to accept the place as a gift, although it would have been all right. Men in public office do well to avoid gifts. Mink coats, 5 per cent transactions, deep freezes, and so forth have been in the news recently, to say nothing of big fees and large gifts of money which have had sinister motives have been all too common.

WHITHER MISSIONS.

witness? Should we have a part-time ministry, or even ordained men in some cases who are volunteers? Is the typical western practice of a paid minister in charge of each church the best practice for other lands?

6. Initiative and Mobility. One delegate posed two questions, which later the Steering Committee sent out for group discussion: (1) How can the church recover its missionary initiative and achieve greater mobility? (2) Are missionary societies and younger churches ready now to face the radical changes in traditional policies and the sacrifice which such a new initiative demands?

7. Unity and Cooperation. In America there are many denominations, some of them with a huge and growing foreign mission program, that are not in cooperation with the Division of Foreign Missions. A delegate from Japan spoke earnestly of the situation that is developing in Japan where many small groups from America are opening independent work.

Rev. David J. du Plessis, until recently Secretary of the World Conference of International Pentecostal Churches, attended the meeting at Willingen by invitation, and presented in a small gathering a document from his organization which may open the way for closer relations. He himself was humble and friendly—deeply desirous of closer fellowship. There are other indications of this desire. Let us be sure that we are animated by this same spirit, openminded, and willing to change where change is really needed.

The Research Committee of the Division of Foreign Missions has been asked to initiate a study of this problem, in which study all the groups concerned will share insofar as they are willing. This touches one of the great problems of our age. It has ramifications the world over. May good come from this cooperative study.

8. Mission Institutions. It came out that some countries like India have many Christian institutions, while others like Indonesia and parts of Africa have very few or no mission institutions on the highest academic level.

These institutions vary greatly in quality and Christian impact. Many have too few Christian staff members, too low a proportion of Christian students, and too little effective relation with the church. Some of them are far too large to have effective teacher-pupil relationships that may be expected to eventuate in Christian influence of a high order. These conditions are more obvious to those who have had opportunity to observe Christian work in many lands than they are to the persons who are immediately responsible for the institutions.

When one comes to deal with a specific case limitations of money and personnel are immediately encountered. An increasing number of people are questioning the large proportionate emphasis which is being placed on institutional work—unless their Christian impact can be strengthened as indicated above.

9. International, Interdenominational, Interracial Teams. A specific suggestion emerged that teams be formed that represent different nations, denominations and races, who could visit various lands and present the gospel, incarnating in their make-up the type of Christian unity for which we strive. Perhaps certain boards will pick up this suggestion and carry it through in cooperation with the younger churches.

We spend much time preparing conferences. We spend much time and money conducting them. We must spend much time and thought pondering their conclusions and trying to carry them out if such gatherings are to serve their rightful purpose. This is my effort to that end. You are invited to meditate on these matters and comment upon them in letters to me as you may be moved to do.

WORD FROM DR. LAUBACH.

"the largest republic in the world and the most critical spot in the world."

Pointing out that three states in South India went Communist in the first election this year, he warned that the west has four years, until the next election, "to convince the masses of India that we are their true friends and that by our help they can rise out of misery by the peaceful way of knowledge and cooperation."

Dr. Laubach next month will return to India, he said, to direct the literacy and literature aspects of the India's Village Development Program. He and his literacy team since 1935 have worked out literacy lessons in India in 22 languages, and prepared more textbooks for use in teaching adult illiterates in India than any other organization. He described for the group the readers for the newly literate which teach basic information on health and agriculture in simple vocabularies.

"We know how to write simply, but we need to know how to write interestingly, and we need a vast amount of simple literature," he told the group.

"The 320,000,000 illiterates of India are more than double the population of the whole United States," he said, "and if we succeed in the Village Development Plan, millions of these people will march into literacy each year."

Urging the newspaper and magazine people to marshal their resources and skills to help provide such literature, he said, "You write above the heads of two-thirds of the human race. You have underestimated the importance of meeting those minds in their own languages."

By sending writers out to the rural masses and by training native writers with facility in their own language, he told the group, "you could mold opinion as swiftly and effectively as the Communists are doing it now."

Dr. Laubach, consultant to the National Council's Committee on World Literacy and Christian Literature, is being loaned by the committee to World Literacy, Inc., a related organization outside the National Council. World Literacy, Inc., will make the services of the literacy team available to India for six months. There Dr. Laubach will work with the Village Development Program in which both the Technical Cooperation Administration and the Ford Foundation are taking an active part. The development program purposes to reach 12,000,000 villagers in the next 12 months with health, agriculture and literacy services.

Announcing the New 4-H History

Democracy has a growing bulwark—a bulwark that stretches across our great country and into Alaska, Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

That bulwark is the 4-H Club Work where boys and girls learn the great privileges and responsibilities of democracy: individual initiative; active citizenship; respect for others' accomplishments; group cooperation; healthy competition; love of farm, home and community; interchange of ideas from club to club across state lines.

The story of the development of such a great bulwark is faithfully presented in the first history of 4-H Club Work, "The 4-H Story," just published by the National Committee on Boys and Girls Club Work, 59 East Van Buren Street, Chicago 5, Illinois.

An exciting panorama is set in motion by the inspirational words in "The 4-H Story," words that came after Author Franklin M. Reek's many months of careful research, interviews with pioneers in the movement, data checking with the U. S. Department of Agriculture and State 4-H Club leaders, and the reading of all available records.

"The 4-H Story," which the author says "is too great a movement to be claimed by any one man," unfolds through the early 1900's when the country was ready, youth was ready, the time was right for a great upsurge of rural power.

Simultaneously, in various parts of the country, corn clubs and canning clubs appeared, as county superintendents of schools sought to make education a more vital factor in the everyday living of the boys and girls. Then the colleges found a way to let their discoveries be known through youth—cager, inspired, energetic youth, who planted the experimental corn, who used the new ideas, who came together in groups for discussions of better methods and for comparing results. In 1911, the four-leaf clover with H's signifying head, heart, hands and health, appeared, and by 1918, the term "4-H Clubs" was being generally used.

With the passage of the Smith-Lever Act in 1914, the Cooperative Extension Service was established, and a national program was on the way. In 1919 a group of public-spirited citizens foresaw a role for industry in building a stronger 4-H, in the strengthening of our youth, in participating in the development of rural areas to which industry owed so much. From these beginnings came the National Committee on Boys and Girls Club Work, National Awards programs, the National 4-H Club Congress,, and other services to 4-H Club Work. In 1927, National 4-H Camp came into being to honor 4-H boys and girls with outstanding abilities in leadership and citizenship. At this first National 4-H Camp, the 4-H pledge and motto were officially adopted.

All this and much more are in "The 4-H Story" with countless episodes of early vision, youth's responsiveness, the strength and devotion of local volunteer 4-H leaders, the capable direction of federal, state and county extension workers. The hope of our country lies in our youth, and today 2,000,000 boys and girls, active members of 4-H Clubs, are living by the 4-H's of head, heart, hands and health to build richness into their lives, into their farms and homes, and into this wonderful country of ours.

"The 4H Story" may be ordered for $3.00 postpaid from the National Committee on Boys and Girls Club Work, 59 East Van Buren Street, Chicago 5, Illinois. It has 208 pages, 23 chapters, 91 illustrations, an easy-to-handle index, dark green hard covers, and is 7 by 9 inches in size.

KIWANIANS PUSII SUNDAY SCHOOL ATTENDANCE.

to pay such costs of printing and advertising work being done by the committee.

Throughout the entire campaign Chairman Cummings kept throwing out such thought provoking ideas as, "You can't lose for winning," "If you don't help yourself, you will help someone else," "Keep Sunday school attendance on your mind during the week," and "Talk Sunday school attendance to everyone you contact in business and otherwise."

Reviewing the activities of the participating groups, the committee learned that throughout the entire six months, every Sunday school followed through on the nine point procedure suggested by the Church Appreciation Committee. These points were.

1. Increase attendance of members of Sunday schools who do attend regularly.

2. Invite those who have been dropped from rolls.

3. Contact members of the church who do not attend Sunday school.

4. Ask your members to bring the members of their families.

5. Everybody has friends who are waiting to be invited to attend Sunday school.

6. Invite your associates in business.

7. Invite members of your clubs and organizations.

8. Contact newcomers to the community.

9. Make a prospect list of all of the people in your church vicinity and call on them.

Some of the months in the campaign showed increases of more than thirty percent in attendance, and the entire six months' campaign disclosed averages of better than twenty percent increase.

The committee was gratified, the Sunday school units were pleased, and the treasurers who received the awards were happy; and the Kiwanis Club felt that they had accomplished material benefits to the community.

This Is Friendship

I love you, not only for what you are but for what I am when I am with you.

I love you, not only for what you have made of yourself, but for what you are making of me.

I love you for the part of me that you bring out

I love you for putting your hand into my heaped-up heart and passing over all the frivolous and weak things that you cannot help seeing there, and drawing out into the light all the beautiful radiant things that no one else has looked quite far enough to find.

I love you for closing your eyes to the discords in me, and adding to the music in me by worshipful listening.

I love you for ignoring the possibilities of the fool in me and for laying firm hold of the possibilities for good in me.

I love you because you are helping me to make of the lumber of my life not a tavern, but a temple, and of the words of my days, not a reproach, but a song.

I love you because you have done more than any creed could have done to make me happy.

You have done it without a touch, without a word, without a sign.

You have done it by being yourself.

After all, perhaps that is what being a friend means.—The Craftsman.

A Small Church Can Do a Large Job!

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL AT OAK GROVE CHURCH

Oak Grove Congregational Christian Church is one of the smaller churches of the Eastern Virginia Conference, located just a little across the Carolina state line, near Sunbury, North Carolina. The church is now operating under the efficient leadership of Rev. Earl T. Farrell, and according to all reports, is getting ready to go places.

We cannot do better than quote from a letter from the pastor:

"The picture concerns the Vacation Bible School at Oak Grove. It shows me standing before the group, behind me is my son, Tommy; the little girl in front and to my right is my daughter, Sharon.

"Our Vacation Bible School was held July 14 to 18, 1952, the first one ever held in the history of the church. We had almost perfect attendance with 25 receiving certificates. We thought that was good out of a Sunday school with total enrollment of about fifty and an average attendance of 38. The Vacation Bible School bought and presented to the Sunday school an attendance register board as their project.

"Now about the church. The church has recently been painted inside and out. A new roof has been put on the church, covering up the ugly wood shingles. The cemetery has been enlarged and leveled off with the use of a bulldozer, the church yard improved, with two drives to the front and sides of the church with rock on them."

We congratulate the members of this church and their pastor for the work they are doing. We feel sure that there are many other churches in the Convention that are also doing good work, which they should report to their church paper.

Local Boy Comes Home

REV. WILLIAM A. GRISSOM

Liberty Church, Vance County, North Carolina, will welcome a native son in the role of minister and pastor on Sunday. Rev. W. A. Grissom returns to his home church as its first full-time pastor.

Mr. Grissom is a graduate of Elon College and Yale Divinity School. He served the New Preston Congregational Church in Connecticut while studying at Yale. He served as a Chaplain in the U. S. Navy for three years. After spending two years in business, he assumed the pastorate at Franklin, Virginia, in February, 1949. Under his leadership a new educational building was added, a new heating system and air conditioning for the Sanctuary were installed.

William Grissom has two brothers—Raymond and M. L. Jr.—both of whom are ministers. Mabel Carroll Grissom, his wife, is a native of Warrenton. Now Mr. and Mrs. Grissom are back home in North Carolina.

The Grissoms have two children, Nancy, 8, and Peggy, 5.

News Flashes

The Laymen's Fellowship Council met at Elon College on Saturday, August 23.

Rev. Arnold Slater, former pastor, will preach at Holy Neck Christian Church, near Holland, Virginia, this Sunday. We welcome Arnold back to the Eastern Virginia Conference area, if only for a visit.

Professor J. W. Barney of the English Department, and President L. E. Smith, both of whom underwent major operations during the summer, are recovering and will be able to assume their full responsibilities at the opening of Elon College.

Rev. and Mrs. Henry V. Harmon announce the birth of a daughter, Jane Little Harmon, on August 16. Congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Harmon. Mr. Harmon is the new pastor at Timber Ridge and the Conference Worker in the Valley Conference.

On Tuesday morning of this week, our Editor, Rev. Robert Lee House, suffered an attack of illness and was taken to the Moore County Hospital in Southern Pines, North Carolina. At last hearing on Wednesday afternoon, he was slightly better, but his condition was still quite serious.

Rev. H. H. Crutchfield announces that Homecoming Day will be observed at Berea (Great Bridge), on Sunday, September 21, 1952. Services will be held both morning and afternoon, with a luncheon being served by the ladies of the church. All former pastors and members and friends are cordially invited to attend.

Our readers will regret to learn of the death of Mr. Daniel J. Bowden, Sr., at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Paul E. Spivey, 2805 Third Avenue, Richmond, Virginia, today, at the age of 90 years. Mr. Bowden is survived by his wife, by his son, Dr. D. J. Bowden, Dean of Elon College, and by three other daughters. There will be a service held tomorrow (Friday) morning at 11 o'clock at Bliley's Funeral Parlors in Richmond, and commitment will be at 3 o'clock in the afternoon at the Antioch Christian Church Cemetery. Our deepest sympathy to the bereaved.

Laymen's Fellowship Organized in Asheboro Church

On Saturday evening, August 9, a Laymen's Fellowship was organized in Asheboro Congregational Christian Church. Officers elected were: Dalton Harper, president; John Griffin, vice-president; Hubert Beane, secretary, and Clifford Bowers, treasurer.

Sybrant Pell, conference chairman of Laymen's Work, was a guest at the meeting and made an address concerning this type of work. The devotional was given by the pastor of the church, Dr. F. C. Lester.

Following the business session, refreshments of homemade ice cream and cake were furnished by Orva Brown and Roy Moore.

Union Grove Christian Church Will Hold Revival

The annual revival will begin at Union Grove Christian Church, east of Asheboro, North Carolina, just off highway 902, on Sunday, September 14. The morning worship service will be followed with a picnic luncheon on the church grounds. The services will continue at 1:45 on Sunday afternoon and each evening, Monday through Friday, at 7:30. There will be special music each evening.

Rev. M. A. Pollard of Pleasant Hill Christian Church will be the evangelist. Rev. Winfred Bray, pastor of

Report of the Laymen's Fellowship Meeting at Elon College

On August 23, a meeting of the Laymen's Council was called to order at Elon College by W. B. Williams, chairman. Those answering the roll call besides the chairman, were: E. C. Mann, Eastern Virginia; S. H. Pell, Western North Carolina; S. L. Mauldin, North Carolina and Virginia; Hubert Beane, Western North Carolina; George D. Coleclough, representative on the Convention Board, and J. Earl Danieley, vice-chairman. The treasurer reported $12.50 on hand.

Rev. Henry E. Robinson presented to the council the need of finances for the Moonelon project. It was urged that the churches respond to the request sent out by the Moonelon committee. A steering committee was elected for our campaign for Moonelon. This committee is composed of W. B. Williams, J. Earl Danieley, and Rev. Mr. Robinson. This committee was authorized to get out a brochure to advertise the campaign.

The council continued its endorsement of the insurance plan for pastors, and suggest that Eastern Virginia adopt the plan on a conference-wide basis rather than by individual churches.

The president was requested to get out a packet to each church and pas-

Near East Missionaries Retire

After 40 years of service as a Christian educator in Turkey, under the American Board, Miss Grace Towner of Adana, Tarsus and Scutari, was made an emeritus-missionary beginning July 20, 1952. Miss Towner's service in the field of education was divided into three periods. For the first period of 21 years, she was principal of the Girls School at Adana; the second period of 12 years was at American College, Tarsus, and the third and last period was spent in the American Academy at Scutari, where she was on the staff of the girl's school.

Grace Towner was born in Kansas and educated at Washburn College. She was a teacher and superintendent in schools in the U. S. A. for five years before she went out to the Near East.

Mrs. Alma S. Woodruff became an emeritus-missionary of the American Board on July 24, 1952, after 41 years of service in Bulgaria and other parts of the Near East. With the exception of the last ten years, Mrs. Woodruff was in Bulgaria, where for 20 years she gave able leadership in the field of elementary education. In the second term of her service she was widowed and left with two small sons. When in 1942, the United States broke off diplomatic relations with Bulgaria, Mrs. Woodruff was obliged to leave and went to Turkey, where she worked for nine years at the American Academy for Girls in Scutari.

Alma S. Woodruff was born in Detroit, Michigan, and before she went to Bulgaria as a missionary, taught school in the U. S. A. for ten years.

Radio Free Asia Reports Progress

Radio Free Asia—a privately sponsored voice of the free peoples of the Far East and the United States—reports that its messages of freedom and hope are getting through to Communist dominated China and the Asian nations on its borders.

A series of reports from listeners in Asia was recently made public by the Committee for Free Asia, which operates RFA. Some of these reports consist of letters smuggled out of China through the Iron Curtain pulled down over that country by the Soviets. These letters indicate that the effect of the committee's activity is being felt in many of the key population centers of Asia.

Quoting from letters written by Asian listeners as widely separated as India and Japan, the committee's president, Alan Valentine, declares: "We are greatly heartened by responses indicating that our broadcasts are not only being heard, but are proving of value in the fight for freedom."

Valentine pointed out that the Committee for Free Asia is not directing its total effort to Red China. Both its radio and editorial services are reaching audiences throughout the crucial area of South East Asia, where the threat of Communism is facing many newly-independent nations.

A letter from Malaya, where Soviet inspired insurgents continue to snipe at Malaysians and Europeans alike, says: "I have relied on the impartial and accurate presentation of news and world commentaries broadcast by your radio. . . I considered it a lucky evening when I was able to locate your transmission, because since then I have learned quite a lot about democracy and the real happenings in Asia. . ."

Another Malayan, a mechanic, reported that he listened to the Cantonese program every night.

A listener in Morioka City, Japan, wrote: "We hope that all the Asian people will get the true free and the peace not only there but also all peoples of the world by means of your broadcasting service."

A man living in Sumatra sent his request for "a table of your general broadcasting schedules so that I can tune in and listen to Radio Free Asia."

Letters blasting the committee and its Radio Free Asia are sometimes re-

Our Principles

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Wayside Stewardship

A letter from Dr. Stanley U. North states that the Western Pastors' School allocated $180.00 of its offering for Franklinton Center. How thoughtful! How unanimous!

The Western Pastors' School is held each summer at La Foret, Colorado. That is a long way from North Carolina, but stewardship has a way of bridging great distances. The money allocated will make an appreciable difference in the program of renovation at Franklinton, but far more important is the new interest created and arrested. Such is the nature of our energizing and beneficent fellowship.

Our modest friend, Dr. North, did not state who originated the idea of the Franklinton allocation, but one can easily read between the lines. This is not the first time he has tapped distant resources for the benefit of Franklinton.

Christian concern and imagination will find many wayside stewardship opportunities. The Kingdom of God is built in just such ways. Opportunities abound; but they must be recognized, seized, developed. We have gone on singing, "Brighten the corner where you are." Good enough, now why not "Salvage the corner where you are"?

From Town to Country

The old and widely prevalent idea was that the country church was a stepping stone in a ministerial career to a town or city church. One simply endured the rigors and deprivations of the rural situation as a necessary part of one's training, as a brief though painful prelude to the luscious city situation beckoning beyond.

We are witnessing the reversal of that ancient concept. Lo, "the last shall become first and the first shall become last." Some of our ministers seem to be graduating from the city church as they accept the challenges of the rural parish. No anticlimax, this, but the chance of a lifetime for a creative ministry.

Here is a new and promising pattern of churchmanship, one that should become increasingly prevalent and fruitful throughout the Convention.

Rev. W. A. Grissom brings to his new charge the insight of a native and the perspective of wide training and experience. His constructive ministry at Franklin suggests the kind of vigorous leadership which may be expected at Liberty.

For many years Liberty has been one of our leading rural churches. It has hesitated again and again on the verge of a full-time ministry. At long last the venture has been made, and the church has entered the era of its maturity.

Communion by Radio

Rev. J. Frank Apple has evolved a plan of getting the Lord's Supper to his shut-in members in Henderson, North Carolina. This is accomplished on a Communion Sunday when the service is broadcast by the local station. A deacon is assigned to the home of a shut-in. They listen to the service as it is broadcast and follow the Communion service, the deacon administering the elements which have been provided. Thus people in the homes and hospitals enjoy the comfort and strength of the Holy Sacrament.

We have a responsibility to make every church a church of the Word and of the Sacraments. Every minister is a minister of the Word and of the Sacraments. Both are important. In Word and Sacrament alike the Lord is active and present in his congregation.

Sometime ago Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of the New York Methodist Church administered the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper to fifty thousand communicants in one thousand five hundred Methodist churches in Iowa and Nebraska by radio. The Bishop read the Communion ritual from an Omaha station with two Iowa stations picking up the signals and re-broadcasting them to church receiving sets. These churches, with a membership of 323,000, were commemorating the two-hundredth anniversary of the spiritual awakening of John Wesley, founder of Methodism. Many small churches in the Omaha area are served by "accepted supply pastors" who are not privileged to give Communion, Bishop Oxnam explained. These pastors acted as his assistants as he read the ritual and every Methodist was enabled to receive the Sacrament.

Labor Sunday Message--1952

COME UNTO ME all ye that labor and are heavy laden . . . ” To most of God’s children these words bear the same meaning today as they did when they fell from the lips of Jesus—carpenter, teacher and Son of God—in the hills of Galilee. The majority of mankind is even now heavily laden with the burdens that must be borne merely to stay alive from day to day.

It is hard for us who live in a favored land that God has so richly blessed to realize that for men and women in many other lands life is a daily struggle to obtain sufficient food to provide nourishment for them and their children.

Evidence is mounting that men today have both the information and the means adequately to feed and to clothe the increasing populations around the world. The burden of sensitive hearts in 1952 is to find the will and the way to apply our knowledge and resources to this end. Our government has put into effect on a modest scale plans to help other peoples and their governments to learn how to increase the available supply of food and clothing. It is attempting to find ways to attract the investment of capital in enterprises and facilities so organized as to preserve human values, and to assist the peoples of those countries in the development of their own economic institutions in order to raise the standard of living of the poverty-stricken labor and farm elements in their populations.

The Point Four Program.

This work is being done by the United States Government and through the specialized agencies of the United Nations. It is known as the Technical Assistance Program and has wide bipartisan support. Our purpose is to help break the bonds of poverty that bind teeming populations in many parts of the world and to give them an incentive for a life in which they will be to some degree free from a never-ending struggle for mere existence and have some leisure for education and for the development of a culture fully utilizing the values of their heritage. Communism has exploited the yearning for a richer and more satisfying life that goes far beyond a desire for more nourishment and clothing alone.

Man must have food and raiment, but his deepest longings can be satisfied only by the bread of the spirit.

For many years the churches have had their own “Point Four” program. They have sent to other countries as missionaries men and women trained in education, medicine and agriculture to help people directly and to teach them to help themselves. The National Council of Churches is ready to join with the labor movement and other groups in a continuing effort to aid the poverty-stricken peoples of the world to shed the burden of their poverty. We are gratified that American labor unions also have taken steps to assist free unions in Europe, Asia and other areas to organize and raise the living standards of working people and to oppose the efforts of communists to gain control of the unions of workers in free democratic nations.

The net benefit of the economic assistance we have given to nations in Europe and elsewhere has been substantially lowered by the reduction in the value of the dollar. Government officials and leading economists warn that the danger of inflation will continue for several years.

In addition to sound public policy, there should be restraints exercised by all individuals in their use of funds, by business concerns in setting prices, and by unions in their demands for wage increases, so as to hold back the forces of inflation.

Many leaders of American industry have worked to devise means to protect their employees from injury and death. A number of labor unions have trained their members in the self-discipline needed to guard them from accidents while at work. Despite the progress achieved through safety programs, the Christian conscience is shocked by the repeated occurrence of terrible accidents, such as the one which occurred last December in West Frankfort, Illinois, in which 119 coal miners lost their lives. Reports of investigations of this catastrophe indicate that our knowledge of the means to prevent such disasters has advanced far beyond our determination to take the necessary measures to keep them from recurring.

Nation’s Leadership.

Our success in dealing with the problems of mutual concern to labor and the church will be deeply influenced by the integrity and vision of our future national leadership. On November 4, we will select a President and members of Congress to guide us in the perilous years ahead. The labor unions are to be heartily commended for their efforts to have their members study the issues and exercise their privileges as citizens at the polls.

Any citizen who neglects to exercise those privileges fails to honor those who won for us the sacred right to have something to say about our destiny.

As a nation, we face a major peril in our possible failure fully to interpret and accept the heavy responsibility that flows from the power we have as a result of the natural wealth that God has given us. We of the church, on this day set aside to honor the dignity of labor, should pray for humility that power may not make us arrogant, for moral integrity that our abundance may not betray us into weakness, and for faith that the confusion of our time may not cause us to lose our confidence in the ultimate victory of justice and brotherhood.

Rev. J. Frank Apple Reports Progress At Henderson and Mt Carmel

Much progress is being made in these churches this year. The second Sunday and the week following in June, we held our revival meeting in the Henderson church. The Rev. Fred Register of Varina, North Carolina, assisted us, doing the preaching. His sermons were very timely and inspiring. Mr. Ben Stephenson of Holly Springs, North Carolina, assisted us with the music. His solos added much to the services. The attendance was good throughout the entire meeting. In all, twenty members have been received since the first of April. There are others to come in soon. We are planning to have the baptismal service the first Sunday in September.

The Daily Vacation Bible School was held the week following the revival meeting. We had a very successful school, conducted under the supervision of Mrs. W. H. Masters with ten teachers and helpers. Only ages 4 to 12 were included. The daily average attendance was forty-three.

The different organizations of the church have been very active. The Woman's Missionary Society, in addition to meeting its regular requirements has been very active in the City Council of Church Women. The May Fellowship Day was held in this church. The society sponsored young people's groups, preparing suppers for Sunday evenings and entertaining on special occasions such as the Easter breakfast.

The Young People's organization has been very active under the leadership of Mr. and Mrs. J. Lee Lassiter, Jr. Joint meetings have been held once a month with the young people of the Liberty Congregational Christian Church. During the early spring they played a series of basketball games. The attendance and the summer programs have been good. Discussion groups have been conducted. From time to time local ministerial students and young people have made talks to the group. A large delegation attended the State Wide Rally held at Elon College. Four boys attended the Summer Conference at Elon, and four boys and two girls attended the Junior High Conference at Camp Crabtree.

Every third Sunday evening the young people conducted the worship and preaching services. At Christmas and Easter they presented interesting pageants. We are very proud of our large group of young people.

The Ladies' Aid Society meets once every two months. It has been a great help to the progress of the work. It has bought beautiful front doors for the church and had floor tile laid in the vestibule. It has given nine dozen communion glasses and other supplies.

The Sunday school attendance has been good. It has paid for painting the rest rooms and inlaid floor covering. J. Lee Lassiter, Jr., is our most efficient superintendent. The annual picnic is being held this week. The Philathea Class supervised and paid for the painting of the Junior auditorium, halls and floors, and the kitchen.

The O'Kelly Baracca Class has taken as its project the insulation and weather stripping of the parsonage, which has long been needed.

The Building and Improvement Committee is also busy. Work is now being done to get rid of termites. The committee is also planning to have some of the floors in the parsonage sanded and refinished and some work done on the walls.

Our church attendance has been good with bright prospects ahead. Some of the young men conducted services while we were away on vacation. Dr. Robert Bruce of New York City preached for us on the fourth Sunday in July. Dr. Bruce is the superintendent of the Congregational Christian Conference of New York State. It was a real treat to have him with us. September is our month to broadcast over radio station WHNC. The eleven o'clock service will be broadcast.

Mt. Carmel Christian Church near Franklinton is still on the map. I conduct services there each third Sunday afternoon. Our revival meeting was held the fifth Sunday and the week following in June. I had the happy privilege of doing the preaching and conducting the music. We had a good meeting. Six joined the church on profession of faith and one by transfer. Many improvements have been made in the past two years. A new floor and new carpet have been laid and some painting done. New windows have been installed. A cement walk has been laid and other improvements made on the grounds. Our attendance has been very good.

PASTORS' SCHOOL HYMN

O God of love, made known to us today
 In all the beauty which around us lies,
 Thy Holy Spirit will not let us stay;
 But to the task beyond us bids us rise.

This place of vision ne'er let us forget,
 Where we have Thy voice still speaking clear;
 Where with our questing spirits Thou hast met,
 And we have known that Thou art always near.

So we would go again to do Thy work,
 To hold the vision clear whate'er betide.
 And bear the light where darkness yet may lurk,
 Assured that with us Thou wilt still abide.

O God of love, Thy call we will obey;
 Our hearts united by these holy ties.
 Thy Holy Spirit will not let us stay;
 But to the task before us bids us rise.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT J. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Prospective Enrollment of Students

There are more high school graduates today than ever before. These high school graduates create a "pool" from which the colleges may secure students. Practically all colleges now require graduation from high school as a prerequisite for entrance. An accredited college is permitted to admit a limited number of non-high-school graduates on probation, provided these would be college students are beyond 21 years of age.

While it is true that we have more high school graduates than ever before in this country, we also have a great many more colleges than we have ever had before, and larger ones. Colleges are prepared to offer educational advantages to a much larger number of students. A decade ago our state schools did not enter the field with solicitors for students, but today they go into the field securing new students with greater force than the privately endowed schools have funds to provide.

In addition to these hindrances and obstacles, there are certain other conditions and situations that constitute greater hurdles for the would be college student. First, there are jobs for everybody. There are jobs that have been created especially for high school graduates. They pay good salaries with a promise of a successful future. It is difficult for a high school graduate to turn down a job that pays $250 or $300 a month to go to college, which will require from $600 to $1,500 a year. A good job with a future held out to a young man constitutes a flattering temptation.

Second, this country lives constantly under the threat of war. We try to think of Korea not as a war but as an incident. Nevertheless, they fight and the casualties are terrific. The government is constantly calling attention to the need for young men for our armed forces, offering to high school graduates an opportunity to enlist and at the same time the threat of being drafted is hanging over them. These young men are promised that if they volunteer, they will be released after a certain number of years, and given so many years training in the college of their choice at the expense of the government. Many would be college students are volunteering rather than be drafted and automatically placed in whatever branch of the service the authorities may dictate.

Third, there is another hindrance for the high school graduate when he thinks of college and of a college education. That is the lack of interest. He just does not want to go to college. You may talk to him about the pleasure and satisfaction of being on a campus with a group of fine young people of comparable age, ambitious and determined to prepare themselves for life. You may tell him how much more he will get out of life with a college education than he otherwise would; that it will open to him fields of service and of social living that otherwise would never occur to him. Also you can tell him that he will be in a position to command better positions with better salaries, but after all your arguments, he remains of the same opinion—he does not want to go to college. He may wake up in later years, find his mistake and wish he had, but that doesn't remedy the situation at all. If he is going to college, now is the time to go.

Our field force: Mrs. Burns, field secretary out in the field, Mrs. Matlock in the office, Mr. Currin in the field assisting Mrs. Burns during the summer months, and Mr. Carl Woods, Alumni secretary, part time during the summer likewise assisting Mrs. Burns, has done an excellent job. They have faced obstacles with efficient and effective efforts. The prospective enrollment for 1952-53 has been increasing quite satisfactorily week after week. To date, August 30, we have 283 first year students who have completed their matriculation; 45 who have made application, have been accepted, but have not completed their registration. This makes a total of 328 first year students, together with upperclassmen who will return, should give us a student body of 600 or more.

I wish to express appreciation to Dr. Robert Lee House and other pastors in our Convention who have worked to induce our own young people to enter our college. Your efforts have been of great assistance. This should be just the beginning of the cooperative efforts of the leaders of our church to induce our own young people to enter our college.

* * * * *

The sixty-third matriculation began on Tuesday morning, September 2, at 9 o'clock. Upperclassmen register on Thursday, September 4. We are anticipating a good enrollment and an excellent student body for 1952-53.

* * *

The faculty of the college for 1952-53 has been completed in detail. The president has called the faculty to meet for an orientation period on Monday morning of this week at 9 o'clock and remain in session until 10 o'clock in the evening, with the annual faculty dinner at 7 o'clock.

* * *

Prospects for all college teams are good, and the coaches are planning and working for a successful year. Elon College continues to cooperate with the Civic Music Association, and our students will be provided with an excellent lyceum course this year.

* * *

The rains have brought a change in atmosphere, refreshment to crops and green to the campus. The mower is running constantly and the workers have been busy getting the campus in order for the opening Football practice began Monday morning at 9 o'clock. Under conference rules, any kind of practice before September 1 is forbidden and could disqualify the team violating this rule for participation in intercollegiate sports.

Apportionment Giving

This has certainly been an unusual summer; unusually hot, unusually dry, and now becoming unusually wet. However, in it and through it all, contributions have continued to come in on conference apportionment for the college. At times these contributions have been encouraging. At other times they have been rather small. We confidently look forward to the week and the month when the contributions shall be sufficiently large to total the amount apportioned to the churches for the college.

The college is facing a rather hard pull and needs the assistance of individuals, Sunday schools and churches. This is the responsibility of us all, and we should find joy in assuming that responsibility and doing the same.

IX.-- Elon Professor Finds Tragedy in Palestine

The kings of Egypt and Jordan lost their thrones, their jobs, while Mrs. Sloan and I were in their regions. We were reminded of Elijah, who was told to depose the kings of Israel and Syria. We visited Israel and Syria, but both are now democracies with no kings to dethrone.

But these upsets in governments are minor matters in comparison with what is going on in Palestine today. Palestine is one of the world's tragedies, a tragedy to the Arabs who have lived there 1300 years and many of whose ancestors have lived there since history has been written, a tragedy to the Jews who gave birth to some of history's greatest people, and a tragedy to the honor of civilized mankind.

We are sympathetic with the Jews who for 1800 years have wanted a place they could call theirs. The Zionist movement started some fifty years ago to help Jews settle in Palestine, for there had been practically no Jews there since 135 A. D. At the end of the First World War, the Zionists persuaded Britain to assist Jews to move to Palestine.

The persecution of Jews by Hitler gave impetus to Zionism, but this became a renewed Hitlerism, in reality a dastardly anti-Jewish movement to segregate the Jews, turning Palestine into a great ghetto, rather than absorbing the Jews into the world civilization. It was supported by many competitors, as well as by emotional Jews and Christians who responded to high pressure salesmanship.

Britain was having so many troubles at home, in India and in South Africa, that she threw up her hands in despair and pulled out of Palestine four and a half years ago. Jewish people, who by that time made about a third of the population of Palestine, were prepared. They already had a government and an army organized to take over. The Arab people, with a bit of help from neighboring Arab nations, made an effort to defend their homes, but were completely unorganized.

The Palestine Jews considered this was war, and drove the Arabs out of their homes. In a village a mile west of Jerusalem, two hundred and fifty men, women and children were machine gunned. Similar atrocities took place elsewhere. This can be said to be the work of a few hot-heads, but this does not explain why the Israel Jewish radio broadcast over and over, "Arabs, leave your homes. Go east. Remember what happened west of Jerusalem." Arab leaders advised their own people to flee, saying that the United Nations would see that justice was won and that they would be back in their homes soon.

But "soon" has not arrived. The Jewish State, Israel, has taken over the western two-thirds of Palestine, practically all of the fertile land that Palestine has; and 800,000 Arab people (ten per cent of them Christians) have fled from their homes. Little Trans-Jordan was put in charge of the land not taken by the Jews and has half of the Arab refugees—the nation's name was changed to Jordan, since it now lies on both sides of the Jordan river.

These refugees are homeless, living in camps composed largely of tents and hovels they have built for themselves. The land did not produce enough food for those already there, and without expensive, modern irrigation can be made to produce very little more.

The death rate, especially among children, is very high. The United Nations is concerned, but much of the money being spent is consumed by high salaries and expensive cars of foreign executives. Most of the refugees are now being given 1250 calories of food a day. A person can reduce his diet to that amount and continue to exist, but not if he had already been getting less or has been ill.

But merely staying out of the grave is not enough. People need hope, something to live for. The Arabs are beginning to give up hope. Many of them were successful business men, manufacturers, owners of orange groves and olive plantations. They had beautiful homes—now nothing but a tent and a bit of food.

The Lutheran World Federation is doing a splendid relief job, securing clothing and medicine for refugees. Most of this aid has come from America. Other than the government and the United Nations, the Lutheran Federation is the largest employer in Jordan. With the exception of one American and two Germans, every employee is a refugee. On every hand we found stories of suffering. Of course some people have reestablished themselves, but opportunities are scarce.

After seeing the situation in Jordan, Mrs. Sloan and I, through the assistance of the American consul, "crossed over" no man's land to Israel, the Jewish nation. Here we found tragedy of another kind. The people average much younger and are more prosperous, are optimistic and happy. They are experiencing relief from persecution, seeing an ideal being fulfilled, a hope realized. If one saw only Israel he might be enthusiastic for the project.

Unfortunately, few people see both sides. No Jews get into Jordan; and they would not last long if they did. They are satisfied with the slogan, "To the victors belong the spoils." As a class, the Israeli feel that the country should be theirs and give no thought to the unfortunate people whose homes, businesses, furniture and bank accounts were confiscated.

We talked with many people in Israel. When we told them what we had seen in Jordan, they would reply, "But the Arabs used to live in tents, so why worry?" When we talked with a prominent physician in a magnificent home in Israel, we were told, "There are Jews living in tents, so what of it?" When we pointed out that the house in which we were sitting belonged to an Arab, the answer was, "I never thought of that!"

Yes, a lot of Jews are living in tents and in little hot corrugated iron huts, but two things are definitely different—they are there because they came voluntarily (although a lot of them are now trying to leave Israel), and they see the situation as temporary, have something to look forward to. How different the optimism of the Israeli from the despair of the Arab.

"Tell Americans what you have seen here," was the plea we heard again and again in Jordan. Unfortunately, Americans, and the rest of the world, know little of the Palestine situation. When we wake up, something will be done. Driving out the Jews would not help the situation—

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

Do You Have a Packet?

About fifty women's societies have purchased packets of literature for use during the coming year, which starts the first of October. The remainder of our societies need packets, in order to plan their year's work and to have complete, well-rounded programs.

The women's packets were prepared by the Literature Committee of the Woman's Board of which Miss Pattie Lee Coghill is chairman. They may be purchased from the Southern Convention Office, Elon College, N. C. It would be well to address your request to Miss Ruth Dunn, the office secretary, who handles literature orders.

The complete packets, containing the home and foreign mission study books, cost $4.35. Packets without the study books may be purchased for $2.35, for use by additional circles.

This year the books for use by local societies may not be purchased in quantities, as has been possible in recent years. Many of our societies preferred to make their own, and so the committee decided not to have additional ones made, but simply to mimeograph enough to put two in each packet for the leaders.

The following items are included in the packet this year:

1. List of materials contained in the packet.
2. Year Book.
3. The Program booklet, "Building with Love and Gratitude."
4. The Friendship Press small eat-along announcing the mission study books for 1952-53.
5. The Home Mission Study book, "These Rights We Hold," by Fred Brownlee.
6. "Is It Nothing to You?" brochure on the work of our Congregational Christian Church in "Home Missions and Human Rights."
7. A sample luncheon mat for use with the home mission theme.
8. The Foreign Mission Study book, "Africans on Safari," by Leslie C. Sayre.
9. "Africa on the March," Congregational Christian Work in Africa.

10. A sample luncheon mat showing our work in Africa.
11. "Make Africa Live," a list of place cards, invitations, napkins, etc.
12. The program, "Stewardship—Total Dedication to God."
13. The program, "Symbolism."
14. The program, "A Program for Christian Family Week."
15. "The Master's Family."
16. Letter from Miss Corrine Nordquest.
17. Installation Service, "In Thy Hand."
18. The Bible Study Book, "Christ in You"—Leader's Guide by Joseph M. Gettys.
19. April issue of Guide Posts, with envelope and sheet for subscription.
20. "Universal Declaration of Human Rights."
21. "The American Board—a Tabular View."
22. "Simplified Parliamentary Procedure," based on Roberts Rules of Order.
23. "Adventures in Reading," 1952 list.
24. The Cradle Roll Party for 1953, and a Christmas Program for the Cradle Roll.

Family Night at Pleasant Grove

The Women's Missionary Society of Pleasant Grove Christian Church, Western North Carolina Conference, held their annual Family Night on June 14 at the church, with a picnic supper on the lawn. Society members and their families, as well as several visitors, enjoyed the food and fellowship together. This was followed by a very interesting program.

Rev. and Mrs. Yow, of the Friend's Church, who had recently completed five years of missionary work in East Africa, spoke to us and told of their work there. They showed a number of pictures they made on the mission field. We felt, since our foreign study will be on Africa next year, we were very fortunate to have these pictures shown to our society.

Family Night is one of the highlights for our society each year.

FLOSSIE BRAY,
President,

Union, Southampton, Reports

The Women's Society of Union Church, Southampton County, Virginia, reports a very happy and successful year's work.

Our society is made up of three circles. All of these circles are very active, and are steadily increasing their memberships.

Also, the young people's work is very promising, as is the children's and the Cradle Roll departments.

In spite of the fact that we were without a pastor from March until July, our people were loyal to our meetings, which have been very well planned.

With the Master on our side, we are looking forward to a better year's work under the capable guidance of our new pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. Clyde Fields.

MRS. LARRY OVERBY,
President.

What Do You Read?

I have observed in recent years the fine reading program put on by the Home Demonstration Clubs. They have a definite number of books to be read from a definite list—and they take the matter seriously.

How about our church women? Do they do as well? I think without a doubt the answer is "No!"

In the packet, you will find a list of books entitled "Adventures in Reading," prepared by the National Fellowship of Congregational Christian Women and the National Laymen's Fellowship. I wonder how many societies will use it?

Why not a reading circle in your church? You might do as the Southern Baptist women—have a group of twelve, each one buy a book from the selected list, and have an exchange each month, with a program based on ideas from these religious books.

This may be a way you can interest women who have not been challenged by the present program of your women's society. If anyone has such a group, please let us know about it.

TRAGEDY IN PALESTINE.

too often men have tried to correct one wrong by doing another. The Arabs must be compensated for the lands and bank accounts confiscated, be given aid in irrigating their present land and establishing industries, and be given access to a harbor on the Mediterranean. The problem can be solved, but it must be done before Russia takes over.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Boys and Girls:

Last week's Life magazine has several pages showing the work of a young doctor at St. Anthony's hospital in New York. He gives the serums and drugs that put ill persons to sleep so that they may be treated or operated on. His work is very important for all people, big or small, who have something of a fear of hospitals.

It is "the smell" some people say. Nowadays hospitals do not use ether quite as much and so some of "that smell" is eliminated. Others are afraid of being left alone, or of the x-ray machine, or of the operating room.

Life in the hospital is a life apart. It goes on and on, night and day, running on shifts from 7 a. m. to 3 p. m. to 11 p. m. until 7 a. m., and on again. Each floor has its supervisor, its graduate nurses and, if it is a teaching hospital, its students. Today's modern hospitals also have nurses' aids. There are orderlies to help move patients, carry heavy oxygen tanks and to wheel patients.

For the past six weeks I have spent much of my time in the hospital because my mother was a patient there. So I absorbed much of the atmosphere of this world-apart and how it works. This particular hospital is run by nuns, one of the Roman Catholic orders of St. Francis. They are called "Sister" and are highly dedicated to their work.

And there is work a plenty: cleaning, cooking, nursing, healing, visiting, ministering. In addition to their nursing duties, each nun spends four hours a day in prayer. Think of it—some of us haven't time for a half hour!

The hospital is concerned with getting the sick well, and in the cases like mother's who couldn't get well, to keep them comfortable. Doctors come and give their orders, and the nurses and technicians carry them out.

If you should happen to be a patient in a hospital, perhaps you will be fortunate enough to have a doctor like the one pictured in Life to reassure you and help you cast out fear.

Jesus was a physician too. He healed people who were sick, ashamed and afraid. He healed lame, blind and diseased people. There are those kinds of people in our world today. Some of them need medicine, some of them need religion. There is great goodness in medicine and religion together.

The Evangelical and Reformed Church uses dedicated women in their hospitals, but they do not give away their entire lives like the Roman Catholic nuns.

If you must be a patient, be as cheerful as you can, do as you are told, pray hard and work to get well. If you are a visitor, be cheerful too, walk and talk quietly and pay short visits.

JUNE JOY HOUSE.

Bruised

By MARY STARK KERR.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Dr. Warner, why are you so much opposed to corporal punishment for children?" asked one of the students in a Child Development class.

The teacher had expressed herself strongly concerning a judge who had told the jury to disregard in their verdict the whipping of a child with a hairbrush, because he said that a parent has a right to correct a child as long as the punishment is not too severe. Witnesses had disagreed as to whether certain bruises left on the child's body were a result of the punishment, more witnesses being of the negative opinion than of the affirmative. Most witnesses thought the parent had been a good mother to the child.

Dr. Warner answered the student's question by saying, "The physical pain of a spanking is not the only effect on the child. If you mothers would only look at your children when about to use any form of corporal chastisement, you would never punish them in this way. If you could see the expression of terror in the child's face, which is pretty sure to appear when you start such punishment, you would never go on with it, if you have any heart about you. But I fear that parents are seldom thinking of the child when they give a spanking. They are angry because the child has offended them by breaking some rule and, without investigating to find out the cause or observing the child, they just proceed to inflict their idea of a just penalty."

"But, Dr. Warner, I ask my children to explain, and sometimes they stubbornly refuse to do so," said one woman.

"Are you sure it is not fear that keeps the child silent?" questioned the teacher. "Fear often makes a child tongue-tied for the time being. His mind will not work, and, besides that, sometimes, or I should say usually, children are not intentionally disobedient. They do not remember promises as well as adults do, and unconsciously they disobey some rule. Then it is impossible for them to give an explanation for their conduct and they feel that your demand is unfair. This adds to the harm done by corporal punishment. Perhaps you do not bruise your child's flesh, but you do bruise your child's personality.

"Some of you may not realize the shock to the child's nervous system which a spanking often produces. If there are other children in the family witnessing a spanking, it is a shock to them, too. I remember, when I was little, if I saw another child spanked, it was a terrible shock to me, and as there were a number of children in the family, more lively and less timid than I, it had to be seen so often that it had a permanently harmful effect upon me.

"Parents frequently wonder what is holding their children back from better progress in school—wonder why they do not always respond to the teaching they receive there—when it is they themselves who are responsible for the trouble. Having been spanked or whipped, and knowing they may again be punished that way, some boys and girls live in constant fear and dread, and this is not conducive to mental development. Moreover, such apprehension also causes physical illhealth in many cases."

"Then we just have to let our children do as they please, and become juvenile delinquents, I suppose," said another mother.

"No, indeed," answered Dr. Warner. "Just use your intelligence instead of your hands in disciplining your children. The more carefully you think and teach your children to think, the less need there will be for any form of punishment. Lead them to be your partners in obeying the rules of the home, and, as far as possible, make all the members of the family subject to the same penalties for any violation of the rules, and you will have less trouble and more pleasure with your children."

North Carolina and Virginia Youth Plan Fall Rally at Durham

The officers and nominating committee of the North Carolina and Virginia Youth Fellowship met at Elon College on August 23. The meeting was presided over by Curtis Young, president. Plans were made for a Fall Rally to meet at the Durham Church. There is a question about the date, but ask the young people to look forward to it and be planning for it. The date will be published as soon as plans are completed. We feel that a good program is being prepared, with emphasis on the commissions of our Pilgrim Fellowship and the election and installation of officers.

N. C.-Va. Youth Fellowship Buys Hymnals for Jose

Lois Scott, secretary of the North Carolina and Virginia Youth Fellowship, is sending out this week another appeal for money for the hymnals for Jose. About half enough has already been sent in. Jose should be home by now; a card has been received from him with a Honolulu postmark. Our best wishes go with him, and we are hoping to hear from him soon.

Curtis Young Elected Chairman of Christian Faith Commission

At the July meeting of the National Pilgrim Fellowship in California, Curtis Young of our Durham church was elected chairman of the Christian Faith Commission of the National Pilgrim Fellowship. Curtis has been a leader in his home church, his conference and the Southern Convention. There is no one more deserving of this honor, and we are all happy that he was selected for this important post. Curtis is president of the North Carolina and Virginia Youth Fellowship. He is entering Elon College this week as a ministerial student.

Hats off to you, Curtis, we're quite proud of you!

Some Things to Remember and Some to Forget

- Remember the value of time,
- Remember the success of perseverance,
- Remember the pleasure of working,
- Remember the dignity of simplicity.
- Remember the worth of character,
- Remember the power of kindness,
- Remember the influence of example,
- Remember the obligation of duty.
- Remember the wisdom of economy,
- Remember the virtue of patience,
- Remember the improvement of talent,
- Remember the joy of originating.

- Forget the slander you have heard,
- Forget the hasty, unkind word;
- Forget the quarrel and the cause,
- Forget the whole affair, because forgetting is the only way.
- Forget the storm of yesterday,
- Forget the chap whose sour face forgets to smile in any place.
- Forget you're not a millionaire,
- Forget the gray streaks in your hair.
- Forget the coffee when it's cold,
- Forget to kick, forget to scold,
- Forget the plumber's awful charge,
- Forget the iceman's bill is large;
- Forget the coalman and his ways,
- Forget the winter's blustery days.

David's Religious Contribution

MEMORY SELECTION: "Serve the Lord with gladness: come before his presence with singing."—Psalm 100: 2.

LESSON: II Samuel 7: 18-19, 25-29; 23: 1-4.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 24.

Blessed are the Humble.

Success goes to some folks' heads. They get "stuck up," they become "high hat." This tendency is illustrated in a humorous and realistic way in the life of Maggie, of Jiggs and Maggie fame. As Maggie climbs higher and higher on the social and financial ladder, she becomes more and more haughty and high hat. But not so with this great man David. Here he was, a king of a great domain, a man of proved ability and of great accomplishments, supreme ruler over a whole nation, and yet as humble as a little child, marveling at the grace and goodness of God that had made it possible, and ascribing to God the glory and honor of it all! "Who am I, O Lord Jehovah, and what is my house, that thou hast brought me thus far?" he cries out in amazement and wonder. And still the wonder grew when he realized that God had promised better and greater things for his house in the days to come. The man's heart is filled with wonder and awe and gratitude and thanksgiving. Here was one of the surest tests of the great character of this great and good man. It is the test of the character of every man. Great men are humble, they realize that they are not self-made men—there is no such animal anyway—and they sincerely and humbly give God the credit and glory. Even such efforts as they made themselves and such success as they had achieved, was due to the grace of God. What a rebuke they are to little men and women who boast of their achievements and strut around like peacocks or pouter pigeons, saying "I," "I," "I did this and did that."

Unrealized Dreams.

David had it in his heart for a long time to build a "house" for his God, a temple that compared favorably with the houses in which men dwelt, and even one that surpassed the royal palace itself. It was one of his lifetime ambitions. But it was not to be. God plainly told him through the prophet Nathan that he should not build the temple. To be sure he was to have a part—he was to collect the materials and make ready for it, but it was to be left to his son Solomon to build the house of God. The dream blew up in his face. Frustration became his lot. But there was no bitterness, no sulking, no wringing of hands. Instead, he thanked God for bringing him thus far, and for helping him to do what he had done. Here again is the mark of a great man, a royal character in every sense of the word. How often do men become bitter and sulky when they are denied their heart's desire! How often do they lose heart when the dream eludes them! How often do they take defeat in a rebellious spirit! It seems as if it is a part of life's discipline that some of our dreams are never realized in this life. A man's reach should exceed his grasp anyway. And quite often life's frustrations are God's open doors to new and richer experiences. Certainly they are a part of life's discipline. After all, we are not judged simply by our achievements, but by our efforts. Not arriving, but striving, is the important thing. There are many people who do realize their dreams, worthy dreams, in this life; but like so many of the heroes of faith in Hebrews 11, many and most people die, "not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off."

"The sweet Psalmist of Israel"—thus does the inspired writer refer to David. The word psalm in Hebrew is the equivalent of the word song in our language. And like our songs, the Hebrew psalms were poetry. David was in reality a poet, a hymn-writer, and the Hebrew song-book, the Psalms, is full of songs which he wrote. He did not write all of these psalms. In fact, it is specifically stated that some of these psalms were written by other people. But there are at least seventy-three psalms or songs attributed to David, which is significant in itself. I believe it was Martin Luther who said he did not care who wrote the laws of his country so long as he could write its songs. Here was a king, a wise and beneficent king, who undoubtedly did great things for his nation by his laws and decrees and administration, but he did even more for his nation by his songs and poems. So great was his influence on the writers of the other psalms included in the Psalter that the whole collection is called "The Psalms of David."

A Goodly Heritage.

The title for today's lesson is "David's Religious Contribution." Let no one think that this king was a pious, puny, pussy-foot person, substituting weak sentiment for direct action. Here was a man who subdued the enemies of his country and enlarged its borders, who organized the nation into a compact union in which there was strength, and administered affairs in an efficient way, who conceived and carried out great expansion in many fields, including commerce and building, and who won recognition both at home and abroad by his ability and by his achievements. He made many contributions to his country and to his contemporaries. But perhaps the greatest contribution which he made to the people of his day and to posterity, was a religious contribution. David was a genuinely religious man. To be sure, he was not perfect, the story of his life has at least one ugly, very ugly chapter in it. But he was a man who was devout, and who was devoted to God. He was God's man. He tried to do God's work. Something of his passion for God and his purpose to serve God are to be found in the songs or psalms which he wrote. For David, public office was not only a public trust, it was a divine stewardship. The earthly king was the representative of the Divine King. Alas that all too many Presidents and too many men in high places do not have something of the spirit of this man of the long ago. Our present age needs men of sound moral character and religious convictions and the willingness to bear their witness to the Lordship of Jesus Christ in public office.

The Orphanage
 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

The main excitement on our campus right now is Home Coming. All plans are being made for a good returning of persons who once lived here. We have the best response through the mails we have had so far. We hope the weather will be fine and that all will have a good time.

It is really a great joy to many of the men and women who attend our Home Coming. They like to remember their childhood just as you do yours. They like to see the familiar old sights, the buildings which once were their home, the fields, and the woods. They bring up memories. They like to see the boys and girls who were their playmates, the matrons and the other helpers. They remember their schooling, their clothing and their food, and their friends who inspired them to try to be somebody worth while in their lives.

You should see them gather in little knots and laugh and talk. You should hear what they say, and see what they are interested in. It makes one happy to hear the praise they pour out upon the orphanage. And they do not stop at praise. They share what they have with the home. One person who is unable to be here has mailed in a check for $100.00. Many who come will not have much left after they maintain their own home and family, but they will bring something.

You can be proud of them. Some of them were here for only a short while. But the time they were here was a crisis-time in their little lives. It was a time when somebody was needed and badly. Your orphanage stepped in and did a real service. Many children are here for only a year or so. And perhaps many of the people who begged to have them taken for that short time do not appreciate it like they should, but on the whole, when the child comes to be of age and himself heads a family, he appreciates it. If he doesn't, the orphanage has still done a fine thing and helped a needy one over a crisis.

Then just think of the large number of children who have had no other resources, no other home, just us. They are never tired of telling what the orphanage did for them. Of that type of work you may be especially proud.

Right now we are a little discouraged on our farm. We had it dry like so many others, until many acres of corn are not worth what it took to plant and tend them. Our hay crop is very poor, and a good portion of it is now wet in the field and is lost. Especially worried are we because of a large acreage of soy bean hay which was really beautiful, and which we expected to help us with our dairy herd during the winter. It is now mowed, wet and moldy and worthless. So it goes. We have to take it just as it comes. But our friends will share with us, and we shall come out all right.

Thank you for the good report again this week. Remember it needs to average more than $1,000.00 every week. It encourages us when we have any where near that during one of the summertime weeks, and we have had several that reached up that way this summer. You are very good to us, and according to the best faith all of us have, when you are good to the needy boys and girls you are "doing it unto Him who has done so much for us." For these boys and girls, and in His name, I thank you.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

In Memoriam

Mrs. Hyatte, Charter Member of Newport News Church, Passes

Bessye Baker Hyatte, widow of the late Thomas G. Hyatte of Newport News, Virginia, died on August 22. The funeral was held on August 24, at the First Congregational Christian Church, with the Rev. A. Lanson Granger, Jr., officiating.

The only child of William B. and Roberta Parker Baker, she was born in Nansemond County on August 11, 1891, but moved to Newport News in her infancy. When she was only ten years old she became a charter member of the Newport News Church. In her youth she was very active in the choir and in young people's work.

Being of an artistic nature, Mrs. Hyatte was often called on to arrange tables, plan favors and fix extra details for women's meetings. Her interest in Christian Endeavor spread from the local to city and state organizations; and on several occasions she taught courses on Endeavor work, and taught at Elon Leadership Training School. She took groups of young people to state conventions, on outings and on camping trips. Some of the young people with whom she worked are today serving our church: Mrs. W. B. Williams, president of the Women's Convention; the Rev. J. Howard Smith, and others.

Mrs. Hyatte taught Primary children for many years. She was a natural story teller and her art work enabled her to show children creative ways. She continued to work with young people until her hearing began to fail. Although she could still hear some, she left the choir and gave up children's work, Married in 1910 to Thomas G. Hyatte, they had one daughter, June Joy, now Mrs. Robert Lee House, who survives. She is also survived by her mother. Mr. Hyatte died in 1949.

Mr. Granger spoke of her life of usefulness to the church, and especially mentioned her cheerfulness and interest in others in spite of her pain in the last year of her illness. She maintained a steady interest in the local church, the Conference and the Convention as long as she lived.

Miss Jane Utley McCauley—An Appreciation

Miss Jane Utley McCauley, daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Joseph E. McCauley of Waverly, Virginia, passed away unexpectedly on the morning of July 12, 1952. She had returned from a trip to the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches in Clairmont, California, only a short time before. Mr. and Mrs. McCauley were in attendance at the Rural Pastor's School at Blacksburg, Virginia, and found her suffering severely with headache on their return Friday night. A doctor was summoned immediately. No relief could be given through the night, and she passed away quietly at six o'clock on Saturday morning.

Jane was a graduate of Elon College, in the class of 1950. She had taught in the Sadler school, near Reidsville, the past two years. Her life of quiet goodness was more than could be said about her. Her music teacher at Elon said to me, "If all my students and choir members were like Jane my worries would be over." She was active in college life and served as president of the Student Christian Association during her senior year.

Though she was only twenty-five, her influence upon her friends and students will last many years. She was not pretentious in any manner. She was the essence of goodness, purity, kindness and sincerity. Her life was a little heaven of Christlikeness on earth.

The service in her honor was conducted from the Waverly Congregational Christian Church, on Sunday afternoon, July 13, in the presence of more people than could be crowded into the house. The floral tributes were such as might be expected for a life like hers. Friends from Richmond, Norfolk, Henderson, Paces, Reidsville, and other places came to stand with the bereaved in their hour of unspeakable sorrow.

A number of teachers from the Sadler school, who taught with her, along with a large number of friends she had made in our Reidsville, N. C., church, were present for the service.

The writer was assisted in the service by the Revs. Lane and Carson, pastors, respectively, of the Baptist and Methodist churches in Waverly. The family has walked in the "valley of sorrow" before. They know the way of suffering, and therefore, how, now, to trust in the sustaining grace of Him whom they love and serve.

May the expressed sympathy of their many friends be also a means of grace.

JESSE H. DOLLAR.

tor of the Convention for use during Churchmen's Week and Laymen's Sunday, on October 19.

The printing of stationery for the Fellowship, for the use of the chairman and secretary, was authorized.

The vice-chairman was instructed to revise the handbook and constitution and present them for approval at the mid-winter meeting of the council. It was suggested that the name, "Laymen's Council" be changed to Executive Committee. The time for the mid-winter meeting was left to the chairman and Dr. W. T. Scott.

The Convention Wide Meeting to be held at Elon College in mid-winter: We plan that a business session be held every even year (1954, '56, etc) to elect Convention officers and conference representatives at large. In order to correlate the work, of the Convention and the conferences, Chairman Williams is to write the conference chairmen suggesting that each conference elect its officers for a term of two years at their annual meetings every odd year (1953, '55, etc.), beginning in 1953. These chairmen will serve on the Executive Committee of the Southern Convention Laymen's Fellowship.

The secretary was instructed to write a letter to all of our churches in the Convention relative to our financial plan, urging the men of the church to send dues of 50c to the treasurer.

S. H. PELL,
Secretary-Treasurer.

During the past year, the church has been remodeled. It is hoped that this revival will help the spiritual building of the church to keep pace with the physical building.

The Church and Its Altar

By ROBERT LEE HOUSE

Excerpts from the Sermon given at the Dedication of the Chancel in The Church of Wide Fellowship, June 1, 1952.

Hear this prophecy from Isaiah 19:19,20: "In that day shall there be an Altar to the Lord in the midst of the land, and it shall be for a sign and for a witness unto the Lord."

This prophecy is fulfilled in every age. The Altar is a sign and a witness to our faith in God. It is designed to create the setting for worship, to induce reverence and awe, to acclimate people to the divine, to induce great mental and spiritual transactions.

There is discernable today a renewed interest in and emphasis on worship. It is reflected by the changing emphasis in architecture. A great preacher in a former generation gave this prescription for his new church: "Build it so 1,300 people will be as close to me as is possible." The result was a platform thrusting out into a half-circle of sloping floors and tiered seats. I think the preacher of today would give this prescription: "Build the church so those who come will be helped to get as close to God as possible."

The Chancel helps people to get close to God. It is not simply an effort to make the church pretty. There is the "Lectern" on one side, from which the Scriptures are read. Opposite is the "Pulpit," calling attention to the prophetic function of the minister. It emphasizes the office and not the man. Here the servants of God must proclaim his Word to our generation. The "Altar" occupies the central place in the Chancel. It dramatizes the story of redemption. It reminds us of what Jesus Christ has done and can do for us. The Cross speaks to us of the sacramental nature of our religion. From it the symbols of the broken body and shed blood of our Lord are administered, and to it are brought the gifts of hands and hearts. Henceforth every song sung from the Chancel and every offering made becomes a sacramental act. Lo, the auditorium has become a Sanctuary!

Infinite resources are available for those who expect and attempt great things for God. When people give of their best to the Master, deliberately set apart places and hours that God may have a chance to renew their hearts, to speak to their minds, to strengthen their wills and heal their hurts, then we have worship of a high order. . . .

For a number of years Dr. Boynton Merrill was minister of the Second Congregational Church in West Newton, Massachusetts. The gothic structure was designed by Dr. Ralph Adam Cram. One day Dr. Merrill was going down one of the side aisles. From the shadow of a great pillar there rose the figure of a boy. "Is this your church," asked the boy. "I am the minister," replied Dr. Merrill. "Do you mind if I sit here?" "Of course not, my boy, that is why this church is always open and the light burning above the Altar." Then the boy said, "You know, this church does something to you, doesn't it?" Dr. Merrill was interested: "What does it do?" The boy thought a moment and said, "Well, it makes you all kind of quiet inside, and it makes you feel bigger than you are."

In such a turbulent age, we need periodically to get "quiet inside." And in the presence of herculean tasks we need to "feel bigger than we are."

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1952

We Salute Second Church, Norfolk

The Second Congregational Christian Church of Norfolk, Virginia, in its new location, is only four blocks from "The Times Square of the South" Ward's Corner, a comparatively new and exceedingly thriving business area. In its location the church commands a central place on almost an acre of ground in the very center of approximately 2,000 families.....The nearest church is a mile away.. Its location is easily within walking distance of over 5,000 people.

The colonial front entrance to the educational building is visible from the main thoroughfare through this section, connecting Ward's Corner and points east with Hampton Boulevard, the Naval Base, the Newport News Ferry and one of the main arteries into the city of Norfolk.

The entrance to the Chapel, which will seat 180 people, is equally commanding with its Steeple and Cross. Both the colonial front with its large columns and the steeple with its Cross are accentuated at night by floodlights which command the attention of the passers-by.

The spacious grounds surrounding the church provide about a half acre of green lawn and a quarter of an acre of graveled parking space. There is ample room for future construction.

There are about a thousand families who reside in rental apartments in this area, many of them families of service personnel. This presents the problem of a heavy turn over. Nevertheless, with approximately equal floating and permanent population this area presents a challenge to this church not surpassed anywhere in the Southern Convention.

News Flashes

Did you see that Elon College was listed in Saturday Evening Post's "Pigskin Preview" last week?

Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein filled his pulpit in the Richmon Church last Sunday after a two month's stay at his summer cottage in Delaware.

We are glad to have received news that Rev. S. E. Madren has returned home from the hospital, where he was operated on recently for a verieose vein.

Mt. Olivet (R), near Elkton, Virginia, will observe its annual Homecoming on Sunday, September 14. All friends of the church are invited to attend.

Rev. Mark W. Andes of Virgilina, Virginia, will be the guest speaker at revival services to be held September 14-19, at Mt. Olivet (G) in the Valley Conference.

Our Editor, Dr. Robert Lee House, who has been in Moore County Hospital at Pinehurst, North Carolina, since Tuesday of last week, is reported as slowly improving. He is unable, however, to receive any visitors.

Valley Churches Have Successful Vacation Bible Schools

Rev. S. E. Madren of Elkton, Virginia, reports that the Vacation Bible Schools held in his churches this summer were the largest in the records for those churches.

The Bible School at Mt. Olivet (G) was conducted July 21-25 with a total enrollment of 45. Miss Thelma Morris conducted the school assisted by Miss Winona Morris, Mrs. Elphio Morris, Mrs. Vernon Snow and Mrs. Fred Morris.

Mt. Olivet (R) Bible School was held August 4-10, under the leadership of Miss Evelyn Allen of Winchester. Other helpers were Misses Lucy Lilly, Delores Savdridge, Tillie Strickler, and Louise Frazier. The total enrollment was 56.

August 18-24 were the dates of the Bible School at Bethel. Those who assisted the pastor in the school were: Mrs. Carroll Monger, Mrs. H. T. Hensley, Mrs. Eula Bloxom, Mrs.

Goldie Meadows, Mrs. Doris Wright, Mrs. James Frazier, Mrs. Ralph Jenkins and Mrs. Oliver Dovel. The enrollment for this school was 76.

In each of these Bible schools refreshments were served each day and a picnic was held at the close of the week. A public program was also given on Sunday.

Mr. Madren worked in each of the schools and speaks commendingly of the cooperation shown.

Reporting from Sophia Flint Hill and Bailey's Grove

Last November, Sophia and Flint Hill (R) dedicated their parsonage, it having been paid for in full.

On August 17 of this year, at a special meeting, the Sophia Church voted unanimously to purchase a lot on which to erect a new sanctuary. It was also voted unanimously to begin a church building fund campaign. The church has had its best year financially; and attendance has been better this year than ever before. The Sophia Church is located between three growing towns, Asheboro, High Point and Randleman. There is a great future for the church.

Flint Hill will celebrate its 25th anniversary on October 12. Rev. S. M. Penn of Alabama, who organized the church, will be present for that service.

Bailey's Grove, in North Asheboro, raised $3,000 the past year toward a new sanctuary. The church has carried the largest benevolence and current budgets this year that it has ever had. The members are hoping and working for a new sanctuary in the near future.

W. T. MADREN,
Pastor.

A Testimony in Memory of Altie Cumings Galt

So many of you have spoken or written your very kind words of sympathy and comfort to me and the children, and so many others, we know, have had us in your thoughts and prayers, that we must let you know how helpful you have been. In acknowledgement and gratitude we send this brief testimony, to share a small fraction of the thoughts we hold precious in memory.

* * *

A bit timid and cautious by nature, Altie shrank somewhat from the new or untried or venturesome. Yet, called upon often through the years to meet uncertainties and change, sometime with real risk involved, she stood the test with deep calm and courage.

Her cautiousness was partly fostered by the parental care of her childhood. Her parents had lost three older children, so took extraordinary care to shield the living ones, especially the one daughter. For example, although they lived on a farm and handled horses every day, they never lifted Altie to a horse's back to venture a ride. Hence donkey riding, early undertaken in China, was a real adventure.

Her fortitude in trying times very evidently was due essentially to a strong religious faith and undergirding—faith like Paul's when he said, "When I am weak, then am I strong." She exemplified the assurance of God's Spirit to Paul, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

To Altie home and family were especially full of sacred meaning. Her children can attest how earnest and passionate she was to knit and hold the ties very close no matter what the distance of separation. But, also, she quite rose above the narrow and selfish loyalty to immediate family. The intimacy and loyalty here just helped her to open wide her heart for larger scope of friendship. Perhaps this became clear during our last two and a half years in Peking, living in the mission house in which transient guests or colleagues were mothered there and made to feel a part of the family. It was home to them rather than hostel. Even committees and other groups meeting there felt something of the home atmosphere.

But this capacity for joy in an inclusive friendship was not of late appearance. The "Tabor girls" of her childhood and school years were always held in close ties. And to these she kept adding friends on several continents. In busiest times she kept up, with her pen, a remarkably wide correspondence. And in her letters there was sharing of intimacies, not just a reporter's items. If any of her correspondents fell away she felt it a real loss.

Perhaps it was this trait of prizing personal friendship that accounted for her special interest in the individual, rather than in mass humanity. A call to a missionary career just in abstract terms, or to some welfare movement, offered no great appeal. But when, in life, her lot was along side a Mrs. Yang, or a nurse Chang, or the Wang children, or her fellow teachers in a school, their every need or turn of fortune appealed to her. Thus her part in mission work was quite on the intimate personal plane. Also she was generous in respecting the personalities of others. A niece has written that, as a little girl, it was her Aunt Altie's treating her much as an equal that gave her a beginning of a grown up feeling. In her companionship with her own and other children she kept an unusually even balance between respecting their wills on the one hand and, on the other, guiding them mostly by persuasion out of her greater experience and more mature judgments. Her friends and her dear ones were companions to be respected in a cooperative fellowship, as well as to be loved and cherished.

Life for death can part us,
O thou Love eternal,
Shepherd of the wand'ring star,
And souls that wayward flee.
Homeward draws our spirit to thy Spirit yearning—
Who wert and art and ever more shall be.

Our comfort is in assurance of Jesus, with words like these: "Where I am there ye shall be also."

Yours most earnestly,

ELMER W. GALT,

For himself, Ralph, Edith and Faith.

NOTE.—Elmer and Altie Galt were A. B. C. F. M. missionaries to China from 1910 to 1951.

Notice of Meeting

The Committee on the Ministry of the North Carolina and Virginia Congregational Christian Conference is called to meet at Elon College, North Carolina, on Monday, September 22, 1952, at 2:00 p. m., in the Library Building. All candidates for the ministry from said conference who desire to meet the committee are requested to be present.

Our Principles

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

DR. AND MRS. W. W. SLOAN

Welcome home, globe-circling professors! To say that you have had an exciting and strenuous trip would doubtless be putting it mildly. In such a far-flung and crowded itinerary, it is a marvel that you found time to prepare reports for our publication. Only a professor could do that!

You have given us a great lesson and example in the stewardship of time. How easy it is to waste a summer! A vacation is good, but the good often becomes the enemy of the best. You were not simply as tourists, but as Christian ambassadors!

We are having a timely study of Africa, which has been described as "the most promising mission field in the world." But you did more than read a book, as good as that may be, you went to Africa!

America and Africa have historic ties that are intertwined and unbreakable. There is much that is regrettable. We must write a new and better chapter. We are eager to see your pictures and to hear your conclusions.

MR. BOWDEN W. WARD

When the news came that you are leaving Richmond for Birmingham, Alabama, our family remembered your coming to Richmond. We learned that you had been active in the Collegiate Church in Nashville. Originally a Methodist, you discovered and learned to appreciate the Congregational Church. In Richmond you learned the significance of the Congregational Christian Church. During these intervening years you have been very useful in the Richmond church; serving as usher, chairman of the Finance Committee, chairman of the official board, teacher of the Carlton Bible Class, Sunday School superintendent and deacon. You served Christ, the Church and the Kingdom of God while others hesitated to move their memberships.

Now you are off to Birmingham. You are a grand layman. It was a joy to be your minister for a season.

The prayers and good wishes of many friends will follow you and your family. Such is the nature of our rich fellowship in Christ.

THE REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, JR.

Congratulations to the pastor of the Lakeview Community Church! Sunday, August 24, must have been a great religious experience. Many of us have never had the experience of organizing a new church. It would be a pleasure to enroll as a charter member of your new church, but that too is out of the question for many of us. The list will surely grow. Years hence—25 or 50—the church will have a great anniversary occasion and honor those original members.

Your venture of faith is most commendable. The growth and permanence of this church will give new impetus to our church extension program. Laymen in other communities may follow the fine example of Mr. C. R. Faucette in donating property for home missionary projects.

THE REV. BILL SIMMONS

Will Rogers used to say, "All I know is what I read in the papers." He referred, of course, to the newspaper. This is neither the time nor the occasion to debate the merits of newspaper information and education, but it is safe to say that one may find much interesting and valuable information by reading the Church paper. I wish we could get this point over to more people.

I was pleased to read in The Christian Sun of your licensure on August 17 at your home church in Albenarle. I am sure it was a fine experience not only for you and Mrs. Simmons, but for the church as well. Some churches have never had the experience of sending out a minister of the gospel.

We need young men for the ministry. A service of licensure points the way toward ordination. I am glad you are on the way. Many of us will follow your ministry with interest. Blessings on you as you study and preach the glorious gospel of Christ.

THE WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

REPORTS ON . . .

The Third World Conference On Faith and Order

To the list of historic church councils, add the Third World Conference on Faith and Order held at Lund, Sweden, this year of our Lord 1952, August 15 to 28.

What history will say concerning this conference we cannot know. How important the documents, over which the theologians have so earnestly labored and prayed, will seem, ten years or a century hence, cannot be predicted as this is written during the closing hours of the meeting.

How much the things said and done at Lund will mean to the rank and file of the churches and Christians around the world is predictable only in terms of how sincerely the churches are willing to follow Christ in his prayer that his disciples "may all be one."

Elected to preside at the conference were Archbishop Yngve Brilioth, the Primate of the Church of Sweden, president; Dr. Douglas Horton (U. S. A.) vice-president; Dr. Oliver Tomkins and Dr. Floyd Tomkins, secretaries; Dr. Leonard Horgson, theological secretary.

Thirty-nine instances either of union achieved between independent churches or of negotiations for union still in active progress were recorded in a document, "Toward Church Union, 1937-1952," by Bishop Stephen Neill. A previous volume entitled "A Decade of Objective Progress in Church Unity, 1927-1936," had previously been prepared by Dr. Paul H. Douglass. Much of the material in the present report had to be gleaned from periodicals and pamphlets, and from official church statements from countries and churches around the world. Statistics in both volumes, and especially in the current one, seem to indicate that the trend toward Christian unity is far more than merely a matter of talk. It is a real movement with a history that is impressive when understood. Examples cited ranged all the way from full organic union achieved across denominational lines to negotiations for mutual recognition of ministries within confessional families of churches.

Adopted as the Faith and Order

theme for the Second Assembly of the World Council of Churches (at Evanston, Illinois, U.S.A., 1954) is: "Our Oneness in Christ and Our Diversity as Churches."

Lund has achieved no miraculous formula for Christian unity, no panacea for overcoming the deep-grained divisions of centuries.

What, then, has been accomplished?

1. Official delegates of all the great confessional families of the world, and from lands of every continent, have met to worship together, study together, discuss and frankly probe their agreements and disagreements. They have been learning to know each other face to face as fellow followers of the same Lord. That such a conference could take place at all is the most tangible evidence of the degree of essential unity which does exist within the Church, despite the many factors that divide it.

Present at the meeting were 230 official delegates appointed by their churches, plus an impressive list of consultants and a youth delegation. Delegates were encouraged to bring their wives as "accredited visitors" and the women organized a series of meetings outside the official framework of the conference to discuss problems of special interest to them. Perhaps one weakness of the conference was that only three women were present as full delegates, and one as a consultant.

Noteworthy is the fact that several representatives were present from Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Eastern Germany, and their participations throughout the meeting was a stimulating and encouraging element in the discussions. Delegates from the younger churches not only took an active part in discussions, but because of the union already achieved in some of their united churches, gave important leadership in many of the sessions.

The delegates worshipped together daily according to manifold traditions—Angelicans, Baptists, Lutherans, Reformed, Quaker, Methodists, Russian Orthodox, and Mar Thoma (the ancient Church of India). Most of the delegates accepted the invitation of the Primate of the Church of Sweden to participate in "High Mass with Communion" held in the Cathedral on the first Sunday of the conference. A stirring moment was the morning worship service at which one of the Hungarian delegates preached from Philippians 1:3-8.

All worship services were held in the historic old Lund Cathedral, the foundations of which were laid in the twelfth century.

2. Coming to the conference from their own local or confessional situations, the delegates heard theologians of the widest experience and long history of ecumenical participation present these same or similar problems in world context. They can take back to their own churches the message that no matter under what conditions the individual church may have to work, other churches and other Christians are experiencing the same problems and are anxious to work with them to find solutions in accord with the Spirit of Christ.

3. The delegates have confirmed in their discussions a fact made evident in their preparatory study: that many of the differences which now divide the churches are not strictly theological, but are at least augmented and perpetuated by a whole galaxy of social and cultural factors which have their roots in racial, economic and psychological origins or, sometimes, in what seem to be mere accidents of history. Some of the members, however, pointed out that such factors should not be considered as negative since all history is in the hands of God.

Each of the church families travelling their diverse ways has acquired what some delegates termed "ecclesiastical baggage." Each group, however, has also acquired its own share of ecclesiastical treasure—treasure of diverse sorts that will enrich the ecumenical movement as the churches try to once more make manifest the central unity in Christ, a unity which they acknowledge as being already in existence.

Notice was also taken of the problems of terminology—the fact that many theological terms have come to mean different things to different churches during the years we have been apart, so that now our discussions become confused by problems of semantics.

4. It has also been discovered, increasingly, as the discussions have

Drinking Among Students in Our Colleges

By WAYNE W. WOMER, Exec. Sec'y Virginia Church Temperance Council, Inc.

During the last five years, the Yale Center on Alcohol Studies, Yale University, has been making a survey of College Drinking. This survey was costly and included one-hundred major items, covering all sections of the country and all types of colleges.

The study is essentially concerned with a significant age group in American society and sought information about many basic descriptive phenomena, (who drink, why, when, with whom, under what circumstances and with what resulting effects) as well as the inter-relationships between drinking behavior and socio-economic characteristics. Because of its broad orientation, the study provides for the first time a body of factual information, which will provide a more realistic basis for dealing with varied problems of alcohol.

The purpose of this article is not to attempt to give the complete survey, which will be published in book form, but to give several significant findings.

Family income revealed that students from the lower income families were more inclined to abstain from alcoholic beverages than those coming from the higher income brackets. The percentages were as follows:

Group	Men	Women
Income under $2,500	66	30
$2,500 to $4,999	74	48
$5,000 to $9,999	81	58
$10,000 and over	86	79

Percentages of users by religious affiliations also were significant:

Group	Men	Women
Jewish	94	94
Catholic	90	78
Protestant	77	60
Mormon	54	23

Among the Protestant students it was shown that only 50 per cent of those who attended church regularly were users of alcoholic beverages.

The type of college also seems to have a definite relation to percentages in this problem:

Group	Men	Women
Private Schools	93	87
State Colleges and Universities	83	74
Religious Colleges or Schools	65	39

Perhaps the most important revelation of this study is that of parental attitudes and example in the use of alcohol, as illustrated in the following classifications:

Group	Men	Women
Both Parents use Alcohol	90	83
One Parent uses Alcohol	81	52
Both Parents abstain	51	19

Here is a clear indication that the example of parents is of vital importance and has a significant relationship as to whether or not their children use alcoholic beverages. The number of students who use alcoholic beverages with both parents drinking is 51 per cent greater than the number of students who use alcoholic beverages with both parents abstaining. It was further shown in the Yale Survey that parental example was more influential in the use or non-use of alcoholic beverages than that of education or religion.

Another fact well worth noting, brought out in this survey is that 72 per cent of the students indicated that they began drinking before entering college. Therefore, it would seem that any program of Alcohol Education should begin at the grade school level, as other studies show that those who use alcoholic beverages take their first drink about the age of fifteen.

Some of the conclusions that can be drawn from the above facts taken from the survey are, that the use of alcoholic beverages is widespread among our present day college students. (It was indicated that the students had not given much thought as to why they drank, but reported that they were just following a custom); that, it is apparent this problem must be attacked at the home level during the adolescent period; that, if this situation is to be changed, there must be a change in the attitude of many parents. Also, this survey reflects the widespread use of alcoholic beverages in American society today. It presents a challenge to the Church to educate parents of their responsibility and the vital importance of disciplined Christian living. It also gives some significance to the values of the church-related college, and to the fact that the teaching of abstinence by the Evangelical branches of the Protestant Church has had some influence in the lives of their people.

By no stretch of the imagination, however, can the picture be called bright. It signifies there is much to be done if we are to make the principle of total abstinence an effective doctrine of Christian living. Before a solution can become effective, we need first to create a moral climate concerning the non use of alcoholic beverages, a new Christian morality that will give impetus to the cause of Abstinence. There is no other way. It must be a part of our Christian culture. The religious significance of this problem is rooted in our conviction that God has entrusted man with life, the world and all created things. Any use of these which obstructs right relations between man and God, and man and his fellows, is sin; and the result of personal sin is social evil. We have failed to provide an adequate program of education. We have let inertia take the place of social action on this vital issue.

Minister Resigns at Liberty (Vance) To Further His Education

On Sunday, August 17, Rev. Warren Matthews preached his final sermon at Liberty (Vance) Congregational Christian Church. Last November this young minister was asked to supply for the church after the resignation of Rev. T. Fred Wright, and later was extended a call to serve as pastor, which he accepted.

He preached two Sundays a month, but then being a senior at Elon College and because of his class room activities he was unable to do the pastoral work in the community that he wanted to do. However, he came as often as time permitted, and made as many visits as was possible. He made an extra effort to visit the sick and the shut-ins during his short stay in the community.

While at Liberty, he preached 20 regular sermons and conducted a week's revival services. He received 19 new members into the church, 17 being baptized the last day he was with us.

We feel that Mr. Matthews realized a very unusual experience: during his revival, he had seven brothers to profess Christ, join the church and be baptized by the Rev. Carl Wallace, with his assistance.

The impression made on the church, or I may say churches, because many visitors came from other churches to hear him, will be a lasting one. His messages were of the highest type. They were based on the word of God and were presented in such a calm, spiritual manner that often with the church filled almost to capacity, one could have almost heard a pin fall. He had a personality that attracted and held the attention of his listeners.

He came with messages filled with "A Formula for Christian Living." These truths, accompanied by the sincere, Christian influence he possessed, have meant much to both the church and the community.

During his pastorate, much improvement has been made in the Sun-

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Welcome to Freshmen—1952

The other day I went into the Field Secretary's office and said to Mrs. Burns and Mrs. Matlock, "Have you ladies written the incoming freshmen telling them what to bring with them when they come to Elon?" They answered, "We certainly have," and they gave me a copy of the letter which they had sent to you freshmen. In this letter were outlined the various articles for rooms, such as sheets and pillow cases, blankets, etc. I trust that you have brought all of these necessities, which I am sure you have. But I also trust that you have brought certain other articles for yourself personally and for your college. These articles might be termed articles for interior decoration, such as:

I. A good disposition. Make up your mind that this is to be your home for the next year, two, three or four, as the case may be. Since this is to be your home, there may be some things about it that you don't like; some that you wish were different, but there are many things that you do like, so make up your mind to be content, to be at home while you are here, and to be happy.

There are some folks, however, that can't be happy at all times. There are times when we are cross, disgruntled and hard to please. We do not mean any harm, but we are just made that way. You know sometimes you are just a little fussy and when you get into a mood of that kind, you have a tendency to make everybody around you dissatisfied and unhappy. It pays to be happy. Smile and the world smiles with you; weep and you weep alone.

II. I trust that you have brought with you a friendly attitude. Friends beget friends. If you want friends, and everybody does, be friendly. As students, speak to one another. Speak to everybody. Freshmen boys may blush a bit when you freshmen girls speak to them, but speak to them anyway—they'll like it, and you'll have a good time doing it. Speak to your professors. You will find them cordial, friendly, and happy to have their students speak. Speak to me. I wish you would speak to me and tell me your name. I have so little contact with the students, I would like for you to speak to me anywhere you see me. Speak in an interested way, speak to get acquainted. You perhaps have heard the story of the family on board ship. The sea was rough, the entire family was desperately seasick. They were all lying on deck—the father, the mother and little Johnny. The mother looked up and said to the father, "Speak to Johnny." The father said, "How do you do, Johnny." I am not speaking about this kind of speaking, but the happy, joyous kind. If you can only say "Hi," say "Hi"! Make sure that you are friendly and you will have plenty of friends.

III. Another article of decoration that I trust you brought along with you is a cooperative spirit. No one lives to himself on a college campus. We are our brother's keeper. There are dozens of ways in which you can help your fellow student. He may not know the way to the dining room, and you can help him. He may not know the way to his dormitory, and you can be of assistance. He may not know the way to the bookstore, and you can direct him. He may want to talk over with someone the courses that he would like to take—music, dramatics, art, or a selection of the regular courses. Sit down with each other and talk the matter over. You may be of help to your professor. Be sure that you understand your assignments. Then make sure that you prepare your lessons. Your professor is interested in you and anxious to help you. Be cooperative, be helpful yourself, open up the way for your own success in college.

Some years ago a number of boys came to the campus around the first of August to help get the buildings in order, mow the campus and do general odd jobs in helping the business manager get things in shape for the opening. A couple of the boys met another boy in front of West Dormitory and the two boys said to the one, "We are looking for a dust cloth, do you know where we could find one?" This boy had on a pair of blue jeans, and one leg was torn at the knee. He reached down, completed the tear, and handed the torn piece to the two boys. They asked, "What are you doing, why are you tearing your britches off?" He said, "I don't think anything is too good for Elon College."

IV. Another article for interior decoration is an open mind. A mind that knows its limitations, but at the same time is eager and hungry for knowledge, and is anxious to add to its own statue and to make the very best of your college days. The professors in this college know more than you do. That's why you are here. Get all you can out of them. They are anxious to share their information with you and will be happy to see you grow and develop mentally. This is your one chance for a college education. Be sure to make good. You will find on this campus a good library. For more than sixty years your college has been purchasing books, stacking them in the library so that they will be there when you come and when you need them. You won't be able to read all the books in the library, but there are many books that you should and doubtless will read. Your professor and the whole library force will be glad to cooperate with you in selecting the books that you need to read and that you should read. So many students go through college without knowing much about the library, using as few books as they have to. Make friends of good books. They will inform you, inspire you, and develop you as few other things in the world can or will.

V. Another article of interior decoration that I trust that you brought along with you is a determined mind. A determination that you are going to find out what college life is about.

X.--Babylon, Baghdad, and the "Garden of Eden"

Now I know why Abraham left Ur of the Chaldees—he could not stand the heat. In our visit to Bible lands, Mrs. Sloan and I went to Iraq, the traditional Garden of Eden. We found the temperature 117 degrees.

Despite the heat, we enjoyed visiting the ruins of Babylon, from which Nebuchadnezzar conquered Jerusalem 2500 years ago. We also enjoyed Baghdad of Arabic lore, the Tigris and Euphrates rivers.

The Bible will always be more alive for us because of this visit to Egypt, Sinai, Palestine (both Jordan and Israel), ancient Babylon and Assyria, Syria, Greece and now Rome. We can appreciate the journeys of Abraham, Moses, Paul and the migrating Hebrew people.

We shall never forget that trip to Baghdad. At 6:30 in the morning we found a car in Jerusalem going to Amman, the capital of Jordan in the mountains east of the Jordan River. We had a busy four hours there. We first visited the American consul to get a letter to the Iraqi consul asking the latter to grant us a visa. At the Iraqi consulate, we found the consul had had too much to drink, and was not going to grant us the necessary visa. He demanded proof that I was a Christian—evidently he was not going to allow any Jews into his country. Then he demanded that I prove that I was not a missionary. One must be a little Christian, but not too much so. Finally several cups of coffee and my wife's questions about differences between Iraqi and Jordan Arabic got the gentleman into a good enough humor to grant a visa—for ten dollars plus fees for taking our pictures.

Now that we might enter Iraq, we had to get permission to leave Jordan. The police officer in charge was in good humor, but in going through our passport to prove to himself we had not been in the hated Israel, he found our entrance permit for Ethiopia in Africa. The odd Ahabric letters looked to him like Hebrew. Again persuasion was necessary.

Now that we might leave Jordan, we had to go to another office to get a visa to get back into Jordan. This proved the most difficult of all, but patience and persistence won just a few minutes before the car was to leave that was to take us twenty-one hours across the desert.

In addition to Mrs. Sloan and myself, the car contained eight large Arab men, six of them with long flowing desert costumes. I think the car had springs, but our weight flattened them out. At one bump I hit my head a hard wallop on the top of the car. We were in convoy with another car. About 2:00 a. m., it broke an axle. When we found we could be of no help, we left the car in the desert after the other passengers had demanded we take them aboard; and one had to be thrown off the car after we got started.

About day-light the driver became so sleepy he stretched out in the road for fifteen minutes. The night was not hot, but as the sun rose the temperature also rose. When we reached the Baghdad Y. M. C. A., about noon, we were glad to find a tub of water, dinner and beds.

Our return journey across the desert was also by night—people do not travel in the heat of the day. But this time we got a Nairn bus to Damascus in Syria. We were provided with comfortable seats, food and cold drinking water.

About 3:00 p. m., we left Damascus by car for Amman, expecting to reach Jerusalem that night. However, ahead of us some one tried to smuggle hashish (dope) across the border into Jordan. Possibly our driver was a smuggler too! The police were taking no chances. They jacked up our car and prodded and tapped every part of it, even the air in the spare tire. We passed the examination, but did not reach Amman until 10:00 p. m., too late to get another car to Jerusalem. Even then we made much better time than Paul did in his journeys between Damascus and Jerusalem.

Crossing through the Mandelbaum Gate and across "no-man's"—and into Israel is, as we have related, a story within itself.

When I was in Palestine some years ago, it was a pleasant drive of less than six miles from Jerusalem to Bethlehem, but that is no longer so. Jerusalem and Bethlehem are both in Jordan, but most of the road is in Israel and, therefore, cannot be used. The Arabs have built an expensive road twisting among the Judean mountains. It is nearly twenty miles long and requires an hour's time. Most of the old road from Jerusalem to Nazareth is in Jordan, so the Israeli have built a road from their part of Jerusalem to Nazareth, which they "own." We drove many hundred miles by car and bus in both countries and really saw the rural regions. Road-blocks are frequent, but we got past them. I took a picture of a road-block on the road from Jerusalem to Emaus and realized that there are some similarities between today and the time of Jesus, when the Romans had their army of occupation in the land.

When Peter spent some time at Lydia, he never dreamed that we should take a plane and fly to Greece. That is the way we got to Athens, where we stood on Mars Hill and recited from memory Paul's address. Another plane from Athens took us across Paul's Corinth to the "Eternal City," Rome—the city of Peter and Paul. We visited the "tombs" of both of these saints, but failed to find the religious courage of Peter or the scholarly thoughtfulness of Paul in the expressions of Christianity we saw about us.

I do not recommend a summer visit to Iraq, but otherwise feel that every person who wants to understand and appreciate his Bible should visit the Bible lands.

Apart from Iraq, the weather has been splendid. I have spent some time investigating prices and find that by eliminating all frills and commissions. I could bring a group of North Carolina and Virginia people (not less than fifteen) to London, Paris, Rome, Athens, Beirut, Damascus, Jordan, Israel and Egypt next summer for a thirty-day trip for a little less than twelve hundred dollars each, about half of what a new car would cost.

NOTE.—This is the last of Dr. Sloan's articles on Africa and the Bible lands. He, however, "after spending ten days in Roman Catholic strongholds," has decided that he would write one more report. This article will appear in the coming issue of The Sun. The managing editor wishes publicly, as the editor has already privately done, to thank Dr. Sloan for this series of most informative articles.—Mg. Ed.

The North Carolina Woman's Conference

The annual Woman's Missionary Conference of North Carolina will be held on Tuesday, October 7, at Apples Chapel Church, beginning at 10 o'clock a. m.

This is to be a workshop conference, with an attempt to make practical and helpful suggestions for each department of work.

Each society should try to send at least the president, vice-president and Program chairman, but it is a great help to have all attend who will. Chairmen of departments and committees should try to attend if at all possible.

All pastors are especially invited to come.

Lunch will be served at the church.

Hines Chapel Society Has Had Successful Year

The Hines Chapel Society has completed a most successful year—both spiritually and financially.

Each program—book review, Bible study and devotional study—has been spiritual nourishment for the soul.

We have gained two new members the past year, boosting our number to twenty-two, but I regretfully report that only about fifty per cent are active. Nevertheless, through faith and prayer our society achieved its standard of excellence.

We are proud to report our apportionment for the year of $80.00 was paid in the early months. We received for our Thank Offering $62.00, for World Community Day $9.00, and for Friendly Service to Ryder Memorial Hospital in Puerto Rico $14.00. At Thanksgiving we took a special offering of $18.00 for the orphanage. A shower gift of $35.00 was given our pastor's wife for the forthcoming "blessed event." A life membership was purchased for Mrs. L. R. Anderson, senior member of our group.

Each meeting we take a cent-a-meal offering. So far, we have received $45.55, which has been deposited to the credit of our building fund. Yes, we are still working and praying to achieve the project of an educational building for our church, which we have been working on for a number of years. The past year, we have sold Christmas cards and flavoring to boost this fund to approximately $1,800.00.

We enjoyed worshiping with the Monticello women for the May Fellowship and the World Day of Prayer services.

The book reviews were beautifully given by two of our own members. We are proud of the ability shown in our group.

With the assistance of our pastor, we experienced a most inspiring study of the Book of James.

New officers were installed at our meeting on September 4, which was held at the church. They are: Mrs. Ray Carter, president; Mrs. J. W. Iseley, vice-president; Mrs. Julius Rice, secretary and treasurer. All members of the Hines Chapel society request the prayers of the readers for a greater work for God's Kingdom in 1952-53.

A Letter from Bay View Woman's Fellowship

Greetings from the Woman's Fellowship of Bay View. Although it has been a long time since you have heard from us, we have not forgotten you.

We have been and still are a very busy group of women. We are in the midst of our building program and hope to be in our new Sunday school rooms the first Sunday in October.

We have had our home and foreign mission studies and also our Bible study. We had our Thanksgiving service in November.

We sent Friendly Service gifts to Franklinton, to the Elon Orphanage, a box of clothing to India and a gift to a local child at Christmas.

We attended the fall conference, the spring rally and the School of Missions, which we enjoyed very much.

We observed World Community

Day, the World Day of Prayer and May Fellowship Day.

We have given $1,500.00 to our building program so far this year. We paid all of our apportionment.

We had our fellowship picnic on August 6, with our husbands and children as special guests, and all had a wonderful time.

As my term of office as president draws to a close, I wish to publicly thank each member of our fellowship for their wonderful cooperation and help.

I know that God has richly blessed us, and I pray that he will be with us in the years ahead and will bless and guide our new president, Mrs. L. D. Albert, who takes office in October.

MRS. B. C. HASKET,
President.

First Christian, Portsmouth, Reporting

The Woman's Fellowship of the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Virginia, has held regular monthly meetings during the past year, with planned programs from the packet, which have been most interesting.

We have had two outstanding book reviews: "Mission to America" was given by Mrs. Stanley Carne in January, and "We Americans: North and South," by Mrs. W. I. Ham in March. We also attended a joint book review at the Suffolk Christian Church, when Dr. Truman B. Douglass reviewed his own book, "Mission to America."

We observed World Community Day and the World Day of Prayer, working with our United Council of Church Women.

Early on the morning of April 1, we were shocked and grieved at the sudden death of our beloved pastor, Rev. W. Stanley Carne. We have greatly missed the fine leadership, counsel and guidance of our good pastor. We have also missed Mrs. Carne, our councilor and program chairman, who was so very active in all of the church work. Mrs. Carne left us in June to reside with her parents in Maine.

In May we observed Fellowship Day by uniting with the South Street Baptist Church in entertaining service men with refreshments and entertainment.

In July we held a picnic supper and open air meeting at the city park.

We have sent a large package of clothing to the migrant center at Richmond, Virginia, and also helped

A Page for Our Children

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Boys and Girls:

When I wrote about hospitals last week, I didn't know that I would be going back to one so soon, but I did! The editor of our paper is resting in bed, feeling better and trying some of the things I "prescribed."

School bells have been ringing. Two little boys were talking about the oldest school. One of them said St. Petersburg, Florida, had the oldest one, but the other boy argued that Symes-Eaton School in Hampton, Virginia, was the oldest. It is certainly the oldest public school of the English speaking peoples; but schools go back much further than that.

We know that Jesus, as a baby, learned from his mother and Joseph. Later he went to the synagogue, and there he heard the ancient stories of the Jewish people and read the words on the old scrolls. Perhaps you have seen a picture of the teacher or rabbi with boys around him. Girls were taught at home how to cook, spin, weave, nurse, and wait upon the men. Times have changed! It might be well for girls to spend more time learning things to do at home now.

We no longer teach everything at church, but we shouldn't neglect our church studies.

As you begin a new school year, learn many things, for learning is the great joy and work of life.

JUNE JOY HOUSE.

Making Decisions

By MABEL-RUTH JACKSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association

Mrs. Moore and her new neighbor, Mrs. Caldwell, had arranged to take their children to the park for an afternoon outing. Mrs. Caldwell was ready first and called for her friend.

"Sorry," said Mrs. Moore, "I seem to be a bit slow this morning." Then turning to her little daughter, she said, "Gwen, we're all ready but you. Do you want to wear your yellow or your blue sweater?"

"Uh—the yellow, I think," answered the child. "No, I think I'll wear the blue."

"The blue it is," said her mother briskly. "Come on. We're going to have a good time."

After they had reached the park and the mothers had established themselves where they could watch their children playing, Mrs. Caldwell asked curiously, "Do you always let your youngsters choose what they're going to wear or do? I mean, the way you asked Gwen which sweater she was going to wear?"

Mrs. Moore laughed as she took out some socks to darn. "Oh, that! No, not always. I hope I don't carry it too far. I don't think children should have to make decisions all day. But I do feel they should learn to make them and have practice in making them, where there is a choice. Gwen needs this training more than the boys do; she has trouble making up her mind. I don't want her to grow up to be a shillyshallyer. She must learn to make decisions and abide by them."

"This is a new thought to me, Mrs. Moore," remarked Mrs. Caldwell. "Could you give me some more instances?"

"Well, I think all mothers believe in giving their children some small duties to do about the house. Gwen is old enough to dry the silverware, pick up newspapers, and do things like that. I try to think up a variety of chores. Then I ask, 'Do you want to dust the table legs and chair rungs today? Or would you rather water the plants?' That avoids monotony for her. Also, I've found that there's something about being allowed to make a choice that takes away from the 'must' aspect of the chore. I believe it makes the child feel more like a co-worker than when merely obeying orders."

"How I used to dislike having to wash dishes night after night!" exclaimed Mrs. Caldwell. "There was no choice."

Mrs. Moore laughed. "The 'choice' system has helped me, too," she went on.

"When Jimmie was smaller, he hated to wash his hands, and—"

"Are there any boys who haven't been that way?"

"Very few, I imagine. I put two bars of soap by the bowl, then took time to go to the bathroom with Jimmie, and I asked him, 'Would you like to use the white soap or the green soap today?'"

"That sounds too simple," said Mrs. Caldwell inereduously. "You don't mean to tell me it worked?"

"It did. Soon I didn't need to go to the bathroom with him to put the question. And now, of course, he's past that stage."

Mrs. Caldwell drew a deep breath. "Mrs. Moore," she said gratefully, "I'm certainly glad we had a chance to have this little talk today. I feel that I've learned something valuable."

MINISTER RESIGNS AT LIBERTY (VANCE).

day school. The following figures were presented on his last visit in the Sunday school: During August, 1951, number on roll, 260; average attendance, 195; during August, 1952, number on roll, 295; average attendance, 264. There was also a greater interest shown at the worship service.

His entire stay here has been a pleasant and profitable one. The church seems more united, and at the present, seems ready to begin a new and better service, with the coming of the new pastor, Rev. W. A. Grissom, who began his work here on September 1.

Warren, as he is familiarly known by the people of Liberty, left early in September for Hartford, Conn., to enter the seminary there for further preparation for the work which he has chosen to do. The people here have full confidence that he will make good and they are looking forward to having him come back to the South better prepared to carry on where he left off.

He expressed the desire to see the great mission at Liberty (Vance) carried out. "There are great things to be done," he said. "For a short while, I will be away, preparing to be a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. If you need me, call on me, I will count it a privilege to come to your need. I will pray continually for your success."

He further said: "Your new minister is coming to you with a great vision, ready and prepared to do a great work. Support him in every way. Give him your prayers, and help him in every way possible to make the coming years at Liberty (Vance) the best ever."

College Students from Winston-Salem Church

One of the grand things about life is to see and know college students. Winston-Salem church had four to graduate from college this summer:

Helen Jackson from Elon College; Irvin Kelley from High Point College;

Rita McKerley Lang from Duke University;

John H. Seawell, Jr., from Stetson University (Florida).

With the exception of Rita, who remained in Durham with her medical student husband, the others are located at home again and are teaching nearby. It is a joy to have them working here again.

College life begins for Meryle Jean Mauldin at Elon College and for Jimmy Nelson at Duke University. Both have shared in the work of our church here and both are excellent leaders. Meryle Jean is the new treasurer of the Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship. Jimmy is a star football player and will soon take his place on the squad at Duke.

Also returning to college are

Johnny Penry, a sophomore at the University of North Carolina;

Roger Jackson, a junior at State College in Raleigh.

Returning to medical school is sophomore Warren Batell at the Boman Gray School of Medicine in Winston-Salem. Bill Lang has continued his work at Duke Medical School this summer.

We are proud of our college and medical students. The church honors them each fall before they leave with a luncheon. Correspondence is continued during the year.

The Pilgrim Fellowship gave a "going away" weiner roast for those going away to school for the first time and for several other young people who were moving to the State of Washington to be with their father who is in the army there.

Report of Eastern Virginia Junior High Camp

The Eastern Virginia Junior High Camp was held August 24-29, at the Y. M. C. A. Camp, Bayside, Virginia. The camp included 66 students from 16 churches and ten counselors. The churches represented were: Suffolk, Berea, Bethlehem, Holy Neck, Liberty Spring, Burton's Grove, Little Creek, Wakefield, Newport News, South Norfolk, Rosemont, Damascus, Oakland, Windsor, Franklin, Cypress Chapel, and visitors from Bay View.

Our Counselors were Rev. Lanson Granger, dean; Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, registrar; Mrs. R. E. Brittle, dean of girls; Rev. James Madren, Mr. Timothy S. Chang, Rev. C. C. Thomas, Rev. and Mrs. Baxter Twiddy, Mrs. Dorothy Lassiter and Miss Phyllis Brinkley.

We awoke each morning at 7 o'clock with the bugle call. Breakfast was at 7:30, followed by ten minutes of quiet time. After that was our time to clean up our cabins. Our two hour adventure class followed, in which time we were to get closer to God by nature. Following this was a half-hour of swimming, and then lunch at 12:15.

A one hour rest period came next, followed by crafts. Recreation and swimming came just before lunch at 6:15. Refreshments at the Y. M. C. A. Surf Club was followed by our evening program.

We had a very interesting campfire service each night led by Baxter Twiddy and his worship group. Then came time for taps and lights out around 9:30.

Our offering the last evening was given to Timothy Chang in order that he might further his Christian education.

Communion was held on Thursday evening before taps. This was the most impressive of all the services held.

A good time was had by all. We want every church represented at the camp next year.

Berea Youth Group Meets

Our group, the Intermediate Class and Youth Fellowship of the Berea Christian Church, was organized on the first of January and met on the first Sunday in each month thereafter. Officers were elected as follows: Lad Daniels, president; George Cornell, vice-president; Frances Copeland, secretary, and George DeGraw, treasurer. Our goal for the year was well planned and successfully completed.

Reidsville Young People's Choir Presents Sacred Concert

The Young People's Choir of the Reidsville, North Carolina, Church, under the very able direction of Miss Marian Foust, presented a concert of sacred music at the Sunday evening hour of worship on August 24. The church was almost filled for this fine program. Not only members and friends of our church were present, but many visitors from surrounding churches.

The program began with an organ and piano prelude by Miss Foust and Miss Patsy Chrisman. "Watch and Pray" was sung by Ann Black, Wilma Ann Saunders and Shelby Dill. The choir then sang: "Lead Me, Lord," "Spirit of Mercy, Truth and Love," "In Pastures Green," "Lord, I Want to be a Christian," "O Lamb of God, I Come" and "Jesus, the Very Thought of Thee."

The Girl's Chorus then sang "We, Thy People, Praise Thee," "Stand Up for Jesus" and "Glorious Things of Thee are Spoken."

Next on the program were two solos, "I Walked Today Where Jesus Walked," by Gloria Woodall, and "Bless This House," by Walter Scott.

Members of the Youth Choir include: Katrina Williams, Sue Humphries, Ouida Apple, Ann Black, Patsy Chrisman, Dot Hall, Doris Apple, Bronsa Dockery, Peggy McClintock, Shirley Apple, Joe Ann Lasley, Gloria Woodall, Christine Claiborne, Dorothy Dill, Shelby Dill, Wilma Saunders, Barbara Brown, Janie Mills, John Warner, Doug Holt, Walter Scott, Michael Fargis, Gilbert Smith and Richard Payne.

This is a fine group of young people who are very loyal and faithful in their ministry of music, and who contribute a great deal to the program of the church.

Solomon Begins His Reign

LESSON XI—SEPTEMBER 21, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Trust in the Lord with all thy heart, and lean not upon thine own understanding; in all thy ways acknowledge him, and he will direct thy paths."—Proverbs 3: 5-6.

LESSON: I Kings 1: 38-40; 3: 5-9; 8: 27-30.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Prov. 3: 15-18.

A Plot That Went Wrong.

David was old, weak and dying. There would soon be a new king. Adonijah was David's eldest son, and by usual processes would have succeeded his father to the throne. In fact, so sure was he of this, that he did some celebrating. He called together some of his friends and followers, including Joab, a general in the military—and Abiathar, the priest—he had the support of the priestly class—and he staged a big party. It was a "coup" so often repeated in succeeding centuries that had every indication of being successful. But Adonijah's celebration was a little premature. He never got to be king. He did not have the kingly qualities, and God had other plans.

When Bathsheba, Solomon's mother, got word of the proposed "coup," she summoned Nathan the prophet, and together they went to see the king about the matter. He soon set things to right. He said that Solomon was to be king, and he gave orders to have him anointed as king over Israel at once. It is the only instance in Israel's history where a son was anointed king during his father's lifetime.

A New King Is Crowned.

Acting upon David's orders, Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet sought out Solomon and put him on the king's mule and brought him to Gihon, where Zadok the priest took some of the sacred oil from the tabernacle and anointed him king. Then they brought him to Jerusalem amid great rejoicing.

Adonijah and his coterie of followers heard the great celebration and inquired at to the cause of it. When he was told that Solomon had been anointed king on David's orders, he knew "the jig was up." He fled in terror to the altar for sanctuary, and appealed to Solomon for mercy. Solomon put him on probation, assuring him that if he would show himself "a worthy man, there shall not a hair fall from him to the earth; but if wickedness shall be found in him, he shall die." This was a little unusual treatment of a usurper to the throne, even in that far away day.

The People's Choice.

Solomon was evidently the "people's choice." Only a little clique wanted Adonijah as king. This young man had many qualities that fitted him for the kingship, and the people hailed him with enthusiasm and joy. The fact that he was the beloved David's son, the fact that he was smart, the fact that he showed such promise, caused him to be a great favorite with the masses. He began his reign with a united, loyal people behind him.

A Personal "Gun Man."

The Bible presents human nature in the raw as well as in the refined. There are some nasty chapters in the early days of Solomon's reign. He had a man in his circle of intimate followers who was his personal "gun man," a fellow named Benaiah, who first "bumped off" Joab, one of the leaders of the revolt, and Adonijah, his rebel brother, and Shimei, one of his father's old enemies. It all sounds like the system which modern gangsters still use in getting rid of folks who stand in their way. We must remember, however, that we are dealing with times different from our times. The standards of that day are not to be taken as the standards of this day, and we are to judge these men in the light of the times in which they lived.

A Blank Check.

"Ask what I shall give thee?" In a sense, it is God's signed blank check to Solomon. "Name it and you can have it," says God. What do you really want? What one thing would you rather have than all else? What would you say if God should ask you that question he asked Solomon? If you had been in this young king's place, what would you have said? More specifically, what is your answer to that question now? What do you want more than anything else? What one thing do you request of God? What do you crave? What is the deepest desire of your heart? These are good questions to ask the men and women who seek our public offices and places of authority. They are also good questions to ask ourselves.

"What seek ye," asked Jesus on one occasion. It is a stabbing, sobering question that probes to the very innermost of our being.

A Wise Choice.

The young man might have asked for riches—a great many of us want that more than anything else, even more than honor or purity, or character itself. He might have asked for power, more power—many people seek power. He might have asked for long life—every normal man wants to live. He might have asked for many things. But hear him when he says in answer to God's question, "I am but a little child. . . . Give, therefore, thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and bad." He asked for wisdom, for understanding, for discernment so that he might be a good ruler and a good steward of his privileges. And because he asked for this elemental and primary thing, God told him he should have riches and long life in addition.

A Greater Need.

And yet Solomon lacked something—the same thing that we lack. Like him, we need more than wisdom, the power to discern between good and bad. We need power to do. A young agricultural demonstrator approached a farmer and told him he would be glad to tell him how to do better farming. The farmer sadly told the young man that he already knew better than he was doing. Ah, the power to do what we know we ought to do, that's the thing we all need. But this does not minimize the importance of the choice which Solomon made.

A House of God.

There is not space to describe the Temple which Solomon built in Jerusalem. It is estimated to have cost between two and three billion dollars. That would be a sizeable chunk of money in these days, but think of three billion dollar jobs in that day! The important thing is that Solomon wanted to put worship at the center of the life of his nation. He put God at the heart of the state. He emphasized worship in the life of a nation. He honored God. And he himself worshipped God. It is not enough simply to build houses of God; people must use them.

THIRD WORLD CONFERENCE ON FAITH AND ORDER.

progressed, that many of the most vital differences—and agreements—cut squarely across denominational lines. This would be true of even what are generally considered quite strictly theological factors, the most difficult of which are probably questions of ordination and inter communion.

5. One of the most important advances made, according to some leaders, is one of method. At the first and second world conference on Faith and Order (Lausanne, Switzerland, 1927, and Edinburgh, Scotland, 1937) the method was largely one of "cataloging" areas of agreement and disagreement.

Soon after the present conference opened, it became evident that this would no longer be the most fruitful avenue of research, but rather a dead end in the search for unity. The theologians, therefore, began to look back into church history—back to the days before the present divisions developed—and asked themselves at what point these divisions had come about and why, and whether there were not almost always a degree of righteousness, and of guilt, on both sides of our historic divisions. Repentance, on the part of every church, it was said, would open the way to renewal within the Church and renewed churches could come together in new ways to rediscover their common unity. Thus the delegates looked not only backwards to a common historic unity, but forward to the renewal of the complete unity of Christ's Church in an "eschatological" future and to the increasing achievement of that unity in history.

6. The conference found it possible to speak through an official message to the churches. "It is the hope of the conference," said one spokesman early in the deliberations, "to produce a report that can be inserted into the life of the churches, like leaven. The success of the conference may be judged by the extent to which that report helps the churches to rise, and the degree to which this is achieved will scarcely be known in less than foom five to ten years."

As the discussions got under way, based on—but in no way bound by—preparatory materials produced by some of the world's most competent theologians, it soon became evident that the problems uppermost in the minds of the delegates revolved around the very nature of the Church itself. Sections, which have formed the working core of the conference, have focused their attention on various aspects of this subject. As welded into the Conference Report their work has yielded chapters on "Christ and His Church," "Continuation in Unity," "Worship," and "Intercommunion."

It is a first principle of the ecumenical movement that official statements are binding upon the member churches only as those churches voluntarily accept them. The reports are there "received," not "adopted." But this report will be grist for the most serious study and discussion by the churches in the years between now and the meeting of the World Council of Churches Assembly in Evanston, Illinois in 1954, at which times these findings will be reported.

Appraising the value of its own work, the conference says in its report: "We have not resolved our differences nor brought forth before the world a simple method of achieving unity. Yet we have safeguards against complacency of a far more important kind. This conference, by its very existence as well as by repeated emphases, has called the churches both to a deeper awareness of their common faith and to a more resolute effort to translate that faith into terms clearly visible in their common life. More perfect agreement waits upon a more adventurous courage and upon a more urgent effort of the will. . . ."

"In the task which lies ahead, there is a part which every Christian can play. The insufficiency of our discipleship is due to the imperfection of our dedication to God's will. If our churches have not risen to match the needs of the world with a clear demonstration of God's will and purpose, the cause lies partly in the apathy and laxness of so many who call themselves by Christ's name. When Christian people have humbly returned to the only springs of mercy and power, they will find that their feet are firmly set upon the path which leads to that unity which God has designed for his people. Most earnestly, therefore, we summon all Christians to the duty of constantly renewed self-dedication to the will of God. And when we are ready humbly to receive what God designs to give us, we shall know that the greatest treasures of his Church are never of human achievement but always of divine grace."

dry weather had saved the farmers the trouble. Yet the swollen western river gave evidence of heavy rains along its course.

Once we became lost and drove a distance out of the way. The good spirit of the trip was shown by the way the men were able to pass off this delay with light jests. The men were happy to stretch their legs after a long journey. We had reached our destination. California? No. Only Pattie Lee and a few other lucky people get to go there. We were at Albemarle for the Laymen's Fellowship Rally. We enjoyed the trip and the program.

Relax With Max

I'm taking the risk of plugging the Laymen's Fellowship on our Youth Page because all of you boys and young men can take part in this program of the church. It's one good social affair where you can go without having to take your girl flowers. In fact, you can't even take your girl!

It was a pleasure to register at Elon this year, for as I walked through the halls I saw many familiar faces—faces of the boys and girls from our churches. These are the young men and young women that Elon needs and our churches need. Because of them, this promises to be one of Elon's best years.

Dr. Truitt told me the other day that he reads the Youth Page, and I'm sure that there are a good many other adults who read it each week. We are happy that we have these people who are young in spirit and who are interested in us. Let's not disappoint them. I'm sorta proud of this page today because you sent in a good bit of news. Keep it coming.

The lamp with a clean globe and the lamp with a dirty globe have the same amount of light. The only difference is that the dirty lamp keeps the light to itself, while the clean lamp shares it. What sorta' lamp are you?

The Orphanage
 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Frank Hayes is nine. After due study of his application blank, he was brought here by a county welfare agency from a mountain home in western North Carolina. My son and I drove up a hard stiff hill to reach his home on a mountainside when I was studying his ease. The afternoon was growing late and we were glad to get down and across the two creeks which we had to ford. I saw Frank the next day after his friends had left him here. I asked him how he liked it here. "I like it fine," he said, "except I'm mighty lonely." "Lonely?" I asked. How could he be lonely with all these boys and girls? With my arm around his shoulder, I saw a sort of far-away look in his eyes. Then it came out, he was lonely for the hills.

Two days later Jerry Patterson came with his grandmother. I should like to separate those words and write grand mother, for from his infancy she had cared for him, loved him, petted him, and provided him with whatever he had needed. Now she is older and her health has become very greatly impaired, and so here was Jerry. Shortly after he had been here a day or so I said, "Jerry, how goes it? How do you like here." "Fine," he said, "except I'm lonely." He was two years younger than Frank, so I said to him that I knew what he meant. Even when I was much older than seven, I had been lonely, so I just listened as he talked. He said that he missed the water. Ah! yes, I knew he was from Atlantic, North Carolina. I have never been there, but I know it is on the east coast of North Carolina, and there is the ocean—the Atlantic ocean.

There they are, two fine boys, both bright of face and keen of eye, and both beloved by old grandmothers. Their paths met halfway on the Piedmont hills. We shall try as best we can to make up to them their losses, and give them the watchful care and oversight to which, in their innocent boyhood, they are entitled. May they become good friends, and may God bless them, and may the one have the opportunity to learn of the beauty and majesty of the mountains and the other the majesty and beauty of the sea.

This summer a minister and his family in the Valley of Virginia gave two boys who had never seen the mountains two weeks in their home, which they will never forget.

There are five other new children here: Marjie Lee Hayes, and four Oakes—Ruby Ann, Betty Jean, Dewey Alvis, and Jeannette. Jeannette is only three and a half, but how could we leave her behind. Our church at Albemarle has already spoken for the sponsorship of Jeannette, and I know they will do a good job by her.

Charles has been here already more than a year. Some of you have seen him in our programs and noticed his limp and little leg. Some time before he came here, he had infantile paralysis. He has spent several weeks at an orthopedic hospital. It seemed that he was going along fine; but the surgeon on his case did not like the slowness of the improvement, and has decided to keep him at the hospital for two or three months more. Charles was delighted when I entered him into the hospital to see old friends among the nurses and doctors. It was pathetic to think of his having to be left there away from the so many friends which he has made here. If you wish to send him a cherry card, address him: Master Charles Ward, Orthopedic Hospital, Gastonia, N. C.

Thanks to you all for the kindness you are showing us in helping with the shoes and clothing for school children here. Thanks for the gifts of money and goodwill you are remembering to send to the orphanage. Thanks for the coupons that are coming our way, and thanks for the visits you are making us.

In Memoriam

WILLIAMSON.

Mr. John Greeley Williamson passed away on July 27, 1952, as a result of injuries received in a tractor accident. He was 57 years of age, and lived in Mecklenburg County, Virginia.

Mr. Williamson was a member of Hebron Christian Church, Nelson, Virginia. Funeral services were conducted at the church by the pastor, Rev. M. W. Andes, and assisted by Rev. Paul Travis. Burial followed in the Gravel Hill Cemetery.

Mr. Williamson is survived by his wife, Mrs. Lillie Davis Williams; by two sons, Bruce, of Clarksville, Va., and William Lee, of the U. S. Navy; by two daughters, Ruth, at home, and Mrs. Evelyn Willard of South Boston, Va.; and by one brother, Mr. W. A. Williamson, of Nelson, Va.

We give thanks for all the goodness and truth that have passed from his life into the lives of others.

GLASSCOCK.

Mrs. Nannie Murry Glasscock, wife of the late M. W. Glasscock, passed away suddenly at her home near Virgilina, Va., on July 14, 1952, at the age of 78.

Mrs. Glasscock was a lifelong member of Union Congregational Christian Church of Virgilina. Funeral services were conducted on July 15 at the church by the pastor, Rev. M. W. Andes, and assisted by the Rev. H. E. Robinson. Burial followed in the town cemetery.

Mrs. Glasscock is survived by five daughters: Mrs. W. F. Shotwell, Mrs. N. C. Tuck, Mrs. Worth Jones, and Mrs. Fenton Clark, all of Virgilina, and Mrs. A. M. Blank of Richmond; by four sons: W. B., R. W., A. P. Glasscock of Virgilina, and H. H. Glasscock of Richmond; by 34 grandchildren and by 21 great grandchildren.

May God be praised for the many gracious memories that surround her life.

RASCOE.

On August 1, 1952 Ernest B. Rascoe, of 315 Hall Ave. Burlington, N. C. died after several months of illness. He was 68 years of age, and is survived by his widow Mrs. Mabel Truitt Rascoe and a sister Mrs. Ollie Stephens of Burlington. He had been a deacon in the First Christian Church of Burlington, N. C., for more than 25 years. He was known as one of the best loved laymen in his church, and his loyalty and devotion was a great asset to the church.

In the absence of his pastor, Rev. Henry E. Robinson, his funeral was conducted in the church by the assistant pastor, Rev. John S. Graves, Rev. Walstein W. Snyder, and the writer. The large auditorium was crowded, the floral tributes were many, and the music, consisting of hymns previously selected by the deceased and sung by a mixed quartet from the church choir, was beautiful. The services were a fitting tribute of a large congregation to a life lived nobly for his master.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

SCOTT.

Malissa Hand, a daughter of Mr. E. S. Hand was born in Tallapoosa County, Alabama, May 1, 1901. Malissa married J. O.

Scott, January 19, 1923. They moved to Chicago, Illinois, in 1935 and made their home there, where she died on August 10, 1952.

She gave her life to Christ in childhood and united with the Christian church. When Vanceville (Ga.) Christian Church was organized, she became a charter member. She held her membership there, and was faithful and loyal till she received her summons and went to be with her Lord. She was a lovely character who "Went about doing good." She was loved by all who knew her. Eternity alone can reveal the real value of a consecrated Christian life, be it long or short.

Malissa leaves to mourn their loss her father, one brother, four sisters, and numerous other relatives and friends.

Funeral services were held August 17, at Tifton, Ga., where her body was buried to await the resurrection of the just.

MRS. W. A. HAND.

LEWIS

We the members of Holy Neck Congregational Christian Church wish to pay tribute to the memory of Cecil Lewis who departed this life July 8, 1952.

He was a son of Henry C. and Mahala Anderson Lewis. Surviving him are his widow Mrs. Edith Gomer Lewis, a daughter, Mrs. Robert Warren, two grandsons, Delbert Dean and Melvin Ronald Warren of Holland, Virginia.

Mr. Lewis spent his entire life in this community where he was engaged in farming. His son-in-law, Robert Warren joining him as a partner in recent years.

We the church wish to submit the following resolutions of respect:

1. That he be remembered in his community as a generous and kind neighbor and friend;
2. That we record our sorrow in the passing of this friend and co-worker;
3. That we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father and extend our sympathy to the family, commending them to the Great Comforter who said "Let not your heart be troubled."

Miss ALLIE LEE NORFLEET,
Mrs. C. C. BAKER,
Mrs. JUNE O. DAVIDSON, Sr.,
Committee.

You are going to know something of the advantages and use them to the fullest extent. Find out who has been the best student in Elon College in all of its history. Inquire about the things that contributed to his scholarship and write them down in your notebook, in your mind and determine that you are going to excel, that you are going to be the best student that has ever been enrolled in Elon College. This is a high mark to set, but you are capable of exceeding that mark. Find out the best athlete that has ever enrolled in Elon College. Find out some of the things in which he excelled. Think about it and determine to be the best athlete that has ever been on the Elon College gridiron, hardwood floor, or baseball diamond. Find out who was the best music student that has ever been in Elon College. Talk with your professor, find out something about him and determine to be the best musician that has ever enrolled in Elon College.

Write your name high on the scholastic roll of our college. When you do, you write the name of our college right up there with yours. You can not excel without your college excelling with you.

Apportionment Giving

At the beginning of the conference year, the churches have twelve months in which to pay their apportionment. At the beginning, this looks like plenty of time, and no particular need for a hurry. However, the months pass rather rapidly, and before we realize it the conference year is slipping away. For the most of our churches there are now less than two months remaining in the conference year. At the end of the conference year, all apportionments are supposed to be in hand. If you will take time to look at this report, you will observe that even though five-sixths of the conference year has passed, we have only secured a little more than one-third of the amount apportioned. I know that a number of our churches wait until the end of the year to send their remittance. It would be of very great help to the college, however, if the apportionment could be paid in twelve equal installments.

The Board of Publications is requesting that the college pay its apportionment of $900 for THE SUN on an equal monthly basis; and if the churches will be good enough to pay on that basis, then the college would have no difficulty in complying with this request.

At any rate, won't you please talk with your church officials, including the Finance Committee, and if it is convenient, a contribution on the conference apportionment for the college will be greatly appreciated.

A WORD to the CHURCHES

FROM THE THIRD WORLD CONFERENCE ON FAITH AND ORDER

We have been sent to Lund by our churches to study together what measures of unity in matters of faith, church order and worship exists among our churches and how we may move towards the fuller unity God wills for us. We give thanks to the Lord of the Church for what he has wrought among us in and through our fellowship of conversation and prayer. We have made many discoveries about one another's churches and our perplexity in the face of unresolved differences has been surpassed by our gratitude for the manifold grace of God which we see at work in the life of the churches all over the world.

We have seen clearly that we can make no real advance towards unity if we only compare our several conceptions of the nature of the Church and the traditions in which they are embodied. But once again, it has been proved true that as we seek to draw closer to Christ, we come closer to one another. We need, therefore, to penetrate behind the divisions of the Church to a deeper and richer understanding of the mystery of the God-given union of Christ with his Church. We need increasingly to realize that the separate histories of our churches find their full meaning only if seen in the perspective of God's dealings with his WHOLE people. . . .

Should not our churches ask themselves whether they have shown sufficient eagerness to enter into conversation with other churches and whether they are really acting together in all matters except those in which deep differences of conviction compel them to act separately? Should they not acknowledge the fact that they have often allowed themselves to be separated from each other by secular forces and influences instead of witnessing together to the sole Lordship of Christ, who gathers his people out of all nations, races and tongues?

Obedience to God demands also that the churches seek unity in their mission to the world. We share the failure to convey the Christian message to the masses of mankind. . . .

The word penitence has been often on our lips here at Lund. Penitence involves willingness to endure judgment—the judgment of the Lord to whom has been given the power to sift mankind and to gather into one the scattered children of God. . . .

The Coming of Autumn

Crowned with the sickle and the winter sheaf,
While Autumn, nodding o'er the yellow plain,
Comes jovial on, the Doric reed once more,
Well pleased, I tune. Whate'er the wintry frost
Nitrous prepared—the various-blossomed Spring
Put in white promise forth—and Summer suns
Concocted strong—rush boundless now to view,
Full perfect all, and swell my glorious theme.
When the bright Virgin gives the beauteous days,
And Libra weighs in equal scales the year,
From heaven's high cope the fierce effulgence shook
Of parting Summer, a serener blue,
With golden light enlivened, wide invests
The happy world. Attempered suns arise
Sweet-beamed, and shedding off through lucid clouds
A pleasing calm; while broad and brown below
Extensive harvests hang the heavy head.
Rich, silent, deep, they stand; for not a gale
Rolls its light billows o'er the bending plain;
A calm of plenty! till the ruffled air
Falls from its poise, and gives the breeze to blow.
Rent is the fleecy mantle of the sky;
The clouds fly different, and the sudden sun
By fits effulgent gilds the illumined field,
And black by fits the shadows sweep along.
A gayly checkered, heart-expanding view,
Far as the circling eye can short around,
Unbounded, tossing in a flood of corn.

—James Thompson.

News Flashes

Mr. Earl Danieley of Elon College and Chapel Hill supplied at Southern Pines for the past two Sundays.

Rev. Robert T. Woodruff, Jr., and family have moved from Winston-Salem, N. C., to 9765 Cunningham Road, Southside Estates, Jacksonville, Florida.

The dedication service of the Ebenezer Christian Church, Rev. W. C. Farrell, pastor, was held at 10:00 a. m., Sunday, September 14. There was also an afternoon service. Dr. W. T. Scott and Rev. Fred Register were guest speakers.

Rev. C. O. Koon, pastor of Belew Creek and Salem Chapel Congregational Christian churches, has been quite ill for the past month. He has now returned from the hospital to his home at Belew Creek and is able to be up and around in the house a little each day. We pray for him a speedy recovery.

The re-dedication of the Chapel Hill United Congregational Christian Church is to be held on Sunday, September 28, at 11 o'clock. There will be a musical program that evening at 7:30 o'clock, with Mr. Louis Potter, father of Mrs. Richard L. Jackson, as organist, and Edgar and Dorothy Alden as violinists.

Salem Chapel, near Winston-Salem, is starting a renovation program this fall. Some of the historic sanctuary needs new timber and the place will be almost a new one when the plans are completed for its revamping. Even though their minister has been sick, the members are moving ahead on this work.

Dr. Harold Saxe Tuttle, who wrote "Teaching Religion in College," the article reprinted from Christian Century on pages five and six of this issue, has studied at the College of the Pacific, University of California, Pacific School of Religion and Columbia University, where he obtained his doctorate. He is now located at Lewis and Clark College, Portland, Ore.

The editor says: "Your cards, letters, telegrams and prayers during these recent days have been one of the deeply moving experiences of my life. Thank you for your interest. I am receiving royal treatment and am most happy and grateful to be improving." Dr. House is improving and is expecting to return to his home the last of this week. He will have to remain in bed the rest of the month.

The Asheville Church is undergoing extensive repairs and renovation. A new coat of paint on the outside adds beauty to the structure. The sanctuary will be repainted, and it is hoped that a new organ can be bought and installed. The pastor, Rev. Frank Ratzell, and family are busy in the work there and new life is evidenced by new members, new organizations and a new program for the whole church.

Dr. and Mrs. Jesse H. Meredith have recently moved to Winston-Salem from New York. Dr Meredith is a member of Elk Spur Church in Virginia and a graduate of Elon College. He will be one of the surgeons at the Baptist Hospital. Mrs. Meredith, formerly Lillian Dyer of the Happy Home community and of our Reidsville Church, is also a graduate of Elon College and is working part time at the Baptist Hospital. Miss Gaynell Dyer, a 1952 graduate of Elon College and sister of Mrs. Meredith, is making her home with them.

Rev. W. J. Andes Appreciates Vacation Help

A pastor may be on vacation, but the work must go on. Winston-Salem Church carried on. During the summer months, the pastor was assisted in the preparing of bulletins and the other office work by Miss Meryle Jean Mauldin, recently enrolled as a freshman in Elon College. She attended to the bulletin board out in front of the church, saw that the church building was in readiness for services on Sunday. The caretaker of the building was prompt each week and did his job well, but someone always has to see that the hymn numbers are posted, the bulletins and hymn books in place, etc. During the vacation of the minister Miss Meryle Jean also checked on news items each week before the printing of the bulletin. During the past year she has served as president of the Pilgrim Fellowship in the Winston-Salem Church. We wish her well at Elon College.

There were others who helped, too. Roger Jackson, a junior at State College in Raleigh, presided and led the worship service on one Sunday morning. Dorothy Mauldin presided and led the service another morning. Various young people served in the choir and as ushers. Several adults assisted with the morning prayer on various Sundays. Other adults had charge of the nursery during the church hour. Teachers in the church

Pleasant Ridge Church is First To Send in Dues

Mr. S. H. Pell, secretary-treasurer of the Laymen's Fellowship writes: "I would like to report to the laymen of the Southern Convention that the Laymen's Fellowship of our Pleasant Ridge Church in the Western North Carolina Conference, was the first to send in the suggested dues of 50 cents per member, amounting to $12.50. Who will be next? We hope that your Fellowship will send in its dues promptly as we are in need of some funds for further work in the Convention."

Western North Carolina Laymen's Fellowship Meets

The Western North Carolina Conference of The Laymen's Fellowship met with the Albemarle Church on August 6, for its third rally this year.

This was the largest group of men we have had together. One of the reasons may have been the barbecued chicken that the Albemarle men fed us. It was a very enjoyable evening. The fellowship was grand, the dinner was delicious, and the movie, "More for Peace," was very inspiring.

We are to purchase a Fellowship Bell to be used at our meetings and, perhaps, for an attendance trophy.

Men, if you really want to have a good time together, do as three of our near by churches did, charter a bus. That is a good way to go, and another way to enjoy fellowship with other men in a different way.

A note of humor was added to the program this time which gave us some hearty laughs. To the reader it may not seem that it would be particularly humorous to have all of those present introduce themselves and tell their hobby. But just try it in your group sometime.

Our men, seeing a need for funds in the treasury of the Southern Convention Fellowship, took an offering in the amount of $28.80.

We were very glad to have nine of our ministers present along with the 103 laymen from 12 churches.

Recognition was made of our new Fellowship at Asheboro. It was organized on August 16, with 18 charter members. The president of this new group, Mr. Dalton Harper, lead the closing worship.

I want to take this opportunity to thank the Albemarle Fellowship for making our meeting such an enjoyable evening; and also for their interest in the welfare of the Conference Fellowship treasury. This interest was shown by their contribution of $55.00, which represented the profit from the dinner. This was a very fine thing to do, and it is appreciated very much. I am sure that this money will make it possible for us to have better programs for your enjoyment.

We will be meeting again in November. Look for announcement and details of the meeting in THE SUN. A very unusual idea seems to be entering the minds of the program committee. We will be looking for you in November. The place will be announced.

S. H. PELL,
Chairman.

J. W. Madren Goes to Wakefield

Rev. and Mrs. James W. Madren and Carol Ann have moved from Fancy Gap to Wakefield, Virginia. Mr. Madren has accepted the call to serve the churches of the Wakefield Parish: Barrett's, Burton's Grove, Dendron and Wakefield.

These churches are fortunate in having Mr. and Mrs. Madren come to work with them. Their coming has stimulated interest and created enthusiasm among church members, especially the young people.

Mrs. G. C. BRITTLE.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

A UNIFIED BUDGET IS THE ANSWER

(A Guest Editorial by Rev. Jesse H. Dollar, Chairman, Convention Stewardship Commission)

Many of our churches in yoked pastorates, with two or more churches, are wondering how they can have an Every Member Canvass and use personalized, weekly envelopes. While the Unified Budget is at work successfully in all kinds of churches, it is proving to be an especial blessing to part-time churches. It works this way: All the funds of the church and Sunday school (and many times the young people's work and women's organizations, etc.) are placed in a single treasury, and funds needed for all purposes and programs are drawn from the united treasury.

Such an arrangement means that envelopes are provided all members of all organizations, one set of course, to each person, and they may put their envelope in at any one of the meetings of any organization. As for the church and Sunday school, it means that funds for the church budget, or any unit of it, may be received at each Sunday school session. Payment by the week makes it possible for all to give more, and church pledges are kept current on Sundays when there is no preaching service. This system has worked with the finances of many a church, and also with all types of churches.

Where there cannot be a unified budget, envelopes are available for one, two or more Sundays, and can be purchased according to the needs of any particular church. The important point is to have a well planned budget and to work it so that those who come to any service at all may make their offering to church or Sunday school support. If you are not getting the money needed, after a thorough every member canvass, try this miracle working plan.

THE SUN'S MAILING LIST

A session with the current mailing list is an interesting experience--both exhilarating and depressing. There are the familiar names of subscribers who have been on the list for years. God bless them. They are the pillars of our churches. Then one looks in vain for certain names. Regretfully, we concede, they must have dropped their subscription. Then it is gratifying to note new names and addresses on the list. It is all very much like studying the roll of a church. Some abide, while others come and go.

There is considerable news locked up in the mailing list. For instance, it appears that Mrs. W. Stanley Carne has moved from Portsmouth, Virginia, to Bolsters Mill, Maine. Her husband was serving First Church, Portsmouth, at the time of his death. We thank God for the labors of Mr. and Mrs. Carne in our midst. Why not write her?

Fayetteville did not appear on this list until Rev. Kenneth Lindner organized the Eutaw Church. Now it appears that Mrs. Robert L. Brunner has put on a campaign for subscriptions, with the result that there are now seven subscribers at this address. It is most commendable and heartening to find a new church promptly introducing its members to their Church paper.

It is interesting to note that The Sun circulates in 27 States, the District of Columbia, India and Africa! What are the States? Here they are: Alabama, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Iowa, Illinois, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia and West Virginia.

Although some of the people on this list are unknown to the editor personally, there are many grand people on it. For instance, I am pleasingly surprised to find the name of Frank Korab of Kansas City, Kansas. We served together on the Nominating Committee of the General Council. He is one of the fine churchmen of the mid-west. For many years he was a member of the church served by Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, well known author of "In His Steps." Mr. Korab was nominated for Moderator of the General Council at Claremont, and, although not elected, he was given substantial support. Now he is taking a year's leave of absence from his business to devote to the National Church Building Campaign. It is good to see Mr. Korab's name on our mailing list.

Yes, The Sun goes weekly into more than half the States of the Union. Perhaps some of you would tell your friends in some of these other 21 States about The Sun. Better still, send them an introductory subscription. The largest circulation, to be sure is in North Carolina and Virginia. Burlington, North Carolina, and Norfolk and Suffolk, Virginia, are tops on the subscription list.

A perusal of this list moves one with amazement and gratitude that The Sun is exercising such a wide ministry. And yet its witness could be greatly magnified if each subscriber would get or give another.

Teaching Religion in College

By HAROLD SAXE TUTTLE in Christian Century

Church-Related Colleges will revise their offerings notably during the next decade. Pressures are strong in at least three competing directions. Whether changes merge into one general trend or continue as cross currents can scarcely be forecast. The outcome will have a marked effect on the religious leadership of the next generation.

Some colleges are yielding to the pressure to imitate tax-supported schools; they are stressing the sciences and the humanities and are offering prevocational programs, while reducing offerings in biblical literature and religion, or reducing them to the elective status. On the other hand a considerable number are increasing their offerings in religion or restoring elective courses in the subject to the required status. These follow two competing philosophies. Some are seeking to make their courses in religion more scholarly; others are seeking to make them more functional—a contrast that need not exist, but does.

Contrasting Philosophies

Back of the bid for students to which the present emergency compels every administrator to give attention, there are two basic philosophies of higher education which affect, and in some cases determine, the curriculum in religion: (1) The Academic. The college is the repository of truth. It is the business of the college to pass on to each succeeding generation the truth entrusted to it, together with all the added truth it has been able to discover. (2) The Functional. The college is the agency of society by which to secure competent leadership. To the church-related college this means consecrated and efficient leadership. Since the pioneer colleges in America were church-inspired, this was the original philosophy of higher education.

The academically minded will either be assured of accurate and academically sound courses about the Bible, the world's religions, the history of Western Christianity, the philosophic thought on which theology has rested, and the current religious scene, or they will have no courses at all in the field. The functionally minded are concerned that courses dealing with religion shall not only make the student more literate but shall add to the dynamic of his faith.

The competition between these philosophies raises several pertinent questions regarding the courses that should be offered, the criteria by which their success is to be judged, and the preparation of those who are to teach. Should the success of a course be judged by the learner's mastery of factual knowledge about religion? Or by the correctness or liberality of his interpretation of religion? Or by his devotion to the application of religion to life? Or by some combination of these? If the ivory-tower theory be rejected and devotion to a more Christian social order be included, there still remain several questions regarding curriculum, method and leadership. Will these outcomes be best secured by bringing analytical courses down from the curriculum of the divinity school, or by organizing courses around the social applications of religion interpreted in the light of devout scholarship? Who is best prepared to teach courses that will assure increased vitality in the learner's religious experience?

Early Colleges Were Functional

We should never forget that the American college was founded by the church. The training of intelligent and devoted leaders was the objective. Many who defend vocational higher education maintain that colonial colleges were genuinely vocational. They were supported for the purpose of educating religious leaders. Certainly they were functional. The success of the college was judged by the effectiveness of its products as religious leaders. In theory the church-related college has through three centuries been maintained as a producer of leaders. There is nothing in the nature of higher education to discount the importance of sound scholarship; rather the opposite. The functional philosophy holds that devoted leadership is the goal and that the justification of sound scholarship is the contribution that it makes to the attainment of that goal.

The scientific movement, however has not been so tolerant of devotion to ideals. Scholarship must be based on proved facts. Science has no concern with the application of its discoveries; it is searching for pure truth. The scholar must not dissipate his energies by asking how this truth is to be applied. Incongruous though it may seem, the scientific spirit has reinforced the traditionalism of the classicist in defending the humanities as ends in themselves in the curriculum. The result has been to discount the social applications of knowledge as sentimental and outside the realm of higher education.

Taking the Easiest Way

When courses in religion were subjected to the test of truth for its own sake, a metamorphosis occurred. The insistence that they be scholarly rather than hortatory became rejection of the religious ideal itself in courses in religion. The examination and grading system supported this reversal: it is easier to write examination questions on facts supported by research than on prophetic ideals and social applications of the principle of brotherhood. Grades came to be based on knowledge of the Bible or the history of religion or some findings of research. And once these academic achievements became the basis of grading they also and inevitably became the practical objectives of the courses.

Tax-supported colleges, which have generally accepted the philosophy that they are the custodians and transmitters of truth, have found offering such factual courses the easiest way—perhaps the only way—to satisfy the churches that they are not godless institutions and yet avoid donning the prophet's mantle. Competing for students with tax-supported colleges, many church-related colleges have accepted both the general academic philosophy and the specific policy of offering courses in religion that match the academic scholarliness of these other institutions.

The fallacy of this logic—intelligible in tax-supported schools, but unforgivable in church-related colleges—is its assumption that courses must be either scholarly or prophetic. The fact is that no “either/or” is necessarily involved. Hebrew religion nurtured and exalted ethical ideals. Christianity leavened pagan culture and rescued a decadent civilization. The dynamic power of these religions does not inhere in an ignorant interpretation and an emotional presentation. Rather, intelligent scholarship increases the effectiveness of the religious appeal, because it more truly interprets the claims and values of religion. High scholarship is not a foe but a friend of prophetic teaching.

Advocates of the academic philosophy will never admit that the truth they transmit lacks vitality and dynamic power. Are not many college graduates dynamic leaders? Indeed do not some have a vital prophetic message? True, but so have many self-educated leaders. Cold truth did not kindle the prophetic fire. The spark in the learner is fanned by some teacher in whose heart burns a love of his fellows. Truth unwarmed by devoted idealism does not produce spontaneous combustion. This is no mere figure. No view has been more thoroughly demonstrated by psychological research than that knowledge in itself creates no drives. Knowledge is a rudder, not a motor. It is indispensable in controlling the direction of progress, but it provides no dynamic drive. . . .

One who is familiar with the evidences that intellectual creations do not create drives or ideals must reject the academic philosophy if he is concerned with the social behavior of educated persons. He will support the functional philosophy for both secular and religious courses. He will hold fast, with the founders of higher education in America, that the business of the college is to provide consecrated leadership in every social situation. From church-related colleges he will demand the training of statesmen and prophets.

Testing the success of a course in terms of objective knowledge is consistent with the academic philosophy; it is quite inadequate from the functional viewpoint. One may pass a course on the historic backgrounds of the biblical writings “cum laude” and still become a cynic. One may earn all A's in comparative religions and reject them all. One may surpass all other members of the class in knowledge of the teachings of Jesus and make a fortune gambling. Every law school knows that high grades in its courses do not assure high ethical standards in practice. Superior knowledge of medicine constitutes no assurance of superior ethics. Defenders of the academic philosophy cannot prove a cause-and-effect connection between intellectual mastery and ideals. On the contrary, both observation and experiment refute such relationship. The human factor is always involved in the culture of ideals.

What College Courses Can Do

Should scholarly, informative courses in religion not be given in college? Certainly they should be given! But they should be related to the social ideals that justify the propagation of religion everywhere in society. Method and treatment make radical differences in the outcome of a course dealing with the same content. Two instructors in the same institution gave courses in the history of music. They used the same syllabus; grades were based on the same final examinations. Students under one teacher acquired a growing appreciation of music; under the other, a growing dislike. Courses in poetry which include a knowledge of historical backgrounds can create distaste or enthusiasm. The same holds true of courses in religion. In conversation with a lumberman on the tenth anniversary of his graduation from Beloit College, I asked what he prized most in his college education after the lapse of a decade. Without hesitation he replied, “Dr. Blaisdell's course in Bible.” More important are the testimonies of students that the college Bible course gave them the foundation for a mature religion.

The function of the department of religion in a college is not that of a theological seminary. It is quite out of place to transplant technical graduate courses from divinity school into the undergraduate college curriculum. Not only are such courses beyond the grasp of the student; they are beyond his interest. Technical courses, planned to provide professional tools, are not suited to building character and ideals in the maturing student. . . .

Let the church-related colleges courageously accept the functional philosophy; let them give an emphasis to religion which the tax-supported colleges will not give; let them accept as criteria of success in these courses the strengthening of faith and character in their students along with intelligent interpretation of the Bible and maturity in religious thinking; let them select instructors who they know accept this functional philosophy and who are trained to apply it to undergraduate college youth. Then let them have faith that fidelity to the purpose for which they are maintained by the churches will most surely lead them to success.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

The North Carolina College Foundation

The Conference of Church Related Colleges in North Carolina is taking steps to organize the North Carolina College Foundation. The purpose of this proposed foundation is to solicit corporations, foundations, manufacturing industry, for the support of the current demands of all privately endowed independent colleges that will take membership in the foundation and comply with conditions that are agreed upon for membership. There are 36 church related or privately endowed colleges, senior and junior, located in North Carolina. Membership in the foundation is voluntary. It is estimated that a budget of $20,000 a year will be required for the establishment and successful operation of this proposed foundation.

Representatives of 31 of these colleges met at Salem College, Winston-Salem, North Carolina last Friday at noon. The group was addressed by the president of Heidelberg College in Ohio. Dr. Wiekman outlined the Ohio Foundation and how it operated, giving a very interesting address that provoked considerable discussion. It seemed to be the desire of all present that such a foundation for North Carolina be formed as early as is practical. The group present adjourned to meet again at Salem College on November 5 at 11 o'clock in the morning, for the purpose of deciding definitely if such a foundation is to be formed, and to determine rules and regulations governing the same. Each privately endowed college in North Carolina is requested to secure authorization from its Board of Trustees. The cost per institution will be determined by the number of colleges who take membership in the foundation. In all probability, the cost will range from $500 to $1,000 per institution.

The Ohio Foundation approaches only corporations, foundations and manufacturing companies. The first year, operating only five months, the sum of $196,000 was secured for the member colleges. The plan is to have two presidents, or one president and a member of a Board of Trustees call on members of foundations and corporations or manufacturing industries, and give them the opportunity of contributing to this united fund. The money raised is to be used for current expenses only, not for capital improvements of any kind, and is to be allocated on a sixty-forty basis—that is 60 per cent is to be allocated equally to all member institutions. The remaining 40 per cent is to be allocated to the same institutions on the basis of enrollment as reported to the North Carolina College Conference for the fall quarter or semester as the case may be.

In Ohio the smallest college received $5,000 plus, and the largest college received $17,000 plus. North Carolina does not have as many foundations and corporations as Ohio, but it does offer a fruitful opportunity for an adventure of this kind. It would seem advisable for all interested colleges to take membership in the foundation and help to make as strong as possible this united appeal.

We all—individuals, foundations, corporations, everybody—contribute for the support of our state schools. It would seem only fair that we join together to strengthen the non tax supported colleges. We must, if our future is to be secure.

Apportionment Giving

The road for Elon College has not always been smooth, nor has it been lonely. It has been compelled to walk, but not to walk alone. There has always been a fine group of people in the Southern Convention who felt an interest in Elon College and realized the church's responsibility for encouragement and support of the college.

I assume that a number of people have contributed to the college year after year since its foundation; and others have joined with them in the support of the institution as they came along, and became a part of the church and the institutions of the church. We are encouraged as this number increases. I am sure that more individuals in the Southern Convention contribute to the support of the college now, either directly or indirectly, than in all of its previous history. These contributions help, but they do fall short of the amount required for the successful operation of the college. The cost of every item entering into the operation of the college has increased in such proportions that those responsible for the ongoing of the college are made to wonder what will happen and which way to turn.

We are encouraged, however, by the fact that the college is a part of the church, that the church believes in the college and that it is back of its every obligation. It is the hope and prayer of us all that the campaign that was intensified on Tuesday of this week will accomplish its purpose at an early date.

Appreciation is expressed for every word of encouragement and every dollar contributed.

Emergency Relief Shipments Rise

During the first seven months of 1952, emergency relief shipments made possible by the churches coordinating their programs and shipments through the National Council of Churches' department of Church World Service increased one-fourth over those for the corresponding period of 1951. Shipments of food, clothing, medicines and other goods totaled 8,010,198 pounds, and were valued at $3,111,150. Major areas of need to which the materials were sent were India, Korea, Germany, Greece and Lebanon. In reporting on the record, Wynn C. Fairfield, executive director of the department, pointed out that this augmented relief effort of the churches mirrors a widening of response to the distress of the millions of homeless, orphaned and destitute people in stricken areas overseas and is a tribute to the compassion, generosity and true spirit of brotherhood of Christian America.

Some Observations on Roman Catholicism

By DR. W. W. SLOAN

After spending ten days in Roman Catholic strongholds, I feel directed to write one more report, for Roman Catholicism, where it is boss, is far different from what it is in the United States. If the Roman church ever gets control in the United States, as it intends to do, that difference will disappear.

There are some positive things about the Roman church that I noted in Italy, the Vatican State, Spain and France. One of these is the great number of seemingly able young men and women who are giving their lives to their church—more about this later.

The second is the international or world-wide feeling the Roman church develops, partially by the use of a common language (Latin), which the people scarcely understand, and partly because of the constant teaching that all roads lead to Rome—that apart from the Roman church no one can be saved.

The third positive impression is the dignified use of pageantry, which appeals not only to uneducated people but, to a degree, to the educated as well. There is no shouting and jumping, no cheap, undignified buildings erected to the glory of the All-Highest, but a solemn dignity and beauty.

Even some of these values in the Roman church are disappearing. I didn't visit the Pope this time as I did his predecessor some years ago. It used to be difficult to get an audience, but now any one who wishes may go to the Pope's summer home where the tourists gather in national groups. The Pope goes from one group to another, giving a snappy greeting in its language and in return getting "three cheers," hurrahs, etc., from the crowds.

Although rules are posted at the churches requiring women who enter to have arms, legs and heads covered, and there is generally a guard at the door who occasionally forbids someone to enter, some women in sun-suits get by. Even at solemn mass I noted only half of the women had their heads covered. The Roman Catholic who says his church never changes is not observant.

These changes may be encouraging, but other things are most discouraging. First, is the way extremely poor people are bled to supply wealth for the churches. With all the poverty of these countries and their constant begging for American financial aid, Roman churches brag about their wealth. In one church we were told, "The ceiling in this room is solid gold, more than 1200 pounds." That would be worth more than a half-million dollars. The big churches all have treasures, crowns, swords, and crosses, and statues of Mary and the saints, of solid gold and diamonds. These and the art collections total many millions of dollars, dollars lying dormant, doing nothing for the Kingdom of God.

But worse than the misuse of money is the furthering of superstition. "Here are the footprints left by Jesus when he met St. Peter fleeing from Rome." "There are the footprints left by the Virgin Mary when she first touched earth when she visited Spain in the year 666." "Here is the Virgin (a statue) who saved the Toledo fort from being captured by the enemy in 1936." The enemy was the democratic government in power at that time.

Indulgences for sins may be gained by all kinds of payments or physical actions. At the foot of a stairway of 25 steps in southern France I found the following notice: "Four times a year, on days of their own choice, the faithful who mount the Sacred Stairs are able at each step to gain indulgences for nine years upon the following conditions: (1) go to confession and communion; (2) mount on the knees; (3) pray for the intentions of the Pope." In other words one might thus gain indulgences for 900 years every year. How different from the spirit of Jesus!

We visited Lourdes in France, the world's most famous faith-healing spot. As at several places less well known, the faithful believe that Mary appeared here about a hundred years ago to a shepherd girl, Bernadette, and ordered that a church be built to her memory. Since then it is claimed that people may here be healed of all kinds of diseases if they adore Mary in sufficient faith.

Lourdes has become a place which promises forgiveness of sins as well as healing of bodies. Great multitudes are urged to go there. Probbly much of the urging comes from the 200 hotels where most exorbitant prices are charged. We attended the evening candlelight procession in which from 15,00 to 20,000 people, singing hymns of praise to Mary and asking that their sins be forgiven, carried their candles a good two miles.

Monday afternoon we attended the presentation of the sick, in which people in wheeled litters and wheeled chairs are placed in long lines before the church. It was reported that there were 2,000 such sick in Sunday's presentation. For two hours, chants were led over loud-speakers, mostly prayers to Mary, some to Bernadette and other saints, a few to Christ. These were a constant repetition of the theme, "You can make us well if you want to do so. Please make us well." Finally came the "procession of the holy sacrament," in which about a hundred priests in a wide variety of costumes, marched around the group, stopping every few steps to glance over the sick.

Since many who feel they are ill need only confidence to become well, it surprised me that not more people reported being healed. No such public claim was made, although a rumor was whispered about that at the railroad station the night before, one man laid aside his crutches and got onto the train without them.

Monday night, as I watched the ill and crippled being loaded onto trains, I became heart-sick. So many were disappointed. They had come hoping that Mary would heal them, and now they must go home unhealed. How many would now give up in despair, quit trying to get well? I wondered how many would die within the next twelve months, because Lourdes had destroyed their determination to get well. I fear that Lourdes is the cause of many deaths as well as a great source of income for Lourdes hotel-keepers, candle-sellers and the church.

To what are young men and women in the Roman church dedicating their lives? Is it to build the Kingdom of God on earth, or is it to secure political power, financial wealth, and a strangle-hold on the minds and lives of men for an organization that lives unto itself alone?

The church may have seen its duty imperfectly, for it is made up of fallible human beings, but when all is said, it has been the one power for nearly two thousand years which has stood for peace, for brotherhood, for the the cause of the poor and distressed.—Ernest F. Scott.

Artists Help a Church

Miss Angie Crew has sent us twenty beautiful pictures of Japanese scenes, painted by Japanese artists for the purpose of raising money to enlarge our church in Kobe.

As some of you will remember, the church was bombed and destroyed. When Miss Crew got back to Japan, she found the pastor almost dead from malnutrition, but still carrying on the church in his home. Since she has been back in Japan, a small church has been built. But the building is inadequate, and they want to enlarge it and make it more useful.

These outdoor scenes of Japan are painted on heavy cardboard and are 9½ by 10½ inches in size. They have a gold edge and could either be framed or hung as they are, using a fastener which may be purchased at a ten cent store, which "sticks" on the back of the picture.

The pictures are $1.00 each, or may be purchased in sets of four, if desired, for there is spring, summer, fall and winter of each scene.

Orders may be sent to Mrs. F. C. Lester, 840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C. The pictures not sold before that time will be on display at the three women's conferences in October, and may be purchased then.

This is one way in which the Japanese are trying to help themselves. By buying these pictures, we can do something very concrete for our missionary work.

Eastern Virginia News Notes

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, following a recent trip to Eastern Virginia, sends us two interesting items:

The Eastern Virginia Woman's Board met at Bethlehem Church, Suffolk, Virginia, week before last. They must have done a lot of good, hard work, for the meeting lasted from 10:30 till 4:00. Miss Coghill reports a delicious lunch served by the Bethlehem young people. Those presented included the fine president, Mrs. Garland Spratley, Mesdames H. S. Hardcastle, Ray Gordon, R. E. Brittle, W. V. Leathers, Millard Stevens, E. G. Middleton, W. C. Seeley, A. C. Moore, W. B. Williams, Cornell, Johnson,

R. F. Edwards and Miss Patie Lee Coghill. Among other items of business, the fall conference was planned, with Dr. W. W. Sloan as the guest speaker on Africa. This conference meets at The Christian Temple on October 2.

Miss Lucy Steele will speak at the Franklin Church on November 16 for a Bible study meeting. It will begin at 4:00 o'clock and the Franklin women will serve coffee and sandwiches at 6:00; there then will be an evening session. All women from our Eastern Virginia churches are invited, and this is certainly too good an opportunity for them to miss. Hats off to the Franklin women for arranging this meeting with Miss Steele!

World Community Day Material

Those who are planning to observe World Community Day on November 7, are asked and urged to send for their materials now, if they have not already done so. These must be ordered from General Department of United Church Women, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. The complete packet costs 30 cents. Send your money with the order. No orders will be filled after October 24.

"Give Packets for Peace," is the subject. These packets can be large or small, containing new or used clothing for children up to six years of age. If you like to make layettes, you can buy the material all ready to sew from the national office of the United Church Women in New York. The cost is small and they are well out and easy to make.

If you see this notice and your chairman happens to miss it, please tell her about it. It is very annoying to have calls for these materials coming into the Convention office or the State Council office. They must be ordered from New York City before October 24.

We hope all our churches will take part in a service on World Community Day.

MRS. HENRY E. ROBINSON,
Interdenominational
Cooperation Chairman,

Mt. Zion Women Report

The Women's Society of the Mount Zion Church, Elipse, Virginia, has held regular monthly meetings during the year, with planned programs from the packet, which have been most interesting.

We began our new year with World Wide Communion Sunday. The Thank Offering program drew us very close to our foreign friends in Japan. Our Family Life Committee gave us and our husbands a Christmas party, and gifts were exchanged.

We sent cards and flowers to the sick. At the time of the loss of our beloved pastor, the Rev. W. Stanley Carne, we served a luncheon at Mrs. Carne's home.

World Day of Prayer was combined with our neighboring churches.

In March we enjoyed a visit at the Suffolk Christian Church and the wonderful address by Dr. Truman B. Douglass. We also made a visit to our neighbor church and saw slides of Japan, showing different sides of life there. We also had a combined Easter service.

On Mother's Day gifts were given to the oldest and youngest mothers, the mothers having a birthday near that date, and the shut-in members. A Father's Day program was carried out the same as Mother's Day.

In our July service we had our Friendly Service program. We gave thirty size three hospital shirts for children to the Ryder Memorial Hospital in Puerto Rico.

In August we had our Vacation Bible School, in which we had thirty children in four classes for two weeks. Then we had a wonderful hay-ride to City Park in Norfolk. The next week a party was given by the superintendent. The children had as their mission project material for India.

We have given a memorial instead of flowers through the Elon Orphanage and a memorial through our conference. We helped the T. B. and polio drives and made a gift to Moon-elon.

We have studied the Book of James, being led by Mrs. Margaret Dixon, our Spiritual Life leader, and by Mrs. I. W. Johnson. This was enjoyed by all. We are closing our year with a covered dish luncheon, at which time we will have our pastor and his wife, Dr. and Mrs. I. W. Johnson, with us.

The officers have been elected for the coming year, and we are looking forward to another year of service for our Master.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Young Folks:

Boys and girls in school need someone to look up to, a hero or a heroine. Sometimes it is the father or the mother. In some cases the child looks up to his minister or teacher, but there must be someone living or who has lived a life worthwhile, whom the child can follow. This makes a strong plea for Bible study, as there are heroes aplenty, especially in Old Testament history.

Girls have longed to follow the footsteps of Florence Nightengale, who was a nursing heroine of days gone by. For some time there has been a shortage of nurses in our nation, and only now is there enough to properly care for the sick.

The hospital in which my husband has been receiving treatment does not train girls, so it has a staff of graduate nurses. The Sandhills Veterans Association devised a system for helping supply nurses. Each year they offer one or two scholarships to high school graduates in the Sandhills area who are interested in nursing and who qualify as to ability, personality and who promise to spend so many of their nursing years in Moore County Hospital. Their scheme for raising funds is good, too, they send crisp one dollar bills to Sandhill citizens, saying, "Please put one (or more) with this and send it back." Last week another of their "grads" finished Rex Hospital and returned to her home county to nurse. What a wonderful system of scholarship award and community service!

Who is your hero? Would you be a nurse, a doctor, minister or teacher? School offers the basic training upon which special training may be added. Our country is so blessed with schools and teachers, books and equipment! We are indeed fortunate to have learning at hand.

JUNE JOY HOUSE.

India Works to Educate Sixty Million Children

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

India has set itself the tremendous task of bringing free and compulsory education to 60 million children. This goal was set by the two year old Indian Constitution, which says: "The State shall endeavor to provide, within a period of ten years from the commencement of this Constitution, free and compulsory education for all children until they complete the age of 14 years."

The task before the Indian Government, America's sister republic in Asia is two-fold: (1) To impart education to larger numbers (at the time of independence, August 1947, the rate of literacy was 13.5 per cent; four years later it was 18 per cent). (2) To integrate the school with the life of the community, so that education can make a useful contribution to economic and social progress.

The first part of the task is to be achieved through compulsory education of children up to the age of 14, and a social education program for adults. The second is to be accomplished by supplementing formal education of children with preparatory vocational training. This means a program for training the student in crafts and practical work to enable him to earn a living for himself and contribute to the growth of the national income.

The educational goal under the British was to train a limited number of young men for service in the departments of the government. But free India today sadly needs educated youths to work on the land and in offices and factories, for the development of the country. Therefore, it is essential that the gulf existing between training and social environment be bridged.

Social education planned for adults is not merely to instruct them in the "three R's" but to train them in the art of citizenship, so that they can be effective partners in a democratic community. The curriculum under this heading is to include courses in the concept of citizenship, the laws of the land, personal and public health, and creative fields such as art, literature, music and dancing.

New experiments are being made in the field of social education. An educational caravan recently toured a few rural areas to arouse interest among the village folk. The caravan consisted of four vans, one of which served as a mobile stage, another as a movie house, and two as exhibition halls. The caravan produced plays, gave concerts and showed educational and cultural films.

Expenditure on education in India has doubled since independence, the present figure standing at $210,000,000. The outlay on education from government funds alone has risen from $53,600,000 in 1947 to over $136,500,000 in 1951. It must be remembered that this great increase in expenditure has taken place in years of great financial strain, when millions of dollars had to be spent on such urgent projects as the relief and rehabilitation of displaced persons from Pakistan, land reclamation, etc.

At present, in India there are 28 universities and more than 650 colleges. To cope with the great demand for technical personnel, facilities for technical training are being considerably enlarged. Two new research institutes, each accommodating 3,000 students, have already been established. One is the Institute of Technology at Kharagpur in West Bengal and the other is Eastern Higher Institute at Hijli, near Calcutta. Two more institutes are under construction.

school took their vacations, but substitutes were always on hand to help out.

Timothy Chang was in Winston-Salem for two weeks, speaking on the Sundays the minister was on vacation. He visited the homes of the sick and in general helped in the work. He also spent a while at Pfafftown, and spoke there one Sunday morning at 9:45 o'clock. He made quite an impression on all of us, and we hope he shall be able to visit with us again.

Mrs. Maynie Neal spoke one Sunday on her trip to the General Council in California this summer. Both the Pfafftown and the Winston-Salem churches enjoyed this fine presentation.

During the summer, our regular organist was away, and her place was taken by various members of the church: Mrs. O. J. Nelson, Mrs. Russell Klapp, and by Mary Frances Cunningham of the St. Timothy's Episcopal Church.

The minister is always grateful for a cooperative and working church. Now comes the fall and winter program of the church. It is good to know that we shall be busy, but we shall succeed only as God and all of us work together. W. J. ANDES.

Eastern Virginia Fellowship Officers Hold Planning Meeting

The Eastern Virginia Young People's officers met at the Suffolk Christian Church on September 2 to plan the program of their Fall Rally to be held also at the Suffolk Church on October 5, 2:30-4:30, p. m. Other business taken up is a meeting of local presidents to be held October 19, at Cypress Chapel, near Suffolk. The meeting is to begin at 3 o'clock, with supper for the group, and closing in the early evening. Also, the young people discussed the printing of a young people's paper, monthly, and two boys from Norfolk, First, Church volunteered to print it.

Liberty Youth Organize

Rev. M. L. Pressnell, pastor of our church at Liberty, North Carolina, reports that the young people of his church have organized a Young People's Fellowship group.

The following officers have been elected: Nancy Bare, president; Sherley Mathews, vice-president; Linda Brady, secretary; Patty Bare, treasurer; Linda Brady, pianist; Patricia Brady and Susan Smith, ushers; Patty Bear, program leader; Mrs. Ruth Lowe and Mrs. J. G. Brady, counselors.

The group will meet each Sunday evening at 6:30 o'clock.

Valley Junior High Camp Held at Powell's Fort Valley

The seventh annual Junior High Camp of the Virginia Valley Conference was held from July 14 to 21 at the Powell's Fort Valley Camp under the able direction of Rev. Silas E. Madren, dean, and Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Director of Religious Education of the Southern Convention.

Thirteen of the 20 churches of the Valley Conference were represented by young people, teachers and counselors. One hundred, three persons were enrolled in the camp located in the beautiful Shenandoah Valley. All of the ministers of this conference participated in the camp, and some of the ministers' wives assisted by

Besides the Valley young people who served as teachers and counselors, we were privileged to have a caravan of young workers from the National Youth Council to assist with teaching, directed recreation and counselling. The caravaners were: Janis Benson, River Falls, Wisconsin; "Bert" Niehous, St. Louis, Missouri; Charlotte Vieth, Lakewood, Ohio, and Bob Gemar, Lodi, California.

Jose Dubuet of the Philippine Islands was a great inspiration to us all. He contributed much to the spiritual atmosphere of the camp, especially in the morning devotions and the quiet hour which followed.

Two very welcome young adults were Rev. and Mrs. Baxter Twiddy of Elon College, N. C. Both were most helpful with teaching and with the music interest groups.

Pattie Lee is always an inspiration to us with her untiring efforts to serve others.

We sincerely feel that this year's camp was, through the efforts of the faculty, the counsellors and most of all the young people, a very successful week. It is our hope that all who attended this year and a lot of new young people will plan to be at Powell's Fort Camp next year.

Curtis Young Reports on National Council

Dear Young People:

If I tried to tell you everything that was done at the National Pilgrim Fellowship Council it would take the space of a small book.

Probably the most important work and the thing that will have the most effect on us will be the change in the commission plan. As you know, our present plan has been: Personal, Missionary, Social, and Interdenominational Actions. This plan will be carried out during the coming year. After next year our commissions will number three: Faith, Action and Fellowship. The reason for the change is to eliminate overlapping and to better fit our statement of purpose.

To understand exactly what the work of each commission is we must take them one at a time and consider what part of our statement of purpose it fits.

The Faith Commission.—Its purpose is the first paragraph of our statement of purpose. It is "To know God in our lives as revealed by Jesus Christ, to worship him only, to study his truth, and to dedicate ourselves to do his will."

I will not attempt to give a full outline of this commission's work, but just the things that are going to be especially emphasized during the first year of work.

1. Stewardship.

The budgeting of time, talents and material possessions, studied as the growing, normal expression of a developing faith.

2. Personal Worship.

a. Prayer.

b. Study and use of the Bible—stressing Revised Standard versions and other modern translations.

3. Group Worship.

a. Cell Groups—study and use of.

4. Personal Evangelism.

Personal Christian witness.

5. Leadership Training.

Youth and Adult Advisors.

The Christian Action Commission.

It fits perfectly to the second paragraph of the statement of purpose: "To witness to the message and mission of the Church among all people, serving the world in the name of Christ and striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace" is the very essence of "Christian Action." This commission will include both Missionary Action and Social Action under the old plan.

Special emphasis in this commission is going to be (1) International Areas of Study, namely: foreign missions and relief and reconstruction.

(2) National Areas of Study: service

The Glory of Solomon's Empire

LESSON XIII—SEPTEMBER 28, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: "A man's life does not consist in the abundance of his possessions."—Luke 12:15.

LESSON TEXT: I Kings 4:20-26; 11:4-8.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 125.

Prosperity.

They were having good days in Israel. At least, they were good days for some of the people. King Solomon had extended the borders of the nation and ruled over a vast empire. The population had increased rapidly. The people "ate, drank and were merry." The king himself lived on a scale perhaps never equalled by any other man. He had a magnificent house, a vast retinue of servants, and he lived off the "fat of the land." He dressed lavishly—Jesus referred to his elaborate wardrobe. He indulged himself in his favorite hobbies. He lived in luxury and ease. His income was so large that it was really unknown. He was, of course, the wealthiest man in the kingdom.

Behind the Scenes.

But all was not as well as it appeared. It cost prohibitive sums to maintain the royal court. Taxes and tribute to the king zoomed to high figures. While he was living in luxury, many of his subjects were eking out a bare existence. Furthermore, the vast building operations, and the "public works" demanded a lot of labor, so the king resorted to slave labor in order to get the necessary manpower to complete the great projects. Over 150,000 Canaanites, their wives and children, were reduced to slavery and sent to the mines and the forests to produce marble and cedar respectively, for the large building projects. The people of Israel rested, ate, drank, and made merry, while others did the work. It was not good. The people were becoming flabby and soft. Prosperity is dangerous. There was a peril under the surface in Israel which nobody seemed to see. One wonders if America is not given too much to "eating, drinking and making merry" in these days of prosperity. "Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey, where wealth accumulates, and men decay."

A Wise and Wealthy King.

Reference has already been made to Solomon's wealth. He was also a very wise man. He coined three thousand proverbs. He was an authority on trees and animals. He composed over three thousand songs. People came from far and wide to hear the king's wisdom. When we wish to pay tribute to a man's wisdom we usually say that "he is as wise as Solomon." But as we shall see later, wise men can be fools. There is wisdom and there is common sense, and sometimes wise men lack common sense. Book learning does not always make a wise man. Knowledge is not always wisdom.

Wealthy, but Worldly.

This wise and wealthy king became worldly, and therein lay the tragedy of his life. He started out as a young man, devoted to God and seeking to know and to do God's will. There are few passages anywhere in the Scriptures which equal in beauty of language or fervency of spirit, Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the Temple. And for a long time, he worshipped God and God alone. But as he grew older and wealthier he became worldly. He began to worship other gods. He even built sanctuaries for other gods, one of them directly opposite the Temple itself. "His heart was not perfect with Jehovah his God as was the heart of his father David." He went after other gods; and as he went after other gods, his ardor for Jehovah naturally and inevitably cooled. This man, so wise, was so foolish. His life came to a miserable climax—he who was the "wisest" of kings, became the most foolish.

The Influence of the Wrong Woman.

"It came to pass, when Solomon was old, that his wives turned away his heart after other gods. It seemed as if one of the hobbies of the king was to collect wives. And what a collection he had! The record says, he had seven hundred wives, princesses, and three hundred concubines! The chances are that he never saw many of them, and had a speaking acquaintance with only a few of them. But some of them did have association with the king, and they were the cause of his downfall. At least they were a snare unto him.

Some of these women had come from foreign countries where they worshipped other gods. They remained loyal to their gods, and they talked Solomon into building shrines and sanctuaries for their gods in Jerusalem and roundabout. Thus they gradually weaned him away from Jehovah, and at last he worshipped at the shrines of the heathen gods. Solomon was not the first man, nor was he the last man, who got the wrong woman for a wife. Nor was he the last man who was weaned away from loyalty to God and the Church by a woman. Many a man has lost his devotion to God and his enthusiasm for the Church because he has a wife, or a girl friend, who follows after false gods. Many a man would be more interested in the Church if his wife had more religion. Many a man would lead a different kind of life if his wife or girl friend was of a different type. And, of course, the thing works the other way. Many a woman and wife would be more interested and active in church work if her husband gave her any encouragement and companionship in religion. In many instances, a man's foes, or a woman's foes, are those of their own household.

Growing Old.

Growing old presents a problem and a challenge. For some, old age is a blessing, for others a bane. And it does not depend simply upon external factors. To be sure, it is a good thing to feel that one has security for his old age. But many people who have much of this world's goods find old age a burden and find it bitter. Nor is it a matter of health, although health does help. A happy old age depends upon internal factors. If one has lived well and has served well, if one has been giving heed to the things of the mind and the heart through the years, if one has been storing in the mind and the heart good thoughts and happy memories, then one can grow old gracefully and graciously and happily. "Old men and women—with the treasures of a life time of righteousness and beautiful living piled up in their hearts! The tell-tale record of how godly or godless we have been is etched deeply in the lines of our faces in the later years of our lives."

The Measure of a Man's Life.

Dr. Lucecock tells of a woman some years ago, who was called the "best

OUR ITALIAN SERVICE MISSION

Granili is where, if he were among us today, Christ would be. Parking our car out of sight and, at Belden Paulson's* request, taking no camera, Bel and I entered what used to be an armory barracks, where 10,000 people now live. There is a second unit with 10,000 more. Once inside a cavernous, dark hallway, a man came after us, together with what I think was a policeman (his uniform appeared different from the four types explained to me before). We could not enter, he said. But dramatically and from nowhere, thirty or forty beaming, rollicking children swarmed around Bel (and two took me by each hand and stayed there throughout our whole trip) to belie the fact that these were "strangers." So we went on.

The building is four or five stories high, where not destroyed. There is a central corridor, with large "rooms" off it. Most of the rooms have been subdivided with sacks, earboard, crating, newspapers. Children tugged us successively into a dozen of these "homes," in each of which nine to fifteen people live. In one, two parents and four children (and one expected) slept in the same double bed. Where there are windows, they are small. Dampness is a constant cause of illness. Children play in the mine-like cobblestone corridor. An emancipated child in one room leaned over the side of his bed to vomit. A mother in the same unit showed us a little boy with an impossible tumor. An extremely fine looking young mother with four children is unable to nurse her fifth, whose body desperately showed it. Fourteen-year-olds are the size of our Jonathan. Three irate mothers beckoned us into their quarters like Harpies, to argue with Bel for not having given their children a clothing packet equal in quality to others.

All the while we were followed by this merry, lilted, beaming, adoring swarm of the kids who have come to love and admire Belden Paulson, without whom, it is safe to say, the work the CCSC is now doing for these people would not have begun. We went the length of one floor and returned the same way. If I was not ill from the experience, I was sick at heart. Flies were crawling over the faces of sleeping babies. The people have no money, no work, no food—only children.

Howard K. Smith, in The State of Europe, points out that the crucial problem of Italy, especially southern Italy, is too many people. Procreation is the people's only recreation.

The Italian Service Mission of the Congregational Christian Service Committee takes a realistic and not a sentimental attitude to this suffering. The new mayor of Naples, since a week ago, is a Monarchist. Ironically, the Granili people helped to elect him, perhaps because the king, like them, is now homeless (in Portugal). Although I don't believe the new mayor has been in Granili, he has promised, with the profits of his own profitable Italian shipping company, to move all these 20,000 people out into to-be-built housing in the next year or two. This is providential, though not every city boasts such a businessman for mayor. Granili would then be destroyed.

Meanwhile, the mission manages in surpassing fashion to reach 300 or so of the children from Granili, and through them their families. It gives these children something to eat and drink and wear—and to think about. Every child gets one meal a day and has gotten a packet of clothing. Each member of his family has gotten a packet of clothing. There are classes all day, in sewing, jigsaw work, English, singing, radio-telegraphy. There is a kindergarten, neat as any in Switzerland, from 9 to 1:30. Bel has an athletic program in a pitifully narrow driveway, where also the U. S. Information Service comes with a sound truck every Saturday evening, with documentary films. There is a medical clinic with free medicine. (In this, we surpass the Roman Catholics, who only diagnose.) And, interestingly, the Catholics have been prodded by the presence of our work into creating a "private school" next door and into setting up two wooden barracks squarely in front of Granili—though these have been there only a few weeks with absolutely no activity. Wherever Protestants take initiative, it bears fruit sevenfold in Catholic action nearby. This reminds me of the fat fish in aquariums which can be steered only by smaller and more agile ones swimming nearby.

Dr. Santi, who is head of the staff, and Bel have shown me the Mergellina and Capodimonte caves. Both are now evacuated and cemented over as a result of the work of this mission. The Piazza Nazionale barracks, to which many cave dwellers were moved by Dr. Santi, were today in process of demolition because those people have been resettled. Bagnoli village, where former cave dwellers pay a rent of only $1 or so a month (rent averages $16 to $30 a month in ordinary apartments) is prospering. Significantly, every family moved to Bagnoli, where life has decency, prestige and cleanliness, has had the emotional security to find employment.

Where to move the Granili dwellers? Sixty percent, according to Dr. Santi, are reasonably dependable and trustworthy. Forty percent would tend toward crime. Accordingly, he feels that they should be distributed throughout the city, not isolated off in a "green belt" margin of the city where they would not be assimilated. Ideally, one family should be taken into each existing apartment unit. But for this kind of people, it is not as simple as just building housing units in a block somewhere.

Today, also, I met the extraordinary ex-Catholic priest, of forty years ago, who heads the all-Protestant hospital committee. And I have met most of the ten doctors who would make its staff and now staff crowded clinics meeting in church hallways. In six years they have bought the land ($12,800 plus legal and other preparation of $8,000) and have in the bank $16,000 plus investments of $1,600. They need another $16,000 before beginning the construction of the first two of four stories. A two-story unit would cost $48,000. There is no Protestant hospital in southern Italy, and the Catholics are interested that there should not be. This grim fact only brings a twinkle into these people's eyes.

*Belden Paulson, Oberlin 1950, after a summer at Agape Work Camp, has spent the past two years on Dr. Santi's staff at Naples.

The Orphanage
 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

There they stand in my office door. This time it is three little girls. Yesterday afternoon it was four boys. Every afternoon now for several days they have been coming here. They know that I am going to say come, and that I am going to listen to their plea. It is for shoes. I suppose that line of boy and girl traffic will not stop until the last one of them has had new shoes. Shoe time comes too fast. What did you do with the pair I bought you some time ago? These are they—perhaps they said “them.” Why didn’t you have them mended? We did. Twice. Shoes they need. Seventy-eight pairs of them. No, not seventy-eight, I should have said seventy-seven, because Charles Ward will be operated on this Friday, the 12th, seeking to make his paralyzed foot a better one. He will not need a pair of shoes for several months.

Some of the children are emboldened by the others, or they would not yet ask for shoes. Perhaps, since they are so new, they wouldn’t know they could. It is not time yet they would think so. But here they come, group after group of them.

And that is just a sample. There are many other things they need when they start to school. By school time the treasury is so low it makes it a burden. But I hear their pleas, and I do the best I can, with a smile. When I think of how much money is wasted—no, maybe I ought not to say wasted—but when I think of how many dollars most people spend so lightly, I just sort of wish we had some of those “lightly” dollars here. How we could use them.

Calvin Clayton must have learned all about that when he was a boy here in the orphanage. I do not have the figures right at hand as I write this, but I feel safe in saying that in the three years I have been here he has contributed more than $1,300 right back into the “home” that helped him. You will see his name in this report. Several others have and are contributing back to the “home” that helped them. It is commendable of them, shows that they learned to do and be right deep down inside while they were trained here. And what is more, they are doing well for their homes and communities where they live. Many of them are also leaders in their local churches, too. Well, that is something we can all be proud of.

There are no heavy dollars now, it seems. All of them go lightly. But, nevertheless, I cannot help thinking sometimes how good it would be if all of us slipped another dollar to the really needy—the innocent homeless child. I have observed the folks who have the feeling within to pause and take time to “stoop to help a child,” and there is something a little extra about them. “He who gives a child a treat, rings a bell in heaven’s street.”

Perhaps you do not remember the time when—but I can tell you there was a time in your childhood when a new pair of shoes was a “treat.” I am reminded of it because in these days I see it first hand every day.

Thank you for your help. It is good; and I do greatly appreciate it.

"IVANHOE"

Picture of the Month

Here, staged in the pomp of traditional pageantry, is MGM production of Sir Walter Scott's great romantic story. The classic novel has been adapted to the screen with fidelity to the main lines of the plot intact, and with judicious condensation. Reminiscent of one's high school reading are Richard Lion Hearted's captivity in Austria, the usurpation of his throne by King John, the fights between the Saxons and their Norman conquerors, and Richard's ransom gathered through the good offices of Ivanhoe. Forever poignant is the romance involving Ivanhoe, his Saxon sweetheart Rowena, and the noble Jewish girl Rebecca who saved his life and gave him up to the love of another.

The success with which the film recreates a period of England's history is due to the enormous amount of research undertaken to insure accuracy. A medieval castle was built in Hertfordshire to provide a proper setting for much of the action. The famous Ashby jousting tournament scene takes place under the eyes of a tremendous assembly and gives an idea of the customs of that day when differences were settled with spiked mace, chain and ax. Caparisoned horses, nights in armor and mail, and pennants flying from elaborate tents add splendor. Battles fought with arrows, spears, battering rams, hurled stones and flaming pitch heighten the excitement.

An imposing cast has been assembled with Robert Taylor in the title role, Joan Fontaine and Elizabeth Taylor as Rowena and Rebecca, and George Sanders as Brian de Bois Guilbert. They are ably supported by character actors Felix Aylmer, Finley Currie, Emlyn Williams, Guy Rolfe and others. Archers, soldiers, trumpeters, farmers, knights, serfs, court ladies and peasant women give an impression of great crowds and much activity throughout. The acting is superb. Artistic values are of a high order. The musical score by Miklos Rozsa is most effective. The Technicolor is magnificent.—Protestant Motion Picture Council.

sibilities. The widest area of work is going to be in (3) Community Areas, where "group relation"—inter-cultural, interracial and interfaith—along with civic improvement is to be emphasized.

Relax With Max

When all of you send news the way some of you have done this week, I can relax all of the weeks like I do some of the weeks. In case this does not make sense, the idea is to send in news for YOUR page. Mr. Kernodle will like it, too!

An old rancher in eastern Kansas was hoeing his corn in the hot summer sun. "Why don't you hitch the team up and plow those weeds out with a cultivator?" his more energetic inlaw asked.

"Oh, I dunno," the rancher replied. "It's so easy to quit this way."

The little man introduced himself as a butler. He was asked if he was working for Mr. Jones. The brisk little man drew himself up haughtily. "Certainly not. Mr. Jones is working for me. He gets up at seven every morning and goes down to that dirty, stinking city to make enough money to keep this place and me going."

In Memoriam

IN MEMORIAM.

In loving memory of my darling husband, Carey Edward Hanbury, who passed away to his Heavenly home on September 17, 1945, to that beautiful city not made with hands.

You have gone, my darling sweetheart. Never will your memory fade; it's like ivy on a weathered oak. When all other things decay, my love for you will still keep green and never fade away.

In Heaven there will be no sad parting. We will evermore sing and rejoice. Some sweet day, I will meet you there, my darling. I know you are happy in Heaven, over on our loving God's celestial shore. Now you live where Jesus is in the beautiful land of rest.

Your joys now no tongue can tell; your smiling face and cherry words would oft drive away our fears. Now you are up there to hear the angels sing, in glorious realms above. Your days will not be numbered there, but with Jesus you are wearing a beautiful robe, and a shining crown upon your dear head.

You have gone, my precious husband; you have crossed the chilly tide; you have met o'er there with loved ones, and with Jesus you abide.

Your devoted wife,

IDA HANBURY.

Celebrate Buddhist Holiday

There was celebrated recently in New York City, with the Buddhist Church on West 49th Street near Amsterdam Avenue, as the focal point, the age old holiday known as O-Bon. Nearly a hundred adults and children, attired in multi-colored Japanese kimonos, danced the traditional Bon-Odori in honor of Gautama. O-Bon, once a strictly Buddhist event, has become a national festival for people of Japanese descent, during which families of all religious faiths offer homage to their dead.

HOW THE BIBLE WAS REVISED

The committee that worked to produce the "Revised Standard Version" of the Holy Bible was composed of leading scholars of the Protestant church, with Dr. Luther A. Weigle, Dean Emeritus of the Yale Divinity School, as chairman. They worked in two sections, one dealing with the old Testament, and one with the New Testament. All changes no matter how "minor," were subject to review by the entire committee.

A preliminary draft of each book was prepared by an individual member; each verse was then thoroughly discussed by the section. Their vote determined the reading to be adopted for the first draft. This was circulated to the entire committee and the Advisory Committee—the latter made up of representatives of forty cooperating denominations.

After twelve years of patient efforts, the first draft was completed in June of 1949. Meanwhile, the chairman was collecting suggestions to compile the agenda for the final draft. All suggestions involving matters of principle or meaning were discussed in meetings of the sections; others, concerned with details of style or expressions, were dealt with by an editorial committee.

At last, on October 5, 1951, the final manuscript of the "Revised Standard Version" of the Bible was delivered to the publishers—to be ready for publication on September 30, 1952.

A full compliment of 91 scholars cooperated in this great undertaking.

News Flashes

Dr. Wm. T. Scott is the guest minister at Southern Pines Church this week.

Beulah Christian Church in the Eastern North Carolina Conference, will celebrate Homecoming Sunday on September 28.

Dr. Truitt has requested that the October 30 issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN feature the Christian Orphanage at Elon College. Watch for this issue.

The Richmond Church is doing a major remodeling job in the church basement, where an up-to-date recreation room for the youth group is being provided.

In the near future we will begin a series of meditations by Rev. Henry E. Robinson of First Church, Burlington, on the general theme, "Christian Attitudes." We promise for our readers a treat.

A news flash announcing the dedication of the new building of the Ebenezer Christian Church, near Raleigh, N. C., was run last week. Next week we expect to present an historical sketch of the church and a picture of the new building.

Attention is called to the change in meeting place of the Virginia Valley Woman's Conference. The meeting is to be held at Bethel Christian Church, near Elkton, and not at Mt. Olivet (G), as had been previously announced. The date is October 9.

This issue of THE SUN had been planned by the Editor for some time. Subsequent issues will be planned by Dr. Duane Vore, chairman of the Board of Publications, the managing editor, and guest writers, until the editor has had time for complete rest and recuperation.

Dr. House continues to improve. We are sure this will be welcome news to his many friends as well as to the office of publication. In a personal note, Mrs. House says: "Lee is doing well—sleeping a lot, behaving nicely with his diet." And she adds, "I'm fine."

Rev. Henry E. Robinson, pastor of our Burlington Church, writes: "October 5 has been designated as Loyalty Sunday in the First Church, of Burlington—a day of ingathering and dedication. Rally Day in the Sunday school will be observed, with an attendance goal of 500. New members will be received; and World Wide Communion will be observed. The Every-Member Canvass will be conducted in the afternoon. We are trusting this day will be one of great significance in the life of our church."

Special Notice

The committee appointed by the Executive Board of the Southern Convention to "consider qualifications and outline duties of the Secretary of Stewardship" will meet at the First Congregational Christian Church, Henderson, N. C., on Friday, October 3, at 10:00 a. m.

WILL B. O'NEILL,
Convener.

Few of us are able to stand the pace of modern life; and unless we have an altar to which we may turn, we are likely to find that the poise and strength of soul which should be ours has been worn away by the bustle of life. All of us stand in continual need of being refreshed in body mind and soul; and happy are we if we know where to turn.

Reidsville Church Reports

The activities of the Reidsville Church are many and varied; there is a full program, which gives opportunity for all ages, both sexes, not only to worship but to serve. From time to time we like to report some of these activities. This is one of those times.

Our Sunday school picnic was held on Saturday, August 23, when a large group of the Sunday school went to Pettigrew's swimming pool for a swim and picnic supper; however, it was too cold to swim, but the rides and the games were varied and many. Supper was delicious with a capital "D," and the fellowship that followed sent everyone home saying it was good to have been there.

Two weeks ago over the week-end it was the privilege of our church to have the Rev. Robert C. Mueller, who for the past six years has represented this church as a missionary in the foreign field of India. Mr. Mueller's visit was stimulating and inspiring. He filled the pulpit of the church both for the Sunday morning and Sunday evening services. Monday night the Deacon Board of the church and their wives and husbands were dinner guests of the pastor and his wife, the Rev. and Mrs. Humphries, at the parsonage. On this occasion the Deacon Board, as officers of the church, had an opportunity to ask the many ques-

A Pastor Testifies to His Convention Superintendent

Many letters come to our desk. Many have to do with problems, programs, etc. These are important and we always welcome the opportunity to be of service and to counsel to those who write. Occasionally there come letters from some good pastor saying, "Thank you", and others just sharing joys of being a pastor. We appreciated a letter that came last week from one of our faithful pastors whose long years of service are an inspiration. I want to share his testimony. Except for experiences like his that come—once in a while—to pastors (and to superintendents) the "high calling" would lose much of its joys. He writes:

"I suppose that every pastor feels that he has the best church in the world. Naturally, we feel that we have the best church in the Convention. It is a source of gratification to see your congregation growing spiritually. Our official board met last night and every member was present who could possibly get there. After the long meeting—lasting nearly two hours—the members came out and said that they felt that they had been to a "revival". I suppose God will forgive me when I say that I wish I could take 20 years off and that God would let me live 20 years longer. However, whatever the years or the months may be, the rest of my ministry I am all out for my Christ and His Church. I want you to know that I am deeply grateful. I can never repay God for what He has done and is doing for me day by day. One thing that happened last night brought joy to me when one of our fine young men arose representing our young people and saying that this group had pledged themselves to tithe, and they wanted to support a missionary.

"We are expecting to have more than 100 members by Christmas. We hope this group will continue hoping and praying and will have at least two of our young people to enter the ministry. I keep saying day by day that the work of our church has just begun.

"More and more I come to feel that our prayers and our preaching and our living must be founded upon the Holy Scriptures. God is faithful and He has never failed us and He never will fail us. Remember, too, that we are praying daily for you that God will give you strength and grace to carry on the good work you are doing."

WM. T. SCOTT,
Superintendent.

Conference Notice.

Mount Auburn Church extends to each member of the Eastern North Carolina Conference a cordial invitation to attend the annual meeting on Tuesday and Wednesday, October 21 and 22. Mount Auburn is located nine miles north of Manson, in Warren County. Manson is eight miles north of Henderson on Route 1.

Those expecting to attend and plan to stay over night will please notify—

MRS. ALLEN KIMBALL,
Manson, N. C.

Committee to Meet

The Committee on Education and Standing of the Ministry of the Eastern North Carolina Conference will meet at United Church, Raleigh, N. C., on Monday, October 6, at 4:00 p. m. Will those seeking licensure, or renewal thereof, or those having any questions regarding ministerial standing in this conference, please meet with the committee at that time.

WILL B. O'NEILL,
Chairman.

New Translation Is Great Bible News

We have not a new Bible but a new translation. Thank God for the King James translation, which has served well and has not exhausted its usefulness. We still have it and will continue to use it. However, our devotion to it will not blind us to its limitations, some of which were imposed by faulty scholarship, and some of which has been imposed by the progress of language.

The Revised Standard Version of the Holy Bible should usher in a new era of Bible study, appreciation, and understanding. Let us also thank God for reverent, competent and contemporary biblical scholarship.

Study the picture on the front page, contemplate the accumulated and composite scholarship which has produced this remarkable translation. The Bible is no longer a book of magic; it is a lamp for our feet, day by day. It is God's eternal Word in the language of the people. Order your copy today. Use it, not as an ornament, but as a guide for everyday living.

Publication Climaxes Christian Education Week

Publication of the new revision of the Holy Scriptures, in the opinion of President Truman, gives this year's celebration of Christian Education Week "a special significance not only in the life of the churches but in the life of the entire English-speaking world." In commending Christian Education Week as an opportunity for the American people to renew their faith and refresh their spirits at the fountainhead of spiritual inspiration he said it was his hope and prayer that the celebration of the appearance of the Revised Standard Version of the Bible will bring a fresh awakening of religious interest and that the "brotherhood of all men under God will become increasingly realized."

Christian Education Week, September 28 to October 5, will be marked by community-wide observances by the churches and the people in hundreds of communities. They will emphasize in special services of dedication and thanksgiving the central place of the Bible in every spiritual movement of the Christian church.

The President, in a letter to Dr. Gerald E. Knoff, executive secretary of the National Council of Churches' Division of Christian Education, declared that "never has the world stood in greater need of the guidance of the Holy Spirit than now and seldom has the world been as eager to hear the Word of God and to follow his guidance. The ancient message of peace and faith in the God of History, who is the ruler of all nations needs to be carried to all people—not least or last to the people of the United States and their spiritual and temporal leaders—in words which are understood clearly in our day."

"The Word of Life in Living Language" is the theme of Christian Education Week, which will open with Rally Day Services in the churches on Sunday, September 28, and close with an observance of World-Wide Communion Sunday on October 5. The climactic point of the Bible Observance will be on Tuesday evening, September 30, at which time the new revision of the Bible will be presented to hundreds of thousands of Christians participating in simultaneous community services of dedication and thanksgiving.

On the previous evening, September 29, the National Capital Observance in Washington, will bring together the leaders of both the churches and the national government.

The Bible Observances during Christian Education Week, as outlined by the Division of Christian Education, have a five-fold purpose, as follows:

1. To deepen the religious life of our people and prepare the way for a mighty revival of religion, as we remember the central place of the Bible in every spiritual movement of the Christian Church, and especially in the historic life of Protestantism.
2. To encourage a wider reading and study of the Bible in our homes and churches in order that its teachings may become a constant guide for daily living.
3. To make communities more aware of their basic unity in the common heritage, purpose and religious idealism in the Bible.
4. To honor, both before the church people and the general public, the scholars who have given themselves tirelessly to the work of translation.
5. To celebrate completion of the Revised Standard Version of the Holy Bible as a historical moment in the great tradition in translating the Bible into the people's language.

The Revised Standard Version of the Bible is described by the scholars who revised it as "a simpler, more understandable, more accurate version which will give the people the real meaning of the Holy Scriptures while retaining the classic beauty of the beloved King James Version."

The Word of God in New Words

By FRANCES DUNLAP HERON

I.—Why the Revised Standard Version?

The time is 1,000 B. C. Out on the hills of Palestine shepherds gather round their campfire. The stars shine down and God seems close. It is the hour for stories; one of the group begins them while the others listen raptly to the stories of Abraham and Moses and of the greatness of God, told in words the shepherds know and love.

The centuries pass. In Nazareth, schoolboys—among them a friendly, thoughtful lad—are busy writing on their clay tablets words that their teacher reads from long leather rolls: "Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord."

It is a memorable Lord's Day in A. D. 100. In the courtyard of a home in Asia Minor, worshippers hear a visiting speaker read from a precious scroll sayings of Jesus—words that the Master spoke in Aramaic, now recorded in the Greek vernacular of these people.

It is A. D. 1526. A devout English family, at risk of severe punishment, hides within the walls of its home a copy of the forbidden Tyndale New Testament, produced on that amazing invention—the printing press—in English!

A. D. 1611, persecution over, and the English-speaking world hails the new King James Version of the Bible, "appointed to be read in the churches."

Thus the Word of God through the ages manifested itself to his people in order that they might hear and read, understand and follow. Always the one who preserved God's message wrote in whatever language his people could understand—Hebrew, Aramaic, Greek. From language to language the Word has spread, until today it appears in more than a thousand tongues.

And now this year, A. D. 1952, sees the newest milestone in the story of man's longing to comprehend the Word for his own day. On September 30, the citizens of the United States and Canada will have their first chance to see and obtain the recently completed Revised Standard Version of the Holy Bible. Here in language clear and meaningful to readers today is the result of long years of devoted labor by thirty-two Bible scholars.

The Standard Bible Committee, of which Dean-emeritus Luther A. Weigle of Yale Divinity School is chairman, was appointed in 1930 by the International Council of Religious Education (now part of the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A.). On behalf of forty Protestant denominations, the International Council authorized the committee to produce a translation designed for public and private worship, making use of the best available biblical research, manuscript discoveries and archeological findings. Intensive work began in 1937. The first part of the task—the New Testament—appeared in 1946.

The issuance of the completed Bible this year will coincide with Christian Education Week, September 28 to October 5, and will be the occasion of nation-wide celebration. Simultaneous observances on Tuesday evening, September 30, are being planned in 3,000 communities. Not merely is the Revised Standard Version making religious and literary history, with a first printing of almost one million volumes, it is establishing itself as the biggest project in book publishing history.

From the scholar's standpoint, however, the most significant record the Revised Standard Version can achieve is that of quickly becoming the people's Bible, as the King James Version did in its day.

To that end, their immediate concern is to spread far and wide the answers to such questions as these: Why was a revision of the King James version needed? What changes have been made? How did the committee arrive at decisions on translation?

Bringing out a revision of the Bible is not a new idea. Two versions authorized by the Church of England, preceded the King James—all three within a period of seventy-two years! The remarkable thing is that within the following 341 years, only two authorized revisions of the English Bible have been made. The first was the English Revised Version of 1885, followed in 1901 by our American variant, the American Standard Version. The second is the Revised Standard Version of 1952. Both versions are revisions of the King James.

It is one of the ironies of history that even before the revision scholars of the 1870's and 80's had finished the last page of Revelation, other scholars and archeologists were busy turning up masses of old manuscripts and monuments and ruins that would shed new light on translation problems over which they had labored. In fact, within the last seventy-five years more discoveries bearing on the text and meaning of the Bible have emerged than in all the previous centuries!

Certainly the time has come for a revision that takes advantage of all this body of resources that the King James scholars and the English Revised Version committee didn't know existed.

Let us take a quick look at three reasons why the King James Version needs to be revised.

First, the King James translators had only a dozen or so late medieval manuscripts of the New Testament, too few and too far distant from the originals to insure accuracy. The Greek text on which they based their New Testament was full of the accumulated errors of many centuries of manuscript copying by hand. Today's scholars can count more than five thousand mistakes in the Greek! Furthermore, the King James group had no aids for understanding the Hebrew text of the Old Testament, such as biblical scholarship now possesses.

Only a few years later, older Greek manuscripts began to turn up. Out of the East in 1627 came a Greek version of the Bible dating back to the fifth century. Rescued from a monastery wastebasket in 1844 were pages from the oldest Greek Bible known, and later almost the whole manuscript was recovered. Within very recent years, the Chester Beatty manuscripts of 1930 and the Dead Sea scrolls of 1943 have pushed our knowledge of the text of the Bible back nearer and nearer to original writings.

Second, the translators of 1611 and even of the 1870's did not have the present-day contributions of archeology to help them understand the vocabularies, idioms and grammar of New Testament Greek. A workman digging near the Nile one day flung a mummified crocodile onto the rocks and opened up a whole new world of research for New Testament schol-

POVERTY AND PLENTY

A Sermon

By Dr. Roy L. Smith

"One man gives freely, yet grows all the richer; another withholds what he should give, and only suffers want."—Proverbs 11:24.

"There is that scattereth and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet but tendeth to poverty."—KJV.

The management of money is one of life's most contradictory problems. We spend in order to make a profit, and the goods we save are corrupted by moth and rust.

True benevolence is one of the finest of the fine arts. To give without impoverishing the recipient, and to save without becoming impoverished of soul ourselves, represents one of the most delicate procedures.

The wise old Hebrew philosopher had watched his neighbors with an

R. S. V. B. Observance in North Carolina

Over fifty North Carolina cities and towns will hold community-wide services during Religious Education Week, September 28 to October 5, to celebrate the publication of the new Revised Standard Version of the Bible, according to the Rev. Morton R. Kurtz, executive director of the North Carolina Council of Churches, which has been promoting the event in that state. Almost all of these observances will be held on the evening of September 30, the date when the new Bible officially goes on sale. A few of the cities will hold their services on another day due to local circumstances.

A national Bible Observance Advisory Committee representing all of the larger Protestant denominations drew up plans some time ago for holding local observances across the nation to appropriately commemorate the historic occasion produced by the publishing of the first generally accepted new English translation of the Bible since 1885. In North Carolina, the State Council of Churches accepted responsibility for developing these services, cooperating with ministerial associations, local councils of church women, and other interested organizations. Observances in each city will feature a guest speaker and the presentation of gift copies of the new Bibles to citizens selected by a local committee.

observing eye. He had seen one man—one-handed, generous and charitable—grow great of heart and merry of spirit as he shared his goods with his less fortunate brethren. And he had seen another—hard, parsimonious and selfish—grow smaller year by year, with life becoming increasingly stern.

There was the little old lady who lived in a wheel chair, and eked out a precarious existence, paying her bills with the meager sum she received in the form of an old-age pension, supplemented by a tiny income on the side earned through the sale of little pieces of handiwork. But she tithed faithfully!

That was what saved her. "If it had not had not been for my tithe," she said, "I might have lived all my days inside this bare little room, with never an outlook. But as it is, I live around the world. I have sent my dollars to the missionaries in a dozen countries, and I have followed every dollar with a hundred prayers. Because I pray for the people over there, I read everything I get hold of about them. That helps me know what kind of people they are."

Year by year she grows richer and finer. They said she should not give, "because she was so poor." "Surely they would not deny me the right to pray. Then why deny me the right to give?"

And the old Hebrew Proverbialist would have agreed with her.

If the salt of the gospel is to save the meat of the world, it will not do to put the salt and the meat in separate barrels. Education must be seasoned by the salt of religion.

REIDSVILLE CHURCH REPORTS.

tions that were on their hearts and in their minds and to get a direct answer in the form of a report from one of our foreign missionaries.

Tuesday night was circle meeting night of the church, and Mr. Mueller was the honored guest at one of the circle's picnics. Wednesday night there was a covered dish supper at the church to which all were invited and to which a goodly number responded. After supper Mr. Mueller showed slides of his work and spoke in detail of his effort in India.

We were sorry not to have the pleasure of Mrs. Mueller's company, but a new baby prevented this. Our hope is that before too long we might have just as close a contact with Betty as we did Bob.

Now we look to the future and plans are under way for our full revival which begins on September 28 and lasts a week. The Rev. Fred Register of Fuquay Springs will be our preacher, and the Rev. O. D. Poythress of South Norfolk will be our song leader. Cottage prayer meetings have been set up in advance of these services. Special music has been planned for all the time, and we are looking forward to a rich harvest in the name of Jesus Christ.

Our revival ends with Rally Day on Sunday, October 5, and at that time we are planning to have at least five hundred for our Sunday school attendance and morning worship.

The friends of the Reidsville Church will be glad to know that our Sunday school is growing and that no longer is our very spacious building adequate; therefore, we have appointed a building committee to explore all possibilities of creating new Sunday school rooms as an addition to the church. These plans have not been accepted by the building committee as yet nor the church, but we hope for some positive action in the near future.

A new prayer group has been organized in the church to include only men who believe that prayer changes things and who want to help the pastor as this church seeks to reach out and reclaim the wayward and lost of our city. Is it out of order to use the good pages of THE SUN to ask other Christian men and women to add their voices to ours as we ask God's blessings upon the efforts we make and the plans we have in his name.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Founders' Day Is Observed at Elon College

Some years ago Elon College started out on the plan of building Founders' Day around the life and labors of important individuals who had played a part in the founding of the college and the building of its program from year to year. The Presidents were to be honored first. Dr. William Samuel Long, first president of the college, was the first to be honored. Then followed the others in chronological order — Dr. William Wesley Staley and Dr. Emmet Leonidas Moffitt.

The war came along and interrupted the program. Dr. William Allen Harper, fourth president of the college, was honored at the exercises on the campus on Tuesday, September 16, at 11:00 o'clock. Dr. Howard Scott Hardeastle, an alumnus of the college and a student during Dr. Harper's administration, was the speaker. Dr. Hardeastle was presented by Trustee D. R. Fanville of Burlington. Mr. Fanville was a trustee of the college during Dr. Harper's administration. It was a lovely day and an inspirational service. The music by the Elon Singers was uplifting. Dr. Hardeastle's address was an honor to Dr. Harper's memory and the great work that he did for the college and the church during his lifetime. There were between two and three hundred out-of-town guests representing the church, alumni, and friends from widely scattered areas. The group enjoyed a barbeque lunch on the campus and returned to the auditorium at two o'clock for a service in which an organization to complete the Two and One-Half Million Dollar Campaign was formed, and the campaign launched with earnestness, hope and faith. Luther Hodges of Leaksville, Democratic nominee for the office of Lieutenant Governor of the State of North Carolina, was the speaker. Mr. Hodges gave a very excellent address emphasizing the fact that business, religion, and industry have a very important stake in education: that if we are to have free enterprise we must have free education. The dual system of education that we have in this country must be maintained on an even keel. At the conclusion of Mr. Hodges' address the President of the college took charge and in a brief statement presented the assets and needs of the college and called for an intensive and united effort on the part of the church, alumni, and friends of the college to provide the college with its obvious needs. The officials of the campaign organization, together with the ministers present, were asked to assemble at the altar, and while there the President, by authorization of the church and the Board of Trustees, commissioned all who came to go out and complete the organization in their respective churches and communities, and approach every individual with information and appeal in the interest of Elon College.

Following the commissioning, Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein stated that this is a most serious and important occasion in the history and life of Elon College; that a man is never taller than when he is on his knees and requested that all at the altar kneel while he offered the prayer of consecration and benediction.

A Memorial Established

On Monday afternoon, September 15, prior to the observance of Founders' Day on September 16, Mr. H. L. Bondurant, a faithful and loyal member of our Rosemont Church, came into my office and gave me a little slip of paper together with a crisp $100 bill. On the paper was the following inscription:

"In loving memory of my devoted wife, Gertrude Gibson Bondurant, I hereby make this bequest of one hundred dollars ($100) in cash to Elon College, the same to be used for such purpose as may be determined by the President, Dr. L. E. Smith."

Mr. Bondurant stated that he was giving this money in memory of his devoted wife, that she, during her lifetime, seemed to find more satisfaction and joy in giving to worthy causes than anyone he had ever known.

We need this money for current funds and it would help a very great deal, but money given under such conditions and with such sentiment seems to be too sacred to be spent for just anything. Consequently, this money has been invested and will constitute a part of the college's permanent funds. As I said to Mr. Bondurant, in this way his devoted wife will live on and on and on, and she will be contributing to the support of the college so long as time shall last.

There are literally hundreds and thousands of good people who could give as much and more to the college without missing it except in their minds and they would miss it in their minds but for a short while only. Why not establish a memorial at Elon College by which and through which you would continue to live and contribute to the cause of Christian higher education so long as memory lasts.

Enrollment—1952-'53

The fall term at Elon College opened on Tuesday, September 2, at 9:00 in the morning. Students are permitted to enroll for full time credit up to and including September 15. As of this date we have enrolled 641 college students. This does not include special students, or students taking only one course in college. Enrollment last year, as of this date, was 585, which makes a gain of exactly 56 students over last year. Of the total enrollment for the quarter, 315 are first-year students. Practically one-half of the student body is on the campus for the first time. This is wholesome and most encouraging for the years that lie ahead.

I wish to express appreciation to the enthusiastic assistance of the pastors of the churches in the Southern Convention. Reverend Robert Lee House of Southern Pines and Reverend Melvin Dollar of Rosemont are to be commended for their continuous efforts in enlisting students from their churches in the college. I have not been able to check but I am confident that we have more young people from our own church enrolled in Elon College than in previous years.

We, ministers and church officials, should take the success of our efforts this year as an indication of what can be done, and by getting a good start for 1953 we should be able to increase our enrollment a great deal more.

The Riggs Find Their Experiences At Kilanjunai Interesting

Dear Friends:

It is high time we were writing again even though it has not been long since our ill-fated letters of July were finally mailed out. We have been here in Kilanjunai just two months now and have had enough interesting new experiences to fill a book rather than just a letter—but obviously have been kept too busy by this to find time even for short notes. We are now more nearly settled than we were when we last wrote, although the current shortage of cement and the natural slowness of country workmen here mean that the repairs and alterations on our house still have not been finished. I am started in my program here to the extent that I have opened three leprosy treatment stations in various directions from three to five miles from here where I also see general patients. However the rush of patients which has continued ever since we arrived has kept me off balance and I have not yet started any of the village work I had planned. My assistant and translator is now doing full-time leprosy work—injections, dressings, and lab work—and I need to find someone else for the ordinary translating, language teaching, and lecturing at the shows. I have had to give up altogether any idea of answering calls for shows, etc., in other parts of the Diocese, because it is so much harder to get out of here than I had planned, and there are so many patients left in the lurch when I have to be gone for as long as it seems to take to travel to the more distant places.

The biggest news recently has been the onset of the rains. We had one very wet weekend soon after we moved here in July, but apparently it was not enough to do any good for the crops. The people here told us that the heavy rains would come any time between the first of July and the middle of September; but apparently they had reason to hope for the earlier date, because there had been much anxious scanning of the skies during the past month. As we watched one pond and water hole after another dry up we thought they had plenty of reason for anxiety. We still can't imagine what they do for drinking water the years the monsoons fail altogether.

But last Monday noon it suddenly clouded up and let loose with a good brisk downpour, and the local weather prophets were sure that the rainy season had begun. Here in Kilanjunai the Hindu community beat drums continuously during that shower in celebration, and all the men and boys hurried out to the fields to sow seed for the rain to wash into the soil that had been plowed and re-plowed during the past four months in order to be ready for the occasion. At the time I was out at one of my leprosy treatment centers just finishing up the injections in a temporary shed the people had erected for me on the outskirts of a village. We finished the treatments and then scrambled madly to a sheltered place in the village, where I saw general patients while waiting for the rain to stop. But it had rained a lot heavier where I was than it did here in Kilanjunai, and when the time came to go the fields and "roads" were a very sea of soft mud and standing water, and we were told that it was absolutely impossible for our bicycles to get through. Because I had a foot infection they decided I should ride in a bullock cart with some rich patients who had come to the clinic. So with me inside and my cycle lashed on top we set out, the others wading and by turns dragging or carrying the other cycle. The cartwheels and the bulls seemed to be made for just such travel conditions (triumph of ancient India over the gadgets of modern civilization!) so that although it took three hours to go two miles the cart never hesitated or got stuck once. Of course the strong sun was out by this time drying things up. We finally reached a drier road. After stalling as long as possible to let things dry up, we started out again and made the rest of the trip home by nightfall on our eyes.

I think the people here were a bit disappointed with that first rain. But there have been several showers during the week since; and the last two were real hum-dingers. We woke up yesterday morning to find water standing in the pond next to our house and last night the roar of croaking frogs filled the night air. So I guess our drinking water worries are over for the moment at least. All the people and bulls have been busy in the fields so that nobody has been available for our building work. Morale is high and I expect the countryside to start turning green any day now.

The rainy season brings only one disadvantage. For the whole day last week it was so cloudy that we scarcely saw the sun at all. The next day our first case of cholera came in. Fortunately it was mild and there were no others. But I was told that after every rainy spell there is a flare-up of diarrhea and dysentery in the villages. The reason of course is that the habits of sanitation of the people are such that the only possible means of sterilization of feces and protection of drinking water is the sterilizing power of the sun's rays, which keep the situation under pretty good control all year around except during those few days when the sun is covered by clouds and doesn't shine. I couldn't prove that this case was cholera (although a severe dysentery can be just as dangerous), and nobody here would believe that it was because there were not several cases and nobody died. So they were as bad as the Shaowu people with their plague, not wanting to recognize its existence if they could help it so that the fair name and reputation of their town wouldn't be blackened by the accusation that such a disease was in their midst.

Actually, thanks to the sun's rays and the wide open spaces, intestinal diseases are not very prevalent here. There is a tremendous variety of diseases coming into the clinic, but I would judge that the chief problems are malnutrition, leprosy and tuberculosis, and maternal and infant mortality. The TB and leprosy come from sleeping in crowded unventilated quarters due to inadequate housing. The malnutrition problem can't be licked as long as there isn't enough water to grow vegetables. The childbirth troubles just require more education and more trained midwives available. Fran is already hard at work with a mushrooming pre-natal clinic as well as a number of other activities so that problem is being faced at least.

Best regards,

ED RIGGS.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

Mrs. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

North Carolina Women's Convention

*Tell the women to take heed,
Their cooperation we will need,
Annual Conference comes our way,
October seventh is the day.*

*Make your plans now to attend
Officers, members you should send;
Pastors and others should come too,
We have important work to do.*

Thus Mrs. W. J. Andes, president of the North Carolina women, closes a recent letter to them concerning their annual Conference, which will meet on Tuesday, October 7, at Apple's Chapel Church, beginning at 10 o'clock in the morning.

This conference will be a workshop, which is planned to be practical and helpful for the local societies. All the conference officers will take part, and it is also hoped that Mrs. W. B. Williams, Convention president, will be present.

Lunch will be served at the church, and the meeting will close at approximately three o'clock. Make it a point to see that your new president comes to this fall conference—bring as many carloads as you can and see what a difference it makes in the enthusiasm of your society.

If the packet has not been purchased, it may be done at this time, as well as any other books or literature your society may need.

Societies Report on Year's Work

WAVERLY.

The Women's Missionary Society of the Waverly Christian Church has closed another year of service in the work of our Master.

We observed World Community Day in November. Our Thank Offering service was presented to our Sunday school with an interesting program and a very good attendance. Our World Day of Prayer was a union service, with the other churches of the town taking part.

This year our Friendly Service gift was sent to the Ryder Memorial Hospital in Puerto Rico. Our members gave gifts, so we had a very nice box of needed articles for the use of the hospital. We also sent four boxes of clothing to the mission church at Fancy Gap, Virginia.

Our study book was reviewed by pastor, Rev. J. E. McCauley. Mrs. Johnson, our president, reviewed the book on Latin America.

We have met all requirements for the honor roll, and are looking forward to another year of service.

Mrs. O. C. OSBORNE.

LIBERTY SPRING.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Liberty Spring Congregational Christian Church has been true to its new name as an auxiliary to all services of the church during the year. It has been a pleasure to help in the renovation of our sanctuary, and to feel that all of our efforts in other projects were appreciated.

The spiritual life lessons taught by Mrs. I. W. Johnson, ably assisted by Mrs. S. H. Rawles, have been the highlights of our monthly meetings. The importance of faith and prayer has been beautifully presented to us from the Book of James. We do feel so fortunate in having two such consecrated, beloved members to inspire us to live better Christian lives.

As we plan greater service to missions and the Church for the coming year, we are organizing four circles, hoping that each unit will be able to reach out better to our members and thus bring them closer to our goal.

Mrs. J. E. HARRELL, JR.,

Secretary

* * *

LITTLE CREEK.

The Little Creek Women's Missionary Society has completed its year's work, meeting all the requirements. We tried two ways of raising money for this work. First, a sacrificial offering, doing without something ourselves in order to help missions. Secondly, each member make some money secretly and at an appointed time, turn it in, telling how she had earned it. We had a lot of fun and raised a good sum of money.

We always look forward to Family Night. This year we had a covered dish supper, with games, quizzes and singing afterwards.

Five of our women taught and assisted in our Vacation Bible School.

There were 83 children in attendance. We had a home and foreign mission project. For home missions, each class made interesting things for children in a local hospital. A story was told each day about missionaries to Africa, and on the last day, an offering was taken to buy Bibles for African work.

We have had a good year, but, trusting in our Heavenly Father, we are looking forward to greater things in the future.

NEWPORT NEWS.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Newport News, Virginia, Church has had a very active and successful year under the leadership of Mrs. L. J. Brown, president.

Twenty-four members attended the Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference on October 4, at the Bethlehem Christian Church.

On Sunday, November 4, the auxiliary had charge of the morning worship service when their annual Thank Offering program was presented.

World Community Day and the World Day of Prayer were well attended by our group.

At a Sunday evening vesper service on December 16, "Light for the Way" was presented by several members of the auxiliary. This was a most impressive service.

We were privileged to have Miss Angie Crew as our guest on January 30, and she told of her experiences in Japan.

We celebrated our fourteenth anniversary with a lovely birthday party on February 13. Members, with their husbands as guests, sat at tables decorated to represent the months of the year. More than 100 people attended.

Twenty-three members from our group traveled to Suffolk to hear Dr. Truman Douglass review the mission study book, "Mission to America."

Each of our circles has sent Friendly Service gifts, the gifts going to the Migrants, Ryder Memorial Hospital, Fort Berthold Mission and Lebanon. Several of the circles and our young people gave gifts and presented programs at the Weaver Orphanage and the Patrick Henry Hospital for the chronically ill, both of these being community projects.

We are looking forward to the new year with a renewed spirit and hope to attain bigger and better things in our Lord's work.

Mrs. GLENN GIVENS,

Secretary.

A Page for Our Children

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Boys and Girls:

At the end of this month, a new translation of the Bible is coming from the printing presses. There are many articles about it in this issue. You will probably see one and hear it read in your Sunday school and church. It is a great event to be living at such a time.

Okapi—Aristocrat of African Animals

In the hidden depths of the vast Iturbian forest of the Belgian Congo lives the aristocrat of African animals, the okapi, pronounced o-copy. Fiercely independent, courageous and unpredictable, very few people have seen this animal in its prehistoric domain. The okapi was not known to the outside world until 1910.

A member of the giraffe family, the body of the okapi resembles an antelope's and its legs are banded like a zebra's. Its long, narrow head is a deep red, blended into black over the muzzle and into reddish gray to silver over the jowls. Its huge ears, known for their unusually keen hearing, are beautifully fringed with black. The back is deep black, flanks and belly are red. The magnificent ebony bands on a brilliant background, bordered here and there with brown, are met just above the knee by a stocking of immaculate snowy whiteness, with a bracelet of jet at the ankle. Delicate fur covers a skin of incredible thickness.

The meticulous care with which the okapi tends its precious coat is remarkable. During the day and sometimes at night it carefully bathes itself, licking its farthest spot of fur its tongue can reach. The tongue, more than fifteen inches long, folds and turns like a snake, and when the animal's sinuous neck twists back parallel to its body, the tongue can easily reach the tail.

A curious and interesting characteristic of the okapi is its enormous eyes, which roll over a very large surface and whose vision is remarkably keen. When at rest, these eyes are tender and appealing, but the slightest noise or irritation brings something hard, icy and strangely shocking to the expression. At the same time the animal utters a weird sound, a sort of neighing and loud grinding of teeth.

The strength of the okapi is extraordinary. The good-natured elephant, like the gorilla, maintains an easy neutrality with the okapi, and the fierce leopard will attack a young but not an adult okapi.

The okapi can travel all day and cover more miles in a day than a man on foot can cover in a week. At twilight, it seeks a pleasant stop to spend the night in a dry, clean and slightly elevated place protected from the rain, for falling drops of water from trees, or splashes of mud irritate it to the extreme. These seem to be the only things this curious animal really fears and tries to avoid. It never travels with another animal, and changes its resting place every day, unless it is a female with young.

The home of the okapi is one of the largest undeveloped regions in the world, equal in size to the combined areas of Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, California, Montana, Nevada and Oregon. Traversed by one of the world's largest rivers, the Congo, it is a vast region of natural resources, large portions of which have never been explored. This is especially true in the vast Iturbian forest, only home of the mysterious okapi.

No "Skirt Clingers"

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

What a continuously unfolding profession is parenthood! True, most parents do not recognize parenthood as a profession at all, but is not this because it is so generally practiced without proper preparation? When such preparation is sadly belated one of the first lessons for some parents should be, "Watch and guide your children," but for others, it should be, "Hands off." Many children are suffering from the lack of parental assistance in their problems, but a surprising number are being weakened by oversolicitude and too much direction.

"Don't let your child be a skirt clinger," cautions a wise child psychologist. A friend of mine, a delightful, well-educated woman, actually sang lullabies to her daughter regularly, even when she was in junior high school. That same daughter, now a college graduate and just released from a responsible position, telephoned her mother the morning after her wedding reception, "Where shall we go on our honeymoon, Mother?" Yet what else could the mother expect? In every way, since Cindy was a small curlyhead, she had trained her daughter to be a leaner, to let others do far too much of her thinking for her.

In sharp contrast to Cindy is Michael, reared by parents whose chief desire for their only son is a steady growth toward honorable, independent manhood. Michael has a paper route, has regular home responsibilities, runs errands for the neighbors, is one of a dozen boys who have a junior enterprise project, and when Mom and Dad go out for an evening he takes care of his small sister.

As I chatted with Michael, a question on world affairs was discussed, neither of us having the answer.

"When I don't know, I call the public library!" I confessed.

"I do that sometimes, but usually I look it up in our Children's Encyclopedia," the well-informed youngster replied.

If we teach our children to picture themselves as being self-reliant and capable of handling responsibilities, they will be far more able to measure up to this ideal than if we constantly discouraged them in every new venture.

A teen-age nephew of mine wrote, "My favorite motto is, 'They can who think they can.'" For years Don has been helping like a man in the family-owned-and-managed grocery store.

I have observed that even young children feel more important if they are permitted to pay the fare on buses and street cars, to answer the telephone, and to take simple messages. If while they are still quite young they are allowed to help with the dishes and with the care of their rooms and clothes, they will love to do these things, and soon they will be generally helpful around the house and in the garden.

Too many mother and fathers fail in the rearing of their boys and girls because they do not prepare them for emotional maturity. Character building begins at home, and some of the old ideas regarding child training have been found wanting,

Activities of Rosemont Youth Fellowship

The Youth Fellowship of Rosemont have been very active this past year. We presented a Christmas pageant which consisted of forty young people. We also observed a full week of activities during Youth Week.

World's Day of Prayer was observed and we had eighteen present.

A pantomime depicting the Easter Story was presented at the Palm Sunday night services.

An Easter Sunrise service was conducted by our young people and doughnuts and coffee were served for breakfast.

We also read our Daily Lenten Devotions.

We had a missionary speak to us in the winter, and one during the early summer. Our special collection for them was $50.00.

Our Missionary Study Book was reviewed by one of our members. We had as our guests the young people from South Norfolk Christian Church and Berea. A social was held after the evening services.

We also have had the young people from Hunterdale and from the First Church in Portsmouth as our guests, and socials were held for these also.

We conducted several evening church services and the story of the Book of Ruth and five scenes were portrayed in pantomime at one of these services.

A special collection of $40.00 was taken for Work Day for Christ.

We have paid $60.00 which was $10.00 above our apportionment, and gave $50.00 to our Building Fund on our Church's Golden Anniversary.

A round table discussion has been held for several weeks on Youth Problems and Christian Beliefs, conducted by Rev. Melvin Dollar who is beginning a study of James.

with an average of about 18 members per meeting.

Our new officers took their offices in October. They were: Mary Davis, president; Thurman Wilkins, vice-president; Billy March, secretary, and Mary Virginia Lewis, treasurer. Our leaders were Mrs. J. O. Davidson assisted by Mrs. James a Hareum.

During the year we have had a variety of programs. Mrs. Davidson lead a discussion about the topic, "What Shall I Do with My Life?" Everyone took part in the discussion and all of us benefited from it. At one of our meetings, Mrs. Hendricks Jones gave us a talk on the different symbols in our church and what they mean. Another program of great interest was given by our pastor, Rev. Allen Hurdle. It was a book review, "I Believe," by Neum C. Harner. Mrs. Allen Hurdle gave us a talk on other denominations. It was not long after that that we visited the Catholic Church in Suffolk.

At every meeting we have had some form of recreation. On several occasions we had special meetings just for recreation. We had a social at Christmas and another one on Valentine's Eve.

We have had two study books reviewed for us. Mrs. Allen Piland reviewed "Traded Twins" for us. In October, we were invited to Bethlehem Christian Church to hear the book, "Now," reviewed by Mrs. Thomas Woodward.

We feel that we have contributed much to our church in the past year. In the beginning of the year we organized a youth choir under the leadership of Mrs. Delman Felton. It has proven to be very successful. We contributed $25.00 toward the purchase of a carpet for our church. We feel that carpeting the entire church has added much to the worship services as well as to the beauty of the sanctuary.

On two occasions we have been invited to join the fellowship of other groups. On New Year's Eve we were the guests of the Union, Southampton youth group. The Holland young people invited us to a social on Saturday night, August 30, 1952, honoring Timothy Chang, who was guest teacher at the Holland Church on the following Sunday morning.

We hope, as this church year draws to a close that the good Lord will give us strength and courage to carry on another year as well as we have this one.

Young People of Eure's Christian Church Report

The young people of Eure's Christian Church have made wonderful progress this year. They have paid their apportionment in full, studied mission books and carried out all requirements except attending summer camps. They have also helped convert an old store building into a community house. It has been a great project, causing young and old to mingle together in helping to build a new church, for that is what we are hoping to do in the near future. This community house is a great means of supplying a place to have our social gatherings.

We have eighteen active members, and hope to gain more in the coming year. We hope we will be in the news more in the near future with a new church that we so badly need.

Relax With Max

THE SUN and I are in sort of the same position. I am beginning my third year writing this page, and none of the time have I known exactly what I was doing. Let me take this opportunity to thank all those officers and interested persons who have contributed to this page. This past month has been the best in the first two years, because many of you have sent in news.

Jesus Dedicates His Life

LESSON I—OCTOBER 5, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Lo, I have come to do thy will, O God."—Hebrews 10:7.

DEVOTIONAL READING: John 24: 14-21.

LESSON: Matthew 3: 16-4: 11, 17.

Introducing a New Series of Lessons.

We begin today a series of lessons from the Gospel of Matthew. For the next three months we will be studying the words and works of Jesus. This gospel was written by Matthew, a Jew, and presents Jesus as the King, the expected Messiah, the royal Son of God. It shows how the Scriptures were fulfilled through Christ. Again and again these words or their equivalent appear: "That the Scriptures might be fulfilled." It is the Gospel of the Christian Life. And, of course, the central Figure in the Book is Christ, the Example and the Source of the Christian Life. In today's lesson, we consider the dedication of our Lord to God. There are three phases of this dedication emphasized in this lesson.

Baptism.

Jesus early felt that he had come into the world for a specific purpose. Even as a lad of twelve, he had at least intimations of a divine commission. "Did ye not know that I must be about my Father's business?" he asked his distressed parents after they had found him at the end of three days' search in the Temple. And although there is no written record of the "hidden years," the years, eighteen of them, when he lived in obscurity in Nazareth, we may be sure that that conviction was deepening. Finally it crystallized and, leaving his home, he began his public ministry; or at least he dedicated himself to it. He was baptized by John, sometimes called John the Baptist, his cousin.

He, of course, was not baptized for his sins. He knew no sin. His baptism was a token of a symbol of his consecration or dedication to the work to which God had called him. It was a public announcement of his commitment to the will of God. He thus took this ancient form or ritual and filled it with new meaning and beauty and power. Baptism is all the more beautiful and wonderful since he glorified it with his life.

God set his "seal of approval" on his Son at the baptism. Matthew reports that "the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending as a dove, and coming upon him. And lo, a voice out of heaven saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." As Dr. Erdman says, "The former was a symbolic indication of the divine power by which his ministry was to be accomplished, the latter was an assurance that he was the Messiah, the very Christ of God. . . . He had then yielded himself to his task, he is now prepared for his service. He had then dedicated himself to his work, he is now consecrated to his career." To be sure, Jesus had had the presence of the Spirit before this occasion; but this experience brought to him a new assurance of the divine power and Sonship. The thing that concerns us is the fact that to those who dedicate themselves to the work of Christ, there comes assurance of Christ's approval and power.

Temptation.

Jesus was tempted—tempted in all points as we are. And because he was tempted, he knows how to help those who are tempted. The lesson today gives the story of our Lord's temptations at the beginning of his ministry. That was not the only time he was tempted; nor was it the only way in which he was tempted. But the account deals with the basic temptations which Jesus had to face and deal with at the beginning of his ministry.

"If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones become bread." Thus taunted and tempted the devil. "If"—that was subtle. The devil tried to awaken doubt. He insinuated that perhaps he was not the Son of God after all. Or if he was the Son of God, why not display his miraculous and magical powers! "As the Son of God, you have the power to turn these stones into bread. The people are hungry. By such a demonstration of your power, you can be hailed as the Messiah at once. You can make it easier for the people who are hungry." The power of the temptation lay in the truth of the tempter's words. But Jesus saw it for what it was, the temptation to put the requirements of the body above everything else, to enthrone material possessions above spiritual qualities. There are many today who follow Jesus for what they think they can get out of it. But Jesus refused to use his powers for his own selfish use. And he refused to use his powers to establish his Messiahship. His Kingdom is not eating and drinking, but righteousness and joy and peace in the Holy Spirit.

"If thou art the Son of God, cast thyself down!" The devil is more subtle than at first. He quotes Scripture to bolster his case. "You have already shown that you trust God. Good! Now cast yourself down from the spire of the Temple, and show just how much you do trust God. Then the people will really flock to you!" Basically the question was, how best could Jesus "get a name" for himself? Should he play to the galleries? Should he do something spectacular? Should he accommodate himself to the expectations of the people? And then, of course, there was the temptation to presume upon God's promises and protection. The answer of Jesus was clear and final. It is one thing to take risks in the sphere of one's duty. It is quite another thing to do this as a stunt. For example, it is one thing to ride in an airplane in the line of one's duty; it is quite another to do stunts on the wing of an airplane. One must not presume upon the power or the pity, the love or the mercy of God.

"If thou wilt fall down and worship me!" Jesus could have the whole world if he would do this. At least the devil said he could have it on those terms. But Jesus refused to be fooled. He knew in the first place that the world did not belong to the devil to be given away by him. But more, he knew that the world could not be obtained as a free gift, it would have to be won at a great price! The temptation raised the question of the method by which Christ should win the world, by the devil's method, or by God's method. He chose God's method, even though it sent him to the Cross. There was no short cut for him. There is no short cut for us.

The ancients had a theory that when a man conquered his enemy, or killed a wild beast, the strength of the victims became his own. It was a parable of the truth that each ars. Within the crocodile—and his brothers around him—were ancient papyrus documents, written in the same Greek as the New Testament. Researchers found to their amazement that this was the everyday Greek of housewives and schoolboys, and that the rules of classic Greek translation they had applied to the New Testament did not always convey the right meaning.

Old Testament scholars also are profiting by the findings in the age-old mounds of cities in Palestine, Syria, Egypt and Mesopotamia. The deciphering of some fourteenth century B. C. documents unearthed in Syria in 1928 revealed a language similar to Hebrew. Many obscurities in the Old Testament, particularly in Psalms, are cleared up as a result.

In the third place, many English words have changed meaning since the days of the Elizabethan language in which the King James Version is preserved. To be exact, more than three hundred English words in King James, accurately translated in 1611, have now so changed in meaning that they are misleading. Grandfather, Aunt Mary, Junior, Junior's Sunday school teacher, and maybe the preacher, think they know those words because they're familiar. That's the trouble. The words are familiar, but they aren't what they used to be!

To take a few examples: "Conversation" in 1611 was not a lot of talking but "behavior"; "comprehend" then is "overcome" now; "mansion" is "abiding place"; "prevent" is "precede"; "carriage" is "baggage." "Take no thought for the morrow" (Matt. 6:34) really means "Do not be anxious about tomorrow." "Suffer" is now translated "let"—a change that will save a new generation an unhappy concept of the verse. "Suffer the little children . . ." A middle-aged woman confesses that all during childhood she wondered why Jesus wished small boys and girls to suffer.

Many a Sunday school pupil who has wisecracked about the "first fruits of our dough" (Neh. 10:37) that the Israelites were asked to present, will find now that proper meaning of the word today is "course meal"; whereas the injunction, "Be not high minded" (Romans 11:20) in King James means for us today, "Do not become proud."

Inheriting on the one hand the inaccuracies and the weaknesses of the King James Version and on the other the greatest body of scholarship resources in history, the members of the Standard Bible Committee saw their task as threefold:

1. They have sought to recover the Bible; recover the text at points where the Hebrew and Greek texts that were followed by King James were in error; recover the meaning at points where King James was correct but now misleading on account of the changed meaning of English words.
2. They have sought to preserve the Tyndale-King James tradition—the basic structure of Tyndale and the simplicity, dignity, directness, beauty and power of King James.
3. They seek now (according to Dean Weigle) to replace the King James Version, because it is defective and misleading at many points. In its place, they offer the Revised Standard Version, as accurate as conscientious scholarship can produce in the light of what is known today. Where the Tyndale-King James wording was correct, it was kept. Where not, it was changed. Each substitution of words called for committee discussion, with a two-thirds vote of approval necessary.

Changes that will meet the eye at once are the return to the "Lord" of the King James Version, replacing "Jehovah" of the American Standard Version. For the first time, many readers will realize that the Psalms, much of the prophets and many other portions of the Old Testament are poetry; for instead of being set off as numerical verses they are printed in their original poetic form.

The two million persons who have bought the New Testament in the new version already know how reading is facilitated by the dropping of "eth" and "est" endings. "Thou" and "thy" remain only when addressing God in prayer.

The Old Testament section of the Standard Bible Committee followed the same meticulous plan of revision as the New Testament section. As a member prepared a preliminary draft of a book or a part of the longer ones, he presented it to the chairman, who had copies typed for each of the other members to study. During the following group sessions each verse was thoroughly discussed by the whole section and a vote taken to determine the reading for a mimeographed draft. This draft was distributed for written criticisms from members of the other section, from the Advisory Board representing the denominations, and from interested scholars. In time the agenda filled 909 single-spaced pages!

So many meetings were required to reduce that stack of sheets and arrive at the final manuscript that between June, 1949, and June 24, 1951, the scholars put in more than one hundred nine-hour days in conference.

The word change that occupied the last moments of their discussion was symbolic of the purpose of the revisers to recover the original spirit and meaning of the text. What to do about the Hebrew word chesed was the problem. One of the most important words in the Old Testament, it has been translated in earlier versions as "mercy," "loving-kindness," and "kindness." But those words, the committee agreed, do not adequately express the meaning of the original Hebrew, which was meant to describe the character of God and his disposition toward men. The term which was finally chosen was "steadfast love." It brings us closer to the God of the Old Testament as the early Hebrews knew him.

Dr. Fleming James, in a prayer that closed the last committee session, reflected the spirit of dedication in which members of the group worked and in which they present the Revised Standard Version of the Holy Bible:

"Almighty God, who didst reveal thyself of old in thy holy Word, and who didst choose us through thy church to make a revision of the Hebrew Scriptures in the speech of our day; we thank thee for the privilege thus bestowed upon us, and pray that our work may be acceptable in thy sight. Vouchsafe to speak to countless hearts in these pages over which we have labored. May this new version quicken men's interest in the Bible, and teach them to walk more surely in the way everlasting, that the Word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified.

The idealism of Christianity is Jesus Christ and eternal life.

The Orphanage
 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Our children's program will be ready for Sunday schools and churches the first Sunday in October. We would like invitations to churches in the Valley of Virginia, Eastern Virginia, and any of our North Carolina churches. The children derive real benefit out of the training which these trips give them. It opens the door for them to people and places beyond our campus. It trains them in speaking and singing. It gives them a touch of home and hospitality which is a real blessing. It boosts their morale and inspires them to be bigger and better boys and girls. If you want them to come to your church, let us know right away. This program is available any time this fall through the second Sunday in December. Churches near the orphanage may even engage the program for a week-night service.

This week, in Greensboro, a beautiful, large, stone church was dedicated to the glory of God and as a memorial to loved ones. It cost seven hundred thousand dollars. It was given by the members of one family. May it do much good.

Now, wouldn't it be wonderful if somebody would think of leaving a bequest for homeless boys and girls at the Christian Orphanage, or making a sufficiently large contribution to memorialize a loved one with a much needed diningroom and kitchen. Friends are rising up and joining me with a vision of this diningroom. We have practically no coldstorage equipment, only a refrigerator or so, and one family-size deepfreeze. What we need are coldstorage quarters with one room below freezing, one room at forty above freezing, and one room around sixty. With a family of one hundred to feed three times daily, this much storage is a necessity. Also the building should have space for the preparing of food, vegetables, corn, etc., for canning or cold processing. Our present kitchen is over crowded, and so also is our dining room. It is a dream of ours, for now we are repairing the buildings we have, and fighting with the high cost of living, so that at this place it is only a hope we have. But we believe that when enough people see the need, it will be met. It is my duty and obligation, knowing the need, to let you know about it.

Here they come now, a half dozen little fellows—boys and girls—to see me on their way back from school. They all talk at once as they come into my office, and all crowd around just as close as they can get. My ears are being filled with reports of words they have learned, pictures they have drawn, and what teachers have said. Very soon, since they have seen me and told me, they are on their way again. It doesn't matter so much as to whether I have heard each one separately, as long as I have given approval and a caress, or even a "scold" as though they were "upsetting my appplecart," all are satisfied. What a load of tomorrow they are! God bless them every one.

A new little girl came yesterday afternoon. She must have been told how to do. At any rate she came up to me very close, and answered my questions quite well. She was glad I knew her name. Yes, I did know her name, and much else about her besides, and from what I knew, it was good for her to come with us.

Save a place for us in your thinking, save room for us in your benevolent planning, and may you be well blessed in your living and your giving. Thank you for this good, very good, report this week.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

HYATTE.

The Golden Rule Bible Class of the Congregational Christian Church of Newport News, Virginia, wishes to express its sorrow in the passing of a beloved member, Mrs. Bessye Baker Hyatte, on August 22, 1952.

Therefore, Be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the divine will of our Heavenly Father.
2. That we extend our love and prayerful sympathy to the bereaved family, and commend them to the God of love and mercy.

ports for their reports that are to be made to conference. The church that has been busy all through the year raising its funds, doing its work and assembling its report quarterly will have comparatively little trouble with its annual report. When the work of the church is done efficiently and continuously all through the year the various institutions and causes of the church have received their share of support and are much stronger to do their work. The churches that have been negligent will have a good bit of strenuous work to do in these closing weeks of the conference year. The perfectly obvious needs of the college constitute a strong appeal to every individual and every church in our Convention. The entire apportionment for the college is more badly needed today than in any previous year. Your generous support will mean much.

RIGGS FIND EXPERIENCES INTERESTING.

veranda where we do most of our living; the white-wash men are messing up the kitchen; the painting hasn't been started yet; but our little house is really very livable already. Things would move along a lot faster on the house repairs if we hadn't been so busy that we weren't around to push the workmen. The children are doing very nicely in their country home and we are very thankful. The biggest question about our move here was their health, and they have proved to us that they not only keep well in the country but they love it. Louis has three little boy playmates that live right next door to us and they are together constantly. Occasionally they get rough with each other, but most of the time it is just wholesome romping. Louis is fast learning how to do the real country dance, and his latest fad is pounding the nearest tin or kettle, thumping his feet, and swinging his arms in fast rhythm. It's far from perfect, but he's learning fast. When the three of them get started one can hardly think because of the racket. Joy also is learning things. She started to walk day before yesterday. We had been trying to get her to take her first step for about a month, but all she would do is throw herself into our arms. Then yesterday she got so interested in the baby next door she forgot herself and walked towards him. Joy's feet are awfully unsteady yet. She has a hard time getting them off the floor. But her balance is very good, and she picks herself up easily. All she needs now is practice.

I have been filling in all my spare moments with helping Ed at the hospital. We had a cholera case the other day and I was busy most of the day distilling water in a home-made still for I. V. fluids. Every Tuesday I go out with Ed to a roadside clinic, . . . etc. I do all the jobs that no one else has time for. I think the day I like best though is the roadside clinic. We take our lunches and meet our patients under a huge tree near a temple. We see some seventy patients—half of whom are lepers. It is good to do a bit of nursing again, and the children don't seem to miss me one day.

Sincerely,
FRAN RIGGS.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

temptation overcome strengthens the victor by just that much. When the devil left Jesus, angels ministered unto him.

At his baptism, Jesus dedicated his life to God. In his temptation, he charted the course which he was to follow in doing God's will.

Preaching.

Jesus began his preaching on a seeming strange note. "Repent," said he, "for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." It was a stern summons to an "about face"—the word literally means "change your mind." The men of that day could not enter into the new order which Jesus was proclaiming, unless they experienced a complete change of mind and heart.

This lesson gives splendid teaching material to those who teach young people, although of course its truths are applicable to all ages. Here is the call to complete dedication, of the setting apart of one's life to the service of God, of the commitment of one's life to the cause of Christ and the Kingdom of God. The Master is come and calleth for youth to dedicate their lives to his service. May you say something that will encourage them to rise up and follow him.

For 16 years, leading Bible scholars worked at the Revised Standard Version of the Holy Bible. It is now ready—more accurate than any other version, and far easier to read.

It is based on the most authoritative manuscripts—some, recently discovered, more ancient than any previously known. It is written in the living language we use today, yet the poetic beauty of the King James Version is preserved. Here, at last, is a Bible all can read, understand, enjoy.

News Flashes

We are glad to be able to report to our readers that Dr. House continues to improve.

We commend to you the guest editorials contributed by Dr. Jesse H. Dollar this week. They are both pertinent and timely.

Waverly District Leadership Training School

Sunday school superintendents, officers, departmental superintendents, teachers, ministers and all who are interested in Sunday school work, are urged to attend the Leadership Training School to be held in Waverly, Va., October 6 to 10, from 7:30 to 9:30 each evening.

Rev. J. E. McCauley will serve as dean of the school, and Mrs. Garland Spratley of Dendron, will act as secretary. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Educational Secretary for the Southern Convention, will help to direct the work.

The following courses and teachers have been arranged for:

"Planning for Children in the Church," Mrs. Frederick Huber.

"Introduction to Teaching," Dr. Jesse H. Dollar.

"Improving the Sunday Church School," Dr. H. S. Hardeastle.

The following churches are participating: Barretts, Burton's Grove, Centerville, Dendron, Bethlehem Disputanta, New Lebanon, Union, Wakefield, Waverly, Spring Hill.

Amelia Reports

On Sunday, September 14, Amelia Christian Church held its second annual "Rally Day." The purpose was to encourage members who did not attend regularly, to resume their attendance again, and to gain new members. The enrollment did not increase much, however the attendance was much better.

Following Sunday school and the regular morning service conducted by Rev. Fred P. Register, lunch was spread on the church grounds.

After lunch the members of the church presented a wonderful play, "Answered Prayer," which has a great inspirational lesson for those who have let their faith wander away from God. Amelia Church highly recommends this play.

The play was followed by music and songs by little Danny and Melissa Burtch from Angier, N. C., who displayed a glorious revelation of talents—God-given talents, because they had hardly any training.

Everyone enjoyed the day's activities, and our purpose was well-filled since we had a much larger attendance and also had a wonderful time renewing old acquaintances.

Reporter.

Attention Laymen of the Western North Carolina Conference

This is just a little reminder that October 19, which is Laymen's Sunday, is just around the corner. I trust that you have already made the necessary plans to observe that day with the rest of our churches. If your church has never tried having a service with the laymen in charge, why not try it this coming October 19. And may I suggest that if the national date of October 19 is not convenient, that any Sunday in October will be fine. We would like to have as many of our churches as can to use their own men on the program. This is a good way to develop leadership. Why not take advantage of this opportunity?

After you have read this reminder, take it upon yourself to talk with your pastor, Sunday school superintendent, or Laymen's Fellowship president, and see that the program is lined up. Offer your services to

Numerous Outstanding Leaders On Elon Campus

The Elon College Student Christian Association held its fall retreat at the New Hope Conference Center, Chapel Hill, on Friday and Saturday, September 12-13, some fifty students and faculty attending.

This is the largest number to attend such an assembly from the Elon campus in recent years, and the spirit of the group was such as to promise much for the work and influence of this organization this year on our campus.

Among those who are contributing much to the program of the Student Christian Association this year are some notable youth leaders. Curtis Young, former president of Pilgrim Fellowship for the Southern Convention and now one of the executive officers of the national staff of the Pilgrim Fellowship organization; Philip Mann, president of S.C.A., and now himself president of the Southern Convention P. F. organization; Tom Targett, president of the United Student Fellowship, the Congregational Christian and E. and R. college Youth organization for North Carolina; Miss Laverne Brady, who has just finished a summer with a youth caravan with the E. and R. Church, and is the spark for most of the campus social activities thus far at Elon; Miss Grace Mathews, a transfer student, now a sophomore at Elon, from Meredithville, Va., who

Superintendent Visits Southern Pines Church

It was our pleasure to supply the pulpit of the Church of Wide Fellowship at Southern Pines, North Carolina, on September 21, in the absence of Dr. Robert Lee House, who suffered a heart attack some days ago.

A large and concerned congregation greeted us. They are pleased that Dr. House is making a speedy recovery, and hopes are high that he may be able to return to his pulpit before many weeks.

The church is in the midst of a building program. The sanctuary has been completed, and the chancel and new choir arrangement have added much to the loveliness of the church. It was a pleasure and inspiration to visit this good church. Our prayers join those of Dr. House's loyal people for his speedy and complete recovery. He is doing a great work in Southern Pines, and in addition serves as our efficient editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

"The Church Meeting"

Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, our good pastor of the Durham, North Carolina, Church, afforded us a most profitable opportunity to attend a meeting of that church on Wednesday night, September 17. It was what is called "A Church Meeting." The real purpose was to consider the financial opportunity and responsibility of the church in light of the Christian Gospel.

The budget for 1953 was considered item by item in that light. No motions were made, though accustomed to "speedy action" the members were tempted to "adopt" the proposed budget. There was ample opportunity to discuss every phase of the church's work and responsibility, and the net result was that a common mind was reached by the church members present.

The meeting was unhurried, frank and sincere. The "common mind" from this meeting will be taken to the annual meeting of the church, and we venture to say that the new budget of the church will be more meaningful than in any previous year.

We commend this "Church Meeting" idea to all our churches. We come into business meetings to hear the report of a finance committee, and because we trust the good minds and hearts of this committee, we just adopt—without "adapting"—the financial plan for the year. To consider our giving in the light of our Christian discipleship can revitalize our church life. Let other churches try the plan so well carried out by Dr. Harrell and his people.

LEADERS ON ELON CAMPUS.

has proved already an exceptional leader in her capacity as chairman of the Worship Committee of S.C.A.; Miss Louise Bemis, a freshman from Spencer, Mass., whose mother is the president of the Women's Work organization of the Massachusetts Conference, and a nationally known leader in missionary work, her daughter having spent the summer in a youth work camp in Puerto Rico, and looks forward to the mission field as her field after college; Roger and Robert Phelps from India, sons of one of our leading missionaries in India, and making a large contribution to the college life through S.C.A. These and others worthy of mention augur much for the future leadership of our college graduates, and help to confirm our confidence in the worthwhileness of maintaining a real Christian college at the center of our church life.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE SUSTAINING FUND

The Sustaining Fund for Elon College is a fund, established by the Southern Convention, to help meet the increasing demands laid upon the college by circumstances resulting from increased costs of operation and training leadership for our pulpits and pews. The college belongs to the Convention. Its problems are the problems of the Convention. We who belong to the churches of the Convention are the Convention. The problems of Elon College are therefore our personal problems.

Last year the churches of the Convention contributed $10,000.00 to the Sustaining Fund. That made it possible for the college to close its books, June 1, with a balance of $600.00 (a frightfully small balance for an institution like Elon!) when without the Sustaining Fund, she would have had to close her year with a deficit of $9,400.00. What a difference it made!

We are asked to give $1.00 per member from each church. Some have raised it as a "special." Such a plan may work for a year or two, but when the plan is used year after year, it ceases to be a "special" and becomes a regular item in the church program. It, as such, loses its "special" appeal. The special day idea has one big fault. It does not get the members not present on the "special" day. We believe the answer to the question of "How shall we sustain the Sustaining Fund?" lies in making the fund a part of the local church budget. Then all will share. It will be easy and its success will not have to depend upon those present on the day of the "special offering" having to pay the portion of the members absent that day. Many churches are putting the fund into their budget. Such a plan deserves a try, at least.

The Reverend Henry E. Robinson of Burlington, N. C., is now chairman of the Sustaining Fund. Dr. D. J. Bowden, Dean of Elon College, is secretary. They were recently elected by the General Committee. There is an announcement from them in this issue of The Sun, stating that Sunday, October 12 will be Sustaining Fund Sunday in all our churches. Letters have also been sent to all pastors. The committee offers literature, speakers, etc., to any church in the Southern Convention which might desire special help. If you have the Sustaining Fund in your budget, or have already raised your part for this year, you will not likely need them. If, however, you have not already raised the fund for this year, they can be of great assistance to you. Write them immediately. The time is short.

Making Conference Apportionments Easy to Pay

All churches would like to pay their apportionments in full. They should. Some have a hard time doing it. There is a way to make it easy. Many years ago, the Convention divided the church year into periods for special emphasis. The period around Thanksgiving was assigned to the Christian Orphanage. The Christmas season was suggested at the time for Superannuation; January and February for Elon College; Easter for Missions (three months), and June for Christian Education. We believe it was intended that whatever special effort was necessary would be given these various interests during the specified period, and the apportionment to each paid at the close of the special period. The churches which have followed that plan have found it easy to pay their conference apportionments, and have come to the end of their church year with all obligations met in full. How wonderful! No "clean up" campaigns, no deficits at conference time!

At the last Convention, the Finance Committee came forward with another plan which has great merit. It recommended to the churches that apportionments be paid quarterly, and that the Convention Office be requested, by each church thus paying, to distribute the amount sent in pro-rata over all items on the apportionment table. Such a plan gives money to each enterprise throughout the church year and makes it easier for them to meet current demands. That is about as fair as could be asked, if we are to carry forward a well-rounded program of support for all convention interests and enterprises. This is especially true with churches which may not pay their apportionments in full. It is fair, too, since the Mission Board would not have to wait, and perhaps borrow money to give aid to mission churches. Somewhere down the way we shall have to face this matter of how we support the convention program. The solution may well lie in the adoption by our churches of the above plan.

Since each church makes its own budget and determines how it shall be met, we commend to our pastors and proper church committees the above plans, both recommended by the Southern Convention for our consideration. Between the two plans, we feel that there is a way by which paying apportionments can be made easy, enjoyable and challenging. Take your choice, but in Heaven's Name, let us try to take the dread out of the support due our institutions and undertakings which have come into being as the result of vision and spiritual compulsion.

The Happy Nation

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

Pastor of First Church, Richmond, Virginia

The Psalmist voiced what history and contemporary life affirm in his declaration, "Happy is the nation whose God is the Lord."

Do you ask the reason for the misery, the wretchedness and the dejection that are found in many nations today? The answer is the fact that so many of the leaders in those nations and so many of their followers have neglected and ignored the God of our Christ as their Lord.

"Happy is the nation whose God is the Lord," but miserable and forlorn is the nation which ignores and repudiates the God of our Christ as its Lord. Witness the evidence in the sad story of ancient civilizations and that of contemporary nations the world over! The unspeakable inhumanities being perpetrated throughout the world today are due to the fact that nations have rejected the God of honor, of love, of mercy and of truth and peace as their Lord, and are bowing before the God of materialism, the God of greed and force. The Psalmist was right—the only happy nations are those whose God is the Lord. "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." No nation is secure—no nation which honors not the God of creation can know happiness and peace. Only nations that reverence the Lord God of time and of eternity with faith in his promises, appreciation of his love, respect for his will, his name, his Church, his Holy Day, and his Holy Word, can be a happy nation.

The happiness that the American people have enjoyed down through the years has been due to the fact that so many of her citizens have prayerfully sought to have God as the Lord of their lives and of their nation. Both believers and non-believers have been blessed by the faith of those who made God the Lord of their lives and of their homes.

Three hundred thirty-one years ago, the Good Ship Mayflower docked at Plymouth on Cape Cod, Massachusetts, and the Pilgrims, with high hopes and resolute faith, walked down the gang plank onto the soil of the New World. They forthwith proceeded to establish the first Congregational Church in America. It was religious faith which prompted them to make the perilous voyage over the untried waves, and religious faith gave them courage to face the unknown with confidence and unafraid. Before they finished their places of shelter, they built a place of worship.

Down through all the years since then, Congregationalism has made an enviable contribution to each period of American history. Today, more than one million members of the Congregational Christian Churches in our country bravely face the present and the future as worthy sons and daughters of their Pilgrim Fathers.

Those Pilgrim Fathers came to America in order more effectively to make God the Lord of their lives, and in order to worship him according to the dictates of their own consciences in their quest for freedom, truth and peace. The Pilgrim Fathers were not perfect, nor did they credit themselves with being so. They were as human and had as many foibles and short-comings as have any average group of Christians today. But they loved God and they trusted God, sincerely seeking to make him the Lord of their lives and of their newly established community. They prayerfully sought God's help in their effort to overcome their weakness, and they sought God's guidance in all their relationships and interests in life. Truly, God was their Lord—their chief concern. To honor him was their supreme purpose; to serve him was their highest delight, their main desire. Religion to them was not trammelled with obligatory creeds. Religion to them was a life of companionship with the Christ of God.

Our nation came into existence because of the fact that those who sought its being believed, worshipped and put their trust in God. The Colonial soldiers, when fighting for independence, were inspired of God in their desire for liberty. The private soldiers as well as the officers were men of prayer. General Washington, kneeling on the snow at Valley Forge, expressed the common faith of the Colonial soldiers and officers. He had only untrained farmers and tradesmen in his army—but their God was the Lord. The British generals were all trained in military tactics—their soldiers were well-trained—all the resources of a powerful nation were at their command. But they were on the wrong side—against justice, liberty and God. But Washington and his untrained army, with their limited resources, had God on their side, and the victory was inevitable—and the United States came into being.

Down through the years of our history as a nation, America has gained her high place among the nations of the world, because of the religious ideals of her leaders and their followers. God grant that America may never lose those ideals; God grant that America may never put her trust in the god of might, instead of in the God of right! If she should, then miserable will be her people, because their god will not be the Lord. But as long as the people of America worship and serve the God of their fathers, the God to whom Jesus and the prophets prayed, the God to whom General Washington and the Colonial soldiers prayed, the God to whom Abraham Lincoln prayed—so long as the God of our nation is the Lord, that long will the people of our nation be happy. "Happy is the nation whose God is the Lord."

But wretched and miserable is any nation whose God is not the Lord. Witness the plight of the people in the totalitarian countries today! And their plight will but become the more terrible until the God of righteousness is enthroned in their lives, their laws and their objectives. It was men of religious convictions and of spiritual courage who, under God's guidance, brought our nation into being, and whose services bequeathed to us the happiness with which our

The Word of God in New Words

By FRANCES DUNLAP HERON

II.—“The Newest is the Oldest”

Each Christmas, the women in the Jones family make plum pudding. To satisfy their husbands they all use a recipe handed down from Great-great-great-grandmother Jones. Of course each generation has said the pudding of the moment may not quite come up to the original ancestral production, cherished in tradition as the best ever concocted.

Not long ago, a new Jones bride, clearing out the attic, made a remarkable find. She uncovered—no, not Great-great-great-grandmother Jones' original recipe, but one copied in the painstaking script of Great-great-grandmother Jones—a copy three generations nearer the original than any other known.

And lo and behold, a comparison of the recipes shows that the product has varied! Somewhere along the line, a cook left out half a cup of sorghum molasses—most likely because it was stuck in between half a cup of citron and a half a cup of grape juice, and the copyist's eye simply slid over the middle half cup.

Furthermore, some cook must have decided that Great-great-great-grandmother's dough was a bit stiff and omitted a fourth cup of the flour. More shocking still is the discovery that some Jones housewife dared add half a cup of candied cherries.

Next Christmas the Jones wives will return to the attic recipe, the nearest to the original.

As with that plum pudding, so with a very, very old book—the Holy Bible. It is some 3,000 years since the Old Testament began to take written form. Almost exactly 1,800 years ago the New Testament was completed. Until the invention of printing around 1450, the Bible was kept alive by the only method known—a method subject to error—copying by hand.

But, someone protests, God would insure that his Word be kept safe, unchanged, from generation to generation. Indeed, strong proof of the divine origin of the Scriptures is the fact that they have come down to us through the ages with their hold on the human heart unchanged. For transcribing his Word, however, God had to depend on human beings—copyists whose eyes grew weary in flickering light, whose hands cramped in pain. They would have been superhuman if occasionally they did not misread a word or leave one out or add one.

How do we know that errors have crept in? Just as with the pudding recipe, we look back to the oldest manuscripts we can find. It is unlikely that we ever will unearth a first copy of a Bible book. But manuscript discoveries and archeological research of the last seventy-five years have pushed our knowledge ever nearer to the originals.

The Revised Standard Version of the Holy Bible, which was published on September 30, is the result of those discoveries and that research. The New Testament was published in 1946.

In trying to give modern readers an English Bible that is clear and meaningful and accurate, today's scholars have but followed in the tradition of more than twenty centuries of translation and revision. As early as the third century before Christ, the Old Testament was translated from its original Hebrew into Greek, then the international language. When the New Testament appeared, it, too, was in Greek.

As Christianity spread, the Greek Bible was translated in turn into other languages. The most famous was the Latin version, known as the Vulgate, prepared by Jerome in 385-405.

To John Wycliffe, rector and college master, we owe the first translation of the Latin Bible into English, completed in 1382. The first English version of the Scriptures to be made direct from the original Hebrew and Greek, and the first to be printed, was the work of William Tyndale. His New Testament of 1535 was to become the basis of all later revisions. Accused of perverting the meaning of the Scriptures, he was burned at the stake in 1536.

Soon afterward, however, his dying prayer, “Lord, open the King of England's eyes,” was answered and a succession of versions began to win favor. Myles Coverdale gave the people the first complete printed Bible in English. His Great Bible of 1539 was followed by the Geneva Bible of 1560, the Bishops' Bible of 1568, the King James Version of 1611, and the English Revised Version of 1885.

King James' instruction to his fifty-four translators was for a revision “as consonant as can be to the original Hebrew and Greek.” That they realized they were but one point in history is evident in their statement of purpose in translation: “To make a good one better, or out of many good ones, one principal good one.”

Certainly, if they were living today, they would be the first to commend the Revised Standard Version! How they would have enjoyed being on the Standard Bible Committee, and how they would have marveled at the wealth of old manuscript discoveries! Whereas, in 1611, they had access to only a dozen or so late medieval manuscripts of the New Testament, full of the accumulated errors of centuries of hand-copying, today's revision committee could draw upon hundreds of old manuscripts far antedating those of the King James group. Recent archeological findings throw new light on the meaning of the Old Testament Hebrew.

The Chester Beatty manuscripts of parts of the Bible, turned up in Egypt in 1930, go back as early as the second century A. D. Fragments of Deuteronomy have been found from the first or second centuries B. C. The Isaiah scroll rescued from a cave near the Dead Sea by a shepherd lad in 1947 appears to date from the late second century B. C. It became the basis for thirteen readings incorporated in the Revised Standard Version of Isaiah.

Throughout the new revision are changes correcting the additions, omissions and substitutions traceable to ancient and medieval copyists. These and other inaccuracies have been corrected because the committee could go back nearer the original manuscripts than any other group of scholars in history.

To take a few examples:

Just as the cook, copying successive “half cups,” left out the molasses, so in Revelation 8:7 a long-ago scribe overlooked the clause, “and the third part of the earth was burnt up,” and went right on to the next, “and the third part of the trees.”

The Chester Beatty papyri verified other evidence of a disastrous omission—the dropping of “God” as the subject of the sentence in Romans 8:28. King James had it, “And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God.” Correctly translated in the RSV, the verse declares, “We know that in

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

The 1952 fall semester is starting off in an encouraging way. We have a good enrollment and a fine spirit on the campus. Students and faculty seem to be happy.

* * *

The freshman initiation week, with the usual comic dress and the odd appearance is over. There are no casualties. Everybody seemed to cooperate but glad since this period of college life has passed.

* * *

The Music Department is endeavoring to reorganize the College Band. Jimmy Rhodes of Burlington, whose father wrote the college song, "Here's to Dear Old Elon," is the director. Jimmy is a good musician and will do a good job with the band.

* * *

The Burlington Civic Music Association will again present its performances in Whitley auditorium. The college provides the facilities and pays a slight sum for the admission of all students enrolled in college. This is a great opportunity for our students, and they appreciate it.

* * *

Homecoming Day has been set for October 11. The Elon College Fighting Christians are host to the East Carolina Pirates. This promises to be a real football game. The Carolina Pirates are coached by Jack Boone, a former football star of Elon College. Alumni all over Virginia and Carolina will be greatly interested in this game. All alumni are invited to come to the college for the afternoon program. The game will be played at 8 o'clock in the Burlington stadium.

The Two and One Half Million Dollar Campaign

This campaign has been in progress since 1946. When launched it was to extend over a ten year period. We have succeeded well thus far in the campaign. We are beyond the half-way mark, but we shall be compelled to redouble our efforts and make a bit more sacrifice if we are to succeed in raising the entire amount. To raise this sum of money will not be easy, but it is not impossible if our people will cooperate in this campaign, giving themselves freely to the organization and to campaign efforts. If all shall pull together, we shall succeed.

The average individual will contribute to a worthy cause if he is approached personally in an interested and convincing way. Few people will contribute in response to a telephone call or letter. When it comes to securing money, there is no substitute for the personal contact and the face to face appeal. In a personal conversation, ideas may be expressed, questions may be asked and answered, and otherwise the contributor may be convinced of his opportunity to give his support to a cause that will mean much to society and indirectly to him personally.

This campaign is to approach not only individuals, but corporations, business enterprises and manufacturing establishments. These organizations should be informed and made to realize that they do have a stake in education, that if they are to maintain freedom in their enterprise, we must also have, undergirding that freedom, freedom in education. The only way to maintain freedom in education is to maintain our free educational institutions and support them to the degree that they shall be enabled to compete favorably and successfully with tax supported and state controlled institutions. I am sure that our people realize this fact and will voluntarily give their support to Elon College. We are depending on the constituency of our institution to give the necessary support as we pass through the present crisis.

Apportionment Giving

It is the purpose of the Convention to enlist the church in support of the college through its churches and local organizations. In order that this support might be equitably distributed and adequate to a certain degree, the apportionment plan was adopted. Churches are not apportioned equal amounts, but the apportionment for each local church is determined by its membership, its ability to give, and its annual contributions to conference and convention enterprises. A total of $15,000.00 is apportioned to the two hundred churches. This $15,000.00 may seem to be quite a sum, and it is; but we should be reminded and the entire church should understand that this $15,000.00 will not pay for the cost of operating the college for fifteen days. The college has grown to such an extent that the expense of operation is inconceivable in comparison with the cost of operation when $15,000.00 was first apportioned to the churches. Of course, we should also understand that to help make up this difference the Convention authorized the Sustaining Fund of $1.00 per member for the support of the college. If this could be collected in its entirety and the conference apportionment would be paid in full, these funds would be of tremendous assistance to the college.

We are nearing the end of the conference year. I am sure that the churches will heed the convention authorization regarding these funds and make their best efforts to raise the amounts in full.

Piano Wanted

The West Dormitory of the college is badly in need of a grand piano. We find that the one in the social hall in West Dormitory has a cracked sound board, which renders it useless. It may be that some one of the college's friends has a piano that is not being used or not likely to be used anytime soon. If such a person should not be willing to lend or donate the piano to the college, perhaps he or she will sell it at a reasonable price. If the reader of this notice is at all interested, will you please write me at your convenience.

Here are directions for reaching Apple's Chapel, as sent in by Mrs. Rallis M. Cook:

From Greensboro—Follow Highway 29 north to the Monticello-Brown Summit crossroad; there take No. 150 to the right to Osceola crossroad; turn right again and the church is approximately 4 miles down that road.

From Reidsville—Follow Highway 29 south to the Monticello-Brown

From Burlington—Come to Gibsonville; from there take the Frieden Church or Reidsville-Gibsonville road and at Frieden Church take the road to the right. Apple's Chapel is about 6 miles down that road.

There is a large sign in front of the church. With these explicit directions it should not be difficult to find the church.

Let's have representatives from every society in the North Carolina Woman's Conference at Apple's Chapel next Tuesday.

Valley Woman's Annual Conference Will be Held at Bethel

Mrs. J. E. Bryant, president of our women in the Valley of Virginia, writes that her officers had a very fine board meeting on September 11, when they planned for their annual Women's Conference.

For many years the Valley women have met in July, which made it very difficult for them to plan their program to fit in with the other women's groups in the Southern Convention. This year they have voted to meet on Thursday, October 9.

The place of the meeting will be Bethel Christian Church, near Elkton, Va.

Mrs. Bryant concludes her letter by saying:

"I think every department of the Valley missionary work has been very progressive. We are looking forward to a good conference, as we are expecting some very fine speakers."

Best wishes to the Valley women as they meet next week—and we hope every church in that conference will be represented.

Postage on Packets

If you order the women's packets to be mailed to you from the Convention Office, please add 24 cents for postage when mailed to Eastern Virginia or the Valley of Virginia, if they contain the study books, and 20 cents without the study books. North Carolina postage costs 22 cents with the study books and 20 without. As you can see, this would amount to a sizeable item for the Convention office, and so individual societies must pay it.

Miss Coghill reminds us that if the packets are secured at the Women's Conference, this item of postage may be saved!

A Fine Report from Oak Grove

The Woman's Missionary Society of Oak Grove Christian Church, Sunbury, N. C., holds regular meetings each month, using the program outlined in the Year Book. Our meetings are well attended and we feel greatly benefitted by these meetings.

We observed World Community Day, World Day of Prayer, and May Fellowship Day.

For our community project, the ladies sponsored a "Paint Job." We had the interior of the church painted, then the outside, and then contributed to a new asphalt roof.

The grounds have been plowed and raked, and the driveways roeked. Also the eemetery has been improved with the help of the men of Oak Grove Church.

One of the greatest attainments of the year was a Daily Vacation Bible School, the first ever held at this church, and it was sponsored by our society.

Much has been done, more could be done, and we hope with a new slate of officers for the coming year, bigger and better things in our Lord's work will be accomplished.

After all, we are very proud of the work done by our little group under the leadership of our president, Mrs. W. K. Parker, and we hope to do even greater things in the coming year.

ETHEL H. PARKER.

THE HAPPY NATION.

nation has been blessed all of these years. And only men of religious appreciation and of spiritual courage are qualified to lead our nation in the present—only such can preserve and advance our national life. Happy will our nation continue to be, if her leaders and citizenry hold firm their faith in the God of our fathers.

In these days, as in all the days of our national history, we need statesmen instead of politicians; we need leaders who are Christ-minded. We need men who make no apology for being Christians, but who are proud of being known as Christians. Lord Halifax, as Ambassador to our country from England, when accepting his appointment, expressed the sentiment of every true statesman, "I shall in all things seek to follow the light of the love and judgment of God."

The religious ideals and the religious life of our nation must advance instead of decline, if we would continue to be a happy nation. Our nation's material wealth will in itself bring disaster to us as a people unless the spiritual life of both leaders and people is what it ought to be. Any boy who inherits material wealth without having moral and spiritual background and support is doomed for a swift ride to ruin. We have the story of the Prodigal Son in the Bible. And in the book which we call history, we have numerous stories of prodigal nations.

Ancient Greece and Rome made marvelous progress in the arts and sciences—progress which in many respects has not been matched by any nation before or since. Some of the secrets revealed to those ancient peo-

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Boys and Girls:

Among the commonplace but important things in our everyday living are ordinary postage stamps. These little stickers are on letters that bring us glad tidings from homefolks and friends, on birthday, Christmas and other occasion cards, and on parcels that contain material values.

More than 100 years ago there were no postage stamps, not many letters, and only a few postoffices. No letters were typewritten since the typewriter did not come into practical use until 1875.

There were no envelopes, either, in the early days of this country. Letters were written on sheets of paper, usually known as foolscap, about 13 x 16 inches. Only one side was used. The sheet was then folded in a particular way, with the blank side out for the address, and sealed on the corner. A postmaster would place his initials and indicate the amount of the carrying charge on each letter, the amount being according to distance. There was no parcel post.

Now back to postage stamps. Ordinary postage stamps, that is stamps other than commemorative, range in value from the ½-cent variety, which contains the picture of Benjamin Franklin, this country's first Postmaster General, to the $5.00 stamp on which the likeness of Calvin Coolidge is shown. In all, there are 32 varieties. Each deceased President is honored by some ordinary postage stamp, except Franklin D. Roosevelt. He has been honored by four commemorative stamps, and later his picture will appear on some ordinary stamp. Federal law forbids the use of the picture of a living person on any postage stamp.

The 50-cent stamp, and the $1.00, $2.00 and $5.00 stamps are issued primarily to meet the demands of shippers who use parcel post, and who prefer stamps to the postage meters. Warren G. Harding's picture is on the $2.00 stamp, Woodrow Wilson's on the $1.00 issue, and William Howard Taft is honored by the 50-cent stamp.

The great variety of ordinary stamps imposes a task of selection of colors and combination of colors on the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, for each stamp must be different.

The country's first postage stamps were issued in 1847. At first there were only the two denominations—5 cents and 10 cents. Benjamin Franklin's portrait was on the 5-cent and George Washington's on the 10-cent value. The manufacture of envelopes began about two years after the introduction of the first postage stamps.

Needless Disappointment

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Did you have a nice Tea this afternoon?" I asked my friend, Jane Goddard, who teaches in the third grade at Central School. "A number of mothers told me they were planning to attend it."

Jane had come to the library, where I work in the children's room, so that we could go together to dinner at the home of a mutual friend.

Her face clouded as she replied, "That's what most of the mothers told their children—that they were coming to the Tea—and then some of them failed to appear."

"I'm sorry you didn't have a good attendance after all of you—teachers and pupils—had done so much to make the Mothers' Day Tea attractive."

"We did have a good-sized crowd," Jane acknowledged. "I think, to the mothers and to the children of the mothers who were there, the Tea was worth all the effort it cost. I'm just feeling sorry for the children whose mothers disappointed them."

"It means a great deal to a child to have his mother visit his school, doesn't it?" I commented.

"More than most mothers realize," Jane agreed. "One look at some of the disappointed little faces I saw today would have told them that. The worst part of it was that the mothers had promised to come, and the children were expecting them. Perhaps some of the mothers were unavoidably detained at home, but it would have been better had they not given a definite promise. As it was, their children waited for them in vain all afternoon, while their more fortunate friends welcomed their mothers and guided them around the building.

"The Mothers' Day Tea at Central School," Jane explained, "is intended as a gift from the children to their mothers. Committees to arrange for it are chosen in each room, and we make an effort to give every child some part in the preparations.

"The children in my room made invitations in their art class two weeks ago and took them home to their mothers. Gary Woods had never done good hand-work, but he tried very hard this time and carried home a neatly-lettered invitation. The boy was all smiles next morning when he came to school. 'Mother liked the invitation,' he told me, 'and she's coming to the Tea.'

"One after another, almost all of the children gave me the same report 'My mother has promised to come to the Tea!' The few whose mothers were working outside their homes or who knew in advance that something would prevent their attendance explained this to me. Those children, naturally, were sorry, but would not suffer disappointment, because they were not expecting their mothers.

"The first part of the afternoon was given to a brief welcoming program in each room; then the children took their mothers to the auditorium, where the tea table was in readiness, and there all the mothers and teachers could visit with each other. Host and hostesses were stationed at the doors of the rooms and in the auditorium to greet the visitors.

"Gary Woods was at the door of our third-grade room. I watched him greet each mother who came, all the while watching for his own mother to appear. As the moments passed and there was no sign of Mrs. Woods, his face grew very sober. Finally the program in our room was over, and Gary's mother still had not arrived.

"When the little procession of mothers and children from our third-grade room started down the hall, Gary took his place among those who were going to the auditorium with me. All of his joyous enthusiasm was gone.

"A promise to a child should never be lightly given," Jane concluded. "Gary would have been spared a needless disappointment if his mother had told him beforehand that there was a chance she would not be able to come to the Tea. Keeping faith with a child is essential to the development of his sense of honor and responsibility."

An Elon College Junior Goes Caravanning

The six weeks spent caravanning this summer were the most profitable I have ever had. Profitable not from the moneyed angle, but from the fellowship, the good experience, and the rich memories.

This particular caravan training session was supported by the Evangelical and Reformed Church. Forty-nine young people from all over the United States came to Tiffin, Ohio, for nine days of intensive training in preparation for the weeks ahead.

After splitting up into teams of four members, the eight regular caravans began to study the application blanks made by the churches. We wanted to learn why a caravan was needed in each church.

You may be wondering what happened to the others of the forty-nine, since 8 times four is thirty-two. Ten of them went to St. Louis to spend the summer in slum areas. Seven more went to Honduras to build churches, paint and teach.

On the Indiana team were eighteen year old Jim Swander from Tiffin; Alice Stevens from Shelton, Conn., a nineteen-year old; Marge Riesinger of St. Louis, Mo., who had taught school for five years; and me, a junior at Elon College.

We chose Marge as our leader. Jim was the treasurer of the group; Alice, the librarian, and I, the secretary.

Our first week away from Tiffin, we served as counselors at Camp Merom, Indiana. Merom used to be a college, but it closed in the twenties. Some of the old students came back for a reunion while we were there. Rev. W. E. Alexander, who was Elon's college pastor following the closing of Merom, was there for the gathering. We talked at length about his days at Elon. He remembered my father quite well, and naturally I was pleased that he did.

Two large city churches in Evansville, Ind., used us for the second week. Being city churches, they had the problem of low-income neighborhoods closing in around them. The church people are perplexed about whether or not to move somewhere else. Since the church youth live all over the city, much of their efforts is disjointed. We tried to get the Youth Fellowship program functioning better, so that the needs of its members might be supplied.

Another large E. & R. Church in Louisville, Ky., asked for us the next week. The dozen-or-so youth in this group stuck closely together so as to form a clique. Their interest span was quite short, so they very quickly dropped all the projects they attempted. The caravan members tried to get them to expand their circle and to have programs that would hold the interest of newcomers. As we left, we felt that only the surface of their problem had been scratched.

From Louisville, we rode all night so that we might spend the day sight seeing in Chicago. Alice and Jim went to a triple-feature at the theatre. Can you imagine going to Chicago and doing nothing but seeing a movie (rather three of them)? Marge and I splurged and took a conducted tour. We found it difficult to stay awake and that made us mad—to think that we'd paid to see Chicago and were too sleepy to do so!

A welcome change from the larger churches was a Congregational Christian Church in Anamosa, Iowa. Anamosa is a peaceful county-seat town. At one of our gatherings, we had a wonderful little man, eighty years young, to participate in the folk games. It warmed our hearts to hear him say later that our service to the church was invaluable and the cause of Christ was greatly reflected in us. These are some of the unforgettable memories.

In Godfrey, Ill., we helped the youth plan a program outline for six months ahead. On Thursday night, the parents came along, too, and everyone participated in a consecration service. Each vowed to work in his own way to make Christianity a reality for us and others.

I know I never before have used six weeks in such a very profitable way. As we worked, painted and carpentered in the mornings; made preparations for the evening activities in the afternoon; then executed those plans at the evening meetings, my teammates and I grew in fellowship and understanding. Besides our service to the youth and the churches, each of us gained a new insight about true Christian living which, I pray, may shine through our lives and influence others.

LAVERNE BRADY.

Elon College Pilgrim Fellowship Retreat

On Friday afternoon, September 26, the Pilgrim Fellowship of the Elon College Community Church held their fall program-preparation retreat at New Hope Conference Center, Chapel Hill, N. C., staying overnight and returning at noon on Saturday.

Twenty-eight young people and counselors shared the retreat program, which was set up by Mrs. Jas. H. Booth, adult counselor for the Pilgrim Fellowship and the pastor, Rev. H. P. Bozarth. Assisting with the program were Curtis Young, the chairman of the Faith Commission of our National Pilgrim Fellowship Executive Staff and a freshman at Elon College; Miss Laverne Brady, a junior at Elon, who has become the outstanding leader in social programs on the college campus this year, after spending a summer with a special youth caravan; and Tom Targett, a sophomore at Elon, who is president of the North Carolina United Student Fellowship, the newly formed organization of the Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed denominations. No youth assembly could be more fortunate in the assistance given by such outstanding youth leaders, and the Pilgrim Fellowship members of Elon returned with a comprehension and purpose regarding the coming year's work, and an enthusi-

Jesus Describes the Christian Life

LESSON II—OCTOBER 12, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works and give glory to your Father who is in heaven."
—Matthew 5: 16.

LESSON TEXT: Matthew 5: 1-12.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Romans 12: 9-21.

Folks haven't changed much since Jesus' day, at least not basically. Like the people of his day, folks are looking for happiness. And a lot of books are being published, telling how to be happy. And a lot of money is being spent by people in an effort to find happiness. And yet, happiness seems to elude us. How many people do you know who seem to be genuinely happy? To be sure there are many people who seem to be having a good time. But deep down in their hearts they are not happy, and they would frankly tell you so if you asked them. Why is it that so few people find happiness?

The lesson for today gives the answer. People fail to find happiness because they look for it in the wrong place. Perhaps it could be said, they fail to find it because they deliberately set out to find it. Happiness is an elusive thing, it cannot easily be laid hold on. People think that happiness is to be found in things or places. If only we had more money, more things, if only we were somewhere else, if only we were somebody else, we could and would be happy. It is the great illusion.

As Jesus sat on the mountain-side and looked at the great multitude before him, he was moved by what he saw. Here were people feverishly seeking happiness. Here were people disappointed, sorrowful, frustrated, unhappy. And at the beginning of what we call "The Sermon on the Mount," he says in effect, "I will show you the road to happiness." And he opened his mouth and spoke what we call the "Beatitudes." They are called that because the first words are the words "blessed," which, of course, is akin to beatitude.

What Jesus makes clear in the "Beatitudes" is that happiness is not the sum total of pleasure, not in possession of things, but it is the result of inner attitudes. Then he breaks it down into some of its component parts. He mentions some of the qualities of mind and heart which make for the happy or blessed life. What he said must have come as a surprise to the people who heard him. It comes as a surprise to people today. We still think that happiness is to be found in goods, and not in goodness, in doing and not in being, in having and not in helping, in being served and not in serving. And, as a result of all this, we are hurried and harried and hampered in life.

Some Qualities of the Blessed or Happy Life.

"Blessed are the poor in spirit" . . . Blessed or happy are those who are free from spiritual pride, who feel a sense of dependence on God, who are not smug and self-satisfied, who are conscious of their sins and sorry for them, who seek forgiveness and yearn for pardon. To those of such spirit belongs the Kingdom of Heaven.

"Blessed are they that mourn" . . . Strange indeed that a fellow who mourns can be happy or blessed! And yet that capacity to mourn, to feel sorry for the plight of others, to mourn the loss of loved ones and friends, to be affected by the decline of their nation's greatness, is in itself a factor in the blessed life. Only sensitive souls can mourn—the careless and callous and hardened do not have the quality of life which makes it possible for them to be happy.

"Blessed are the meek" . . . That sounded strange to the people of Jesus' day. Rome mocked at the word meek. In their thinking meekness meant weakness. It is thus in the thinking of many today. But not so. Meekness is strength, directed strength. It does not mean inferiority or ignorance. Jesus called attention to the fact that he was meek and lowly, but there was no weakness in him. Meekness is submission to the divine law, and men who submit to the divine law are strong and courageous. The earth belongs not to the militant but to the meek. Jesus himself says so.

"Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness" . . . It might seem that those who had arrived would be more happy than those who are still on the way. But Jesus says that the blessed life is the growing life. The folks who think that they have grown as much in grace as they can, who think they have received all the blessings from God that he has for them, who feel no sense of incompleteness, who are not stretching toward the mark—to these God cannot make known his exceeding riches of grace in Christ Jesus.

"Blessed are the merciful" . . . One can be merciful from selfish reasons. A man might be merciful for no better reason than that he might someday find himself in need of mercy. That is a false mercy, only a disguised selfishness. But when one shows mercy, expecting nothing in return, one is showing Christian mercy at its best. And such mercy will indeed receive its own reward.

"Blessed are the pure in heart" . . . The word means, of course, purity in the sense of cleanness. Impurity blinds or distorts our vision of God, our capacity to see God. But the word also means "sincerity" or singleness of mind. Those who have such a desire to see God that they try to keep their inner lives clean, and their actions unified, shall indeed see God.

"Blessed are the peacemakers" . . . That means what it says, literally, the folks who make peace. Peacemakers are those who keep the peace, or restore the peace when it has been broken by others. Their lives are centers of goodwill, of understanding, of tolerance, of mutual trust, of friendliness, of peace. Such folks are indeed the children of God.

"Blessed are they that have been persecuted for righteousness sake . . . when men shall revile you and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely (such evil as they speak must be false) for my sake" . . . Here is a quality of character dealing with the Christian's relationship to the world externally. One could develop the other qualities in a monastery or in a cave. Jesus intimates that those who have the qualities of character mentioned above will have to suffer for his sake. But they will find joy in it, for they thus become a part of a great fellowship of the prophets before them, and a fellowship with Jesus himself. Comfort and ease do not always, and certainly not wholly, make for happiness and blessedness. The happy

THE HAPPY NATION.

ples have ever since been withheld from the mind of man. What grandeur those nations attained! But, because their god was the god of licentiousness, sensuality and debauchery, and was not the God of righteousness, they fell—and “great was the fall thereof”!

History is characterized by repeating itself. Regardless of what power any nation may have attained today, if its God is not the Lord, that nation is doomed. Ancient Babylon, ancient Greece and ancient Rome—the greatest nations of their day, fell in ruins because they worshipped materiality and physical strength and sensual pleasure. Their governments were built on selfishness and narrow nationalism; their institutions of government have fallen and long since crumbled into dust, and their civilizations have perished from the earth. Their citizens were unmindful of the God of heaven and indifferent to the consequences of wrong living. They did not consider the fact that “the wages of sin is death” for nations as for individuals, and their civilizations fell.

We read in our histories about “Proud Rome”—The City on Seven Hills—the home of the Caesars, and of the proud line of aristocracy in art, literature and politics. But the Rome of today is a pathetic shadow of the glory that ancient Rome once possessed. A visit to the ruins of that ancient city brings depressingly to the visitor’s mind that neither men nor nations can live by bread alone, or by the glory of material power. The present day would address the proud Rome of antiquity: “Proud Rome of the long ago, for centuries you ruled the then known world. The story of your high day of privilege has been studied in the schools of the world down through the centuries since your ignominious collapse. O that the nations of today might profit from the lesson of your fall. Because you allowed selfishness to supplant righteousness; because you condoned and legalized sin and crime; because you became drunk with dreams of conquest and power; because you ignored God’s laws; because you ignored the rights of humanity; because you defiantly followed the ways of wrong-doing; O Rome, your sins found you out, and the judgment of Almighty God came upon you; and your once proud nation went down in disgrace. Even the language you spoke has long since been pronounced ‘dead.’ The ruins of your temples, your Circus Maximus, your Coliseum, your palaces, today tell the price you paid for ignoring the God of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.”

And from the distant past, the voice of the Rome of yesterday would reply: “The glory that was once ours has crumbled into dust, because our people sought not the God of honor and truth, and loved not the good. Righteousness would have exalted our nation, and would have brought happiness to our people. Righteousness would have preserved us as a nation, but our sins against God and mankind brought upon us our ruin and our destruction.”

It has always been true that nations which pass out of the picture come to their end by their own hand of self destruction.

Let the nations of today look to ancient Rome for its warning! Let our own America and every nation of today look to the Rome of antiquity for their warning in these modern days! Across the centuries may be heard that warning, “Be sure your sins will find you out.”

Disaster comes to any nation that forsakes God. Miserable is the nation that rebels against God and tramples under foot his Holy Commandments. Happy is the nation whose God is the Lord—the Lord of truth, of righteousness, of life and of peace.

Ancient Greece and Rome held the place in the world of yesterday that America and Great Britain hold in the world of today. Those ancient nations perished from off the earth, not because they lacked knowledge, but because they lacked goodness of life. The works of those ancient masters in literature and art, are the models used by the schools of the world today. No artist since has been able to match the art of Phidias of ancient Greece. The writings of Demosthenese, Plato, Vergil, Horace, and scores of others among those ancient writers, are scarcely approached in elegance of thought and literary expression by the writers of either the medieval or the modern world. Ancient Greece and ancient Rome lost their power and their prestige not because of lack of knowledge, but because of lack of righteousness. Righteousness would have exalted and saved those nations. And only righteousness can exalt and save our beloved America today.

Those ancient nations did not perish because of their lack of wealth. They perished not because of their lack of military power, for both ancient Greece and ancient Rome boasted that with their combined armies they could conquer the then known world. Armies and navies do not give nations security. Indeed, it was the superior military power and might of modern Germany which was responsible for hurling that nation into its present abyss of disgrace, impoverishment and shame. Righteousness, which means good citizenship, honorable living on the part of the leaders and of the common people, obedience to God and reverence for God—this alone gives a nation security.

The nations of yesterday that have gone down to ruin and have perished from the earth, passed into oblivion because they lacked genuine goodness of life—they lacked righteousness—they ignored God. History tells how low the morals of the people became before the nations collapsed. History tells how every form of sin was countenanced and legalized by those nations before they went to pieces. They began to decline when they began to be guilty of practices abhorrent to God, the Lord of life. Anyone who reads history knows the story of the decline of ancient civilizations. Anyone who has visited the ruins of Pompey and seen the museums of antiquity in the city of Naples, knows the story.

Any nation that ignores God, any nation that neglects the worship of God, any nation that countenances evil, and that licenses wrongs of any kind, will pay the price. Their judgment day is coming—just as it came to the nations of old that fell beneath the weight of their own sins. Miserable has been and is the fate of nations that forget God!

The churches of Jesus Christ are dedicated to the proposition of bringing happiness to their nation, by holding before the people the light of faith in the God of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Happiness walks out on any nation whose God is not the Lord.

Well may we be frightened by the thought of what the future holds in store for any nation in our modern world which puts licentiousness, state socialism, communism, or bureaucracy as the pagan god of its hopes!

The most patriotic gesture any American can make in these critical days is to “stand up and be counted on the Lord’s side” as a true soldier of the Cross.

In Memoriam

PIERCE

Mrs. Dora Covington Pierce, a resident of Richmond, Va. for forty-one years, passed from Labor to Reward Wednesday morning, August 13, 1952 on her eighty-third birthday.

Mrs. Pierce was the daughter of Samuel T. and Mary Jane Covington. She leaves to mourn her going a daughter, Miss Janie Pierce; a son, Mr. Edgar Covington Pierce; a nephew, Henry Wellons Covington; a niece, Gloria Covington; a number of distant relatives and a host of friends.

Mrs. Pierce was one of the charter members of The First Christian Church of Richmond (now The First Congregational Christian Church), and was one of the leading spirits in this Fellowship to the day of her death.

Her husband, Archie Edgar Pierce, preceded her in death in 1922. In the going of Mrs. Pierce, Richmond has lost one of its noblest and truest Christians and one of its worthy citizens—the spiritual matriarch of her church which she loved with all her mind, her soul and her strength and to which she was devotedly faithful until death promoted her to The Church Triumphant. Her glorious deeds of loving service, and the memory of her distinguished noble life will be an inspiration down through the days to come to all who knew her. Earth is the poorer by her going, but heaven is the richer in her coming.

Memorial Services were conducted at her church by her pastor, Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, assisted by a former pastor, Rev. J. E. McCauley of Waverly, Va. Burial was in the cemetery of the Pleasant Grove Christian Church, Halifax County, Va.

BONDURANT

We, the members of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Rosemont congregational Christian Church, wish to pay loving tribute to the memory of one of our faithful and charter members, Gertrude Gibson Bondurant (Mrs. H. L.) who passed away on July 15, 1952. In her going we feel a deep sense of loss, yet are we strengthened by the faith and hope that was hers.

Because then, of the love and esteem in our hearts for her, be it resolved:

1. That we honor her life not only with our lips, but by being true in service to the cause she loved and served.

2. That we extend our sympathy to her family, praying that in their sorrow they may find peace of God that passeth all understanding.

help, and I am sure that you will be doing your church a great favor. Men, this is a great day for us, so let us not let it go by without doing our little bit to help build the Kingdom in the hearts of men.

After you have done this, I would appreciate it if you would send me a card telling me that your church observed Laymen's Sunday, so that we will know the number of churches that joined hands on that day.

Hoping for you a great day on October 18, I remain,

Sincerely yours,
S. H. PELL,
Chairman.

Editorial Note.—While this appeal is made to the Western North Carolina Conference, we suggest that the laymen of the other conferences may well heed it.

THE WORD OF GOD.

everything God works for good with those who love him."

Substitutions were more numerous than omissions. A scribe who got two letters wrong, turned the original Greek word for "was perplexed" into "did" in Mark 6:20, and King James followed: "Herod feared John, knowing that he was a just man and an holy, and observed him; and when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly." How much more sensible is the correct reading of RSV: "Herod feared John, knowing that he was a righteous and holy man, and kept him safe. When he heard him, he was much perplexed, yet he heard him gladly."

Apparently trying to improve on the text, another ancient copyist substituted "Joseph" for "his fathre" in Luke 2:33. In RSV the verse (referring to the baby Jesus) is correctly restored: "And his father and his mother marveled at what was said about him."

In the class with the addition of the half cup of cherries to the plum pudding recipe are many deliberate additions to the original biblical text. The adjective "begotten" does not appear in the oldest renditions of John 3:16; RSV correctly translates, "God . . . gave his only Son." I John 5:7, as it reads in King James, "For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one," does not occur in any Greek manuscript written prior to the fifteenth century. RSV, therefore, omits it.

Someone in the seventh century undertook to bring Ephesians 5:30 up to date by adding to the original statement, "We are members of his body," the words "from his flesh and from his bones." The King James translators did the best they could by treating the inserted words as apposition, "For we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones." The flesh and the bones are no more in the Revised Standard Version.

Thus it stands—on minor points and on significant interpretations—the newest version with the oldest authority.

asm which has made this retreat memorable in the history of the Pilgrim Fellowship of this community.

At one session Curtis Young presented the picture of Pilgrim Fellowship at work from the local to the national level, and held a splendid discussion following. Laverne Brady and Tom Targett led the young people in a highly successful social program following the evening session on Friday. Mr. Targett led the outdoor morning worship service on Saturday morning, preceding breakfast. Following breakfast, a skit was given on "What's Wrong with This Picture?" it being a demonstration of "How not to conduct a Sunday evening P. F. program."

The young people divided into four Action Groups, thereafter, to outline their program for the ensuing three months, to which all look forward most eagerly.

Max says: "Guess I done and went and made another mistake. Since I told you how much I appreciated the news you were sending, I ain't got none. So please start sending it again and I won't say nothing!"

Dr. Bozarth sent his wonderful article direct, we suppose to save time, so Max didn't know about it. But, honestly, we do hope that you will help Max relax by contributing your share to this page. M. E.

COLLEGE SUNDAY

SUSTAINING FUND EMPHASIS — SUNDAY, OCTOBER 12

The Sustaining Fund Committee at its meeting at Elon College, September 16, voted to designate Sunday, October 12 as College Sunday. At this time an offering for the Sustaining Fund should be received. October remains in the College Emphasis Period and affords a most appropriate time for the churches to meet their goals of one dollar per member before the Conference year ends.

The Sustaining Fund Committee is prepared, on request, to supply every church with a guest speaker, literature, offering envelopes, and any other help in its power to give. Address the Sustaining Fund, Elon College, N. C.

The value of the Sustaining Fund to the College cannot be overestimated. The aid rendered from this source is sorely needed for current expenses. But for the receipts from this source last year, the College would have shown an operating deficit.

Some of the churches have put the Sustaining Fund in their budgets for next year. This seems a logical and sensible way of handling this item, and your committee commends the practice to every church.

May October 12 be a day of renewed devotion to the College. Let us have your requests for assistance as your plans develop. You can count on your committee. May your committee count on you!

HENRY E. ROBINSON, Chairman.

Ebenezer Builds a New House of Worship

EBENEZER CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Ebenezer Christian Church, in the Eastern North Carolina Conference, was organized on August 2, 1883, and the first church building was completed approximately one year later. This church was rebuilt in about 1926. In 1949 plans were begun for the building of a new church plant, and the present structure was dedicated on September 14 of this year. Under the leadership of Rev. W. Clay Farrell, the membership is now 237, and there is also a growing Sunday school. We are expecting great things of Ebenezer.

News Flashes

Thirteen people joined Greensboro First Church on World Wide Communion Sunday. The church reports a total for the year of 65.

Rev. Carl R. Key of Durham, N. C., associated with CROP, is supplying at the Southern Pines Church. Mr. House is getting up and has been out to sit on the porch.

The Suffolk Christian Church has completed the redecoration and renovation of its sanctuary. A new stained glass window has been installed in the chancel, new lights and new paint bring beauty and opportunity for worship.

Your managing editor wishes to thank those who have been cooperating so wonderfully during the past few weeks in contributing material and other assistance in the publishing of THE SUN. Please keep up the good work.

Mr. W. B. Williams of Newport News, Virginia, president of our Convention Laymen's Fellowship, will be the guest editor of the October 16 issue of THE SUN. There will also be other contributions which should be of interest to the men of our church.

Dr. Wofford C. Timmons will be the welcome guest minister at Suffolk Christian Church for their annual Preaching Mission, beginning on Sunday, October 12. Churches in the surrounding areas are invited to share as many of these services as they can.

The First Church of Greensboro has voted to sell their old building to the group known as The Church of God, which is being forced to move out of their building because of the widening of a street. Mrs. Wisseman says: "We are all glad that it is to remain in use as a church building."

Rev. A. Lanson Granger, Jr. pastor of our church at Newport News, Va., writes: "A Week of Christian Decision, with Rev. Richard L. Jackson, pastor of the United Church of Chapel, N. C., preaching, is being held in our church each evening, October 5-10. We are preparing for these services as a time of quickening of Christian faith and decision."

Dr. Timmons to Speak at Preaching Mission in Suffolk

Rev. Wofford Colquitt Timmons, D. D., will be guest minister for the annual Preaching Mission held at the Suffolk Christian Church, beginning on October 12.

Dr. Timmons, who is the director of the Department of Evangelism of the Congregational Christian Church, has the responsibility for promoting a program to reinforce the spiritual life of the pastors and people of our churches. At the Oberlin meeting of the General Council in 1948, a "Call to Advance" in Christian commitment was issued and adopted by the representatives of the churches. This has been made the basis of an advance in the denominational Christian World Mission.

"Our primary need is the revitalizing of our local churches," points out Dr. Timmons. "The first step (Continued on page 15.)"

Will Hold Church Rally in South Boston

A rally and fellowship meeting of the members and friends of the Congregational Christian Church in the South Boston, Virginia, area, will be held at the C. H. Friend High School in South Boston on Sunday, October 12, at 3:00 p. m.

Among the Congregational Christian Church officials and pastors expected to be present are Dr. L. E. Smith, Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Rev. W. W. Snyder, Rev. W. T. Madren (pastor-elect of the Ingram pastorate), and Rev. M. W. Andes.

The adult choir of Union Church, Virgilina, will render special music.

All members and friends of the Congregational Christian Churches in the South Boston area are urged to be present.

Attention Laymen of the North Carolina & Virginia Conference

Our laymen will be gathering from all churches of the North Carolina & Virginia Conference in Greensboro, North Carolina, on Saturday, October 18, for a supper meeting and rally at 7:00 p. m. We will assemble in the beautiful new building of the First Congregational Christian Church, which has been acclaimed one of the most modern and finest churches in the South.

Dr. Rockwell Harmon Potter of Hartford, Connecticut, will bring a special message to our men. Dr. Potter is an outstanding speaker and is well known among our churches.

We men of the Congregational Christian Church have a big job to do. We have a laymen's group organized in each church and have accepted our responsibility to do the (Continued on page 11.)

Ebenezer Dedicates a New Church Building

Sunday, September 14, a large congregation made a great occasion of Homecoming Day at Ebenezer Christian Church, near Raleigh and adjoining Crabtree Park. A devoted pastor, Rev. W. Clay Farrell, and his faithful congregation met to dedicate their new modern brick church building. The impressive dedication service included the morning service. An unusual part of the day's services was that the cornerstone laying was conducted just before the morning service, though the building had been completed some months before. Mr. Joe Stevenson of Wake Chapel Church, and the Ebenezer choir rendered special music for the morning service. A capacity congregation, composed of members and "home-comers" and friends enjoyed the morning service. On the church grounds a bountiful dinner and hour of fellowship were enjoyed by all.

At the afternoon service the house was filled again to capacity. Members of Auburn and Wentworth Christian Churches, served also by Mr. Farrell, were present and their choirs presented special musical numbers. Rev. Fred P. Register, President of the Eastern North Carolina Conference, delivered the sermon to conclude this day of history before the Ebenezer Church.

Mr. Farrell and his congregation deserve congratulations on their achievements at Ebenezer. May God richly bless and multiply their ministry in their new and beautiful temple dedicated to our Lord. A history of Ebenezer Church, prepared by Mr. James A. King, church secretary, unfolds the interesting life of the church, and it appears in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

A Visit to the West Virginia Christian Conference

On September 4, Rev. R. A. Whitten, Rev. Henry V. Harman, Rev. R. E. Newton and the writer, visited the annual meeting of the West Virginia Christian Conference. The session was held at Oak Dale Christian Church, Rig, West Virginia, near Moorefield. Oak Dale is a lovely church, and we were impressed by the active work being done there. We were cordially received by the conference, and besides counseling with the brethren on the business and spiritual concern mutually shared, I had the privilege of delivering a sermon on the subject, "The Christian Church."

Rev. Harvey Joy, president, presided over the session. Rev. Early Foster served as vice-president, and Rev. M. O. Wolfgang served as secretary. The reports of the churches of this conference have not been included in the denomination yearbook for some years, but as nearly as we could ascertain, there are about ten churches and approximately twenty missions or "preaching" points. Among the churches are: Oak Dale, Kite's Run, Wadesville, Mill Run, Laurel Mountain, Wilford. Among the ministers are: Revs. Harvey Joy, Davisville, W. Va.; Rev. Early Foster, Box 75, R 1, Oakland, Md.; M. Wolfgang, Box 148, Apple Creek, Ohio; C. W. Fox, Phillippi, W. Va.; J. W. Bryant, Morgantown, W. Va.; D. L. Snyder, 1601 Pike St., Parkersburg, W. Va.; Lot Wilmoth, Millersburg, Ohio; Sarah Wilmoth, Box 120, Central Station, W. Va.; Edison Ahart, R. 1, Davisville, W. Va.; Howard Hartsell, Rowlesburg, W. Va.; M. G. Riggelman, Rig, W. ### Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

What "Authority" the Finance Commitee?

A great many churches have asked, from time to time, about the work of the Finance Committee in the local church. Many have had problems arising because the work of the Finance Committee was not clearly set up. It is timely that we consider the matter.

First, let us say that it is not the business of the Finance Committee of a local church to "set" the budget of the church. It is the responsibility of the Official Board, or whatever the representative board of the church may be called, to determine the matter of salaries, apportionments, etc., and otherwise determine how much money the church will need to carry its program through the approaching year. Those figures should be submitted to the Finance Committee. The Finance Committee should go into the matter of money needed for upkeep, heat, lights, etc., and see if the previous budget carried sufficient money for operating expenses. If not, it may recommend such increases as may prove wise. Then, the Finance Committee, meeting with the pastor, should "assemble" the budget items and find the total.

Secondly, the Finance Committee, working with the pastor, should make plans for the Every-Member Canvass (after the budget has been submitted to and adopted by the church). This work should be well planned, and well in advance of the date for the canvass. Proper preparation should include a general letter from the pastor to the membership, setting forth the plans and program of the church, but not on the point of finances. This subject should be the purpose of at least two weekly letters from the Finance Committee. Each should include a well-chosen pamphlet on Christian Stewardship; the latter a copy of the church budget for the new year. The pastor may do his part by preaching on the scope of Stewardship Living, as well as the obligation of Stewardship Giving. Other short pamphlets given out at the close of the worship service is good stewardship education

Finally, the week before the Every-Member Canvass, at least three nights should be set aside for training the workers (previously selected and committed in writing) who are to go out on visitation, two by two, after the Loyalty Service and pledging on the part of all present at the service. There are several splendid motion pictures that are helpful, if used on the first night of the training period. It is good to have the entire church see this picture. The other two nights should be for workers in the canvass only.

A successful canvass is the responsibility of the Finance Committee. Not until every member has been seen in person can we say that we have had a good canvass. Out of town members should be written a personal letter and asked to pledge. Living in another community should not be immunity from pledging support to the church to which a person belongs. He can at least be present in purse if not in person.

The proper word is not "authority," but "responsibility."

The Wording of a Church Budget

1. For the preaching of the Gospel, the administration of the Sacraments, the pastoral care of our homes; for comfort in sorrow, and counsel in the problems of life. ....

2. As our share in the support of our institutions of charity, education and benevolence, for the conference and convention program of leadership and service, and in support of our World Mission of evangelism, education, church extension and relief. ....

3. For the preparation and care of God's House, that it may be clean, lighted and warm for our use. ....

4. To share in the operating expenses of our pastor's car, while ministering to us, and representing us in conferences, boards, committees and conventions. ....

5. For office and church supplies, which are designed to keep us informed and encouraged; and to add dignity and confidence to our worship of God. ....

6. For protection against loss from fires or storms, to our church building and parsonage, and to keep them in good condition. ....

7. Our share in the pastor's Annuity and Retirement fund, set up by the denomination for all pastors. ....

8. To meet the convention's "asking" of $1.00 per member, from each church, as a Sustaining Fund for Elon College, so that it may continue to train our pastors and Christian laymen for service. ....

9. To provide for the demands of our church program and property, which are unforeseen, but may become necessary during the year. ....

Such wording gets us away from commercial language and sets before us a sacred trust.

Christian Attitudes

A Series of Meditations

By REV. HENRY E. ROBINSON

Minister, First Christian Church, Burlington North Carolina

I.—Toward Ourselves

No matter where we are, or what we are, or who we are, any effort we make toward a better world must start with ourselves. I love the game of baseball and go to the games when I get a chance. One very obvious fact about baseball is that the winning team is the one that makes the most runs, and every run begins with the batter at home plate. Someone might come along and suggest that more runs could be made if the runner started at second or third base, but the rules will not allow for such short-cuts. With the batter himself, starting at home plate is where every run begins. When we seek the solutions to the pressing problems of the day, how easy it is to turn our attention to the Russians or to Washington and the administration, or to our neighbors, forgetting that the solutions we seek usually begin with our own energies, motives and attitudes. The lawyer wishing to justify himself asked Jesus who his neighbor was. Jesus answered by telling him how to be a good neighbor. They brought to him for judgment the woman taken in adultery. He answered them with a challenge to inspect their own lives. The prodigal son thought the answer to life lay in distant cities and free living, and found nothing but misery and frustration until he came to his senses by searching his own heart. Jesus cautioned his hearers that it was not what went into the man, but what proceeds from his mouth that had the power to defile. "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he," is a statement of the Master which reaches down and grapples with the ultimate in human attitudes.

We take the name of Christian from our Master and Lord. We wear it like a badge of honor, forgetting its profound implications and its weighty obligations. To be a Christian means to be like Christ deep down in our hearts where attitudes are born and actions take their rise. I wonder if our attitude toward ourselves is not measured by a comparison with others. We look about and see how others live and what others do, and find that we measure up rather well. In most every circumstance, no matter how tangled, confused and degenerated, there is always someone lower than ourselves. Our attitude toward ourselves is then wholly secular and worldly and has nothing in it to suggest that we are followers of Christ. Across the years many have attacked Jesus, but no one has accused him for setting a low standard either for himself or for his followers. Indeed, he said, "Be ye perfect even as your Father in heaven is perfect." Into the standards of life Jesus instilled the qualities of humility, patience, sympathy, understanding, sacrifice, mercy and love. To feed one's attitudes with these qualities is to turn them from the secular to the sacred, from the things that fade to the eternal verities.

Our attitudes are not fixed and changeless anchors that are cast into the sea of life forever to hold against the storms that threaten. Our attitudes are exceedingly flexible and often change slowly, subtly and completely before we realize we have done an about-face. The forces of evil know this, and never relax their pressure upon the Christ-like standards we would set for ourselves. When we relax our vigil for a few short days or even hours, we find that the ways of the world have crept into our thinking and our acting so that people look at us so-called Christians and say, "Why should we join the church, its members are no different from us? We pay our bills, we respect our neighbor's rights, we live decent lives, at least we stay out of court. Now tell us, why should we give our lives to Christ and the church, when you Christians live the same as we do?" Then we examine our personal attitudes and find that in place after place, and time after time, our attitudes have become as the pattern of the world, and our standards are set by man and not by Christ.

To maintain Christian attitudes and to live the Christian life is a difficult thing these days. Each day we need to ask ourselves some very frank questions. How am I investing my life? Am I yielding to temptation? Am I living a life of service or a life of selfishness? Am I going somewhere or just drifting with the current? Am I making new friends or just holding on to the old ones? Am I serving my church, or do I expect my church to serve me? Am I a good steward of my substance, or do I put my own needs and desires above God's need and the church? Am I deeply concerned about the life of private prayer, or do I let others do my praying for me? Am I building and perfecting the traits of personal character or am I content to remain as I am? Am I growing or shrinking? In two or three minutes we could run down a check list like this and soon discover what is happening within from a Christian point of view. Take an inventory of yourself and see what has happened in the past year to your attitudes. Have they moved closer to Christ or closer to the standards set by the world?

I'm not sure that I agree generally with the "get tough" way of thinking and dealing. I am sure that most of us need to "get tough" with ourselves. We need to discipline our tempers, our habits, our dispositions. We need to think about the effect of our present example upon others. At the end of each day we should ask ourselves if our actions of the day would draw others to Christ or cause them only to be confirmed in the laxness of self-satisfactions of the world. Such a question, I'm afraid, causes us to hang our heads in shame, for we have been poor disciples and unfaithful to the trust which has been laid upon us.

Let us play fair with God and our fellowmen by first examining our-

The Word of God in New Words

By FRANCES DUNLAP HERON

III.—“The Bible Comes to Life”

The Egyptian housewife who in A. D. 100 wrote down a new bread recipe used simple, everyday Greek words. So did the little boy painstakingly printing a letter to his father away on a business trip; likewise the farmer who gave his neighbor a receipt for grain and the merchant who dictated his last will and testament. Their Greek was quite different from that of Plato and Sophocles.

We should not be surprised to discover that their Greek was also the Greek of Paul and the Gospel writers. For certainly the teachings of Jesus were concerned with the behavior of men and women in the marketplace, toward their neighbors, in their homes, at their places of worship.

For hundreds of years, however, Bible translators did not recognize the humble character of New Testament Greek. They tried to apply classical Greek rules of grammar, word order and idiom with the result that often they did not come out with a smooth, correct rendition.

It was not until the dawn of the twentieth century that archeologists digging into tons of papyrus (ancient paper) uncovered startling evidence that changed their outlook toward the original Greek of the New Testament. They were indebted to such obscure persons as the Egyptian workman who broke open a mummified crocodile filled with Greek documents of the period—private letters, wills, receipts. Research revealed the truth, that the everyday “people’s” Greek of the first century recordings was the same as that which Paul and the Gospel writers used.

Likewise biblical research, based largely on archeological findings during the last fifty years, has resulted in clearer or more accurate translation of certain Old Testament passages.

The first revision of the Bible to feel the effect of all this recent research is the recently issued Revised Standard Version of the Holy Bible, which was authorized by some forty Protestant denominations. One of the biggest tasks members of the Standard Bible Committee faced in preparing it was that of restoring the original meaning of many words in the Scriptures to bring the message into life for people of today.

The scholars, working under the chairmanship of Dean Luther A. Weigle of Yale University Divinity School, had archeological discoveries and manuscript resources such as no group ever had before to help them recover age-old shades of meaning in the original Hebrew and Greek. That was part of their task. The other was to replace more than three hundred English words in the King James Version that have changed meaning completely. In 1611, they were a sound translation, but today they can only confuse the reader.

The new knowledge of Greek usage that the current revisers possess naturally colors the whole of the Revised Standard Version (RSV) of the New Testament. At many points new insights contrast with those of the King James Version (KJ). To take a few examples:

The words Paul used to criticize some persons at Thessalonica are shown by the papyri to indicate idleness or neglect of proper occupation rather than general disorderliness (I Thes. 5:14).

It appears that the phrase previously translated “the deceitfulness of riches” (Mark 4:19, KJ), Jesus used a word that in the vernacular meant “delight” or “pleasure.”

The simple present tense, “I have,” as used in Phil. 4:18, KJ, does not convey the proper perfect tense idea, “I have received full repayment” (RSV), revealed in receipts found among the papyri.

The adjective applied to milk in I Peter 2:2 undoubtedly meant to a Greek housewife “pure” rather than as with persons “sincere.”

When Paul urged people to give (Rom. 12:8), he did not mean “with simplicity,” as KJ translates, but “in liberality” (RSV). Such was the meaning the Greek noun had acquired in the period and literary level of the New Testament.

In such passages as Acts 23:8, where KJ uses “both” to refer to more than two, there is now sufficient evidence for translating the Greek word “all.”

More striking to the average reader will be the replacement of those more than three hundred words that have changed meaning since 1611. If there were no other reason for the revision of KJ than that, it would be sufficient. It is quite unfair to the KJ translators to retain words that now convey meanings they did not intend.

Let us consider several of the significant transformations of meaning that come from bringing KJ up to date:

There’s the Psalmist chanting in Ps. 119:147, KJ, “I prevented the dawning of the morning, and cried: I hoped in thy word.” Such a declaration doesn’t make much sense, but many a reader has thought, “It’s in the Bible, so it must be all right.” Yes, it’s in the Bible that way because it was all right in 1611. At that time the word “prevent” meant “go before” or “precede.”

Rephrasing that verse accordingly, the revision committee now gives us in RSV: “I rise before the dawn and cry for help; in thy words do I hope.”

Now the picture is perfectly clear—the pious Hebrew getting up early to begin the day with meditation and prayer.

In Shakespeare’s day “communicate” meant “share.” Thus when the KJ scholars had Paul urge (Gal. 6:6), “Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things,” they were not approving talking back to the preacher. They and Paul both meant “pay the preacher’s salary!”

In the modern English of RSV, the verse reads: “Let him who is taught the word share all good things with him who teaches.”

“Thought,” “carefulness” and “careful” in the seventeenth century were all sound translations of the Greek word for “anxiety.” When Jesus, therefore, advised, “Take no thought for the morrow” (Matt. 6:34, KJ), he was not advocating a happy-go-lucky attitude; instead, as RSV translates, “Do not be anxious about tomorrow.”

No untidy housewife of today can get backing from Jesus’ gentle reproof of Martha for being “careful . . . about many things” (Luke 10:41, KJ). Rather he was chiding her for worrying, for being “anxious . . . about many things” (RSV).

The word “virtue” as used in Luke 8:46, KJ, had nothing to do with moral character. It signified “power.” Jesus, realizing that someone has touched him, says in RSV, “I perceive that power has gone forth from me.”

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

The Two and One-half Million Dollar Campaign

All of us are aware of the campaign which is now in progress in behalf of Elon College. The objective of the campaign is to secure two and one-half million dollars over a period of ten years. The campaign has been in progress for five years already, and half of the objective has been reached. During the next several months it is our hope to secure in cash and in pledges the remainder of this objective, the pledge to be paid during the next five years. Many people among our churches and among the alumni of the college have been working in an effort to create an effective organization for the completion of this campaign. It is needless to say that President Smith has been working day and night to this end.

If the campaign is to be successfully completed, we will need the full cooperation of every member of our churches within the Southern Convention and every alumni of the college. I would like to solicit this cooperation from you.

W. MILLARD STEVENS,
President So. Convention.

Virginia, the Convention and Elon College

The task the Southern Convention has assumed that Elon College may be undergirded with a sound financial base is no small one. Virginia is called upon to assume a major share of that responsibility. It is a task that must be faced with great hope and deep faith. The people of each of our churches will be called upon to take up their fair share of the responsibility. Alumni in each of our communities will be asked to bear their fair share of the total amount in addition to those who are intimately connected with the college. Foundations, business firms and individual friends will be asked to join us in the program of advancement.

Some of us will ask, "Where is our money to go?" The plan now is to completely renovate and to add a new wing to West Dormitory, and to call the new building Virginia Hall. The need for this dormitory is well known, and Virginia can be proud to meet that need successfully.

Worshiping with the First Church of Greensboro, North Carolina

It was my privilege to worship at the First Congregational Christian Church of Greensboro, North Carolina, last Sunday. This was my first opportunity to see the church since its completion. The auditorium was most attractive, beautifully arranged, and the acoustics are excellent. A good congregation assembled for worship. Dr. Wesseman, their pastor, gave us a good message, the music was inspiring, and the whole service was helpful to those who worshipped.

Following the sermon, Mr. Powell, one of the church's influential members, showed me over the entire plant. The educational building is entirely adequate, the plans are modern in every respect, and I am sure they are greatly appreciated by every member of the church. It will be admired by the entire denomination. In addition to departments and classrooms, there are ample provisions for social gatherings, and for luncheons or dinners as may be required by the congregation and community.

At the noon hour about 62 men of the church went to the social hall for lunch, instructions and assignments for the canvass to be made in the afternoon to raise $26,000, the payment due on the building this year. These men were teamed in pairs, and a fine group of men they were. It must be an inspiration to the pastor, as it would be to any pastor, to have cooperation in an undertaking of this kind with such a substantial group of men. When they were ready for the canvass, the pastor offered a prayer of consecration and encouragement. The men went out and, I understand, reached their goal. I wish to congratulate the Greensboro First Church on its achievements.

The Sustaining Fund and Elon College

The Sustaining Fund to date has meant a great deal to Elon College. It has kept the college out of the red and made it possible for us to continue to make progress at the college.

Dr. William Moseley Brown gave a lot of time and energy to the Sustaining Fund last year and succeeded in many churches. Unfortunately, Dr. Brown's health did not permit him to continue this work. Consequently, very little definite work was done to encourage the churches to raise the amount requested. A few weeks ago the Sustaining Fund Committee, designated by the Southern Convention, met at the college. Rev. Henry E. Robinson, pastor of our Burlington Church, was made the chairman of the committee, and Dr. D. J. Bowden, Dean of the College, was made executive secretary. Dr. Bowden has taken this assignment seriously and has contacted practically every pastor in the convention, talked over with the pastors the needs of the college and the necessity for raising the Sustaining Fund in full. Dr. Bowden reports that in the conferences with the ministers, they expressed their willingness to use their best efforts in securing this money for the college. Already results are coming in, and we anticipate greater success in securing the Sustaining Fund money this year than last.

Those who are interested in the college may be assured that all money raised for the college will be used to the very greatest possible advantage. The college does need and will greatly appreciate your help.

Apportionment Giving

Time marches on. A few more weeks and the conference year 1951-52 will be an item of history. Each year certain goals are set for each conference, and each local church has its job to do to make the conference to which it belongs come up to the goals set by the conference.

Elon College is fortunate to be included on the Convention's program for support. This is right and proper since the college is a convention institution. We have been doing very well this year, and we do have an excellent report this week. The total of $1,567.19 received this week is really encouraging. This, added to the last week's report brings the total beyond $9,500.00, which brings us within $5,500.00 of the amount apportioned.

We do not have many more weeks left, but a sufficient time, if every church will pay its apportionment in full. We have learned to depend on our churches, and I am sure they will not disappoint us this time.

I Visited Franklinton Center

Back in June I visited Franklinton Center and was met by Rev. William Brogden, who was the director at that time. He showed me through the buildings, of which only one, besides the house in which he was living, was being used. I saw the repairs that had been made, and I especially noticed the rooms renovated by the gifts received from the Life Memberships and Memorials for the past year.

Mr. Brogden showed me so many things that had been done in the past few years that I wondered how it must have looked before, and under what handicap they must have been working.

The linen closet was well stocked, thanks to you good women of the convention. The rooms that were completed, "thanks to you" again, looked clean and comfortable.

New light fixtures had been put in the auditorium. The kitchen seemed very well equipped, and Mr. Brogden said they could care for 200.

Then I was invited into Mr. Brogden's home, which looked very neat and well furnished, with most of the modern conveniences. He showed me three or four bedrooms which had been renovated and looked good.

All in all, it was a very enlightening trip, but there is so much more to be done. We have only scratched the surface. I feel that there is a great future for Franklinton Center, and I feel sure that all the women of the convention will want a part in that future. Your part can be a Life Membership or a Memorial.

A New Society at Pfafftown

News of a new women's society at our Pfafftown Church has come to us from the pastor, Rev. Wm. J. Andes.

The officers of this new society are: Mrs. C. E. Fulk, president; Mrs. I. C. Higgins, vice-president and chairman of Friendly Service; Mrs. Herman Franklin, secretary; Mrs. H. O. Cline, treasurer; and members of the Program Committee: Mrs. Watson Flynt, Mrs. Dudley Phillips and Mrs. C. A. Gross.

The group will meet on the first Wednesday of each month in the afternoon in the homes of the members. It is hoped that a night group can be started soon, for there are several who work and cannot attend this afternoon women's meeting.

A goal of $25 has been adopted to be sent to the Woman's Board.

Congratulations to this new society and best wishes as it starts out on its first year's work.

Good Year at Durham

The Missionary Society of the Durham Congregational Christian Church has experienced a successful year. Programs have been varied and informative. The program chairman, Mrs. J. E. Harward, gave the Bible study and the Rev. Mr. James Perkins reviewed the foreign mission book. The director of the Children's Church, Mrs. Carl R. Key, discussed the friendly service project and displayed attractive articles the children had made for migrants. The work in Mexico was presented by Mrs. Robert S. Smith, who has spent a summer there.

In addition to regular meetings and missionary activities, we serve the Pilgrim Fellowship once a month. Recently we sponsored a tea for new church members, had a Brunswick stew supper, a white elephant sale, and a bake sale.

Our outstanding project was entertaining the Southern Convention. In preparing for this and in the actual entertaining, we found each of our members cooperative and enthusiastic.

Two members attended the Elon School of Missions. By using the ideas they brought to us, plus the packet, and under the capable leadership of Mrs. D. M. Estes, we are looking forward to a year of increasing usefulness and service.

LUCILLE M. SMITH.

News! News! News!

It so happened that your editor checked local society report blanks for the Asheboro District, since Mrs. E. P. Boroughs, the superintendent, had recently undergone an operation. I noticed that many of them had to answer "no" to the question, "Have you sent in an item to THE SUN during the year?"

Since then I have noticed that many societies send in an item about their group after the year is over, and past the time for their report to be in their district superintendent's hands. I wonder if they marked this question "yes" on their report blank . . . and, if so, why couldn't every society which had not sent in an item have done that same thing? I fear that I would have had a deluge of reports this September, if they had done that!

I wish all of the societies could remember that this page has to be filled fifty weeks in the year (there being no paper issued the last weeks in June and December) and that items along during the year, as activities happen, are especially welcomed by the editor.

Let's make a resolution to do that type of "reporting" during this year just starting.

Did you have a special Thank Offering program observance? Did you have a fine Christmas program? Did you join with another society for the first time in the observance of the World Day of Prayer? Did you have a successful "Family Night" or "Family Week" in your church? Did a member of your society—or a guest—present the study books in a fine way? Write to me as those events occur, give other ideas and the news, and help us have a better page all during the coming year. Thanks!

American Board Missionaries Sail for Madura, India

Paul Robert Dettman of Rochester, New York, World War II veteran and his wife, Jean Emery Dettman of Toledo, Ohio, sailed this week from New York on the S. S. Constitution, bound for Madura, India, where Mr. Dettman will teach under the American Board of Foreign Missions in American College. Mr. and Mrs. Dettman have three small children, Paul aged 6, Carl, 4, and Cynthia, 9 months old.

Mr. Dettman is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Warren J. Dettman of Riches-ter, New York. He was born in Oswego, New York, and was educated at Oberlin College and Harvard University.

Following two and one-half years in the United States Army, Mr. Dettman enrolled in the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences at Har-vard University, and while complet-ing his second year of graduate work accepted a position on the staff of the Military Attache to the American Embassy in London, where he served until the fall of 1951. He then was in the Pentagon at Washington, but decided that he wished to become a Christian missionary teacher and so went back to Oberlin College, where he earned his M. A. in English this year.

Mrs. Dettman is the daughter of Mrs. George W. Emery of Toledo, Ohio. She was born in Toledo and was educated at Oberlin College, Class of 1945, B. A.

Mr. and Mrs. Dettman will be the special representatives in India of the Pilgrim Congregational Church of Toledo, Ohio, where they were commissioned as career Congrega-tional Christian missionaries on Aug-ust 3, 1952; the First Church of Christ, Congregational, New Britain, Connecticut, and the First Congre-gational Church of Randolph, Mass.

The American College, Madura, India, where Mr. Dettman will teach, is a high-grade Christian institution founded in 1882 by the American Board, and has a student body of around a thousand.

"Geographic Jolts"

Now that the schools are open, many young people are finding, as usual, interest in certain subjects, but little or no interest in others.

Geography, for example, is a subject not well liked by many students. But perhaps that it because most geography lessons are confined to locating points on the map, giving boundaries, drawing straight lines, comparing distances and dividing the world into such simple sections as north and south, and east and west. But there are other things about geography that are rarely, if ever, stated; and it may be that mention of a few of these would make geography more interesting.

Although several States lie north of North Carolina, if a straight line were drawn from Asheville in the western part of the State to the farthest part east in the State, the distance would be more than if a line were drawn to the nearest point in Canada from Asheville.

Or consider this: Vladovostok, Siberia, is farther south than Venice, Italy, and Houston, Texas, is closer to New York than to San Francisco. Not only so, but Santiago, Chile, on the west coast of South America, is actually farther east than New York City.

It is a long jump from Texas to Illinois, but Texarkana, Texas, is closer to Chicago, Illinois, than to El Paso, Texas. You will also find that Atlanta, Georgia, is nearer Chicago than is Richmond, Virginia.

And, believe it or not, the Panama Canal is farther east than Miami, Florida, while Pensacola, Florida, is farther west than Indianapolis, Indiana.

Any student of geography would probably say that Tulsa, Oklahoma, is in the western portion of the United States. But this is not the case if a perpendicular line is drawn through the exact center of the country. Try it, and you will see that Tulsa will fall in the eastern half of the United States.

But these are only a few geographic jolts. A little looking, a little measuring and comparing will result in finding others. If your interest in geography is low, try a bit of exploring.

Congratulations to the children of Portsmouth, Virginia, on the 200th anniversary of their city. Congratulations to First Church, one of whose members, a lovely young lady, was crowned queen of the celebration. Two hundred more years of progress to Portsmouth!

"The Tyrant Jealousy"

By M. LOUISE C. HASTINGS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Dorothy causes the baby to trip, she slaps her, and she seems always to be looking for other ways to make her little sister cry. The family at last have decided that perhaps Dorothy is jealous of the baby, but her father and mother do not seem to be doing anything constructive about it. In fact, they are increasing the jealousy by spanking Dorothy, and by speaking loudly and sharply to her when she does these things.

What should they do to counteract this behavior, provided that it is jealousy that explains Dorothy's actions?

When Mother is bathing the baby, instead of telling Dorothy to keep away, she should let her help. She could let her go for the soap, for the towel and for the baby's clothes, each of which has been put in a special place. Helping happily tends to create love for the one being helped. If Mother will talk to Dorothy during the baby's bath, bringing to her notice that the baby likes Dorothy to be near her and how much she enjoys playing with her floating toys, just the way Dorothy did when she was a baby, this will create a loving interest. Under supervision—it seems strange that supervision is necessary, but in this case it is very important—she should let Dorothy play with the baby and her floating toys and let her carefully squeeze the sponge full of water over the baby and then watch her laugh. Giving the child something to do to make the baby happy, all the time emphasizing how helpful and kind she is when looking out for Baby, is likely to banish any desire to make the baby cry.

It is possible that Mother has been so devoted to the new baby and so absorbed in watching her cunning ways that Dorothy has felt slighted. She may act as she does to get attention—to make herself the center of attraction, as she always had been, until the baby came. Parents do not always realize it when they become less demonstrative toward the first child after the second.

There is such a thing as reasoning with children, even young children. For instance, "You know, Dorothy, that the baby needs you to help her, don't you? When Mother isn't in the room who has she but you?" her mother could ask. It is wise for the mother to talk quietly, but purposefully, and to wait for a definite reply. Such questions may have to be asked several times. And they should require happy answers. Saying to the child, "How would you like to have me do that to you?" when the older child hurts the baby may do much more harm than good.

We are always teachers, we mothers. Do we slap? Then the children slap. At another time do we scream at them? Then the children scream. We teach—and seldom realize we are teaching—morning, noon, and night. We are constantly teaching somebody. And some of us threaten, too; and eventually the children learn that mother does not mean all she says.

Sometimes we find adults showing jealousy; it is such a sad thing to see. There are two sisters whom I know—one is so jealous of the other! The jealousy has nothing to do with money, or property, or friends. But one of them has a daughter and the other's daughter died when six years old! However, the woman's jealousy began long before she was a parent. It is of many years' standing; its roots extend far down into her early childhood. Her aunt has always loved this niece the most and she does everything for her. But with their mother the other daughter comes first, and the jealous one has always recognized this. The situation requires careful handling so that there will not be continual friction.

I feel very strongly on one point. I do not believe in failure! We mothers make many mistakes, but we do not fail if we do our best with the light we have, provided we have sought for light. We may not be able to eradicate the jealousy that has grown to be pernicious, but if we are careful to give no cause for jealousy, and begin to counteract any tendency in that direction as soon as we see signs of it, we should be able to make it a steppingstone to a spirit of kindness, and this invariably brings happiness.

The North Carolina and Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship Rally

As has already been announced, the Rally of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference Pilgrim Fellowship will be held in Durham on October 12. The program will be started promptly at three o'clock, so be sure to get registered before that time.

Here are the things to bring: (1) As many P. Fers as you can "rake and scrape up." (2) A list of those attending, with the names and mailing addresses of your president, counselor, minister and Sunday school superintendent. (3) Sandwiches for supper; the Durham Church will furnish the drink.

It is hoped that all churches in the conference will send young people whether or not they have a young people's organization.

The packet for the coming year will be available. Come to the rally prepared to get yours, because your group will be lost without it. The cost will be about $2. The packet is really wonderful this year. You will want it.

There will also be a special group meeting for presidents, led by John Graves, the minister of Religious Education at the Burlington Church. This group is to meet at 2:30 p. m.

CURTIS YOUNG,
President.

News from Valley Young People

"Why Young People Don't Come to Youth Fellowship Meetings" was the discussion topic for the group meeting at Bethlehem Church in the Virginia Valley Conference on September 12. But to judge from the number of us (over twenty) who crowded into the living room at the home of Gareth Kagey, our vice-president, the discussion should have been on why they do come.

Our new "pastor-at-large," the Rev. Hank Harman, led off with a devotional service on "Knowing the Presence of God"; but the main course was the discussion. Three young people, together with their advisors, Mr. and Mrs. Clark Foltz, had carefully drawn up in advance some questions for discussion which were

The young people really tore into such questions as "How to get ourselves to invite others to our youth group?" and "How can we get young people more interested in the work of the church?"

Plans for the month's social meeting were made, a fair amount of refreshments consumed, and small talk exchanged, before we adjourned with the benediction by Rev. Mr. Galt.

Young People's Packet

The Young People's Packet is now ready. You may secure your packet Young People's Rallies for $2.00. We feel that it is very good this year, as it contains a little yearbook with program suggestions for weekly, bi-weekly, or monthly meetings. Also, it contains a copy of How, the Home Mission study book; Everyday Christians, a booklet containing 15 programs; and several other programs, including an Easter Sunrise Service by Ruth Dunn, and a skit written by the Holland Young People for use at New Years. Thanksgiving to Christmas Bible readings are also included. Please be sure to get your packet early and get started on your year's work.

Work Day for Christ

October 25 is set aside as a nationwide Work Day for Christ, in which you can earn money for the following projects:

Your Conference Missionary Project; the Convention Project for 1952-54, building a Cabin at Moonelon, or some special project in your local church.

Jobs to earn money include: House cleaning, mowing lawns, washing windows, washing cars, baby sitting, delivering groceries, collecting and selling old paper, or your regular job.

Study these projects and decide what you would like to do, and then ask the cooperation of your parents and other adults in the church. Start the Work Day with a worship service and then dedicate your gift at the end of the day to your project.

Don't forget the date, October 25, 1952.

Relax With Max

Mrs. B. F. Frank, a very lovely lady from the Valley of Virginia, sent me a letter full of jokes. Certainly do think this was thoughtful, and I hope you enjoy these jokes over the next few weeks as much as I have. Here are some of them:

* * *

Myron: "Where's my hat?"

Byron: "Over on the table."

Myron: "So it is! I wonder what silly place I'll put it next?"

Byron: "On your head, I suppose."

* * *

Too often a grade crossing is the meeting place of headlights and light heads.

* * *

Mother: "Wour hands are very dirty. What did you wash them in?"

Joe: "In a hurry."

work that is ours, and ours alone. Dr. Potter can help us renew our enthusiasm and strengthen our desire to accomplish our best.

Announcements of the meeting have been mailed to each church group. We ask that reservations for the supper be mailed not later than October 14, to Mr. Austin Lane, First Congregational Christian Church, 400 Radiance Drive, Greensboro, N. C.

Remember: "Every layman working in his place in his church!" The place is Greensboro. The time is October 18 at 7:00 p. m.

Jesus Demands Sincerity

LESSON III—OCTOBER 19, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."—Matthew 6:21.

LESSON: Matthew 6:1-9, 16-18, 22-24.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 40:1-8.

The Master was pleading for sincerity. In fact, he was demanding it. There must be no sham, no insincerity, no hypocrisy in religion or in life. The word sincerity has an interesting derivation. It comes from two Greek words, "sine" and "cera," which together mean "without wax." And thereby hangs a tale. In days of old, when a sculptor or maker of images or small statues, made a mistake in chipping off the marble or other material and marred the thing he was making, he would take some wax, and mixing it thoroughly with some dust from the material he was using, he would plug up the proken place, or neatly patch it. When the wax had hardened, one could hardly see the defect. But if he had good luck with his work and did not find it necessary to use any wax in the process, he would stamp or cut on the image the words, "sine cera." That meant that the thing was real, it was actually what it was represented to be. The word has thus passed over into our language, and signifies genuineness, reality, lack of sham or hypocrisy. Alas that there are so many of us who could not stamp "sine cera" on our lives.

Hypocrisy.

Hypocrisy is, basically, pretending to be what one is not. We usually associate it with religion, but it permeates all of life. There are hypocrites in the church, many of them. And sometimes they keep people out of the church, or at least people who are out of the church usually give that as the reason why they are not in the church. But there are hypocrites outside the church. And the folks who say that they do not belong to the church because it is full of hypocrites—a rather sweeping statement—belong to lodges and clubs and organizations which are also full of hypocrites, and work and play with hypocrites every day! These folks are hypocrites themselves,— they are not consistent or sincere themselves!

Hypocrisy may be of two kinds. A person may pretend to be better than he is. That is hypocrisy. But a person may appear to be worse than he is, and that is hypocrisy too. The hypocrite in religion tends to parade his religion, to make a show of it, to do things to be seen of men, to give expression outwardly to religious acts and ceremonies that have no corresponding reality. Jesus scathingly denounced this spirit. He made a plea for honesty, for purity of motive, for reality in religion and in life. In today's lesson he applies this principle to three areas of the religious life. He might have mentioned others, but these illustrate the point.

Charity or Giving on Parade.

"When thou doest alms, do not sound a trumpet before thee as do the hypocrites in the synagogues and the streets, that they may have glory of men." To give to be seen of men is wrong. We ought to give if men never knew anything about it. A man, by mistake put a silver dollar on the offering plate instead of a penny. He asked the usher to exchange the coins after the service, but the usher told him that he had no right to do that. "Well," replied the man, "I'll get credit for it in heaven." "No you won't," replied the usher, "you'll get credit only for the penny." The usher "had something" there. We are not to give to be seen of men, we are to give as unto God. Those who give to be seen of men have no reward. But those who give as unto God in secret shall be rewarded openly by their heavenly Father.

Prayer on Parade.

"And when ye pray, ye shall not be as the hypocrites are." One would hardly think that in something so sacred as prayer, there could be any spirit of pride, or any tendency to parade prayer. But the hypocrites, the Pharisees of Jesus' day, would stand on the street corners or in the synagogues and say their prayers so that men could see them, and know that they were religious. It was mockery and blasphemy; and their prayers never got any higher than their swelled heads. Their prayers had no meaning, and they were not acceptable to God. To be sure men can and should pray in public. But prayer is essentially something secret. It should be an inner transaction between a man and God, something done not to be seen of men, but to be heard of God.

Fasting on Parade.

"And when ye fast, be not as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance . . . to be seen of men." Fasting has merit. Jesus did not discourage or forbid it. He simply said that men should not put it on parade. Were there times when men felt the spirit of penitence, when they felt as if they ought to fast, when they were sad and heavy of heart? Well and good. But let them not make a show of this. Let them not walk about among their fellowmen with a long face, parading their sacrifice and boasting of their cross-bearing. Let them fast inwardly, let them be content to know that God knew their inner spirit—it did not matter whether men saw it or not.

The Single Eye.

The human eye has the capacity to report facts with remarkable precision. But it can also grossly mislead folks. Let a Democrat and a Republican look at the same fact, and each sees it differently. Each sees what he wants to see. He was seeing double, and to see double is worse than not to see at all, generally speaking. As Ruskin wrote, "Seeing falsely is worse than blindness. A man who is too dim-sighted to discern the road from the ditch may feel which is which; but if the ditch appears manifestly to him as the road, and the road to be the ditch, what shall become of him?" Jesus suggests that the remedy is to have an eye that is single. If the light in a man is darkness, how great indeed is that darkness!

We come here to the matter of conscience. It might well be substituted, for all practical purposes, for the word "light." If conscience is dead, how great is the darkness in a man! And yet conscience itself is not sufficient. Conscience tells us to do right, but it does not always tell us what the right is. Our eye can be single only as we are guided by the Spirit of God, and as we walk in the light which we have. He who refuses to walk in the light which he has, will increasingly have less light in which to walk. And at long last, he will fumble and stumble in the darkness, and come to disaster.

An Historical Sketch of Ebenezer Christian Church—1883-1952

During the years that followed the Civil War as the South struggled to rebuild there grew up a prosperous community in the area where we are gathered today. And as the community grew its leaders became very much aware of its need for a church since there was no church near to serve them. So on August 2, 1883, Rev. D. F. Jones and a small group from this community gathered and organized a church. They accepted the cardinal principles of the Christian Church and from the Bible they chose the name Ebenezer meaning "The Stone of Help."

Thus Ebenezer Christian Church was founded. The first meetings of this little church were held in Al King's cotton gin building but soon plans were under way to build a church building. On August 18, 1883,, John King and his wife Matilda deeded a parcel of land containing one acre to W. H. Pennington, John N. Carpenter, and John King, Sr., trustees of the church. By late 1883 or 1884 a building had been built and services could be held there. This building stood about 125 feet to the right of this present building and in 1925 or 1926 it was rebuilt—being changed from a two-door building with square top windows to a one-door building with a steeple and pointed top windows. This building stood until early 1952, when it was sold and removed from the grounds.

From the time Rev. D. F. Jones organized the church Ebenezer has had the following pastors:

- Rev. W. G. Clements..1906-1909
- Rev. J. Lee Johnson..1910-1919
- Rev. J. E. McCauley..1919-1921
- Rev. G. J. Green.....1922-1924
- Rev. J. C. Cummings..1924-1933
- Rev. J. A. Denton....1933-1948
- Rev. Clay Farrell....1948-

This list is not complete due to insufficient information on the early history of the church, and there have been other preachers who preached only once or for only a short time whose names we do not have.

On April 17, 1949, at a church meeting it was decided Sunday school rooms or an entirely new church building was needed and a building fund was started. Soon a definite decision was made to build a new church building. An additional plot of land joining the north side of the original plot was given by Jim King, Willie King, Irene Dillard, and Lorena McGhee, heirs of the Lonnie King es-

BEWARE WHAT YOU BELIEVE

Second of a Series of Short Sermons Based on the RSV of the Bible

By DR. ROY L. SMITH

And went after worthlessness, and became worthless.—Jeremiah 2:5.

And have walked after vanity and have become vain.—KJV.

There is no greater fallacy than the quip so often quoted: "It makes no difference what you believe, as long as you are honest in your belief." As if sincerity would atone for inaccuracy, or as if honesty could be substituted for intelligence.

Beliefs are creative. What we believe makes us what we are. If we believe mistakenly, we will live blunderingly; if we believe correctly, we can live magnificently.

Jeremiah was one of the greatest philosophers and epigrammatists of them all. No one could pack more meaning into a few words than he could, and he never did it better than when he wrote this text. "Go after worthlessness, and you become worthless." Dr. Moffatt translates it, "They went after empty idols and became empty themselves," and Adam Smith gave it to us in a slightly more dratate, to build the new building on. In October, 1950, ground-breaking ceremonies were held. The year 1950 saw the building well under way and in 1951 services could be held in the new building. Now on this the 14th day of September 1952 the new Ebenezer Church building stands complete as originally planned, dedicated to God having a membership of 237 and a growing Sunday school.

matic style, "They followed after bubbles and bubbles they became."

When the word began to come back from the atolls of the South Pacific and from the Aleutians, nestled up under the Arctic circle, that "No Jap ever surrenders," the world began asking, "What kind of men are these?" They committed hari-kari with a wild abandon, not because they did not love life, but because they had been taught that to die for their emperor was to insure themselves a special status in the heaven of the chosen people. The thing that made them the most dangerous enemy the American soldier ever faced was not their military equipment, but their theology.

This is a basic principle of life. We become like the thing we really worship. Let any man make gold his god, and he will become hard; let any man make Christ his God, and he will accept his crosses with rejoicing. If we worship a whimsical God who can be swayed by our empty promises and frantic prayers, then life loses all its moral meaning. If we worship the God whom Jesus of Nazareth called "Our Father," all our horizons recede and our labor becomes fruitful.

selves to make sure that our innermost thoughts are in line with the teachings of Christ, and that our attitudes, which are the mainsprings of action, are worthy of the name of Christian. The attitudes which we hold today are shaping tomorrow's world. Will that world be pagan or Christian? A part of the answer lies within your heart and mine.

 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

I wish you could see my mail any morning; but this is an interesting one to tell you about. It contained the morning paper, a package which looks like shoes, for Mattie O'Neill; a magazine for Miss Fannie Newman, our dietician; four birthday cards for children; a package for Jackie Wilkins, a package of coupons sent by Mrs. J. W. Isley from Hines Chapel; a package of coupons sent by Mrs. Ed Chilton of our Reidsville Church; a grocery catalog for Miss Newman; a home town paper for Mrs. Bennett, the boys' matron; a complimentary letter enclosing a check for shoes for four children, in the amount of $20; and the weekly report and check from the Southern Convention office in the amount of $182.30. There was also a letter for David Haith, a letter for J. C. Davidson, a check in the amount of $5.81 from New Hope Sunday School in Alabama, a letter for Jean Daughtrey, a letter for Bobby Daughtrey, a check for $46.91 from the Hopedale Church in Alamance County and twelve nice big bills. Some other bills came yesterday, and others will follow tomorrow. The monies will show in the next week's report in THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

This was a fairly representative morning's mail, except that being the first of the month, there are more bills than usual. The mail connects us with you. We are together in our postoffice box, as it were—the orphanage and its good friends all across our convention, and throughout our houses and shops where supplies are purchased. The postoffice is a common meeting ground. Always I turn the key in the locked draw with hope and wonder. Always there is something encouraging. You have good representation there daily. Out of 35,000 church members—all "stockholders" in the orphanage—we can always expect to hear from somebody every day. If you have not written us lately, your letter will be appreciated.

This morning I dressed to go to a conference—the Woman's Conference in Eastern Virginia—but before I had finished dressing, the telephone was calling to report an accident and the need for my taking a little girl to the hospital for burns—very painful but, luckily, not very serious. The sewing matron accompanied us, and as we rode back together she told me that during September she had patched, altered, fitted nearly 500 garments. Overalls headed the list. Few of us realize all that must be done where daily, hourly care of 80 children is involved.

The total found in this week's report stands at $31,020.76. By the last day of December, that must reach $60,000.00. First draw a long breath when you read that goal, then just think of helping with your own gift, whether it be a dollar or more. With your help we shall reach that goal, and every cent of it will be needed. We are more than half way, and usually the larger half of our income is received between this date and December 31.

What a good time our children had at Beulah Christian Church, Eastern North Carolina Conference, the Rev. Carl Wallace, pastor. I preached in the morning with reference to the orphanage, a large home-coming congregation had dinner, and after the delightful dinner, our children presented their full program. Everyone was very happy, and we were back on our campus at five o'clock with much interesting news to tell all of those who could not go with us.

We want to come to your church soon.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

CRUTCHFIELD

Mrs. G. C. Crutchfield, wife of Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, passed away at her home near Burlington, N. C., on Friday, August first, after an illness of the past 15 months.

Mrs. Crutchfield was a native of Guilford County, the daughter of the late H. C. Ballard and Mrs. Bell Stack Ballard.

Surviving in addition to her husband are three daughters, three sons, five sisters and her mother.

Funeral services were held on Sunday, August third, at 2:30 p.m. from Bethlehem Christian Church, of which her husband is pastor. A beautiful floral tribute was a fitting praise to this good woman. Burial followed in the cemetery of Pleasant Ridge Church, near Builford College. The services were conducted by Rev. Wm. T. Scott and Rev. W. E. Wisseman.

has been the acceptance of the 'Call' which, if faithfully taken, will lead to the release of Christian power and purpose in undreamed-of magnitude."

Dr. Timmons heads up the Department of Evangelism of the General Council, which is now a division of The Board of Home Missions under the general title, Division of Church Extension and Evangelism.

Born in a parsonage in Georgia, Dr. Timmons was educated at Southwestern College, Kansas; Drew and Union Seminaries; Columbia University and Oxford University, England. He served as a chaplain in World War I, and has since served in prominent pastorates before taking his national post.

Dr. Timmons has travelled extensively in Europe; and in early 1949, made a special tour of the Hawaiian Islands in the interests of Evangelism and our Christian World Mission.

Those who have an opportunity to hear him while he is in Suffolk will be well repaid for attending any of the services.

VISIT TO WEST VIRGINIA.

Independence, W. Va.; Albert Grim, R. 1, Tunnelton, W. Va.; A. N. Moats, 1026 6th St., Parkersburg, W. Va.

These brethren impressed us as deeply spiritual, and they possessed a real concern that Jesus Christ be exalted through a living Church. They expressed great appreciation for the Cardinal Principles of the Christian Church and in the history and work of our denomination. We greatly enjoyed the day with these brethren and hope to be able to fellowship with them again. The men from the Virginia Valley Central Conference extended to the West Virginia Conference pastors and their churches a cordial invitation to attend the 104th annual session of the Valley Conference to be held at Leaksville Christian Church, near Luray, Virginia, October 15-16.

The Christian Annual for 1928 reported the churches as follows: Clover Mountain, Flannagan's Hill, Huff, Lanesville, Mackeyville, Mill Run, Oak Dale, Powers Street House, Rosendolph, Shaver Run, Timbuck, Wilford's Chapel. In 1931-32, the list of churches included: Dry Fork, Macks Mill, Mill Run, Hendricks, Rosendolph, Mabie, Harrison Mill, Mill Creek, Blue Rock, Huff, Quiney, Shrewbury, Racine, Red Creek, Flannagan's Hill, Oak Dale, Harts and Tracy Fords. Evidently some of these churches have disappeared, and doubtless others have been organized.

We earnestly hope that a closer fellowship may be established between these West Virginia Christian Conference ministers and churches.

WM. T. SCOTT.

THE WORD OF GOD.

The sacredness of individual personality seems denied in the KJ rendition of Acts 10:34, "God is no respecter of persons." But in the days of Elizabethan drama, "person" was still close to its derivation from the Latin persona, the mask an actor wore. Thus the reference to the externals, which God does not count important. RSV renders this sentence, "God shows no partiality."

Who would suspect that the phrase, "the end of their conversation" in Heb. 13:7, KJ, really means "the outcome of their life"? So it emerges in RSV, since "conversation" formerly referred to conduct or behavior.

Also on the list of seventeenth century words that have been replaced in RSV are: "suffer"—"let"; "allow"—"approve"; "comprehend"—"overcome"; "meat"—"food"; "carriage"—"baggage"; "fetch a compass"—"make a circuit"; "nephews"—"grandsons"; "wealth"—"well-being"; "base"—"humble"; "let"—"hinder."

Readers with copies of the Revised Standard Version of the Holy Bible can continue this word adventure for themselves. Those who seek will find in accurate, lucid, idiomatic English the Word of God for their own lives.

A Wonderful Church Family Breakfast

The Greensboro First Church recently held a "family breakfast," at which approximately 185 were present. The Truitt Class (women) prepared the breakfast and the Pilgrim High group served.

After group singing, Mr. Hinton Rountree, Sunday school superintendent, presented awards to 12 students for perfect attendance last year. A junior in High School, Tommy Andrews now has an 8-year record. Three classes shared some of the things they had learned during the past quarter; the Russell Powell family gave a skit showing how the new family book, Bible Quiz Book, may be used. Mrs. W. E. Wisseman gave a preview of the new quarter's materials and activities. John Foster presented the new edition of the Bible to the church school; and then W. B. Truitt presented Dr. Wisseman with a copy, and spoke words of appreciation for his 17 years in Greensboro.

Parents visited church school classes to see children actually at work.

WHAT IS A CHURCH?

By DR. ROCKWELL HARMON POTTER

A Church in any place, a Church local, is a society of people. It is not a building. The building they use is a meeting house or a church house. It is a social organism, subject to the laws which govern the life of all human social organizations.

The people are people of faith, general religious faith, living under the compulsions of that which is spiritual—invisible, inaudible, intangible, imponderable. They are, at least more or less, aware of and responsive to that which is of the spirit; that is, of God.

They are united in striving: not in standing still, or sitting down. Their union is a union of effort, like the union of those who engage in the same task, are travelling by the same road, towards the same goal. Their bond of union is not a creed which is a statement of opinion, but a covenant, as in a Congregational Church, which is a declaration of purpose.

Their striving is to learn and to do the will of God. That is the ultimate, for human effort. Therefore the Church always seems to be failing. And therefore it never does fail. It always seems to be dying. It never does die. And note that the striving is both to learn and to do. It is both a teaching and a serving institution. It must learn what it learns by doing. Learning without doing is futile. It cannot do anything without learning what it is and why it should be done. This may seem impossible, but it's the way of life. It's the way we come to be able to walk or to talk. A Church that is always learning and never doing anything, dries up, loses its life, clutters up its place and cumpers the ground. A Church that is always doing things and never learning anything about what it is doing, may become a club or a mutual admiration society—but it never becomes a real Church.

This society of people of faith united in striving to learn and to do the will of God becomes a Christian Church by looking to Jesus for the way and the power it needs. It looks back to Jesus, the Jesus of history in Palestine, 1900 years ago. It looks out to the Jesus—the Christ—who is in humanity. He said, "Inasmuch as ye did it to one of these, ye did it to me." He is in people! In all kinds of people! We seek and serve him there. And the Church looks up and on to Jesus as the pattern and goal of human life, without which human life has no meaning or purpose. This looking to Jesus, when it includes obedience, trust and loyal love is specific Christian faith. It is what we mean when we say, "I believe in Jesus."

Believing so in Jesus, the Church looks to him for the Way and the Power. The true and right way of life and the power of God, given as he promised, to those who thus believe in him, to walk in that Way and so to enter truly into the life which is the True Life.

News Flashes

The Southern Convention lost one of its best loved ministers last Friday, when Dr. C. E. Newman passed away.

Dr. Leon Edgar Smith will be the anniversary speaker at The Christian Temple in Norfolk next Sunday. The magnificent Temple was built under his leadership.

The Western North Carolina Conference will meet on November 5-6 at Seagrove Church, with the other churches of that pastorate, Ether and Shady Grove, sharing in the entertainment. Speakers will include: Dr. Ray Gibbons of the Council for Social Action, Rev. and Mrs. Richard L. Jackson of Chapel Hill, Rev. W. J. Andes of Winston-Salem and Mr. Martin Garren of Greensboro.

The Virginia Valley Central Conference is meeting this week with the Leaksville Christian Church, near Luray, Virginia, of which Rev. R. E. Newton is pastor. The time of meeting was changed from August that it might be more in line with the time of the other conferences of the Southern Convention. An excellent program has been prepared, and a good session is predicted. We are sorry that formal notice of the meeting did not reach us in time to be in last week's issue, and we hope to have a detailed account of the conference in a subsequent issue.

First Church, Norfolk, celebrated its 105th anniversary on October 12, 1952. The members celebrated by entering a "Deeper Life Crusade," which is planned to stimulate a deeper consecration, a higher loyalty to the church's program, and a more effective ministry for Christ and his Kingdom. The crusade will continue for ten weeks with a special emphasis for each Sunday. The Young Adult Fellowship of the church has resumed its meetings after a vacation. This year they will study "The Life of Paul." Rev. C. C. Thomas is the pastor of First Church.

Moonelon—an Obligation and an Opportunity

The Laymen's Fellowship of the Southern Convention has agreed to undertake the raising of a capital sum of $25,000 for improvements at Moonelon.

Moonelon is an obligation and an opportunity. It is an obligation because it is a piece of property given to the convention to be developed into a conference center and assembly grounds by the W. W. Sellars of Burlington. It contains some twenty acres located about one-half mile from the college. There are already on this land two dwellings, city water, electricity, a lake, concrete swimming pool, picnic shelter and, of course, a road leading into the grounds. Land and improvements are valued at about $35,000.

Moonelon is an opportunity because, if developed, it will provide the convention with a greatly needed facility for summer conferences, retreats and a gathering center for all manner of church group meetings. Over the country where such centers have been developed, the universal testimony has been of their great usefulness to the work of the churches.

For a down-to-earth practical project where men can not only give, and see the result of their giving, but also contribute time and labor, this project cannot be surpassed.

Plans are being studied for cabins and central dining room. The Pilgrim Fellowship of the convention is interested in constructing at least one cabin in the near future. Major development awaits the active and sacrificial interest of our men. Give this effort your prayerful consideration.

The Moonelon Committee charged with maintaining and developing the property consists of seven members, as follows: H. E. Robinson, chairman, Wm. T. Scott, George Colclough, L. E. Smith, John G. Truitt, Stanley C. Harrell, and Mrs. W. E. Wisseman.

Asheboro Observes Religious Education Week

Religious Education Week was observed by the Asheboro Congregational Christian Church, under direction of its pastor, Dr. F. C. Lester.

On Sunday, September 28, the entire Sunday school met for a closing worship service and the issuance of promotion certificates. We now have a graded school, with separate classes for each grade up to the intermediate class, and with two pre-school classes.

The new Sunday school officers and teachers were installed at the morning worship service on the same Sunday, with the entire congregation joining in a pledge for cooperative work. At the same service, Phyllis Kay Hanner, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hanner, was consecrated, making a fitting link between church and home in the educational process.

The sermon topic was "The Bible We Teach," with emphasis on the background for the new translation issued last week. As it happened, Miss Warden, the Bible teacher in the Asheboro public schools, worshipped with us that morning and was introduced to the group—and here was a connecting link between the church and the school, for our church helps support this teaching of Bible.

On Sunday afternoon, September 28, a workshop meeting was held for the new Sunday school teachers and officers, with Miss Pattie Lee Coghill as counselor. The re-elected superintendent, W. H. Hughes, Jr., in a thoughtful and well prepared message told of the work of the past year—its successes and failures—and challenged the teachers to do better work in the coming year. A fellowship period was enjoyed, following the work session.

Evangelism in Our Churches

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, Chairman
S. C. Committee on Evangelism
and the Devotional Life

An important meeting of the members of the Southern Convention Committee on Evangelism and the Devotional Life, together with the chairmen of the Conference Committees on Evangelism, was called to convene at Henderson, N. C., September 23, to plan together for a convention-wide program of Evangelism in our churches leading up to Easter. The purpose of the meeting was to think together and plan together for a deeply spiritual, comprehensive, enthusiastic program of Evangelism in every church of the convention in this new church year, under the divine guidance of God.

Seven members of the Evangelism Committees, together with Supt. Wm. T. Scott, were present, spending the afternoon and evening in deep meditation and thought on the need of quickening an Evangelistic concern in our churches and how to meet our responsibility and opportunity as individuals and churches in this field of Christian effort.

It was the consensus of opinion of the group that none of our churches are measuring up to the full possibilities of their evangelistic challenge, and that every church of the convention and every pastor should bestir themselves in a new and larger way in the great work of "Winning Souls for Christ," "Introducing Lives to the Master," and recruiting new members in our churches during this new church year.

As goes the work of Evangelism, so goes the work of every other department in our church life. Not only do the vitality and growth of our churches depend upon a full and enthusiastic acceptance of their responsibility and opportunity in Evangelism, but also the life and perpetuity of every local church depend upon it. The fires of evangelistic concern need to be rekindled upon the altars of all our churches.

Because of this conviction, the Henderson meeting committed itself to the consideration of methods and motivation in this field of church activity, looking forward to an enheart-ening ingathering of new members next Easter.

The conference Chairmen of Evangelism will carry to their respective conferences at the fall meetings the plans recommended for District Rallies this fall, and for a simultaneous emphasis on Evangelism in all our churches during a designated period in the pre-Easter season, at which time it is hoped that every church in the convention will major in the work of Evangelism. Some of the churches will hold a week or two weeks Preaching Mission during this period, the pastors or visiting pastors proclaiming the message. A visitation campaign during the period and observation of "Decision Day" in every Sunday school at the close of the period were recommended by the seminar.

Our eighty pastors in the Southern Convention are urged to renew their zeal and their passion in Evangelism through special prayer each day for a genuine revival of the religion of Jesus in our midst.

Successful Rally in Halifax County

Approximately 250 Congregational Christian Church members from Liberty, Ingram, Pleasant Grove, Union, and Hebron churches of Halifax County, Virginia, and from Lebanon, in Caswell County, North Carolina, met on Sunday afternoon, October 12, in South Boston, Virginia. The meeting was held at the High School building; and it proved to be a highly

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

"RISE UP, O MEN OF GOD!"

A Guest Editorial by W. B. WILLIAMS, Chairman
The Laymen's Fellowship of The Southern Convention

Sunday, October 19, has been designated as Laymen's Sunday. We are told that this year a number of other major denominations have officially agreed on the third Sunday in October as Laymen's Sunday and thus have "joined forces" with those churches which have observed this date in the past, with the Laymen's Movement for a Christian World and the United Church Men of the National Council of Churches.

Laymen's Sunday has become a tradition in America. It is the annual occasion when the men in the pews take over the church service and in their way tell their fellow-members in the congregation what they as laymen believe.

The theme suggested for the Laymen's program this year is taken from the opening line of the stirring hymn, "Rise Up, O men of God," which was written in 1911 by Rev. William Pierson Merrill for a movement which was on at that time for enlisting Christian laymen to support the Church and its work. In this theme we recognize a dynamic call to concerned Christians everywhere to "rise up" and "give heart and mind and soul and strength to serve the King of kings."

What greater challenge could come to the laymen of America? The laymen of America number millions. They are the very life-blood of the Christian movement; upon them depends a large part of the destiny of the Kingdom of God on earth. The laymen have powers which, if released, would galvanize the Christian forces of the nation and the world.

Whether or not too many laymen have taken the scriptures literally where the disciples went with Jesus to the garden and he told them to "sit ye here, while I shall pray," many have been too much inclined to "sit there" and let the minister do all the praying, and anything else he could possibly do without their help. So many laymen have fallen asleep on the job that the minister, in many cases, would rather do the job himself than to keep insisting that the laymen assume their share of the responsibility. For success, we not only need the preacher, we also need the working layman.

The Church began as a "layman's movement." It was to laymen that the instructions to go ye, therefore, and teach all nations," were given. They responded to this commission and went out teaching, preaching and writing. Laymen are just as important today as they were when the Master Layman walked this earth. The difficulty is that many of them do not realize their significance. A church calls a minister to be their leader, not to do all the work. Accepting this leadership, there should be a willingness to follow it. The churches that are making the greatest contribution to the Kingdom of God on earth today are the ones that have a group of wide-awake, spiritually-minded laymen to give vitality to their programs and assistance and strength to their ministers. There is a place in the church for every layman, as well as for the minister. It is up to the layman to find his place in his church and to work in it.

On this Laymen's Sunday, let us make this a special day of rededication by laymen to that faith preached every week by the minister.

"One of the great hopes of 1952," someone has said, "is the fact that more and more men are seeking God." This gives us a better opportunity than ever before to awaken in ourselves and others a deeper understanding of God's will in our lives, in our churches, in our nation and in our world.

Churchmen in a Modern World

By G. C. MANN
Cypress Chapel, Virginia

“Rise up, O Men of God”!

The world is in sore need of your help. There is an urgent need for an increase in your number. The need for an increased fervor is imperative. “The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few.” Moreover, not only is there an ever increasing amount of work to be done and too few to do it; but daily it is becoming more certain that the fate of mankind depends upon whether, and how soon, willing Christian workers are found and persuaded to act. The workers must believe in the work to foster a more potent Church.

For true churchmen, to day, both a challenge and an opportunity stand out in bold relief. If a more sane and sober civilization is to be expected, churchmen will be the ones to assure it. The forces which have, for some time, been determining the course of events have not done too well. In material things—in the United States, at least, almost unbelievable advance has been made. Whether mankind has really progressed is in serious doubt. Sin has nullified much of the good that might have been.

This sin has appeared in many different forms, but paramount among these are:

- S Selfishness;
- I Indifference;
- N Neglect.

There is a challenge for churchmen to tackle these on every level—local, state, national and international. But since both the weakness and greatness of an individual or a nation is within, it may well be wise to start at home. “First to thy self be true.” A golden opportunity to make this a peaceful, prosperous world awaits the churchmen who, in sincerity of purpose, attack these forms of sin and help to restore a respect for those moral standards which are mandatory if we are to guarantee to our posterity a life that will be really worth living.

Selfishness. This form of sin is most insidious. Many churchmen have been guilty of succumbing to it. The modern excessive desire for material gain is leading too many to put self-aggrandizement above the good of neighbors or the welfare of country. Anyone who reads the papers, listens to radio, or views television, has, far too often, learned of the sordid behavior of those in high or responsible public office. It is sickening and disconcerting that in our Federal government—and too often some state and local governments—corruption, brazen deceit and outright thievery have been widespread.

Indifference. The Church as an organization should not become involved in politics, but the churchman should. Too often the churchman has been indifferent, not only to his opportunity and responsibility to learn how best to vote—and vote, but also indifferent to crooked manipulators in public office.

Negligence. Churchmen have too often been negligent, both as citizens and as church members. It is assumed that churchmen desire good government and a respected, well attended and active church. Yet, along with the non-churchman, they neglect both duties and rights. This fact is ominous. The pages of history are bespattered with the stories of the decline and fall of nations whose citizens neglected their opportunities and their obligations. Is it happening here? Of those in the United States who are eligible to vote—in 1886, 78.4 per cent voted; in 1900, 73.5 per cent voted; in 1940, 53.4 per cent voted; in 1948, 51 per cent voted!

Not only has there been neglect as citizens, but also neglect in the work of the church. The number of names on the church roll has increased, but church attendance has declined. Too many good churchmen (?) are using Sunday for their visits to the beach or for fishing parties. Our country was founded by men who held religion and their church in highest regard. Our forefathers might not be so proud if they could see how their grandsons have become so busy during the week with the affairs of the world that even on Sunday their church and its work are neglected.

What needs to be done? No organization will have appeal, power and influence if its members do not show respect for it. The churchman must apply religious convictions to everyday life. They must exercise their influence by a living example. By their actions as well as their words they must, like Joshua of old, say to the world: “As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.”

These words of Micah, 6:8, are worthy of daily conscientious consideration: “He hath shown thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?”

Church Insurance

By W. H. BAKER
Newport News, Virginia

When we think of “church insurance” our minds usually turn to fire insurance, a contract which insures “against all direct loss or damage by fire” on the building and contents or any other property, for the specific amounts named in form attached to and made a part of the policy. The standard policies and attachable forms vary as to states according to statutes governing the writing of insurance. Fire insurance may be written for terms of one, two, three, four or five years. It is also possible to include in a fire policy “extended coverage” which covers against wind-storm, hail, explosion (does not cover explosion of steam boilers), riot, riot attending a strike, civil commotion, aircraft, vehicles and smoke damage. This coverage is very important and (Continued on page 12.)

Christian Attitudes

A Series of Meditations

By REV. HENRY E. ROBINSON

Minister, First Christian Church, Burlington North Carolina

II.—Toward Others

I know a certain community where it has become the practice to build walls about one's house. Some of these are elaborate, constructed of stone and very costly. Others are made of wood; still others are high, thick hedges. All serve the same purpose, that of shutting out the world. These walls are silent, yet they speak loudly to each passer-by: "You are not good enough, you are unwanted here. See the chain on the gate and the sign on the post."

One day I was walking down a woodland path and noted a turn-off through the bushes. Out of curiosity I followed it for a short distance and was met by a grisly, snarling dog. A little further on I saw a hut with an old man standing in the window. He was waving me away. The dog was speaking the same unmistakable language. I came away. No words had been spoken. No walls, or locks, or signs were in evidence. But the message was plain enough: "I have withdrawn from the world—keep away."

In another part of the world there are men by the thousands working in shops and mines, whose freedom has been robbed and whose lives are worth only what labor can be extracted from them. When they grow old (and few do) or sick, or exhausted, they are rewarded by death and are buried without rite or ritual in shallow graves, and their places are taken by other human chattel whose fate will be the same. This goes on in the twentieth century marked by unparalleled progress in the arts and sciences.

Our attitudes toward others take many forms and shapes. All cannot be set forth in a short space. But in the foregoing examples I have indicated three typical approaches to the world: aloofness, withdrawal and exploitation. Christians must be on guard every moment lest they fall into one or all of these unholy pits. My illustrations are extreme. Very few people build actual walls, or seclude themselves in the forest, or set themselves up as taskmasters. Yet how often we allow ourselves to look down on others, withdraw from duty, take advantage of our neighbor. And we do these things in such a way as not for one moment to disturb our Christian professions.

There are churches that claim to follow Christ where only the privileged are made welcome. To be sure there are no walls, and no one will ask to see your birth certificate or bank book at the door. But by look or guarded whisper and the greeting that is withheld, the poor man reads

the "signs" and knows this is not the place for him

There are people, and more than we like to number, who are present on the festive days. They like to sing the loud hosannas and hang the victor's laurels. But when the call goes out for sacrifice of time and dollars, they are deep in the forest, and if you get close enough to see them, they are waving you away with thin excuse and unanswered bell.

The world is full of people striving for gain, who hold all things secondary to the accumulation of worldly goods—even life and human personality. If the joy of an individual stands in the way, it is swept aside. If the welfare of the family, the education of a child, the property value of a neighbor are impediments, they are ignored. At the end of the year, the profits are added and success is measured accordingly.

These approaches to our fellowmen are as old as Cain and Abel, as Lot and Abraham, as David and Uriah. But a new way of life has come into the world. It is the way of devotion to one's fellowman without thought of self or gain. It is the way of Christ, who came as a servant, healer, helper, friend to all, regardless of class, color, culture or custom. Jesus told the story of the Good Samaritan and included in it the Priest and the Levite for the benefit of those who claim to be religious and aloof. He told the story of the talents and included in it the buried treasure for the benefit of those who would withdraw. He told the story of the vineyard and the unfruitful steward for the benefit of those who exploit what rightfully belongs to another. Jesus left no doubt about how his followers should act toward other people. "Love one another" may not be written in so many words on every page of the Gospels, but every page of the gospels teaches compassion and selfless devotion toward human need whoever had it or wherever it is found.

Strangely enough our attitudes toward others are mysteriously bound up with our own health—physical, mental, spiritual. If we are selfish and worldly in our human relationships, our bodies are cursed with nervous frustration, our minds are fettered with little thoughts, and our spirits are restless and troubled. As the rich young ruler sought to alleviate a strange longing, so we with sick and distorted minds, and troubled hearts cry out for help. Then let us remember the words of Peter when he said: "Lord to whom shall we go? Thou has the words of eternal life." And when we go to him, we find him pointing to the sick, the hungry, the lonely, and saying: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Will our attitudes toward others stand this test? Thrust out your hand to someone today. Strangely enough, you will be the one who profits most.

The higher men climb the longer their working day. Any young man with a streak of idleness in him may better make up his mind at the beginning that mediocrity will be his lot. Without immense, sustained effort he will not climb high. And even though fortune or chance were to lift him high, he would not stay there. For to keep at the top is harder almost than to get there.

—Cardinal Gibbons.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

The Two and One-Half Million Dollar Campaign Fund

It is one thing to officially authorize a campaign for the college. It is another thing entirely to create an organization and make the canvass. Such an organization must be constituted by human beings. A carpenter may build a house, a mechanic may construct a machine, and the articles entering therein stay put, but human beings have minds, wills and are capable of making decisions and reversing decisions.

Many miles have been traveled, many conferences have been held, in a conscientious and determined effort to set up a convention-wide organization to carry information of and appeals for the college. Many individuals are greatly concerned for the completion of the organization and the success of the campaign, but to find a sufficient number necessary to make this campaign is becoming serious and difficult. Efforts on the part of a limited number of interested individuals who would carry this appeal to every individual church member and alumnus would result in complete victory. Neither too much time nor too much money will be requested of any individual, and if all who are interested will pool their efforts and their gifts, we would be surprised by the limited time it would take to do the job.

At present, initial organizations for Burlington, Greensboro and Raleigh have been planned. These groups will meet in Greensboro on Tuesday, October 14; in Burlington on Wednesday, October 22, and in Raleigh on Tuesday, October 21. These meetings are to list the individuals who are to be appealed to, and to arrange for individuals to make the canvass. It is amazing how many different appeals are being made to the same people today. Of course, every church has its own program and responsibilities. Convention-wide organizations have their appeals to make, and they have plenty. It would be comforting and a blessing to all if our people would set aside one-tenth of their monthly earnings and out of their tithe meet their financial obligations to all interests to which they are responsible.

The campaign is progressing ac-ceptably, not as fast as we should like, but we are moving along. I find that our people are greatly interested in the college and are anxious to do their share in meeting its financial needs.

MISS RACHEL MATTHEWS.

MISS HELEN NOTT.

Someone said to me the other day that he would be glad when the college is through making campaigns for its support. I did not agree with him. I think it would be unfortunate for the church and for the college should the day come when it would not be necessary for the church to support the college; for when such a day arrives, the college will no longer be a church institution. When you stop supporting your home, it really ceases to be yours, and the same is true of your church and of all her institutions.

Elon College Annual Homecoming

The annual Homecoming was held Friday and Saturday, October 10-11. The students decorated the dormitories in a welcome to the alumni. West won first place, and East second. A parade was held in the afternoon from Elon to Burlington, through the streets of Burlington, from Burlington to Gibsonville by Highway No. 70, and back to Elon. There were between 50 and 60 cars in the parade.

Rachel Matthews was elected the Queen of Homecoming, with Helen Nott as Maid of Honor. The fraternities, sororities and the different dormitories and organizations in the student body presented sponsors and escorts. The Homecoming Queen was crowned on Friday evening, in a special ceremony in the gymnasium. The Queen, the Maid of Honor and the escorts were presented at half-time at the football game on Saturday night. The Elon College Fighting Christians played the East Carolina Pirates. It was a thrilling game in some respects. It was "all Elon" the first half, but "all East Carolina" the last half, which paid off. For the first time in its history, East Carolina conquered Elon with a 25 to 9 score. This is the first conference defeat for the Elon squad this year. From this defeat they will take the ball and march on to victory.

A number of old grads were back. The college was glad to see them and welcome them.

Apportionment Giving

No liberal arts college, whether it be a church college or a state college, is able to meet current financial demands without outside assistance. Simply because we are not appealed to individually for the support of the state schools does not mean that we are not supporting them. Every individual who pays taxes is helping to sustain our state schools. Our church colleges must be supported directly by individuals who believe in Christian education and who are concerned that the type of education that the church school gives should continue for the good of the church, the state and civilization as a whole.

Never before in the history of our country has it been so necessary that our college curriculum be imbued with the Christian spirit and inoculated with the facts of Christianity. The character of public spirit for tomorrow must have within it the courage and the boldness of Chris-

The Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference

Mrs. L. W. Stagg, corresponding secretary of the Eastern Virginia women, writes of the fortieth annual Missionary Conference, held at the Christian Temple on October 2, "The day was perfect, the attendance large, and the spirit fine."

Dr. W. W. Sloan of Elon College was the featured speaker, telling of the trip he and Mrs. Sloan made to Africa this past summer. He spoke to the 340 women on "Africa, As I Saw It," reporting that most of the natives in government positions are products of Christian mission schools.

Rev. James Madren and Dr. W. T. Scott spoke of our Carroll County Mission, which will be the recipient of the Thank Offering for 1952. Other speakers were Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Dr. J. G. Truitt, Dr. L. E. Smith, and Mrs. W. B. Williams.

District superintendents reporting were Mrs. G. C. Brittle, Mrs. Ray Gordon and Mrs. J. Everette Neese. It was reported that $9,000 had been raised for missions during the year.

Mrs. R. T. Bradford installed the following officers:

Our Thank Offering

Last week the president of each society received a copy of the Thank Offering service, together with information concerning our Thank Offering for this year, which is to go to our Carroll County mission work. It is suggested that this program be held on November 2, which is a Sunday, or on some other date early in November.

This material was prepared by a committee consisting of Miss Gladys Yates, Mrs. A. C. Moore and Mrs. R. V. Powell. It consists of a fine worship service, including the service of giving, and also much information about this mission written by people who have worked there or who have visited there recently. It is suggested that the information could be worked into a dialogue given by three women, but that will require careful preparation. Do not wait until the last minute — time now is short enough! —but begin your planning for this special service immediately, if you have not already done so.

Dr. W. T. Scott stated recently that he hoped the Thank Offering this year would amount to $5,000, for the money is so badly needed. One of our churches, Rocky Ford, is "down in the gully, the gully so low". The building is in a bad state of repair and the people have voted to move it to "higher ground." The land has been given, and $1,000 already raised by the people of the community. They are aiming at $5,000.

This is a project that definitely needs our help at this time. Let us make the appeal to our people as realistic as possible, and urge them to give generously for this re-location of a church in our own area.

Layettes Ready to Sew

World Community Day is to be observed on November 7, if possible in cooperation with other churches. Each year we bring some kind of gift to this service. This year that gift is a "Packet for Peace" consisting of new or used clothing for children up to six years of age. One of the items suggested is a layette.

Mrs. B. B. Johnson, superintendent of Interdenominational Cooperation for the past year in the North Carolina Conference, had ready for display there a completed layette. Here is the story behind it.

You may order from the Cut Garment, Service Center, New Windsor, Maryland, material all cut and ready to sew (with directions) for six layettes at a cost of $6.36 for the entire bundle.

It would not be too late for our women's groups to share with their sewing in such a project for World Community Day—or, later, if that date is too close at hand for the sewing to be completed. (I note on this information it says by November 30.)

Not many of our societies meet for work projects of this type, but in many areas our church women meet one day a week at the church for sewing for others. This might be a good time to start such a cooperative project. The bundle(s) could be purchased with society funds, and the work done by as many women as are interested.

And remember that your program for World Community Day must be ordered by October 24 from United Church Women, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, New York. It costs only 30 cents.

The North Carolina Conference

Apple's Chapel was filled with representatives from our N. C. women's groups on Tuesday, October 7, for the annual conference. We were delighted to be able to use the new educational plant there for the luncheon and for the displays from the various departments.

The opening worship was conducted by Mrs. Carl Dawson, spiritual life superintendent. Rev. J. R. Lackey welcomed the group. District superintendents reported—sixteen societies attained the achievement goals out of 70 reporting.

The Thank Offering for Carroll County work was presented by Mrs. R. V. Powell and Dr. W. T. Scott.

Dr. L. E. Smith told of the progress of the current Elon College campaign and of the need for funds to complete the two and one-half million dollar goal.

All were pleased that the report of the treasurer, Miss Susie Allen, showed a gain of about $450 over last year, with the total giving amounting to $9,419.26. Of this amount, $1,402 was for the Thank Offering, $570 for Life Memberships and $150 for Memorials. Three societies sending

OUR NEIGHBORS' NEED

By DR. F. C. LESTER

The Mission Board Has Heard the Call Will You in the Churches Lend a Hand?

Churches of our fellowship in this area that are coming into being or are struggling to build, turn to the Mission Board for aid. The Mission Board lends the listening ear of the 200 churches of the Southern Convention.

But the Board has no money with which to help except the amounts the churches entrust to it. Hence it is necessary for the Board to be a voice to relay to the churches the calls that come for help.

Movement of population has made it necessary for some of our churches to move, and for others to increase their buildings. Church people like to have nice churches. All of this means large outlays of money. We have two churches in Greensboro and two in Norfolk that have recently gone through this rebuilding or need to do so soon. Southern Pines had a disastrous fire and needs aid in rebuilding. Rocky Ford, in our mountain mission, needs a new church in a new location. Beverly Hills in Burlington is just getting started and needs help to get on its feet.

Then there is a thrilling opportunity for us in Fayetteville. The land, five acres, was given. We have an organization of 35 members that is well on the way to success. They need a building that will cost $50,000. All around our church grounds, homes are going up, but we have no church building. Every day we wait means lost opportunity.

Such are the needs of the churches. The calls for aid heard by the Mission Board amount to $20,000 we do not have, and will not have unless people in the more fortunate churches contribute the needed funds.

Fayetteville

After several trips to Fayetteville, and many interviews with the people in our church there, I am thoroughly convinced that now is the time to help erect a building that will be the center of one of our most rapidly growing church areas.

To do this the Mission Board will need to give $5,000, and to lend another $5,000 just as soon as a contract can be let and the work begun, which should not be later than December 1 of this year. The Board has so voted.

It may be that some member of our churches has the amount needed to give, or to lend, who will be glad to do so. I can think of no better investment. Money loaned will be perfectly safe as to principle, and the interest will be paid as agreed upon. A sizeable gift to this project will, I believe, bring great joy to the donor through the rest of his or her life, and will be a continuing memorial through the years to come. Anyone interested in helping in this way should get in touch with Supt. W. T. Scott at Elon College, N. C.

Those of us who cannot deal in the larger figures can be sure that the missionary apportionment of our churches is paid this year and next. That will help tremendously. And it just may be that some churches or individuals can send a little something extra. That certainly would bring joy to those who struggle with these problems of making our churches effective where they are greatly needed.

Rocky Ford

Our people of the hills are to have a new minister next month. The people of Rocky Ford need and are anxious for a new church building. We need to help them to the amount of $5,000, money that we do not now have. Our women are to give a Thank Offering for this purpose. Perhaps some of the men will want to do likewise. Gifts for our mountain work will bring returns in Christian living in an area too long neglected.

in funds for the first time were, Beverly Hills, Gibsonville and Calvary Church, Greensboro; while Amelia, Damascus and Morrisville reported to the treasurer after being reorganized.

New societies organized during the year included: Beverly Hills and Lakeview of Burlington, Fayetteville, Lebanon (Va.), Moore Union and Pfafftown. The newest of these was at our recently organized Lakeview Church, and they had seven women present for the conference!

Mrs. W. E. Wisseman spoke as a representative of the Home Boards, and Mrs. W. B. Williams reported on General Council features of special interest to women. Dr. J. G. Truitt delighted the group with his plea for "coo-pons" or "kew-pons," and will undoubtedly reap a big harvest of them as a result.

Mrs. Henry Robinson conducted the memorial service, while the new officers were installed by the Southern Convention Superintendent, W. T. Scott.

There was no "guest speaker," the time being given to an opportunity to examine the displays of material by each department. There were tables for cradle roll, children, young people, women's packets, Bible study, friendly service, and interdenominational cooperation, as well as a table of "reduced" mission study books of previous years. The latter was a popular place, as you know women cannot pass up a "bargain"! Mrs. W. J. Andes, president, had done a good job in planning and helping to arrange this.

The newly elected officers are:

President—Mrs. W. T. Scott, Elon College.

Vice President—Mrs. Richard Jackson, 232 McCauley St., Chapel Hill.

Secretary—Mrs. R. V. Powell, 411 Woodlawn Ave., Greensboro.

Treasurer—Miss Susie Allen, 612 W. Lane St., Raleigh.

Superintendents: Spiritual Life—Mrs. Carl Dawson, Elon College;

Literature—Mrs. T. G. Humphries, Reidsville; Family Life—Mrs. Ed Chilton, Reidsville; Life Memberships and Memorials—Mrs. S. E. Albert, Stokesdale; Interdenominational Cooperation—Mrs. W. L. Parker, 1326 Dixie Trail, Raleigh;

Young People—Miss Ruth Dunn, Elon College; Children—Mrs. Carl Key, 1421 Ruffin St., Durham;

Cradle Roll—Mrs. W. P. Bowland, Burlington; Social Action—Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Elon College.

District Superintendents: Asheboro—Mrs. Bill Simmons, R. 1, Bennett;

Burlington—Mrs. C. C. Ward, Box 1304, Burlington; Greensboro—Mrs. Beulah Wright, Reidsville;

Halifax—Mrs. Y. A. Bray, Nathalie, Va.; Henderson—Mrs. Carl Wallace, R. 1, Louisburg; Raleigh—Mrs. D. M. Estes, 104 W. Club Blvd., Durham; Sanford—Mrs. R. L. House, Box 62, Southern Pines.

A Page for Our Children

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Boys and Girls:

Some of you may have read a recent London dispatch that a new coat of arms or armorial bearings is being designed for use of the newly created knights, peers and baronets honored by Queen Elizabeth. If the story was meaningless to you, this is an effort to explain it.

Unlike the people in the United States, the English are believers in titles. Knights, peers and baronets are among the honors which a king or queen may confer upon chosen individuals. A particular coat of arms is a distinguishing factor of such honors.

But what is a coat of arms? Near the end of the eleventh century, the Christians of Europe began to send military expeditions to Palestine to free the Holy Land of infidels. These expeditions are known in history as the Crusades, the first being sent out in 1096 and the last in 1270. These struggles, incidentally, failed in their purpose.

It was during the second or third of these crusades that the soldiers—known as Soldiers of the Cross—found it necessary to find some means of distinguishing friend from foe in battle, fighting in those days not being so well organized as it is now.

The soldiers adopted what might be called in modern language a shoulder patch, a modification of a similar method used by the early Egyptians. These shoulder marks were known as heraldic bearings, and were embroidered on a surcoat worn over the armour itself, hence the name—coat of arms. The system developed into a family symbol.

Few could read or write in those days when knights were both brave and illiterate. Even many kings could not write their names. Many persons had large estates, and there was need for something as a signature for legal papers. Their papers were signed in place of a written signature by a little seal which impressed their arms—their symbol—upon the document.

A coat of arms includes the shield, the helmet, the crest or crown, the wreath, the mantling, and the motto, if the family had adopted one. The shield is the most important part of the composition.

Since the Crusades, and continuing until this day, the coat of arms has been a symbol of great family pride. Many families of colonial days who came to New England from various parts of Europe displayed their coats of arms in their homes and handed them down to their descendants.

Some of the oldest books in the Library of Congress are on heraldry. Many of these books include most family names represented by the early settlers in colonial America, and describe the family coat of arms. In addition, there are books in this vast storehouse of knowledge showing the actual colors, and by nationalities, of every available family coat of arms.

Heraldry is not exclusively connected with aristocracy, as many seem to think. Some of the most striking and ancient coats of arms in this country have been, and still are, maintained as symbols by families which are neither distinguished by titles nor by possession of any particular wealth.

Heraldry is the memorial of the brave and true hearts and great names of those earnest and patriotic times, and a monument to the men who by their energy, love of liberty and valor very largely contributed to the democratic processes of today.

"Want a Taste?"

By JANICE A. McDONALD.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"May I have an ice-cream cone, Mother? I want an ice-cream cone Please!"

Pleading blue eyes shone out of a rosy tanned face, damp with perspiration. Her blond curls were pinned up to keep her cool; she had on a sun suit, and her arms and legs were bare. She was three years old.

"Wait until I get my purse, then!" answered her mother.

"Oh!" she cried joyfully, jumping up and down in anticipation. "An ice-cream cone! I'm going to have an ice-cream cone!"

Her mother smiled at her in an indulgent adult manner.

The child gripped the money tightly, her tiny fingers wrapped securely around it. She was a "young lady" now as she walked down the steps and down the street intent on making a purchase at the corner store.

Talk on the piazza was arrested when the little girl returned. She made such a charming picture as she came up the walk. She was blissfully unaware of adult gazes and adult smiles and deaf to the remarks of bored wonder from some of them, such as, "How little it takes to make a child happy!"

Both hands were clutching the cone as slowly, happily tongue and lips began to do justice to the cooling delicacy. One or two drops eluded her and fell onto her sun suit. Her mother breathed a sigh of relief at the thought that she wasn't ruining a dress and gazed at her fondly as the child paused a minute from eating to say, "It is so good, Mother! Will you have a taste?" Her eyes were wide and happy, her buttonlike nose had a spot of brown on the tip now. She extended the cone to her mother wordlessly, wanting her to share some of the joy.

"Oh may I have some?" her mother asked. Then taking a small spoon from the tea table close by, she tasted the cream with a dramatic gesture and gave the cone back to the child. Someone in the group remarked, "She's in seventh heaven."

The little girl left then and went and sat on the top step to finish her treat. She was unhurried and took delight in every drop. An adult would have finished such a refreshment much more quickly and would not have found in it nearly as much pleasure. The child's joy remained even after the cone was eaten.

The incident might have left the mother's mind completely then. After all, what is there to remember or to think about when a tiny tot enjoys an ice-cream cone? She had given her daughter a few cents to buy a cone, she reflected. And although the monetary outlay was very small, it had made the child supremely happy. Instead of thinking in bored wonder, "How little it takes to make a child happy," she considered, "It is the children's gift to take pleasure in simple things, and adults should learn from them!"

The first lesson in life is to burn our own smoke; that is, not to inflict on outsiders our personal sorrows and petty morbidity, not to keep thinking of ourselves as exceptional cases,—James Russell Lowell.

Youth Group Reports from Windsor Church

The youth group of the Windsor, Virginia, Christian Church met for a few brief minutes on Sunday, September 29, for the purpose of electing officers for the coming year. Those elected were as follows: Bill Holland, president; Barbara Dean Bracey, vice-president; Nancy Watson, secretary, and Thomas Alphin, treasurer.

Our leaders are Rev. and Mrs. Ellis Clark.

We are looking forward to a very successful year.

Oak Grove Youth Group Has Successful Year

Under the leadership of Mrs. Elsie A. Eason, the members of Oak Grove Youth Fellowship have had a very successful conference year. We have 15 active members on roll, with an average of 13 members present at meetings.

Our new officers took their offices in September. They are: William Greene, president; Kermit Godfrey, vice-president; Anita Goodwin, secretary, and Roy Goodwin, treasurer. Our leader is again Mrs. Elsie Eason.

We have had two study books reviewed for us by members of our own youth group. At every meeting we have had some form of recreation. On several occasions we have had special meetings. We had a social at Christmas and another one in September, honoring one of our youth members who was leaving for Elon College.

We feel that we have contributed much to our church in the past year. We contributed money toward our new paint job at the church and toward buying rocks for our new driveway. Some of our youth group has helped to put up our new bulletin board. We have paid our apportionment in full and carried out all requirements except attending summer camp. Two members of our youth group are teachers in our Sunday school, and all of them have taken much interest in church work this past year.

We hope that as the church-year draws to a close the good Lord will give us strength and courage to carry on another year as well as we have this one.

Thanks to Mrs. Eason for supplying the necessary guidance for our success.

More News from the Virginia Valley

The three youth groups of the Linville Charge of our Valley Conference: Linville, Antioch and New Hope, met together at Linville on Tuesday evening, September 16. In addition to about thirty members, friends and advisors of the three groups, were Miss Evelyn Allen, the president of the Valley Young People's Conference, Rev. E. J. Rohart, pastor of the three churches, and Rev. H. V. Harman, pastor-at-large in the conference.

Mr. Harman led a worship service on the theme, "Spiritual Resources," to begin the evening's program. Then leaving the sanctuary for the basement hall beneath, the group divided into six smaller groups for the program of the evening. Each small group proceeded first to analyze the way that one "average member" spent his week. After discovering that almost all spend more time working, studying, being entertained, or "voluntarily with members of the opposite sex" than in church work, Mr. Harman made the point that we must, as young Christians, learn how to apply our faith in all areas of life, lest it become peripheral rather than central in our lives.

Next each group got one problem to work on. Mr. Harman had chosen these problems, they were true life situations, to illustrate the difficulty sometimes of applying our Christian faith. One problem was to answer the questions of a Roman Catholic about Protestants; one was to answer a non-Christian who didn't thing much of the conduct of "Christians" in the church; others on making Christian choices in school, about vocations, in community affairs, and in the choice of our life's partner.

Some of the answers were good, some were quite inadequate; but the group learned that Christian choices are not always easy or obvious.

After this mental and spiritual exercise, came some physical exercise, as Linville competed against New Hope-Antioch in a "track meet" of various kinds of crazy relay games. The visitors won, but all enjoyed the fruits of victory, the many refreshments and the good fellowship that followed.

Jesus' Test of Faith

LESSON IV—OCTOBER 26, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father in heaven."—Matthew 7: 21.

LESSON: Matthew 7: 12, 15-27.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 119: 105-112; Epistle of James.

A Good Rule.

Of the making of laws, like the making of books, there is no end. The Congress as well as State Assemblies and City Councils are always passing laws and ordinances to govern people in their relations with one another. And the volume of laws is not much greater than the vagueness of some of them. One has to be a smart man to understand what some of them say, and even smarter to understand what they mean. Ambiguous, complicated and complex they clutter up our statute books and confuse our citizens. To be sure, we have to have laws; but is there not some simpler principle, some general rule that can be used as the standard of conduct toward our fellow men?

With his characteristic insight, Jesus put it in simple terms. We call it the Golden Rule: "All things, therefore, whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you; even so do ye also unto them." It should be noted that the Jews had a Golden Rule, but it was negative. "Do not unto another what thou wouldst not have another do unto thee," said Hillel, the great Jewish teacher. That was good, very good. But it was negative. One was to refrain from doing unto another what he would not want another to do unto him. But Jesus' law was positive. One was to put himself in another's place, and then do to the other fellow what he would want the other fellow to do unto him if he were in his place. Jesus added a significant word, too. He said that on this law hung all the law and the prophets. "This is the law and the prophets," said Jesus. The law-givers and the prophets of the Old Testament were simply expressing the practical application of this great principle in their teaching and their preaching.

Think what an amazing change would take place in the life of the world if we practiced the Golden Rule. Suppose, for instance, that the white man put himself in the place of the black or colored man! Or the dictator put himself in the place of his subject peoples! Or the man who is impatient at the telephone put himself in the place of the harassed operator! Or the critical husband put himself in the place of the tired housewife! Or if all of us put ourselves in the place of the other fellow and then treated him as we would like for him to treat us! Well that is Jesus' law of life. That is indeed a Golden Rule.

Being and Doing.

"By their fruits ye shall know them." Sooner or later, the inner life finds expression in outward conduct. A good tree brings forth good fruit. A bad tree brings forth bad fruit. What we believe is important, but how we live is still more important. Right belief leads to right action and right living, provided one feels deeply enough about what one believes. Our conduct is the ultimate test of our faith. How important it is that the heart be kept right; for "out of the heart are the issues of life." The surest way, and ultimately the only way to do good is to be good. Being and doing are closely related. By their fruits shall we know men.

Saying and Doing.

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father in heaven. Many will say in that day, Lord, did we not prophesy by thy name, and by thy name cast out demons, and by thy name do many mighty works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity." Saying is not enough. It is easy enough to profess, it is difficult to perform.

When you get to heaven,
You will likely view
Many folks whose presence there
Will be a shock to you.

But keep very quiet;
Do not even stare,
Doubtless there'll be many folks
Surprised to see you there.

—Williams,

Jesus says in startling and sobering language that many folks who serve in his cause and do good works in his name, will miss the Kingdom of God. Their lives are insincere, shallow, hypocritical. Ministers, Sunday school teachers, deacons, church leaders, beware, lest we miss the Kingdom of God!

Hearing and Doing.

"Every one that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, shall be likened unto a wise man . . . and every one that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them not shall be likened unto a foolish man." The emphasis is upon doing what we hear. To hear and not to do, is like building a fine home on a shifting sandbank, or in the bed of a river. Here is the final test of faith. To act upon the words that he hears, that is the words of life as spoken by Jesus, is the highest form of wisdom. "Christian beliefs come from hearing the words of Jesus, which in turn results in Christian character, which in turn leads to good deeds. If there are no good deeds, it shows that there is no Christian character, and the fact that there is no Christian character shows that the person does not seriously believe these words of Jesus."

The storms will come. They will come alike to all. The wise man and the good man will have to face the storms of life, as well as the foolish man and the bad man. The thing comes alike to all. But the results are not the same. He who has built his life upon Jesus Christ has built upon a foundation that will enable him to stand in the time of storm and stress.

IV.—For Use in Churches

The juniors in a suburban church school were studying the history of the Christian church. And dramatic though the material was, built out of the vision and courage of martyrs, some of the political and theological implications were beyond ten-year-olds. With the lack of historical sense characteristic of juniors, they did not seem actually to share the sufferings of Ignatius and Justin.

Then one Sunday morning the principal stood in front of the group and began reading Luke's account in Acts from the Revised Standard Version of the New Testament:

"And when it was decided that we should sail for Italy . . . we put to sea . . . a northeaster struck down from the land . . . Paul said, 'Take heart, men, for I have faith in God' . . . the soldiers' plan was to kill the prisoners . . ."

The wriggling and punching in the junior assembly gave way to active attention. Here was real sea adventure!

The principal continued with the safe landing of the ship's passengers on Malta, in Chapter 28:

. . . the natives welcomed us . . . a viper fastened on Paul's hand . . . he shook off the creature into the fire and suffered no harm . . . they said that he was a god . . . the chief of the island, named Publius, entertained us hospitably . . . the father of Publius lay sick with fever . . . Paul healed him . . . after three months we set sail . . . we made a circuit and arrived at Rhegium . . . and so we came to Rome."

When the principal stopped at the sixteenth verse, there was the silence of understanding in the room.

"You didn't know the Bible sounded like that, did you?" asked the leader. The answer was in the pupils' surprised faces.

This incident can be matched by countless other church school teachers who, since 1946, have been using the Revised Standard Version of the New Testament in the religious instruction of boys and girls. Now teachers and pupils alike are looking forward to using the complete Scriptures in their classes.

Since it is at church that young and old alike will hear and read and study the Bible most, much of the responsibility for introducing the Revised Standard Version and for stimulating appreciation of it rests with ministers and church school workers.

Numerous congregations already have become accustomed to the reading by their preachers of the morning Scripture from the Revised Standard Version of the New Testament. The Old Testament will now add to the minister's worship resources in such treasures as the new revision of the Psalms and Isaiah. The rhythm and beauty of the King James Version of 1611 have been retained at the same time that errors in medieval transmission have been corrected, obscure passages have been cleared up by research on ancient manuscripts and archeological finds, and words that were misleading have been replaced by words that accurately convey the meaning of the Scriptures.

Church school teachers of children especially will appreciate having the whole Bible freed from "est" and "eth" endings and of "thou" and "thee," except in prayer addressed to God; also "unto," "would fain," "holden," "haply," "privily," "divers," "aforetime" and "begat." The use of logical paragraphs rather than division of thought by individual verses gives children the feeling of a unified narrative.

The printing of the Psalms and of many passages from the prophets in their proper original form as Hebrew poetry adds to the spirit of worship. Every teacher who has ever sighed while pupils struggled with "Jehovah" of the American Standard Version will be delighted to find the "Lord" of the King James Version back in the new revision.

A look at some Old Testament readings provides typical illustrations of changes that will make teaching easier. Some are simply improvements with twentieth century idiom, for example.

I Kings 10:21—"it was nothing accounted of" (KJV); "it was not considered as anything" (RSV).

Neh. 9:21—"their clothes waxed not old" (KJV); "their clothes did not wear out" (RSV).

Other examples show the substitution of contemporary idioms for the Hebraisms of King James:

I Samuel 20:42—"seed" (KJV); "descendants" (RSV).

Deut. 31:27—"stiff neck" (KJV); "stubborn" (RSV).

Gen. 17:3—"talked with him, saying" (KJV); "said to him" (RSV).

Since the New Testament is the basis of a great part of Sunday school teaching, its simplicity and directness in the new revision facilitate the teacher's task. The pupils in turn feel that here is a real book they can read and understand—not a musty old-fashioned volume for the bookshelf.

Imagine the difficulty of both pupil and teacher who try to wrestle with Romans 12:9-11 as in KJV: "Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another; not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord."

Now turn to the same passage in RSV: "Let love be genuine; hate what is evil, hold fast to what is good; love one another with brotherly affection; outdo one another in showing honor. Never flag in zeal, be aglow with the Spirit, serve the Lord."

For boys and girls, RSV has put one of their favorite stories of Jesus into understandable, accurate language that makes him more real than ever before. It is the account of his trip to Jerusalem at the age of twelve, Luke 2:41-52. Particularly striking is the rendition of verse 49, which in KJV reads:

"And he said unto them, How is it that ye sought me? Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

RSV translates: "And he said to them, 'How is it that you sought me? Did you not know that I must be in my Father's house?'"

Paul's advice in II Timothy 2 contains these two verses that show how easy RSV has improved clarity both for study and for worship:

"And if a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully" (KJV); "An athlete is not crowned unless he competes according to the rules" (RSV).

"The husbandman that laboreth must be first partaker of the fruits" (KJV); "It is the hard-working farmer who ought to have the first share of the crops" (RSV).

 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

These rainy mornings show us up when our children get ready to go to school. I made two or three trips with my car this morning, and all reached school in good shape. Almost all the children have raincoats or water-repellant wraps. Most of them have proper shoes for the weather. But, as I am saying, these first rainy mornings show us just what we need. It is funny how children like to splash in muddy water. As best I can remember, I liked it as a boy when I was barefooted, which probably was most of the time, but I did not like to get my dry shoes and those home-knitted stockings wet. I was even glad to take my father's instructions to clean my shoes with mutton tallow. But around here, many of our children seem allergic to fancy-packed shoe polish. When it rains, it is not dusty here, and the campus, shrubs, fall flowers and fields—pastures—all look much refreshed.

Once in a great while there is a good, oldfashioned fight between boys—not that I think many fights are "good." Yesterday, two boys were found delightfully at each others throats, or they probably thought they were having fun. I was very much interested in the way the matron handled the situation, and how both of them came out of their troubles bigger boys—really bigger inside, I mean. And, by the way, I meant to tell you, these boys are brothers. You would have been real proud of that younger one when he stood up in the dining room and accepted blame for the fracas and asked that his older brother be not punished.

I was enjoying a second cup of coffee at the recent luncheon session of the North Carolina and Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference at Apple's Chapel when a lady came along with a one-hundred-dollar bill. Such good coffee! While I was drinking it, still another lady came along, and she placed five 20-dollar bills on the table. I happen to know they and their husbands are tithers. They are liberal contributors in their local church, and their homes and families are happy ones. Malachi 3:10-11 says: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room to receive it, and I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts." No, do not look on this as legalistic, but look on yourself as a person who loves God as a good Friend and wishes to make real the fellowship and partnership with him. There is a joy in honoring God as the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

Thank you for this good report. Thank you, one and all, for everything you do for these children. Be looking forward, please, to generous offerings and contributions during the Thanksgiving season. Help us bring this week's total to $60,000 by December 31.

Associate with men of faith. This tends to be reciprocal. Your faith will communicate itself to them, and their faith to you. Do your work in a "faith" atmosphere, and you will work at a maximum advantage. You impress others by your own faith, and they will have faith in you only in the degree that you have faith in yourself.—Kleiser.

ASHEBORO OBSERVES WEEK.

If you have not used the "Self-Rating Chart for Teachers" found in the Manual for Summer, 1952, we think you have missed something good. Mr. Hughes gave each teacher a copy for use this coming year, following a discussion of each item on the list.

One new feature of our teaching staff is to have couples as teachers of classes—the nursery, the kindergarten, and the fifth grade group. We are looking forward with interest to the success of this innovation.

On Thursday, October 2, members of our church joined in the community-wide observance of the appearance of the Revised Standard Version of the Bible. Dr. Bernard Boyd of the department of Religion at the University of North Carolina, was the guest speaker.

On Sunday, October 5, a Rally Day service was presented at the close of the Sunday school period, and World Wide Communion Day was observed in the morning worship.

We are looking forward with optimism and enthusiasm to the new year in our Sunday school.

successful meeting. The primary purpose of getting together was that of fellowship. Also, high hope was expressed that we might have a new work in the city of South Boston, where years ago we had a growing congregation. Further investigations will be made, and perhaps a meeting of Congregational Christian Church members living in South Boston will be held in the near future. South Boston is a developing center of our church, and all the churches in that area would benefit from the establishment of a church there.

The group expressed a desire for other rallies in the area of these churches, and it is hoped that one or two may be held annually.

The meeting was arranged through the efforts of Rev Mark W. Andes, pastor of Union, Lebanon and Hebron churches. Those participating in the program besides Mr. Andes were, Rev. W. W. Snyder, president of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, President L. E. Smith and the writer. The Union Church choir rendered special music.

tian statesmen. Such characters cannot be produced separate and apart from the Christian Gospel and a Christian atmosphere. It should be counted as a privilege and a joy for our people to give their support to our college. No institution ever conceived or founded by the Southern Convention has made the contribution to our church in the Southern Convention equal to those made by the college.

Elon College deserves and should have our generous and liberal support.

CHURCH INSURANCE.

church against loss resulting from legal liability due to accidental injuries suffered by persons other than employees in or on insured premises. It covers injuries resulting from "ownership, care, maintenance or use" of insured church, including ordinary repairs. Covers where injuries occur "at, within or upon" insured premises, sidewalks or streets immediately adjoining. Pays for defense of damage suits, even if ground- less.

Another coverage which is over- looked by a large number of churches is Boiler Insurance. In this small, black iron box, usually hidden away in the basement and very seldom seen by the members of any church, is a potential bomb, one that can wreck any building, whether frame, brick or stone. Insurance may be obtained which covers directly property damage (not liability due to personal injury) resulting from explosion of boilers and vessels, either of steel or cast iron parts which permits leakage of steam or water.

Church Burglary, Robbery, Theft and Larceny Insurance is also over- looked by many churches, and this covers against loss as a result of burg- lary, robbery, theft or larceny of the property common to houses of wor- ship. Also covers damage done to property as the result of burglary or attempt.

A number of our churches have beautiful glass windows, and these may also be insured under a Plate Glass coverage, which covers loss to insured glass, lettering or ornamenta- tion thereon, caused by accidental breakage. Because of large invest- ments in art and cathedral glass in some of our churches, this is an angle of the insurance problem on such properties which should be gone into specifically in each case.

Automobile Insurance. This will probably be a new subject of insur- ance with the representatives of many congregations, but it is one which should be considered by every church. The courts have ruled that a person acting as the agent for the church may be held liable for injury or dam- age resulting from an accident, and in some cases judgments have been given against churches resulting from automobile accidents, where the agent was liable. Protection may be secured under a Non-Ownership Liability Coverage. The premiums are based on the number of paid employes and the size of the membership.

There are a number of other cov- erages which are applicable to our churches, but we realize that all types cannot be purchased by the average church. These which I have listed are important. They should be con- sidered by your trustees, if you are not insured at this time. Remember, you cannot purchase it after you suffer a loss.

"Every Man a Builder"

By WALTER A. GRAHAM
National Director, Laymen's Fellowship

Why does a man build a house? Is it because he really wants a new one, larger and nicer, or is he afraid the old one is going to fall apart? Something of this same argument may apply to the explanation of why men are interested in religion or in the church. Do they really desire a new ethic to live by or are they afraid the too-prevalent materialistic philosophy of life is about to break down? Whatever the reason may be, it is a fact that more men today are interested in the church and Christianity in America than for many years past.

The Laymen's Fellowship has seen much progress in the past two years, and a firmer foundation has been planned for greater progress in the future. The Laymen's Fellowship, the organized manpower of the Congregational Christian Churches, can be better discussed or described as a movement rather than an organization.

What Is the Laymen's Fellowship?

The Laymen's Fellowship is the fellowship of the men of the Congregational Christian Churches who believe in the Christian way of life and want actively to promote the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth. All men, therefore, who are members of any Congregational Christian Church are members of the Laymen's Fellowship. The Laymen's Fellowship also includes those men of any church-sponsored clubs, Bible classes or other organizations who are not members of that particular local Congregational Christian Church.

For the purpose of working units, the Laymen's Fellowship is ideally organized on at least four separate levels:

1. Local church men's group.
2. Association or area organization.
3. State Conference or Convention.
4. National Committee of 48 men, including Board of Directors of 13 men, with executive committee of five men.

Purpose.

The purpose of the Laymen's Fellowship, as set forth in the Working Rules which were adopted by the assembled laymen at the Oberlin, Ohio, General Council meeting in 1948, are as follows:

1. To promote Christian fellowship among men of the church.
2. To encourage widespread practice of Christian principles in all daily relationships.
3. To rally all men to the support of the total program of the churches.
4. To develop an awareness of the universal need for Christian brotherhood.
5. To cultivate the love of God in the hearts of men everywhere.
6. To create Christian statesmanship.
7. To sponsor local, state and national programs that will effectuate these purposes.

Church Celebrates Twenty-Fifth Anniversary

On Sunday, October 12, 1952, the Flint Hill Congregational Christian Church observed its twenty-fifth anniversary. This church was one of the few Congregational churches of North Carolina prior to the merger, having been organized by Rev. S. M. Penn, who now lives in Alabama.

Rev. Mr. Penn returned to North Carolina to preach the anniversary sermon on Sunday morning, using as his subject, "My Church and I." In the afternoon, after an enjoyable picnic luncheon, there was a program of special music and group singing. Miss Lola Farlow, church secretary, presented a History of Flint Hill Church; and past experiences were recalled by members of the church. Dr. F. C. Lester, president of the Western North Carolina Conference brought the service to a close with a brief address.

Located near Sophia, in Randolph County, North Carolina, Flint Hill has been a blessing to the community and to the denomination. Small in membership, it is large in faith and loyal in spirit. It has done much toward molding the lives of many Christian men and women.

Other ministers, besides the organizer, Rev. Mr. Penn, who have served the church, include Rev. D. M. Spence, Rev. C. C. Thomas, Rev. G. C. Crutchfield and Rev. W. T. Madren.

News Flashes

Dr. F. C. Lester is preaching each evening this week at the Winston-Salem Church, of which Rev. W. J. Andes is the pastor. This church observed its twentieth anniversary on Sunday, and the members will be seeking greater dedication for themselves to the work of their church.

The Laymen's Fellowship of the Asheboro Congregational Christian Church was responsible for the morning worship service on last Sunday. John Griffin presided, Hubert Beane read the scripture and led in prayer, a talk on the National Fellowship was made by W. H. Hughes, Jr., and Dalton Harper spoke on "Men of God in Fellowship." Mr. Harper, who is an Elon alumnus, is the president of the Asheboro fellowship.

Because of his excellent record at North Carolina State College last year, Timothy Chang received a research fellowship award from Ohio State University for this school year. He is working in the field of Poultry, and feels this will be a great help to him in his future work in China as a Christian minister. Timothy's address is Seicoto Club, Stadium Dormitory, Ohio State University, Columbus 10, Ohio. He will be very happy to hear from you.

News from Berea (Great Bridge)

On Sunday, September 21, 1952, Berea (Great Bridge) Congregational Christian Church observed Homecoming Day. At the eleven o'clock service the pastor, Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, delivered the sermon. A picnic dinner on the grounds followed the morning service.

The afternoon service began at 2 o'clock, with the Rev. O. D. Poythress of South Norfolk conducting the song service. Mrs. J. F. Morgan of Norfolk brought the message. A memorial and recognition service follow her inspiring message, and then a historical sketch of the church was given.

The night service, beginning at 8 o'clock, started a series of revival services—a wonderful week of revival for Berea. The Rev. Johnson Griffin of Bay View Christian Church assisted the pastor by bringing a wonderful message each evening.

Bible Exhibit and Tableaux at Norfolk Church

On Sunday, October 12, the Congregational Christian Temple of Norfolk, Virginia, performed an experiment. The regular Sunday evening service was replaced by a Bible exhibit and an interesting program of tableaux entitled "How Our Bible Came to Us." The script was written and read over the public address system from backstage by Mr. Norman Schlegel, teacher of one of the adult classes. The social hall was darkened as a record of "O Lord, Most Holy" was played. The curtains were opened on a series of tableaux as the narration traced the writing and translating of the Bible from the beginning of time, through the centuries, to the Revised Standard Version published September 30 of this year.

The congregation saw grandfather telling the stories of Cain and Abel, and Noah and the Flood to his son and his grandson as they sat around the campfire. They watched as Isaiah preached, as Mark wrote what Peter dictated, as Jerome translated in his cell by candle-light. They saw Tyndale's Bibles burned, a bishop and scholar presenting a book to King James, and Luther Weigle conferring with modern scholars at a table. The display of Bibles ranging from Hebrew, Greek, German and modern foreign translations, to modern English translations and old family Bibles, was thus made more meaningful.

The program was concluded with refreshments and a pleasant social period. The evening provided an opportunity for worship, education and fellowship for the whole family.

Oakland Church Bible Class Reaches Twenty-Fifth Milestone

Ninety-two members and guests of the I. W. Johnson Bible Class, of Oakland Christian Church, Chuckatuck, Va. assembled at Planter's Club, near Driver, Va., on October 14, at 7 p. m., to observe the Silver Anniversary of the class.

The occasion was featured by a fine program and a delicious ham and fried chicken dinner.

C. C. Johnson, class president, presided, welcomed the guests, and presented the speaker. The blessing on the meal was asked by Malbon E. Joyner, a member of the class.

Dr. I. W. Johnson, accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Johnson, sang the "Holy City" and reviewed the history of the class. Dr. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor, pointed "The Way for the Future."

The program was climaxed by an address by Dr. Murray Kantor, Rabbi of the Agudath Achim Synagogue, in Suffolk, Va.

Mrs. O. W. Newman sang "It Is No Secret What God Can Do." Benediction was pronounced by Dr. N. G. Newman.

The guest table was centered with a birthday cake, with silver trimmings, bearing the twenty-five candles and the dates 1927-1952. To preserve the memory of the occasion the class presented to itself a silver offering plate, appropriately inscribed, to be used in its class room. Dr. Johnson made the presentation.

Mrs. E. L. Bowden, with fitting words, presented to Mrs. J. Rollie Gayle, on behalf of the class, a silver pitcher. Mrs. Gayle has served the class as teacher for more than eighteen years, and as assistant teacher for the remainder of the life of the class.

THE CONVENTION

The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches is the instrument of the five Conferences in North Carolina and Virginia for the expression of their common life and concern. The Convention provides opportunities for the pooling of the energies, resources and desires of all the churches in these five conferences for the effective development of life in every area of concern. These include: Missions, Christian Education in the local church, Higher Christian Education through Elon College, the care of children through the orphanage, Social Action, Rural Church Life, Pilgrim Fellowship, Laymen's Work, assistance for retired ministers, the Woman's Convention, and many other concerns.

A Convention Office for the promotion and coordination of these activities is maintained at Elon College, North Carolina. This office is under the direction of the Convention Superintendent. The superintendent is called to his position by the Convention in session each two years and works under the direction of the Executive Board of the Convention. The superintendent has no authority over any church or person within the church, except that of his own influence, earned by his own abilities. He councils with churches and pastors when so requested to do on problems relative to their life and work, but has no authority to resolve these problems except as he can help find a solution by common agreement. The only human authority which exists in our churches is in the local congregation. The superintendent is at all times a ready and willing servant of all the churches, conferences and boards of the Convention.

The superintendent helps churches in every way that he can to find suitable pastors, and is in position to provide churches with information about available pastors. However, he does not choose pastors for churches. Each church must choose its own pastor, within the accepted rules of the conference, and must accept responsibility for its choice. Pastors in like manner have the responsibility of choice in relationship to the place of their ministry. Their standing as ministers is in the conferences and not in the Convention.

The Convention office and the superintendent are vital parts of our church life. They are doing an essential job and doing it well. We must support them with our good will and appreciation. They are made possible through the Convention fund in our apportionments. The payment of this part of our apportionment is necessary, if the Convention office is to serve its purpose.

THE CONFERENCES

Within the bounds of the Southern Convention there are five Conferences. These conferences meet each year for the purpose of assembling reports from the churches and planning the work of their area for the next year. These conference sessions are very important in the lives of our churches. They mark the end of a year's work for the churches and the beginning of a new year's endeavor. They provide a time when we give an account of our stewardship and make new and worthy resolves for a more effective stewardship for the future.

These conferences all meet at one time or another during October and November of each year. We hope you will have the opportunity of attending your conference session this year. It will be a great inspiration to see so many people present and to know that all of them are interested in the work of the church. Carry that inspiration back to your church. You will be a better Christian and churchman for it, and your church will be a stronger part of our great fellowship for it.

In behalf of the Convention, I extend Christian greetings to all the conferences as they gather for their annual sessions. Let us strengthen the tie that binds us in common devotion and concern.

A Series of Meditations

III.—Toward Things

I once had the opportunity of watching a surgeon perform an operation on a serious head injury that had broken the skull. The pieces of bone had to be removed and a silver plate set in place. At the side of the surgeon was a semicircular glass-top table laden with instruments. A nurse who had worked with the doctor many times and trained in what one might call a sign language passed the tools back and forth at only a gesture or a glance. Great caution had to be exercised as one slip of an instrument would cause damage to the brain. Many other objects were close-by which could be summoned if needed. X-ray, anesthesia equipment, sterilizers, sutures, tape, bandages, drugs, and a host of other related items. In fact the whole hospital with its kitchens, boiler room, laundry, laboratory, and all the rest was a part of the physical objects playing a part in this battle to save a life. Important and indispensable as they were, these objects were not ends in themselves, they were useful means toward a higher end, namely, the saving of a life in the service of man.

Another time I saw a costly Stradivarius violin. The component parts were rather common articles: wood, glue, gut, and horsehair. These ordinary objects had fallen into the hands of a superior craftsman and a violin of rare quality resulted. But even this priceless instrument was of little value without the artist who had perfected his talents, and the composer who had given the world a deathless melody.

In these illustrations it is easy to see how things are secondary to higher purposes and values. But in a society where things have usurped so great a place it is not easy to keep the material subservient to the spiritual. We amass our possessions in terms of money, homes, factories, farms, cars, jewels, and clothing and forget what is really important and who is master. When we fail to make things means toward the higher end, the forces of evil, seeing our blindness, move in and make our possessions means toward the evil end.

A dollar is but a harmless object without moral qualities. The moral qualities are vested in him who possesses the dollar. The possessor may use that dollar and buy poison to take a life, or he may take the same dollar and buy penicillin to save a life.

One is not on the highway very long these days without realizing the tremendous part the automobile plays in modern life. The automobile can be used to promote business, wholesome recreation, fellowship, or even at times to save life itself. On the other hand it can sponsor crime, lust, illicit traffic, and kill by the hundreds, when misused. What one of us has not been saddened by the death of kindred or friend due to traffic fatality?

Our time becomes absorbed by material possessions either in the acquiring of them or in the maintaining of them. Unless we are exceedingly careful our time and our loyalties are won by material objects and they become our masters rather than the servants they should be.

The temptation to let things rule in Jesus' day was not as great as it is today because life was more simple and attractive possessions were not nearly so numerous. Yet Jesus himself was tempted to misuse things and in turn cautioned his followers often to beware of putting one's trust in possessions. He said: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth where moth and rust corrupt and thieves break through and steal, but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven where moth and rust do not corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal." He told the parable of the rich fool whose goods exceeded his barns so he ordered new barns erected that his goods could be laid by and his soul take its ease. But his soul was required of him and his possessions had no power to save his soul in the hour of its need.

We look about and observe the prosperity of the wicked and the happiness of the rich. We grow envious and covetous and impatient. We begin to doubt the words of the psalmist when he spoke of the righteous man: "And whatsoever he doeth shall prosper." "But the way of the ungodly shall perish." In our hasty judgement we forget the element of time. Moth and rust corrupt slowly. Withhold your estimate for fifty years or until evil has had full time to set its processes of degeneration in operation. The later picture may be wholly different from the rosy present. It may be that we have come into the story at the moment of feasting and dancing. Wait a little while and the scene may change to that of swine and the husks which they did eat.

A certain man of wealth came to his minister heavy of heart. His only son had brought shame and disgrace to his name. "What more could I do for him?" said the father. The minister replied, "You have given your son cars, travel, spending money unlimited, the pick of the nation's schools. Yes, you have given him everything but God." This father tried to make things take the place of prayer, worship, Bible study, fellowship, fatherly companionship and all those pursuits which must inevitably come. When the things of the world are substituted for the things of the spirit only heartache and disillusionment can result.

The kingdoms of this world are spread before us in exchange for our deepest loyalties. In this temptation, which is probably the greatest in our generation, we must as Christians remember the words of Jesus when he said: "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and him only shalt thou serve."

There are nettles everywhere, but smooth, green grasses are more common still; the blue of heaven is larger than the cloud.—E. B. Browning.

Virginia Valley Conference Holds Great Session

The 104th annual session of the Virginia Valley Central Conference was held at the Leaksville Church, near Luray, Virginia, on October 15 and 16. The churches were well represented by delegates. It was a great session. Mr. K. B. Dofflemyer, president; Mr. Clarence A. Phillips, secretary, and Mr. O. W. Andes, treasurer, all consecrated laymen, performed their duties with honor and credit to their Church.

The program was built around the theme, "Let Us Rise Up and Build." It included addresses by President L. E. Smith of Elon College; Mr. William K. Newman, area director of the Church Building Loan Fund Campaign; Dr. John G. Truitt, superintendent of the Christian Orphanage; Rev. Gladwyn Childs, missionary to Africa, and Superintendent Scott.

Reports were presented as follows: Home Missions, Mr. R. O. Rothgeb; Foreign Missions, Rev. R. E. Newton; Ministry, Rev. R. A. Whitten; Sunday School Convention, Rev. S. E. Madren; Stewardship, Rev. E. J. Rohart; Evangelism, Rev. S. E. Madren; Religious Literature, Mrs. B. F. Frank; Apportionments, Mr. E. A. Showalter.

The session of the Christian Missionary Association was presided over by Rev. S. E. Madren.

A highlight in the session was the receiving of several fine young ministers into conference membership: Rev. Ralph Galt, pastor of the Shenrock Parish, who came by transfer from Iowa; Rev. Henry M. Harman, pastor of Timber Ridge and pastor-at-large in the Valley Conference, who came by transfer from the Washington (D.C.) Association; and Paige Painter, a senior at Elon College and a member of the Leaksville Church, who was licensed by the conference. Paige is the son of Mr. and Mrs. N. F. Painter, leaders in the Leaksville Church.

An impressive ordination service was held for James W. Madren, son of Rev. and Mrs. S. E. Madren. The beautiful charge given to this young minister by his father will not soon be forgotten.

The conference was pleased to have members of the West Virginia Conference present for the session. Present were Rev. James Thomas, pastor of Oak Dale Christian Church, Rig, W. Va., and four of his laymen, Earl Barr, James Barr, Robert Barr and Bennie Evans. By unanimous vote of the conference, Mr. Thomas was given associate membership in the conference, along with the Oak Dale Church. It is hoped that this fellowship may result in the strengthening of this good church and our West Virginia Christian Conference.

A Letter from Timothy Chang

Columbus 10, Ohio,
October 11, 1952.

Dear Friends of the So. Convention:

Some of you might think that I had left the United States and gone back to China, or somewhere else, as some of you thought last year. Actually, I am still here, except outside the Southern Convention territory!

As I remember, four years ago, I arrived in North Carolina from China, I felt everything strange to me, but I soon realized that you were very kind to me in all ways, especially Dr. and Mrs. Scott. All of you have given me great encouragement. All of your kindnesses to me have made me feel that North Carolina and Virginia are my home states in the U. S. A. That was why you could find me at Elon—Dr. Scott's home, or at Chapel Hill—Mr. Jackson's home, during my holidays or short vacations.

Last month when Bill Scott, Jr., drove me to catch the bus at Greensboro, I had a terrible feeling, just like I had four years ago when I left Foochow, because I was leaving North Carolina and Virginia for a while and I could not see you all so often as during the past four years. I could not even say what I wanted to say to Bill, except "Thanks a lot," because my feelings had stopped my words! Anyway, I assure you that "I shall return" to North Carolina and Virginia to see you sometime soon, at least before I leave this country.

In these four years, my work and study have given me a great confidence and direction for my future work as God cares. I shall never forget that which you have done for me in your advice, encouragement, help and love. I am sorry that I couldn't say "goodbye" to everyone of you personally before I left you. This is one way that I am able to express my thanks to all of you, and I hope you still pray for my work at the present and in the future.

I arrived here in Columbus on September 23 and registered on the 29th. I am living in a room with 15 other students, mostly graduate students—two from Japan, two from Hawaii, one from Burma, one from Ecuador, another Chinese besides myself, two Negroes from Alabama and Cleveland, one from North Carolina, one from Oklahoma, and the rest from Ohio. There is a study room beside the bedroom. We have a good time together with this combination. Sometimes we talk about some subjects, and each has something to say differently because of different backgrounds. When we talk about religion, it is more interesting (and serious) because most of them are not Christians, even the few American students. But we enjoy our discussions. I always think now that there no such word as "war" used in the international language, if all people lived closely like we do. We leave out the word "prejudice" and emphasize the words, "We are all children of God."

I attended the First Congregational Church in Columbus on the first Sunday I was here, when Dr. Douglas Horton was the guest speaker. I went to Plymouth Congregational Church last Sunday. I also attended the United Student Fellowship here several times. A great program has been planned for the entire quarter, meeting twice a week, Friday night for parties and fun, and Sunday nights for supper meeting, songs, speeches and discussions. Last Sunday evening the film, "More for Peace" was shown after supper. I am engaged to speak in the E. & R. Church in Columbus next Sunday morning and evening.

I can tell you on and on about my new adventures, but I think I better stop here and thank THE CHRISTIAN SUN for this space here for me.

God bless you all.

Your friend,

TIMOTHY S. CHANG.

I do not believe in the word Fate. It is the refuge of every self-confessed failure—Soular.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Superintendent Scott and President Smith attended the annual session of the Virginia Valley Central Conference at Leaksville Church on October 15-16. A good session was reported.

* * *

The student body has recovered from the Homecoming and the loss of the football game to East Carolina College and is down to good hard work again. The football team has been practicing daily. The contest with the football team of Little Creek, Norfolk, Virginia, on last Saturday evening at the Burlington Stadium, was a close one, but a good game. It added another to our victories.

* * *

Encouraging reports are made by Dr. Bowden from his "round the Convention" travels contacting pastors and church officials in interest of the Sustaining Fund. Dr. Bowden is optimistic. He feels that we will reach or pass the half-way mark of $1 per member from members of the Southern Convention for the college. It is hoped that every pastor and church will make sure that their obligations are met.

* * *

Elon College is operating on the quarter system. The first quarter is a little more than half gone. Counselors are busy with individual students in an effort to improve the grades of those who are falling below the passing mark. The counseling system at the college is working more smoothly and more efficiently this year than before. The new quarter begins December 1. Additional students may register at that time.

The Virginia Valley Central Conference

The annual session of the Valley Conference for years had met in August until this year. By vote the conference adjourned to meet in October at the Leaksville Church. It was my privilege to attend the first day session of the conference on October 15. The Leaksville Church has certainly improved since my last visit. The sanctuary has been redecorated and provides a very attractive and worshipful appearance. Sunday school rooms have been added, which adds to the convenience and efficiency of the church. A full basement has been built under the church and attractively furnished for social occasions. A most bountiful luncheon was served to the guests and visitors and a delicious meal it was!

Mr. K. B. Dofflemeyer is president of the conference, and Mr. Clarence Phillips is secretary. I arrived during the opening moments of the conference, was introduced as the president of Elon College and given the privilege of the floor for an address immediately.

During the time allotted, I emphasized the contribution of Elon College to the church during its sixty-two years of service. The greater majority of our ministers have had college training, if not advantages of the seminary, since the founding of the college as compared with the training of our ministers prior to the founding of Elon College. Trained leadership means a better, more efficient leadership.

As a result, the membership of our church in the South has steadily increased year after year until today our membership has been more than tripled since 1890. I also called attention to the Two and One Half Million Dollar Campaign for the college which is now in progress, and emphasized the necessity of every local church and every individual church member contributing to the fund. If everyone will contribute what he can, we shall raise the entire amount.

In a conference with the ministers and officials of the conference at the noon hour, it was decided that the campaign in the Valley of Virginia should be made the first two weeks in January. The hope was expressed by the group that Dr. W. Millard Stevens, general chairman; Dr. Duane Vore, chairman for the State of Virginia, and Mr. George D. Colelough, chairman for the State of North Carolina, would be able to come for the first two days of the campaign to assist in the organization and give personal guidance. Personally I trust that these officials may find it possible to go.

Apportionment Giving

The annual conferences are meeting during the next few weeks. A total of $15,000 was apportioned for the college to be paid by the churches as a part of their apportionment. The Valley Conference, the first to meet, was held last week. The total received to date amounts to $10,554.75, which is a little more than two-thirds of the amount apportioned. Appeals to the churches and Sunday schools have been made weekly through THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The Convention Office has received these payments and disbursed the same to the college. It has been the hope and prayer of many of us that the entire amount apportioned would be paid this year, particularly since expenses are so high and the entire amount is needed so badly.

If your church has not paid its apportionment in full, won't you please make a special effort to do so before the annual conferences close and the final reports are in?

A Memorial

The Virginia Valley Woman's Missionary Conference gave a copy of the new Revised Standard Version of the Bible to Elon College as a memorial to Mrs. O. J. Sours, a faithful and loyal member of Leaksville Church and of the Woman's Missionary Society. Mrs. Sours passed away some time ago.

Mrs. Sours' co-laborers in the church and in the missionary societies chose to memorialize her name and her good work in this manner. The Bible was presented to President L. E. Smith during the annual session of the Virginia Valley Conference, on October 15, by Mrs. J. E. Bryant, on (Continued on page 15.)

"Unto These Hills"

By GLADYS YATES, Chairman

The Thank Offering Committee

In the mountains of Western North Carolina there is presented each summer a dramatic production called "Unto These Hills." We might let our minds use these words as a focal point in connection with our 1952 Thank Offering.

The Psalmist of old gave us the beautiful words of the 121st Psalm, which begins: "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help." What could be more fitting than this as our theme for our project: Church Extension in Carroll County, Virginia.

Many years ago our Southern Convention undertook, as a missionary project, the establishing of a church or churches in Carroll County. From this beginning have come the Rocky Ford and Elk Spur churches. Down through the years they have kept the fires burning, although at times they have burned but dimly. But the spark has never died.

The Thank Offering Program.

The season of the year has come when the thoughts of the Women in the Southern Convention turn toward the Thank Offering program. We are asked to present our program on Sunday, November 2, 1952, if it is at all possible, and to receive our offerings at that time. If that date does not fit the program of your group, we suggest that it be done at the earliest possible date after that, and that you will forward your offering to the treasurer of your Woman's Conference.

Ere now, each society has received, or should have received, the Thank Offering program. If you have not, please write Mrs. W. B. Williams, president, 1253 24th Street, Newport News, Virginia.

The Committee on the Thank Offering programs, endeavoring to give the women's group real "down-to-earth" materials, wrote to leaders in the convention and former pastors and teachers who had served the Carroll County area for first hand information. This is given you in the program as it was received, with the earnest hope that it can be used to make the entire program vital and alive. Use it as it best suits your needs.

A Wonderful Dream.

The story of the Carroll County Mission is full of dreams and romance. It is the story of a people who have seen the vision and who are determined to make it a "dream-come-true." They have done much to make their churches vital and active. Now they have need of us and they have asked us to aid them in their work of church extension. They have seen the need or relocating the Rocky Ford church building. They have given of their substance, but they need further help from their friends—from you and me. Through our Thank Offerings we can help write the pages of a wonderful and inspiring story—a story of the extension of the work of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

I hope this fall will find us going "Unto These Hills" in spirit, even though, in body, we may be far away.

I would like to close this simple message with these words by Edith M. Chamberlain:

"I lift up mine eyes unto the hills,"

For there in the highest solitudes apart,
Resting amid the silence of the majestic hills

The awakened spirit brings peace to the weary heart.

One is never alone, for there
Is the companionship of God above;
And the murmuring trees around
Bring their message of beauty and love.

There, too, a lonely brook
Is wandering toward the seas
And the sole of its tinkling music
Is wafted through the trees.

"I lift up mine eyes unto the hills,"

And their strength will carry me on
For in the heart of the mountains
A higher hope is born.

While the trees are softly crooning
The sun sinks in the scarlet west,
And through the growing shadows
A shining star bids us rest.

Report of the Eastern Virginia Missionary Conference

By MRS. GARLAND SPATLEY,

Conference President.

The fortieth annual session of the Woman's Missionary Conference of Eastern Virginia Congregational Christian Churches met on October 2, 1952, at ten o'clock in the Christian Temple, Norfolk, with an attendance of about 350. The theme for the day was "Building with Love and Gratitude." The service of devotion was led by Mrs. J. F. Morgan, who used as her topic, "The House We Are Building."

Information from the district superintendents and departmental leaders indicated well-made plans for the year had been faithfully executed.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill presented the literature for the year. Mrs. W. B. Williams, president of the Woman's Missionary Convention, addressed the conference on "Together, We Build."

The treasurer reported $9,199.88, which included $650 for Life Membership and Memorial Certificates to be used for Franklinton Center.

We had as our speakers for the conference, Dr. W. W. Sloan, who has recently returned from Africa; Dr. W. T. Scott, and Rev. James Madren, who spoke on the projected program in Carroll County (object of our 1952 Thank Offering); Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College, who presented and spoke on the current campaign by the college; Dr. John G. Truitt, superintendent of the orphanage, who thanked the women for coupons and requested more for the orphanage.

Mrs. W. B. Williams told of the campaign of the Building Society to be launched in March, 1953.

The following recommendations were adopted:

1. That $50 be appropriated to the Virginia Council of Churches.
2. That the goal for 1952-53 be set for $9,000.
3. That special emphasis be placed on the work of the Carroll County Missions.
4. That each local society endeavor to show the feature film, "More for Peace."

The reports were mimeographed in booklets and distributed, making possible a longer usefulness.

The officers for the year 1952-53 were installed by Mrs. R. T. Bradford. (The list of officers was given on this page last week.)

All in all, it was a great conference, and we look forward with enthusiasm to the year which lies ahead.

"Victoria of the Hills"

By DR. J. O. ATKINSON.

The message arriving April 22, stating that Victoria Edwards (our "Victoria of the Hills") had died April 21, and would be buried in the afternoon of April 22, brought a pang of grief and deep regret to the heart of your writer, the Mission Secretary. "Victoria of the Hills," feeble of frame for years, but ever strong and serene of soul, had managed to sing her song of love for her hills and in fact, of love and life itself, we are persuaded, into the hearts of hundreds, maybe thousands, of CHRISTIAN SUN readers. repeatedly, for ten or twelve years, physicians had said she couldn't live long, but her invincible courage and strength of spirit refused to succumb; in fact survived the last wasted ounce of her exhausted body!

How she did love life and all that was strong and blessed and beautiful in life! One wonders if the creed of Arnold Walter had not long since become her creed, "I would be strong for there is much to suffer; I would be brave, for there is much to dare; I would be a friend to all—the foe, the friendless; I would be humble for I know my weakness; I would look up and laugh—and love—and live." Whatever her creed, both CHRISTIAN SUN readers, and her pastors and those who knew her best, know that her deeds were golden and the melody of her life charmed and soothed all who caught the inspiration of it through her writings and her service.

One who had been her pastor for years testifies that she was the backbone and the life of our Elk Spur Church, for, though exceedingly limited in physical endurance, she was never asked to do anything for church or Sunday school or community betterment, and refused. He reply always was, said her pastor, "I feel unworthy, but I will do my best."

Here, indeed, is the life, and here, indeed, is the testimony that should help all who read these words, "I feel unworthy, but I will do my best."

Victoria Irene Edwards was the daughter of Deacon Washington Edwards and wife of our Elk Spur Church. She was born on August 19, 1903, and, as already stated, passed from the mountain peak (for she lived right on top of the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia) to the still higher life on April 21, 1938.

When we opened our first school in Carroll County, in an abandoned storehouse at Elk Spur, in 1920, with the then Miss Lola Hedgpeeth as the teacher, Victoria was one of the first to register. There was no school at that time in her vicinity, nor Sunday school, nor church, and her father's house lodged and boarded our first teacher and the one who blazed the way for opening a Sunday school and later planting a church in that community. We have there now a substantial house of worship, with its day and Sunday school rooms, and close by is the parsonage.

Miss Victoria advanced rapidly in her studies, early in her career accepting Jesus Christ as her guide, redeemer and teacher. Then she became obsessed with the one idea, that of fully equipping herself for teaching and helping uplift, in the name of her Lord, her beloved mountain neighbors and friends. When prepared she came to Burlington to enter high school, paying her board and keep by services in the home before and after school hours. She did the same in the home of Brother Garrison, not far from Windsor, Virginia. She was too diligent in her studies and broke down by keeping hours that were too long for physical endurance, and was sent home to recuperate. She was then sent to a State sanatorium in which she spent some years and then returned to her home on top of the mountains she loved so dearly, to fight her battle with life, and then finally to keep her rendezvous with death. Well, we shall miss her writings in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, but shall be richer for the inspiration that her musical pen brought us. Her church and Sunday school have lost one whose place it will, indeed, be difficult to fill.

The highest tribute her church and Sunday school can pay to her memory is to see to it that the work she did there shall not be in vain, and the life she lived shall not be fruitless through the years that are to come.

One could write on about such a life, but let us content ourselves now by adapting to our use words from Gray's Elegy:

Large was her bounty, and her soul sincere;
Heaven did a recompense as largely send;
She gave to mis'ry all she had, a tear;
She gain'd from Heav'n ('twas all she wish'd) a friend.

No further seek her merits to disclose,
Or draw her frailties from their dread abode;
(There they alike in buoyant hope repose),
The bosom of her Father and her God.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN,
April 28, 1938.

N. B.—"Victoria of the Hills," a product of our Carroll County Mission, is an example of the character and ability of other youth in our Elk Spur and Rocky Ford Churches. The Rocky Ford Church needs a new building. The Thank Offering of our women in The Southern Convention is to be dedicated this year to Carroll County. We need $5,000. It is our hope that our people will respond liberally to this great need. Give to the women's Thank Offering.

"When the World Wanted to Play"

"I'm tired of washing dishes, of dusting and making the beds. I'm not going to help you today, Mother," said Nell. "Mary and Margaret do not do any work at home and have so much more time to play than I have. I'm going to play with them today."

"All right," said mother, "you try your own way for the day. I want none but willing workers about me."

Nell picked up her doll and her skates and gaily ran out to join Mary and Margaret, who always could play. They skated and had lots of fun until Nell fell down and hurt her knee. She started to run to the house so mother could bandage it just as she always had, but stopped when she remembered she wasn't helping mother today. It would have felt better but—

"Oh, well," she thought, "it soon will stop hurting if I just go on and forget it." Turning to Mary and Margaret, she said, "Let's play dolls now."

Nell's doll had pretty dresses that her mother had helped make for it, but the other girls had only dresses that they could make. "Mother has no time to sew for our dolls," said Mary. She always has too much else to do."

Nell thought how tired their mother always looked and wondered if she could not have looked better and had more time for them if they helped her sometimes as she helped her mother. But she didn't say anything, because she was not helping her mother now.

They had a good time, but Nell had grown tired of her play long before the day was over. Of course, she wouldn't say she was not having as much fun as she thought she was going to have, since she had been the one who had thought playing all of the time would please her best.

That night when she told her mother good night, she felt a little bit sorry that mother looked tired, but she went on to bed without telling her so, and after falling asleep she had a dream—

The little moon fairies said:

"We're tired of oiling our lamp and hanging it out each night. Little Nell is playing all of the time, why

No Magnifying Glasses

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association

"Mother, Tom and Freda went off to town without me!" There was a stormy look on the face of my small niece as she spoke those words. She had come running through the yard and across the porch to the living room, where her mother, my sister Doris, and I sat sewing.

"They looked everywhere for you before they left, Joan," her mother replied soberly. "I'm sorry you were not here to go with them."

"But they knew I wanted to go!" Joan protested. "I was just across the road at Maida Swanson's house looking at some new puppies. I was coming right back. They could have waited for me. They always treat me like that, and it isn't fair!"

The little girl was starting to walk away to sulk by herself, when her mother's firm voice recalled her. "Wait a minute, please, Joan! Let's do some clear thinking. Didn't you hear us talking about the trip into town at breakfast time?"

"Yes, Mother," Joan answered reluctantly.

"Do you remember why Tom was going?" Doris persisted.

"Daddy needed something to mend his tractor. He wanted Tom to hurry," Joan admitted.

"The clouds seem to promise rain today," Doris explained. "Your father hopes his tractor can be fixed in time to get some work done with it before a storm comes. What did Tom tell you and Freda about being ready to go with him?"

"Tom said he'd start just as soon as he had fed his calves," Joan replied. "I was going to watch for him with Freda, but when Maida came to tell me about the puppies I went over to see them. They were so cunning, I guess I looked at them too long."

"I'm sorry you did not remember to note the time, but there will be other days for you to go into town. Perhaps your Aunt Lucia and I will go one afternoon while she is visiting us, and we'll take you with us. I wonder if Aunt Lucia might enjoy seeing the colored pictures we took on our week-end trip to Payette Lakes last fall. Would you like to fetch them and show them to her?"

"Oh, yes, Mother, I'd like to show Aunt Lucia those pretty trees." My small niece's face brightened as she skipped out of the room.

"You really will enjoy seeing the pictures of the tamarack trees in their autumn coloring, Lucia," my sister told me. "They were like huge yellow candles in a great outdoor cathedral. It will make Joan happy to show those beautiful pictures to you as it did to look upon the actual tamaraks."

"You want Joan to recall something pleasant instead of dwelling on her hurt feelings and being sorry for herself, don't you?" I questioned.

"Yes," my sister agreed. "But I needed first to help her to understand that she herself was responsible for her disappointment. Even if Tom and Freda had been at fault, I would not want her to magnify the hurt. Too many people seem to apply magnifying glasses to every trivial real or fancied slight. They make themselves and everybody around them needlessly unhappy."

As a smiling little girl came back into the room with the treasured pictures, I wished that all children who were apt to indulge in the habit of self-pity could be guided away from that childish folly in as successful a way as Joan had been guided.

Reidsville Cradle Roll Opens Mite Boxes

The Cradle Roll Department of the Reidsville Church held its annual party on Saturday afternoon, September 20, on the lawn of the church. Forty-five, including the parents of some of the children, were present. Upon their arrival, the children played outdoor games and were then served ice cream and cake.

The highlight of the party was the opening of the children's mite boxes and the awarding of prizes to those who had saved the most money. The first prize in the Nursery Department went to Tymesia Somers, three-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Somers, who had $35.30 in her mite box. Second prize went to Kenneth Yount, four-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Larry Yount. First prize in the Beginners' Department went to Steven Maynard, five-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Maynard.

Approximately one hundred dollars was received from all the mite boxes.

Attendance Record Broken at Last Virginia Valley Rally

Over one hundred young people of the Valley Conference crowded the Palmyra Church to overflowing at their fall rally on October 12. Both afternoon and evening services were well-attended.

Rev. H. V. Harman, new pastor of Timber Ridge Church and also pastor-at-large for the Valley, addressed the group in the afternoon on the topic, "We Went to Europe." Rev. and Mrs. Harman visited Europe in the summer of 1950.

The speaker for the evening service was Rev. William James Simmons, a Negro minister from Roanoke, Virginia. His subject was "Setting Your Life to Music."

Hines Chapel Young People Conduct Worship Service

The pastor of the church, Rev. Julius Rice, was absent on Sunday, September 7, 1952, and the young people conducted the Sunday morning worship service. The order of service which was carried out was as follows:

Call to Worship; Prayer; Hymn, "Dear Lord and Father of Mankind"; Scripture Lesson and Poem; Hymn, "Open My Eyes That I May See"; Offertory and Doxology; Special Music, "Saviour Like a Shepherd Lead Us"; another Poem, Meditation, and a Candle Lighting Service.

The entire service was well rendered, and it is hoped that the group may have the opportunity of conducting another service very soon.

Valley Conference Ordains One—Licenses One

In an impressive ceremony on October 16, at the Leaksville Church, Rev. James Madren was ordained an elder and Page Painter was licensed to preach the Gospel.

James Madren is the son of Rev. and Mrs. Silas Madren. He is a graduate of Elon College and has been serving churches for some time. He has recently accepted a call to serve churches in the Eastern Virginia Conference.

Page Painter of Luray, Virginia, is a senior at Elon College and has long been active in youth work. He has served as counselor at several camps and is now one of the Commission chairmen of the Southern Convention Youth Fellowship. He has been an outstanding student at Elon College, taking part in campus activities and playing on the varsity tennis team.

Norfolk Group Adopts "Little Sister" in India

When the young people of the First Church, Norfolk, Virginia, came home from the state-wide Rally in Richmond this year, they had a dream in their hearts. They had heard Miss Nieholson tell of her work in South India and wanted to do something to help a young person have the opportunity to go to school.

They contacted Miss Nieholson and were instructed as to what they were to do. Soon they sent a check to Miss Miriam Brown at the Luey Perry Noble Institute, asking her to select a girl in her teens and put her in school. They were careful to specify that it be a girl who might not be able to go to school without their help. Miss Brown replied, telling the Norfolk young people that she had selected Panchavarnam, a thirteen-year-old girl from the famine area where there has been no rain for four years. She stated that Panchavarnam is in the first grade and is doing very well. She also sent a picture of the "little sister" to her friends here.

The Norfolk young people will pack a box for her for Christmas. It is a wonderful feeling to reach out a hand to help someone else!

President.

Relax With Max

The Valley of Virginia was the scene of a fine church conference last week, and I was fortunate enough to be there. Congratulations from all the young people to James Madren, who was ordained, and to Page Painter, who was licensed to preach. May God bless them.

From indications shown at the Valley Conference, Dr. L. E. Smith will never be a magician. As most of you know, the fundamental trick of the magician is to pull a rabbit out of a hat. Well, Dr. Smith was unable to find the right hat—and this can be fatal to a magician. He finally found his hat after walking out of the church with Dr. Scott's hat and several hats of unknown ownership. I'm certainly glad he returned Dr. Scott's hat because he needs it more than some of us do.

* * *

The story goes that when Rev. R. A. Whitten was sick during the summer, his wife urged him to partake of the wonder medicine, Hadacol, which was known for its ability to perform wonders. At first, he refused, but finally consented. The next morning, when Mrs. Whitten called him for breakfast, he murmured, "Aw gee, I don't wanna go to school."

Twentieth Anniversary Services at Winston-Salem Church

On Sunday, October 19, the United Congregational Christian Church of Winston-Salem, North Carolina, observed its twentieth anniversary, with Dr. W. T. Scott as guest speaker and Mrs. Scott as guest soloist. Approximately 115 people gathered for the morning service, with about 75 staying for picnic lunch in the basement of the church.

The Winston-Salem Church was organized on October 9, 1932, with W. T. Scott as minister. Mr. Scott had been working in Winston-Salem for a year, and had things in readiness for the new church. Twenty charter members were enrolled on October 9, and others joined later.

Charter members joining October 9, 1932, who attended the anniversary services were: Russell Klapp, Mrs. W. L. Padgett, Dr. and Mrs. W. T. Scott, Mrs. W. P. Strader and W. C. Stout (who came a Sunday early for the services, but is counted in this list). Others attending the special services who were charter members joining later than October 9, were: Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Mauldin, Mrs. Maynie Neale, and Mrs. S. R. Peebles.

Taking part in the anniversary services were: the present minister, W. J. Andes; the present church choir composed of 15 members; Mrs. Jesse H. Meredith of our Reidsville church; Mrs. J. H. Haney, organist and member of the St. Timothy's Episcopal Church, now using our church plant while theirs is under construction, and the Rev. John Drake, rector of St. Timothy's Church.

W. J. ANDES,
Minister.

Jesus' Power and Human Need

LESSON V—NOVEMBER 2, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: "He took our infirmities and bore our diseases."
—Matthew 8:17.

LESSON: Matthew 8:5-17.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isaiah 54:4-9.

Human Need and Helplessness.

Just before Matthew records the story of the healing of the centurion's servant, he tells the story of Christ's healing of the leper. Leprosy was a dramatic symbol of the loathsomeness of sin, and the healing of the man was a demonstration of the power of Christ to cleanse from sin. The story of the centurion's servant who had the palsy or paralysis, which is a symbol of helplessness, is a demonstration of Christ's power to help, and to meet, human need. In short Matthew shows Jesus in his dual capacity as Healer and Helper.

That man with the palsy is a symbol of man in his helplessness without Christ. Science has done, and is doing some marvelous things, but apart from Christ, men are helpless. Science with all its vaunted power and resources cannot forgive sin, cleanse the heart, renew the spirit, or regenerate the life of man. Man is helpless to save himself. If he is without Christ he is without hope. Man needs a Saviour to save him from his sin. God would never have sent his Son into the world if man could have saved himself. A man can live after a fashion without Christ, but he cannot live at his best. And man needs more than reformation; he needs transformation. Only the Spirit of God can change the human heart. Only Christ can take away sin. Only in him can a man become a new creature or a new creation. We need Christ, all men need Christ.

Human Concern.

If the centurion's servant represents human need, the centurion represents an inspiring response to human need. He is an inspiring character. A man of war, a professional soldier, a captain of one hundred men as his name indicates, he was a human being with a warm heart and a great faith. Why should he, a "big shot," be concerned about a slave, one of his menial servants? Life was cheap in those days, he could get another servant easily enough, he had so many important things to do, why bother with the servant? But this centurion was a man who had compassion. He had a genuine concern for his servant. He cared, and he cared enough to do something about it. That is the first prerequisite for helping folks—we have got to care for folks, to have compassion and sympathy for them, to be concerned about them.

The centurion was also a man of faith. He believed that Jesus had the power to heal. He may have seen some of the miracles of Jesus. He may have heard about his mighty works. In any event, he felt sure that Christ could help, he had faith in our Lord. He went direct to him in behalf of his servant. Without faith, it is not only impossible to please God, but it is impossible to be helped or healed. Generally speaking, no man can be healed by any doctor, or by Christ himself, if he does not believe that he can be cured. Faith is one of the mightiest powers in the universe. This man had faith in Christ, faith in both his ability and his willingness to heal. How little faith some of us have in Christ at either or both of these points!

And the man had amazing humility. He did not feel worthy to have Christ come into his house. He knew what it was to obey—he was under authority. He knew what it was to be obeyed—he had authority. He believed that if Jesus spoke only the word, the thing would be done. His humility and his trust were so extraordinary that Jesus was surprised and said that he had "not found such faith anywhere in Israel." Concern or compassion, humility, faith or trust, these three constitute the basis on which God's healing and helping power become operative.

Divine Help.

Jesus spoke a word of warning and rebuke to his Jewish hearers. Using as a figure of speech the picture of a banquet to describe the joys of the Kingdom of Heaven—the Jews had thought that the Messianic age would be ushered in with a banquet to which they would be invited, and from which the Gentiles would be excluded. Jesus declared that many Jews would be excluded, while many Gentiles would be included. There is peril in privilege. No man enters the Kingdom by mumbling over a creed. Obedience to the will of Christ and not pious profession is the road which leads to the Kingdom of Heaven.

And then Jesus speaks words of comfort and encouragement to the centurion. "Go home," Jesus says. "Your faith, your simple trust in me, has been rewarded. As you have believed, so it has been done unto you." And when the centurion returned home—he did not ask for a written statement or an affidavit from Jesus, he took him at his word—he found that his servant had been healed and was up and about again. And when he inquired as to when this thing happened, he learned that it had happened at exactly the same hour when Jesus had told him that his servant would be healed!

Matthew includes another incident in the healing ministry of Jesus. By a touch of his hand, he healed Peter's mother-in-law of a fever. Here is a symbol of Christ's power to heal our feverishness and restlessness and anxiety and worry and temper and sense of haste. And strangely enough Jesus renewed Peter's mother-in-law so that there was no weakness and helplessness as a result of the fever. She got up and "ministered unto them." In countless homes today, hearts that have been soothed by the healing touch of Christ are rendering him service of grateful love. Indeed, gratitude for what Christ has done for us should find expression in what we do for Christ to others.

As the word spread, about these and other miracles of healing, great crowds came at evening, bringing with them loved ones and friends who were sick of body and, still worse, sick of mind and heart. And by his word of authority he cast out the spirits, and by his touch he healed their bodies. It was all the fulfillment of the prophet's words: "Himself took our infirmities, and bare our distresses." We do God and Christ wrong if we think of them sitting afar off on a throne, removed from human sorrow and sin, and unconcerned about them. God was and is in Christ in the world, taking upon himself our sorrows and sins and sufferings. He suffers with those who suffer and is nigh unto those who are of a broken heart. And as of old, there is healing in his touch and health in his fellowship.

V.—For Use in Homes

“Bring the Book.”

No matter how extensive a library an American family might have had at the turn of the century, that bedtime order from Father, settling down in his hickory rocker, meant but one thing: “Bring the King James Version of the Bible.”

From the round walnut table or from the top of the folding bed, Janie or Jimmie fetched the Scriptures, often tattered from long and daily use.

Schoolbooks, magazines and sewing all were laid aside while Father “read a chapter,” ordinarily in chronological sequence. Then the whole family knelt at their chairs to be led in prayer by the head of the house. The fact that an overnight visitor might not share the religious convictions of the host did not alter the routine,

This regular custom did much to knit family bonds, bring God into the home circle and hold up the Bible as the core of Christian living. The lapse of family worship in recent years is a cause for concern to any Christian leader. But an honest evaluation of the old-time method would reveal some weaknesses.

It is doubtful if hearing Father read from the Old Testament one of the “begat” chapters or the measurements of Moses’ tabernacle, fostered in Janie or Jimmie any interest in reading the Bible for themselves. The Elizabethan language of the King James Version—“would fain,” “an hungered,” “aforetime,” “lest haply,” “set at naught,” and “whence earnest thou?”—intoned in Father’s special scriptural voice, seemed to put God’s word strictly in the adult classification.

In truth, there was much of it that Father himself did not try to understand. As for Mother, there were times when she had to be nudged to kneel for prayer. The children, having no personal part in the family devotions, grew up into a world of speed and struggle that left small opportunity for meditation. They failed to institute the family altar in their own homes. They turned religious education over to the church.

The last decade, however, has seen a reawakening of parents to the values of religious undergirding in the home itself. Today they are asking for helps for family worship and for their own understanding of the Bible. The church, finding that it could not do the job alone, is preparing church school lesson materials that include reading books and assignments for pupils and parents to work on together at home.

It seems providential that at this very moment of heightened interest, the Revised Standard Version of the Holy Bible should have made its appearance. . . . But . . . the final test of the success of the revision committee’s task rests with the rank and file of church members. Only as it becomes the people’s Bible will it have fulfilled its purpose.

The Old Testament grew out of the common people’s experience with God. Jesus gave his message most often, not in a synagogue, but in the market place, along the road, on the hillside, wherever he found everyday men and women and children needing him.

The goal of the current revision committee was to preserve for modern readers that message of Jesus and that record of Old Testament faith in word and thought as nearly like the original as exhaustive research makes possible. With the unprecedented resources of ancient manuscripts and archeological findings, the scholars have been able to correct errors that crept into the text through centuries of copying and translating.

They have eliminated the archaic words and word endings that are so confusing to twentieth century readers, particularly children. More important, they have replaced with modern equivalents the more than three hundred words in the King James Version that have changed meaning since 1611 and, therefore, no longer convey the correct idea.

For example, the word “let” in the seventeenth century meant the same as “hinder” does today. Hence the reader of the King James Version is misled by Pharaoh’s angry question to Moses and Aaron (Exodus 5:4), “Wherefore do ye let the people from their works?” The Revised Standard Version makes it entirely clear:

“Why do you take the people away from their work?”

From the literary standpoint, the first recommendation for the new volume is its physical appearance. Only one and a half inches thick, printed in easy-to-read type, bound in maroon cover stamped in gold leaf, it invites handling and reading. The mystery and somberness so often associated with the Bible in the past, may well be replaced by an attitude that here is a Book of and for Life.

Since almost all major Protestant denominations will be basing their church school lesson materials on references from the Revised Standard Version, parents who fulfill their role of supplementing the Sunday morning session with home assignments, will need the same version in their library.

Along with home study of the Bible goes family worship. . . . Often this is geared to the Sunday morning study. If the home-church task of religious education is to succeed both must use the same basic tool.

Whether it is in an adult’s own private worship or in out-loud reading by different members of the family, the Revised Standard Version will prove its effectiveness. Those who fear that the classic majesty of the King James Version is an irreplaceable loss, will find a new kind of beauty—the beauty of simplicity, terseness and smooth-flowing understanding. . . . Throughout its pages the open-minded reader can find examples of simpler or clearer or more accurate translation such as these:

Paul’s description of himself in Acts 22:3, which in KJV reads, “I am verily a man which am a Jew,” becomes in RSV simply, “I am a Jew.”

The many references to “Holy Ghost” in KJV, so unfortunate for children, are more understandable as “Holy Spirit” in RSV. For instance, “whoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him,” gives way to “whoever speaks against the Holy Spirit will not be forgiven” (Matt. 12:32).

At the Last Supper Jesus’ words to his disciples, recorded in KJV as “Drink ye all of it,” take on proper meaning in RSV as “Drink of it, all of you” (Matt. 26:27).

These and other such changes, trivial though some may seem, add up to a Book that brings God into the life of today. Within its covers a family can find and comprehend the answers to their longings and needs.

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Thank you for a good report. Seventeen churches and several individuals have remembered us in this report. From now on to the end of the year, we hope many churches and people will think of these children and the work we are trying to do here for them.

Sunday fifteen of the children will present our program at Monticello and Hines Chapel churches. Those in the program this time are: Doris Leigh, Tommy Leigh, Hugh Black, Betty Ann Ward, Roy Black, Marlene Gregory, George Morningstar, Laverne Mecimore, Jo Ann Black, Billy Proctor, Nancy Watkins, Ella Gene Haith, Mattie O'Neill, Hubert Cook and Betty Lou Wilson.

We need two new matrons here at the orphanage—one will be retiring soon, and another has to resign to take care of the health of her son. To have two matrons leave us—and such good ones as they are—at one season is a major problem.

Maybe you can help solve this problem. Do you know someone with good health, good mind, good spirit, who would like to work with children. Give us their name and address or send them to see us. It would be good if they could drive an automobile, as they could serve their children much better by being able to take them places, chaparone them at times on trips such as basketball games. I have learned that in this day it is almost a necessity to be able, if the occasion demands it, to drive a car. Of course, this is not the main requirement, nor is it indeed a requirement at all. Good common sense, good health and ability to handle children are essential. Please help me find two matrons! The wages are good, and expenses of living are given, meaning room and board. Please be careful in your recommendations, but make them as soon as you can.

I have just returned from the Valley of Virginia Conference. It was a very good session. One of the most important items was the fact that James W. Madren was ordained and Page Painter was licensed to preach. I enjoyed so much seeing many old friends and meeting many other such good people. The spirit of the conference was great. It was presided over by laymen, the secretary is a layman, the treasurer is a layman, and a majority of the reports were made by laymen or women. This, however does not mean that the ministers were not on the job, too. They were. And a fine team of ministers they are! The Valley Conference is on the march.

Last night at our local P. T. A. meeting, several teachers came up to me to tell me how well our children were doing in school. They like to see children from the orphanage make good pupils—in fact they desire such good success for every child—but they seem especially pleased when orphan children “ring the bell.” And they are grieved when one of our children is not measuring up. On the average, we are doing all right; but I want my children to be above the average in everything that is good.

Help us liberally, and let us do a good job here for these boys and girls. Thank you.

III.—Love As a Disciplinarian

Third of a Series of Short Sermons Based on the RSV of the Bible

By DR. ROY L. SMITH

As a man disciplines his son, so the Lord your God disciplines you.—Deuteronomy 8:5.

As a man chasteneth his son, so the Lord thy God chasteneth thee.—KJV.

We have listened to so many sermons on the love of God, and have been assured so many times that God is a loving father, that we are in danger of forgetting that love can sometimes be very stern and strict.

The kindest and most loving father is not the one who indulges his child's whims, and grants his every wish. Instead, he is that one who sometimes resorts to strict discipline because nothing less will provide him with the training he will need if he is to miss the blows of life that are sure to fall.

He was a loving father who insisted that his son should know the multiplication tables precisely, be able to distinguish accurately between the edible and the poisonous fruits, and be instructed in the ways of the adder and the rattlesnake.

He was a loving father who walked beside his son, correcting his erring steps, teaching him how to co-ordinate his muscles, and holding him steadily to his exercises until he became a champion.

He was a loving father who, perceiving his son's talents, held him in college, refused him more than the necessary funds, and kept ever before him the great objective in a college education.

He was a loving father who, having struggled with doubts in the years of his youth, compelled his son to face the facts of life and find answers of his own for the inescapable questions which arise within the minds of all honest thinkers.

He was a loving father who, having found a working faith, shared it with his son and commended to him the strict disciplines by which it is kept strong and rewarding.

And because his son discovered that his father never laid a load upon him for the purpose of oppressing him, but always for the purpose of compelling him to grow strong, he began to say, "Oh Lord, only make plain the thing Thou art trying to produce in me, and I will co-operate." In that way he became his father's masterpiece.

"WHEN THE WORLD WANTED TO PLAY."

can't we just play too?" So the moon didn't shine out.

The little stars said:

"We've been shining every night for years, and we're tired. Let's stop and play and not shine out tonight."

What a dark night that was, without any moon and stars!

The raindrops came along and said:

"We want to play, too, We've always been so busy making things grow that we haven't had time for play. Let's drop our work and join in the fun," and they didn't rain any more.

All along the street that had been shaded with lovely green trees, there were only old stumps with dead branches. In the flower beds around the house and out in the garden where lately blooming flowers of beautiful reds and pinks, purples and gold, had been, now there were withered stalks to show where they had grown.

What a strange place that was, without any green trees and growing flowers, and Nell didn't like it at all; the darkness frightened her. Suddenly waking, she called:

"Mother, oh mother, I'm afraid!"

"I am here, darling," said her mother, as she held Nell's hand in hers.

"Oh, mother! I thought you might have stopped mothering me, too" said Nell, as she told the dreadful dream.

Then she told of the day spent entirely at play and of how tired of play she had grown before night had come; and she cried:

"Mother, I'm sorry you were so tired tonight because I didn't help you today at all. I'll help you tomorrow, just see if I don't. I know now that play isn't fun if you play all the time. There is work to be done and if I don't do my share someone else must do more. I guess the moon and the rain, the stars and the flowers would like sometimes to play too, but they just keep on working, knowing that their jobs must be done, and nothing and nobody can do their parts for them. How bad it would be for us all if they did stop their work to play."—Anonymous.

"My Secret"

I used to be quite naughty,
Whenever mother said:
"Come, children, say 'Good night'
now,
It's time to go to bed."
But since I learned a secret,
I like to go real well,
I'll share it if you promise
You'll never, never tell!

I run away to Dreamland,
When I'm supposed to rest,
And there I have such good times!
But what I like the best
Is playing with the fairies—
That's where they live, you know,
In Dreamland! Do you wonder
I always love to go?

Mother and Daddy live here,
And Bob and Baby Bess;
If I should stay in Dreamland,
I'd miss them all, I guess.
So I come back each morning—
You see, it's just this way:
I like Dreamland at night time,
But home is best by day!

Christ Revealed

In every part of the Old Testament there are prophecies concerning the coming of Jesus Christ—predictions that were realized in remarkable detail. When we pass from the Old Testament to the Gospels, we are confronted with the historic Christ, the fulfillment of those things which had been predicted aforetime. It is well for us to remember that our faith rests upon the solid rock of historic fact. If we cannot rely upon the Gospel record, then nothing historical is reliable. As we pass to the Acts of the Apostles and the Epistles, we find the Christ of experience, and in the Revelation, we are face to face with Christ still—the Christ of glory. Thus, the whole record of sacred Scripture is concerned with, and sets forth, the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Layman and Loyalty to the Church

From an Address by MR. NORMAN LANKFORD, Superintendent Union Christian Sunday School, Franklin, Virginia

As a layman, what have I a right to expect of my church? And what has my church a right to expect of me?

There is a tendency in churches to strive for quantity at the expense of quality. Progress is too often measured by attendance figures and by the size and number of organizations. The business man knows that it is not the volume of sales but the net profit which determines his success; and as the business man, God takes not inventory of possessions, he counts hearts.

As a layman, I believe we should expect the church to determine its accomplishments in terms of net spiritual profit, not physical strength.

As a layman, I believe we have a right to expect the church to constantly keep us aware of our Christian obligations by teaching God's law for human conduct with fearless and aggressive persistence. No preacher should sugar-coat his preaching of the gospel.

What does our church have a right to expect of us?

First, and above all else, our church expects us to conduct our personal lives in such a way as to reflect the honesty of our profession of faith in Jesus Christ. We are an obstacle to the church, when we live in such a manner that others point to us as poor examples of churchmen.

Second, our church expects us to do our share of the church work. We do not relieve our obligations by hiring a minister. We must bear our part of the load. Some must be officers, some teachers, but to every last one of us it means supporting the church, both financially and spiritually.

The church expects us to openly admit that we are Christian churchmen. There is an urgent need for Christian Laymen. Their job is becoming bigger day by day, and the fate of mankind depends upon how soon Christians throughout the world are persuaded to act. Theirs is a great challenge and a great opportunity for true church workers. If this civilization ever improves, it will be through the work of the church.

The desire for material gain is causing many to think of self alone, is placing self above the good of neighbor or the welfare of country. The corruption in government is just one example of the selfishness of people in this leading Christian nation. We, as churchmen, should exercise our privileges as citizens to rid the country of such leadership and to help restore good government. We are not only neglecting our duty as citizens, but we are neglecting the work of the church. Our country was founded by men who sought freedom to worship, and they held their church in highest regard. Would they be proud to see how we today have become so busy with the affairs of the world, that even on Sunday the church is neglected?

What can we do about it? We can practice our Christianity in everyday life. We can influence others by being living examples. What our church expects of us is a great challenge. How can we meet that challenge? We as laymen can try to find our part and exert our strength in building Christian character into the everyday life of the world.

May God grant us the understanding and the power to succeed.

News Flashes

The Christian Temple, Norfolk, has instituted an informal Coffee Hour following the Sunday morning service.

Rev. Erston M. Butterfield, assistant superintendent of the Ohio State Conference is succeeding Rev. David Shepherd as superintendent of the Alabama-Georgia Conference.

Rev. Clyde Koon, minister of the Salem Chapel and Belw Creek churches, is improving in health, some, being able to be out of the house some during these pretty days.

Rev. William V. Roosa is coming from a four-year pastorate at the First Congregational Church of Great Bend, Kansas, to serve as secretary of the American Friends' Service Committee, with offices in Greensboro, North Carolina.

Rev. John R. Lackey, minister of the Apple's Chapel Church, near Gibsonville, N. C., is the guest speaker for revival services at Pfafftown Community Congregational Church this week. The members at Pfafftown planned in a great way for these services. Special prayer lists were made, the week of visitation was carried on the preceding week, and special music was arranged.

Friends of Salem Chapel will be glad to know that much progress in the campaign to secure funds for the renovation of the church building is being made. The work is to be started immediately. This church is located near Winston-Salem, and has given much help to the work at Winston-Salem in years gone by in the transfer of members to that church when they moved to the city.

Layman's Sunday at Union Grove

Rev. Winfred Bray stepped aside and took a place in the pew on Laymen's Sunday. The congregation was pleased to have Mr. S. H. Pell of the Pleasant Ridge Church speak on this occasion. Another layman, Mr. Dalton Harper of the Asheboro Church, gave an interesting message on the subject, "What the Church Means to Me."

Dr. Charles E. Newman

Our Church has suffered a great loss in the death of our good friend and brother, Dr. Charles E. Newman. Dr. Newman was one of our most faithful pastors. He was a good preacher. He served well in any and all positions that he accepted in the church. Where ever he served, he made friends for Christ and strengthened the church that he pastored.

He centered the greater part of his public ministry at Virgilina, Virginia, and surrounding churches. This section of our church was strengthened because he lived and served, and they will never forget his faithful service. His personal interest in his people was a rich treasury to them.

It was my privilege to know Dr. Newman intimately and for a number of years. Shortly after arriving at Elon College as a student in 1906, I received an invitation from Dr. Newman to preach for him in Durham. Services were being held in the courthouse. From that time until his death, I was associated with him in special meetings in Henderson and in Virgilina on different occasions. His quiet, unassuming, conscientious, and consecrated life was a benediction to me, and meant much to my ministry.

After returning to Elon College in my present capacity, it was a pleasure and a privilege to recognize the service of Dr. Newman, the contribution that he had made and was making to the church and the Kingdom of God, by conferring upon him the degree of Doctor of Divinity, which he so richly deserved and bore with distinction and honor to his alma mater.

The Virginia Valley Conference at Leaksville

The Valley Virginia Central Conference of the Congregational Christian Church held its one hundred and fourth annual session of conference at Leaksville Church, near Luray, Virginia. The conference is composed of twenty churches located in Rockingham, Shenandoah, Frederick, Page and Green counties. The conference was well represented by delegates from eighteen of the twenty churches.

Official and institutional representation from the Southern Convention was as follows: Dr. Wm. T. Scott, superintendent of the Convention, brought the official business from the Convention to conference. The major item was the "Convention Finance Plan," which this conference had the prestige of being the first to adopt. President L. E. Smith of Elon College, addressed the conference, using as his subject, "Let Us Rise Up and Build." Superintendent John G. Truitt of the Christian Orphanage, brought greetings. In his address on Wednesday evening, he left this thought, "Need a miracle be performed to show us the signs of our times?"

The guest speakers were Mr. William K. Newman, secretary of the Building Department of the Board of Home Missions, and Dr. Gladwyn Childs, head of the School of Missions in Angola, Africa. Mr. Newman

Let Me Tell You about the Christian Orphanage

AN EDITORIAL BY DR. JOHN G. TRUITT

The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches established in 1904 a child-care institution in the town of Elon College, North Carolina. It is operated by a board of trustees elected by the Convention. It stands near the center of the Convention geographically; and cares for some eighty boys and girls.

Christian Home Life

Every child is given loving care and attention. Each has his or her own personality. Each is from a background known and considered in the efforts to give the child the very best advancement and training. The superintendent and his co-workers look on each child as a loving trusting friend, and each of them seek to lead the child toward his best development.

Special emphasis is made of Christian worship and training. The matrons and others on the Orphanage staff seek to live Christian lives, believing that our examples are paramount in the development of the child. Children are taught to love and worship God, to go to Sunday school and church, to pray and to show reverence and gratitude for all blessings. During the summer week the daily Bible school is enjoyed by these youngsters.

Education

The children go to a public school two blocks from the orphanage. We have children in each grade from the first through the twelfth. First and second grade children receive their lunches at the school cafeteria, at 20 cents per lunch. The children learn cooperation and obedience so that we are told by the school principal that our children are among the best. Their grades on the whole, although they do not have as much personal attention on their lessons in this large family, are as good as the average. Some students are outstanding. They make their way into all the activities of the school and are given a chance to make good in higher education or later avenues of earning a livelihood. Some of them continue their education and many have made good in their chosen professions.

Industry and Aspiration

Early the Orphanage child is taught to be clean, and to keep his room, house and surroundings clean. They are taught that cleanliness is next to godliness. They are taught to work. And they are given play and recreation. Chores are assigned boys and girls suitable to their age and ability. Chores in house-cleaning, sewing, laundering, and work about the dairy, poultry yards, gardens, is assigned them. Boys also help on the Orphanage farm. The splendid opportunities to learn to do things here is one of our best assets.

Children are taught to aspire to be somebody, to learn to earn honest livings by industry, and not to feel that life is a "hand-out." They are frequently rewarded for work well done, and patiently reprimanded when their work is neglected. Most of them desire to show their prowess by being able to excel in their chores. Not all, however, are deft with their hands. Some like a book or magazine. We try to be wise enough to understand that, and to guide each child along the way in which head and heart are urging his feet. The nearly half century record has justified such guidance.

A Visitor Would See

Were you to visit us, you would see a campus atop rolling hills, bedecked with great trees, and three main dormitories. There is a mown lawn, spacious and marked here and there with shrubbery and flowers. There are old paths and playing areas where the grass has been kept back by little feet across half a century. More than six hundred and sixty children have called this home. You would see fields on every side except the northern, there is Elon College. Several of our boys and girls have attended college and done well. The fields and pastures surrounding the orphanage on the other three sides are planted in gardens and dairy farm crops. You would notice the dairy barn and the accompanying dairy houses. Nearby are machinery sheds. Back a little are hog houses and pastures. Hardby is a poultry run and houses. To the east on an approaching highway is the home erected for the superintendent. You would be impressed with the permanent pastures in full view, the grain fields and the hay fields. In the distance are towering pines and oak forests, frequently the haunts of boys in search of Indian, or huckleberries. And best of all, children you would see, children who will have a mental picture of these views and a heart picture of these buildings.

This, Too, Let Me Tell You

The late Charles D. Johnston, superintendent for more than thirty-two years, envisioned a chapel with a playroom on the ground floor. Out of the generosity of the Kirk Holt family of Burlington, North Carolina, that dream is about to be realized. The Holt Memorial Chapel will be a fitting memorial to a long-time president of the Board of Trustees, the late Mr. Kirk Holt, and his wife. We are deeply indebted to their children.

We are also urgently in need of a dining-room, kitchen and coldstorage building. Our children and their matrons crowd our small dining-room, overcrowd our kitchen and lessen the possibility for receiving additional children.

Dr. Truitt and his staff at the orphanage have a constant struggle on the limited resources provided to do the job which we have commissioned them to do. It will ease the anxieties of our servants at the orphanage if we will give them our generous support during November and December, the Orphanage Period. A generous "Thanksgiving Offering" to the orphanage this year will be a good investment in Christian care and training. Remember the Christian Orphanage in your prayers and by your gifts. It will be a good investment.

The Boys and Girls at the Christian Orphanage and Their Birthdays

Some of you folks may be surprized to know it, but the boys and girls at the Christian Orphanage have birthdays just like other boys and girls.

Some of them have been "adopted" by individuals or classes and are remembered on these most important occasions, but there are others who have not been so fortunate. Don't you think this would be a fine idea: pick the one whose birthday is nearest your own; then check with the superintendent to see if they have already been "adopted"; if they have not then they will be your boy or girl for one day in the year. It will be fine for them, and fine for you, too!

Here is a complete list, with the birthdays of each:

Elon Continues to Steadily Move Forward

For these sixty years and more, Elon College has been steadily moving forward in the field of Christian higher education. It is useless to remind ourselves that at times the going has been hard, but the college, its associates, and friends, have refused to acknowledge defeat, but have pressed on with courage and the determination that have resulted in triumph. In new undertakings the college is ever mindful of the strength of the church and the contributions that the church has made to its program and needs. By the grace of God, it has been able to employ and maintain a splendid faculty—a faculty that has been an inspiration and a blessing to the students who have come in search of knowledge and for preparation for a more efficient life.

The type of education available on the Elon College campus at the beginning of the institution was needed by the church and society. It is the purpose of Elon College to give instruction in liberal arts and related subjects at the most effective level possible. At the same time, it is mindful and has always been sensitive to the need of religious content and spiritual significance in all of its instruction.

Elon College is ill content to give instruction without the religious emphasis. To be sure, highly trained men and women in literature and the sciences are needed today, but never before in the history of civilization have those elements in instruction that are indefinable apart from spiritual values been needed so badly as today. We need men and women with strong intellects, and efficiently trained; but of what value, if the individuals possessing such minds and achievements are void of principle and character.

Too many of our schools have allowed themselves to degenerate into mere machine institutions that barely rise above trade and technical schools, that are void of elements that go to build character and to mold manhood such as are essential to good living and good government. The products of our church colleges invariably take their stand on high moral planes and are the exponents of right training and Christian living.

Elon College builds its curriculum, employs its faculty, invites its students and proceeds in the business of instruction and training of minds with the determination to develop the whole life, that its graduates may make maximum contributions to an intelligent civilization and to the Church of Christ in which lies the hope of man and the hope of the world.

Apportionment Giving

By the time this article is read by CHRISTIAN SUN readers, all the annual conferences save the North Carolina and Virginia will have become history. This means that the conference year for practically all of our churches has come to a close.

The College Budget is set up on a basis of $15,000 from the churches, and when this is not reached, the college is left in a rather serious situation financially. The Convention calls on the college for $900 for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and for scholarships for all ministerial students and full-time Christian workers, which comes to a total of approximately $4,000 a year. These amounts must be paid in full by the college. It is assumed that these payments are made out of money received on apportionment. When the apportionment is not paid in full, the amount from the churches is reduced in proportion.

At present, we have $10,839.76, which leaves more than $4,000 to go. Our books for this fund are left open until January 1. It is the hope and prayer of all who are interested in Elon College that the conference fund may be paid in full. The college needs this money as never before.

Invest in People

By REV. F. C. LESTER, D. D.

President, W. N. C. Conference

The money God enables us to earn is a sacred trust. We must invest it wisely—as we do our lives.

Certain economists advise investment in real estate. When money is devalued, and stocks and bonds are depreciated, the land remains. But land has value because it serves the needs of people. Without people, land has no value.

The president of a good bank once told me that he invested in people. Said he: "An honest person will pay what he owes. A crook can find ways of getting out of a signed obligation. We want to lend to people who are honest." His best collateral, he had decided, was honest people.

Ministers know that. And they invest their lives in helping to make good people. Very few of them accumulate much money; they are interested in transformed people, who are the "treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust consumes and where thieves do not break in and steal."

It is not at all strange, then, that a minister should be in charge of an orphanage. He is accustomed to investing in life. He may help to run a farm, erect buildings, counsel with children, handle large funds, solicit support, write articles, make speeches, keep books, and do the work of a dozen men for less salary than certain laborers get for a forty-hour week, with no responsibility. Why? The answer is simple. The children of today become the men and women of tomorrow. They need their chance to become good people. Workers in our orphanage are investing their lives in boys and girls, not in houses and lands, banks and bonds.

Those of us who are members of churches do well to assist them by making an investment of money that will bring a harvest of useful living. Yes, there are many claims on our ability to share, but we must never forget that money sent to our orphanage is an investment in people—a direct investment in people.

Conference Notice

All delegates and visitors planning to attend the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, being held this year November 11-12, at the Bethlehem Congregational Christian Church, Altamahaw, N. C., and who wish entertainment are urged to notify the pastor, Rev. G. C. Crutehfield, as early as possible.

Coming from Greensboro, Summerfield and Winston-Salem, come by way of Monticello, follow highway 150 to Osseola, and follow the hard surface road east to Altamahaw and follow signs.

Coming from Roxboro, follow 49 by way of Union Ridge.

The Christian Orphanage Has Developed an Outstanding Dairy Herd and Excellent Pastures

The Opportunity Afforded by Our Orphanage

By REV. FRED P. REGISTER
President, Eastern North Carolina Conference.

I suppose it is indicative of our secular culture, but a great many of us tend to think too often of what does it offer me. This is true in a limited sense for Christians.

We are all confronted with real needs in our communities. I have been exposed to some also. A few years ago a family of five children was brought to my attention. Some of these children were living with their father, a very cruel man to say the least. The other children were scattered anywhere the father could leave them for a day, a week or a month. Neighbors were complaining about the condition in which these children were living; but no one had any real solution to offer.

I visited the Welfare Department and discovered that there was no possible way short of a lawsuit to help these children, because of the contrariness of the father—and even then it was doubtful if the law suit could be won. Yet here was a case of real physical need. Yes, and mental and spiritual, too. The church is supposed to minister to needs.

I shared my problem with the Christian Orphanage, and in a short while three of the older children were well taken care of as citizens of our church home; and in less than two years, all were comfortably located in this home which is made possible by our church.

The Christian Orphanage is worthy of our support, because it gives us an opportunity to make ample provision for real needs that are thrust upon us.

The Orphanage Renders a Service

By REV. WALSTEIN W. SNYDER
President, N. C. and Va. Conference

About two months ago there came to me a request from a mother for help in meeting the needs of her children. The mother alone was trying to take care of six children as well as work at public work in order to have an income. After I had made some investigation and felt there was a very real need, I went to see Dr. Truitt and asked him if our orphanage could help out in the situation. Dr. Truitt visited the home and found there an opportunity for our orphanage to be of service. One month later, five of the six children were in the orphanage. The mother kept the oldest child with her. Today, these five children are receiving adequate care. They are assured of sufficient food, clothing and shelter. They are also now receiving the proper training that children must have if they are to grow up Christian citizens. Knowing this situation as I do, I know the Christian Orphanage has rendered a real and needed service.

When we see our orphanage rendering a service like this, we cannot help but feel that it should have our full support. When you see an institution like the orphanage meeting the needs of those that must have help to live a normal life, it makes you want to do all you can to help it operate efficiently. Let us all give our full support to the Christian Orphanage.

Be you witch, goblin, cat, spook, clown or gypsy, this is wishing you a jolly and safe Hallowe'en. Is your community one in which the storekeepers allow you to paint on their windows and give prizes for the most bewitching or bedeviling?

Do some of you work to make money? Do some of you work to make your church and Sunday school contributions? A few weeks ago a letter came to me telling that Roy Vann Brinkley, who attends Cypress Chapel Church was picking up peanuts left by the picker and selling them to make money for his pledge to the church. He had made a pledge the year before, and this year he wanted to increase his pledge. He did just that and has been working hard to make the additional money. Congratulations to his family and church for helping him be that kind of a boy!

We would be happy to hear from some of you and to know your projects and work that help contribute to your church. The Sanford Church spire was paid for by a brother and sister. The Junior Choir of the Church of Wide Fellowship sells salted peanuts to make money for a new piano in their choir room. Let us know what your projects are.

What the Parent-Teacher Association Does for the Child

By ANNIE L. GAETZ.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Back of every great movement, behind every worthy project, is some one person, someone with a vision and the courage to make that vision a reality. The idea of a Parent-Teacher Association was born in the heart of Mrs. Theodore W. Birney, and for the first few years of her organization's existence, it was guided and fostered only by mothers.

Then the fathers began to realize that they, too, were parents, sharing equally with the mothers the responsibility of the education and upbringing of their children. When fathers and mothers and teachers joined hands in one great movement, the influence of the Association began to be widespread, and today, after nearly fifty years of activity, organized groups of Parents and Teachers may be found functioning harmoniously in all progressive countries of the world. The movement is one of the most significant of modern times.

The aim and object of the Association is the cooperation of teacher and parent for the benefit of the child. It is a non-political, non-commercial, non-sectarian movement, seeking to discover methods and principles which will enable parents, teachers, and other citizens to work together for the improvement of all conditions which affect child life. It seeks, also, to strengthen and encourage the work of the teacher by enlisting the cooperation of the parents.

An improved understanding between parents and teachers tends toward an improved understanding between teachers and pupils. The knowledge that she has the moral support of the parents is an incentive to give of her best.

The Association offers an opportunity for the discussion of the problems which confront teachers and pupils, broadening the viewpoint of both the teacher and the parent, and benefiting the child through the cooperation which is thus developed. Unless the teacher has such cooperation, the questions of home study, proper food, sufficient sleep, social diversions, and the use of leisure are beyond the school's control.

The time has come when parents are beginning to realize that they must be trained for their most important and exacting task—that of, without the benumbing effect of dictatorial measures, guiding the thoughts and actions of their children.

It is now acknowledged that the complete activity of the child begins at birth, and guidance must begin at that time. It is not safe to wait until a child is six before you begin with him a program for right living. If you do wait it will not be easy to repair the damages done during those years of neglect and mismanagement.

Though the discussions of such subjects as home influencing and child development, aided by the findings on those subjects by noted educators, parents are being assisted in the great task that is theirs—that of bringing up the future leaders of our land.

Then, too, at the Parent-Teacher meetings there are discussions of that part of their children's education gained from the streets together with the wider social forces represented by playmates, including the gang; from sports, organized or unorganized; from motion pictures, radio, and television; and later from the dance halls and the automobile. The educator in home or school who fails to recognize these forces fails utterly in the understanding of his or her duty and opportunity.

Only by the close association and agreement of parents, teachers, and other citizens can the ideal community be created and maintained and education carried on as a unit in home, school, and community. When this is done, with open minds and hearts will parents and teachers, working together, help the child to develop, through a sympathetic, well-rounded education, into a really good and loyal citizen of the country.

This fund was established by the church to materially strengthen the Department of Religion at Elon College. The amount authorized was $100,000. After the churches had paid $70,000, Elon College advanced sufficient funds to make the total amount sought, with the understanding and instruction that if and when the churches paid their allotments for this fund, these payments were to reimburse the current funds of the college for the amount advanced.

For the past two years these payments have come in rather slowly. This is to be expected, since a great majority of our churches in the

MAX VESTAL, Box 792, Elon College, N. C.

Greetings from Hartford Friends

Last week I visited the Hartford Seminary Foundation, of Hartford, Connecticut, and there enjoyed seeing some of the students who are studying there. We have four former Elon students there this year. They are: Miss Dorothy Foltz, who is a member of the Leaksville Church in the Virginia Valley, and has served as director of Religious Education at Elon College and Burlington, North Carolina; William Tolley, who is past-president of the North Carolina and Virginia Youth Fellowship; Warren Matthews, who is past-president of the Southern Convention Youth Fellowship; and Paul Varga, who is a member of Bethlehem (Disputanta) Church in the Eastern Virginia Conference, and was student-minister at Hopewell, Virginia, two summers ago.

While at Hartford, I visited in the home of Dr. and Mrs. Allan Gleason, Jr., who are members of the Holland, Virginia, Church, and are leaders in campus life at Hartford. Dr. Gleason is Librarian and Professor of Linguistics and Phonetics, and Mrs. Gleason is director of the Nursery School. They always make students from the Southern Convention feel at home in their home, and they gave a party for us while I was there.

They all send their greetings and best wishes to the people of the Southern Convention. Hats off to these people who are continuing their education at Hartford and to Dr. and Mrs. Gleason who give you a "home away from home"!

Spoon's Chapel

Our young people are looking forward to a good, new church year. They are planning to present a play at the church on November 2.

Recently they have elected new officers, which are as follows: Shelby Jean Luck, president; Martha Luck, vice-president; Geneva Luck, secretary; Evelean Keeling, assistant secretary; Edith Stout, counselor; Betty Luck, song leader. The Program Committee are Arlene Scott, Ernest Scott, Edith Stout and Lydia Stout.

Reyax With Max

I would like to share with you the following letter which I received recently:

Dear Max:

In reading over a lot of papers which had accumulated in the office while I was on a trip for almost a month, to Nebraska and Minnesota, I was very happy to read your column on page 13, of one of the September issues of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and to see that you are plugging for the Laymen's Fellowship.

Will you please accept not only my appreciation, but the appreciation of all the laymen of the Southern Convention for the interest and time you have taken not only in Laymen's Fellowship work, but also the work of the entire church. . . .

Most sincerely yours,

WALTER A. GRAHAM.

Mr. Walter A. Graham is the director of our National Laymen's Fellowship, so naturally I was happily surprised to get this letter from him. The article to which he refers was one urging the young men to join their local Laymen's Fellowship. We in the Southern Convention should feel proud that this national leader thinks about us. Let's not disappoint him. Furthermore, boys, let's not miss the fun and fellowship to be had.

Miss Georgia Bradley for Mt. Zion Church . . . . .	100.00

This makes a total received of $95,-448.96. This is very good, and we move along toward the eventual completion of this fund by the churches. If there are other churches due an amount on their allotments, it would be of great assistance to the college at this particular time if they would make payment. We have come along successfully thus far; why not get together and complete this fund?

THE VIRGINIA VALLEY CONFERENCE.

spoke of the need for increased giving for church building, due to inflation and the great shifts in population, and the increased evangelistic needs. Dr. Childs stated that the one big job of the church in Africa is to win the people from paganism and to keep materialism from encroaching upon them. The great work of the missionary is to teach leaders for the church.

One of the most impressive services of the conference was the ordination of James Madren, son of Rev. S. E. Madren, and the licensure of Page Painter, son of Noah F. Painter of Luray.

Two new ministers were welcomed into the conference: Rev. Henry V. Harman who comes from the Washington Association, and Rev. Ralph M. Galt who comes from the Iowa Conference.

The Woman's Missionary Society presented a copy of the Revised Standard Version of the Bible, as a token of remembrance of the late Mrs. O. J. Sours, to the Elon College Library. It was accepted on behalf of the college by President Smith.

Conference officers re-elected for the coming year are: K. B. Dofflemyer, president; Rev. R. E. Newton, vice-president; Clarence A. Phillips, secretary; Rev. E. J. Rohart, assistant secretary, and O. W. Andes, treasurer.

The Compassion of Jesus

LESSON VI—NOVEMBER 9, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: "When he saw the crowds, he had compassion for them, because they were harassed and helpless, like sheep without a shepherd."—Matthew 9:36.

LESSON: Matthew 9:1-9, 35-38.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ezekiel 34:11-16.

Healing of Body and Mind.

The man was a pathetic figure. He was suffering from paralysis—he was not able to walk a step. That was bad enough. But there was something that was worse—he was suffering from pangs of conscience and the pain of guilt. His paralysis had been caused by his own sins. That made his physical suffering the more acute and burdensome. To be sick of body is bad; to be sick of mind and heart is worse. To be sick of body and mind and heart—well that is unbearable.

Through the help of some friends, this man was brought to Jesus. They were concerned primarily, one suspects, in getting him healed of his bodily ills. This may have been the man's chief concern, too. There are many people who are more concerned about their physical well-being than about being spiritually whole. Imagine, then, the surprise of the men, all five of them, when Jesus said to the man sick of the palsy, "Son, be of good cheer; thy sins are forgiven thee." It was good psychology; for these words, directed to the mind and heart of the sick man, gave him encouragement and hope. He was ashamed of himself, perhaps despairing of himself. Jesus awakened and quickened faith and hope and expectancy.

There were some other folks who were also surprised. The scribes were scandalized. The idea of such a thing—a man having the audacity to tell another man that his sins were forgiven! Only God could forgive sins. It was blasphemy, blatant blasphemy!! Jesus knew what they were thinking, their thoughts were plainly written on their faces. So he replies, "Well, which is easier to say, Thy sins are forgiven, or to say, Arise and walk? Just to show you that I have power or authority on earth to forgive sins, I will have this man to get up and to take up his bed and walk." "Get up and walk," he said to the paralytic; and the fellow got up and walked away, carrying his bed!

There are many lessons here, but the topic for today is "The Compassion of Jesus." The word compassion comes from two Latin words, con, which means "with," and patio which means "to bear" or "to suffer." Compassion is the capacity and the willingness to bear with, or to suffer with another. It was a characteristic and basic quality of the life of Jesus. Back of what he said and what he did, was his great compassion for men. He cared for them, he was concerned about them, he suffered for them; he loved them. The man who lacks compassion, lacks one of the basic qualities of the Christian life. And the Cross of Christ was a symbol of God taking upon himself, in the Person of his Son, the sorrows and sins and sufferings of the world. We do not have a High Priest who cannot be touched with a feeling of our infirmities.

Friendship for the Outcaste.

Scandal No. One for the scribes and Pharisees was the incident of the healing of the paralytic and the words of forgiveness to the man. Scandal No. Two came immediately thereafter. As Jesus walked along the seashore, he saw Matthew, or Levi, sitting in the office of the Collector of Internal Revenue. Matthew was a publican. That is all that has to be said from the standpoint of the scribes and the Pharisees. That made him a renegade to both his race and his religion, and marked him as a man hated and an outcaste. He was socially ostracized. And here was this Man Jesus, calling this outcaste, a socially unacceptable publican as one of his intimate followers!! That was too much. Those old fellows "blew their tops" sure enough.

But it was all an expression of the compassion of Jesus. He felt for that lonely, lowly, lost man. "Follow me," said Jesus; and the words found an answering response in the publican's heart. He arose and followed Jesus. Thus did Jesus demonstrate that if you treat a man like a man, he will react like a man. Thus did he challenge the Church to fulfill its mission to the lowly and the lonely and the lost, to the discriminated-against and to the disinherited. Some churches, sometimes go after the rich and respectable; and they are not interested in the people that live on the other side of the tracks. God knows that these people need Christ too. But if the church would keep faith with its Founder, it will have compassion for the underprivileged and the outcaste.

It is a matter of history, of course, that this ostracized and overlooked publican had unsuspected capacity and possibilities, and he became not only a faithful and fruitful disciple and apostle of the Master, but the author of what is known as the Gospel of Matthew! One can never tell. God does not see as men see; he sees the man within the man, the man that can be.

Compassion for the Multitudes.

How do you feel, Mr. Preacher, when you go into your pulpit and see a large congregation before you? Do you swell up with pride that so many people have come to hear you? Or do you fill up with compassion because you see the people as sheep that are weak and wandering and wayward and worldly? Is there anything about them, even if they are well-dressed and if they did come in fine cars, that tugs at your heart, and causes you to be moved with compassion for them? Can you enter sympathetically and compassionately into their fears and hungers and sorrows and burdens and sin and suffering? The same questions can be put to the teacher of a Sunday school class, or the social service worker, or for that matter to the individual Christian. Can you move through a city and remain unmoved by what you see in terms of human need? Can you look upon the needs of people round the world and not do anything to share with them what has been so generously given to you?

One of the greatest needs in the world today is compassion, a concern for others, a concern that is so deep and dynamic that we have to do something about it. One suspects that one reason why so many people are indifferent toward the Church is because they do not think that the Church cares. "Compassion is the basic emotion of the Kingdom of God; it is the hope of the world; it is the call to the ministry of every

SOCIETY REPORTS

Bethlehem—Eastern Virginia

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Bethlehem Congregational Christian Church has completed a very successful year, both financially and spiritually. All three groups of this society have contributed to both T. B. and Red Cross. We have visited the community shut-ins and carried flowers, fruit and other gifts.

We sent friendly service gifts to the migrants, including health gifts, clothing and toys.

We have had our home and foreign mission studies and also our Bible study. Family Life Night was observed by our church as a whole, with a supper followed by a very inspiring program given by the young people. A movie was also shown.

The societies were fortunate in gaining four new members during the year. We regret the loss of one of our faithful members.

We have met all of our requirements for the past year, and with the help of God plan to make the coming year even more successful.

MRS. W. E. HORSLEY,
Secretary.

Elon College

The Elon College Missionary Society completed its year's work on Monday, September 15. We have met all requirements for the Standard of Excellence, have held full number of meetings, observed special days and occasions, received life memberships and thank offering, and reviewed both mission books. The Willing Workers and Cradle Roll have also done a most commendable work. The society has also voted to restore the Junior and Young People's departments next year.

These things may be of interest: Since we have acquired a new parish house, there are definite needs for which our women are accepting responsibility in addition to our usual mission work. Our constitution is being revised to care specifically for these changes. It provides for more general meetings. In addition to the previous quarterly business meetings, we will unitedly care for our book reviews, our Thank Offering, Community Service and Friendly Service responsibilities. That these special business meetings may not prove burdensome, we are having but ten circle meetings—from September to June.

Miss Angie Crew was our guest in April. While she was here, the day circles were invited to hear her at an informal tea at the home of Mrs. L. E. Smith. After dinner the evening circles enjoyed hearing her.

It is always a privilege to hear an author review his own work. This year, Dr. Truman Douglass, author of "Mission to America," was our guest for a luncheon meeting to which other missionary societies of both our church and other denominations were invited. Also Dr. Samuel McPheeters Glasgow was with us for an evening service and reviewed "Applied Christianity," his commentary on the Book of James. Those who heard him will not forget his vivid, spiritual interpretations. Our own Dr. Sloan gave us an insight into "We Americans," with moving pictures of our work in Mexico and South America.

Altogether we have had a good year and are looking forward to a better one.

MRS. L. E. SMITH,
President.

* * *

Damascus—E. N. C.

The Damascus Women's Missionary Society, Route 3, Chapel Hill, North Carolina, has had a very good year. We had twelve monthly meetings. We have used the packet program material along with our own planned devotionals.

At our Christmas meeting, instead of exchanging gifts we started a fund to buy a carpet for our church. This fund has grown to almost one hundred dollars.

For Family Life Week, we had a community song service on Sunday night. We used the planned program, after which we enjoyed gospel singing by six groups, three of them being family groups.

Our friendly service projects were Franklinton and North Carolina migrants.

Our society is still young, but we are gaining steadily. We did not quite reach our achievement goal this year, but we are looking toward a better and a more successful year ahead.

MRS. JEROME CRABTREE,
President.

* * *

Rosemont

The Woman's Missionary Society of Rosemont Congregational Christian Church has had a variety of very interesting and inspiring meetings under the able leadership of the president, Mrs. Elmo Spencer.

We have been so fortunate in having Mrs. I. W. Johnson teach the study of the Epistle of James, according to the suggested outline given by the Board of Woman's Work.

Mrs. J. F. Morgan reviewed our mission study book, "We Americans: South and North." We had speakers at some of our other meetings, among them Mrs. Nathan Bray and Rev. Douglass Newman from the Methodist Church.

While our average attendance stays about the same, we are hoping that this year we can show an increase in both attendance and interest in this very necessary phase of the work of the church.

MRS. M. K. HASSELL,
Secretary.

* * *

Cypress Chapel

The Woman's Missionary Society of Cypress Chapel Christian Church has had a very successful year. We would like to tell you everything we have done, but space will not permit. We have a small group, but it is filled with enthusiasm and determination.

During the past year, we have tried to follow the theme, "A Highway for Our God." Our programs have been well planned in advance and given each month.

Our spiritual life leader, Mrs. G. C. Mann, taught the Bible Study on the Book of James. The study was inspiring and instructive.

We observed World Community Day with Bethlehem (Nansemond). The Thank Offering service was also observed. World Day of Prayer was observed at the church with Liberty Spring and Bethlehem joining in the observance.

An enjoyable Christmas party was held and all members exchanged gifts. We also remembered the sick and the shut-ins.

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

I wish you could have seen how seriously happy—by that I mean too happy to jump up and down like girls often do—Margie Hayes was when Mrs. Stadler, our sewing matron, fitted a very pretty coat on her. She felt of it and admired it, and looked in wonderment and joy as if she couldn't believe it. It had to be shortened, but could she wear it up to the main building to show her matron. When she was told that she could, she came on by the office to let us see how beautiful it was. Margie is a good girl; and I am real glad for her. Each autumn this friend makes some girl happy with a real coat. Last fall it was Doris Ward, a senior this year, who got the coat. Doris was present when this one was fitted yesterday. I asked her what had happened to the one she received last fall; and she told me that she had it now, as good as new, and how much she had appreciated it.

One wonders if the donor of these coats cannot remember with warm delight the first beautiful teen-ager coat she had. She works in a lovely department store where she sees beautiful coats, and thinks how much one of the girls would enjoy having one. She must be happy to think of some girl without a mother and father to look after them, in a "home" getting a thrill out of wearing a beautiful coat. As I say, you should have seen Margie yesterday, when she was told it was hers, her very own. "You must keep it nice for Sunday." "Oh! I will, I will," she earnestly replied. A lot of young people today cannot realize what that coat means, but some older ones can understand. All of us could do something about making a child happy here, and most of us will. Do not forget us, and when you remember us, remember also that everything is costing us more all the way around.

Our children enjoyed presenting their program at Hines' Chapel and Monticello churches this past Sunday. They get much fun out of seeing the country, as well as seeing the churches and the congregations. It is a very worthwhile experience for them, and any church which invites them has had a share in their educational experiences.

Thank you for the good report this week. We hope it will begin climbing each week toward the final goal. To make that goal, we must have $26,350.93. That means that we must all remember the Orphanage in our benevolent giving. I am sure that all who read THE CHRISTIAN SUN will do so. The only thing is that so few people see our church paper compared to the entire membership of the Convention. It is perfectly legitimate in the Convention financial plan for churches to go beyond their apportionment with special offerings for the Orphanage in November and December.

Those two new matrons are still needed. That is a very real necessity. If you know of someone whom you can recommend, please let us know at once.

The Eastern North Carolina Conference

By W. T. SCOTT, Superintendent

The one hundred twenty-seventh annual session of the Eastern North Carolina Conference was held at the Mount Auburn Church, near Manson, North Carolina, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 21-22. It was well attended, reports from the various churches were most encouraging, a strong program was planned and executed, and in our opinion this was one of the most successful sessions held in years.

The session was well presided over by President Fred P. Register. Rev. Emory M. Carter was on hand to discharge faithfully his duties as secretary, which position he has held for 25 years. Mr. W. J. Ballentine, a prominent layman from our Wake Chapel Church and long time treasurer of the conference, was there to perform his important duties.

All of the pastors of the conference were present except three, one of these being Dr. Robert Lee House, who was kept away because of illness. Only three churches failed to make reports, and the majority of the churches paid in full the apportionment items. Churches having "paid in full" their apportionments at the time of the conference session were:

Amelia, Antioch, Bethlehem, Beulah, Chapel Hill, Damascus, Fuller's Chapel, Good Hope, Henderson, Hope Mills, Lebanon, Lee's Chapel, Liberty (Vance), Martha's Chapel, Moore Union, Morrisville, Mount Auburn, Mount Carmel, Mount Gilead, New Hope, Niagara, Oak Level, Pleasant Hill, Plymouth, Pope's Chapel, Sanford, Shallow Well, Southern Pines, Turner's Chapel, Wake Chapel, Youngsville, and our newest church—Fayetteville.

This is a splendid record, the best in years. This is a total of thirty-four churches "paid in full" out of forty-eight churches in the conference. We believe some of the other fourteen will send in remittances which will pay "in full" their apportionments. Only one church in the conference failed to make any remittance for the work of our benevolent program.

Rev. William A. Rich, host pastor, welcomed the conference, and he and his people proved their welcome by providing generously for the temporal needs of all present.

Outstanding on the program were the following presentations: The claims of the Christian Ministry in an address by Dr. H. S. Hardeastle of the Eastern Virginia Conference, who spoke on "Concerning the Ministry"; the needs of Elon College, presented by President L. E. Smith, Mr. I. H. Vickery and Mr. S. H. Basnight; the Church Building Loan Fund Campaign, need and program, presented by Rev. Eric T. Braund of Greenbelt, Md.; our financial and stewardship responsibilities, by Rev. W. C. Farrell, chairman of the Stewardship Committee, and Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, chairman of the Convention Finance Committee, who addressed the conference on "The Larger Faith"; the Conference Sermon by Rev. W. A. Grissom, and the observance of Holy Communion, which was in charge of Revs. W. L. Wood and W. A. Rich; and the program of our Young People, by Miss Bettie Burt Hight and Miss Coghill.

The conference voted unanimously to approve the increased apportionments, designed to make possible the employment of a Stewardship-Evangelism Secretary, and likewise the conference's participation in the Church Building Loan Fund Campaign was unanimously approved.

Two new ministers were welcomed: Rev. W. L. Parker, pastor of The United Church, Raleigh, and Rev. W. A. Grissom, new pastor of Liberty (Vance).

Devotional services were conducted by Revs. R. T. Grissom, George M. Tally, and W. L. Parker.

Reports were presented by the committee chairmen, as follows: Education and Standing of Ministry, Dr. Will B. O'Neill; Christian Education, Miss Coghill for Dr. Robert Lee House; Home Missions, Rev. Carl Wallace; Foreign Missions, Rev. R. L. Jackson; Religious Literature, Mrs. R. L. House; Ministerial Relief, Mr. I. H. Vickery.

Dr. John G. Truitt, superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, told of the work and needs of the orphanage. The report of the North Carolina Council of Churches was given by Rev. M. R. Kurtz, executive director, and Rev. Carl R. Key reported on CROP. Rev. Frank Apple, the president of the Christian Missionary Association, presided at a session of the association, and upon vote, it was decided to assist our new church at Fayetteville with funds of the association.

One familiar figure was missed at this session—the late Deacon J. A. Kimball. Brother Kimball, through out his long and useful life, represented Auburn Church in many sessions of the conference.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

In February, Rev. E. T. Farrell, pastor of our church, gave a most interesting review of our mission study book, "Mission to America." Our foreign mission book, "We Americans: North and South," was taught by Mrs. Roy Brinkley in such an interesting manner that we all enjoyed it.

As our Friendly Service gifts we sent a large package to Franklin Institute at Franklinton, N. C., and another to the migrants, at Richmond, Va.

With the help and inspiration of our pastor, we observed Family Life Week by visiting the shut-ins and having a program and song service with them. This was followed on Friday night with a covered dish supper. All families of the church were invited. This week was one of the highlights of the year.

A life membership has been purchased for Mrs. Otelia Harrell.

We have a very active Cradle Roll under the leadership of Mrs. E. T. Farrell. At the end of the year a party was given for them and an offering taken.

Our group joins with you in our prayers for our missionaries and our work in the coming year:

New Carroll County Mission Leaders

Rev. and Mrs. Wolfe and Kenneth

Rev. and Mrs. William R. Wolfe began their work in our Carroll County Mission on November 1. They come from Pleasant Hill, Tenn.

Mr. Wolfe was born and reared near Pittsburgh, Pa.; and is a graduate of Duke University. Mrs. Wolfe is a graduate of Dennison University. Both received their B. D. degrees from Yale Divinity School, and both are ordained ministers of our denomination. They have one son, Kenneth, born in 1950.

The Woman's Thank Offering is to be used for helping to erect a new church building at Rocky Ford. The sum of $5,000.00 is needed, and the support of the Thank Offering this year will be a great help to Mr. and Mrs. Wolfe in their new work. Elk Spur and Rocky Ford churches will prosper under their leadership.

News Flashes

Dr. Duane Vore announces that Dr. John G. Truitt will return to his former pulpit in Suffolk and assist in the act of re-dedication of the sanctuary and the presentation on behalf of the trustees to the people of the church.

Miss Lucy Eldredge, who was at one time director of Religious Education of the Southern Convention with headquarters in Richmond, was a visitor to the office of publication for a short while last week. We were delighted to have her visit us.

Rev. L. M. Presnell, pastor of our Liberty, North Carolina, church reports a most enjoyable service on Laymen's Sunday, October 26. Mr. Lester York was in charge of the program, and Mr. Jack Shoffner was the speaker, using for his subject, "Laymen's Place in the Church."

Our church in Asheville, North Carolina, has installed a new Baldwin organ, which was used for the first time last Sunday. Mr. Arthur Borgensen was the organist. Extensive repairs and improvements have been made on the church property recently. Rev. Frank E. Ratzell received seven new members on Worldwide Communion Sunday.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill served as dean and also taught in the interdenominational Christian Workers' School being held at the Braddock Street Methodist Church in Winchester, Virginia, last week. She will be a group leader in the Annual Youth Conference of the Virginia Council of Churches to be held at the Second Baptist Church, Richmond, Friday evening of this week through Sunday.

North Carolina and Virginia C. M. A. Needs Your Help

We have contacted the minister or a lay leader in every church in our conference urging them to see that a Conference Missionary Association representative was appointed in their church. We hope that this has already been done. This person is to go to bat for the C. M. A., in his or her local church, trying to get as many memberships as possible. We hope that these people will put in a good word any time or anywhere they can. Anything that you may be able to do for this cause will be greatly appreciated.

Our goal this year is $1,000.00. We really need this amount now to meet, in part at least, pressing needs about us. We are completely dependent upon free will donations through individual and group memberships to keep the C. M. A. going. We are counting on you to help meet our goal.

Send your membership dues to Mrs. W. E. Briggs, 1402 Richardson Drive, Reidsville, N. C., or see her at conference when we meet at Bethlehem, November 11-12. You will hear of some of the things we are trying to do during conference.

KENNETH REGISTER,
President.

Pleasant Ridge Laymen Conduct Church Service

Sunday, October 26, was observed as Laymen's Sunday in the Pleasant Ridge Church, with four laymen giving addresses and other laymen conducting the entire service. Laymen's Sunday was postponed one Sunday so as to correspond with the regular preaching Sunday.

The four speakers were: Hubert Beane, from our Asheboro Church, who spoke on the topic, "Men—at Work"; H. V. Cox, Jr., Harry Smith and Earl Lowdermilk, members of Pleasant Ridge, who spoke on the topics, "Men—at Play," "Men—at Church," and "Men—at Home," respectively. Others participating in the service included Harry Stewart, who pronounced the invocation; Theodore Cox, who led the morning's prayer; J. C. Newell, who pronounced the benediction, and Lawrence Cox, who played the piano. The choir also was composed wholly of laymen.

Attendance was good for this very impressive Laymen's Day service.

MAX VESTAL.

News of Liberty Spring Church

The Laymen's Fellowship of the Liberty Spring Christian Church, near Suffolk, Virginia, conducted the regular morning worship service on Sunday, October 19, under the direction of its chairman, Joseph Savage. The responsive reading was led by W. L. Wilkins, the scripture lesson was read by Charlie E. Nichols, and R. E. Rogers led in prayer. The Men's Chorus, composed of J. R. Lawrence, William T. Harrell, J. E. Harrell, Jr., Dale Lawrence, Joseph Bryant, Jerry Perry and Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, rendered special music, and Parke C. Brinkley delivered the laymen's message. Mr. Brinkley, who is the Commissioner of Agriculture of Virginia, is a deacon of our church.

On Friday, October 24, at 7 p. m., the laymen held their annual Ladies' Night Banquet in the Fellowship Hall of the church. Seventy laymen and guests were present for the occasion which featured an excellent program and a delicious turkey dinner with "all the trimmings." Charlie E. Nichols served as toastmaster and kept things moving along smoothly. The guests were welcomed by N. W. Byrd, with Mrs. William Tucker responding for the ladies. The invocation was given by Wesley Harrell. The speaker of the evening was S. Womack Lee. Mr. Lee, who is the itinerant instructor on Farm Training, was introduced by Joseph Savage. He spoke on the topic, "Successful Farming." At the close of his address, William T. Harrell, accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Wilkins, sang a musical selection. The program committee of the Laymen's Fellowship and the ladies of Circles One and Four of the Woman's Auxiliary were largely responsible for the wonderful evening which everyone present enjoyed.

The newly installed officers of our wide-awake Laymen's Fellowship are: Joseph Savage, chairman; N. W. Byrd, vice-chairman; Emmett Arline, secretary; Johnnie Morgan, treasurer, and Mrs. L. W. Wilkins, pianist.

Greensboro Planning for Another Training School

An enthusiastic group of people representing practically all of the churches of the Greensboro area met at First Church, Greensboro, on Sunday afternoon, October 26 to plan for another Leadership Training School. It was decided to hold a four-day session of leadership education, featuring a workshop or laboratory type of meeting. The following courses and teachers were selected: A Workshop on "Methods of Teaching the Bible," Miss Leila Anderson of the National Division of Christian Education; a Workshop for "Leaders of Young People," Rev. John Graves, Minister of Religious Education, First Church, Burlington; a Workshop for "Church Officers and Workers," Dr. W. E. Wisseman, pastor of First Church, Greensboro; and a class on "The Congregational Christian Church," Dr. Wm. T. Scott, superintendent of the Southern Convention.

The school will begin with registration at 2:30 on Sunday afternoon, January 4, and will continue each evening from Monday through Wednesday, from 7:30 to 9:30 p. m., at the First Church, Greensboro. Rev. Harold Hipps, recreational leader of The Methodist Church, will meet with the entire group between the two sessions each evening.

The following officers were elected: Mr. Martin T. Garren, dean, First Church, Greensboro; Mrs. Hugh Nelson, secretary, Pleasant Ridge; Mr. R. W. Iseley, treasurer, Hines Chapel. Rev. W. J. Andes, Winston-Salem, and Mr. Paul Huffines, Apple's Chapel will serve as additional members of the Finance Committee, of which the treasurer will be chairman.

PATTIE LEE COGHILL.

NEWS OF LIBERTY SPRING.

The local projects of the Fellowship are the beautifying of the church lawn and the restoration of the historic spring from which the church derived its name.

Liberty Spring Church has received 24 members during the year, but our net gain is fifteen. We now have 357 members.

Our budget for the new church year has been oversubscribed. Most of our members made weekly pledges instead of yearly pledges.

The Youth Fellowship is doing a good job.

Our Woman's Auxiliary has been divided into four circles. Each circle meets monthly and the auxiliary quarterly. We believe this reorganization of the auxiliary will revitalize our women's work in the church.

Our Sunday school made a good investment when it purchased a Tri-Purpose projector for teaching purposes. Film strips are being used each Sunday morning in some department. The first six weeks, of the quarter, "Events in the Ministry of Christ" will be shown, and the second six weeks, "Life and Ministry of Christ in Original Art" will be used. Mrs. V. L. Christopher is our Visual Aid chairman, and Mrs. C. E. Nichols is her assistant.

The Board of Deacons and their families recently enjoyed a buffet luncheon at the home of Deacon and Mrs. G. O. O'Berry, in Harrellsville, N. C. The regular meeting of the board was held immediately following the luncheon.

Under the leadership of our pastor, Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, along with the 125 members holding official responsibility, this should be the beginning of the best year ever.

"Building--With Love and Gratitude"

A GUEST EDITORIAL

By MRS. W. B. WILLIAMS, President
The Woman's Missionary Convention
Southern Convention

When a woman becomes a member of the women's organization of a Congregational Christian Church, she becomes a member of the National Fellowship of Congregational Christian Women, a member of the General Department of United Church women, and a member of the women's division of the World Council of Churches, which links her with the world-wide Christian family.

When a woman becomes a member of the women's organization of a Congregational Christian Church she is automatically caught up in a movement which numbers more than 600,000 Congregational Christian women and which boasts a proud record of distinguished achievement down through the years.

If we ended our thoughts with the above two paragraphs, we would think that this organization of Congregational Christian women was such a large body that we as individuals could not possibly fit into the total pattern. But we must remember that we tend to think in parts, not wholes, and we work with vision and great purpose only as we see each part in relationship to the whole.

Our Woman's Missionary Convention of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches has a very vital part as a unit in the total program of the National Fellowship. Our three Women's Conferences make up the Woman's Convention. The conferences are composed of the fifteen districts, and the districts are made up from the various societies in our one hundred and ninety-seven churches. The thousands of women in our churches like you and me, in the every-day walks of life, make up these societies. So, when we get right down to business, we find that each individual is a very important part of this whole great Fellowship of Women.

Quoting from our National Manual, we find these words: "Unto us as church women are entrusted the most precious things in the world. It is ours to cherish and to nourish all that is best in human life and experience. The church is our bulwark; God is our source of strength and inspiration. And yet, in a most marvelous way, he is dependent upon us to do his work in the world—dependent upon our human hearts and minds and hands. In the brief moment of time in which we are privileged to live in this challenging world, what a task is ours to perform, what a high service to discharge."

There is an old adage that says, "Man's work is from sun to sun; woman's work is never done." So it is today—woman's work is never done. As organizations of church women, it is our purpose "to cultivate the spirit of Christ, beginning within our own lives and reaching out into home and community and the uttermost parts of the earth." To answer the call to service is no easy task. The work is one of enlarging proportions and unending limits.

Our theme for this year is "Building—With Love and Gratitude." As we go about our duties we, as church women, will be building, and we MUST build with love and gratitude, in the home, the church, the community and finally in the uttermost parts of the world. For what truly grateful heart, with love for God and man, can fail to know deep happiness that expresses itself in Christian word and deed!

What a challenge is ours! If we have the true faith Paul speaks of in his letter to the Colossians, and this deep happiness comes to us and we give it outward expression, we build for ourselves, as well as for others, an inner peace that must needs be translated into peace for the entire world. If the whole will of our Lord and Master is to be done, this will include human rights for our fellow-man in America, and a deeper understanding of the needs of our brother in Africa, and our responsibility to him; as well as the re-vitalizing of our own church program in Carroll County.

These are some of the things which will be among our concerns for the coming year, and "it is to such a mission that we as church women re-dedicate ourselves to spend our time, our talent and our treasure in mutual endeavor with our own denomination and with the body of Christ in our nation and throughout the wide reaches of the world."

Christian Attitudes

A Series of Meditations

By REV. HENRY E. ROBINSON

Minister, First Christian Church, Burlington, North Carolina

IV.—“Toward the Community”

On a certain trip I used to make to the South I would be on the look-out for the first Spanish moss which hung like lace upon the trees and added atmosphere and a lazy beauty to that part of the country. Something of that beauty rather disappeared for when I discovered that Spanish moss was a parasite which drew its life from the host tree and would eventually stunt or kill the tree.

Spanish moss need give us little concern. The trees will somehow survive and reproduce as they have through the centuries. But Spanish moss is a good illustration of a type of citizen which is all too abundant in the community, who draws his life from the life of the whole without contributing effort, or inspiration, or material gift toward the growth and progress of the group of which he is a part.

In the history of man, never has community loyalty and community responsibility been so vital. Never have men been so interdependent. We literally draw our life from the community. A little while ago I drank a cup of coffee for my breakfast. It was grown by our neighbors in South America. It was transported by the marine industry. It was processed, packed and distributed by food marketers. I added sugar from Cuba and cream from some dairy perhaps many miles away. I brewed the coffee in an electric percolator the parts of which had been assembled from many sections of the world. For heat, I depended on current that was generated by some great electric plant also miles distant. In as simple a thing as drinking a cup of coffee I have acknowledged my dependence upon many men in many lands. If this is true of a cup of coffee, which I might easily do without, how much more is it true of my home, my car, my radio, my clothes, my food which is so important to living?

A Christian, out of nothing more than fair play, must feel deeply the desire to make his contribution to the life of the community. Surely a Christian has nothing in common with Spanish moss. A Christian must take the role of sunshine, rain, air and the essential elements of the soil which sponsor growth and bring a harvest. Christians have the example of their Lord and Master, whose footsteps could be traced by deeds of help and healing. He made the world richer for his presence. He plainly stated that he came to serve and to bring the abundant life. He punctuated his words with deeds of sacrifice, even the giving of his life when that became necessary.

REV. H. E. ROBINSON

If we are so dependent upon one another for the material things of life, should we not realize how deeply our close-knit society is affected by the moral standards which we hold? It is said that personal cleanliness is nowhere so important as on shipboard where five hundred men live close together. Disease could spread rapidly and exhaust the efficiency of the crew. The world is living closer together than it ever has before. Only a few years ago, what happened in some distant corner or isle of the world was of little moment to the rest of the world. Today, what happens in Korea and Formosa reaches into our family circles for our sons and into our incomes for our very livelihood.

There are always those who excuse themselves because their actions can have no effect upon distant scenes halfway around the world. But what about the world in which we are the center? In that world our actions are tremendously important. The greatest contribution you can make toward a better world is to make a better world right where you are. Maybe it's to lift the burden of loneliness from the heart of a friend, maybe it is bringing someone into the fellowship of the church, maybe it is putting your shoulder to the wheel of a worthy cause that has bogged down in the slough of indifference. Each of us has his own sphere of influence, his own circle of friends who watch our actions and follow our example. Each of us has a daily task to perform. The way we do it will have its effect on people and situations. Most of us live in a family where our attitudes and actions make the greatest difference of all. In these relationships we can be self-giving, thoughtful, sacrificial. We can make this little world of ours more Christian, and by that amount we make the greater community—the world itself—that much more like the Master we seek to serve.

To earn a living, live in comfort, protect our old age, maintain our health, pay our taxes, obey the law, stay out of the courts, live at peace with our neighbors is not enough. There is nothing in any or all of these pursuits which is distinctively Christian. Instead, they are aimed at self-preservation, at promoting the interest of one's own welfare. The Christian must look beyond himself to the welfare of others. Only this attitude toward the community will bring growth in human relationships and a satisfaction in living so earnestly sought by the life of the soul.

Annual Virginia Youth Conference Meeting in Richmond

The Youth Conference of the Virginia Council of Churches will be held on Friday evening, November 7, and through noon of the 9th, at the Second Baptist Church of Richmond, Adams and Franklin Streets.

An excellent program has been prepared, consisting of Addresses, devotional services and group discussions.

The opening address on Friday evening will be by Dr. Roland P. Riddick, his theme being “Common Concerns of Christian Youth.” The discussion groups will meet at 10:20 on Saturday morning. The topics for discussion will include: Christian Faith, Christian Witness, Christian Outreach, Christian Citizenship and Christian Fellowship.

Our Churches Report . . .

Eleven Laymen Conduct Sanford Church Service

One of the largest congregations of the year was present on Laymen's Sunday, when a picked team of eleven men occupied the chancel of the Congregational Christian Church in Sanford, North Carolina, and conducted the service of worship with dignity and discernment.

Let it be said that the large congregation was no accident, it did not just happen. Under the dynamic leadership of A. H. McIver, there was launched a well organized campaign, designed and directed with the express purpose of securing the attendance of men of the community. Almost every well-known method was employed to attract the attention of the men of the neighborhood, starting with the bulletin board at the church, which carried the announcement: "Men Wanted to Worship at This Church on Sunday, Laymen's Day," and going out in ever-widening circles through the use of letters, personal solicitation, telephone calls, paid advertisements and articles in the local daily, and by spot announcements over the two local radio stations, it was made apparent that a service of unusual proportions was being scheduled and that men were especially invited. Our efforts were well rewarded and the expense justified by the large number of men present at the service.

With but little deviation, the service followed the accustomed pattern. A. H. McIver was the presiding "minister," W. J. Willitt read the scripture lesson, and Dewey Tillman led in the responsive reading. A quartet comprising Paul L. Wicker, Sr., Emory Matthews, Truby Proctor, Jr., and Clarence Dickens, sang most effectively, "There Were Ninety and Nine."

Adoptin the theme, "Rise Up, O Men of God," suggested by the national organization known as United Church Men, and in co-operation with The Laymen's Movement for a Christian World, four of our fine young men gave of their best to bring to the rest of us the message of the Master as they found it within the four stanzas of Dr. William P. Merrill's stirring hymn of that name.

Beginning with Burke Buchanan's treatment of the leading thought expressed in the first stanza, "Have Done with Lesser Things," the messages progressed stanza by stanza. Rex Thomas spoke on, "Bring in the Day of Brotherhood," Raymond C. Pigford on "The Church for You Doth Wait," and V. C. McIver on "Tread Where His Feet Have Trod." With the ending of the spoken word, we were moved very deeply by the beautiful tenor voice of Emory Matthews in a rendition of "I Walked Today Where Jesus Walked."

We are sold on the idea of Laymen's Sunday. It holds immeasurable potentialities which should be released in the interests of the kingdom of Christ. One thing it has shown us, is that there is stored up great man-power waiting to be harnessed to the tasks of the Church.

The total experiences of the day were most rewarding. We came away with a deep sense of pride in the quality of leadership which we had really discovered for the first time in the men of our church. One knows the church has been blessed when he hears the man on the street repeat again and again an expression used by one of the speakers, "What kind of a church would my church be, if every member were just like me?"

WILL B. O'NEILL,
Pastor.

Reidsville Church Begins New Church Year

The Reidsville, N. C., Congregational Christian Church began its new church year on the first of October. At the annual business meeting of the church, the pastor, the Rev. Tucker G. Humphries, reporting upon the state of the church, told his membership that the spirit of the church was excellent, that there was high enthusiasm and interest for the things of God. Seventy new members were added to the fellowship of the church, and 42 had been baptized.

Reports were received at this meeting from all classes and organizations of the church. One in particular, worthy of note and of interest to all was that presented by Mr. Charlie McKinney, general superintendent of the Sunday school. His report showed a Sunday school enrollment for the year of 435, plus 40 teachers and officers, with a total attendance in Sunday school for the year of 18,567, or an average attendance of 357 per Sunday, plus 37 officers and teachers, 92½ per cent of the membership.

For the first three Sundays of October the average attendance has been 456. In deed there is interest and high enthusiasm for the things of God in the church.

Liberty (Vance) Enjoys Many Improvements

With the beginning of a new conference year and the coming of our new pastor, Rev. W. A. Grissom, we feel that Liberty Church is making much progress.

The greatest thrill the church anticipated was the repairing of the church building and the parsonage. Before Mr. Grissom and his fine family moved in, a much needed repair job was done in the parsonage, which included moving some walls and cutting new doors, floors repaired, cabinets built in the kitchen and linolium laid where needed. An oil circulator was installed, and the entire inside of the parsonage was painted, making the parsonage a really beautiful home and one of which we are justly proud.

At present, the church building is undergoing repairs. These include a new roof, painting inside and out, and a few minor jobs elsewhere. The church feels that the money used for this purpose is money well spent.

At the recent quarterly conference, when new officers for the church were elected, two new deacons were voted in, bringing the total number of deacons to twelve.

The work of the care-taker is well done, and we feel that we have one of the best kept churches and church grounds and cemetery to be found in any rural section of the state.

Much improvement has been made in our choir, and it still tries each time to improve on the last effort.

The work of the Sunday school is good, and our average attendance is still up.

The Missionary Society is now doing good work. At its last meeting, it was voted to give a memorial in memory of Dr. Charles E. Newman, who served the church for nine years.

The work of the Young People is excellent since the coming of our new pastor. There have been as many as fifty young people at the Sunday night service of the Pilgrim Fellowship. The young people of the Henderson Church and our young people

Twenty-One Years of Service

As I come to write this article for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, I am reminded that tomorrow, Saturday, November 1, twenty-one years ago, I arrived on the campus of Elon College to endeavor to take over the reins of leadership and discover, if possible, the problems involved.

There were problems; to find solutions was the responsibility. Many and devious have been the ways—some dark and foreboding, and others more plain and inviting; but whether complicated or understandable, there has been a degree of satisfaction and a bit of joy. It is always a satisfaction to see dark ways clear up and to have the experience of burdens being lifted. Success during these twenty-one years has not been as marked as we all had hoped, but nevertheless we have come a long way toward the goals desired by the most devoted and the most ambitious.

We dislike to think about unpleasant things, and yet there are certain conditions and certain personal experiences of the years past that cannot be easily forgotten. I am sure that one of the happiest moments of my twenty-one years of service for Elon College and one of the most unforgettable experiences happened on the morning of January 23, 1943, at 10:30 in the morning in the vaults of Virginia Trust Company, Richmond, Virginia, when I turned over to the president of the company, Mr. Walker Scott, a check for $10,000, which completed the payment of the obligation that we had with the Virginia Trust Company, assumed in the fall of 1935, in the amount of $142,000. This paid in full all the financial claims against the college.

From that day to the present, we have been able to operate the college out of the red and to meet obligations as was necessary.

Elon College is today entering into an era fraught with responsibilities and dangers, and yet with opportunities unparalleled in its history. Elon College, together with other church-related colleges, is facing circumstances that will require money running into considerable figures. The requirements of the college, however, will not and shall not be beyond the ability of the church, alumni and friends. The church and the alumni must lead the way. They are the college's beneficiaries, and shall continue to be so. If these two groups will give generous support to the college, neighbors and friends will cast in their bits, and the totals will be sufficient. More and more, Elon College must become an institution of the church. The church needs the college, and the college needs the church.

It is encouraging to note that more of our own young people are enrolled in Elon College today than in previous years. With the continued help of our pastors and our alumni, more and more of our church young people will come to Elon College for training and guidance. To be sure, they may get equal educational advantages elsewhere. They may also receive religious instruction and spiritual guidance on other campuses; but one thing is certain, they cannot receive contact with their own church elsewhere as they are privileged to receive it on their own college campus. We need to be guided in religion, but we also need to be instructed and guided in the affairs of the church of our homes and our hearts.

I trust that in the immediate future and in the long years to come, it may be said of our church that it loves its college, supports its college, and gives of its wisdom that the college may be guided rightly in its efforts to prepare the necessary leadership for tomorrow.

Elon College Freshman Reports on Work Camp Experiment in Puerto Rico

Puerto Rico is called the "Key to the Caribbean." It is 3,435 square miles in area, and has a population of 1,543,913. It was to this small island that I traveled this past summer. I attended an Ecumenical Religious Work Camp sponsored by the World Council of Churches. The purpose of the work camp was to give life, socially and economically, to a small, rural mountain community named Jerusalem.

The campers consisted of one boy from the Dominican Republic, eight Puerto Ricans and three girls from this country. Everyone, of course, spoke Spanish except the three Americans. We all helped one another to learn both languages, though, and before the summer ended, we got along very well.

Our living quarters consisted of an abandoned three-room house, like those in which the peasants live, a mile and a half up the mountain. The kitchen was an old shed four feet off the ground behind the house. There was no furniture, electricity, running water, or refrigeration, in either the house or the shed, and the walls were charcoal black with soot from the primitive cooking.

Our first few days were spent in building furniture, cleaning, arranging a system of rain barrels for water, constructing a porch with a roof of palm leaves, and digging ditches so that the rain would not wash us off the mountain. Cooking was our main problem at first, because we had to prepare our food as the peasants do. There was a sandbox on legs in the kitchen, topped off with three large stones between which we built fires and on top of which we cooked. Eventually, we acquired a little two-burner oil stove, but it was never quite adequate for preparing meals for fifteen people.

Our daily diet consisted of Puerto Rican rice and beans, cafe con leche, bananas, coconuts, pineapples, oat-

Ed Riggs Finds the Days All Too Short for What He Has to Do

Kilanjunai P. O.,
Ramudd District,
South India,
Sept. 29, 1952.

Dear Friends:

The end-of-the-month letter gives a good excuse to pause and take stock of the events and achievements of the month. The first thing I realize as I look through the record is that I will have to turn in another monthly report to the United States Information Service that the filmstrips on health which they loaned me on a special long-term basis so that I can show them frequently have not been shown at all again this month. It serves to emphasize how I have not been able to start any of the health education work that I originally had in mind here, because of the day-to-day pressure of emergency patients coming in all the time. I still have my one or two regular days set aside for patients here in Kilanjunai, and my three out-clinics in various directions from here, which are supposed to be for leprosy only, but which are attended by quite a crowd of other patients too.

I am trying not to encourage "ordinary" patients, and am turning down all except the most urgent surgery, even the kind that is within my powers, so as to save the time I would spend in operating. But it seems as if all my mornings and evenings on all the days, and a good chunk of the weekends, are spent in taking care of various kinds of urgent cases—the kind that one simply cannot turn brusksly away for the sake of getting time for a long-range program. Of course, the other Mission Doctors have a fine chance to say, "I told you so," because that predicament is exactly the reason they haven't accomplished more health education and long-range programs themselves. And of course, too, this experience is exactly what I need to determine what the people are getting and whether a preventive program would be possible or not.

I get cancers now and then, and other types of surgical cases which cannot feasibly be "prevented" under present conditions in this country. Another tragic example is one young leprosy patient who suddenly developed a mental disease and became "raving mad." I know exactly how to treat him, with insulin shock therapy, but there apparently isn't enough reliable insulin in all of South India to do the job. There is only one mental hospital in all of Madras State. Admission there is by commitment; that is, I could certify that he was showing homicidal or suicidal tendencies and the (Government) District Medical Officer would take him off my hands. But while waiting for a vacancy in the asylum he would have to lodge him in the district jail; and there he surely would die before his chance came. His relatives preferred to take him home and tie him up there, where he could at least die in a little more friendly surroundings.

I have been equally frustrated by TB patients. With no x-rays available and so few able to afford streptomycin, and no chance to use the preventive BCG vaccine, there didn't seem to be much I could do there except hand out advice which they would not understand or have the spirit to follow. But I suddenly discovered, quite by accident, that the new "miracle" drug for TB has arrived in India, and at least one drug store in Madura is selling it in large quantities, showing the articles in Time and Life as proof of its efficacy. It is cheap enough to be within the range of a great many sufferers, and will undoubtedly produce an initial improvement in symptoms in most, so that the patients will feel at last that something is being done for them, and will be more inclined to be cooperative. But what then? I don't even know the present status of medical opinion in America on the subject, but I suspect that I would be in plenty of hot water treating patients freely and indiscriminately without any sort of control over them. Knowing about the new drug and knowing that it is cheap, gives a tremendous boost to the prospects of being able to do something for TB, but it will take a little figuring to decide just what the right thing to do will be.

With the rains failing again after the auspicious start a month ago, it will be quite a trick giving the proper advice about the diet to correct the most prevalent disease—malnutrition. We have just received some relief supplies of powdered milk, powdered eggs, and Multipurpose Food (a mixture of soy beans and vitamins). The last two, I am mixing together with powdered gram (the Indian equivalent of beans) and multivitamin tablets to form a high-protein "cocktail" to dispense to the most obvious malnutrition cases. I have a feeling that all the patients should be getting it, because their under-nutrition overshadows all the other disease pictures. The "Meals-for Millions" Foundation in Los Angeles comes through with a thought-provoking suggestion, that for food-short areas such as this, where there will never be any reasonable hope for supplying the population with a well-balanced diet in the traditional sense, why not decide to permanently supplement the cereal grains with an artificial concentrate like Multipurpose Food (but produced in India, of course), and teach the whole population to eat a daily ration of this powder mixed with their rice or millet, in hopes that their strength and pep can be raised so that, even if they couldn't grow food, they could at least produce something salable to pay for it. That would hardly be a job for me to tackle, but I must admit that the gifts of Multipurpose Food which are sent from time to time, and which the Governments of India and the United States are still transporting and importing free by special arrangement, seem to be about the most practical way at the moment of giving help.

meet jointly once a month, alternating the meetings at each church, with the host church serving supper for the group. A memiograph machine has been purchased, and the young people, with the help of the very efficient wife of our pastor, are preparing and printing the church bulletins. The Pilgrim Fellowship organization observed "Work Day for Christ," and realized a collection of $25.00.

As a whole, Liberty Church is moving ahead. The people are ready and willing to do, and it seems now that we have just what is needed, a hard working young minister and his very accomplished young wife, both pushing and pulling at the same time, and always ready to say, "Let's go!"

Miss Lucy Steele to Present Study at Franklin

Miss Lucy Steele, the pride and joy of the Southern Presbyterians, who has delighted the women of the Southern Convention with her Bible teaching at the School of Missions for the past two years, is to be at our church in Franklin, Virginia, on Sunday, November 16, to present the Bible study for the year.

This is a wonderful opportunity for the women of our churches in Eastern Virginia to hear a wonderful leader present the study of Colossians, for the Franklin Society has invited women from all the other churches to join with them for this occasion. Mrs. E. P. Jones of the Franklin Society suggests that the visitors bring sandwiches with them for supper. The Franklin women will provide coffee.

The Bible study will be given in two sessions. The first will begin at four o'clock in the afternoon. Then there will be an evening session following the supper and fellowship period.

We certainly urge all who possibly can to share in this Bible study. And we shall hope to have a report of the meeting for this page!

"Where Is My Article"

The above question may well be asked by many of you who sent in reports from your societies for the Woman's Page in THE SUN at the close of your year's work. Never fear, those articles are safely at rest on my desk, and will appear on this page in due order—I even have them all marked with the date I received them so I can keep them coming in the right sequence!

However, at the same time of year these reports come flooding in, we have items of current interest which must be presented—the fall women's conferences, the thank offering, meetings like the one above, and timely articles like the one published below, which some of you will want to use in women's society or Sunday school, or at your club meeting for a Thanksgiving meditation,

We want the reports, but we feel that the other items must be printed first. And we would like it if you would remember this year to send in articles concerning activities as they occur rather than waiting until the end of the year to "tell all."

(Greensboro, First, how about a write-up of your "dried flower" show?)

Quarterly Letter at Sanford

When on a recent visit to the Sanford parsonage, Mrs. Will B. O'Neill showed me a letter sent to each woman in the church by their new society president, Mrs. Ralph Cline. It is a good idea to pass on to you who are society leaders, for she intends to send such a letter at the beginning of each quarter—and you might like to do the same.

The letter told of the theme for the year, "Building—With Love and Gratitude," and of the Bible study for the year—Colossians. It also told of plans for a covered dish supper for the circles meeting together each quarter. Special events listed for the first quarter included the women's conference, the thank offering and World Community Day.

This is a good way to keep every woman in your society posted on coming events, and to have an active, wide-awake group. Congratulations, Mrs. Cline, and keep up the good work!

A Thought for Thanksgiving

All good gifts around us
Are sent from heaven above;
Then thank the Lord, O thank the Lord
For all his love,

Is there a man or woman, school-boy or school-girl in our country today who has not thrilled to the story of the first Thanksgiving—the story of how our Pilgrim forefathers realized, at summer's end and when the harvest was gathered, that Divine Providence had seen them safely through another year. True, it was a year of hardship; a year of work and toil, of dangers and distress; but now the realization that they are a little more firmly established in their new homes and in a new land, and a little better prepared to meet the rigors of another New England winter, causes them to pause and to know that those things for which gratitude fills their hearts have not been wrought by the work of their hands alone. And so, the idea of a day for thanks was born—an idea which has been handed down from generation to generation, and now to us!

Thus, in this year 1952, we who have inherited this land for which our forefathers battled the dangers of the wilderness, the hunger and disease which plagued their families, and all of the other perils of those early years will do well to think on these things.

Today, we live in a land of plenty, a land of opportunity, a land where we can exercise our rights of freedom of speech and to worship as we please, in a nation founded on the ideals of liberty, freedom and justice for all men. However, in some parts of the world today there are people who are hungry and homeless, people who live in fear and subjection, people who are denied the freedom to speak and to worship as they desire; and so it might well be for us who enjoy so many good things to—in a moment of quietness with our Lord:

Count your blessings,
Name them one by one;
Count your many blessings,
See what God hath done.

(Moment of silent meditation.)

The Psalmist, David, in Psalm 103, exhorts us to "Bless the Lord . . . and forget not all his benefits." So might we, with a song of thanksgiving in our hearts, read again these words of the Psalmist, as he reminds us of the manifold mercies of God:

(Psalm 103, from your own Bible.)

"We Plow the Fields and Scatter."

(This poem may be found in your hymnal.)

May we pray:

"O God, Thou who art so gracious and so merciful to us, thy children, we do thank thee for all of the good things of life.

"We realize that oft times we are not worthy of these abundant gifts of thine; but, O God, we pray that thou wilt help us to grow in the ways of thy kingdom; guide our lives in the paths that lead us to become more worthy of thy precious love.

"Help us to so live that we may make every day a thanks giving day. 'No gifts have we to offer, for all thy love imparts' except as our lives and service for the upbuilding of thy

A Page for Our Children

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Children:

Some of your parents who were at the Eastern North Carolina Conference Women's meeting saw the salt and cornstarch figures that Mrs. Carl R. Key had on display. They were made by her son, Paul, and several of them were from one of the African mission study books.

Sunday, the Key family was with the House family for dinner, and a pleasant afternoon together. Paul brought out the box with his figures, and we looked at them with great interest. It is a cheap, easy modeling material, and is certainly durable and lasting.

Mrs. Key's recipe goes like this:

Mix one cup of salt with one-half cup of cornstarch. Add half a cup of boiling water, stirring constantly until mixture forms a ball. Put in a drop of oil of clove or wintergreen to keep it sweet. Cool and model into desired shapes. Bake in a slow oven at least an hour or until hard. Paint if desired.

The oil is optional, if you plan to use all of the mixture at once and bake the same day it will not be necessary. You may use a variety of paints: water, shoeblack, flat, oil or enamel. If you want to make interesting Christmas figures, you may add a cup of mica snow after cooking or sprinkle with sparkle.

The slow baking insures a very hard product and a very sturdy one. We tried dropping articles made this way and they withstood some heavy falls. The girls in our family made beads of varying shapes and ran toothpick through before baking, and have strung the various colors and shapes.

For a different type of recipe of the same ingredients see the 1952 McCall's Needlework and Crafts Annual which came out the first of October. It has a slightly different receipt but gives the same results. You may add water or salt if the mixture becomes too thin or too thick.

Once we rolled some of it like dough and cut out shapes. If you push a looped string into the dough before baking, it will make light cord pulls or tree ornaments. There are many possibilities, and we hope you find some interesting things to make. One final word about large figures—add pipestem cleaners or toothpicks to help hold the shape.

A class or department project might be to make an African village or African animals as Paul Key did, or to model, color and display a Christmas crèche or manger scene.

"At Mother's Knee"

By LELIA MUNSELL.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

A sweet picture hangs on my memory wall. I was visiting in the home of a young mother. After supper, on Saturday, she gathered her children around her. The four-year-old daughter leaned against her knee; the two older boys lay stretched on the floor. Together they studied the Sunday-school lessons. She asked questions, they asked questions; it was the regular week-end ritual.

Did those children grow up into fine men and women? They did. "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old he will not depart from it" is as true now as when it was first said. Of course, a child usually requires more help than he gains from the study of his Sunday-school lesson; but that study is a long step in the right direction.

The time periods of home influence may be divided roughly into two: young childhood, to twelve; youth and adolescence, from twelve on through the teens. However, we face the same two tasks for both periods. We must teach children to be glad of the ever-presence of God and must make that presence as comprehensible to them as possible by developing a spirit of reverence and trust; and we must stride to guide the children gradually into the understanding of religious principles, until they see their truth clearly and, therefore, accept them naturally, as a part of their pattern of life.

We cannot begin this work too early. It meant a real effort for Mrs. Joyce to get three-year-old Harold to cradle role each Sunday. "Does it pay?" she echoed my question. "Oh, yes. My baby has the most beautiful faith in God. He trusts Him just as he trusts his daddy and me."

A friend said, "I had a letter from Thelma today that made me very happy. When my children were tiny they always knelt at my knee at night and repeated the prayers I had taught them. As they grew older they knelt by their own beds and made their own prayers. Like Daniel, we never failed to pray and give thanks to God. Thelma wrote: 'Mother, not one of us can get away from the habit of bedside prayer that you taught us. No matter how tired we are we still say our prayers before we tumble into bed.'" This mother's three talented daughters were entertaining together in a musical organization, giving performances every night. She had reason to be grateful and happy, had she not?

Precept must be backed by example. Mark was eleven. It was Decision Day in Sunday school and he, with the others, went to the front. Afterwards, he asked, "Mother, why didn't you come up?" A bit surprised, she answered, "Why everybody knows where I stand." "It wouldn't have hurt to tell them again," he responded. "You're right, Son," she admitted, humbly.

Don's father used this method. Don was reaching the questioning age. "What is the use of reading the Bible so much?" he asked. The paper that day carried the story of a well-known Federal judge who had taught a Sunday-school class for twenty-three years. Don's father marked such passages as these in the article: "Never yet has there appeared in my court, on a criminal charge, a man who had charted his course by the Bible."

"We are not afraid of the man who lives by the Bible. We know he will not kidnap our children, or hold us up on the highway, or break into our home in the night, or vote more than once on election day." Then he gave the article to Don and asked him to read it. Don's comment was, "I guess maybe he ought to know."

Not only must we begin early, but we must keep at it. And we must never allow youth, with its impatience and half-formed judgments, to force us into an apologetic attitude for the Bible-directed way of life. Centuries ago Isaiah said, "Precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little:" and that is still a sound pedagogical principle.

Liberty Spring Fellowship Installs New Officers

The Youth Fellowship of the Liberty Spring Church, located in Nansmond County, Virginia, held an impressive installation service recently. The officers installed were as follows: Bobby Harrell, president; Martha Leigh Bryant, vice-president; Jane Moore, secretary; Mary Ann Bradshaw, treasurer; Dean Powell, pianist, Dr. Jesse H. Dollar is the Spiritual Life leader, and Mrs. Zack Perry and Miss Evelyn Riddick are directors.

On Wednesday, October 29, the Fellowship held a Halloween Party in the Fellowship Hall of the church. Each member brought a guest to the party. From all reports, everybody had a wonderful evening of fun, food and fellowship.

Liberty (Vance) Youth Work for Christ

The Youth Fellowship of Liberty Congregational Christian Church, Route 1, Henderson, N. C., observed Saturday, October 25, as Work Day for Christ. It was a busy day for the youth of the church, with 28 of them participating in the activities. Sixteen young people, with their pastor, Rev. W. A. Grissom, picked cotton in a group and greatly enjoyed it. Others, who already had Saturday work, contributed part of their earnings of the day. Still others did odd jobs and contributed their earnings. It was a great day for the young people of the church—and when the money was counted, they had $25.00. The money was all brought in on Sunday evening and at the close of the regular program was dedicated to Christ's work.

This group highly recommends this project to the young people of every church. The spirit of the day was "doing things together for Christ."

I've just been thinking what wonderful seasons Thanksgiving and Christmas are for young people to join the church. How many of you are planning to join the church, but have just put it off? Some of you young men will be going into the services without joining the church, if you aren't careful. You need the church, and the church needs you, whether you are at home or far away.

meal, spam, powdered milk, plus native fruits. At first the food did not appeal to me, but I learned to enjoy even the powdered milk.

Washing clothes was an experience that was actually fun. We carried our laundry down to the mountain stream and were taught by the Puerto Rican women how to twist and pound clothes on the rocks. I really thought my clothes would never survive, but they always turned out sparkling clean. We also bathed and swam in the cold, clear water of the river.

After breakfast, we enjoyed worship services which gave us courage to overcome the inconveniences that we thought we were living through and made us realize the importance of our work. These services became very meaningful for us all. We read the Bible and sang hymns in both Spanish and English, and we had a great feeling of unity and closeness to God on our mountain top.

Upon finishing our devotions, we hiked down the mountain clad in dungarees, shirts and heavy shoes. Our job was to build a cobblestone road up the mountain to replace the donkey pass that had been there for many decades. By building the road we were trying to help the people to realize that something should be done to improve their community and thus their individual lives.

We worked every morning on the road, trying to accomplish our purpose. Little by little, we began to notice a change in the attitude of the people. Women began bringing us refreshments while we worked, the children helped us carry stones, and eventually the men started working on week-ends when there was no work in the sugarcane fields. Gradually we started making progress. Whenever rain prevented us from working on the road, we went to Yuquiyu, the Congregational Missionary Center, and helped by working in a clinic and by doing odd repair jobs.

We spent our afternoons in classes. Government agents, doctors and ministers spoke to us about the economic, social, religious and political problems of the island, soil conservation, and the Cooperative movement. The lectures were given in Spanish, but were translated into English for us. Through these study groups we learned the problems of the people, and we

The Training of the Twelve.

"And he called his twelve disciples, and gave them authority over unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of disease and all manner of sickness." They were not technically trained men, they had no formal education, they had not been ordained by the religious leaders of that day. They were men of various temperaments and talents. They had their limitations and faults. They wore no halos about their heads. But they were the best he could get. And they had the one prerequisite of discipleship—they loved him and they were willing to follow him and to obey him. Because of that fact, he used them and blessed their efforts.

He gave them authority and power over unclean spirits and to heal the sick. There was to be verification of their mission, both for the disciples themselves and for those among whom they worked. It all was what might be called a "laboratory experiment." They were to learn by doing. He was training the Twelve for special work along approved, psychological lines. The time was coming when he would not be with them in the flesh. They would have to carry on his work. He would have them ready for it. That Sunday school and church is wise which is training leaders all the time to take the place of those who, sooner or later, will pass on leadership, or pass away. The wise minister or Sunday school superintendent delegates authority. People learn to do Christian service by doing it.

Limited Assignments.

"Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and enter not into any city of the Samaritans; but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." That looks like narrowness and petty provincialism, doesn't it? Here was the Master, with good news for all men, and he was telling his disciples to share it only with the Jews! It was not selfishness, but spiritual strategy. Those men were not yet ready to come to grips with the Gentile world. They had not had the training or the experience which would be needed for that larger task. That was to come later, to be sure. And their experiences among the Jews would prepare them for their experiences among the Gentiles later. There are those of us who, in a burst of emotion, or the thrill of a great religious experience, would try to save the whole world. It is better to try to save the man who lives next to us. This assignment was something like a "training cruise" which midshipmen take after, or even before, graduation.

Preaching the Kingdom of Heaven.

"And as ye go, preach, saying, the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Preaching means proclaiming, or heralding "good news." This good news was that the kingdom of heaven was at hand. Fact is, it was already a present fact. But it was also a future event. The rule of God on earth, the doing of his will in every phase of life—that is the kingdom of heaven or the kingdom of God. At the beginning, the preaching was to be simple. Later, they were to tell about his kingship, his atoning work, his resurrection. But they were to make it simple on this first tour. They were to call men to repentance and to state the promises and the blessings of the kingdom. How much better it would be if ministers made their messages simpler, plainer, more direct! And Sunday school teachers might well do the same!

Danger Ahead!

The Master was honest with his disciples. He warned them that they would face hardship, danger, opposition, persecution, suffering, even death. They could not expect to fare better than their Master—"a disciple is not above his teacher, nor a servant above his lord." Because they were not of the world, the world would hate them. We usually make discipleship too easy. We do not make plain to young or new Christians that following Christ involves sacrifice, suffering, opposition, hardship and self denial. The Master wanted those men to count the cost and to be ready to pay the price of discipleship. But they need not be afraid. They would find strength for dark days in their fellowship with him, and through the spirit of God their Father. He that was with them was greater than those who were against them. They were to bear their witness. They were to proclaim publicly what he had told them privately and secretly. They were to teach others what he had taught them. They were not responsible for results; they were responsible for proclaiming the truth. For the rest, God would take care of that, and of them.

A Sword, Not Peace.

"I came not to send peace, but a sword!" These words were spoken by Jesus, the Prince of Peace! Did he mean that he had come to bring war? Certainly not. The swords of war never found any sanction whatever in the spirit of Jesus. War is a denial of everything he taught and worked for. What he was saying was that he does cause division. The struggle for the kingdom of God is a bitter struggle, but its warriors carry not swords in their hands, but crosses on their backs. "A man's foes shall be those of his own household," said Jesus. Strange, but true. Sometimes our best friends, and even the members of our own families, stand between us and Christ. For instance, many a parent discourages a son or a daughter from giving himself or herself to full-time Christian service. Many a parent gives no encouragement to children to attend Sunday school or church, and in some cases actually discourage such a practice. Husband and wife often keep the other from living at their best. In our efforts to live Christian lives and to serve the cause of Christ, we often find obstacles and opposition from those of our own household. To be sure, it is often unconscious, but that makes it no better.

Totalitarian Religion.

The religion of Jesus is totalitarian. It claims the allegiance of the whole man and to the whole life. There can be no rival of Christ in the heart. Jesus put it in startling and striking language when he said that unless a man loved him more than he loved father or mother or son or daughter, he was not worthy of him. Christ would be Sovereign of all of life. He demands first place in our lives.

Losing and Saving Life.

"He that loses his life for my sake will find it," or save it. Let one stop thinking about his own life, let him spend and be spent for Christ, let him forget self in thinking of and serving others, and he finds his life, finds it on higher levels, at more points, at greater depths, in richer measure.

kingdom here on earth may lead others to thee and thy saving grace. So grant, O God, that we may give our thanks to thee by living our thanks to thee. Help us to so live our lives that in some small way others may see Christ in us as we go about our daily tasks; and that in knowing us, they will want to know more of our Lord and Saviour, who gives so abundantly the blessings which we enjoy.

"This prayer we make in the name of thy greatest Gift to the world—thy Son, our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

Praise God, from whom all blessings flow;
Praise Him, all creatures here below;
Praise Him above, ye heavenly host;
Praise Father, Son and Holy Ghost.

"Amen."

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Please receive for us the biggest Thanksgiving Offering your church and Sunday school have ever made. I have just this morning received our check from the Convention Office for a week's receipts—which will show in next week's SUN—and it was only $132.88. for a whole week! Only eight Sunday schools out of the 196 sent anything at all. What am I going to do? Please set a goal the biggest ever for your Thanksgiving Offering, and plan for it, and work for it, and see that you send us a big offering. We need $25,708.92 to come out even at the end of the year.

In 1951 there were 4,310 orphanage children cared for by the 28 orphanages in North Carolina. Of these, 2,214 were boys and 2,096 were girls. These 28 orphanages had a total number of employees of 693 or an average of 5 children to each employee. The Christian Orphanage has six matrons—only five right now—and the assistant superintendent, the dairyman, the secretary and the superintendent, and most of the time two colored farm helpers—a total, counting the two colored men, of 12. At the average, that would give us 60 children; we have 80. The average cost per day per child, not including capital investments, was $2.36; ours was only $1.76—thanks to loyal people for gifts of clothing and to our farm. To be sure there is a lot we do without, but in the long run, I suspect our results are as good as the others.

Yesterday afternoon four of my oldest boys and girls came into my office to upset a request that every child in the orphanage was to stay on the campus on Hallow'en night. "Dr. Truitt, you can't mean it. We have always joined others and gone to little parties, and about town, having our share of fun. Some of us have been invited to little home celebrations." How I was besieged by them. They had so much in their favor. Their arguments were good and were presented in a right and pleasant manner. I listened patiently and in fact proudly to the way in which they presented their case. But sometimes destructive pranks are reported on Hallow'en, and it is often reported, and sometimes may be correctly, that "orphanage children did it."

As nearly as possible, we wish to be respected and loved by everybody, and most especially by the good people of our community. In a previous conference with others on our staff, it was thought best to ask the children to remain on the campus. I was the spokesman. The issue was on as soon as the children came home from school. When the four had had their say, I told them it was my personal wish that they comply with the request; that I was glad to do anything I could for any child on the campus and only had their interest and the welfare of their home at heart; and that I needed their help and cooperation as wise leaders on our campus to make it agreeable with the others. They went out happy, I believe, and I was proud of them. I find these boys and girls worthwhile, and the work we are doing is inspiring.

We need your help now. Do not wait until you can give a big gift, but be glad to encourage us with what you can give; and help me to get every church and Sunday school to make their biggest ever Thanksgiving Offering.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

POE.

We, the members of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Ramseur Christian Church, wish to express its sorrow in the passing of a beloved member, Mrs. W. E. Poe.

She was granted a long and useful life. In her going our society has lost a very loyal and true friend. Her long life of service should inspire and draw us closer to God.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father.

2. That we extend our deepest love and sympathy to her family.

Mrs. CLAUDE CRAVEN,
Mrs. J. S. MANESS,
Mrs. E. A. COX,

Committee.

LANKFORD.

Whereas on August 19, 1952 God called to his final reward our beloved friend Mr. Elihu Lankford, for many years a member of Mt. Carmel Congregational Christian Church.

Therefore be it resolved;

1. That the church has lost a beloved and faithful dear friend.

2. That we extend our deepest sympathy to his love ones.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication, a copy to the family and a copy be placed on the records of our church.

Mrs. JULIAN CARR,
Mrs. OTIS V. JOYNER,

Committee.

DUCK.

Miss Sallie Duck departed this life on October 4, 1952. We the members of Mt. Carmel Christian Church wish to pay tribute to her memory;

Therefore be it resolved;

1. That God's way is always best.

2. That we extend to her loved ones our love and prayerful sympathy and commend them to the God of love and mercy.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be spread on the minutes of our Church, and a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Mrs. JULIAN CARR,
Mrs. OTIS V. JOYNER,

Committee.

DREWERY.

We, the members of Mt. Carmel Christian Church wish to pay loving tribute to the memory of our beloved member Mrs. Ella Drewery who died June 29, 1952.

She was a woman of fine Christian character and we shall always cherish her memory.

Therefore be it resolved;

1. That we realize God doeth all things well and that our loss is her gain.

2. That we extend our deepest sympathy to her family and commend them to the great Comforter, who said "Let not your heart be troubled."

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy entered on the records of our church, and a copy sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Mrs. JULIAN CARR,
Mrs. OTIS V. JOYNER,

Committee.

BOWDEN.

Whereas Almighty God has taken from our fold on September 8, 1952, our dear member, Mrs. Anna Carr Bowden, to the home on high, where all tears are wiped away and where the just shall forever reign and be rewarded according to their works.

Therefore be it resolved;

1. That we resign our will to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

2. That our deceased sister's association with us has been and will continue an example to us to live better lives and to perform more faithfully the work which the Master has called us to do.

3. That we extend to her sorrowing husband our heartfelt sympathy in this his sad hour of bereavement and trust that he will be comforted by the Great Healer of all sorrow.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be entered on the church record, a copy be sent to her husband and a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Mrs. JULIAN CARR,
Mrs. OTIS V. JOYNER,

Committee.

OLIVER.

We, the members of Bethlehem Congregational Christian Church, wish to pay tribute to the memory of Ernest Oliver, who departed this life June 2, 1952 after several months of illness.

Mr. Oliver spent his entire life in this community, where he was engaged in farming until health failed him.

He is survived by a daughter, Martha Oliver Britton and two sons, Ernest Oliver, Jr. and Willard Oliver, five grandchildren and a host of friends.

We, the church, wish to submit the following resolutions of respect:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the divine will of our Heavenly Father.

2. That we extend our love and sympathy to his family and pray God's blessings may comfort them.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be placed on our church records and one be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

Mrs. J. E. HARRIS,
Mrs. EDGAR SAVAGE,
ALICE G. BRIDGES,

Committee.

BRACY.

On September 9, 1952 our Heavenly Father, in His infinite wisdom, called home Mr. Walter Bracy. He is survived by six children and a number of grandchildren, and a host of friends.

Mr. Bracy was unassuming and humble, but firm and steadfast in his devotions to Christian principles.

We, the members of Bethlehem Congregational Christian Church, offer the following resolutions:

1. That we bow in humble submission to our Heavenly Father.

2. That we extend our deepest sympathy to the family and commend them to God for comfort.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy placed on our church records and one sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

ALICE G. BRIDGES,
Mrs. EDGAR SAVAGE,
Mrs. J. E. HARRIS,

Committee.

ELON COLLEGE FRESHMAN IN PUERTO RICO.

thus understood and appreciated much more of the things around us.

Also included in these programs of study were tours and home visitations. We called on many families who lived far back in the mountains and discussed their troubles with them in an effort to find the necessary solutions. Our tours included trips to San Juan over the Fourth of July, to El Yunki, which is a tropical rain forest, to a sugar "central," or refinery, to a progressive prison farm, Luquillo Beach, and a three-day trip around the island, stopping at large cities and various denominational missionary centers.

We attended church services on six nights of the week at the small church on top of the mountain where we were living. The boys, who were our fellow campers, were all seminary students; so they took turns planning the services.

We ended our days with much happiness in our hearts and exhaustion aching in our bodies. We tumbled into bed, tied up our mosquito nets, and slept the sleep of contented people.

Being in Puerto Rico and living with persons of a different culture, race and tongue was indeed a grand experience for us. We helped break down the ill feeling of the Puerto Rican people toward the Americans and build up a feeling of Christianity and the spirit of God in each of us.

LOUISE BEMIS.

A Prayer for Christian Women

“O God, our Father and the Father of all mankind, we bow before Thee
To worship Thee, to await Thy guidance,
To renew our strength in the realization of Thy indwelling Spirit.
In many churches and many lands Christian women are waiting before Thee,
To know Thy will. In our common devotion to Thee
May we be united and strengthened in fellowship, one with the other.
Bestow Thy blessing on us all;
Use us as Thou wilt.
Give us vision, wisdom and strength to do our part
In keeping alight the lamp of faith that shall illumine the dark places of the earth.
Thou God of Truth, reveal to each of us new insight in Thy Purpose;
Thou God of Love, fill our hearts with love for all Thy children;
Thou God of Peace, purify our desires and the desires of all mankind
That peace, lasting and righteous, may prevail.
May Thy Kingdom come,
May Thy will be done,
In the name of Thy Son, whom Thou didst give to the world. Amen.”

“What I Believe”

By REV. JAMES W. MADREN

A STATEMENT OF FAITH

Made to the Committee on the Ministry of the Virginia
Valley Central Conference

I BELIEVE in One living and true God. He is God the Father, all-knowing and all-powerful, Creator and Preserver of all things and of all life. God is unchangeable, but our ideas about him change with growth. I believe God created everything good, and gave man the freedom of choice. Conflict with God's will brings evil. He rewards those who follow his will, and punishes those who deny him. God is Spirit. They that worship him must do so in spirit and in truth. He is Personal, Infinite and Perfect. I believe God gave life to man, and will guide man in developing that life. When our earthly task is finished, God will receive the soul unto himself.

I believe the Lord Jesus Christ is the Son of God, equal with God, perfect and full of truth. Jesus is our Mediator, between God and man, and one day will judge the world. Christ is the Head of the Church; and the followers of Jesus will make him the head of their lives. Jesus took upon himself the sins of the world. This includes all peoples in all lands and tongues. He died on the cross that we, through him, may live a life of peace with God and man, and obtain eternal life. I believe that only through Jesus Christ can one be saved; and only through him can we have real happiness in this life.

I believe the Holy Spirit is the Comforter which Jesus promised the disciples. This Holy Comforter came on the Day of Pentecost. To me, the Holy Spirit is God within. He is an individual Guide, leading us into truth.

I believe the Holy Bible is God's written Word, made known to us through inspired men. It is the most sacred Book ever written. I believe the Bible to be “a sufficient rule of faith and practice.”

I believe the Church is the Body of Christ. All who repent of their sins and believe in God through Jesus Christ are a part of this Church. I believe that each person is the “temple of God” to the extent that he lets God reign within.

I believe that all flesh is weak, and that no person is perfect in this life. Through disobedience, we are guilty of sins of omission as well as sins of commission. Therefore, we stand in daily need of forgiveness.

I believe in the Baptism of the Spirit. The baptism of water is an outward testimony of the confession made in the heart. I believe that the Baptism of the Holy Spirit, through the forgiving love and grace of Christ is the Baptism that transforms life.

News Flashes

Make your Thanksgiving Offering for the Christian Orphanage a worthy one. It is badly needed.

Lakeview Community Church, near Burlington, N. C., our newest church, under the leadership of Rev. John G. Truitt, Jr., continues its good progress. Plans are completed for the erection of the church's first unit on the spacious lots donated by Mr. C. R. Faucette of our Burlington, First Church.

The majority of our churches in the five conferences have paid in full all apportionments for the Conference Year 1951-52. These churches are to be commended. It is our hope that those who have not paid in full will send the balances to the Convention Office at Elon College, N. C., at once, so that they may be listed in The Annual, which will go to press very shortly.

Beverly Hills Community Church, Burlington, N. C., had a good day on Sunday, November 2. There were 130 in attendance at the morning service and approximately 100 at Sunday school. The junior choir of 30 voices rendered special music. The morning service was broadcast over WNFS, Burlington, Supt. Wm. T. Scott delivering the sermon. At this service, Elia Ann Snyder, the infant daughter of Rev. and Mrs. W. W. Snyder, was consecrated. Mr. Snyder and his Beverly Hills people are to be commended on the steady progress being made in this new work.

Young Pastor Receives Gift

Rev. Max Vestal, the young pastor of the Pleasant Ridge Congregational Christian Church received a very pleasant surprise last Sunday morning when Mr. Theodore Cox, the superintendent of the Sunday school, presented him with $108.50. This money had been given by the members of the church to help their pastor purchase a new car.

Max Vestal is a senior at Elon College, the efficient editor of our Young People's page, and has been pastor of the Pleasant Ridge Church since last July. He expressed his thanks to the congregation and promised to let them ride in his new automobile.

A Young Minister's Statement of Faith

When James W. Madren, the son of Rev. S. E. Madren, faithful minister of our Virginia Valley Conference, asked that conference for ordination, he was asked to write a statement setting forth what were his religious convictions.

Young Mr. Madren gave his answer in the statement, "What I believe," printed on the front page of this issue of THE SUN.

"One should have a relationship to God that would cause the individual to strive to live up to his deepest convictions," he thinks, and he explains why these convictions finally led him to accept the calling to the ministry of Jesus Christ:

"My Dad being a minister, and my growing up in a Christian home, caused me to know something of the joys as well as the tribulations of a minister. I wanted to help my fellowman in some way, but not as a minister. I decided to be a medical doctor, and I entered Elon College with the idea. In school, I discovered that I was more interested in Philosophy, Sociology and Religion than in any other classes. Then I thought of being a medical missionary to some foreign land. I saw so much in America that was foreign to God; and I wondered: 'How much more "foreign" could a foreign land be?' At once I dedicated my life to the ministry to help make the world a better place in which to live, and to teach Christian living to others. My faith in Christ led me into the ministry, and his love has kept me there."

Reidsville Church Honors Older "Young People"

A gay and happy party was held at the Congregational Christian Church in Reidsville on a recent Thursday evening for the older young people of the church. Sixty or more guests accepted the invitation of Mrs. John Briggs, president of the Women's Auxiliary of the church, and most of

The Eastern Virginia Conference Holds Successful Session

The 132nd annual session of the Eastern Virginia Conference held at the South Norfolk Church, October 29-30, was one of the most successful sessions held in recent years. The attendance was excellent, most churches being represented. Every pastor was present, except one who was kept away because of illness. The reports from the churches indicate a very good year in every area of church life. Only a very few churches failed to pay every item of the apportionment.

Significant actions included endorsement of the $2,500,000 campaign for Elon College, approval of the Church Building Society Loan Fund campaign of the denomination, approval of the convention's financial plan providing for the employment of a Stewardship and Evangelism Secretary. In order to assist in recruiting and training ministerial students, the conference voted to pool its Ministerial Educational Fund and the Scholarship Fund with those of the other conferences in the Convention. The conference reported a large class of ministerial students.

Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, president, dispatched the business of the conference in good order. James H. Lightbourne, Jr. was on hand to serve as the efficient secretary, and Rev. O. D. Poythress and the members of the South Norfolk Church provided most efficiently for the physical comforts of the delegates and pastors.

The various departmental and committee reports revealed interest and concern that the conference continue its good progress. By unanimous vote the conference authorized a committee from the Norfolk area to promote the organization of a new church in that growing metropolitan area.

Dr. D. J. Bowden, dean of Elon College, delivered the conference sermon on Tuesday night, and it was followed by the Communion service conducted by Revs. Lanson Granger and Duane N. Vore. The South Norfolk Church choir and pastor had charge of the worship service.

Addresses were given by Dr. W. M. Stevens, president of the convention; Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College; Rev. James H. Hess, missionary to India for 30 years; Mr. W. K. Newman, secretary of the Church Building Society, New York; Rev. C. Emerson Smith, Virginia Council of Churches; Superintendent John G. Truitt of the Christian Orphanage, and Superintendent Wm. T. Scott. The report of Dr. N. G. Newman, historian, was one of the highlights of the session. Miss Rebecca Mann, president of the Youth Fellowship, brought an interesting report from our youth. Mrs. Garland Spratley from the Women, Mr. G. C. Mann from the Laymen's Fellowship, and Mr. Floyd A. Turner from the Sunday School Convention, each brought encouraging reports of the work of these auxiliaries. The session closed with an impressive Memorial Service conducted by Dr. I. W. Johnson.

Churches Well Represented at Western North Carolina Conference

The 82nd annual session of the Western N. C. Conference was held at the Seagrove Church, Seagrove, N. C., November 5 and 6. To see nearly every church represented by delegates, and all the pastors present was an inspiration. This conference has perhaps made greater progress during the past six or eight years than any in our Convention. This progress is due in no small measure to the leadership of Dr. F. C. Lester, president.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

The Recruiting Work of the Church

A GUEST EDITORIAL

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, M. A., D. D.

Chairman, Southern Convention Committee on Evangelism

Evangelism is the recruiting work of the church. Every pastor should be the recruiting officer for his church. The day of the professional revivalist is rapidly passing, for which fact the churches may well thank God. The responsibility for recruiting the membership of the church has always belonged to the pastor and the church members themselves. In the past many pastors shifted the responsibility to some professional revivalist or ignored the responsibility altogether.

The pastor of a church has no greater privilege than that of meeting men where they live, where they work, and where they play; and by sincere interest and tactfulness enlist them in the fellowship and the service of the church. If any pastor or layman is apologetic about recommending to those outside the fellowship of his church what his church has to offer, he ought to see to it that his church has something to offer which he will be anxious to recommend. It is a reflection on the church which a pastor serves, if he is not enthusiastic and faithful in the work of Christian recruitment. The salesman who does not believe that what he has to sell is of superior value will have but few, if any, sales accounts. The pastor who does not believe with all his heart and soul in the spiritual values which fellowship in his church has to offer, will not enlist many new members in his church.

A pastor's interest in his church, a pastor's interest in people outside the membership of any church, and a pastor's love for God and his faith in the sufficiency of Jesus Christ to meet every spiritual need of man, will be the measure of his evangelistic concern and efforts.

With the better understanding of the origin and nature of the Bible, the larger knowledge of human life, and the fuller appreciation of spiritual values, the ministers of our generation have more to make them zealous in the work of evangelism—the work of Christian recruitment, than had the ministers of any past generation.

The following are possible approaches to our responsibility in Evangelism as ministers and churches:

1. Making contact with the unchurched of our communities.
2. Contacting the inactive members with urgent invitation to become actively affiliated with the church.

3. Taking careful religious censuses in cooperation with other churches of the community.
4. Preparing "Responsibility Lists" of persons for whom the church is spiritually responsible.
5. Observing a special Period of Evangelistic Emphasis during Lent, with a Preaching Mission of a week or ten days at the first of the period.
6. Distributing Evangelistic literature to all members and to prospective members.
7. Having a practical Program of Assimilation for new members.

CHURCH MEMBERS, THINK IT OVER:

There were two men who were business partners. One was a churchman, the other professed no religion at all. One Sunday morning they met on the bus. One was on his way to church, the other was bound for the race track. As they parted, the godless man said, "Look here! Why don't you give up all this hypocrisy?" "What right have you to call my religion hypocrisy?" said the churchman. "Because," was the reply, "If what you profess is true, it's a pretty hopeless case for me. Yet you have never said one word to me in the past twenty years about attending your church or about the help I might get if I did."

The question for every church member in the Southern Convention is—"Are we playing fair with our non-church friends if we fail to talk to them about the church and invite them to attend its services?"

Let's prove to our friends who have no church home that we have religious concern for them and that we are deeply concerned about our church and about their religious needs. As Christians are the one indispensable factor in a Christian society, every church member is under obligation to God and to the world to help increase the number of Christians in his or her own community. One of our nation's greatest Presidents declared that "the biggest thing any man can do is to influence someone else to become a disciple of Jesus Christ."

"Heaven's gate is closed to him who comes alone, Save thou another's soul, and it shall save thine own."

Christian Attitudes

A Series of Meditations

By REV. HENRY E. ROBINSON

Minister, First Christian Church, Burlington, North Carolina

V.—“Toward the Churches”

A young family with two small children moved to town not long ago. He is a college graduate and she is from a family of good standing. He has a promising position in the laboratory of a big corporation. Housing is scarce, so they live in a small apartment. A minister heard about this family from a neighbor and came to call. He found that both were members of a church back home, but during the college years and then the coming of the children, they hadn't been attending much over the past few years. They wanted to get started again, especially for the sake of the children. They were given a warm invitation with the promise of a hearty greeting by the congregation. When Sunday came, Bob had had a hard week on the job with lots of over-time. One of the children had the sniffles. They got a late start. No, this wasn't the day to break into church-going. The next Sunday some friends of Bob's invited them out to a summer cottage. The next Sunday, Bob had to wax the car. It had to sit in the sun all day and just had to be protected.

The minister called again. There were friendly greetings and more promises. But Sunday was the only day they could be together and relax. It was the only day they didn't have to dress up. By the time they got the children ready, attended Sunday school and church, got dinner out of the way and dishes washed, the day was two-thirds gone. Besides the apartments with children didn't go very often. They had lots of company Sunday doing about what they were doing. In the letters that went back home there was an occasional reference about like this: “We have met the nicest minister and hope to start back to church soon.”

The substance of the little story with varying details could be told many times. Since the beginning of the last war over half the people of the nation have moved. Thousands of young people have established homes far removed from the old home town and the familiar surroundings that made church attendance easy. There are thousands of names on the church rolls who are now absentees and must literally be won again to the cause of the church. The greatest single threat to the church today is the paralyzing indifference caused by the pressures of modern living which threaten to turn our nation from Christ to paganism. I believe this is far the greatest danger to the moral fiber of our nation which we face.

It is greater than the threat from any outside force.

This is by no means the cry of despair and defeat for the church. I do not believe that the church will be defeated, because the fate of the church is not in the hands of man. It is in the hands of God who created it. The church has survived through all manner of catastrophe. Soon after it was born, the civilized world as then constituted came crashing down about it. Through persecution, plagues, famine, war and fall of government the church has survived. Through the varying demands of the age of darkness, the age of renaissance, the age of discovery, the age of science and the machine, the church has lived to serve the needs of men. The church will live through the materialism of this day as God's instrument of man's salvation. Not for a moment can the church hide behind this fact and allow itself to grow indifferent to the need of man. Indeed, it must redouble its effort to win men to the way of Christ and to save man from the peril of his own self-righteousness.

Strangely enough, the attitude which men have to the church colors every other relationship. In a community of strong churches, where families worship, pray and study God's word, there are better government, better schools, better working conditions, fewer divorcees, less delinquency, and generally a happier, healthier place in which to live.

The church needs men in her service; but be sure of this—men need the church for the welfare of their private and corporate living. Indifference to the church will weaken her, but she will endure. But indifference to the church is a sure sign that the things in life that are most worthwhile are being neglected and that men are that much poorer in the things which pertain to God. The church has a place for you. Are you in it, are you proud of it, are you satisfied that God's work assigned to you will not have to be done by somebody else?

A Cure for Fault Finding

Just stand aside, and watch yourself go by;

Think of yourself as “he” instead of “I.”

Pick flaws, find fault, forget the man is you.

And strive to make your estimate run true.

The faults of others then will dwarf and shrink.

Love's chain grows stronger by one mighty link,

When you, with “he” as substitute for “I,”

Have stood aside and watched yourself go by.

—Strickland Gililan.

External things and opportunities so abound in American life that, instead of nurturing the true source of happiness, we tend to make it a direct aim. So we end in looking for happiness in possession of the external—in money, a good time, somebody to lean upon, and so on. We are impatient, hurried and fretful because we do not find happiness where we look for it.

—John Dewey.

Riverside and Judson Memorial Churches Enter Our New York City Association

A forward step in the movement toward Christian unity was made when two historic New York churches, the Riverside Church and the Judson Memorial Church, whose ministry extends from Morningside Heights to Washington Square, were received into the New York City Congregational Church Association of the New York Congregational Christian Conference.

The "Recognition Service," a landmark in the widening interdenominational horizons of organized Christianity, was held on Thursday, November 6, at 8 p. m., at the Broadway Tabernacle, Broadway at 56th Street.

This recognition service formalizing the membership of the Riverside Church and the Judson Memorial Church in the New York City Association followed after the regular fall meeting of the association held in the afternoon of the same day.

Dr. Albert J. Penner, minister of the Broadway Tabernacle, delivered a welcoming address, following a formal ecclesiastical procession. Dr. Robert J. McCracken responded for the Riverside Church and the Rev. Robert W. Spike for the Judson Memorial Church. Dr. Douglas Horton, minister of the General Council, gave the concluding address, his subject being "The Outrage and Necessity of Conformity." Ministers and lay delegates from Congregational churches throughout the metropolitan area attended.

The ministers of these two churches were recognized as Congregational Christian ministers, while retaining their present ministerial standing. They were received by Dr. Alfred Grant Walton, minister of Flatbush-Tompkins Congregational Church and chairman of the Credentials Committee of the New York City Association, as ministerial members of the association and of the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches. The ministers so received from Riverside Church are, Dr. Robert J. McCracken, Dr. Norris L. Tibbetts and Dr. J. Gordon Chamberlin, and from Judson Memorial Church, the Rev. Robert W. Spike. Dr. C. Ivar Hellstrom of Riverside Church is already a Congregational Christian minister.

The Riverside Church and the Judson Memorial Church will both maintain their historic Baptist connections, while gaining a broader base for their community and world-wide activities. The new affiliation has become possible because both Baptist and Congregational Christian churches are congregational in operation: that is, the members control the church's affairs. Both are autonomous, having no creedal requirements for membership. "We feel this is a method of moving toward cooperation and unity which may be adopted as a pattern in many other cases," said Dr. Douglas Horton.

Other Congregational Christian leaders were equally enthusiastic in welcoming the new churches into the Congregational Christian fellowship. "We are delighted," said Dr. Robert Bruce, minister and superintendent of the New York Congregational Christian Conference, "at the new opportunities which are given us for service through these two churches." A similar note was expressed by Dr. Truman Douglass, executive director of the Board of Home Missions, when he said, "We welcome the new resources of leadership and personal capacity that will be brought to our common enterprises by the memberships of these churches!"

Just three years ago the Riverside Church appointed a committee on ecumenical relations to explore the possibility of closer ties for the Riverside Church with churches in different denominations while maintaining its historic connection with Baptist churches. In making its report to the church, the committee said in part, "With more than thirty denominations represented in the membership, Riverside has achieved Christian unity in its own life and work. Now it is proposed that Riverside shall have an additional affiliation with the Congregational Christian churches. This would bring about actual interdenominational relations and represent a forward step toward greater Christian unity at the level where a local church can act.

"The operation of this plan will increase Riverside's opportunities for service. We need to work with others and to feel ourselves in association with them. We need ways to reach beyond ourselves. Moreover, Riverside can demonstrate in a practical way its faith in Christian unity. Opportunities to provide leadership, to exercise influence, and to participate in world-wide Christian movements will be increased beyond what is now possible. We shall open new doors which will allow our young people to enter more freely into Christian service."

In announcing the desire of the Riverside Church to affiliate with the Congregational Christian Churches, Dr. Robert J. McCracken, minister of the church since the retirement of the Rev. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick in 1946, declared: "The old controversies are no longer real. They stand as monuments to battles of a bygone day and to institutional rigidity and conservatism. Most of the people in the churches know little about the theological and ecclesiastical differences which long ago gave rise to the denominations. They are more concerned that their children should become Christian than that they should become, say Episcopalians or Lutherans, or Methodists, or Baptists."

The Judson Memorial Church, built in Washington Square in 1892, is a memorial to two great Baptist pioneers, Adoniram Judson, the first Protestant foreign missionary from this country, and Edward Judson, his son, who was the founder of the Judson Church. It is sometimes known as the first institutional church in America. Its relationship to the New York Baptist City Society, which has been the administrator of its property and funds since 1913, will remain unchanged. The present program of the church is varied. It serves New York University with a student cooperative dormitory and a full time minister to students. It ministers to the Greenwich Village artist, writer and intellectual. It also provides guidance for the children and youth of this neighborhood through a full scale weekday program of group work and counseling.

The Rev. Robert W. Spike, pastor of the Judson Memorial Church, cites its present aim as follows: "Our job is to maintain the church as an effective Protestant witness in the Greenwich Village scene. We look at our cosmopolitan community as a totally new kind of mission field. This means that we use new methods and new ways of getting into the vital areas

The Annual Session of the North Carolina Church Related Conference

The North Carolina Conference of Church Related Colleges was held on Thursday, November 6, at Salem College, Winston-Salem, North Carolina, and in conjunction with the annual session of the regular North Carolina College Conference. The principle item of business to be transacted was the presentation and consideration of a special committee's report that had to do with the establishing of the North Carolina Foundation of Church Related Colleges. There had been a previous meeting of the presidents of the colleges for the consideration of this organization. At the first meeting there were a number of questions to be cleared up which left doubts in the minds of many of the representatives. At this meeting those questions were pretty well understood.

The purpose of this foundation is to make a united appeal to business and industry for funds for current expenses of member colleges. At this meeting it was made clear that any institution would be at liberty to continue its campaign for capital funds and that it had a right to go to any foundation, corporation or business for funds for buildings, endowment or improvements. The foundation concerns itself only with the solicitation of funds for current accounts. Since Elon College has not canvassed or received donations outside of the church for current funds in the past twenty years, it seemed evident that membership in this foundation would not handicap Elon College in any way, but, on the other hand, it would offer an opportunity to secure funds to help with current expenses—salaries, heat and light bills, and printing and publicity expenses. It would seem that the day will come and is about here when, because of mounting costs of operating the college, we shall have to canvass for funds to keep the college out of the "red" in operating expense.

There were twenty-nine institutions represented. Sixteen of the number had cleared either with the Executive Committees or complete Boards of Trustees and were willing to join with the group in establishing this foundation. Nine of the others felt certain that their institutions would join, but wanted an opportunity to confer with their Board of Trustees before giving a definite answer.

A meeting of members of the foundation, together with the nine who gave conditional acceptance, is called for Monday morning, November 17, at 12:30 for a luncheon meeting to be held at Salem College, Winston-Salem, N. C. At this meeting definite steps will be taken to form the foundation permanently. April 16, 1953, is set as the deadline for charter membership in the foundation. This would seem to be a good move for our church related or privately endowed colleges in North Carolina. I trust that the Elon College constituency will be agreeable to their college accepting membership in the foundation, and will continue to cooperate as they always have.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee and other members of the Board of Trustees, on October 23, authorization was given for membership in the foundation.

The Western North Carolina Conference

The annual session of the Western North Carolina Conference was held at our Scagrove Church, Rev. Rosser Lee Clapp, pastor. I have been attending the Western North Carolina Conference for the last twenty years. These conference sessions have been improving in personnel, program and procedure year after year. I am sure that this was one of the best sessions that it has been my privilege to attend. The various institutions and interests of the church and conference were carefully considered and presented in an attractive and convincing way.

Dick and Dorothy Jackson represented the missionary interest of the church. They both spoke of the work in China, their experiences while they served in China, and their hopes for the future of the church.

The conference was well attended, and I am sure measures were taken that will prove constructive.

The officials of the conference and the Program Committee presented an elaborate and most attractive bulletin in which the full program of the conference session and reports to be presented to conference were presented.

It was a privilege to be present and to present the condition, needs and aims of Elon College.

The Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Fund

The Convention authorized this fund to supplement the permanent funds of the College for a more generous support of the Department of Christian Education in the college, with the hope that the college would add an additional instructor for that department. This was done years ago.

The college advanced, out of its current funds, about $30,000 to complete the $100,000 goal for this fund, with the understanding and the provision that as the churches paid their allotments the current funds would be reimbursed. The college needs this money badly now.

Bethel Church of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, has sent a check for $100 which completes this church's share of the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Fund. If your church has not completed its payments, it would be appreciated if it could do so now.

Amount previously reported . . . .	$95,448.96
Bethel Church . . . . .	100.00

Grand total received . . . . . $95,548.96

Apportionment Giving

We have come to the end of the conference year for all of the conferences constituting the Southern Convention. Some of the institutions and boards will receive their total apportionment; some will not unless a miracle is wrought. Elon College comes in the latter class. Not within the last twenty years has the college received its full apportionment. This year is no exception. A total of $15,000 for the college is apportioned to the conferences by the Southern Convention. To date, $11,802.83 has been received, leaving a balance due of $3,197.17.

Needless to say, the college needs this money very, very badly. Should you wonder why the church should contribute to Elon College, if you will consider the contributions that Elon College has made to the church, your

"Christians from Boston" Celebrate One Hundredth Anniversary

Miss Alice E. Cary of Boston, Massachusetts, recently left by Pan American Airways from San Francisco, en route to a coral pin prick called "Kusaie" set down in 5,000,000 square miles of South Seas, to visit those "Christians from Boston" in Micronesia, who became known and loved during World War II by the American Armed Forces.

She carried with her as a gift to the island churches from the American Board, which planted Christianity in Micronesia 100 years ago, a silver baptismal bowl lined with gold and suitably inscribed. This gift, which fittingly enough is a Paul Revere reproduction, will be presented by Miss Cary together with two memorials from the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches in America and the American Board as a special observance in Kusaie when the 100th birthday of the founding of these churches will be commemorated.

Miss Carey, who is American Board secretary for Japan, the Philippines and the Micronesian Islands, stopped over in Honolulu until October 26, when she continued her flight to Kwajalein. She will spend a month and a half visiting among those "First Century Christians" in the Carolines Trust Territory of the Pacific. Her administrative tour will also include Japan, the Philippine Islands, and possibly India. Miss Cary expects to return to the United States around April 1, 1953.

The first missionaries to Micronesia, sent 100 years ago by the American Board from Boston, included two Hawaiian Christians from Honolulu as well as six Americans from the mainland. In the group were Rev. and Mrs. B. G. Snow and Rev. and Mrs. Luther D. Gulick, who left Boston Harbor, November 18, 1851, aboard the little sailing vessel, Esther May.

Four wearisome months later the Esther May reached Honolulu, where the missionaries changed boats and landed in Kusaie in the summer of 1852, or nine months after sailing out of Boston Harbor. Today, Miss Cary, traveling mostly by plain, covers the same distance in less than ten days. This includes crossing the United States by train and a brief visit in Hawaii.

The story of the island Christians came before the American public in World War II in large part because of the tales of the American Armed Forces. One incident, which has become a classic, is that of the Army Chaplain and other officers who, when trying to evacuate the native people to places of safety, were faced by one elderly little lady who emerged from a cave tightly clasping a Bible. She eyed the officers and defiantly

Miss Cary looks forward to meeting the former King John, ruler of the Kusaieans, who after his island became a democracy happily laid his royal title aside. Recently ordained a Christian minister, King John, now Rev. John Sigrah, looks with greater pride upon his post as a Christian pastor than he ever did upon the status of king.

In addition to presenting the baptismal bowl and memorials, Miss Cary is giving to the schools in the islands four large pictures of Jambor's beautiful head of Christ entitled, "Jesus of Nazareth." Because glass is so hard to secure in the islands, these pictures have been treated with a special plastic coating that will make glass unnecessary.

Following the war, Rear Admiral C. H. Wright, then General Inspector of the Pacific Ocean area and Deputy High Commissioner of the Trust Territory, traveled among the people asking what they wanted most in the way of help. He was amazed to receive the same answer time after time, namely—"Send back the missionaries."

Later, Captain J. P. W. Vest, for two years Governor of the Marshalls, came to Boston to ask that the American Board send more missionaries. Interviewed by the press, Captain Vest was asked, "Are you from Boston?" "No," replied the captain, who came from Baltimore, Maryland, "But after being in the islands for a while I began to think I must be from Boston, since out there Boston is synonymous with America."

Miss Cary was born in Japan of distinguished Congregational Christian missionary parents and was educated at Wellsley College. She worked in Japan for over 25 years before being called to international headquarters in Boston, and now resides at 56 Concord Avenue, Cambridge, Massachusetts. Following World War II, she was the only woman member of the first interdenominational church commission to go back to Japan, and while there had an audience with Emperor Hirohito and an interview with General Douglas McArthur.

Eastern Virginia C. M. A to Meet With Windsor Church

The Eastern Virginia Christian Missionary Association will hold its annual meeting at the Windsor Congregational Christian Church, Tuesday, December 9, 1952. The session will be called to order at 10:30 a. m. by President H. E. Chutehfield. All churches of the conference are urged to remember this date and to plan now to have a representation present. Not all of the churches of the conference have reported in the past several years, but it is hoped to have a hundred percent there in this session.

Time was devoted to the work of the association at the last annual conference, and perhaps many of our church people were made aware of the activities of the Christian Missionary Association. Many of you have learned how the organization operates on volunteer memberships to further the work of the missionary enterprises within the conference. The dues are $10 for organizations and men, and $5 for the women.

We must become new church mind ed in our conference, as it has been

Friendly Service

One of the growing departments of our women's work is that of Friendly Service. Reports indicate that many gifts were sent last year to the Migrant Workers, to Franklinton Center, to Ryder Memorial Hospital in Puerto Rico and overseas.

Our page this week is concerned with three types of Friendly Service for this year. One is the regular project sponsored by our Southern Convention department—gifts at our Christmas meetings for Ellis Island. Another is concerned with gifts to India, about which we heard last spring from Miss Oline Nicholson, which consist of many things we would ordinarily discard. A third is coupons for our Christian Orphanage.

In addition to the needs of our local communities at Thanksgiving and Christmas, let us remember these other groups as we plan our Friendly Service program for the year.

* * * * *

"We Use What You Would Throw Away"

The above quotation is from Miss Oline Nicholson, missionary of our church to India, who spoke at the Women's Rallies last spring. Miss Coghill writes that several have requested Miss Nicholson's address recently and thinks it would be well if we would repeat it here—and thus we would like to remind you of the things you can send to her. The address is:

Miss Oline Nicholson,
Rachanyapuram School for Village Girls,
Pudur P. O., Madurai,
South India.

In sending boxes, be sure to send used or old articles in separate box and mark on outside: "No Commercial Value, Used Articles for Charitable Institution." On customs declaration tag, put "Used Articles—No Value," where it asks for Value. Scrapbooks, papers, old Christmas cards, books, should be sent separately by book post, without being valued. Maximum weight of each box, 20 pounds.

Clothing.

Used cotton clothing for men, women and children, including baby clothes and blankets and sheets; old felt hats; all scraps and remnants left over from sewing—even very small scraps.

School Supplies.

Notebooks and any kind of paper; crepe paper; pencils and pens, old or

Plans for Christmas Party

Each local society president should have received ere this the plans for a "Christmas Party and Program for Ellis Island," as prepared by Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, 315 N. Edgeworth Street, Greensboro, N. C., chairman of Friendly Service for our Southern Convention women.

This program will require planning ahead. It is suggested that the Christmas tree be trimmed with small flags of the United Nations. This set of 61 flags costs $1.00 and must be ordered from: American Association for the United Nations, 45 E. 65th Street, New York 21, N. Y.

The women are asked to bring gifts for children arriving at Ellis Island from overseas. It is urgently requested that bags accompany these gifts—large, strong bags with a drawstring in the top—which may be used to carry the possessions of these children. Someone has suggested that feed sacks would be good to use. You do not fill the sack—but send it for them to use in place of a suitcase.

You will need to check with your hostesses ahead of time, for cookies from foreign nations are suggested for refreshments, and the recipes for them are given.

Let us plan ahead and have fine and different Christmas programs in our societies—and then let me have reports of them for this page in The Sun!

new; crayons, colored pencils; paste, scotch tape; scrapbooks and any kind of children's books; Sunday school lesson books and song books and papers; odd assortments of tacks, nails, screws, bolts, etc.

Crafts Supplies.

Thread, needles, embroidery hoops, patterns, scissors, buttons, beads of any kind, old pocketbook tops, ribbons of any kind, velvet scarfs, plastic or oilcloth pieces, crochet needles, etc.

Odds and Ends.

Old Christmas cards, birthday and other greeting cards; jigsaw puzzles (all pieces should be there!); games; old or new costume jewelry; old or new purses or vanity cases; bobby pins, barrettes; soap, balls, marbles, dolls, hard candy, religious calendars, picture frames.

Why not give your Friendly Service chairman the job of collecting some of these things for use in India? Or ask a children's group to collect some of them? Or clean out the Sunday school literature cabinet and send Miss Nicholson old quarterlies and papers?

Coupons! Coupons! Coupons!

The Christian Orphanage at Elon College still wants coupons. Here is another job you can give your Friendly Service chairman, or you may prefer to designate some other person to collect coupons from your society.

So far, the orphanage has received $145.33 from coupons sent to them by our church women. This has not cost anyone a penny—simply the trouble of saving them and sending them in. Let us keep on with this helpful service to our orphanage.

Right now there is a special offer on two kinds of coupons:

Double value, $8 per 1000, on Luzianne Coffee and Tea, to December 31, 1952; and Double value, $8 per 1000, on Octagon Toilet Soap, Cleanser, and Granulated Soap, to July 31, 1953.

The other items on which they regularly receive cash are: Octagon Soap products, Health Club Baking Powder, Mrs. Filbert's Margarine, Mrs. Filbert's Salad products, Ballard's Obelisk Flour, Ballard's Prepared Mixes, Rumford Baking Powder, Borden's Silver Cow Evaporated Milk and Magnolia Condensed Milk.

The superintendent of the orphanage, Dr. John G. Truitt, asks that societies or individuals keep coupons of like kinds together and send them in bundles of 25, 50 or 100 of each kind. He ends his letter concerning the collection of coupons by saying, "We do appreciate the help you have given so far and count on your making another big effort."

How to Make a Flannelgraph

Because of some discussion on the subject of flannelgraphs at the annual meeting of the Western North Carolina Conference, Carl Key was requested to ask his wife to write these directions for publication in THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Flannelgraphs, when purchased, are often quite expensive, but home-made ones can be made at little cost. Children who have a share in making one themselves, benefit far more than by sitting back to just look at the commercial variety. The finished product may not be as artistically beautiful, but the value of having children use their creative abilities in such a project is of greater educational importance.

Use a piece of white cotton flannel for the background. About 24 x 18 inches is a good size. Sketch in a background scene with crayons, and color the sky, water, grass, trees, etc., by rubbing the crayons on the flannel. The characters to illustrate the story or song can be drawn or traced on paper, colored with paint or crayons. Old Sunday school lesson papers often give helpful ideas for drawing the people, animals or buildings that will be needed for your flannelgraph picture. On the back of each part to be put against the background cloth, fasten small scraps of flannel with scotch tape. Be sure enough of the flannel is exposed so it will cling to the flannel graph background when placed against it. The fuzz of the two surfaces makes them stick in place. The same background scene can sometimes be used for more than one story by changing the figures or characters.

Why not try illustrating the Christmas story of the shepherds and angels from the Book of Luke, or the carol of the Friendly Beasts? The journeys of Abraham and the story of feeding the multitude are also good subjects for a flannelgraph.

BARBARA C. KEY.

Building Blocks

By LOUISE B. FERGUSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"I don't know what to do," said a small boy to his grandmother.

"Well, why don't you play with your blocks?" she asked.

"Oh! Mom said she was tired of cleaning around them—'Such a litter,' she complained. So she put them all up in the attic somewhere."

"Oh, that's too bad, but perhaps I can do something about it," consoled his grandmother. "How about putting them in my study? I could fix a place for them by arranging some small wooden boxes. The boxes could be placed on their sides against the wall for a building surface and you could use the lower parts to store extra blocks and their boxes. In that way you could keep them all off the floor and, what is best of all, your buildings could stay up as long as you liked. Then you could add to them or reconstruct them."

This was a very interesting idea to Peter.

Three wooden boxes, each about 10 by 10 by 16 inches, were found. Two of them were placed on their sides, one on top of the other. The third box was also placed on its side and against the first two. Together they occupied a space of about 10 by 32 inches and the higher of the two levels was 20 inches.

It didn't take Peter long to start his block-building, and he never seemed to tire of thinking up new forms of construction. He would often erect his building on the single box, bringing it to the upper level of the other two boxes and then finishing it with a square peg-board, having a row of pegs in one side for a fence. Then, when more pretentious projects were in order, a larger board, a drawing board, was sometimes added. Eventually the blocks most used were the cubes, bricks, triangles, and pillars of the Froebel "gifts" because they were so very accurate in measurements, lending themselves to truly wonderful constructions. The larger log-cabin sets, of course, could not be used in such a small space; they require a whole room, temporarily, for construction purposes.

In the beginning Peter liked to follow plans suggested to him, but later, when he became more expert, he drew plans of his own buildings on checkered paper—not only floor plans but elevations, too. He would take pleasure in building over and over again from his own plans. The only restriction placed on his activities was that no blocks must be left on the floor. As there was plenty of room in the open parts of the boxes for all unused blocks, this was no hardship, and Peter enjoyed feeling the security and durability of his creations.

His grandmother has never regretted devoting that space in her study to her grandson's block-building. It not only solved the disorder problem for his mother and was a constant source of amusement for Peter, but it gave his grandmother the enjoyment of many precious hours of his society. During his very frequent, quiet visits she had, also, the opportunity of watching the steady growth of his creative ability, which had taken place because of the permanence of this building space.

Peter is now thirteen years old and has gone away to prep school. Before leaving he said to her, "Shall I put away all the blocks or shall I leave a building for you?"

"Leave it," she answered quickly.

So now she still has one of his beautiful constructions to delight in as she reads or listens to his letters and so follows with confidence his further development.

Southern Convention Youth Council Meets at Moonelon

The Southern Convention Youth Council held a meeting on September 13, 1952, at Moonelon.

Philip Mann, president of the council, called the meeting to order. The others present were: Bettie Burt Hight, vice-president, and president of the E. N. C. Youth Fellowship; Louise McLeod, secretary; Meryle Mauldin, treasurer; Page Painter, Social Action chairman; Curtis Young, Missionary Action chairman; Rebecca Mann, president of the E. Va. Youth Fellowship; Rev. Ralph Galt and Mrs. Mark Andes, counselors; Rev. Wm. J. Andes, chairman of the Board of Christian Education; Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, educational secretary. Visitors included: Valley—Margel Oates, Thomas Madren, Rev. Henry Harmon, Mrs. Dewey Dofflemeyer, Donnie Litten, Mrs. Ralph Galt and two sons; North Carolina—Ruth Dunn, Tom Targett, David Crowle; Eastern Virginia—Eddie Bryant and Lewis Gwinn. Other guests included: Rev. Howard Bozarth, Laverne Brady, Louise Bemis and John Truitt, Jr.

The opening worship service was led by Curtis Young.

A report of the National Council Pilgrim Fellowship was given by Curtis Young and Philip Mann. The new Three-Plan Program of the National Council was explained: (1) Faith—Stewardship, group worship, personal evangelism, and leadership training; (2) Action—Christian action, international areas of study, national areas of study, and community reorganization of other nationalities; (3) Christian Fellowship—to cooperate with all who tend to seek Christian fellowship, and recreation.

Tom Targett, president of the North Carolina Student Fellowship, gave a report of the meeting of the United Student Fellowship at Illinois College, Jacksonville, Ill.

Rev. Howard Bozarth, pastor of the Elon College Community Church, presented the North Carolina Student Fellowship. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill presented the program materials for the coming year.

Committees were appointed, as follows: Program Materials—Bettie B.

Hight, Curtis Young, Mrs. Mark Andes; Finance—Meryle Mauldin, Donnie Litten, Lewis Gwinn, Rev. Ralph Galt, Ruth Dunn.

The meeting was adjourned for supper.

The evening program featured Miss Laverne Brady, who spoke of her experiences on a National Youth Caravan this summer, and Miss Louise Bemis, who worked in a Work Camp in Puerto Rico. Both talks were very inspiring and gave several persons present the incentive to work on these next summer.

Rev. Henry E. Robinson, chairman of the Moonelon Committee, presented Moonelon to the group.

The evening meeting adjourned.

* * *

After breakfast, September 14, the morning worship was led by Miss Rebecca Mann.

Donnie Litten told about the Lord's Acre project at Wissler's Chapel.

Miss Bettie Burt Hight presented the Projects Committee's report to build a cabin at Moonelon. Voted.

A committee was appointed to investigate the possibility of building: Curtis Young, chairman, Philip Mann and Louise McLeod. The committee for future planning of building is: Curtis Young, chairman; Page Painter, Rebecca Mann, Louise McLeod, Bettie Burt Hight, and Philip Mann, ex officio.

Resolution by Rev. Harmon: Resolved that the Young People's Convention follow the missionary emphasis of the denomination by presenting to the conferences for their action a list of projects secured by the Convention Director of Religious Education and the Missionary Action chairman of the Young People's Convention."

Voted: Rebecca Mann be reporter to THE CHRISTIAN SUN for proceedings of this meeting and that the secretary send copies of the minutes of this meeting to all officers and counselors.

Voted: That we recommend a planning conference for each conference, to make their own plans for the year.

Report of Finance Committee—in absence of Meryle Mauldin, chairman—given by Ruth Dunn.

Budget and report of Finance Committee accepted.

Voted Executive officers, with Page Painter as member at large, constitute Executive Committee for this year.

Voted: Executive Committee be allowed to change budget according to their discretion.

Report of Program Materials Committee adopted.

Voted: Accept Three-Plan Commission of National Pilgrim Fellowship, to go into effect in fall of 1953.

Voted: To adjourn.

LOUISE McLEOD,
Secretary.

Western Carolina Youth Rally

The Young People of the Western N. C. Conference will have the rally on Sunday, November 30, at the Antioch (Randolph) Christian Church. The program will begin with registration at 2:30, followed by an important and well-planned program.

The officers will be elected for the coming year. This was to have been done at the last rally, but due to bad weather and a small attendance, it was voted to postpone election until the November rally.

Don't forget to bring a well-filled basket; the host church will provide the drinks. It is important that you be present at this rally. I will see you at the Antioch Christian Church on Sunday, November 30, at 2:30 o'clock. Please come.

DOLAN TALBERT,
President.

Winston-Salem Halloween Party

On Saturday night, November 1, the Youth Fellowship of the Winston-Salem Congregational Christians enjoyed a Halloween Party, which netted $45 for the Moonelon project. Included in the evening's fun were costumes, fishing, cake walks and other games.

On the following Sunday evening, the young people held a service of dedication for the money raised. The adults of the church were invited to attend this very impressive service.

Jesus' Thanksgiving and Ours

LESSON VIII—NOVEMBER 23, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."—Psalm 126: 3.

LESSON: Matthew 11: 2-6, 25-30.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isaiah 35: 1-10.

Concerning Doubt.

John the Baptist was "down in the dumps." He had "the blues." He was discouraged. He was plagued by doubt. And no wonder; accustomed as he was to freedom, he was a prisoner, in a dungeon in a great fortress set in the midst of a wilderness. He was cut off from his friends and from his work. Furthermore, he had been doomed to die. He felt sure that he would never get out of the place. He felt lonely, afraid and neglected.

His doubt was due in part to his physical condition—doubt is often caused by a low ebb in bodily welfare. It was caused in part by his inactivity—people who are active can ill stand inactivity and confinement. But one of the chief factors in his doubt was the fact that although Jesus knew about John's situation, he was doing nothing about it. If he were the Messiah, if he had the power he claimed to have, why did he not do something to release John? He could easily by his word or his work, deliver John from prison and from death. Like lots of folks, John doubted Christ because Christ apparently was not doing anything for him, was not delivering him from his personal predicament. People often doubt God, and Christ, for instance, if one of their prayers goes unanswered, or if they do not find personal deliverance from some ill or untoward circumstance. There were many people who doubted God because he did not prevent the last World War, or did not stop it after it started. And they wonder why he doesn't do something about this mess in Korea, too.

Then, too, John doubted Jesus because he was not acting the way a Messiah was supposed to act. John, you will recall, pictured Jesus as one who would baptize with fire, who would be a man threshing grain, or a man cutting down unfruitful trees.

And here he was, humble and meek, spending his time "going about doing good," without fanfare or fire either. Perhaps, after all, he had been mistaken when he pointed out Jesus as the Messiah.

One thing should be said for John—he went straight to Jesus with his doubts. Though he could not go in person, he at least sent a delegation to Jesus to ask him if he were really "the One who should come," or whether they should look for another. And the reply of Jesus was significant. "Go back to John," he said "and tell him what you have seen and heard: men who were blind are seeing, folks who were lame are walking, lepers who were unclean have been cleansed, folks who were deaf now hear, folks who were dead have been brought back to life again, and poor folks have the good news preached to them." All too often, we look for God and the evidences of God in the unusual and spectacular, when all the while God is at work all around us, and even within us. God is to be seen in the lightning and to be heard in the thunder, but he is to be seen more clearly in the power of sunshine and growth, and in kindness and loving service.

Concerning Thanksgiving.

The theme of the lesson is, "Jesus' Thanksgiving—and Ours." There is only one reference to thanksgiving in the lesson, and that only a passing one. "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou didst hide these things from the wise and prudent (or understanding), and didst reveal them unto babes." To be sure, God reveals himself to folks through their intellects or their intelligence. But he also makes himself known through the intuition and the emotion. Furthermore, a man must put away his arrogance and his conceit, his confidence in his own wisdom, and become humble and as a little child. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him. And there are many humble and unlettered and unlearned people who know more of God than brilliant and bright philosophers and professors, and supposedly "smart folks." Instincts and intuitions, as well as, and even more than intellects, are channels of revelation of God.

One could find many other instances of the spirit of gratitude and thanksgiving which characterize the life of Jesus. No man ever had less of this world's goods, but no man had more of the spirit of gratitude. He demonstrated that material things are not the source of the good life, and certainly not the prerequisite of a grateful heart.

At this Thanksgiving Season, we can well be thankful among other things—among hundreds of other things—that God does reveal himself unto "babes." He gives grace to the humble and comes to those who are poor in spirit. Let us give God thanks for this priceless spiritual boon.

Concerning Burden Bearing.

"Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light." Multitudes have turned to these words and have found that God is not slack concerning his promises. Christ plainly, and with no apology, stated that people, even his chosen people, would have burdens which they would have to carry. It is a part of life. But they could be of good cheer. Using a figure of speech which his hearers could readily understand, he said that he would bear one end of the yoke—and he takes the heavy end—and that he would help them to carry their burdens. Thus, they would learn of him. Thus they would find rest unto their souls. As they cast their burden on the Lord, they would find that he would sustain them.

* * *

Jesus' Thanksgiving—and Ours. We have discovered something of the spirit of gratitude which he who had not where to lay his head, had. He who had so little was thankful for so much. What about you, what about us? At this Thanksgiving Season, do you think about what you lack or about what you have? Do you return thanks, not only at Thanksgiving, but throughout the year? And do you give evidence of the spirit of gratitude and thanksgiving throughout the year by the way you live and the way you serve. It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord and to sing praises unto his name. We are ed, we felt like our work was not in vain. Thanks to our president, Mrs. R. M. Cook.

The program committee did a fine packet. The Bible study, "Applied Christianity," was a source of spiritual strength. The mission study books have taught us to love those whom we have not seen, and we are anxious to help care for their needs. The more we learn about those less fortunate than we are, the greater the burden becomes. We trust by our offerings sent in each quarter, some have found there is a Highway in which they can walk and learn more about the love and goodness of the Heavenly Father.

Friendly Service gifts were sent as follows: Towels and bath cloths to Franklinton Center, kitchen supplies to the Migrants, and a large package of nice clothing to the Philippines. To the sick and shut-ins in our church community were sent flowers, cards, trays, gowns, bed jackets and house coats.

We sponsored a social for our Sunday school superintendent and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. J. Paul Huffines. A delightful picnic dinner was served, after which the couple were presented a lovely dinner set of china as a token of appreciation for their untiring efforts in behalf of our Sunday school work.

World Community Day, Thank Offering service and World Day of Prayer were held at the church, with an inspiring service for each event.

A Life Membership was given to Mrs. Laura Gerringer, a charter member, and a Memorial for Miss Ella Shepherd, who was also a charter member. Miss Shepherd passed from our midst during the year.

Seven delegates attended the conference at Ingram, and six attended the spring rally at Palm Street, in Greensboro.

The outstanding accomplishment of the year was the organizing of a new society with fifteen members. Their work is to be commended. At a joint meeting at the church on September 4, these officers were installed: Mrs. Carston Hogan, president; Mrs. R.

M. Cook, vice-president; Mrs. Dee Murray, secretary; Mrs. E. W. Brown, treasurer; Mrs. Ted Andrews, Bible study leader; Mrs. P. L. Summers, program chairman. The new society officers are: Mrs. Gordon Powell, president; Miss Iris Pritchette, secretary; Mrs. Estine Pritchette, treasurer; Miss Iris Pritchette, program leader.

As we enter the new year to try to help "Build for Peace," we covet the prayers of Southern Convention women.

Years Work—Elon College
Cradle Roll

1. Began Cradle Roll year October, 1951, with 92 children on roll.
2. Enrolled 45 new members early in fall, making total enrollment 137.
3. Made 45 or more visits to enroll this number of new members. Birth certificates were given to each new child.
4. Made 137 visits delivering mite boxes and books on first call.
5. Over 378 visits delivering library books, during year.
6. Other visits made to new babies and sick children.
7. Birthday, Christmas and Valentine cards sent each child.
8. Egg hunt given children at Easter.
9. Cheer Cards sent to children during year when visits were impossible. Cards sent to children is excellent means of keeping in contact with mothers and children.
10. Library books were distributed when transportation permitted. Our Cradle Roll circulating library is most excellent means of visiting children 3 to 6 each month.
11. Lost 37 children during year, by moving away.
12. The Cradle Roll rally took place at the Parish House, August 26, 1952, with 115 mothers, children and guests.
13. The program for the rally was the one sent out by Mrs. Wallace, the District Cradle Roll Superintendent. We found this program very helpful.
14. There were 22 children promoted at the rally.
15. Contribution from mite boxes was $70.50.
16. Refreshments were served on the Parish House lawn after much enjoyment of children's games.
17. We closed the year with 78 children on roll.

 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Billy Lamberson, five years old, joined our family this week. He is a fine little fellow, and seems to appreciate very much his nice warm home. I do not know what I would have done at five years of age, if I had had no place to go. I know one thing, I would have missed my father and mother, and brothers and sisters a great deal. When I go back to that old home now—my sister owns it and lives there—it looks good to me, and what happy memories it brings forth.

Well, Billy Lamberson begins at the Christian Orphanage at five. He will miss a great deal by not having a home and a family. Has God blessed you with what he is missing? If he has, you will be glad to help us make this home here just as good for him as we rightly can. Were you deprived of a good home and your own childhood home life? Some people in that position are among our best contributors. "I want to help some boy or girl have a better chance than I had," they say. Are you a father or mother, with your own sweet little children right with you? Give thanks at Thanksgiving by sending your orphanage a generous contribution. We are doing the best we can here under a great financial strain. Your sharing with us will help so much.

Look at the total in this report from the Sunday schools and churches of our entire Southern Convention for this week—$132.88—and see if you can figure why I am asking you for your help at Thanksgiving!

People say such nice things about the work here, and we all appreciate that. Everywhere I go I am encouraged with kind words. Keep them coming, but salt them down with something with which to pay our bills here.

I wish to pay my compliments to John T. Kernodle, managing editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, for the excellent work he did on our special edition. Save that number and you have the ages, birthdays, names, of every child here. You have a picture of our four seniors—three girls and a boy. They are David Haith, Virginia Black, Ann Kinch and Doris Ward. They are to graduate this year and will be going into further schooling or training. They are four fine young people. We are proud of them here, and if you knew them personally, you would be proud of them too.

Use that special edition of THE SUN for your speeches before Sunday schools, churches and other organizations for your special Thanksgiving offering. The Convention in session last May recognized that the amount apportioned to the churches for the orphanage was far from enough. But rather than apportion more, they are asking churches and individual members to help add $25,000 to the regular apportionment. When we have to raise the sum of $60,000, it is necessary that each church receive a special Thanksgiving offering for the orphanage. Now 80 children are with me in this request. They cannot speak, but as long as I am here, I shall gladly speak for them.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
 Superintendent.

them came. The only requirement for an invitation was that you must be sixty-five years of age or over.

The dining room of the church was beautifully decorated in a fall motif. The refreshment table, with two huge punch bowls, was lovely with a large Halloween pumpkin, water-mellons, corn in husks, fall leaves, and holly.

Mrs. Briggs and her helpers from the Auxiliary, and there was an equal number of them, met and welcomed each guest as they arrived.

The program began as the pastor, Rev. Tucker G. Humphries, welcomed the group and led in several old fashioned hymns and old fashioned songs.

Mrs. Briggs then presented prizes to the oldest lady present, the oldest man present, the couple present married the longest, the person present with the largest number of children, the man and the woman who had married the youngest, the lady with the smallest foot and the man with the largest foot.

After these contests, there was other entertainment. Two little girls, Miss Gilda McKinney and Miss Susan Chaney, sang a duet. Mrs. Emma Gerringer gave a humorous reading which had appeared in a local paper thirty years ago, "Aunt Susan and the School Census Taker." Four young ladies, Miss Wilma Saunders, Miss Ann Black, Miss Shelby Dill, and Miss Gloria Woodall, next helped to warm the hearts of the "kids" as they sang old, old songs.

Mrs. Briggs then invited the guests to have a part in the program, and some responded with memories of yesteryears, a joke or a story.

As this part of the program closed, Miss Marion Foust, the minister of music of the church, played "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," and all with bowed heads prayed God's benediction upon their dreams for the future in their own words, in their own way, as the pastor pronounced the benediction.

Perhaps the last phase of the program was the most interesting, as refreshments of punch and cookies, nuts and candy, were served, and these older young folks visited, renewed old friendships and re-lived yesterday.

Indeed, it was a gay and happy party, and all left saying it was good to have been in God's house.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

He had the wholehearted support of the other officers of the conference and an excellent group of pastors and lay leaders. The great majority of the churches are "paid in full" this year, so far as apportionment goes, and nearly every church has made improvements on church buildings. Nearly every church has more service of the pastor than previously.

The program was well arranged around the theme, "What in the World Shall We Do?". The morning of the first day was given over to reports from the churches, the delegates reporting on achievements and problems facing the churches. The afternoon program emphasized the close connection of the Convention institutions, boards, and agencies with the churches. Reports were heard from Convention Superintendent Wm. T. Scott, from Dr. John G. Truitt, superintendents of the Christian Orphanage, and from Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College. Mr. M. T. Garren, Convention chairman of the Church Building Campaign, presented the need of funds with which to build new churches in our growing country, and Rev. Eric T. Braund, Greenbelt, Maryland, gave a picture of the expanding country and need of churches. Rev. and Mrs. Richard L. Jackson, now of Chapel Hill, recently returned from China, inspired the conference with their addresses on the subject, "I was your Missionary to China."

The evening program of the first day included a worship service by Rev. Rosser Lee Clapp, host pastor, and the church choir; reports from the Woman's Conference and Laymen's Fellowship; the licensure and ordination of ministerial candidates, and an address by Dr. Ray Gibbons, of New York, Director of the Council for Social Action.

Committee reports presented the previous day were considered, amended, and adopted on Thursday. Ample time was allowed for discussion. This was really a "work session," the only difficulty being that so many of the delegates are "one day attenders" and were not present for the important actions on Thursday. Each conference of the Convention faces this problem of "the second day!"

The conference was concluded late Thursday afternoon with a memorial service for the late Rev. D. R. Moffitt conducted by Rev. Bill Simmons, and the Communion service conducted by Rev. Wm. J. Andes of Winston-Salem.

The presence of young ministers now serving in the conference gave good promise for the future. Congratulations to the Western Conference on a good session, and thanks to Rev. Rosser Lee Clapp and his good people of Seagrove, Shady Grove, and Ether for adding so much to the comfort of the delegates with bountiful meals.

CROP--A Story of Hands

What is CROP, the Christian Rural Overseas Program?

CROP is really the story of HANDS. The Hands of the hungry, lifted beseechingly, begging, against their will, for food to sustain the life of the family remnant. Your Hands, outstretched to give—commodities of wheat, corn, soybeans, milk, peanuts, cotton.

The Hands of the sick—thin and pale, robbed by disease and pestilence of the ability to build, to live, to push aside the debris that was once a home. Your Hands outstretched with a gift—to refugees in Europe and Palestine, to war, famine and flood victims in Korea and India.

The Hands of the young—who have never known youth, or joy, or freedom, or security. CROP is a quick, economical, absolutely non-partisan plan to span the gap between the "reaching Hands." Idle Hands can be filled with food, tools and materials with which to work.

Help canvass and give through CROP during the week in November your county has set aside. If your county is not organized, send your gifts to North Carolina CROP, 1421 Ruffin Street, Durham, North Carolina, or Virginia CROP, 109 W. Grace Street, Richmond, Virginia.

By the "work of our hands" let us send a message of love, hope and peace to the overseas needy now.

News Flashes

Rev. Bill Simmons assisted Rev. E. C. Brady in revival services at Niagara recently.

Rev. Kenneth Lindner of Fayetteville, North Carolina, spoke on Sunday evening at Hope Mills. A delegation from the Eutaw Church also attended the service.

Dr. John R. Scotford of New York met with the Official Board of our Newport News Church on Monday evening to discuss with them plans for remodeling the sanctuary.

Thus far in November, four new members have been received into the Second Church of Norfolk, Virginia. All came by transfer of letters from Methodist and Baptist Churches.

Mrs. J. Everette Neese of Second Church, Norfolk, Virginia, has been elected president of the Norfolk Federation of Missionary Societies (the Council of Church Women). In this organization are women's societies from eight denominations, with a membership of approximately sixteen hundred.

A local paper carries news of the recent marriage of Dr. James Clinton and Miss Ruby Kovac. Dr. Clinton, who is at present pastor of the Congregational Church of Everett, Pa., is well known to many of our church people in Virginia and North Carolina. Miss Kovac has been deputy Court Clerk of Prince George County, Virginia, for the past thirty-five years. She and Dr. Clinton met last year when he was a guest speaker at Bethlehem, Disputanta, where her father was once pastor.

Report of Bethlehem Congregational Christian Church

This has been a profitable and progressive year for the Bethlehem Congregational Christian Church, located about six miles north of Elon College, in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. We have, with the exception of a few minor things, completed our new house of worship. We have also just about completed the furnishing of our kitchen.

The attendance at our morning services has been exceedingly fine; and there is great interest in the overall church program. The first week in October the church put on a series of cottage prayer services in preparation for the revival meeting which began on October 12, with the Rev. Tucker G. Humphries of Reidsville, North Carolina, doing the preaching. Mr. Humphries' preaching was of a high order, and he was graciously received by the congregation. There were 14 additions to the church on confession of faith and two by letter of transfer. The whole church was greatly revived spiritually.

While there has been much progress made at the church, it has been a very rugged year for me. All through the first part of the year, as many of you probably know, Mrs. Crutchfield was critically ill and was in the hospital at intervals until August 1, when death came to our home to relieve her of her suffering. No congregation could have manifested a finer spirit and more loyal devotion to their minister in a time like this than did the folks at Bethlehem.

The congregation entertained the North Carolina and Virginia Conference on November 11 and 12. It was a great conference meeting, and we were most happy to have the members as our guests.

Pastor.

Paul Varga Spends Summer in North Dakota

The Congregational Church at Hope, North Dakota, was without a pastor after Rev. A. C. Walker left in February of 1949. In June of that year the Congregational Church and the Methodist Church decided to worship together. A Union Sunday School was organized with a membership of seventy-five. The pastor was from the Methodist Church, who agreed to serve both churches. This proved to be too big a job. The Methodist Conference felt that their church program was suffering. After three years of union services, there seemed to be a growing dissatisfaction among the people.

Our State Minister met with us and informed us that a student pastor was available for the summer. The Congregational Church withdrew from the union service and invited a student pastor, whose name is Paul Varga, to come.

Paul arrived in Hope the first week-end in June, after having worked in a Vacation Bible School at Sanborn and Ekleson. The people of the church went all out for him. His first Sunday service was so challenging and so inspirational that the attendance grew from fifty on the first Sunday to one hundred twenty-five on the last Sunday. Our church membership was only eighty-four. Our Sunday school continued with the Methodists until the first of July, to complete the quarter. A meeting of the church board had been held in June to discuss the re-organization of the Sunday school and getting the necessary teachers. The first Sunday in July, there was a full staff of eight teachers, a superintendent, an assistant, and a secretary-treasurer. It was decided that there should be a meeting of the Sunday school staff once a month. The en-

Southern Convention Dates to Remember

NOVEMBER-DECEMBER—CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE PERIOD

December 9—Eastern Virginia Christian Missionary Association
Windsor Congregational Christian Church

Homecoming Observed at Linville Church

Linville Congregational Christian Church, in the Virginia Valley, observed "Homecoming" on Sunday, November 2, 1952. Rev. E. J. Rohart, pastor of the church, led in the morning service of dedication of memorial windows, and Rev. R. A. Whitten of Winchester preached the sermon for the occasion. Several beautiful musical selections were rendered.

A bountiful lunch was served at the noon hour.

In the afternoon, Rev. W. B. Fuller and Rev. S. E. Madren, two former pastors, gave testimonials for the occasion.

The pastor is to be congratulated for the fine work he is doing. The Linville people are to be congratulated for a well kept church building.

Following are excerpts from an historical sketch of the church by Miss Clara Messerley :

The Linville Christian Church was organized on June 10, 1871, with sixteen members. Rev. D. A. Long was the first pastor.

The records of the church from that date to 1884 are missing and the only record of this time has been given us by the older folks of the community.

After the organization, the members, with their pastor, went to work to build a church. It was built on the Jennings estate. The carpenters were Harvey Simmers and John Williams. The foundation wall was built by Harvey A. Armentrout. The church was plastered by J. A. Payne.

Our grandparents tell us that the rocks in the foundation wall came from all over the community. The big log sills came from the Fridley estate, and the lumber in the building from the old Kratzer estate. The church was dedicated on October 8, 1871.

There have been 400 members on the church roll. Many of these have moved away, and many more are sleeping in the cemetery adjoining the church.

Many improvements and changes have been made since the church was erected. A wing was added for Sunday school classrooms; a basement; pews, a pulpit and other furnishings. Electric lights, of course, now replace the oil lamps; a furnace has replaced the stoves, and there is a parking space instead of the old stile and hitching posts. At one time a picket fence and gate surrounded the church yard. This has been removed. The cemetery has been enlarged.

Recently, the church has been repainted, inside and out, the inside has been papered, and a new ceiling has been installed. Through the efforts of the women and young people, a bulletin board was purchased; and memorial windows installed.

The church has been served by twenty-four pastors. Their names may bring to mind other memories:

- D. A. Long, W. M. Walker, J. T. Kitchen, D. T. Dean, J. W. Barrett, P. H. Fleming, D. A. Barney, J. A. Scott, E. T. Isley, R. H. Peel, L. L. Lassiter, C. C. Jones, H. C. Moore, A. W. Andes, R. L. Williamson, W. T. Walters, W. C. Hook, J. C. Barrett, R. P. Crumpler, W. B. Fuller, M. L. Weekley, Paul B. Sanger, S. E. Madren and the present pastor, E. J. Rohart.

From the original sixteen members, the membership has grown to 165. During the 81 years the church and Sunday school have had in their membership many loyal leaders and teachers.

In the old days, as now, the church was the heart of the community. Our faith in the God it stands for has been strengthened by the services within its walls. Down its aisles have come hearts full of joy and happiness, and also hearts full of sorrow, all receiving peace and comfort from the Christ who dwells here.

Children, now grown to manhood and womanhood, have carried its memories to far places, and no matter where they may be, when the bells ring out on the Sabbath Day, they come back in memory to the old home church.

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Two Problems of Vital Importance

Are Brought to Our Attention in Editorials by

REV. MILLARD W. STEVENS, D.D.

President of The Southern Convention

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION and ELON COLLEGE

The church-related college is our one great hope in this country for providing our young people with an education in a Christian atmosphere under the direction of devoted Christian scholars. Moreover, these colleges are our most important means of keeping the people conscious of the fact that God and the Christian way of life are a part of reality and an essential part of knowledge. When religion is left out of education, it is only empty knowledge without a soul. We have too much of such empty knowledge in our time.

These church-related colleges are face to face with a struggle for survival. Our own Elon College is no exception. We cannot depend upon the state or on people outside the church to undergird these colleges. It must be done by Christian people who are aware of the value and necessity of these colleges. We of the churches in the Southern Convention are the hope of survival for Elon College. If we fail Elon, then Elon will have no hope of meeting its great opportunity in the field of Christian Education. We must not fail her!

In an effort to undergird Elon College and provide a stable foundation for her, the college authorities are seeking to raise the sum of two and one-half million dollars for buildings and endowment. About half of the objective has been achieved during the past five years. An effort to complete this campaign within the next few months is now under way. The support of every friend of Christian education, every alumni of Elon, every member of our churches is needed to do this.

We suggest that you can help in this effort in many ways. One way is by making a contribution to this campaign now. Make it as large as you can, for any purpose you may desire—as a memorial to a loved one if you like—but make a contribution now, either through your church, or direct to Elon College. Another way in which you can help is by encouraging your friends to make a contribution. Use your influence to secure large gifts from business and industry in your community. A third and most important way in which you can help is to have faith in Elon and the cause of Christian education. Neither will fail you!

SPIRITUAL GROWTH

The material growth of the Church in America has been outstanding in the past few years. Millions have been spent on church buildings and contributions to church support have had a marked increase. But how have we grown in the deeper things of the Spirit? Is our understanding of Christ and of the Christian Way greater? Has our loyalty and devotion to the Church grown deeper? Such questions are important in our time.

It is wonderful when people go in large numbers to churches to see the dramatic and enjoy the unusual or to hear a discourse on how to be "happy" or to have "peace of mind." Psychological helps for personal integration are valuable. Efficiency experts in church administration are also helpful. But we also have to find some means of living in a world of reality. Sources for such living are found within man's soul and are made effective only in vital spiritual growth. This growth can be experienced only in significant worship and the devoted practice of our Christian faith in everyday living. We suggest that every church has an inescapable obligation to provide men with an opportunity for worship and to give them an understanding of life which will make it possible for them to live their faith. As we grow in material things, let us also be sure that we grow in spiritual depths.

Spiritualizing Church Finance

By W. G. O'BRIEN

Chairman, Board of Deacons of Union Christian Church, Franklin, Va.

Jesus and Money. It is a great surprise to many people to learn that Jesus had much to say on the subject of money or property. It is asserted that one verse of every six in the Gospels of Matthew, Mark and Luke, is on this subject. Sixteen of Jesus' thirty-eight parables deal with the right or wrong use of money.

Spirituality and Money. Someone has well said, "The money that belongs by every right to God, but is kept back from him by his people, is probably the greatest hindrance to vital spirituality that there is in the world today." To cheat a man out of a dollar is to rob him of more than a dollar. It robs him of your friendship. The same principle holds true in our relation with God.

A restaurant man put up a sign which read, "Meals Cash. We trusted a friend. He failed to pay. We lost both the price of the meal and a friend." God frequently loses not only the amount which is due him, but the man.

We hear much these days about when the church gets right with God spiritually there will be no trouble about the money. The scriptures teach that the reverse is true. You cannot get right with God spiritually unless you are right with him financially. If you don't believe this, try it on your next door neighbor.

Personality and Money. With some money is "cold cash." Money is more than that. It is the energy of the body and brain transformed into currency. It represents life.

If I go to a farm, a store or a shop, and sell my labor and get a five-dollar bill for a day's work, what is this piece of currency? It represents a day of my life. If I give it to the advancement of the Kingdom of God, I have given a day of my life to the Kingdom of God. Money represents life reduced to dollars and cents. It has a spiritual value.

Material Tokens of Love. When man first gathered the fruits of the field, the orchard and the herd, and saw that but for these gifts from God he could not live, he built an altar and brought some material token of his acknowledgement of God's goodness. Would it have been more spiritual if he had come with songs and words only? Songs and words may be used in worship, but love demands something more.

In our churches today are many who profess to love God, but who give little or nothing for the extension of his kingdom. One may give without loving, but one cannot love without giving.

For the Giver's Sake. Giving is for the giver's sake. It is not to help out a poor God. Christ is not a beggar at our back door seeking a hand-

"Excuse Me, Lord!"

By Rev. JESSE H. DOLLAR

I know, dear Lord, you understand
Just how it is with me;

I have to work so hard for ME,
I have no time to work for Thee.

I want so many things you see,
There' little left to offer Thee.

The things the Jonses have you see
Are nice; just like I want for me.

But when I get my work all done,
Have laid aside a miser's sum,
Perhaps I'll have some time for Thee:
And make an offering big, anr free.

So just be patient with me, Lord,
While I stint, and try to hoard;
Some day I bet I'll make you glad,
My offering, no doubt, will fill the bag!

So you keep waiting, Lord, and see;
When I get mine, I'll give to the!

out. His church is not a pauper seeking alms. Of course, kingdom service always needs funds, but we need to give on each Lord's Day, whether or not our church may need funds, or apportionments call for our gifts, for we are worshippers, and giving is an act of worship. Giving must be as systematic and definite as our singing, praying and reading of the Bible.

Why should you, your wife, your son and daughter, "each one" participate? The answer, that it is a matter of worship, and no one can worship for another. Worshipping is an individual matter. Someone raises the question, "There is but one pay check coming into our home, why cannot that one then subscribe and give for the family?" If it were a purely business matter, as for food or clothing, it could very properly be paid that way, but not so with the part of that income that is set aside for worship and kingdom service.

Many of us were trained to let father subscribe for the family, but Paul said "each one." Husband cannot worship for wife, nor parent for child. No one can go to church, sing, pray, and give for another. Young children should have allowances or earnings and their own subscriptions and envelopes. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and even when he is old he will not depart from it." Why is it so difficult to secure church funds from older people? Because they were not taught early that giving is a regular act of worship and an individual matter.

And Paul did not stop there. He says, "Lay by him in store . . ." How often our giving evidences no intelligent preparation. We give the leftovers, the odd change. Many plan with forethought for their taxes, seed, grain and furnishings, but give little thought to planning regular giving to the kingdom.

The Measure. Paul tells us how to measure our giving, "as he may prosper." Our giving is not to be measured by that of another; not to be just as little as we can get by with, nor to be the same year by year. It is to be as God prospers us.

Money goes to eight major objects: shelter, food, clothing, business, education, religion, recreation and government. Where in our expenditures do we place religion? Too often our investment in religion is the least on the list. We don't think it is time for us to place religion, God, worship and church up where they ought to be. We need ever to bear in mind that Jesus said, "Where a man's treasure is, there will his heart be also."

Inactive Members. When we face that long list of inactive members on our church rolls, we should remember that they are not there because they are bad people. They are our neighbors and friends, but they are inactive and indifferent, in the majority of cases, because they have not been taught that deep truth of the Master, that they need for their own sakes to make worth-while investment in the Kingdom of God as represented by the church.

If we examine God's operations in nature, we will discover system in the sun, the tides, the seasons, crops, and in all that God does for man. If God did not so work, it would mean

At Work, at Play, in Home, in Church

A LAYMEN'S SUNDAY MESSAGE

By C. F. SAUNDERS, Superintendent
Spoon's Chapel Sunday School

I should like to give you my idea of what I think men should do at work, at play, in home and church.

I will start with the home. Home is where most of us stay, most of the time.

Being a good provider is very important, but that is not all. Being a Christian husband and father, living a Christian life, is very important in maintaining a happy home. A man should never leave God out of his home. Families should have at least one family prayer and daily Bible reading together, with the entire family taking part; and we should always give thanks to the Lord at meal time.

One of the most important things in rearing a child is to teach him the Bible and the ways of the Lord. A man should spend all the time possible in being with his family, helping to do the things around the home that are necessary to insure their health and happiness.

I once saw on a billboard the picture of a Christian man and his family at evening worship and prayer at home. They were seated around the room. The words under the picture drew my close attention—they read, "A family that prays together, stays together." No truer words have ever been spoken. The man of the family should always be careful in what he says and does, because he has a great influence on his family. Most children, especially boys, think that what "daddy" does is all right for them to do.

Not only is it important that we have family worship and prayer at home; but it is also very important that we go to church.

Most of us have heard the saying, "Don't send your children to church and Sunday school, bring them." Again that brings us back to being a good influence on our children. If a man gets up on Sunday morning and does not go to church and Sunday school, but sends his wife and children, the little ones will say to themselves, "Why do I have to go when my daddy stays at home and reads the funny paper and lies around?" It doesn't make sense, does it?

What happens when we do go to church? Do we go to church just for the sake of going, or do we go asking God for a blessing? Ask yourself that question.

A man not only should go to his church, but he should take an active part in the church. After all, the church is made up of the group of people who attend it.

He should be dependable toward his fellowman and toward God. It pleases the Lord for us to come to church, but it pleases him still more for us to carry out his work. Everyone can have a part in church work, and everyone should do his or her part in building a larger and more efficient Sunday school and church.

We all know that it takes money to run a church, just as it takes money to run a home. Where is it coming from? Have we ever been guilty of the habit of not tithing when the collection plate is passed to us? We might be fooling the church, but we are not fooling God. Paul, in II Corinthians 9:6-8, says: "He that soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. Let each man do according as he hath purposed in his heart: not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver. And God is able to make all grace abound unto you; that ye, having always a sufficiency in everything, may abound unto every good work." God doesn't expect us to give more than we can. Think of the widow's mite. She gave only a small amount, but the Lord was well pleased with her because it came from her heart. Let us, too, let our hearts be our guide.

Next comes work. Each one of us has some work to do; so why not go about it in a cheerful way? Never neglect prayer before starting your daily task. It is a wonderful thing to know the Lord is with us all the time, no matter where we are, or what we are doing. Man should, of course, be honest in his work, as in everything else he does. If you work for someone else, give them an honest day's work. Show them that you can be depended on to do your work honestly and properly. A man should also be cheerful and friendly with his coworkers.

Your work doesn't always go along easily. Sometimes there are difficulties and misunderstandings between you and your employer, and maybe your co-worker or neighbor. The Bible has an answer for that also. It is found in Matthew 18:15, 21-22: "If thy brother hath sinned against thee, go, show him his fault . . . if he hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. . . . Peter said to him, Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? until seven times? Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee, Until seven times; but Until seventy times seven." The Bible also says that in order to have friends, we must show ourselves to be friendly. All people do not work in industries or plants, but wherever one works, one should always consider his fellowman.

Now, suppose you have someone working for you. Consider what you would do the job for. Remember the Golden Rule, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." Remember this in paying anyone. Pay him fair wages for what he does, not just what you can get by with. Remember that he is trying to make an honest living too. Also, do not ask him to do anything that you yourself wouldn't do.

When we are working, especially in industries, we should be careful not to waste materials. We may not realize it, but we pay for the materials that are wasted. Remember again that honesty is always the best policy—deal honestly in everything you do or say.

Next comes play. Most everyone of us likes some particular recreation or game. Being a good sport is very important in playing a game. Be a good loser as well as a good winner.

A man should be clean and honest in his play. He should be thoughtful of his opponent. He should also remember that the team he is playing with depends upon him—be sure that they can. However, do not depend entirely on someone else, or you might wind up like the joke I once heard on a cab-driver. It seems that one day a certain cab-driver had a passenger who was in a hurry to get where he was going. Upon approaching an intersection, he said to the passenger, "Sir, are there any cars coming from down the road?" The passenger looking hurriedly over his shoulder saw

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Happenings on the Elon College Campus

Chapel programs for the past week have been very interesting. President Blanton, of Crozier Theological Seminary, spoke on Wednesday. Dr. Blanton is an ordained minister of the Baptist Church, served some of the strongest churches of his denomination before accepting the presidency of Crozier Seminary. The seminary has grown under his administration. Friday's chapel service was moved up to Thursday. The faculty and students had the privilege of hearing Mr. Montague of Hollywood, California, formerly of the Canadian Mounted Police, and at present a professional lecturer and entertainer. The students and faculty were greatly interested and benefited by the homespun philosophy and interpretation of life given by Mr. Montague. It was a privilege for the students to hear a man with such unusual background, a variety of experiences and an unusual ability.

* * *

Elon's intercollegiate athletic program has not been going too smoothly. Our coaches and football team have worked hard, but they have lost too many games to add to the enthusiasm of the student body. Prospects for the basketball team are excellent; and Coach Mathis is working hard to make sure that our record in basketball shall eclipse our record in football. The Hosiery Mill Classic, an invitational tournament, will be played at Elon College the week before the holidays. This is the beginning of a tournament that will doubtless develop into a program of statewide significance. We have the gymnasium and the opportunity. We must seize it.

* * *

The Dramatic Department gave a play, "January Thaw," on Thursday and Friday nights, November 6 and 7, with good attendance. The cast included Lynn Cashion of Sanford, North Carolina; Ann Wilkins of Suffolk, Virginia; J. B. Pickard of Greensboro, North Carolina; Diane Maddox of Cincinnati, Ohio; David Crowle of Prospect Park, Pennsylvania, and John G. Truitt, Jr., of Elon College. Mrs. Elizabeth R. Smith directed the play.

* * *

Thanksgiving Day is "just around the corner." Holidays begin at the college on Wednesday before. On Thursday, Elon will play Guilford in the annual football classic. The game will be played at Reidsville at 2:00 p. m. Alumni everywhere will be interested in this game and the final score.

* * *

Mrs. L. E. Smith, Sr., honored Miss Alice Marion Black on Thursday, November 6, between the hours of four and six o'clock with a tea. Miss Black is Dean of Women at the college.

The Story To Be Continued

Have you heard about the Two and One Half Million Dollar Campaign for Elon College? What do you think about it? Is it possible to raise this amount of money for our college? Are we—church, alumni and friends—able to invest this much money in a growing enterprise that means development of character and personality, a blessing to our church and a success for the efforts of other boards and causes.

Before you give your answer to the above questions, think for a moment what Elon College has meant to our church in the Southern Convention and to churches beyond the Convention. It has trained by far the greater majority of our active ministers and has helped prepare inviting fields for those who have been trained elsewhere who now serve with us for the church. The majority of our Convention, conference and local church officials have been trained in our college. In addition, a number of Sunday school teachers, young people's workers, and others have received their inspiration and training on our campus. Did ever a small college do so much for such a needy people in so little a time and with so little to do it with?

Do you think that our people—I mean our church members—will respond to the appeals of the college in this hour of need? Before you answer this question, think about the obligations that you have in your own church congregation, a church debt, a parsonage debt, other obligations to be met by you and the members of your church. Listen to this story:

Recently I was in a nearby city to go with an alumnus of the college to solicit funds from business associates who were neither alumni of Elon College nor members of the Congregational Christian Church. The first place we called, the head of the concern was not in. The next place we called, the owner of the business was in his office. There was an informal introduction, a very pleasant conversation, then the real purpose of the visit. The man replied that they were not making any money; they were not in a position to give. I told him that it wasn't necessary to pay the pledge now, but it could be paid anytime within five years. The man countered that he had just headed up a campaign for his own church college, and was not in a position to contribute. I gave another explanation for the appeal, and he said he could only make a token contribution, but not a pledge. I told him that we were working hard to get 2,000 to give $500 each over a period of five years, making a total of $1,000,000. The man said he could do that much. He gave me his cheek for $100 and his pledge for that much for four additional years. You never can tell!

Again, I was with another friend, and we were making calls on the same campaign. We were not getting along so well. I suggested that we go to see a friend who is a member of his church. He said that there was no use, because "he has a pledge to our church. We are building a new church, you know; and besides, he is not interested in the college. He even talks against the college." But we went, and after a brief conversation about the college, its needs, and the contributions which it has made to our church, he remarked that he would give $100 a year for five years, beginning in December, 1952.

When our church people understand and when they are reminded what the college has meant to our church, what it will mean in the future, they contribute freely, gladly and generously.

And so the story continues—What have you done about the Campaign for the College? what would you like to do? Do you have any suggestions. As you finish reading this article, won't you find time and write me,

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

First Thank Offering Report Comes from Union

The Union Congregational Christian Church at Hunterdale, near Franklin, Virginia, had a fine Thank Offering service on Sunday evening, November 9, according to a report from the pastor's wife, Mrs. Clyde Fields.

The attractive bulletin, which we suspect was made by the pastor's wife's husband, has a picture on the front, "Christ for the World." There is a fine statement in the bulletin, explaining the work of the local missionary societies and their relation to our denominational work, as well as a summary of the needs in Carroll County.

The evening service was conducted by the Young People's Missionary Society. The order of worship follows.

Call to Worship (Psalm 121)—Mrs. Clyde Fields.

Hymn—"Christ for the World!"

Prayer Poem—Mrs. Fields.

Hymn—"The Church's One Foundation."

Scripture—Mrs. S. M. Joyner.

Special Music—"Lord, I Hear of Showers of Blessings."

Meditation—Mrs. Larry Overby.

Recommendations of Southern Convention Women—Mrs. Edgar Blythe.

Endorsements of Carroll County Mission by former pastors and friends:

Rev. James Madren by Mrs. V. R. Scott.

Mrs. W. B. Williams by Mrs. William Vaughn.

Mrs. John G. Truitt by Mrs. Robert Hollowell.

Mrs. W. E. Wisseman by Mrs. Richard E. Carter.

Rev. R. T. Grissom by Mrs. Stafford Blythe.

Dr. W. T. Scott by Mrs. Ryland Hasty.

Additional Information—Mrs. W. G. O'Brien.

Poem—"To the Hills Again"—Mrs. E. B. Rader.

Worship in Tithes and Offerings.

Doxology.

Benediction.

The service was not only filled with information and inspiration, but resulted in a Thank Offering of more than $50.00.

Congratulations on this good service, and thanks for a prompt report.

New Officers at Rosemont Church

The new officers of the Rosemont Women's Society have been sent to us by the church reporter, Mrs. Geo. Dennis. We appreciate this, for it helps all of us to get better acquainted early in the year. They are: Mrs. William Sparkman, president; Mrs. Melvin Dollar, vice-president; Mrs. Oliver G. Fleming, secretary; Mrs. H. R. Morrison, treasurer. Cradle Roll superintendents are, Mrs. E. J. Richardson and Mrs. William Phillips; Youth superintendents, Mrs. A. P. Coffield and Mrs. W. E. Gladstone, and Spiritual Life superintendent, Mrs. M. K. Hassell.

Good luck to these new officers, as they carry on the work at Rosemont!

An Apology

How many wondered who wrote that lovely meditation, "A Thought for Thanksgiving," found on this page in the issue of November 6?

If something is found on this page unsigned, I get the credit for it, as the editor of the page. However, I did not write that article.

I regret very much that credit was not given to the proper person—either the printer or I inadvertently omitted her name. It was prepared for us by Mrs. Raye Knight, Spiritual Life Superintendent of the Eastern Virginia Conference, at the request of Mrs. Garland Spratley, the president. We apologise to Mrs. Knight for the omission, and thank her for the fine article.

Dried Flower Show Given by Greensboro Church

Our Building Fund is some $775 richer today because of the outcome of the dried flower show and market so successfully staged by the Women's Auxiliary of the First Church in Greensboro, on October 30 and 31.

Mrs. Bill Weisner, chairman of the flower show stated that the total receipts would pass the $775 mark, because all the ticket money is not yet in. This all came from an original investment of just $40.

The show, the first of its kind ever held in Greensboro, or North Carolina, is believed to be one of the few to be held in the entire United States. Visitors and customers numbered nearly 1,000 for the two-day event, with visitors coming from as far away as Asheville, which sent an interior decorator to observe. Others came from Asheboro, High Point, Burlington, Leaksville, Spray, Reidsville and other neighboring communities.

Assisting Mrs. Weisner in her work were Mrs. A. A. Hylton, Mrs. Wallace Truitt, Mrs. William Truitt and Mrs. Austin Lane. Mrs. Hinton Rountree was in charge of the snack bar which accounted for something over $100 of the profit realized from the overall project.

We are very proud of this event in more ways than one. While we are all—even the men—proud of the show, we are also proud of the success of it, because it enabled the auxiliary to vote to pay to our church treasurer $1,000 to be applied to the Building Fund bills.

We are now looking forward to our Bazaar to be held in the Educational Building of our church on December 4 and 5. We invite all of you to come and visit us on one of these days.

MRS. H. G. BALLINGER,
President.

Shallow Well Reports for Year

The Ladies Aid and Missionary Society of Shallow Well Church has completed a most successful year. With the cooperation and help of our members, we have achieved our standard of excellence.

We used the material from the packet for our programs. We had the Bible study given by one of our members, Mrs. Cranford Fineher. We had our Thank Offering program in November. We have had two outstanding book reviews, "Mission to America" was given by our pastor's wife, Mrs. W. L. Wood, in March, with Sanford and Turner's Chapel societies attending. In January, we were invited to Sanford to hear Dr. W. W. Sloan of Elon College review the book, "We Americans, North and South."

We observed World Community Day, the World Day of Prayer, and May Fellowship Day. The spring rally was held at our church this year.

Our Laymen at Work . . .

Western Carolina Laymen to Meet

The twenty-ninth of November is a day that you will not want to forget. At six o'clock that evening, the Western North Carolina Laymen's Fellowship will meet for a Father-Son Banquet at the New Market School, on the Asheboro-High Point road, above our Sophia Church.

The Father-Son Banquet means exactly what it says. Fathers are to bring their sons; sons are to bring their fathers.

At this meeting, we will study the need for more ministers in our conference. To help us with this study, there will be a father and a son, Dr. John G. Truitt, and John G., Jr., who are giving themselves to the cause of Christ. As they tell us of their call to and their experience in the ministry, we are hoping that some may listen anew to God's voice. We believe that God still calls men into his ministry, but so often men fail to listen to the call.

The Sophia ladies will prepare the dinner. In order that your plate may be ready for you, please have one member of your group send in the total number who will attend from your church.

S. H. PELL,
President.

Laymen's Service at Holy Neck Church

The service opened on Laymen's Sunday with a Call to Worship by Henry Lee Weaver, president of the Holy Neck Laymen's Fellowship; Allen Piland, deacon and church treasurer, gave the invocation, and James E. Worrell, chairman of the Finance Committee, read the poem, "I Will Build My Church." The Scripture lesson (Psalm 1, Matthew 9: 35-38) was read by James V. Jones, chairman of the Board of Trustees. H. L. Worrell offered prayer. Jack Copeland, chairman of the Building and Grounds Committee, gave the "Be-attitudes for Laymen"; and Samuel Felton, superintendent of the Sunday school, read "To Waste Wisely My Days." Marvin Felton, chief usher, presided at the offering. A male quartet furnished special music. The message of the morning was given by Paul Everett, Commonwealth Attorney of Nansmond County. After the singing of a hymn, a very fine service was concluded with the benediction by C. T. Parks, chairman of the Board of Deacons.

A. L. HURDLE,
Minister.

Wake Chapel Laymen Hold Anniversary Banquet

On Tuesday, November 11, 1952, at 7:00 p. m., the Wake Chapel Laymen's Fellowship held its first anniversary banquet. This fellowship was organized last November. Its organization grew out of a genuine interest and enthusiasm which a number of the local laymen found when they attended a conference-wide meeting of laymen held at the Sanford Church the latter part of October, 1951. Professor J. Earl Danieley of the Chemistry Department at Elon College, spoke at the meeting held in Sanford, so it was entirely in order that the speaker for the Wake Chapel Laymen's Fellowship anniversary banquet should be Professor Danieley, and that the other invited guests were the laymen of the Sanford Church, along with their pastor, Dr. Will B. O'Neill.

Professor Danieley brought a timely message entitled "The Two Great Needs of Our Churches." He singled these out as (1) "More men deeply consecrated to the Living Christ," and (2) "A cooperative spirit among these consecrated individuals, as they strive together in the cause of Christ."

The laymen of Wake Chapel have an opportunity for Christian service through their own organization. They have conducted a very successful Visitation Evangelism Program; and they provided all the canvassers for the Every Member Canvass this fall. They purchased a desk and typewriter for the pastor's study. They also made a contribution to Moonelon.

These laymen have all become better churchmen as a result of these activities. They are making plans now for more and larger projects for the coming year.

It is the opinion of a number of onlookers that these laymen have not only enriched their lives, but have also greatly enriched the life of the entire local church.

Mrs. CLAY WILSON,
Church Reporter.

SPIRITUALIZING CHURCH FINANCE.

starvation for mankind. Spasmodic giving brings spiritual starvation. Those who give but little are under the same obligation to give as those who give much. System is just as necessary for the smallest giver as for the larger ones.

Something Happens. What happens in a church when giving becomes worship; when all participate regularly as God prospers them? Many things will be prevented: deficits, retrenchment, loans and their accompanying interest, and worry. Irritation will be turned into joy; the church will become more concerned with men than with dollars; the inactive will be reenlisted. It will put new courage into a church, revitalizing its moral and social ideals. It will give the church a new place in the community, for it can enlarge its plans, carry the gospel, and win the outsider as a church never can that is always begging, whining, shirking and straining. It will inspire other churches, honor Christ and extend his kingdom.

It will be seen that the Lord is not a bandit holding man up, but a great Father, a Friend, showing us where to place our treasures so that they will multiply a hundredfold and last forever.

AT WORK, AT PLAY, IN HOME, IN CHURCH.

no cars, but did see a large truck, coming from up the road—but absent mindedly replied, "No, there aren't any cars coming." The cab-driver went on out into the highway without stopping, and wham, the truck ran right over them. Luckily, no one was injured. Crawling out of the wreck and helping the passenger to his feet, the driver said, "My good man, I thought you said the road was clear." The passenger, looking up somewhat in a daze, said, "No, I said there were no cars coming." Of course, the cab-driver should have made sure for himself by stopping at the intersection.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

All this week has been devoted to books—Book Week throughout the land. The New York Times Book Review Section brings out an annual report of the new and good books for boys and girls.

Mothers and fathers will be happy to know that many educators and librarians are now saying that comic books are all right if they are not the only reading matter of children (now, boys and girls—here's your chance!), and further emphasizing that the reading level is sixth or seventh grade and that younger children who are keen enough to read them are extending their vocabularies. But we are interested in that other reading matter, that other portion of daily and weekly reading.

Christmas is coming, too, and that means parents, grandparents, aunts, uncles, teachers and friends will be giving presents to youngsters. We have said it before, and we say it again that Friendship Press has the very best when it comes to children's books. The books are written with the intent to educate, but they throw in a lot of adventure, mystery and goodness at the same time. Here are a few of the current list, available from Pilgrim Press, Boston; Methodist Book Store, Richmond; or your local book dealer.

THE GRAY EYES FAMILY by Edith J. Agnew. $2.00. Illustrated by Jean Martinez.

This is the tale of a Navajo family with the name of Gray Eyes. Miss Agnew, who wrote the book, lived and worked among the Navajos, and she knows their story. Some of the Convention children who journeyed westward this summer had a chance to see the Navajos and their hogans (homes). This book has pets, an uncle home from Korea, and many other interesting happenings.

* * *

MPENGO OF THE CONGO by Grace W. McGavran. $2.00. Illustrated by Kurt Wiese.

This is the story of an eight-year-old boy in Africa. He has a very exciting life without comic books, movies, T. V., or Cub Scouts. Beginning with a close brush with a crocodile, and continuing through elephant trapping, hunting trips and, finally, with a happy, happy end, Mpengo keeps moving and growing! This is a choice book for boys.

* * *

YAKIMA BOY by Grace W. McGavran. $2.00. Janet Smalley, illustrator.

This is the second book by Miss McGavran, who is the daughter and granddaughter of missionaries. She spent some of her early years in India, and after she came to this country, she taught boys and girls. Now she lives in the State of Washington and writes, much of her writing being for youngsters.

Living close to Yakima Reservation, she paid the Indians a visit and met many of the boys and girls there. She saw their home life and went to see the salmon fishing.

Here again we have a book slanted for boys, but it would be interesting for girls too. Two Indian friends, Lester and Denny, are the main characters. One is old-fashioned, following the ways of the tribal customs, and the other is very modern, liking the ways taught at the Christian mission school. How he wanted to go!

There are thrills here, too. Pack trips into the mountains, fond hopes rising and falling, but a very pleasant ending.

* * *

NYANGA'S TWO VILLAGES by Esma R. Booth. $2.00. Janet Smalley, illustrator.

Back to Africa again. Remember, it is our mission study and that boys and girls will be studying it too. Mrs. Booth married a missionary to Africa and has lived among the villages such as Nyanga's. All the books seem to center on boys! This one, African Nyanga, takes a spiritual journey back to his grandfather's old village. Excitement is provided by the hunt, at which time he shot an animal himself. Nyanga has the opportunity to weigh the two villages: grandfather's and his own. Which did he choose?

Friendship Press is having its Golden anniversary this year. We salute their staff, writers and artists, for giving Protestant children in America such fine books, so well written and ably illustrated, at such reasonable prices. Remember these books!

Quixotic Notions?

By HILDA RICHMOND.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Mrs. Wilson and Mrs. Smith, who were visiting in the kindergarten department of the school, watched with interest the games and work of the little boys and girls. They waited until the short intermission, and then they stated their real errand.

"You are doing a wonderful piece of work. Miss Kile," said Mrs. Wilson, "really wonderful!"

"Yes, it is wonderful," echoed Mrs. Smith. "Our little ones love every moment of the period."

"It is about the Cortello twins that we have come, as well as to enjoy your work," announced Mrs. Wilson. "Several of the mothers want to club together to put Jonny and Ruth Cortello into the kindergarten on Elm Street, in District Number Eight. We are willing to pay the charge for transferring them there if it can be arranged."

"What makes you think the Cortello twins would be happier or better off at that kindergarten?" asked clear-eyed Miss Kile.

"Well," answered Mrs. Wilson, "it is not particularly to make them happier that we seek to have them transferred to another district. The fact is the family is objectionable."

"Do you mean you think they are commu—?"

"Oh, no, not that, but they are a mixed breed—part European and part Asiatic, or something."

"The parents are American citizens."

"I don't know about that, but they don't belong in our class, and if their children play with our children the next thing will be that they'll want a house next to ours. I think you see our point."

"Well, ladies, I think you have overlooked the real point," said Miss Kile earnestly. "Did you see anything objectionable or rude when the Cortellos played with the others?"

"No, indeed! They are interesting little folks, and we hope they will be happy in the other kindergarten."

"But the Cortello children belong in this district, and they are as much future citizens as your own little boys and girls. Jonny and Ruth Cortello are very bright children, but even if they were not they would still be on a level with the children of other Americans."

Youth at Work in the Church

MAX VESTAL, Box 792, Elon College, N. C.

Pleasant Ridge Group Works and Plays

On October 25, the members of the Pleasant Ridge young people's choir observed "Work Day for Christ." Our choir voted to give what we earned on that day for the work of missions. All together we earned $22.50, which we are going to use for a project of our own, send to foreign missions, or for the use of the building at Moonelon.

On October 30, the choir was invited to a party at the home of Norman and Peggy Smith. Most of us came dressed in Halloween costumes, which we all enjoyed wearing. Later, we unmasked and played several games. We were glad to have our pastor, Rev. Max Vestal, and his friend, Rev. Page Painter from the valley of Virginia, to play several tunes on the guitar and fiddle.

Refreshments were served, and our pastor dismissed us with prayer.

Churches See Cavern Slides

Pleasant Ridge and Spoon's Chapel young people have seen on successive Sunday nights in November slides of the Luray Caverns. Page Painter, a senior at Elon College and a newly licensed minister from Luray, Virginia, showed the beautiful colored pictures and conducted the worship services. He stressed the fact that the caverns are a manifestation of God's great creative power.

Young Adults of Happy Home

On a beautiful Saturday afternoon in October, around thirty members of the young adult class, friends and Mr. Bowers, their pastor, met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Sapaugh, near Reidsville, for a chicken fry and wiener roast, out on their back lawn. When it came time for the marshmallows to be roasted, most everyone was too full of chicken, wieners, slaw potato chips, pickles and coffee to enjoy anything else.

After the dishes were washed and the tables cleared, we gathered in the home for the election of new officers. Our class talked about how much we needed a class room. A hat was passed around and a very good offering was given toward future class rooms and a recreation hall for the young people.

Around 9:30, everyone left, declaring they had enjoyed a wonderful evening.

Relax With Max

Let me apologize for keeping for so long the Happy Home news which is printed today. I stuck it in my Psychology book, and one day I opened it up, and there was the letter from Mrs. Powell. Please send me more news, and I'll see if I can do better.

* * *

Don't imagine any of you knew I was a-studying Psychology. When I learn enough about it to know what it is, I'm gonna try some of it on you. But they tell me that anyone crazy enough to go to a psychiatrist ought to have his head examined.

* * *

The story is told about two psychiatrists who met with this greeting: "Good morning. You're all right; how am I?"

* * *

The man who continuously blows his own horn usually stays at the little end.

* * *

Lee: "Can you draw a straight line with a ruler?"

Teacher: "Of course."

Lee: "That's funny; I use a pencil."

* * *

Someone asked a little boy to define the word, "appetite." His answer was prompt: "When you're eating, you're 'appy. When you get through, you're tight. That's appetite!"

(We hope Max's Psychology teacher doesn't see the above note. He had better start studying his lesson more often.—M. E.)

To Be a Member of a Church

... is to share in the highest social and religious relationship available to man. To be a loyal, interested member of a church is a higher privilege than any lodge, club or other fraternal organization can offer.

To be a devoted church member is evidence of one's faith in God, one's love for Christ, one's commitment to the Christian way of living, one's belief in a better future for mankind and a better world in which to live.

To be a member of any church makes one a member of The Church Universal, giving one all the privileges, opportunities and responsibilities of the Christian heritage. To be known as a Christian is the highest tribute any person can receive.

We unite with a church not because we are perfect, but because we want to be better, and because we feel the need of God's help and the help of Christian fellowship to enable us to "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord."

—Roy C. Helfenstein.

PAUL VARGA SPENDS SUMMER IN NORTH DAKOTA.

rollment the first Sunday was twenty-nine, and it grew to sixty-five. There were eleven enrolled in the adult class with Paul as the teacher.

A Pilgrim Fellowship group was organized with twelve members, who met every two weeks. A vacation Bible School was held for one week by the two churches, and Paul taught the seventh and eighth grades. There were seven in this group who expressed a wish to join the Congregational Church, so Paul conducted a pastor's class for six weeks. The church board voted to permit Paul to conduct Communion Service and Baptism. The next to the last Sunday, he was in Hope, he baptized twelve, took in seven new members, and the last Sunday, he had a Communion Service.

Paul spent a week in July at the Senior Youth Camp at Lake Metagoshi. His Christian leadership was also enjoyed there.

Most of the church members lived in the country. A car was provided for Paul, so he visited all the families and friends. He slighted none. It seemed that everyone was precious in his sight. All grew to love him and respect his leadership. His last Sunday was the climax of his work in Hope. A fellowship dinner was enjoyed by all, and everyone wished him God's blessing, and hoped he would return next summer.

Jesus' Law of Doing Good

(TEMPERANCE LESSON)

LESSON IX—NOVEMBER 30, 1952

MEMORY SELECTION: "Do not imitate evil, but imitate good. He who does good is of God; he who does evil has not seen God.—III John 11.

LESSON: Matthew 12: 1-14.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ephesians 5: 11-20.

Scandal Number One.

The Master and his disciples were walking along a grain field. The disciples were hungry, so they reached out, plucked some of the heads of grain, rubbed out the kernels and ate the grain. It was as simple as that to them and to the Master. But that was very, very sinful to the scribes and Pharisees. Did not the law of Moses forbid work on the Sabbath Day? In plucking the heads of grain and rubbing out the kernels, the disciples had been guilty of breaking the law on two counts, harvesting and threshing!!! That was terrible, unheard of, sinful and sacrilegious. Why did the Master allow such a thing? Why did he allow such flagrant breaking of the law to go unrebuked and unpunished? What did he have to say for himself on this matter.

He had plenty to say, and he said it, but in a friendly, frank, fearless way. "By the way," said Jesus in effect, "do you remember the story in your sacred book of how David and his men went into the house of God, took the shew bread which only the priests were supposed to eat, and ate it, and on the Sabbath day?" And they did it with the consent and approval of the priests. Guilty on three counts of breaking the law, they were held guiltless by the priest. That man rightly put mercy and human need before the letter of the law. Did the Pharisees want a precedent for the action of his disciples? Let them look at David and the high priest.

Furthermore, their own priests habitually broke the law, that is the letter-observance of the law. The Sabbath Day on which all work was forbidden by the law, was the one day when the priests worked more than usual. But who would say they were guilty of breaking the law of the temple. And then the Master climaxed it all when he said, "But I say unto you, that a greater than the temple is here." He then added, "For the Son of Man is Lord of the Sabbath." The letter killeth but the spirit maketh alive. Mercy has precedence over sacrifice. Men have precedence over institutions. Christ is Lord of the Sabbath as an institution.

Scandal Number Two.

The Pharisees were defeated, but not discouraged. They would "get him" yet. So they followed him into the synagogue, trying to trap him. They had their chance at once. There was a man at the service with a withered hand—one of the gospel writers says it was his right hand, his means of earning his livelihood. Would Jesus heal the man on the Sabbath Day, and thus break the law? Again the Master "knew all the answers." "By the way, fellows," he said in effect, "What would you do if one of your sheep should fall into a pit on the Sabbath Day? Would you not bestir yourselves and get that sheep out of that hole? You would be working, but do you think you would be breaking the law, at least in spirit? Why of course not? Well, if you would do that for a sheep, don't you think I ought to heal a man on the Sabbath Day? How much better is a man than a sheep! The fact is, men, it is lawful to do good on the Sabbath Day. That is what the Sabbath is made for. It is perfectly proper to do works of necessity and works of mercy on this sacred day." Then he said to the man, "Stretch forth thy hand." And he stretched it forth and it was restored whole as the other. That did it. Such a fellow ought not to even live. And "the Pharisees went out and took counsel against him, how they might destroy him." Scandal Number Two was too much.

Here again, Jesus was asserting human rights above laws and institutions. He was emphasizing the fact that human personality is sacred, the most precious value in the world,

The letter of the law, institutions, sacred places are secondary to human rights and human welfare. Tradition must not stand in the way of human betterment. Human welfare is above all else. Any word or deed that will help it, or improve it, must be spoken or done—and when better done than on the Sabbath?

Jesus' Law of Doing Good.

This is the title of today's lesson. It is also a Temperance Lesson. It is all of one piece of cloth. There are forces and laws and institutions, and social practices and attitudes that lower the standards of men and tend to destroy men. The acid test of all of these things is the question, "Does it make for human welfare? Does it elevate or degrade human personality?"

The Sabbath is a bridge between two shores,
White arched, strong girded. Loud on either side,

Down to the border of the silver tide,
Eager and fain, the noise of traffic roars,
Then falls to silence. Not an echo frets
The lofty span, nor any garish light
Nor sordid shadows fleck the quiet height
To stain all its snowy parapets.

Caught in a safe, high calm 'twixt strife and strife,

A little while our hearts are holden there;
Our souls, like tranquil pilgrims softly shod,
Halt, and forget the weariness of life.
And leaning, find sweet heaven mirrored clear
In the still river of the rest of God.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

Our Friendly Service project was to send needed items to the North Carolina migrant center. We had our fellowship picnic in August at the church.

New officers were installed at our meeting on September 18, with Mrs. Jack Campbell, Sr., in charge of the impressive service. They are: Mrs. Robert Buchanan, president; Mrs. Lendon Rollins, vice-president; Mrs. Paul Rosser, secretary and treasurer of the Ladies' Aid, and Mrs. James Watson, secretary and treasurer of the Missionary Society.

I wish to thank each member in our society publicly for the wonderful co-operation during my two years as president. I pray that God will be with us during this coming year and will bless and guide our new president.

MRS. DAVID ROSSER.

Sowing and Reaping and Offerings of Thankfulness

A Sermon

By JOHN F. C. GREEN, D. D.
McKeesport, Pennsylvania.

"Then Noah built an altar to the Lord and offered burnt offerings on the altar . . . And the Lord smelled the pleasing odor. (And he said) While the earth remains, seedtime and harvest, cold and heat, summer and winter, day and night shall not cease."— Genesis 8: 20-22.

An ancient legend tells the story of a feast on Mount Olympus to which Zeus had invited the olympiad of the gods. All had come. And all were well acquainted with each other, excepting two: Kindness and Gratitude. These two had never met. It took God himself to have Kindness meet Gratitude.

Someone has rightly said that were blindness—physical blindness—the common lot, so that the beauty of God's nature, in sunrise, sunset, and in the glory of the day, of flowers, of trees, of wondrous skies—and of the beauty of human faces were unknown, a granted glimpse of these or any of this wonder, would be a veritable miracle of beauty. As it is, to be had for looking and seeing, and to be unrecognized for beauty surpassing all comprehension, this gift of God, out of his infinite kindness, does not meet with the gratitude it deserves.

We now stand in the equinoxes, when day and night are of equal length, when the beauty of the productive summer with growth and flower and maturing harvest, gives way to the transition unto the resting months of winter, when nature displays beauty of foliage that is beyond description or the ability of human reproduction. Two little city guests were sitting on the shore and watching a sunset. The unaccustomed vastness of the skies and the absence of distracting traffic had made them pensive. Words seemed inadequate.

But one finally drew on the experience of the city and said, of the greatest beauty that he had known: "Gosh, just think; and its technicolor, too!"

A renowned American aviator once said: "I have flown over most of this world, and I have marvelled at its indescribable beauty. But I have never yet seen any of the change man has made on the earth that is as beautiful as is the earth where man has not changed God's own handiwork." It was in this sense that Jesus spoke of "Solomon in all his glory," that yet could not match the natural beauty of one of the uncounted millions of spring flowers that carpeted Palestine after the spring rains had brought bloom to the sere desert of the winter drought.

Just as the city children have been estranged from nature's beauty, so city men and women, too, have been alienated from the natural processes that give sustenance and livelihood, in the crops of the land by which the people are fed.

In the simpler life of the farm, each child was a partner in sowing and reaping. Each child had tasks to do that would perhaps seem burdensome to him, but which made him more the coming man and woman; which made him share in the work and friendship of humans and animals. The miracle of life in its beginnings, its flowering and fruition, the glory of the changing seasons, the beauty of the rain and the treasury of the snows were all his. And out of the mystery of this revelation of infinite life, he was, perhaps unknowing, prepared for the fullest revelation of God's way with his earth and his children.

The Bible is an out-door book. Every great passage of scripture is a paean of praise for the beauty and goodness of nature, as the gift of God. Every festival of the ancient church is a feast of thanksgiving for the goodness of God in his harvest for the needs of men.

The drama of Noah portrays new life upon the punished earth which had been destroyed for the sins of man. And the first act is a harvest-festival of thanksgiving, in gratitude to God, who is moved, out of infinite kindness, to promise that in the future he will not again destroy man for his wickedness.

A little child comes toddling to his mother, holding in his tiny fist a few crushed dandelions, saying, "Flowers, for you, Mommy"; and the mother takes the flowers with joy.

She pretends to smell and enjoy them; she says they are beautiful; and she kisses the child in gratitude for this love revealed by him. So God acted, in this sacrifice of Noah. So, surely, he acts in response to every offering of gratitude from his children. Not that he requires the gift—who is the Great Giver; but the offering of the grateful heart is the sacrifice supreme.

The churches—reaching back into the very dawn of civilization—have included a service of thanksgiving and offering at the end of the harvest, to thank the Lord of the Harvest for his goodness, that had given food for the months ahead, until the new year would bring in another season of sowing and reaping. In the transition from the farm to the town life, this good custom has often been neglected, and that is not well. Man always and ever depends upon the mercy of God for his needs. As there are frosts and hails and droughts and floods to undo the growing harvest and to cause famines in the world, so there are misfortunes that bring want and starvation to the peoples of the earth. Never can security be established for man. Perhaps it is well. For without the danger of want and need man would declare his independence from the God who created him and sustains him.

It is meet, therefore, that those who pray for themselves and for each other, return to the hallowed customs of old, that brought special gratitude to the God of harvests for the supplies of the earth whereby life is sustained.

A haze on the far horizon,
The infinite, tender sky,
The ripe, rich tint of the corn fields
And the wild geese sailing high;
And all over upland and lowland,
The charm of the goldenrod,
Some of us call it autumn,
But others call it God.

Amen.

AT WORK, AT PLAY, IN HOME, IN CHURCH.

be sure the game is played safely. There have been many unnecessary accidents because of not taking your time and considering the other man. Not only should we be clean, honest players; but, if we are not in the game, we should be good spectators also.

Christianity should be with us at play and entertainment, as well as at work, in our church and in our home.

The Orphanage
 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Many of you will want to make a personal gift of Thanksgiving to the Christian Orphanage at this time. Please do. We are in really great need of the funds. Our bills have accumulated during the summer and fall, and now we must have the money with which to pay them.

Just read these lines, and send us a Thanksgiving gift—one dollar to one thousand dollars, as the Lord has prospered you—will be gratefully received. You do not have to wait until some deed of greatness you may do, says the song. Give as the Lord has blessed you.

In the Bible, we are told: "He that hath pity on the poor lendeth to the Lord, and that which he hath given will he pay again."

Little twin boys, Bobby and Billy, are in the fourth grade, very humble and quiet little boys. They do not rush to the front nor put their needs forward, but at last their poor shoes were worn out, completely. So a day or two ago, they stood at my desk, and one of them quietly told me they needed a pair of shoes, whereupon each of them stepped around where I could see what they were wearing. Well, I'm telling you, they got new shoes!

Here are 81 children, needy for everything they have. Two dollars in a whole year from each member of our churches would be $70,000.00. The price of a half a tank of gasoline from each member would be more than we are asking. We have run our bills up into several thousand dollars, and we hope and pray that sufficient funds will come in at this Thanksgiving season to even the slate.

In the Bible we are told: "Therefore, I command thee, saying, Thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy in the land; because that for this thing the Lord thy God shall bless thee in all thy works, and in all thou putteth thine hand unto." Has the Lord blessed you, and would you like his favor and guidance and blessing in the days to come. Then have a good heart of compassion on the needy. God has been gracious unto you. Find ways of showing thanksgiving and gratitude for his kindness.

Your orphanage is doing a good part by every boy and girl here. Will you join with others in seeing to it that there are sufficient funds with which to do the job.

Every church in our Convention is requested to give their congregation the opportunity to give to the orphanage a Thanksgiving offering. If you wish to be very generous, make it a special offering. By that I mean, an offering given beyond the apportionment which each church expects to give. Make it a part of the extra which the Convention voted as being a proper asking of the churches.

In the Bible we are told: "He that giveth unto the poor shall not lack, but he that hideth his eyes shall have many a curse." The poor give to the poor. And also the humble, whom God has blessed with riches give to the poor. Well, by that token, an orphan homeless child is poor and needy—and I believe many will hear, in this land of plenty, his cry.

Do not wait until some deed of greatness you may do; send your Thanksgiving offering today.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

FREEMAN.

We, the members of Burton's Grove Congregational Christian Church wish to pay tribute to the memory of our member, Mr. Clifton A. Freeman who passed away on June 15, 1952. He was loyal to his church, a faithful and devoted father, a peaceable friend and neighbor.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we as members of the church deeply feel the loss of our member.
2. That we shall miss him, and shall cherish the memory of his friendship.
3. That we extend our deepest sympathy to his family and commend them to God for comfort.

Mrs. NELLIE BURTON,
Mrs. P. N. GAY,
Mrs. G. C. BRITTLE,
Committee.

BOWDEN.

We the members of the Woman's Missionary Society of Mt. Carmel Congregational Christian Church, wish to pay loving tribute to the memory of our beloved member, Mrs. Anna Carr Bowden, wife of R. T. Bowden, whom God in his infinite wisdom took from our midst on September 8, 1952.

Be it resolved;

1. That God's way is always best.
2. That we shall cherish the memory of her unflinching cheerfulness though her body bore the burden of intense pain and suffering for many months.
3. That her sweetness of spirit will always be an inspiration to all who knew her.
4. That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to her devoted husband, and loved ones who ministered to her so faithfully during her illness, and pray God's blessings upon them.

Mrs. OTELIA JOHNSON,
Mrs. E. W. BEAL,
Committee.

NEWMAN.

On October 9, 1952 Rev. Charles E. Newman passed to his reward. In October 1916 he was called to the pastorate of Lebanon Christian Church in which capacity he served for thirty years up to the time of his retirement from the active ministry in 1946.

Now therefore, be it resolved;

By the deacons and members of this church that while we mourn the loss of his genial personality and Christian leadership, we rejoice in the memory of his contribution to the spiritual and social life of the church and this community. By his devotion to duty and his untiring efforts to bring happiness to others, he endeared himself, not only to this church but the entire community.

Be it further resolved;

That a copy of this resolution be spread upon our minutes, a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication and a copy sent to the bereaved family.

Apportionment Giving

The annual sessions of our conferences constituting the Southern Convention have been held. I trust that payments on apportionment for the college for the conference year have not all been made. On the $15,000 apportionment for the college we have received only $12,795.75, which means that we are still more than $2,000 from the goal set by the Convention.

It has been the custom of the college for the past few years to leave our books open for payment on the previous year's apportionment until January 1 of the following year. If your church has not paid your apportionment in full, won't you please make a special effort to raise the balance, that the college may have that additional encouragement and assistance. We are grateful for every penny paid to date.

FOR THE CHILDREN

"Yes, that is true, in theory, Miss Kile, but it is rather quixotic for this day and age, don't you think?" asked Mrs. Wilson.

"No, Mrs. Wilson, I do not. I thank God daily that in our beloved land the people are expected to provide the same educational opportunities for the children of all who come to our shores. And the question of 'class' depends only on behavior, for there is no position so high but it may be reached by any child born beneath the Stars and Stripes."

"I see it now," said Mrs. Smith with tears in her eyes. "We, on our way to a patriotic meeting, stopped to try to put this most absurd an un-American plan into action! I thank you from my heart that you have awakened me."

"Well, I cannot say that I agree with such ideas, but if you will not cooperate with our plan, we will drop the matter," said Mrs. Wilson.

"It is not my plan any more," averred Mrs. Smith. "My children's father, fighting for democracy, would be amazed that I could consider such a thing. Success to you and your work, Miss Kile. I have learned a much needed lesson in American ideals, and I shall never forget this day."

"Toward More Christian Family Living"

By PAUL REYNOLDS

Secretary of Family Life and Young Adult Work

"The quality of family life either makes or breaks a program of religious education," stated Dr. Seward Hiltnes in a recent article.

We may not completely agree with such a sweeping statement. However there is increasing agreement that "home half" of Christian education is of primary importance.

It was for this reason that some years ago the Fellowship of Congregational Christian Women and the Division of Christian Education sponsored the formation of a "Family Life Committee," national in scope. The group consists of fifteen families, nominated by various state conferences. Each family holds membership as a family and for three year terms. Every summer a four day Workshop is held and the families live together in a camp setting. The four days of sharing at meal time, swimming hours, family games, family vespers and various other activities, give a rich background of fellowship.

Experiences are pooled, achievements, problems and difficulties are shared and discussed. New plans and materials are suggested. Often the first draft outline for some useful piece of material is worked out during sub-committee sessions. The first Family Book, "The Family Celebrates Christmas," was outlined here, and later was written by Mrs. Carl, of Lincoln, Nebraska. The Carl family were at that time members of the committee.

The past two summers, the group has spent a great deal of time discussing the qualities and characteristics which mark a Christian family. The members feel strongly that in these days of rapid social change when former standards are called into question, it would be helpful if some suggestive list of goals or patterns could be formulated.

The leaflet, "Ten Suggestions for Enriching Family Life," has been widely approved and used by our denomination and others. The latest edition was printed by the National Council of Churches. This experience seems to give promise that if a similar, list using the Christian frame of reference could be prepared, this might be useful and helpful.

There were marked differences of opinion as to the items important in such a list. There was also a deep sense of humility at attempting any list. It was recognized that there are families which do not claim to be Christian and yet in many respects show fine and wholesome family living. Contrary-wise there are church families where the actual quality of home life leaves much to be desired.

Still further, it was felt that a family might feel that it was striving to be Christian in its purpose and ways and yet did not observe some of the items listed as goals or patterns. Finally, these suggestions were tentatively adopted.

Patterns for Growth in Christian Family Living

1. The Christian Family finds and radiates joy in Christian living.
2. The Christian Family seeks to know and live by the truth.
3. The Christian Family has a growing faith in God.
4. The Christian Family strives to become followers of the life and teachings of Jesus.
5. The Christian Family feels the need to be in constant touch with God through individual and family prayers.
6. The Christian Family, realizing the need for strength and guidance which comes from fellowship with people of like beliefs, worships in church regularly, and enters actively into the life and program of the church.
7. The Christian Family grows in the knowledge of the Bible and the heritage of the church through study, discussion and participation.
8. The Christian Family, through unselfish and outgoing love, has respect for each personality so essential for the wholesome emotional life of the home.
9. The Christian Family has active, personal concern for all mankind.
10. The Christian Family, realizing that its life and possessions are the gift of God, with gratitude and humility shares its time, its money, its talents.

It is hoped that adult groups all around the country will help improve this list of suggestions. It is planned that then a revised pattern may be published in leaflet form.

Please send your criticisms, suggestions, etc., to Family Life Committee, 19 S. LaSalle Street, Chicago 3, Illinois.

THANKSGIVING

Make a joyful noise unto the Lord, all ye lands!

Serve the Lord with gladness!

Come into his presence with singing!

Know that the Lord he is God!

It is he that made us, and we are his;

We are his people, and the sheep of his pasture.

Enter into his gates with thanksgiving,

And into his courts with praise!

Give thanks unto him, and bless his name!

For the Lord is good;

His steadfast love endures forever,

And his faithfulness to all generations.

News Flashes

Rev. Herman L. Johnson, a junior at Elon College is now pastor of the Berea Church, near Elon College, N. C.

The many friends of Dr. Earl Weed, former pastor of our church at Asheville, extend sympathy in the death of Mrs. Weed in Lincoln, Neb., November 2. She was buried on November 9, in Texas. Dr. Weed still maintains his home at 31 Kingwood Place, Asheville, N. C.

Lakeview Community Church, our newly organized church near Burlington, N. C., gave a generous Thank Offering of $18.00 for our Carroll County Mission. It pleases us to see our newly organized churches taking their places in the important missionary work of the Church.

Dr. John R. Seotford, Church Architecture Consultant, is visiting in the Southern Convention the week of November 16-23. His visit is made possible by the Church Building Department of the Board of Home Missions, New York. He will visit about ten or twelve churches and consult with them about improvement anticipated in church building. Dr. Seotford was formerly Editor of Advance.

Congratulations to the First Evangelical and Reformed Church of Burlington, N. C. Under the sponsoring of this church a new church has been begun in Burlington, in the Grove Park section of the city. The committee has been authorized to proceed to make plans for the temporary building to be placed on their church lot in Grove Park, Burlington, and the National Board of Missions of the Church has authorized a loan of ten thousand dollars ($10,000) on the project.

Rev. William Fairbank Hastings, the director of the Displaced Persons Program of the Congregational Christian Service Committee, recently flew to Germany to serve in the refugee resettlement program of the Department of Interechurch Aid and Service to Refugees of the World Council of Churches. Serving as a "fraternal worker" under the World Council, Mr. Hastings will help to facilitate the resettlement of refugees from Europe to overseas countries to which they are being sent under the auspices of the World Council. Mr. Hastings has been joined by his wife, who will also serve as a "fraternal worker" under the World Council.

FIRST THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION

To all ye Pilgrims:

Inasmuch as the Great Father has given us this year an abundant harvest of Indian corn, wheat, peas, beans, squashes, and garden vegetables, and has made the forests to abound with game, and the sea with fish and clams, and inasmuch as he has protected us from the ravages of the savages, has spared us from pestilence and disease, has granted us freedom to worship God according to the dictates of our own conscience; now, I, your magistrate, do proclaim that all ye Pilgrims, with your wives and ye little ones, do gather at ye meeting house, on ye hill, between the hours of nine and twelve in the daytime, on Thursday, November ye twenty-ninth, of the year of our Lord, one thousand six hundred and twenty-three, and the third year since ye Pilgrims landed on ye Plymouth Rock, there to listen to ye pastor and render thanksgiving to ye Almighty God for his blessings.

*William Bradford,

and Mrs. Douglas Horton, flew on Tuesday morning, November 18, from La Guardia Airport, New York, on the first leg of an extended visit in the South Pacific and Asia.

Dr. Horton is internationally known in the councils of the ecumenical movement, is Minister of the General Council and is Moderator of the International Congregational Council which meets this June in Scotland.

A major objective in India for the Hortons will be attendance on the Central Committee of the World Council of Churches meeting at Lueknow, December 31 to January 9, in preparation for the next assembly of the World Council of Churches in Evanston, Illinois, in August, 1954. Following Lueknow, Mrs. Horton will remain in India until the first of March under the United States State Department's educational exchange program. She will visit colleges and universities, acquainting herself with India's educational programs, addressing the students and seeking to interpret life in America to them.

The Hortons' first stop will be in the Hawaiian Islands, where they will speak and visit among the Congregational churches under the auspices of the Hawaiian Evangelical Association. They will then go on to Australia and New Zealand, where Dr. Horton will represent particularly the International Congregational Council and speak at key points.

At the close of the meeting of the Central Committee of the World Council in Lueknow, Dr. Horton will return to the United States, detouring in Cairo, Egypt, long enough to dedicate a new dormitory in the American University at Cairo of whose Board of Directors he is chairman. He expects to reach the United States around January 20.

Report of Valley Conference Young People's Superintendent

"Remember thy creator in the days of thy youth." Our attitude toward young people and their work should not be of such a nature as to give the idea that young people are just preparing to become citizens of the Kingdom and serve but rather that they are a vital part and everyone has a definite place to fill.

The calendar of the young people of the Valley has been filled with activities of a very high type the past year. There are 11 societies in the conference, 10 reporting, all of which have been active in their churches and many achievements have been realized.

Antioch — Holds meetings each month, paid $50.00 to missions. Representatives at state and local rallies and camp. Studied the book, Looking South. Had Hallowe'en and Christmas parties with the Linville young people. Joint meeting with Linville and New Hope to hear Rev. Harman.

Bethel — Held monthly meetings, had planned devotions using the youth packet. Have 20 members on roll. Each second Sunday have the Sunday school worship service. Paid conference apportionment. Held special Mother's Day service and presented church with five Hymnals dedicated to "Mothers." Purchased six dozen communion cups and filler. Served a supper and held a lawn party, proceeds which will go to the project, namely, the furnishing of the young people's room in the new Education Plant. Sponsored a Watch party, inviting neighboring churches. Was represented at rallies and camp.

Bethlehem—Thirty members on roll with an average attendance of 23. Held meeting the second Friday night each month, with the fourth Friday night as recreation night. Donated $50.00 to the Building fund. Project—to furnish class and recreation room.

Leaksville — Gave $50.00 to the building of the cement walk, made donation to the basement fund. Next project is to purchase an electric fan. Several special programs have been given by the young people.

Linville—Meet each month, having a short devotion. Studied the Book of James and Looking South. Joint party with Antioch on Hallowe'en and Christmas. Served Ruritan supper, sold jello and vanilla. Project—purchasing marker for the church. Each fourth Sunday have devotions at the Sunday school worship. In the spring went to Smithland Nursing Home on a Sunday afternoon and had a short worship program and music, vocal and instrumental. Had a hayride and weiner roast at Massanutten Caverns in July.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

"The Ministry of Christian Education"

A GUEST EDITORIAL

By REV. HENRY E. ROBINSON
Pastor of the First Christian Church
Burlington, North Carolina

Many of the incidents related in the gospels center around the preaching and the healing ministries of Jesus. Surely to preach the Word and to heal the wounds of the world is to follow his example. Of equal importance is the teaching ministry of our Lord. The introduction to the Sermon on the Mount itself says: "And he opened his mouth and taught them . . ." The men whom Jesus called and to whom he gave the great responsibility of bearing his message were called "disciples," which means "learners." The name of his followers itself implies that their Master was a Teacher. He was often addressed as "Teacher." The disciples assumed the office of teacher as they heeded the great commission: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations . . ." By example, by name, and by commission, we, as his followers today, have the duty and privilege of the teaching ministry.

This area of the Christian ministry has its center in our church schools. The church school has four major, persistent problems:

1. A trained teaching staff.
2. Adequate materials to interpret the message of Jesus to our times.
3. Modern equipment on a par with the public schools.
4. Sufficient time to put the message across.

With our volunteer staffs, there is a constant need for training and for replacement. A forward-looking program of Christian education will provide a class for prospective teachers as well as periods of teacher training. Teachers become discouraged because oftentimes they are cut adrift of help and supervision once they have been enlisted and assigned a class. Usually we are so busy repairing the gaps that we have no time for the long-range job of training.

Our available materials are improving, but are not perfect. They never will be. Times change too rapidly and church situations differ too drastically to expect any edition to meet every expectation. I have two suggestions at this point. Study the literature available from all sources and choose what best suits your local needs. Let your denominational leaders know your feelings and have your criticisms. If enough of our church school workers would do this, their desires would be reflected in the lessons.

The equipment problem is being attacked in vigorous fashion by scores of churches. Lay and clergy alike see the need and are providing better quarters. One of our most encouraging signs is the large place being given the teaching ministry in nearly every building program.

The last major problem is that of sufficient time with the pupils. This is the most difficult. Hours given to the day school program are reduced to minutes for the church school. The interval between class sessions is too great for efficiency. I believe, however, that the concerted effort being made to strengthen the relation between home and school is bearing fruit and holds great promise. With parents aware of the church school's effort, and working through the week to carry out the Sunday program, far more will be accomplished.

A Prayer of Thankfulness

"O most mighty and gracious God, thy mercy is over all thy works, and hath in an especial manner been extended toward us. We beseech thee, make us truly sensible of all thy mercy; and give us hearts always ready to express our thankfulness, not only by words, but also by our lives, in being more obedient to thy holy commandments. Continue, we beseech thee, thy goodness toward us; that we, whom thou daily crownest with thy loving-kindness, may serve thee in holiness and righteousness all the days of our lives; through Jesus Christ our Lord and our Saviour. Amen."

—Missions Council Church Calendar.

The Pastor's Responsibility to The Unchurched People in His Parish

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN
Chairman, Convention Committee on Evangelism

The unchurched people in every community constitute the evangelistic opportunity and responsibility of every church in the community. And the evangelistic responsibility of every local church rests mainly upon the pastor. He must be the chief recruiting officer in his church.

A pastor's goal in social service and his emphasis on social action are given largest meaning by a consistent interest in a practical program of evangelism to enlist the unchurched people of his parish in the life and work of the church. The social service program of the Church at large depends upon a vital program of evangelism for its effectiveness, its outreach and its continuance.

Christians are the one in indispensable factor in a Christian society. Hence, if a Christian society is our goal, the responsibility of the Church in Christian Recruitment is inescapable. The failure of the churches during the past twenty-five years to carry on a practical, vigorous program of evangelism has been largely responsible for the mushroom growth of the various cults in our day, many of which definitely misrepresent the religion of Jesus to communities all over the nation. Their untrained and unqualified leadership because of their evangelistic zeal are bidding well to supplant within a very few years the churches of the major denominations in literally thousands of our communities. What the regular churches once had, but which many of them have long since lost, these cults possess — namely, Evangelistic Fervor, and without which no religious group can long survive. What a reflection on any church to lose it! And what a tragedy that such is not possessed in largest degree by pastors and churches having the greatest culture—the best educated pastors, and the largest understanding of the unsearchable riches of God in Christ Jesus! Pastors and churches that do not have evangelistic concern are not playing fair with God or with their respective communities. Down through the centuries, the most highly educated and most scholarly ministers in each generation have been characterized by being the most passionately concerned about and the most successful in "The Work of Evangelism." It is because so many of the regular churches have lost the evangelistic spark that society is today afflicted with its numerous cults, many of which are characterized by fanaticism and other crudities which cast reflection upon true religion.

Every worthy pastor is eager to accept his heaven-imposed responsibility in the work of evangelism. In nine cases out of ten, it was a passionate evangelistic concern that prompted today's pastors of churches in every denomination to enter the Christian ministry as their life work. That concern alone justifies a pastor for remaining in the ministry. Every worthy pastor is moreover eager to accept his responsibility in seeing to it that his church shall meet its responsibility toward the unchurched people of his parish.

Following are a few of the pastor's personal responsibilities in this regard—a pastor should assume that there are some unchurched people at every service of worship, and he should have such in mind in the preparation of every sermon. It is his responsibility to make plain the fact that the Religion of Jesus is a religion which cannot be truly known except by personal experience. As Dean Inge so forcefully put it, "There is no substitute for first-hand experience in the spiritual life." And because of that fact, at least occasionally, a pastor should "preach for a verdict." Such a course does not require a show of hands or an altar call, but it does give opportunity for people to register in the secrecy of their hearts their commitment to the God of the Church.

Pastors should assiduously guard against the tendency, which so many churches have, of allowing the church to become merely an organization for the discussion of humanism, an ethical society, or a social group.

Pastors should see to it that the challenge for Christian Enlistment shall be like a golden thread running through the entire pattern of the church's program and message.

It is moreover the pastor's responsibility to make clear what the nature and mission of the Church is—namely that a church is something more than a social club—something more than a Mutual Admiration Society in which each member is kindly disposed toward the other members because of their good judgment in casting their lot with the same group of which he or she is a part. A pastor should make it clear in season and out of season that the Church is both a divine institution with a human purpose and a human institution with a divine purpose. The greatest argument for the divine significance of the Church is the fact that for 1900 years it has proclaimed its message and has survived even in a hostile world.

In this connection, it is interesting to note that the Church weathered the depression years in our country far better than did any other institution in our society. Statistics disclose the fact that during the first four years of the depression:

"One out of every six banks in our country was forced to close its doors.

One out of every 22 business and industrial organizations folded up.

One out of every 40 hospitals found it impossible to carry on.

One out of every 45 colleges was compelled to cease functioning.

Whereas only one out of every 2,344 churches in our entire country was forced to give up."

A pastor should make it plain to the unchurched people of his parish that no church is a museum of labeled saints who pretend to have attained perfection, but that every church is a school of religion, a fellowship of learners, a fellowship in religious thought and living, a fellowship in spiritual quest, a fellowship in service to humanity under the inspiring leadership of Jesus Christ. The pastor should make it clear to the unchurched that no church is composed of those who have been relieved of all their doubts, but that every church is made up of those who, in spite of their doubts, consider their beliefs to be of greater importance than their doubts. Everyone has his doubts along with his beliefs. Unchurched folk need to be informed that the chief difference between the avowed doubter and the avowed believer is that the avowed doubter clings to his doubts in spite of his beliefs, for even the most confirmed doubter also has certain religious beliefs: whereas the avowed believer clings to his beliefs in spite of his doubts, for even the most worthy believer also has his doubts.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Elon College News Notes

Before Thanksgiving, merchants are planning for Christmas! Greensboro, North Carolina, is having its Christmas parade on the Saturday before Thanksgiving on Thursday, and what a parade it is to be! In addition to floats by merchants, civic clubs, etc., Woman's College, Greensboro College, High Point College, Guilford College and Elon College have been invited to send "Queens" to ride in specially prepared floats representing education in the greater Greensboro district. Miss Rachel Matthews of Portsmouth, Virginia, the Homecoming Queen, will represent Elon College.

* * *

The Elon College football team will have its final game with Guilford College on Thanksgiving. The game will be played in Reidsville. The Elon College varsity basketball team will play Virginia Polytechnic Institute in a basketball game in the Elon Gymnasium, Thursday, December 4, at 8 o'clock.

* * *

The North Carolina Student Legislature met in Raleigh on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, November 20-22. Elon College sent six representatives. These students in session pass bills that go to the North Carolina Legislature as recommendations. Many of these bills have been written into law.

* * *

From Wednesday, November 26, to Monday, December 1, will be oppressively quiet on the campus. The college will be closed for the holidays. The employees will be busy cleaning and putting things in order for the opening on December 1.

* * *

Mrs. Warren Burns, field secretary, had a very serious automobile accident on Wednesday, November 12, in the Brambleton section of Norfolk, Virginia. Her father was injured quite seriously. Mrs. Burns escaped serious injury other than shock and nervous disturbance. The car was a complete loss. Mrs. Burns was in Norfolk, accompanied by her father, to visit high schools on College Day in interest of our student body for 1953-54.

Attention pastors, superintendents, church officials! Is there a high school graduate in your congregation who plans to enter college at the beginning of the winter quarter? You would do such a person a service to speak to him about Elon. Our winter quarter opens December 1. We have rooms available. There are now a number of new students entering at the beginning of this quarter, and we should be delighted to have you recommend someone.

A Significant Meeting

Representatives of the campaign organization in North Carolina, together with a group of pastors living in North Carolina, met at Elon College on Tuesday afternoon of last week at 2:30 for the purpose of discussing the campaign and ways and means to make the campaign effective and to raise their local church's and community's share in the campaign. We were faced with the necessity of getting the campaign under way and getting it completed by March 1, 1953. This means that every individual must be interested, must give a little time, must give a little money, and a lot of faith, to make sure that this effort succeeds for the college.

The following definite decisions were reached:

1. That a request be made to the editor and the publisher of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for the second week in January as a special college number. This college number is to be mailed to key individuals in the Southern Convention who are not subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and to ministers of the Congregational Christian Churches serving outside the Southern Convention. This issue is to emphasize the needs of the college and the compulsion on the part of the church to take the lead with the determination that the full amount of $1,300,000 be subscribed, thus completing the Two and One Half Million Dollar Fund for the college.

2. That January 18 be designated as "College Day" in the church. From every pulpit, on that Sunday, or the Sunday following that is most convenient for the pastor, there shall be a message dealing with the college, its needs and the importance of making this campaign a complete success. Prepared information, statistics, procedures and other material will be put into the hands of the pastors.

3. The week following "College Day," there shall be a simultaneous campaign in all of our churches in an effort to raise in cash and subscriptions $1,300,000. The committee felt that there would be a decided advantage in the feeling that every minister and every church member is interested in this one thing during this week. There should be no serious difficulty in reaching the goal toward which we strive. It is the expressed hope that all of our ministers and all of our laymen in all of our conferences will be agreeable to these three decisions reached by the committee, and that we do not only have encouragement but full cooperation in these plans and purposes

The campaign now in progress to secure an additional $1,300,000 for Elon College is of vital interest to every member of the Congregational Christian Church in the South and elsewhere, and to every high school graduate who is thinking of entering college and preparing himself for professional, economic or domestic positions in life. A college education is essential to the best achievements today and tomorrow.

Response to appeals for the college is encouraging where personal solicitations are made. Yesterday, I was in the office of a man who is a member of the Christian Church and a good friend of the college. In the course of the conversation, he expressed his unwillingness to contribute, but he did make a contribution of $1,500 to the college—$300 in cash and $1,200 to be paid $300 annually for the next four years. At the lunch hour, I chanced to meet this friend of mine and a brother of his, likewise a member of the church and a friend of the college. He gave me a pledge for $1,250 to be paid $250 annually for five years, beginning, November, 1952. I went to see another man who is not a member of the church but supposed to be a friend of the college. He was unable to talk, and, of course, did not contribute. Such an experience is to be expected, but not to be a discouragement.

What we need today on the part of every alumnus of Elon College and every member of our church is faith—faith in ourselves, in our fellow man, in our college and in God. Faith never suffers defeat.

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

Naturally there are fewer Sunday schools and churches to send in offerings for the college the week following the meeting of the last annual conference, but it was not anticipated that the number would be so drastically reduced, for certainly there are a number of our Sunday schools and churches that are glad to begin their new conference year with a remittance to their college. The majority of our conferences operate, so far as their contributions are concerned, on the conference year and not the calendar year. For the past two years, the college has left its books open through November and December, and credited contributions received during these months on the basis of the calendar year.

It is hoped that enough contributions will come in during these two months to reach the total apportionment of $15,000. You have about the same to take any twelve consecutive months during the conference year or calendar year. It is a matter of book-keeping and a pleasure to record receipts.

New Pilgrim Series of Grades Lessons Planned

Some of the best qualified scholars from various seminaries are meeting over the Thanksgiving week-end at 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Massachusetts, to discuss the forthcoming curriculum for the Pilgrim Series, graded courses for the church school. By 1959, the Division of Christian Education hopes to produce the best curriculum available to the Protestant churches.

Under the auspices of the division, a part of the Board of Home Missions, men like Paul H. Vieth of Yale University Divinity School, Paul S. Minear of Andover Newton Theological School, Herman G. May of the Oberlin College Graduate School of Theology, and many others equally outstanding, are meeting for three days with staff members for intensive biblical and theological study.

Discussion is being centered around such questions as: What are the most important findings in recent biblical scholarship? What are some of the most assured findings with reference to the ways in which people learn and grow in Christian experiences?

The purpose of the meeting is not to devise the curriculum, but to lay the groundwork for future planning.

"Keeping Christ in Christmas"

"Keeping Christ in Christmas" is the name of a brand new leaflet, just off the press, which, in the form of an attractive, friendly and brightly conceived playlet, carries an impressively informing and domestic triologue between alertly minded housewives regarding the tragic change in recent years, in the Spirit of Christmas festivities in both church as well as social circles.

An interesting and startling relationship is brought to light between the fade-out of the true Christmas spirit since the repeal of the 18th Amendment 19 years ago. The attempt to monopolize Christmas Good Fellowship by the liquor trade is revealed in sensational, factual fashion. The argument of the little playlet is both fascinating and challenging, and seems certain to arouse the thought and hearts of many who have been indifferent to this near capture of the Christmas season, by influences and forces that are completely foreign and antagonistic to its meaning and significance.

The playlet, "Keeping Christ in Christmas," chimes with the fast developing movement of putting "Christ back into Christmas," as it shows how Christmas is being commercialized, and how the liquor industries are outraging decency and becoming more and more sacrilegious in advertising their products.

The author of the pamphlet, Mrs. Blanche Butts. Runion who is corresponding secretary of the National WCTU, in explaining why she was moved to prepare it, says: "We hope it may help public sentiment against the insidious propaganda of this Holy Season by its presentation in one or more of the Departments of the church school, prior to the beginning of the Christmas season.

"One thing we can be sure of, for months now the liquor industries have been making preparation for the spectacular advertising of their wares during the Sacred Season of Christmas. I believe the Christian people of this country can reply to this insidious program by showing their militant resentment against a product, the sale of which at all times is contrary to the principles of Christ and his teachings.

Since there are three characters in the playlet, three copies will be needed in each case. A dime sent to the National WCTU Publishing House, 1730 Chicago Ave., Evanston, Illinois, will be sufficient to bring you these copies of the playlet.

Churches in Shanghai today include about ten different Protestant denominations represented by 139 churches, according to the pro-Communist China Monthly Review, published in Shanghai. These churches are listed by this publication as including: Church of Christ in China, 14; Baptist Church, 15; Anglican Church, 12; Methodist Church, 6; Salvation Army, 3; Seventh Day Adventist Church, 5; Spiritual Work Fellowship, 36; Lutheran Church, 1; Chinese Independent Church, 23; and 24 independent churches. These figures are reasonably close to those given for the year 1950 in the reliable China Bulletin of July 2, 1952.

Another Busy Month in Kilanjunai

Kilanjunai, Indna,
November 2, 1952.

Dear Friends:

This has been another month of being too busy with patients to make much progress on my long-range health plans. I did finally get back the assistant I had last year, who is already familiar with the health education filmstrips and demonstrations, and he has been saving me enough time on translating and in handling the crowds of patients at the clinics that we were able to make a start with the shows in the villages again. But now I have lost my four best filmstrips, a set which was given to me on a long-term loan with the understanding that I would be giving shows constantly, and they were called back because I had not been using them enough.

When I started out, day before yesterday, in a well-planned trek to the other end of the Diocese to meet an engagement which I had promised many times previously, and had to cancel for various reasons, a telegram called me back from half-way because Louis had developed an unknown ailment with a fever of 105. He was better by the time I got back; but I decided that it just doesn't seem to be practical for me to be attempting this formal health education work under these circumstances. Perhaps I will get further in the long run by a better organized program of instruction and guidance for the patients I see here.

The leprosy program is the best-developed example of that so far, although I haven't gotten much further yet than to get the patients to attend regularly for their treatments, hoping that getting them non-infections as fast as possible will be the most feasible method of cutting down on the spread of that disease in the villages. My main problem in that connection is financial. With the average weekly attendance at the clinics approaching 150, the amount of medicines being used for them is costing way beyond the budget. I have found that the proper amount that should be allowed per patient for drugs and other materials is 15 rupees a year ($3.00). Our annual grant from the Indian Leprosy Society, based on the scale of the program before I came, was 75 rupees a year. So the other thing I was planning to do in Madura and had to cancel for the emergency call home, was to approach the secretary for the District Branch of the Indian Leprosy Society to appeal for a larger grant. This group is an entirely Indian organization and it raises its funds locally, and should not be confused with the Mission to Lepers, which pays half of my salary.

In general, I have been telling myself that I don't have time, so far, to visit the infectious leprosy patients in their villages, to see where they are living and sleeping, and to show them on the spot measures which they should take to prevent infecting the children in their families. One exception I made was to visit a highly infectious patient who is hiding the fact of his disease and working as a teacher in an elementary school, and who hadn't been coming for treatment for several weeks. His excuse was that he had been unable to walk even to the nearest way-side clinic. I dressed the foot which was bothering him, and got him to promise to attend faithfully; but I couldn't ask him to stop teaching, because if he did, he and his family would starve.

When it comes to TB, however, the situation is difficult and I really am in a quandary. When I heard that the new "miracle drug" for TB was available in India and was relatively cheap, it occurred to me that perhaps I should be using it to render sputa negative and to cut down the opportunities for spreading the infection, even though conditions were not ideal enough to actually cure the patients. However, from what little I have heard about the drug so far, I suspect that they would still have to stay in bed and cooperate to some extent in order for it to be of any use and not be dangerous. So, as a starter, I have decided to tell all the known TB patients who live within easy cycling distance of Kilanjunai or one of the other clinics that I will visit them in their homes at weekly intervals; and those that I find following orders well enough in regard to bed rest, home isolation, disposal of sputum, etc., I will give a week's supply at a time of the drug. We will see how it works out. So far, one man has apparently qualified, after three or four visits, and is now receiving his first batch. A second, a village goldsmith, came in last Wednesday, and since he seemed young and intelligent and educated, we really piled on the propaganda and warnings and instructions, and loaded him down with printed directions and literature about the disease. Friday, we hunted him up in his village and found him sitting on the veranda, plying his trade, whereas he should have been in bed; and he was quite innocently flabbergasted to learn that we meant any of the things that we had said, so preposterous they sound to the villager. I have the feeling that he will eventually understand and cooperate and qualify for the drug. It will be a harder pull for the average uneducated patients, and especially for the young women with their children, whom no one else will take care of, but who are surely condemned to the same death, too, as long as they stay with their mothers. I have the feeling that the village visiting and the patient talking, with one case after another, will eventually do more than the glamorous picture shows I was depending on and lost.

Our other problem, the maternal and infant one, is not yet being very brilliantly solved. Fran is getting a lot of women in for an initial prenatal examination; but they never come back, because it is too hard for them to walk in frequently from their distant villages when they are near term. Besides, they cannot afford to take so much time from their other children and the field work when they are not "sick." They live too far away to make coming to the hospital or sending for our midwife feasible at the zero hour. However, most of them deliver normally, and the "no news" from them is good news. But when anything does go wrong, our western ideas of saving lives have tough sledding. At one time we happened to have four premature babies in the hospital at once, and they all eventually died because their families believed that they were inherently defective and not worth struggling over to try to save. I suppose it is a case of human lives being counted as cheap, but they feel that a lot of effort and expense to save such a one may jeopardize the chances of the whole family to win its constant fight against starvation.

Alamance District Meeting

On Sunday night, October 26, Mrs. Claud C. Ward, superintendent of the Alamance District, called a meeting of local society presidents and program chairmen at the new educational building of the Burlington Church. She had a fine response, for thirteen of the sixteen churches of the district were represented.

Mrs. W. T. Scott, North Carolina president, presented a very inspiring devotional. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill was present and directed the discussion on the total year's work, including all of the programs.

Many questions concerning all departments of our conference work were asked and answered. This meeting proved especially helpful to both the small and the new societies. But through this informal discussion, even the older societies learned a lot they had never realized before, according to Mrs. Ward.

The idea of a meeting of the representatives of all societies early in the year for the purpose of explaining the year's work might well be used by all of our districts.

* * * * *

A Message from Mrs. W. T. Scott

A fine letter has gone to all the North Carolina societies from their new president, Mrs. W. T. Scott. In it she gives the results of the excellent Executive Board Meeting held in the United Church in Raleigh on October 23.

Only a small percentage of the societies checked all the items on the list of "Achievement Goals" last year, Mrs. Scott has asked that they be printed on this page, so that we may realize at the beginning of the year what we are supposed to do. You will find them in "bold face type" in the center of this page. Look them over now and plan to mark them 100% at the end of the year.

Soon we will give you the names of the book reviewers for the North Carolina Conference, so that you can invite them to your society if you so desire. We will also print some of the questions from the local society report blanks, so that new presidents and secretaries will know the things they are expected to report on at the end of the year. Then you can plan your work accordingly.

Achievement Goals for Local Societies

1. Use the Packet prepared by the Convention Literature Committee.
2. Use designated books for Mission Study and Bible Study, "African Heritage," "These Rights We Hold," "Colossians."
3. Promote good reading in the church by securing subscriptions to "The Christian Sun," and other periodicals such as "Advance," "Guide Post," and "The Church Woman."
4. Promote missions through the Sunday School and/or sponsor societies for the various age groups. (Cradle Role, Children, Young People.)
5. Present missions in a public program.
6. Assist the church in developing Christian Family Life.
7. Use visual aides as a means of presenting missionary ideals to the church.
8. Observe World Day of Prayer, World Community Day, and May Fellowship Day—if possible, in cooperation with other denominations.
9. Present a Thank Offering Program, and receive an offering for the suggested project for the year. (Carroll County Mission.)
10. Present at least one Life Membership or Memorial. (Each $10, money to be sent to Conference Treasurer, along with name of person to be honored and society giving it.)
11. Send gifts or a contribution to at least one Friendly Service Project suggested by the Convention. (Ellis Island at Christmas.)
12. Have representatives at Conference and Rally.
13. Make quarterly reports to the Woman's Missionary Conference Treasurer.
14. Make annual report to the Woman's Missionary Conference through the District Superintendent.
15. Meet annual Conference apportionment.

New Society at Lakeview

Mrs. Claude C. Ward, superintendent of the Alamance District, and Mrs. Harold Ingle, a former superintendent, met with a group of women from our new church at Lakeview, near Burlington, on October 28. Mrs. Ward reports an active and wide-awake group of ten women were present.

The following officers were elected: Mrs. Bill Farrell, president; Mrs. Louise Wilson, secretary and treasurer; Mrs. James Rascoe and Mrs. James Woody, program chairmen. The group is named "The Ruth Faucette Circle," being named after the wife of the man who gave the land for their new church. They set ten dollars as their goal for missions for the year, and hope to go beyond that amount.

Holy Neck Society Reports for 1951-52

The Missionary-Aid Society of the Holy Neck Church, near Holland, Virginia, has just completed a successful year's work. Our apportionment has been paid in full, and we sent friendly service gifts to Ryder Memorial Hospital and to Franklin Center.

At our annual Christmas party, instead of exchanging gifts with each other, each of us brought a beautifully wrapped package containing money, which was later sent to the Elon Orphanage. All of us came back to our homes filled with joy of sharing rather than with the fleeting pleasure of gifts for ourselves.

In January we held a covered dish luncheon, and at that meeting, Mrs. I. W. Johnson taught our Bible study on the book of James. In January, also, we combined our thirty-fifth birthday celebration with a family-life program, and held a buffet supper to which all the families of the church were invited. After the worship service, conducted by Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Harrell and their four lovely daughters, Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, a former pastor, spoke on the subject, "Family Relations." This supper has become a tradition toward which we all look forward during the year.

We were delighted to be invited by the ladies of the Franklin Church to hear Mrs. F. C. Lester review our study book on Latin America. Several members heard Dr. Truman Douglass present "Mission to America" at the group meeting in Suffolk. In March, Mrs. Thomas Woodward of Suffolk gave a most interesting review of the book, "Now," for our group.

A highlight of each year is the May Fellowship Supper, at which

It's Thanksgiving Day—Thanksgiving Day!

Three hundred years ago, when the American Indians were the people who lived in the forests of our nation, there came a band of people from the old country of Europe. These people were English and spoke the same language that we do, except that it was old-fashioned in its style. The King would not let them worship as they pleased, and they had gone to Leyden, Holland, to be safe and happy in their worship with the Dutch people. Although the Dutch people were kind and very good to them, the English people were unhappy to hear their children speak Dutch with the children of the town. So they went back to their homes, gathered what they thought they would need the most, and came to this country on a sailing ship called the Mayflower.

There wasn't a road, house, ear or store here. Just the forest, wild animals, birds and the Indians. The fathers cut the trees, built houses and the church. The mothers and children helped. In the spring they planted gardens, and the Indians gave them corn and showed them how to plant it.

In the fall when all of the food was gathered, the people who were known as "Pilgrims" said to each other, "God has helped us, he has been good. The Indians have helped us. Let us give thanks to God with a great feast and invite our Indian friends." They did, and from that day to this, Americans have had a day each year to count their blessings and give thanks thanks to God.

Do you like baked beans and brown bread? It has been said that the baked bean is older than Thanksgiving itself. The Pilgrims were very serious about their religion and insisted that everyone go to church. If they didn't they were soon punished by being dipped into cold water or fastened in pieces of wood called stocks. They called Sunday "the Sabbath," and it started when the sun went down on Saturday night and ended with sunset Sunday night. There could be no work, no playing, no cooking during that time. When Sunday morning came the Pilgrim family started to church and stayed for the three or four hour services. When they returned home, they were glad to eat . . . some of us get awfully restless if we spend one hour in our church!

The Pilgrim mother baked her beans all day Saturday and she baked the brown bread then too. If her oven in the fireplace was a good one, it kept the beans warm for Sunday dinner. If it wasn't a good oven, they ate the beans cold.

But when the Thanksgiving feast was held, the men shot wild turkeys, and now we like to have them too. We can give thanks for our Congregational forebears who brought religious freedom to our nation and who started many of the things we enjoy today.

"Little Courtesies"

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Don't you ever become tired of saying 'Thank you,' Doris?" I asked my sister as she was hanging out her washing with what seemed to me the doubtful assistance of her two-year-old son.

Doris smiled as she accepted a handful of clothespins from her small helper and repeated the magic formula, "Thank you, David."

With a quickly-chanted, "Welcome Mother," the little fellow ran to the box of pins to refill the order.

"Sometimes it does take a bit of patience to permit David to help me," my sister replied frankly, "but letting him do things now with me forms the basis for a happy companionship that I want to continue through the years. Young children love repetition. David is playing a little game with me while he helps me hang out clothes and he hears over and over again the courteous words of appreciation that he needs to learn to say for himself. It is better to guide him toward forming a good habit now than to wait until he is older and has acquired the bad habit of giving no response when thank you is in order."

"I'm sure David will always be glad his mother took time to teach him the little courtesies of life," I commented.

"Teaching David is sort of a family project, Lucia," Doris explained. "The plan goes back to the time Tom, our first baby, began to talk. His daddy and I noticed in how many instances the little fellow repeated our exact words and phrases. We resolved to take time to speak graciously to each other. We realized that if we helped our children by example to remember always to say, 'Please' and 'Thank you' and 'You're welcome' while they were young, they would naturally make some courteous response when they grew older.

"Their teachers have given the children much help in developing pleasing manners," Doris added. "When we go to hear Tom's English class discuss good books this afternoon, we will try to go early enough to stop in at some other children's rooms, too, and then you can see for yourself."

My sister's family lives in the country, and the children attend a large centralized school where both elementary and high school classes meet in one building. My nephew, Tom, knowing my interest in books from my work as a children's librarian, had invited his mother and me to hear his class's monthly discussion of their home reading.

As we stopped briefly in each of the children's rooms, my sister's words came true. Each small reader in Joan's class was rewarded with a smile and a quiet, "Thank you, Norma"—"Thank you, Joan"—and so on. Older pupils in Freda's room were placing their problems on the board and explaining their solution. As each assignment was completed, the teacher gave some word of appreciation.

Our visit to Tom's English class was the highlight of the afternoon. We were given chairs at the back of the room where other guests and the teacher were seated, while a student leader, appointed by the reading committee of the class, took charge of the program. Much to his surprise, my nephew was chosen for that role.

The reading reports were well given and were intensely interesting, but what I liked best was the pleasing way in which the young leader, with no prompting from the teacher, thanked each student who took part. Tom's quiet ease in filling the position of leadership made me realize the value of the lifelong habit of courteous expression. I understood why my sister was beginning so early to guide her youngest child into the habit of saying thank you.

Newport News Young People Elect Officers

On October 26 the High School and Young People's group of the First Congregational Christian Church of Newport News Virginia held their installation of officers. At the candle light ceremony Mrs. Lois Simons installed the following officers:

President, Miss Patsy Manuel; Vice President, Miss Jaekie Foster; Secretary, Miss Doris Bowden; Treasurer, Mr. Wayne Taylor; Reporter, Miss Edith Mason; Pianists, Misses Jean Danglier and Patsy Manuel; Refreshment Chairman, Miss Ann Hope Scott; Social Chairmen, Misses Jane Squires and Jean Danglier; Membership Chairmen, Miss Nancey Hawely and Mr. George Danglier.

On Sunday, November 2, the group had a service of dedication for the money earned on work day for Christ. A total of $41.15 was earned from the sale of fudge and cup cakes which the girls of the group made, and other odd jobs done by other members of the group.

The sponsors of the group this year are Major and Mrs. Donald Simons. Pastor-counselor for the group is Rev. A. Lanson Granger.

Hines Chapel Works for Christ

The young people of Hines Chapel worked very hard on the Work Day for Christ. We made $60.00 and enjoyed our work very much. Our money was earned by house cleaning, working in tobacco, digging potatoes, gathering corn, and working in department stores. We had a dedication service on the following Sunday morning.

"Shirts 'n' Skirts"

Enrollmen at Silliman University, Dumaguete, in the Philippines, has dropped from 4,000 to 3,000 this year because of the acute depression in the islands. Thousands of young people want to study, but cannot afford it. The College of Theology at Silliman is aided by our American Board.

To help their Philippino brethren, the United Student Fellowship, a group of Congregational Christian and Evangelical & Reformed young people, has adopted a project with the slogan, "Shirts and Skirts for Silliman." In addition to money scholarships ($250 in American money provides a full year of tuition, board, room and books) the fellowship is seeking books, magazines, and clothing for the Philippine students.

Further information regarding this project may be obtained by writing Bob Green, USF Action Commission Chairman, YMCA, Lincoln, Neb.

Relax With Max

I hear that the Eastern North Carolina Youth Fellowship Rally at Fuller's Chapel was a very good meeting. I hear that the young people in the Valley of Virginia had a very good Youth Rally in October. I hear about a N. C. and Va. President's meeting at Greensboro, an Eastern Va. President's meeting at Cypress Chapel, and a N. C. and Va. officers meeting at Elon. But hearing about them is all. I'd like to know more about these meetings and I think some of the other young people would, too. What about some reports?

* * *

I received a very nice letter and some jokes from Mrs. W. A. Newman, of Henderson. I'd like to share some of these jokes with you and to thank Mrs. Newman.

Junior was passing his plate for his fourth helping of pie when his mother cautioned him. "Be careful, dear. There was once a boy who ate too much pie and burst."

Junior thought a moment, then replied, "Couldn't be. No such thing as too much pie."

"But there must be," reasoned his mother, "else why did the boy burst?"

Junior passed his plate again and announced, "Just not enough boy."

* * *

Sitting in a concert hall waiting for the concert to begin, a man, seeing a little boy in front of him looking at his watch, bent forward and asked, "Does it tell the time?"

"No," answered the little boy, "you have to look at it."

At the kindergarten when they reach the age of four, pupils are expected to put on their own shoes; Johnny, having attained that age of discretion, was told by his teacher to do so. He did his best but later had to be told that he had his shoes on the wrong feet.

"But, teacher," he protested, "I haven't got any other feet."

REPORT OF YOUNG PEOPLE'S SUPERINTENDENT.

Newport—Had devotions on second Sunday each month at Sunday school. Sold Christmas and other cards. Had several outings.

New Hope—Fifteen members on roll. One new member was added during the year. Paid $10.00 to missions. Read the mission book. Assisted the Women's Society in packing a box of used clothing for overseas relief.

Wissler's Chapel—This is a new society this year. They met twice a month. They had a "Lord's Acre" project and raised over $100.00. Attended several parties with other churches.

Woods Chapel—Meets every two weeks. Have planned devotions. Have heard several missionaries speak. Did quite a lot of Friendly Service in the community. Have a Lord's Acre project—raising a calf, which will soon be ready to go on the market. Have had several weiner roasts and parties with other young people in neighboring churches.

Winchester—This year the young people divide into two groups—senior and younger teenagers. The seniors met once a month in homes with missionary programs. The younger group met on Sunday evenings last winter in the parsonage social hall. They held a successful "Work Day for Christ." Attended State rally. Each Sunday evening service is featured by a worship circle and an unbroken chain of prayer. Christmas—A Bible display, featuring Bibles of many printings and languages. A Mother's Day service was held honoring mothers. Had a hayride at close of school and did not hold regular meetings during the summer. October 16th will be Parents Night and installation of officers in a public service to follow.

Timber Ridge—No report.

The young peoples project of the Southern Convention for the next biennium is to build a cabin at "Moone-lon."

Jesus, the Great Teacher

LESSON X—DECEMBER 7, 1952

MEMORY SELECTION: "Where did this man get this wisdom, and these mighty works?"—Matthew 13:54.

LESSON: Matthew 13:24-35, 53-54.

DEVOTIONAL READINGS Psa. 119:33-40.

The Master Teacher.

We call him Master, and we do well, for so he is. And nowhere is his mastery shown to better advantage than in his teaching. He was the Master Teacher. In so far as modern psychology and pedagogy are sound, they simply use the principles and methods which Jesus used. He used pictures, projects, points of contact, problems, plain speech, people, in teaching truth. He used illustrations, questions, objects, every-day experiences, to make his teaching simple, interesting, plain, vital. No wonder the common people heard him gladly. He was informal, simple, clear, direct, understandable, interesting, human, down-to-earth. He made effective use of the important principle in education of speaking of the unknown in terms of the known—it used to be called "the point of contact in teaching."

His teaching was fresh and lively, and there was a note of authority in it. It amazed the learned people of his day, astonished the multitudes, and caused his disciples themselves to wonder. "Where did this man get this wisdom?" they exclaimed, when they heard him speak. They had never heard anything like it before.

"Jesus came teaching." He depended upon the power of the spoken word. He left no written material. That is significant. It was an evidence of Jesus' confidence in the power of truth, in the spoken word, and of the capacity of men to receive the truth. In other words, Jesus had faith in the seed and in the soil.

Some Master Teaching.

Today's lesson gives us three illustrations of Jesus' mastery as a Teacher. He wanted to tell the people about the kingdom of God or the kingdom of heaven, as Matthew reports it. How in the world could he help the people to understand something so seemingly vague and intangible as the kingdom of God? That was a thing of the spirit; the people dealt with material things. Well enough, he would talk to them about things of which they knew little or nothing, in terms of things they did know about.

He told them seven stories, or gave seven parables or "pictures" of the kingdom of heaven in terms of things that were close at hand and thoroughly familiar. The lesson gives three of these parables. The theme of each one is "The Kingdom of Heaven."

It should be said that Jesus is not talking about heaven, the place of jasper walls, pearly gates and streets of gold. He is talking about the rule or reign of God. It is both present and future, both personal and social, both inward and outward. He presents three aspects of it in three simple parables.

The Tares in the Field.

A man sowed a field of wheat. But when the wheat began to grow, it became apparent that there was something beside wheat in the field. There was a goodly supply of "bearded darnel," a pestiferous, and somewhat poisonous weed. The farmer's servants were all for going into the field and pulling up the tares. If they had done that, they would have ruined the wheat, for in the early stages of growth, the wheat and the tares look very much alike. "Let them both grow until the harvest," said the wise farmer, "and we will then gather the tares and burn them, and then we will harvest the wheat." His reply to his servants as to how the tares got into the field in the first place is significant—"an enemy hath done this."

Jesus is not propounding a theory to account for the existence of evil; he is simply saying that it is not according to the perfect will of God. Why, we ask, does not God destroy evil? Why does he permit war? And why does he not destroy the wicked man? The parable points to an answer to these and similar questions. First of all, Jesus is saying that truth will not be destroyed by error, that goodness will be harvested in spite of the wickedness in the world. He is also pointing up to a day of judgment. Made up, as it is, of human beings, there are elements of evil mixed up with the good in the kingdom. But eventually, there will be a separation, eventually, the good will come to harvest, eventually, the evil will be destroyed.

The Mustard Seed.

"The smallest of all seed . . . greater than the herbs, even a tree when it is grown." Here Jesus is emphasizing the amazing potentialities for growth in the smallest beginnings of the kingdom. We are not to despise the day of small beginnings. The classic example, of course, is the growth of Christianity itself. It began with Jesus himself. Here he was, a young Carpenter, turned Teacher and Preacher, without any wealth or political power or organization or prestige, living in a little corner of the world, dominated by a great world power. He gathered around him a little band of twelve men, run-of-the-mine men, just average men in a way. But from that Man and his little group of friends and followers there has come the Christian Church, the greatest institution on the face of the earth, greatest in numbers, in wealth, in power, in influence, in possibilities!

The thing has been repeated thousands of times—from some small beginning, and this applies to science and industry as well as to religion—and there have come amazing results. Even the smallest things have amazing possibilities. Most big churches started with only a few charter members. Great mission stations started with one or two missionaries on the field. Great schools and colleges came from small beginnings.

The Leaven in the Dough.

The unknown in terms of the known! "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till it was all leavened." Introduce the spirit of the kingdom into a human heart or into an organization, or a community, or even into the world for that matter, and it begins its silent, steady, sure work, transforming the thing which it touches. It has power, and power to change things. No other parable so beautifully illustrates what happens when God's will becomes supreme in the human heart. And the fact that Jesus says, "until the whole is leavened" might well mean that he was predicting the ultimate triumph of the kingdom of heaven on earth.

The Story of Dr. Douglas' Private and Public Life as one of America's greatest preachers and one of America's greatest novelists.

When Lloyd C. Douglas died February 13, 1951, it was fortunate indeed that he had marshalled so much treasured material for his Autobiography—only the first volume of which he lived to complete—Time to Remember, covered his Life Story from early childhood through his maturing years until his graduation from the Theological Seminary. Though originally he compiled the material purely for his family and without thought of its being published, but as "an exercise in occupational therapy" as he expressed it, the book proved to be another "best seller."

His two daughters—Mrs. Virginia Dawson, a distinguished author in her own right, and Mrs. Betty Wilson—were persuaded by a host of "Douglas" admirers to assume the task of assembling in book form the remainder of the accumulated memoirs left by their illustrious father.

With keen literary appreciation and insight the daughters—both responsible for collecting and selecting data—Virginia doing most of the writing, have most commendably finished their task of love in producing the marvelously interesting story of their father's life covering his thirty years as a preacher and the later years as novelist, October 30, 1952, being the date of publication. The title of this arresting and stimulating volume is, The Shape of Sunday.

Along with Dr. Douglas' numerous novels, this book will without question also be numbered among "The Best Sellers." His first novel, Magnificent Obsession, was high on the list of Ten Best Sellers—more than two million copies being sold the first few years after publication. His novel, Porgive Us Our Trespases, placed second in the list of Ten Best Sellers. His other novels, Green Light, The Robe, The Great Fisherman, etc., received like rating.

The Shape of Sunday is not only an intimate story of Dr. Douglas' life, it also carries much of his personal correspondence to his family, friends and publishers down through those years of his ascent to fame.

I knew Dr. Douglas personally during my first pastorate at the University of Illinois. After he became pastor of the Congregational Church at Ann Arbor, Michigan, our Ministerial Association frequently invited him to come back as guest speaker on important union service programs in the large university auditorium, at which times he always spoke to capacity audiences. No other speaker drew such large crowds of students and townfolk as did Douglas. While general secretary at the University of Illinois Y. M. C. A., he was frequently guest speaker at the church of which I was pastor. He was one of the most forceful and most beloved ministers in the Congregational Christian denomination; and one of the most genuinely Christian men I have ever known. God was so real to him, and he was able to make God real to his audiences.

The intimacy of "The Shape of Sunday," relates eccentricities, idiosyncracies and side-lights on Dr. Douglas' personal life unknown to his closest ministerial friends, some of whom may be momentarily shocked to learn them. But the memory of the richness of his spiritual life, his power of personality, his sincerity and genuineness, his abiding faith in God, his intellectuality, his quest for truth, his inspiring friendship, will ever be a benediction upon all who were privileged to be associated with him in Christian service or in social relationships. Lloyd Douglas was "A Man of God," "A Man Among Men," "A Preacher of Power," to the time of his departure. He was a born author and a born preacher, but he never could have written his numerous great novels except for his experience of thirty years in pastoral service, which revealed to him human nature at its best and at its worst, with a loving God always close at hand.

MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY.

Pastors must be in love with the Church if they are to have influence in interesting unchurched people in their church. They must be passionately concerned about its welfare, its honor and its good name if they are to have influence over the unchurched people of their community. Moreover, a pastor must be convinced in his own mind of the divine mission of the Church in human society; he must give his church priority claim upon his time and interest; he must be proud of being a disciple of Jesus Christ—and proud of being an ambassador of his Lord, never for a moment pitying himself or making apology for being a minister of the Gospel, if he is ever to win the respect of the unchurched and especially if he is to have influence in recruiting them for the service of his Lord.

Moreover, a pastor must believe in society's imperative need of the presence and the message of the Church; he must believe that "there is no other name under heaven given among men whereby men and nations and the world itself can be saved, but the name of Jesus Christ"; he must believe this in order to be justified in remaining in the ministry, and he must believe it in order to be able to influence the unchurched to line up with his church. Unless a pastor does believe these things, he will not be sufficiently concerned about his church or about the unchurched people of his community to seek to enlist them in the fellowship of his church.

All pastors should be, as I believe most pastors are, constantly alert in making personal contacts with the idea of Christian Recruitment in mind, prayerfully watching for the psychological moment to give opportunity for making the Christian Confession and Commitment.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

The Master Story Teller.

"Without a parable (a story or a picture), spake he nothing unto them." He was a Master Story Teller. In order to make sure that his message could be understood, he spoke in parables. No wonder the common people heard him gladly. Even today, people like stories. Here, as elsewhere, the Master is our Example.

In Memoriam

Reverend Charles Everette Newman

The Reverend Everette Newman, D. D., was born May 30, 1874, in Isle of Wight County, Virginia, the fourth son of John Bridger and Hannah Urquhart Newman. He spent his early years on the farm.

He was brought up in the Sunday school of Oakland Christian Church, Chuckatuck, Virginia. At the age of twelve, he became a member of that church, and his name was retained there as an honorary member during his entire lifetime.

He attended the public school in his home community until the age of fourteen. From the ages of fourteen to nineteen, he worked on his father's farm. His father was failing in health, and his brothers were gone from home. At this early age he became the mainstay on the farm for the support of a family of five.

In 1893, he entered the academic department of Elon College, which was to prepare him for the college work.

While at Elon he made his home with his brother, Dr. J. U. Newman, who helped him in many ways. Nevertheless, Dr. Newman worked his way through college. It is said that even while plowing, he would utilize the time for study. He placed the Latin grammar book at one end of the field and would repeat the vocabulary or some part of the grammar as he followed the mule across the field and back. He also sold books, insurance, and one year stopped in early spring to cultivate a crop to make his way through school.

In 1899, Dr. Newman graduated from Elon's College "cum magna laude," with an average of 90-95.

For the first three years after finishing Elon he taught in private schools in Berkley, now Norfolk, Va., and in Isle of Wight County.

He was licensed to preach in 1901 by the Eastern Virginia Conference at Norfolk, Va. The next year, 1902, he was ordained to the ministry at Cypress Chapel, Virginia.

His first pastorate consisted of four rural churches in the Eastern Virginia Conference.

In the fall of 1904 he became pastor of Union Church, Virgilina, and Hebron Church, Nelson, Va. From 1905 to 1913 he served, in addition to Union Church, the Durham Church from 1905 to 1906, and churches in and around Henderson, N. C., in the Eastern N. C. Conference. In 1913, he accepted the call to the Raleigh Church and served until 1916. He returned to the Virginia pastorate in 1916 and served here until his retirement in 1946, serving the four churches, Union, Hebron, Lebanon, and Liberty of the N. C. and Va. Conference. During his ministry in this area he organized the Liberty Christian Church near Nathalie, Virginia. This church has become a strong rural church of this conference. The present brick structure at Union, Virgilina, was also built during his ministry.

In recognition of his outstanding contribution to the Christian Church and of his scholarship, Elon College conferred upon him in 1944 the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity.

Upon retirement he continued his scholastic pursuits—even to the study of Greek, and the writing of church histories. He loved the soil and planted a garden and carefully tilled it, even through this past season. He also served the Southern Convention and the Conference through the office of historian, and committees. He has worked tirelessly on the O'Kelly Cemetery Project during these last years.

He is survived by his wife, Mabel Brittle Newman, of Virgilina, and the following children and grandchildren: Mrs. Paul Nance and son Paul of Washington, N. C.; Mrs. Reginald Mason and children, Reggie, Charles, Helen, and Ralph, of Henderson, N. C.; Charles, Jr., of Raleigh, N. C.; George of Lynehburg, Va.; Ralph and children, Bobby and Mary Leigh of Siler City, N. C.; Leon and children, Leon Stagg, Jr., and Ann, of Spokane, Washington; one brother, Dr. N. G. Newman, of Windsor, Va.; and two sisters, Mrs. W. C. Wicker of Elon College and Mrs. L. W. Stagg of Norfolk.

This is a very brief resume of a life that was fully lived in the service of the Lord and his fellowman.

The value of a free people is found in what it loves more than in what it owns, in spiritual rather than in material things.—Sneed.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

time the Holy Neek society and the Holland society alternate the supper and program. This year we held a buffet supper in our fellowship hall, and Mrs. E. T. Batten of the Holland society presented Miss Marian Perkins, former Y. W. C. A. secretary of Norfolk, who gave a sympathetic review of "A Man Called Peter," Kathryn Wood Marshall's delightful biography of her husband.

World Community Day and World Day of Prayer were observed with five churches of three denominations cooperating.

For our local projects, we contributed $100 toward the purchasing of a carpet for the church, bought a vacuum cleaner for the church, and also bought screens for the fellowship hall.

Several of our members assisted in the Vacation Bible School. Six of us attended at least part of the School of Missions at Elon, and three were present for the entire school.

At the September meeting, Life Memberships were presented to Mrs. H. L. Worrell, a former president, and to Mrs. Allen Piland, retiring president.

As we look forward to a new year, we pray that God will guide and bless us as we strive to carry on his work. We feel that we have accomplished much in the past, and we look forward to even greater work as we enter a new year under the leadership of our new president, Mrs. Robert Warren.

"What Is Christian Worship?"

By DR. ROCKWELL HARMON POTTER

Worship is the most universal function of the Christian Church. In all its parts, from the gorgeously ceremonial Eastern Orthodox Church to the simple Society of Friends, the "Quakers," the one thing that all churches do and always do, everywhere, is to worship. In manifold ways, by many modes and forms, they all worship God, and they worship God as they believe he is revealed to man in the Gospel of Jesus.

The clue to the meaning and purpose of worship is given in the word itself. Worship is "worth-ship"—it is the declaration of the "worthiness" of God; the testimony by the Christians that God, made known to us by Jesus and in Jesus, is worthy of the adoration, devotion, obedience, trust and love of man. It is the adoration of God in praise and prayer and meditation as a means of bringing man into the devotion that realizes itself in obedience, trust and love.

The principle of worship is the profound truth, in the science of the human personality and in the experience of life, that we become like that which we adore. The text for the Christian to remember is Jesus' own word, "God is a Spirit and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

The rational goal of human life, indeed of all life and of all nature's being, is the development of free spirits who grow into likeness to God and enter into communion with him. There is no other reasonable answer to the age long question, Why?

Now the two imperative conditions of worship which make it effect its purpose are sincerity and regularity. Many other motives may lead men to worship, some good, some indifferent, some positively bad, but the one essential motive is the sincere desire of the worshipper to become like God in character and purpose, and so to enter, in the measure of his capacity, into communion with God. Instinctively we recognize that worship without at least something of sincerity in it is blasphemy and poisonously degrading to the worshipper.

The other imperative condition is regularity. Just going now and then, here and there, "by spells and in spots," will not effect the purpose of worship. The "Easterite" may receive some slight, transient benefit from his annual participation—let us hope he does—but only those who make it a regular discipline of life get out of worship what God has put in it—in the very nature of human personality—for them.

It may also be noted that the common worship of the church must be supported by the private worship of the individual—and conversely the private worship of the individual must be sustained by the common worship of the church. In experience the one does not long live without the other.

God grant that we, each in his own life and all, together, in the church, may "worship him in Spirit and in Truth."

"Listening for God's Voice"

*All day long with anxious heart and wondering ear,
I listened to the city; heard the ground
Echo with human thunder, and the sound
Go reeling down the streets and disappear.
The headlong hours, in their wild career
Shouted and sang until the word was drowned,
With babel voices, each one more profound,
All day it surged—but nothing could I hear.*

*That night the country never seemed so still;
The trees and grasses spoke without a word
To stars that brushed them with their silver wings.
Together with the moon I climbed the hill,
And, in the very heart of silence, heard
The speech and music of immortal things.*

News Flashes

The Rosemont Church, Norfolk, received 13 members into the church on Sunday, November 30, making a total of 62 members received since Easter.

Messrs. Mills W. Godwin and Shirley T. Holland, are in Richmond for the special session of the State Legislature. Mr. Holland is accompanied by Mrs. Holland.

Eastern Virginia churches are reminded to have their representatives present at the meeting of the Christian Missionary Association, in Windsor on December 9.

Attention officers of the Laymen's Fellowships of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, Eastern North Carolina, and the Virginia Valley. Please let SUN readers know what your groups are doing.

Dr. R. L. House assisted at church services in the Church of Wide Fellowship on last Sunday. He is expecting to conduct the services this Sunday. We are sure that his many friends will be glad to know that he is getting along so well.

Rev. Charles C. Thomas was the guest preacher at the Union Thanksgiving Service held by the churches of South Norfolk. The service was held in the Congregational Christian Church, with Rev. O. D. Poythress presiding, and ministers from the other churches assisting in the service.

On November 30, the First Congregational Christian Church of Norfolk was host to Berkley and Doric Masonic Lodges on their annual "Go to Church Sunday." There was a good representation for the meeting, and everyone agreed that it was a worth-while service.

The United Congregational Christian Church of Chapel Hill, N. C., is now a "100% CHRISTIAN SUN" church. One member has anonymously given a one year's subscription to all families not hitherto subscribers. Is there someone in your church that would be willing to do the same thing? Given through the local church, it would be deductible in figuring your income tax.

Second Harvest Festival at Pleasant Ridge is Success

Pleasant Ridge's second annual Harvest Day Festival, on Thanksgiving Day, was a successful day of fun and inspiration. Members and friends of the church brought as gifts to the church about 150 bushels of grain. This will be sold, and the money will be used to complete payment on the Sunday school rooms of the church. Dalton Harper, a member of the Asheboro Church, spoke at the evening service. The gifts of the afternoon and the evening offering were dedicated. After the worship service, there was a cake and pie sale, which netted $160 for the building fund. Those attending the evening program ended the day by returning to the sanctuary for quiet, personal worship.

Reverend Emory M. Carter Honored

A faithful pastor, who served as the secretary of the Eastern North Carolina Conference for more than twenty years, Rev. Emory M. Carter was honored in Raleigh, N. C., on Monday evening. Following a business meeting in the United Church, the ministers adjourned to a banquet room at the S & W Cafeteria, where they were joined by their wives and others.

Rev. R. L. Jackson presided over the meeting. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, one of Mr. Carter's parishioners who holds her membership in Fuller's Chapel, spoke on Mr. Carter's ministry at Fuller's and presented an orchid to Mrs. Carter. Rev. J. Frank Apple, one of Mr. Carter's nearest ministerial neighbors, presented a leather-bound copy of the Revised Standard Version of the Holy Bible to Mr. Carter in behalf of the ministers. Superintendent Wm. T. Scott emphasized the importance of an efficient conference secretary and paid tribute to Mr. Carter for his prompt and faithful service in this capacity.

Mr. Carter, visibly moved by the occasion, responded by recounting some of the highlights of his 52 years of ministry and his joy in the fine

The Pastor of Windsor, Virginia, Parish Reports

The work of the Windsor Pastorate has progressed nicely. We have had good attendance throughout the year, each church has gained new members and the interest has been good.

The Isle of Wight Church had its first revival services the last of April, with the Rev. Raymond Grissom doing the preaching, during which we received nine new members; then others joined our church throughout the year. We are having another revival there this week (the last week in November), with the pastor doing the speaking. This revival is being attended well and it will continue through Thanksgiving night. On that night we will have union Thanksgiving services with the churches of the community. Rev. John Hamm, pastor of the Methodist churches, will speak on Thursday night.

The Isle of Wight Church had its best financial year, paying its conference apportionment in full. The Daily Vacation Bible School was a community project, all of the churches coming together to make it a success.

The Windsor Church had its revival in October. The Rev. Raymond Phelts, pastor of the Ingram Memorial Congregational Church of Washington, D. C., was our guest speaker. Mr. Phelts did a wonderful work for us. There were added twelve new members. Our church and Sunday school have steadily grown since we went into our new building. The members have shown great interest in reducing the debt on the building. On Rally Day, the fourth Sunday in September, we had the record attendance of 207. Only a couple of years ago the record had been less than 100.

On October 26, we observed Laymen's Sunday, at which time Mr. Edward Hall conducted the worship service and Mr. Dow Keeling brought the inspiring message, "Jesus, the Master Worker." It was very satisfying to know that we had laymen who could and will come to the aid of their pastor, and who are able to conduct Divine worship.

What Is Your Minister Worth?

A GUEST EDITORIAL

By REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL

Pastor of the Durham, North Carolina, Congregational Christian Church

It is a generally accepted conclusion that every church should have an individual who serves as minister, pastor, or priest. This conclusion is probably the result of long experience. One does not have to live to a ripe old age in order to see what happens to a church which does not have the ministrations of an individual leader.

Let us approach the question of the worth of a minister in terms of the social and spiritual values, rather than in terms of the economic and monetary considerations. We will accept St. Paul's dictum that the laborer is worthy of his hire; and seek to find the ways whereby the minister can make the maximum spiritual contribution to the individual, the church and the social group of which the church is a part.

There is no doubt that the achievements of the church depend in a large measure upon the ability and qualifications of its minister. It is also everlastingly true that the achievements of the minister depend upon the consecration, the spiritual discernment and the whole-hearted cooperation of the church membership. Many churches proceed upon the assumption that if only the right minister is secured, all will be well with the church. If things are going poorly with the church, it is the logical conclusion that the fault lies with the minister. The fact is that church and minister are a spiritual team; and perfect teamwork is demanded on the part of both.

The minister, as was his Master, must ever be concerned with the spiritual problems of the individual. Every individual has personal problems, which he needs to face in the clear light of Christ's teachings. The average church member often is lacking in knowledge of what Christ did teach, and has had even less experience in applying Christian teachings to present-day life. It is in such situations as this that the minister may find opportunities to render his most valuable service.

It should be clearly recognized that when an individual church member has need of such personal ministrations, it is his responsibility to seek the counsel of the minister. The minister should make it perfectly clear that he is ever ready to share and to aid in resolving personal difficulties and problems; but the parishioner should realize that it is his responsibility to seek the aid of his minister when he is in difficulty, just as readily as he calls his physician when he is sick. Perhaps it should also be said in this connection, that a person should be just as frank with his minister as he is with his physician. He may be sure that if moral turpitude is involved, he will get more sympathy than condemnation.

It is the primary concern of both minister and church member to hasten the coming of the kingdom, when the will of God will be done on earth, even as it is done in heaven. The minister is in the church to help every member become a great servant of God. The member is called into the church in order that he may do his part in the work which Christ has committed to his Church. Every phase of the work of the church should be of vital interest to every member of the church. If there is any item of the church program which is not important it should be dropped, for there are so many essential things, that no time should be wasted with non-essentials.

There is no office in the church which cannot be made the medium for exalted spiritual service. It is not the relative importance of the office one holds, but the degree of consecration and faithful service which one renders in performing the duties of the office. Every individual is peculiarly fitted for some special type of service in the church. Your spiritual growth will be in proportion to the service you render. Do not force your minister to spend too much of his time trying to persuade you to do something. He will gladly assist you in finding the place in which you may serve best. Then let him turn his attention to other matters, assured that you will take care of the responsibility which you have accepted.

As you estimate the worth of your minister, carefully consider whether or not his time is being taken up with tasks which you or some other member of the church could do equally as well as or better than the minister can do them. The good minister's time is very precious. See to it that he is not made a clerical errand boy.

The worth of your minister can not be determined solely by the excellence of his sermons. The way you hear the sermon and the extent to which you practice what he preaches is the determinant of what your minister is worth to you and to others. The most eloquent sermon which was ever preached about Christian love is not as potent an attraction to hungry hearts, as the warmth of Christian fellowship and love which exist between the members of the church. Christian lives of the people in the pews represent the worth of the minister in the pulpit.

"Christian Faith"

Dick Jackson, writing about Laymen's Sunday as observed by the United Church at Chapel Hill, North Carolina, summed up it by saying, "It was a real occasion for us." It must have been to have produced the three articles on the general theme, "Christian Faith," which we are giving our readers on this page.

Albert Lovejoy is professor of Sociology at Lynchburg College, Lynchburg, Virginia. He is now on leave of absence at the University of North Carolina where he is doing graduate work. Willard Walker is an undergraduate student at the University of North Carolina. J. E. Larsh, Jr., is the chairman of the Department of Parasitology of the School of Public Health of the University.

Thank, you, Dick, for sharing them with us. There is a wealth of interesting and worthwhile material produced in our local churches which is valuable to others only if they have the opportunity to share it.

"Christian Faith—in the Classroom"

By ALBERT LOVEJOY.

It is not hard for me to talk about this topic, "Christian Faith in the Classroom," since for the past two years I have been teaching sociology in a Christian college.

Though I have never felt "called" to teach as men are often called to the ministry, I like teaching so much that I do feel bound to do as well at it as I possibly can. This stems from my agreement with Martin Luther's conviction that a cobbler (or any layman) can worship and praise God by mending shoes well just as effectively as can a minister of God.

The first thing that I want to say about teaching is that we teachers do teaching of two sorts: we teach subject matter and we teach character. Even if we did not wish or intend to do this, it would be inevitable, because of the very nature of our work. No teacher can avoid influencing his students by the impact of his personality on theirs. Since this is true, the Christian teacher certainly has the obligation and privilege of letting his faith manifest itself in his work.

Briefly, I see three Christian traits as being very helpful to me in doing my best work. They are humility, respect and optimism.

By humility, I mean that any teacher, and especially a young one, must admit that he does not know "all the answers." And, in reality, the more he explores his particular specialty, the more he senses his relatively high degree of ignorance. Also, the humble teacher welcomes and encourages all his students to do their best. He glories in the achievements of students who can outstrip him in intellectual as well as in other achievements. He is not the champion, but rather the coach who aids those of both great and limited potentialities. Lastly, the humble teacher must remain teachable himself, able to profit by criticism, and quick to forgive immaturity in others. In short, the Christian teacher must ever remain an attentive student.

Respect, the second trait that helps me in my work, has two aspects. As a child of God, one must possess self-respect and must seek to foster it in his students. Why? Simply because of the realization that every human being has divine possibilities and is infinitely precious in the sight of God. Near miracles can be performed if one will work patiently to bring out and expect the best of every person he deals with.

The third characteristic, optimism, may sound somewhat out of place in a world where war, corruption in high and low places alike, and moral confusion are so blatantly evident. But, as I tell my freshmen at the beginning of the school-year: "This is the best time of all to be alive!" Times like these try our souls, but for those who have faith in the ultimate victory of God's purpose, this is a good time to be alive. Those who sincerely believe that all things work together for good among those who are truly Christian have no reason to be pessimistic even in an age of fearful confusion and paralyzing despair.

Therefore, it is my opinion that Christian faith in and out of the classroom challenges us to renewed and re-dedicated life purposes, to loftier ideals, to greater responsibilities, and to have the courage to face the future with more daring than we have had in the past. Perhaps humility, self-respect and optimism can help us attain these goals.

"Christian Faith—on the Campus"

By WILLARD WALKER.

The student on the campus can express his faith in various ways: attending church, helping in the church activities, by prayer, in daily Christian living and by using Christian principles in his relationship with fellow students. These ways are open to all of us. Is there a special or unique way that the student can serve God and man? Yes, I think there is.

The college years are a special period in an individual's life and can never actually be duplicated at a later time. Never before or after does a person have that rare mixture of a youthful, questioning, open mind; deep wells of knowledge at his fingertips; an almost unlimited capacity for work and play, and relative freedom from the responsibility of earning a living. At this point in life, the individual breaks from the ties of home and the training of early years, and begins to think and act for himself. What he accepts and rejects during his college years will form a philosophy of life for him that will, in all probability, remain with him in the years ahead.

It is because of this unique period of his life that I say he has a unique way to serve God. In fact, he has two ways:

First of all, he must prepare himself for the road ahead. He must serve God by serving himself as God would have him do. Any student who fails to do his best in his studies or fails to take advantage, when available, of broadening himself outside the classroom is failing to serve God as he should. College is not an end, but rather a means to an end, and the student should always keep in mind the life after college and prepare himself accordingly.

Secondly, he has a service to perform for God by service to his fellow student. Many students, after they enter this new life, find themselves confused on many matters and especially on belief in God and Christ. They find that the things they were taught in youth are not necessarily so, that there are many new acceptable ideas. Caught in a whirlpool of conflicting ideas, they become agnostics or disbelievers or just plain confused. The Christian student has a responsibility here and a job to do that no one else can do. It is the student who has faith who must witness to it and thereby make it a

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

News Notes of Elon College

J. Earl Danieleley, an alumnus of the college and member of our Science Department, has been on leave for the last eighteen months studying at the University of North Carolina, in an effort to complete requirements for his Ph. D. degree. Earl has completed all residence requirements and has to complete his thesis. He expects to receive his degree in the summer of 1953. Earl has taught one course in science during the fall and will teach full time during the winter and spring quarters.

* * *

John G. Truitt, Jr., and Matt B. Currin, Jr., both members of our senior class and ministerial students, visited Princeton Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J., last week to investigate the facilities and offerings of the seminary in an effort to decide where to go for post-graduate theological studies. It is encouraging that the majority of our graduates continue their education after completing their undergraduate requirements.

* * *

Dr. John G. Truitt, superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, is ill and confined to his room in Alamance Hospital. Dr. Truitt was taken with a hard chill and high fever on Saturday night, November 22, and was taken to the hospital the following Tuesday. His illness developed into erysipelas. We are happy that he is improving and hopes to be back at his post in a few days.

* * *

John Westmoreland, instructor in piano and organ, and director of the Elon College Singers, is carrying a full load of work at the college and making frequent trips to New York in an effort to complete requirements for the doctor's degree.

* * *

Many of our churches that paid their Sustaining Fund in full for 1950-51 have not paid their allotment for 1951-52. Perhaps this is just an oversight, and if reminded they will pay their allotment in full.

* * *

From Wednesday afternoon until Sunday evening, students on the Elon College campus were conspicuous by their absence. Monday, December 1, was the beginning of the winter quarter in our college. There are 25 new students registered for this quarter.

* * *

Fletcher Moore, alumnus of Elon and head of our Music Department, is on leave this college year to complete requirements for the Ph. D. degree in Music at Columbia University. He will return to the college for 1953-54.

President Smith left on Saturday, November 29, for Memphis, Tennessee, to represent Elon College at the annual meeting of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

Wither 1953 High School Graduates?

Ten to twenty years ago this question never bothered high school graduates before late spring or early summer. In fact, the majority of college minded high school students thought but little or nothing about college until after they had received their high school diplomas. After that there seemed time enough to decide on which college to enter.

The situation is entirely different today. Many high school students begin considering colleges in their junior year in an effort to select a college most to their liking. They begin to compare the offerings of different colleges that they may make a wiser selection.

The colleges would not permit high school seniors to delay the question as to whether or not they would go to college and which college they would enter. These institutions, are, through their representatives, constantly knocking at the doors of high schools with insistent requests that they be permitted to interview prospective students of these high schools. So insisitently and so frequently came these representatives that the schools, in self defense and for the convenience of their seniors, have designated "College Days" to which they invite the colleges to send representatives to interview their seniors. The senior class has the day off and are permitted to counsel with these college representatives. The college representatives display catalogues, bulletins, all kinds of materials expressive of their colleges and offer whatever inducement they are permitted to offer prospective college students.

These days in high schools begin in early fall and continue through the year into the spring. It is amazing the number of college representatives who descend on high schools on these special days.

On a recent such occasion in a high school in Richmond, Virginia, more than 80 college representatives descended on the campus of that school in an effort to enroll the graduates in their different schools for the year 1953-54. All state schools are represented at these special College Days. Twenty-five years ago state schools were not expected to solicit students, and, as a rule, they did not. Every college seems to be trying to build a bigger, if not a better student body.

Displays, persuasions and instances of this type are not all bad by any means. They have a tendency to make high school students college minded, and create within them a desire and a determination to enter college and acquire a college education. Anything that will influence young people to pursue their education beyond high school is good—good for the individual, good for society, and good for the country.

Elon College is greatly interested in these College Days, but it is far more interested in the young people of our own church. We covet the interest and active influence of our pastors and church officials in the interest of the high school seniors of their respective congregations. We hope that they will speak a good word for our college and urge our own young people to enter. The college is the church in action in the field of Christian higher education. The results of the educational program on our campus are reflected in the work of the local churches throughout our Convention.

Will you please forward the names of the high school graduates in your congregation?

Eastern Virginia Laymen Meet at Newport News

The Laymen's Fellowship of the Eastern Virginia Conference held its fall rally at the Newport News Congregational Christian Church on Sunday afternoon, November 16. President G. C. Mann of the Cypress Chapel Church presided.

About 225 men participated in five discussion groups. Twenty-six of the churches of the conference were represented.

During the short business session, it was voted to have the executive committee decide on the number of meetings to be held next year, the type of meeting, and the place. An objective committee was appointed to plan the program for the coming year. One of the main objectives will be cooperating with the other lay groups of the Southern Convention in raising $25,000 to improve Moon-elon, the summer camp and conference site near Elon College.

W. H. Baker of Newport News led the group in singing, and Miss Shirley Lawson, also of Newport News, sang a solo. One musical highlight was the "Preachers' Quartet": Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, Jr., Rev. Clyde Fields, and Rev. T. Fred Wright.

Dr. H. S. Hardeastle was the speaker of the evening. He brought his usual after dinner mixture of wit and wisdom.

The executive committee and those present were in agreement that warm thanks should go to the laymen and women of the Newport News Church for their hospitality, delicious meal and warm entertainment.

The men of our conference are looking forward to their next get-together.

P. D. HOWELL, JR.,
Secretary.

Western North Carolina Laymen Hold Father-Son Banquet

The Laymen's Fellowship of the Western North Carolina Conference met on Saturday evening, November 29, with the Laymen of the Sophia Church, in the New Market School for a Father-Son banquet. There were present 99 men, including 14 ministers, from 13 of our churches.

The banquet was greatly enjoyed.

In this connection, I would like very much to express my personal appreciation for the interest that the ministers are taking in the work of our laymen. The presence of our ministers will always be welcome at all of our meetings.

Those of us who were privileged to be at this meeting were thrilled with the fine message given by one of our very promising young ministers, Rev. John G. Truitt, Jr., who spoke on the subject, "Why I Entered the Parish Ministry." Mr. Truitt spoke with great enthusiasm and shared with us some of his very rich experiences in answering his call to the ministry of Christ. We missed very much Dr. John G. Truitt, Sr., who was also to have spoken, but was absent due to illness. We wish for him a speedy recovery. Our plans were to have father and son as our speakers. Drs. Wm. T. Scott, F. C. Lester and D. J. Bowden filled in for Dr. Truitt. We appreciate the fine words of wisdom given by these fine men of God.

The ladies of the Sophia Church served a very delicious dinner of fried chicken and all that goes with a chicken dinner. We thank the ladies for a job well done.

One of the interesting parts of the program was the surprise visit of Santa Claus, who was on his way down from the North Pole to the South, getting ready for Christmas, he said. He gave some candy to all, and to my surprise he presented me with a beautiful neektie. Thanks, Santa, hope THE CHRISTIAN SUN comes to your house, as I didn't get a chance to thank you when you gave it to me.

All of the officers were reelected to serve for a term of one year. Next year, the officers will be elected for terms of two years in order to follow the pattern set up by the Southern Convention Council of the Laymen's Fellowship.

The Laymen's Bell was a new attraction at this meeting which added to the dignity of our gathering. The bell certainly has the ability to command the attention and to call to order a meeting.

An offering was taken for the orphanage, amounting to $49.06.

The Pleasant Grove Church extended an invitation for the Fellowship to meet with them in March.

S. H. PELL,
Chairman.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

$1,500 short of the total amount apportioned to the churches for the college.

By the time this article reaches the public through THE CHRISTIAN SUN, the fifth Sunday in November will have passed. I trust sincerely that every Sunday school receiving an offering for the college, that the offering will be sufficient to bring the apportionment for this year much nearer the total goal. If the churches of our Southern Convention would give $10 additional, and that certainly would not impoverish any church, the total amount apportioned for the college would be reached. This would be a record and a tremendous assistance to the college. Why not have your church send in the $10 bonus.

Japanese Cherry Trees to Grow on U. S. College Campuses

The cherry tree, the blossoms of which symbolize the spirit of the Japanese people, will soon take root on many American campuses. Colleges and universities in the United States whose students show an interest in the International Christian University by contributing $250 or more toward the general scholarship fund will receive a Japanese Cherry Tree ready for planting on the campus.

By effect, the tree may serve as the basis for a growing fellowship between the American institution and ICU, and also as the symbol of the genuine friendship between the youth of the two peoples.

A plastic or light-metal tag, with inscription acknowledging the contribution of the American college or university for its support of the ICU general scholarship fund will be affixed to the tree.

"A Page from Our Carroll County Mountain Notebook"

"The everlasting hills . . ." "The strength of the hills is his." Such phrases appeared in the concordance I studied as I sought to find biblical expression for the many impressions that have been part of the whole experience of getting settled in these mountains.

The everlasting quality of these hills is so apparent that it seems inadequate to describe them in that way. Yes, I think "the strength of the hills," though less easily visualized, is a more vivid phrasing of something of what we have shared here. The strength of the hills begets strength in those of us who live here. You cannot sit by the fireplace with a withered mother and hear her recount the stories of her life with her eleven children and her proud enumeration of grandchildren and great-grandchildren, without feeling the same awe you feel when you look across the valley when it is blown clear after the rain.

The hills are strong, but the men and women are strong, too. Their faith is strong, also, like the rough-hued beams and hearthstones that still mark the work of another generation in many homes. Perhaps only the strong have survived, yet I believe that these hills must have inspired, in the glory of the sunrise or amid the fading autumn colors, some of the needed strength to face the day when, without deep faith, men might have given up and left the hills.

The everlasting quality of the hills can never be erased; but one impression persists: The hills are no longer rural or isolated in the sense that we thought of them even a decade ago. The urban conveniences, the urban sins, are as much a part of the lives of many of us as they might be if we had spent all of our lives in the city. Electricity, and with it conveniences as well as luxuries—radio and television, has made a great difference. The kids up the road have the same entertainment as your children, even though they attend a one-room school. The gap between our educational and religious undergirding and the constant tugging of secular forces makes me realize how much our children and youth need a sense of the everlasting, strengthening forces for life. Few of us have television to bless and blight our day, but I cannot say too clearly that we have not been isolated and left off the main stream of mechanical progress.

We still are isolated, however, in another sense that is perhaps the most tragic form of isolation, the kind that you realize and can do little to alter. The isolation of poverty is still all around us. Winter-long diets of corn bread and milk, and pork, spell malnutrition. Poverty that cannot afford a well, is the life long sentence for women, married too young, to water and wood carrying. Poverty that cannot afford a doctor until all home cures have failed, promises physical disorders throughout life for men and women. My prayer this day is, "Lord, send us a nurse to live and work among us."

When you wind down the mountain from Fancy Gap and look off into the distance, the view is beautiful, but if you look over the hundred or more foot embankment, you feel a cold chill as you survey the prospect of a miscalculation in your driving. The hills are like that. You're close enough to heaven to sense the Eternal, but the immediate problems are grim and tragic. We need the strength that the hills can inspire to minister to the vast problems we face here.

Oh yes, and to answer that question everyone has asked us, we like it here, and God willing shall seek to serve him and you, to bring light and new hope to our people here.

WILLIAM R. WOLFE.

Reidsville, North Carolina, Church Adopts Missionaries

At the eleven o'clock service on Sunday morning, November 23, the Reidsville Congregational Christian Church had a service of recognition for the two new missionaries of the church.

For some years now, the Reidsville Church has been the major support of two missionaries in India and one in Africa; however, upon their return home this past year the Rev. and Mrs. Robert C. Mueller decided not to return to the foreign field. In the place of Mr. and Mrs. Mueller, the Reidsville Church has adopted the Rev. and Mrs. Robert Fairbank of Sholapur, India. This couple is already in the field and has been for some time as were their grandparents and parents before them.

In the service of recognition and adoption, the pastor of the church, Rev. Tucker G. Humphries, led the congregation as it made the couple the following pledge of loyalty:

"Unto you, Robert and Marie Fairbank, we the members of the Congregational Christian Church of Reidsville, pledge our thought, our prayers and our lives. We will strive in every way to make your work our work, to provide for your necessities, to strengthen your hands and hearts, to share both your burdens and your joys in our homes and in our united worship. We will lift you up in our prayers to the God and Father of us all, that he may richly sustain you, that you may bear much fruit and that the fruit of your labor may abide."

Taking part in the service also was Dr. J. H. Hess of the faculty of Elon College, who himself spent nearly thirty years in India, and who knew not only Mr. and Mrs. Fairbank but his parents and grandparents before him. Dr. Hess very briefly brought greetings from India.

Dr. William T. Scott, superintendent of the Southern Convention, spoke briefly upon the missionary zeal and projects of the church, using as his theme, "Across the Street and Across the World."

In addition to being a commissioning service for these two new missionaries, it was also the church's Thanksgiving service. In the church, there was only standing room available. The pastor of the church, Mr. Humphries, brought the morning message, using as his theme, "God Has a Measure for Our Gratitude."

The Reidsville Church has been told by many who know churches and have seen much of the mission effort of this country, that their mission projects are unique. The congregation of the church is convinced that while missions should begin at home, certainly they should not end there.

One Society Reports

It is not often that this entire page is given to the report of one society. However, the only president's report which I have ever seen in our Southern Convention societies which gives a complete statement of the year's work is that from Chapel Hill. And so, this year it is being presented to you in full, with the exception of the financial items, where only totals are given here.

Every society president is urged to study this report and see if she can make one to equal it—or better it—at the final business meeting of her society next fall. And please send that good report to me, so that others may hear about it!

Woman's Fellowship of United Church, Chapel Hill

During the year 1951-52, the Woman's Fellowship of the United Congregational Christian Church, Chapel Hill, North Carolina, held eleven regular monthly meetings, one supper meeting, and one special call meeting. The average attendance for the year was 24, an increase of six over the previous year. Eight new members were added to the roll and two were discontinued. Enrollment at the end of the year was 36.

A constitution and by-laws was drawn and adopted.

The programs, projects and activities during the year were as follows:

Friendly Service.

A gift of fruit and candy to Elon Orphanage at Christmas.

Participation in hospital auxiliary activities.

Four needy families cared for at Christmas by donation of food, toys, etc., through Orange County Welfare Department.

One Girl Scout troop and one Brownie troop were sponsored by the Fellowship. They were allowed use of the hut for meetings.

Missions.

Thank Offering to Christian University in Japan

Fifty-six pounds of good clothing collected and shipped to Korea,

Gifts for children of migrant workers collected and delivered in observance of May Fellowship Day.

A long-range project, which consisted of the adoption of three orphans living in foreign countries, was initiated. The plan consists of the financial support of one child in each of the following countries: Korea, Lebanon and India. The purpose of the project is two-fold: (1) to aid in the physical care of the children by contributing financially to their support, and (2) to afford an opportunity for members to experience directly the spirit which should prevail in true missionary work.

Special Activities.

Host to the church at a supper on December 9, 1951.

Served a father-son banquet for our church.

Served a coffee hour for visiting ministers at district meeting.

Sponsored a reception on the evening of the installation service of the new minister and his family.

Served a buffet supper to visiting ministers and their families on the evening of the installation service.

Served the annual church supper in March, at which new members and friends of the church were honored guests.

Sponsored student supper at the beginning of the fall session of school.

Annual Activities.

Insurance maintained on Hut; utilities paid for Hut; heat furnished for pastor's study.

Apportionment to Missions paid.

Furnished two church nursery attendants each Sunday.

Furnished and arranged flowers for all church services.

Cleaned church each week during re-decoration period and at other intervals during the year; cleaned Hut several times.

Life Membership was awarded Mrs. P. R. Perry in recognition of her faithful service to the church.

Presented and financed the annual Christmas and white gift service. Made and donated Santa Claus suit.

Wedding gifts were presented to all church members who married during the year.

Special Programs and Guest Speakers.

Thank Offering Service—Mr. Matoshi Shumara, speaker.

Migrant Service—Mr. Roland Giduz, speaker.

Address, "History of the Church," by Rev. Richard L. Jackson.

Lecture (including slides), "Mexico and Latin America"—Mrs. W. W. Sloan.

Lecture (demonstrating denominational literature), "Women's Work"—Mrs. F. C. Lester.

Book review, "Mission to America"—Mrs. Richard L. Jackson.

Reading, "Esther, the Queen of the Jews"—Mrs. Foster Fitzsimmons.

Reading, "Rebecca"—Mrs. R. F. Schenkan.

Candlelight Service at Christmas Fellowship meeting.

Meetings Attended.

Southern Convention, Durham, N. C.

World Day of Prayer, Chapel Hill, N. C.

School of Missions, Elon College, N. C.

Spring Rally, New Hope Church.

Orange County Institute of Religious Education, Chapel Hill.

Publicity.

All activities and projects were thoroughly publicized by newspaper, posters, mail and telephone.

Devotional.

The devotional theme for the year was "Women of the Bible." Scripture readings, prayers, stories and readings were developed upon the lives of the women of biblical history. Much research, time, thought and effort resulted in excellent devotional programs.

Cradle Roll.

Certificates were issued to thirteen babies of the church during the year. Their birthdays were remembered with cards.

Special Projects.

Donated the dossal curtain to the church as a part of its re-decoration program.

Donated new carpet for church and church parlor.

Improvements to Hut: kitchen curtains, utility seat.

Ways and Means Projects.

The profit for the year was shown for each item sold, which is the only way a society can tell if there is any use in continuing certain activities. The total was $574.75.

A Page for Our Children

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Christmas is Coming!

Yes, and it comes but once a year. There are so many wonderful things about it: surprises, smells and cards, choosing and wrapping presents, carols and hymns, tastes and waiting!

Did you know that some countries have the custom of making a little calendar showing how many days there are to Christmas? Then the child marks off each day, and it does not seem quite so long—or does it? I read somewhere that a little girl made a chain of red and green paper and snipped off a link for each day!

From time to time, I have suggested things to cook on this page, and the other day I had a note asking for a Christmas recipe. I hope the young lady who is collecting will like these two. The first one is "made up," as we say in our family, when we invent a recipe:

- 1 package (6 oz.) of chocolate drops
(We prefer these to the semi-sweet bits but either would do. Littlest folk can peel off silver foil.)
- ¼ cup peanut butter.
- ¼ cup milk.
- 1 cup powdered sugar.
- ½ cup skim milk.
- 1 tablespoon butter.
Vanilla to flavor.
- 3 cups of crushed vanilla, or chocolate wafers or graham crackers.

Melt all the drops with the milk, peanut butter and butter. Sift in the powdered milk and sugar. Add the crackers and vanilla. Grease your hands and knead this mixture until it is well blended. Then you may shape it into a roll and chill overnight and cut into slices, or you may shape it into little bars and set aside to cool.

The Lena Swezy Circle of our church has just published a cookie and cake receipt book that Mrs. Swezy used. I don't believe they copyrighted it, so here is one of her receipts for "Hermits," an old favorite:

- ¾ cup shortening.
- 1½ cup brown sugar.
- 2 eggs.
- 1 tablespoon milk.
- 2½ cups flour.
- ¼ teaspoon salt.
- ½ teaspoon soda.
- 1 teaspoon cinnamon.
- ½ teaspoon nutmeg.
- ¼ teaspoon cloves.
- 1 cup seeded raisins.

Stir in some judgment.

Drop from spoon onto well greased baking sheet.

Hope you like both receipts. More Christmas ideas are on the way!

"Are You Both Friend and Parent?"

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"'Mommie, what is a hotel?' Janie had asked me this more than once when her daddy had left home to go on a business trip. It was all so mysterious to her!" the vivacious mother told us as we sat knitting in the patio of our apartment building. Then, as we all looked up inquiringly, she added, "I decided to show her where it was daddy stayed when he was not with us."

"Did you and Janie go with Tom on one of his trips?" asked Mary, the gentle mother of twins.

"No, but the last time we were at Grandmother's in Oak Park, Tom attended a business meeting at the Palmer House, in Chicago, so Janie and I visited his room, and we walked around the lobby, too, before dinner. 'This, darling, is a hotel,' I explained, as her childish eyes, eager with curiosity, took in every detail."

"How much better it is for little ones to understand about everything that affects them personally or that interests them," a wise mother remarked. "When I was a child, there were so many things I didn't understand. And no one in our family seemed to realize my hunger to know about what to them were very simple things."

Janie's mother looked thoughtfully at the tips of her red shoes. "Yes," she said, "sometimes we ignore our children's wistful, questioning glances. When my sister and I were little, my father, a probate judge, encouraged our playing in his small courtroom—when he was the only occupant, of course. Familiarity with the huge books and tall desks made a delightful bond between us."

"My father used to take me to lunch occasionally," said Joyce Matthews, smiling. "It made me feel important. I learned how to order from a menu and to watch prices, ob-erving the difference between a la carte and table d'hôte."

Then my friend, Ellen, entered the conversation.

"My dad was a doctor," she said, "and Mother used to let me answer the telephone and write down the patients' messages. It taught me to listen carefully."

"I visited my Aunt Sarah in Indianapolis frequently," spoke up another of the group. "Her coachman used to take us to market, and Aunt Sarah would ask, 'Does this look fresh to you, dear?' 'Do you think there are enough vegetables for six of us?' How I'd puff up with pride! Youngsters adore being treated with courtesy and respect."

There is no doubt about it! We need to develop social intelligence in our children. The more we help them to feel a kinship with those about them, the better adjusted and the happier they will be. It is the things that they want to understand but cannot, which frustrate them.

Our friends, the Kerrs, never plan anything for the family without having the children "sit in." Everyone makes suggestions, and when practicable, those of the younger generation carry the same weight as those of Mother and Dad.

The parent who announces, "Today, we're going to the museum," without discussing the intended trip with the family before hand is out of date. Since you cannot really make a child benefit from anything you may plan, the only sure way to achieve your purpose is to make him want to do what you want him to do. The more knowledge a child has of what is going on in the minds and hearts of his family, the more "at home" he feels. So, reader friend, would it not be well to stop and ask yourself, "Am I friend as well as parent to my child?"

International Group Finds Work Enjoyable

At 2 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, November 22, a small but enthusiastic group of students, young adults and the minister gathered together at the United Church in Raleigh, N. C., to have a Saturday afternoon work camp. This was an international group consisting of boys and girls.

The first item on the agenda was the re-working and seeding of the small strips of ground between the street and sidewalk. Several of the workers, equipped with shovels, picks and rakes, went to work tearing up the ground, while four or five boys took the truck which was furnished and driven by one worker and went out to a church member's home to obtain two or three truck loads of topsoil to replace the soil which had eroded from the strips. After the ground had been thoroughly worked over and the topsoil had been dumped and spread, some of the workers started to sow winter rye. After they did this, another group came behind them to rake the seed into the ground. While this was going on, the girls were down in the church basement preparing the supper.

The second item was to assemble all of the parts of a fire-escape behind the church where it would be put up. The steps were out at State College, where some extra steps had been welded on. One of the workers, with three helpers, took his trailer and brought the steps back to the church. In the meantime, the fire-escape platforms were placed on a small two wheeled cart and carried around to the back of the church.

Supper was then announced, and we all rushed down to the table at which the blessing was asked. Then all of us dug into the supper, which consisted of large, generous hamburgers, onions, hot cocoa, apples, sour and sweet pickles, and many other good and filling things.

After the meal was finished, we sat around the table and talked, sang some songs, and discussed business. Then each person helped carry the dishes into the kitchen where a group washed and dried them. When the dishes had been washed, the work camp was officially over, so we all said good night and went our respective ways.

Even though we were tired, we were much richer in the friendship and experiences that we shared with one another.

Valley Youth Officers Meet at Wissler's Chapel

The meeting of the officers of the Virginia Valley Youth Fellowship was held on November 2, 1952, at Whissler's Chapel. Rev. Ralph Galt opened the meeting with prayer.

The officers present were: Presidents Donnie and Carroll Litten, Reporter Robert Green, Mission Action Chairman Betty Stroop, Interdenominational Action Chairman Iris Allen and Secretary Gail Carper. Others attending the meeting were Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Miss Ruby Green, Mrs. Nina Will, Mr. A. N. Green, Rev. Ralph Galt and Rev. Henry Harmon.

It was first discussed and then decided to appoint Ruby Seldon as corresponding secretary.

Three people were elected to assist Robert Green by reporting happenings in their regions to him and to serve as delegates to the Executive Committee meetings. They are: De Lois Sandridge, Naomi Higgs and Martha Rohart.

Mrs. Dewey Dofflemeyer, Mr. A. N. Green and Rev. Henry Harmon were elected counselors.

The business of officers disposed of, the state rally to be held this spring in Eastern Virginia was discussed. A rally for older young people was scheduled for December 28, at Bethlehem Church. The theme of this meeting will be "Christian Vocations." A rally for younger young people will be held sometime later in the winter.

Motions were made and passed to the effect that: the conference will pay the registration fees of the delegates to the Richmond Rally; that $1.80 will be paid Palmyra Church as a part payment for signs pointing the way there for the October rally; and $15 will be paid Rev. Bill Simmons.

There was no further business.

The meeting was closed with prayer by Miss Coghill.

Norfolk Scout Troop Reorganized

Members of the Young Adult Fellowship of the First Congregational Christian Church of Norfolk have formed a troop committee, secured a Scout Master and revived the dormant community Boy Scout Troop. The official board of the church gave permission for the newly organized troop to use the church for a meeting place, and the troop has been meeting for several weeks with a wonderful response. The Troop committee consists of George Dewey Simmons, Jr., chairman; Paul Sieloff, Joseph E. Nixon, Jr., Owen L. Dowdy, Alvin L. Porter, Jr., Roger L. Ballard, Harry Bell and Horace L. Nixon. The Scout Master is Preston S. Springston, and assistants are Adolph G. Mellberg, Jr., and James H. Armbruster. The Troop has applied for its charter and very soon, now, a public service will be held at the church for the presentation of the charter.

Relax With Max

Someone wrote me this week asking if I could use some news. Can I? Boy, if I had more news I probably wouldn't get bald headed so fast! My address is at the top of this page, and I'll be happy to hear from any of you.

* * *

Why is a bad boy like a cake?

Because a good beating makes both of them better.

* * *

Larry: "What's the matter? You look angry."

Harry: "I played hookey from school all day before I remembered it was Saturday."

* * *

Teacher: "Why are you shivering, Billy? The weather is warm."

Billy: "Yes, but there is a zero on my report card."

This column is gonna be a little short this time. I can hardly wait to get to our Western North Carolina Laymen's Fellowship Rally tonight. This is the father-son banquet, and there is always plenty of good food. Food — — good-bye!

Jesus Disperses Fear

LESSON XI—DECEMBER 14, 1952

MEMORY SELECTION: “. . . He constrained the disciples to enter the boat. . . and after he had sent the multitude away, he went up into the mountain to pray.”—Matthew 14: 22-23.

LESSON: Matthew 14: 13-33.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 27: 1-6.

They That Wait Upon the Lord.

The Master had had a hard and heavy day. Although he and the disciples had gone across the Sea of Galilee to get away from the crowds, the multitude followed him and pressed upon him. He had, therefore, spent the day in teaching and healing and feeding the multitude, and in doing this, he had spent himself. Furthermore, there was not only the strain of the work, but the subtle temptation to accede to the people's desire to make him a king. Accordingly the Master desired to be alone for prayer and meditation and silence. He first of all sent the disciples away, and then gently dismissed the multitude. Then “He went up into the mountain apart to pray; and when even was come, he was there alone.” Jesus had learned the secret of renewal which comes to those who wait upon the Lord.

How much we moderns need to learn this secret! The world is too much with us. We do not take time to be quiet, and we do not know how to keep silent and to be still, and to know that God is God. We need to get away from our work and the world and even our most intimate friends, and to spend time alone with God. And, like the Master, we shall find that they who wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength, they shall find power over temptation, they shall find power for service. The Master's public ministry depended so much upon his private meditations.

Stormy Seas and Contrary Winds.

“But the boat was now in the midst of the sea, distressed by the waves; for the wind was contrary.” The disciples had been battling for several hours, and they had made only about three miles. One of the strong winds that so often swept down from the hills was blowing directly against them, and kicking up high seas. It was tough going. It was also dangerous going. They were becoming concerned about their safety. Perhaps they were beginning to wonder why the Master had sent them out on such a dangerous trip. Obedience to Christ does not give immunity to the storms of life or to contrary winds. Indeed, the Christian life is essentially a struggle against seen and unseen powers arrayed against it. That is a part of its glory. One thing for which we can well be thankful at this Thanksgiving Season (These Notes are being written before Thanksgiving Day.) is as Dr. Gains Atkins says in a recent issue of Advance, that in the most trying experiences of life God has given to us “the power to take and translate these experiences into the finer and more enduring qualities of the spirit, to transmute them by his grace into wealth of soul, patience, courage, charity and understanding.”

Fear.

The disciples were already filled with fear. When they saw Jesus approaching them, walking on the sea, they were indeed troubled, and cried out with fear. “It is a ghost (or spirit),” they said. That is characteristic of fear; it distorts, magnifies, falsifies things. It has terrific and terrifying power. It is perhaps our “Public Enemy No. One.” It not only affects the mind, it affects the body. Its vast domain and dominion in the hearts of men covers many areas of life and many aspects of life. I am now reading a book by Dr. G. Ernest Thomas, “Faith Can Conquer Fear.” He makes no pretense of covering all the fears that plague mankind, but he does have chapters dealing with the following fears: Fear of the Future, of the Past, of the Unexpected, of a Crisis, of being One's Self, of Insecurity, of People, of Failure, of Loneliness, of Life, of Being Young, of Growing Old, of Facing God, of Sickness, of Death. Perhaps you can add some chapter headings of your own. Certainly you can pick out in the list above some fears that plague your life. Man has achieved many conquests, but in a large way, fear is still an unconquered area of human life. The tragedy of it all is, that so many of our fears are groundless. And where there are things to fear, fear unfits us to deal with them effectively.

“Fear Not.”

“Be not afraid,” “O thou of little faith”—these two expressions from Jesus are to be found in today's lesson. The first was addressed to the disciples when they cried out in fear at his approach. The second was addressed to Peter when, taking his eyes off of Jesus as he tried to walk to him, he began to sink. But they were typical of the many words which Jesus spoke to banish fear and to quicken faith during the days of his earthly ministry. For Jesus, the great antidote for fear was faith. Men were to look not only at the things that they could see, but at the things which they could not see. They were to realize that nothing disastrous ultimately could happen to the soul that was joined to God in faith. This is no “blind ostrich” approach to, or reaction from the grim realities of life. But it was not mere wishful thinking either. God was a reality, the Great Reality; and in quiet confidence in him, man could face anything courageously and confidently. God is the ultimate Controller of our destinies. Faith in a personal God overcomes fear.

“And they that were in the boat worshipped him, saying, Of a truth thou art the Son of God.” They had come to that conclusion gradually. When these disciples first followed Jesus, they thought of him only as a Teacher, and perhaps as a Leader of a new movement. They did not think of him as anything but a man, although they did think he was an unusual man. But as they companied with him, as they saw his mighty works, as they listened to his majestic words, as they felt the impact of his spirit upon their minds and hearts, they began to sense an “otherness” in him, they became conscious of a sense of God. They became convinced that he was the Son of God. And they worshipped him as such. For the disciples, Christ was God. They were led gradually, but inevitably to this conclusion. And they went out to preach that conviction. Those who look upon Christ as anything but the Son of God, do not get their conception from the New Testament. There, always, everywhere,

Because of an epidemic of measles, we were unable to have our Community Bible School in Windsor.

A new piano has been given the church by Mrs. Sterns of Florida.

The Antioch Church has celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of its present church. The history of Antioch dates back to Colonial times, it being the second church to follow James O'Kelly. This observance of its 110th anniversary was held on the third Sunday in May, with about 500 people present. Dinner was served on the grounds, and there was a great home-coming spirit prevailing throughout the day. The church had been newly painted and treated for termites, new pulpit furniture had been purchased and everything was in readiness for that great day. Mrs. Hattie Griffin and children of the Windsor Church presented Antioch with a bronze Altar set, in memory of her grandfather, father and husband, all of whom had been deacons of Antioch. The revival at Antioch was held in September, when Rev. W. L. Wood was our guest speaker. The house was full each night during the week. The membership was increased and revived.

Mount Carmel Church has had a very good year. Although we have lost some of our most faithful members by death, we have gained in other ways. We enjoyed the week of revival in September when Rev. Earl T. Farrell brought great messages and stirred the people of our community. Our church here has been painted; we had a record attendance at our Bible School in June. The church has purchased a lot on which to build a parsonage at a later date, and we have about $2,500 as a nest-egg to start the building. The every Sunday envelope system has been started and the people are responding very favorably.

The people of the Windsor Pastorate have not only been faithful and loyal to their churches, but they have been thoughtful of their pastor and his family. In the early spring, the pastor expressed his desire for a "deep freeze," and all of the churches same to his aid and he was able to have his desire fulfilled, and then the people have kept it full of good things to eat. This is only one of the many kindnesses that has been shown him throughout the year.

Mrs. J. F. Morgan Clark taught the Bible Study Book of Colossians for the missionary societies of the field, at Antioch in October.

I helped Rev. Raymond Grissom in a revival at Hank's Chapel, and Rev. W. L. Wood in a revival at Turner's Chapel this past summer and fall.

guiding light for those in the darkness of confusion. At the same time, the Christian student must not hide from an honest doubt. Nothing will push a disbeliever further away than for him to see a Christian refuse to face a problem or doubt concerning his faith. There is no reason for anyone to fear an honest doubt, for held in the light of a true faith it will become a stepping stone to a higher faith.

How then can a student serve God?

First, by training himself for the future as best he possibly can.

Secondly, by striving to bring his fellow student closer to God.

And thirdly, by praising God for all the wonderful opportunities that are his.

"Christian Faith—in Scientific Research"

By J. E. LARSH, JR.

Our Christian Faith is based on a belief in God the Father, and a belief in and adherence to, the teachings of Jesus, the Son of God. What, then, is the significance of the Christian Faith to a research scientist?

The great French bacteriologist, Louis Pasteur, once said, "My laboratory is my house of worship." After thirteen years of scientific research in the field of infectious diseases, the same area in which Pasteur worked, I feel certain of what he meant in that statement. No one working in this field can fail to appreciate God's work. The organization, function and transmission of these living organisms are marvels to behold. The longer a person specializes in a field of research, the more he realizes his own limitations, and even those of the entire human race. He grows more and more humble and marvels daily in the work of God. Such a worker realizes how little, after all, we know of man and the other living things on this earth. The sweeping claims that science some day will solve all of our problems are made by neophytes, or those seeking publicity through dramatic appeal. Such claims are rarely made by men dedicated to research who have spent a life time gathering bits of scientific truth. In fact, the research scientist is led to the belief that it is God's plan that there shall be a limit to man's mastery over life. Thus, a strong belief in God is of great significance to the research scientist.

In what ways do the teachings of Jesus influence the life of a research scientist. The very basic doctrine of Christ's teachings is that all men are equal in the eyes of God. Thus, the research scientist, especially one working in the field of Public Health like myself, finds a great satisfaction in his work. We are seeking to improve the health of all men. Our findings are not for ourselves, our university, or even our country alone. Our findings are published in scientific journals for distribution throughout the world. Scientists in my field are bound together in a fellowship for the good of all mankind. When they congregate at international meetings, there is an atmosphere of brotherhood and cooperation. Politicians could learn much by attending such an international conference.

Thus, the Christian Faith has a great significance to the research scientist; it is a Faith he observes and practices in his daily life. It has been very gratifying to me, and I know it will be to you, to learn that most research scientists are deeply religious, having a strong belief in God and the teachings of Christ. It is comforting to know that scientific research is in the hands of such men. In fact, such knowledge leads one to be encouraged in these troubled times.

Sunshine Fund.

Total spent for flowers, gifts, etc, was $20.03.

Financial Statement.

The report included a complete financial statement, which showed disbursements amounting to $916.44, and a balance on hand of $50.73.

Final Statement.

At the installation service this year, the women of the Fellowship pledged continued support of the church under the leadership of a new pastor. They have fulfilled this pledge in a manner which entitles them to be proud to be known as church women.

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

When I came down last Saturday with a "bad cold," I thought that with rest I could whip it. I did not know that during the night I would have a hard chill, and that before dawn I would have a very high fever. Drugs and disease kept me in a stupor until Monday morning. Quickly I discovered that I could bear no weight on my right leg. I was hustled off to the hospital with an infected leg, caused by a little crack in my toe—Maybe a slight one also in the head for not slowing down at two or three warning signals. I am writing this from my hospital room. I am much better; and hope to go home in a few days.

The staff, with the good help of V. R. Holt, are going right ahead with the care of the children, and the daily urgent business of the home. I am so disappointed in having to slow down right at this time. I thank you everyone for your generous help and I pray that funds from a generous people may pour in until our needs are met.

In Memoriam

Report of Committee on Memoirs of Eastern Virginia Conference

During the past year one death has occurred among the ministers and officials of the Conference. On April 1, 1952, after a brief illness, Reverend William Stanley Carne, the pastor of the First Church, Portsmouth, and Mt. Zion Church of Eelipes, passed away. He was sixty-eight years old. He served several important charges during his long ministry, including Spokane, Seattle and Leavenworth, Washington, five years; Gorham, Maine, thirteen years; Moody Church of Northfield, Mass., nine years; Elizabethtown, New York, six years; and First Church, Portsmouth, and Mt. Zion, Eelipse, Virginia, nearly five years. The importance of these charges and the success of his work indicated his adaptability and versatility as a pastor and preacher of the Word.

He was a man of God. His humility and dignity, his cheerfulness and sound thinking, his sincerity and integrity, his standards of conduct and character, his loyalty and spiritual devotion—all these impressed his friends and made his ministry useful and uplifting to the churches. In the pulpit and out of it, his manner of life witnessed to a deep consecration and high spiritual living.

Your committee offers these resolutions as a feeble tribute to his life and work, and as an expression of sincere appreciation of him as a man and minister.

Resolved:

1. That this Conference record our willingness to bow in submission to the will of God in this bereavement.
2. That we thank God for his ministry in this Conference.
3. That we express our heartfelt sympathy to his wife and all the other members of his family in their great loss.
4. That a copy of these resolutions be entered upon the records of this Conference and published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN; and a copy be sent to the family of the departed servant of God.
5. Furthermore, Be it Resolved that this Conference hereby express its sympathy for all members of the churches within the bounds of this conference, who during the past year, have been bereaved by death of loved ones in the family.

Respectfully submitted,

I. W. JOHNSON,
J. M. ROBERTS,
T. FRED WRIGHT.

The Low Cost of Dying

By S. M. SMITH.

Everybody these days is looking for a bargain. A store puts on a bargain sale. Women crowd the counters to see what they can find.

A man strolled leisurely through a ten-cent store. "Something I can show you?" asked the sales-girl. "No," said the man, "I'm trying to decide how many things I can do without."

But there is one thing that we cannot put off, and that is death. I remember well how they buried people seventy-five years ago, that is in the country. There were no funeral-homes, no undertakers. No one knew anything about embalming. In the country where I lived, when anybody died they sent for Tom Busbee. Tom was an old bachelor. So was his brother, Dr. William. He was a "horse and bugy" doctor. Tom came and brought his reed. The reed was eight feet long—cut out of a near-by swamp. Tom measured the body, and then went to his carpenter shop and proceeded to make the coffin. It was made of pine lumber and was painted with walnut stain. The inside of it was upholstered with wheat straw and white cloth. Most farmers had their own family burying ground.

On the day of burial, neighbors came in the morning and dug the grave. At the appointed hour people came with their families in wagons and proceeded to the burying ground. The service was brief, usually a prayer. It was announced then when the funeral would be at the church where the deceased belonged. The attendance was usually good; and sometimes these funerals made up an all-day service.

The first crematory built in this country was in Washington. Now there are many throughout the country. There are also mausoleums in which bodies may be stored for a limited time.

An uncle of mine, several years ago, persuaded me to go into the undertaking business in my home town, formerly run by an old man who had to retire. I tried it for a while, but it didn't appeal to me. Sitting around waiting for someone to die wasn't my idea of making a living. I quit that and went back to teaching young people. That has helped to keep me young.

“Religion in the Home”

Religion in the Home is the source of institutional religion. It is the spring from which flow those rivers of the water of life—the Churches of Christ. When God sent his Gospel in Jesus Christ into this world, he sent it not through the temple or the synagogue, but through the Home. And when the Christian Church began, the first meeting-houses were not temples or basilicas, but Homes. Religion worth its salt is home-made religion. If that source is neglected, the devaluation which follows is appalling.

Religion in the Home is first of all an atmosphere, a life. It is the way we speak, and look, and act, and think, and feel, and live. A real Christian home is like heaven, where they need no temple. The atmosphere, the life is a temple, and therefore heaven. Religion in the Home is the life to which all contribute: a life of love, and joy, and peace; nobility and honor; high standards; durable values; the beatitudes of daily living. A child growing up in such a home may say: I had a Christian home, and religion there was the breath of life—a sanctity not to be indecently exposed but decently lived.

Religion in the Home has a Christian nurture. It is nurtured with scripture and psalm and hymn. Children, and parents, should learn the great Psalms: the 23rd, 24th, 100th, 121st, for example. God's Word is the living bread for living homes. Even if children do not understand these scriptures, feed them to them. They will in some measure enter in later days into the profound truth. Let them learn by heart the Beatitudes and the Commandments of Jesus. Let them learn these in the King James version. Children should grow up knowing these stories and names and living words in the great English text.

Always have prayers before meals. As children grow into youth, teach them the great prayers, for these are disciplines in the great necessity of prayer. Above all let the home sing hymns together and learn hymns by heart. This is one of the best ways to plant and grow pure religion. From the very beginning of your family life, learn in the home the great hymns of the Church of Christ. Again, no matter if the children do not understand all the words, they will understand them when they grow up; and the main thing in religion, for both children, and adults, is to grow. Learning great hymns by heart, singing them together in the noble and approved melodies, this carries religion to the very heart of man. To know the 23rd Psalm in one of the great tunes, is a Christian nurture in itself. By such hymns, and prayers, and scriptures, we establish religion in our homes, which ought to be thresholds of heaven.—Warren S. Archibald, in Handbook for Congregational Christian Churches.

“THE CHRISTMAS FUND”

For the past fifty years the people and churches of our denomination have made Christmas gifts to our ministers who are in need. Each year the Ministerial Relief Division gathers and distributes the Christmas Fund for the Veterans of the Cross. A part of this fund is used at Christmas time in special gifts supplementary to our regular pension grants. A part is used as an Emergency Fund to meet unforeseen but inevitable crises as they arise throughout the year.

Beginning in 1952 with a few very small gifts the fund has grown year by year, until for each of the past seven years it has exceeded $100,000. Last year gifts totalled $109,593.73—a near record.

Our friends are looking forward to another Christmas. Their needs and their hopes are much the same as they have been in the past year. We at the office of the Ministerial Relief Division know that the people of our churches will not disappoint them.

Gifts may be sent to “The Christmas Fund” through your Convention Office. They should be forwarded promptly, since our books close on January 7. In 1951, a total of $1,665.77 was received from churches and individuals in the Southern Convention.

News Flashes

We are printing in this issue a most interesting letter from Mr. William Kincaid Newman to Mr. House. Mr. Newman is the regional director for the Atlantic Coast Area of the Church Building Loan Fund Campaign being undertaken by the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches and a good friend of many of our churches in the Southern Convention.

North Carolina and Virginia Ministers Meet

Officers for 1953 for the North Carolina and Virginia Conference Ministerial Association were elected on December 8, as follows: John R. Lackey, president; Bland A. Leebrick, vice-president; Richard M. Petersen, secretary-treasurer, and John G. Truitt, chaplain. The above officers will serve as the program committee for the year.

At this meeting, John S. Graves Spoke on the subject, "Christian Education for Our Day." The ministers voted to support the plans for Evangelism Institutes to be held in January or February, 1953. They also planned for active participation in the Elon College Two and a Half Million Dollar Campaign.

Significant Service at Chapel Hill

The Chapel Hill Church had a particularly significant service last Sunday morning. After a meaningful service of communion, eight new members were received into the church. After the service, one of the young men stood up before the congregation and said:

"Although I was active in my church (one of another denomination) before I left home, it wasn't until I came to Chapel Hill that I began to think seriously about religion. Discussions led by the Rev. Charles Jones first started me thinking about really applying the teachings of Jesus Christ to our everyday life. Then, a little over a year ago I happened to visit the United Church in Chapel Hill. My heart was warmed by the friendliness of the people and the spirit of Christian fellowship I found here. I later joined the choir and accepted a Sunday school class. My experience in the Y. M. C. ### Distinguished Educator Honored By Board of Home Missions

Thirty years of distinguished service in the field of Christian religious education was recognized on Tuesday evening, December 2, when Dr. Harry Thomas Stock of Boston, general secretary of the Division of Christian Education for the Congregational Christian Churches of America, was honored by the Board of Home Missions at a dinner in the Gramercy Park Hotel, New York City.

Dr. Stock, who is an author and speaker as well as a recognized authority in the field of religious education in interdenominational circles, came to the Congregational Christian Board of Home Missions in 1922 as secretary of the Department of Student Life and Young People. In 1938, he was made general secretary of the Division of Christian Education, which post he still holds.

He has general supervision of the educational program of the Congregational Christian Churches, including the wide sweep of age groups from children through young people's work to adults. The author of numerous books on religious education and church work, Dr. Stock's most recent contribution is the text book for senior high young people in the Pilgrim Series coming out early in 1953,

Dr. Stock spoke Tuesday evening on "Changes of Thirty Years in the Field of Religious Education." Other speakers at this recognition dinner for Dr. Stock were Forrest Knapp of New York City, American general secretary of the World Council of Christian Education; Miss Merle L. Easton of Boston, Mass., editor-in-chief of the Division of Christian Education, and Dr. Howard Stone Anderson of Scarsdale, N. Y., president of the Board of Home Missions.

Born in Springfield, Ill., Dr. Stock was educated at Knox College (A. B. and D. D.), Chicago University (A. M.), and Chicago Theological Seminary (D. B. and D. D.).

A Pastor's Tribute to His Predecessor

Since coming to Virgilina, Virginia, as pastor, I have had the happy privilege of spending many hours in association with Dr. Charles E. Newman. These hours of fellowship with him have been under many and varied circumstances. Yet in all of these times of companionship with him, I was not as conscious of his physical presence as I was of the Christ he represented. His attitude and interest pointed you to a Greater Life, even that of Jesus Christ. His own being seemed to fade away as through him your eyes beheld something of the glory of the Lord whom he faithfully served for many, many years.

Tradition has attributed to Thomas a Kempis as having written in the book, "The Imitation of Christ," "He is truly great, that is little in himself and that maketh no account of any height of honor." This saying truthfully portrays the life of Dr. Newman. The self in him became so little and the Christ in him so big that you saw only the Lord. This quality characterizes true greatness; it is the incarnation of the spirit of Jesus.

Another word, concerning his pastoral ministry. Dr. Newman's reputation as a beloved pastor is well deserved and was earned through many years of faithful devotion to this task. Hundreds of people who have had him in their homes would gladly testify to this truth. He possessed many virtues which would qualify him in this position of esteem. One basic trait which he had and exercised so skillfully was the interest he showed in you. When he made visits, he was always concerned about you, your problems, your joys, your ambitions. He did not talk of self, or of his own achievements. He put self in the background and identified himself with the hopes, ambitions, disappointments and sorrows of his people.

In his life there are numerous things of good report on which to think, but surely the testimony of his life is clothed in the words of II Timothy: "I have fought a good fight,

Church Sustains Great Loss in Death of Dr. Elbert Moore Conover

Reverend Elbert Moore Conover, D. D., died on November 17, 1952. He has probably visited and assisted more Congregational Christian Churches than any man not on the staff of one of the denominational boards. From 1934 until his death, he was director of the Interdenominational Bureau of Architecture and the Bureau of Church Building and Architecture of the National Council of Churches. The bureau was founded in 1934 through the efforts of Reverend Ernest M. Halliday, then general secretary of the Congregational Church Extension Boards, and leaders of several of the other denominations. Because of his outstanding work as the director of the architectural department of the Methodist Board of Church Extension, Dr. Conover was elected its first director. Literally thousands of beautiful church buildings throughout the United States stand as memorials to his untiring effort. Many things which are today accepted as routine, are accepted because of his pioneering effort. His achievements may be summed up as follows:

1. His constant effort was to educate churches in the need of expert guidance in planning church buildings. It is necessary to have a competent architect with a thorough knowledge of churches to design a good church building. This cannot be left to a carpenter or contractor or construction engineer.

2. The sanctuary should be designed to help those attending service to worship. Dr. Conover fought a steady battle against the auditorium type of church with a rostrum instead of a pulpit, with the choir facing the congregation and organ pipes as the center of interest. He urged the elimination of distracting elements and increasing emphasis upon the Communion Table and Cross in a balanced and carefully designed Chancel.

3. Dr. Conover was equally interested in Christian education. He urged churches to think through carefully their religious education programs before planning buildings, instead of trying to adapt the program to the building after its erection. He was the constant advocate of an adequate number of class rooms and of class rooms of adequate size, working in close collaboration with religious educators in the development of programs and standards.

4. Dr. Conover pioneered in organizing conferences of church building in various centers throughout the United States, to which experts in church building, architects and religious educators were gathered together to meet with the representatives of churches having building programs. He urged the theological seminaries to give adequate attention in their curricula to Christian art and architecture.

Dr. Conover, in his office, examined literally thousands of blueprints of church buildings, writing helpful criticisms and suggestions. The total mileage which he travelled in visiting churches would have circled the globe a number of times. His interest in the most remote rural church was equal to his interest in the large city church. His books and articles have national circulation.

Although emphasis has been placed on the ideas and practical assistance given by Dr. Conover, one of his greatest contributions has been in his friendly approach to the churches and as a counselor to minister and laymen alike all over the country. He was a personal friend to thousands of people, and visits to churches which he made many years ago are remembered with gratitude by those visited. He will be greatly missed and long remembered.

Editorial That Were Not Written

The Editor's pen has been idle for a while. Really for the first time in over twelve years, it has been relieved of its weekly chore. Perhaps it is a bit rusty now from disuse.

A few editorials were written in advance during August, and these helped to tide the ship of publication along during September. During the intervening weeks editorial activity has been restricted to brief dictation and the use of the blue pencil.

Alas, there were many contemplated editorials which were never written. They were in the mind and heart of the Editor, but they never got down on paper and into print. Like David of old, of whom we read, "It was in his heart to build the temple," one still finds it impossible to fulfill every desire; but the Scripture goes on to declare that "it was accounted unto him for righteousness." There is the ultimate comfort.

There was to be an editorial about Founders' Day at Elon College. This, naturally, was to center around the life and influence of Dr. W. A. Harper, whose achievements were commemorated on the occasion. It was intended that this should be a call for his students and admirers to rise up and erect a fitting memorial to this man of scintillating mind and sterling character on the campus where he gave the best years of his life. Perhaps it is not too late! It would be grand to have such a memorial announced at the next commencement. If such a memorial is contemplated or desired, now is the time to begin—before a generation arises that "knoweth not Joseph."

The Editor would have counted it a privilege to write an editorial at the death of Dr. C. E. Newman, for he was pastor of the writer's home church when the writer was a small boy. Dr. Newman was the kind of pastor who gave a boy a good and lasting impression of the ministry, one that did not need to be revised later with more mature observation. Through the years those who were privileged to know him "took knowledge of him that he had been with Jesus."

One who has spent a bit of time in the hospital might be expected to give more than passing attention to the announcement that Dr. Selma A. Waksman was awarded the 1952 Noble Prize in Medicine for unlocking from earth mold the wonder drug, streptomycin. Although the announcement of the award was made October 23, the presentation was scheduled for December 10, in Stockholm, Sweden. Dr. Waksman, a Russian-born American scientist, is director of the Institute of Microbiology at Rutgers University. Thus, America, Russia and Sweden are united in this award which honors the scientist of the year who has, to use the words of Alfred Nobel, "conferred the greatest benefit upon mankind." Is it too much to expect that human need, the need for survival, will one day bring the nations together? Meanwhile, in a world of disease and disaster, we are privileged to live in the age of streptomycine.

Editorial That Were Written

Guest Editorials have a number of advantages. They prod new writers and promote wider reader interest. Each writer and his or her friends are sure to read the page. Incidentally, those who write may become more conversant and sympathetic with the problems of the editorial writer.

We have enjoyed a wide and excellent variety of editorials during recent weeks. Many facets of our mutual task have been presented. It has been a wholesome experience. In one sense of the word, the Editor can say in the vein of St. Paul: This thing that has happened to me has turned out for the furtherance of the gospel!

Heartfelt thanks to those who have written.

Having had this experience of editorial pinch-hitting, perhaps they can be induced to a repeat performance.

Thanks also to Dr. Duane N. Vore, chairman of the Board of Publications, and to Mr. John T. Kernodle, the managing editor, both of whom have assumed additional responsibility.

The editorial page has no superior virtue or merit, but it does serve a purpose. It undertakes to present the various phases of the thought and activity of the Church and does not confine itself to any one department. Not infrequently someone asks a question or seeks information which has been given already on the editorial page.

William Kincaid Newman Writes of His Visits to the Southern Convention Area

December 1, 1952.

Rev. Robert Lee House,
265 Bennett Street,
Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Lee:

I have just returned to Montclair from my third consecutive trip to the Southern Convention this fall, having visited three of the five Conference meetings. It seemed very strange being down there and not seeing you. Wherever I went I heard people saying how much they missed you and how soon they hoped you would recover. Your value to the denomination as editor of THE SUN, as pastor at Southern Pines, and as a friend is very great.

I thought you might be interested in some of my impressions of the Convention and its activities, based on these visits.

The first thing of which I was aware was the careful preparation for the conference meetings. Programs were worked out with care and were printed. In some cases, as at Eastern Virginia, the reports submitted to the conference were mimeographed in advance and bound together in a book. The committees had all been at work.

The hospitality of the churches was true to the Southern tradition. All three buildings, Leaksville, South Norfolk, and the Bethlehem Church of Altamahaw, were in excellent condition. Bethlehem, brand new and an outstanding achievement in church building, and Leaksville and South Norfolk, freshly modernized and re-decorated. All three were so clean you could have eaten off the floor. However, we did not have to, for delicious dinners were served by ladies of the churches. Many women think they are doing a lot if they prepare one meal. At these conferences three meals each were prepared, and the third was as good as the first. If I attend many more Southern church suppers, my diameter will increase to the point where my wife will not let me come home.

Going from things of the flesh to things of the spirit, I was impressed by the attention being paid to evangelism and to local church problems. Henry Robinson did a swell job in his forum on the local church at Bethlehem, while the problems and opportunities of evangelism were highlighted at all three conferences. I was glad to see that the churches were giving more than lip service to this matter and were recognizing the especial needs for evangelism created by the tremendous growth in population in this country in the last few years—a growth of nineteen million from 1940 to 1950, and over six million since the 1950 census. There has seemed to be a recognition by the churches that the old type of revival wasn't doing the job today and that more attention should be given to calling by the pastor and members of the church and to making an outreach of the church to its community an integral part of the church's life. With the large number of new homes being built in the areas of many of our churches, there are tremendous opportunities in this field, and many rural churches are discovering that there are more un-churched people in their areas than they have heretofore realized. The increased number of churches which are having full-time pastors and the increased number which are holding services of worship every Sunday are signs of splendid progress.

It was inspiring to see the concern of the churches for the work of the church as a whole, the apportionment for work in the Southern Convention and for home and foreign missions, the work of Elon College, and the work of the Elon Orphanage. I had always known that Dr. Smith and Dr. Truitt were good speakers, but I was impressed anew with the importance of the causes which they presented and the forcefulness of their presentations. I also heard Dr. Truitt preach the Communion sermon at Leaksville, which was very powerful and moving.

I was glad to learn more of the Elon College drive and was greatly impressed with the need of the college for additional funds at this time. I was glad to see the way in which the churches were rallying around and sincerely hope that Dr. Smith's efforts will be crowned with success. The record of progress of the college under his leadership is indeed inspiring.

Because of the college campaign, we are not approaching the churches on our Church Building Loan Fund Campaign until after March 1, but the general principles of the campaign were presented, and the motion picture, "The Basis of the Blueprint," was shown at each conference meeting. I made three of the presentations, and the other two were made by Rev. Eric T. Braund, pastor of our church in Greenbelt, Maryland. All five conferences passed resolutions approving the campaign and accepting their conference quotas.

I hope it will not be long before you are back in the swim again, but please be careful not to undertake too much until your strength has returned.

Cordially,

WM. KINCAID NEWMAN.

Morehead Planetarium at Chapel Hill to Present Christmas Program

By R. H. EMMONS.

During December each year the Morehead Planetarium at Chapel Hill, North Carolina presents a popular Christmas program, "The Star of Bethlehem," in which science, history, art and music are remarkably combined to create new appreciation of the significance of the first Christmas.

In order to reproduce the sky as it was seen over Judea at the time of Jesus' birth, planetarium technicians have had to take into consideration a gradual movement of the earth's axis, called precession, which completes a cycle of celestial changes every 25,800 years. As the earth spins daily on its axis, this axis drifts in slope relative to the stars. In a single human lifetime this has an almost negligible effect upon the appearance of the heavens, but in twenty centuries the change is radical.

Precession is due to the gravitational pull of the sun and moon on the bulge at the earth's equator. In time, various stars become the "north star" as the earth's axis tips toward them. Now it is the star Polaris. In another 3,000 years it will be Alpha Cephei; in 8,000 years it will be Deneb; in 12,000 years, Vega. While the pyramids were being built in Egypt the "north star" was Alpha Draconis. The famous constellation, the Southern Cross, now visible only to countries south of the United

Harvest Day Festival

Members and friends of the Pleasant Ridge Congregational Christian Church made Thanksgiving Day a day of true thanksgiving by giving to the church $715.50, as they participated in Pleasant Ridge's second annual Harvest Day Festival.

Laymen and friends donated $436 of this amount by giving grain to the church. The layman's project had consisted of a field of oats and hay. In the evening the offering and the proceeds from the cake and pie sale netted $279.

At 7:00 o'clock in the evening a dedication service for the gifts was attended by a large number. Dalton Harper, of Asheboro, was the speaker for the evening, speaking on the topic, "Thanks Living!" Symbols of the various farm produce gifts and the evening offering were placed on the altar and dedicated. The gifts will be used to complete payments on the newly erected Sunday School rooms of the church.

The cake and pie sale was conducted by James Cates and Cecil Richardson. A spirit of friendliness and generosity was exhibited by everyone taking part.

Those attending the evening program ended the day by returning to the sanctuary for quiet, personal worship.

Reidsville Church Has Full Pre-Christmas Program

The opening paragraph of the bulletin issued by the Reidsville, N. C., Congregational Christian Church in announcing its Christmas activities reads: "Christmas, good friends, is a season of good will and sharing, the time when the Word becomes flesh, the time God gives his only begotten Son. As we list below our many parties and good times and services for the Christmas season, let us remember that there are many less fortunate, who but for the goodness of others will not have much happiness at Christmas. If you would share yours with a less fortunate and do not know how to do so, use your church as your channel. Your pastor knows the need. Help him to supply clothing, food, toys, goodies, or money, and strengthen his hands. Bring your offering to the parsonage."

The Christmas program of the Reidsville Church is as follows:

Dec. 11—Class No. 14 of the Sunday school will hold a dinner party at the home of Mrs. Stella Somers. Please bring toys for the orphanage.

Dec. 13—The Women's Auxiliary Christmas Party and program; 7:30 p. m., at the church.

Dec. 14—Full choir rehearsal of all choirs; 2:30 at the church.

Dec. 14—Young People's Missionary Society, dinner party at 4:00 at the home of Mrs. Ada Mitchell.

Dec. 17—Christmas party of the Pilgrim Fellowship, at a convalescent's home, at 8:00 p. m.

Dec. 18—Christmas party of the Sunday school. Santa Claus, Christmas program, treats and carols, at the church at 7:30 p. m.

Dec. 20—Philathea Class Christmas party at the home of Mrs. S. J. Page, at 7:30 p. m.

Dec. 20—Sunday School Class No. 16, Christmas party at the church at 7:30 p. m.

Dec. 20—Ushers' Guild Christmas party and dinner, at the church Scout hut, at 7:00 p. m.

Dec. 21—Sunday school Christmas service at 9:45; church service at 11 o'clock.

Dec. 21—Faithful Seekers Class

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Elon College News Notes

After days and days of cloudy and rainy weather we have clear skies and the sun is shining brightly. It is not too cold, just the kind of day that invites you out.

* * *

The enrollment for the first quarter was 650 college students. There were some graduates, some failures, and some withdrawals. There were, however, 37 new students enrolled for the winter quarter.

* * *

The winter quarter of the academic year in Elon College began Monday, December 1. Many of the students enrolled before leaving for Thanksgiving holidays, but on Monday the halls were crowded with students trying to get through the offices in time to enter classes.

* * *

The basketball season, like the average event, started ahead of time. The Gobblers (V. P. I.) invaded our campus Thursday evening of last week. The ones who witnessed the game reported a very thrilling contest. The score was Elon 73, V. P. I. 61. Our team is getting off to a good start.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Butler are the proud parents of a baby girl, born early in the morning of December 5. Mother and baby are doing well. They have not named the baby. Presumably, they are unable to find a name good enough! Mr. Butler is the efficient business manager for the College.

* * *

The Elon College Dramatic Group is repeating the comedy, "January Thaw," tonight in Walter Williams High School, Burlington, North Carolina, under the auspices of the Junior Chamber of Commerce. This was a very good performance and was popular with the audience when presented in Whitley Auditorium a few weeks ago.

* * *

The Elon College Singers will present "The Messiah," by Handel, Sunday evening, December 7, in Whitley Auditorium. This is the twenty-fourth consecutive performance. There will be 70 voices in the chorus with four soloists. Professor Fletcher Moore, on leave for the year for advanced study, will return for this occasion and be the accompanist. The following Sunday evening, December 14, at 8:00, they will sing "The Messiah" in The Christian Temple, Norfolk, Virginia, and at other churches in Virginia preceding the Sunday evening service. John Westmoreland is the director.

* * *

The Elon College Alumni Association—Norfolk-Portsmouth Unit—held a banquet meeting at the Norfolk Yacht and Country Club Thursday evening at 6:30 o'clock. It was a very beautiful occasion, a lovely banquet, and an unusually good attendance. There were 74 present—a very fine group of Elonites. Mr. William P. Wilkins of Norfolk Motor Company is the President of the Norfolk-Portsmouth Unit. He did an excellent job in securing attendance and provided for the comfort and entertainment of the same. Mr. Walter Wilkins, father of Bill, underwrote the expenses of the evening. This was a very generous act and expression of real interest.

An Open Letter to the Pastors and Laymen of the Southern Convention

Our church in the Southern Convention has made notable progress over the last twenty-five years and more. Many of our churches have either erected new buildings for worship, added new educational buildings, or otherwise improved and beautified their entire premises. Many of our congregations have built new parsonages and advanced their pastors' salaries. We have not done what we should have but we have made considerable progress all of which is good and promises better things in the future.

In this move forward, which I commend most heartily, I wish to direct your attention to Elon College, your College, our College, to which we proudly refer as our church college, reminding the public that it belongs to the church outright. It is something for all of us to be proud of.

But let's take a look at our College and then ask ourselves two questions: What is our opportunity? What is our responsibility?

The Physical Plant—The college's instructional facilities are adequate. The ones who had planned and erected these buildings did a good job. Accommodations for on-campus students were good when provided but are out of date. They simply do not meet the modest requirements for the students of this modern age. We have a temporary kitchen and dining room in which to prepare and serve meals to our students. We need badly new dormitories for men and women students. We need additional houses for faculty members.

Faculty Salaries—"The laborer is worthy of his hire" but our faculty members do not travel from house to house as did the apostles. They must live at the College and must have houses in which to live. They must have food and clothing for their families—the actual necessities of life—to say nothing of books, magazines, and additional study so necessary for their improvement and for the advancement of the College that they serve. Salaries in our College begin at $2,000 and stop at $4,700. They are required to furnish their own houses, either they purchase them on the installment plan or rent by the month. Our faculty members are paid an average salary of $3,400, without house, and this after spending six to ten years in preparation. Can you figure out how they do it?

Don't you think we should do something about this? The present campaign is our opportunity? It is our responsibility. The goal in this campaign is $1,300,000 to complete our $2,500,000 fund for our college. This is not a large amount for us to raise. It only means that every individual member—man, woman, and child—shall contribute an average of $7.50 annually for five years. This would give us a total of $1,312,500.

Surely we can and will do this little for the great College that we call our own, particularly in this hour of need at this opportune time which offers to us this opportunity?

* * * * *

Apportionment Giving

For the past three years Elon College has been crediting contributions on apportionment on the basis of the calendar year. This gives churches and Sunday schools an opportunity to make up any deficit they may have sustained in the conference year. On this basis our receipts to date total slightly more than a year ago, for which the College is grateful.

Missions at Home and Abroad

"I Choose Jesus"—The Conversion of a Witch Doctor

She stood before them in all her witch-doctor's adornments. With her hair done up in black clay and ornamented with inflated goats' bladders and with seemingly endless number of charms and medicine pouches hanging from her neck and arms, Sangoma, witch-doctor of witch-doctors, raised in the air her wand and tiny cowhide shield, crying:

"I am tired of it all! I am tired of deceiving the people! I choose Jesus."

The awe-stricken little congregation in Mziplace, an out-station of Umzumbe, Natal, South Africa, fixed their eyes upon the distinctive witch-doctor's insignia which crossed the chest and back of Sangoma, and marvelled:

"Can this be true? A witch-doctor choosing Jesus! A teacher of witch-doctors repenting! A witch-doctor giving up all the goats and cattle she has been earning!"

For Sangoma, of whose conversion writes Mrs. Geo. B. Cowles, missionary under the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions since 1893, is no ordinary person. She stands as far above the common variety of native physician as a great specialist stands above a young interne.

"Do we not know her? Have we all not feared her?" thought the group of native Christians. They hardly dared whisper. Surely the Holy Spirit was near.

Sangoma turned suddenly after taking her stand as a Christian. With goat bladders bobbing and skin kilts flapping, she disappeared down the grass path which led to her hut.

Soon she returned with her drum and other medicine pouches. Tearing the goat bladders from her hair and wrenching off her leather scarfs, she laid them all "at the disciples' feet." Soon a solemn procession, headed by Majoze, the Zulu evangelist, filed out of the small church. A fire was built, and one by one the pouches, the bladders and all the other paraphernalia of superstition were fed to the flames. The drum, the wand and the scarfs were about to follow when Majoze, the evangelist, stepped forward and, raising his hand, said imperatively:

"No, I want these for our missionaries. I think these should be sent to the 'American Boodie' (Board) in Boston."

And they were sent to accompany this truly remarkable story of the conversion of the great witch-doctor, Sangoma. They rest now upon a table in the rooms of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions on Beacon Hill—a far journey from the heart of Zululand.

Like all really good stories, this one has a sequel. A few weeks later Rev. George B. Cowles was called to Mziplace to conduct a communion service. Witch-doctor Sangoma—no longer a witch-doctor, however—was there. They had washed the black clay and grease out of her hair. In the place of dirty cowhide kilts was a neat cotton dress. Cleansed within and without, she sat happily "at Jesus feet."

What makes this story even more appealing is the fact that Mziplace is one of the smallest of missionary preaching places in Umzumbe. Work started there very recently, and it was only a short time ago that the head man of this little village put in a plea for a school teacher, saying:

"Even though we are so small, should not a place where a witch-doctor was converted have a teacher?" Did they get one? They certainly did.

American Board people in Africa think this conversion is a really momentous thing, and will have unbelievable influence in that section of the country.

Both Rev. and Mrs. Cowles hail from New Britain, Conn., and Mr. Cowles is a member of the First Congregational Church of that city.

We wonder if someone could not write a sequel to the sequel to this remarkable story. If someone knows it, THE SUN would like to publish it.

MOOREHEAD PLANETARIUM.

States, could be seen from Canada in the year 3,000 B. C. because of precession.

The seasons once began as the sun appeared to enter the constellations of Aries, Cancer, Libra and Capricornus. Now the seasons begin while the sun is seen against the background constellations of Pisces, Gemini, Virgo and Sagittarius. A particular star will rise and set at different times on the same date, from one century to the next, as the result of precession. If our calendars were based on the stars instead of the sun, and precession were ignored, in time our coldest month in the northern hemisphere would be July, instead of January.

Although the dynamics and consequences of precession are quite complicated, the necessary projector adjustments in order to duplicate the sky at the time of the Nativity are quickly accomplished. The precessional movement is already geared into the driving mechanism. The planetarium technician need only turn a few controls to order the sky for any date—past, present or future—as seen from any place on earth.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The last Sunday in November was the fifth Sunday on which date all Sunday schools are requested to receive an offering for the College. Other interests of the Convention—Missions, the Orphanage—receive monthly offerings from our Sunday schools.

Only fourteen Sunday schools out of a total of 200 have sent in a fifth Sunday offering. I am sure that there are many more to come. Had all our Sunday schools received an offering for the College on that day, in all probability we would have received our full apportionment of $15,000 for the year.

The figure which is a part of this report indicates the total amount received on apportionment during the calendar year 1952.

For Christmas Eve at Home

By MRS. W. MILLARD STEVENS,
Chairman, Family Life, Eastern Virginia Conference.

It is possible that during the last few years your children have been deprived of some of their heritage of Christian joy in the home at Christmas time, because their elders have been unable to give of themselves freely in a world torn by war and with millions of people homeless and suffering. Christmas is the great Christian family festival. Jesus, the Christ should be the center of our observance.

Let us strive more this year as a family, to make our observance of Christmas one of joy and of deeper meaning for each member of the family.

Every hearth is aflame, and the beautiful sing that Jesus is King."

Prelude—"Silent Night" (To be sung by group, or played on instrument. A child lights candle during prelude.)

Call to Worship (by Mother)—

A candle is such a lovely thing;
 It makes no noise at all
 But softly gives itself away
 While quite unselfish it grows small.
 So like the stars in Bethlehem's skies,
 That showed the road the wise men trod.
 The Christmas candle exemplifies
 The Christ, the Son of God.

Closing Prayer—

What can I give him
 Poor as I am?
 If I were a shepherd,
 I would give him a lamb;
 If I were a wise man,
 I would do my part.
 But what can I give him?
 Give him my heart.

Activities at Shallow Well

The Pilgrim Fellowship of the Shallow Well Christian Church held its first fall meeting in the parlors of the church on Sunday, September 14, with 28 present. An outline of the work for the coming months was given by the sponsor, Mrs. W. L. Wood. After a short meeting the hostesses, Miss Graee Kelley and Mrs. Wood, served icecream and cake. Plans were made for a Christmas program and supper. Committee in charge of supper, Peggy Fincher, Fay Buchanan, Graee Kelley and Mrs. Wood.

The Willing Workers class of the Shallow Well Church conducted an attendance contest which ended September 14. The losing side entertained the winners on Thursday, September 19, with a hot dog roast. Between 45 and 50 attended. The captain of the winning side was Lawton Maddox, and the captain of the losing side was Eugene Rosser. The contest proved very successful in that it greatly increased the attendance of the class. All reported a good time and many plans were made for the coming year.

All together Shallow Well has had a good year. Twenty have been added to the church roll and seven have been baptized. The church attendance has increased. A choir has been organized and robed. A Pilgrim Fellowship and Pilgrim Brotherhood have been organized. We are looking forward to even better things for 1953

Items of Interest

The meeting of the Greensboro District of our North Carolina Women's Conference was held on Sunday, November 23, at 3 o'clock, in the Congregational Christian Church in Reidsville. The new superintendent, Mrs. J. C. Wright, presided. Eight societies were represented by some thirty women. Mrs. W. T. Scott, Woman's Conference president, was a visitor and very capably led the discussions on problems confronting each society.

Dr. Ruth Isabel Seabury is on a tour of Africa. Her interesting letters tell of visits to the Gold Coast, British Togoland, Belgian Congo and Angola. She has visited Dr. Mary Cushman, our veteran medical missionary to Africa, now 82.

* * *

Miss Angie Crew is spending the Christmas holidays with her sister and husband, who are in the Philippines for a year of teaching. This trip is a Christmas present to Miss Crew from her sister. We are sure she will enjoy the warmth of the weather as well as the fellowship with her family.

* * *

One circle of our Asheboro society enjoyed its Christmas meeting very much. Their guest speaker was Miss Karoline Nau, exchange teacher from Germany, who was in Asheboro visiting the schools there for a week. Miss Nau, a protestant, told of Christmas customs in her country, and how it is a religious festival, in home as well as church, and yet commercialized as we find it here. They have special services for each Advent Sunday, lighting candles in both home and church, and have church services on Christmas eve, Christmas day, and the day after Christmas.

* * *

We notice that our groups in Greensboro, Pleasant Ridge (G), Winston-Salem, Elon College and Asheboro have had bazaars and hope that all did well on them. Elon's was announced by a very clever poem by Mary Halstead Booth, telling of all the things that their women could make and do for the bazaar.

* * *

Ten women from our Winchester church presented a program for the Bethlehem women recently. They have been doing quite a bit of "caravaning" in the Valley and are enthusiastic about these visits. Mrs. Cecil Whitlock, president of the Valley women, and Mrs. Edgar Nelson, district chairman, recently visited the Timber Ridge women's society.

Book Reviewers for North Carolina

Fortunate we are in North Carolina to have Dr. and Mrs. W. W. Sloan to review our mission books on Africa—and to do more than that, to tell us some of the information they picked up while on their trip to Africa last summer, and to show slides and pictures of their travels. They took their time and their money to make the

More Christmas Doings

The last issue of Advance the national Congregational magazine, has an article by a teacher and a mother telling of her experience in building a Christmas scene with her little son.

One of the recent issues of Life has several colored pages of drawings showing how certain Christmas customs started. Be sure and see them—they are worth saving.

If you want to make an easy gift for a small brother, sister or friend here's what you need:

An old stocking that is clean (may be cotton, or silk, nylon), rags or cotton, two buttons, thread, piece of ribbon (any color will do).

Cut the foot off the stocking and stitch across the top on the wrong side. Do it on the machine if you can or ask mother to do that. Turn the stocking right side out. Either tie or sew the top corners to make ears. Stuff the head—make it firm—and tie the ribbon snugly to make a head. Sew on buttons for eyes. If you have any pieces of yarn or embroidery thread, make a nose and mouth—yarn will make lovely whiskers. Stuff the body—try not to get it lumpy and sew across the bottom, leaving a long piece hanging. This dangling piece may be split twice to make three sections—plait these, sew securely at end of plait and admire your nice, soft kitty cat.

The whole family might like to make a centerpiece for their table. What about a snowman? Here's another how:

An old jar (size that spiced peaches come in), a burned out electric bulb, cotton batting, cloves, wool or sweater scraps, paper (brown or black, and glue.

Rub glue on jar and roll cotton around it. Put electric light on piece of batting and cover securely. Tie it at the bottom and stick in jar. Hold securely by using piece of wool cut to make a scarf. Stick in cloves for eyes, mouth, buttons. Cut out two mitten shapes and glue on man. Make his hat of paper, first cut circle big enough for brim, then cut straight strip to make crown, this may be glued, sewed, or stapled on. Or make a stocking cap from your wool scrap. Take him to the place where he is to stand and cover him with artificial snow (squirt or shake kind) and heap some around his feet. Circle all with greens or holly.

"Father's Role"

By LUCIA MALLORY

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Sometimes I wonder if most of the fathers of today function only as harassed providers of material goods for their families.

Not long ago a mother who has recently come to live in Barnard brought her two little boys to visit the reading room of the city library, where I serve as children's librarian. When they came to my desk to check out some books, she said, "I have to take the children to every place where they cannot go by themselves; their father is too busy to be bothered with them."

I longed to tell her that even a limited childhood companionship with their father might prove invaluable in her son's future years, but I could only reply, "I'm glad you could visit the library, Mrs. Branson. I hope the boys' father, too, will be able to come with them sometime. We've learned that fathers often find a great deal of pleasure in sharing their children's reading and in renewing acquaintance with their own early book-friends."

Many mothers come with their little folks to the library and tell me, as did Mrs. Branson, that their husbands have no time for the children. Few of them seem to realize that no amount of material gain can compensate for the spiritual loss suffered by a family when there is no fellowship between father and child.

The Winton family have given me proof that even a limited time at home can be used to establish a happy relationship between a father and his little son and daughter. As I walked past their home one evening I noticed my friend, Aline Winton, sitting alone on the front porch.

"Where are the children?" I inquired, stopping for a few moments' conversation. "I'd like to tell Tommy about a fine new book on the ways of nature that has come to the library."

"Tommy and Sue walked up the hill with their father to see the roses in Thornden Park," Aline replied. "Please come in and wait for them. They'll be home soon, because Tom, Senior, has a meeting scheduled for eight o'clock. His work with the boys' clubs of the city leaves so little time for his own children that he likes to take advantage of every minute he can be with them."

"I wish all fathers had such interest in their families," I declared, as I sat down beside my friend. "In many homes such companionship is sadly lacking."

"I don't believe fathers lack interest in their children," Aline replied. "They just don't know how to budget their time."

"Isn't that where mothers could help?" I inquired, hoping Aline would tell me how the problem had been solved in her home.

"Yes," she agreed. "When fathers have so little time at home, mothers are apt to drift, as I did, into the habit of doing everything for the children. Fortunately, a memory of my own childhood made me realize that I was making a mistake. On Sue's sixth birthday I was showing her a picture of a tall, smiling man giving a tiny girl, myself at her age, a ride on a bright new sled. The pleasure depicted on those faces brought back all the joyous hours I had spent with my father, and with those memories came the dismaying thought that my children would have no such happy experiences to recall—and yet—hadn't my father, a village doctor, been just as busy as Tom? I realized that my father must have taken advantage of every minute he could be with us, and I determined to help Tom to do that with our children.

"I began by quietly stepping aside, giving Tom a chance to do some of the things I had been accepting as my prerogative. I suggested to the children that they invite their father to go with them on such brief excursions as the one this evening. I didn't want to miss knowing that both of their parents love beauty and books and music—all the fine things we want to be woven into their lives.

"It hasn't been easy for their father to contribute toward the budget of family time, because Tom's work is demanding and commuting is tedious and difficult," Aline concluded, "but he has found many more extra minutes than we had dared to hope that he could when we started to make room for him in our planning."

Know Your Officers

This is the first in a series of articles about the officers of the Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship. These officers have been very modest, and it has been difficult to get the necessary information. Please urge all the officers and Commission chairmen whom you know to send in information about themselves.

Phil Mann, President—Our president for the next two years is Phil Mann, of the Eastern Virginia Conference. Phil graduated from Whaleyville High School, Whaleyville, Virginia, in 1950. He was president of the student government in his senior year.

Phil is now a junior at Elon College where he is a mathematics and chemistry major. His main extra-curricular activity is being chairman of the entertainment committee this year. He is also president of the Student Christian Association and a member of the Men's Interdormitory Council, and last year was a member of the student legislature.

Last, but not least, he has been a member of the Elon Singers for the past two years. He attended the National Pilgrim Fellowship Conference in California last summer. As for the future, Uncle Sam will take over temporarily.

His address is: Phil Mann, Elon College, N. C. Please write him when you need help or information.

Lebanon Young Adult Group Meets

The regular meeting of the Young Adult Group of the Lebanon Christian Church, Semora, N. C., was held in the home of Mr. and Mrs. John McAden, Burlington, N. C., on November 21st. The members of the class presented their teacher, Mrs. John McAden, a silver platter in recognition of her splendid leadership of our class this year.

Devotionals were led by the Devotional Leader, Mr. Maynard Wells, with scripture taken from the 100th Psalm. The thought was "What Am I Thankful For?" This was followed by a poem entitled "How Can I Be Thankful." Our pastor, Rev. Mark Andes, closed the devotionals with a Thanksgiving prayer.

The class president, Mrs. Ezra Stowe, presented an appropriate story entitled "Thanksgiving Fragrance."

Mrs. Foster Pointer, Program Chairman, presented a report on the progress of our Christmas Pageant, "The Adoration of the Kings and Shepherds." This will be held on December 21 at 7:30 P. M. at the church.

A Nominating Committee was appointed to nominate class officials for 1953 and present the list of names for approval at our meeting of December 12. These were as follows:

1. Mrs. W. F. Hudson, Jr.
2. Mrs. Wilson Lockhart.
3. Mr. R. S. Taylor.
4. Mr. Foster Pointer

At the close of the business session, a recreational period with games and prizes was enjoyed by all. Delicious refreshments served by the hostess climaxed an enjoyable evening for the class.

Mrs. W. F. HUDSON, JR.

Youth Rally at Antioch Church

Antioch Christian Church was the host Sunday afternoon and evening to the regular fifth Sunday rally of the Pilgrim Fellowship of the Western North Carolina Conference of Congregational Christian Churches.

Over 300 young people were present for the worship and fellowship. The attendance trophy was presented to the Pleasant Ridge group, which had the largest percentage of members present.

In the afternoon the group sang, listened to special singing by groups from the churches, and heard an inspiring address by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, educational secretary of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches. A picnic style supper was served in the church basement, and recreation was led during the supper hour by Rev. Bill Simmons.

The host church presented a play in the evening entitled "She Made a Punkin Pie." After the play the officers for the coming year were installed. They are Clem Shankle, president; Charles Oates, vice president; Betty Talbert, secretary; Mrs. Bill Simmons, treasurer; and Rev. Winfred Bray, C. F. Saunders, Jr., Paul Wilson, and Mrs. Raymond Grissom, counselors.

The evening program ended with a Communion Service, conducted by Rev. T. D. Sutton, of Albemarle. This proved a fitting close for a day spent in fellowship with the people of the Antioch Church, who were kind hosts to the visitors.

Father-Son Banquet Sponsored by Laymen

One hundred fathers and sons were gathered at the New Market School cafeteria on Saturday evening November 30, for a Father-Son Banquet sponsored by the Layman's Fellowship of the Western North Carolina Conference of Congregational Christian Churches. There were fifteen father-son combinations and three father-son-grandson combinations present.

The speaker for the evening was Rev. John G. Truitt, Jr., senior at Elon College, who spoke on the topic of "Why I Entered the Ministry." Rev. Truitt is the son of Dr. John G. Truitt, superintendent of the Elon Christian Orphanage, who was unable to attend because of illness. Also sharing their ministerial experiences with the group were Dr. William T. Scott, superintendent of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches; Dr. D. J. Bowden, dean of Elon College; and Dr. F. C. Lester, of Asheboro. Santa Claus also made an appearance, spreading his usual good cheer.

During their business session the men elected Sybrant Pell, president; Ardell Simmons, vice president; Ralph Riddle, secretary; and Harold James, treasurer for the coming year. The next meeting of the Fellowship will be March 28 in Bennett School Cafeteria, sponsored by the Pleasant Grove Christian Church. An offering of $50.00 was received for the children at the Elon Orphanage.

Fact, Not Fancy.

There are many fanciful, and even fantastic things about Christmas. But Christmas is a fact, a solid, stubborn fact of history. It is the celebration of a historic event—the birth of a Child, the Christ-Child. It is so deeply rooted in history that history itself turns upon it as a pivot. All the world, dates are reckoned in relation to it. Events happened, or do happen, either B. C., or A. D., "Before Christ," or "In the Year of Our Lord," according to whether they happened, or do happen, before or after this Babe was born in Bethlehem!!! That is something to think about! That is something that even the most blatant atheist cannot rule out of court. That is something that Christians ought to emphasize.

Christmas marks the coming down to earth to dwell in the form of a man, and among men, of the Eternal God. It is the most significant event in the moral and spiritual history of the race. We moderns have almost forgotten that. We have cluttered up Christmas with so many things, we have so commercialized it, that it has lost much of its meaning. We need to recapture "the lost radiance" of Christmas. It is more than a holiday; it is a holy day.

This Is How It Came About.

"Now the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise"—thus does Matthew begin his narrative of the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. His approach and his point of view are different from Luke's. But like Luke, he shows the same delicacy and reserve, combined with the same definiteness and clearness, as to leave no doubt as to the fact recorded.

Whereas Luke tells about Mary's experiences, Matthew tells about Joseph's. Here was a man, pure, upright, devout, engaged (betrothed) to a fine young Jewish maiden. In those days betrothal was as binding as marriage itself. The young lady he loves is with child before their marriage. Perhaps he hears from Mary herself the apparently fantastic story that no man, but rather the Holy Spirit of God was responsible for her condition. His first impulse was to get her out of the community and far away from relatives and friends to spare her the agony and disgrace. But as he thought and prayed about the matter, God made known his will unto the simple-hearted and great-souled man. His doubts were put to rest. He went ahead with his plans to take this woman, vindicated by God, as his wife, and to obey God in all things that he had shown unto him. "And he took unto him his wife, and knew her not until she had brought forth a son."

Fulfilling Prophecy.

"And all this came to pass that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the Lord through the prophet, saying, 'Behold a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son.'" Matthew was always using the words, "that it might be fulfilled." He saw Christ as the fulfillment of prophecy. In this case he took an incident that had a temporal setting and gave it a timeless significance. Throughout his gospel he presents Jesus as the King, the Messiah, the Promised One. God had kept his word. He had fulfilled his promises.

The Name Above Every Name.

"Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he will save his people from their sins." The word "Jesus" literally means that, "a Saviour." And the name revealed his mission. He came to save men from their sins. Not only from the penalty, but from the power of sin. He had the power to impart inner resources of the Spirit so that men could live victoriously. By his life and by his death, Christ saves men from their sins, if they yield themselves to him. Jesus is more than Teacher or Example or Master; he is Saviour. There is no other name under heaven given among men whereby men can be saved, except the name of Jesus. Those who believe on him shall be saved.

God With Us.

The folks of that day, and the folks of this day, think of God as being far away and far off. But the ancient prophecy insisted that the name of this Saviour of the world was to be Immanuel or Emmanuel, which means literally "God with us." The Word was made flesh and dwelt among men. God came down in the flesh in the Person of Jesus Christ to live among men. And God has sent his Holy Spirit into the world to live among men and to live in men. God is not far from any of us. He is closer than breathing, nearer than hands and feet, as the poet says. He is with us in all the experiences of life. He is everywhere and always available. Furthermore, because he incarnated himself in Jesus Christ, he knows how to help those who are tempted. God's presence can be as real to us as it was to the shepherds or the Wise Men. Christmas defies time and space and history. It recurs again and again in the hearts of men, generation after generation.

The Greater Miracle.

From the modern and scientific point of view, it is in the realm of the miraculous that a child should be born without a father. And for some, it is regarded as impossible, unthinkable. Well, no use kidding ourselves, we are in the presence of the mysterious. And of the miraculous. But after all, Jesus is himself the Great Miracle. When one considers his matchless character, his sinless life, his spiritually dynamic teaching, his marvelous and miraculous works, his sacrificial death, his glorious Resurrection and his mysterious ascension, his increasing influence on the total life of the world and the course of history, it is not incredible that his coming to earth was attended by miracle and mystery. And further, the real importance of the event does not lie in the method, but in the results of the supernatural birth. As Dr. Erdman writes, "The real significance of the birth of Jesus, as here related, lies in the fact that the Son of Mary is also the incarnate God, who is able to save those who put their trust in him, for he is all that the blessed name implies, our divine Saviour Jesus."

Dedication of Memorial Windows At Linville, Virginia, Church

On November 16, 1952, there was held at the Linville Congregational Christian Church, Linville, Virginia, a dedication service for the memorial windows which have been installed in the building.

The historical sketches given below in this connection were contributed by Mrs. Mary Scott Davis.

* * *

HISTORICAL SKETCHES.

By Mrs. Mary Scott Davis.

An old man, traveling a lone highway,
Came at the evening, cold and gray,
To a chasm deep and wide;
The old man crossed in the twilight dim;
The sullen stream had no fears for him.
But he turned when safe on the other side
And built a bridge to span the tide.

"Old man," said a fellow pilgrim near,
"You're wasting your strength in building here;

Your journey will end with the ending day;
You never again will pass this way;
You've crossed the chasm deep and wide;
Why build you the bridge at eventide?"

The builder lifted his old grey head,
"Good friend, in the path I've come," he said,
"There followeth after me today
A youth whose feet must pass this way.
This chasm that was as naught to me,
To that fair youth may a pitfall be;
He, too, must cross in the twilight dim:
Good friend, I am building this bridge for him!"

—Anon.

Consider our church as a bridge; for we, too, have builders for the spans. Each, in his own way, has constructed a means for youth to grow, and created a better world for those to come.

* * *

E. L. DEPOY AND FAMILY.

Most of you here today knew Mr. Depoy and felt the loss of such a worthy member. Unlike many other families that have moved away, the Depoy children have their homes in Linville and are a valuable asset to the church. Mr. Depoy was a very active church worker and was always ready to give help when it was needed. Mrs. Depoy is still a member of this church and an architect of our Christian bridge.

* * *

CHARLES RHODES.

A promising young man, his life was tragically ended when he was in the first phases of Christian work. He was a leader of young people and a true designer of the bridge spans for the feet of youth, having been a Sunday school superintendent for a short period preceding his death. He came from a Christian home and his church had high hopes and a great need of him. "Remember now thy creator in the days of thy youth."—Eecl. 12:1.

* * *

CLARK RHODES.

"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends"—John 15:13. Clark's star is the only one in gold in our service flag, he having lost his life in the battle of St. Lo, in France. He was a fine young man and a member of this church, which has sustained a great loss. Our hearts were saddened and our sympathies went out to his dear mother, brothers and sisters.

* * *

SAM EARMAN.

The Earman family has been active in this church for many years. Mr. Earman is the oldest member at 93, and has served his church well the greater part of his life. He was the treasurer of the Virginia Valley Conference for thirty-two years and is a deacon of our church. He is a man with the courage of his convictions, loving his church, his Bible and his God. "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength. They shall run and not be weary and they shall walk and not faint."—Isaiah 40:31.

* * *

THE J. A. PAYNE FAMILY.

The J. A. Payne family have all been life-long members of this church. "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation."—Luke 17:20. This is a fact that these people realized in many ways, as good Christians, good neighbors and good workers in whatever was their lot. There is only one of this family left, but he shows his interest by his contributions and his presence whenever possible.

* * *

THE H. E. SIMMERS FAMILY.

"Now the God of hope fill you with all peace in believing that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost."—Romans 15:13. Not many members of this family are left, but through the words of Paul, which may have been the prayers of Mr. and Mrs. Simmers, they too have had a part in the bridge for youth.

* * *

EMANUEL SIPE.

Emanuel Sipe was one of the pioneers, a deacon, a leader of this Linville Church. His life must have been one of faith, not only of the things of his own day, but for the future generations. "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for and the evidence of things not seen. For by it the elders obtained a good report."—Heb. 11:1-2. Colonel Sipe was a man of faith, and by his faith in generations to follow, he realized that man's extremity is God's opportunity.

* * *

J. A. TAYLOR AND FAMILY.

Many people here remember Mr. Taylor and his good wife. I will always remember him as a man who loved to sing. He was a leader in our church and a deacon for many years. His passing was a loss to our church and the community, for he was always present to help in every way possible. His family, former members of this church, have moved to other communities and have continued their work of Christian service. "In the world ye shall have tribulations, but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."—John 16:33.

* * *

MR. AND MRS. W. H. HOSAFLOOK.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Hosaflook were public-spirited citizens of this community and true builders for our bridge of youth. They were ever helpful to those in need and as Christians and members of this church, their influence has been far-reaching. One can hear them saying now to their sons, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." If they had made no other contribution to the building of God's kingdom than that of their son, Roy, they had spent their lives wisely and well.

* * *

THE L. S. RHODES FAMILY.

Mr. L. S. Rhodes was a deacon for many years and was ready with words of comfort for those who needed help. His wife was his helper and loving homemaker. They had a large family who were all members of this church at one time. The church was of supreme importance in their home. Their Christian building has been the means of guiding many in the path of better living. Our present Sunday school superintendent is a great grandson of this union.

* * *

HAROLD RHODES.

"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee, because he trusteth in thee." Harold Rhodes, a member of this church and a leader of the Laymen's Fellowship, was a man of honesty, integrity and a

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

As I say, my mother used to tell me that "work tells." How about this report! Isn't it a beauty! Well, I thank you from the depths of my heart. It is so nice to send checks to our friends who have given the orphanage kindly credit. Thank you so much for helping us. We must have help to completely reach our goal. Watch our reports with your prayers and checkbooks. If you stood at the call of 81 children for every nickle spent on all their entire living and maintenance, you would know what I mean.

How is the leg? Better; but I am getting plenty tired of steeping my toes in a warm solution, trying to stop their "weeping." I tell my friend, Bill Scott, that tears at both ends is entirely too much. So here I sit, fairly unhappy about being kept off my foot at such a busy time. I need your help and your prayers. One visitor, seeing my foot so brown from the solution, remarked about it. I told him I was only beginning to "rust out." Well, I am made happy by your helping us to reach our goal.

The children are doing all right. The matrons and other staff workers are putting in their best service, and here I sit. But God can go where I cannot, and I trust him simply to make many a trip for these children and the work we are all doing here. My prayer is that every church and person will be divinely blessed who remembers the orphanage now.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

is president of the Student Y this year) was of great value to me. I came here to study business, but I have decided to enter the Christian ministry because I believe I can better serve the Kingdom of God that way. I have had long discussions with our minister and believe that the principles of the Congregational Christian Church, with autonomy for the local church and freedom of conscience, are in accordance with my own beliefs. I would like to request that this church give me your support and backing in sponsoring me for the Christian ministry."

Thereupon, a motion was made and passed recommending that Gil Marsh be enrolled as a ministerial student by the Eastern North Carolina Conference.

trip, and now we have the opportunity of hearing them tell about it—and for getting "credit" for listening to them, for Africa is our "foreign" study this year.

If you want them to come to your society, write Dr. and Mrs. W. W. Sloan, Elon College, N. C. And remember, it is only the courteous thing to do to pay at least their travel expenses—although a little "honorarium" would not be amiss for these experts!

The reviewers of the home mission study book, as announced by Mrs. W. T. Scott, North Carolina women's president, are:

Mrs. Carl H. Dawson, Elon College, N. C.

Mrs. H. E. Robinson, 522 Parkview Drive, Burlington, N. C.

Mrs. F. C. Lester, 840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

They will each review These Rights We Hold, the home mission study book written by Dr. Fred Brownlee of our own denomination. It is interesting that in two successive years the home mission books were written by Congregational Christians. Of that we should be very proud!

Mrs. Scott would like to have someone from the Raleigh-Henderson area to review the home mission book. If you would be willing to do it, or if you know of someone you think would be good, please write to her at Elon College.

deep sense of his duty toward his fellowman. He believed that actions speak louder than words, and this was evidenced by his ready response to the many calls that came to him. Harold was a man of retiring nature, but with a heart as warm and tender as a breath of spring.

I do not think of him as dead,
Who walks with us no more;
Along the path of life I tread,
He has but gone before.
And still his silent ministry
Within my heart hath place,
As when on earth he walked with me
And met me face to face.
Within the maddening maze of things,
When tossed by storm and flood,
To one fixed thought my spirit clings—
I know that God is good.

THE J. A. SCOTT FAMILY.

One of my earliest remembrances of my father, Rev. J. A. Scott, was sitting on his knee and trying to learn verses of scripture. I learned many which I feel have always been a tower of strength to me. I think his favorite was, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." When I was a little older my mother said, "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." I feel that the members of this family have contributed much to the building of the spans of the bridge we have been speaking of today.

It singeth low in every heart,
We hear it each and all,
A song of those who answer not,
However we may call.
They throng the silence of the breast,
We see them as of yore,
The kind, the brave, the true, the sweet,
Who walk with us no more.

* * *

THE WINDOW WITH NO NAME.

I should like to mention the window that has no name on it—Mr. and Mrs. Warner Stearn. Let us tell them now how much it means to have such consecrated people living and working in our church. It is our prayer that their days may be long and rewarding in the Master's service. "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy and for thy truth's sake."—Psalms 115:1.

* * *

It is on my heart today to mention the names of a few lay workers. They are in the families we are honoring today, though their names do not appear on the windows.

The prayers of the righteous avail much, and I feel that generations to come will be blessed and the feet of many a wayfarer will be guided over this bridge to a more abundant life. These names are: Miss Fannie Simmers, Miss Sallie Payne and Mrs. Ora Scott Earman. "Who can find a virtuous woman? For her price is far above rubies."—Proverbs 31:10.

The Bible Most Powerful in the Home

UNIVERSAL BIBLE SUNDAY

DECEMBER 14, 1952

The strength of any nation is found in the home and family life of its people. From the Bible millions of homes of our nation have through the decades drawn courage, guidance and joy. Almost without exception, our greatest leaders have acknowledged the influence of a home devoted to the Bible and its teachings. In the training of children and youth, there is for it no substitute. Tolstoy well said: "I cannot think how the education of children would be possible if the Book of books did not exist."

The example set by one's mother is never forgotten. "The Bible in our home was not a book of record of births and marriages. It was in constant use. Mother not only asserted its value, but she convinced us of it by her own life and her use of it."

Such an influence is likewise true for godly fathers. "My father never left the house in the morning without stopping before the family Bible, opening its pages, removing his hat and standing reverently and reading a portion with which to start the day. Closing the Book, he replaced his hat and left the house, with that act indelibly impressed on the heart of the little girl who observed him."

Harnack's authoritative work on "Bible Reading in the Early Church" is replete with proof that home Bible reading and Christian virility have gone hand in hand from the earliest days. His premise is irrefutable that "the Reformation, by placing the Bible in the hands of every Christian layman, only returned to the simple confidence of the early church."

O, Come, Let Us Adore Him...

A Christmas Prayer

By MRS. J. EVERETTE NEESE

The folly of their greed for pomp and power on earth
At this Yuletide make men to see,
O God. This prayer I breathe to Thee:
    Instill within their sinful hearts
The message of that holy birth.

May peace on earth, good will to men
Be heralded over all the world, and then,
O God, make foolish hate and war to cease,
Make all men everywhere to long for peace.

Help me, hear God, to catch the gleam of His bright star,
And to Him, as men of old brought royal gifts afar,
May I remember a rugged Cross and give myself anew.

    May His own words be heard this day,
"My peace I leave with you."

News Flashes

THE SUN's staff wishes each of you a very happy Christmas. There will be no paper issued next week.

Superintendent W. T. Scott and President L. E. Smith were visitors for a few minutes at the office of publication this week.

Timothy Chang's address is Scioto Club, Stadium Dormitory, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio. He will be glad to hear from friends in the Southern Convention.

Rev. Henry E. Robinson, Secretary of the Convention's Executive Board, reports a constructive meeting held last week at Henderson.

On Sunday evening, December 1, at Second Church, Norfolk, Mrs. J. Everette Neese will present the dramatic reading, "Noel Nocturne."

Miss Sally A. Daniels, for the past ten years Promotion Manager of the Pilgrim Press, left December 1 to become Sales and Promotion Manager of Carroll Whittemore Associates, Boston, Mass.

A Bible Exhibit and Tea was held Sunday afternoon at our Durham Church, of which Dr. Stanley C. Harrell is minister. Old and unusual Bibles, together with articles of religious interest, were on display in observance of Universal Bible Sunday.

The Committee on the Ministry of the Eastern North Carolina Conference met Wednesday afternoon in the study of Rev. R. L. House at Southern Pines. Dr. Will B. O'Neill is chairman of the Committee. Rev. R. L. Jackson presented Mr. Gil Marsh to the Committee for consultation.

News has reached us of the death of Fred M. Dunaphant of Atlanta, Ga. Both Mr. and Mrs. Dunaphant were former students of Elon College. They and their family have long been associated with our Central Congregational Church of Atlanta. Mr. Dunaphant was in the construction business in Atlanta.

At Christmas

At this time of year, as at no other, "the soul feels its worth." Not one of us, however sophisticated in his religious thinking, but who feels a strange stirring in the breast at Christmas. It is as if the better angels in us echoed the age-old song, "Christ the Savior is born!" We think of Santayana's penetrating lines:

"It is not wisdom to be only wise,
And on the inward vision close eyes,
But it is wisdom to believe the heart."

True, there is much about that first Christmas we do not understand. Loving and devout minds have couched it in the poetry, the imagery of the Orient. But he is poor in mind, indeed, who cannot see behind the poetic line the grandeur of the historic fact: Jesus the Savior was born! "He saw with open eyes," said Emerson, "the mystery of the soul. One man was true to what is in you and me. He, as I think, is the only soul in history who has appreciated the worth of man." It is this that lifts the heart and restores great expectations at Christmastide; the soul feels in Christ its true worth.

To Hold Three Leadership Training Institutes

Miss Leila Anderson of the National Division of Christian Education of the Congregational Christian Church will be in North Carolina for three Leadership Training Institutes early in January.

These institutes will be for teachers of all age groups as well as for all interested in improving our Sunday schools.

The general theme of each institute will be: "Methods of Teaching the Bible." They are sponsored by the Conference Sunday School Conventions, Conference Committees on Religious Education, and the Southern Convention Board of Christian Education.

The meetings will be held in the evening, classes being at 7:30 and 9:30 o'clock. The first institute will be at Burlington, First Church, on Thursday, January 8; the second at the Sanford Congregational Christian Church on Friday, January 9, and the third at Wake Chapel, Fuquay Springs, N. C., on Saturday, January 10. Plan to attend the meeting nearest you.

For further information, write to Pattie Lee Coghill, Educational Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

Second Church of Norfolk On the Air

During the month of December the morning worship services at the Second Congregational Christian Church of Norfolk, Va., are being tape recorded by Station WRVC (FM) for broadcast at 3:30 each Sunday afternoon.

The WRVA Radio Dialog for the month of December has the following notation in it:

"The Second Congregational Christian Church, Norfolk, from which WRVC (FM) broadcasts at 3:30 p. m., the recorded Sunday morning services, has for more than half a century rendered effective service--first in the northwest area and now in its beautiful home of colonial architecture in the rapidly developing Ward's Corner vicinity.

"The Rev. J. Everette Neese, pastor of this congregation, was educated at Elon College and Andover Newton Theological School in Boston. Serving his fifth year in this pastorate, the Rev. Mr. Neese has demonstrated a leadership and devotion represented in the progress of this church. His friendly personality has won a host of friends. The music, heard with greatest fidelity on a frequency modulated station, is directed by Mildred Gibson, with Iva Moore McBride, organist."

News of Suffolk Christian Church

It is with interest that we have read the reports of the progress of the churches of the Southern Convention and we wish to add our voice to those reports.

During the past year the Sunday School of our church has shown a commendable gain. The work in the children, youth and adult divisions has not been limited to a Sunday morning discussion but expresses these in service to the community, to the church and to individuals. The programs of study, service and fellowship are good. We have set our goals for ourselves that will require effort and devotion to attain and that outreach is the most important single thing we do.

Last Friday, December 5th, the Woman's Fellowship had a very successful and satisfactory day in its annual Church Fair. Those who gave so unselfishly of their time and effort were very tired when the doors closed at 9:00 P. M. But they were a very satisfied group, too. The fellowship they shared was rich and effective and their tasks were well done.

Recently Dr. John G. Truitt assisted in the service of re-dedication of the sanctuary and the dedication of the Griggs Memorial. That memorial is composed of a beautiful stained glass window, 'Christ The Light Of The World,' designed and created by the Willet Stained Glass Company of Philadelphia; the addition of new paneling immediately beneath the window; the installation of new electrical fixtures and the complete re-decoration of the sanctuary. We are indeed happy with these physical changes and additions.

In every area of church endeavor much remains for us to accomplish but as we look back over the year's work there is a sense of satisfaction and our re-dedication coupled with a deep thanksgiving and great hope for the future.

D. N. VORE,
Pastor.

Newport News Church Holds Bible Festival

"A Festival of the Bible", which turned out to be one of the most interesting and exciting evenings our church has had, was held in the First (Continued on page 8.)

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

The Son and The Sun

This publication has exalted Christ for more than a century. It has sought to give more than lip and pen service to the Master; it has sought incessantly to build and to extend Christ's Kingdom, and it has endeavored to keep the streams of sustenance flowing freely for the institutions of the Church. That it has succeeded in no small measure is an occasion for gratitude and renewed effort.

Christmas is a time when we look back with reverence upon the infant Son of God. We review his teachings, sing of his birth, and reflect on his spirit. Then we endeavor to project his spirit and message throughout the coming days.

The Sun and the Son are laborers together with God. The Sun, the junior and imperfect member of this partnership, endeavors to be a contemporary mouthpiece for the beloved Son. Each successive issue is concerned with his person, his message and his mission.

We believe that it is no exaggeration to claim that The Sun has been and is an effective instrument in the hands of the Son. Multiplied witnesses have testified through its columns during the past century. Each issue during the coming year will reflect on his teachings, quote his followers, report his victories and plead for his world-wide mission.

Your faithful reporting of news, your promotion and renewal of subscriptions—yes, and your gift of additional subscriptions—will all help to carry the gospel story. Think of the beloved layman in our Chapel Hill Church who gave subscriptions to all members who did not receive their church paper! How could one find a better way to multiply the witness of the Son? We, therefore, earnestly solicit your prayers, your news, your subscriptions.

The Horizontal View of Life

The minister stepped into his regular pulpit the last Sunday in August and delivered the sermon. Naturally, he expected to preach the next Sunday, and the next, and the next. But not so! Illness intervened, and he preached again for the first time three months later.

It is so easy for the minister to preach with the bland confidence that there will be another opportunity next Sunday and the next. This feeling allows for a degree of complacency. Failing to make adequate preparation and do a good job one Sunday, one naturally assumes that one will make up for it all right next Sunday. Ah, if one could only be sure! Richard Baxter, we are told, once said that he "preached as a dying man to dying men, as never sure to preach again." "Poor Richard," we are tempted to say, "isn't that a bit morbid?" And yet his approach was more in line with reality than much of our conventional preaching.

And, to be sure, the pew as well as the pulpit may be guilty of taking sermons with the proverbial grain of salt. If one does not get to church today, what of it? There will be a sermon next Sunday; in fact, an endless succession. True, but the layman may not hear them. Each sermon may be the last. Frequently it is the last for someone. That realization should quicken the pulse of listening.

During eighteen days at the hospital, the minister had the new experience of studying life consecutively from the horizontal position. There for a season he joined the great fraternity of the helpless. There he thought of them—the babies, the afflicted, the maimed, the incurable, and resolved never to overlook or forget their presence and predicament. One never knows when he will join that great fratehnlity, or how long he will remain in its category.

A second truth gradually dawned upon the incumbent preacher; namely, the miracle and power of helplessness. This paradoxical truth was stated by St. Paul to the Corinthians: "When I am weak, then am I strong." Experience seemed to attest this truth. Letters of condolence came from protagonists and antagonists. When hands must relinquish a task temporarily or permanently, others come to the rescue. Even weakness may have compelling power. That is the message of the Cross.

And what is the message of Christmas? It begins with a helpless Babe in a manger. There is the miracle and power of innocence and helplessness. Hearts are touched, human needs are met, the underprivileged become the privileged, and the wayward and sinful are constrained by the love of God.

Still another factor became apparent: the great fraternity of helpers. The patient in the hospital is cared for by doctors, nurses, dieticians, orderlies, technicians, maids, cooks, electricians, pharmacists, benefactors, etc. Moreover, one thinks of parents who take care of their children, and children who care for their aged and ailing parents. It is sobering to think anew of all those to whom we are indebted. God has his ministering angels, and their name is legion.

The horizontal position is conducive to meditation and prayer. There comes a new awareness of God's grace, mercy and healing. Prayer becomes more deliberate, searching and submissive. Like Albert Edward Day, the patient finds time to study "The Autobiography of Prayer." Solitude whispers its own message of orientation.

Even sickness, it appears, has its sweet compensations: The balm of silence, the sealing and maturing of friendship, the emancipation that comes with the sacrifice of lesser desires, the deeper and fuller understanding of God's will.

Some years ago Ellery Sedgwick edited an anthology, Atlantic Harvest, which included an essay on "Twenty Minutes of Reality." The writer described her experience of being wheeled out to the hospital porch for the first time after an operation. It was, she wrote, an ordinary, cloudy March day, almost a dingy day. Then she goes on to say: "Here, in this everyday setting, and entirely unexpectedly, my eyes were opened, and for the first time in all my life I caught a glimpse of the ecstatic beauty of reality. I cannot say exactly what the mysterious change was, or whether it came suddenly or gradually. I saw no new thing, but I saw all the usual things in a miraculous new light—in what I believe is their true light. I saw for the first time how wildly beautiful, beyond any words of mine to describe, is the whole life. It was not that for a few keyed-up moments I imagined all existence to be beautiful, but that my inner vision was cleared to the truth so that I saw the actual loveliness which is always there; and I knew that every man, woman, bird and tree, every living thing before me, was extravagantly beautiful, and extravagantly important. Once out of all the gray days of my life I have looked into the heart of reality; I have witnessed the truth; I have seen life as it really is—ravishingly, ecstatically, madly beautiful, and filled to overflowing with a wild joy and a value unspeakable."

Every complication may have its compensation. The convalescent emerges with a new appreciation of the restored privilege of mobility. On one occasion a speaker arrived at this peroration: "Now in conclusion, there is one thing I would like to drive home, and that is a Cadillac!" The convalescent knows that whether he is permitted to drive a Cadillac or a Crosley, he is among God's privileged ones. There are so many who will never drive either again, who will never leave the hospital alive. And any experience which brings one to a heightened appreciation of the privilege of living, however grievous it may be for a season, must be reckoned as a precious asset.

CHRISTIANS AT CHRISTMAS

"For there is born to you this day in the City of David, a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord."

Journeying swiftly, silently, through the long hours of darkness, Three Magi of the East traveled twelve nights under the quiet stars, "And they came into the house and saw the young Child with Mary his mother, and they fell down and worshipped him; and opening their treasures they offered unto him gifts."

What shall we give this Christmas? Christians turn the world upside down to give gifts to one another. Yet, too much of our giving is really selfish. We give generously to those who we expect will give to us, and often sparingly or not at all to those unlikely to think of us. Thus we make a travesty of Christmas. . . .

On birthdays, it is customary to give to the loved one whose birthday it is, a gift. Christmas is the birthday of our Lord. We can only give to him as we give to others. Gifts to missions are gifts of love in the name of Christ the Lord, giving healing to the suffering, comfort to the sorrowing, courage to the heavily laden, and peace to the anxious. Loving even the unlovely for the sake of what they might become if only God's love could be shed upon their lives is ever the ministry of Christ's Church. Christmas will be even more joyous if we give gifts that are creative of joy to others, who, through our gifts, may discover the Christ Child as their Lord.

—Leonard M. Outerbridge.

ALL MY HEART THIS NIGHT REJOICES

All my heart this night rejoices,
As I hear, far and near,
Sweetest angel voices;
"Christ is born," their choirs are singing,
Till the air everywhere
Now with joy is ringing.

Hark! a voice from yonder manger,
Soft and sweet, doth entreat,
"Flee from woe and danger;
Brethren, come; from all doth grieve you
You are freed; all you need
I will surely give you."

Come, then, let us hasten yonder;
Here let us all, great and small
Kneel in awe and wonder.
Love Him who with love is yearning;
Hail the Star, that from afar
Bright with hope is burning.

Thee, dear Lord, with heed I'll cherish,
Live to Thee, and with Thee
Dying, shall not perish;
But shall dwell with Thee forever,
Far on high, in the joy
That can alter never.

--Paul Gerhardt, 1656.

St. Nicholas in a New World

By the Late S. PARKES CADMAN, D. D.

Many of life's finest souls are hidden from our eyes, or lost in the recesses of the past. Some individuals sheltered themselves behind their benevolent deeds. Others existed so remotely or obscurely that we know them only by the continuous beneficence flowing from their careers. Saints who taught the great to mingle with the lowly, the wise with the simple, the rich with the poor, seldom received the homage their fellowmen offered to poets, statesmen, kings. Their reign is an invisible dominion; they distribute God's gifts throughout the earth. To them we owe the defeat of tyranny and cruelty, the freshness and fragrance of peace and good will. Their hearts leapt like flames to greet the Christ. They shared the riches of his grace with the needy and the desolate.

Such a saint was Nicholas, the bishop of Myra, whose day of celebration dates from December 6, 326 A. D. His various names indicate the spaciousness of his influence. In Latin, Sanctus Nicholas; in Italian, San Nicolo, or Nicola di Bari; in German, Der Heilige Nicolaus, or Niklas; in Dutch, St. Nicholaas or Nielaes; in English, plain St. Nicholas; and here in America we have come to call him good old Santa Claus. He is the patron saint of children, especially schoolboys, of portionless maidens, of sailors, travelers and merchants. He is also the protector against losses by thieves and robbers or violence. He is the chief national hero of Russia, the patron of Bari, of Venice, of Freiburg and of numerous other cities and towns, particularly those located on the coast, seaports and places engaged in commerce. If knighthood had its St. George and chivalry its St. James, serfhood had its St. Nicholas. He is emphatically the leader of democracy, the joyous saint of the people, the bourgeois "holy one" invoked by the peaceable citizen, by the laborer who toils for his daily bread, by the merchant trading from shore to shore, by the mariner venturing on stormy sea. The captive, the prisoner, and the slave, in many lands beyond our own, unite with the orphan and widow in his praise.

Effigies of St. Nicholas, that benign ecclesiastic, with his embroidered robes glittering with gold and jewels, his mitre, crozier and three attendant youths, meet one at every turn in some of the countries mentioned. No saint in the calendar has so many young men many years before this. Marriageable maidens who cast coy glances at Patra's young patrician received no encouragement from him. After much reflection he entered the ministry, was ordained a priest. He gave his substance to the poor, his service to the people, his life to God. In furtherance of his piety he made a voyage to the Holy Land during which a violent storm arose. The ship's master implored his help, whereupon he prayed so effectively that the raging waves were stayed.

On returning from Palestine, St. Nicholas transferred his residence to Myra, where he pursued a retired life of humility and service. But the eyes of the devout were on him, and when the bishop of the city died they insisted that he should be elected to succeed him. Time would fail to tell of the wonders of his episcopate: he fed the hungry, saved Myra from famine, rescued the innocent from unjust penalties. Yet all these contributions could not defend him against the anger of reviving paganism. The politicians plotted; the populace gave vent to its passions, and men fought like beasts. Meanwhile, the bishop tended his flock and communed with the Good Shepherd. When a drunken reveller asked him in what he found contentment during such troubled days, he answered, "I have the supreme happiness." "What is that?" inquired a cynical bystander. "The happiness that comes of joyous giving," replied St. Nicholas; whereupon his critics protested that he was mad.

One does not have to reconstruct at length the details of his career. It should be clearly understood that no one of his high rank could be a holy bishop under Diocletian without exposing himself to the tyrant's vengeance. The besotted Romans supported the emperor's reprisals. Hence

CHRISTMAS MAGIC

By C. REXFORD RAYMOND

The myth of Santa Claus holds hidden truth.
For gifts which seem to come from far away,
To cheer the children in their winsome youth,
May foster faith upon some future day.
The fable of the Saint who brings them treasure
From Arctic snows to fill their Yule with glee, Foreshadows gifts of God beyond all measure
To bless their lives throughout eternity.

We carol Christmas songs with glad accord
And tell the tales of Magi and the Star,
For Christmas is the birthday of our Lord
Who lives with us and does not dwell afar.
Christ helps us keep our flag of hope unfurled;
And tells us: "I have overcome the world."

churches, chapels and altars dedicated to him. He is honored as the representative of humanism rather than nationalism, and as the directing personality of the Yuletide Feast.

It is useless to attempt the historical verification of his career. His cult is as famous as its origin is unrevealed. Many of the accounts given of him are mainly legendary. Yet beneath them is the usual core of truth. A bishop bearing his name and venerable for his piety and generosity was loved and esteemed in the Eastern Church during the sixth century. It is claimed that this bishop held the see of Myra during the reign of the Roman emperor, Diocletian; that he had been a wealthy

Christmas — 1952

The love of God always manifests itself in due season. Man's rebelliousness became so intense throughout the passing centuries, his sins against man and God became so great and so evident, that God threatened to destroy him completely and remove him from the face of the earth. In the midst of wrath, God's love for man and the world was manifested in the gift of his Son, our Lord.

Love is a moving force in human experience. Before it, barriers that separate men and nations give way. Darkness that obscures the pathway of wayward feet is scattered and the way made plain. Obstacles that would defeat the forces of righteousness are plucked up and cast away. Sins that would damn man's soul are, by the power of God's love, forgiven and cast away, and the sinner is given a clear title to priceless treasure that shall not pass away.

Each year at this season through the passing centuries, the Christian world has celebrated the birth of Christ. We sing the songs of nativity, hymns of adoration, anthems and oratories exalting his greatness and power. We offer our prayers of thanksgiving and praise. We preach our sermons telling of his mercy and exhorting men everywhere to repent of their sins, accept Him as their Saviour, and enthroned Him in their hearts as the Lord of their lives.

This Christmas season of 1952 shall not be different. Already Christian hearts are warm with a sense of devotion as they prepare their gifts that proclaim Him Lord and King. May our gifts be our best and expressive not only of our devotion but of our faith.

As we make room for material growth and prepare for an upsurge in business, may we make room for Him in our hearts and prepare for that overflow of devotion and love that God desires so much to give to us on this, the birthday of His Son. "Whosoever hath Him hath life, and that life is the light of the world."

Apportionment Giving

The years pass quickly. The longer we live the shorter the years seem to be. For our churches the years seem short. The time given in which the local church has to meet its obligations beyond its community seems to be short.

Our Sunday schools and churches have done very well by the College. Appreciation and thanks are hereby expressed. In fact, we have done so well that every congregation should make a special effort to see that we raise the total amount apportioned to the College one year at least. It won't take much if every church would contribute. We have only $1,000.82 to raise to assure the College of the full amount apportioned.

In view of the great needs of the College, won't your church and your church and your church take this matter to your people. I find that people are glad to contribute when they understand.

NEWPORT NEWS CHURCH BIBLE FESTIVAL.

Church of Newport News, Wednesday, December 3. As members arrived, they viewed a magnificent exhibit of Bibles and related Biblical material. A committee, headed by Mrs. L. L. Taylor, had gathered texts and materials from members of the church, the American Bible Society, and the Congregational Library. The result was a fascinating array.

Members brought in old family Bibles, some of them dating back over a hundred years. Along with these were such modern translations as Smith-Goodspeed, Moffatt, and the new Revised Standard Version. Various language texts put in an appearance: Greek, Spanish, French, Russian, Bullock (Africa) and Hebrew. Samples of more than a dozen other languages had also been furnished by the American Bible Society. One display showed authentic pages from the Wyclif, Tyndale, and Coverdale Bibles, and included copies of the gospels, secured from the Congregational Library, in the Gothic, Anglo-Saxon, "Wycliffe" and Tyndale versions. Texts of the Bible used by fraternal organizations, and New Testaments which had been the companion of men in the armed services, one of which had been picked up on the battlefield at Gettysburg, also were part of the exhibit. At the center of the display was the pulpit Bible of the church.

A highlight of the program was the contribution made by Rabbi Jesse J. Finkle of Rodef Sholom Temple of Newport News, who exhibited a number of Hebrew texts, including the scrolls of the Torah, from which he read. Rabbi Finkle's answers to the wide range of questions which were put to him in the informal period added to the appreciation of the Hebrew contributions to our living Bible.

One of the most enjoyable features of the program was the Bible quiz, in which teams of two contestants, answered (sometimes with the help of the audience) questions from such categories as Familiar Passages, Books of the Bible, Women of the Bible, Great Prophets, Sayings of Jesus, Disciples of Jesus, and Familiar Passages from Paul's Letters.

The showing of the color film strip, "The Bible Through the Centuries," which concluded the evening, gave us a panoramic view of how the Bible had traveled through the years, speaking God's Word to men in the midst of changing conditions. All of us went home with a deeper appreciation and more thankful hearts for this Book of our Life.

A Page from Our Carroll County Note Book

Letters and cards which we have received indicate that you want to know how we are doing—here in the hills. A more probing question would be, what are we doing?

After a little over a month, we have the feeling much like our son, Kenny, must have when he visits the toy displays in the stores. He runs from one thing to another, uncertain as to what is the most fascinating and attractive. There is so much we need to do! As yet, we are still running from one thing to another—hoping to get a long-term perspective as we talk over each day's experiences and discoveries. There is a terrible feeling that particularly at the Christmas season many things will be left undone which we ought to have done—for the simple reason that we do not know all of the needs of our two communities. We know that everything will not come overnight, and we trust that you will appreciate our inability to give you a summary report on progress at this time.

Perhaps there is one step in the right direction which will have lasting value. We have begun to organize. From what information I have, there has not been a constitution or official leadership for our churches in any formal fashion. Though it could result merely in formality, we believe that organizing of our churches can train good leaders and spread responsibility. Our church cabinets will plan the work of our churches, and greatly assist in the job that is ours. We trust that the leaders we develop will be a valuable contribution to our communities as well as to our churches. At present we are a mission which greatly needs your constant prayers, your generous support, and your frequent visits—but we hope, someday, to take our place among the churches of our fellowship and make a real contribution to some other missions.

Christmas planning is well under way in the churches, and we, like you, will have our holiday season marked by special church observance. Before Christmas we will have a hanging of the greens for all of the families of our churches. This will conclude a day of activity of ornament making and Christmas activities for the children. Of course, our play at Rocky Ford and our pageant at Elk Spur which will be combined with a visit from Santa will be the high point of our program. Even the planning with our young people and children has been a joyous sort of blessing—somehow, the nativity story seems most appropriate in this setting. We pray that your Christmas blessings will be as rich as those we are sharing here.

One word about our needs. If your church uses the Pilgrim Series materials, and has no use for them at the end of the quarter, would you save them for us? Lessons, including the teachers' materials, would be of great assistance. Your back numbers of Children's Religion would be treasured as much, at least, as much fine gold. Don't send them, just box them up and let us know you have them, and we will pick them up when we visit your church this spring. Or perhaps you will bring them with you when you come to visit when the laurel blooms again on the mountain.

It will soon be time to cut the Christmas tree we picked out over on the hill. We wish we could share it with you, for you've really made it possible for us to be here and to bring some light for Christ among our people here.

Merry Christmas!

WILLIAM AND ALIDA WOLFE.

Mrs. Thelin Narrowly Averts Disaster

A New England Congregational Christian missionary, Mrs. Guy A. Thelin, en route to the Philippine Islands was one of the 11 passengers on the Norwegian Motorship the Fernstream which sank in San Francisco Bay recently after being rammed by another boat. Mrs. Thelin who is the sister of Stewart L. Cushman, 134 Mt. Vernon Street, Winchester, Massachusetts, was on her way to join her husband at Midsayap, Mindanao, Philippine Islands, where both are serving under the American Board.

Mrs. Thelin, the former Betty Cushman, was born in Pawtucket, R. I., and educated at Oberlin College and Brown University. In 1925 she went out to teach in an American Board School for Girls in Foochow, China, and in 1931, she married a (Continued on page 13.)

Brightest and Best of the Sons

Brightest and best of the Sons of the Morning
Dawn on our darkness and lend us thine aid;
Star of the East, the horizon adorning,
Guide where our infant Redeemer is laid.

Cold on His cradle the dewdrops are shining,
Low lies His head with the beasts of the stall;
Angels adore Him in slumber reclining,
Maker, and Monarch and Saviour of all.

Say, shall we yield Him, in costly devotion,
Odors of Edom, and offerings divine,
Gems of the mountain, and pearls of the ocean,
Myrrh from the forest, or gold from the mine?

Vainly we offer each ample oblation,
Vainly with gifts would His favor secure;
Richer by far is the heart's adoration,
Dearer to God are the prayers of the poor.

Some Thoughts at Christmas

It has been our privilege to have in our home for a week Miss Karoline Nau, exchange teacher brought to this country by the State Department for the purpose of studying our school system.

Miss Nau is a charming person, but she is more than that—she is a Protestant Christian from another country and it has been a joy to share with her memories of her homeland at Christmas.

In Germany the Christmas season is a religious one, and apparently not commercialized as in our country. On each of the four Sundays before Christmas (Advent), there is a special ceremony of the lighting of the advent candles, with songs suitable for the occasion, in both home and church. Christmas trees are used in the churches, and her particular church has one on the top and the choir sings Christmas songs from the church tower.

Saint Nicholas comes on December 6, with "goodies" for the children who have behaved and a promise of carrying off in a sack those who have been bad!

On Christmas eve there is a church service, and again on Christmas day, and then on the day after Christmas! The tree at home is decorated by the parents and it is the highlight of the year when the children are allowed to see it and the presents which have come from the Christ Child.

How many of our churches can get their people to go to church for a service on Christmas eve—or Christmas day itself? Not many. We are too busy at home or visiting our friends to take "time out" to think of the Christ Child on His birthday.

Pattie Lee Coghill told a story at the recent Western North Carolina Pilgrim Fellowship meeting at Antioch (R) Church which illustrates our attitude. A child said to his parents: "I don't understand. At Christmas I get a lot of presents. And mother and daddy get a lot of presents. But I thought it was Jesus' birthday. Why doesn't he get any presents?"

Those of us who are mothers can have a lot to do with the attitude of our children toward the entire Christmas season. It can be one of "give" rather than "get." It can be one which includes worship as well as Santa Claus. It can be one in which the family is drawn close together, rather than a time when each goes his own way to "have fun." Let us strive this Christmas to have the word mean what it says.

A PRAYER AT CHRISTMAS TIME

Lord, in all the stir
When Christmas comes around,
The games and the greetings,
The songs and the meetings,
The toys and joys and shining trees,
The carols' sweet sound—

Father, in the midst of these,
Let us not forget
The fair Star of Christmas,
The Star that cannot set.
"Glory be to God in heaven,
On Christmas Day!"

—NANCY BYRD TURNER

Many Activities at Bay View

You have not had a report from the Bay View Congregational Christian Church since our retiring fellowship president sent her annual report. Many nice things are happening, so we want to tell you about them.

The new educational building is progressing nicely and will soon be ready for use. Erecting it has been a long, hard struggle, but, led by our efficient and enthusiastic pastor, Rev. Johnson Griffin, we have this much needed additional church facility.

We have received new members in our church and have added some new voices to our already extra good choir.

We also have a hard-working, "never say die" Fellowship Missionary Society. You may call them whatever name you will, but they're still the "Ladies' Aid," for that's their work. The good ladies aid every one in need, spiritually and physically, and all the projects of the church, and no church can efficiently function without them.

We have a teen-age Fellowship that could be better and will. Mrs. Kivette and Mrs. Penn have a Bible class of children. Can you imagine? They have an average of forty children, ages from four to fourteen, each Tuesday to study the Bible, and the class is increasing. God's Spirit is mighty in the world when we can report classes like that. Mrs. Kivette is an exceedingly talented woman in the art of teaching children.

All this and more, too, for we have, for our very own, a fine young ministerial student, Reuben Askin. He has filled our pulpit several times and he is really a very inspired young man that might be—who knows?—another Peter Marshall.

Altogether, we have the faith and love of the Master to believe that our feet are firmly set on the highway to Heaven.

Thank Offering at Hopewell

The Ladies Missionary Society of the Congregational Christian Church at Hopewell, Virginia, had their Thank Offering Service on Sunday evening, November 3. The service was conducted by the women of the church, the order of worship being as follows:

Call to Worship (Psalm 121—Mrs. Black.

Hymn—"This Is My Father's World."

Prayer Poem—Mrs. Lowe.

Hymn—"The Church's One Foundation."

Scripture—Mrs. Powell.

Meditation—Mrs. White.

Comments and Poem—Mrs. Sodomka.

Candle-light worship service in tithes and offerings.

Benediction.

The service was an inspiration to those of us who heard it. We received a Thank Offering of $15.00 for Carroll County Mission work.

Berea (Great Bridge)

The Ladies Auxiliary of Berea has enjoyed a prosperous year under the leadership of our president, Mrs. Edna Waterfield.

We have sponsored the cradle roll and youth fellowship of our church. The youth fellowship has been served refreshments by the ladies of the Auxiliary once a month.

The World Day of Prayer was observed by our members by meeting with ladies of five other churches of this area.

A Page for Our Children

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

A Happy Christmas to You!

As we celebrate the birthday of our King, let it be a time of happiness and fun, but also one of reverence and praise. The service for a family to hold on Christmas Eve, written by Mrs. Stevens, and appearing on the Woman's Page last week, is a good one to use. Or better still, plan your own. We know some families that are doing just that, and another family that is giving a playlet that they wrote, costumed and directed.

Singing seems such a big part of the Christmas celebration that we hope you sing, even if there is no instrument to play. Have you a kazoo? And let's not forget tonettes. Can you play one of those? Pick old favorites for real pleasure.

Listening to records may enhance your Christmas, too. For fun there will be "Jingle Bells," "Deck the Halls," "Rudolf," "Jolly Ole St. Nick," "Toy Symphony," "The Nutcracker Suite," "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," and "Here Comes Santa Claus." More seriously you may enjoy the "Carols and Hymns," little known carols sung by the famous Trapp Family, parts of "The Messiah," and such favorites as "Holy Night."

At Mrs. Edwards' School here in Southern Pines, there is always a rhythm band at the Christmas program and party. Oatmeal boxes, full size and cut down, make drums; little dinner bells, sleigh bells, 5 & 10 sew-on bells; two blocks of smooth wood for striking together; sawed-off broom handles with the little round roofing tabs nailed on, or substitute bottle caps; cans with lids glued on and filled with gravel or beans, and a real triangle, will make a lovely band—you will probably think of other possibilities.

Do you know the story of the little boy who dreamed there was no Christmas, no Christ Child, whose birthday we keep? In his dream there were no teachers, ministers, doctors, churches, schools, hospitals. He saw only wicked, selfish people and awoke sadly, but was soon happy when he found his dream was unreal. Let's keep it so. Merry Christmas!

"Christmas for All the World"

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Instead of following my usual custom of journeying to spend the holiday season at the home of my sister, it was necessary last year for me to stay in Barnard, where I work as a children's librarian. It had seemed that Christmas Day was likely to be quite lonely for me until one of the members of the Library Board, Sue Burnham, invited me to come to dinner at her home.

"Our Christmas is going to be special this year, Lucia," she told me, "and we want to share it with you."

Of course, I accepted my friend's invitation gratefully, but her words, "Christmas is going to be special," gave me a feeling of misgiving. I knew that Christmas at the Burnham home was always a happy time. The friends of both parents and children trooped in to be warmly welcomed and lavishly entertained. Sue seemed never able to do enough for her family and friends, but rather expected her generosity to be limited to her own small circle. This "special" celebration might take the form of more elaborate decorations than usual, or it might be the serving of some new and expensive delicacy. I should find it hard, I thought, to watch Sue's family being surfeited with good things while I knew that for many of the world's hungry children Christmas would be only another day on the calendar.

How mistaken I was! A few minutes in her home convinced me that, instead of stopping at the confines of her own circle, Sue was reaching out loving arms to all the world—but let me tell you about it.

Sue's high-school daughter, Joyce, met me at the door and led me into the living room, where other guests were already assembled. There were two teachers from the high-school faculty whose homes are in distant states, and a group of people I did not know—a tall man of slender build and refined, intelligent countenance, a gentle-faced woman with prematurely gray hair, a smiling little boy, and a tall, fair girl of Joyce's age.

Joyce presented her guests. "Miss Mallory, we want you to know our friends, Mr. and Mrs. Lukas, and Sophie and Jan. They are the family whom our young people's group welcomed to America."

As I greeted the visitors and listened to their halting replies, I did not need Joyce's explanation to tell me that I was meeting the displaced family whose coming had long been the goal of the young people of Joyce's church. I knew with what zeal the group had labored to make an old house habitable, how they had obtained work for the father, and how the older members of the church had joined with their sons and daughters to make the strangers welcome. I knew, too, how eager the family had been to repay their new friend's kindnesses, and how, with fine courage and self-reliance, they had already contributed much to the community they now called home.

Their gift to me that day was an appreciation of the privilege of celebrating Christmas. With Joyce at the piano, we had been singing Christmas carols. Suddenly I noticed how very sad were the faces of the older members of the Lukas family, and I heard Sue exclaim in a compassionate voice, "I'm sorry! It would be easier for you if we did not sing!"

Quickly the mother protested, "Oh, we are joy—you sing! Please sing."

Sophie, who had more knowledge of English, finished for her mother. "We are sad," she explained, "only that all cannot sing. In our homes over the sea people cannot say, 'Be glad—Christ is born!' People cannot sing on Christmas Day. Maybe in the night comes a knock—enter men—take the father—and—we—not see—"

The girl's voice broke before she could finish the sentence, but we needed no more words. I could understand then why Sue had given her guests a simple meal, why her decorations had been only fragrant evergreens, why she had entered our thoughts on the essence of Christmas—the commemoration of the birth of Christ.

"I wish," Sue said to all of us, "we could send Christmas to all the world! Let's try to bring that day of peace and good will among nations by keeping the spirit of Christmas always in our hearts."

Come, Lord Jesus, our guest to be during this Christmas season.

Know Your Officers—Bettie Burt Hight

Our vice-president of the Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship is Miss Bettie Burt Hight, of Louisburg and Raleigh. She has been active in youth work for several years, and is now president of the E. N. C. Pilgrim Fellowship. Bettie Burt is also a member of the United Church Choir in Raleigh.

In high school she was a member of the Beta and Four-H Clubs, a junior marshal, and an actress in the junior and senior class plays. She was voted "Best all-round" girl, and was elected vice-president of the senior class. Bettie Burt sang in the Glee Club for four years and also played basketball all of her high school career, being elected to the county team two of the four years.

Miss Hight attended Peace College in Raleigh for one year. While in college she sang in the Glee Club and was elected to the May Court. She is now working in Raleigh, where her address is: Miss Bettie Burt Hight, 905 West Cabarrus Street, Raleigh, N. C.

United Christian Council to Hold Study Conferences

More than 1,500 Christian students and staff workers of many denominations will spend the latter half of the Christmas holidays in concentrated study of the main issues confronting them as Christians in American colleges and universities, the United Student Christian Council has announced. Three study conferences will be held simultaneously from December 7 to January 3, at Leland Stanford University, in California, Park College in Missouri and Morgan State College in Maryland. The conferences are sponsored by the United Student Christian Council and are under the direction of Dr. Ruth Wick, Executive Secretary of the Council, and Mr. James L. McAllister, Associate Secretary.

One purpose of the conferences is to train students in the ways of effective group study. Student delegates will spend most of the conference hours in worship, individual reading, discussion in small groups and informal exchange of ideas in "bull sessions."

Another purpose of the conference is to confront students with three urgent problems of the day: the Christian student's particular role in the Church, the university and the world's political and social struggle. Study in these three areas will be based upon three books especially prepared for the conferences, and edited by Dr. J. Robert Nelson, Study Secretary of the Council. The Association Press has published the books for wider use among college students.

Study leaders at the three conferences include prominent persons in the field of Christian thought. Leaders at the Stanford University conference will be Prof. Arnold S. Nash, Prof. Alexander Miller, Dr. Glenn Olds, Prof. Theodore Bachmann and Rev. Rabb Minto. Leaders at the Park College conference include Prof. Eduard Heimann, Dr. Joseph Sittler, Prof. Allen O. Miller, Prof. Holmer and Dr. W. B. Easton. Those who will serve as leaders at the Morgan State College conference are Prof. B. W. Anderson, Dr. J. R. Nelson, Prof. William H. Poteat, Prof. James H. Robinson, Prof. Waldo Beach, Prof. George Forell and Rev. John Coburn.

The conferences will include delegates from many foreign countries. The meeting at Morgan State College will be the first major student conference to be held at a college for Negroes.—E. P. S.

Relax With Max

Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year! We hear these words so often that we sometimes forget what they mean. Well, I mean to say to each and everyone of you exactly what they say, "Merry" Christmas and "Happy" New Year.

* * *

We marvel as we read the Christmas Story about the shepherds seeing the great light and hearing the angels sing. I am listening to some of our best Christmas music as I write this. Isn't it wonderful that we, 2,000 years after this great event, can still hear the angels sing?

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

The Wise Men Seek Jesus

LESSON XIII—DECEMBER 28, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: Ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with your whole heart.—Jeremiah 29:13.

LESSON: Matthew 2:1-12.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Jeremiah 25:3-8.

When folks meet to consider this lesson it will be the Sunday after Christmas. But is it too much to hope that the glow and the glory of Christmas will still warm their hearts and quicken their spirits? Indeed every Christmas day should give fresh and sustained impulse to deeper consecration and larger service in the Name of Christ.

A Study in Contrasts.

The Christmas story as given by Matthew is a study in contrasts. Here for instance are the "Wise Men," scholarly, studious, observant men, characterized by an inquiring spirit, a humble mind, a reverent mood, and great faith. They had seen some portent in the Eastern skies that led them to believe that a new "King of the Jews" had been born and with eagerness and persistence they set out to find him. They were men of great ability, great faith, great humility, great resolution, great generosity. There is something majestic about them, not because of their wisdom, but because of their humility. They were great characters.

And there was Herod the king. He was a man of ability. But he was vain, jealous, suspicious, cunning, cruel, ruthless, cynical, unscrupulous. Like many another man in high place he knew little or nothing about the great moral and spiritual processes that were at work in his land and in his time. He did not even know where the Christ should be born. He did not know that He had been born. And when he learned that He had been born, he craftily planned to have Him put out of the way. The phrase "King of the Jews" struck fear into his heart and aroused his anger. He would brook no rival to his throne. Herod does not appear in a very good light in this story. He is what we moderns would call "a stinker."

Following the Gleam.

The "Wise Men" saw a strange star in the East. To them it signified some unusual event, particularly the birth of some unusual person. Perhaps they had learned from Jews of the Dispersion about the "One Who Should Come," the Messiah of the Jews. They would know more about it. They would make the long journey to Jerusalem to inquire about this new King of the Jews. It was natural that they should go to Jerusalem; that was the capital of the Jewish nation and a king would be in the capital. And to Jerusalem they came. They persisted in their spiritual pilgrimage. It should be noted that at the beginning they did not have much light or knowledge. But they followed the light they had, and used the knowledge they possessed. That is the important thing for us. A willingness to follow the light we have, to obey the truth we know, is the prerequisite for getting more light and knowledge. It should be noted, too, that there were times they did not have the kindly light of the guiding star: "And when they saw the star, they were exceeding glad." There were not always visible evidences and tokens on their pilgrimage. It was a venture of faith as well as by sight. But he who does the truth will come to the light. Jesus himself is the authority for that statement.

Bothered by a Baby.

"And when Herod the king heard it, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him." At heart Herod was a coward. He was always afraid that someone would challenge his right to rule, and might rise up and overthrow him. This Baby might be the One to do that. "He was troubled." There wasn't much danger from this mere Babe. But that Child grew up. And that Child, grown up, was a challenge to Herod and his kind. The forces of special privilege, of organized crime and vice, of corrupt politics, of selfish power, of tyranny, of evil are always troubled by the presence of Christ. He was the Disturber of men. And men are always trying to get Him out of the way. The men of Jesus' day tried to do it by crucifying Him. The men of our day try to do it in perhaps more refined ways. The Christmas Season troubles many folks. It brings them face to face with Christ. It challenges them with His ethical demands. They would like to have Christmas without Christ.

Journey's End.

"And they came into the house and saw the young child with Mary his mother." They lost the star for a while, but in due time it appeared to them again, and led them to the place where the Christ Child lay. Obedience is the organ of spiritual knowledge. God does not lead His children up dead end streets or blind alleys. Those who set out to find the Christ, and who persevere in their search will find Him. "Seek and ye shall find." He that doeth the truth cometh to the light.

Vision, Submission, Consecration.

These three words sum up all that needs be said about these Wise Men. They had a vision, and they were not disobedient to that vision. When they found Him whom they sought, they bowed in submission and in adoration before Him. Perhaps nowhere in the Scriptures is there a more dramatic or impressive scene than these three Wise Men bowing in reverence and adoration before this Baby. And when they expressed their reverence in giving. They presented unto Him gifts of gold and frankincense and myrrh.

The Premium on Humility.

The Christmas Story, both in Matthew and in Luke shows how God puts a premium on the humble mind and the meek spirit. There is a great contrast between the shepherds and the Wise Men, but there was a common characteristic — both groups were humble of mind and meek in spirit. And to them came the revelation of this greatest of all moral and spiritual events in history. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him. Babes often see what the "wise and prudent" never see.

A Sign Unto Us.

The Wise Men were Gentiles. They were symbols of that great host of Gentiles, which no man can number—and we are included in it—who have sought Christ and been found of Christ, and who serve and sacrifice in His Name and for His sake.

Citation for Roy Hosaflook

In the December 11 issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN the story of the dedication of memorial windows of the Congregational Christian Church at Linville, Va., was printed. Through error, the name of Mr. Roy Hosaflook was omitted. Brother Hosaflook was one of the most loyal members the Linville Church ever had. We print the citation to his memory, as follows, and this should be added to those appearing in last week's story:

ROY HOSAFLOOK.

Roy Hosaflook became a Christian in young manhood, and he spent his entire life, after uniting with the church, in very active service for his church. He was a deacon of the Linville Church, and for 28 years was the Sunday school superintendent. He also served faithfully as an officer of the Virginia Valley Conference.

He was a wonderful neighbor, and was loved by young and old alike for his ready wit and friendly manner. The church and community lost a friend in his passing to his heavenly reward. He not only knew the value of his own soul, but also the soul of his fellowman. "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord; and he delighteth in his way."—Psalm 37: 23. This was true of Roy Hosaflook. Quietly he lived and quietly he passed away, leaving a host of loved ones to mourn his passing.

The Christmas Fund Offering for Our Aged Ministers

In the December 11 issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN there appeared an article by Dr. Frank J. Scribner regarding the Christmas Fund for Veterans of the Cross. It is our hope that you read that article.

We have asked Dr. Scribner's office of the Division of Ministerial Relief of our Board of Home Missions, New York, to mail to each pastor or Sunday school superintendent, envelopes and descriptive material for promoting this offering at Christmas time. If you have not received this material, you will receive it shortly. If you do not receive envelopes in sufficient quantity, please address the Convention Office, Elon College, N. C., and additional ones will be sent promptly.

The work of our Board of Superannuation has been done through our national Board of Home Missions for some time now, and we are highly pleased with the generous consideration given our retired pastors, pastors' widows and dependents. As we have said previously, our own Southern Convention "Veterans of the Cross" are receiving more generously from our Board than we are giving to our Board.

The Christmas Fund constitutes a special gift sent to our retired ministers and ministers' widows at Christmas time, and for emergency needs. This is an opportunity to express our love and appreciation for faithful service rendered by these Veterans of the Cross. Contribute liberally to the Christmas Fund.

Since the Christmas Fund constitutes an extra gift to our pensioners and other ministers in need, it is a special fund and is not credited to our regular apportionment. However, your church will receive credit in The Annual for these gifts. Please send contributions to the Southern Convention Office, Elon College, N. C., clearly designated, "For the Christmas Fund. Please send your gifts promptly. It is hoped that each of our churches and Sunday Schools will receive this offering.

MISSIONS.

fellow missionary, Guy A. Thelin, an agriculturalist under the American Board in China. Both Mrs. Thelin and her husband have visited and spoken in the Southern Convention.

Mr. and Mrs. Thelin have two sons in the U. S. A., both born in China, Mark C. Thelin, a student at Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, and Robert Thelin, a student at South Dakota State College, State College Station, South Dakota.

Because the crash came before passengers were even dressed, Mrs. Thelin lost all of her personal belongings, including her clothing, visa and passport. Fortunately her larger freight was being sent on another boat. She is staying with friends, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Sturtevant, 509 Sonora Drive, San Mateo, California, until new arrangements can be made for her trip to the Philippines.

Mrs. Thelin was not only a teacher in China, but did a great deal of village reconstruction work with her husband. When the Communists took over control in China, Mrs. Thelin returned to the United States in 1950, but her husband remained another year and then was transferred to special agricultural service at the new Southern Christian College at Midway on the Island of Mindanao, Philippine Islands, where Mrs. Thelin will join him.

BEREA (GREAT BRIDGE).

We enjoyed sending Christmas cards and Christmas cheer baskets to our aged and shut-in members and friends. There were also clothes, food and cash sent to the needy for Christmas.

One of our most inspiring meetings of the year was our mission study book reviewed by Mrs. J. F. Morgan of Norfolk. We always look forward to hearing Mrs. Morgan's message any time we have the opportunity of hearing her.

We have enjoyed and appreciate very much our Bible study each month by our pastor, Rev. H. E. Crutchfield. We have received higher inspiration for our mission work after hearing the messages he brought us each month.

Our members have taken turns in furnishing flowers for the morning worship services each Sunday. We are glad to have this opportunity to help make our sanctuary more beautiful for these services.

One of our mission projects has been to contribute to the upkeep of a child in India for the past year.

We have given a memorial certificate in memory of our former pastor, the late Rev. J. F. Morgan.

Mrs. Edna Waterfield is retiring from office as president this year. She has been our leader for approximately twenty years. During this time she has been out of office for a period of one year at the time three different times, each time because of illness. We have enjoyed our work with her and appreciate every effort she has put forth as our leader. We have accomplished great things in working for the Master under her leadership.

We are looking forward to the privilege of doing great mission work for our Father and building of his kingdom under the leadership of our new president, Mrs. Bertha McClain, a very faithful worker.

Dear Friends:

This report brings us to $48,431.83. Thus we climb nearer the goal. Thank you, thank you. How much I appreciate your help, your gifts and your prayers to God for this family of 81 children, the staff of faithful workers and for me. Your contributions and your prayers are like the great guy-wires that hold the light-poles straight and strong during all sorts of weather. I wish I could thank each one in person who has helped to bring us to this place on the way to our goal.

How eagerly I open every letter now days, especially since I have been deprived of the privilege of going out to see people about our needs of this home. I am spending some time each day now in the office trying to help Miss Foster catch up with the work. Many people are writing for a little girl five years old to visit them during Christmas. I believe we could have placed 50 girls five years old in homes of friends for Christmas. We do not have enough children of any age to supply the demand for such Christmas visits. This is a good sign. It shows that more and more people are thinking of helping these homeless children. For all of it, I am deeply grateful. We shall do the best we can to see that everyone who wishes one of the children gets one just as far as it is practicable for all concerned.

Seven of our children are in the house with mumps, others are out again, and perhaps there are others to take it.

On Tuesday, December 9, a group of 31 children and two staff workers went to Chapel Hill, where they were served a turkey dinner and given Santa Claus at the Phi Gamma Delta House. Flyers from Pope's Field brought Santa with two or three gifts for each child on Wednesday, the 17th. Santa came in a helicopter, and it was great fun to see him come down out of the skies.

The Woodmen from Greensboro will "fling" a big Christmas party for all of us on the 18th. The Elon College students are working up their Christmas party for the 81 children, and it is always a high spot in the hearts of these children. Many of our churches, classes and friends have all or some of these children on their Christmas lists.

Thank you for all such kindnesses. When I was in the pastorate, I learned that food, fuel, fruit and friendship were the fast ways of furnishing Christmas to the needy. To do that here—extending Christmas across the year—send money.

And from each of us, Merry Christmas to all.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

ST. NICHOLAS IN A NEW WORLD.

arose the cry in every town and city: "The Christians to the lions!" The jails were crowded with them: the public concourses were lit up at night with their burning bodies. We who sit in quiet and safety awaiting Christmas as the Birthday of the King of kings cannot easily apprehend the terrible persecutions which Nero, Domitian and Diocletian inflicted on our spiritual ancestors. They died to make us free in a larger liberty than our political charters have bestowed. St. Nicholas is numbered among them. He became, as we have seen, Bishop of Myra, because his brethren recognized his superior merits. His fortune was placed at their disposal for the spread of the faith and the relief of the poor. Henceforth he trod a path beset by countless menaces. The majority of his countrymen would have been glad to hear of his death. When it overtook him, he was remote from all earthly cares. Ripened in soul by his privations and sufferings, he calmly awaited the call of his Master

Probably not all the youngsters who hang up their stockings on Christmas Eve and reluctantly march off to bed to dream of fairylands filled with prancing reindeer and the jingle of the sleighbells know that the well-fed Santa whose scarlet and befurred coat and baggy pants are in evidence during December is the modern representative of an ancient bishop of the Christian Church. His outlines are well nigh lost in the mists of antiquity, but Santa is very much alive and the spirit of that beloved bishop could have no finer embodiment.

Before the last change in his name, travelers invoked his protection and then started on their journey. When he hitches up for his annual trip he is encompassed by more invocations than the recording angel could gather up. If we could gather up into one great supplication all the faith and prayer and affection lavished on Santa's yearly trip, they might transform the world's hard and selfish living.

The mere mention of his name thrills one's heart. December is as pleasant as May when Santa is near. In his presence everlasting spring abides with never withering flowers. Let us have done with the useless chatter about forbidding him to visit us. . . . Then he will be doubly welcome, and the Christ he subserves shall see the travail of his soul and be satisfied.

UNIVERSAL WEEK of PRAYER.

topics are: Sunday, "In the Beginning God"; Monday, "The Symphony of Prayer"; Tuesday, "The Art of Meditation"; Wednesday, "The Inner Cost of Prayer"; Thursday, "Christ-Centered Prayer"; Friday, "Apostles of the Love of God"; Sunday, "Practicing the Presence of God"

A booklet, just from the press, written by Rev. Lynn J. Radcliffe of Cincinnati, Ohio, is recommended by the Joint Department of Evangelism of the National Council of Churches. It is attractively printed and presents many valuable suggestions on how to pray. It is priced 15c and may be obtained from the above organization at 97 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York.

A Christian Christmas

Councils of Churches and Ministerial Associations can do much toward Christian observance of Christmas. Christ needs to be brought into the center of the Christmas celebration. Urge the purchasing and sending of Christian Christmas cards; the singing of Christmas carols throughout the community; a community Christmas tree; store window Christmas scenes and such other things that will celebrate the Birthday of Christ appropriately. All Christians should do what they can to discourage office drinking parties which are so prevalent in many communities.

THE NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

ence enjoyed the new surroundings as compared to the rainy and muddy surroundings of five years ago when the Bethlehem people were constructing their new building. One cannot refrain from saying a word of thanks for such a lovely church building.

The Conference gave Conference Ordination to G. J. Rice, pastor of Monticello and Hines Chapel Churches. Herman Lee Johnson, pastor of Berea Church, was licensed to preach. Received into the Biblical Class were: Fred H. Wrenn and Curtis Young. The following ordained ministers were received into the membership of the Conference: W. T. Madren, the new pastor at Ingram, Pleasant Grove and Liberty; T. D. Sutton, the new pastor at Mt. Zion, Bethel and Concord; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. R. Wolfe, recently arrived ministers of Elk Spur and Rocky Ford. R. C. Mason, Jr., was recognized as pastor of our Mebane Church and a student at Duke University.

Dropped from the Conference roll were: P. H. Ricketts, Staley Sorrell, and James R. Hailey. Several others were transferred to other conferences.

A highlight of the Conference was the receiving of the new Lakeview Community Church in Burlington into the Conference. John G. Truitt, Jr., is pastor of this new and thriving church. The Conference now has 48 churches on its roll.

The problems of the local church were considered several times during the conference session. So many were the calls on the local church that it was felt necessary to hear the needs of each church.

Then the calls from the Mission Boards, the Church Building Society, the institutions of the Convention and other places were heard.

After hearing all of these problems and calls, the conference delegates communed together with their Lord and Master and went out to do His bidding. This was reminiscent of Jesus as He faced the terrible dark night of his betrayal and crucifixion, he communed with his disciples. Then He was ready for the events of that fateful night.

W. J. ANDES,
Conference Secretary.

Christmas a Holy Day

By I. W. JOHNSON, D. D.

Christmas is a great holiday. It should be a great religious festival. Childhood welcomes the day; middle life should honor its significance and respect its history. It commemorates the birth of a Child. On that day the Lord Jesus Christ should be crowned King of kings and Lord of all the earth. Christmas Carols and great Anthems of Praise are a sacrilege when offered in the name of an ordinary child of human parents. The Child Jesus is either an idol or the Lord. In the lowly manger, he was as Divine as when he hung upon the Cross. Lifted from the bed of straw, he was the Son of God as truly as when he arose from the dead. He did not BECOME the Son of God by a process of growth, education and development, he WAS—and he IS—the Son of God by birth.

Christmas should not humanize Jesus; it should magnify his Divinity. Jesus was more than the son of a Jewess, he was the Son of Man. He was more than a son of God; he was the Son of God, the only Begotten of the Father. God was watching that stable while that mother was in travail, comforted by Joseph, her devoted husband.

The angelic choir was waiting for that first cry of this Holy Child. Suddenly the Judean hills echoed a new song. Such a song had not been heard on earth by human ears. Sweet harmony, beautiful words, significant message. The world was tired of war-cry, glittering swords, sharpened spears and flying javelins. It is weary of war today. Then humanity wanted peace. Today people desire rest from conflict. In the stillness of that historic night the message came: "Fear not: for, behold, I bring unto you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the City of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." And then this heavenly "Call to Worship" was followed by a "multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

Is that story the poetic creation of ignorant minds under the spell of mystic, religious enthusiasm? Bethlehem was a city located in a part of Palestine well known, even in this far distant day. The land was real, the city was real, the shepherds were real, the Child was real, the words were real. We have everything, in that event, except a picture of the angels and a record of the tune to which these words were sung. Nothing could be more convincing that this story is based upon fact, and not upon fancy. The record is satisfying to clear minds and believing hearts. Jesus was born. The angels did sing. The shepherds and the wise men saw him. They worshipped him. Parents and children, old age and youth, should unite in songs of praise and exchange of gifts, if they believe in him, and should open their hearts to let him reign as Lord and Master of all life.

Do not rob children of the joy of Santa Claus, when such a spirit opens their hearts to appreciate the gift of God, when Jesus came as a little Child. Santa Claus, when properly understood, is the personification of good cheer, liberal giving and happy living. Jesus can make children happy. He wants them to sing and play. He wants them to love him, more than they love Santa Claus and the gifts they receive at Christmas. Put more of Christ in our Christmas cheer and festivity. Keep out the bad and bring in the good. It is not a time for revelry, but rejoicing and praise. It is a Holy Day.
