ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CIV

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JANUARY 3, 1952

NUMBER 1

Maker of New Years

*God of the years that lie behind us,
Lord of the years that stretch before,
Weaver of all the ties that bind us,
Keeper and King of the Open Doors:*

*Grant us hope, and a courage glowing White and pure as the stars above;
Grant us faith in a full stream flowing Down from the heights of Thy changeless love.*

*Out of the ruins of doubt and sorrow,
Out of the ashes of pain and tears,
Help us to fashion a new tomorrow,
Free from the anguish of blighting fears.*

*Build with us, lest our great walls crumble,
Broken stone upon useless clay;
Walk with us, lest our slow feet stumble,
Grope, and falter, and lose the way.*

*All through the seasons of sowing and reaping,
All through the harvest of song and tears,
Hold us close in Thy tender keeping,
O Maker of all New Years!*

ON ENTERING THE NEW YEAR.

With what spirit do you come to a new year? That is an easy question to ask but rather hard to answer.

Most of us will bring the same old heart, the same old thought, the same old practice, the same old life. We can't expect much more in a new year if that is the case. God offers you an opportunity to take the next 366 days and make them different. In the last year we have had some sorrow, some triumph, some failure and a lot of frustration. Why? Because we are dependent too much on ourselves. The new year holds the promise of being different if we will share a partnership with God. Let him be the guide, let him be the strength, let his be the purpose and the new year will be different.

—Duane N. Vore.

TIMOTHY KEPT UP!

When Timothy Chang entered N. C. State College this fall to major in poultry, his professor raised the question whether Timothy could "keep up" with the class, being a divinity student. Timothy thought he could. Did he? Here are his grades.

Poultry Judging, A; Genetics, A; Poultry Anatomy and Physiology, A; Poultry Seminar, A; Paints lost by unexcused absences.

IMPORTANT NOTICE!

At the request of Supt. W. T. Scott, we are printing in this issue of THE SUN the "Ministerial Directory" as it will appear, subject to correction, in this year's Annual. We suggest that you tear out pages 13 and 14 of this issue and file them for reference. We also request all ministers to check the list for their own names and to send any changes that should be made to Superintendent Scott immediately.

Program Chairman—Wayne Russom.

NEW DEPARTMENT CREATED.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Home Missions at its meeting December 5, created the Department of Church Finance Advisory Service of the Division of Church Extension and Evangelism giving departmental status to the work of Mr. Curtis R. Schumacher. Mr. Schumacher in the nearly four years that he has been with the Board of Home Missions has assisted 62 churches in financial campaigns, being instrumental in the raising of more than two and a half million dollars. In addition to this, he has acted as a consultant to a large number of additional churches that have raised, it is estimated, close to another half million dollars. Mr. Schumacher's work has assumed vital importance among us, and is being observed by other denominations with a view to introducing similar functions within their organizations. Mr. Schumacher will continue to assist churches in their building campaigns, in addition to which he stands ready to consult with conferences, associations and city unions with reference to financial problems involving fund raising projects.

CHRISTMAS IN RETROSPECT

Did you have a satisfactory Christmas? Was it well-balanced with respect to its material and spiritual aspects? Did you get your best score on your home or church observance? Was it characterized by benevolence or malevolence in your community? What factors were overlooked or inadequately provided for? In what ways do you contemplate improving next year's celebration?

Christmas becomes stereotyped for many people. They do the same things, have the same decoration scheme, go the same places and see the same people. While there is something to be said for such a pattern, it loses some of the freshness and variety which should characterize this grand festival. Some churches have a Christmas pageant every year, while others have a cantata. Why not have both one year?

Some churches lack variety in their choral repertoire. Now is the time to anticipate the needs of next Christmas. Some of the necessary properties could very properly become the project of an individual or group. The church budget for the new year should carry an allowance for new anthems and cantatas. Only by planning in detail a full-scale observance, including cantata, pageant, properties, costumes and decorations, can the varied talent of the constituency be developed and utilized.

Anne Wertsner says: "Christmas comes but once a year, but its enjoyment need not be limited to a few crowded days in December. Anything so nice as Christmas deserves to be anticipated a long time in advance and remembered a long time afterwards. A good time to look forward to Christmas is when you have just finished enjoying one. Then you may be full of ideas for next year."

So this seems to be the most appropriate time to wish for you a sublime Christmas in 1952!

LIFE CAN BE WONDERFUL

Someone prayed: "Lord, forgive us our Christmases as we forgive those who Christmas against us."

Christmas may be a violation rather than a celebration of the advent of Christ. Those who look back at Christmas through sobered eyes may be standing in the need of prayer.

We are prone to forget it, so Christmas reminded us all that life can be wonderful. Those who live in the mutual society of the Golden Rule learn that life can be sustained on a high plane of living.

Who has not been refreshed, gained a new perspective and achieved a loftier philosophy of life through the Christmas experience? Redemptive influences are released. The amelioration of unhappy circumstances is made possible by the widespread exercise of charity. Truly it is a blessed season. All of us have multiplied cause to exclaim "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift."

The well-wishes of our friends, both vocal and written, give a strong lift. This is especially true of the non-canned variety of Christmas greetings. For instance, Walter Graham sends this refreshing message: "All of us join in sending warmest greetings to you and hoping that 1952 will be one of the best years you have ever known. There is reason for pessimism because of world conditions, but if we can take a backward look through history, particularly through the Old Testament, then, have a living, working and growing faith in a God of love, we should be optimistic and face the future with confidence."

A BANNER YEAR

We are in the heart of our Mid-Century Advance for Christ. By avoiding the mistakes of the past and utilizing fully the resources of the present, nineteen fifty-two may be a banner year in the history of Christendom. It should be. It must be.

By exercising a more intelligent discipleship and a more sacrificial stewardship, this should be a banner year in countless churches. This is the year to achieve new and improved patterns of churchmanship. Quantitative and qualitative gains should be registered.

The meeting of The Southern Convention and the General Council should be provocative and open new vistas of service. New churches will be built and members received. God and the individual make a strong partnership for the new year.

"Count your blessings," suggests the old hymn, "and it will surprise you what the Lord hath done." And one might add: "Give Him a chance and it will surprise you what God can do."

Will you do it?

The Riggs Write From India

Manamadura, Mission Compound, Ramnad District
December 6, 1951

Dear Southern Convention Friends:

Louis seems to be the one that does things that makes material to write home about. This time he has gotten himself infected eyes. He has been running around, in a miserable sort of way, with great gobs of pus blinding him. It makes his temper terrible and the first few days he usually ended up in bed in the middle of the morning. The infection is carried by a tiny fly called the "eye fly." It's about the size of a sand fly, and our compound here is noted for having more than the usual number around. These flies will fly in-between the lashes and light right on the eye ball. They are like the house fly and like both food and dirt. Their favorite occupation though is to fly from one "pussey" eye to another. We are using insect repellent and castor oil on the eye to drive them away. Louis has surely had a siege with the infection for about a week. The whites of his eyes have been a fire-like red and part of the time swollen shut. This morning he woke up with one eye sealed shut but when we finally got the drainage cleared away the eye looked almost normal. He has been playing normally most of the morning.

Louis' birthday came and went very quietly. We didn't try to celebrate it much for I don't have much pep to spend a lot of money when so many around us are so desperate. We took the money we would have spent for Louis and bought saris for the girls that work for us. We put little gift cards on them and let Louis present them. In the afternoon we took Louis to the bread train which was a real thrill for him for he loves trains. Seventy-five per cent of his time is spent in dragging around a toy train that Dorothy Jackson sent him, making toot tooting around, or dashing out into the yard to see the train pass that goes by not too far from the compound. That evening we served his cocoa cake with two blue candles on pink animal holders. When he saw the cake he let out a big "oh-oh." We let him blow out the candles several times and showed him how to cut it, (the cake). All in all I don't think it was too bad a birthday for him and it did make some others happy.

Thanksgiving we were all prepared to go to Madura and have dinner with some fifty other foreigners when Louis came down with his eye infection. It didn't seem wise to travel with him especially since he would infect the rest of the mission children, so we stayed home. I bought a chicken on market day and we had chicken enough for three days. We gave Louis a bone which he didn't like! nor did he like the meat either. We had our Thanksgiving a week later than you did. The day after Thanksgiving we got letters from home telling how you had spent the day.

Then this last Sunday morning we went to Gandhi Cram. (That is why this letter is late). We stayed with the Keithahns for it is some seventy miles from here and with two children one needs to stay over night. Ed has described it to you before so I won't try to tell you much about the place. The girls they have there are all either widows, or former prostitutes, or girls who have become pregnant while single, or orphan girls. They are given an all around education so that they can teach, or give home nursing, or midwifery, or farming, or anything a village may require, with special emphasis on village improvement. They are highly respected girls when they leave the place. They live cooperatively doing all their own work. The day we visited we found the largest group sifting rice in a huge hall. I had Joy in arms and one of the girls reached for her timidly. She looked like such a jolly clean girl I handed Joy to her. Quick as a flash she scooted across the room but before she reached the corner another girl had her. Joy bounced from one pair of arms to another until almost every girl in the room had given her a small hug. She looked from one new face to the next and never let out a peep. I thought she would start howling but she only looked startled and a bit excited. They were surely the healthiest, bounciest bunch of girls I had seen in a long time. They got a big thrill out of seeing a white baby. Even though I had intended just one girl to hold the baby it was kind of fun to see these girls break away from their natural reserve. We toured their farm, weaving mills, clinics, orphanage school, kitchens, new sewage disposal pits, and dairy, all run by the girls themselves and a few men. We lived in the Keithahn home which they build themselves and run without servants. The Keithahns are unusually radical people, who have been kicked out of India twice by the British for their leadership in trying to better the lot of the Indians in social reforms, but people who live what they believe.

I had better quit rambling and let Ed add the "meat" to this letter.

FRAN.

Dear Friends:

"If "meat" means being ponderous, I am not sure that I even have any of that this time.

On returning home yesterday we found a telegram announcing the death of Mrs. Lorbser, one of the mission group in Madura. We do not know the details yet, but had not been expecting this, although she has been seriously ill for several months and was one of these I was concerned about while I was looking after the missionaries' health last spring. She is the second member of the older group in Madura to die since we have been in India.

This past month was featured by the coming of the monsoon—for the first time in five years. Over South-east India in general it was late in starting and generally described as "weak," with only a few days of rain. But our own section around here has been very fortunate. Much cool cloudy weather, with several days of steady rain at various times and a few heavy downpours, have certainly made the farmers happy. The rice yield will be twice as much as normal, they say. Our river has been full all month, and dozens of irrigation ditches have been drawing off the water to fill hundreds of reservoirs all over the countryside. It has been cold and clear and windy the past few days but the monsoon rains may not yet have ended; at least that is the hope held out in those areas where the rainfall has not been enough to make up for the dryness of the last four years.

The rainy weather and various other things kept me from accomplishing very much last month. I spent nearly a week finishing the examinations at the high school in Srivilliputtur which I started in October. I got a closer look at the boys who had been selected as being most under par, and was able to get a better idea of the insidious effects of malnutri-

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

THE COLLEGE PERIOD.

The Convention has designated January and February as the college period—not necessarily a period in which funds should be sought with which to supplement funds realized from endowment, student tuition and fees, and from other sources for current needs, but a period in which the pastors of our churches, superintendents of our Sunday schools, and teachers in our Sunday schools should inform our church congregations about the college, its contributions to our church and what Elon College has meant to our denomination as a whole. This should be a period of information and propaganda for our college.

There are so many special days and so many causes to promote that at times our pastors feel that they just can't add one other thing when that one other thing would take from the real message of the church. But what could be more vital or more necessary for the effective on-going of any church than a consecrated and efficiently trained leadership. This is exactly what Elon College was founded to do and precisely what it is endeavoring to do today.

A reference to our college and its needs in your Sunday morning sermon will add to its effectiveness instead of taking from it. Last Sunday morning, December 23, Mrs. Smith and I stoped in at the Baptist church in Atlantic, North Carolina, for worship. The pastor, right in the middle of his sermon with effectiveness, referred to Wake Forest College commencement programs and the awarding of degrees. This did not detract from his message but added to its force and gave his audience a new appreciation of their college. This is the period in which our pastors and Sunday school officials are expected and requested to bring our college, its contributions to our church, and its needs, to the attention of our church people with the expectation that they shall do something about the needs of their college.

Here are some things concerning our college that you may say to your people:

1. Elon College is our college. We built it. We have supported it, and we should continue to support it. If it is not as good a college as we should like for our children to attend, whose fault is it? What have you done to make it a better college?

2. The Convention has asked the churches and Sunday schools of our Convention to contribute a total of $15,000 through conference apportionments for the support of our college. 1951 has just come to a close. We raised only $12,923.30 which is $2,076.70 short of our Convention's askings. No one is proud of this fact. Our church's share was $———. We raised it last year, but we are going to raise more this year. We are beginning now, today, to make sure that we do our share in the support of our college.

3. Elon College has trained 60 per cent of our active pastors in The Southern Convention and a great many of our Convention, conference and local church officials. We cannot get along without the college. We must give it our support.

4. Elon College needs our sons and daughters who are ready for college so that they shall not lose contact with their church while they are in college. During their college days their church is administering to them through its college, and they are continuing their contributions to their church through their college. In this way we add to the solidarity of our church and increase its force and effectiveness in the world.

Brother pastor, brother superintendent, and Sunday school teachers, Elon College, our college, needs your help now.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Now that 1951 has passed into history, we begin a new college year.

It is not only disappointing but distressing that our churches and Sunday schools have not only failed to raise their conference apportionments but have failed to raise as much as they did in 1950. I say "distressing" because this means that we have $1,195.58 less for the college from the churches, and this in the face of increased needs at the college. I am sure that if our churches, pastors, knew the real situation at their college, they would certainly do something about it. The ones of us who administer the affairs of the college can only be careful, saving, and downright stingy. We cannot make money or force people to contribute. This is a voluntary act. The college was voluntarily founded by the church, and its support by the church must be voluntary. It is the prayer of all who are interested that sufficient funds may be forthcoming to enable the college to continue its program of service to the church and to civilization without serious interruption.

A great many of our churches have raised their entire apportionments. The college wishes to express its appreciation to these churches and to everyone who has contributed anything to the support of the college during 1951. We pray that 1952 may be more profitable to us all.

PROTESTANTS ASKED FOR 10 PER CENT OF INCOME.

Most American and Canadian Protestants will be asked to give at least 10 per cent of their income to their church in 1952, the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U. S. A. said recently.

Leaders of 31 churches representing a reported 31,000,000 members in the U. S. and Canada attended the opening of the two-day annual conference of the council's Department of Stewardship and Benevolence to map the council's educational program for 1952.

"We can see that the emphasis on Christian tithing is rapidly developing as a main theme in the churches of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U. S. A.," said the Rev. T. K. Thompson of New York, executive director of the Stewardship Department.

Tithing is payment of one tenth of a person's income, a custom established thousands of years ago.

Thompson said "Millions of Americans are coming to realize that giving generously to the church is a part of a Christian's response to God's call on life."

HOW TO PLAN A YOUTH SUNDAY SERVICE.

Pilgrim Fellowship Sunday is to be observed this year on January 27, almost here, it isn't too early to begin planning for it. Here's a chance for every Pilgrim Fellowship group to share its ideas with the adults of the church. It is also an opportunity for us to show our elders that Pilgrim Fellowshipers are interested in subjects more important than cokes, dates, movies, and parties. Pilgrim Fellowship Sunday is an excellent time for us to say "We are young people who are striving to live according to the ideals of Christ." Besides these advantages it affords us an opportunity to gain some constructive experience in developing, planning and leading a worship service.

One should begin by discussing the idea with the members of your group at a weekly meeting. Then appoint a committee to visit your minister to talk about your ideas and to decide upon some definite plans for the service. Report the results of this meeting to your group on the following Sunday night. The next step is to choose a worship planning committee to work out the order of service with your youth advisor or minister. You may want to develop the service around the topic, "Pilgrim Fellowshipers strive to live according to the Christian ideals." This may be effectively divisions of our new statement of purpose. If each topic of the statement is discussed and illustrated. With many pertinent and accurate illustrations, the congregation will be given an inspiring and vivid picture of Pilgrim Fellowship work throughout the nation and world. You may prefer to assign the sermon time to one young person who is desirous and capable of tackling the job. He or she may want to talk on the purpose of Pilgrim Fellowship or on some other aspect of youth work in your own church or community. Your main purpose should be to give your parents and friends a picture of young people who are concerned and dedicated to building a better world.

Besides having young people give the sermon you should also include in your planning opportunities for young people to read the scriptures, responsive reading; to lead prayers, to sing a morning solo, to play the organ or piano, and to usher at the beginning of the service and at the offertory.

Don't stop with a Sunday morning service. Hold a youth Sunday open house. Not many years ago a Chicago Pilgrim Fellowship group held an extremely successful one for their parents and members of the community. They began at 6:00 p. m. with a sacrificial dinner. The proceeds went to our Christian World Missions. A worship service followed the meal. After that, the president of the group gave a short talk of welcome and told the parents and friends about the group and their work along with a preview of what was to come for the rest of the year. When this was over recreation was conducted for all. At the end of the meeting, parents, friends and young people went home with a better understanding of each other and a stronger appreciation of each other's work in the church.

These are just a few beginning ideas which you may use as a springboard. The most important task is to begin making your plans now and to do a good job of organizing the entire service. Make sure you have at least two practice sessions during the week before the actual service is conducted. Your slogan should be "Plan and practice with more careful planning practice."

Lastly, give your service good and complete publicity. Begin two or three weeks ahead of time. Write an article for your church newspaper and greeting. Submit an article to your local newspaper. Talk about it at church, at school, and at home. Don't be afraid to share your ideas and experiences with the older people of your church. Work hard and sincerely and you will have creative and constructive success.

Theme: United! Committed! in Christ!

Goodwill is the one and only asset that competition cannot undersell.

"THE CHURCH BELLS."

The Amelia young people presented the play, "The Church Bells," at Fuller's Chapel at a meeting sponsored by the young people on a recent Sunday. Members of the Youth Fellowship at Henderson and Liberty Vance were present and participated in the program. The offering was turned over to the Amelia young people for their new Sunday school rooms. It was an enjoyable occasion for all.

RELAX WITH MAX.

The year 1951 is past and gone; not one second can we get back with all the money in the world, not with influence, or mink coats. Let's not make the same mistake in 1952. Let's not waste time; it's the stug life is made of. Jesus came into the world 1951 years ago so that we might have the abundant life.

It makes a difference to all eternity whether we do right or wrong today.

With Emphasis on Missions

WHERE DOES OUR MONEY GO?

At this time of the year when families often "check up" on their receiving and giving, their income and outgo, the above is a familiar question. It is important to ask it, to see if we are giving a fair share to God's Kingdom. It is never too late to give more, if we find we have not been giving enough.

However, in connection with the women's work of our church, there is a very simple answer to the question: It goes to the conference treasurer, who will send it to whatever agencies you have designated it for—or, in case you have not designated it, it will be divided equally between home and foreign missions before it reaches its final destination.

Not long ago one society sent me their Thank Offering. Miss Coghill writes that several societies have sent her their Thank Offering gifts. Please remember that all local society money goes to your conference treasurer:

Eastern Virginia—Mrs. George Cornell, Route 2, Suffolk.

North Carolina—Miss Susie Allen, 612 W. Lane St., Raleigh.

Valley—Mrs. H. F. Nelson.

And, as Mrs. Williams reminded us in her Christmas letter, please do not keep "idle dollars" simply lying in the bank—or in an old sock at your treasurer's house!—when the needs of the world are so terrific.

EASTERN VIRGINIA INVITATION.

Societies in Eastern Virginia are invited to come to Franklin, Virginia, on Friday, February 8, at eight o'clock in the evening, to hear Mrs. F. C. Lester review our foreign mission study book, "We Americans: North and South."

Mrs. Lester presented the foreign mission study at the School of Missions last summer, but many of our women were not there to hear her. We will be glad to welcome any who can come to the Franklin Church on the above date.

A LETTER TO AFRICA.

As a New Year's Resolution, why not send a letter from you, or from your society to Miss Corrine Nordquest, 505 Montreal Mansions, Smit St., Hillbrow, JHB, South Africa?

You will remember that it is for her expense account we are giving the remainder of the Thank Offering originally given for the Han Mei School. Recently there was a fine letter from Miss Nordquest printed on this page, telling about her work and her ap-

WANT TO BE A SAINT?

Several people have requested the publication of the "motto" which Mrs. Henry Robinson used at the North Carolina Woman's Conference. It gives us an appropriate idea for the New Year.

"Why were the saints, saints?"

"Because they were cheerful when it was difficult to be cheerful, patient when it was difficult to be patient; and because they pushed on when they wanted to stand still, and kept silent when they wanted to talk, and were agreeable when they wanted to be disagreeable. That was all.

"It was quite simple and always will be."

* * *

How fine it would be if each of us could take the above for our one New Year's Resolution! It would make many others unnecessary. Think on it as you begin a new year's work in your church.

preciation of the gift. She asked for letters from us—and for our prayers. I failed to include her address, I believe.

HELP YOUR CRADLE ROLL.

A letter has recently gone from Mrs. Carl Wallace, convention cradle roll superintendent, to all societies. However, in case it failed to reach the person interested in cradle roll work in your society, here are some of the ideas from it:

"In the Southern Convention Missionary Cradle Roll, the ages extend from birth to school age. . . . If you have worked your Missionary Cradle Roll with your Sunday School Cradle Roll, with help and cooperation from both Missionary Cradle Roll Superintendent and the Sunday School Superintendent, that is fine. If you have not, we suggest that this plan might be easier than having the two work as two separate units.

"The aim of the missionary cradle roll is to enroll children of the church and community, and plant in the minds of both children and parents the first seeds of missions.

"Visit the new baby or prospective member; explain the nature of the department, and let the mother feel that you are interested in her child and family. Send a card or Present the baby a certificate either at the time of enrollment or at a cradle roll party. Keep birthdays and addresses so children may be remembered with birthday cards. Give mite boxes to each new member so the children can drop their coins in daily and feel that they are doing their bit for missions. Plan a cradle roll party and program for the month of June or a time that is most convenient. Plan a project for the older group of children and study the current mission study books and mission projects. Advise and help parents in their selection of devotional materials to be used in the home. Have available a reading list for parents and children. Remember the children at different times of the year and always be on hand to give assistance to parents. Use visual aids and musical recordings for the older children and parents."

If a cradle roll superintendent does all these things suggested by Mrs. Wallace, other churches might make a report similar to an example she gave—"One minister reports that sixty new members were added to his Sunday school last year through the visitation of the cradle roll department. If you enroll the children, in many instances the parents will come, too."

One of my earliest recollections is visiting with my mother, who was the cradle roll superintendent for our Sunday school. She visited every home once a month, taking some material to leave with the parents each time. And now the people from some of those homes (where the cradle roll was the only contact with any church) are leaders in our church in that community. Yes, the work of the cradle roll is important!

The Women's Fellowship of our Richmond, Virginia, Church met the requirements for an active society. We held eleven regular monthly meetings. (Continued on page 10.)

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Boys and Girls:

By now you have eaten lots of candy and chewed the bubble gum that you found in the toe of your stocking, played with your toys and had a great time. What a blessing that we had Baby Jesus whose birthday we keep by giving gifts.

For a long time I have rejoiced that the church is a friendly family circle extending over land and sea miles. Would you like to hear about some of this family in action? Some of you will remember a story on this page about Eileen Rush of Newport News who is a neighbor of my family and a member of our church there. As a matter of fact Eileen lives just across the street from our church and a good thing too, for she had polio five years ago and for a long time couldn't walk at all but stayed in bed or went in her wheel chair.

Last fall she went to New York for more treatments and has learned to walk well with her crutches and braces. Why, she moves along like a breeze! Either in New York or may be at home she met Dr. W. C. Timmons from New York who is one of our ministers who travels over our country helping churches with their devotional life and helping churches know how to receive members. He found out that Eileen was flying to New York the day after Christmas to go back to the hospital and he sent her family a message that he would meet her at the airport and take her to the hospital. Isn't that wonderful? Because of church friendship we have love and goodwill working across the miles. I wish our readers could see a picture of Eileen that I have on my desk, a wonderful picture with her arms outstretched as she greets her father at the doorway of a plane. Our money for pictures isn't very great so we can't print it, but we can say Happy New Year to Eileen and that we are glad she is making such a fine recovery, and thanks to Dr. Timmons.

Our outdoor Christmas tree this year was a flood-lighted holly tree. This tree has been on the parsonage grounds for many years and is stately, long-boughed and loaded with rosy, red berries. It is an American holly and grows beautifully as do all holly trees in Southern Pines. Our sandhills seem to help them grow straight and full.

Our public library has an art wing for exhibits and the Christmas one this year was a display of the many varieties of holly grown here. They were raised by Mr. E. Morell of Holly Tree Nurseries (by the way—more church family: Mrs. Morell's niece is Mrs. J. H. Lightbourne, Jr. of our Holland Church). Several hundred kinds of holly grow here: English, Chinese, American and Swamp, Yau-pon and on and on. Each little clear glass container was filled with water and pebbles and had a graceful branch of holly. Some of the varieties have white berries and others have blue ones. Two I remember as being especially lovely: myrtle leaf type and the miniature Japanese. Among the holly branches there was a lovely Maddonna figurine and it was a most beautiful Christmas exhibit.

The word holly comes from holy as it was often called the "Holy Tree." The glossy sharp-leaved plant is a real symbol of our Christmas celebration. Much mistletoe grows here too. Now we must put aside our holiday decorations and begin our New Year's resolution list.

DOLLS' CLOTHES.

By LAURA GRAY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"What are you going to do with that rubbish, Aunty?" I asked my visitor. "The fire is the best place for those old doll's clothes."

"I think I can fix them up," responded Aunt Sarah.

She had picked from a jumbled toy box a doll's bonnet, a bedraggled pink silk dress, and a coat burst across the back from being forced around too big a doll. Another dress had evidently acted as a blackboard eraser, and a white nightie had served for wiping paintbrushes.

"Rather a waste of time, don't you think?" I commented, smiling.

"I want to do something for Nancy, and I've no spare cash with which to buy her anything," was the answer.

"But Christmas is now long past," I said. "She won't be expecting anything." However, I watched her with indulgence; a woman without children must be humored.

The little garments were washed in warm suds, dried by the fire, ironed and mended—a button sewn here and a ribbon there. At the sound of Nancy's step, returning from school, all the things were quickly pushed into a cupboard. "I want to surprise her," Aunty explained.

In the evening Aunty's scissors and needle were active. From an old silk blouse and a voile frock were made two of the cutest doll dresses—with real buttons and buttonholes—that I had ever seen. Two cardboard boxes, with lids sewn on so that they would open and shut but not come off, were used to hold this crisp, fresh wardrobe. A roll of attractive "pieces" for making more dresses and a bag of sewing materials were added, and all were laid on a chair by Nancy's bed.

I thought I knew my own child pretty well, but I was not prepared for the delight that those reconditioned dolls' clothes brought. How often her dolls were now dressed and undressed, washed, talked to and about! And the enthusiasm lasted for many, many days.

Dolls' clothes have a wonderful fascination for most little girls. Once asked what she wanted for her birthday, a small girl answered, "Dolls' clothes! Just dolls' clothes." At bazaars the dolls' clothes booth usually sells out first—unless prices are too high. Much in connection with these clothes has an educational value too. High schools spend large sums on equipment to teach girls the best way to dress and care for young babies and to teach good taste and economy in dressing themselves. We do not all live near such schools, but much can be learned at home by just dressing a doll.

When buying a doll it is advisable to choose from the smaller ones. These cost less, are easier to dress, and are not too heavy for even very young arms. It will be found that the children generally prefer them. Big dolls appeal to mothers rather than to their children.

Real pleasure in orderliness can be realized in caring for a doll. Having a place for the doll's clothes is important. Boxes are good for this purpose. One ought to be for underwear and another for erushable tion—easy fatiguability, eye trouble while studying at night, no resistance to colds and skin infection, etc. Lots of the minor ailments can be fixed up at the local government clinic; and nothing can be done about some of the major defects, requiring surgery or refraction for glasses, because of the expense. But the real work of follow-up on the general health problem I found is still ahead of me. With a thousand students I could easily spend enough time there to warrant making it my headquarters if I were to do the job properly.

The Communist slogans painted all over the white walls in Manamadura, including that of our compound, reminded us of the approaching elections—India's first country-wide experience of this kind. The opinion here at present is that Congress will win because the opposition is divided into too many little groups. In spite of all the graft and corruption and loss of morale due to famine and world-wide inflation there is still a lot of idealism in certain quarters and determination to re-make Indian society. The lady doctor who heads the work at Gandhi Gram is running for the Madras State Legislature on the Congress Party ticket and will be throwing her weight in the days to come toward extending throughout the Providence some of the Gandhian reforms which are being pushed in the villages around Gandhi Gram.

Actually things are being accomplished these days. In the villages near Gandhi Gram we were shown a new high school building put up by the villagers, and heard of another high school being opened in temporary thatch huts. The latter school, I believe, was being attended by students who commute twenty miles a day by train, so eager they are for an education. In one area there are forty-six elementary schools, one for each village, where there were only nine years ago. In Srivilliputtur the ninety-six-year old Christian High School was for years the only institution of higher learning in its area—and it wasn't even a full-fledged high school in those days—so that anybody in South India who came from there who amounted to anything, such as the present prime minister of Madras, could point to that school as being where he got his start. But now there is a Catholic High School and a private Hindu High School in Srivilliputtur; and seven miles away, in the new booming cotton-mill town of Rajapalayam, there are two other private high schools and a government school; and one of the mill owners is about to donate money to start a college—the fourth of its kind in the small towns of Ramnad District. All this is more remarkable when we remember that South India never had the age-old instinctive passion for education that China has. In the north there have been Mohammedan schools of a sort during the past several hundred years. But in this part of India, before this present trend began, there was nothing of any kind—no opportunity even to become literate and no desire for it by the people.

But to correct any too exalted an impression of the social progressiveness of this area I might mention a small item on the back page of the paper reporting a brief strike by the workers in this Rajapalayam cotton mill. They walked out in protest because a spinning-master had assaulted a worker and the management had not done anything about it. However the management called municipal authorities for help and a squadron of police was sent to the scene, whereupon the men quietly returned to work! But if the mill owner wants to perpetuate this kind of social system he had better give up the idea of endowing schools and promoting education.

I was very much encouraged the other day to read what I thought was a sensible answer to the contention that public health efforts are a bad thing for a country like India because the resultant saving of lives causes over-population with poverty and starvation. Dr. Paul Russell, the American malariologist, says that this talk of "hazards of using modern methods to promote health" and the danger of eliminating "the natural checks and balance on a nation's population" is all wrong. There has never been a proper balance and maintaining the existing order by withholding public health is a negative attitude. Agricultural, educational, industrial, and other improvements are useless to a society which lacks average good health, and a high birth rate is the result, not the cause, of poverty. There should be a balanced program on all fronts in the fight against human misery, but doctors should lead the way in vigorous development of their sector as an example to others, rather than holding back to the slowest pace of society.

This message is pertinent also to the church here, whose business is mostly the spiritual welfare of its flock. May it also serve as a Christmas thought for us all and carry with it a special Christmas wish for a "more abundant life" for you and all the world.

Best regards to all,

ED RIGGS.

ings and one public meeting. The latter was our Thank Offering program at which the offering amounted to $26.84.

The Women's Fellowship sponsored a covered dish supper for the quarterly conference during the year.

Our Fellowship was represented at the fall rally in Wakefield and at the conference in Norfolk in the spring. We participated in "World Community Day," "May Fellowship Day," and "World Day of Prayer" programs along with other denominations of our city.

We served supper to 300 delegates to the Youth Fellowship Convention last May. In June the Fellowship sponsored a Family Night Supper, at which Rev. Richard L. Jackson was our guest speaker, showing slides of his work in China. Mrs. E. C. Culpin of Essex, England, who spoke at the School of Missions, was also our guest speaker in June.

We assisted the Holmes Bible Class in their contribution to two needy families in the community at Christmas time. The women's fellowship sent cards, flowers, and fruit to the sick during the year; subscribed $100 to the church budget; contributed $15 to the young people's project of re-decorating the church basement; repaired electric urn in church kitchen at a cost of $41.40; purchased large punch bowl and 24 cups and sponsored and assisted in the purchase of 100 place settings of silver; and provided flowers for the church at Easter.

New officers are: Mrs. S. A. Viriden, president; Mrs. G. T. Parsons, vice-president; Mrs. Clifford Parsons, secretary; Mrs. V. J. Sexton, treasurer.

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Thank you everyone for all your wonderful help. God bless you and give you joy in knowing you had a share "making Christmas" for eighty children. Several thousand people—through offerings, and individual contributions—have helped with the work here at the Orphanage in 1951. Thank you again and again. I know it was a joy to you. It has been encouraging. You have all been so kind. At the time of this writing we are not yet over the top with our goal, but as my good friend, Mr. C. D. West, says, "we are still climbing." I hope by the time you read this we shall be well over the mark.

One thing I can safely say we have rolled up our sleeves and worked at it, and my mother used to tell us boys that work counts. I have enjoyed putting the best into it, and I know the best will come in return. It has been so for many good years.

Ministers, minister's wives, men, women, young people, yes, and children have joined in. You have all been so good and kind. I wish so often that I could just sit right down in your home and tell you how thrilling it has been to have your help and cooperation. Just look at the long list of gifts and money in these reports—and remember the long lists in the several previous reports.

The children have been given a great Christmas. They have sung popular Christmas songs together and in groups, they have sung the sweet Christmas carols which fit childrens voices so beautifully, they have bowed in prayer—yes in silence and in prayer, they have felt the true spirit and meaning of Christmas. Also they had had the excitement of Santa Claus—"with all the trimmings."

God bless you for expressing something deep and fine in you by sending gifts to these children. They have had plenty, and much of it—in fact most of it of real value, for a dolly in the right little hands is the most valuable thing in the world! Or almost the most! You should see these children receive them. And the nice toys for boys. I stand quietly by and my tears do me wrong, for why do they come when I am happy! Well, folks, I thank you!

We have two reports in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. I shall not take more space, because words are inadequate anyhow to express my gratitude for every donation. We shall make our final report for 1951 next week. I am praying that it may put us over the top. A good and prosperous New Year to all.

Sunday School Lesson

FINDING THE CHRIST.

LESSON I—JANUARY 6, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: We have found the Messiah (which means Christ.)

—John 1:41.

LESSON TEXT: John 1:35-49.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isaiah 55:1-7.

By Way of Introduction.

We begin today a series of lessons on the general theme the early followers of Jesus. It can be an interesting and thrilling adventure. We will see the varied and the wide appeal which Jesus made to men and women, see how men and women of varying temperaments and dispositions in this amazing man that which appealed to them and that which satisfied their highest and deepest hungers. There is a common denominator in it all—a spirit of humility, a willingness to be taught, courage to follow, and a simple but strong faith in Jesus as more than a mere man. If we study these lessons with an open mind and a responsive heart we will be better Christians.

How it Started.

Today's lesson is concerned with the story of the first followers or disciples of Jesus. There are three simple principles which are timely and timeless.

1. The men had an experience with Jesus. As Jesus walked along, John the Baptist pointed to him and said, "Behold the Lamb of God." Two of John's disciples, one of them Andrew, followed Jesus, and in response to his invitation, went to his abode and spent several hours with him. We do not know what they talked about, or what was done. But something happened. Even that brief time spent in his presence convinced them that he was no mere man—he was the Messiah. Their hearts must have burned within them as he talked with them, and as they felt the influence of his personality upon them. They found something in Christ that they wanted to share with others. Perhaps one reason why we do not do more personal work is because Christ means so little to us.

2. They began where they were to share Christ with others. One of the two men who heard John speak and who spent some time with Jesus was Andrew, Peter's brother. He first found his brother, Simon Peter, and brought him to Jesus. Philip was of the same city as Andrew and Peter, and he found his neighbor Nathaniel. These fellows began right where they were. They won the man next to them. They started in the family circle, with their fellow-townsmen, among their fellow-tradersmen. It is the divine order. Those of us who have found Christ precious should share Christ with others, and we should begin right where we are. Parents should win children, children should win parents, the man in the shop should win the man who works next to him, members of clubs and lodges should win their fellowmen, Christians should win their fellow-townsmen.

3. They let Jesus make his own appeal. When there was any disposition to argue about the matter, these men simply and wisely said "Come and see." They did not argue or try to win a debate about the matter. They were content to let Christ make his own appeal. They were willing to put Christ to the test of experience. Christ is able to take care of himself. We need only to introduce people to him—he will do the rest.

If we would apply these principles the church would grow by leaps and bounds.

THE CALL OF FISHERS.

LESSON II—JANUARY 13, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: Follow me and I will make you to become fishers of men.—Mark 1:17.

LESSON TEXT: Luke 5:1-11.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matthew 4:18-35.

The Simplicity that was in Jesus.

He was the Son of God, but he was so simple and unaffected. Here he is by the lovely Sea of Galilee, surrounded by a multitude of people eager to hear "the word of God." So what did he do? Did he say "You folks come up to the synagogue on the Sabbath Day and I will preach to you?" Not the Master. Looking around he saw a couple of fishing boats, so he got into one, pushed it off a little from the shore, so that all the people could see and hear him, and sat down and taught the people from the boat. It was so simple and sane and natural as that. No wonder the common people heard him gladly! They liked the informality and sincerity of the man, his simplicity, his earnestness, his ability to put great truths in simple and picturesque language, his note of authority, his friendliness, his spiritual power. He went where people were, he began where they were, he spoke in words which they could understand, he spoke to their deepest needs, he made them conscious of God himself.

Obedience the Organ of Spiritual Knowledge.

Peter knew something about fishing—he made his living at it. He probably was not in a very good humor to begin with—he had been fishing all night and had caught nothing but a lot of trash which had to be washed out of his nets. And here was this young fellow, who had been a carpenter and who probably had never caught a fish, telling him how to catch fish. "Put out into the deep and let down your nets for a draught" said Jesus. The idea of catching fish in deep places, and of all times in broad daylight! Peter didn't like that very much, and he told the Master as much, in a polite way of course. But he figured he didn't have anything to lose, so he rowed the boat out into deeper water and let down the nets. And sure enough something happened. He got so many fish in the net that it began to break and they had to call their partners to their aid to save both nets and fish. There is a parable here. There comes a time when a man has to surrender to Christ's will and way. There are many things that we cannot know about him until we obey him. Not our will, but his will is the key to discipleship. And the secret of peace and power and joy.

Fishers of Men.

They were fishers—they were to become fishers of men. Fishing is an honorable occupation or calling. But to catch men for Christ is more honorable. Fishers, fishers of men—thus does Christ exalt and dignify everything that he touches. Even the humblest and most common place tasks take on new meaning and dignity when they are done for him and in his name and his spirit.

Big Dividends.

The Master pays big dividends. Peter got big returns for the use of his boat. Christ will be in no man's dresses, which should be carefully folded. Better than boxes, however, is a small chest of drawers in a corner of the playroom. This will hold many different things. But the drawers for dolly's wardrobe should be kept strictly for that purpose.

The desire to make clothes for her doll family is often fostered in a child by helping her start the collecting of small pieces of pretty cloth. A little girl's first effort in sewing may be crude, perhaps impossible to use, but if the child is encouraged the effort will lead to future accomplishments, even, perhaps, to making clothes for herself.

debt. If we lend him our boats he will return them filled with fish. To be sure it does not always pay in dollars and cents to follow Christ. But it pays, it pays big dividends, it pays in the things that endure and permanently enrich life.

My New Year's Message to Eastern Virginia

Christmas is a time for family gatherings, when members of a family strive to be together for the Festival. So, the New Year is a time of resolutions; when realizing that we have not made the best of the past we endeavor to command the courage to try harder with the coming of new opportunities.

A conference of churches is a family also. Though there has been no effort to call the larger family together, every local church has had its programs and called the local family together to observe with sermon and song the birthday of our King. Thus it has been that units of the larger family, the conference, have had their heart strings drawn once more about the manger and the Christ Child. It is good.

Now that the New Year, 1952, has dawned upon us, we would like to call on the forty-four members of the family of churches in the Eastern Virginia Conference of Congregational Christian Churches to "Maintain the Spiritual Glow," as Moffatt puts it, carrying the deep significance of the Christmas season, with all its tenderness, thoughtfulness, unselfishness and sharing into the work of each local church and therefore into every nook of the conference. This spirit will challenge all of us, pastors, deacons, Sunday school superintendents, teachers, etc. to undertake greater things this year, and to do better those we have been doing.

May such a spirit keep its hold upon us, and may we, through that spirit, make haste to do the work of God. God-speed into the New Year!

JESSE H. DOLLAR, President.

A New Year's Message for My Conference

The year 1952 will be a year of decision. This statement certainly will be true on the international scene. For many countries more directly affected by communism than we are today it will also be a year of decision. If predictions that are now being made have any worth, this will be a year of decision for our own nation, economically, politically, socially, and religiously.

We as individuals might feel that we will have very little to do with all these decisions that are to be made. Yet it is such people as you and myself that will indirectly make many of them. We will make public opinion one way or the other. This is what will control the decisions made in our nation. It is my belief that our nation is still religiously and morally strong enough to have much bearing upon the international scene. If individuals like you and myself will only realize the responsibility that is ours we can have much to do with the decisions that are to be made during this coming year. Each of us as individuals will be faced with many decisions that will have much effect upon our life in the future. We must be prepared to make the right decisions.

Let us look forward to this New Year with a determined and steadfast mind instead of one of fear and indecision. May we look forward to this year with hope for a more peaceful world and be the possessors of a deepening faith in the principles that Jesus Christ taught his disciples. Let us each face the New Year with renewed hope and faith that the principles that Jesus Christ taught will eventually triumph.

WALESTIN W. SNYDER,
President of the N. C. and Va. Conference.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CIV

NUMBER 2

Cypress Chapel Begins New Era

CYPRESS CHAPEL CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Since Colonial days Cypress Chapel has been a place of importance in Eastern Virginia. By virtue of its location, it has attracted many of those who have migrated to and from North Carolina.

At Cypress Chapel, where it is likely a Wesleyan Society had been formed during the war, James O'Kelly and Francis Asbury first met on July 8, 1780. Asbury later wrote of O'Kelly: "He appears to be a warm hearted and good man." They worked together as Wesleyan preachers until 1784, when at Baltimore was organized the Methodist Episcopal Church, and as Methodist preachers until 1792. In that year, O'Kelly and others, in rebellion against the autocratic powers of the bishops, broke away from the Methodist Church. In 1794 there came into existence a new organization which not only discarded the office of bishop, but also the name Methodist, and took the simple name CHRISTIAN.

The Bi-Centennial Celebration at Cypress Chapel was held on September 10, 1950. The church called Rev. Earl T. Farrell as its first full-time pastor, who began his ministry there in November, 1951. The former teacherage for Cypress School has been acquired, remodeled, and now provides for social activities as well as an expanding Sunday school. An electronic organ has been purchased at a cost of $2,896. The latest project is the erection of a seven-room parsonage, which will be ready for occupancy during February.

Cypress Chapel, with two full centuries of service to community and denomination, enters its third century with strength, confidence and vision.

News Flashes

The Convention Mission Board met with Second Church, Norfolk, on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. Dr. Scott will probably have a full report of this meeting for next week.

We learn with regret that Rev. Joseph McCauley, pastor of the Waverly, Virginia, Church, and Mrs. McCauley were in an automobile accident last week. According to reports their car was demolished, Mr. McCauley suffered a fractured knee, and Mrs. McCauley was badly shaken up. We hope for both a speedy recovery.

Mrs. Theo Kelley, a member of our Richmond Church, is in Medical College of Virginia Hospital, where she underwent an operation on Tuesday of this week. She was reported doing nicely on Wednesday of this week. Mr. Theo Kelley has served for several years as the chairman of the Finance Committee of the church, and his father, Mr. D. J. Kelley, who is well known to a number of our readers, was the first superintendent of the Richmond Sunday school.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The Committee on Revision of the Constitution of The Southern Convention is to meet early this month. Anyone having suggested changes for the Constitution should notify one the members of the committee immediately. They are Rev. W. J. Andes, chairman; Rev. F. C. Lester, Mr. W. E. Wissemann.

RADIO CHRISTMAS GREETINGS TO CZECHOSLOVAKIAN CHRISTIANS.

A message of greeting from representative Christian leaders in America was broadcast to Christians behind the iron curtain in Czechoslovakia over Radio Free Europe, on Christmas day. The message, signed by the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, D. D., President, and Rev. Dr. Samuel McCreca Cavert, General Secretary, the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the USA; also Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, D. D., Chairman, and Rev. Dr. Henry Smith Leiper, General Secretary, World Council of Churches—Conference of USA Member Churches; said:

"Now in these days when the community of Christ unites in the remembrance of His coming, as officers of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America and the American Conference of the World Council of Churches, we remember in fraternal affection those who follow His way and walk in the footsteps of John Hus and Comenius. Unshaken is our sure belief that your dedication to their spiritual ideals and your devotion to the patterns of democracy derived from their teachings have not failed. We thank God, as we have in the past, for your unflagging loyalty and zeal, your dauntless hope and courage. May the greatest gift of all be yours by faith in this hour of testing. Let us all remember that "Christmas always comes at night! Can wise men see a star at noon? Christmas comes in deepest dark when, in despair, man sees a spark conquering the night!"

Words of Tribute . . .

HARRY BEMIS CARLETON*

To write a tribute to the memory of Mr. Harry Carleton is difficult in only one respect. Where can one find enough rugged and sturdy words for the describing of this man who seemed to me to embody just about all that should be in a good layman and a faithful man of God.

Harry Carleton loved his church. There were many and varied and good interests and concerns in his life. There was his home, also his business, and the community; but always had time, plenty of it, to discuss with other church officials and his minister, the work of the church.

There was a humor in the man which was his own. It was not copied from anyone. And again and again it would appear at the moment when most needed.

However, one must take care to say that this man, who could make us laugh at his witticism, was loved and respected. He had words which could be scathing for anyone who would dare to approach him with a shoddy proposition.

My personal word is this. I loved Harry Carleton. (I never called him Harry when I was his pastor—but he will understand now.) From the first time we met we seemed to "hit it off." Both Mr. and Mrs. Carleton made their home a place of encouragement for me, and often I found there the methods with which to deal with difficult problems.

In spite of physical handicaps he lived a full life which overflowed in goodness and blessing and service for God and man.

I shall always count it one of the great joys of my ministry to have known and worked and laughed and served with Harry Carleton, and to have had him as my friend.

VICTOR B. CHICOINE.

SAMUEL WYCHE ELDER.

Samuel Wyche Elder was born in Chambers County, Alabama, March 30, 1872. He was the son of Rev. John Thomas and Joise Elder, and the grand-son of Rev. W. M. J. Elder, the founder of the Christian Church in Alabama. He not only came up in the home of a minister, but was surrounded by relatives who were ministers. He united with New Hope Christian Church, the mother church of our faith in Alabama, when he was a small boy. He spent his life on the farm. He married Lucy Stoker, and to them were born four sons and four daughters. The oldest son is a minister, and one of his daughters married a minister.

He lived a modest life. He worked hard, providing a good home for his family. He lived the slogan, "Early to bed, early to rise." In the prime of his life he would go into the field with his team and wait for light to break to see how to plow his crops. But he was no more industrious and frugal than he was honest. What he promised, he did. What he obligated himself to do, he did. He loved his family and rejoiced in them. He loved his church and was faithful to it. Unless he had a good word for a person he had no word. This characteristic is illustrated by the incident when someone was criticising his pastor. Mr. Elder asked, "Can you beat him preaching?" The man answered, "No." Then, he said, "you have no right to criticise him."

After a long illness he passed quietly into rest on December 7. The Rev. J. D. Dollar, my brother, and pastor of the family, conducted a very fitting service for him, assisted by the writer. His body was laid to rest in the church cemetery where four generations of Elder family lie in the honor and respect of all who knew them.

He was not a great man, as some men count greatness, but he was great in integrity, great in devotion to the right, great character and great in patience through his years of affliction. I know, for I married his daughter. JESSE H. DOLLAR.

OUR FATHER'S BUSINESS

The Christ Child grew rapidly. As a young adolescent, he surprised his relatives and friends by declaring: "Did ye not know that I must be about my Father's Business?" The Christ Child grew to be a man who had some stern things to say. "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me."

The demands of discipleship during this new year will not be light nor easy. If the going becomes hard as the burdens accumulate, we will neither whine nor complain, but remember his words: "Ye have not resisted unto blood." Hardships, trials, sacrifice—these simply mean that we are discovering and experiencing the real meaning of discipleship. Religion is no longer a mere luxury, an elective; it has become the supreme business of life.

Procrastination goes out the window. Many of us are wasteful of time because we take too long to begin. There is a task to be done and so often we take more time in preparing to do it, in thinking about it, in making the arrangements, in delay because it is disagreeable, than would have been consumed in doing the whole difficult task. "The King's business requireth haste."

Dr. Edgar D. Jones has written a book on "The Great Business of Preaching." We do well to remember that preaching is a great business. The great themes of the Christian gospel will be presented in countless pulpits this year. The implicit relevance of this gospel must be made explicit. The exigencies of our age call for preaching of a high order. This should be a year an era of great preaching.

Stewardship is a great business. Tithing is great business. Here and there laymen are getting a new conception of stewardship, are taking their stewardship seriously for the first time. They are saying, in effect: "I am not willing for others to carry my part of responsibility for the work of Christ. I want to share to the limit of my ability. No one can deprive me of that privilege. It is my birthright. Never again do I want to be a barnacle on the ship of salvation, a leech on the living organism of Christendom." Miracles of grace follow when people realize that stewardship is a great business.

This is the time to link ourselves anew with God in a great and grand enterprise. God has been in business a long time. He is the Creator, Architect, the eternal Benefactor. He is engaged in an age-long effort to redeem his people—all his people.

Not even a cross has been able to thwart him in his central, avowed purpose. His amazing activity is increasing. "He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep." Discipleship means being "Honest-to-God" and "Honest-with-God." As we stand in awe before his holy Presence contemplating his unwearying purpose as revealed in Christ, we resolve anew to be about our Father's business.

RELIGION AND ETHICS

"The first American approach to the crucial dilemma of laymen's Christian vocation in our industrial society," is the description given by a leading Protestant churchman to "The Christian and His Daily Work." This pamphlet by Rev. Cameron P. Hall of the National Council of Churches' Department of the Church and Economic Life highlights for church people and church groups "what there is about daily work that calls for an ethical response by Christians and how Christian faith is relevant to daily work today."

At this time when leaders in public life and committees of Congress speak of the "enormous responsibility of religious and educational institutions" for raising the moral standards not only in government, but in the country generally, the writer of this pamphlet calls upon church people to note that "the well-being of any people depends in a large part upon the character and measure of the senses of responsibility which they bring to their work. . . . In our industrialized society . . . the horizons of one's sense of responsibility in one's work extends beyond the individual, family, or locality; it extends to the nation."

Prepared as background reading material for delegates to the forthcoming North American Lay Conference on "The Christian and His Daily Work," to be convened at Buffalo, New York, on February 21-24, 1952, this pamphlet is also recommended for study in the local churches during the annual Church and Economic Life Week, January 20-26, 1952.

Analyzing the relation of God to daily work and why Christians particularly are concerned with its practice, Mr. Hall points out that "the Bible takes work for granted as a natural and necessary part of life . . . God is where life is and work belongs to life as God has made it. It follows then that God is to be found within a man's daily work as well as outside of it."

Student Volunteer Movement Anniversary Observed

Out into the bitter cold of the new year, more than 2,000 college students of 47 nationalities went with a beginning sense of their mission in the church.

Delegates to the 16th Quadrennial Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement at the University of Kansas closed their six-day meeting on New Year's morning with a hymn that has closed many historical Christian conferences: "Thine Was the Glory."

Going back to campuses all over the U. S. and Canada, they take with them questions they shaped in large and small discussion groups during the conference.

"This closing session," they were reminded by the Rev. E. H. Johnson, general secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement, "is the opening of the conference, not the end."

The students had come together in a time of world turmoil and disillusion in a gathering whose theme was "Christ's Kingdom—Man's Hope."

"Men talk today with sober realism about the possible collapse of Western civilization," they were told by the Rev. Charles Ranson, of New York City, general secretary of the International Missionary Council.

"The church may not save civilization today. That is not its business," he said, in one of his three addresses on God's work in "The Saving History," "The Redempting Community," said "The Ultimate Hope."

But, he reminded them: "If we know the conference theme to be true, then we can go out into the bewildering currents of contemporary history with a kind of Christian monchalance, to pursue without panic but with a powerful sense of mission, our high calling in Christ Jesus."

One of the highlights of the conference was a ceremony honoring Dr. John R. Mott, of New York and Florida, founder of the 65-year-old student movement, and himself a reminder of the 16 generations of college students who have gone out as volunteers.

White-haired but still erect, Dr. Mott, Nobel peace prize winner and leader in establishing many of today's world Christian organizations, received a scroll expressing "deep gratitude for the outstanding leadership" he has given Christian students around the world.

Dr. Latourette, president of the American Baptist Convention and a leading church historian, told the delegates of the movement's beginning at a meeting of 251 college students, including Mott, at Mount Hermon, Mass., in 1886. He reminded his young hearers of the more than 20,000 volunteers who have gone out since to "every continent and most of the islands of the sea," founded schools, pioneered in medicine and agriculture, translated the Bible "into more than a thousand tongues," proclaimed the gospel, organized churches and trained church leaders.

These volunteers, he said, led in the early stages of the ecumenical movement which "in our time of rising and embittered nationalism is drawing together Christians around the world."

"This is the history of the movement," he said. "What of the future? The spirit of God is there. The future rests with you."

The 16th quadrennial brought the Student Volunteer Movement to the University of Kansas campus for the second time in four years. The delegates represented a new generation but their purpose was the same that attracted their grandfathers to Cleveland, Ohio, for the first quadrennial in the gas light era of 1891. As Christians—leaders in religious life on the campus—they came to learn about the mission of the church and the kind of useful life in its service they might find, probably in a foreign land.

Some of the largest foreign delegations were from Asia, Africa and the Middle East, and this seemed appropriate at a conference that was putting a major emphasis on the Christian witness in a revolutionary time.

Over and over speakers stressed the ferment of hope and anger in Asia, Africa and the Arab world—and the need for a Christian answer in the areas of turmoil.

At the opening session, the Rev. Tracey Jones, Jr., of New York, conference secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement, a second generation China missionary, warned that in Asia and elsewhere to the old resentment against Western domination, and against poverty and want, there have been added new facets: contempt for the arrogance and pretensions of those who once ruled; hope for a way out of bondage; and, most important, a new surge of pride in their own race and culture.

"People whose colors of skin is not white, now are thanking God for it," he told the delegates. "This is something we dare not ignore. If the church cannot meet the racial issues of our time, the church will become irrelevant."

Paying tribute to the accomplishments of Christian missions in Africa in medicine, teaching, agriculture, Mr. Eduardo Mondlane, of Portuguese East Africa, a student at Oberlin College in Ohio, reminded his hearers of tremendous problems that still trouble the continent: hunger on marginal and eroded land; sickness and unhappiness in new industrial slums; frustration for those, educated in missions schools, who are unable to get work that will use their talents and training.

In the Middle East, said Dr. John S. Badcau, current tensions arise not from Communism—"the current and easy answer"—but from a reawakening of the Arab world that "inevitably clashes with Western interests."

Noting that the Christian influence has suffered less than any other from present anti-Western feeling in the Arab world, he pointed out that the missionary movement has demonstrated "a new kind of relationship between the dominant West and the awakening East" based on mutual needs and mutual services.

But unless the Christian enterprise can show that its work and message mean something in terms of the current problems in the Middle East, he warned, it will have little appeal to the Arab world.

Both speakers in their address and students in their conference sessions worked at this problem of relating the Christian message to the problems of an age in transition.

There was a concern about race relations that came up repeatedly in conferences. And an allied concern that Christianity was neither a means of saving Western civilization nor its exclusive property.

"Christ still lives in American youth," one young delegate wrote in a report—and then, taking thought, crossed out the word "American."

How to take Christianity from where it is to where it is needed?

"We must help the desperate nine-

HANK'S CHAPEL YOUNG PEOPLE.

Pittsboro, N. C.
December 20, 1951

Dear Pilgrim Fellowshipers:

I promised our group sometime ago that I would, in the near future, write a news letter to THE SUN, well this isn't exactly the near future I spoke of, but would like to get in a few lines before the year gets away.

Let me say first that, considering the year, that is going out, we have had a good year. Oh: not a lot of things to brag about, maybe nothing to reach the headlines, but a good year in that we have grown somewhat, in members, and spiritually I know. I believe that we have said before, that we formed a junior group. Well along with the junior group and our regular group, we have real good attendance, and very interesting programs. Would like to put in a good word here, for the juniors, when we have Bible quizzes the juniors are more likely to come up with the correct answer, than us older folks.

Our pastor, Rev. R. T. Grissom, is with us in every meeting, and adds much to our programs. We've said it before, but let us say again, that we are indeed grateful for Rev. Grissom's presence and interest in our group. Any group should be proud to have a pastor that takes a personal interest in their group. Rev. Grissom is, fast, winning the love and respect of all our community people.

Now I will go back to halloween, that's the high spot, that, I (was) going to write about. I believe that I can truthfully say that it was the best social we have had in a long time. Everyone came dressed in some sort of costume. To name a few, we had a bride and groom, several pirates, some clowns, a monkey, some negro mammals and negro show boys, and many others. We had a time ever finding out who every one was. After several good games, and contests, which were well planned, we had all the hot dogs we all could eat. It was an evening of fun for all who came.

Just a word about our Sunday school, in which our young people always take a quite active part. Our Sunday school is growing, not by leaps and bounds but steadily, and we all hope for it to continue so. For the past 29 weeks we have had an average attendance of 140, with Sunday, November 4, bringing out the largest crowd, 164. Our juniors sing several songs or choruses every Sunday.

One of the more recent events here was at our last regular meeting, De-

ARE YOU THINKING?

Have you stopped to count the blessings
You received in 'fifty-one?
Are you giving God the glory
For the Gift of His Dear Son?
Now, since 'fifty-one is ended
And we enter 'fifty-two,
Will we make our lives a blessing
In the things we say and do?

Christ is always near His children
In this sinful world below.
If we only love and serve Him,
His "sweet peace" He will bestow.
He has kept us through the old year
And has brought us to the new;
Let us love and serve each other
As He bids us daily do.

Let us not forget that Jesus
Always hears and answers prayer;
And that He will keep His children
In His tender loving care.
Then when work on earth is ended
And our Saviour says "well done,"
We shall meet again our loved ones
Where there'll be no setting sun.

—GUY H. VEAZEY.

December 9, when the group cancelled plans for a Christmas party and voted instead to take the money that would be spent on a party and buy food and clothes and toys for some needy family in the country. The most note-worthy thing about this was the fact that all the members were in favor of doing this and expressing a desire to bring other things.

Before this reaches print the group will have given a Christmas pageant at the home church, under the leadership of Rev. and Mrs. Grissom. Also they will have gone Christmas caroling, this has become a regular practice among our group, several of the adults find great pleasure in doing this, as do we all, going from home to home singing out the good news of our blessed Saviour's birth.

We have enjoyed reading the letters and reports of the different groups on the youth fellowship page, and hope to see more and more of them in the coming year. Lets try to send our news when it is news, while it is on our minds, that will keep us from having to write letters of reminiscence.

We have been happy to see the recent good reports from Dr. Truitt at the orphanage, lets all help Dr. Truitt to have more good reports all throughout the year.

Heres hoping all of you have had a joyous Christmas and are ready to go into the new year with a strong faith and will to do God's will.

Am sending two addresses of service boys, from our group, write to them, they will be happy to hear from any of you—pray for them, and all boys in service.

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

STUDENT RECOGNITION SERVICE.

In the Saturday issue of the Burlington Times News there appeared a notice from Front Street Methodist Church, Burlington, N. C., to the effect that Front Street Church would observe Student Recognition Sunday on December 30 at 11:00 a. m. It gave the names of seven members of the Front Street Church who were currently enrolled in colleges and who would participate in the morning church service. Since one of these students was an Elon College student, Mrs. Smith and I concluded that we would attend the service and worship with that congregation.

One of these college students presided. Four took the prayer period, each offering his own prayer. One sang a solo. A student preached the sermon, and a very good sermon it was. The pastor, Rev. W. L. Clegg, made some announcements, but the students opened and closed the service. The whole program was well done and effective. In the Reverend Mr. Clegg's announcements, he stated that Student Recognition Services were being held then, the last Sunday in the year, in every Methodist Church in the United States and that the Front Street Church was glad to cooperate in the program. This kind of service not only recognizes the colleges that the young people of a particular congregation attend, but it recognizes the young people in a very definite way and gives them to understand that their church is interested in them and anxious to be of service to them.

I was glad that Elon College was represented on the program. It occurs to me that this is a very excellent plan—one that would be worth a try by The Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches. As a rule our more capable and more aggressive young people go to college—the type of individual that should be interested in the church—and the church should make every possible effort to increase that interest that he may make some definite contribution to the church. If we would adopt such a plan for our churches there would be, of course, some churches that would not have a member in college. Others would have more than one member in college. If the church did not have a young person enrolled in college, it would certainly have some in high school or who should be in college, and they could be used in the service. The most appropriate time for such a meeting would be the last Sunday in the old year. At that time college students as a rule are home and are glad to attend the home church service and would appreciate a share in its worship program. At any rate, I think it would be an excellent plan to give one service in a year over to the young people of the church and let them have the entire church service. They would probably not do it as well as the "tried" deacons and trained pastors, but the service would be conducted, it would make a contribution perhaps to the worshipers in the pews, and it certainly would make a contribution to the young people who took part. By giving them an opportunity to express themselves, the church has the opportunity of discovering talent and prospective leaders for the church and the organizations of the church. I would like to commend to our people the idea of "Student Recognition Sunday" to be observed by all of our churches the last Sunday in the year.

SMALL COLLEGES FACE WORST MONEY CRISIS IN HISTORY.

Mr. Jay Heavilin, National Education Association Staff Correspondent, speaking in Cleveland, Ohio, some days ago is reported in the daily press to have said, "Caught in the crush of rising costs, low endowment returns and declining enrollment, small colleges across the nation are facing the most severe financial crisis in their history.

"More than one-fourth of the nation's colleges are operating in the red. There is every indication costs will continue to soar. Enrollments, down 10 per cent from last year, are expected to dip even lower as calls to military service and the attractions of defense work increase.

"Is there a cure for the financial 'sickness' threatening the survival of colleges not supported by taxes? . . ."

Mr. Heavilin thinks that the colleges in Ohio have found a remedy in the organization of a foundation for the support of all non-tax-supported colleges in that state. I am sure that this is the remedy. I am sure, however, that by gifts of individuals, corporations, businesses and business executives, a successful and permanent remedy may be found for our privately endowed colleges now facing the most serious crisis in their history. Business simply cannot afford to see these colleges close their doors. They are the principal contributors to free enterprise and the American way of life.

Every dollar contributed to our church colleges is an investment that will bear dividends not only in human development and character but in business and financial returns on money invested.

A NEW YEAR'S MESSAGE FROM THE SUSTAINING FUND.

The purpose of this brief message is three-fold:

1. To thank each and all of you for the fine support you have given to the Sustaining Fund program since its inception. While we have not by any means achieved our goal for the conference year just closed, we have received $11,669.00. You will be happy to know that this amount enabled the college to close its year without a deficit. With a reduced enrollment we shall need the entire allotment of $35,000 to balance our budget for 1952. We trust and pray that every church may cooperate completely by securing its entire allotment of $1 per member.

2. To ask that each church in The Southern Convention (there are 194 of them) consider the advisability of making the Sustaining Fund an item in its budget for the current year.

3. To remind you that January and February, 1952, constitute the next college emphasis period and to ask that you do everything possible to bring the services and needs of Elon College to the attention of our people, beginning promptly on New Year's Day. We want to send as many speakers as possible to our churches during this period and shall appreciate your prompt requests for such speakers. Many of our churches will wish to make their special effort for the Sustaining Fund before the end of February.

We thank you again, one and all, for your fine support. We are confident that interest in our college and

TESTIMONY OF POLIO VICTIM.

"Underneath are the everlasting arms. Without that how could our faith withstand the trial," so wrote Dr. Victor Fanstone Masters of Mt. Silinda, Southern Rhodesia, East Africa on October 25, following the death by polio of Carolyn Zilla, his four-year old daughter, and the acute illness from the same disease of Mrs. Masters and one and a half year old son Michael John.

On Sunday, November 4, Dr. Victor F. Masters himself died of polio. He would have been 35 years old December 1. He died in the Umtali Hospital where his wife and small son were improving slowly. Two other small children, Christopher, age 9 and Robert, age 6, were being cared for at Mt. Silinda in the home of Mrs. John F. Allen, the former Patricia Williams.

The death of Dr. Masters was doubly tragic because in addition to his skill as a physician he had a singing soul and a passion for bringing balm to broken spirits as well as sick bodies. Reports of his activities told by him with sparks of humor and the testimony of his fellow missionaries, showed that he gave himself without reservation to the call of suffering around him.

In the small hours of the morning he would answer the hurried knock at his door and travel miles by car; then tramp more miles along dew laden trails through mealy fields, eight foot kaffir patches and on past sleeping kraals to minister to frightened, suffering Africans. When it was all over, he would take time to talk to the people gathered around the dirty huts about the hospital at Mt. Silinda and of Jesus who picked babies up in his arms and loved them.

Dr. Victor Fanstone Masters was born in the Belgian Congo, but his home was in Old Hill, Chislenhurst, Kent, England. He was educated at Epsom Public School; Kings College, London University, and Charing Cross Medical School, London University, (M. R. C. S., L. R. C. P.).

Victor Masters was a 12-year old lad attending a Crusader Camp when he became a Christian. It really "took" with him. From then on he was active in various camps and conferences; boys' missions and clubs, and even after entering medical school worked in the Inter-Varsity Fellowship. He was a leader of a Crusader Class and lay preacher in a local Methodist Circuit.

In 1945, after specializing in surgery, Dr. Masters entered the British Army and saw service in England and then 18 months in the Middle East, i. e., Egypt, Palestine, and Malta, serving as a "Graded Orthopaedic Surgeon and General Surgeon." During this period of army service he was a member of the Officers' Christian Union. When this was over he wrote jubilantly as he enlisted under the American Board of Foreign Missions, for service in Africa.

"Now at long last the time is coming when I shall be freed from National Service and the Army and will be able to satisfy my greatest ambition of serving my Savior on the Mission field. This is the acme of my spiritual ambition. . . . From my conversion to the present time the call has become even more insistent and imperative to follow in the steps of the great physician in the place where most good can be done to the greatest number, i. e., on the mission field."

Dr. Master's grandparents were pioneer missionaries in Brazil and his father practiced medicine in the Belgian Congo where he was born, although he was brought to England when he was a little over a year old.

Dr. Masters is survived by his widow, Beryl Bowden Masters, and three sons, Christopher Fanstone Masters; Robert B. Victor Masters and Michael John Masters.

S. V. M. ANNIVERSARY OBSERVED.

tents of the non-Christian world out of their hunger and misery before we can preach to them," said Dr. Frank Laubach, pioneer missionary educator and literacy expert.

"Our opportunity is to help them help themselves," Dr. Laubach said. He urged a program of literacy teachers, journalists who could provide simple reading material for the newly literate, and "a hundred thousand of the finest men and women in America" to go abroad with our technical aid and skills in medicine, agriculture, sanitation and other fields. These technicians, he added, must be "willing to get their hands dirty, blind to race or nationality, friend-makers in a world which is being taught to hate us."

Agreeing, in general, with the idea of the program, many of the students doubted that it would solve all the world's problems; some feared it might tend to identify Christianity with Western culture; others felt it was more important to spread the gospel than to multiply good works.

Most specific prescription for the missionary enterprise was given by Dr. Badeau: ingenuity that will find new ways of relating the Christian mission to new situations, missionary scholarship, a mastery of the language and a real understanding of the spiritual heritage of the people the mission serves; and the highest degree of professional and technical competence.

"We need million dollar brains on missionary salaries," he said, "to serve to the glory of God with the highest intellectual and technical skills of the modern world."

That some of these skills would be forthcoming was indicated by the specialized fields many of the students were training for: dentistry, nursing, architecture, engineering, social service, accounting, teaching, dietetics, journalism, among others.

Leaders at the conference too included a young missionary doctor now preparing a report on a medical survey of the once-closed kingdom of Nepal, and a labor union executive planning to go out on a unique Christian mission in labor relations in India.

The student co-chairman of the conference, in the Student Volunteer Movement tradition, are both planning careers as missionaries. Miss Barbara Grant, 21, of Vancouver, B. C., Canadian chairman, is a student at the United Church Training School in Toronto, planning to go into home mission work in a city church. Mr. David Hoh, 22, of Lancaster, Pa., is at Mt. Airey Lutheran Theological Seminary near Philadelphia, and hopes to serve as a missionary to India.

The church's mission exists at home as well as abroad, Dr. Truman B. Douglass, executive vice-president of the Congregational Christian Board of Home Missions, reminded the delegates, and it exists as near to them as their own campuses.

N. C. COUNCIL TO MEET.

The North Carolina Council of Church Women will meet on January 16 and 17 at the West Market Street Methodist Church in Greensboro in connection with the annual meeting of the N. C. Council of Churches.

The Board of Directors of the Church Women will meet on January 16, from 3:00-5:30. Officers, members-at-large, and denominational presidents comprise this board.

There will be a public meeting on Wednesday evening at 7:30, when Dr. E. H. Pruden of Washington, D. C. will speak. He is a Virginian, with Southern Baptist training plus work at Yale and Edinburgh. He has served as president of the American (Northern) Baptist Convention, as a missionary teacher at the University of Shanghai in China, and since 1936 as pastor of the First Baptist Church of Washington, D. C., where one of his parishioners is President Truman. Church men and women are urged to hear him.

Thursday morning, following a joint session with the Council of Churches at 9:00 o'clock, there will be held the business session of the Council of Church Women, with reports, plans, election of officers. Every church woman in North Carolina is eligible to attend. Mrs. James Wyker, national president of the Council of Church Women will be there.

At 12:30 there will be a luncheon for all church people with Mrs. Wyker as the speaker. Many of our churches are near Greensboro and it would be fine if our women would attend these sessions. I am sure that Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, 315 N. Edgeworth St., Greensboro would be glad to put in a reservation for you for the luncheon, if you would notify her how many could come from your society.

RECORD FOR BURLINGTON. (FROM "THIS AND THAT").

On the first Monday of this month of December, one hundred and twenty-six women of the church (First, Burlington) joined together in the fellowship and worship of the Christmas season. Fifty-five women were present at the general meeting in the morning, the Margaret Lightbourne Circle met in the evening with twenty-four members present, while Circle 6 met at the church with thirty-four members and thirteen visitors present. We believe this to be a record attendance for our auxiliary.

DEFINITION OF A SAINT.

Last week we gave a definition of a saint, as quoted by Mrs. Henry Robinson at the N. C. Woman's Conference. Here is another definition which comes from an Evangelical and Reformed Missionary, Martha Herrscher, who works in Latin America:

"When a little boy was asked to define a saint, he recalled the stained glass windows he had seen in Sunday school and church and so he answered: 'A saint is a man the light shines through.' Here in our little vilage of Pinalejo in Honduras there are many such saints through whom the light shines. I think they would be embarrassed if I were to mention them by name, for they, no doubt, think of themselves as quite ordinary people. But they know themselves to be Christians and indeed the light does shine through in their everyday actions and when they are persecuted. Some are fairly well educated; others are poor, humble citizens."

How many of us are "saints" according to this definition?

The worship service "Light for the Way," given in the sanctuary of the church, led by Mrs. M. Z. Rhodes, was one of beauty and inspiration. Mrs. J. R. Kernodle sang "Watchmen, Tell us of the Night," and Mrs. R. W. Brannock furnished the music.

A delightful Christmas luncheon was served by Circle 3, Mrs. G. A. Kernodle chairman. The tables were beautifully decorated with Christmas greens, candles, and an all-white Madonna arrangement.

At the evening meeting Circle 6 gave a Christmas party for our DP family, the Husenovices. A lovely tree stood loaded with gifts of toys, clothing, and food. This Christmas in a new and strange land will always be remembered with joy in the hearts of this family, who look to our church people for friendship and comfort.

FOR CHILDREN'S LEADERS.

Miss Lula Woodson, Woman's Convention Superintendent of Children's Work, has prepared a fine bulletin carrying missionary education suggestions for children for the year. One copy of this is available for each local church in the convention.

You may also secure a copy of a year book for children prepared by Mrs. W. C. Seely, which is excellent. There is also available a picture to be used as a cover for a notebook for Children's Missionary Activities.

All of these children's materials may be secured by writing to Miss Pattie Lee Coghill at The Convention Office.

AMBASSADOR TO VATICAN.

Miss Margaret Hargrove, National Secretary of Woman's Work, is urging women in our churches to become intelligently informed concerning the question of an Ambassador to the Vatican. She says, "It is a part of our responsibility as Christian citizens to obtain accurate and impartial information on which to base decision and action and to see that such is made available to ourselves and others."

She especially recommends the November 26 issue of Advance, which contains excellent material in this connection, including an editorial by Dr. McCracken entitled "My Dear Senator." If you do not take Advance (perish the thought!), you might borrow this copy from your minister. Also excellent is "A Reference Manual on U. S. Diplomatic Representation at the Vatican" which may be secured for 30c from the National Council of Churches, 297 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York.

WOMEN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY RAMSEUR CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

We have been following the theme set by the Women's Convention for this year, "A Highway for Our God," and have found the program most interesting and helpful in our society meetings.

Our group especially enjoyed the Christmas program, "Light for the Way," from the program book, "A Highway for Our God." The period of group participation through Bible reading and song, the period of guided prayers and the candle-lighting narrative and service were most impressive.

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Before you throw away all your Christmas cards—send them to North Carolina Orthopedic Hospital, Gastonia, N. C.

The boys and girls there will cut them out for scrapbooks or make cards that they can use next year. It will bring them joy, give their hands a job and save them money. I'm sure they wouldn't object if you sent along a jar of paste with your cards.

One of the nicest gifts we have received in a long time came from the Jacksons at Chapel Hill. It is a little Chinese boy for our doll collection. His name is Sido Bow which Mrs. Jackson tells me means "Little Brother." He is about eight inches tall and very fat because he is wearing his padded clothes. His trousers are dark blue and tied neatly at his ankles and his waist. His jacket is also quilted and padded but of a very fine print material with the lovely Chinese frogs to fasten it at the side and throat.

Sido Bow's family are very proud of him so have given him a "cash" or coin to wear to ward off evil spirits. Around his neck is a silver necklace that looks like our arm bracelets. His hat is black with two soft rabbit ears standing up and on the front are fastened four silver plates with the virtues marked on in Chinese characters. The back of his hat has a silver tassel so he has quite a bit of wealth with his tassel, virtues and necklace.

His face is plump and typically Chinese with high cheek bones and slanting eyes. He has a pleasant look and has taken his place with our other dolls and seems quite happy with the Indian children, Korean boy, Hama from Tibet and Dutch twins.

Do some of you collect dolls? It is a very interesting hobby.

Some people make their dolls, others collect theirs on their travels or collect certain kinds of dolls. It seems that everyone from nine to ninety likes dolls. We don't play with ours but keep them in a display cabinet and visitors coming comment on them and like to hear their stories. We are very grateful for Little Brother who came from Hong Kong.

By the way—have you seen the movie "Hong Kong?" It is a good story, full of adventure and beauty. A little Chinese boy plays the part "Wei Ling" and he looks very much like our "Little Brother." See it if you can.

A CHILD CAN LEARN TO BE FRIENDLY AND COM-PASSIONATE.

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Bright-eyed Teddy piped up, "I'm glad you're sitting by me!"

Commenting to the mother on her child's charming manner, she replied, "I'm trying to teach Teddy to feel and to express a warmth of friendliness for people."

"Delightful!" I answered. "Too many forget the rich dividends such attitudes pay."

I have a friend who has lived in many countries. "I was reared in a small town," I heard her say, "and I feel that it was a great advantage. Where the community is small people are apt to be more interested in each other, I think."

Certainly she is interested in everyone—kindly disposed and understanding. She told us of an eight-year-old boy in a Children's Home who answered the question, "Have you any money, Bobby?" with, "No! I haven't. I had a dollar, but I gave it to our television fund." Then she held out her hand to us ingratiatingly. "I'm helping with the television set for Bobby's Home. Any donations?"

Another friend of mine raised money for the younger children and widow of her daughter's former schoolteacher. This family lives on a farm. "If Ann had a deep freezer," my friend had considered, "Mary and I would keep it stocked." Now the once-worried mother has no more food problems.

I heard Dr. and Mrs. Harry Allen Overstreet speak on "Foundations of a Sound Personality." They declared that too many personalities are built on sand; that both parents and children need to keep in contact with those things which are greater than themselves. They stressed the importance of teaching a child compassion.

When children show a sincere interest in the people with whom they come in touch we know they are developing understanding, compassion, and a desire to help. There are so many ways, at all age levels, in which one may really assist. Even a smile may dispel weariness; a small personal sacrifice may bring hope and courage.

A very popular couple whom I know canceled a pleasure engagement in order to take a casual acquaintance to dinner and the theatre. She had mentioned to them, "I am so lonely!" "That settled it!" the wife told me, eyes gentle with sympathy. "We couldn't have enjoyed a gay evening thinking of that unhappy girl!"

These good people are passing on their fine golden-rule ideas to their children. When seven-year-old Carol received a birthday check from her Uncle Joe, she cried out excitedly, "Oh, Mommy—a new doll!"

Mother smiled down at the copy curls and twinkling eyes. "Mandy's still your favorite doll, isn't she, darling? What about the children in Europe who need food and clothing?"

"And dolls, too, Mommy—that's right, we'll send them the birthday money."

Yes, even little ones become bored if life is all play. There are many thoughtful things they can do. They can carry a delicacy to the chum who is ill, select a gift for Gram, save for Sunday school. They can be quiet when Mommy is resting; play in another room when Sister is studying for an examination. They can invite the new, not-yet adjusted fellow pupil to come to dinner.

At a party an executive of a large corporation—a Yale graduate—quoted a Chinese proverb which he had learned, he said, from his lovely grandmother: "A bit of fragrance clings to the hand that gives you roses." I am sure he learned no better sentiment at Yale!

Every child as he matures should move into a circle of responsibility—responsibility, however, not too large nor too small for his capacity. Boys and girls need to associate with the type of persons who will give them some comprehension of what life requires of us. Are you, parent reader, teaching your children to understand? Do they daily show compassion, so that "a bit of fragrance" clings constantly to their small, loving hands?

The Rich Young Ruler

By JOHN F. C. GREEN, D. D.

St. Luke 18:19-30.

The young man who is called a "ruler," in our translation, was a member of the governing council of the synagogue. He was wealthy and educated. He possessed a prominent social station and had the respect of the community among a people that respected learning and authority. Moreover, he appears to have lived a well-tempered life. He was a man held in great esteem. And so he thought of himself, as well.

Under the law, the good man was he who regulated his life according to the rules laid down. He gave his tithes to the temple; he aided the poor; he fasted; he observed the prescribed ritual of religion. And now this good man came to Jesus to secure the approbation of the Messiah.

Jesus anticipated the reasoning of the young man, when he asked "Good Teacher, what must I do to inherit eternal life?"

"None is good, save one, even God," replied Jesus. And then he recited the commandments, to which the young man replied with confidence that he had kept them faithfully since his youth.

But he had not expected to hear the next word of the Master: "One thing thou lackest yet: go sell all that thou hast, and give it to the poor." That there would then be laid up for him treasure in heaven. This was what he had asked: how to enter heaven! And then, for the rest of his earthly life, to follow the Master in his poverty and wandering, teaching and healing!

At this proposed high price of eternal reward the young man turned away. He could not bear to pay the cost.

And Jesus commented upon the difficulty with which rich people enter heaven. "It is easier for a camel to pass through a needle's eye than for a rich man to enter heaven."

But the people who had stood by hearing this conversation were astonished: "Who then can be saved?" If this young man, good as he is, having obeyed the law, having given freely to the needs of the poor, must pay so high a price as to abandon all that which earth had given him as a favor, to become a wandering, poverty-stricken follower of the Master, who then can be saved? What is the use of doing anything, of trying for the religious life, if this good young man has not yet earned the inestimable boon of the future life? Now the by-standers, too, were discouraged.

Hereupon Jesus gives the answer which describes the difference between the old law and the new gospel: perfection is not, with Jesus, in anything that man does; it is in the belief in the perfect God. "Ye, therefore, shall be perfect, as even my Father in heaven is perfect."

Let us be sure, before we continue, that Jesus did not mean to say that the rich as such are by him singled out as sinners. He touched this

POST CHRISTMAS REFLECTIONS.

A hundred thousand miracles

Were wrought this Christmas morn,
When in as many waiting homes
A little child was born.

To some of us a dream came true—
A boy born yesterday!
Kneel, parents! lest this miracle
Too quickly pass away.

The angel-song at the birth of a babe
Will soon grow old and dim,
While ease and pleasure, greed and hate
Cast lots for the soul of him.

And we, in our busy carpenter shops —
May choke the dream God sent
To some boy's heart—your son or mine—
Of His divine intent.

Till he who might have saved the world
Will listen when we say
To tempt him, "Son, don't be a fool!
The old's the safer way!"

Mrs. W. W. SLOAN,
Elon College, N. C.

young man at his weakest point: his goodness, his self-righteousness. For a person's point of strength is also his weakness.

Thus, when he dealt with Nicodemus, the wise elder of the church, he pointed out that he had to divest himself of his wisdom before he might enter the kingdom of heaven: "Except ye are born again,"—becoming a child, in willingness to learn the supreme wisdom of salvation.

A wise evangelist of the former generation was wont to say that there was hope for almost any sinner, no matter how great, but that he had never known a penurious person to be converted. That when the love of money, for the sake of money, came between a man and his soul, the man was lost. Could it not be, that here is also the tragic secret of the failure of Judas, of the apostles? That he became discouraged with Jesus, because he would not profit for himself and for his followers from his infinite powers? Why should he not, in the mind of Judas, enrich himself and give liberally to them? Surely, only a fool would so act. And would it not be folly to follow such a fool? And the end was the betrayal!

Jesus, thus always touched each person at his weakest point. At the place where the sinner thought himself strong.

Always the gospel finds that weakness. In humor there is the story of the young woman who confessed to her priest that she had sinned, because she was vain in her own beauty, only to hear the gentle retort of the confessor: "No daughter. You are not guilty of vanity. You are in error about your looks." Man is usually in error, in the over-estimation of his own excellence.

In tone of the classic stories of the American frontier, a group of poor immigrants make a settlement in the Middle West, and by years of unremitting toil converted their farms into gardenspots and their early huts into fine and comfortable homes. And the outstanding leader of the colony is a man renowned for wisdom as well as efficiency as a farmer and warmhearted kindness as a neighbor. Toward the end of the first generation there returns to the community an early member, who had failed, in the scale of achievements. He was poor. He had been addicted to drink. And now he came back to his early friends, who still received him as one of them.

But the leader could not refrain from imposing upon him some good advice with the readily proffered help. To which the errant brother replied: "And you, my friend, also have a serious fault: you cannot overcome your own self-righteousness." And this criticism was received by the better man, because he was a great-heart in fact. "There is none good, save one, even God."

Another favored young man of the Jews, namely Saul, made this conversion within himself. He too had been a good man, zealous in the law. He, too, had been respected as a learned scholar and teacher. And then he was touched by the perfection of the Christ, and as Paul he surrendered "all that he had," and came and followed the Master, through "peril, toil and pain" and unto death.

And as he wrote to the new converts

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

MATTHEW BECOMES A FOLLOWER.

LESSON III—JANUARY 20, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: Those who are well have no need of a physician, but those who are sick: I have not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.—Luke 5: 31, 32.

LESSON: Matthew 9: 9; Luke 5: 27-39.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matthew 16: 24-28.

Mr. Matthew Meets the Master.

Matthew was a tax-collector, a collector of "internal revenue." In our day that does not count against a man—it is a perfectly legitimate and honorable business, although in recent months there have been a large number of dishonest and dishonorable "collectors of internal revenue." But in Matthew's day it was, on the whole, a dirty and dishonorable business, at least for a Jew. A Jew who was a publican, or tax collector was both a traitor to his country and a renegade to his religion. He bought the "concession" of the tax list from Rome, and then proceeded to "make a killing" by squeezing the last penny from the tax-payers. Many publicans were rich, and most of them were both dishonest and unpopular. They were lonely, and unhappy men too. There was money in it, but that was about all. And men are so constituted that money alone is about the most unsatisfying thing in life. Matthew was a publican, a tax-collector, a business-man, a well-to-do man, rich but wretched, loathed by his countrymen, and despised by his employers. Few liked him, and fewer still saw any good in him.

And then Jesus came by one day, and saw him sitting at his desk. There is no record in the gospel that they had ever met before. But Jesus saw something in that dishonest, despised tax-collector. He saw the man that was to be. He saw what others did not see. He saw what even Matthew did not see. Forthwith he said simply, but arrestingly, "Follow me." And believe it or not, this hard-headed, and apparently hard-hearted business man got up immediately and followed Jesus. It is one of the most astounding things in the gospels. He left a good income. He was inviting economic disaster, he was becoming in a way even more of a social outcast, for even the publicans now might despise him. In fact Matthew was leaving everything, it was costing him his all to rise up and follow Jesus. But there was something in that young Galilean teacher that laid hold on something inside the publican, something that made him willing to pay any price to become a follower of Jesus. It was an act of sublime faith and superb courage. The folks probably thought Matthew was crazy. They thought about what he had lost or given up. Matthew rejoiced in what he had found and received. Although he did not know it at the time, that simple and sincere act was the beginning of a career that put this tax collector among the immortals. He became "one of the Twelve." He became the author of one of the gospels. Ah if only we could see in others, what Christ sees in them! If only we could see ourselves as he sees us!

Mr. Matthew "Slings a Party" in Honor of the Master.

It took courage for Matthew to rise up and leave his livelihood and to follow Jesus. It took courage for Matthew to arrange in honor of the Master, and to invite his fellow-publicans as guests. But this is exactly what this courageous fellow did. It was his witness to the fact that he had broken with the old life, that he was on the side of Jesus. It was also an evidence of his concern for his fellow-publicans, and his desire to have them to know Jesus too. It was as gracious and generous as it was courageous. The fact that Jesus accepted the invitation is evidence, too, of his courage. It was his protest against social ostracism. It was his way of declaring that he had come to help just such people. It was his way of saying that even publicans were not incurable thieves. We do not know what they talked about that day. We do not know whether Jesus won any of the publicans or not. But it was the most amazing banquet the town had ever seen and we may be sure that the tongues of the people wagged fast and furious for a long time. We may be sure, too, that more than one publican was haunted by memory of that quiet man, so simple, so sincere, so friendly, so pure, so good that he reminded them of God himself.

The Master's Table Talk.

As they sat around the Master talked in an intimate, friendly way. Luke gives us an account of some of the things he talked about. In reply to the criticism of the scribes and Pharisees because he ate "with publicans and sinners" Jesus, with delicate and delightful irony said that like a physician, he had come to call not the righteous but sinners to repentance, that he went among the sick because the sick needed him and not the people who were well. The scribes and Pharisees had no sense of sin, they were righteous, self-righteous. Lacking any sense of need, he could do them no good. Then, too, he was saying by act as well as by word, that God draws near to those who are sick and sinful and delights to help and to heal.

These old scribes and Pharisees thought that religion was a serious, sober, somber, indeed a melancholy thing. Here was the Master, the one who made such pretentious claims, and his disciples eating and drinking and having a wholesome good time like ordinary folks, and all in the name of religion. It was disgusting, it was unnatural. "No" said Jesus, "it is natural. Religion is not a wet-blanket. There is no reason why a man cannot be religious and happy at the same time. The arithmetic of the Kingdom does not emphasize subtraction, but addition. Seek first the Kingdom of God and these things shall be added unto you." We do Jesus an injustice when we picture him as "a man of sorrows." That was not his dominant mood. He spoke of his "joy" which the world would not give nor take away. He was always bidding men to "be of good cheer." He emphasized happiness. To be sure, said Jesus there will be times when men will have occasion to mourn. But enjoy life in a wholesome and legitimate way while we may. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

And to those who resented and resisted change in that day—and in this day—Jesus spoke in homely fashion. As usual he used commonplace experiences to teach great truths. Would one of you take a nice, new piece of cloth to patch an old garment, or vice versa? Or would you put wine while it is undergoing fermentation with all its expansive power into skins that were old and weak? Hardly! Well said Jesus, you cannot imprison the new spirit of faith and life of my gospel in the old forms of Judaism. The forms of Judaism are inadequate to express the spirit of Christianity. The law cannot be combined with the gospel, or at least the gospel cannot be put into law. Christianity requires new forms, new methods, new ideas, new rules, new laws. Only new wine-skins will do for the new wine. Not legalism but love, now rules but spirit, not law but grace.

S. V. M. ANNIVERSARY OBSERVED.

"Much of the university community is estranged from the Christian faith," he told them, "and it will take more than cider and doughnuts or a vesper service with organ music to change this."

"Too often we stress the picturesque and humanitarian aspects of home missions," Dr. Douglas said, "but its basic task is taking the church to people where they are, and a lot of the job is patient day-to-day janitor work."

The students who came to the convention concerned over the increasingly complex problems of the world and their own place in a complex generation, could not possibly find the answers to all their questions in six days. Confused at the start, they reached the point where they knew the questions they wanted answered.

In a divided world, what about the denominational divisions of the church? What about the divisions made by racial caste? In terms of their personal missionary obligation, how to reach their own campuses and communities with their Christian faith?

And there was a note of reassurance in the final speech by one of the country's top theologians, Dr. John A. Mackay, president of Princeton Theological Seminary in New Jersey.

"Human history is not a flower garden but a battle ground, in which a titanic struggle is taking place between God and the forces of evil," Dr. Mackay told them, a few hours before the end of the old year.

"But those who believe that the deepest forces in history are controlled by God and are on the side of righteousness trust God and do the right thing which is nearest to them. In the total perspective of history it will be seen that such people, by what they were and what they did, contributed in a very real sense to 'preparing the way of the Lord.' "Upon the threshold of 1952 let us re-echo and live by the truth that Jesus Christ shall triumph in history and that the kingdom of righteousness is an everlasting kingdom."

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

We are now planning our World Day of Prayer service, inviting the other churches of our town and community to meet with us.

We sympathize with Mrs. F. C. Lester in the passing of her father. May God's richest blessings abide with her.

Dear Friends:

Thank you very, very much for the final total received into the general fund of $65,408.19. Of this sum $9,023.20 was from cash sale of hogs, pigs, milk, grain, etc. Humbly I bow in gratitude to our heavenly Father for his goodness to us all. I appreciate your help everywhere more than I can possibly tell you. So many of you I know personally. How I wish I could walk right into your homes—the homes of everyone of you—and thank you in the warmth and hospitality of your own home!

Herewith is presented our first report for 1952, and with it our prayers and best wishes for a happy and prosperous year for one and all. This first report is a good one, thanks to so many kind people. Several churches have thus already enrolled themselves on the 1952 chart. As you know there is a list of all the churches in The Southern Convention with twelve monthly columns. See that your Sunday school or church makes an offering each month if at all possible. For while we reached our goal, our expenses for 1951 were so much we shall need your help regularly from the beginning of this year. In an address before the entire orphanage family last night I appealed to all workers and children to join with me in a crusade for the strictest of economy.

The children here had a great Christmas. Everyone was so good to them. There were many gifts of clothing, dollies, balls, toys, nuts, candies, fruits, cakes, turkeys—and toys and gifts all over again. The children and all their helpers get a very big thrill out of Christmas. Thanks for everything.

We are grateful for good health in our big family, and we set out with the purpose of training these children in 1952 in such way as children in a Christian institution should be trained. We invite your prayers, visits, and help during this new year, and pledge you that we shall give our best to the work.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

"Tonight I am going to Bethlehem Church again to speak at their Christmas Eve service. The church is having some sort of program and somehow the stranger in their midst has found a place in the whole thing.

"I am happy that I was able to spend my holidays in this part of the country. Thank you for making arrangements so that I could met the people to whom I am indebted for my stay in this country this year. My visit to Hepewell was most pleasant and enjoyable. I only wished I had more time to spend with the fine people of the church there."

in this letter from Rev. Galt to Miss Pattie Lee Coghill:

"We certainly appreciated very much the visit of Jose Dabuet, and thank you again for letting him come to us. He was most cooperative, humble, and helpful. He preached the Christmas Sunday morning sermon at Bethlehem, at which service we received 14 new members. We gave up one scheduled meeting with Jose so that he could speak at Leaksville on Sunday evening. He did much pastoral calling with me, helping to dig car out of snow bank, pushing the car, etc. . . ."

Jose Dabuet left the Valley of Virginia Conference on Christmas Day, boarding a train for Lawrence, Kansas, where he attended the Quadrennial Student Volunteer Conference. Then it was back to Princeton and more days of classes. Say! It's quite a job keeping up with Jose.

RELAX WITH MAX.

Here's a letter I received this week from Pattie Lee:

"The young people of the Happy Home Church—A. J. Martin, president—had the nerve to set up a banquet for which they charged $5 a plate to raise money for their new educational plant. They raised $400 in this project. I was their speaker so they did not get their money's worth there, but they did from the banquet because the food was delicious."

I think this was a very nice letter. This might be a godd idea for your group. Sometimes Miss Coghill can be persuaded to talk for less than a five dollar plate too.

A Mohammedan went to his judge and said: "If I eat dates is that breaking the law?"

"No," said the judge.

"Not even if I add water to them?"

"No," said the judge again.

"And a little yeast?"

"Also allowed."

"Well, date wine consists of only these things. Why is it forbidden?"

The judge replied: "If I throw some dust on your head, will that cause pain?"

"No," said the man.

"And If I add water?"

"It still would not hurt me."

"Well, if I knead the dust and water together and burn it into a brick and hit you on the head with it, what then?"

The man got the idea and went home.

"You say he left no money?"

"No. You see he lost his health getting wealthy, and then lost his wealth trying to get healthy."

To Rev. Robinson, Burlington, and other lovers of Texas the following joke is dedicated:

A new arrival in heaven found everything just as wonderful as he had expected except for one thing. There was a man sitting in one corner with a ball and chain tied to his leg. "How come this man is always tied?" the new arrival asked St. Peter.

"Well," replied St. Peter, "that man's from Texas, and every time we turn him loose, he tries to go back!"—Progressive Farmer.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

We are in the New Year, 1952, but all money to date was received by the churches during 1951. The college is operating on the calendar year. This would necessarily place the report today in the year 1951, which gives a total of $13,200.99 received by the college on conference apportionments for 1951. I wish to thank every church, Sunday school and individual that has contributed to the support of the college during the past year and to express the hope that you will stand by during 1952 and exert your influence in every way possible for the good of the college.

Many thanks for your cooperation and help during the year that is now history.

THE RICH YOUNG RULER.

gregation in Rome, he thought of the perfection of God over against human achievements, and said, of himself "The good that I would, I do not; but the evil that I would not, that I do. . . . Who will deliver me out of the body of this death? . . . I thank God through Jesus Christ."

A great poet pointed this principle by saying: "Let no man be like unto another; but let every man become like unto the highest!" You ask, how that can be: "Let each one be perfected in himself"—by patterning after the Christ.

In 1810 five young men, students at Williams College, took upon their hearts the burden of the evangelization of the world. They met in a field to pray, where they were overtaken by a storm. Against it they took shelter under the lea of a haystack. Here, during the storm, they dedicated themselves to the cause of missions. And so, by their consecration, the first American missionary society was born: the mother-missionary society of this country: The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. The churches and the seminaries followed their vision, their devotion. From that small seed has grown the vast and fruitful missionary work of America's churches. They obeyed the Master's command, to leave all and follow him.

Always there have been those who have heard and heeded the Master's call to seek perfection, like St. Paul of old, and these young men in our land and church. And always this word of the Master returns to haunt the selfish good of wordly standard.

The pilgrim spirit moveth
 Across the world this day.
 Uniting youth in service,
 To Jesus' holy way.
 It knows no race or kindred,
 No narrow, selfish plan,
 But only the fulfillment
 Of what our Lord began.
 We are fellow-pilgrims
 In the Master's plan
 To make of all the nations
 One brotherhood of man!

AMEN.

DOUBLE GOLDEN WEDDING ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION

By LOWRINE HALSTEAD, Church Secretary.

On Sunday, November 25, "open house" was observed in the Rosemont Christian Church social hall honoring the golden wedding anniversaries of two beloved couples—Dr. and Mrs. I. W. Johnson, and Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Hedley.

Maude Chase and Henry Chester Hedley were married on November 27, 1901, in Portsmouth, R. I., Episcopal Church by the late Rev. Mr. Pearce.

The Hedleys moved to Virginia in 1920 and became members of the Rosemont Church the same year. Both were active in the work of the church for a long time. Mr. Hedley sang in the choir for many years, taught the Men's Bible Class, and has served as trustee and deacon for thirty-one years. In September, 1951, he was one of five members presented with a loving cup for long and active service in the church. Mrs. Hedley has likewise rendered loving service in her church. She was active in the Ladies' Missionary Society and taught a Bible class from 1924 to 1944, when her health caused her to give up this work. The class has since been named the Maude Hedley Bible Class.

The Hedleys have three children: Mrs. Ruth Hassell of South Norfolk, Mrs. Elva De La Barre of Blacksburg, and Henry Hedley of Chesapeake Beach. They also have four grandchildren: Marjory and Betty Jane Hassell, and Peggy and Ronny Hedley. All were present at the celebration.

Bertie Ellenor and Isaac Walter Johnson were married in the Whaleyville, Va., Methodist Church, November 20, 1901, by the late Rev. E. M. Jordan.

Dr. Johnson began his pastoral work in 1898, becoming pastor of the churches at Oakland, Isle of Wight, Holland and Windsor. In 1903 he gave up the Isle of Wight and Windsor churches, but added Liberty Spring to his pastorate. Later, in 1906, he left the Holland church and went to Berea, Nansmond. From then until January, 1950, when he retired, he served the Oakland, Liberty and Berea churches. Since last July he has served as supply pastor for Rosemont, and he and Mrs. Johnson have endeared themselves to all of the people here.

During his ministry, Dr. Johnson has married 2827 couples. It would be wonderful if these couples could get his recipe for a long, happy married life.

Mrs. Johnson has been active in church work, too. She has been teacher, organist, choir member, leader in missionary work, and constant companion and helper to her husband in all his work. This happy team is still about the "Lord's business."

The social hall at Rosemont was decorated with candles and beautiful flowers, the gifts of the John Morrison and Maude Hedley Bible Classes. There was a lovely wedding cake for each couple, and other refreshments. Each couple was presented a $50 check to be sent the Elon Orphanage as a special offering in honor of their anniversaries. Edward Drinkard sang: "Smiling Through the Years," "I Walk Beside You," "Until" and "Because. Many friends were present to extend best wishes Rosemont had a rare treat in helping these two couples celebrate fifty years of devoted married life. Our great wish for them is many more years of happy traveling on "life's highway" together.

When All Is Done

While yet the morn was fresh and new,
I rose from out my couch of rest
And all the hours, the hot day through,
I tried to do my very best.
So in the field I plowed all day,
And with the oxen kept my pace;
And I grew weary in the way—
Great beads of sweat stood on my face.

I planted later, all day long
I sowed the seed with thoughtful care;
And, as I toiled, I sang a song
That seemed to fill with joy the air.
The rolling stones I raked aside,
So that the wide field faultless stood,
And I can say with honest pride,
I did the very best I could.

When, later, little weeds appeared,
I toiled with rake, and hoe, and spade;
Nor till the eventide had neared,
My earnest work aside I laid.
I strove the noisome weeds to kill,
To give the seed a chance to grow;
And, that I used some share of skill
I think the field will plainly show.

So I have plowed, and sowed, and toiled,
As best I knew and understood;
With faith my life was being filled
The harvest would be fair and good.
And, now, that I have done my part,
At early morn and evening late,
I can but with a trusting heart
The harvest of my efforts wait.

News Flashes

The editor is teaching Homilies and church music at Franklinton Institute this week.

Rev. Eugene Tally received eight members at Elm Avenue Church, Portsmouth, last Sunday.

Enthusiasm, interest, and attendance are at a high level in all the organizations and worship services in the Reidsville Church.

The Rev. Tucker G. Humphries, pastor of the Reidsville Church, has been elected as president of the Reidsville Ministerial Association for the year 1952.

Sympathy to Mrs. Duane Vore whose father, Mr. George Blackman, was killed in an accident last Sunday. Mr. Blackman resided at Haw River, N. C.

Dr. George Shepherd, former missionary to China under the American Board, has accepted a call to Central Congregational Church, Middleboro, Mass.

College Day will be observed in our churches on February 17 instead of February 3 as announced earlier. Include this in your calendar of events. Materials for a program and other suggestions will be mailed to the ministers soon.

Miss Sarah Jane Douglas and Mr. Clyde L. Bryan were united in marriage on November 29, 1951, at four o'clock in the afternoon, at the Long's Chapel parsonage. The vows were exchanged in the presence of Rev. E. J. Clawson, pastor of Long's Chapel. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Douglas of Burlington, N. C., Route 5. Mr. Bryan is the son of Mr. (deceased) and Mrs. Henry Bryan of Garner, N. C. Following a wedding trip to the mountains the couple are at home at Garner, N. C.

Rev. H. G. Council of Elizabethtown, New York, writes: "We have a new addition to our family, a son, Geoffrey Duerson Council, born December 17, 5:47 p. m., at the Moses-Ludington Hospital, Ticonderoga, New York, 7 pounds 12 ounces, a perfect baby in every respect. We are very happy over this addition to our family which now gives us three boys and two girls. Quite a coincidence that our last baby should be born at the same place that our twins were born and with the same doctor."

RAMSEUR CLASS HOLDS ANNUAL PARTY.

The Philathea Class of the Ramseur Christian Church held their annual Christmas party this year with Miss Mary Lee Craven as hostess. The class members usually exchange gifts among themselves but this year decided instead to bring gifts to wrap for the orphanage, giving a small prize for the most attractively wrapped gift. In this manner the class entered into one of the most interesting and enjoyable parties ever held. The gifts were delivered to the orphanage Sunday, December 16, by some members of the class. The class also remembered their teacher, Mrs. Sherman Maness, with a most attractive and useful gift.

The Bible class and young men's class have purchased an outdoor bulletin board for the church and expect to erect it as soon as the weather permits on the church grounds.

The Sunday school sponsored the annual Christmas program, "A Christmas Pantomime," depicting the Birth of Jesus.

Our many thanks to our new pastor for the printed programs and assistance he has given us for this service.

We feel that we have a good year before us and hope to accomplish much under the leadership of our most capable pastor, Rev. Clyde R. Fields.

MRS. SHERMAN MANESS.

BEVERLY HILLS PASTOR RESIGNS.

Rev. Robt T. Woodruff, Jr. has resigned as pastor of Beverly Hills Community Church, Burlington, N. C. He will remove to Winston-Salem, where he will engage in private business, continuing, however, to do supply work and other speaking engagements.

During his ministry at Beverly Hills a church has been organized and welded into a strong basic working organization. The grounds have been graded and seeded to lawn, and the parish house of Beverly Hills has been painted and waterproofed outside and decorated and equipped in the temporary sanctuary. The parsonage has been completed, being an ample dwelling for the pastor and his family and also providing auxiliary space for church activities in the full basement.

The church has developed a Junior Choir under the direction of Mrs. R. O. Wilkins, Jr., which has, in addition to taking part in several worship services, put on a well rounded musical program in connection with the church's Christmas Pageant. The church also has a going Sunday school with facilities for both young and old.

During the past year Beverly Hills has provided the community with opportunity to see several of the year's best religious films, and developed a church social life as well as religious services.

The church will announce next week the name of a pastor to continue the work.

MID-WINTER MEETING IN CLEVELAND.

Over 300 key Congregational Christian laymen and clergy will meet in Cleveland, Ohio, January 21-24, at the Cleveland Hotel for the Mid-winter Meeting of the Missions Council.

Primarily a working conference responsible for formulating the program of the Christian World Mission of the Congregational Christian Churches in America for the year 1952 these meetings will be conducted under the general theme, "Let the Church Bear the Message."

The Chaplain for the meetings will be Rev. Allen Hackett, minister of the Pilgrim Congregational Church, St. Louis, Missouri, recently of Honolulu, Hawaii. The program Chairman is Rev. Daniel Bliss of Greenwich, Connecticut, ex-U. S. Army Chaplain in World War II. Dr. Albert D. Stauffacher of New York City, minister of the Missions Council which is the joint promotional and educational unit of the various mission boards, is in general charge of the sessions.

Among the outstanding speakers will be: Dr. John C. Schroeder, Master of Calhoun College, Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut, Professor Charles J. Kennedy, Department of Economics of the University of Nebraska; Dean Liston Pope of Yale Divinity School; Dr. Alfred W. Swan of Madison, Wisconsin, and Rev. Howard F. Schomer of Chambon Sur-Lignon, France.

The Division of Church Extension and Evangelism of The Board of Home Missions will hold a pre-session luncheon Monday noon, January 21, with speakers fresh from unique and strategic pieces of service in high potential areas of Florida and northern California; the flood areas of Kansas, and sections of Utah where Protestants are a minority group among the Mormons.

To serve humanity where it needs us most. That is Our Christian World Mission. The American Board needs 45 new missionaries in 1952.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

AN EDITORIAL TOUR

When one has traveled from Southern Pines to Newport News, he has touched two geographical extremities of the Southern Convention. The Editor left Southern Pines on Monday afternoon of last week to attend a meeting of the Eastern North Carolina Ministers at Chapel Hill. It was a privilege and joy to hear the devotional service conducted by Rev. Kenneth M. Lindner of Fayetteville, and "The Reflections of a Christian Educator" by Dr. W. W. Sloan of the Elon faculty. Perhaps he will share these reflections with our readers.

A Sunday School Planning Conference was held following the ministerial meeting. Rev. Fred Register, president of the Sunday School Convention, conducted the conference. The good news is that Beginners and Primary teachers will have an all-day session with Miss Lela Anderson at Youngsville on February 2nd. Another Superintendents Conference will be held at Sanford on March 6. That program, practical and varied, is being planned.

We could not visit Chapel Hill without sensing the fact that Pastor Jackson and his people are highly elated over the prospect of having their church remodeled. Architectural feats were planned under the aegis of Dr. John R. Scotford. The Sunday School Planning Conference adjourned in time for the Missionary Society to come to order and hear a message by Mrs. F. C. Lester, ye Women's Page Editor.

The editor visited and spent the night with his mother, who has read The Sun throughout her married lifetime and still reads it from "kivver to kivver."

The Mission Board met last week at the Second Church, Norfolk. Those present for this policy-making meeting were: Mrs. John G. Truitt, who presided; Dr. F. C. Lester, Dr. H. S. Hardcastle; Revs. H. E. Robinson and T. G. Humphries; Mrs. W. B. Williams, Mrs. Russell Powell, Supt. W. T. Scott, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Mrs. Wm. T. Harrell, and the writer. Mrs. Truitt succeeds Dr. W. B. O'Neill as president. Some of us were surprised to learn that the net receipts for the year were not less than $72,872.05. What an achievement! Can we do better this year? We shall need to, for budgetary demands indicate that $80,000.00 will be asked. Details of our Missionary opportunities at home and abroad will appear as we approach Easter.

Members of the Board were pleased with the new location and construction of Second Church. Happy in location, adequate in facilities and striking in appearance, this church has taken a new lease on life. Pastor Neese and his congregation are to be commended for their vision, sagacity and courage on moving into this strategic situation. We hope to give you a pictorial view of this new church soon.

This meeting adjourned just in time for the Editor to reach Suffolk for a conference with Rev. Duane Vore, chairman of the Board of Publications. Chairman Vore reported that the financial status of The Sun is improving steadily. Publication notes were exchanged and agreement reached on a number of projects which may become apparent soon.

A trip back to Newport News to get the writer's family brought the opportunity of attending a Church Night Supper with Rev. A. Lanson Granger and members of his congregation. We returned to Southern Pines on Thursday and attended the annual supper and business conference of The Church of Wide Fellowship on Friday evening.

Grand work is being done on many fronts. There is abundant evidence of vitality among the churches of our Convention. We thank God, and take courage.

The Life of Mary

By MRS. JAMES M. PINNEY

It is not possible to consider Mary apart from Jesus, so what we will try to do in this story is to put ourselves, as far as possible, in Mary's position and go with her step by step as she faces the greatest privilege and the greatest problems that have come to any woman.

Who was this woman? Where was she born? Our data is meagre. She is mentioned in the Old Testament prophecies once; in the Gospels of Matthew and Luke, and twice in the Gospel of John. Only once is she mentioned in Mark and once in Acts. From these Scripture passages we have to construct her life.

The Gospels say nothing about her birth or family although the Apocryphal accounts give us the names of Anna and Joachim as her parents.

Mary was betrothed to a young man named Joseph, a carpenter by trade. He was a descendant of the House of David, and it is believed that Mary also belonged to that royal line.

According to the custom of the day, Mary remained at home for a year after her betrothal and perhaps it was during this time that her parents died. It was during this year also that the angel, Gabriel, appeared to Mary and told her that she was to be the mother of Jesus. It was enough to overwhelm the mind and heart of any maiden. She felt she had to tell someone her wonderful secret, and the only person she could talk to was her kinswoman, Elizabeth. So covering her head with a veil and carrying a basket containing food and gifts, she probably joined a caravan to go up to the hill country to the city of Juda. Here she found a surprising welcome, for Elizabeth, who was also with child by Divine favor, knew at once that Mary was to be the mother of the Messiah. These two women understood each other—Elizabeth had no jealousy but only joy, and she sang a hymn of praise to Mary. In Mary's response, she reveals herself as a woman of deep piety, of faith and spiritual insight.

Mary remained with Elizabeth for three months, and then made the long journey back to Nazareth. At home, she resumed her ordinary life among her people, but was now faced with the problem of Joseph's attitude on learning of the Annunciation. It would be impossible to imagine the disturbance in Joseph's heart, but he was a just man, and when the angel came to him he fully believed the words of the heavenly messenger and took Mary as his wife.

When it was time for the first general census, Mary accompanied Joseph to Bethlehem, and here it was that she met her great hour with simple fortitude under the most trying of circumstances. The birth of her son attracted no attention in the city of Bethlehem, but soon the shepherds came in great haste and told Mary that angels had appeared before them and told them that "a Saviour, Christ the Lord" was lying in a manger. How Mary must have rejoiced at the homage to her Son.

Mary and Joseph went to the temple in Jerusalem to present their child to the Lord as was required by law. Here they were met by Simeon, the prophet, who recognized the Christ Child. As the old man spoke they rejoiced in his wonderful testimony, even though it contained a prophecy for Mary's own life—"Yea, and a sword shall pierce through thine own soul." Every mother expects some sorrow, so Mary may not have paid too close attention to the poignant warning. At any rate that was in the future—now, she was filled with joy and thanksgiving.

We need not dwell on the flight to Egypt to escape the wrath of Herod, but we know that Mary's heart was filled with fear and forebodings. We know nothing of her life there, but it must have been a relief to Mary when they at last returned to their home in Nazareth. Here she watched her Son grow in wisdom and strength with the keenest of interest. Perhaps these years were the happiest of her life.

When Jesus was twelve years old, Mary and Joseph took him to the annual Passover in Jerusalem. It was on the return trip when they had gone a full day's journey that the absence of Jesus was noticed. Mary had trusted her Son to run ahead of the caravan and play with the other children, as he had never given her cause for worry. So we can easily imagine Mary's distress when her Son could not be found. After three days' search they found him in the temple, and Mary, because of her anxiety, spoke in a reproving voice to Jesus. When Jesus answered her, "Did you not know that I had to be in my Father's house?" Mary must have realized that her Son was slipping beyond her control into a realm where she found it difficult to follow.

During the next eighteen years Jesus worked as a carpenter in Nazareth and was the mainstay of the family because Joseph had died. Mary watched her son "cut his way forward in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and with men." She knew this was the plan of God for him and was happy.

When Jesus was thirty years old he began his public ministry, and Mary is kept in the background more and more, but her heart was with him all the time. She was present at the wedding feast in Cana with Jesus, and when there was no wine, she told her Son. She met with an apparent rebuff when Jesus said, "Woman, what have I to do with thee? My hour is not yet come." There is no disrespect in the word "woman" instead of "mother," but this translation implies that Mary had stepped beyond her prerogative in making suggestions about his Messianic work. Mary must not have been displeased or disconcerted, as she turned to the servants and said: "Whatever he may say to you, do it." These are the last recorded words of the Virgin Mary. Whether Mary had expected her Son to turn water into wine we do not know, but surely that miracle added to her joy and pride in her wondrous Son.

At least two years passed before we have another definite word of Mary. She heard that Jesus was so busy in his ministry that he scarcely had time to eat or rest. We can imagine her solicitude for her Son; she felt she must interfere. So Mary made the journey to Capernaum and sent word to Jesus that she and his brethren were outside desiring to speak with Note—The above article was sent in by Mrs. Ruth H. Strong of Chapel Hill, N. C., who writes: "Our devotional study in our Women's Fellowship this year has been the lives of various women in the Bible. 'The Life of Mary' was written by one of our members, and I think it will be enjoyed by all readers for Christmas. The various sources of her information were 'Women of the Bible,' Rev. A. T. Lundholm; 'The Apocryphal New Testament,' translated by M. R. James; 'The Mother of Jesus,' A. T. Robertson, D. D.; 'Mary of Nazareth,' I. Giordani." The story was received too late for the Christmas issue, but we believe it may still be enjoyed.—Mg. Ed.

CHRISTMAS PROGRAM.

The annual Christmas Program of the church was presented at Long's Chapel on Sunday night, December 16, 1951, at 7:30 p. m. The program was planned and directed by teachers of the younger classes in the Sunday school. The program presentation was highly commendable and most favorably received. Following the program a Christmas treat was presented to all members of the Sunday school.

ROSEMONT CHURCH.

In the annual business session of the Rosemont Church, held at the beginning of the first quarter of the present conference year, three of our faithful deacons: H. C. Hedley, O. S. Mills and A. M. Pugh were presented with a beautiful silver loving cup each for the many years of devoted service rendered during their term of office. Mr. H. L. Bondurant, who has served for 34 years as church treasurer, was also presented a silver loving cup by the church and a number of the friends of the church presented to him a Hamilton gold wrist watch as a token of their appreciation of his faithful service. Then Mr. H. R. Morrison who has been a faithful superintendent of the Sunday school for many years was also presented with a silver loving cup. These tokens of appreciation reflected the spirit of the church and paid due tribute to these worthy workers in the church.

In November the church honored deacon H. C. Hedley and his wife and the supply pastor and his wife in a double reception celebrating the golden wedding anniversary of the two couples: the Johnsons having been married November 20, 1901 and the Hedleys November 27, 1901. This was a very happy occasion for all who attended.

In December the church sent to the Christian Missionary Association a total of $250.00; the amount paid in December, 1950, was $25.00.

At the quarterly conference held recently the treasurer's report showed a balance on hand of more than $2,000.00 for current expenses. The church has voted to meet the Convention and Conference apportionments in full for the current year. Plans are under way to raise the full request for the Elon College Sustaining Fund for this year.

At a called conference this week a call was extended to Rev. Melvin Dollar of Hunterdale, Franklin, Va., to serve as pastor beginning in March. He was indicated that he will accept this call.

Rosemont is located in a rapidly growing part of South Norfolk, and this church faces the greatest opportunity of its history. A new addition to the Sunday school building is contemplated, and should be under construction at an early date. Congratulations to Rosemont.

I. W. JOHNSON.

THE McCAULEYS RECUPERATE FOLLOWING ACCIDENT.

On December 27, 1951, after having visited our son, J. Franklin, at Raleigh, N. C., we started to see our youngest son, Larry and family, in Burlington, N. C. Just two miles out from Raleigh we had a headon collision with another car, from Greensboro, N. C. All of us suffered shock, bruises and general shake-up. I received a fractured knee-cap and some internal injuries; Larry a head and nose cut. Geraldine was cut over eyes by flying glass and bruised on body. Jane and Mrs. McCauley had ligaments pulled from shoulders and back, with head and neck injuries—none of which we hope will be too serious.

Both cars were taken in by the wrecker. I don't know whether they can be repaired or not. All of us were treated at Rex Hospital.

I'm confined in my room, which is pretty hard on me as a teacher and preacher. But could you see the cars involved in the wreck you would marvel, as everyone else has, that we could possibly be alive. For that we are most grateful.

On arriving home, we found our home being re-decorated; so our good friends and neighbors, the Lewis Tomlinsons, took us in, bag and baggage, for seven days. Such generosity and thoughtfulness of everyone overwhelms us. Everyone has been so kind and good, that we can't find words to express our feelings. Daily we thank God for these folks who have been so kind and have made our burdens easier to bear.

Even though our family reunion was interrupted (we never arrived at Larry's home) we have so much to be grateful for.

We would like to take this means of expressing our appreciation to all who have sent telegrams, cards, letters, called, and taken us into their hearts and homes during these days. Our prayer daily is, that, in some way, we may in part repay them and be of greater service to them and to Him, whom we feel sure was near and around us.

JOSEPH E. McCAULEY, AND FAMILY, Waverly, Va.

NEWS FROM REIDSVILLE CHURCH.

The Christmas season at the Reidsville Church was a happy and a busy time for its entire membership and its many friends. From December 8 on almost every night some class or organization was celebrating with a party, and in many instances there were several on the same night. Each was well attended, and each was well carried out.

One of the highlights of the entire program was the Sunday school Christmas party which Mr. Charlie McKinney and his able staff of teachers planned well. The young people's department of the church was decorated beautifully and was filled to an overflow with the young children of the church and their parents and friends. Mrs. Emma Gerringer, Superintendent of the Young People's Department, presented a lovely Christmas program which was climaxed by the coming of Santa Claus with his box of gifts and treats for all.

Another feature of the Christmas program was the Women's Auxiliary party at which time all eleven circles of the society met together, and a Christmas program was presented under the leadership of Mrs. Humphries, assisted by the spiritual life committee. Carols were sung, gifts were exchanged, and a white Christmas was brought for less fortunate people.

The highlights of the entire Christmas program was the service of carols and lights, which was presented on Sunday night, December 23. All three choirs of the church, numbering about sixty voices, under the direction of Miss Marian Foust, minister of music of the church, participated in the service. All of the glorious carols of the season were sung as the Christmas story was read from the Holy Bible. The Rev. Tucker G. Humphries, pastor of the church, brought a Christmas message, "Every-

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

ASHEBORO.

Sunday morning, January 6, Mrs. Smith and I dove to Asheboro, North Carolina, to attend services in our church there and worship with that congregation. Dr. F. C. Lester is the pastor. It was a most unfavorable day to get away from the home fire-side. Unusual for this section of the country, there were constant snow flurries. At time for church the snow was coming down in a hurry. In spite of the unfavorable weather, there was a good congregation, men, women, and children of all ages. A junior choir, ages eight to ten, opened the service with a prelude very well done. The whole service was a semi-formal service with the minister in charge. He gave a good message for the New Year, an impressive communion service, and a worshipful occasion. It was good to be there.

This congregation worships in a comparatively new building. It is not an expensive structure but an adequate one, sufficient to house a live, spiritual congregation and a growing church. It is a growing church. There were 40 additions to the membership in 1951. They have set as their goal 100 for 1952. I believe in setting goals. If our churches would think more about winning the unsaved in the communities to Christ and into the membership of the church, more about quickening the lives of the indolent members of the church, and less about "dead members" as they call it, and the "revision" of their rolls, the churches would grow more rapidly and the kingdom would come faster and more powerful.

One visitor who is a member of the church elsewhere remarked to me, "We have needed a church in Asheboro for a long, long time, and now we have it. I am delighted to see it." I am sure that this faithful member expressed the feeling of many other members in the Western Conference and in The Southern Convention as for that. Years ago, as church history relates and many who are now living remember, we did have a church in Asheboro, located on Main Street. It was a fairly good church with a good membership. At one time this church entertained The Southern Convention. The church was lost in a severe storm that swept Asheboro, and it was never rebuilt. The lot, which is a most valuable one at present, was disposed of and I presume at a low figure compared with current prices. It seems unfortunate that our denomination has lost all these years in this thriving and growing city, but it is gratifying that we have there now an inviting church, a growing congregation, and a very efficient minister. Mr. Lester and his family are doing excellent work and making a significant contribution, not only to the church in Asheboro and to the churches of the Western Conference, but to The Southern Convention as well. This comparatively new church is supporting all the enterprises of the denomination including the college. At present there are three members of this congregation who are students at Elon College, one a ministerial student. The church meets all its apportionments for the college including the Sustaining Fund. More power to this church, and the blessings of God upon their efforts during the year 1952 and all the years thereafter.

THE SUSTAINING FUND.

We are now in the College Period. Our churches have the privilege and are given the opportunity of complying with The Convention's request by contributing to the Sustaining Fund in the amount of $1 per member. We should be reminded that in The Convention's request for this additional and much needed support for our college, it directed that the amount for each local church should be determined by the enrollment reported to The Convention the previous year. This was intended to remove the temptation of a church, if a church may be tempted, to "revise" its membership roll that the obligation might be lowered to what is called "active" membership.

Only 91 of our churches complied with the request of The Convention, but the ones that did comply gave in sufficient amounts totaling $11,669.00 which made it possible for the college to stay "out of the red" as of June 1, 1951, which is the close of the college fiscal year. While we did not reach the goal, the amount contributed saved the college a tremendous amount of trouble and of embarrassment. It is to be hoped, to be sure, that the Sustaining Fund will be more successful this year than last. Surely it will. Our churches know of the need and of the plight of the college and how important it is to give this meager assistance to our institution that is so essential to our program and progress.

Liberty Spring Church has already sent in its 1952 Sustaining Fund amount, $350. Ingram Church has sent in $75 on its 1952 allotment. These are good examples for the other 190-odd churches in The Convention.

Let every church make its resolve now that for the sake of our entire church program, it will raise its Sustaining Fund money.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

This is a new year, 1952. This is the College Period, January and February,—not a very favorable time to raise money but an excellent opportunity to do some good publicizing, to tell our people about the college, its magnificent history of service to the denomination and to the whole program of Christian education, of its fine and effective service to the hundreds of young people who come to its campus annually for instruction, preparation and guidance. How empty our church appeal and our church program would seem without our college, and how impoverished our church leadership would be without the contributions of Christian higher education that are made week after week and year after year by our college. So important is this service that it must be supported generously and adequately that its flow of results may continue to our church's pulpits and to other denominations and to the whole Christian movement.

This is a fine time for the ministers of the churches to talk to their young people about Elon College, about the necessity of our own church people attending our own church college, that together we may know about our church and its workings so that in the years to come we shall not only an informed membership but a membership with a solidarity of purpose and determination. Our churches not only help their young people when they direct them to Elon College, but they make a contribution to their church in the days and years to come.

MISS CREW IN THIS AREA.

Miss Angie Crew, missionary to Japan on furlough in this country, will be in The Southern Convention for several week, having arrived in our area yesterday (Wednesday, January 16). Because her time is short, her visits to churehes will be limited to those who have written Miss Pattie Lee Coghill inviting her visit to them.

While there may be echanges in her schedule, at last report she would speak in the following places:

Tentative Schedule.

January 16, arrive in Asheboro; 17, Albemarle; 18, Spoon's Chapel; 19, Mt. Bethel; 20, Union Ridge; 21, Elon College; 22, Winston Salem; 23, Asheboro; 24, Southern Pines; 25, Fuller's Chapel; 27, Holland Church; 30, Newport News; 31, South Norfolk.

The Union Christian Church near Burlington is especially inviting all those in nearby churches who would like to hear Miss Crew to visit them on Sunday evening, January 20.

Let us make the most of this opportunity to hear Angie Crew before she returns to Japan this spring.

AN APOLOGY.

Our life is about as calm as a "three ring circus" and we are often the perfect example of an unorganized family. Therefore, it is not strange if sometimes mail becomes misplaced—although it might be a good reason for changing editors for this page!

Recently when my husband cleaned out his desk in the study at the church there came to light two reports from local women's socieites which should have been published on this page some time ago. I apologize for the delay. The articles are given below. (Incidentally, if any other society has sent their report to me and it has failed to appear, please let me know so I can check on it.)

UNION GROVE.

The Ladies' Missionary Society of Union Grove Congregational Christian Church have held monthly meeting this year with good programs using the packet.

At our March meeting Mrs. Clyde Fields told the story of the Crucifixion using a flannelgraph board.

At our April meeting we were fortunate to have Miss Edith Preusse, a returned missionary from India, to come and speak to our group and some visitors.

Rev. Dick Jackson came to our church and showed some beautiful pictures of China and gave an interesting talk. This service was well attended.

We sent a box of clothing to the Christian orphanage at Elon College, N. C.

Flavoring and eards were sold to make money. From the proceeds we gave a donation of $100 to the Building Fund to help brick veneer the church which is nearing completion.

Our members participated in "World Day of Prayer" and sponsored a "May Fellowship Day" program by having a family picnic at the church, after which Rev. Clyde Fields, our pastor, gave an interesting talk.

We attended a joint book review at the parsonage where Mrs. Fred Allen reviewed "Once There Were Two Churches."

We reorganized at our August meeting. We have 26 members and are striving for more members and better work in the coming year.

SHALLOW WELL.

The Maggie I. Morgan Missionary Society of Shallow Well Church held its September meeting in the home of Mrs. James Watson with twenty-eight members present.

Mrs. Lillian Rosser presided over a brief business session, after which Mrs. R. T. Grissom gave the charge for the installation of the new officers in an impressive candlelight ceremony.

Officers instaled were:

Mrs. Lillian Rosser, president; Mrs. Robert Buchanon, vice-president, Mrs. James Watson, treasurer; Mrs. Lonnie Watson, treasurer of Ladies' Aid.

Mrs. Lila Mae Campbell was given a Life Membership for her faithful work in our society and also in our Woman's Conference.

Mrs. Lila Mae Campbell, Mrs. Lois Watson and Mrs. Paul Rosser gave an interesting program on "Democracy in the Home," after which the hostess served lime sherbet, ginger ale, nuts and cookies.

MRS. LONNIE WATSON.

MISS ANGIE CREW TO SPEAK AT WAKEFIELD, VA.

Miss Angie Crew will be the guest of a group of Eastern Virginia Missionary Societies on Tuesday evening, January, 29, at the Wakefield Christian Church. This will be one of the few chances that our women will have to hear Miss Crew before she returns to Japan. Miss Crew is a pleasant speaker and one who can speak with the authority of experience. No one who has the opportunity to hear her should fall to do so. Members of the societies of the Windsor, Franklin, Hopewell, Waverly and Bethlehem groups are especially urged to join with the Wakefield group upon this occasion. Of course, women—and men too—from other groups will be more than welcome. The Youth Fellowship of the Wakefield Church will conduct the devotionals for this meeting and also will render special music.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Today is the birthday of Benjamin Franklin who was a very great American. He was one of the first men in the New World to propose that the colonies unite. Soon after the Declaration of Independence was signed he went to Paris wearing an old brown coat that he planned to wear until real independence was achieved. He was very popular with the French people; so popular, in fact, he persuaded the French to give money and aid to the Americans.

He loved Philadelphia, his home city, and there founded the magazine Saturday Evening Post which is still on newsstands, or so the story goes. He experimented with electricity with a string, key and kite and a thunderstorm made by God; or so the story goes. And he was well known in his day for witty sayings and curious attitudes. Ben Franklin was known by some as a "free thinker" which meant he was a liberal.

One wonders if his old, shabby, brown coat lasted until freedom was a reality in America. One can almost see the portly old gentleman as he shuffled around in comfortable clothing shocking and attracting people at the same time with his ideas and funny sayings. He was the kind of American we need today: free thinking, individualistic and sturdy.

Since last week's column mentioned "Honk Kong" we have seen the Jackson family and Mrs. Jackson said the Chinese spoken was Mandarin and carried with it a very heavy American accent! We really didn't know! The Chinese nursery tune was authentic however as were the street scenes of the city. Mr. and Mrs. Jackson sailed on the sister ship of the President Line which was shown in the Hong Kong Harbor.

While traveling in Virginia last week we stopped at one of our favorite places, the Chuckatuck Mill which has been grinding corn meal for over a hundred years, since 1820 actually. A visit to a mill is a treat that many present day boys and girls have missed. Located by water the great wheels turn, the meal runs out and a great white cloud settles on the miller, floor, rafters, walls and visitors. Oldtimers claim that water ground meal is far better than machinery made meal. Chuckatuck Mill must be one of the oldest in Tidewater now running and has long been in the Godwin family.

The ancient god for whom the month of January was named had two faces: one to face the past, one to face the future. In a visit to an old mill one realizes that the past does mix with the present, even the future, and often does it profitably. As you grow up, young friends, do not lean to the past nor to the future but take a happy mixture of both.

AND ONE TO GROW ON!

By JANICE A. McDONALD.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Happy birth-day, dear Bobby; happy birth-day to you!" Everyone sang to Bobby. He stood there smiling, enjoying it. Yesterday he was four. Now he was five and a "big boy." He had a birthday cake with a candle for each year and an extra one "to grow on."

And one to grow on. What a wonderful phrase that is to a child. Why? Because he thinks to himself, "Someday I'll be big and grown-up and can do anything I want to do!"

But it seemed like a slow process to Bobby. First he must go to kindergarten, and then—so slowly—to one grade after another: first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and so on, until, finally, he finishes the eighth and is ready for high school.

Bobby grew out of childhood. Now he was older, wiser, intellectually more inquiring. From a wide-eyed youngster, who believed that everything his parents said was wonderful and true, he became a thoughtful youth, who sometimes criticized his parents and spent time planning what he would do for his life work.

Bobby was a nice "clean-cut" boy. He grew into a self-reliant young man. He had friends, hobbies, and a definite aim in life. He became interested in his parents as people, and he was annoyed when his mother barked back to his babyhood days. His conversation became a mixture of boyish talk about "the crowd" or his "girl" and serious comments about world affairs; at one time the football team, at another deep thoughts about life.

Bobby might have stopped growing when he was graduated from high school. Many boys do. The responsibilities that come with maturity sometimes force all the youth's energies into doing well with his job and settling down to marriage. Thus evenings and week ends are often spent in mere time-passing social activities and empty evenings.

Only a few individuals out of large groups of people realized that education should continue all through life, that growing—learning new skills and having new interests—keeps the batteries of the mind charged, the personality alive, and prevents the sieges of boredom that must be the lot of the many whose leisure is continuously spent in "killing" time by going out with "the crowd."

As Bobby's fifth birthday is celebrated and he is given wishes to be happy and a candle "to grow on," the guests are not thinking of this kind of growth, and, of course, Bobby knows nothing of it. It is later, when he is an adolescent, that he becomes critical of all who influenced him in his growing or in his lack of it.

What stimulus is there, for instance, for Bobby to go further in school, to be a boy scout leader, to become a "ham" radio operator, to take lessons on a musical instrument, or to sing in a choir if Dad just yawns behind a newspaper, listens to the radio, and goes to the movies once a week? What spur to his growing ambitions is his Mother if she merely listens to the radio, crochets, and turns the pages of a woman's magazine as her only occupations outside of housework?

Bobby and his parents would be happier and, also, more interesting to themselves and others if all three of them were bent on growing. This might come about through gardening, photography, carpentry, painting, studying a language or music. It does not so much matter what the avocation is just so long as it is something different from the daily routine.

Growing, after you have left school, is like opening windows. It takes patience, pressure, and tenacity of purpose to let in this kind of fresh air. The wise adult keeps on doing it, nevertheless, and influences his children to do likewise.

"I WAS SICK, AND YE VISITED ME."

About 20 of the Congregational Christian girls at Woman's College in Greensboro have organized a fellowship group, which meets the first Friday of each month. Already they are making their influence felt by the community. During the month of January they have taken as their project a Sunday school. This Sunday school is unable to come to them, so they go to the pupils. These young ladies are going each Sunday evening during this month to the Polio Hospital in Greensboro. There they teach words of Jesus and the ways of the Christ to about 65 patients.

Billie Masters, of Henderson, is the chairman of this group; Joan Scott, of Greensboro, the program chairman; Ann Grissom, Liberty Vance, the membership chairman; and Nancy Shankle, Troy, is the service chairman.

There is a committee from the First Congregational Christian Church in Greensboro that works with this group. This committee includes Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, who is counselor for the group, Mrs. William O. Truitt, Mrs. J. H. Rountree, and Miss Margaret Rowland.

Friday night, January 11, a group of boys were invited from Elon to share in their program. Rev. Wayne Peck, assistant pastor of the First E and R Church in Greensboro, addressed the group on the many interesting jobs awaiting young Christians. After the worship service came a delicious supper and several games, which were greatly enjoyed by everyone present. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Director of the Board of Religious Education of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, was guest of honor.

COLLEGE STUDENTS IN WINSTON-SALEM CHURCH.

"What Makes the Church the last Sunday morning, December 30, Church?" was the topic discussed 1951, at the morning service in our Winston-Salem Church. This was taken in part from the Youth Fellowship Kit, Volume 8. Those taking part and their subjects were:

Scripture Reading (Matt. 2:11-21), Warren Batell of the Brown Gray Medical School; "A Letter to the Emperor," Roger Jackson of State College; "The Church of the Middle Ages," Johnny Penry of University of N. C.; "The Modern Church," Irvin Kelly of High Point College; "Pliny Goes to Church to see what makes the Church the Church," Helen Jackson of Elon College; "The Secret of the Church," Rita Mc Kerley of Duke University. The pastor gave connecting thoughts between each speech.

Highlights of the service came when Miss Rita Mc Kerley and her parents united with the church on letter of transfer. It is good to have such fine young people in our Winston-Salem Church. They give to all of us a sense of striving to become better prepared for the work of tomorrow. All of the above students are now members of the church and are doing their share in the work of the church.

Came the end of the year and they gathered at the parsonage with the parsonage family for breakfast and devotions. Following breakfast the most enjoyable "bull session" took place. College students are on their toes in these days and it behooves any church to learn to know them and keep them associated with the church.

W. J. ANDES.

LENTEN DEVOTIONS.

Thirty-three years ago the war to end wars closed with an armistice. A day was set aside to commemorate this happy event.

Now, six years after a vastly more disastrous second World War, the American people have learned that "armistice" means only a temporary peace. We have learned that peace, justice, reason, are only empty words unless backed by force. We have learned that national policy is not a matter of white papers and diplomatic meetings, but something we must be prepared to die for.

To our young men who are doing the fighting today, there are no small wars. In Korea, or anywhere, "the guns are just as heavy and the dead are just as dead."

Twice in one lifetime we have tried to build peace. Both times we have failed. And both times God has been kept from the peace table—the first time because the world was "too busy"—the second time because God was barred by Communism. Despite the Bible warning that "Unless the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it," we have tried to build a world peace without his aid.

As we enter the Lenten season of this year, let us as young people turn to Christ for help and guidance. Upon the shoulders of our youth of today rests the destiny of our America of tomorrow. And if we return to religion and to our individual faith in God, our labors will not be in vain. Let's all help by truly practicing day by day the principles of Christianity.

As the Southern Convention Personal Action Chairman, I urge our young people to us the Lenten Devotions for Young People. These readings will help you grow in spiritual discipline. Each day's reading indicates one of Jesus' teachings. You will learn a great deal about what Jesus had to say in regard to some of the deep experiences of life.

Thousands and thousands of copies of these booklets are sold each year, not only in our denomination, but in many other denominations as well. Lent begins February 27, and I urge you to order your copies now. The booklets cost five cents per copy in any quantity. Your orders should be sent to The Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Mass. Get your orders in as early as possible because the supply sometimes is exhausted.

FELLOWSHIP RALLY AT RAMSEUR.

On Sunday afternoon, December 30, 1951, the Pleasant Ridge Congregational Christian Church, on Ramsey, Route 1, was host to the Pilgrim Fellowship Rally of the Western North Carolina Conference.

Everyone of the approximately two hundred and fifty persons present seemed to enjoy the program of the afternoon. A panel discussion proved to be interesting to all.

After supper in the recreation room of the church, the Pleasant Ridge young people presented a Christmas Cantata entitled, "The Lost Carol."

NICODEMUS, A HESITANT FOLLOWER.

LESSON IV—JANUARY 27, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: Truly, truly, I say unto you, unless one is born anew he cannot see the Kingdom of God.—John 3:3.

LESSON TEXT: John 3:1-10; 7:45-52.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matthew 10:32-39.

Pen Portraits of Nicodemus.

We have four pen portraits of Nicodemus. John gives us three of them. And the apocryphal Gosepl of Nicodemus, gives us the other. The ones in the Gospel of John, which are more or less familiar to the readers of the Bible—and John is the only Gospel writer who tells us anything about Nicodemus—will be discussed in more or less detail. It might be of interest to state that according to the Gospel of Nicodemus and other legendary works, Nicodemus gave evidence in favor of Christ at the trial before Pilate, that he was deposed from his office as a member of the Sanhedrin, and that he was baptized by Peter and John. He is said to have been buried in a common grave, alongside of Gamaliel and Stephen. So much for information about Nicodemus outside the gospels. Now for such information as the Gospel of John gives.

Nicodemus Comes to Jesus at Night.

The fullest and best known story about Nicodemus concerns his visit to Jesus by night. In it is embedded the teaching which Jesus gave concerning the "New Birth"—its necessity, its mystery, its reality, and appended to it are the immortal and well-known words, John 3:16: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life," and the comment on these words. In this story, there is more than enough to fill many pages of THE CHRISTIAN SUN if any detailed exposition of the words were given. But inasmuch as the lesson is a study of the character of Nicodemus as a follower of Jesus, emphasis will be placed upon that. What kind of man was Nicodemus? What did he do? What was his relationship to Christ? In what sense does he belong in this series of lessons which is devoted to "The Early Followers of Jesus?"

He was, of course, Jew. He was "a ruler of the Jews" a member of the Sanhedrin which was the highest ecclesiastical tribunal of the Jewish nation. This meant that he was a man of prestige, power, and perhaps of possessions. He was a "teacher, at least Jesus referred to him as such. Perhaps most significant of all he was a Pharisee, a member of the "anti-Christ party, which fought Christ from the start, and finally stained their hands with his blood. He was cultured, refined, respectable, thoughtful, and devout and religious. In spite of all this, he was dissatisfied, spiritually hungry. It was this fact that led him to come to Jesus. His contacts with, or his information about Jesus, convinced him that this young Galilean peasant had something that he did not have. Unlike most of his fellow-Pharisees, he was teachable, humble, willing to learn.

Much has been made of the fact that Nicodemus came to Jesus by night, as if he were afraid of what people would say, or was ashamed to have it known that he had come. Much has been said about his lack of courage. More ought to be said about the fact that he came to Jesus at all, and of the courage that it took for him to come to Jesus. It took a lot of courage for this older man, wealthy, well-established, acknowledged religious leader to come to this young Galilean, unaccredited teacher to learn from him the secret of a richer, fuller inner life, and the way of the Kingdom of God. To be sure, Nicodemus was faint-hearted in faith, and timid and hesitant in action, but he did not lack courage, either physical or moral, as his later actions demonstrated. The tragedy in the situation is, of course, the fact that when Jesus did initiate him into the deeper mysteries of the way into the Kingdom, and invited him to yield to the influence of the spirit which alone could make it possible for him to "see" and "enter" the Kingdom, Nicodemus did not go all the way. He was a friend of Jesus, an admirer of Jesus, but not a follower. That is bad, but alas there are a great host of Nicodemuses in the world and in the church today, men and women, young people who admire Jesus but who do not adventure with him, who are his friends but not his followers, who yearn for him but do not yield to him. Like so many people today, he thought he could get into the Kingdom by intellectual quest, that he could find peace and joy in an explanation, instead of through an experience. Like so many of us, he lacked decision of character. He knew what to do, but he was unwilling to do it. He missed the joy of the waters of salvation because he stood on the bank and refused to take the plunge.

Nicodemus Defends the Civil Rights of Jesus.

In his second pen-portrait, John show Nicodemus as a friend of Jesus, defending his "civil rights." Frustrated and frustrated because the officers which they had sent to arrest Jesus, had returned without him, and impressed by him, these Pharisees were about to resort to violence against Jesus. Nicodemus reminded them of the rights of a Jewish citizen under law, stating that they had no right to judge Jesus, until they had first heard him, and knew what he was doing, or had done. It took courage to say this. Nicodemus's friendship for Jesus was deepening, and coming closer to discipleship. He was met with scorn and ridicule, but he stuck by his guns. One wishes that those who are friends of Jesus would more often bear witness to their loyalty to him as did Nicodemus.

Nicodemus Openly Professes Discipleship for Christ.

The last pen-portrait, shows how Nicodemus, by an act of reverence and in a public way, shows his discipleship for Christ. Out of his wealth he provided a hundred pounds weight of myrrh and aloes and helped to embalm the body of his dead Lord. It took courage to do this—never had the cause of Christ been more unpopular. Never were his fortunes at a lower ebb, humanly speaking. But Nicodemus boldly nailed his flag to the mast and let all the world know that at long last he was a disciple of Jesus. It was, of course, too bad that it was too little, too late. But it is a dramatic expression of how the man's naturally hesitant faith and timidity of action were overcome by the working of God's Spirit, and of how belief in the Son of Man is in truth a new birth, and entrance into eternal life.

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Among the very large number of Christmas cards I received at the Christmas season was this one:

Dear Dr. Truitt:

I hope you have a Merry Christmas. You are very good and I love you. Love.

ELLA JEAN.

It was a pretty card, and was written with lead pencil, and the writing was wobbly as though it might fall down any time. It did not begin at the right place, and it ended very shortly after it began, but it said something! She is a freckle-face, and too fat, but everybody here thinks she is big with being kind and helpful and ready to do everything just as right as she can. The little card didn't say a word about "Happy New Year," but it made quite a bid for my happiness without saying so. That is just like kindness, it talks right on days and days after the deed is done.

And speaking of kindness, night before last I carried a car load of our high school girls to see one of our basketball games. I had worked hard all day, but at supper time the telephone rang: "Please, Dr. Truitt, take us to see the game tonight." I stammered and stuttered but went. I hated to let the girls down on one of the conference games. Well, sir, during the half I stepped out the door for a bit of fresh air, and to rest my ears from two high school's yelling supporters. A gentleman followed me. Was I the superintendent of the orphanage. Yes, sir. I thought so, you know I have a little piece of money for you. I told him I was glad I came to the game. He handed me $50.00. I have three children myself, said he, and their mother and I appreciate God's goodness to us so much we wish to express a part of our gratitude in this way. (Yes, said the girl, just like you say, Dr. Truitt, kindness pays).

From Saugertie, New York, comes today a check for $15.00: "The money was a special collection through mite-boxes and given at Christmas time." The letter went on to say other nice things. And how about those checks from Newport News? There is a big story of kindness back of them—the kindness of our good friend, C. D. West. It is so good to have others helping the orphanage. That is the secret of its success—others! True we try pretty hard here to do our part, but after all the final results rest upon others—the good people who think of us, and pray for us, and help us. Thank you everyone.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

AMONG OUR CHURCHES.

 where, Everywhere, Christmas To-night." The climax of the service was reached when in a blackened out church each individual worshipper lighted his candle from the candles of the ushers and held them high as "Silent Night, Holy Night" and the benediction concluded the service. In spite of competition from every church in Reidsville on this date, our church was filled to an overflow. It was a glorious service, and as our pastor expresses it, perhaps the most beautiful service of the year in this church.

There were other things besides parties and good times indulged in by the church at this holy season of the year. Through the services of worship, entertainment, and gatherings the real spirit of the day was caught, and every organization and most of the members shared in some way in making the less fortunate of our community happier. On the Saturday before Christmas our pastor, Mr. Claud Somers, and Mr. Claud Garrison loaded a truck with baskets of food, toys, and presents and played Santa Claus to some who would have had no Christmas but for the generosity of the people of this church. It was a busy season; it was a happy season for all.

WARREN MATTHEWS PREACHES AT LIBERTY VANCE.

"The Importance of Beginning" was the topic used Sunday, January 6, by the Rev. Warren Matthews at Liberty Congregational Christian Church (Epsom). He chose for his scripture referenece Joshua 3:1-11, a description of a group of people about to make a beginning.

The Hebrews were camped beside the river Jordan. On the other side, they could view the Promised Land, the place they had longed so much to reach; the place they had been told was flowing with milk and honey. Were they selfish in their efforts and was each one trying to secure the best place? No, they wanted a new beginning and were seeking a good one. So they turned to Joshua to direct them. Joshua made a few things clear to them. First, he said, you have not been this way before. Some will tell you it's a place of plenty flowing with milk and honey, others will say the place is full of giants to capture you. But Joshua told them he thought there was trouble ahead and they had to be ready to do their best.

What is ahead for us this New Year? asked the young minister. Some forecast the best year yet, others predict war and doom. But he said the year of 1952 is a Gift from God, and should be used accordingly. Ask yourself the question, "How am I going to use this gift?" He urged that we have faith and make the most of it. He insisted that we make a new and better beginning in order to make this year a most successful one. He directed his listeners to do what Joshua said do: Sanctify yourself, clean up. We must have a physical and moral cleansing. A Divine Plan is what Joshua offered.

What does this command mean to us? What is the meaning of "Sanctify Yourself?" What and how does it affect a new beginning for a New Year? What about our resolutions? Do we search for loopholes to get around doing the things we resolve to do? Do we have a fault-finding attitude? he asked! Are we doing anything about it? Or are we sitting around criticising? Often what we find wrong with other people are faults we ourselves possess. Let's get ourselves right, so we can begin the new year in the right way. Sometimes the inability to understand others causes criticism. This we would avoid if possible.

Joshua admitted he didn't know what was ahead, but said follow God's will and you will come out victorious. What are we going to follow this year? Leaders are needed. Where are we going to get our leadership? When so many leaders will take over new responsibilities, follow God's plan in choosing these leaders.

The young minister offered the Bible as a guide and direction for following God. All that follow this guide will come out victorious. To take advantage of the new year and to make the best of it, study your Bible, and it will enable you to begin a new year according to the Divine Plan of God which the year of 1952 is a part of. Listen to the teaching of Joshua when he says, "Sanctify yourselves, clean up. This is a Divine Plan. Let's make a new beginning."

THE FAMILY FARM.

What does it mean to be a Christian family on a farm?

The Reverend Kenneth McCrea, pastor of Church of Christ, Greensboro, Vermont, thought the question worth taking time and trouble to answer. With the aid of interested laymen he initiated an Institute on the Church and the Family Farm. Seven other parishes in the area supported it.

An enthusiastic group of more than 90 people attended the Institute to listen to qualified speakers and to discuss the basic principles of Christianity, applying them specifically to the life of the farm family. They anchored their discussion to a definition of an ideal family farm written by Christians who believe that the God-given responsibilities and relationships of the home are still central in the life of Protestant Christianity.

At the end of an all-day session, the members of the Institute outlined their conclusions. They found that (1) 4-H clubs promote the best in farming life; (2) Discussion groups such as theirs, followed by subsequent action, can be highly successful; (3) Special action groups which help young people to become good farm owners through financial or advisory aid must be established; (4) Similar Institutes should be held annually, and the topics they promote carried over for discussion in local churches.

TESTIMONY FROM AFRICA.

There is no place in all the world where we would rather be than in S. Africa today. For nowhere in the world is there greater need for the good news of justice, brotherhood, and love in the Gospel of Jesus Christ. It is a rare privilege to be here, with the opportunity of trying to share that "Good News." The hatreds, fears, and suspicions among the five major groups are at times terrifying. The anomalies are mainly economic, political, and social. The five groups, and their approximate sizes are: Africans, 8 million; Coloreds (mulattoes), 1 million; Indians, 1/4 million; and two groups of whites, totaling 2 1/2 million, one group loyal to the British Commonwealth; the other ardent nationalists, favoring a republic. At times the antipathies seem to be so great and so intense that there can be no hope for solution save by the grace of God, working through dedicated people of all groups. Our own job will be primarily, working with the Africans, in and through the churches, trying to help them to become mature, consecrated "doers of the Word." Secondly, we hope to be able to serve as bridges of fellowship and reconciliation among all the groups.

BAGGETT.

We the members of Bethlehem Christian Church wish to pay loving tribute to the memory of little Mahlon Baggett, Jr. who left us so suddenly.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father who doeth all things well.

2. That we know his way is always best.

3. That we extend to his loved ones our love and prayerful sympathy, and leave with them the words of the Master who said, "Suffer the little Children to come unto me."

Mrs. CALVIN BENTON,
Mrs. P. B. PILAND,
Committee.

WILLIAMS.

It is with deep sorrow that we, the members of Mt. Carmel Congregational Christian Church, record the passing of our beloved sister, Mrs. Ella Spivey Williams on the 12th day of November, 1951.

We shall miss her and wish to express our appreciation for her friendship.

Be it resolved:

1. That we let our will be lost in God's will in dealing with his children.

2. That we extend anew our sympathy to her family, praying that in their sorrow they may find peace of God that passeth all understanding.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family, a copy to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy be recorded on our church record.

Mrs. JULIAN CARR,
Mrs. Otis V. JOYNER,
Committee.

SMITH.

The death angel knocked at the door of one of our homes to bring sorrow and heart-ache to all who were left when he took from us Mrs. Mary Ellen Smith, a much beloved member of Bethlehem Christian Church. The many years of service and friendly smile made her but the more endeared to the hearts of those who knew and loved her best. Because then, of the love and esteem of our hearts for her, be it therefore resolved.

1. That we honor her life not only with our lips, but by being true in service to the cause she loved and served.

2. That we as a group of God's children purpose to do his will that some day we may stand in the same groups where our ranks are not broken and death cannot come.

3. That we extend our deepest sympathy to her family and remind them of the words of him who said, "In my Father's house are many mansions."

him. Jesus recognized their concern for his welfare, but took this occasion to tell his followers that the one condition for relationship with Jesus is the doing of the Father's will. Some of his brethren took the words to be a rebuke, but Mary must have understood his words and most likely remained to listen to her Son or to leave some new garment she had made for him.

Now events moved swiftly to their inevitable end, and Mary had to stand aside in helpless anxiety. She knew her Son was innocent, pure and holy,

LOOKING FOR HONORS.

Were you looking for honors today?
Dear one, being a disciple of Christ:
Just doesn't work that way.
Said Jesus, "If my disciple you would be,
Take up thy cross daily, and follow me."
"But Master," "We're cultured, and intellectual, Don't you see?"

"Yes, my child, Our Saviour's answer;
With a Smile;
"Are ye humble and surrendered?
Do you go the Christian's second mile?"

When we began this pilgrimage to glory,
We were ready for storms, even some disappointment too—
But didn't realize there'd be a cross of Sorrow;
Even a burden to bear, like you!
Often misunderstood by loved ones,
Seem lost, weary, and alone—
Then we remember her, if we follow our Lord—
We're passing by another mile-stone!

We're like the woman at the well,
We too, have a new name,
After truly meeting Jesus—
Life is never again the same!

Honor for worldly fame is ashes, never again—
But Oh! the joy to help another, in Jesus' name!

To climb heaven-ward in our aim,
One thought, one hope, one reward—
To live for Christ—Our risen Lord!

Oh! God of our Fathers,
Jehovah, Creator, Saviour, and King—
Give to us daily, Thy Love—Thy Power.
Thy guidance—and through Thee,
We, as disciples, can conquer the world!
And by His grace—subdue everything!

HAZEL T. WILLIAMS,

and when others forsook him she followed him to the cross—saw him bleeding from his wounds—heard his cry of agony—and still would not leave him. With the exception of Jesus, no human being has ever suffered as this mother did during those hours. Jesus in the very moment of death entrusted her to the care of the disciple that he loved. John was true to that trust and took Mary into his own home.

There is only one more direct mention of Mary in the Bible. The scene is an upper room in Jerusalem, and the time is between Ascension and Pentecost. About 120 disciples had met for prayer, and among that number was "Mary, the Mother of Jesus." She was there as one of the worshippers who had learned to know and love the Master.

Here the Bible takes leave of Mary. We know nothing of her last days—where she lived or how long. She has not left us a single word about Jesus, though she could have told us more than anyone.

"She kept all these sayings, pondering them in her heart."

YOUTH AT WORK IN THE CHURCH.

This is elaborated on in another article on this page. Anyway, they introduced to us a game called logic. Maybe it's not new to you. See if you can find the answer to the one below. Send in the answer to me along with any other hypothesis you think may stump the other readers. You might send the news from your group at the same time! If you send a logic problem, please send correct answer. Okay, see if you can answer this one?

Early one morning a man was found hanging by his neck from a rope, which was fasten to the chandelier. It was a case of suicide. The room was barren, having absolutely no furniture. The night before this man had called the desk clerk of his hotel requesting two articles. Name these two articles and you will know how he managed to hang himself.

A Pastoral Prayer

By WILLIAM ROBERT CATTON

OUR LORD, we give thee thanks this day. We give thee thanks because, beyond our poor deserving, far beyond our little merit, life has been so good to us. Life, and people, and thou, our God, all have been so good to us. Only now, within this house, as we have sung together and prayed together and thought together, have we been sure of this—that thou art good to us. Sometimes we have complained. We have been impatient. If many things were well with us, but not quite everything, we have allowed ourselves to be unhappy. We have sometimes even been guilty of self-pity. The little, unimportant things we could not have, loomed larger in our thoughts than all the bounty we so freely had, and we allowed ourselves to wail and to lament that life was harsh with us. But not so, now. Now we give thee thanks; thanks for all the goodness of life that has made us know thee as our loving Father. Even we, being evil, know how to give good gifts to our own children: how much more our Father in heaven!

We thank thee for life, with all its splendid chances; the chance to grow, the chance to love, the chance to give and share, the chance at beauty, the chance to know the truth, to understand the ways of God himself, to think thy thoughts after thee, the chance to work, to strive, to build and to achieve.

We thank thee for this growing world, and for the strange and awful responsibility thou hast laid upon us that we should make it grow aright. God be thanked who has matched us with this hour. God be thanked who has given to us the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven.

We, that are matched to these demanding times, make us strong and brave, our God. Let us not flinch. Let us not hesitate. Let us not waste our talents, mis-apply our energies, letting the work of the Kingdom of God remain undone while we occupy ourselves with trifles.

Give us true insight, even now, in answer to our prayers this day. Show us the work that lies before our hands just now; here in thy church, in our homes, in the community. Show us now that we must be about our Father's business, and that our Father's business lies close at hand and must be done today, tomorrow, right away, and not at some other time, by someone else.

There are sorrows all about us we should try to heal. There are hungry people in our midst that we should feed. There is doubt that we can turn to faith. There are fearful people we can help to be brave again. There are temptations we can help to overcome. There are sins that we can conquer. There are lies that we can show for what they are, and truth that we can make prevail. Show us thy will, and let us then be up and doing.

God, we thank thee most of all for God. We thank thee for our faith. We thank thee thou art ever troubling us with visions of a fairer world, a nobler life. We thank thee thou hast loved the world, even in its littleness and shame, thou hast so loved the world that thou dost enter into our very hearts to redeem them, to claim them for thyself. And now our hearts respond to thee, and move in answer up to thee. O Lord and Master of us all, we own thy sway, we hear thy call, we test our lives by thine.

Amen.

RE-DEDICATION at HOPE MILLS

By LIEUTENANT L. ROY KYLE

"To the glory of God, our Father, by whose favor we have built this house; to the honor of Jesus, the Christ, the Son of the living God, our Lord and Saviour; to the praise of the Holy Spirit, the source of life and light: We dedicate this House."

The Litany of Dedication resounded solemn and clear as the afternoon sun of June 11, 1939, played hide and seek with the fleecy white clouds that dotted a blue summer sky. Those assembled were proud of this moment, as only those who have seen a cherished dream come true can be proud. This church, built three years earlier and organized as the Union Sunday School, was at last taking its place among sister churches of like mind and purpose, dedicated to the glory of God and service to fellowmen. The First Congregational Christian Church of Hope Mills was a reality; a fond hope, a cherished dream, a wish, a prayer, come true.

It had not come easy, this moment of dedication. Events leading up to this day were a cross-section of human emotions: Fear, hope, despair, faith, joy, and sorrow. Many present could recall how, not too long before, they had watched with saddened hearts as the church of which they were a part was completely destroyed by fire. Very little was saved, and rebuilding would take money, more money than was available in that year of 1934.

Discouraged, down-hearted, but with a faith that characterizes a Christian people, those few members set about rebuilding their place of worship. Those few pieces that were salvaged from the fire were repaired or renovated. A new site was chosen for the new building, on land that was the gift of the late Mr. John Cameron. In the spring of 1936, actual work was begun. Both labor and materials were a gift of the people. Much of the work was completed at night, after most of the men had completed a day's work at their regular jobs. It was only natural that as each stone was laid, each board fitted, each pew completed, this building (Please turn to page 5)

WESTERN CAROLINA PULPIT EXCHANGE.

Realizing the need for better acquaintance and closer cooperation with the ministry and laity of the churches in Western North Carolina Conference of Congregational Christian Churches, the pastors have planned an exchange of pulpits for the morning services on February 10. Every pastor with the exception of only a few, will be a visiting minister that day. Since there are more churches than pastors, every church will not have a visiting minister.

The plan is that each minister pay his own expenses and accept no remuneration from the church he visits. The schedule is as follows:

Dr. F. C. Lester, Albemarle;
Rev. T. D. Sutton, High Point;
Rev. M. A. Pollard, Pleasant Ridge;
Rev. B. H. Loudermilk, Liberty;

Rev. Clyde Fields, Hank's Chapel;
Rev. J. O. Pugh, Seagrove;
Rev. E. C. Brady, Pleasant Union;
Rev. G. H. Veazey, Sophia-Bailey's Grove;
Rev. L. M. Presnell, Pleasant Hill;
Rev. W. T. Madren, Flint Hill (M);
Rev. R. T. Grissom, Asheboro.

A Mass meeting of the laymen of this conference is being planned, with able speakers and a supper, for the purpose of getting more laymen's groups to organize.

G. H. VEAZEY,
Secretary.

HOLY NECK HIGHLIGHTS.

The year 1951 in Holy Neck Church was marked by several important occasions. First was the arrival of our new pastor, Rev. Allen Hurdle, who came to us in March. Since then, both he and his wife have endeared themselves to all of us.

Our Daily Vacation Bible School in June, under the direction of Mrs. George D. Parker, was a great success. Between ninety and one hundred children were enrolled.

In September, our annual revival was held. Rev. Melvin Dollar, pastor of the Union (Southampton) Church, conducted the services.

The newest member of our church family, a Laymen's Fellowship, was organized in November. We are expecting great things from this group of fine men under the leadership of the following officers:

Harry Lee Weaver, president; C. C. Copeland, vice-president; James C. Jones, secretary-treasurer; J. C. Davidson, chaplain.

The climax of the entire year was reached on December 30, when dedication services were held for the beautiful electric organ presented to the church by the children of the late Mr. and Mrs. Brock D. Jones, as a memorial to their parents. Dr. John G. Truitt, son-in-law of Mr. and Mrs. Jones, preached the morning sermon, and Mrs. Baxter Twiddy, their granddaughter, rendered a vocal solo. Seven of the Jones children were guests for the occasion. Dr. Darden W. Jones, Franklin; James Jones, Holland; Dr. Brock D. Jones, Jr., Norfolk; William Thomas Jones, Franklin; Mrs. John G. Truitt, Elon College; Mrs. E. H. Stephenson, Suffolk;

WALSTEIN SNYDER CALLED TO BEVERLY HILLS.

Rev. Walstein W. Snyder, of Route 3, Burlington, N. C. has accepted a call from the Beverly Hills Community Church (Congregational Christian) located at the corner of North Church Street and Friendly Road of Burlington. He will begin his ministry about March 1 in the new church organized in 1951 and sponsored by the First Christian Church, Burlington, and the Mission Board of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches.

On Sunday, January 13, Mr. Snyder announced his resignation at Bethel, Concord, Mt. Zion Congregational Christian Churches, near Burlington, where he has served as pastor for the past eight years. Mrs. Snyder is the former Miss Nellie Gray Mann of Burlington. The Snyders have a young son, Coy Wesley.

Mr. Snyder is a native of Elkton, Virginia, where he received his primary school education. He graduated from Elon College in 1945, receiving his B. A. degree. He received his B. D. degree from Duke University Divinity School in 1950. While a student at Elon College he was active in the campus life, and served as president of the Student Christian Association. He was elected a member of PI GAMMA MU, a national honorary social science fraternity, and was elected to "Who's Who Among College Students" in 1945.

He has been active in the affairs of his denomination, having served as president of the Virginia Valley Young Peoples' Conference, president of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference Missionary Association, and he is currently president of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference.

Beginning his services as pastor of Bethel, Concord, Mt. Zion Churches during his student days at Elon College, Mr. Snyder has guided these churches in steady progress. At Concord a new and modern church and Sunday school plant valued at $45,000 has been erected. A strong youth organization has been developed. At Bethel Church a thorough remodeling program has been completed, including the addition of Sunday school facilities, a pastor's study, new pews, and a chancel. Funds are on hand, raised by the young people, for the erection of a youth building. A playground with electric lights was put into operation in 1946. It is a community center for the young people, with equipment for tennis, basketball, horseshoes, badminton, and folk games. It has a dutch-oven for picnics. At Mt. Zion the exterior of the church building has been remodeled and brick-veneered, and a second story to the Sunday school plant has been erected. An automatic heating plant has been installed. Funds are now being raised for remodeling the interior of the church sanctuary. The young people's work was organized in 1946, and as a project they purchased an army barracks, dismantled and reconstructed it on the church grounds as a community building. The parsonage owned jointly by the three churches of the parish has been weather stripped. The churches furnished the living room, and installed an electric stove, electric refrigerator, and hot water heater.

In each of the churches there are active missionary societies, and each summer Vacation Bible Schools have been held, with large number of children attending. The churches under the leadership of Mr. Snyder have more than doubled their budgets, and large numbers of lay leaders have been developed. During his ministry there have been 133 new members added to the churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Parsonage Problems and Possibilities

There is new hope and new life at New Hope Church in the Eastern Carolina Conference this week. A new parsonage has been erected, and the pastor, Rev. Carl Wallace, is moving in. The congregation has a resident pastor for the first time in the history of the church.

Thus churches, as well as individuals, have new and stimulating experiences. New Hope and Beulah are linked in a pastorate under the vigorous leadership of Carl Wallace, who is now in his third year at the Duke Divinity School. Here is a happy situation which is geared to progress. New Hope and Beulah will bring new strength and vitality to the Eastern Carolina Conference.

No one can estimate the benefits which may result from the construction of a parsonage. Many congregations are discovering that the surest way to build a church is to build a parsonage. The history of every great church is influenced by the history of the parsonage.

Now the fact that our Franklinton parsonage is empty poses a problem. The possibility of reviving our work in the town of Franklinton is being considered. No minister appears to be available at the moment to occupy the parsonage. It is our hope and confidence that a solution to this problem will be found soon. It can well be that the fact of a parsonage at Franklinton will cause the revival of that church.

The Fact and Fate of Franklinton

This editorial is being written at Franklinton Center. The winter Institute for our Negro Congregational Christian ministers is in session, and is extending for a period of five weeks. None of the pastors in attendance have had college or seminary training, and yet many of them are rendering most acceptable work in our churches.

Practical courses are being offered in the Bible, preaching, church administration, worship, sacred music, the church, and the family. Teaching here is a good experience. One is reminded of a quotation from Bishop Denny: "Don't preach above people's heads; the man who shoots above the target does not prove thereby that he has superior ammunition. He just proves that he can't shoot!"

The friends of Franklinton are multiplying. Rev. Galen Weaver of the American Missionary Association, and Miss Lela Anderson of the Division of Christian Education, are on the current faculty. The Board of Home Missions is sharing in the support of the Center. Dr. Stanley U. North has given invaluable assistance in numerous ways and serves on the Board of Trustees. The women of our Convention are giving substantial assistance this year, thereby furthering the program of repairs and improvements to the property. The Negro churches of the area will observe Franklinton Day during March to raise $3,000.00, the cost of the new furnace. Here and there through the Convention, a church takes an offering for Franklinton on Race Relations Sunday.

Good purposes have been confirmed and strengthened at Franklinton. Ministers and laymen have gained new conceptions of Christian truth and service. Preachers have gained a new lease on the ministry. New channels of stewardship have been opened. Miracles of grace have occurred.

Franklinton is a home missionary project worthy of priority from many considerations. Missions, race relations, Christian education, church extension, all offer full and immediate opportunities at Franklinton to those who would further these causes.

The fact that Franklinton Center is in our midst brings us joy and gratitude. The fact that its needs are not fully met brings us regret. The fact that more people are interested and participating brings hope. Let all who are likeminded work and pray that God's fullest purposes may yet be realized at Franklinton.

Thirteenth Annual Institute Of Religion at Raleigh

The thirteenth annual Institute of Religion—sponsored by the United Church, Raleigh, N. C.—opened Monday night, January 21, at 8 o'clock and will be held on successive Mondays thereafter through February 25, as announced by Dr. George A. Gullette, chairman of the 1952 Institute of Religion Committee.

"Foreign and Domestic Issues Confronting Our Democracy" will be the theme of this year's Institute. All sessions will be held at The United Church and will be open to the public.

An address by William Agar, the United Nations' acting director of the Division of Special Services, opened this year's Institute. His topic was, "The United Nations Today."

Other speakers will be: Henry Field, anthropologist and archeologist, who will speak January 28 on "New Light on the Bible"; Oscar Ross Ewing, Federal Security Administrator, whose subject will be "Health Alternatives Facing the American People"; Col. Ben C. Limb, chief of the Korean mission to the United Nations, who will speak on "Can Asia Be Saved from Communism"; Dr. John C. Bennett, Professor of Christian Theology and Ethics at the Union Theological Seminary, whose subject will be "Christian Strategy in the World Conflict"; and Elizabeth Gray Vining, author and tutor to the Crown Prince of Japan, who will speak on "Young People of New Japan."

"The United Church takes special pride this year in inviting its friends, old and new, to participate in the thirteenth annual Institute of Religion," Dr. Gullette said, on behalf of the Institute committee. "The church finds itself this year without a full-time minister, but it has gone forward with its plans for the winter Institute program in the belief that this community forum has become too important a part of the intellectual and moral life of this area to be discontinued.

"The Institute, we believe, has become an institution, and we have been encouraged in this belief by the warm support and assistance that has come from our sister churches, from the colleges, and from the community at large.

"This year the program is more varied than usual. . . . Though no one can say that international tensions have eased in any perceptible degree during the last year, we have felt that some attention should be paid to domestic and general issues, as well as to matters connected with foreign policy. We are therefore presenting a mixed program which we hope will reach an even wider range of thoughtful people than we have reached in the past.

"The Institute again reaffirms its basic faith that a proper concern of any vigorous religion is the open discussion of all affairs that vitally affect mankind. . . ."

Three courses will be given this year. They are: Judicial Protection of Civil Rights and Political Privileges, led by Dr. P. W. Edsall, head of the Department of History and Political Science at State College; Toward an Understanding of International Relations, led by Charles F. Blanchard, Raleigh lawyer; and The Relation of the Church and State in a Modern Democracy, led by Dr. Edwin McNeill Poteat, pastor of the Pullen Memorial Baptist Church.

The courses will come at 7 o'clock on Institute nights.

As usual, a fellowship dinner will be held on Institute nights at 6 o'clock. Reservations should be made before 1 p. m. of each day of the Institute. The church telephone number is 2-1119. Seats will be reserved in the auditorium for all who attend the Institute dinners or courses.

RE-DEDICATION AT HOPE MILLS.

became more and more a part of every member participating in its construction. At last it was finished, and the Union Sunday school was organized.

As the weeks went by it became apparent that a Sunday school alone could not meet the needs of this rapidly growing organization. Regular worship services were needed and wanted. To meet this need, Dr. F. C. Lester, then Promotional Secretary of The Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches was called on, and with his help, this church submitted its petition for membership in the Eastern

North Carolina Conference. Accepted as such and governed by the five cardinal principles of Congregational and Christian Churches, the twenty-one charter members were at last pledging themselves and their handiwork to the Glorification of the Kingdom of God. Rev. Allyn P. Robinson of Raleigh served as the first pastor.

From that small beginning thirteen years ago "the little church on the hill," as it is affectionately known to the residents of Hope Mills, has continued to grow and to serve. The church is free of debt and has never failed to meet its apportioned share of the work of the Eastern North Carolina Conference. New members have been added and organizations formed.

In 1951, a decision was reached to renovate and enlarge the facilities of this house of worship. A Beautification and Building Committee was appointed to study plans and to submit recommendations for this project. A Building fund was established in order to provide for adequate funds when actual construction is begun. This is to be no small project, but instead, through the Grace of God, we envision a complete and modern physical plant, including a parsonage. Envelopes were used for the first time last year, and the income has more than doubled.

That this vision will soon become a reality is evidenced by the unselfish devotion, the untiring efforts, and the sincere desire on the part of every member of the congregation to build a house truly worthy for the worship of God.

The minister's too have left their indelible mark on the growth and service of this house. The Reverends A. P. Robinson, F. C. Lester, W. J. Andes, J. F. Apple, Kenneth Register, C. C. Dollar and Tucker G. Humphries have inspired us during their service, and left upon our hearts a memory that even time cannot erase. Dr. Robert Lee House has been our pastor for the last two years.

Upon entering this New Year, we the people of the First Congregational Christian Church of Hope Mills, pausing to consider the work of the past year and our goals for the future, believe this to be an appropriate time in which to consecrate ourselves anew and re-dedicate ourselves and this building "In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

We do so re-dedicate.

PLEASANT RIDGE.

The Pleasant Ridge Christian Church is happy to report that on Monday night, December 24, the senior choir presented a cantata for the parents and friends. On the fifth Sunday, December 30, we cordially welcomed everyone from churches all around to attend our youth rally. The program was very interesting. A huffet style supper was served with drinks furnished by the host church. We ended the happy day with our cantata. "The Prodigal Son," presented by the young people's choir.

NEW GROUP AT LIBERTY SPRING.

After having a series of planning meetings, at one of which Miss Pattie Lee Coghill was the speaker, the young people of the Liberty Spring Church have organized a Junior High Pilgrim Fellowship.

The following officers were elected: Bobby Harrell, president; Mary Ann Bradshaw, vice-president; Martha Leigh Bryant, secretary; Herman Smith, treasurer; Jean Powell, pianist. The program committee is composed of Mary Ann Bradshaw, Jane Moore, and Antha Copeland. Joseph Bryant, Barbara Ann Byrum, and Barbara Byrum make up the membership committee. Jimmie Airece, Joe Copeland, and Mary Bryant were elected to serve on the Social Committee. The project committee is composed of Martha Leigh Bryant, Bobby Harrell, and Mary Ann Bradshaw. The director is Dr. J. H. Dollar, and the advisors are Mrs. J. H. Dollar, Mrs. R. W. Harrell, and Mrs. N. H. Bradshaw.

KEEPING UP WITH JOSE.

Below is a portion of a letter received by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill from Mrs. Frank Sodomka, Hopewell, Virginia. Here again we learn of the fine impressions being made by Jose Dabuet.

"Thanks for letting Jose come to us for the week end before Christmas. He came to us a stranger and when he left he had won a spot in our hearts, and we were sorry to see him leave. While he was with us he showed his willingness to help wherever he could. Jose conducted the morning worship service and then in the evening he spoke to the young people—a very inspiring message. Then on Monday when Frank took him to the bus, we were saddened by his leaving. The young people want to know when he can come back again."

UNITED FELLOWSHIP IS ORGANIZED.

The young people of the Kallam Grove, New Lebanon, and Mt. Bethel Churches have organized a united Pilgrim Fellowship. These young people have seen the importance of working together, and they have received the full support of Rev. C. Fred Allred, who is the pastor of the three churches.

The sponsor of the group is Mrs. Ralph McCollum; the councilors are Martin Barham, Essie Simpson, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Moore, and Mr. and Mrs. M. M. Joyner. The officers of the group are as follows: O. L. Tysor, president; Edmond Albert, vice-president; Martha Payne, secretary; Marilyn Sharp, assistant secretary; Beth Ann McCollum, treasurer; Mrs. Irma Albert, corresponding secretary. The program committee is made up of Carelene Joyner, chairman; Jay McCollum, and Jerlene Joyner.

This group has made an important step toward building a better Pilgrim Fellowship in the Southern Convention. The young people of other pastorates might profit from this fine example. The following are charter members of this new Pilgrim Fellowship group. Jay McCollum, Donald Sharp, Shirley Joyner, Carelene Joyner, Nancy Jo Ashburn, Jerlen Joyner, O. L. Tysor, Mrs. Fred Allred, Mrs. Pearl Kallam, Shirley Kallam, Jean Foulks, Annie Belle McCollum, Madie Foulks, Fay Foulks, Leonard Foulks, Mrs. E. W. How many of you have ever visited Pattie Lee Coghill's office in Elon. Well, I was lost in there for an hour this afternoon; so I'll attempt to describe it. It has no deminsions. It stretches endlessly in all directions. As you enter the door, Ruth Dunn will be on your left side and Pattie Lee will be on your right (keep looking, they're there somewhere). The air will be filled with papers which will be important some other time. Ruth is hunting tirelessly for the one important paper of the moment—the one on the bottom of the 69th pile—while Pattie Lee gives directions on how to get to Flint Hill to Dr. Scott. The floor of the office is laced with a network of wires, leading to various instruments. The surest way to get out is to follow these wires, because they lead to the light switch beside the door. If any of you would like a conducted tour, just let me know.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

MID-YEAR MEETING OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF ELON COLLEGE.

The Board of Trustees of Elon College met in regular mid-year meeting on Tuesday, January 15, at ten o'clock in the morning. There were 18 members of the board present. The main item for consideration was the campaign to complete the two million dollar fund for the college. This campaign was launched in 1946 and was for a ten-year-period. 1951 marked the half time allotted to the campaign. From 1946 through 1951 the college realized nearly one million dollars in cash and capital improvements including faculty houses, student apartments, and additions to the endowment fund. The major task for the college, the church, alumni and friends is to reach the two million dollar goal. This money will be used for the erection of a new dining room, a new dormitory for girls, a new dormitory for boys, two additional dormitories, and further additions to the permanent funds of the college.

The college administration and the Board of Trustees realize that more than one million dollars will be required for the proposed buildings. A resolution was passed to request The Southern Convention through its Finance Committee to allow an additional amount of $250,000, making the total amount to be raised from 1946 to 1956 two million, two hundred and fifty thousand.

It is encouraging to note that even though the organization through which to conduct the campaign has not been completed, a total of more than $130,000 has been secured in cash and pledges, $37,000 of which has been paid in cash. Every reasonable effort is being made to complete the organization and increase the pledges and cash for this purpose.

The Board of Trustees also expressed appreciation of the contributions made by the churches of the Convention for the support of the college, particularly the Sustaining Fund. The goal for the Sustaining Fund was $1 per member for each year. The first year a total of $11,699.00 was received by the Convention Office. This was far short of the goal, but it was of great assistance to the college. The board voted to request the Convention, through its Finance Committee, to continue the Sustaining Fund program until the financial condition of the college improves perceptibly.

The preamble to the President's report read as follows:

"The small privately endowed college is facing situations without parallel. It is facing serious economic conditions recognized by all, but at the same time industry, business and professional men and women, people who are able to offer solutions to its problems, are aware of its perils and will do something about it if properly informed and effectively approached. The way is open, and the money is available, but the interest, time and effort of men and women who 'speak the language' of people of means will be required. There is not much promise in sending a person who has failed, to solicit a man who has succeeded. You must match success with success if you are to succeed. There are one hundred men and women among Elon College supporters who, if they would take the time to properly inform themselves of the needs of the college, the issues and possibilities involved, and devote one-tenth of their time and a reasonable share of their earnings to the campaign for four months beginning in February, could secure in cash and pledges the $1,250,000 sought. The money is available to the right people with the right spirit and the right approach and the right determination."

The President also carried in his report quotations from Alfred B. Sloan, Jr., President of General Motors Corporation; Mr. Irving S. Olds, President of U. S. Steel Corporation; Mr. Frank W. Abrams, President of Standard Oil Company, and Dr. J. Spencer Love, Founder and Chairman of the Board of Directors of Burlington Mills Corporation, calling attention of citizens of the United States in general, business, industrial and manufacturing interests of the country in particular, to the serious financial plight of the privately endowed colleges of our country and to the opportunity and responsibility of business and industry to give support to these colleges in their present economic distress.

Mr. Sloan said, "... never have our schools of higher learning so needed financial help as they do now. . . . It seems to me that, in its own interest, corporate enterprise should support the sources from which fundamental knowledge flows. . ."

Mr. Olds stated, "... Surveys show that one-half of all our private, liberal arts institutions are now operating in the red. . . . I want to say emphatically that—in my opinion—every American business has a direct obligation to support the free, independent, privately-endowed colleges and universities of this country to the limit of its financial ability and legal authority."

Mr. Abrams in a public address called on big business to pool its resources in the formation of a foundation for education to give direct financial assistance to the privately endowed colleges of this country.

Dr. Love stated in a public address, "I know that all of you have your own responsibilities—your community, your church, and your college. I have the same, but we all have a responsibility for the support of Elon College, our local institution of higher learning."

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

When the Convention considers the needs of its boards, institutions and causes, and arrives at a figure which it proposes to request the churches through the conferences to contribute for these various causes, each individual concerned adds up these apportionments, takes a look at the totals, and some of us have a hope that our institutions and causes may receive the amount apportioned. We ask the churches to contribute only the amount that the Convention apportioned.

Speaking for Elon College, our only educational institution, it has not yet received the amount apportioned in any one year. During 1952 the Convention is making two requests of our churches for the college—$15,000 through conference apportionments and approximately $35,000 for the Sustaining Fund. If the churches would contribute these amounts, and it is entirely possible, the college could entertain the hope of balancing

WORLD DAY OF PRAYER. NORTH CAROLINA SUPERINTEN- DENT.

The World Day of Prayer, February 29; Theme: "Christ, Our Hope."

Christians all over the world will again come together in a fellowship of prayer and in the one thought, "Christ, Our Hope," on the first Friday in Lent, which falls on February 29, 1952.

Offerings given on the World Day of Prayer are equally divided between home and foreign missions. This is a wonderful opportunity to share our Christian faith. Some African women writing to their Christian sisters in England expressed it so well in the following words: "Even though we do not see one another face to face yet we can know each other through the conversation of our hearts."

EASTERN VIRGINIA SUPERINTEN- DENT.

Now that Christmas holidays are over and we are well into January, it is high time to plan for World Day of Prayer, which we observe on February 29.

Order material at once if you have not already done so. Our theme this year is "Christ, Our Hope." Let's make the service universal in all our communities.

1. Arrange places for the service in churches, schools, jails, hospitals, old people's and children's homes.
2. Plan leaders for each of these services.
3. Get volunteers to assume the responsibility of publicity through newspapers and theaters, radios, television and churches.
4. Distribute "A call to prayer" in all public places.
5. Pray for the success of the committee as it prepares the churches and community for World Day of Prayer.

Our group of church women here at Weverly, Va., held our Thank Offering on December 16. We had a good attendance and a most interesting program.

Our little folks have been studying about children of Japan and have become very interested. They brought a very nice offering which they had been saving for weeks.

A couple of us have sons recently returned from Japan, so a very at-

A SECOND CHANCE.

At this time of year, quarterly reports to your conference treasurer have been received and properly valued. The question which is asked more often than any other is: "How much was our Thank Offering?"

There are forty-one women's societies in the Eastern Virginia Conference. Thirty-two sent in a Thank Offering. Nine of our group of our group took no part this quarter in helping to establish a Christian University in Japan. Is your society one of this group?

If your group did not participate this quarter, I sincerely feel sure that they will respond next quarter which ends March 30. Take advantage of your second chance!

May I urge each treasurer to get her report to me before the deadline. In that way only can your group be given full credit at the proper time. Don't let your members down by being a tardy treasurer!

I should like to take this opportunity to thank each one of you for the wonderful cooperation which you have given me in this first quarter as your new treasurer.

Broadcasting and Film Commission Of National Council Reports

Light Sheds Light.

Nearly 200 stations across the country are now broadcasting the new weekly transcribed series, "Let There Be Light" which tells dramatically the many-faceted story of the cooperative work of the Protestant and Eastern Orthodox Churches. The distribution of this series marks an attempt to set a new pattern in the use of transcribed religious programs. The Broadcasting and Film Commission, through local expeditors, has asked that stations carrying the series sign a broadcast agreement which stipulates that (a) the station will carry the programs for a full fifty-two weeks; (b) that the time of broadcast will not be changed without the consent of the local religious radio expeditor; (c) that the programs will not be sponsored commercially. Times of broadcast offered by the stations have also been examined carefully. Where possible, we have tried to keep the program away from a Sunday or Saturday time, partly because most weekend time is poor listening time and partly because we feel this series should help reinforce the idea that religion is not just a weekend luxury, but something which pervades all of life. Thus, "Let There Be Light" is not only a dynamic religious program series but it also serves as a medium to help interpret the public service responsibility of stations in religious broadcasting.

Is TV Here to Stay?

What effect is TV having on the life of our nation? Latest surveyor to try to find answers to that question is Good Housekeeping magazine, who queried 1,403 subscribers in 22 TV cities. As reported in Television Digest, the survey shows that 70 per cent of the set owners have cut down on movie-going; 82 per cent on radio listening; 47 per cent on "going out"; 47 per cent reading books; 35 per cent reading newspapers; 35 per cent reading magazines; 9 per cent cut down on home entertainment. But among those who have had TV for one or two years, 20 per cent now do more entertaining at home than before they had TV and 65 per cent do about the same amount.

For Your Convenience.

Mr. John Groller, recently appointed Secretary for Religious Broadcasting for the Presbyterian Board of National Missions, has prepared a packet of religious radio helps which any broadcaster or anyone responsible for religious programming will find most useful. The packet includes suggested formats and ideas for a radio Sunday school lesson, a religious newscast, and devotional programs of varying lengths, as well as some practical suggestions for improving religious programs. Two sample scripts are also included. Mr. Groller has very graciously offered to send the packet to any religious broadcaster requesting it, regardless of denomination. Write him at 156 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Public Service Pointers.

At workshops and institutes, and in connection with the distribution of the Let There Be Light series, questions keep coming up about the responsibility—if any—of radio stations to carry religious programs. There is no easy answer to these questions but perhaps a brief review of the facts of the case will help. Under the Federal Communications Act, radio and television stations are licensed to operate on a given frequency in "the public interest, convenience, and necessity." Licenses are issued by the Federal Communications Commission normally for a period of three years (there have been instances in which licenses have been given stations for as short a time as six months), at the end of which time the station requests that the license be renewed. When a license comes up for renewal, one of the factors which the FCC weighs very carefully is the matter of public service. While no one has ever defined precisely what is meant by "public interest, convenience and necessity," it has generally been interpreted to mean that the station should give from 10 to 15 per cent of its broadcast time to public service programs. Again, no one has been able to define clearly just what is public service programming, as opposed to commercial broadcasting, but it has generally been interpreted to mean religious broadcasts, school, or other educational programs, programs of civic and service organizations, such as Red Cross, Community Chest, Rotary, etc. In addition, the station may, of course, produce public service programs of its own, such as newscasts, public forums, educational broadcasts, on-the-spot coverage of events in the community, and even dramatic or documentary programs of a public service nature. If the station is a network affiliate, the network public service programs which it carries are also counted as broadcasting by the station. There has been no clear decision as to whether a commercial program such as a sponsored newscast or a commercial religious program is really public service broadcasting, but in practice many such programs have been so considered. . . .

The airwaves of the nation belong to the people of the nation. The people, through the Federal Communications Commission only lease them to the broadcasting stations. While the broadcasting industry is one of the nation's largest commercial enterprises, by its very nature it must also perform a service to the communities it serves—a service which is greater than the merchandising of detergents and corn flakes. The co-operating religious groups can also perform a real service by helping the broadcasters keep sight of their greater calling. One of the best ways to do this is by constantly improving the quality of religious programs that are offered to the stations for public service broadcasting.

its budget without embarrassment. If these funds are not received, it would not take a wise calculator or a divine prophet to determine what the results would be.

The college has a very fine record for past years. Conditions are different on practically all college campuses today. Elon College is no exception. Our people are loyal to the college and generous. I am confident that they shall come to its rescue, lighten its burdens, and make it possible to continue its progressive program of education.

To suffer any accident which scars, mars or cripples is a very unfortunate thing. Having grown up in a family with impaired hearing it became my conviction that the loss of sound was the greatest tragedy that can befall man, and doctors of the mind and emotions say that is true. The average person, however, thinks of blindness as the greatest sorrow. Have you ever known a blind person? I went to school with a boy who lost his sight before he was two years old. Once a group of us were returning from school and he commented on the chance remark of one of us that the moon was visible. "How," he asked, "Can you see the moon in the day?" Then we told him of its late afternoon visibility, thinnish white and misty looking.

Just a hundred years ago Louis Braille died, the great man without sight, who brought new worlds to his sightless friends and to those who have followed. When he was three he went into his father's leather shop to make something to surprise his father and the sharp awl used for punching slipped from his babyish grasp and pierced his eye. This being long before the day of our "miracle" drugs he soon lost the sight of his other eye from infection. He was a very bright boy who loved school and his friends, and life even though he could not see.

Many had tried to find a system of "reading" for the blind but their efforts were not successful. The letters were too clumsy, too long or hard to learn. One man made a system using twelve dots, but Louis Braille reduced it to six and the same kind of instrument that punched out his sight, first punched the dots of the alphabet onto paper. All was not smooth, some people doubted his system, but finally it became universal.

Helen Keller, a famous American woman who is blind, has given her words of thanks for the development of the Braille system. She says it would be impossible to teach blind children without it. Blind children today are taught to mix with other children, to feel their way into a happy life. Their parents are taught not to pity them, to cry over them or protect them from every day accidents that happen to all normal children. Any adult would protect children from a bully, but other than that, sightless children are taught to fend for themselves be it feeding, climbing a jungle gym or dressing.

Betsy Barton who has suffered two major accidents once wrote: "It isn't what you lose that matters, but what is left that counts!" Miss Barton is right! With ears to hear, noses to sniff and smell, voices to speak, singing and talk, and legs and arms for motion and feeling there is indeed much "Left." If you know a person without sight do not pity them, but take pride in their friendship and treat them as normal people. Never, no never think of them as being so different for they have "the hearing ears, the seeing ears."

WHEN GRANDPARENTS COME TO VISIT.

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"How I wish my parents could have heard Dr. Buxton's talk this afternoon!" Marian Fraser spoke earnestly.

A small group of mothers in the clubroom at the city library were lingering to discuss an address that had been given by an eminent doctor who was visiting in our city. The subject has been Mental Health in Childhood. Since my work in the juvenile department of the library is related to all that benefits children, I had joined the listeners.

"I wish mine could have heard him, too." Adele Foster responded. "I am sure my parents' visit would be happier if the dear people would be willing to let the children follow their regular schedule of eating and rest."

"My problem is the same," added Ellen Robbins. "I want my parents to have good times with little Marcia, but when the child is denied needed sleep she is so irritable that nobody is very happy at our house. Now, I remember that my mother was careful when I was Marcia's age to see that nothing interfered with my afternoon nap."

"My parents supervise my little boys too much," Marian Fraser continued. "Donald and Ted received such constant attention when their grandparents were with us last month that both boys have been dissatisfied ever since. It is difficult for them to occupy themselves independently."

"Since we all have a similar problem," volunteered Ann Salter, "there should be some solution. Can you give us some advice, Miss Mallory?" she inquired of me.

"I think I know someone who can help you," I replied, turning to Grace Bryant, the only one of the group who had not yet spoken. "Please tell us, Grace, how you and your mother have dealt with the situation of having two mothers in your home."

"I believe the answer is mutual cooperation," Grace responded. "Grandparents sometimes need to be gently reminded that children are potential adult human beings, and not just entertainers or playthings."

"After my father's death," she explained, "it was necessary for my mother to make her home with us. Knowing that she was very lonely, I wanted her to feel at ease in our home. For this reason I hesitated to make her unhappy by protesting when she suggested that Sharon be permitted to stay up an hour later than usual when we had company. Then, too, if the ice-cream wagon came by just before dinnertime and Mother bought Sharon an ice-cream cone I let Sharon eat it, instead of having her place it in the refrigerator to save for desert."

"It wasn't long before a rather petulant whiner took the place of our cheerful little girl, and I realized that something must be done. I talked the problem over with my husband, and we decided that our only course lay in frankly telling her grandmother that some things were not best for the child's mental or physical health. Jim assured me that my mother was actually as much concerned about Sharon's welfare as we were."

"Keeping that thought in mind helped me through the difficult time of remonstrating when grandmotherly indulgence prompted the omission of Sharon's afternoon nap or the postponement of her bedtime. I told Mother that Sharon would be benefited, as I had been many years before, by regularly allotted hours of rest."

"After I had banished my feeling of anxiety over hurting my mother's feelings, I found that she was completely cooperative in carrying out

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

At the Christian Orphanage we put the child in the center of all our planning and thinking. We have set for ourselves a seven-point program as follows as we look forward to the year ahead.

1. Better understanding of the child as to its background, its needs, —physically, intellectually, socially, and spiritually,—and a determination on the part of each worker in the home to help meet those needs in each child.

2. Cleaner, fresher and more home-like buildings by repairing, painting, plastering and equipping the present buildings until they are adequate and homelike.

3. Neater, trimmer and more beautiful campus and more adequate playgrounds and recreational equipment; teaching a love of beauty, shrubs, flowers and orderliness and cleanliness.

4. Increasingly good records in public school, learning to study and make the grade, also to take a good and normal part in all school activities.

5. More adequate training in the common courtesies, kindnesses, manners, and cooperation: as well as such ordinary arts as cooking, cleaning house, housekeeping, sewing, mending, and keeping clothes in good repair; also gardening, farming, cattle-raising, dairying, hog-raising, handling machinery, firing furnaces, etc.

6. Implanting in each child a sense of belonging, letting him know the worth of real loving friendship, and teaching him to know how to offer it in return both in their youth and later in the homes which they themselves may establish.

7. A regular day of rest for every matron and worker in order that each employee may do a better job.

Again I thank you for all your help. JOHN G. TRUITT, Superintendent.

our plans. We had a quiet talk and agreed that we would make it our practice never to discuss Sharon in the child's presences—never to argue before her about a ruling one or the other of us had made. In matter of minor concern each would respect what the other had said. Important questions would be quietly discussed by her two mothers before our decision was made known to Sharon.

A PHARISEE AND A REPENTANT WOMAN.

MEMORY SELECTION: If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just, and will forgive us our sins and cleanse us from all unrighteousness. — I John 1: 9.

LESSON: Luke 7: 36-50.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 32.

Exhibit A—A Sinner.

The woman in this story by Luke, told in his inimitable way, was a sinner. Perhaps she was a harlot. Certainly she was a sinner, a shameful, sordid, sensual, stained piece of humanity. But somewhere, somehow, sometime, she had met Jesus. And by a great act of faith on her part, and by a gracious act of mercy on his part, she had found forgiveness. The old burden had been lifted, the stain had been washed away, the sense of guilt had been taken away, she had beauty for ashes, and a song in her heart. It all seemed too good to be true. But it was true. She knew it was true. Comment number one. Forgiveness comes by an act of great faith on the part of man, and by an act of great grace on the part of God. It takes faith for the sinner, especially if he or she is a hardened, habitual sinner to believe that God can and will forgive anything, everything. It seems too good to be true. But it is true. If a man is genuinely sorry for his sins, if he confesses his sins, if he forsakes his sins, he can through faith receive forgiveness for his sins. It requires, sometimes, a prodigious act of faith. But we have God's own word for it—if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just, and will forgive our sins, and cleanse us from all unrighteousness. I John 1: 9.

The woman's heart was filled to overflowing with gratitude. So when she heard that Jesus was a guest at dinner in the home of a Pharisee in the town, she slipped in quietly and stood directly back of him as he reclined at the Pharisee's table. As she thought of his grace and mercy, the fountains of the deep were broken and tears flowed down her cheeks and fell upon his feet. Perhaps embarrassed, she took the long tresses of her hair and wiped off the tears. And then impetuously she took a small alabaster cruse, filled with expensive ointment—it probably represented an extravagance on her part, and anointed the Master's feet. It was all unstudied, unrehearsed, spontaneous. Comment number two. The consciousness of pardon begets a deep sense of gratitude. Alas for the man or woman whose sins have been forgiven, who does not have a deep and abiding sense of gratitude to God in Christ for the miracle of his grace and goodness. Sinners saved by grace should sing long and loud in thanksgiving unto God in Christ. Comment number three. Gratitude should find expression in the way we give and give and serve. This woman was grateful, and she was grateful enough to do something about it—more than simply feel a sense of gratitude. She said something and she did something about it. She said something by what she did. The fact is that in the story, the woman never spoke a word. But her actions spoke more eloquently than mere words. Let the redeemed of the Lord say so not only with their lips but with their lives.

Exhibit B—A Sinner.

The Pharisee in this story was a sinner too. To be sure he was respectable and he was religious and he was righteous according to the law, but he was a sinner, a despicable, dirty sinner. In a way he was a worse sinner than was the woman, because if anything sins of the spirit are worse than sins of the flesh. This fellow was smug, satisfied, self-righteous, superior, scornful, sneering, stubborn, snobbish. He was discourteous and not even decent toward Jesus. He had invited the Master to be his guest, and when Jesus came to his house he did not show him even the most elemental acts of courtesy as practised in that day—no water with which to wash his feet, no friendly kiss on the cheek, the usual salutation to guests, no anointing with oil, a special token in honor of special guests. The fellow was a boor, a conceited, consummate ass. And as he had no respect for Jesus, he had none for this penitent woman. He haughtily referred to her as "this woman that is a sinner." What mattered it to this sanctimonious sinner that this broken piece of humanity had been rescued from the scrap-heap, that one who had been lost was found again! No note of joy, no word of encouragement, no hand of fellowship, but sneers and scorn and suspicion for both the Master and the woman. This fellow was closely akin to the elder brother in Luke's story of the Prodigal Son. The tragedy in both situations is the fact that both men were blind. They were sinners and they knew not that they were sinners. They had no sense of sin and no sense of need for forgiveness. There are none so blind as those who will not see.

A Story With a Point.

As was so often the case, Jesus met the situation with a simple story, a story with punch and point. He told a story about two men who owed another man sums of money, one of them five hundred shillings, the other fifty. Recognizing the inability of either man to pay the debt, the man marked both accounts "Paid" and forgave the debts. "Now," said Jesus "which of these men will love him most?" Sneered Simon, "That's easy. The one who owed the most, the one who was forgiven most." Smart guy, this Pharisee. Or was he? Come to think of it, he was plain dumb. It never occurred to him that like the woman, he too was a sinner. The only difference between him and the woman was the fact that she had repented of her sins and had found pardon—and he hadn't! One wonders whether he got the point of the story. At any rate there is no evidence in the story that he did anything about it.

Luke, more than any other Gospel writer has much to say about sinners and about Jesus's dealings with sinners. Jesus is the friend of sinners in Luke's gospel. Jesus sought sinners, and saved sinners. The Son of God, the Perfect Man moves among publicans and sinners, seeking and saving that which was lost. And whenever and wherever men and women turn to him in penitence and confession and faith, he is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. And men and women who have had that cleansing, liberating experience will never want to presume upon his grace and goodness, and will try to serve him with gladness as well as worship him in the beauty of holiness.

RECOMMENDED CHANGES IN THE CONVENTION GOVERNMENT.

The following are the recommended changes in the Government of the Congregational Christian Churches of the Southern Convention, as thus far worked out by the Revisions Committee of the Convention. They are printed in accordance with the provisions of the rules of the Convention.

CHAPTER I.—CHURCHES AND MEMBERS. SECTION I.

Congregational Christian Churches.

The first paragraph now reads:

In the union of the Congregational Christian Churches it is provided that each local church shall have the right to determine whether it shall use the name Congregational or Christian, or Congregational Christian to indicate its denominational status; and it is understood that the adherence to the name used shall, in no case, be construed as a lack of loyalty to the United Churches.

Changed to read:

In the merger of the Congregational and Christian Churches it is provided that each local church shall have the right to determine whether it shall use the name Congregational or Christian, or Congregational Christian to indicate its denominational status; and it is understood that the adherence to the name used shall, in no case, be construed as a lack of loyalty to the denomination.

SECTION II.

First paragraph now reads:

Those wishing to organize a new church within the bounds of the Southern Convention may use the form of organization set forth in the "Manual of Congregational and Christian Churches," by Dr. Charles Emerson Burton (1936 edition, pages 73-76), or the following:

Suggested change:

Those wishing to organize a new church within the bounds of the Southern Convention may use the form of organization set forth by the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches, or the following:

Third paragraph now reads:

Those who have signed the agreement as set forth in the Manual referred to above, or as set forth in this section . . .

Suggested change:

Those who have signed the agreement above . . .

SECTION III.

Fifth paragraph:

Every church should celebrate the Lord's Supper at least four times a year, preferably once a month.

Omit the phrase:

preferably once a month.

CHAPTER IV.—MINISTERS.

Section I, Candidates, reads as follows:

1. A candidate for the ministry in the churches of the Southern Convention shall make application to the Committee on the Ministry or similar committee of the Conference to which his church belongs.

2. Such candidate shall be of approved moral character and religious experience, shall give promise of ability to make suitable preparation, and shall be recommended by the church of which he is a member.

3. The Committee shall examine him as to his fitness and qualifications, and if he is accepted, shall have oversight of his training and preparation; and he shall report annually to the Committee. Failure to report, or to make satisfactory progress, shall be sufficient ground for dismissal from the roll of candidates.

4. All applications for aid from the Conference or Convention shall be presented through the Committee.

5. It shall be the duty of the secretaries of the Conferences to enroll the candidates for the ministry with the Secretary of the Convention, who will include their names in the Ministerial Directory of The Annual.

Change to include the following introduction to the chapter. Also make the following changes in Section I:

The ministry is the highest office in the Congregational Christian Churches. To it come the people who believe that God has called them to this specialized type of Christian service.

In the Southern Convention there are four divisions of the Christian ministry, each with its particular duties and responsibilities. A member of either group is entitled to all the rights and privileges of the ministry, limited only as stated in the following Sections.

Section I—The Biblical Class.

1. Members of the Biblical Class are enrolled by Conference and are given the privilege of preaching wherever there is opportunity. Members may not serve as pastors of churches, but may work under the direction of an Elder.

2. A candidate must be a member of a church of the Conference in which he seeks membership, be recommended by his church, have good moral character, and show promise of becoming an effective minister.

3. Application must be made to the Conference through the Committee on the Ministry. The committee will examine the candidate on his call to the ministry, his Christian experience, his knowledge of the Congregational Christian Churches, and his willingness and ability to pursue further training.

4. Candidates found worthy will be recommended to Conference in session, and, if approved, will be directed in further education by the Committee on the Ministry.

5. Members will report to the Conference through the Committee on the Ministry annually. Failure to make report will indicate that the member no longer desires such standing, and he shall be dropped from the roll. Promotion from the Biblical Class to a Licentiate depends upon the progress made by the candidate.

Chapter IV, Section II.—*Licentiate*s. 3. (b) now reads:

. . . his knowledge of the Principles and Government of the Convention.

Suggested change:

. . . his knowledge of the Principles and Government of the Convention and the organization of the denomination.

The phrase, "And the organization of the denomination," shall be added in a similar way in Section III. 3 and 5.

6. now reads:

Only under emergency circumstances shall an Executive Board feel justified in granting licensure ad interim.

Change to:

Only under emergency circumstances shall an Executive Committee feel justified in granting licensure ad interim.

Section IV, Local or Conference Pastors. 1. now reads:

In the case of persons not expecting to continue their education and who are not qualified for ordination as elders, but who testify to a call to preach and who are in respect to moral character and Christian experience well qualified, it is provided that they may be set apart as local or conference pastors and ordained as such.

Changed to read:

In the case of persons not expecting to qualify for ordination as elders, but who testify to a call to preach and who are in respect to moral character and Christian experience well qualified, it is provided that they may be set apart as local or conference pastors and licensed or ordained as such for one year.

2. now reads:

Local or conference pastors shall have standing only in the conference or conferences ordaining them, and their standing in the conference shall be renewed annually.

Suggested that the word shall be changed to may.

3. now reads:

If a local or conference pastor accept a call to a field within the bounds of another conference than that ordaining him, he shall forfeit his ministerial standing, unless by due procedure he secures like recognition and ordination from the other conference.

Suggested that the words, and ordination, be omitted.

It is recommended that the following be added to this section:

6. Local or conference pastors shall be expected to pursue a course of study as prescribed by the Committee on the Ministry.

CHAPTER V.—CONFERENCES.

Section I, Membership, 2. now is as follows:

Every church shall have lay representation, and each Conference shall fix its own ratio, provided that each church shall have at least one delegate and that no church shall have more than four.

Suggested change reads:

Every church shall have lay representation, and each Conference shall fix its own ratio. However, it is recommended that each church shall be entitled to two delegates. Churches having more than 200 members shall have an additional delegate for each 100 members, or major fraction thereof, provided that no church has more than four delegates.

Section II, Organization, 3. Suggested that the following sentence be omitted:

"An appropriate address should be delivered by the president.

Section IV, Business of Conference, 3. through 17, now reads:

3. Conference may appoint the following standing committees: Executive, Ministry, Home Missions, Foreign Missions, Christian Education, Evangelism, Social Service, Religious Literature, Stewardship, Moral Reform, Superannuation, Apportionments, Ministerial Ethics, Memoirs, Woman's Board, a Board of Trustees, and others when deemed advisable.

4. The Committee on Ministry shall be composed of elders; all questions and matters pertaining to candidates for the ministry shall be under their charge; applicants for licensure or ordination shall be examined by them; and all ministers applying for admission into the Conference shall be referred to them.

5. The Committee on Home Missions shall have charge of all matters pertaining to Home Missions within the bounds of the Conference.

6. The Committee on Foreign Missions shall keep in touch with and report upon the Foreign Mission interests of the Congregational and Christian Churches.

7. The Committee on Christian Education shall report on the general condition of Sunday School work within the Conference and shall make recommendations for its development, with special emphasis upon the promotion of Leadership Training. It shall also include Christian Endeavor and Pilgrim Fellowship in its program of promotion and development, seeking to enlist the cooperation of young people in every department of our Church. It shall include also the interests of higher education, especially as they are represented in Elon College.

8. The Committee on Stewardship shall seek to promote the emphasis upon systematic giving, and otherwise develop the latent powers of life and service in the denomination.

9. The Committee on Moral Reform shall report and act upon the cause of temperance and other matters affecting the public or private morals of church members.

10. The Committee on Superannuation shall bring to the attention of the Conference the actions of the Convention related to the support of the ministry and the provision for the care of the retired and infirm ministers and the widows of ministers. It shall also make recommendations to the Board of Superannuation of the Convention concerning appropriations for assisting retired ministers of the Conference and the widows of ministers.

11. The Committee on Apportionments shall make a report each year on Conference Apportionments for the local churches, indicating the various amounts to be raised.

12. The Committee on Ministerial Ethics shall report on any matters pertaining to the moral and spiritual standards for the ministry.

13. The Committee on Memoirs shall report suitable resolutions upon the death of ministers or Conference officials each year.

14. The Committee on Evangelism shall endeavor to intensify the spiritual life of the churches, to awaken a general evangelistic spirit among them, to furnish evangelistic information, and to suggest a program.

15. The Committee on Social Service shall suggest service programs for the churches, that the church may be the community center in ministering to the whole life of the membership.

16. The Committee on Religious Literature shall assist in circulation of the church organ, denominational publications, and recommend the best literature for the people.

17. An Executive Committee of three, two of whom shall be elders, the president of the Conference being chairman, shall be appointed to transact necessary business between sessions of Conference.

Beginning with 3, it is recommended that this section shall read as follows:

3. Conference should appoint the following Standing Committees: Executive, Ministry, Missions, Christian Education and Literature, Evangelism, Stewardship and Apportionment, Social Action, Memoirs, and others when deemed advisable. A Board of Trustees should be elected, if required by state law, or as may be determined by Conference. The duties of these committees are as follows:

(a) An Executive Committee, two members of which shall be the president and secretary of the Conference. This committee shall transact necessary business between sessions of Conference.

(b) The Committee on Ministry shall be composed of elders; all questions and matters pertaining to candidates for the ministry shall be under their charge; applicants for licensure or ordination shall be examined by them; and all ministers applying for admission into the Conference shall be referred to them. The committee shall promote the interest of the ministry.

(c) The Missions Committee shall have charge of all matters pertaining to Home Missions and Ministerial Relief within the bounds of the Conference; shall acquaint the churches with the denominational work in Home Missions; shall keep in touch with and report upon the Foreign Mission interest of the denomination; and shall encourage adequate support for the missionary enterprise of the Conference, Convention and denomination.

(d) The Committee on Christian Education and Literature shall report on the general condition of Sunday School work within the Conference and shall make recommendations for its development, with special emphasis upon the promotion of Leadership Training. It shall also include Christian Endeavor and Pilgrim Fellowship in its program of promotion and development, seeking to enlist the cooperation of young people in every department of our Church. It shall include also the interests of higher education, especially as they are represented in Elon College. The committee shall assist in the circulation of denominational publications and recommend the best literature for the people.

(e) The Committee on Stewardship and Apportionment shall seek to promote the Christian principle in the acquisition and use of material possession, time and talents; shall promote effective emphasis upon systematic giving for the support of the local church, Conference, Convention, and denominational program at home and abroad. The committee shall make a report each year on Conference Apportionments for the local churches, recommending the amounts to be raised by the churches for the enterprises of the Conference, Convention and denomination.

(f) The Social Action Committee shall study the moral, social and economic health of the local community, state, nation and world, and shall suggest courses of action on all such matters; shall seek to promote peace, brotherhood, temperance; shall seek to promote consistent Christian attitudes and action on the part of church members in particular.

(g) The Committee on Memoirs shall report suitable resolutions upon the death of ministers or Conference officials each year.

(h) The Committee on Evangelism shall endeavor to intensify the spiritual life of the churches, to awaken a general evangelistic spirit among them, to furnish evangelistic information, and to suggest a program.

It is recommended that paragraph 18, in this section, shall be omitted. It reads as follows:

18. The Board of Trustees shall hold in trust for the Conference and local congregations such deeds as may be entrusted to it, and serve in other official capacities having to do with material values.

Paragraphs 19, 20, 21 and 22, of this section, shall be renumbered as paragraphs 4, 5, 6 and 7, respectively. Otherwise they shall be unchanged.

. . . He shall be a member ex-officio, without vote, of all Convention Boards and Committees, and of the Boards of Trustees of Elon College, the Christian Orphanage, and of the Boards of other Convention Institutions.

ARTICLE X—BOARDS.

Section 2, Mission Board, reads:

Section 2. Mission Board. This Board shall work according to the purposes of its charter for the promotion of missionary activity among the churches, and shall serve as the Extension Division of the Convention. This Board shall be composed of eleven members, ten members elected by the Convention, five of whom shall be elected biennially for a term of four years, and one of whom shall be the president of the Woman's Board. This Board shall have representatives from all constituent conferences.

Section 4, Board of Superannuation, reads:

Section 4. Board of Superannuation. This Board shall survey the needs and promote the adequate support for the Convention's retired and disabled ministers and their dependents. Its current funds shall be administered through the Division of Ministerial Relief of the Board of Home Missions of Congregational Christian Churches, the Board of Superannuation recommending beneficiaries for such grants. The Board shall endeavor to enroll all ministers of the Convention in the Annuity Fund of the denomination.

Suggested amendment, combine the two sections as Section 2, Mission Board, reading as follows:

Section 2. Mission Board. This Board shall work according to the purposes of its charter for the promotion of missionary education and activity among the churches and conferences. It shall serve as the Church Extension and Ministerial Relief Divisions of the Convention. In addition to its usual work for the interests of Home and Foreign Missions, it shall survey the needs and promote adequate support for the Convention's retired and disabled ministers and their dependents. Its current funds designated for Ministerial Relief (or Superannuation) shall be administered through the Division of Ministerial Relief of the Board of Home Missions of Congregational Christian Churches, and the Board shall designate a committee from its members to receive applications for, and recommend to the Board beneficiaries for grants from the National Board.

This Board shall be composed of fifteen members, fourteen members elected by the Convention, seven of whom shall be elected biennially for a term of four years, and one of whom shall be the president of the Woman's Missionary Convention. As far as possible the Board shall have representatives from all constituent conferences.

Section 5, Board of Publications becomes Section 4. The last sentence reads:

. . . It shall be composed of five members, elected biennially by classes.

It is suggested that the last sentence shall read:

. . . It shall be composed of six members, elected in two classes.

Section 6, which concerns the Christian Orphanage and Elon College, shall become Section 5. It is recommended that the last phrase of the section, ". . . and shall report biennially to the Convention," shall be omitted.

Section 7. Add "and Institutions" in first line and omit "6" in second line. This section becomes Section 6.

ARTICLE XI.—COMMITTEES.

Section 2, Special Committees, subsection b, reads:

b. Nominating, composed of five members appointed by the Executive Board at least three months before the regular session of the Convention. This committee shall make nominations of all officers of the Convention, and members of Boards, except those otherwise provided for.

Suggested change: The word "appointed," shall be changed to "elected."

BY-LAWS.

Section 6, Executive Board, reads:

The Executive Board shall meet in regular annual sessions in October and April, the exact time and place . . .

Suggested change:

The Executive Board shall meet twice each year, the exact time and place . . .

CHAPTER VII—DISCIPLINE.

Section III, Subsection 2, reads:

A church found guilty of charges may be admonished, censured, or cut off from the Conference; but the sentence against a church should not involve members who protest against the offense with which the church is charged. A church cut off may be restored by repentance and application.

The competency of witnesses shall be determined by the court of trial in all cases.

Suggested change: Following the words, "the church is charged," the sub-section shall read:

. . . When a church is dismissed, the conference should claim title to the property in accordance with Chapter III—Local Church Property. A church which has been dismissed may be restored by repentance and application. The competency of witnesses shall be determined by the court of trial in all cases.

This committee recommends that the Convention appoint a Revisions Committee to prepare the script for printing the revised Manual and to present the same to the Executive Board for approval and printing.

and Mrs. Morris Prince, who has just returned from a stay of two years in Panama. Only Elijah Jones of Connecticut was unable to be present.

Perhaps no couple in the history of our church exerted a more far-reaching influence by their Christian lives than did Brock and Selma Rawles Jones. It is particularly fitting that the lofty tones of inspiring organ music should henceforth remind us of the nobility of those lives. We extend our deepest gratitude to the fine family that saw fit to pay loving tribute to God-fearing parents in such a reverent way.

At the close of the dedication ceremony, ordination services were held for four newly-elected deacons: Jesse Hareum, John Felton, Roland Piland, and Robert Warren.

We face the New Year with a song in our hearts, and a prayer on our lips that God will guide and protect us as we strive to serve him better in the year ahead.

MRS. ALLEN PILAND.

A POSSIBLE CHANGE IN EXECUTIVE BOARD OF SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

The Committee on Revision of the Manual met and under separate heading is making a suggested change in several places in the Manual. However another suggestion has come that will be acted upon by the committee before the meeting of The Southern Convention. This is suggested below with the possibility of the Revision Committee acting favorably upon it and including it in their report to The Convention:

"Since the President of Elon College and the Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage are executive officers of institutions which are directly under the control of The Convention, these two should not be members of the Executive Board of The Convention."

Since the Executive Board or the Executive Committee of the Board is a small group, there is a question in the minds of some whether it is a good policy to have these two officers of institutions, directly under the control of The Convention, serve on this important and yet small board.

Any other suggestions should be sent me as chairman of the Committee on Revisions.

YOUTH ANSWERS THE CALL

Thousands of churches of 38 Protestant denominations across the United States will celebrate Youth Week, January 27-February 3, with the enrollment of one million young people in a Call to United Christian Youth Action, when each, in addition to volunteering for service in their home communities, will donate one dollar for state, national, and international Christian youth work.

The groundwork has been laid by a field staff of 33 young persons, between the ages of 18 and 25, who have worked since September for expenses only, many of them postponing a semester of their college courses. They have helped ministers and other church leaders throughout the nation complete plans for the Youth Week observance, centering about the theme, "United! Committed! In Christ!" The high point is to be reached in community worship services on Sunday, February 3, at which time the million will dedicate their efforts and their dollars to Christian citizenship.

Following Youth Week, the volunteers from the various churches will develop their program of community action together. This program has three phases:

1. A one-week evangelistic mission to reach unchurched youth.
2. A survey of social welfare needs in the community followed by a week end camp for some such purpose as painting a church, planting a garden for an old folks' home or turning a littered lot into a playground.

A study of world responsibilities, ending in a one-day rally dramatizing the drawing up of a charter of Christian world order.

Dollars for Overseas

"Our money goes where we can't go" is the idea back of the million dollars, according to Don Shriver, national chairman of the United Christian Youth Movement. It will be used for such projects as ministry to youth in armed services, the undergirding of national programs of Christian youth work overseas, and the interchange of ideas at world youth conferences.

Overseas needs to be filled include the establishment of leadership training centers, the distribution of books, films and church school lesson materials, and assistance to refugee youth in Western Germany.

Those answering The Call to United Christian Youth Action on February 3, will be asked to join in "a covenant with God," written by youth:

"Believing that God's power is my strength, because of my faith in Jesus Christ, I join with other youth in a united effort to demonstrate the significance and the power of the Christian fellowship.

"For us there is no alternative but to serve God in every moment of our lives; to treat all men as brothers; to work toward the day when suffering and strife will be replaced with cooperation and love, and when peace shall abide in place of war.

"We are not alone in this task. The strength of Christ is ours. Divine resources flow through us, and human fellowship sustains us as we give ourselves to the Church of Christ and its mission in the world."

This is Still God's World

BY ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

AR TOO MANY things are happening in our nation and in the world at large which are undermining human security and challenging faith in God. Nor is the half being told. For the protection of political factions, under the guise of seeking national security, much that is happening is being withheld from the people. The order for suppressing many items of the news keeps the people from knowing how black the picture really is. Newspapers and the radio are permitted only to tell a part of the tragic story of present day life. Strict censure of the news is the order of our government. Only a fraction of the whole is known by the people. The provision of the founders of our nation has been reversed from the government being of and by and for the people to the government being for those wielding the wand of political power.

There is plenty that we all know that is now going on in governmental affairs and in business, in industry and in social relationships to make people pessimistic about the future. But if the whole truth were known by the people, there would be such a rising up of the people and such a turning to God as the world has never witnessed.

Faith calls us to look up and hope for the best in spite of everything that is happening in Washington or Moscow. Faith calls us to face life with a smile even though our heritage of freedom has been placed on the acution block. Faith calls us to look for the best from God even in the face of receiving the worst from the world about us.

Though man has lamentably failed in his tenancy, come what may, this is still God's world, and he has no intention of giving up his plan and program for human redemption, nor has he any inclination to abandon his hopes for world redemption and for mankind to accept his offer of salvation for every person and for every human relationship through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Nothing but faith in Almighty God can change the hideous picture of contemporary world happenings.

No amount of private trouble, no extent of the madness, perverseness and insanity of many leaders of nations, no degree of bitterness between peoples or between groups can draw the curtain of night for those who with all their hearts do truly seek him. There is a peace, that is far beyond man's most sanguine hopes, in God's plan that is to be realized by his human family. And he is counting on those who believe him to cooperate with him in the realization of his plans. Nor will we forget that "It is always the darkest just before the dawn."

News Flashes

Remember! February 17 is Elon College Day in our churches.

Miss Leila Anderson and Mrs. W. E. Wissemann are on the faculty of the Winter Institute this week at Franklinton Center.

A conference for children's workers will be held at Youngsville on Saturday of this week. Misses Pattie Lee Coghill and Leila Anderson will be the leaders.

Dr. Stanley North announces that Mr. Nathaniel Talmage of Friar's Head Farm, Long Island, New York, has made a gift of $1,000 to Franklinton Center to be credited as an authorized special gift.

The friends of Dr. C. E. Newman will be interested to know that he was taken to the South Boston Hospital, South Boston, Virginia, on Friday, January 25, for a physical examination. He will be hospitalized at least two weeks.

Dr. Stanley I. Stuber announces that the buildings and plant of the Japan International Christian University will be dedicated on April 30, 1952. Plans are being made for a delegation of church leaders, educators, and lay people to attend this dedication service.

Read Dr. Scott's article beginning on page 3 of this issue. Then turn to your conference table and check the record of your church. Is your church one of the 49 that lost more members than the rest of the 195 gained? If so let's change the record this year. Make it your business as well as your minister's to do something about it. We can if we will! Let's will to do God's will!

OAKLAND CLASS OBSERVES BIRTHDAY PARTY.

The I. W. Johnson Bible Class of Oakland Congregational Christian Church, near Chuckatuck, Virginia, observed the birthdays of 50 members and guests, at a dinner meeting, on January 22. The group enjoyed a delicious three-course dinner served by the ladies of Wesley Chapel M. E. Church, Chuckatuck, in their new, spacious and attractive dining hall. Mr. C. C. Johnson, presided. The blessing on the evening meal was asked by Mrs. J. Rollie Gayle, teacher.

After the dinner the group was lead in singing "America," by Dr. I. W. Johnson, accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Johnson.

Dr. H. S. Hardcastle offered a prayer for peace. Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle conducted devotionals, using an interpretation of the 23rd Psalm, as given by an Iberian shepherd.

Miss Celia Rae Wagner sang two solos, accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Alton L. Wagner. Mrs. Gayle, teacher, introduced to the group Mrs. W. W. Beasley, wife of the pastor of Wesley Chapel, who delighted the audience with a humorous lecture, interspersed with impersonations.

Mrs. Henry Knight, Mrs. Harvey Saunders and Mrs. E. L. Bowden were in charge of arrangements for the dinner and program.

Dr. I. W. Johnson dismissed the meeting with prayer.

This class, composed of both men and women, will observe its Silver Anniversary on October 14, 1952.

PASTOR GOES TO NEW FIELD.

For a long time I had heard pastors talk of changing their fields of service, and how hard it was to leave some of the places they had served. But I had never experienced much of it until the close of 1951.

In August of 1951 I received a call to become pastor of Elm Avenue Christian Church, Portsmouth, Virginia. It seemed from that very moment that the Lord was pleading for me to go. However, I wanted to be absolutely sure as far as I could tell, that it was the Lord and not my own feelings. Then I began to think about what we would have to give up. First, there were my mother and father, and my wife's mother. Then there were friends and other loved ones. Then we began to think about the churches that we would have to leave. All in all it took just a lot of praying, but finally we said, "Lord here we are, if you want us to give up all this, we will go."

Now the people in those churches and communities that we left are just wonderful Christian people. They seemed to be sorry about our leaving, but then they were fully re-

SOME OBSERVATIONS ON OUR RECORDS FOR 1950-51.

By W. T. Scott, Superintendent
The Southern Convention.

The 1950-51 Conference year is history. The stewardship of the officials, churches, conferences, pastors and members of The Southern Convention is written in the "book of life." We have just completed the material for the 1951 Annual, which is now in the process of printing and it will soon be in our hands. The record, as we have reviewed it, is encouraging in nearly ever respect except in that of the primary business of the Church—witnessing and winning men and women to Christ and His Church. Measured by the success standards of our day, the churches of The Southern Convention in the 1950-51 Conference year had one of their better years.

The financial record will show that we raised more money during 1950-51 than in any previous year. We raised through the churches the sum of $1,055,622 as compared with $995,144 in the 1949-50 Conference year. For building and improvement of church property our churches raised $442,537 as compared with $420,175 in 1949-50 (our best previous year). Nearly every Church in the Convention reported major or minor building improvements. The value of our church property reported was $6,257,745 for the year just closed, our all time high. Pastor's salaries increased to $231,052 as compared with $216,222 the year before. Through not as high as we are capable of going, the missionary, educational and general benevolent giving totaled $168,347 as compared with $159,911 in 1949-50. For Convention enterprises the churches raised $116,273 on apportionment and for the Elon College Sustaining Fund. Of our 195 churches 121 paid their apportionments in full.

The records show that we have a better trained and a better paid ministry than at any time in the history of our church in the South. More churches have full time or a larger share of a pastor's time than at any previous time. The members of our churches are better trained, and all in all we are a people in The Southern Convention who are now living on a higher level economically, educationally, and socially than we have ever experienced. We are equipped to do a better job through our church than ever before. These assets bring upon us greater responsibilities. How well we have proven our worth as Christian disciples in this day of growing paganism is a sobering question.

The Lord did not commission us to erect great buildings; raise larger sums of money—even for the poor! Our commission is "Go . . . be my witness!" Now our records of 1950-51 seem to tell us that our sense of responsibility in the work of evangelism (witnessing) could certainly not be as vital as it should be—that is if the record means what it says! Here it is: We started the 1950-51 Conference year with 34,645 members. At the end of the year we came to the Conferences to report but 33,923 members—meaning that we had experienced during the year not a gain but a net loss of 522 members! Get it—after a year's work (?) we have 522 less members in our churches than we had when we started the year! Yes, I know that many of these losses represent those lost by revisions of church rolls. Yes, and I know that many of those losses represent "names carried on the rolls that should have been cut off years ago!" But it is small comfort that 49 of our churches wrote off 1,530 members through revisions of

CONVENTION PROBLEM

It seems a bit strange to take issue with our good friend, the Rev. W. J. Andes, of Winston Salem. His article in this issue rightly calls for a re-evaluation of our Convention organization and enterprises. This is most certainly in order as a prelude to the forthcoming Convention. As a pump-primer, this article is excellent. On the other hand, some of its pronouncements call for examination.

For instance, Mr. Andes states that The Sun is costing us too much, that it is not in good financial condition, and that it faces difficulties ahead.

One would like to inquire, what is not costing us too much these days? Some of our people think the Church is costing too much, period. Someone remarked that there was a time when, if you went broke, you ate hamburger for a week; whereas now if you eat hamburger for a week you go broke! Yes, one can argue with considerable documentation that living, Church, and government as costing too much. It has even been intimated that death (funerals) is costing too much. And it follows that the time is passing when one can get a substantial printing job done for the proverbial song. Dr. Marna Poulson used to say that the gospel was costly, but that it was cheap at any price.

The Board of Publications finds that the financial status of The Sun is improving steadily, and is confident that the period of convalescence should be over by the time of the Convention. The financial outlook is encouraging. To be sure, no individual or institution is immune to difficult days ahead.

No bisected or fragmentary publication could possibly carry the diversified and comprehensive coverage possible in our sixteen page weekly.

A publication which has weathered the storms of a century, which has never lost its identity by merging with another, which promotes faithfully the institutions of its Church, which is operating currently on a financially sound basis, would seem to deserve a chance to survive.

"LORD'S ACRE" LEADER NAMED MAN OF THE YEAR

The Progressive Farmer carries an editorial in its January issue which should be of interest to rural churches in general and North Carolina in particular. The magazine named the Rev. Dumont Clarke "Man of the Year in Service to Southern Agriculture." The chief reason for honoring Mr. Clarke is his work in promoting The Lord's Acre movement throughout the rural South.

The Lord's Acre plan provides that each church member or family plant one acre of some crop, tend it and harvest it, and give the proceeds to the Church. Or, if more convenient, the member can raise an animal and sell it for the Church. This plan could be used to a great advantage in our rural churches throughout North Carolina and Virginia. Any rural or semi-rural church which has difficulty paying its minister, raising its conference apportionment, or making any necessary improvements, should try this plan. The limits of stewardship have been reached by few, if any, of our rural churches. Here is a plan which has been tried in various denominations with conspicuous success. The fact that the Plan and the leader are prominently endorsed by The Progressive Farmer should commend it more widely. This indigeneous movement should bring new life and resources to our churches, as well as to the institutions of the Church.

Born in 1883, the Rev. Mr. Clarke was raised on a New Jersey farm. He attended Princeton University and the McCormick Presbyterian Seminary in Chicago. He was pastor of a Presbyterian church in Mount Vernon, New York, and later a missionary to India for the YMCA.

For 22 years, however, he has been religious director of the Farmers Federation, a cooperative farmers' organization covering a large number of Southern mountain counties. He lives in Asheville. He has worked unceasingly on promoting the Lord's Acre plan. It is now being practiced in every state of the Union and in many mission fields.

Every year since 1936 The Progressive Farmer has named some great leader as "Man of the Year in Service to Southern Agriculture." This "Roll of Honor" includes:

The late Dr. Charles Herty, for research in making paper from pine; the late Dr. A. J. Pieters, "Apostle for Lespedeza"; Edward A. O'Neal, for farm organization leadership; the late Dr. H. A. Morgan, service to farmers through Land-Grant colleges; Oscar Johnston, president of the National Cotton Council; the late Dr. George W. Carver, foremost Negro agricultural scientist; the late D. M. Clements, Southern leader of Smith-Hughes co-ag teaching; Hugh H. Bennett, No. 1 American in soil conservation; David Lilienthal, for TVA contribution to rural progress; Dr. Julian C. Miller for developing new sweet potato varieties; Paul W. Chapman, for Southwide promotion of rural industries; Senator Lister Hill, for helping rural America get hospitals; William C. Johnstone, for discovering and pushing Kentucky 31 fescue; E. S. McFadden, for pioneer work on disease-resistant wheats.

The Great Migration

An Address by REV. ROSS W. SANDERSON

Director of Field Research for the Board of Home Missions of the Congregational Christian Churches

We live in the time of Great Migration.

Time was when we thought the westward movement of the American frontier involved huge numbers of people. It did, for those days. These are new days. The frontier is bigger than ever, whether we have realized it or not.

Before 1840, for example, we had organized seven Congregational Churches in Iowa. By that date the Territory of Iowa had 43,112 people.

As late as 1870 Oregon still had less than 91,000 people. Between 1940 and 1950 Portland alone increased by more than 60,000 people.

In 1850 all of California had well under 100,000 inhabitants (92,597 to be exact). Between 1940 and 1950: San Diego increased by 118,144 people. San Francisco by 126,217, Los Angeles by 453,415.

In 1850 the State of Washington had a few more than 75,000 people. Between 1940 and 1950 Seattle alone increased more than 94,000 people.

Here we are in the Western Reserve. In 1850 Cleveland had all of 17,034 people. Between 1940 and 1950 even within the city limits it grew 28,300 people—as if Torrington or Middletown, Conn. had been bodily annexed to Cleveland proper.

The point of these figures is that the great home missionary enterprise of a century or more ago was geared to a population movement that today seems small indeed, numerically. The westward march of our people was heroic, it was picturesque, it was matched by faithful churchmanship; but the numbers involved were meager as compared with today's population shift.

Time was when we welcomed millions of immigrants from Europe. Long ago the gates were closed to this sort of immigration, but there is another sort which of late has been at full-tide. After depression years of parental conservatism, war and high employment have upped the birth-rate, at least temporarily. "Out of the everywhere into the here" have come trooping millions of little boys and girls, who for years to come will need to be more adequately housed in bigger and better Sunday school rooms.

Moreover there is, if not a sharp reduction in emigration, at least a serious postponement. After three score years and ten most people used to migrate outward, into the Great Beyond. As things are now, we Americans don't emigrate so early. We oldsters create (along with the new baby crop) an additional problem, and a new opportunity—for church program builders, even for church architects.

Meanwhile folks are not only more numerous, they have been scattering. "Scatteration" is part of our problem. If people merely lived more thickly around the same old churches, the old churches could grow bigger and serve all the new people. Our churches are larger than they were half century ago, they are also fewer. If cities insist on exploding, where the human lava from these urban volcanoes submerges little rural churches, there is an acute problem of adjustment, even for institutional survival. Where this urban tide flows outward over open fields, there must be new schools, new stores, and new churches, as well as new homes. New churches cost money, often more money than people can afford who have to buy their own homes at inflated prices.

For things have been happening to the dollar also. The penny newspaper and postal card are no more. The nickel subway, streetcar, or bus fare is a nostalgic memory. The phoning nickel tends to become a dime. Sunday papers cost fifteen cents, or even twenty-five cents, or thirty-five, according to the distance. Dollars don't stretch as far as they once did. They have lost both their elasticity and their potency. It takes three, four, sometimes five of them to do the job one was able to do.

Moreover we were caught napping. Railroads, when well managed, use depression years for rebuilding their rights-of-way. To be able to do this, huge capital funds are needed. We might have increased our church building backlog, we might have doubled our revolving fund. We didn't. At the moment other needs seemed to have higher priority.

Time will come when iron curtains will have crumbled, or have been battered down. Time will come when we will be sending a host of technicians to serve as colleagues for the leaders of the younger churches overseas. That is, we shall do this if we have strong new churches at the homebase, where millions of migrant Americans happen to be living at the time. If we build shopping centers, and erect television aerials, and leave out our church sites, and let people grow up in easy, pagan secularism, we shall by no means be a missionary church.

Whether it be on newly irrigated land in the Columbia Basin, or on the suburban borders of our exploding cities, or even in our established communities where old buildings need at least refurbishing and enlargement, or even replacement, we are going to need money. Some of us have more money than some of the rest of us have. All of us ought to face squarely together the fact of the Great Migration. Shall the church follow the people? It can only do so as the churches help the people to build necessary edifices for worship, instruction, and Christian fellowship, "We would be building." It will cost money—millions of dollars. This task is of prime importance now for the future of America, for the outreach of our denomination, and for the spiritual culture of those involved in the Great Migration. Let us be at it.

THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION AND TOMORROW.

Your writer is a member of the Revision Committee of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches. Any suggestions for revision of the Manual should be sent to Mrs. W. E. Wiseman of Greensboro, N. C., or to Dr. F. C. Lester of Asheboro, N. C., or to me. Some revisions were suggested in THE CHRISTIAN SUN last week.

Yet one wonders if we have not arrived at the place where we should make some new plans and pave the way for a new day in our Southern Convention. Why should we not have two State Conferences in The Southern Convention, namely North Carolina and Virginia? Why should we not have smaller associations within these two state conferences? Why should we not use the terms employed elsewhere in our denomination?

We give our good Superintendent, W. T. Scott, an almost impossible

SUPPER MEETING AT WINCHESTER.

We have only one group and it meets in the social hall of the parsonage at 6:15 each Sunday evening for a supper meeting, following the 5 o'clock vesper service of the church, which the young people are urged to attend. A large percentage of them do come at the 5 o'clock hour. They are the younger teen agers, in 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th grades at school. The supper is always followed by a prayer circle, when the chairs are arranged before the fire place and an unbroken chain of sentence prayers is almost always our experience. The worship service is not long, since they do unite in the worship program of the church just preceding the meeting. They take part in the service, often giving special music, etc. They are dismissed and go to their homes on Sunday evenings by 8:30. The young people are enjoying worship, as well as fun and fellowship in the name of the church.

ACTIVITIES AT LIBERTY CHURCH, NATHALIE, VA., DURING 1951.

The first event of the year for us was Youth Week. We observed this by conducting Sunday school the Sunday beginning the week.

Our church group was asked to contribute ten dollars to the Philippine project. At this time we didn't have any money in the treasury, so we decided to present an Easter program. The program was a success. The offering taken that night went to the project and it was sufficient for our apportionment.

The officers of the pilgrim fellowship went to the officer's rally held at Union Church, Union Ridge, N. C. Those attending this meeting were Clair Wilkins, Grace Bray, Edwill Owen, Inez Rudder, Bill Wilkins, Louis Wilkins, and Mrs. M. B. Perkins.

The convention was held at Elon College. Those attending from Liberty were Clair Wilkins, Grace Bray, Mrs. Perkins, Louis Wilkins, Bill Wilkins, Phillip Bray, Inez Rudder, Alice Richardson, Marvin Owen, Winfield Tuck, and Edwill Owen. These pilgrim fellowshippers learned much from this meeting and enjoyed it.

There had been a lot of talk about wanting a place outside of the church to have our meetings. However, no action had been made in that direction until Mr. E. E. Clark told us he had an acre allotment of tobacco that wouldn't be tended and that we could have it rent-free for use toward a recreational building. This was offered before the church and they agreed to support us in it.

We met one afternoon and planted the tobacco. We met late in the evenings and worked and harvested it. This was fun as well as profitable, as it was the first time some of us had this kind of work to do.

We met at Mr. Charlie Wilkins home one Saturday and readied the tobacco for market, while the ladies cooked a stew for us. We can't thank any one person for making this crop of tobacco a success. We can truly say everyone did more than his share.

Every summer we have had a social. This summer the same problem arose—no money. Mr. R. W. Fisher furnished us a truck and we decided to go to Staunton River park. Everyone was to bring twenty-five cents for transportation and a lunch. We spent the afternoon at the park and on the way home that evening we stopped to see a movie. We arrived at home that night about ten o'clock. Everyone reported having had a wonderful time.

The first Sunday in October an offering was taken to go to the building fund. That night we elected new officers for the pilgrim fellowship. They are: Clair Wilkins, president; Edwill Owen, vice-president; Grace Bray, secretary; Alice Warren Richardson, treasurer; Mrs. M. B. Perkins, adult advisor.

The fall rally was held at Apple's Chapel. Those attending were Clair Wilkins, Bill Wilkins, Norma Lee Clark, Mrs. Perkins, Louis Wilkins, Betsy Clark, Peggy Martin, Inez Rudder, Alice Richardson, Marvin Owen, Edwill Owen, and Louis Clark.

We decided to have a Thanksgiving party. A committee, consisting of Grace Bray, Louis Wilkins, and Alice Warren Richardson, was appointed to make arrangements for the party. The party had a large attendance and everybody expressed having had a delightful time.

We agreed to present a Christmas program for the church. By the artful help of our advisor, it was given in grand style. This was said to have been one of the nicest programs we have ever had.

Mrs. E. E. Clark gave an age party for us. Everybody in the community was invited. They paid one cent for each year of their age. This money was turned over to the building fund.

We decided to keep a scrapbook of the activities of the pilgrim fellowship next year. The officers were asked to bring their pictures to put in it. Some appointed person will write up the events to go in the book. Louis Wilkins was appointed photographer. He will take pictures of the activities to put in the scrapbook.

On Christmas Eve the pilgrim fellowship went caroling. This was a new experience for us which proved rewarding in much pleasure and gratitude. We have Mr. Bray to thank for the use of his tractor and wagon, and Philip Bray for driving it.

The last thing we did, and probably the most worthy, was to send a ten dollar CARE package to Korea.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

THE CHURCH'S STAKE IN ELON COLLEGE.

In the beginning of this country, the church fostered education. The church was the only organization to foster education. To keep the Christian religion true and dynamic, intelligent and informed expositors were required. This type of leadership could only be produced in the church school.

Near the end of the eighteenth century the Christian Church came into existence under the leadership of James O'Kelly, Rice Haggard, Barton W. Stone, and others. This ecclesiastical organization came into existence as a protest of autocratic rule that had become prevalent. James O'Kelly is on the pages of history as the champion or religious freedom. As the church grew and time passed, the leaders of the Christian Church—W. B. Wellons, W. S. Long, W. W. Staley, J. P. Barrett, and others—realized that if the Christian Church was to fulfill its mission in the world, it must have ministers and lay leaders learned in the traditions of the church as well as in the affairs of state, and the church must do the training. Consequently Elon College was chartered and founded in 1889 as a Christian institution, a 4-year liberal arts college. Elon College was founded by the Christian Church. It was, it always has been, and it is today a servant of the church. It has built itself into the heart of the church. It is the source of the church's information, inspiration, and leadership. No, it is not an emotional institution with an irresistible emotional appeal. It is an educational institution, a training station where ignorance is replaced with information, where uncouthness gives way to polish, where doubts are dissolved by confidence, and where trembling spirits become courageous in the proclamation of a mighty gospel.

Under the faith of a conquering Christ, assisted by the training and instruction of our college, the Christian Church in the South has come to its present strength and worth. The Congregational Christian Church in the South does have a stake in Elon College, and a very vital stake it is. The church has no idea of losing that stake, regardless of the cost. Any cost is cheap compared with the value of Elon College—intrinsic and material. The contributions of the college under the spirit of God are the church's life and power.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

When a Sunday school or church pays its conference apportionments for the college, this is what happens:

1. The Sunday school or church has a feeling of satisfaction in having contributed to the support of the college to the extent that the Convention and the conference feel that it should.

2. Its contribution means a very great deal to the college. When the college was founded, it was understood thoroughly that it would entail an expense upon every church and every organization within the Convention, not only for the beginning but for the continuation of the college as a Christian educational institution.

3. Your contribution enables your college to meet its current obligations, which include salaries, heat, light and water bills, purchases of necessary materials for the continuation of an educational program, and many other items too numerous to mention.

When your church or Sunday school fails to pay its conference apportionments for the college, this is what happens:

1. A failure to comply with the Convention and conference requests will have an unfavorable effect upon some members of your church and Sunday school. The failure to discharge an obligation is depressing, more or less. Of course there may be some among your congregation who feel that you have done the right thing by not paying your apportionments, but always there are some who have a different feeling.

2. You have withheld from your college necessary support for its ongoing. So far as you and your church are concerned, you have marked the college off as a useless or an unworthy institution.

3. You have denied your church and Sunday school the privilege of a satisfaction resulting from a duty well done, and have increased the burden of others who are resolved to give support to our college that it may continue its contributions to the cause of Christian higher education in general and to our own church in particular.

What a joy and a satisfaction it would be to all concerned—the church and the college—if we would unite our efforts, pool our contributions, and together determine to give the necessary support to our college. Such a united effort is necessary in these difficult days. If the college ever needed the church's support, that day is today.

task. He must cover two states, help by visitation and counsel almost two hundred churches and meet with every committee and Board of the Convention, conferences, and churches. This means much travel, letter writing on a large scale, information and inspiration by long-distance telephone calls. We want him to represent us in the national boards. We expect him to know all of the answers.

Our conference lines are very irregular in North Carolina. Churches in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference are separated by at least two hundred and fifty miles (Ashboro to Union, Va.) The need is great for smaller grouping of churches. Let these be more compact.

Our two institutions, Elon College and the Christian Orphanage, would benefit greatly by emphasis given in smaller groups of churches. Both state conferences would naturally want to continue their support of these institutions. They belong to us and we want to make them stronger.

Our church paper in The Southern Convention, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, faces some difficult days ahead. Fi-

SOMEONE READS THIS PAGE.

Two weeks ago I printed two write-ups which had been sent to me some time previously and which I had misplaced. I stated then if other societies had sent me write-ups which had not been printed, to please let me know.

Last week I received a letter from Miss Flossie Bray of Pleasant Grove society, who said she had sent some material some time ago which had not been printed—but that she understood and would send some more. The day before I received Miss Bray's letter I had "uncovered" three following write-ups, which I believe will still be "news" to you. I apologize. They came in the fall when I was receiving more material than could be used each week, were put aside, and were not found for far too long. Perhaps you'd better write Mrs. W. B. Williams, our president, that you need a new editor for this page—and soon!

FINAL MEETING IN SUFFOLK.

The Ever Ready Circle of the Ladies' Benevolent and Social Union of the Suffolk Christian Church held its final meeting in September at the home of its leader, Mrs. Z. Turner with Mrs. L. S. Hollowell as co-hostess.

On October 1 all organized women's groups in the church were merged into the Woman's Auxiliary.

The guests were received at the door by Mrs. Hollowell and Miss Anna Goode Turner. Mrs. Turner welcomed the guests and conducted the devotional period, during which she reviewed the history of the organization, spoke on friendship, and closed with a prayer.

During the business session reports were received on cards, letters, flowers and gifts sent and visits made to members and others in the community who had been sick or in distress. A permanent flower fund was set up, a donation of $15.00 made to the Sunday school library, and plans made for the purchase of additional flat silver for the church dining hall.

A program of games, contests, and a "fashion show" was much enjoyed. Mrs. Floyd A. Turner and Mrs. J.

H. Wilkins won prizes. A group picture was taken.

The Ever Ready Circle was so named by Dr. H. S. Hardcastle, who was the pastor of the church when Mrs. Turner assumed its leadership in September, 1923. Mrs. L. S. Hollowell, the co-hostess, was a charter member of the circle. Mrs. Turner was presented with a pair of silver

100 YEARS IN MICRONESIA.

One hundred years ago the American Board sent its first missionaries to the Micronesian Islands. Every Congregational Christian Church in the United States is asked to celebrate this anniversary sometime between January and June of this year.

And, important, too, some person or organization is asked to send a letter of congratulation, good will, and Christian fellowship to the Islanders following the anniversary service. Thus the chain of fellowship will be complete.

Excellent material for a program is given in the winter issue of "Envelope Series," of which Miss Ruth Isabel Seabury is editor. This magazine which always contains helpful missionary education material only costs 50c for the four issues a year. Why not subscribe for the year 1952, beginning with this Micronesian number? The address is 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Massachusetts.

The particular issue contains a letter from the editor, outlines for three programs, Micronesian hymns, a message from Miss Eleanor Wilson, our veteran missionary in the area, a map and map talk, sketches of eleven Christians in Micronesia, an excellent play, "O Morning Star," and refreshments a la Micronesia.

What more could you ask in the way of material on Micronesia, or for one-fourth of your fifty-cent subscription!

compute consoles, as a gift of love and appreciation. A social hour was enjoyed and the hostesses served delicious refreshments, assisted by Miss Anna Goode Turner and Z. Turner.

The meeting closed with a rising vote of thanks to Mrs. Turner, leader for 28 years, Mrs. E. R. Wyatt, treasurer for 20 years, and Mrs. J. B. Fisher, secretary for 15 years.

PLEASANT GROVE.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Pleasant Grove Christian Church has closed a very successful year, with interesting programs prepared with the use of the packet.

We were fortunate to have one of our own members, Mrs. James Caviness, to give our book review "Assignment: Near East." We also used "The Great Book of Prayers" at each meeting.

"Our "Thank Offering" was given to our Sunday school as a whole. We have done several friendly service projects to people in our own community and the society members have been responsible for flowers in the church each Sunday.

In May at our "Family Night," we had a picnic supper and had the pleasure of having Rev. Richard Jackson show his beautiful colored slides of China and give a most interesting talk.

In July we enjoyed a joint picnic with the Youth Fellowship, at which time "Pattie Lee" and her "Youth Caravan" gave an interesting program. The caravan consisted of Timothy Chang, Bill Tolley and John Graves.

We were very sorry to lose one of our most faithful charter members, Mrs. L. M. Presnell. Our loss is Liberty's gain. Best wishes to the Presnells in the new parsonage at Liberty.

Our officers have been elected for the coming year, and we are looking forward to another year of service for our Master.

PLEASANT HILL.

We feel that the year 1951-52 has been one of service for our Master in the missionary society at Pleasant Hill Congregational Christian Church, Liberty, Alamance County, North Carolina.

Mrs. Martin L. Fogleman has been our president and inspirational programs have been given by various members of the society each month.

The members of the society made quilt squares and gave two quilts to the Christian Orphanage at Elon College. People in the community who were ill were also remembered with donations of food which the ladies prepared and carried to their homes.

Our officers for the coming year are: Mrs. C. E. York, Jr., president; Mrs. James Euliss, vice-president; Mrs. Erwin Wrenn, secretary; Miss Amy Fogleman, assistant.

May we go forward in the work of our Master.

MRS. B. D. HARGIS.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Last week we spoke of those who had lost their sight. There are many sad accidents which befall boys and girls but recently a story of a very great tragedy appeared in the newspapers. It was the true story of a little baby girl born, in the mid-West, without arms. Her mother and father were so sad and unhappy when they learned of this that they refused to see her any more or even to consider keeping her.

A kind lady who had no children of her own heard of this little girl, for she was a distant cousin of the baby's mother, and she came to the hospital to see if she might adopt the child and she did. All of this happened eleven years ago. Today the little girl is rapidly growing into a young lady. Would you like to know some of the things she can do?

She dresses and feeds herself with her feet. She plays the piano, goes to school, skates and enjoys games and fun with her friends. Last fall a piece of fancy work that she had crocheted won first prize at the State Fair.

Once, her foster mother related, some children with whom she was playing teased her about being without arms. In a fit of anger she burst in the house crying, "Why don't I have arms?" Her mother tried to explain with patience and love that by some accident she was born without them. "Well," the little girl replied, "I wish God would let me grow some, I could use them!" She wears slacks and slips her feet into soft moccasins that can be flipped off quickly so she can go to work with her "hands of feet!"

Remember what Betsy Barton said? "What is left is what counts, not what is lost." Some of us are such fuddy-duddies that we can't open a door with our left hands or write with the other hand, much less use our feet for anything but walking, kicking or plain down aching!

No one of us ever uses all our powers. Each of us could work for home, school and church with both our hands and both our feet. Our trouble is that we have never had to! Without having to, make the most of what you have.

It is quite easy to develop great skill in using both hands. Natural born "Both-handers" are called by the long term "ambidextrous" but many are not natural-born but acquired "Both-handers." Try cutting paper with your scissors in your "other" hand. God has given us many talents, senses and skills, let us develop and use them.

THE SUPPLANTED CHILD.

By MABEL-RUTH JACKSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Four-year-old Billy Brown dashed his house of blocks to the floor with a ruthless hand. His mother, who was murmuring endearing words to the baby on her lap, looked up and spoke reprovingly. "Billy! You mustn't make so much noise! You'll scare baby sister."

Billy frowned, threw himself down on the floor and bumped about noisily; then he took a toy truck and ran it across the waxed boards.

"Honestly, Mother, he hasn't ever acted this way until recently," Mrs. Brown said to her mother, who was paying her a visit. "I don't know what's the matter with him."

"Don't you, Carolyn?" asked her mother, looking at her gravely. She rose and went over to Billy. "How would you like to take a little walk with Grandma?" she asked him.

Billy jumped up quickly. "May we go down by Harry's house and see the new puppies?" he asked.

"We surely may," answered his grandmother, smiling.

When they returned half-an-hour later, Billy was chattering happily and his grandmother was listening intently and answering his questions. The baby was asleep in her crib, and his mother came and knelt down by Billy and kissed him warmly. "Did you have a nice walk, darling?" she asked lovingly.

"Oh, yes, Mommie," he responded, hugging her. "The puppies are brown and one has the blackest nose! They tumble all over each other!"

His mother laughed with him. "They must look very funny," she said.

"Will you come with me and look at them, Mommie?" he asked anxiously.

"Oh, I don't—" she began. Her mother gave a little cough. "Why yes, of course I will, Billy," Carolyn said quickly. "Not just now though. After lunch. Will that be all right?"

Billy nodded his blond head. "You really will, won't you?" he asked.

"Certainly, I will. Now go wash your hands and face, dear."

After her small son had obediently departed for the bathroom, Carolyn smiled ruefully at her mother. "Thanks, Mom," she said. "They say a word to the wise is sufficient. Well, I'm not very wise, but your question did make me think. And I had been so sure I was being intelligent and modern—I had prepared Billy so carefully for the coming of the new baby."

"You didn't go far enough, Carolyn," said her mother. "The most important thing in the world just now is for Billy to know he has the same love from his parents that he has been used to. You can't expect him to reason like an adult. He was the adored, petted baby, such a short time ago. Now he feels he has been pushed to one side, like a deposed monarch."

"And I suppose he does these little naughty things to attract my attention—trying to let me know he's still here, poor baby," said Carolyn. "And all I did was scold him."

"There are so many new, strange things in a child's life," answered her mother. "There has to be one stable thing to which he can cling. And that, of course, is the assurance of his parents' love for him. And now, while Billy's still so young, that love must be put into action, just as it was before the new baby came."

"I know, Mother," said Carolyn contritely, "and that's the way it's going to be from now on."

SOME OBSERVATIONS ON OUR RECORDS FOR 1950-51.

church rolls in the Conference year 1950-51!

"Missing in action" is a sad report from the battlefield. Some of those so reported are deserters; others dead; others wounded; others just cut off; others killed by fire from friendly lines; others captured by enemy forces. Is not the same true of the Church? One should not stand in judgement upon a church that chooses to revise its roll, because there are many factors known only to a local situation. Nevertheless, it should be remembered that sometime, somewhere every one of those 1,530 names dropped from our church rolls represented people who at some altar said to the Lord, "I will follow thee." Have we just let them get lost, or have they been wounded or killed by "fire" from our own lines, or has the enemy of Christ captured them? One wonders! One ventures the guess that most of the revisions made on our church rolls in any given year represent people whose addresses our churches don't even know! What a shame!

I may forget my church, but I pray that my Church, the Body of Christ, will never forget me! What a difference our church records would reveal it through an annual roll call our church records were kept accurate. It is nothing short of a sin for a church to lose the address of its members through failure to keep in touch with these members month by month, year by year!

Dr. Ross W. Sanderson, Director of Research of our Board of Home Missions, New York, says our vitality as a church can be more accurately determined by the number of accessions on Confession of Faith, than by total members received. However, in these days of rapid and great change in residence, letters of transfer perhaps take on a new meaning. But let us look at our record on members received on Confession of Faith. During the 1950-51 Conference year our 195 churches reported 873 members received on Confession of Faith, out of the total 1,756 received by the churches. Our evangelistic index is low, too low! Our record tells us that in 1950-51 it took 100 members of our churches a whole year to add about 2.64 (2 2/3) members on Confession of Faith. Examine your own local church's record, and together let us move on toward our goal of new members for the Church—on person per month brought to Christ and into the membership of the Church for every 100 members. In other words, this means that a church with a hundred members would seek to bring in 12 during the year. Possible? Yes!

We showed a small increase in Sunday school enrollment, but with the great increase in birthrate we ought to gird ourselves for a substantial advance in Sunday school membership. There are reported approximately 5,000 young people be-

THE DECISIONS OF TWO RICH MEN.

LESSON VI—FEBRUARY 10, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: Enter ye in by the narrow gate; for the gate is wide and the way is easy, that leads to destruction, and those who enter in it are many. For the gate is narrow and the way is hard, that leads to life, and those that find it are few—Matthew 7:13-14.

LESSON: Luke 18:18-23, 19:1-10.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Mark 10:23-31.

This is the story of two rich men who met Jesus. We never hear anything more about them after they had this experience. But it is not difficult to imagine the difference in the lives and happiness of the two men. The one, the rich young ruler, must have been haunted all the rest of his life. He had come so near to the secret of a richer, fuller, more abundant life. He knew what he ought to do. But he wouldn't do it. To be sure he still had his youth, his position, his wealth, but there was a great emptiness in his life and a great hunger in his heart. There was a time in his affairs, that taken at its flood would have led to great happiness. But because he was unwilling to follow the Master, his life was bounded by shallow and superficial meaning.

The other man, Zacchaeus found life different, so much different. He did not have as much money as he once had. He had to pay back four-fold what he had wrongfully extracted in illieit taxes from people. And of what he made thereafter, he gave half of his earnings to charity. But he had a great joy which he had never found in the world, and which the world could not take away. When the Master's call came to him, he answered that call, and rose up, or rather "came down" for he was up in a sycamore tree, and followed Jesus. Gone was the old hunger for God, the old sense of loneliness, the lack of self-respect. Life had new direction, new dignity, new meaning for Zacchaeus when Jesus came into his life.

The Rich Young Ruler.

Some folks might wonder why this young ruler came to Jesus in the first place. He seemed to have everything a man could wish for. He was young, he was rich, he had high office, he had social distinction, and above all else he was a good man—he had kept the commandments from his youth up—that is the commandments that concerned a man's relationship with his fellowman. In spite of all this, he felt as if he were missing something. Life just did not have the desirable tang. It seemed somewhat flat. He did not have that quality in his life which the young Galilean Teacher talked so much about—the abundant life or eternal life. Perhaps Jesus could tell him how to get it, tell him what he had to do to get it. So he came to Jesus asking "Good Teacher, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" In reply to Jesus' injunction to observe the commandments, the young man said that he had already done that—from his youth up. It is to be noted that Jesus mentioned only the commandments in a man's relationship to his fellow-men. Then he put his finger on the sore spot, or the weak spot in the man's life—covetousness. That man loved gold more than he loved God. The prescription was drastic and demanding—"sell all that thou hast, distribute to the poor, and . . . come, follow me." It does seem severe, too severe. The fact is, that nowhere else in the gospel record does Jesus make this demand of another. He is not stating a universal rule here. He does not always ask a rich man to sell all he has and to give everything away. But money was this man's idol, his god. There was no hope for him unless he cast down this idol and gave himself unreservedly to God. The principle runs through the whole New Testament—absolute, unconditional surrender as the terms of discipleship. The young man was unwilling to make the great sacrifice and to embark upon the great adventure. He went away sorrowful. He probably did some window-dressing. He probably acted as if he was having a good time in life. But he knew what others did not know, or probably only surmised. He knew that there was an emptiness and a hunger in his heart that nothing else could satisfy. That haunting memory of that experience probably followed him, like the "hound of heaven" through all the years of his life.

Zacchaeus.

There is another brighter picture of a rich man—Zacchaeus. He was a little, sawed-off, hammered-down grasping, greedy Jew, a publican, a traitor to his country and a renegade to his religion. He was undoubtedly unpopular, and just as certainly lonely. Like the young ruler, he had money, seeds of it, but unlike this ruler, he was not popular, nor did he have social position and civil power. But in common with the rich, young ruler, he had a hungry heart. He was dissatisfied with life. He knew he was missing something. And he determined to find out what it was. So when Jesus was passing through Jericho he knew his chance had come. Buffeted around by the crowd, and squeezed out of a place of vantage along the route of what was a great parade by the throngs which had gathered to see Jesus, Zacchaeus shinned up a tree, just like a small boy on circus day. It took courage to do that. And when Jesus came along, Zacchaeus had a grand-stand seat.

What did Zacchaeus have in mind? Was he going to speak to Jesus? Was he going to ask a question of Jesus? We do not know. What we do know is that Jesus saw this little man up that tree, and reading between the lines, and sensing the man's heart hunger and his sincerity and eagerness, he said "Zacchaeus come down. I would like to go home with you for dinner and to spend the day with you." One suspects that this little fellow still holds a world's record for getting down from a sycamore tree.

We do not know what they talked about that day. We do know that something happened that day which changed Zacchaeus' whole life. Unlike the rich young ruler, he responded to the Master's call to discipleship. He boldly and publicly proclaims that if any man would present a substantiated claim that he had been forced to pay too much taxes, he would be reimbursed four-fold! And he also boldly stated that from that time on he was going to give half of his income to the poor and to charitable purposes. Now of course a man does not get to heaven by doing a thing like that. We are not saved by our good works, but through faith, and by the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. But what Zacchaeus did was pretty good evidence that a change had been wrought in his life,

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

In this report are sixteen churches. We are so glad to hear from you each one. Thank you. The offerings that come in monthly should keep us from getting too far behind before Thanksgiving. When a report is less for any week than $1,000.00 there is a deficit for that week. Your interest in this weekly report can help to keep it from dipping too far below that mark.

Suppose every church through its Sunday school or some other organization sent a monthly offering. It would not have to be big, but if every church was heard from each month it would be around 45 churches in each weekly report, and it would keep us from going into debt before Thanksgiving. Then at Thanksgiving we could raise some money to go on the next year. I tell you this hand-to-mouth method is hard.

Another television set has been given us. We now have one in the Boys' building, and one in the little children's building. Rules and regulations regarding study hour and work hour have to be emphasized, but these sets help the children and their matrons very much. We are very grateful. Also this week a good friend in Sanford gave the Orphanage a record player, which plays all size records. This, too, we greatly appreciate. Several envelopes filled with coupons have come in since our announcement some time ago that Mrs. Truitt was starting a coupon campaign to help secure kitchen equipment. All kinds are appreciated and can be used.

In cleaning up the Boys' building we have had to discard several worn out linoleums. The bedroom floors have been scrubbed, but they are now bare. A few throw rugs, please.

This home for homeless children is yours. These homeless children are appreciative of your help. Your charge and mine they are. Please see that they have a good home, a good chance, and that you and I do for them a good job. To that end please pay us a visit. Let us show you what there is here. Let us show you the children and their helpers, and let us give you firsthand information of the work you are doing here.

Now again let me ask you to subscribe to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Tell your friends about your church paper. Ask them to subscribe. If you do not have but $3.00 to spare and it is a question as to whether to give it to the Orphanage or THE CHRISTIAN SUN— give it for a subscription to THE SUN, for you may help interest others in the Orphanage and every other enterprise in our Convention. Let us see how many people we can get to read THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Thank you.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

and that he was showing his faith by his works. How much different his life must have been from that time on. Life had new dignity, new direction, new meaning, because it had a new center. One interesting fact to be noted in the case of Zacchaeus is the fact that he apparently did not have to give up his job. It evidently was possible for a man to be honest even if he were a publican. Men often keep the same job when they accept Christ, but they do their work in a new spirit.

Here then, we have the story of two rich men, and their decisions. Weigh them carefully in your own mind. Which do you think, from here on, was the happier man? And the better man?

PASTOR GOES TO NEW FIELD.

signed to the will of the Lord in it all. Each one of them remembered us with a nice gift.

We were at New Elam for our last service the third Sunday in October. They loaded our car with many lovely gifts in the way of a pound- ing.

Our last service at Lee's Chapel was at the Christmas program on Wednesday night, December 19. There the Sunday school gave us six plates of Haviland China in Apple Blossom design. Several of the members gave us a cup and saucer, as well as many other lovely gifts.

The Sunday school at Lebanon gave me a nice Arrow Shirt and tie. Then at Piney Plain they remembered us with a nice wall plaque with Romans eight twenty-eight as the verse.

At Zion and Christian Chapel in the last services, they remembered us with very fine love offerings.

These acts of love and kindness along with all the nice things that were said to us, make our love for these dear people stronger. Our prayer is that under the leadership of the Holy Spirit, these churches with their new pastor may go forward in the work of the conference.

Now we are very happy in our new work here, and we desire the prayers of all our friends that we might be used of our Lord in a great way.

ful things was appreciated very much, and was a pleasant surprise to them.

The committees of the church are working and planning their work for the coming year. Every member of the church is working on some committee, and all are looking forward to progress next year.

LAYMEN'S FELLOWSHIP ORGAN- IZE.

The Laymen of Pleasant Grove Congregational Christian Church meet January 21, 1952, and organized a Laymen's Fellowship with nine charter members. The pastor, Rev. E. Carl Brady, presided over the meeting. The following officers were elected:

Sammie Leonard, president; Kermit Brady, vice-president; Wade Bray, secretary.

The meeting adjourned to meet the first Monday night in each month. Then a round-table discussion on a parsonage which is to be built soon. We hope to have our parsonage completed in the near future.

WADE BRAY, Secretary.

REPORT ON SILER CITY.

Rev. Winfred Braz is pastor at Siler City Church now. It was my privilege to work there last year as organizing pastor, and I appreciate the cooperation I received there. I would like to urge everyone in the Siler City community that is interested in our church to work with Rev. Braz in getting our new church going there.

SOME OBSERVATIONS ON OUR RECORDS FOR 1950-51.

 the ages of 12 and 24 years of age in our churches and their organizations. We have close to 10,000 laymen in our churches and their organizations, and there are between 12,000 and 15,000 women in our churches. We have people, good people, financial resources, greatly improved physical facilities, and we are called to follow a supreme Lord. Let these become consecrated lives; made spiritual assets, and the Kingdom of God in our midst can be brought nearer. May 1951-52 be a year of advance by a great people to whom God has been good!

With the increased service given by pastors to single or smaller groups of churches we stand in need of more pastors. We need 12 new pastors at this time, if all the churches are to have pastors. We are not producing enough ministers. There are not enough young men answering the "Call" and preparing themselves for the Christian ministry. Our Christian College is prepared to help train young men called and dedicated to the Christian ministry. But our homes and churches must inspire, encourage and claim more of our fine young men if our churches are to have an adequate supply of ministers for our present day and for the future. How many ministers has your Church helped inspire and claim for this ministry? "The fields are white unto the harvest! Let us pray, therefore, that the Lord of the harvest will send forth laborers!"

THE CONVENTION TOMORROW.

 nancially, it isn't paying off as it should. It isn't getting into enough church homes. We must face up on this situation. I doubt the advisability of having a paper so large and so costly as well as something so competitive to our national church paper, The Advance. We need to have more subscribers to The Advance in this area. A smaller newsheet might suit our needs. The two state conferences would either work out a joint paper or each state have its own paper.

Take the matter of Board meetings. It is hard to get members together from such large areas and it is expensive. Boards and committees organized on a state level would be more practical.

Our young people held state-wide meetings last year and these were very successful. The women are leading the way in their three conferences: North Carolina, Eastern Virginia and Valley Virginia. The three North Carolina Sunday School Convention presidents meet frequently and make excellent plans. Laymen think more in terms of state boundaries than Convention boundaries.

The time is ripe for some hard thinking and planning for the Tomorrow of The Southern Convention.

Let the Church Bear the Witness

A Report of the Mid-Winter Meeting in Cleveland

By REV. HENRY E. ROBINSON

The Missions Council is the agency to which is given the task of promoting and propagating the total works of our denomination. It consists of secretaries and representatives from the American Board, Home Board, Council for Social Action, and the Service Committee. It seeks to weld these together as a team and to coordinate and correlate the works of all. Dr. Albert D. Stauffacher is the minister of the Missions Council and heads a corps of workers under him.

The theme of the meetings this year was: "Let the Church Bear the Witness." Again and again was stressed the critical emergency of our task and that the church has a witness to bear. There is no other means provided. The opportunities open before us, both at home and abroad, are legion. They are dangerous opportunities, for if we do not answer the call, many other and less worthy causes shall seek and capture men's loyalties.

Missionary giving is up about 6 per cent over last year. This does not mean that we are stronger, for inflation and rising costs the world over have more than absorbed this increase. Our giving to Relief and Reconstruction suffered a sharp decline in a time when there are millions of homeless and hungry in the world which we cannot pass by.

The American Board ended its year within its budget and free of debt. Lest this give a false impression of a completed task, may I say that it has turned down scores of urgent requests from every field for vital and imperative needs.

The Building Society has had to turn down church after church requesting loans and grants. All its funds have been committed. About $2,500,000 in aid had to be denied to churches and situations which need help to meet the opportunity awaiting them. Because all our Boards and departments recognize the necessity of establishing new churches, the following vote was passed by the Council: "(We) heartily approve an effort on the part of the whole denomination to obtain substantial additional funds for the Revolving Fund of the Congregational Church Building Society, in order that our fellowship may discharge its responsibility and meet its new opportunity of helping to provide churches for the people of our growing, moving nation." If this move goes through it means that next year we will be raising a large capital sum to augment the resources of the Department of Church Extension.

The Rev. Howard Schomer, now under the American Board, heads our "Fellowship to Europe," which seeks to bear witness to the Christian movement on the continent. His presentation to the Council was deeply moving.

As you have probably heard, Morning Star VI. is being replaced, and you will have further information on this and our Micronesian Mission.

Dr. Vere Loper, moderator of our churches, spoke with great effect on two occasions. His remarks closed the sessions on a high plane of spirit and challenge. The Rev. Allen Hackett of St. Louis conducted the devotional services. Dr. Daniel Bliss, of Greenwich, Conn., was elected chairman of the Home Boards, to succeed Mrs. Judson Fiebiger of Iowa.

"Of One Blood" Acts 17: 26

A Message for Race Relations Sunday, February 10, 1952

By DEAN LISTON POPE of Yale Divinity School

"God . . . hath made of one blood all nations of men. . . . For we are also his offspring." (Acts 17:26a, 28b)

The whole world watches every denial of human brotherhood. The issue of race has become crucial in a time when men must learn to live as brothers if they are to live at all. In Asia and Africa non-white peoples are breaking old bonds of domination and are struggling toward equal status in the world. On occasion their aspirations are thwarted by newer and subtler forms of tyranny, but they will not be forever denied. The struggle for racial equality is a central aspect of the current conflict among the nations, and tyranny can hardly be defeated in one sphere unless it is rejected in every form, everywhere.

The findings of science and the ideals of democracy agree with the Christian faith in proclaiming the unity and the essential equality of all men. But Christian faith goes deeper and bases its teaching on foundations that can never be shaken. It affirms that men are not only equal under God, but also brothers: "For we are also his offspring." He hath made us all of one blood; we are all kinsmen in the only family that shall endure forever. We are required therefore not only to tolerate one another, and to deal justly the one with the other; more profoundly, we must actually love each other. Because God our Father loves us all, our love must be without sham. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son."

A revolution in race relations has been taking place in America in the last decade; old fetters are breaking and a new spirit of reconciliation is abroad in the land. But too often still the vague fact of color and the vaguer theories of race overshadow the deeper fact of brotherhood among all men. Emancipated, the Negro is not yet given equal freedom. Welcomed as cheap labor, newly arrived members of minority groups, including Jews, Orientals and Mexicans, are still treated cheaply in many ways. The American Indian, on a continent earlier his own, yet suffers from exploitation and limited opportunity.

God gives life to every man; for all men did Christ die and rise again. Under God every infraction of brotherhood will come to judgement; in Christ men are bound inseparably together.

The faith we profess condemns all racial division and directs our feet toward a new way. The Christian Churches have succumbed largely to racial lines. Now we are moving toward unity in race relations and toward integration into a more blessed community. We must hasten; the times are urgent and our imperatives are clear.

A time of testing has come for that greater faith which the centuries have not obscured: the assurance that we live and move and have our own true being in God the Father, whose offspring we are and whose redemptive love enables us to treasure all men as brothers.

News Flashes

Rev. John Gallo states that Dr. James R. Clinton of Philadelphia is conducting a preaching mission this week at Bethlehem Church, Disputanta. Services will continue each day through Sunday at 7:45 p. m.

The pastor of our church in Richmond, Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, who is an active member in the Lions Club, was one of the speakers when the club recently observed its thirtieth anniversary at a Ladies' Night Dinner Party in the Hotel John Marshall.

Mr. J. H. Newman, a deacon, trustee and faithful member of the Richmond Church was taken ill while at church on last Sunday and had to be hospitalized. At this writing he is still unable to have visitors. We hope that he will soon be much better.

From Rev. Mark W. Andes comes the following: "Dr. C. E. Newman was operated on Saturday, February 2, at the South Boston Hospital, South Boston, Va. He stood the operation all right and is getting along as well as can be expected." We wish for Dr. Newman a speedy recovery.

RECEPTION AT ELM AVENUE, PORTSMOUTH.

A reception was held Tuesday evening, January 22, 1952, at the parsonage of the Elm Avenue Christian Church to welcome the new pastor and his family, Rev. and Mrs. R. Eugene Tally and daughter, Phyllis, formerly of Sanford, North Carolina.

An evening of Christian fellowship was enjoyed by all those present, and Rev. W. Stanley Carne, pastor of the First Christian Church of Portsmouth gave words of welcome to the Tally family which were responded to by the new pastor. Mrs. F. H. Lewis of the Shelton Memorial Church, in brief comments, challenged all the members and guests as well to continue working together in Christian unity. Rev. J. Walter Felton gave a summary of the beginning and early work of Elm Avenue Christian Church. The group was favored with a duet by the new pastor and his wife. Miss Lillie Keith presented to Mrs. Tally a guest book numbering around 40 guests who called during the evening.

OUR CHAPEL HILL CHURCH LAUNCHES REMODELING PROGRAM.

After a period of study and planning, our Chapel Hill congregation has begun an extensive program of church remodeling.

The Rev. Richard L. Jackson, pastor, announces that a drive for $6,000 to renovate the building and improve the grounds is now underway and $5,300 already pledged by some of the 90 members of the congregation.

Seats inside the church, erected in 1900, will be rearranged in the sanctuary, and the pulpit-centered arrangement will be replaced with a chancel. This will place emphasis on the communion center as the main point of the worship service.

Other improvements, recommended recently by Dr. John R. Scotford will include addition of lighting effects in the chancel, building of a parlor in the rear, beautifying the entrance, building a front porch and brick walk, and repainting the building.

Bill Ray, a member of the congregation and a professional architect, drew the plans for the remodeling.

A sum of about $4,000 has been earmarked to buy a new Homer pipe organ, to replace the present one, bought from the Baptist Church in 1923. The new organ is expected to be installed within two weeks.

Committees for the various projects will be:

Organ: J. Earl Daniely, chairman; Mrs. Raymond Strong, Mrs. James Lyman, and George Williams.

Worship, furnishings and equipment: Mrs. A. C. Shearer, chairman; Mrs. Hubert Neville, Mrs. Lindsay Neville, Mrs. R. L. Jackson, Mrs. Nick Watts, and Mrs. James Pinney.

Plans and construction: J. R. Ellis, chairman; P. R. Perry, Oscar Ray, Jack Graham, D. D. Marley, and Jesse Basnight.

Finance and promotion: Stein Basnight, chairman; Mrs. George Nicholson, Mrs. Mamie Leonard, Mrs. J. Earl Daniely, Lindsay Neville, John Hunt, O. D. Neville, and Norman Savage, project treasurer.

All our institutions rest upon business. Without it we should not have schools, colleges, churches, parks, playgrounds, pavements, books, libraries, art, music, or anything else that we value.—Cassius E. Gates.

Resume of the Year's Progress at The Christian Orphanage

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

The Christian Orphanage showed many outstanding accomplishments during the past year. Foremost among these is the fact that 80 children have been give a home with good food, good care and training.

Emphasis is always placed on the orphanage's farming, dairying, hog raising and poultry. However last year extremely dry seasons greatly reduced the yield of pastures, crops, gardens and grain. Plenty of fresh milk, eggs, vegetables and meats have been available, however, to keep the children healthy and growing.

Four children last year required hospitalization, several had toncilectomies and all had their teeth checked and considerable dental work done. Several children also were fitted with glasses. There were several cases of mumps and a few colds, but the administration feels that on the whole the health was very good.

The year 1951 saw another forward step, that of adding a director of religious activities. This has been done with but little additional cost to the institution because Miss Melva Foster, an experienced secretary and bookkeeper, who had just completed a four-year course in religious education, was secured to do the combined job of office secretary, and director of religious activities.

Miss Foster is a 1951 graduate of Elon College, and a member of the First Church in Greensboro. She directs worship services on the orphanage campus graded to the group-age of the children.

During the year a home for the superintendent was erected at a cost of around $25,000, 60 per cent of which was raised by the orphanage during the year. The new home has been built without using any money sent into the orphanage for regular operating expenses, thanks to the generosity of many friends and businesses in the surrounding community and beyond.

A large machinery shed was erected during the year into which tractors and farm equipment can be driven easily, thns housing all tools and equipment from the weather.

Additional and rather expensive equipment had to be installed during the year for the milk house and milking barn, a new pasture was fenced, and some permanent pasture added.

A good start was made during the year on a beef cattle herd. Children had been eating too much hog meat, and it is thought that with the pastures which the orphanage has and can develop, a herd of between 15 and 20 cattle will supply a reasonable amount of beef yearly.

During the year a new roof was installed on the Johnston Hall and it is now in good condition. For many years the orphanage had hoped to place fire-escapes on the Baby Home where 30 little children live. During this summer those fire-escapes were started and it is hoped that before many weeks this work will be completed.

The number of children taken care of was increased during the year to 80, which is a net gain of four, and a net gain of nine in the past two years.

The year 1951 has seen a new living arrangement for the children in the home. The boys and girls to the age of 10 are all placed in what has been called the Baby Home; boys 10 and above live in the Johnston Hall, and girls 10 and above live in the Main building.

Along with the increase in maintenance cost, repairs, and general overhead a number of new contributors to the orphanage have been found; and but for the very dry season on gardens, the large fields of corn and hay, and shortage in pastures the or-

Priming the Pump of ## RACE RELATIONS

Every democracy, just as every family and home, has its less attractive, less desirable aspects. Individuals and nations have their flaws in character, their weaknesses, their blind spots in spiritual perception.

People do not always notice or praise our strong points. Sometimes they seem to deliberately single out our weaknesses, call attention to them, even magnify them. They seem to overlook our virtues or simply take them for granted. Unfortunate, perhaps, but true.

The South has its virtues, its assets, its unmistakable evidences of progress; but it also has its less proud, its seamy side. Wherever democracy is vulnerable, critics are apt to hurl their verbal assaults.

A book, which is certain to have a wide reading, is being prepared for publication. It is well documented and will be profusely illustrated. Cringe as you read the title: "South of Freedom."

What, specifically, are we of The Southern Convention doing to improve race relations? The negative approach is totally inadequate. It is futile to go on simply denying charges that are hurled at us and denouncing those who propose reforms.

We have a stewardship of influence to discharge. We may not be responsible for the pattern that has been set before us, but we are eternally responsible for the part we play in this our southern democracy.

Where can one who is interested take hold of this problem? How can one take a positive approach, alter undesirable patterns, and establish new ones? What can a church do in response to the Biblical question, "Am I my brother's keeper?" If a church is genuinely and seriously disturbed about its sins of omission and commission, how can it begin to make amends? The following suggestions will not be acceptable to the idealist, but they do indicate a point of departure. We of the South may not be able or willing to do all that some of the absentee specialists would demand of us. We can, by God's grace, do the minimum, if not the maximum. Here, then, are some practical ways to prime the pump of race relations.

1. White churches can get acquainted, or better acquainted, with the Negro churches in their community, especially the churches of our own denomination. Find common ground. Ascertain their needs. Take cognizance of their anniversaries, victories. Assist them in time of difficulty or great undertaking. Make a contribution on their building fund.

2. White churches may make available to Negro churches new or second-hand hymnals, choir robes, pews, communion sets, pulpit furniture, Sunday school literature, stained-glass windows, etc. All these items are needed desperately in many of our Negro churches. Such gifts will not be construed as smacking of paternalism. Information is available for any interested person or church. Don't, please, undertake to sell your surplus or cast-off properties to a Negro church for a profit!

3. Arrange for Fraternal Delegates at Conferences and Conventions. Keep the door open for constant and friendly counsel on a Christian basis. Substitute Christianity for Jim Crowism. Multiply acquaintances on a Christian level.

4. Have a Social Action Committee in your church, composed of sane, trusted, but progressive leadership.

5. Make an offering for Franklinton Center on Race Relations Sunday.

6. Seek to purify democracy at the grass roots. Urge fair play between white and Negro. Take your turn at the business counter or ticket window. Throw the weight of your influence against discrimination. Seize every opportunity to correct erroneous views concerning Negroes.

7. Remember, what we do now influences the future, liberates or penalizes the next generation.

8. Let the Church be the Church, now two churches! Keep the church strong. Practice missions at home as well as abroad. Build a firm wall of understanding and mutual concern against all the onslaughts of outrageous fortune.

The Disturbing Jesus

A Returned Missionary

writes about the ethical demand of Jesus in contemporary society

If Jesus came to your town, what kind of a reception would he get? In the eighth chapter of Matthew, when he went to the city of the Gadarenes, we are told that "all of the city came out to meet him, and when they saw him, they begged him to leave their neighborhood." Isn't that a strange way to treat one who blessed little children, who healed the sick and who gave life and hope to the multitudes?

This incident calls attention to the fact that there is another side to the character of Jesus Christ which we so often overlook. It's true that he was a comforter; but he was also a disturber. He came to bring peace to men's hearts; but he also came to bring the sword. Throughout the gospels we discover his mission to be not that of lulling men to sleep, but that of stabbing them awake by driving the sword of truth into their inflexible minds and into their hard set ways of doing things.

I.

The Gadarenes had reason enough to beg Jesus to leave. First of all, Jesus was a Jew—a member of a despised race. The Gadarenes, like ourselves, felt more comfortable to keep up the fences which separated them from people of other races and nations. The Gadarenes had also another reason for asking this trouble maker to leave. He had healed two insane men—but at what cost? A valuable herd of swine, as a result of the healing, had rushed down the steep bank and drowned in the sea. Suppose you had been the owner of the swine—they represented a big investment. In order that these two maniacs be healed, you had to take a heavy financial loss. Wouldn't you beg Jesus to leave the neighborhood and let you alone? That's what they did, too. They wanted to get rid of him. As long as he was around he was a threat to all the property interests in the community for he placed human values above property. To Jesus, a man's life was more valuable than a hundred head of livestock.

In a recent issue of The Christian Century, Dr. Lucecock calls attention to the last scene in Shaw's play, "St.

Joan." In the midst of the celebration in her honor, St. Joan appears and says "I didn't know you loved me so much. I will come back." The surprised response of the people was "No, horrors, anything but that." They were content to sing her praises but they were much happier if she would just stay dead.

We ought never to lose sight of the fact that the people whom today we revere as great—were, in their time, disturbers of the peace, trouble makers. The greatest disturber of all—was Jesus Christ.

If we look deeply enough into the record, Jesus is bound to disturb us today. Especially does he disturb our rigid minds and our fixed patterns of thought. Most of us give verbal acceptance to the idea that change is in the nature of things. We acknowledge that:

The old order changeth yielding place to new;
And God fulfills himself in many ways
Lest one good custom should corrupt the world.

Yet, while we give lip service to this idea—we ourselves, are loath to change. We want to keep our outgrown ideas, our deep seated prejudices. A wise school master observe that often our brains, instead of becoming powerhouses, become cold storage chambers. Someone has said that five per cent of the people think creatively, ten per cent think they think and the rest would rather die than do any original thinking.

Isn't it a fact that most of our ideas and attitudes are in conformity with the people around us, and we don't like to be different? The other day I saw a sign in a store in Raleigh which said, "Which one of these dangerous ideas do you have?" I rushed across the street to find if I was subversive, only to find a company trying to sell steel safes. The notion is abroad that any idea which is different from that held by the majority is dangerous, and we shy away. I once heard a minister say in a sermon, "If I know that a book has anything in it which is not in accordance with what I believe, I won't read it."

If we are satisfied with the progress we've made—with our ideas as they are—all growth has stopped.

Charles Kettering the wizard of General Motors says, "Research is an organized method for keeping reasonably dissatisfied with what you have." True research in living and thinking is not bulwarking our pet concepts with arguments and proofs, but constantly being dissatisfied with what we are with an eagerness to learn and improve. "Discontent," wrote Oscar Wilde, "is the first step in the progress of man or nation." As we inquire more deeply into the life and teachings of Jesus, we cannot long remain complacent. His absolute demands on our lives make us conscious of how far we fall short of what God expects of us. We begin to re-examine our ideas, our attitudes and our lives in the light of divine standards.

Let us take an example. You may remember in that popular play, South Pacific, one of the songs goes like this:

You've got to be taught to hate and fear;
You've got to be taught from year to year;
It's got to be drummed in your dear little ear.

You've got to be carefully taught.

You've got to be taught to be afraid
Of the people whose eyes are oddly made,
And people whose skin is a different shade.
You've got to be carefully taught.

You've got to be taught before it's too late,
Before you are six or seven or eight,
To hate all the people your relatives hate.
You've got to be carefully taught.

All of us, as a result of our early training, have developed certain attitudes of mind, certain ways of responding to other people, which, when confronted with the ethical demands of Christ, simply do not conform. As Christians, it is our responsibility to put our own minds in order, to see to it that our attitudes toward people who are in any way different from us—either in their thinking or outward appearance—are in conformity with Jesus' teachings about human brotherhood. When the words of Jesus disturb our deep seated prejudices, our customary practices, let us thank God and open our minds wider to the truth of God's word. The only thing to fear is lest our minds become rigid and the poison of self-satisfaction sets in to keep out the disturbing Jesus.

II

Jesus also disturbs our rigid ideas about the very nature of the Christian faith and of the church. We can't get away from the fact that Christianity, from the outset, has

Youth at Work in the Church

MAX VESTAL, Box 792, Elon College, N. C.

YOUTH WEEK OBSERVED AT SUFFOLK.

The young people of the Suffolk Christian Church have shared two important services on January 27 and February 3. On the 27 of January they assumed full responsibility for the morning service of worship. Ben Baines conducted the service with Virginia Mae Wagner and Florence King assisting him. Miss Shirley Saunders, Miss Elizabeth Rountree and Lanier Felton spoke on the topics, "What the Church Expects of Youth," "What Young People Believe," and "What Young People Expect of the Church." Certainly the future of our church is assured if one can judge by the caliber of the service of worship presented by these young people.

On February 3 our young people united with the youth of the community in response to the "Call" that young people may be committed more deeply to the cause of Christ. The Rev. John A. Winslow, Rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church was the speaker and the service was conducted by youth leaders from the five cooperating churches. Certainly the challenge to united action and the sense of sharing in an undertaking that will receive the support of a million or more young people offers to our youth a strength not to be found in our own little group. We accepted with a deep sense of privilege the opportunity to unite with others in the covenant of the call.

RICHMOND CHURCH OBSERVES YOUTH SUNDAY.

The First Congregational Christian Church of Richmond, Va., observed Youth Sunday the last Sunday in January. Five of the young people from the youth fellowship group had full charge of directing an unusually impressive worship service. Each of the five presented his or her part with ease and dignity and reverence which won the appreciation and praise of all present. The youth fellowship group of the Richmond Church meets each Sunday evening for worship, study, and fellowship and has been doing special work on certain week nights in the interest of providing a recreation room in the basement of the church. The group is most fortunate in having as its counselors Mrs. L. L. Bond and Mr. A. A. Dofflemeyer.

SUCCESSFUL TRAINING SCHOOL HELD IN GREENSBORO.

The Leadership Training School held recently in First Church, Greensboro for the churches of the area, was declared a success by all who attended. 162 people were registered and 110 received credit for courses through the Congregational Christian Division of Christian Education and sixteen through the Evangelical and Reformed Board. Churches participating were: Apple's Chapel; Monticello; Hines Chapel; Calvary, Greensboro; Palm Street, Greensboro; First Church, Greensboro; High Point; Pleasant Ridge; Winston-Salem, and the First Evangelical and Reformed Church in Greensboro.

Mr. Martin T. Garren was a very able dean and the teachers were: Dr. Ferris E. Reynolds, Elon College; Rev. Henry E. Robinson, Burlington; Dr. Raymond Smith, Greensboro College, Greensboro; Miss Julia Woodson, Burlington, and Miss Lelia Anderson, Division of Christian Education, Yankton, South Dakota.

RELAX WITH MAX.

A large number of you will remember the fine state-wide rallies that were held in North Carolina and Virginia last year. Plans are being made for even better and bigger rallies this year. These will be held toward the end of March. Plan to come! Watch this page for further information.

* * *

We get a kick out of seeing a man sitting on a limb and sawing it off between himself and the tree. But what are many of our young people's groups doing? They are sitting out on the limb, cutting themselves off from their conference, from The Southern Convention, and worst of all from the teachings of the Bible, which emphasizes the brotherhood of all mankind. It's not very funny when this happens—it ruins the limb and hurts the tree.

* * *

If your religion doesn't make you different, then how is God gonna know you got it?

* * *

I've been watching that mechanic for the last 15 minutes. There's a man who knows his business! He didn't spill a drop of oil on the ground. He put the hood down gently, fastened it securely, and left no fingerprints on it. He wiped his hand on a clean tissue before opening the door, spread a clean cloth over the upholstery, meshed the gears noiselessly and drove carefully out into the street."

"I know. That's his own car."

A woman once asked Horace Greeley for advice about her church which was having a desperate time with its finances. She listed the many ways of raising money that had been tried—bazaars, pancake suppers, drives, a mock wedding, box socials, friendship quilts, and others.

"Can you suggest some way," she ended, "that we can keep the church from having to close up?"

Mr. Greeley had one suggestion. "Why don't you try religion?" he asked.—Sunday Digest.

ATTENTION: THEOLOGUES.

A national contest aimed at preparing future ministers to lead a church building or improvement program in a local church is underway, co-sponsored by the National Council of Churches' Bureau of Church Building and Architecture.

Dr. E. M. Conover, director of the Bureau, said the competition is open only to students in Protestant theological seminaries, and that each contestant is required to select a specific church and prepare a building program which he believes is needed. An alternative is to plan a completely new church, he added.

An acceptable contest entry, Dr. Conover pointed out, must provide a building plan not only for worship purposes, but also for religious education, fellowship and recreational activities, pastoral and administrative work. He said the designated church must be one which serves 150 or more members.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

SPECIAL COLLEGE ISSUE.

Our editor, Dr. Robert Lee House, has given his consent to a special college issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN to appear the week of February 10. Much of the material for this particular issue will be prepared by a number of the friends who are expressing themselves on different topics.

We all realize that the college occupies an essential position in our total church program and that at this particular time it faces serious situations. Many problems confront the college at the moment. Money will not solve all of its problems, but a sufficient amount would solve many of its problems. The forthcoming particular issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN will deal with salient facts of the campaign. The college is intensifying its campaign to raise one and a quarter million dollars. The one million dollars has been authorized by The Convention. The Convention will be requested to add $250,000 to the million dollars now being sought. This money, when raised, will go first for the building and equipping of a dining room and kitchen; second, for a girls' dormitory; and third, for a boys' dormitory. According to architect's figures, these buildings will cost from $250,000 to $300,000 each. This will leave two dormitories that should be constructed as early as possible. However, it may be the decision of the trustees of the college to add the remainder of the million and a quarter dollars to Elon's endowment funds. This fund now totals only $472,000. Elon should have a minimum of one million dollars endowment. Then it would be far under the amount of endowment held by the average college of the size of Elon.

Elon's constituency is enthusiastic and determined to make the college as nearly secure as possible from the standpoint of buildings, equipment, and endowment. The cooperation of Elon's entire constituency is earnestly and expectantly solicited.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The Convention expresses its continued interest in Elon College by providing a means whereby each individual member may make his contribution to the college. A total of $15,000 is apportioned annually for the college. This distributed among 35,000 people means a very small contribution for each individual—so small that anyone could contribute it without missing it at all.

It does seem that when we consider the services the college has rendered to the church of our Convention and the services that the churches of the Convention will need the college to render in the years that lie ahead, everyone would without insistence or solicitation voluntarily make his contribution. A contribution to Elon College from the standpoint of the church is not a gift but an investment that will come back many times over again in services that are essential to the ongoing of the church.

SUSTAINING FUND NEWS.

For the Sustaining Fund, as well as for other things, the year 1951 has now passed into history. We are sure that all the church members in The Southern Convention will be interested in a summary of what was contributed to the fund during that year.

There are 194 churches in The Convention as of the present time. Of these, a total of 26 made the Sustaining Fund Roll of Honor for the first year of the fund's existence. That is, each of these 26 churches contributed not less than $1.00 per member to the fund during the conference year, and many of them contributed in excess of that amount for each member on the church rolls.

Of the 168 churches, which did not make the Roll of Honor, 59 made at least some contribution to the Sustaining Fund during the conference year. When we deduct these and the Roll of Honor churches from the total, however, we find that there are 109 churches, which did not participate at all in the Sustaining Fund effort in 1951. We are hoping that every single one of these churches will do its part in 1952, and that the list of contributors for the current year will be 100 per cent instead of a little more than 45 per cent as was the case for the year just closed.

Late gifts to the Sustaining Fund credited on 1951 contributions have raised the total to just under $12,000 for that year. That is still far from the goal set by The Southern Convention—but it is at least a beginning. A continuance of the joint efforts of all of us will insure the complete achievement of our goal for 1952. Surely our college is worth more than 2c per week to each of us so far as its usefulness and contribution to the whole church is concerned. That is over and above the other gifts to the college, remember, and represents a sort of gratuitous acknowledgement of our gratitude to God and to the college for what it has meant to our denomination and to the world, as well as to a great many of us individually, during the more than sixty years of its history. Surely such an institution is worth undergirding and sustaining now even more than has been the case in the past. We must go forward! There is no standing still, and retrogression is, of course unthinkable.

Our thanks and appreciation go to all our Sustaining Fund officers and committees, as well as to all the ministers and workers in our individual churches, who have made this auspicious beginning of the Sustaining Fund possible. We are sure that they will "gird up their loins" for even greater efforts in this connection during 1952. Present plans call for a full report of the fund to The Southern Convention in its biennial session next May together with a request for authority for its continuance. It is expected confidently that this authority will be granted without question.

Many of our churches have already put the Sustaining Fund in their budgets for 1952. Some did for 1951. The college is deeply grateful for this fact. May there be many

At Home and Abroad

A LETTER FROM ED RIGGS.

Mission Compound
Mamadura, Ramnad Dist.
South India
January 7, 1952

Dear Friends of the Southern Convention:

Happy New Year! The Christmas season has come and gone, and we have enjoyed our usual pause to catch our breath before we begin the new plunge into the "struggle." I am afraid the latter is still mostly blundering; but things keep happening that are full of interest and gradually help make the picture clearer.

Before I start, however, I should mention the elections here last week. There are not enough ballot boxes or trained election officials in India to do the job all in one day, so the various Districts take their turn in rotation, and will be at it for a month or more. Our turn came last Wednesday. Since the schools were used as polling places, our Compound was full all day with ragged bewildered-looking peasant men and women, wandering about in search of the Boarding School building and standing patiently in line waiting their turn to vote. Incidentally the women's line was longer than the men's most of the time. The results were announced in the paper yesterday. A little less than half the electorate of 77,000 voted. The Congress candidate won easily with 22,000, and the Communist candidate was a poor second with less than 7,000. The Socialist and "F. B. Marxist" candidates had to forfeit their election deposits for failing to get the minimum required number of votes. I don't know how good a showing the Communists are making over the country as a whole, as the paper gives no publicity to the subject. The Communist candidate won in "Madura North," despite the fact that he is still in jail! But everywhere that I know of, the Communist platform and tactics have been a mild and watered-down performance, compared with what we were accustomed to in China, and not featured by any anti-foreign propaganda. Over the country as a whole Congress seems to be winning because opposition seems to be divided into too many weak groups.

My chief accomplishment last month was to get started with my village lantern-slide shows on health education. My projector arrived at last, with its pressure kerosene lantern as light source so that it can be used in places without electricity. With colored film strips on sanitation and nutrition borrowed from the United States Information Service in Madras, and a few "Life of Christ" slides to make it a suitable Christmas program, my assistant and I sallied forth every evening for about a week, our bicycles loaded down with equipment, to one of the nearby villages, a different one each evening. We would hang a sheet under a tree for a screen, and I would run the projector while my assistant gave the explanations in Tamil. Then we would come back by moonlight. This was just experimental, of course. Beginning this month I hope to spend the time that the borrowed film strips are available in remoter villages, so that we have to stay overnight in the place we give the show. Thus we will have time to talk more with the villagers and reinforce the health lesson with posters and flannelgraph skits. The kerosene light is not brilliant enough to allow a very large image, so the size of the audience is strictly limited, as it should be in these tiny places. A group of 150, crowded together on the ground in a space the size of an American living room, could see it clearly; but it was very unsatisfactory for the 250 leprosy patients who were more spread out in the auditorium of the leprosarium for a special Christmas show.

After the week of these shows I attended part of the meeting of the Diocesan Council, where I was trying to get formal approval for my health program. The meeting was in Tirumangalam, a town where I had not been before. The delegates were housed in the Church boarding school there, which, it seems, is a sort of model school and the show place of the Diocese. The site was selected fifteen or twenty years ago on the edge of town by a missionary who bought extra land with the idea of developing an agricultural school.

But the missionary left, and anyway the land didn't seem suitable for ordinary crops. A young Indian pastor took over and has been responsible for all the development since; and as he showed me around he acted as if he were really proud of what he had done with it in these years. He had started out by buying an electric pump and digging a well which just happened to hit a vein with a seemingly endless supply of water. Ordinarily a small amount of land with a constant abundant water supply is used for vegetable gardens and orchards. But this pastor elected to plant flowers, for which there is a small but steady market in Madura for garlands for weddings, funerals, and other celebrations. He has all the land around the well and pump put into roses, so grown that some of the bushes will be in bloom every day in the year and the market can be supplied steadily. The profits from his rose garden have been used, not only to pay for the pump and electricity and to landscape the rest of the school grounds, but to build and maintain better school buildings than the other boarding schools have, with electric lights in every room. And he feeds the children better, and was even able to start a normal school in the girls' compound. At present he has fruit trees along the walks and irrigation ditches, the rest of the grounds planted in millet and vegetables, and is even experimenting with bee-keeping and poultry-raising. You can imagine how the students get plenty of agricultural training after all, even if it is not the orthodox kind. Also quite unorthodox is the idea of a church institution being maintained by a profit-making business. There are disadvantages and pitfalls in such a scheme, and the Communists certainly wouldn't approve if they came into power. But the children are eating better and living in cleaner surroundings than in the other boarding schools, and morale is high. The pastor doesn't take the credit for any of this; he says it was all because he happened to hit an abundant supply of water, which made an electric pump economically feasible.

The Diocesan Council there passed my health proposal — rather perfunctorily, I thought. I haven't been able to generate much enthusiasm here in India so far. Everybody approves of the idea of preventive medicine but they seem to be a bit skeptical whether propaganda methods will be

HAVE YOU HEARD?

Mrs. W. E. Wisseman is teaching in the Winter Institute at Franklin-ton this month. Her course will be "Program Planning" for the Women's leaders.

* * *

Mrs. O. H. Paris, former president of the Women's Convention, is in Wesley Long Hospital in Greensboro, following a heart attack. The doctor has ordered complete rest, which means giving up all her church activities. Let us remember her in our prayers and with cards and notes.

* * *

"Friendly Service" for January in our Burlington Woman's Auxiliary consisted of church visiting and a membership drive. This would be a good project for any group for a month—or throughout the year.

* * *

Young People's packets are still on sale from The Convention Office, for $1.00. Included is the new and different Now!—young people's mission study book which is in the form of the Reader's Digest.

* * *

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill has several copies of Now for sale from The Convention Office for 35c each. They are fine for adults as well as young people. If your adults will not read the ordinary 'mission study book' you might surprise them with this very readable "book" which consists of short articles, pictures, and special features on home mission activity. It will 'count' as a mission study book in the home field this year.

* * *

Mrs. L. E. Smith, president of the Elon College Missionary Society, was hostess at a lovely tea given in honor of Miss Angie Crew on Monday, January 21. Groups were invited for both afternoon and evening, so that the entire community could be reached in a sort of "welcome home" for this veteran missionary who lived at Elon College during the war years.

LEST WE FORGET.

When the end of the year rolls around and we find that we have left so many things for the last minute we are inclined to become panicky and then and there we resolve not to put off so many things until the last minute next time. Well, "next time" is fast slipping by. I wonder how many of us are up to date on our obligations.

SAVE THOSE CUPONS.

In a recent bulletin from The Christian Orphanage there was included a message from Mrs. John G. Truitt, good wife of our good superintendent. She asked that the women of our churches save all kinds of coupons for the Orphanage—having seen in a Raleigh orphanage a kitchen floor tiled as a result of coupons!

Here again is a little thing which the women of our churches can do which will mean a great deal to the Orphanage. Save any kind of coupon—cereal, soap, flour, and what have you. When you get a bunch together, send them to The Christian Orphanage and they will know what to do with them.

The job of promoting this might be given to your friendly service chairman, or some special person might be chosen for this particular task. Let's cooperate with the Orphanage and show them how many coupons the women of our churches can send them in 1952.

One of the most important phases of our work is our Life Membership and Memorials. Truly we could honor a friend or pay tribute to a loved one in no better way, for thus we enable them to live on in service to others. Isn't there someone you would like to honor in this way?

This year, as you probably know, the money you give for Life Memberships and Memorials goes to Franklinton Center. Maybe you would like to know something about this work.

Franklinton Center is not a school as many have thought it to be, but a place where all of our Negro Congregational Christian ministers and laymen and lay women can come for conferences and institutes.

One of the buildings is incomplete, having been started many years ago, and another building (Howell Hall) which is being used is in very bad condition. The plan is to completely renovate Howell Hall as soon as possible so as to help in expanding the program there.

Again may I ask you to think this over as individuals or as a group. The Master again offers an opportunity to serve in fields where his feet would tread.

 Life Memberships and Memorials.*

PROGRESS AT LONG'S CHAPEL.

We have been following the theme, "A Highway for Our Lord," and have found the programs very interesting.

At our regular November meeting a special missionary service was observed. Rev. James T. Donnell, a former missionary to South America, was the principal speaker. At this meeting a Thank Offering was received for the Japan International Christian University.

At our December meeting we especially enjoyed the Christmas program, "Light for the Way," from the program book; group participation through Bible reading, songs and prayer. The candle-lighting narrative service was most impressive.

During the Christmas season our society remembered the sick and shut-ins with special cheer-baskets and cards.

Our society was on hand to serve the laymen's fellowship group at their first meeting and are looking forward to serving them in the future.

We have also provided a new oil heater for the church hut. The ladies have decided to divide into group, three per month, to clean the church and supply flowers for our Sunday morning worship services.

With renewed purpose we look forward to greater achievements in the future.

MRS. E. J. CLAWSON.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Boys and Girls:

February is the month in which we are asked to think about the brotherhood of all God's children. Some churches invited ministers of other races to come to their churches and speak. Some church schools invite Negro, Indian, Chinese or Mexican children to visit their classes. How will you think about this important month?

There are many racial groups in our country. There are many religious groups in our country. We are a democracy that believes every man should be free to work and worship as he pleases. Some races, especially the Negro, feel they are mistreated. It is true that every group of people who are small in numbers will not have as easy a time as the strongest.

Once the black men were slaves in our country but they were freed. A bitter war was fought about this and after the war there was more bitterness as the people were full of hatred and revenge. Some of the bitterness has lasted until this very day. Many young people have discovered real friends among other races and they have learned to judge young people as individuals, which is the way it should be.

Minority groups work hard to make their voices heard. There is an organization known as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People which works to protect and to advance its people. This month, however, in Rochester, N. Y. the NAACP gave its approval when the book, Little Black Sambo, was banished from the schools. How silly! Little Black Sambo is not a Negro boy at all, but an Indian (don't forget American Indians are different from India's Indians) boy who met three fierce tigers. Who ever heard of an American Negro boy meeting any tigers? All Little Black Sambo did was to outwit the tigers, save his fine clothes and eat over 100 pancakes all drizzled with tiger butter. Sometimes we can worry so much about our differences we forget our likenesses! And we are all alike when it comes to making mistakes, feeling proud, feeling hurt and being resentful. God knew we were so he sent his Son, Jesus, to tell us the way to live good lives.

Believers in God are brothers too—be they Protestant, Roman or Greek Catholics, or Jewish. Each has a different form of worship but each group has a firm faith in his belief. In America each group can worship God as it pleases. But that wonderful fact does not make some people happy, no indeed, they want everyone to worship God as they do. Many wars have been fought, many lives given and many sacrifices made to give us freedom to worship God as we please. Let us keep it so. Let us rejoice with our Roman and Jewish brother. Think of their churches and synagogues as being holy places. Think of their rabbis and priests as being consecrated men. It is the Christian way to behave.

For the 29 days of this Leap Year February we can think about our brothers who are alike in blood and bone but different in skin covering and characteristics. We can think about our brothers of different beliefs and we can think good thoughts, kind thoughts and wish them well and pray that we might live as true brothers! Poor Little Black Sambo never did much harm—any thoughts he fostered must have been loving ones for he is a lovable little boy. But you know what?—if we conquer racial and religious prejudice—we will have to use our wits to outsmart those tigers! And there won't be any drizzled tiger butter either.—Just plain hard work.

WATCHA MEAN?

By LOUISE C. HASTINGS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

This expression, Watcha mean?, we hear on all sides today. Children have always wanted to know the meaning of things—that is the way they have learned—but today's children, when they question, have their own way of asking for information. The small children who visit us use the expression; the boys across the street use. We park beside a curb, and a boy passing with his mother is heard repeating the same question in the same way. The neighborhood children who bring their turtles and snakes to me for identification all use the same wording. There is a musical charm to this expression that grows upon one. I've heard it—oh, so many, many times—and I like it.

"I think the way Shirley interrupts you when you are reading to her is dreadfully rude—and the way she asks, again and again 'Watcha mean?' is positively uncouth! When I was a girl I listened and never opened my mouth." So said a visiting aunt who has strong opinions and is always sure that what she thinks is right. My aunt is living in the yesterdays; the child of today is a new species to her. It does no good to try to win her over to modern ways. It just can't be done. There is only one way to her—her way.

I might have told her that this was how Shirley learned—that it was really a benefit to both of us for her to ask me questions. Questions and answers bring mother and child into close association. All sorts of questions come up from reading aloud. We do not wish our children to say, "No, don't let's ask Mother questions like that; let's ask one of the older girls."

I knew a mother who read aloud to her two boys every noon, while they ate their lunch, during their entire primary and grammar school years. What delightful times they must have had, and what happy memories they must cherish. Instead of saying "Watcha mean, Mother?" the probably asked, "What does that mean, Mother?" But, always, children need to ask questions.

The important point, however, is not the wording of the questions but the fact that Mother answers the questions willingly and intelligently. It is a blessed privilege to be able to explain situations that the children meet day by day, in their books as well as in their lives. None of us wish our boys and girls to get the wrong outlook upon life.

It is unfortunate when parents turn away from their children's questions. It is true that mothers and fathers are generally busy; yet we never should be too busy to meet the child's immediate need. We do an injustice to both the child and ourselves when we do not rise to the occasion. Sometimes questions come at unusual and inopportune moments, and we are obliged to do difficult and embarrassing explaining, nevertheless, it is wise, if possible to do

THE DISTURBING JESUS.

been a revolutionary movement. It was considered dangerous—even subversive—not only by the Roman authorities, but by the religious professionals, the Scribes and Pharisees. The great reform movements within Christianity throughout the centuries, have all been revolutionary in charter. John Wesley, in 1776 wrote, "I am not afraid that the people called Methodist should ever cease to exist either in Europe or America. But I am afraid that they should exist only as a dead sect, having the form of religion without power."

Unfortunately, not only in Methodism, but in all denominations, that often happens. The spirit leaves and there remains only the empty shell. Consequently the church becomes a group of self-satisfied and static people with the inevitable result that it becomes weak and ineffective. In many instances the church is content to major in minor questions, content to appoint committees on resolutions and living by the stale appeal of past ideals. "This extravagance" in contentment, as one has called it, "is costing the church many people of power who are not geared down to a snail's pace. We hear calls for the church to assume social leadership, but like Scarlett O'Hara, we say, 'We will think about it tomorrow; it won't hurt so much then.'"

One of the greatest tragedies of our time is that so many of our Christian ministers as well as laymen are so little concerned with finding a Christian solution to the problem of inter-racial brotherhood. I returned from China with the conviction that the Race Problem is America's No. 1 social problem and upon its solution will depend whether or not we will emerge as a great moral leader of the world—or whether we still will go down, friendless to defeat. The non-white people of the world—and they represent two thirds of the total—are looking at us today and their eyes are focused on how we solve this problem here in America—because they know that we won't treat them any better than we treat our own colored citizens.

I brought out of China with me several newspapers published by the Communist government. There is one article which accuses the United States of using our military power to help the French retain their colonial imperialistic control and white supremacy. There's an article on "What is Freedom in America?" which says that it is freedom only for those on top—especially for those of Anglo Saxon descent. Everytime there is discrimination against any racial group in America—every time there is a lynching—it makes the headlines all over the world, especially in non-white countries.

A little over a year ago a student in Union High came to see me. "I have a question to ask you about American," he said. I knew what it was as I had been asked so many times before. "How do they treat negroes and people of other races in America?" They can't understand how we can reconcile our treatment of other races with the teachings of Jesus Christ.

These non-white people of the world want to know our attitude toward other races before they accept our leadership. Russia professed and practices racial equality. I came home from China convinced that before I could ever go to a foreign land again and preach the brotherhood of man, I would have to do all in my power to make it a reality in my own country.

Dr. E. Stanley Jones was pleading with a group of young people in India. "I wish you would stand up and tell me, if you will, why you are not Christians. Why will you not become Christians? What do you think of Christ?" One young man answered. "Your Christ is wonderful, but you Christians are not like him." Mahatma Ghandi once considered becoming a Christian. He went one evening to hear a minister preach in an English Episcopal Church in India. "You can't come in here," he was told. "But you can stand outside and listen." Ghandi, though an admirer of Christ never became a Christian.

The great tragedy of our time—is that so few of our so-called Christian people are concerned about this question. It is true that a great deal of progress has been made in the past few years but the church is trailing rather than leading. I've met quite a few thoughtful young people lately, who are interested in solving this race problem and other social issues—who never give the church a thought. They think we're too involved in irrelevancies to be concerned with this live issue. And often we are.

Benjamin Franklin once proposed to found a church for himself to be called "The Society of the Free and Easy." I don't know whether he ever did it or not, but a church of the free and easy can never be a church of Jesus Christ.

Only a vision of the disturbing Jesus can correct the church's lethargy and complacency. Armchair Christians aren't going to move fast enough to save a perishing world.

We can get along without this disturbing Jesus. We can go on, as we've been accustomed to doing,—adopting for ourselves the ideas, the attitudes, the standards of our contemporary world. We can lead respectful, even successful and self-satisfying existences. We, like the Gadarenes, can ask this Jesus—this trouble maker—to get away from our neighborhood—to quit troubling our minds and consciences with thoughts about social justice and this nonsense about the brotherhood of man.

Yet, when we ask Jesus to go away, we know that we banish our only hope of salvation. And so, although he disturbs our minds, although he refuses to let our consciences rest, although he continues to confront us with seemingly impossible demands, still we know that we need him—and in him is not only our hope for us as individuals but for our entire human family.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

the explaining at the psychological moment.

Watcha mean? is an attitude of mind not limited to boys and girls. Now and then the expression itself is used by adults. We must continue to ask questions; otherwise, growth will remain at a standstill. When we lose our curiosity regarding history, science, or any phase of life, it is unfortunate.

Bert's father called up to tell us that Bert would be late. He was driving the car for his grandparents in the vicinity of a large fire. "Oh," I said, "he will probably be detoured and have to go all around Robin Hood's barn." Quick as a flash came back the question, "Watcha mean—Robin Hood's barn?"

"Seen and not heard" is certainly no fitting description of the youth, or adult, of today!

No one has equaled David for poetry, nor Isaiah for vision, nor Jesus for his moral and ethical teachings, nor Peter for holy zeal, nor Appolos for fiery oratory, nor Paul for logic, nor John's statement of sanctified love,

THE FAMILY AT BETHANY.

LESSON VII—FEBRUARY 17, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: She said unto him, Yes Lord, I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, he who is coming into the world—John 11:27.

LESSON TEXT: Luke 10:38-42; John 11:1-5, 24-27.

DEVOTIONAL READING: 1 John 2:8-17.

The Family at Bethany.

There were three in this family of Bethany, Martha, Mary, and Lazarus. The home evidently belonged to Martha who was probably the oldest of the three. She was a busy, bustling, bundle of energy, with a knack of getting things done. She was the kind of person who would have told you that she did not have time for meditation and perhaps for prayer. To be sure, she was a good woman, but there was work to be done, and she would be up and doing it.

Mary her sister was just the opposite. She was a quiet, contemplative type, with a far-away look in her eyes, and a mystical temperament. Whereas Martha wanted to be in the midst of things, Mary wanted to be apart from them. She was a thinker, Martha was a doer.

We know little about Lazarus their brother, and the third member of this Bethany family. He may have been the youngest of the three. He evidently was a likeable kind of fellow—Jesus thought a great deal of him. (John 11:3) He is remembered because he was the man whom Jesus brought back to life from the tomb.

It was a devoted family, a little group living together in harmony and dignity, bound by strong ties of mutual respect and affection. Homes like it are the salt of the earth.

The Home With the Open Door.

It was a hospitable home. In a land characterized by hospitality, this Bethany home was conspicuous. Again and again, Jesus and his disciples visited in the home, and the latch string was always out for them. It must have meant a great deal to him, who had no home, to be invited into this home, and to share its friendliness and its fellowship. And today, excluded as he is from so many homes in which apparently he is not wanted, or from which he is shut out by other things, the Master rejoices when he is invited, not only as a guest but as a member of the family.

Company Comes for Dinner.

Jesus and his disciples were passing through Bethany, and either by invitation, or on his own initiative, he "drops in" for dinner. He was, as always, welcome. He probably told the women folks "not to go to any trouble." And he meant it. But women folks do not know what that means. When company comes, they "have to put on the dog." They do not always understand that hospitality is as much fellowship as food. Like many a modern housewife Martha was so busy getting the dinner that she did not have any time for her guest. Perhaps a modern instance would be the woman who is so busy getting the Sunday dinner ready that she does not have time to go to church. All this is no condemnation of having company, or of treating company nice. But it is a friendly reminder that folks often overburden themselves when "company comes," when both they and themselves would feel better and would have a better time if less work and worry were devoted to the meal, and more thought and time were devoted to the fellowship.

Too Much of a Good Thing.

Things were not going very well in the kitchen. Perhaps it was a hot day. Perhaps the bread did not rise as it should. Perhaps everything went wrong on this particular day—things have a way of doing that sometimes. In any event, poor Martha could not stand it any longer. Here she was working, and wearing herself out, trying to get the meal ready and the table set, and Mary her sister was just sitting down, doing nothing—at least it seemed that way to Martha. Jesus or no Jesus, she just couldn't stand it any longer. Coming to the front room, she said in a plaintive voice "Lord dost Thou not care that my sister did leave me to serve alone? Bid her therefore that she help me." Like so many of us—when we are tired and worried, we tend to blame others for things. Before we condemn Martha too severely—and many have done Martha an injustice—we need to keep in mind that somebody has to do the world's work. If everybody were like Mary, a lot of folks would not be fed or clothed or taken care of. The world needs Marthas—but Marthas who have a sense of values and a sound perspective. He who takes time to be quiet will do more work than he who works all the time. And he will do it in better spirit. The fact is, that it is easy to undertake to do too much for Christ. Many good people miss the joy of service, and become tired and fretful, because they are trying to do too much.

The Good Part.

The Master sympathized with Martha. But he knew there was something he ought to say to her. "Martha, Martha" he says, and we can well imagine the chiding, but tender tone in his voice, "you are all bothered about the wrong thing. I want a bite, not a banquet. You are making much ado about nothing. Mary has chosen then the good part. Worship is as important as work. Fellowship is as important as food. To heed me is as good as to feed me. Mary is really doing more to entertain me than you are. Come now, take things a little easier, join us, listen to me, I have something worth while to say to you."

Martha and Mary in Modern Life.

In our country, at least, there are too many people after the Martha pattern. The patron saint of America is St. Vitus. We do not know where we are going or what we are going to do when we get there, but we are going at break-neck speed. Whirl is king. The symbol of our civilization is a speedometer and not a compass. We need, like Mary to be still and to know that God is God, to listen, to wait upon the Lord. What we need is a happy medium between the two types—folks who take time to be quiet, and then who go out to work. To wait is as important as to work. Life for many is shallow and superficial because work has not been given meaning by waiting upon God.

A Loved One is Taken.

The ranks of this devoted family circle were invaded by the Death Angel who took away their beloved brother. Death is always doing that—coming into the home and family

VISUAL AIDS AVAILABLE FROM THE SOUTHERN CONVEN- TION OFFICE.

The "Life of Christ" filmstrips are available in The Southern Convention office. They are not only useful with all the Pilgrim Series courses for the current quarter, but useful with other materials on the life of Christ and with the Uniform Lessons. They are very well done and seem to visualize a very good picture of Jesus and his teachings. They can be used with both children and adults so you will want to schedule them for your Sunday school. Rental fee is 50c.

"A Wonderful Life," the feature film for the year, has not been used as much as we would have liked. It is the story of a man who had worked all his life for others and how his life affected the lives of his family and friends. It is a stirring movie of forty minutes in length and our churches should schedule it soon. We have had to send back two copies so there is only one copy left for the whole Convention so make your requests right away.

All visual aid inquiries may be directed to Ruth Dunn, Box 336, Elon College, North Carolina.

A LETTER FROM ED RIGGS.

practical. The pastor here said: "You propose to print and distribute tracts, but they won't be of any use to the 95 per cent of the village women who don't know how to read at all." I asked him how it happened that the church didn't have anything better than that to show for a hundred years here. Also didn't Dr. Laubach's literacy drive make any headway in this area? He replied by asking if I would have any spirit to study at night, without lights, if I had been working from dawn to dark in other peoples' fields for a wage never quite enough for a day's meal. The women here live that kind of life, day after day for a lifetime, with no hope for any change for the better, whether they are literate or not. They say, "If you won't pay us to learn to read, or give us a better job as a reward, why should we make the effort?" But the pastor added that in the Manamadura area crops will be so good this year that there will be plenty of work and more food this year; so perhaps the women would have more energy and spirit to respond to a literacy drive beginning this spring. Here is the long-awaited opportunity to break some of these vicious circles, I thought; it might be a long time before Manamadura will have another season with plenty of rain and better-than-normal crops again.

And I learned that the area around us with more-than-usual water is still rather small in extent. The Tamil county as a whole had two-thirds of the normal rain this year, which is better than none but still not enough. On the last day of the old year I went to visit the branch clinic of the Angelican Hospital of Ramnad, in an isolated village not too far from here. (It is the only truly rural medical enterprise which our Diocese is running and is being threatened with closure for lack of funds. It was quite impressive to see the local committee, when faced with these facts, refuse to accept defeat, but offer to go about the villages served by the clinic and raise funds by direct canvassing.) We went there by car, rather a hair-raising experience because the ex-cart tracks we were following were supposed to be passable in dry weather and it wasn't quite dry yet! That whole area is so isolated that the government can't get a doctor for its only clinic, so the mission clinic gives the only chance for medical care the people can get.

The fields were all fairly green with a kind of millet, their first crop in four years. But I asked about their diet because I didn't see any vegetable gardens. I was told that the rains were just enough for millet and not enough for vegetables. The pond of rain water which the village was currently using for drinking would be dry in a month, and then they would have to use the ground water from springs or wells for drinking for the rest of the year. And that was so alkaline it killed the vegetables—literally made them wither up each time it was poured on. That was true even in years of normal rainfall, they said; in the whole area from there to the seacoast no one had ever been able to dig a well and find sweet water. I then asked what they ate besides the millet, if they were able to grow no vegetables. "Nothing else," they said, "nothing but millet and brackish water, and on rare occasions a little dry fish from the ocean."

Why do people keep on living in places like this if it is such a desert? I asked myself. It is true that the population is sparser than other parts of the Diocese; the villages look smaller and are farther apart. But in each village a horde of children would pour out of the huts to watch the car as it passed by or was being pulled out of a mudhole by village men. I was told that a population of 30,000 is within close walking distance of this clinic. I thought of that deeply pessimistic article in the Atlantic Monthly that said that there were too many people in India and there would never be enough food for them; and there was no hope as long as they kept on reproducing and increasing their numbers. This author would certainly say that people had no business living in a place like this.

But of course that amounts to saying that people in a place like this have no business living. And you can't just dismiss people like that. Our pastor said yesterday morning that the Christ of the Indian Road was the Christ of every road in India, not only of the town road, but of the village road and the desert road. And when he talked about the hungry and the thirsty and the naked, etc. who were "even the least of these my brethren," he was thinking also of those in desert places like this, who cannot help it if they have no other place to live but who have as much right to live and struggle to raise children as those of us who happen to inherit the tree and well-watered places of this earth. We ought to be able to find some way to save them—something better than temporary gestures of relief, or just carelessly "writing them off."

Best regards,

and taking away loved ones and friends. In their loss and loneliness the sisters turned instinctively to their Great Friend, and they found that not only was he able to supply all their need according to his riches, but to do exceeding abundantly above all that they thought or asked. So it was then, is now, and evermore shall be, world without end. Amen.

The Orphanage
 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

How I wish more people would read THE CHRISTIAN SUN! If people knew our work here—knew it as they can know it by keeping up with our report each week—we would not have to bear a heavy burden in the "lean months." And we could take more needy children. Just as the Orphanage would be the better understood and its problems met just so would all other enterprises of our Convention be helped. Every church and every department of our work should promote THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The church was never needed in America more than today. Faithfulness to the local church by members thereof should raise to an all-time high. Prayer and Christian loyalty should take on new life. America needs to be strong with a strength that comes from righteousness. Our CHRISTIAN SUN helps every pastor, every church member, and every home which has it. Among the things which need emphasis in our Convention now is THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Subscribe to it. Ask a neighbor to subscribe to it. Thank you.

Let me—while I am preaching—put in a word for college period. Here is a major church effort, namely our church college. We might as well try to build the church without Sunday schools as to try to build Christianity into the fabric of our Christian civilization without church colleges. That does not lessen the need and worth of great secular universities and colleges. Truth learned anywhere is good. Let it be learned. How civilization has advanced with advancing knowledge. But let us help the church college play its great part in teaching the youth of our land. At the church college certain things seem so natural and in their right place such as reference to religion in a favorable light, reference to God as an ever-present friend, reference to and practice of worship and prayer, and the seeing of civilization as needing the Christian principles of brotherhood and unselfish service and understanding. The world needs it. Let us do our part to keep Christian environment and teaching before tomorrow's leaders. Let us support our own Elon College which deserves our patronage and our financial help.

I haven't said much about the Orphanage in this report, but I hope everyone will help us keep as nearly up with our current bills as possible. God honors the person who helps the needy child: Ex. 22:22, "Ye shall not afflict any widow of fatherless child; if thou afflict them in any wise, and they cry at all unto me, I will surely hear their cry; and my wrath shall wax hot, and I will kill you with the sword; and your wives shall be widows, and your children fatherless." It is a vigorous way of saying meanness is poison, kindness it health and happiness and good success.

WRIGHT.

God in his infinite wisdom saw fit to take one of our good Holy Neck Congregational Christian Church members, Mr. Thomas Lafayette Wright from our midst on May 3, 1951. We, the committee, wish to submit the following resolutions of sincere respect for him who was faithful as long as health would permit.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we consider his death a great loss to our church and community.
2. That we accept the challenge of a stronger Christian faith, and be inspired, by having known him, to be a nobler Christian.
3. That we extend heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family and pray God's blessings on each member thereof.

Miss ALLIE LEE NORFLEET,
Mrs. C. C. BAKER,
Mrs. JUNE O. DAVIDSON, Sr.,
Committee.

HARRELL.

We, the members of Liberty Spring Christian Church, were saddened December 5, 1951, by the passing of our beloved friend and member, Percy Samuel Harrell.

We desire to express love and respect from our church for one who served so faithfully as a lifelong member and who will be greatly missed by his many friends and neighbors and, most of all, by his family where he served as a devoted husband and father.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we are grateful for what his life has meant to us as individuals and also for what it has meant to our church and community.
2. That we hold in lasting remembrance his love, loyalty, and service to his Master, and his patience and quiet endurance of his long illness.
3. That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to his devoted family who ministered to him so faithfully during his illness and pray God's blessings upon them.

Mrs. R. WESLEY HARRELL,
Mrs. C. E. NICHOLS,
Mrs. W. R. LOWE,
Committee.

MARCH.

On July 1, 1951, after lingering illness, our Heavenly Father in his infinite wisdom called home to his reward one of our beloved members, Mr. J. Ether March. He was a loyal member, deacon and trustee of Holy Neck Congregational Christian church. He served as chairman of the Board of Finance for a number of years and was generous in his giving and always interested in the work of the church as a whole.

Whereas, God who knoweth and doeth all things well has seen fit to call this brother from our midst,

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of God, and give thanks for the life of our loyal brother.
2. That in our loss we take courage, and be determined by God's grace to carry on the work he so dearly loved.

3. That we commend the bereaved ones to the Great Comforter and assure them that earth has no sorrow heaven cannot heal.

Mrs. C. C. BAKER,
Mrs. JUNE O. DAVIDSON, Sr.,
Committee.

HOLLAND.

Holy Neck Congregational Christian Church suffered a great loss in the passing of Mr. Howard V. Holland, who departed this life on November 20, 1951. He was a member of the Board of Finance, a loyal choir member, a trustee, treasurer of the Sunday school and a deacon of the church.

Although confined to his home for a period of four years he had a continued interest in all the activities of the church.

The Holy Neck Church, Sunday school, the Board of Deacons and all who knew him have lost a faithful co-worker and a good neighbor. His faith and devotion was a great inspiration to all.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we thank our Heavenly Father for Mr. Holland's life, friendship, service and leadership in our church.
2. That we extend our sincere and prayerful sympathy to his wife and family, commending them to trust in God's promise and his sufficient grace for strength to sustain them.

Miss ALLIE LEE NORFLEET,
Mrs. C. C. BAKER,
Mrs. JUNE O. DAVIDSON, Sr.,
Committee.

RESUME OF YEAR'S PROGRESS AT ORPHANAGE.

phanage would have had a very good year.

Absolute necessary repairs have been very expensive, and the cost of all articles of clothing, and all food, laundry supplies, fertilizers seeds, and equipment has made it a good year in which to do a lot of hustling, and hoping for better farming seasons next year.

The Board of Trustees is headed by Chairman Vitus R. Holt of Burlington. Other members include C. D. West, Newport News, Va.; D. L. Boone, Sr., Durham; I. H. Vickery, Henderson; Dr. J. P. Cross, Suffolk, Va.; Mrs. J. H. McEwen, Burlington; L. R. Jones, Franklin, Va.; Loren P. Waldo, Jr., Holland, Va.; Thomas W. Walton, Greensboro; W. J. Ballentin, Fuquay Springs; L. E. Carlton, Paces, Va.; Clyde W. Gordon, Burlington; Russell V. Powell, Greensboro; Dr. Harold B. Kernodle, Burlington; and Mrs. Mark W. Andes, Virgilina, Va.

Receipts in the General Fund during 1951 totalled $65,408.19. Receipts for the new home for the superintendent totalled $15,302.15.

YOUTH AT WORK.

Dr. Conover explained the motive for the contest as a long-standing grievance on the part of architects that Protestant pastors are notoriously poor planners in their church building programs.

Most architects, continued Dr. Conover, believe ministers "do not know how to state their needs for new buildings or improvements, nor how to guide their congregations in determining needs so that the architect can design a building best suited to the situation."

Students submitting contest entries, Dr. Conover said, will be required to prepare a church building program which states exact requirements. These requirements, he added, include statistics on the surrounding community, as well as a detailed plan showing dimensions and contour of the church site.

The contest, which is awarding cash prizes amounting to $500, closes June 1.

In addition to the Bureau of Church Building and Architecture, it is sponsored by the Church Architectural Guild of America.

study book "Mission to America" by Dr. Truman Douglass. It seemed especially fitting that this study was followed by the special meeting on Professor of Bible at Peace College, Raleigh, came out for an afternoon and night session to teach the Epistle of James.

We were so happy to have some twenty-five members of the missionary societies at Amelia, Plymouth and Morrisville Christian Churches come together with us for this treat. They very kindly brought cakes for dessert and the Wake Chapel ladies served a cold plate and coffee during the supper hour.

From the fine spirit, rapt attention to Miss Steele's presentation of the Word of Life, and fellowship together, we shall look forward to more consecrated devotion and service in the "Building of the King's Highway."

UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING

A statement adopted by the NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN THE U. S. A.

January 30, 1952

With the view to meeting the military requirements of our nation during the current period of international tension, the Congress has extended to 1955 the drafting of men for the armed forces. The period of military service has been lengthened from 21 to 24 months and the ceiling on numbers raised from 3½ to 5 million men. If events that cannot now be foreseen should make necessary the further strengthening of the nation's armed forces this end can be accomplished by Congressional action in the light of conditions then prevailing. The National Council of Churches, however much it may deplore the circumstances that have required this stepping up of our military establishment, acknowledges the need of and supports adequate defense measures.

With its position on the issue of national security thus stated, the National Council of Churches affirms its opposition to permanent universal military training. This action is in line with the views of many of our constituent communions which over a period of years have consistently opposed universal military training.* It seems clear, that the effort to establish a system of permanent universal military training will meet with widespread opposition within our churches for religious and moral reasons and to the end that our traditional democratic institutions may be preserved.

We believe it is one thing to acknowledge the necessity of drafting men for a limited period to meet a specific international emergency. It is another, and quite different thing for the churches to support the conscription of each succeeding generation of the nation's youth for a program of universal military training. It is not in accord with our heritage as a free nation under God, permanently to recruit our youth under the banners of the military. To do this would be to take a long step in the direction of a garrison state.

We are mindful of the grave responsibilities with which our Congress is confronted during these difficult days. The decision which it is required to make respecting universal military training will have far-reaching consequences for the people of other lands as well as our own. It is our earnest prayer that to each member of the House and Senate there may be vouchsafed such measure of divine wisdom as will enable the Congress to reach a decision in accord with God's will for our beloved country.

*These communions include the following: American Baptist Convention, Augustana Evangelical Lutheran Church, Church of the Brethren, Congregational Christian Churches, Disciples of Christ, Evangelical and Reformed Church, Evangelical United Brethren Church, Friends Five Years Meeting, Friends of Philadelphia and Vicinity, Methodist Church, and Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. In addition, the Board of Social Missions of the United Lutheran Church has taken similar action.

OUR SACRED HONOR

Elon has a role to play of denomination-wide significance. First of all, it must discharge its stewardship of influence among the association of Congregational Christian Colleges. The fact that it remains unequivocally a church-related college is by no means without its significance. That fact must be a mark of distinction and not one of inferiority. The conspicuous example of one church-related college could help lift the rest.

We are a people who have been blessed with a goodly heritage. At no time has God withdrawn his hand or turned his back. Unitedly we can give Elon a financial transfusion. We can wipe out the stigma which has rested on education in the South. We can bring forth works meet for repentance.

Our sacred honor is at stake. We have made bold professions. We are on record as saying that our church and our faith is unique, that our witness is particularly germane to the present crisis. Now we must substantiate that faith, "put up or shut up."

If we have a witness to bear, we must proclaim it from the housetop, from the college level. We must put our light on a hill and not keep it in obscurity. We must seek first, as never before, the Kingdom of God, and his righteousness. Otherwise, our accumulated sins of omission will condemn us to failure and obscurity.

To be sure, this is not simply a financial problem. It goes to the very core of the institution. As we call upon our people to give more substantially, we call upon students and faculty to make our college more demonstrably Christian. We remind the faculty that they are our representatives, the keepers of the keys; that "whatsoever they shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, that whatsoever they shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." We call upon the college to release its talent and leadership more freely throughout the churches, both in the written and spoken word. We call upon the administration to seek with renewed zeal to build a curriculum, not designed to teach someone's pet course, nor with an eye to commercial value, but to solidly implement our Christian faith and serve the constituency for which the institution was founded.

THE WHOLE GOSPEL

We emphasized Christian Race Relations in our last issue. It is quite possible that some of our readers did not respond whole-heartedly to that emphasis. Now we turn to Christian education on the college level. Again, we fear, some of our readers may not be jubilant over this emphasis.

It is difficult to be well-balanced in ones religious outlook. "Ephraim is a cake half-baked" is the frank way the Old Testament puts it. Now the editor must be polite and not allude to anyone or any group as being half-baked, but it is quite possible for us today to practice a compartmentalized religion. Said St. Paul, "Now we see through a glass darkly." Yes, and he might have added: "Now we see through compartments partially." A fragmentary faith is frightfully inadequate.

One is interested in condemning sins in high places in the Nation's Capitol, but not interested in condemning the sins of discrimination south of Washington. One group is eager to have the sins of intemperance blasted, but is irritated when the preacher begins talking about money. Some are interested in and respond generously for a benevolent program at home, but turn a deaf ear to the cry of the multitudes in mission lands for whom Christ died.

We live in an age of grace, an age of enlightenment. There is no excuse today for a half baked religion. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus." Reason as well as sentiment must be kept active in a healthy religion.

Every mature Christian today should be interested in the church and the churches, temperance and race relations, the kindergarten and the college, the adolescent and the alumnus, benevolence and missions.

On one occasion Jesus said: "I have many things to say unto you, but you cannot bear them now." Ignorance and prejudice and selfishness close the door to God's fullest revelation. "If you would hear his voice, harden not your hearts." Realizing that God speaks to us through many channels let us keep every door of revelation open: Missions, the church college, amicable race relations, stewardship, evangelism, temperance, Bible study and prayer. Then surely God can speak without restraint to our generation.

Christian Higher Education

From the Standpoint of the Congregational Christian Churches

By BRYANT DRAKE.

Elon College is an exception in many ways, but, from the point-of-view of the Congregational Christian Churches it is in a class by itself in that it is actually owned by the denomination. The rest of our colleges were founded by Congregational Christian people, and then turned over to self-perpetuating boards of trustees which have the powers of complete ownership. Our churches have a special interest in these colleges, but no responsibility. Hence the incongruous situation has developed wherein a denomination that is traditionally concerned about education makes only token contributions to most of its colleges at a time when other denominations are raising millions.

However, the colleges owe a great deal to the denomination whose members founded them, for through the years the status of a Congregational Christian institution has been conferred upon each college, and that is no mean asset. Gifts flow in because of the Congregational Christian connection; a certain prestige and status is enjoyed; and the college itself is held to a standard of achievement which has had not a little to do with most of these institutions becoming the outstanding colleges of their areas.

Recognition as a Congregational Christian college means that certain criteria have been met by the college:

1. Its plan of education is functionally integrated in the larger Christian community.
2. It seeks to make the total experience of students a Christian one.
3. Its staff personnel, whether in the trustees, administration or faculty, is composed mainly of men and women who actively foster the Christian faith.
4. Its emphasis in the teaching function is on the Christian point-of-view.
5. Its out-of-class program for the students seeks to develop an environment which will encourage the growth of Christian character.
6. It may maintain relationships with other church bodies, thus demonstrating in itself the ecumenical spirit.

7. Its academic standards are in keeping with those established by recognized accrediting agencies.

Our denominational integrity requires that our colleges shall be places where the truth is sought in complete freedom from the pressures which sometimes hold men back from the whole truth. We cannot reconcile anything shoddy with our ideals, and it would be necessary to protest if a college were to engage in any activity inconsistent with its Christian ideals. A Christian college must be as Christian in its business office and in its relations to campus employees as it is in its catalog or in the speeches of its president, and its Christian purpose requires that its doors be open to all who seek an opportunity to help themselves acquire Christian higher education.

Why I Came to Elon

By RAY COOPER EULISS.

Education must ultimately mean nothing more than the disciplining of the mind and character for successful living in an ever-changing society. In order to prepare myself for such successful living I chose to come to Elon College; for I believed and do now believe that she is in a superior position to prepare her students.

4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Elon College and the Convention

By REV. W. MILLARD STEVENS, Convention President.

The churches of the Southern Convention from their earliest beginnings have had a concern for providing their young people with an opportunity for securing an education under Christian auspices. These churches entered the field of higher education sixty-two years ago with the founding of Elon College. Through the years, Elon has taken her place beside hundreds of other church-related colleges in training young men and women for all walks of life and has sent them out to become Christian citizens as doctors, lawyers, teachers, ministers, farmers, workers in shops and factories, home makers, and good fathers and mothers. This is the function of the church college. We of the southern Convention can be proud of Elon's part in this vital service to humanity in the name of Jesus Christ.

The church college with her Christian leaders and teachers is the hope of our civilization. Secularism is eating out the heart of our civilization, and education without religion is pure secularism. Dr. Howard Lowry in his book, "The Mind's Adventure," points out very forceably three things, among others, which we of the church must think about. (1)

"Secularism has failed. It has allowed specialists to be specialists without first trying to be men." (2) "The secular point of view that dominates modern education tends to produce a hollow man who is not equipped to make life's most important decisions." (3) "The influence of the church colleges in American life is out of all proportion to their size."

The church college provides a spiritual leaven in our educational system which must at all cost be kept alive. Elon is a vital part of that leaven and the opportunity of our churches to make the moral and spiritual fabric of our civilization strong. We of the Southern Convention must give our full support to Elon or we will fail in one of our greatest and most important opportunities. We must support Elon not only with our money but also with our influence and good will. Elon is an arm of our churches for the "Saving of Our Civilization." We must be faithful to keep that arm strong because its task is great.

Supporting Elon Through the Apportionment

By W. M. T. SCOTT, Superintendent of the Southern Convention.

Why should churches contribute to the support of Elon College through the conference apportionment? Because the apportionment is designed to insure a reasonable support of all our institutions, boards and agencies. That is the regular way we have of providing necessary funds for the continued service Elon College has given so well to the life of our churches.

Elon College was founded and is owned and controlled by our churches of the Southern Convention. The Convention has asked its conferences and churches to contribute the sum of $15,000 annually through the apportionment to help maintain our institution of Christian higher education. This apportionment is only about 16½ per cent of the total apportionment asked for all causes of the Convention. Is Elon College worth that much? Count your pastors and other church leaders—past, present, future! Count the number of other pastors drawn to the Southern Convention because Elon College has done her work well! Count the hundreds of youth whose lives have been made more abundant because of this our Christian college. Yes, Elon College pays her way a hundred fold in spiritual leadership.

Elon College cannot continue her work for our church without our financial support. Unless we support our church colleges financially now, they cannot survive. What a sad day that would be for our land! What Elon College has meant to the churches of this area, the Christian college has meant to this broad and fair land of ours. Education is not enough. The state can do much for her citizenship in education, but we simply have to look to our church colleges for the leadership for our churches. It will be a sorry future the church will face if because of lack of support our church colleges cannot survive. Elon College is our particular responsibility. Christian education for our constituency is at stake in our answer to the needs of Elon College. The payment of your church's full apportionment for Elon College will be the best answer you can give to your belief that Christian education has a place in the life of our land.

AFTER CHAPEL SERVICE

Elon's Two Million Dollar Campaign

I--The Goal

In 1946 the Board of Trustees of Elon College requested of the Southern Convention the privilege of conducting a campaign to secure two million dollars for Elon College, the money to be used for the erection of dormitories, dining room, and for endowment. The Convention granted the request and authorized the campaign. The campaign was to extend over a period of ten years. In the fall of 1951, the half-way mark, the college had added to its assets nearly one million dollars.

Last fall we began the second half of the ten-year period. At present we are in the process of forming an over-all organization to carry the needs and appeal of the college to every individual constituent. Even though the organization has not been completed, the campaign has begun. To date we have received in cash and pledges a total of more than $140,000, with more than $45,000 in cash. Pledges are made on a five-year basis. With the enthusiastic cooperation of the trustees, the pastors and membership of our churches in the Southern Convention, Christian friends beyond the bounds of our Convention, officials of the Alumni Association, and every alumnus and friend of the college, we should have no difficulty in securing funds sufficient to provide necessary equipment for the college and add appreciably to the permanent funds of the institution. Cooperation is not expensive, but it is very helpful. No one is expected to contribute beyond his means, but it is earnestly desired that everyone should give what he can without embarrassment that Elon College and the type of service it renders might continue with profit to the individual, to the church, and to society in general. Your efforts and your contributions whether large or small will help to reach the totals sought.

II--The Organization

The ones charged with the responsibility of conducting this campaign for Elon College are aware of the fact that there must be a large number of people participating in the campaign if it is to succeed. They also are aware that the ones conducting the campaign must be organized. A thorough and competent organization must be formed if the effort is to succeed. We are presenting here an outline for the organization which has been approved by a temporary committee. The organization suggested is as follows:

I. Virginia State Division.

A. Eastern Virginia District.

1. Norfolk Area.
2. Suffolk-Franklin Area.
3. Windsor-Richmond Area.
4. Newport News Area.

Elon College and Christian Emphasis

By DEAN D. J. BOWDEN.

Every institution is called upon, at times, to justify its existence. Beset by increasing financial demands and declining enrollments, the church college must define its reason for being if it is to expect material support, and Elon College is today in this position.

Your college is significant in many ways: Its academic standing, its athletic prowess, its well prepared faculty and its outstanding alumni are but illustrations. But if one factor must be singled out as an expression of its purpose, Elon points proudly to the Christian emphasis: this is truly its reason for being. Here, young men and women begin their training for ministry in the Church of Christ; share the opportunities of religious leadership in the Student Christian Association; find inspiration in services of worship; and participate in a curriculum of which courses in religion are a vital part.

More meaningful than all these activities, however, is the spiritual guidance and example of Christian faculty members. The influence of these men and women, their deep personal interest in individual students, and their sincere concern for growth of character and integrity in those whom they teach is a marked demonstration of the Christian college at work. Such spiritual factors cannot be measured by scales or yardsticks, but the subtle influence of Christian lives is distinctly felt on the Elon campus. Without this influence, the college cannot justify its existence; with this influence, the Christian college is a potent force for molding the character and spiritual wealth of our nation and of the world.

Elon College and Our Worship Service

By HOWARD P. BOZARTH.

Our aim in worship at Elon is the same as that in all our churches where services are conscientiously planned and executed. The need of human hearts for reconciliation with God is as great here as elsewhere, and this need we strive to meet. Reverence is the key-note of worship, and this cannot be evoked by hastily improvised orders of service, or casual conduct in any part. We do plan our services with great care, and we hope that the dignity and beauty of holiness are upheld in the pattern which we strive to follow week by week.

I wish to pay special tribute to those who are responsible for our ministry of music, however. Prof. Fletcher Moore serves as our church organist, and Prof. John Westmoreland directs the choir of thirty to forty students, at most services during the school year. There is nothing more inspiring to minister and congregation than great church music, magnificently sung. That we do have at Elon. I believe all who attend have an appreciation of the best in sacred music, whether in liturgy, anthems or hymns, which is rarely found in the week by week worship program of churches generally. This is as it should be, since we are in the unique position of having such a ministry of music available to us. But those who send their young people to Elon can be assured that as they attend the worship services of Sunday morning, they will be enriched for the experience of this special ministry.

Let people know the truth, and the country is safe.—Abraham Lincoln.

COUNSELING WITH THE DEAN OF WOMEN

Elon College and Ministerial Students

By DR. FERRIS E. REYNOLDS.

Busy, happy, and enthusiastic; those common adjectives describe the group of students on the Elon campus who plan to enter the ministry. They take in part in the various campus activities with special enthusiasm. When they gather at the student union or elsewhere on the campus, there are laughter and evidences of good fun. Churches in the neighborhood know them for their enthusiastic work with groups of young people and music organizations. A member of the science faculty remarked, "The ministerial students appear to get more out of college than any of the other groups."

It would not be possible to introduce each and every member of the ministerial association, but perhaps we can say just a word about some of our seniors.

Helen Jackson is a member of our Winston-Salem Church. For three summers she has worked in Convention summer service programs having served in all three of the conferences. She has achieved the skill of an expert in camp, handwork, and recreation. Her work in the college choir and in the office of the department of Religion has greatly added to the scope of her preparation for church work.

Julius Rice comes from the Bethel Church. He graduated from Southern Union Junior College in Wadley, Alabama, and is married to Mary Evelyn Harris, a member of our La Grange Church in Georgia. She served as president of pilgrim fellowship in Georgia before assuming the duties of a student pastor's wife. At the present time Mr. Rice serves our Monticello and Hines Chapel congregations as their pastor.

Rosser Lee Clapp is from the Apple's Chapel Church. For several months, he served the church at Mebane as a student-supply. He is married to Doris Adams of the Apple's Chapel community. Soon the couple plan to move to Seagrove where they will serve the Seagrove, Shady Grove, and Ether Churches.

Warren Matthews is a product of the First Church in Greensboro. He has served as president of the youth fellowship of the Southern Convention for the past two years. Last summer Warren was with Rev. Fred Register among the churches at Amelia, Plymouth, and Wake Chapel. He served as pastor's assistant at Graham-Providence Memorial and is helping at the present with the pastoral work at Liberty, Vance, and Mount Gilead. He plans to enter Hartford Theological Seminary this fall to pursue his ministerial preparations.

Among the ministerial students to be graduated this spring we have three outstanding students of the Baptist and Methodist denominations. All three of them are serving in churches at the present time.

Elon College and Missions

By MRS. JOHN G. TRUITT.

When asked to write an article for the college issue of our CHRISTIAN SUN on "Elon College and Missions," I thought at once of the contribution our college has made to Missions within the bounds of our Convention and in other parts of the world. Our Southern Convention Foreign Missionaries were educated at Elon, as are most of those doing home mission work in our Convention. I thought how proud we all must be.

I thought also of the opportunities afforded the membership of our Southern Convention, if only we took seriously and tried earnestly to educate our youth for service to our church. True we can't all be preachers or serve as missionaries, but we can be trained to be useful Christians and consecrated stewards for Christ.

As we study the records and the current appeals to the Mission Board of our Convention we realize that we need more of our youth trained to take Christian leadership in our churches and to help organize new churches where they are needed, so let us give to Elon College, our church college, liberally of our money, our good will, a friendly boost always, and please by all means our youth—not just our neighbor's or friend's child, but our very own.

The church, I believe, is the answer to our world situation. We need the strongest and best of our youth trained in our church college for places of Christian leadership.

Dr. Harold W. Tribble, President of Wake Forest College, in an address before the Greensboro Rotary Club recently said that dictators seek among their first acts in gaining control of a country to rid the country of Christian educators. He spoke from first-hand experience, for he had studied in Germany in 1931. When he sought to study in Germany under one of the country's leading Christian theologians in 1936, the teacher had fled to Switzerland and it was there that Dr. Tribble furthered his training.

"America needs the private school and the independent college, the church related school, to continue to be free. Free and Christian Education meets the threat to American democracy," said Dr. Tribble.

Elon College and the Sustaining Fund

By DR. WILLIAM MOSELEY BROWN.

The first year of the operation of the Elon College Sustaining Fund is now a matter of history. The second year of operation is under way. It is fitting, therefore, that the members of churches in the Southern Convention should have a brief statement as to the present status of the fund.

During the first year of its operation, contributions from churches and individuals to the Sustaining Fund reached a total of $11,799.00. Of this amount, $5,000.00 was turned over to Elon College during the summer of 1951 to assist with the current expense budget of the college. This was done by the authorization of a special committee set up in the original plan of the Sustaining Fund, the committee consisting of two members of the Executive Board of the Southern Convention and two members of the College Board of Trustees.

Twenty-six of our churches reached their goals in full and were therefore listed on the Sustaining Fund Roll of Honor for 1951. Many of these churches exceeded their respective goals, for which we are duly grateful. A total of 59 more churches made contributions to the fund but these were not large enough to place them on the roll of honor. We confidently expect these churches to make the roll of honor in 1952. There were 109 churches in the Convention, which did not make any contribution to the Sustaining Fund in 1951—more than half the churches on the Convention's roster. From most of these we are expecting at least some contribution to the fund in 1952. Under the rules governing the Sustaining Fund scholarships, a total of seven young men and young women have registered at Elon College during the present session under benefits attributable directly to the fact that their respective churches made the roll of honor. We expect more such scholarships to be won during the current year. Remember, it is not up to the student but up to the church from which he or she comes whether a scholarship at the college will be available during the coming session.

The general committee and all conference and local committees have cooperated fully in the Sustaining Fund effort. For this we are profoundly grateful. A full report will be made to the biennial session of the Southern Convention in May and this report will recommend earnestly that the Sustaining Fund program be continued. Your individual and collective efforts will place your church on the roll of honor for 1952 and will also provide a scholarship for some one of your young people for the session of 1952-1953.

Looking Backwards

By DR. I. W. JOHNSON.

The writer entered the Preparatory Department in Elon College, September, 1893. Four years later he left with an A.B. degree granted with highest honor on June 11, 1898. During those years the number of students in the collegiate department averaged about 100. The girls were required to wear uniforms on Sunday and for special occasions. Caps and gowns for the graduation classes had not been introduced for commencement day. The ministers wore Prince Albert coats in the pulpit for the Sunday service of worship. Smoking cigarettes was forbidden on the campus and in the college building. That seems strange in a day when many ministers now smoke cigarettes in their pastoral study and on church grounds.

Students were permitted to room and board in private homes in the town. The boys and girls did not room and board in the same home, and the boys were not permitted to have dates with the college girls, or enter into extended conversation with each other, without special permission granted by the president or chairman of the faculty. These rules were suspended on holidays such as Thanksgiving Day, or Washington's Birthday. But visiting on holidays was under the supervision of the faculty and could not extend "off campus." These rigid rules did not prevent an occasional case of "school day love" between members of the opposite sex. Some of these "cases" ended in happy marriages after graduation. The writer did not become a "victim" to a case of "marriageable love" until three years after graduation.

We have heard many criticism of Elon College because it was small and not well equipped in those days. Kerosene lamps furnished the light for all students—and for the town. There was no town water supply, other than private wells. Nor was there any sewerage system. No inter-collegiate ball games with any other institution. "Scrub" ball teams were occasionally lined up for baseball or foot-ball, with several bruises in the latter game.

Attendance for Chapel, Sunday school and the "preaching service" was compulsory and a goodly number of students attended the YMCA and YWCA meetings once a week. Religion was honored and respected and not many students went through college without giving themselves devotedly to the cause of Christ and the church.

Elon College was a great blessing to me. The emphasis upon the Christian life made a lasting impression upon my life. May God bless Elon College. May the church support its work and its spirit.

Student Christian Association

By EVELYN BOOTH, President.

The Elon College Student Christian Association is a fellowship of students and faculty members who are seeking to unite the student body of our college in a program of Christian service.

Our association is divided into three commissions, headed by co-chairmen. The commission leaders are Patricia Gates and John Truitt on campus affairs; Virginia Jernigan and Max Vestal on World Relations; and Laverne Brady and Sammy Nelson on Christian Faith and Heritage. Other officers are president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer, under the advisor, Rev. Howard P. Bozarth.

The Student Christian Association sponsors numerous social events during the college year and promotes Religious Emphasis Week. The membership for this year is about 75 students, with an average of 40 to 50 attending our student fellowship meetings on Sunday evenings.

THE QUEEN OF HOMECOMING

Elon College and Her Student Body

By MATT CURRIN, JR., Vice-President of the Student Body.

Through the stately colonnades of Elon College pass hundreds of students every day, students from every walk of life, who are seeking higher education and guidance from the only Congregational Christian institution in the area of the Southern Convention. Elon College has served well her student body for the past sixty-three faithful years of continuous service devoted to the cause of higher education and the promulgation of the principles of Christianity.

The student body of Elon College for the school year 1951-1952 is composed of students from twenty states ranging from as far north as Vermont and as far south as Florida and in the west as far as Arkansas. North Carolina leads the list with three hundred and fifty-three students, Virginia is second with seventy-nine, and Pennsylvania falls in third place with nine representatives. The remaining students are from various other locals.

In the denominational scale we find that Baptists lead with one hundred and twenty-three students, Methodists have ninety-four, and the Congregational Christians are in third place with eighty-one students. There are seventeen other different religious denominations represented by one or more members of our student body.

A major phase of campus activity is student government, which has been operating under a new constitution since late in 1949, and the results of this form of self-government speak very highly in favor of the new program. The principle purpose of student government is to bind the students more closely together in a unit for the promotion of the general welfare of the college and the students themselves.

The Part Elon's Alumni Should Play

By C. CARL WOODS, JR., Alumni Secretary.

In any organization or institution there are certain habits, policies or traditions which are characteristic of that particular group. Elon College is not different, because it, too, has its idiosyncrasies. One of these traditions which has gone on through the years is the alumni support to the college in building a larger and better physical plant. In 1912 the alumni built a large gymnasium and dormitory combination, which at that time was the finest in the state. Then again in 1924 after the tragic fire, the alumni rallied to help launch a tremendous building task of five new buildings. In 1948 the alumni, realizing the need for a new gymnasium, launched another drive to build a new and fine building for the Elon students. Each of these tasks was backed by Elon alumni, friends of the college, the church and other outside help, but the alumni were working diligently as a unit.

We, of the student body of Elon College, are proud of our college, and we strive ever onward towards making Elon a more pleasant place in which to work, study, and live. Those of us who have been here for several years fully realize that Elon has an atmosphere of friendliness which is paralleled by only a few other schools in our nation, and we feel that our years at Elon College have added greatly to our understanding of mankind.

Now in 1952, the administration has called again for the backing and help of the alumni. This time the college is in dire need of a dining hall, and two dormitories to improve and modernize its physical plant. If these changes and improvements are not added to the Elon campus in the very near future, Elon will lose in the competitive fight to gain new students. For these reasons, I feel that the alumni must join forces and work with the present administration in making the two million dollar campaign a success.

HOW CHRISTIAN SUN READERS CAN INFLUENCE HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATES TO GO TO ELON COLLEGE.

By MRS. WARREN BURNS, Field Secretary.

Elon, in its sixty-three years of service to citizens all over the world, has produced many fine ministers, who are serving as pastors of various community churches; numerous successful business men, who are making their mark in the business field; and thousands of well-trained teachers, who are preparing our college students of tomorrow. Elon has prepared many doctors, lawyers, dietitians, aviators and air line hostesses, concert pianists, actors, secretaries, coaches and a host of other professionalists. Each of these, at some time, has either direct or indirect contact with a student who would benefit by attending Elon College.

We are appealing to our alumni to use their opportunities to speak to these students about Elon. The field secretary's office has materials and information concerning the college and we shall be very happy to send it, upon request, to alumni or to interested students.

Elon's Program of Christian Education

By DR. W. W. SLOAN.

Elon College prepares young men to be ministers for our churches, but churches need more than ministers. Many churches need religious education directors. Every church needs Sunday school teachers and leaders of young people's societies and clubs.

Elon College trains these young people, too.

In addition to courses in Bible, the language of the New Testament, philosophy, sociology and psychology which educated church people should have, our church college offers definite courses in Christian education. These include: "Principles of Teaching Religious Education," "The Curriculum of the Church School," and "Methods of Young People's Programs in the Church."

This training program for religious education workers gives a much better foundation for work in our local churches than do the so-called Bible schools. Elon College staff members who prepare our young people for local church work are not only highly trained but thoroughly experienced. They have been directors of religious education and pastors. They know the characteristics and needs of the churches of our Southern Convention.

Churches of other denominations are recognizing the value of the training young people get at Elon. I recently received a letter from a Methodist church asking me to furnish it with a religious education director. The writer evidently knew of the success one of our students is having as director of a neighboring church of the same denomination. A similar request came to me from Florida. The week-day religious education organizations of both Virginia and North Carolina have asked me to furnish them teachers for this important work. Our Southern Convention can be proud of what Elon is doing in the field of Christian education.

What Elon College Means to Young People

By REV. MAX VESTAL.

For some of you Elon College means just another college, just a place to go to keep from going to work, just an offering envelope a couple of times each year, just a page in THE SUN. But to those of us who have attended and are attending Elon, she means more. She means the chance to prepare ourselves for the abundant life, not just by reading books, but by living together on the campus, by listening to the wisdom of others, by making friends—yes, even by making mistakes and trying to correct them. She means to us friends among the faculty and the other students. She means home to us for four years, the four years we are growing from boys and girls into men and women.

No, Elon is not "just another college"—not for John Perry Littiken—not for Bill Simmons—not for Winfred Bray. Each of these young men is married; the first two have families. They have given up good jobs to come to Elon, and here they are preparing themselves to answer the great call into the Christian ministry. They aren't studying at Elon to learn how to make more money. Instead, they are giving of themselves. There are others at Elon who do the same—members of the administration, faculty, and student body. There is no better answer to Elon's problems than the enrollment of more and more of the Christian young people of our churches. The college needs you!

You need Elon College. It is true that we have had some men who have risen to great heights without the benefit of a college education. We can name Abraham Lincoln, Benjamin Franklin—but soon the list stops. The world has never had many men like these. Most of us cannot discipline ourselves to study as these men did. We need guidance in our intellectual, moral, and physical growth. This can best be given by our church college.

We have every right to be proud of Elon's record in the past. Many of our ministers and leaders have been graduated, many of our future leaders are now being graduating from Elon. Still further in the future will be other leaders, both church and civic. It is important that they receive the Christian training that Elon College can give. It is important to the college that it

Acquainting Our Sunday Schools with the College

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

It is desirable that the members of our Sunday schools become acquainted with Elon College, both for immediate, and long-range results. If the people know about our college, its history, its program, its contribution to our church, and its needs, more generous support for the college will be forthcoming. And in the coming years an increasing number of young people from our Sunday schools and churches will enroll as students in the college. How then can we acquaint the Sunday schools with the college? Several ways suggest themselves.

Many Sunday schools devote the offering on the fifth Sunday in each quarter to Elon College. Let there be a program, even a brief one about the college on these Sundays, something fresh, something interesting, something vital. Think of how much information about the college could be given across the years by such a plan!

There are other interesting and influential ways to do this. Sunday school lessons often offer an opportunity to emphasize Christian Education—let the teachers talk about Elon College. Graduates of Elon, or those who have attended Elon should "speak a good word" for Elon on special occasions. Spot announcements of happenings at Elon can be made at Sunday school. Young people going away to Elon, or home on vacation from Elon should be recognized. Literature of the college should be distributed. Moving pictures of college activities can be shown at church week-day, or Sunday night meetings. Items of interest about Elon can be included in the church bulletin. "College Day" should be observed. Subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN should be increased. These and many other plans will help to acquaint the Sunday school with our college.

receive young people from Christian homes. To keep our college and our church strong we must unite our efforts. Elon needs you; you need Elon.

We wish to express our thanks to the various departments which have relinquished their space for this issue of THE SUN.—M. E.

A Story About Elon For the Children

By MRS. R. L. HOUSE.

Two days ago was Abraham Lincoln's birthday. He was one of our great presidents. He was full of fun and seriousness too. Have you seen the technicolor short subject of his life now being shown in the movie houses? It shows him at home with his wife and their son, Tad. It shows the old-timey train on which he rode to Gettysburg to make his famous address. When he was a boy he liked to think of pranks to play—not mean ones or the harmful kind, but just rollicking funny ones.

For all his greatness Abraham Lincoln never had the opportunity that you have. Yes, that's right. He did not have a public school that he could attend nor did he go to college. Right now we are thinking about our own Elon College. Next Sunday (the 17th) is Elon Sunday and you will be hearing about it in Sunday school and church, we trust. We have many more opportunities for making ourselves great than did the frontier people of Lincoln's day, but do we? Frankly no, we are on the lazy side. Some of us think we would like to go to college but it is uncertain, or there isn't enough money, or and or. . . . If you want to go to college prepare to do so: study subjects that are essential; make the best possible marks and then go to your church college. It is not too big or too wordly-wise but a small school where people know each other. It is not above making mistakes but is willing to admit them. It is not so vast and machine-like, but compact and cozy. It needs high school graduates from our churches to keep it our college.

If you read THE SUN every week you will discover the college page with articles and news of the school. This page is prepared by Dr. Smith, the president of Elon. Perhaps your minister is an Elon graduate and can tell you lots about the school. Or maybe there are Elon graduates who work in your church or teach in your Sunday school, if so, ask them to tell you about Elon College. If you really want to go to Elon but haven't the money write to the college to see what help is available. The women of The Southern Convention maintain a scholarship for certain students who plan to enlist in full-time Christian work. There will be organized so as to divide the responsibility of canvassing.

The general chairman and the state chairman have been selected, and they have accepted as follows:

General Chairman—W. Millard Stevens.
Virginia State Chairman—Duane Vore.
North Carolina State Chairman—George Colclough.

Some of the district chairman have been selected. Some have accepted and others have not. It will be necessary to state the personnel of the organization in a later article.

Present plans call for the completion of the over-all organization before the end of March and for a general meeting of the entire personnel of the organization that the detailed plans for solicitations may be decided and launched in given areas at different times. Should you be asked to take part in conducting this campaign, think a long time before you decline. This is an opportunity for you to render a service that is really worthwhile and that will be greatly beneficial to your college and church.

The Campaign in Virginia

By REV. DUANE N. VORE.

The Elon College campaign in Virginia will not be an easy task and to accomplish its goals will require the effort and active support of every person who is interested in and concerned about the welfare of Christian education and the contribution it makes to the developing of the community around us.

The campaign here will have three emphases:

1. The enlistment of concern on the part of community leaders and business and professional people outside our church. Elon College contributes to the whole community through its alumnae. We intend to show that influence to responsible individuals and to enlist their active interest and support for the institution that is responsible for the education of youth in the community.

2. The enlistment of interest and concern of a larger group within our own fellowship that a larger group of our young people will make Elon their choice for their college training. We have not been active enough locally in recruiting students for our college.

3. The enlistment of financial support from alumnae and from other individuals as well as from industrial and business firms that an enlarged plant and program at Elon College may become a reality and not just a dream.

The Campaign in North Carolina

By GEORGE D. COLCLOUGH.

Alumni, members of the Congregational Christian Church, and friends of Elon College in North Carolina are extremely anxious to do their share in the two million dollar campaign for Elon College. Due to circumstances beyond our control, we have not been able to complete the organization but expect to do so within a short time.

We North Carolinians are proud of Elon College and the contribution it has made to our state and especially to the immediate area surrounding Elon College. It is natural that those living within driving distance of Elon College have profited most from its educational advantages during the past sixty-two years. With that in mind, we are looking to our people to be liberal in their support of the financial needs of our college.

We hope that Alamance County and the remainder of North Carolina will invest at least $500,000 in Elon College during the next five years. That is our goal and we are going to do our best to raise this amount.

The most of us who should share the responsibility of meeting the needs of Elon College have been dreaming of some wealthy person endowing our college while we stand on the side line and magnify the weakness of our own school rather than contributing what we can year after year. While Elon College has received some very substantial gifts during its history, there is nothing to lead us to believe that we of moderate means are going to be relieved of the responsibility of support for our college. The goal suggested by the administration and approved by our board of trustees and the Southern Convention is not beyond our reach. It is a matter of full cooperation on the part of all those who are in position to assist Elon College. This is the opportune time and you who read this should not wait for someone to approach you personally. Write President L. E. Smith and tell him what you can and will do over a period of five years to help bring to pass on the Elon College campus the buildings and improvements we have been talking about for many years. Now is the time for action.

WHY I CAME TO ELON.

dents for the task and problems of modern life.

In a final analysis the prospective college student must choose between a private institution and a publicly-supported one. It is my belief that the private school is freer to provide students with a more excellent program of academic instruction and with higher moral training than is the publicly-supported college. The independent institution has the advantage of selectivity in regard to both faculty and students; it can teach what it wants to teach; it can provide instruction to small groups of students and match the capacity of its students with a correspondingly high quality of instruction; and it obviously enjoys certain advantages which stem from the very fact that it is independent.

Elon College, in her role as a private Christian school, exercises her every advantages as an independent institution and affords ample opportunity for broad development to each individual student. A superior quality of academic instruction, and all-inclusive social curriculum, and the maintenance of the highest moral standards enable the college to offer the various outstanding educational programs for which she is justly recognized.

To reap the richest rewards of a college career, then, I chose to come to Elon. I shall never regret my decision, and I stand firmly convinced that the greatest of all years and the greatest of all successful programs yet lie ahead of Elon College. With confidence in her right she ever continues to stride forward to new heights in Christian educational activity.

are grants and aids for ministerial students.

No school is perfect. It couldn't be. But you will probably never find a college with as strong a spirit and fine an atmosphere as Elon. By the way, Elon means oak and there are many of them there. Another way to get acquainted with the college is to attend a young people's conference held there and see the grounds, buildings and equipment.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

PETER, JAMES, AND JOHN.

LESSON VIII—FEBRUARY 24, 1952

MEMORY SELECTION: We cannot but speak of what we have seen and heard.—Acts 4:20.

LESSON: Mark 9:2; 10:35-40; Acts 4:18-20.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 91.

Here are thumb-nail sketches of three of the disciples. There are, of course, many other references in the New Testament, both in the Gospels and in Acts to these men. But the material we have in today's lesson gives us an interesting insight into the make-up of their character and interesting sidelights as to their conduct.

How it all Began.

The incidents in today's lesson happened sometime after Peter, James and John became disciples of Jesus. That was the significant event and should be kept in its proper place. These three men were rather raw material when Jesus called them and bade them to follow him. They were unschooled so far as formal education was concerned, they knew nothing about his person or his Kingdom, they were impulsive, hot-headed, vindictive, narrow, rather rough and ready men. But they had the one absolute essential for discipleship—they were willing to follow Jesus, they committed themselves to him, they obeyed him. That was, and is, the important thing in discipleship. There is no substitute for that. There is no discipleship without that. Christian discipleship involves growth and development but it begins in surrender and commitment. One can go anywhere from there. But he must start there.

On the Mountain Top.

These men learned perhaps a little slowly, but they learned. They had eager minds, questing spirits, obedient wills. And gradually they developed to the place where Jesus took them into the more intimate experiences of his ministry. They alone were with him when he raised Jairus' daughter from the dead; and on the Mount of Transfiguration; and in the deeper privacy of Gethsemane. This was because they evidently had a deeper spiritual sensitivity, because they had grown in grace and in an understanding of the Master's person and work. To be sure they did not "know what it was all about" on the Mount of Transfiguration. Peter said it was good to be there, and wanted to build three "tabernacles" so that they could stay up there. But they saw the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, and it made an indelible impression on Peter, for years later he wrote to his fellow-Christians about it and bore witness to the faith which it gave to him in the reality of God's seal of approval on his Son. It was not favoritism on the part of Jesus to take these three men with him on the mountain. Just as there are distinguishing favors given to the disciples of Jesus which are not given to the world, just so are there distinguishing favors given to some disciple which are not, because they cannot be, given to other disciples. "All the saints are a people near to Christ, but some lie on his bosom."

A Blundering Question.

"Teacher we would that thou shouldst do for us whatsoever we shall ask of thee." Heaven have mercy upon us, suppose God did for us everything that we asked of him! It wouldn't be good for the world, and worse still it would not be good for us. We don't know how to ask. And one of life's worst tragedies would be for God to give us everything we ask for. It is recorded in one place in the Old Testament that God granted the request of his people, but sent leanness of soul!

What did these two men, James and John want? They wanted seats of honor and places of preformance in the glory of Jesus' Kingdom. "Grant unto us that we may sit, one on thy right hand, and one on thy left hand, in thy glory," they asked. It was, of course, rather presumptuous and selfish for these brothers to make this request. But in the name of charity let us look at the other side and give these brothers the benefit of the doubt. The question or request reflects a profound faith in Christ and his ultimate victory—they referred to his glory. And in view of the fact that Jesus had just told them that he was to suffer and die, they understood in some measure what it would cost to follow him. And they felt that they were able to pay that price. The fact is that they did pay that price later. So instead of censuring them for what they said, we will do well to commend them for what they did.

How patient the Master was with these blundering men! No censure, no condemnation, no caustic words. Gently and kindly he told them that places of eminence were not given, willy-nilly to those who sought them, but were awarded to them that had earned them. Prepared places were for prepared people. Each one of us must win his way to a place with Christ in glory. This does not mean that we are saved by works. It does mean that in the Kingdom rewards are according to fitness for them.

Courage in Both Hands.

These men have grown in grace and in grit. A little while before this last scene, one of the three, Peter, had denied his Lord, and the other two James and John had forsaken him and fled. But here they were, Peter and John, standing before the men "high up on the totem pole," the highest civil and ecclesiastical powers and courteously but courageously defying them. Commanded to refrain from speaking or teaching in the Master's name, they looked these rulers straight in the face and said that they were going to continue to speak the things they had seen and heard. It took physical and moral courage to say that. And that courage was recognized by the Jewish rulers as a token that these "unlearned and ignorant men" had been with Jesus. Did these proud tyrants, these blind rulers think that they could make these men keep quiet? They might as well have tried to keep the wind from blowing. These men brazenly defied the order of the court, and said they would go on preaching Christ, whatever happened to them.

There they stand, these two men who had seemed like reeds trembling in the wind a few months and a few weeks and a few days before. John had asked a foolish question. Peter had denied his Lord—three times denied him. But now they defy the whipping post, the dungeon and even death to preach Christ. They had proved themselves. They had been tested in the fire and they had been proved.

THE CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

THE CHRISTIAN religion is both life and light. Personality is the medium of expression of vital religion. If Christianity is to be effective, it must be expressed intelligently. Man at his best is trained in the fundamentals of general education and in the techniques of the arts and sciences, including the science of God.

The Christian College is founded to insure the inclusion of spiritual content in the program of secular education and to see that religion is taught in the college curriculum.

In the Christian College the students are exposed to religion, whether they do anything about it or not. Christ's challenging declaration, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me," is always before us. It is not our business to draw men to Christ, but to lift Christ up that they will be drawn to him. We lift him up in the classroom by reverencing truth. We lift him up on the playgrounds by sympathetic consideration and evident fairness. We lift him up in worship by according him the first place and trusting him with our all. We lift him up in our lives by crucifying the flesh and enthroning him in our hearts.

The Christian College is the exponent of Christianity. It seeks not only to engender Christian belief, but to enable man to give an intelligent reason for the faith he possesses. It is ill-content with make-believe but seeks the confidence of assurance in complete understanding of both man and God.

The Church must look to the Christian College for the solution of many of its problems today. A divinely called and a divinely inspired ministry, with the Christian College as a means of enlightenment is the hope of the Church and of the world.

God forbid that the Christian College with its dictum should pass from the field of higher education.

Parsonage Mortgage Burning Service at Shallow Ford Church

Participating in the Mortgage Burning Service at Shallow Ford Church were: (l to r) Dr. W. W. Sloan, former pastor; M. M. Gerringer, Chalis Iseley, B. A. Barber, Ralph S. Crawford, and Superintendent Wm. T. Scott.

The mortgage and notes of indebtedness on the parsonage of the Shallow Ford Congregational Christian Church, near Elon College, North Carolina, were burned on the parsonage steps during a ceremony held on Sunday, December 2, 1951.

Superintendent Wm. T. Scott presided at the ceremony. In the responsive service preceding the actual burning, W. E. Walker represented the church; Miss Della Rae Foster, represented the children; Miss Doris Chrismon, represented the young people, and C. W. Whitaker, Jr., represented the young adults.

The flame was applied to the mortgage and other papers by C. T. Iseley, assisted by R. S. Crawford, M. M. Gerringer and B. A. Barber.

The principal address was given by Dr. W. W. Sloan, professor of Bible and Religious Education at Elon College, who served as pastor of the church during the construction of the parsonage in which he and Mrs. Sloan lived for two and one-half years. Dr. Sloan recounted events in connection with the construction of the building and suggested forward steps by which the church may serve the entire community.

The benediction was pronounced by Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College.

News Flashes

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill was one of the leaders of Religious Emphasis Week at Woman's College of the University of North Carolina last week.

Young people in our churches are urged to order at the earliest time possible their copies of "Lenten Devotion for Young People." Lent begins February 27 and they should be ready for distribution on the Sunday before. Order from Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon St. Boston 8, Mass. Five cents per copy.

On Sunday evening, January 27, something new was inaugurated at the Congregational Christian Church in Reidsville. It was announced as Decision Night, and preceding the regular evening hour of worship a covered dish supper was held in the dining room of the church. The supper was well attended, and the hour of fellowship was enjoyed by all who came. The evening service followed and nine persons were baptized and seven admitted into the fellowship of the church. All who were there left saying it was good to have been in God's house.

VIRGINIA VALLEY CONFERENCE CHURCH HAS GROUND BREAKING.

Bethlehem Church at Tenth Legion is ready to start building a fine new house of worship, announced its Building Committee, Stanley Lohr, chairman. A new brick church will be erected in the middle of the church yard at the south of the old stone church.

Public ground-breaking ceremonies for the new Bethlehem Church were held in the church yard at 2:30 p. m., Sunday, February 17, announced pastor Ralph M. Galt. Main speakers at the ceremonies were Rev. R. A. Whitten of Winchester, past president of the Valley Conference, and Mr. R. B. Doffenyer of Harrisonburg, president of the Valley Conference. Other guests invited to participate in the ground-breaking service included Rev. R. E. Newton of Luray, Rev. S. E. Madren of Elkton, and Rev. Jesse Robertson of Mayland.

Three large oak trees on the building site are being cut out by the volunteer labor of Mr. Millard Dinges and Bethlehem Church members on Wednesday, February 13. The tree trunks are expected to yield much finishing lumber for the new church.

A number of gifts to the building fund have already been received by the committee. One of the largest of these was given by the Farmers Supply Company of Broadway.

The Bethlehem Church Building Committee met on Sunday, February 10, and surveyed the building site. They decided that the new church should copy for the most part the Mountain Grove Church of the Brethren at Genoa, built in 1950 by Tom Good, a member of Bethlehem Church. Mr. Ray Good was asked by the committee to serve as building contractor for the new church. The committee members are Stanley Lohr, chairman; Robert Sellers, treasurer; Clarence Phillips and Shirley White, finance sub-committee; J. S. Sellers, Tom Good, Jack Rhodes, and Ralph Galt, ex-officio.

WESTERN CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

A Conference-Wide Rally of Laymen will be held at the Town Hall at Liberty, N. C., on Saturday, March

1, at 7:00 p. m. This is to be a Supper Meeting of Laymen, the meal to be furnished by the Liberty Christian Church Ladies for a minimum charge.

We are planning a program of fellowship, music, inspiration, and information concerning the work of the Laymen in our conference. We would like for all Laymen to be present regardless of whether there is an organized Laymen's Fellowship in the local church or not. This is a meeting of men of our churches who desire to understand and enjoy Christian activities in which men can participate. We expect every pastor, superintendent, and a carload of Laymen from each church. As man to man we urge you not to fail us.

We expect to have the Chairman of the Laymen's Fellowship of the Southern Convention together with an outstanding Layman as guest and special speaker. A good meal, good fellowship, good speaking, a good quartet; what else could be added to make for a better evening than all this at the big rally of Laymen at Liberty Town Hall on Saturday, March 1, at 7:00 p. m.

The Chairman of the Board of Publications Writes Concerning Convention Problems

With regard to THE CHRISTIAN SUN I would make the following comment. Yes, THE SUN faces some difficult days ahead as it has faced difficult days in the past. Financially at present it is better off than it was two or three years ago. With the additional subsidy that has come from the churches and with the increase in subscription rates we have been able to meet to date our current obligations.

The format and content of THE SUN have been discussed at length and changes are being made from time to time that a better presentation of news of the churches, of needs of the church and its institutions and of challenging articles that lift our minds and hearts may more adequately be presented. I do not feel that a small news sheet would answer the need nor that the Advance, fine a paper as it is, can promote the work of the Southern Convention as well as THE SUN now does. Certainly I concur in the fact that THE SUN does not go into to as many homes as it should. But with adequate support and interest from laymen and ministers alike, wider reading can be obtained. To my mind rather than seeking to decrease the influence of THE SUN more effort should be spent in seeking to increase that influence.

With regard to state conferences I would make the following observation. The time may come when state conferences on state lines will be advisable but much ground-work and laying of foundations must be done before that can be accomplished. The sixty-three churches in Virginia in the Valley and Eastern Conferences are not at the present time prepared to assume the responsibilities, financial and otherwise, that would be involved in the establishment of a state office. The ability to contribute is sharply limited by the size and economic resources of the majority of those churches. Our Convention Superintendent does have a large responsibility but his responsibility is no larger than that of many another superintendent who cares for a single state. For more than a few of our conferences exceed us in the number of churches to be served and in the distances that must be covered within a state. It may well be that we should set our sights for a day and a date in the future on which separate state conferences should be established. But if we are to do that we must be willing to pay the price of intensive effort upon the part of individuals and churches to increase the spiritual, physical and economic resources that the step may be one well taken and not a leap in the dark.

With regard to the recommendation made as to the change in status for the Superintendent of the Orphanage and the President of Elon College with regard to the Executive Board of the Southern Convention I would make the following comment. In some respects the church must learn a lesson from business enterprise around it. The Board of Directors of a corporation normally, I believe, includes the executive administrators of the various arms of the corporation. It is deemed wise to do so in order that the directors be personally informed of the operation and plans of the individual branch and that the management of the branch be personally aware of the will and desire of the directors the better to enable them to carry out the desire of the Board. Certainly the Executive Board of the Southern Convention can be likened to a board of directors and the Superintendent of the Orphanage and the President of the College as executive administrators ought to sit with that

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

C-O-V-E-R-E-D!

Superintendent W. T. Scott states that the Group Life Insurance and Hospitalization Plan of the Southern Convention with the Home Life Insurance Co. of New York has been put in force. This means that pastors and other full-time employees who participate in the plan are covered with life insurance, hospitalization and surgical benefits for themselves, and those who have so elected have hospitalization and surgical benefits for their dependents.

This is a great victory for the ministers, the churches and the Convention. Even small churches may have the satisfaction of knowing that their pastors are covered by this plan. Anxiety will be minimized and excessive expense will be avoided in case of necessary hospitalization. This realization is an occasion for deep gratitude. Especial thanks are due Superintendent Scott for his tireless leadership in promoting this excellent plan and bringing it into operation.

Participating churches should remember to pay their Conference Fund at once, since the Convention does not have funds with which to advance the payments.

CHRISTMAS FUND REPORT

Our readers will be interested in the fine report released by Frank J. Scribner, general secretary of the Ministerial Division of the Board of Home Missions:

"The Christmas Fund, which is administered by the Ministerial Relief Division of the Board of Home Missions, closed its books for 1951 with a total of $109,595.73. This is the second largest Christmas Fund ever contributed, and is the seventh successive Christmas Fund to exceed $100,000. The total number of gifts received was 6,486. A good part of these represent gifts forwarded by churches, which included contributions from many individuals.

"Christmas checks were mailed so as to reach the recipients before Christmas Day, and a part of the fund has been reserved as an emergency fund to meet special situations arising in the course of the year.

"The officers of the Ministerial Relief Division, in the name of our veterans, wish to express to the membership of our Congregational Christian Churches heartfelt gratitude for this response."

Of the above amount, $1,655.77 came from churches and individuals in The Southern Convention.

Our thanks to each contributor and cheer to the recipients.

THE EDUCATIONAL OUTLOOK

It is interesting to learn that the number of white Americans attending college, in proportion to the total population, has just about doubled in the past 20 years. The United States Office of Education ran a survey that shows that in the 1949-50 school year, one out of every 61 was enrolled in colleges. In 1930-31 the ratio was one in 123. In 1938 it was one in 108. North Carolina and Virginia are among the ten states having the lowest proportion of college students. Obviously, we of the South must take our educational opportunities more seriously. A valid index to the real character of a state is the percentage of its college trained population.

The survey also discloses that foreign student population has more than tripled here in the last 20 years, and the percentage of students who migrate to colleges stands at 20.5%. At Elon College, for instance, are found numbers of students from other states. The number coming from northern states seems to be on the increase. The church-related college does attract numbers of students across state boundaries.

The denominational school is not without its problems, to be sure, but the educational movement is still gaining momentum in our democracy, and the overall outlook at the present time is both heartening and challenging.

The Worldwide Fellowship of Prayer

By FLORENCE GORDON*

A great many people who do not know the word "ecumenical" have had ecumenical experiences. They have them regularly on the First Friday in Lent each year, the traditional day for the World Day of Prayer. Then literally millions enjoy a deep sense of the oneness of "the whole family of God in the whole world," whether the language they speak is Telugu or Bantu, Spanish or Swahili, or the Greek from which "ecumenical" and ecumenicity" come.

Following as far as possible a uniform service, in many languages, they observe a special day of intercession, and over and over again word comes back to the United States, from which the service is sent out, "We become vividly aware of the fellowship of Christians around the world," "Our people realize arisen our oneness in Christ," "The World Day of Prayer makes a wonderful bond."

During the summer of 1951, copies of the service for February 29, 1952 were mailed out to 104 countries and areas of the world. At this point the process is already a cooperative one, for the preparation of the program in English is done under the direction of one unit of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A., the General Department of United Church Women, and distribution is made by another unit of the Council, the Division of Foreign Missions.

Overseas.

The procedure overseas is as varied as the lands themselves. The program, once on the field, is adapted if necessary, and translated into the local language or vernacular. In some countries it is printed and distributed by a special committee of the National Christian Council; much more often, however, some simpler form of reproduction is used, typing or mimeographing and perhaps only leaders of the observances need copies.

"Most of our women do not know how to read," a Burmese leader explains, "but I read the scripture passages to them in Pao, and they do know how to sing Christian hymns and lead in prayer." "We typed out several copies," says another Burmese woman, "and I was glad I could send one which I translated into Burmese to a place about seventy-six miles from our town. I am very glad to do this work, for it did a great deal of good to me, at least." A woman in Assam not only led the women of her own church in their World Day of Prayer meeting, but made copies in longhand and sent them to branch churches, so that they, too, could join in the service.

Language Difficulties Transcended.

There were places last year, like St. John's Pro-Cathedral in Buenos Aires, Argentina, where "the church was almost filled and the programs ran out." At the American Pro-Cathedral in Paris, copies were distributed in both France and English, and responses read and hymns sung simultaneously in both languages. In Taipei, Formosa, where Madame Chiang Kai-shek was among the worshippers, there were programs in the Mandarin dialect and in romanized Formosan.

Perhaps in no area are there more polyglot services than in the Near East. A missionary writes from Tehran, Iran, "A great deal of work went into preparation for the service. First one of our fine young matrons, Jewish Christian, translated the program from English into Persian. Then a worker in the London Mission for Jews edited it, adapting it to our group, and a Moslem Christian, a young mother with little children to keep her more than busy, cut the stencils. One hundred copies were mimeographed by the Albers Foundation. Thirty copies were typed in English. A German friend prepared thirty invitations in German. A Russian wrote a notice and explanation of the Day which was read at the Sunday morning Russian service. The choir, which rehearsed in advance, consisted of Christian teachers from the Church primary school, Iran Bethel, and several young women teaching in government schools. The German wife of one of our Kurdish doctors sang a German solo, and two Russian women a Russian duet. During the offertory, the hymn used was

"I Gave my Life for Thee; What Hast Thou Given Me?"; the first verse sung in Syrian, second in Armenian, third in English and last in Persian. Prayers were offered in these languages and also in Turkish and Greek. The talk was given by an American, a former missionary to China, with Jewish Christian serving as interpreter."

Displacements of recent years have added to the international character of many observances. In Southern Rhodesia, seven countries, China, Korea, England, Finland, the Union of South Africa, the Belgian Congo and the United States were each represented by two persons, one telling of the needs of the countries and the other praying for the needs mentioned. The persons chosen had some real connection with the country. The needs of China, for example, were presented by a China missionary temporarily serving in Rhodesia. Rhodesia itself was last, and many short prayers were offered from the congregation for the needs there. Flags and maps of the world decorated the assembly hall.

No Church Walls!

It is not only language difficulties that are transcended in the World Day of Prayer observances. A woman in the Netherlands cried, "Is it not a blessing: one day in the year, no church walls!" Anglican and Salvation Army worship together, representatives of state church and of the free churches. Theologians lead some services, lay men and women others, children the special program prepared for them. The World Day of Prayer is observed in Egypt by the United Presbyterian Church, Church Missionary Society, Egypt General Mission, Canadian Holiness Mission, Church of God, Friends of the Bible (Coptic), Syrian Orthodox and an Armenian Brethren group. Many refer gratefully to the growing spirit of fellowship between the denominations, and are seeking to extend the cooperation throughout the year, through other joint meetings, study circles and continuing prayer groups.

Stewardship.

There is ecumenical fellowship not only in the prayer observances but also in the concern which one group of Christians in the great chain of prayer will show for another. Offerings in Switzerland were given to several missionary causes, to displaced persons and to victims of the

ROSEMONT NEWS.

Our supply service ended at Rosemont Church, South Norfolk, on Sunday, February 17. The last of a series of Bible Studies, on the Gospel according to Mark, was given Wednesday evening, February 13. A group of members planned a social following the Bible Study period. Light refreshments were served and an interesting program of music and games interspersed with talks made the occasion very pleasant. A number of valentine cards were presented to the supply pastor and his wife, to be read after reaching Florida. Presents were also given to the supply pastor and his wife.

This brief period of work with this wonderful church has been a great inspiration to us. Having been a rural pastor during all the years of our active ministry, as a pastor, we had some fears that we might not "fit" into the city church in an acceptable matter. We have been delighted with the fine response to every suggestion for taking forward steps in the development of the local church and the support of the general enterprises of the denomination.

The presentation of the Elon College Sustaining Fund and the request to raise $600 for that purpose, easily met with success. The people were happy when they learned that the church met this request without making a general canvass or passing the "collection plates" for an offering. We requested those who wished to give, to bring their offerings and place them in a plate on the communion table. The response was adequate and the people rejoiced.

Rosemont is located in a rapidly growing section of South Norfolk. A fine opportunity for growth awaits the church, and this work should be pushed with aggressive prayer and effort. Rev. Melvin Dollar has accepted the call to take up this work on March 15—or, the third Sunday in March, for the first worship service, as pastor. He has done a great work at Hunterdale, near Franklin, Va., and the people of Rosemont are confident that he will enter upon a successful term with that church. There is a fine spirit of unity and cooperation among the people and the general conditions are favorable for the new pastor.

Some improvements have been made recently in the sanctuary and in the Sunday school assembly room. Concrete walks have been laid from the street to the entrances to the church and the parsonage. This is a fine beginning for other greater improvements to be made later.

We leave Virginia on Monday, February 18, for about five weeks stay in sunny Florida, dividing the time between Orlando, Miami and St. Petersburg. Fruit, flowers and fishing will add to the pleasure of the stay there. Precious memories of dear friends and devoted church people will refresh us for other tasks when we return. It is a great privilege to share one's time, talent and energy in the work of the Kingdom of God. We are not in any hurry to leave this wonderful world.

I. W. JOHNSON.

WINCHESTER ON THE AIR!

The Winchester, Virginia, Church will broadcast the morning worship services (11:00 to 12 a. m. E. S. T.) each Sunday in April over radio stations WINC and WRFL-FM.

The churches of Winchester represented in the Winchester Minister-al Association (including our church) united in "Week of Prayer" services, January 20-25, with the Rev. Albert P. Shirkey, D. D., pastor of Mount Vernon Methodist Church. (The largest Protestant Church in Washington. Membership 4,500). These services were attended by large congregations. A retreat for ministers was held, Monday February 18, and beginning February 17 each minister will be preaching on the following themes: "The Recovery of Wholeness," and each Sunday afterwards for four Sundays: "Marriage," "Birth," "Death," as outlined in the book, "Common Ventures of Life" by Elton Trueblood, professor of philosophy at Earlham College and a former President of the Friends World Council. The united campaign in Winchester includes a week of visitation Evangelism with Rev. John Pemberton, Jr., of Cape May, N. J., as the director of that campaign. This will be followed during Holy Week with all churches conducting services daily with the local pastors preaching in their own churches. This is the widest and perhaps the most far reaching campaign by the Protestant Churches here within the history of the present pastors of the city.

HIGH SCHOOL SENIORS AND THE DRAFT.

By D. J. BOWDEN, DEAN, Elon College.

As spring approaches, thousands of high school seniors in North Carolina and Virginia are looking forward to graduation. What is their selective status? Will they be permitted to enter college if they wish? The answer is yes! Will they be snatched out of college before they have an opportunity to prove themselves? The answer is no! Every young man approaching high school graduation may look with confidence to the possibility of entering college if he wishes to do so, for the U. S. Government recognizes the importance of college trained men and women for the continued well-being of our nation. Every young man who has the ability should therefore seek to continue his education.

The high school graduate who is under draft age (18½ years) at the time he expects to enter college will be entirely free to enter the college of his choice (and we hope Elon will be his first choice.) At some time after he comes of draft age he may be called to take the Selective Service Physical Examination, the passing of which will place him in Classification I-A. If, during his first college year, he is called for induction, his local draft board is required to place him in Classification I-S. This defers him until the end of that school year. During this year he will take the Selective Service College Qualifying Examination. If he makes a passing grade on this test or if his academic average for the year places him in the upper half of the male members of his college class, his local board is permitted to give him a Classification of II-S which defers him for another school year. At the end of this year, if he is in the upper two-thirds of the male members of his class, he may be deferred for a third year. And if his academic average for this year places him in the upper three-fourths of his class he may be deferred to complete his fourth year of college.

The young man who has reached the draft age (18½ years) before the time of his high school graduation may not be called into service immediately, depending upon the needs of the local draft board, but it is advisable that he enter college in the summer term if there is a likelihood of his being called. Once he is in attendance in college, the regulations stated above apply to him also.

In summary, the situation boils down to this: every college student is guaranteed deferment until the end of the school year in which he is first called for induction. If he has passed the Selective College Qualifying Test or if he maintains a satisfactory academic average in his college work he may be deferred, year by year, until graduation.

This means that every high school graduate who earnestly desires to continue his studies will be given every opportunity to fulfill that desire. The current draft law is designed to guarantee the continued flow of capable men and women into higher education, and every young man should consider seriously this opportunity.

LAYMEN ENDORSES SUSTAINING FUND.

By W. B. TRUITT.

When the idea of the Sustaining Fund first came to my attention I thought it was one of the most logical ideas that had been presented to insure Elon College against deficits in running expenses. It seemed to me that one dollar per member per year was very reasonable and would appeal to the majority of the membership, and that every church in the Southern Christian Convention could easily meet the requirement. Furthermore, the scholarship for honor churches was certainly appealing.

I am informed by Dr. Smith that instead of his receiving a maximum of something like $35,000.00 from this special Sustaining Fund he only received about $11,000.00. This, to be sure, was a great help to him but cannot relieve him of the uneasiness of deficits under rising costs.

In spite of strenuous efforts by the college authorities through mail and by CHRISTIAN SUN presentation, I doubt that over fifty per cent of the constituency ever heard of the Sustaining Fund. Perhaps about twenty per cent may have read something about it in the church paper. This being the case, responsibility rests heavily upon the ministers. Those who received real educational help from Elon should not forget, but those educated elsewhere probably enjoyed similar benefits and should back up our college in every possible way.

In all churches working on the budget system it would seem to me to be logical to get the one dollar per member by one well advertised free-will offering per year, and the remainder of the fund for the particular church to be annually set up against the church budget. In such cases perchance a free-will offering would yield from one-third to one-half of the amount so that the church budget would only have to support the remainder.

It seems to me that this Sustaining Fund should be advertised throughout every one of our churches and a real effort made to measure up in every church to 100 per cent, with the idea of getting a scholarship and, also, with even the greater incentive of securing Elon against deficits during the next few years when expenses may be expected to be high and perchance higher.

ATTENTON: S. S. S.

Mr. C. E. Reynolds, Superintendent of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., will discuss "Better Business Methods in the Sunday School."

Mr. R. T. Bradford, Superintendent of Berea (Nausemond) County, Va., will give us an attorney's advice on "Special Literature that will help your School."

Hon. Shirley T. Holland, Superintendent of Windsor, Va., will preside over our meeting.

All of these add up to a fine meeting which you cannot afford to miss. Plan now to attend.

FRIENDLY SERVICE PROJECTS.

Mrs. Ray F. Gordan, Eastern Virginia superintendent of Friendly Service, wishes to remind societies of the projects for this year. Choose one, or give to all, but plan now to do something definite about Friendly Service this year.

There is an excellent program in the packet for dedication of Friendly Service gifts, which should be the climax to your year's work in this field. Even if you only bring gifts for one or two places, it will be well to have the informational program concerning all the places to which gifts may go this year.

ATTENTION, DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENTS!

On New Year's Day Mrs. Clyde Fields, superintendent of the Asheboro District, sent a letter to the leaders of societies in her district. She said, "We are co-laborers in a great work. Our task is to make Christ known through our missionary activity. May each society check its progress and make plans for reaching worthy goals."

Then she reminded the societies of the need for planning for the monthly programs, of the World Day of Prayer to be observed on February 29, of the spring rally to be held at the Albemarle Church at a date yet to be selected, of ideas for observance of May Fellowship Day, and of the importance of Friendly Service and Life Memberships and Memorials.

At the bottom of her letter there was a blank to be filled out and re-

MISS CREW TO JAPAN.

Word has just been received from Miss Angie Crew that, as she had hoped and prayed, she has been given permission by the Board doctor to return to Japan for the new term of school, which begins April 1.

She will be sailing from San Francisco on March 16 on the Ponce de Leon, a freighter of the Waterman Line. One of her companions will be Miss Constance Buell of our China Mission who is to be a teacher at Kobe College.

There will still be time to send gifts to Miss Crew for her to take to Japan, or money for her to use to buy things for her little church, for needy friends, or for herself. Her present address is West Milton, Ohio.

I am sure that our prayers and best wishes will follow Miss Angie Crew as she returns to be a messenger of God to the people of Japan.

turned to her with the name of society president and secretary, the pastor, the date of monthly meeting and the number of members on the roll.

We think Mrs. Field's letter is a fine example of the kind of work a district superintendent can do to encourage the societies in her district. It is an idea which other superintendents might well use.

A HELPING HAND.

Those who have been hearing Miss Angie Crew speak in our area have felt that they would like to do some special things for the Japanese people. Angie has suggested one small thing that individuals or societies might like to do to help.

A year ago last Christmas Angie and another American teacher at Kobe College were invited to the home of one of the Japanese teachers, who was a widow with two boys, about six and twelve years old, to support. Japanese teachers at Kobe College get only about $20 per month, which is enough to buy food—but not clothes, or any extras. The American teachers came away from this Christian home deeply stirred by the simple Christmas celebration—one feature of which was a gift of socks and mittens for each of the boys made by their mother from different colors of scraps of yarn.

This same woman has written Miss Crew to say that she can use more yarn—old sweaters or shawls she will unravel and re-do, so even if "moth eaten" they can be used by her. If you can collect scraps of yarn or used knitted garments which she may use, send them to: Mrs. Toshia Nishiyama, Kobe College, Nishinomiya, Japan. Miss Crew has written her to be on the look-out for this yarn, so she will understand why she is receiving it from some unknown friend. This is a friendly service project which will not take much money—just the postage—but which will bring the warmth of Christian fellowship to someone across the ocean.

A MEDITATION.

(From This and That, the monthly of the Woman's Auxiliary, Burlington.)

"Where there is no vision, the people perish."—Proverbs 29:18.

In 1889 the women of the First Christian Church of Burlington met together, not in an organized body, but just as a group who called themselves "The Minister's Helpers." Among this group were Mrs. Ella Turrentine, Mrs. Lou Turrentine, Mrs. Edd Teague, Mrs. Bettie Holt, Mrs. Mollie Walker, and others. Through the vision, faith, and deeds of these women we find ourselves a part of the Woman's Auxiliary today.

These women had a vision. They were not content to live in selfish complacency, doing only for themselves. They grew into an organization that soon reached into the foreign field, ever widening around the globe, carrying the gospel to the uttermost parts of the world.

As we carry this torch, lighted by these women of bygone days, do we stop to see visions and to dream dreams? If there is no new vision each New Year, our auxiliary will perish. But to have visions is not enough. Each New Year these words from Dr. John Sutherland Bonnell come to me anew, "words without deeds are meaningless; words with deeds are meaningful."

Let us dedicate this to the memory of those first women of our church who first caught the gleam of what a group of Christian women could do, lifting up their eyes and hearts and minds to help those in need, both here at home and anywhere around the world.

"IN UNION THERE IS STRENGTH."

On June 4 of last year the three women's organizations of the Suffolk Christian Church were merged into one large group, the name of this group to be "The Woman's Fellowship." At this organizational meeting a slate of officers was presented and accepted, with Mrs. Jack W. Nurney as president, and the women of the church began to plan a program for the year, together, to undergird the total church program.

We are divided into twelve circles, with a leader, co-leader and devotional leader for each. Every circle meets once a month. The regular meeting of the entire group is held every second Monday evening. Our attendance at both circle and regular meetings has been most satisfying and each program has stood on its own merit. One of our goals for the year is to enlist every woman of the church as a member of the fellowship.

Our big project was to attempt our first church fair and make it an annual event if it proved successful. The fair was held on November 29 under the direction of our very capable president, Mrs. Nurney, and her co-chairman, Mrs. Bernard Godwin. Because of their planning and untiring efforts and the splendid cooperation of the membership we were pleased with the outcome.

We realized $525 for our treasury, $500 of this to be set aside in a special fund to renovate our church kitchen, but finer still was the harmony and fellowship that we experienced in working together in a united effort.

We do not expect perfection in such a brief time, however, it has been said that one of the unique gifts women can bring to the church is their ability to weave many details into one harmonious pattern. We are trusting that this may be true of the woman's fellowship of our church.

YOUNG COUPLES RESPOND TO MISSION CALL.

Two young couples were appointed as career Congregational Christian missionaries by the American Board meeting in Cleveland, January 21-24 in conjunction with the Mission Council of Congregational Christian Churches.

Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Markham of 1012 W. Springfield, Urbana, Illinois, are slated for service respectively as an industrial arts teacher and nurse in Angola, Africa. Rev. and Mrs. Paul Furnas Pruitt of Anacortes, Washington, are assigned to the Philippine Islands.

Robin Leroy Markham, 25-year old lay missionary, is the son of Dr. H. Veazie Markham of 23317 Nawthorne Boulevard, Torrance, California, former medical missionary of the American Board in Africa. He comes from a long line of Christian ministers and missionaries. He was born in Portugal while his parents were en route to the field and spent much of his boyhood in Africa.

After graduation from David Starr Jordan High School, Long Beach, California, Mr. Markham went two years to Pomona College and then left to enter the Merchant Marine where he served two years. He returned to El Camino Jr. College in Torrance, California, and then in 1950 went to the University of Illinois where he is now completing his preparation for the mission field.

avalanches. Offerings in New Zealand were divided between the war-stricken in Korea, Orphaned Missions, Interchurch Aid in Europe, and the British and Foreign Bible Society. Canada regularly gives generous contributions to Christian literature agencies around the world. Argentina sent its last offerings to the United Bible Society. In Formosa, offerings were made for Christian literature for the two leper institutions on the island. In Kermanshah, Iran, gifts were designated for "the Korean families, our brothers and sisters in Christ, presently suffering under the wrath of war."

Offerings sometimes are in kind as well as in coin. Two hundred children in the Belgian Congo, whose young leader had opened the service saying reverently, "We have come together to pray for people around the world," closed it by walking quietly to the altar carrying their gifts of manioc leaves or sweet potatoes, while the organ softly played, "Sweet Hour of Prayer."

Naturally it is in the United States, where the Day originated, that it is most widely observed. There are services in 18,000 communities. Offerings, which run close to $300,000, are divided equally between home and foreign mission projects, through the Division of Home and of Foreign Missions of the National Council. The service to be used around the world on February 29, 1952, originated with members of the three groups which receive Christian ministries through a portion of the World Day of Prayer offerings, migrants, sharecroppers and American Indians in government schools.

Services are held not only in churches and chapels, but also in schools, hospitals, county homes, homes for the aged, jails, factories and migrant camps. Workers in the Flandreau Garment Factory at Flandreau, South Dakota, which makes clothing for the government schools for American Indians, gathered at the noon hour when the machines were still. A copy of the painting of Christ at the Door stood on the cutting table, as focal point for eyes and thoughts, as workers followed the service.

In Florida, a minister to the agricultural migrants took a record player and public address system to the place where the migrants gather to go to the fields, and there, early in the morning, he played hymns, offered prayer and distributed the Call to Prayer leaflets, reminding the workers that all over the world people were gathering to pray. Two union services were held in an area of Florida where cooperation between the churches had not been attempted before, and a united Easter program of great significance grew out of the World Day of Prayer observance.

Uniformly, those who participate in the World Day of Prayer consider it a privilege. In the words of a correspondent in the Belgian Congo, "It brings us closer to our Heavenly Father and to each other to know that Christians all around the world are using the same thoughts and prayers on this special Day. We are looking forward eagerly to the next World Day of Prayer, on February 29, 1952."

A Page for Our Children

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Tomorrow is whose birthday? Of course, George Washington's. What a month of celebrations and observances February is! Every American school child has heard of our First President and every Virginia school child is proud to claim this great citizen of Virginia. Have you visited his home at Mount Vernon? It worthwhile trip to take.

More than twenty years ago the Dietz Press in Richmond published a little book by Sally Nelson Robins called "Love Stories of Famous Virginians" and George Washington headed the list of lovers. Lover—oh, he was a great general, a wonderful president and a successful farmer, but a lover? Well, it is February, the month of St. Valentine as well birthday month of two great presidents. If you can find a copy of this little book read it for it will tell you many things you did not know about some of our great men.

Once Washington wrote poetry to a young lady named Frances Alexander and here are two lines which I quote:

"Xerxes wasn't free from Cupid's Dart
And all the greatest heroes felt the smart."

Yes, the great, too, feel the smart for poor George couldn't find a girl that would have him. Some did not care for his looks, others thought him too poor or awkward or their parents did not approve of him so he went from girl to girl. But finally in January 1758, George Washington married Martha Custis who was not a blushing young bride but a dignified widow. No one knows how long he knew Mistress Custis. She had two children and two who died when they were very young who were buried at Bruton Parish Graveyard at Williamsburg.

On their wedding day Washington wore a blue silk coat lined with red and silver trimmings. He wore gold buckles on his breeches and shoes and carried his sword and wore a freshly powdered wig. Martha was quite grand herself in satin quilted petticoats of white and high heeled slippers with buckles of diamond and real lace at her throat and wrist.

History tells us that they were happy. Martha made him a good wife and kept house for him in the finest manner. She was ever well dressed in public and her conduct was above reproach. She must have been glad that General Washington liked her children, John Parke and Martha Parke. We are told that Washington sent to England for their prayer books, clothes and a spinet for their music lessons.

The face we see on stamps and on the pages of history books seems very severe, but remember he was once a gawky, young man who couldn't find the right girl and who had many troubles, but finally found the girl of his dreams.

SCHEDULING THE FUTURE.

By LUCIA MAILLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Someday, when you aren't too busy, Miss Hargrove, I'd like to come to your room to discuss Burke's schedule of schoolwork for the next three years." The speaker was Mrs. Creighton, the mother of one of the students belonging to the home room of Amy Hargrove, a teacher in the Barnard Junior High School. Seated together at a club meeting, Mrs. Creighton, Amy, and I were chatting during the refreshment period that followed the evening's program.

"I'll be glad to have you come," my friend Amy responded. "If Burke will tell me what day is convenient for you, I'll try to arrange my work so that there will be plenty of time after school for the three of us to go over his plans."

"It won't be necessary for Burke to stay," Mrs. Creighton answered firmly. "His father and I have talked over the plans for his future and decided what studies he should take."

Amy's reply was a gentle question. "Wouldn't it be a good idea for Burke to help us make out his schedule, Mrs. Creighton? Your son has shown some special aptitudes this year. I think he might like to tell us about his interests and help outline his course for senior high school."

"Burke is too young to make decisions for himself," his mother contended, "but, of course, he can stay if you wish. He has made such excellent progress in your English classes, Miss Hargrove, that his father and I feel very grateful to you."

"Thank you," my friend replied. "Burke has been a good student. We'll go over his enrollment with him whenever you think best."

After the club meeting was over and Amy Hargrove and I were walking home together, we recalled the conversation with Mrs. Creighton.

"I wish that parents would give their children more opportunities to develop self-reliance," Amy declared.

"While you were talking with your student's mother," I interposed, "my thoughts turned to the many persons I have known who have been unhappy misfits in adult life because their parents had insisted on their sons and daughters pursuing courses of study and following vocations that were entirely foreign to their natural interests and abilities. I hope Mrs. Creighton will not make that mistake with her son."

"When Burke Creighton first came into my English classes," Amy told me, "he had little liking for school. He was lacking in initiative, largely, I believe, because he had been almost smothered by directions from his well-meaning but misguided parents. Fortunately, our school makes available a wealth of good reading material in many fields of interest. It wasn't long before Burke discovered that he liked to read books about scientific achievements. From them he gained a feeling of success in reading that led him on to the enjoyment of biographies of the great scientists and a study of the period of the world's history in which each had lived. This year a course in general science has been his delight.

"Since Burke's father is an able and honored lawyer, I have no doubt he intends to have his son eventually become associated with him in that profession. It's possible Burke will become as much interested in law as his father has been, and that scientific reading and study will be always just a pleasing avocation, but it is more likely that he'll want to make some phase of science his lifework."

"I hope his parents will be willing for him to follow his own aptitudes in choosing a career," I added. "I'm sure you'll try to help them see the need for that."

"Yes," Amy agreed. "I hope they will begin by permitting him to choose some of the elective subjects in his high school course. Every

STATE-WIDE RALLIES.

The state-wide young people's rallies which were so well attended last year will be held again this year. The Virginia Rally will feature Miss Oline Nicholson, returned missionary from India; and the North Carolina Rally will have Jose Dabuet, our Philippine student, and Timothy Chang, whom you all know.

MANY GROUPS OBSERVE YOUTH WEEK.

HOLLAND.

The Pilgrim Fellowship of the Holland Christian Church had the privilege again this year to conduct the Sunday morning worship service, January 27, 1952. It was the beginning of Youth Week and, therefore, was very appropriate. The preacher, Rev. James Lightbourne, was absent that day and was very glad to let the young people conduct the service.

Leslie Johnston conducted the service, assisted by Betty Jean Underwood, who read the scriptures, and Nadine Pulley, who led in the responsive reading. Jo Lynn Holland, Ann Campbell, Billy Brittle, and Leon Duke served as ushers. Lois Jean Grizzard sang the Youth Hymn, "We Would be Building." The speakers for the service were Miss Pattie Lee Coghill and Miss Angie Crew. They were introduced by our president, Jim Batten. The whole program was under the supervision of our sponsor, Mrs. J. D. Rawles. Everyone enjoyed doing it and hope we will be asked to do it next year or before if possible.

ALBEMARLE.

The Albemarle Congregational Christian Church observed Youth Week beginning the first Sunday in February of 1952.

The program committee of the young people's group planned and appointed new officers from the young people of the church for each service in the church for the week.

The following people were in charge of the services in the church: Douglas Harper, the Sunday school; Bill Simons, the morning worship service; Miss Carolyn Gaddy, the young people's meeting at 6:00 p. m.; Mrs. Alma Talbert, the evening worship service; Martin Deese, the Wednesday evening prayer meeting, and Norris O'Neal Whitley, the singing.

Each service, Sunday February 3, was inspiring and worshipful. It was a good day at the Albemarle Church with the young people in charge and to have two new members to unite with the church by letter. These two new members make a total of eight for the year 1952. Five of these eight new members came into the church on profession of faith in Christ and three by letters.

FRANKLIN.

On January 27 the young people of the Franklin Church were in charge of the evening service, having as their visitors the pilgrim fellowshippers of the Union and Holy Neck Churches. Audrey Lankford, president, presided; Bobby Jones read the scripture, and Carolyn Gillette led the evening prayer. Special music was provided by the youth choir, with Sara Lee Johnson and Russell McGhee singing the duet in "It Pays to Serve Jesus." The ushers were Dickie Gee and Henry Copeland. Rev. Melvin Dollar pronounced the prayer of dedication of the offering and the benediction. Miss Angie Crew, who is home from her missionary-teacher service in Japan, was the principal speaker. She was introduced by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill.

MONTICELLO, NORTH CAROLINA.

The Monticello Pilgrim Fellowship began Youth Week, Sunday evening, January 27, with a unique worship service. On the worship center was placed a pair of shoes, the title of the service being, "If You Were in My Shoes." Short talks were given by members of the group who tried to visualize the response to the topic of a Negro, a resident of a slum area, and a new person in the community.

Those taking part in the program were Shirley Huffines, Jay Rodd, Jimmy Faucette, and Karen Smith. Their presentations were followed by a discussion, led by Mrs. Julius Rice, wife of the pastor. There were 23 members present.

NORFOLK.

The South Norfolk Church was the meeting place for a special Youth Week service, which placed emphasis upon "The Call." A Negro choir provided special music, with one of the girls singing "The Lord's Prayer." Rev. Charles C. Thomas, from the First Church in Norfolk, was the speaker. The congregation of worshippers was made up of 250 young people of our two races. About 89 answered "The Call." Their first project will be a clothing drive for Korea. They will continue with a project for each community.

BURLINGTON.

Over 200 young people from twelve churches and of five denominations answered "The Call" in Burlington. This group met in the Evangelical and Reformed Church, of which Rev. H. A. Fesperman is the pastor. A fine program was well received by the group, and a total of $109 was given to aid the program of "The Call." "The Call" has been presented to the public through newspapers, radio, and television. The Burlington group plans to start immediately doing their part to answer "The Call" with action as well as words and money.

HOLY NECK.

The Holy Neck Pilgrim Fellowship observed Youth Week by conducting the Sunday morning service, February 3. The theme of the service was "To Answer the Call of Christ." Those participating in the service were Mildred Ann Carter, Jimmy Copeland, Mary Davis, Barbara Holland, Emma Harrell, Willis Eley, Billy Parker, Louise Piland, Billy March, Therman Wilkins, and the junior choir.

Last spring this group greatly appreciated a visit to the Jewish Synagogue in Suffolk. They have been invited to attend St. Mary's Catholic Church in Suffolk, February 10. This will climax their study of Catholicism, which they have been following.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

"OUR BELOVED BARNABAS."

LESSON IX—MARCH 2, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: He was a good man, full of the Holy Spirit, and of faith—Acts 11: 24.

LESSON: Acts 4: 36, 37; 9: 26, 27; 11: 19-26; 13: 1-3.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matthew 6: 19-24.

"He was a good man"—thus reads a part of the description of the character of Barnabas. When one reads about this man, the adjective "good" takes on new meaning. Indeed one meets few finer characters anywhere in the New Testament than Barnabas. And although he is not well-known, he is also one of the greatest characters in the Bible. He was the kind of fellow who did his work quietly behind the scenes, content to take second place to others, but always giving first place in his life to the cause of Christ. Let us take a look at this man through the few snapshots that are given to us in today's lesson.

What's in a Name?

Barnabas was also called "son of consolation," "son of encouragement," "son of comfort," and "exhorter." There was something in his name characteristic of the man himself. He lived up to his name. He went through life giving strength and sympathy to people, and in exhorting them to follow Christ, he himself first showing the way. A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches. Alas for the man who says he does not care about his reputation.

A Patron of Good Causes.

Barnabas was a land-owner, and evidently quite well-to-do. There arose a great need among the early Christians and there came a call for help. At the time Barnabas did not have any ready cash. He might have done what the majority, indeed practically all modern church members do under the circumstances—he might have said "I am sorry, but I do not have any thing to give, I am out of money." But this fellow Barnabas was made of different stuff. He put up a field for sale, sold it, and took all the money and gave it to the apostles to be distributed in charity. Did you ever hear of anybody doing a thing like that? Can you imagine anybody you know, even the best church member you know, selling a piece of land, or a Savings Bond, or a piece of property, or some personal possession, and giving the money to Missions or to some other good cause! The average member gives God the left-overs, a small proportion tithe, but how many are willing to part with capital assets in order that they can give to kingdom enterprises? If this is what being a good man means, there are not many of us who are good. What effect do you think it would have on our missionary leaders and on the missionary enterprise, if in this year of our Lord, some of us would sell some of our jewels, our plate, our houses, our lands, our cattle, our bonds—anything for the excess of love's sake, and give to the cause of Christ, the proceeds?

A Big Brother—"A Son of Encouragement."

When Paul after his conversion on the road to Damascus, came back to Jerusalem, he tried to join himself to the disciples. They wondered why he did not go to the Pharisees with whom he had been in league the last time they knew anything about him. They suspected that it was some kind of trick, and they were not only not receptive, they were cool to the point of being cold toward him. Enter Barnabas, "the son of encouragement." He brought Paul to the disciples and vouched for him. "He is all right; he is with us; I know." And so highly did the disciples think of this good man, and such faith did they have in his word, that they took Paul unto themselves. It is idle to speculate as to what might have been the effort on Paul if he had been given "the cold shoulder" by the powers that be at Jerusalem. To say the least it would have been discouraging. And Barnabas was the fellow who stood by the young convert in the hour of need. In every church there are young converts and church members who need a big-hearted, warm-hearted fellow like Barnabas to be a big brother to them. Are you a good man in this sense of the word?

A Fellow Who Was Willing to Take Second Place.

The young Christian movement was growing by leaps and bounds. And it was also over-leaping its bounds. Some of the disciples, spread far and wide by the persecution, continued to preach, but only to Jews. But men from Cyprus and Cyrene, began to preach also to the Greeks, to Gentiles. God opened their hearts and there was a great ingathering in the church of these Gentiles. Whoever heard of such a thing? Better look into that right away. So the church at Jerusalem sent Barnabas down to Antioch to take a look at this strange, and to them dangerous, turn of affairs. They could not have sent a better man for the job. Broad-minded, spiritually-sensitive, Barnabas saw at once that the grace of God was at work in the hearts of those Gentile believers. And he rejoiced in what he saw, and went into action himself. The record says that "he was a good man, full of the Holy Spirit, and of faith."

Barnabas soon saw that the work was too much for him—he needed help. And his mind turned to the young man Saul, or Paul, sulking in Tarsus, at least lost in the shuffle there. Forthwith he went to Tarsus, sought out Saul, and brought him back to Antioch with him. What a team that was, Barnabas and Saul! But the name of the firm was soon changed to Saul and Barnabas! This fellow Saul was an intellectual and spiritual giant. Barnabas soon had to take second place. And because he was a good man, he did it graciously. He was not seeking preferment or personal prestige; he was seeking only first the Kingdom of God. Nowhere else does Barnabas show the greatness of his character better than in the spirit which he here displays. Are you a good man in this sense?

Westward Ho! Forward March!

The great and grand missionary crusade of the Christian Church is about to be launched. Paul and Barnabas were selected by the Holy Spirit to spearhead the attack against the pagan world in the name of Christ. It was a great team. They had what it took. To be sure the average church member thinks of Paul as the great missionary of the early church. Barnabas seems to have faded out of the picture. But follow Paul wherever he goes on that journey and you will see at his side the shadow of this modest man, who actually brought

TOWARD THE SALVATION OF THE CHURCH-RELATED COLLEGE.

church-related educational institutions. First, loss of the sense of importance as to the purpose of higher education, with the progressive secularization of even our private institutions. The churches may well ask themselves this question, "What do our church-related colleges stand for, what particular mission do they perform which justifies special continuing consideration for them in contrast with the tax supported institutional?"

If we do no more than our public institutions of higher learning, if our mission is essentially the same, there is no reason why they should not receive complete public support through taxes and no longer hold to an institutional freedom derived from private support.

Second, we have seen a tendency develop during recent years for our charitable giving for education to take on a more secular form with larger amounts going to the great universities for research and facilities. At the same time, with the exception of the Lutheran and the Roman Catholic communions, there has been a progressive decline in interest on the part of the laity in supporting our church-related colleges of liberal arts.

Third, all of us have become the unconscious victims of a way of thinking about the relation of government to the social process which has made it inevitable that many millions of our citizens prefer to be taxed on behalf of the social good rather than to support the institutions for social progress through sacrificial sharing.

Unless we redefine the essential mission of higher education, unless we rediscover a new sense of mission for our churches and their peoples, unless the church-related colleges themselves seriously take up their ancient past, there will be no salvation for the church-related college.

. . . The fundamental concern of education must be the redemption of society through the development of virtuous men and women. We are insisting that education whose mission is primarily the perfection of skills for human exploitation, or the development of smartness for its own sake, carries within itself the seeds of destruction for every moral and spiritual value toward which mankind has moved through all the years of its spiritual pilgrimage. We are insisting that the concern of education should be the development of free men. "Free because they are sensitive and aware, free because they are perceptive and adaptable; free because they are intellectually honest and responsible; free because they have glimpsed the face and the form of freedom and have yearned for what they saw."

Free because they are in bondage to great moral and spiritual ideals as symbolized in a person to whom they are willing to make the utmost personal commitment. No society can cohere when the individuals who compose it have no spiritual hitching posts in their intellectual universe, and whose moral values are based on satisfactions of self and on social expediency.

Too many of our Christian colleges have been willing to soft pedal their commitment to the essential concern of education in order to conform to the secular spirit of our day. They have had no institutional philosophy of education which permeated the full life of the institution and which gave redemptive values to the daily round and the common task of student life. The decline in public morality, community responsibility and national loyalty is sad but eloquent testimony to the fact that education has lost its way. There is a way of salvation. It will be long and hard, but it must begin within the life of the educational institution itself.

The second step in the process of salvation for the church-related colleges after it has satisfactorily defined its mission is to reorganize its internal institutional economy in line with the redefinition of mission and purpose. This second step is a painful one for almost all of the colleges to take. During the last 30 years most of the liberal arts colleges have thought that by being all things to all men they would find a way of salvation.

Under the pressure of narrow vocationalism, which produced many highly specialized undergraduate schools in the universities, our colleges have attempted to organize departmentally in as many specialized directions as there are schools in many universities. In order to support the so-called practical and narrowly vocational department, the content areas which are more truly related to education than to training have been watered down, neglected, or eliminated. Many extracurricular activities which under ideal conditions should normally be an organic part of the educational life have been allowed to mushroom in size, to absorb sorely needed resources and sometimes to dominate the institutional orientation of the college.

All too many college presidents in their frantic search for income have tried first one thing and then another to raise money. The most recent departure has been in the field of intercollegiate athletics. I venture to say that there are few church-related liberal arts colleges which are not as guilty in substance, if not in extent, as many of our larger universities in the professionalization of athletics.

Efforts have been made to develop institutional status to make money, and to extend the influence of the institution's public relations by these means. They have always been futile and inevitably end in disaster. But when Christian liberal arts colleges, through their administrations, flagrantly buy students with athletic inclinations, lower academic standards before admission and afterwards, and deliberately set out to exploit youth in order to increase their institutional income, we have a situation which, at its roots, is as immoral and dangerous as that existing in our larger universities.

Institutional morality cannot be defined with reference to the size of the institution, or the type of exploitation which goes on. Another aspect of our internal economy needs exploration and correction. This is the field of faculty procurement.

. . . There can be no substitute for competence in a faculty. The procurement of broadly educated, professionally trained faculty men is difficult even when no other values are sought for, but when a college is committed to the idea of religious education in the terms referred to earlier in this article, the development of a proper faculty is one of the most challenging and frustrating tasks facing the college president.

. . . The final task of the church-related college if it would save itself is to establish a new dynamic partnership between itself and its churches. With the exception of the Lutheran and the Roman Catholic communions, the law of diminishing returns operates dramatically in the relations between churches and colleges with common historical roots.

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

With the new roof on Johnston Hall I am trying to interest friends in repairing some of the rooms. A place or two in the halls on the bedroom floor need plastering and the entire interior needs painting. Get your men's class or women's class, or some group in your church to take a room or a hall as a project. With from $25.00 to $50.00 up a lot of real necessary work could be done. Thank you.

We are pleased with the response to our appeal for coupons. While only comparatively few have as yet come in, many people have written that they are saving them, and that they are presenting the project to their classes and societies. This is for new laundry equipment—or had I not better say laundry equipment, leaving the "new" off. We are sadly in need of laundry equipment. Overalls for forty boys—how many changes should they make a week—well anyway you figure it out—just the laundering of overalls, shirts, work-shirts, shorts and socks, for forty boys is quite an item. And how about towels, sheets, dresses? Laundry is a big item, and as it now stands a rather expensive item. In trying to economize we see how badly we need laundry equipment. We wash most of the above here at the Orphanage—even so sheets and dry-cleaning run up a bill each month.

Our girls are faithful in their work, but 12 and 13 year old girls cannot do everything and go to school, get there lessons, and have a little time for play. I think our children, both boys and girls, do well. We have one girl 17, a few other girls 15 or 16, but most of our girls are below 15. And these ages apply to the boys.

We are very happy to have seven pretty pure-bred heifers registered this week from our own milk herd. It is wonderful to have good milk for all the boys and girls, and to see how they drink it. During 1951 we used 8,047 gallons of milk here in the Orphanage family. Also in the Orphanage diningroom we served 2,639 dozen eggs. There is no wonder that our children are healthy and happy. These are your assets. In these times when even farming is an expensive proposition—labor, machinery, seed, fertilizer, harvesting and housing—even so, I say, we are trying to do a good job here along that line for the Orphanage. And I want to tell you how much we appreciate the most excellent cooperation of our friends everywhere. The nice things they say about our children, our neatly kept buildings (although they need much repairing we can keep them neat and clean), our dairy farm, and the meat, milk and eggs we raise. It is a home of which we can all be proud. What greater "second mile" type of work can the Lord's church do than be a father to fatherless children. It is crystalized kindness. It is the heart of a people being expressed in merciful help to hungry, stranger, naked and needy. It pays good returns. So I thank you for all the help you give us.

OUR OFFICERS WRITE.

To members of the N. C. & Va. Conference Pilgrim Fellowship:

Dear Friends:

This is a letter from all of your North Carolina and Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship officers.

Curtis Young, your president says:

"The time is drawing near for another state rally. Here is some information about it:

"Time: March 30; Place: Elon College; Main Attraction: Jose Dabuet.

"Yes, Jose will definitely be there. This is the opportunity both you and Jose have been waiting for, a chance to meet each other.

"We have big plans for our conference this year. You will be told about these at Elon. Be sure to come and learn what plans have been made.

"Bring your whole group and if you do not have a young people's group organized bring a delegation from your church, for we must show up the Western and Eastern Conferences."

Rosser Lee Clapp, chairman of Personal Action says:

"Just a word about our Lenten Devotions for young people this year. I have a copy of it and have read it through and think it is the best devotional booklet we can use for this session. It was written by Paul Simpson McElroy, and should be ordered from Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Mass., at 5 cents per copy.

"I feel sure you will enjoy using it. This year for the first time, there is at the bottom of the page each day, an 'exercise' which I liked especially. For instance, on February 28 it is, 'Memorize Matthew 5: 1-12,' and for March 13, 'Resolve to refrain from criticizing or passing judgement upon anyone for the next 24 hours.'"

Meryle Mauldin, the Social Action Chairman, says:

"The Work Day for Christ seemed very successful from all reports. A large sum of money has been raised, and what's more, most of the groups had a good time working and planning together. If your pilgrim fellowship group has not yet held its Work Day for Christ, it isn't too late. The money raised will apply on your apportionment for this year. Some of the groups raised their money by working together and giving a supper, others by working individually. So if you haven't done anything yet, please get behind your group and push.

"A shower of cards to shut-ins is a good project for your community. The cards would certainly be appreciated and would mean much to those who send as well as to those who receive."

Frances Smith, the Inter-Denominational Chairman, says:

"The climax of the work of 'The Call' to United Christian Youth Action will occur when one million American young people dedicate their efforts and dollars to Christian citizenship.

"January 7 to February 3 was Youth Week, however, those churches which did not observe it at this time may do so in the near future. Following Youth Week the volunteers from the various churches will launch their program of Community Action."

Dorothy Ballinger, Chairman of the Missionary Action Commission, says:

"Did you know: (1) That Jose is going to be at our state rally at Elon on March 30? (2) That Jose is just as anxious to meet us as we are to meet him? (3) That we want a large group at our rally to show Jose what a find group we have and that we are behind him 100 per cent?"

Mary Wisseman, our Treasurer, says:

"$538.05 is the amount which has been forwarded to John Truitt, Treasurer of the Southern Convention, to be placed in the fund for Jose. Congratulations for doing a good job last year, but let's get enthused and try to do even better this year."

Finally, I say let's get behind our groups this year and have the best record that any conference has ever had!

Be sure and send the news of your youth group to Max Vestal, Elon College, N. C., so he can put it in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. We all want to know what each other is doing.

Looking forward to seeing you with a large number of people from your church at the state rally. I am,

Sincerely yours,

Lois C. Scott.

RELAX WITH MAX.

Boy! It certainly has been a lot of work writing up all of these Youth Week programs, but it has been fun too. I know you enjoyed working on the programs as much as I enjoyed hearing about them. Keep the news coming in. We'll get me a secretary if more comes in than I can write.

Dr. Smith: (to small boy) "Son, can you tell me the way to Raleigh?"

Boy: "Nope."

Dr. Smith: "Which way is it to Durham?"

Boy: "I don't know."

Dr. Smith: "You don't know very much do you?"

Boy: "Nope. But I ain't lost."

We shouldn't laugh at a young boy who starts shaving before he has whiskers—his faith is well founded. Is yours?

FIRST CHURCH, NORFOLK.

The First Church in Norfolk has a newly organized Young Adult Fellowship. This group has an average attendance of over 25 for their Sunday evening meetings. They have an opening worship service and a period of Bible study, having completed a study of the parables. The group is now studying the great men of the Old Testament. After the program the young adults adjourned to the social room for refreshments and games. One of the men is organizing a "Corny" band, and the women are going to work on a "Welcome Wagon" for new people moving into Berkley.

him out on this road, out into his life work, the good man behind the great man, Barnabas, "son of consolation, of comfort, of encouragement." Back of the life and career of most of the world's biggest and best men, there is the inspiration of some humble unknown man or woman.

"Our Beloved Barnabas."

Barnabas and Paul did not always think alike. They had their differences. They disagreed over John Mark. They knew each others faults. But they still loved each other, and they worked together in a common cause with enthusiasm and consecration. No finer, more effective team are to be found anywhere along history's long road.

Toward the Salvation of
The Church Related College

By PRESIDENT SAMUEL N. STEVENS
 Grinnell College

... There are those who already have taken for granted that our church-related colleges will not survive. Many have assumed that they have played an historic role in higher education in the United States, but like so many social institutions and biological organisms they are no longer adapted to their environment, or are no longer necessary to the maintenance of a proper type of internal equilibrium in the environment. So the members of the President's Advisory Committee on Higher Education recognizes that these colleges have played a role in the past, but frankly envisages a diminishing function in the present and the ultimate disappearance of such institutions in the near future.

The definition which this Commission gives for the needs of higher education in American and the means which it recommends shall be employed to meet these needs clearly visualizes a completely secular government controlled program of higher education. They damn the work of these colleges with faint praise, view their disappearance with mild regret, and pass happily on to what they consider to be a better way of doing things. Let no one foolishly engage in wishful thinking.

... Until 1938 the number of students enrolled in privately endowed church-related colleges was greater than the numbers enrolled in secular and state or publicly supported institutions. The lines crossed in this critical year and the trend of separation in favor of the publicly supported institutions, while temporarily slowing down in 1949, 50 and 51, still continues.

The future of the tax supported institution is secure because the American people believe in education and have for the most part lost their critical judgement as to the purpose of education. The publicly supported institutions will continue to receive more and more adequate financial support. In the year 1942, the total amount of money expended for tax supported institutions of higher learning was $283,250,000, in contrast to the $291,000,000 spent by privately endowed institutions. By 1949, however, tax supported institutions were spending in excess of $350,000,000 a year, while privately endowed institutions had not yet met the $300,000,000 mark.

... We see, therefore, three great movements which are likely to bring about the progressive decline in privately endowed, (Please turn to page 13.)

GROUND BREAKING at TENTH LEGION Virginia Valley Conference

An event long awaited by the members of the more than a century old Bethlehem Congregational Christian congregation—the breaking of ground for a new brick edifice to be constructed on the same plot on the west side of the Valley Pike—attracted more than 100 persons on Sunday afternoon, February 17.

The new church, which will be built south of the present 107-year-old structure, will be modern in every respect and provide needed facilities for the enlarged program of the church. The old stone church will remain and be put to church use.

First Spadeful Turned.

After brief ceremonies, Stanley Lohr, chairman of the building committee, turned the first spadeful of earth. Mrs. J. S. Sellers followed as president of the Women's Aid Society, and Miss Nancy Williams and James Lohr, representing the young people. Other members also turned spades of earth.

The pastor, the Rev. Ralph Galt, presided over the service. There was an invocation by the Rev. D. S. Weiford, pastor of the New Market and Broadway Methodist Churches. Clarence A. Phillips read the report of the building committee, which was completed after months of study. The Rev. J. S. Roller, of the Fairview Church of the Brethren, gave a brief history of the Tenth Legion Community.

R. B. Dofflemyer, of Elkton, president of the Virginia Valley Central Conference, brought greetings.

The Rev. R. A. Whitten, of Winchester, a former president, said he knew the ground-breaking had been looked forward to for years by members of the growing congregation. This congregation in its 107 years has been firm and constant, he stated.

He pointed to the need of expanded quarters to meet the larger program of the church and said he is sure the new edifice will be used for the high Christian purposes which have always marked the services in the old, but now outgrown stone church. Rev. Mr. Whitten spoke of yesterday, today and tomorrow and predicted it might not be too many years until the congregation will have to have an even larger church than the one now planned.

The new church will follow the lines of the Genoa Church of the Brethren built in 1950 by Tom Good, a member of the Bethlehem congregation. Roy Good will be the contractor.

DR. STAFFORD IS DENOMINATION-AL SPEAKER AT PORTSMOUTH.

It is a custom of many years standing to have a week of interdenominational preaching services during each year at Portsmouth, Virginia. Our denomination was responsible for the guest preacher this year.

On Sunday afternoon, January 27, at three o'clock the people of the churches gathered at Monumental Methodist Church, to hear the opening message.

Dr. Stafford, who is president of Hartford Theological Seminary Foundation, had spoken at the Inspirational services 16 years ago.

Rev. Stanley Carne, pastor of our First Church, Portsmouth, introduced the speaker by saying that Charles R. Brown in his introduction to "The Romance of Preaching," spoke of Sylvester Horne's high service, in visiting, Yale, Toronto and sundry other places, bring vision and inspiration to numerous theological students, ministers and people of the church in general. In this same fashion Dr. Stafford came to us and there should be no question but he would inspire and bless many.

The messages Dr. Stafford brought were entitled, "The Ten Great Affirmations of the Apostles Creed." The ministers of our city greatly enjoyed the messages and the people made a good ready response. The attendance was a good average. We regretted to have Dr. Stafford leave us.

We shall anticipate seeing these in book form, before many months pass.

In Observance of Lent . . .

LENT FOR PROTESTANTS.

By REV. DUANE N. VORE.

The word Lent has little meaning to most of us. Many of us see no necessity for the setting apart of forty days to provide a special period for emphasis on spiritual life.

We are inclined to think that Lent is important only to those of the Roman Catholic Church or to a liturgical church. We are inclined to treat the matter lightly, often making fun of the sacrifice some Christians make in this particular period. I admit that most of that sacrifice is superficial and almost meaningless but there is much to be said for the observance of Lent.

Suppose Jesus had taken lightly his responsibilities in those days wherein he set his face to go to Jerusalem. It says he set his face steadfastly, tried to speak more clearly, live with more love, serve with greater effectiveness than he had done in the remainder of his ministry. If it seemed good to him to put a special emphasis on the practice of his faith then it follows that you and I need to take time at least once a year to put special emphasis on ours.

That emphasis ought to be in these areas of our faith: (1) The practice of prayer should be more intense and of a wider scope than we usually give it. Confession and intercession for others ought to take more of our thought. (2) The study of our Master, his word, his teaching, his life ought to concern us more deeply than is usually the case. Not just what we want to hear but as much as we are able to grasp. Study is required of course; personal study with time set aside each day that we may learn more of our Christ. (3) Regular attendance at services of worship that we may express openly our faith. Regular attendance, not because of the preacher and what he says but because of our responsibility to serve God through adoration and praise in company with men of like mind.

These three are just the beginning but their practice by each of us would mark a tremendous difference in the life and the power of the church. Will you join with those who endeavor to make the forty days before Easter a time of soul searching and rededication?

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Small, church-related colleges are capable of doing some unusually fine things. "Operation Bottles," inaugurated at a small Lutheran College, is a case in point. No college or university has a monopoly on education. The children of light should be wiser than the children of darkness. The exigencies of our age call for new devices, new techniques to implement good will. We salute the denomination school and look to such for new manifestations of the creative mind and spirit. "Be not overcome with evil," exhorted ..... , "but overcome evil with good."

Do you ever hear it said that the church is costing too much? Apparently, few people care if pleasure costs too much. We have some rather substantial churches in Virginia. Read the church statistics, then read the statistics given by Wayne W. Womer. Is the church really spending too much or not enough? Mr. Womer does not give the statistics for North Carolina, but one many safely surmise that this state has its disturbing quota of alcoholics.

---

There are new manifestations of life among our churches in every conference. In this issue we turn the spotlight of attention on the Virginia Valley Conference. Here one of our many Bethlehem Churches inaugurates a program of construction and expansion. We shall watch with interest the development of this project. As in other instances, one church may set the example for another. We confidently expect other churches in the Valley Conference to follow suit.

Opportunities in Church Vocations

It is at the very point of church vocations that we have failed to be good salesmen, good promoters of our own cause. The general public is woefully ignorant of ecclesiastical and semi-ecclesiastical vocations. Young people need to be confronted with the variety of opportunities to invest their talent. Leaders need assistance in their effort to make the proper presentation of Christian vocations. We look to high schools and church-related colleges, as well as to the churches, for calculated presentation of vocational opportunities. Fortunately, those who are interested in this ever-present question do not need to look in vain for competent guidance.

A comprehensive chart of church vocations is to be one feature of the March 1952 issue of the International Journal of Religious Education. Compiled by John Oliver Nelson of Yale University Divinity School, this chart will cover some 48 categories of non-professional vocations within the church, as well as those calling for ordination.

In addition to this listing of the many opportunities available, the special issue on Church Vocations will feature articles by Vere V. Loper, Moderator of the Congregational Christian Churches, Roger Fredrickson of Ottawa College, Ottawa, Kansas; President Clyde A. Milner of Guilford College, North Carolina; Richard Belcher of the Methodist Inter-Board Committee on Christian Vocation; and others.

Articles will consider in detail the "why, who and how" of presenting church vocations to young people, and are planned to help youth workers, counsellors, seminary and college teachers, ministers and local church workers in guiding young people to consider vocations within the church.

Single copies of this special issue are 25c. Quantity prices are available on request. Send orders and inquiries to the International Journal offices, National Council of Churches, 79 East Adams Street, Chicago 3, Illinois.

How Many Alcoholics in Virginia?

How Many People Drink? How Much Do They Drink?

By WAYNE W. WOMER, Executive Secretary
Virginia Church Temperance Council

The Alcohol Beverage Control Board in its annual report for the year ending June 30, 1951, reports that the citizens of Virginia spent $168,145,719.81 for all alcoholic beverages. That the per capita expenditure was $50.67; that the average Virginian drank 11.13 gallons of beer, 1.64 gallons of spiritous liquors and .64 gallons of wine—or a total of a little more than 13 gallons of all alcoholic beverages per person. While these figures are correct they do not give a realistic picture of the use of alcoholic beverages in Virginia.

How many people in Virginia drink? The population of Virginia is about 3,318,000 people, but all these people do not use alcoholic beverages. We can assume that children or young people do very little drinking, if any. Therefore, we must consider the adult population of our State, which is approximately 2,212,000 people. But again we must state that all adults do not use alcoholic beverages. Taking into consideration the percentage of our adult population who use alcoholic beverages and applying this percentage to the adult population of Virginia, making allowances for the racial background of our people, their religious affiliation, and the rural character of our State, we then have about 1,327,200 adults in Virginia who use alcoholic beverages to a widely varying degree.

This means then, that 1,327,200 people last year spent $168,145,719.81 for all alcoholic beverages; this was a per capita expenditure of approximately $127.00—and that the per capita consumption of all alcoholic beverages was about 32 gallons, or 3.10 gallons of spiritous liquors, 27.82 gallons of beer, and 1.60 gallons of wine as against the $50.67 per capita expenditure for all alcoholic beverages, based on the entire population, and the 11.13 gallons of all alcoholic beverages per capita as reported by the Alcohol Beverage Control Board. These figures then of $127.00 per capita expenditure, and 32 gallons per capita consumption, based on the drinking population of Virginia, gives us a much more meaningful and realistic picture of the use of alcoholic beverages in Virginia.

The per capita income in Virginia for 1950 was $1,158; this means that the average person in Virginia who uses alcoholic beverages spent 11 per cent of his income for strong drink. These figures are of course based on legal liquor. In a feature article in the Red Book Magazine for December, 1951, it stated that the total capacity of illegal stills as calculated by the Licensed Beverages Industries was exceeding the legal daily production by 199,193 gallons per day. So we can assume, of course, that the amount of alcoholic beverages consumed throughout the State is much higher than the figures reported by the Alcohol Beverage Control Board.

How Many Alcoholics?

How many alcoholics are there in Virginia? Applying the formula that is used to determine the number of alcoholics in our population throughout the nation, and also again taking into consideration the racial, religious and rural characteristics of our population we find that there are about 88,480 alcoholics in Virginia. The Detroit Free Press recently stated that Detroit has 86,000 problem drinkers out of a population of 1,849,568; so that the figure of 88,480 alcoholics for Virginia out of an adult population of 2,212,000 would seem accurate. Also, we find that there are approximately 55,300 excessive drinkers in Virginia, that is people who frequently become drunk or drink heavily, but who cannot be classed as fullfledged alcoholics. Thus, the number of people in our State that can be classified as alcoholics and excessive drinkers, total 143,780. During the year end-

RED FLAG FOR DANGER

CALLED TO BE SAINTS.

By REV. R. L. JACKSON.

During these first weeks we are exploring together the general topic, "The Task of the Church in the Present Age." Today I would like to call your attention to a fundamental job of the church if we are to remain true to our calling. It is a job which is not always favorably viewed either by ourselves or by our contemporaries. It is the duty of the church, to us the words of Paul, to call men and women to be saints.

I can almost hear some of you saying—"What a subject for a sermon in these modern times—in this enlightened age! Who wants to be a stuffy, uninteresting, inhibited old saint? We reserve the term for dead people or some rare individual who doesn't seem to belong to any age."

I have heard it said that the theme song for today might be the title of a popular ballad of a few years ago—"Doing What Comes Naturally." Nobody denies himself anymore. Self-discipline is old-fashioned. Just be natural. Follow your instincts. Don't repress yourself. Morality changes as do fashions in women's hats. Who in this modern world, would want to be a saint?

Yet, Paul—writing to the Corinthian Church and later to the Romans—says, "You (meaning all Christians) are called to be saints." As Christians we must reexamine this whole viewpoint. Perhaps the thing we need is a new definition of what a saint is.

The Christian Church has for 2,000 years appealed to people on the basis of the power of changed lives. Henry Ward Beecher said, "Christianity did not succeed in the beginning by the force of its doctrines but by the lives of its disciples. It was the beauty of the Christian life that overcame pagan philosophies and won the way for Christian doctrine."

The preaching of the gospel is a judgement on the world and speaks a cutting word to any age. But—unless the church does more than talk and preach—we are doomed. To win people in this skeptical age requires that there must be a demonstration of the New Life. The word must again be made flesh. In a perishing world, when people look to us and say, "What is God's word? Do you have the answer which can save us?" we have to do more than talk. That's why the church is an essential part of the Christian witness. We can have no Christianity without the church because we must have a demonstration of what the gospel can do.

Do you understand the full implications of Paul's words, "You are called to be saints"? He means that every one who calls himself a Christian has a responsibility to demonstrate in his personal life the gospel of Jesus Christ. The chief aim of our fellowship is not to get money—or to get power—or even to reform the world—it is to create saints out of our common clay. Several years ago you may have read the book "A Generation of Vipers" written by a professing atheist. He analyzes the evils of the world—and makes quite a penetrating analysis. He states in the concluding chapter, "The only solution to making this a better world is to have better people in it." He's not so far off the track after all. Only people of character can be trusted to make this a better world—and that's where the church comes in. Our job is to create character—or in other words to create saints.

Dr. E. Stanley Jones was pleading with a group of young people in India. "I wish you would stand up and tell me, if you will, why you are not Christians. Why will you not become Christians? What do you think of Christ? Why will you not follow him?" Then one young Indian answered, "Your Christ is wonderful, but you Christians are not like him."

A modern writer says that one of the reasons modern man has a sense of disappointment with the church and is content to drift along outside is because the church hasn't produced saints. Many thoughtful people today have the feeling that the church is like a lodge or a club. They keep thinking that if Christianity is what the preachers keep telling them it is, it ought to make a difference in the lives of those who profess it. Yet, they fail to notice that difference. Like everything else, the church has got to produce or die. If we do not have within the church the power to change people—we have no real reason for existing any longer.

Perhaps part of the blame is to be found in our ministry. It can be that our lives are not saintly enough. It can be that the gospel we preach is so watered down, so innocuous that our laymen feel no challenge. Perhaps we are prone to listen to those in the congregation who, like the people in Israel's time, say, "Speak to us of smooth things." Every once in a while when I find it necessary to correct my son, I speak quite sternly to him. Often he answers, "Daddy, don't talk so hard to me." Maybe we ought to talk "harder" in our sermons. Is this the time for a revival of hell and damnation and fire and brimstone sermons?

This "doing what comes naturally" generation, in which we live, has rebelled against the use of the word "sin." Not long ago when a minister had spoken strongly against sin, one of his members said, "We don't want you to talk as plainly as you do about sin because if our boys and girls hear you talking so much about sin, they will more easily become sinners. Call it a mistake if you will, but don't use the word 'sin.'"

The minister went to his medicine cabinet and brought back a small bottle of strychnine marked "Poison." He said; "I see what you want me to do. You want me to change the label. Suppose I take off this label 'poison' and put on some mild label 'Essence of Peppermint.' Do you see what would happen. The milder you make the label, the more dangerous you make the poison."

I don't know how you interpret the story of Adam and Eve—whether you attribute it to legend or consider it an historic fact. Whatever interpretation we put on it, we can't escape the basic religious truth that there is such a thing as sin in the world. It is deeply ingrained in human nature—and will remain there so long as our hearts are not subject to the Will of God. Calling sin by some name as a mistake, or lesser evil—isn't going to change the facts.

Nor can we change the laws of God by pointing out that everybody is doing it. There are those who think that if we take a census and prove that 51 per cent of the population is doing it—then it's alright. Right is right, if nobody is right; and wrong is wrong, if everybody is wrong.

Now let's look at this question: what is a saint? First, it may help us to see what a saint is not. Dean Inge says "We are losing our Christianity because Christianity is meant ## BETTER STUDENTS FOR ELON COLLEGE.

High school seniors are at present engaged in the very pleasant task of selecting their colleges. It would be interesting to know the criteria by which they make selections. There are large colleges and small colleges, co-educational colleges, colleges for women and colleges for men. All accredited colleges are good colleges with inclusive curriculums. From these curriculums the students are at liberty to make a limited number of selections, but for the Bachelor of Arts degree there are certain prescribed subjects. Credits must be earned in these subjects before the degree is awarded.

The colleges of our immediate section fall into two distinct classes—state or tax-supported colleges and church-related or privately endowed colleges. As a rule the state colleges do not offer constructive instruction in church problems or religious opportunities. The spiritual life of the student is necessarily neglected. Religious emphasis programs on such campuses make a nominal contribution but offer very little if any permanent benefit. The church college has a definite constructive program of religion that carries with it college credits. Such courses are offered not only for credits but for religious advantages and spiritual enrichment. The church college is conscious not only of its responsibility but of its opportunity in making a contribution to the whole of life and thereby fitting the student for his maximum contribution to society.

The church school requires consideration and selection. Which church school will the student attend? The high school seniors of the Congregational Christian Church should have no particular difficulty in selecting their college. Elon College is our own church school. It was established for the particular benefit of the young people of the homes of our church. Elon College is always delighted to have students from other denominations, but it does lay definite claim to its own young people. The church has made large investments to offer as good opportunities in higher education as any other college. It endeavors at all times to see that the proper influences prevail on its campus and is anxious to have young people of our church take advantage of the facilities that have been provided and the opportunities that are offered. This is the time, my young friends, to reach a conclusion and select your college. We trust that Elon College will be your choice. Students and faculty will be glad to welcome you and offer to you every possible consideration as you enter. Your application should be received at the earliest possible date.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

There is only one more week remaining in the college period, January and February. I trust that valuable information concerning the college has been given to our Sunday schools and church congregations. As our people know something of the details of the college, their interest will increase. As their interest increases, their support for the college will increase.

The college period is not primarily for the collection of money for the college, but even so, contributions are expected and appreciated. All contributions sent to the Convention Office to be credited on college apportionments are promptly transferred to the college treasury. Contributions on college apportionments are slightly more than a year ago as of this date. Contributions during the winter and spring months mean a very great deal to the college.

PROMINENT CHURCHMAN PASSES.

THE SUN records with deep regret and sympathy the death of a beloved churchman. Jacob Allen Kimball, 84, died on Saturday, February 23 at his home near Drewry, in Warren County. He was a native of Warren County and was born March 13, 1867. He had lived his entire life in the community where he died.

He was a son of the late James Allen Kimball and Mary Watkins Kimball, and devoted his entire active career to farming. For many years he was a trustee of Elon College, and had been a member of Mount Auburn Congregational Christian Church from childhood. He was for 43 years superintendent of the church's Sunday school and for decades was a member of the board of deacons of the church.

Mr. Kimball and his brother, the late W. W. Kimball, lived together in the same home and there reared their large families.

He is survived by his wife, the former Ruth Morris; three daughters, Mrs. L. E. Milling of Big Spring, Texas; Mrs. W. Boyd Mayfield of Norlina; and Mrs. W. J. Tanner of Palmer Springs, Va.; and two sons, J. Allen Kimball of the home, and the Rev. Robert M. Kimball of Ashtabula, Ohio.

Funeral services were held at Mount Auburn Church on Sunday, February 24 at 3 p. m., conducted by the pastor, the Rev. William Rich, and the Rev. E. M. Carter of Youngsville, a former pastor. Burial followed in the church cemetery.

ALABAMA HAS TRAINING SCHOOL.

Churches in the Chattahoochee Valley of Alabama are making an effort to provide trained leadership for church work through providing Leadership Training Schools.

The second annual Standard Leadership School of Second Series courses was conducted in the Lanett Church, January 27 through February 1. The school is sponsored by the five Valley churches, Bethel Church, West Point, Ga.; Highway Church, Hughley, Ala.; Langdale, Ala. Church; Lanett, Ala., Church; Todd Church, Shawmut, Ala.

THANKS TO MRS. SPRATLEY.

Every few days within recent weeks I have received a letter containing an article for this page of THE SUN which has begun thus: "Mrs. Spratley, our Eastern Virginia president, has asked me to send you. . . ."

And so we have been having interesting and informative articles from the various superintendents and chairmen of standing committees in the Eastern Virginia Conference. I for one greatly appreciate this effort on the part of Mrs. Spratley to see that material has reached this page from the leaders in her conference. I am hoping that by the time she gets around once, it will be time for her to remind them again and we will continue to have these fine articles for publication!

On second thought, she may start next on district superintendents, urging them to get societies in their district to send in items of current interest. That would be extra fine!

(I must admit that it is especially gracious of Mrs. Spratley to do this when Mrs. Luther Williams, the secretary of her local society wrote me recently that an article they sent in in September had never been published! The article has been resurrected and is printed below with apologies. . . . My only excuse is that about that time of year I am deluged with reports from everybody and have to lay some aside, and then newer reports begin coming in and some got mislaid. Let's keep our reports coming in often, in brief form, about current happenings!)

BELATED NEWS FROM DENDRON.

The Missionary Society of the Dendron Congregational Christian Church has had a very successful year, in spite of much sickness among our group.

We have had meetings each month; using the plan books and material from the packet. The devotional period of our meetings is well prepared and serves as a source of strength and inspiration.

We observed Community Day, held a special Thanksgiving service, making a liberal offering, observed World Day of Prayer in cooperation with the other churches in town.

May Fellowship Day was observed with other denominations with a covered dish luncheon and speaker.

In March we had the pleasure of being host to the spring meeting of the Waverly District, at which time we had as speakers Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Mrs. McClintock and Rev. Richard Jackson.

At this meeting a plan of visitation or exchange of programs was adopted. Our society will take a program to Bethlehem September 9 and the Hopewell Church will bring us a program in the near future.

A Week of Prayer was held, when we studied Great Prayers of the Bible.

We have had one Home and one Foreign Mission study book, the foreign book was reviewed by Miss Margaret Blemker at the Mission Study Institute held at the Wakefield Church.

Our Friendly Service department has been very active, we sent a donation to Franklinton College, and have remembered many sick and shut-ins with fruit, flowers and cards.

Our society was deeply saddened at the passing of one of our charter members, Mrs. Waverly S. Barrett, for whom our society has given a memorial.

We trust we may be able to achieve greater things in the approaching year; through him who is the source of all power, helping to build his Kingdom in the hearts and lives of others.

Mrs. LUTHER WILLIAMS,
Secretary.

MISSION STUDY AT FRANKLIN.

More than 200 women—and three men—from churches in the Suffolk District gathered at Franklin Congregational Christian Church on Friday evening, February 8, for a review of "We Americans: North and South," the adult foreign mission study book for this year. The reviewer was the editor of this page.

Mrs. E. Philip Jones, program chairman of the Franklin society, planned a full evening's program, with Mrs. J. Felton Johnson presiding, a candle-lighting worship service, and a reception following the book review in the parlor of the new addition to the Franklin Church.

The Franklin society was delighted at the churches which accepted their invitation for the evening of worship, study, and fellowship. Societies having representatives were: Antioch, Eure, Holland, Holy Neck, Dendron, Cypress Chapel, Windsor, Mt. Carmel, Suffolk, Johnson's Grove, Union-Hunterdale, Bethlehem, and perhaps others whose names I do not now recall. Bethlehem with 32 per cent led the list of visitors, although Holland with 24 figured their percentage was as good if not better!

If those who listened enjoyed themselves as much as the reviewer did, a good time was had by all!

JUNIORS ORGANIZED AT HIGH POINT.

Dear Mrs. Lester:

You ask that we send in reports of our societies' activities from time to time, and I take it for granted that you do not always expect spectacular reports—just like to know if we are still on the job. Well, we can tell you that all right, and that we are having some very enthusiastic meetings with new plans being presented for this year's work. At our January meeting we added three new members to our number.

A Junior Society has recently been organized, and we hope for it to mean much to our children, and hence to the High Point Church. We are using the book "The Children Downstairs," as recommended by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, and also "The Map of South America," with very good results.

Our need for an organized group of our children has been evident for a long time, and we are happy to have this to report at this time. We hope to be sending you further reports concerning the Junior Missionary Society of the High Point Church.

Mrs. B. P. MOFFITT.

A YEARLY PROGRAM FOR VISUAL EDUCATION.

As church women we have learned that planning program material for a year is planning at its best since it requires a long range view of the entire mission program. Even so, if we are to derive the greatest benefit from visual education, we must use long range planning.

Effective use of audio-visual resources for all ages and groups necessitates its correlation with the total planning of the church.

A practical procedure, which is being followed with much success, is executed as follows: The Visual Aid Committee is composed of one representative from each age group of the Sunday school and each major organization of the church to collaborate with the pastor in arranging a calendar of activities and report regularly to the church conference.

Its responsibilities are:

1. To become well informed in the field. (A study course book which has been accepted by churches of all faiths is "Using Visual Aids in a Church," by Earl Waldrup, Visual Education Service, Nashville, Tenn. Also consult Rev. Alex B. Ferguson, 287 Fourth Ave., New York 10.)

2. To be familiar with catalogue resources. (Consult Rev. Ferguson.)

3. To find to what extent audio-visual resources are being used in the entire church program.

4. To decide upon room changes to be made and equipment to be purchased.

5. To train an adequate number of operators. (There should be two or more from each group twelve years of age and older.)

6. To be responsible for the care and scheduling of the use of equipment.

7. To be responsible for training classes or workshops for teachers and leaders. (This may be done by a guest teacher; as a course in the Leadership Training School; or by a member prepared for the task.)

8. To recommend a budget. (A few dollars wisely spent every year will build up an adequate library of slides and filmstrips. By planning your programs in advance, by setting up a film rental budget, and by selecting films that can be used in your church more than one time on the same day, Cathedral Films has an Economy Plan for you.)

Don't miss seeing:

A Wonderful Life—available rent-free at the Southern Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

Again, Pioneers—depicts a migrant family and the transforming power of the Christian gospel. 16mm Sound 68 minutes. Rental—$12.00

Out of the Dust—reveals the high drama of mission service in Latin America. 16mm Sound 45 minutes. Rental—$10.00.

(The two last-named pictures can be ordered from Rev. A. B. Ferguson, or from the Tidewater Audio-Visual Center, 617 W. 35 Street, Norfolk, Va.)

A packet of audio-visual literature will be sent upon request to the president of each local society who failed to get one at the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference last October.

If I can be of further assistance, please let me hear from you.

Mrs. A. C. MOORE, Chairman,

CALLED TO BE SAINTS.

to be a creed for heroes while we are mainly harmless, good natured people who want everybody to have a good time." Saints are not harmless, colorless nonentities who are largely unaware of what is going on in this cold, realistic world.

Nor are saints hard-headed, cantankerous people who tenaciously cling to the "right doctrine." A couplet some time ago in the Atlantic Monthly describes such people thus:

To live with the saints in heaven is bliss and glory

To live with them on earth—is often another story.

The best definition of a saint that I know is this, "Saints are persons who make it easier to believe in God." If we use that definition it will rule out all stuffiness, all piety, all insincerity. Once when a little French boy was asked to define a saint, all he could think of was the figures in the stained glass windows in the church, so he replied, "A saint is a man the light shines through." Isn't that as good as any definition we can give? When someone is so consecrated to doing the Will of God, the light of Christ does shine through his life—for all to see.

Woodrow Wilson once said, "Where there is fire, thither will men carry their lights to be lighted." If we, as Christians, really have the divine spark within us—if our wills are subservient to Jesus Christ, even though we may not know it and will come to us for inspiration and help.

We are called to be saints. One test of sainthood which we Christians can ill afford to neglect is a rather obvious fact that a saint is primarily a person with a loving heart. That does not call for passive weak-mindedness. The real saints were fighters and tenacious in their loyalty. Someone said "A saint is canonized when he is alive and canonized after he is dead." A loving heart does call for a consideration of other people. We can be sure we are moving in the right direction not only when we have learned to bear no grudges against anyone—but when we can put up with unlovely people and find sympathy for obstreperous men and women with whom we have to live and work everyday. We are beginning to be saintly when we begin to see the virtues in people which are often hidden by their imperfections.

If God has called us to be saints—some of you probably wonder "How can we ordinary mortals attain it?" An old negro once prayed, "O God, help me to understand that you ain't goin' to let nothin come my way that you and me together can't handle." The God who has called us to sainthood—he also has provided the way.

In one of Lloyd Douglas's books Christ says to Zacchaeus, "Zacchaeus, what did you see that made you desire this change in doing of your life." Slowly the answer came, "Good Master, I saw mirrored in your eyes the face of the Zacchaeus I was meant to be."

No-one who has looked deeply into the eyes of our Master and who has committed oneself to him, will ever be the same again. The way, and the only way I know for us mortals to live the saintly life—is to walk hand in hand with him. Coming to church regularly is good—and necessary—but it's not enough. Saying our prayers regularly is important—but it doesn't make us into saints. Only one whose heart is committed utterly to the Will of Christ—every hour of his life—can achieve the sainthood to which we are called.

Dr. Leslie Weatherhood tells the story of an old Scotsman who, when he was very ill, was visited by his minister. As the minister sat down on a chair near the bedside, he noticed on the other side of the bed another chair placed at such an angle as to suggest that a visitor had just left it. "Well, Donald," said the minister glancing at the chair, "I see I am not your first visitor." The Scotsman looked up in surprise, so the minister pointed at the chair. "Ah" said the sick man, "I'll tell you about the chair."

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Tomorrow is the first Friday in Lent. It is the day when mothers, grandmothers, aunts, cousins and friends go to church for the World Day of Prayer.

It is also the 29 of February—that extra Leap Year day. Why do we have Leap Year? We need it to keep our calendar in line. We say that it takes a year for the earth to travel around the sun, that is 365 days and a little more. Suppose we ignored the “little extra” and kept on having just 365 years, well, things would get mixed up. Someone has said that we would be two weeks late for school vacation (that would be bad!) and that in a hundred years or so Christmas would come in July (that would be even worse!) Instead of letting these mix-ups happen, we adjust our calendar every four years with an extra day.

Time, calendars and the planets make an interesting study. If you can go to the Planetarium at Chapel Hill you may see how the stars looked in the sky several centuries ago. Or you may go at a time when they are showing how the skies will look two hundred years from now. You can see a circular room with the solar system on the ceiling and see the planets traveling on a track. It will help you understand the sizes and nearness of the sun, earth, moon. Long ago, men often told time and judged events by the stars.

We have had several calendars. One was called the “Julian Calendar” because it was first begun and used during the days of Julius Caesar, ruler of the ancient Romans. During the days of Pope Gregory, XIII, also of Rome, two learned Italians: Lilius and Calvius, worked out a better system—the one we know, and it got the name “Gregorian Calendar.”

When the new calendar was put into effect it was the month of October. A very startling thing happened with the new system which was quite different from the old calendar. The people went to bed on the night of October 4 and when they got up the next morning it was October 15. Such a long rest as they had!

There are some people who don't like our calendar and wish we could have a better or different method of counting the days. The Jewish people go by our calendar but also have their own system of counting the years and their new year begins in the fall. No matter what system we use or how we count the days, the important thing is to make the most of them, for every day gone is lost forever.

RADIO PRIZE.

By IRMA DOVEY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

“Mother! Mother!” John and Mary Ann called as they came into the house. “We're going to sing on the radio.”

“Yes, and maybe we'll get a prize,” added Mary Ann.

“Now sit down and tell me about it,” said Mother.

“A man came to school—there is to be a contest—and here's a paper that explains everything.”

“But how do you know they will let you sing?” asked Mother after scanning the paper.

“Why, he wrote down our names,” John insisted.

“We have to go down Saturday and try first,” said Mary Ann. “Just sing in his office, he said.”

Mother did not seem quite as happy as they would have liked. John began to feel disappointed. “Don't you want us to sing on the radio?” he asked.

“Yes, of course, dear, if you want to,” Mother answered. “But I wouldn't count on it too much until you have been tested on Saturday. Are you sure you can ‘take it’ if you don't win?”

“Oh, sure,” “I guess so,” the girl and boy responded in turn.

“We must write to Grandmother if you do get on the program. She will want to listen,” said Mother.

Saturday morning came and John and Mary Ann were the first two children in the radio studio. They had to wait for what seemed like hours and hours. “I wish they'd hurry, don't you?” Mary Ann whispered to John.

Finally the time came. A man took them into a small room where a woman played the piano for them. They tried three songs, singing just a little part of each one. Then they were told to go and to come back next Saturday. They ran most of the way home and went dashing into the house.

“We do. We're really going to sing!” Such a noise as they made in telling it!

“Good!” said Mother, and John thought she looked a little proud.

“When we get the money I'm going to buy roller skates with my share,” Mary Ann declared.

“I'm going to save mine to help buy my bicycle,” said John.

It seemed that the week would never end. School was only a waiting time. At last Saturday morning came. Mother went with the children. Other parents were at the studio, too. It was almost like a big program in the auditorium at school.

“You won't mind too much if you don't win?” Mother asked, looking hard at them with pleading eyes.

“Oh, that'll be all right. Maybe we won't,” responded John. But in his heart he was already spending the prize money. Singing before the microphone was really not much different from singing duets at school. He and Mary Ann had done that lots of times, and at piano recitals they had played together.

But when they heard the boy who whistled a beautiful solo, just before them, and when, later, they heard a girl's fine piano solo, they both began to wonder. The prize? Well, maybe they wouldn't win it. It could be. It could happen to them.

There was one place at the beginning of the song where their voices did not sound right to them. They sang out, and it was just like always. They were tired and excited as they sat down. After a long time of listening to other contestants, the announcer said, “Now you are waiting to hear the names of the prize winners. They are Billy Lee and Jacquelyn Masterson!”

That was the piano duo. Oh, dear. Mary Ann wanted to cry. But she just wouldn't. She and John were not the best. They hadn't won. She caught Mother smiling at her and looking very proud. She held her head up and pushed back the tears.

As soon as they reached home the telephone rang. It was Grandmother calling all the way from Chicago. “Let me talk to Mary Ann, and to John.” “I heard you sing,” said Grandmother. “You were fine.”

Youth at Work in the Church

MAX VESTAL, Box 792, Elon College, N. C.

FORT BERTHOLD WORK CAMP.

A Congregational Christian Work Camp is to be held at Forth Berthold Indian Reservation, Elbowoods, North Dakota, July 5 to August 16, 1952.

There is a great social crisis on the reservation where our Congregational Christian work is located, due to the removal of 2,200 Indian Americans to a new area to make way for the Garrison Dam on the Missouri River. This task of moving the people and re-establishing their church life is of paramount importance in 1952. The particular job in which young people can serve is to assist in moving a house to the Southern Sector. The work campers will prepare the site, and work in re-locating the parsonage and church for this area. The moving of these buildings must be accomplished in 1952.

Work Campers will also serve in the communities nearby, especially assisting in the pilgrim fellowship program of the churches. There will be both manual and non-manual work in this group. There will be ample opportunity for study and investigation of the situation on the reservation, to see the work of the churches in the area, and to serve in a situation which needs Christian help and leadership.

Who: Young people, active in Congregational Christian Churches, 18 to 25 years of age, who are interested and willing to work with their hands, live simply, share in the group life of the camp, and to render service to the churches and communities on the reservation. There will be several Indian young people, other members of the North Dakota pilgrim fellowship, foreign students, and young people from other areas of the United States—a total of 20 campers.

Campers should have a willingness to work with their hands, good racial attitudes, interest in, and some experience with, Christian youth programs, capacity for good community relationships and helpfulness to the churches.

The Project: Work will continue on the project five days a week with time allotted for discussions, individual and group study, worship, recreation, and personal needs. Week-ends will be a time of special service to the churches in the area, assisting in the youth program, visiting in homes, and general church and community service.

The Cost: Total $43 ($40 for board and $3 for insurance). Each camper provides his own transportation to and from Fort Berthold. A travel pool among work campers is a possibility. Campers will live in the Mission House at Elbowoods and travel to the work project daily.

Leadership: The committee is making arrangements for a young couple with experience in leading work camps and youth projects to be the leaders and counselors in the camp.

Application: For information or application write to Henry R. Rust, Young People's Department, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Massachusetts. An application blank will be forwarded to each applicant. The fee of $43 is payable upon acceptance as a work camper.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE.

A group of Congregational Christian girls from Woman's College spent an afternoon recently working on the new church being erected by the people of the First Church of Greensboro. These girls did physical labor, helping the workman with the inside finishing. They enjoyed doing their part toward building this house of worship, which will probably be in use by the first of June.

RELAX WITH MAX.

He couldn't speak before a crowd;
He couldn't teach a class;
But when he came to Sunday school
He brought the folks "in masses."

He couldn't sing to save his life;
In public—couldn't pray;
But always his "jalopy" was Just crammed on each Lord's Day.

And though he couldn't sing, or teach,
Nor even lead in prayer. . . .
He listened well; he had a smile. . . .
And he was always there.

With all the others whom he brought
Who lived both near and far. . . .
And God's work was greatly prospered
For he had a consecrated car.

WINCHESTER YOUNG PEOPLE OBSERVE YOUTH WEEK.

The young people observed Youth Week by taking charge of the 5 o'clock vesper service, January 27. The theme for the service was "A Lamp Unto My Feet." The church is buying 25 new Bibles in order that each teen-ager might have a Book in his or her hands as we become more familiar with it.

Following the meeting of January 27, the pilgrim fellowshippers invited their adult friends to bring their own sandwiches and have supper with them in the social hall. The young people furnished the drink and cookies. Three of the boys even made a cake. They served buffet-style, and the food was abundant. Between 50 and 60 people enjoyed the fellowship that marked the beginning of Youth Week with us. Following the meal there were games and music which everybody enjoyed.

Many of the youth took part in the vesper service. Mary Ruth Whitten played the organ; Montie Conner led the call to worship. The ushers were David Robertson, Allen Shirley, Raymond McMullen, and Wayne Kess. The pilgrim fellowshippers choir sang "Open My Eyes." "The Holy Scriptures," a responsive reading was led by Billie Casilear, after which poems on the Bible were read by Janet Hawkins, Shelby Lawyer, and Virginia May Clark. Another responsive reading was led by Shirley Boyd. Phyllis Lawyer told the story of "Testaments That Went to War." Juanita and Dorothy Daugherty sang "More Like the Master." The service was concluded with questions and answers from the

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

PAUL, A PRISONER FOR CHRIST.

LESSON X—MARCH 9, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: One thing I do, forgetting what lies behind and straining forward to what lies ahead, I press on toward the goal for the prize of the upward calling of God in Christ Jesus.—Philippians 3:13-14.

LESSON: Philippians 3:4b-17.

DEVOTIONAL READING: I Corinthians 3:9-17.

Two things ought to be said before giving an exposition of this lesson. First of all, Paul was in prison, he was a prisoner for Christ, because he was a prisoner of Christ. He loved Christ so much, he obeyed him so completely, that they put him in prison, not because he had done anything bad or wrong, but because he insisted on doing what he felt Christ would have him do.

In the second place, Paul is writing this letter from prison to warn his Philippian converts and friends against the false teachers, known as "Judaizers." These Judaizers were insisting that old Jewish rites and forms and ceremonies be observed, and observed as a means of salvation. Paul does not condemn these Jewish rites as such, he simply says that they are not necessary to a man's salvation. A man is saved not by rites and ceremonies, and not by works, but by faith in Jesus Christ, faith in the sense of personal trust and commitment to Christ as Saviour.

Confidence in the Flesh.

Like the Judaizers of long ago, there are those who "have confidence in the flesh." People depend on birth or social distinction or education, or good works for salvation. If there ever lived a man who should have had confidence "in the flesh" it was Paul. He was born a Jew, a descendant of Jacob, from the tribe of Benjamin—the only tribal leader born in the Promised Land, and he was initiated into the Jewish faith by the ancient rite of circumcision, which admitted him among the covenanted people of God. He was a Pharisee, the strictest of Jewish sects, and he had kept the law as concerning rites and ceremonies. Furthermore he had shown unusual zeal as a "son of the law" by persecuting the church. "You boast about your Jewish background, you talk a great deal about keeping the ancient rituals and ceremonies of the Jewish faith," says Paul. "Well if any man alive has a right to talk about that, I do. But brothers, they don't mean a thing. I know what I am talking about. I had all those things. But when I found Christ, I threw all these things into the wastebasket. Only one thing matters now: Christ, Christ, Christ." Let no man "have confidence in the flesh." Let no man think that blood, or education, or social prestige, or possessions, or good works will save him. Only Christ can save. And when a man finds Christ he sees that all these other things are, as Paul says, but "as refuse."

Knowing Christ.

Paul gave up all things that he might know Christ. He knew about Christ. But that was not enough, he wanted to know Christ. There is a difference, a vast and vital difference. One may know all about Christ, know the facts of his life, and the content of his teachings, and still not know him, know him in a personal, intimate, saving way. Paul courted all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ. He wanted to know the power of the living Christ in his own life. And more, he wanted to enter intimately into the fellowship of Christ's suffering.

Not Yet Attained.

This fellow Paul was a pretty good fellow. He was a deeply spiritual man. He was exceedingly zealous in service. He might have coasted along from now on. He might have become self-satisfied and self-complacent. Many folks do. They feel that they are good enough. They feel that they have done pretty well in their religious life, so why not take it easy from now on. But not this man Paul. He knew that he had not yet attained. He had come a long way, but he still had a long way to go. He measured himself by Christ, not by himself or by others. He had a divine discontent. The curse of the church today is people who are "good enough." Too many of us are satisfied with ourselves. We are content with the good and untroubled by the best. When a man thinks that he is good enough, he is not good enough.

This One Thing I Do.

Paul was world-wide in his outlook, but he had a single track passion. He did not waste himself on trivial or irrelevant things. He concentrated on the things that were important. He dedicated himself to the highest. He refused to be sidetracked from the main issue. He never let the wrong thing—even if it was a good thing—consume his time or energy once he got Jesus Christ in clear focus. So many of us, spend half our lives chasing the wrong things, seeking the wrong prize. We put first things second, instead of putting them first. We mount our horses and ride off in all directions at once. It is all aptly said by an English minister in 1942: "We in England have been a pleasure loving people, dishonoring God's day, picnicking and bathing—now the sea shore is barred. We have preferred motor travel to church going—now there is a shortage of motor fuel. We have ignored the ringing of church bells calling us to worship—now the bells cannot ring except to warn us of an invasion. We have left the churches half empty when they should have been filled with worshippers—now they are in ruins. The money we would not give to the Lord's work—now is taken from us in higher taxes and higher prices. The food for which we forgot to give thanks—now is unobtainable. The service we refused to give God—now is conscripted for the country. Nights we would not spend watching unto prayer—now are spent in anxious air-raid precautions."

Formula for Success.

No, he had not yet attained. But he had not stopped trying. His program involved three things. "Forgetting the things that are behind—the failures, he could not do anything about them; the sins—God had forgiven them and wiped them out of the book of his remembrance; the successes—he dare not rest on his past achievements; the petty grievances and annoyances—life was too precious to be ruined by them; the persecutions—vengeance was the Lord's, he would let God take care of that; the past—it was in the hands of a merciful God—he forgot it.

"Straining forward to what lies

ESTATE OF GLORY. Thomas Anderson. Tupper and Love, Inc., 1090 Capitol Square, S. E., Atlanta, Ga. $2.75.

Thomas Anderson, minister of Central Congregational Church in Atlanta, has published a book of sermons, or sermonettes. This in itself is a commendable thing. It is no mean undertaking for a busy pastor to prepare a manuscript for publication. Many are obviously not willing to undertake that exacting task. Such a publication adds to the written as well as the spoken word. It may legitimately be considered a part of the stewardship of influence for a minister to put into permanent form his basic convictions about life. Quite admirably has this been done by Thomas Anderson.

The author eloquently insists that there is such a thing as "The Aristocracy of the Indispensable Ones." He indicates that there is for each of us an "Estate of Glory" in this world as well as in the world to come.

Most of us need to have our ideas of aristocracy clarified, amplified, documented and brought up to date. The true aristocracy is a thing of the spirit and not merely the physical grandeur of a departed era. There lies within reach of every soul, Dr. Anderson reminds us, an estate of glory. We are indebted to anyone who can assist us in the realization and attainment of this high estate.

Now those who never have the opportunity of attending Central Church in Atlanta may share some of the homiletic gems enjoyed regularly by that congregation. Tupper and Love have enhanced these fine messages by their skill and artistry in publication.

QUESTIONS PEOPLE ASK. Robert J. McCracken. Harper and Brothers, New York. $2.50.

Here are some antecedent questions which people may ask. What kind of man could succeed Harry Emerson Fosdick? Does he have his own pattern of preaching or does he undertake to copy Dr. Fosdick? What is his general method of sermonizing?

Well, here is his picture and his sermons—just about everything except the accent and the gestures. The method and the general conception of sermonizing—which are most important—are indicated in the "Foreword."

He says "These sermons represent an attempt to come to grips with the religious and moral difficulties confronting men and women in the modern world, first by facing each difficulty frankly and openly, and then by bringing to bear on it Christian insights and applications." So, preaching in Riverside Church is just this easy and just this difficult!

More specifically, this homiletic craftsman goes on to explain: "This, of course, is preaching in only one of its aspects. It is not doctrinal, though doctrine is involved. It is not Biblical, though it would be my contention that Biblical insights are implicit and explicit from start to finish. This is life-situation preaching in which the preacher finds the point of departure in a real, contemporary problem. It may be social or personal; it may be theological or ethical or psychological. Whatever it is, his first business is to get at the core of it, and, that done, to seek as cogently and helpfully as he knows how, to work out a solution, with the mind and spirit of Jesus and the Biblical revelation the constant points of reference and direction. I judge that this is the type of preaching of which there is particular need to day."

Following this technique of sermonizing, Dr. McCracken gives cogent and illuminating answers to such questions as: Can we believe in a personal God? What is the case for survival? Is the Christian ideal attainable? What makes a church vital? Isn't it enough to be decent? etc.

THE FAMILY SCRAPBOOK. Dr. Ernest G. Osborne. Association Press. N. Y. $3.95.

Those of you who read a newspaper carrying the syndicated articles by Dr. Ernest Osborne will quickly recognize the type of scrapbook this is. It is an album, or compilation, of the brief columns that have to do with all kinds of family problems.

Some of the material treated runs from A to—well not Z, but through worry, and that should help a lot of us. Aggressiveness, Apologies, Calmness, Candy Receipts, Crafts, Death, Divorce, Emotions, Exercise, Failure, Generosity, Games, Habits, Play, Quarreling, Responsibility, Rudeness, Schedules, Stories, Tolerance, Values, Water, Fun, all appear. And there are many more subjects which may help you.

Dr. Osborne is professor of education at Teachers College, Columbia University, and president of the National Council on Family Relations. Each subject is arranged on a page with a very catchy pen drawing at the top. You will enjoy this book while finding it helpful.

If you feel that the price is rather high you may find some other parents who would like to share the book with you, or have your mothers group purchase it, or ask your Sunday school librarian if you could have this Scrapbook for your book shelf.

HOW MANY ALCOHOLICS IN VIRGINIA?

ing June 30, 1951, the Department of Welfare and Institutions of the Commonwealth of Virginia reported that 49,297 persons in Virginia were committed to jail convicted of being drunk, drunk and disorderly and driving under the influence. No doubt some of these people were repeaters. It is also a known fact that all alcoholics or excessive drinkers do not end up in jail. These 143,780 alcoholics and excessive drinkers constitute a major health problem for Virginia, as well as a problem to themselves, their families, their employers, their community and the State. This study shows that one out of every nine users of alcoholic beverages in Virginia is either an alcoholic or an excessive drinker. The excessive drinker can become the alcoholic of tomorrow.

The cost in terms of lost manpower, suffering of alcoholics and their families, and deterioration of community and moral strength, are not susceptible to dollars and cents computation. Whether we wish to be interested or not, the loss is carried by all of us. The striking fact is that much of this loss could be stopped with the knowledge and techniques now available.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Today as I write you the sky is bright and clear, sun warm, and a breeze sufficient to dry out fields that need plowing for spring planting. It begins to look like spring is near. Our children are anxious to see spring and summer. Winter has been so wet, and to them it seems long, and sometime very cold. Therefore these sunny days are lovely days for all our boys and girls. I like them, too. We are all looking for spring.

I have been thinking how nice it would be to have some church not too far away to bring a truck load or shrubs, an automobile load of men and tools, and a few ladies to see that the work is done right, and plant some of the bare places on our campus to help make this place look beautiful. It is a pretty place, doing a great work, the lawns and campus should indicate it. We have a sketch made by a landscape man so the planting may be done properly, leaving plenty of space for play and wide lawn space. Talk it over in your Sunday school class and let us hear from you.

Many Sunday schools are helping us right from the start of this year, and not waiting till we are overwhelmed with bills. In January from the North Carolina and Vir-Conference we heard from: Apple's Chapel, Bethel, Durham, Gibsonville, Palm Street (Greensboro), Happy Home, Haw River, Hines Chapel, Liberty, Long's Chapel, New Lebanon, Pfafftown, Pleasant Grove, Shallow Ford, Virgilina, and Calvary (Greensboro).

From Eastern Virginia Conference in January: Antioch, Barrett's, Bethlehem (Nansemond), Centerville, Dendron, Eure, Liberty Spring, Mt. Carmel, Newport News, First Norfolk, Christian Temple (Templemen), Oakland, First Portsmouth, First Richmond, South Norfolk, Spring Hill, Suffolk, Union (Southampton), and Wakefield.

From the Western North Carolina Conference: Flint Hill (M), Fuller's Chapel, Hank's Chapel Pleasant Cross, Pleasant Grove, Pleasant Ridge, Pleasant Union, Ramseur, Shady Grove, and Sophia.

From Eastern North Carolina Conference in January: Auburn, Chapel

Hill, Damascus, Henderson, Mt. Auburn, Mt. Hermon, Niagara, Pleasant Union, Southern Pines, and Turner's Chapel.

And from the Valley of Virginia Conference in January: Antioch, Bethel, Dry Run, Linville, Mt. Olivet (R), Newport, and Winchester.

Other have come in during February. But how good it would be if every Sunday school would remember the Orphanage once each month. It would be an easy way to keep us going here without so much anxiety. We think the churches have done well in January, and we do hope they will take a monthly offering right through the year.

The other day I met one of our pastor's wives who was most enthusiastic about getting each of the three church's in her husband's charge to meet their full quota of subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. How happy she was over the new subscriptions. I am happy, too, because we are helping to finance our church paper, and we are anxious for it to serve all parts of the Convention's program as it should. We know it cannot help as it should unless our people read, and they cannot read it if they do not receive it.

Thanks to the children's department of our Winston-Salem Sunday school for making Valentines for our children here. Thanks to many others for remembering our children with Valentines and gifts. You have warmed our hearts by your many remembrances. Little girls and boys like to come by my office and lay a Valentine on my desk. Once in a while a high school youth comes in to show the superintendent an especially pretty Valentine which they have received. These girls and boys have a right and proper respect for their matrons and workers and we are all proud of them. They cannot realize how blest they are since they had to suffer the loss of home and loved ones to have this place of really Christian refuge and help. I know they do appreciate it.

Today I had a check from a Jew—which reminds me this is Brotherhood Week—a very good friend of mine. He saw one of our little monthly bulletins with a little poem I had written entitled: "You Can Never Be Unhappy," said he liked it enough to make a donation to the work which we are doing here. People like to get the joy out of helping where they know it is appreciated and needed—especially by homeless children.

Well, I wish you knew these boys and girls as I know them. They are bright, and sweet and helpful to one another. And many of them have already set real goals for life ahead. They want to be somebody, and no doubt they will.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

"Thank you," gulped John.

"Never mind if you didn't win. I think you were the best of all."

Mother took the telephone from John. "They were good losers," she said. "You would have been proud of the way they took it."

Mary Ann whispered to Mother that night, "I had just about as good a time as if we had won the prize. Grand mother's telephone call was our prize, wasn't it?"

"Yes, dear," said Mother. "And you and John are our prize!"

In these days, when the schools are trying so hard to avoid competition and are encouraging the child to compare himself only with his own past records, outside agencies seem to play up children's desire to excel. Naturally, parents like to have their children be outstanding, but this is not always possible. What are you doing to help your child accept disappointments when they come?

ALABAMA TRAINING SCHOOL. (Continued from page 7.)

Four classes were offered in the following subjects: "The Teachings of Jesus," taught by the Rev. A. Goff Bedford, pastor of the Langdale Church; "Teaching Children," taught by Miss Eunice Akin, Director of Children's Work in the Roanoke District of the Methodist Church; "The Church's Program for Youth," taught by Miss Loretta Peterson, Director of Christian Education of the Southwest Convention; and "Understanding Adults," taught by Mr. Walter A. Graham, Executive Director of the Layman's Fellowship of the Congregational Christian Churches. The Rev. Joe A. French, pastor of the Lanett Church, served as Dean of the school.

Two class sessions were held each night in each course offered and there was a total attendance of 108 people. Of those attending the classes, 65 took the courses for credit and were issued credit cards on the final night of the school.

The churches held their first union school last year, at which time four courses were also offered. There were 72 registered for the school last year and 42 of them earned credits. Miss Lelia Anderson, one of the secretaries of the Division of Christian Education, was one of the instructors last year.

The schools have proven to be very helpful to our churches and they have voted to hold school annually.

CALLED TO BE SAINTS.

"Years ago I found it impossible to pray. I often fell asleep on my knees I was so tired. And if I kept awake, I could not control my thoughts from wandering. One day I was so worried, I spoke to the minister about it. He told me not to worry about kneeling down. "Just sit down," he said, "and put a chair opposite you. Imagine Jesus is in it and talk to him as you would to a friend." Then he added, "And I have been doing that ever since. So you know why the chair is standing like that."

A week later the daughter of the old Scot drove up to the minister's house and knocked at his door. She was shown into the study and when the minister came in she could hardly restrain herself. "Father died in the night," she sobbed. "I had no idea death could be so near. I had just gone to lie down for an hour or two. He seemed to be sleeping so comfortably. And when I went back, he was dead. He hadn't moved since I saw him before, except that his hand was out on the empty chair at the side of the bed."

The outstretched hand of our Master is always at our side—ready to strengthen us in times of trial and temptation, eager to help us overcome trouble or sorrow—anxious to lift us when we fall beside the road, bruised and defeated. All we need to do is to admit our own frailty and to reach out our hand to his. It is so simple—yet so few of us do it. It is he who has called us to be his saints—it is he who will help us to fulfill our destiny—if we but let him.

WINCHESTER YOUNG PEOPLE.

Bible on "How to Find Real Help in God's Word." Iris Allen asked the question, and the group responded. Rev. Whitten pronounced the benediction.

The big feature of the evening was a worship center which included a Bible display of more than fifty books. There was a book (German) printed in Cologne, 1851, one copy of 1829, an old family Bible, 1816; one Scotch 1812, one printed in Edinburgh 1769, a Modern speech by Weymouth, one Newberry from original Hebrew and Greek, one Latin, one portion in Braille, portions in Danish, German, Spanish, Portuguese, Modern Greek, Swedish, Russian, Polish, Dutch, French, Italian; a Chinese Bible used by some Presbyterian missionary friends, and others.

The worship center was arranged so that an 18-inch red taper, symbolizing the Light of the World, stood in the background while from it, and through the Word, a stained ribbon, symbol of "blood," ran through the work and encircled a globe.

ahead" or "reaching forth to those things which are before"—there were new goals to be achieved, new tasks to be done, new discoveries of the grace of God to be explored, new adventures of faith to be undertaken. The best was yet to be. He greeted each new day on tip-toe. God had yet more truth to break forth from his word, and new revelations to be made known.

"I press toward the mark" or "I press on." He kept on keeping on. Undiscouraged and indiscourageably, persistently, eagerly, uncompromisingly, he did today's task, faced today's temptation, bore today's sorrow, walking in the light he had today and obeying the truth he knew today.

Lutheran College Develops Ingenuous Propaganda

"OPERATION BOTTLES"—One thousand bottles of the type shown are being dropped on the China coast. They contain a message of friendship from students of Lenior Rhyne College in Hickory, N. C., also cigarettes, chewing gum and other useful articles. The idea was conceived by Earl Aiken, public relations director of the college. The student body wrote messages in Chinese and loaded the bottles. The bottles were donated by a manufacturer, and the finished products are being taken to the China coast by airlines and steamship lines. (Photo by Max Tharpe)

The plan, christened "Operation Bottles," is part of the world wide battle of ideas between democracy and Communism. But "Operation Bottles" isn't Government-sponsored; nor was it launched through a nation-wide campaign.

The students hope these bottles will wash ashore on the long coastline of the Communist-dominated country and their messages will keep alive the spirit of friendship between the Oriental and the American.

The project originated in the mind of Earl Aiken, young public relations director at Lenior Rhyne College. He took the idea to the college administration and then to the student body. Others joined the movement. Capital Airlines volunteered to fly the bottles to San Francisco and there other airline and shipping companies agreed to drop them off the China coast.

The bottles were donated by the Plax Corporation of Hartford, Conn., and Washington Columnist Drew Pearson helped line up private interests to drop them off China.

The rest of the work was done by student volunteers. They wrote more than 200 friendly messages to the Chinese and from them a student committee selected the best 20. These were sent to the Chinese Institute in New York for translation and when they came back the students began the long, tiring task of copying the Chinese characters. Each letter took about a half hour to copy.

The messages were inserted and sealed in the bottles by other students.

Chinese writing on the bottles tell the finder that "Inside you have good news." The message inside, written in simple, unadorned language, tell the Chinese that they, unlike Americans, don't have freedom, nor can they learn what is happening in the outside world.

They then say: "The people of America wish to help your country to remain free. We do not wish to force our way of life on you, but merely to help you remain a free China. We are your friends. You can always look to America for encouragement and friendship."

Lenior Rhyne's president, Dr. Voigt R. Cromer, is high in praise of the students' project. "The letters," he says, "are student testimony that they regard freedom a worthy goal for all people. Our youth wish to keep the spark of hope alive in the subjugated and regimented people of the world."

CSA OPPOSES UMT.

The Council for Social Action, at its annual meeting in Cleveland, Ohio, recently adopted a statement opposing Universal Military Training.

Rejecting the contention of the National Security Training Commission that Universal Military Training can be a "foundation of enduring national strength," CSA's statement declares, "The true foundation of enduring national strength lies in the practice of genuine democratic principles, the development of a stronger educational system, a high level of health, a just and sound economic system, and especially, the nation's wealth in individual character."

"It seems," the statement concludes, "that the present world situation is being used as a justification to establish a radically new policy, as a permanent part of American life. It is one thing to provide the manpower and the arms that seem necessary to meet an actual emergency. It is quite another thing to accept universal military training as a permanent institution of American life."

Evangelism of our Board of Home Missions, who made the announcement.

The new department will be known as the Department of Church Finance Advisory Service of the Division of Church Extension and Evangelism.

CONGRATULATIONS, MR. SCHUMACHER.

A new department has been created by our Board of Home Missions in recognition of the work of Curtis R. Schumacher who in the past four years has been instrumental in helping our churches to raise more than two and a half million dollars.

"Mr. Schumacher's work which began as an experiment, has assumed significant proportions, both in terms of volume and importance, in the life of our fellowship," declared Stanley U. North, general secretary of the Division of Church Extension and

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

CLAIMING LENT for CHRIST and HIS WORLD MISSION

Study and action should go hand-in-hand during Lent. A more profound study of the eternal gospel will lead to more purposeful living. A deeper understanding of gospel truth will move one to a corresponding knowledge of life.

Christ is the subject of our Lenten study, and the goals he himself established are the objects of our Lenten pilgrimage. His spirit and truth give the direction for our footsteps. His zeal in the establishment of the Kingdom of God kindles our own emotions, and quickens our footsteps. Having been his disciples, we become his witnesses. In word and deed we proclaim to the world: He died not in vain!

Our giving is the measure of our love. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of heaven," is the stern reminder of our Lord, "but he that doeth the will of my Father in heaven." Lent is the time to express our love and gratitude to God by sacrificial gifts. Lent will be a glorious and redemptive season if we, week by week, manifest our devotion to Christ by giving to His World Mission.

Give through the Easter Offering? Yes, by all means, but do not wait until Easter to give for missions. Some people spend so much getting ready for Easter that they have little or nothing left to give. "Redeem the time," cried St. Paul, "for the days are evil." We can redeem Lent by giving systematically.

Some will use Mission Fund envelopes as they are able. Others will use the Cent-A-Meal plan. These methods will help distribute the giving load. But the test of our giving will be the Tithes. How many will dare to tithe during Lent? God can perform miracles of achievement when his people tithe. New power is released. New resources are made available.

The benefits of tithing are twofold. The giver attains added moral stature. He emerges from the thralldom of mediocre religion and enjoys the release experienced by those who accept the yoke of Christ. He enjoys promotion from the status of an apprentice to that of a master craftsman. He enters and enjoys the fellowship of the unselfish. He joins the great fraternity of those who actually seek first the Kingdom of God. Unfortunately, many go through life and never attain that estate.

Obviously the second benefit is material. Resources are needed—desperately needed—to fulfill our obligations, to complete the tasks we have begun, to grasp the opportunities which await us. Would it not be grand to have the necessary resources? Would it not be glorious to make the improvements, establish and build the churches that have been proposed? The answer is not alone in God's hands; it is in ours. We may have the answer to prayer. Our dreams may come true.

The Southern Convention is like a drowsy giant. It does not know its strength. Tithing, or systematic and sacrificial giving during Lent will disclose the true resources and power of God's people. Revelation cometh not only from above, but also from the grass-roots of human endeavor.

Achievement is the great elixir of the human spirit. Let a people do the seemingly impossible, and their enthusiasm is unbounded. Give God the rein during Lent. Cease robbing God. Seek first the Kingdom. See his banners fly, "And it will surprise you what the Lord hath done."

Our Convention Officials Explain THE MISSION PERIOD

"Ye shall be my witnesses" was Jesus' Commission to his church. His church was gathered to this end.

That our churches of the Convention may bear effective witness of God's love and the good news of how Jesus lived, died and arose again is the purpose of your Mission Board. We want to do our job as well as possible. We need your help. We write you this letter out of deep concern. Won't you read it to your church?

We now enter the Mission Period of March, April, May and June. These are the months when our churches, pastors and members are asked to give special thought to the outreach of our world Christian mission, and to support these thoughts by gifts that the witness may be given with power. During the Mission Period we shall pass through the anniversary of our Lord's Passion, Death and Resurrection. Surely his love ought to constrain us to remember him and the work he has commissioned us to do, that work we must do if we love him!

No longer is it "Foreign" or "Home" Missions. It is in "one world" that we live. We shall as a local community, nation and world either live together in Christ Jesus or we shall die together in our denial of him. He is our peace and hope, and not ours alone but of the whole wide world.

As we approach Mission Period this year, let us first wait for the Holy Spirit to come upon us anew. This waiting and receiving will be worth more than any financial device for raising needed funds. For if and when the Holy Spirit controls us we will find a way, as did those first witnesses to the Good News of Christ.

Having waited and received the Holy Spirit, let us go unto all the world and preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Few of us can go in person beyond the confines of our own geographical boundaries, but nevertheless, we can go upon the wing of prayer and love and concern to all the world. But the wings of prayer, love and concern will not take our witness if we withhold the gifts of money that we ought to make.

Mission Period is a time of waiting, of praying and of giving.

Whether or not this experience comes to the people of your church and Sunday school may rest squarely upon your shoulders. The Mission Board is powerless to do its work apart from you. We earnestly beseech you, then, to have much in mind, heart and plan the cause of Christian Missions during these days.

Our people have been generous in the past, and for this we are grateful. But new and greater opportunities and demands are upon us. Let us consider these.

Christian Mission Needs at Home.

In the Convention we must enter the doors open to us for the strengthening of existing churches which lack financial resources to do the job facing them. The welfare and strength of our boards, conferences and institutions depend upon giving help to these churches now. Likewise, in this day of swift population changes and rapid growth, we must establish new churches if we are to have added spiritual and financial power for the job ahead of us.

Your Mission Board has committed itself to try to give $43,488 in 1952 to some 40 churches, serving some 5,000 members, and three new churches within the Convention. Will we be able to do it? Then answer depends upon you!

In our Homeland outside the Convention we must give that our national Board of Home Missions may be able to bear out national witness. Whether or not America will be Christian and fit for world leadership demanded of us as a nation may well depend upon the Congregational Christian witness to America. To help make possible this effective witness, your Mission Board has pledged to contribute the meager sum of $2,000 in 1952. Will we be able to do it? The answer depends upon you!

Christian Missions to All the World.

In a dozen missions throughout the world we Congregational Christians are under commission to take the Gospel to more than 40 millions of souls. Without us these souls may never know Jesus Christ and his salvation. Four hundred American Board missionaries and nearly 8,000 national Christian pastors, evangelists, teachers, doctors and nurses are our ready messengers if we through our gifts will send them. To this work of sending these messengers your Mission Board hopes to contribute the sum of $29,240. Will we be able to do it? The answer depends upon you!

Won't you really observe Mission Period in 1952? It can and will bring a new enrichment to your life and that of your church. You will need to make your own plans as to how it will be done. We are making a few suggestions on the back page for your consideration.

We beg of you to give Missions a first place in your thoughts, prayers, and program during March, April, May and June. May God bless you and may he give you the mind, the will and the way to help your church bear Christian witness with power this year. Next year may be too late!

THE MISSION BOARD,
WM. T. SCOTT,
Executive Secretary,
ADELIA J. TRUITT,
President.

Congregational Christian Benevolences

The Congregational Christian Churches of the U. S. A. have increased their giving to missionary work 175 per cent in the last ten years and they now give in excess of 5½ million dollars a year, Dr. Albert D. Stauffacher of New York, N. Y. Minister and Executive Secretary of the Mission Council said in addressing the council meeting in Cleveland, Ohio.

"The total contributions of the Congregational Christian Churches to benevolences and home expenses is now well over fifty and one-half millions of dollars a year. In 1951 a record year, they gave approximately $5,761,480.00 to benevolences," said Dr. Stauffacher.

"However, this substantial increase in dollars scarcely matches the increase in national income and falls short of the increase through inflation and rise in costs of operations and maintenance. A much

Hearing Requests for Mission Board Aid

It was an humbling experience to preside over the recent meeting of the Mission Board in Norfolk, Virginia. For instance, there was young Rev. James Madren, himself the son of one of our ministers, long time looking toward the day when he could join in the battle for the church, now waiting for the decision of the Board as to what it would do with his request for help for his friends in our mountain work in Virginia. I watched him there doing battle bravely, setting forth the needs of his people. I knew he had worked hard for them, and they had confidence in him. I wondered what would be the right decision, and about the funds, and whether our people throughout the Convention would rally to the urgency of the cause he represented, and the many other pleas that would be made during the day. I thought how good it would be if many more of our people could hear the call of the church and put their lives in the hands of the Lord as this young minister was doing.

Then there was another young man who had heard the call to the ministry, had paid the price of preparation, and answered a hard and challenging call. There he stood before the Board in due time. He had gotten his church to serve sacrificially and to give generously. Together they had determined to go forward, urged on by the growing need and the insistent demands of leaders in the Convention. I watched him there, somewhat nervous, very anxious, and ready to give the best he had and to challenge the best from his people. He was working in his local community for the church for which we have given our chief concern. I thought how good it would be if all of us could see the need for doing a challenging job for the Christ. It was up to the Board. Our decision would be history-making in that local church. Without its favor the church would fail.

Again there was another young minister standing with some of his leaders waiting at the door. He stressed what we all already knew, the great opportunity and the great need for help. I thought to myself how we are asking for young ministers to fill strategic places. We envision places of great opportunity and pray for prepared men to step in and take those places. Here coming before the Board were such men, in the very heart of such places and in the heat of battle for them. It was, indeed, an humbling experience. And so it went right on until more than thirty such opportunities were presented to us, right here in our own Convention. It was something to see how these anxious persons would wait around to see what good news they might have from the Board.

Well, for one thing, it showed that our Convention is alive, virile, and strong; that it is undertaking things in goodly places; that our work is progressing, and that we have wanted it to challenge us, and that our wishes are being realized. I envisioned our forth-coming Mission Period, four big months in which our churches and all our people are to pray for and give to this work right here at home.

Again we were reminded of the history-making epoch through which the church in all countries is passing; of the shift in Missions fields, of closing doors, and of opening doors; of the brave selfless soldiers of the Cross; of the valiant work being done in so many lands; and of the great need for the advance of righteousness and brotherhood every day and month of the anxious years. It was evident that the church needed sacrificial giving in the name of the Christ, that every member of the churches which make up our Convention should take very seriously the demand on us all as Christians to give more liberally during this Mission Period than we have ever given before. To be sure, we all at that board meeting felt our littleness and our humbleness, but we were thankful for the work which has been assigned by the Christ to the people of our Convention, thankful that we were honored with a real share in the work of the Kingdom. We prayed there that our decisions would be right. And just as those who came before us came humbly and anxiously, we, in turn, as a Mission Board, come humbly now before you for your decisions. I firmly believe that through him we shall do well.

A Venture in Faith at Franklinton

The Eastern North Carolina Conference has been suffering for years with an inferiority complex, because it has not produced any new churches or any new pastors of late, except those transplanted from other denominations.

A few years ago a Conference Missionary Association was organized and it has continued to grow. It found itself in the position of a person in a situation where, not knowing what to do, all he could do was ask, "Could I be of some help?"

The leaders of the Conference courted a situation in the Carolina Pines area of Raleigh for sometime, largely through the efforts of Professor L. L. Vaughn. This has not materialized yet, because of legal red tape involved in building a church in an area in which lots were sold for residential use only and because of insufficient interest.

Now for sometime the town of Franklinton has been in the limelight. This is a growing town. Its industrial life is growing. Then there is the added incentive of around fifty persons living there who are members of Congregational Christian Churches. Some of this number are very active in our nearby rural churches. The greater part, however, would have to be classified as inactive members.

We own in this town a very attractive parsonage, plus a spacious building site (deeded to the Missions Board of the Southern Convention). There is always much to commend and much to discourage any new work.

The Executive Committee of this Conference, after having consulted the Southern Convention and others, met Saturday, February 23, 1952, at

GO YE.

The Christian Church came into being as a result of autocratic ruling governing the pastors, their responsibilities and activities. It was a loosely organized effort to preserve freedom for the individual in the propagation of the gospel and the administrative affairs of the church. Fervent evangelism characterized its efforts to extend the power of the spirit to all individuals outside the membership of the church. There was no particular concern or effort to form the "Apostles of Freedom" into a compact and efficient organization. The fervent aim of the evangelists of our church at its beginning was to win individuals to Christ but not to build a denomination. In the real sense of the word, a true missionary spirit was the actuating force in the movement for freedom.

The Christian Church prior to the merger of the Congregational and Christian Churches was missionary at heart. The missionary spirit has become more pronounced with the passing years. The late Dr. J. O. Atkins was the moving spirit among us. His enthusiasm for missions was conveyed effectively to his church, particularly to the women of our church. Under his influence the Mission Board was authorized and chartered, and the Woman's Board came into existence. Today the whole church is moved with a passion for the carrying of the gospel to the ends of the earth. The obstacles are many, as they have always been. Whenever righteous determination exceeds hindering obstacles, the obstacles will give way and the movement for the salvation of the world will push on. The vision of the needs of the world, the ability and resources of the church continue to widen and increase. Our abilities match our opportunities. If our willingness equalled our abilities, the fulfilling of his command would be immediate. Truly the fields are white unto the harvest, but the laborers are few. The command of nearly two thousand years ago, "Go ye into all the world," is as real as if it had been spoken yesterday. The danger is that we shall see the fields afar without getting a glimpse of the fields that are near.

In this matter of carrying the gospel to the ends of the earth, we must realize that there are fields—abundant fields, at our door, that these fields must be entered before we can effectively enter fields beyond. Our responsibilities as a church, and missionary organizations within that church, begin at Jerusalem, extended to Judea, Samaria, and to the ends of the earth. The gospel is for the whole of society, for all men, regardless of where they live. The connotation of Home and Foreign Missions is a misnomer. We do not have a home and a foreign gospel. The field is the world. Our opportunities and responsibilities are worldwide. We do the job in lands afar to the degree that we do our duty in lands that are near. The light that shines the farthest shines the brightest at home.

Ours is a disturbed world. Conditions are distressing wherever you turn. The gospel of Jesus Christ is a leveling factor, a quiet force, a regenerating power. Christ is the answer. The gospel is the instrument, Christian men and women are the channels. If the church would rise to its privileges, lay hold of God by faith, and uplift Christ to the world, much of the disturbance would be settled and inequalities between nations and races would disappear. Contentions would be halted, and the peace of God, peace that passeth all understandings, would dominate the nations and be the possession of every humble heart.

Today is the day when the church needs not only to be conscious of its responsibilities but aware of its great opportunities. The day is here, the time has come when the church should possess Christ that she might give Christ to the whole world. May we give not only of our time and of our money, but of our sons and our daughters that his Kingdom may come and his will be done on earth as it is in heaven.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

A part of the College Period for the current year is behind us. Contributions from our Sunday schools and churches for the college, to be credited on conference apportion-ments, have exceeded contributions as of the current date in 1951. If the information concerning the college has been given as was intended, we may confidently expect that these contributions shall continue to increase beyond that of a year ago.

If our churches and Sunday schools could realize the emergencies that our college is facing, I know that they would make a special effort to see that their contributions are generous and forwarded to the college regularly. Education does not have an emotional appeal, but it is necessary if the gospel is to be given intelligently to the world and if our church is to have a capable and productive leadership, without which every other interest and institution of the church would suffer. When we make a contribution to Elon College, we make a definite contribution to the moral, intellectual, and religious life of our church—a contribution that will bear dividends beyond any material or social dividend that may be realized from any other investment. The college is appreciative of the assistance, support, and encouragement of the church.

ELON ALUMNUS GOES TO ANNAPOLIS.

John Reynolds Arwood of Burlington, a student at North Carolina State College, has been appointed by Senator Willis Smith to the U. S. Naval Academy at Annapolis.

The Tarheel Senator said today he had named three young North Carolinians as alternates. They are: Thomas Howard Kepley of Salisbury, a student at Chapel Hill; Cpl. Robert L. Hull of Concord, stationed with the Air Force, Newburgh, N. Y., and George A. Colltrane of Trinity, training as a naval reserve officer.

Senator Smith said Arwood, 20, attended Elon College following his graduation from an orphanage school. His mother died when he was a child. In order to attend Elon, the youth worked in a textile plant at night and attended classes during the day, Smith said. He is now working his way through State College.

A LETTER FROM THE RIGGS.

Mission Compound,
Manamadura, S. India,
February 4, 1952.

Dear Friends:

The papers these days are full of election results, and the people are discussing the unexpected weakness of the Congress Party and the strength of the Communists. But around here, at least, the people don't seem to have much idea of what Communism is all about. The other day I was visiting the model Workers' Village for 1,500 employees of the Madura (spinning) Mills, and inspected their clean widely-spread houses, and central water supply and sewage disposal system. The company-run free school, and nursery and health clinic were pretty convincing demonstrations of what enlightened free enterprise can do; and so was the workers' cooperative store. But they remarked that the store management was helpless to prevent the wide fluctuation in the prices of food commodities that cause so much suffering among the poor workers. Of course they are well off at the moment because the rice harvest is coming in and prices are down. But as in pre-Communist China that is because the poor farmers have to sell their rice on the open market in order to pay off their debts, while the rich landowners take the rice in payment at these cheap rates and hold it till it is scarce and prices are high, and they are able to "make a killing." I told them that the Communists in China had been able to stop all that fluctuation, as well as the inflation, and they were incredulous. They could not conceive of a society being changed so radically that such a thing would be possible. Meanwhile I have been getting a closer look at the villages during the month. I spent a week showing my health slides in a pastorate forty miles from here. The new pastor, a former free-lance evangelist, without a lazy bone in his body, who is just starting this as his first steady assignment, really showed me the village life in his area. Besides giving a show in a different village each evening, we went around in the daytime to the village schools, and in the fields and streets where he showed me the daily living and working of these people. I watched the farmers harvesting and threshing a dozen different kinds of millet, and re-planting the fields with chilis, peanuts, beans, and cotton where they could supply water from wells. I saw one outcaste village making brooms for their livelihood, out of wild grasses which they collect from certain distant spots. I was shown a grove of trees where a hundred and fifty peacocks roosted at night, after roaming through the fields and gardens during the day and eating what they liked because they are sacred birds and may not be harmed. I examined the handful of leprosy patients in that area and sent one to the leprosarium for emergency admission for treatment for an infected knee. I also saw a few patients with miscellaneous conditions; for altho there was a Government Dispensary only three or four miles away, many were too lethargic to go that far or too afraid of missing half a day or a day of work in their fields. In general, however, the people are more interested in religious matters than in their health. They would sit patiently and with ardor through a two-hour exposition by the pastor of the film-strip on the Life of Christ, and then be up at five o'clock the next morning for his hour-long daily pre-dawn worship service, and his two-and-a-half-hour Sunday Church Service. In one village trip that I made without the pastor, I gave a flannelgraph talk to the school children. Afterwards the school patron, who was the richest man in the village, took me out to see his new well he was digging for watering his fields. He had a tremendous pit there, and had gone down through thirty feet of solid rock. But after putting two thousand rupees into it he had still not hit water. He wanted me to say a prayer on the spot—English would do, if I didn't know Tamil—and I refused because I was afraid he was expecting me to cast a magic spell on the well. But when he asked why I hadn't said a prayer before giving the kids their flannelgraph show, I didn't have anything to say!

I could go on and on with details of what I saw there. But actually my visit there is still just superficial "dabbling." In just a week I could hardly hope to learn much of the real life of the people or have much influence on them. Last week I had the privilege of joining the group which included Dr. R. G. Cochrane, the world-famous leprosy specialist, formerly of India, to inspect a new village leprosy control project, under the auspices of the Government and the Gandhi Memorial Fund, at a spot half-way between here and Madras. The project is just getting started, and a small network of treatment centers are being established in the experimental area. I was interested in visiting the village closest to the center, where the most intensive work was being done. For four months he and his ex-patient technician had visited the village every morning at sunrise, (to catch the people at home before they left for their work in the fields), to take a house-to-house census and induce every person to submit to examination for the presence of leprosy. They found 26 infectious patients and about 150 non-infectious patients in the village and offered them treatment at the clinic half a mile away. Concentrating on the infectious patients in order to prevent them from spreading the disease, they are now revisiting them in their homes every time they fail to show up for treatment, to find out why they didn't come and induce them to persist. Their next step will be to promote a night-segregation scheme, persuading the villagers to build those 26 patients a shed on the edge of the village where they can sleep in isolation from their children at night because it is hopeless to try to achieve proper isolation technic in their one-room huts. The whole thing is a tremendous uphill struggle against the ignorance and apathy of the villagers—and this is just one village among thousands! But it looks as if that will be necessary for the control of disease where a change in the habits of the people is necessary and where they are so backward and uneducated. The enthusiastic Madras Secretary of the Indian Leprosy Association (a layman and also an ex-patient), who is sponsoring this work, says that if I will select a suitable "model area" in Ramnad District for a similar project, he will come down here and stir up interest and financial support from the local Government and civic leaders.

LENT—1952.

Lent at its best this year could be for each of us a time of asking the right questions:

What am I living for, myself or God?

Have I really given up my sins, or just rationalized them?

Do I love people with the depth that Jesus did?

Does Christ fill my whole life, or just fringes of it?

Have I given myself to a work that is bigger than I am?

Is prayer a living experience for me and my family?

Do I share myself with the lonely, sick, hungry, tired?

But if it's well to ask the right question in Lent, it is better to find the right answer.

What can we as church women do about asking and answering questions for ourselves and other this Lent?

Put a copy of The Fellowship of Prayer into every home and urge its daily use through our women's groups.

See that every young person has a copy of Lenten Devotions for Young People.

Encourage family Lenten devotions through the use of these two pamphlets.

Use other Lenten materials in our group and personal devotions.

MISS OLINE NICHOLSON

MEET OLINE NICHOLSON.

Things that Americans would term "junk" and throw into the trash can are daily being turned into money to help underprivileged Indian girls and women find a new life, says Oline E. Nicholson, Texas Congregational Christian social worker from Madura, India.

As a vocational teacher and superintendent of industries under the American Board of Foreign Missions in the Madura Mission Miss Nicholson teaches in Capron Hall and Pierce High School as well as in the Lucy Perry Noble Institute where she works miracles with things others discard.

When she was last home on furlough Miss Nicholson declared, "The dump heaps of America would clothe and house the poor people of India." From friends in the U. S. A. every year come boxes full of odds and ends such as bits of old florists' ribbons; cast-off beads, vanity cases and costume jewelry; used gold and tinsel from discarded Christmas decorations; worn-out stockings—and other "junk" truthfully labeled "no commercial value." Somehow under Miss Nicholson's skilled teaching these cast-offs are converted into saleable articles ranging from dolls to lovely rugs; from lamp shades to bath mats; from tea cozies to stuffed animals, and from shoulder bags to Christmas creches. Without the money thus earned the girls could not come to school.

"Place of Salvation."

Down through the years since its founding in 1892 Rachanyapuram, the Tamil name for the "Place of Salvation" as the Lucy Perry Noble Institute is best known, has been reclaiming Indian girls from the areas of ignorance and dire poverty in the villages around Madura. After finishing at this unique school they blossom out as teachers, nurses, Christian workers and leaders in their own villages.

Rachanyapuram does not educate these girls away from the village economy to which they must return, but it does fit them to live a self-supporting and richer life. It teaches them many things, among them basketry, weaving, and even agriculture, as it has six acres of rice lands which the girls cultivate. The students spend only half of their time on the academic curriculum. The remainder is devoted to learning by doing and in teaching what they have learned in the villages.

Educate Whole Community.

Miss Nicholson firmly believes in the comment of an Indian educator who said that in India when you educate a boy you lift an individual, but when you educate a girl you lift a family. She goes one step further and declares, "When you educate a Christian girl in India you lift a whole community," for at her school not only are creative handicrafts taught and the way to make a living, but Christian character is built in the process.

At one time when her school faced a financial crisis she went into a village, secured an old Indian potter and got him to teach her and her pupils the ancient trade of pottery-making. Now the school does quite

For our Church, where we learn to be like Jesus,

We give you thanks, O God.

For our schools, where we learn many things,

We give you thanks, O God.

For our homes and the other members of the family,

We give you thanks, O God.

For our food and those who work to provide it,

For the clothes we wear to keep us warm and comfortable,

We give you thanks, O God.

For people all over the world with whom we can be friends,

We give you thanks, O God.

This lovely litany was prepared by the Primary Class of Pleasant Ridge Christian Church who has Mrs. Quinton Hicks as teacher. The children suggested the litany and Mrs. Hicks wrote it for them.

The Rev. Clyde Fields, pastor, sent a copy to me. I am glad that they shared with us. If your group has done something like this won't you share it with us?

Some of you have sent clippings and articles that you found in other magazines which are appreciated, but if the publication is copyrighted we cannot use it. We would, however, greatly appreciate your original material.

Others of you have sent seasonal material and mailed it to Dr. Scott at Elon and it would come on to Southern Pines but be too late for use. Send your mail to Box 62 Southern Pines.

Success to Mrs. Hicks, her Primary boys and girls and pastor Fields!

OPEN DOORS.

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

The father of a friend of mine built in my friend's apartment a small cupboard that is a perfect storage space. This cupboard and a miniature chest of drawers were so attractively painted that I commented regarding them to "Bom," as nine-year-old Jimmy calls his grandfather.

"Your're an excellent painter, Bom," I said.

"Jimmy painted them," Bom replied, looking proudly in his grandson's direction. "He can do many things as well as I can do them."

"How did he learn?" I inquired.

"Mostly by watching me in our basement workshop," Bom replied. "I always answered all the questions Jimmy asked me, even when he was very small. As soon as he showed an interest in tools I told him their proper names and explained the use of each to him. Before long he was asking, 'May I make something, too, Bom? I soon discovered he had learned a good deal through observation; from that time on he learned still more by doing things himself.'

Jimmy is now twelve! he is capable, painstaking, and industrious.

Recently I heard a business executive, whose father had been an inventor and like Bom could do or make almost anything, say, "I can hardly hang a picture!"

This was quite true of both him and his brother. Why had not that father taught his two sons, while they were young lads, the way my friend's father had taught Jimmy, who can not only hang a picture correctly but can also make a frame for one, if necessary?

How important it is to give our boys and girls the incentive to test their abilities.

Through my mother I learned to love and study music. I was often awakened in the morning by the strains of Sweet Genevieve or some other pleasing melody. Mother sang or played almost continuously, much to the delight of all my friends. When I was in high school she was gaining still further proficiency by taking piano lessons with an exceptionally highly skilled teacher.

What a mistake it is for a parent to neglect some special talent he may have. Continuing to use any ability may not only add much to his own personality but it may awaken a stimulating interest which will become a hobby or even profession for his son or daughter. Too many parents who speak several languages neglect this valuable opportunity to teach their children one or more in addition to their native tongue.

"As soon as I was old enough," remarked an acquaintance of mine, "my father took me on long walks through the woods. I learned to love the peace, beauty, and quiet relaxation that the great out-of-doors can bring. Father taught me the names of all the trees and the wild flowers. Through him, too, Latin was made easy, and I learned to enjoy good books."

Her remarks reminded me of my own father—his love of books and his kind interest in all that I did. I could rely on him. I believe the only time he consciously deceived me was once in my early girlhood when I had submitted "a story" to the Saint Nicholas Magazine. I had been quite confident of success. I waited, at first patiently and then impatiently. Finally, not having heard from the Magazine, I complained to Daddy, "I didn't even receive Honorable Mention, like some of the other boys and girls."

"Has it occurred to you that you may be mistaken, dear?" my brilliant lawyer daddy asked. "Partial lists of Honorable Mention have extended through several issues of the magazine. Without doubt, your name was in one of them."

Not until I was grown did the thought come to me, "And just when did Father start reading Saint Nicholas?"

Your understanding and sympathetic response, Mother and Dad, your encouragement in every interest and endeavor of your children will be sure to bring satisfaction both to you and to them.

It is a very terrible thing to let conscience begin to grow hard, for it soon chills into northern iron and steel. It is like the freezing of a pond. The first film of ice is scarcely perceptible; keep the water stirring and you will prevent the frost from hardening it; but once the glaze thickens over the surface, and it thickens still, and at last is so firm that a solid wagon might be drawn over the solid surface. So with conscience, it films over gradually, until at last it becomes hard and unfeeling, and it is not crushed even with ponderous loads of iniquity.—C. H. Spurgeon.

MAX VESTAL, Box 792, Elon College, N. C.

Across the World to College . . .

By MAT CURRIN.

There are at least two students on the Elon College campus, Roger and Robert Phelps, who can't very well go home for weekends, for their home is in Kodaikanal, South India.

Both Roger and Bob were born in Kodaikanal, where their father is principal of the Kodaikanal School. Roger was born on August 27, 1932, shortly after his parents arrived in South India and Robert was born two years later on July 31.

The Phelps family has lived in India since 1932, interrupted by several extended visits to the United States during the ensuing years. Roger and Robert studied in the United States and attended public schools in Washington, California, and Boston from 1944 until 1946.

Roger came to America a year ahead of his parents in 1950 and spent the summer at the home of his sister at Fort Smith, Ark., which has become their "home base" and then on to Elon College for the opening of school in the fall of 1950.

When asked why he had chosen Elon, Roger replied, "While we were in the States in 1946, we met Doris White, an Elon student, in Boston and she told us all about Elon and recommended it very highly. Several years later when I was trying to make the decision as to which school to attend in America I remembered what Doris had said about Elon and decided that Elon had what I wanted. I particularly wanted to attend a small college, and a denominational school appealed to me."

Roger is majoring in history and is undecided as to a vocation; Robert, a freshman this year, has not chosen a major field yet, and, like Roger, he too is undecided as to a career.

The town of Kodaikanal, in which Roger and Robert were born, reared, and educated is very different from the rest of India. They explained that it is almost like another section altogether. Kodaikanal has very little to do with the outside world. The school is the only important thing there, and the school is primarily a school for the sons and daughters of missionaries and businessmen who are living in Asia. Therefore, the town is not typical of India at all.

The school itself is much like any American secondary school, and the curriculum likewise is much the same. The majority of the teachers are American, even though the school nurse is from Austria, the school doctor is from Germany, one of the language teachers is from Czechoslovakia, the music department is Italian, and several of the teachers are from India.

The students themselves are also cosmopolitan. Some of them are the children of missionaries from scattered parts of the world, others are children of American and English businessmen, and some children come from as far as Arabia, Burma, Ceylon and countless other localities. Of course, the children from India are permitted to attend the school too, but the majority of them prefer the English curriculum, for many of them plan to continue their studies in English colleges and universities.

There are about two hundred students in the school now, and the school is run by seven cooperative missions. Their father is under the American Board of Congregational Christian Churches in Boston, and he is a member of the Congregational Christian Church.

Robert, who entered the freshman class at Elon this fall, says that India is a country in which almost anything can happen at any time. Communism is growing, but he does not feel that it is yet much of a threat. "The people are very nationalistic, and they are easily excited, which accounts for the prevalence of rioting. The majority of the Indians are very illiterate, and they don't know much about their government and seem to care less."

In comparing the Indian way of life with the American system, Roger and Robert agree that there is quite a vast difference. For instance over 70 per cent of the people of India are farmers, and the average farmer has in his possession a loin cloth, wooden plow, and two oxen.

European ideas and customs are beginning to change India to some extent. However, the dress of the common man is much like his ancestors. The more educated men are adopting the English sartorial customs, but the women are still retaining the old dress.

All in all, Roger and Robert Phelps feel that their life in India was wonderful, but both of them point out that, while they desire to return to India for visits from time to time, they do not want to live there. Both boys are happy at Elon College and are very glad that they decided to study there.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

TIMOTHY, A DEPENDABLE FOLLOWER.

(TEMPERANCE).

LESSON XI—MARCH 16, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: Let no one despise your youth, but set the believers an example in speech and conduct, in love, in faith, in purity.—1 Tim. 4: 12.

LESSON: Acts 16: 1-3; Philippians 2: 19-24; Timothy 2: 1-5.

DEVOTIONAL READING: II Timothy 2: 11-22.

Today's lesson concerns one of the world's best-known, and finest friendships—the friendship between Paul and Timothy. It is the story of the friendship between an older and a younger man, a friendship that was tender and true and tried. The central character in today's lesson is the young man Timothy, and although attention can be called to the possibilities of the comradeship of an older man on a younger man, the emphasis should be put upon Timothy, his character, his career, his consecration to the cause of Christ. Teachers of a class of young men ought "to go to town" on this lesson. He is a splendid example in both character and conduct for modern young men.

A Young Man Well-Born.

This young man Timothy was well-born. He came from parents of a mixed marriage. His father was a Greek, but his mother was a Jewess. Both his mother and his grandmother were devout, and devoted to the Jewish faith. Furthermore, his mother had become a Christian,—she was converted when Paul first visited Lystra. And as is so often the case, the mother had more of a determining influence on the child than did the father. The important fact is that this young man came from a good home, he was well-born. That helps. To be sure it does not guarantee that the child will turn out all right. But it helps, it helps tremendously. Young men and young women ought to be living in such a way that their children will be well-born. Blood will tell. Give your child a good birthright.

A Young Man Well Bred.

Timothy was not only well-born, he was well bred. His mother believed that there was more to education than the "three R's"—Reading, and Riting, and Rithmetic." She believed that a fourth "R," Religion was necessary. Thus it was that "from a child" Timothy had been taught the scriptures. She had probably told him the stories of the great leaders and heroes and heroines of the faith as a child, taught him to read the sacred writings when he became old enough to do so, and encouraged him in the habit of reading the Jewish Bible as a young man. It seems as if that custom has fallen rather into disuse in our modern homes. When mothers do read stories to children nowadays, they are not Bible stories. The fact is that comparatively few mothers read anything to their children now. The diet of most children, even young children now is what comes over the radio or the television program. And many homes give little or no place to religion and religious instruction in the home. Like many another good and great man, Timothy undoubtedly had occasion a thousand times in his life to give thanks for a Christian mother who imparted to him religious faith and gave him religious instruction.

A Young Man Who Became A Disciple of Christ.

Timothy confessed Christ, and became a disciple and follower of Jesus as a young man. We do not know how old he was when he made the great decision, but we do know he was still a young man. He may have become a Christian at the same time his mother did, on Paul's first visit to Lystra. Could there be any finer sight than to see the mother and her son, step out and confess Christ and join the church at the same time? Yes, to have the father, and the daughter, and the other members of the family to do it too? The important thing is that Christ got hold of Timothy while he was still a young man. How important it is that we win young people to Christ! There are no fields any whiter unto harvest than the young people in every community who have not been won for Christ.

A Young Man Who Became A Minister.

Timothy was a likely and a likeable young man. After he had been "born again" into the Christian life, he grew in grace and in the knowledge of Jesus Christ. He made a deep impression on his home-town folks by his earnestness and eagerness, his sincerity and his consecration. When Paul came back to Lystra to visit the church there—it took nerve to do that for he had been stoned nigh unto death there—he was very much impressed with Timothy. He made some inquiries about this young man, and the "same was well reported of by the brethren that were at Lystra and Iconium." Paul saw in Timothy fine possibilities as a minister, and he immediately enlisted the young man as his assistant. Paul asked the local church to ordain Timothy, which of course it was glad and proud to do. Thus began a long and honorable ministry, fruitful in every good work. In every community there are fine young men with splendid possibilities for Christian service. Why are we ministers and Sunday school teachers so hesitant about seeking to enlist them in the cause of Christ! A word from us may help them to decide on a life-career for Christ and his cause.

A Young Man Who Had Unusual Training for the Ministry.

So far as we know, Timothy never went to the seminary. But he had the finest theological training under one of the world's greatest preachers and pastors—Paul. Think what it must have meant to this young man to be intimately associated with the apostle Paul! A great man once said that a great teacher of his day and a young man sitting on a log were in themselves a university, and there is profound truth in his words. That intimate association with Paul meant more to Timothy than any formal education could have meant. This does not discount college and seminary training for young ministers today. Only a few young men have the privilege of long and close association with great preachers and pastors, and of course there are no Pauls today. But the writer of these notes pays homage, humble and hearty, to the influence of Dr. W. W. Staley on his life and ministry because of the intimate association which he had with greater increase will be called for at this meeting for advance work, particularly in building and strengthening churches, training national leaders in lands overseas to assume responsibility for the church there, doing relief and reconstruction work in Lebanon, Korea and other parts of the world, and in securing human rights for minority and underpriv- leged peoples."

CREATE AND MAKE NEW. Austin Par- due. Harper and Brothers, N. Y. $1.50.

This little volume is the Harper Book for Lent. It is an exploration and exposition of the heart. The author states: "When we speak of the heart we do not refer to the physical organ that pumps the blood through the body, but to the spiritual organ which furnishes the drive and motivation to all our thoughts, deeds and acts." Then he goes on to say: "There will be no world peace, nor social justice, nor economic fairness on a reasonably permanent scale until the sins of the spirit are killed in enough hearts to insure freedom from enslavement to them."

It can readily be seen that this book which deals with the personal approach to the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth is a most relevant study for Lent. Austin Par- due is Bishop of the Episcopalean Diocese of Pittsburgh.

A major emphasis made by Dr. Stauffacher carried the question as to whether the good work of the churches today are "bearing testi- mony to the world as to what God is now trying to persuade men and nations to be and say and do in this hour of world revolution and crisis."

Dr. Stauffacher stated that there is a "profound unrest in the church at this point. . . . God is present in this world now. He is the primary actor and sufferer in this world's tragedy. He is at work trying to reconcile men with each other and with himself. Are we on his side, witnessing to and helping him in the things he is now doing and saying to men at this very moment in his- tory."

The Missions Council of which Dr. Stauffacher is the minister has re- sponsibility for cultivating support for the missionary program of the Congregational Christian Churches at home and in fifteen countries over- seas.

A popular and growing means of missionary promotion and education which these churches are promoting, said Dr. Stauffacher, is that of mis- sion tours. "During 1952 there will be guided mission tours to Japan and the Philippines, to Puerto Rico, to Mexico, to Europe, to mission fields and institutions in the U. S. A., study tours on Home Missions and human rights."

A major question before the Mis- sion Council Meeting was whether or not the Congregational Christian Churches should launch a special campaign to provide an adequate Church Building Revolving Fund.

"The population of the U. S. A. is increasing at an amazing rate and there are today many unchurched areas and many other areas with in- adequate church facilities," pointed out Dr. Stauffacher.

Dr. Stauffacher pointed out that we now have the know-how to build new churches and strengthen inade- quate churches so as to cause them to become almost immediately, and certainly in a brief time, productive churches ready and eager to support the total world mission of the church.

"The people of the Congregation- al Churches will carry more than one financial effort at one and the same time if these are sufficiently urgent and of universal appeal. Dur- ing the last decade they carried three such efforts simultaneously. They made a steady annual increase to missions and at the same time gave $5,384,123.00 to the War Relief and Reconstruction and $1,200,000.00 to strengthen a Pension Fund for re- tired ministers.

Rachanyapuram was recently pub- licated in India through a fully il- lustrated feature story in the Madras Mail in which it said, "Important as it is to allow no materials that can possibly be used to go to waste, the school has a far more important aim that concerns human needs." From among the girls who come to Rachanyapuram "starved mentally and physically the school endeavors to salvage all that is good and to start each one on the road to self-help and its resultant state of happiness that comes from accomplishment and gives them hope."

this great and good man, a sound preacher and superb pastor. If he has had any success in the ministry, much of it is due to the insights, and the influence of Dr. Staley upon his life in the years of his first full-time pastorate in Suffolk. And of course in all our seminaries there are men who are contributing so much to young ministerial students.

A Young Man Who was Dependable.

Timothy had many admirable qual- ities. He had one superb one—he was dependable. He could be de- pended upon. At one time in his life, Paul said that he had "no man like-minded, who will truly care for your state." But Paul could depend on Timothy. Alas, dependability seems often so lacking in many peo- ple today. And yet it is one of most essential qualities of a successful life.

"For they all seek their own, not the things of Christ. But ye know the proof of him," writes Paul. Here was a young man who was not look- ing out for number one. He was rather seeking the things of Christ. That made him "a man of distinc- tion" in the best sense of the word.

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

I am greatly indebted to my mother for the Christian training which in her humble way she gave me, and each of her children. She gave me a faith in God which has made him real to me every day of my life. He seemed near to pity me for wrong and to empower me for right from childhood days until today. He has seemed one to whom I could lift my heart in prayer with complete assurance that he heard and understood and would give in love the best answer—even if it were exactly opposite from my requests. To have that sort of beginning in Christian faith is to me an unspeakably great blessing.

I covet that sort of mother for all children. Now it happens that I am charged with a primary responsibility in passing that sort of faith and training on to many other little girls and boys. In an orphanage I see the need of a special help both for matrons, workers, and children in seeking to approximate that home training in Christian faith and conduct. A matron has as high as thirty-one little ones in her care. It is hard to have them under the personal, nightly, daily touch for such training as my mother gave me and the others of us. It is easy to think it could be done but in the hurrying day with meals to be ready for, chores to be done and school to be attended it comes to be will nigh impossible. We are doing something about it daily in the several ways in which we can try. But we realize a lack of the home training in reverence, worship, prayer, and teaching so greatly to be desired.

My most excellent predecessor, the late Supt. Chas. D. Johnson, saw just what I am now telling you. He saw the need of a central sanctuary suitable for just such training as an orphanage family might be given right on its own campus, thus making the members of the family ready for public worship in the nearby church, and ready to rightly engage in the services of the Sunday school. He advocated such a chapel after many years of experience and wisdom in rearing homeless children. The idea caught hold in the minds of a family which has given time, thought and money toward our Orphanage across many years. Father and son have been presidents of its Board of Trustees. Last week they allowed me to announce that the chapel would be under construction this summer, and that it would be a gift of the children of William Kirkpatrick and Maud May Holt memorializing their own Christian parents. Thus the vision of Supt. Johnston and the desire of the present superintendent is to be realized. The eleven living children of the Holt family have contributed the funds for its erection.

This is Home Missions of a high order. It will make much more effective the attendance of our orphanage family each Sunday at the regular Elon Community Church, and it will be a beacon light to many a boy and girl in all their lives after they leave the Orphanage. It is to be hoped that some of them may become ministers in our Home Mission work, and missionaries abroad. To that end I am praying. May God bless the missionary efforts of our Convention in every home and church and chapel without our bounds.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

A VENTURE IN FAITH AT FRANKLINTON.

Henderson, to take action on the Franklinton new work. This committee voted to endorse the work at Franklinton. We secured the services of Rev. E. M. Powell (Box 395, Henderson, N. C.) for one month. We asked the C. M. A. to provide compensation for Brother Powell and to pay his expenses in this work. It was the agreement of those present that if, after a month's work, the pastor and the committee felt this a worthwhile project, it would be continued.

Mr. Powell is planning to do extensive pastoral calling, conduct cottage prayer meetings, arrange for a community wide survey, and work toward a Vacation Bible School this summer and the organization of a Sunday school before, if possible.

It is the sincere feeling of the Executive Committee that this work will not fail if it receives the proper encouragement from the nearby churches.

It is perhaps needless to say that a church in Franklinton would not only conserve for our churches perhaps literally hundreds of people which rural churches in that area win for Christ, but this would also provide a central meeting place for conferences, institutes, etc. This, of course, would be only a small part of what the church would mean.

Here is a great opportunity to show our faith. A chance to prove we are not barren. If you know any person in Franklinton who is interested, or ought to be, in a Christian Church there, would you write Brother Powell? If you believe in this work—a letter saying so would be a great encouragement to Brother Powell and others. All of us can pray that this work might succeed to the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ.

birthday cakes, each topped with a small candle. The lights in the dining room were extinguished, the birthday candles lighted, and the group sang "Happy Birthday" to the Pack.

In the center of the speaker's table was a large birthday cake decorated with tiny cub scouts dressed in blue and gold uniforms.

The Rev. Tucker G. Humphries, pastor of the church, served as toastmaster. Songs and stunts were presented by members of the group.

Several Scout officials were present including Lin Adams, scout executive; Ed Gunn, president of the Reidsville Boy Scout district; Lee Somers, district commissioner; John Oakley, district organization and extension chairman; and R. H. Wray, member of the district committee. Each of these leaders brought a brief word of greeting as they were introduced.

The formal program for the blue and gold banquet included the recognition of the Baraca Class, Pack sponsors, and of last year's cub pack committee.

Claude Somers, cubmaster for Den Two, presented awards to deserving Cubs. Lee Somers, district commissioner, commended and congratulated the den chiefs.

J. D. Dill, president of the Baraca Class, spoke a few words of greeting to the group. Lin Adams honored the Cubmaster by presenting him with headquarters and national recognition. The new cub pack committee with Boyd Waynick as chairman was then introduced by John Oakley. Ed Gunn presented the new charter and registration cards.

The Rev. Mr. Humphries thanked the entire organization for their every effort in stimulating growth and advancement in the Pack. In a special way he recognized Bob Gilbert, retiring committee chairman, Mrs. Daisey Briggs, Mrs. Rita Childrey, Mrs. Nat Gilbert, and Mrs. Kathryn Watkins, den mothers, and Claude Somers, cubmaster.

The meeting ended with the group singing "God Bless America."

THE VALUE OF THE CHURCH.

By CLEM SHANKLE,
At W. N. C. Rally.

I cannot explain in simplicity the full value of the church and what it means to me. But I will try to give a few ideas of its value. We all know that there are four parts to the main program of a church. These are: The Sermon, the Prayer, Songs, and the Offering.

1. The sermons should be great assets to all Christians. As the preacher breaks the bread of life, we can all receive the spiritual food that we need; as Christ has said that man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. We should all give careful attention to the Word of God because "all scripture is inspired by God."

2. Prayer is another great value of the church. All Christians can come to church and unit their hearts in prayer and God will surely hear and answer our prayers. Jesus says that we have not because we ask not. If we conceive of this in reality, we can realize that this is truly an outstanding value of the church.

3. The songs we sing at church are most inspiring and uplifting which is of great help and value to the church. We should always remember the words of the psalmist as he said, "make a joyful noise unto the Lord, come before his presence with singing." If the Lord didn't give us a talented voice, we should still try to sing for the glory of God. We should sing from the heart. Some hearts are touched by the songs of the church when the other parts of the church means little or nothing to them.

4. And last but not least, is the offering. Some would think that it is not of value to give to the church. We should remember this:

"It is more blessed to give than to receive."

"The Lord loveth a cheerful giver."

If we enjoy the other parts of the church, then we must give of our money to carry it on because it takes money to carry on the work of the church. Where your treasure is there will be your heart also, therefore, we should put our money into the church and the work of the Lord, so that our heart will be in it. And this money will be used to spread the gospel at home and abroad, thus fulfilling the command of our Lord, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel."

What is the value of the Church? No one will ever know in this life the real and full value of the church, but we should hold it dear and sacred to our hearts because we all know that it is the greatest institution on earth.

Let the Church Bear the Witness

TOOLS FOR THE TASK

1. Organize prayer and Mission Study groups which will meet regularly.
2. Preach special sermons on Missions, and have special Mission emphasis in your Sunday school regularly.
3. One Great Hour of Sharing: Receive a generous offering for Relief and Reconstruction on March 16 and 23 for the relief of suffering humanity all over the world—victims of war and displacement and hunger!
4. Tithing: Urge your people to give a tenth of their income to Missions.
5. Receive a large Easter Offering for Missions.
6. Encourage individuals in your church to make special gifts to Missions.
7. Raise your entire Mission Apportionment during Mission Period.
8. Urge your church to let the special and Easter Offerings be "Over and Above" the apportionment. Our Mission Board must raise $25,000 over the regular apportionment if it is to meet the commitments made.
9. Use pictures and other printed materials to tell the story of Missions.
10. Use the Cent-a-Meal Plan for Christian Missions:

THE CENT-A-MEAL PLAN

* * * During Mission Period (March, April, May, June) each family of the Convention is asked to put a CENT-A-MEAL "Sticker" on a box or glass jar and place on the dining table. At each meal, drop in at least a penny for the work of the Mission Board at home and abroad. Each family thereby becomes a witness of Jesus Christ, and by their gifts "go . . . into all the world, and preach the Gospel!"

* * * There are approximately 10,000 families in our Southern Convention. There are 122 days in the Mission Period. If every family united in giving A-CENT-A-MEAL, it means that $36,600.00 could be raised during Mission Period by this Plan alone! Think what that would mean for the cause of Christian Missions.

Just A-Cent-A-Meal

* * * A-CENT-A-MEAL . . . "Our Lord set store by small things: the cup of cold water, the widow's mite, the grain of mustard seed, the least of these my brethren. Even so, the cent, the smallest of our coins, will lead us into the 'fellowship of those who care.'"

* * * A-CENT-A-MEAL . . . "By it we may link ourselves to the ministry of the Church. With the gift of our pennies, there follows a prayer, a thought, a quickening interest in the far-flung reaches of our United States, and out unto the uttermost parts of the earth, where men are without Christ and who are dying without him!"

* * * A-CENT-A-MEAL . . . "By it we recognize God's goodness to us. The very act of dedicating our Cent-a-Meal gifts for such a high purpose says, 'We thank Thee, Father, the Giver of every good and perfect gift.' He has blessed us with food and raiment, home and friends. We acknowledge that it is not only blessed to receive from God, but it is more blessed to share with others what we have received. The Cent-a-Meal gift is in truth a blessing gift."

* * * A-CENT-A-MEAL brings joy. "Any investment made in God's work is never lost. What we give, we have. Through our Cent-a-Meal gift we put money into a bank of which God holds the key. We place therein our treasures, where neither moth nor rust can corrupt."

* * * AT EASTER—SOME CHURCHES DEDICATE THE CENT-A-MEAL GIFTS TO THAT DATE, AND THEY IN THAT WAY MAKE A GENEROUS OFFERING FOR MISSIONS ON EASTER SUNDAY.

"Christ Jesus has entrusted me with the message of his reconciliation, so now I am an ambassador for Christ . . . God appealing by me."

—II Corinthians 5: 19, 20.

Another Church Enjoys Debt-Free Parsonage

Mortgage on Parsonage of Haw River Church Burned

The service of mortgage burning was held February 17, 3:00 p. m., at the parsonage. The parsonage, a brick structure located on Highway 49, was completed in November 1947 at a cost of $12,000.00. The first pastor to occupy the parsonage was Rev. E. T. Farrell. The present pastor, W. P. Smith, assumed his duties June 1, 1949. Those in the picture are, left to right, Herman Neese, chairman of the board of trustees, Supt. W. T. Scott, W. P. Smith, and W. W. Snyder, president of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. Mr. Snyder gave the invocation. Following the invocation the group read responsively a selection appropriate for the occasion. Herman Neese, representative of the men; Mrs. J. C. Wilkins, representative of the women; and Ruth Williams, representative of the young people, read respectively the sentences of consecration and dedication. Supt. Scott had the prayer of consecration and dedication. The pastor pronounced the benediction. Following the service, open house was held. Incidentally, on this same day Dr. D. J. Bowden spoke at the morning worship service, and two additional rooms at the church were dedicated—one as a Sunday school room and one as the pastor's study. These were built at a cost of $2,000.00.

The corner stone of the new building at The Church of Wide Fellowship in Southern Pines will be laid Sunday afternoon. Supt. W. T. Scott will speak.

A MINISTER'S APPRECIATION.

In the past two years I have had the privilege of living in one of the finest communities anywhere, and I feel that I owe these people a public recognition for their Christian attitude.

First of all I would like to say that I have never served a church where I received any better cooperation and enthusiastic support than I have received from Hunterdale Christian Church. Usually when a minister goes into a church and makes as many changes as I have made in this church, he is ridden out of the community on a rail. Here these people have reacted in the opposite way. They have accepted the many changes with a very fine spirit of cooperation, and supported my program in a very enthusiastic manner. This is always encouraging to any minister.

There are three things for which I especially appreciate these good people. The first is the way they have supported the worship services. After a minister works all the week on a message for his people on Sunday, then they walk off and desert the hour of worship after the Sunday school, it is a reflection upon both the church and the minister. In many cases this is not the fault of the minister. This has not been true with the people in the Hunterdale Church. Almost all the people of this church remain for the worship service after the Sunday school hour. This loyal support has made the work of the minister very pleasant.

The second thing I appreciate is the unusual loyalty of the young people. They constitute almost half of my congregation for the evening worship. It is always a great source of joy to any minister to see such seriousness upon the part of the young people, especially when there are so many places of entertainment open for them on Sunday evening.

The third thing I appreciate about the people of Hunterdale is the fact that they let their minister and family live as other human beings without fear of being criticized or condemned. After all, a minister and his family are human just as other folks are; and there is nothing a minister and family appreciates more than the people letting them live as such.

As for the community of Hunterdale, I don't think it can be beat as a place in which to live. One thing I have particular noticed about this community is that the people are very neighborly and helpful. They are just one big happy family, regardless of church affiliations. Some of the very best friends we have are loyal Methodist and Baptist. The community is not cursed with idle gossip in regards to the mistakes and errors of their neighbors, as is found in so many communities. The people live and let live, and as a result they are happy as neighbors.

In regards to Franklin as a town, I was much impressed when I first arrived here two years ago with the unusual friendliness of the people. The first time I walked down the street most everybody I met spoke and smiled as if they had always known me. This friendly attitude is an asset Franklin should never lose. It is as open arms to us who come and go, of which we shall never cease to appreciate.

MELVIN DOLLAR.

Asking for Dollars Is Fun!

By JOHN R. SCOTTFORD

"The gumption of this class gets the acid test tonight," announced Bert Wheelock, president of the Two by Two Class, as the couples settled down for their monthly business meeting—and party.

"That sounds like work," muttered Beth Thompson.

"Yes — real work. The finance committee of the church wants us to take over the active part of the annual canvass for funds."

"'Active part'—what does that mean?" asked Beth.

"That is a polite term for leg work," explained Bert. "They want us to go around and ask for the money."

"What's the big idea?" asked Sam West, the most rotund member of the class.

"It is a big idea. The finance committee has really had a thought. In fact, they have had two. The first is that too many people think of this as an old folks church. They want to correct that notion by sending some bright and shiny young face, unwrinkled by care and undisturbed by age, around to call on the people."

"I'm glad that they know they're old and that we are young," chuckled Sam.

"The second idea is that a new broom might dust out some corners and bring in some dollars that the old one has been missing."

"That isn't too far from the truth," laughed Gwen Owen, "but I admire their nerve. Do they want us to do everything?"

"It isn't as bad as it sounds," reassured Bert. "If we will do the actual calling, they'll do everything else. That includes sending out letters telling everybody that we are coming, and setting us up to a big dinner when we get back."

"If our wives go with us, who tends the babies?"

"They've promised to give us as many experienced grandmothers as we may need."

"How about the folks who don't have cars? Must they work their legs?"

"They'll lend us cars, and send their sons and daughters along for chauffeurs. They aren't aiming to give us any 'outs.'"

"But I don't even belong to the church," objected Drew Macklin. "Do they want me to go out?"

"You're welcome, and you're needed. As an experienced salesman, we might send you to our tough prospects."

"Must we call on everyone?" asked Beth Owen. "Imagine me calling on the president of the bank and suggesting that he boost his pledge from five to ten dollars a week!"

"That's a good question, and they've thought about it," explained Bert. "They don't think that we would be particularly efficacious on the well seasoned pillars of the church. The plan is to have a Loyalty Sunday and take pledges in church from the standbys. Then they want us to go out and see everybody else; the backslid church members, the parents of the Sunday school children, the new people in town. These are the folks who will need some of Drew's salesmanship."

"Are we going to ask outsiders to give to our church?" asked Beth Thompson.

"Why not? They need our church and we need their money. Maybe we can make church members out of some of them."

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

REGIONAL PLANS MADE IN FLORIDA

These lines are being written in Florida—Ahem! No, the Editor is not here on a leisurely vacation, but is enjoying this tropical paradise for two fleeting days by virtue of membership on the Southeast Regional Committee. Now and then one does enjoy the sweet compensations of work.

Here at the Florida Conference Center one may gain respite from the rigors of winter in the North and shallow South. Lake Byrd is on one side, ever beckoning for a dip, a line, or an oar, and sending forth its warm, gentle breezes.

Oranges grow in the back yard. These sun-kissed delicacies ripen by the thousands. Anemic, retired and deflated souls come here for this health-restoring fruit and atmosphere; enjoy warmth and sunshine rather than snow and steam heat, thereby gaining a new lease on life. One could gaze upon the orange and meditate at length on the divine alchemy that conjured up such a delectable article.

The peace of God seems quite real here in this shirt-sleeve weather. The only things to mar our complete happiness has been the burden and inconvenience of unnecessary vest and topcoats. Perhaps we shall know better next time—if there is a next time. Permission is hereby granted in advance if anyone wants to nominate the writer for another Florida hibernating committee!

Just what is this Southeast Regional Committee, someone may ask. It consists of a president and vice-president, the superintendents and convention representatives within the Southeast. These representatives sit down together to evolve and enunciate a denominational strategy for the region. These Conventions and State Conferences are not only related organically to the General Council, they are related to each other by virtue of their proximity.

Such a relationship has been fruitful in the past. Our churches in Georgia and Alabama were once a part of the Southern Convention. The President of Elon College came from Georgia and the President of the Southern Convention came from Alabama. Our Superintendent and Educational Secretary served for a period in Florida. Ways must be found to perpetuate and strengthen this fruitful relationship.

We have four capable superintendents in the region: D. W. Shepherd, J. T. Stanley, W. N. Tuttle, and W. T. Scott. Mr. Shepherd, who serves in Georgia and Alabama, is a native of North Carolina. Close acquaintance and cooperation between these denominational officials is essential to the health and progress of our fellowship.

The report of Dr. Ross Sanderson has given a new impetus to self-evaluation, and this process of self-evaluation is paving the way for greater correlation of our heterogenous emphases. There is ample evidence, to use Dr. Sanderson's apt phraseology, that we are moving from analysis to therapy.

Theological education is one of the major problems of a denomination. An overall study of this problem is being made. The various departments of the Board of Home Missions (City Work, Town and Country Work, Christian Education, etc.) are cooperating closely with the trusted leaders in order to give expert and needed assistance. As the imperative needs of the region are discovered, the resources of the entire denomination may be tapped. We are particularly fortunate in having access to specialized skills provided within our denomination: The Commission on The Ministry, The Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life, The Committee on The Marginal Church, etc. Progress is being registered steadily through a studied and concentrated effort of these highly specialized services within our area.

The periodic and systematic pooling of ideas and experiences, the survey of regional needs and resources, the critical appraisal of existing organizations and institutions, and the willingness to make new adjustments are essential to our effective witness within the Southeast.

All this is particularly relevant to Home Missions, our current emphasis. The new church at Bal Harbour in Florida was assisted by and contributes to the Board of Home Missions, the agency which has given such invaluable aid, both in terms of money and leadership, within the Convention. No conference or convention liveth or dieth to itself. The strength of the local church is conditioned by the strength of the region. We rejoice in the multiple opportunities for mutual fellowship, inspiration and guidance.

The Southern Regional Meeting will be held in September of 1953. The Regional Committee meets again next spring to make final plans for the Regional Meeting.

Those in attendance at this meeting from the Southern Convention are Rev. W. M. Stevens, Supt. and Mrs. W. T. Scott, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Mrs. W. B. Williams, and the writer. The entire committee were highly appreciative of the unusual hospitality afforded by the Florida State Conference, and especially for the long-to-be-remembered services of Supt. and Mrs. Tuttle. Drs. Thomas Alfred Tripp, Stanley U. North, and Ross W. Sanderson represented the Board of Home Missions.

The Evolution of a New Church

A Story of Church Extension and Evangelism
in Florida

By Rev. JOHN LAWRENCE YENCHES

An empty Florida field surrounded by barbed-wire where in World War II were enclosed POWs, a wilderness once used by small boys to hunt rabbits and an area that only four years ago was a dismal mosquito-infested swamp now are the locale of three shining new towns in Florida with over 10,000 population and growing rapidly.

Here too is the Church-By-The-Sea which held its first services in 1946 in a large room over the town jail, but now has a plant and site worth over $300,000 with an annual operating budget of over $25,000.00.

The young Congregational minister, Rev. John Lawrence Yenches of Miami Beach, who tells this amazing story and who is pastor of this community church located in lovely Bal Harbour came from Massachusetts to Florida in 1945. He was not given much encouragement when he arrived there. Everyone told him, "You can't get these people to go to church. They are here for a vacation and a good time."

Mr. Yenches states, however, that after a month he wrote to the Congregational Christian Board of Home Missions which is promoting a nation-wide program of organizing congregations and building churches in high potential areas.

In general, he says, the people here are sophisticated and cosmopolitan. Smart America dipping freely into nightclubs, liquor, races, and gambling. One must learn to begin by loving these people for what they can be rather than for what they are. They need "the expulsive power of a new affection."

Then slowly we began to discover among us key people from large churches in the North. They became the nucleus for a new church.

Now—by the grace of God—it is a heartwarming sight to see people of means who can afford exclusive clubs but are more interested in the gospel and the Church of Jesus Christ. Another unusual sight here is men who have not gone to church for ten or twenty years and who are regular attendants and very faithful workers.

Church in Transition.

Our church services were first held in the Surfside Town Hall in a large upstairs room over the town jail. This was used only on Sundays. Other meetings were held in the homes. We found there is no obstacle that cannot be surmounted. Our first church suppers were held in an ordinary private home where fifty people ate in three rooms! We often used homes because there was no other place. Were not the first Christian meetings held in New Testament homes?

When we built our first unit about three years ago, many hard-headed people said we were planning too big and that it would be our ruin. The very practical real-estate men in the congregation were all against it. Many said we would bankrupt ourselves and put ourselves in a hole from which we would never crawl out. They insisted the fool-hardy pastor would ruin his career. They blamed it all on his youth and said he didn't know better but that was no reason why the older people should not stop him before it was too late.

Board of Home Missions to the Rescue.

But somehow faith, prayer, and sacrifice won out. With splendid help from the Board of Home Missions the parish hall, our first unit, was completed in 1948. And before long it was woefully inadequate. The realists who wanted to remain over the Surfside Town Jail until we were in a stronger position to go forward have long since pulled in their horns.

Our growth has astounded our own optimism. The developer of Bal Harbour said he never expected us to build our large new sanctuary inside of twenty years! But three years after completing our first unit we raised $100,000 to build a new sanctuary and chapel. Our church is not yet seven years old. It is so young that our only real fear is that we might underplan. We know that little plans have no "magic to stir men's blood." And we do not want to sin by preparing inadequately for those who will use the church after us.

Since 1945 the church has raised in pledges for new buildings almost $200,000. This includes a new parsonage. In the spring of 1951 over an eight week period pledges were secured for over $103,000 for the erection of a new sanctuary and chapel. With the completion of these two buildings the property holdings of the Church-By-The-Sea will be valued at over $300,00. It plans in another three years to wipe out all indebtedness and build a final church unit—a large two or three story educational and multi-purpose wing.

In spite of our unusual success and phenomenal growth, we still have a few die-hards who think this is no time to build. They point to uncertain world conditions and insist that critical material shortages will seriously hamper us.

But to build a church there is never any "right time" that will satisfy everybody. The time to build a church is when it is badly needed whenever that is.

We have 310 members, but in ad-

The BIBLE and Christian Education . . .

Not since the issuance of the King James Version of 1611 has the Bible created so much discussion as it did during the week of February 10-16, when 1,300 leaders of 40 Protestant denominations gathered in Chicago to get acquainted with the forthcoming Revised Standard Version.

Coming from all parts of the United States and Canada, they assembled as the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A. This was the first annual conference following a full year of life, the Division having absorbed the old International Council of Religious Education and seven other groups in December, 1950.

Isaiah 40 Read.

The event about which all the 16 interest sections as well as the closing business session revolved was the completion of the Revised Standard Version, with publication scheduled for next September 30. A part of the Old Testament was read in public for the first time—the fortieth chapter of Isaiah. The New Testament was published in 1946. The revised version, in language clear and meaningful today, was authorized in 1929 by the International Council of Religious Education, and the work of translation by 32 scholars was begun in 1937.

How to read, how to live, and how to share this Revised Standard Version held the attention of the conference delegates, responsible for formulating plans for lesson materials for 27,000,000 Sunday school pupils. They studied the place of the Bible in Sunday school materials, in vacation church schools, in weekday church schools, in public education, in family life and in world missions.

"Plaster of Paris Saints."

Dr. Roy L. Smith of Chicago, publishing agent of the Methodist Church, summarized the prevailing opinion of the week in these words:

"The Bible is the least understood and the most grossly misrepresented piece of literature ever produced among men. Its flesh and blood characters have been so misrepresented that they appear to be little plaster of Paris saints or nameless devils. Now, thanks to the historian and the archeologist we are beginning to catch glimpses of them as they stand revealed in modern light as actual crusaders involved in desperate struggles in behalf of a decent and righteous world. The Book of Life fortifies the souls of all those, even today, who labor under God toward these same ends."

The week's conference set in motion the following activities:

Youth leaders launched a grass-roots campaign among the churches to combat the proposed Universal Military Training measure before Congress.

A year-long celebration was launched to mark the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Missionary Education Movement, now a part of the Division of Christian Education. Anniversary programs will be available to churches throughout the country to mark the half century of interdenominational cooperation in the preparation of printed materials for mission study groups.

Plans were made for a national Protestant conference at Lake Geneva, Wis., next July 20-25 to outline a church program that will hold the interest of young married people.

Also announced were nine regional workshops for church workers interested in learning how to use audio-visual aids. These will be held during the year in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Georgia, Indiana, Kansas, Texas, Colorado, California and Washington. How to present the Bible through films and other audio-visual means will be the subject of study.

Bible Observance Plans.

Final plans were drafted for holding on the evening of September 30, more than 3,000 community observances honoring the publication of the Revised Standard Version of the Holy Bible. Denominational staffs, state and city councils of churches and religious education, and laymen all are working to make the public issuance of the new revision a nationwide celebration. Mission stations in India and Africa are also to join in the observance.

Weigle Honored.

The week saw honors conferred upon several members of the conference.

At the opening session, Dr. Luther A. Weigle of New Haven, Conn., chairman of the 32 Bible scholars who prepared the new revision, received the honorary degree of Doctor of Humane Letters from Otterbein College.

Alumni of Yale Divinity School, from which Dr. Weigle retired as dean three years ago, announced their establishment of the "Luther A. Weigle Fund in Christian Education," Dr. Randolph Crump Miller of Berkeley, Calif. already has been called for next fall to become professor of Christian education on this fund. The goal of the alumni group is to reach a permanent endowment fund.

Bible in Sunday School.

The use of the Bible in teaching called forth many comments, suggestions and plans.

Dr. Ralph D. Heim, professor of Christian Education and English Bible at the Lutheran Theological Seminary in Gettysburg, Pa., reported that research by his students revealed that "many people do not know the Bible, many do not comprehend it, and many are in error as to its teachings." The main idea the average reader gets out of the Bible, he said, is "Johnny, be good."

A survey of church school literature by Dr. Heim indicated that Sunday school children probably are more familiar with Matthew than any other book in the Bible. The widest use is made of Exodus because it contains the Ten Commandments, whereas the prophets receive little attention.

Too Many Bible Verses?

The fact that the story of Noah and the flood loomed high in lessons for pre-school children caused Dr. Heim to plead for more suitable lesson materials for particular age groups. His counting of as many as 2,390 different passages of Scripture in printed Sunday school materials led him to observe, "If we were to use one of those each Sunday, a man would require fifty years to consider all of those materials even once. We might do better if we were to use one-tenth as many passages and use them well."

If the Revised Standard Version is to be used effectively, Dr. Heim declared, ministers and Sunday school (Continued on page 11.)

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

JACKSONVILLE, FLORIDA, ALUMNI ORGANIZE.

For the past few years I have been making a trip to Florida in interest of the college as well as for a change of scenery and a respite from routine responsibilities at the college. On these trips I have formed friendships that have proven valuable to the college and the programs conducted in its interest.

On February 10 Mrs. Smith and I started on this annual jaunt. Our first stop was at Hardeeville, South Carolina. We had a very pleasant Charles Howell, Jr., Mr. Clark Toole, and Mr. Maness. Mr. Charles Howell, Sr., lived in Jacksonville for years and is now in Wilmington, N. C., but continues to do some practice for his company in Jacksonville. This really gives Elon College four successful and prominent attorneys in this southern city.

The Manesses have a new home near the banks of the St. Johns River and located in a new and beautiful section of this rapidly growing city. Their home is spacious and adequate for any kind of usual gathering.

A group of Elon College alumni in Jacksonville, Florida, together with Mr. and Mrs. Workman and President and Mrs. Smith. Reading from left to right, William H. visit in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Phillips. Mr. Phillips was not at home, but Mrs. Phillips was. Mrs. Phillips is the daughter of the late Will Jones of Suffolk. They have a lovely home with beautiful surroundings.

Our next stop was Jacksonville, Florida. By advance invitation we spent the night with Mr. and Mrs. William H. Maness. Mr. Maness is a prominent attorney in the city of Jacksonville. They invited all Elon College alumni living in Jacksonville and nearby to their home for a buffet dinner and a general get-together of these friends of a friendly institution.

It is interesting to note that in the city of Jacksonville, Elon College has three prominent attorneys—Mr.

During the informal meeting that we had with these friends, in the discussion of present enrollment and future students for Elon College, Bill Maness remarked that two future Elonites were sleeping in the adjoining room now. Bill was manager of the football team while in college and one of the most popular students on the campus. It certainly was a pleasure to be in their home and to have them extend these courtesies to Elon alumni and friends. Mr. and Mrs. Workman, their next-door neighbors, attended the meeting. Mrs. Workman is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Jack May of Greensboro, N. C. Mr. and Mrs. Clark Toole, both of whom attended Elon College, were present. Mrs. Toole is the former Cora Worsley.

Bill was elected president; Clark Toole, secretary; and Walter Rawls, treasurer. This new organization has set as its goal 100 per cent contributors to the Elon College Two Million Dollar Campaign Fund. Bill made a substantial contribution to head the list. Walter Rawls has been a generous supporter of Elon College all through the years. On the following day it was a pleasure and a joy to have lunch with Mr. and Mrs. Rawls at the Seminole Club. The stay in Jacksonville was pleasant and profitable.

Our next stop was Palm Beach, a very, very beautiful city. Here we stopped at the Palm Beach Biltmore Hotel. This hotel is owned by the Taylor brothers, formerly of Sealevel, N. C., and Norfolk, Va. One of the boys, William, married Miss Geraldine Belsham who was my secretary at the Christian Temple at the time of their marriage. It was a pleasure to see these friends again. They are interested in Elon College and have given the college support in past years.

On our return trip we crossed over to the west coast, spent a day and a night in St. Petersburg where we visited the Congregational Church and renewed acquaintance with Dr. Meckel, the pastor. At the evening service I had the privilege to bear greetings from Elon College to a great congregation. We visited friends in Tampa, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Castor and Mr. and Mrs. R. O. McDonald. Mrs. Castor and Mrs. McDonald are daughters of Mrs. T. B. Dawson and the late Mr. Dawson.

From this point we took a straight course home. On arrival we found plenty of work waiting. We consider this a very pleasant and profitable trip, thanks to the friends who gave us entertainment along the way.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Our Lord said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." The ones of us who are accustomed to contributing to worthy causes and needy individuals are aware of the joy of giving. Selfish and grating people find joy in adding to their holdings. There is nothing wrong about accumulating wealth, provided we give the Lord his share. When we divide what we have for the support of causes that contribute to the betterment of man and see those causes advance, we are able to realize the truth of the Masters declaration con-

A LETTER FROM FRANCES RIGGS.

Manamadura, S. India,
Mission Compound,

February 16.

Dear Friends of the Southern Convention:

This has been a busy few weeks for Ed, and my chief job seems to have been receiving him and sending him off. Also Elda has had an emergency leave, and so more than ever the children stop anything useful that I might try to do. I was surprised, though, how we could get along without her. Her biggest value is that she leaves me free to do extra things for Ed. When she is gone it is housework, and nothing else, for me.

Since Elda has gone I have been encouraging the sweeper to bring her little girl along to play with Louis. She is two and a half and called Pooshpum. She is some five inches shorter than Louis and quivers and wails if Louis gets the least bit rough. Louis has discovered that she is terrified at the stuffed horse that he has. So he goes rushing about all over the house chasing her, poking her in the ribs with the animals. I got tired of pulling her out from under my skirts (that's Pooshpum, I mean!) so I persuaded her to take the doggie and shove it at Louis. It worked. Louis pretended he was sacred. For fifty per cent of the time she really does take Louis off my hands; the other fifty per cent of the time I have to rescue her from his clutches. Her mother won't protect her because Louis is one of the high-and-mighty employers' kids.

This is Sunday afternoon and Ed has just come back from a trip from South Arcot. We all four moved out into the front yard and everything is fine except that Joy wants to be held, and I have collected a group of children around me who want to watch the typewriter work. They are just like the Chinese children except that they are silent and don't interrupt or ask questions.

The last few weeks we have been looking for a gardener. The pastor has finally found a fellow and he says that he is related to the people who carry our water, Pooshpum's mother. It seems that his six-year-old son is to marry Pooshpum's older sister who is six. The marriage is so sure that they are considered relatives already.

Last night as I came home from my language lesson a lady was sitting cross-legged on our porch looking very sad. She was there to see Ed about a lump in her stomach. I noticed that she had her right arm covered, as though it were hurt, with the end of her sari. I looked a bit interested and so she pulled the sari back and uncovered the weest little "bag-of-bones" I ever did see. It seems the baby was one of twins and must have been premature. It was only ten days old and I think I could see every bone in its body. It would have sent an American hospital all in a dither. Later I asked Ed if he had noticed the baby and he said the mother hadn't even bothered to show the wee one to him. If I had known what the mother would do I would have shown Ed myself. Then Ed told me about another patient he has been treating for pneumonia. She had only just delivered a baby, and five days later the baby was dead! Why? Because nobody in the neighborhood had cared enough to give the baby milk enough to carry it through the few days while the mother was sick. In every village there are always several lactating mothers, some of them feeding older children that can live on rice. That village was supposed to be Christian yet no one would lift a finger to help a wee baby for only a few days because they are so involved in their own troubles, and have so little regard for human life. The lady who has the twin is going to Madura; and I think that when the Mission Hospital cares for her they will take immediate action to save the wee one. If only it will live till it reaches Madura!

THE EVOLUTION OF A NEW CHURCH.

dition there are several hundred regular winter attendants who would ordinarily be members except for affiliations with northern churches. In ### Contemporary Architecture.

The emergency nature of the church building has not forced the people of the Church-By-The-Sea into shoddy architecture. The church can hold its place among the other beautiful buildings by the sheer merit of its distinctive style and quality construction. It is airy, light, modern and functional, conforming to the Southern Florida resort architecture. We are not afraid of colors and green plants abound indoors and out. Because outdoors it is almost always sunny and warm, the problem of overcrowding is simplified by putting people outdoors.

They say the tropics make people lazy and sluggish. Is this the impression our churches give? We don't think so. Jesus came out of a climate like ours and some of the world's greatest civilizations. Only in the last 2,000 years has the pendulum swung to the temperate zones. How long it will stay there nobody knows.

Spiritual Vitality Essential.

The most important thing about the Church-By-The-Sea is the spiritual vitality of the people. It is a friendly church. Coffee is served every Sunday after services. Many who visit the church out of curiosity like what they find and stick. The architecture draws them, but what happens to them inside holds them. A group of faithful, handpicked laymen called "The Twelve" meet weekly with the pastor to assist him in calling and general lay ministrations. We are trying to recapture the spirit of early New Testament Christianity.

Every deacon is in church on Sunday morning unless he is sick. It is a glorious sight to see all our deacons marching into church two by two behind the choir, the pastor bringing up the rear of the processional line. The deacons always sit conspicuously in the very front pews on both sides of the central aisle.

A written sermon by some one of our deacons is always in the church files in case the pastor suddenly becomes sick or a supply pastor is unavailable. We feel any church is very weak if one of the laymen cannot on occasion carry a church service. If our pastors become a professional caste, the individual priesthood of the believers is very apt to be lost. Our people are also encouraged to lead in prayer at various

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

NORTH CAROLINA WOMEN INVITED TO HEAR TRUMAN DOUGLASS.

At the beginning of the Conference year, Mrs. L. E. Smith, president of the Elon College Women's Society, invited Dr. Truman Douglass, author of our home mission study book this year, to speak at Elon College. According to plans announced by Mrs. Smith last fall, Dr. Douglass will speak to the women of our North Carolina churches on Thursday, March 20, in Whitley Auditorium at Elon College.

The meeting will begin at 11:30, with Dr. Douglass reviewing his own book, "Mission to America." At 12:30 lunch (at a cost of 50c) will be served, following which Dr. Douglass will conduct an "open forum" session. Adjournment will probably come about 2:00 p. m.

Dr. Douglass is the executive vice-president of the Home Boards of our denomination, with offices in New York City. Our denomination is proud of the fact that he was chosen to be the author of the home mission study book for this year, used by many denominations.

A reminder concerning this important occasion has recently gone to each local society president and it is hoped that many of our women in North Carolina will take advantage of this opportunity.

MISSION INSTITUTE AT SUFFOLK.

A "Mission Institute" for the societies in our Eastern Virginia Conference will be held on Wednesday, March 19, at the Suffolk Christian Church, with Dr. Truman Douglass as the featured speaker, according to information from Mrs. Garland Spartley, Conference president.

The institute will begin at 10:30 with Mrs. Raye Knight conducting the opening worship service. Mrs. Russell Bradford is in charge of special music for the occasion. The Ladies of the Suffolk Auxiliary will be hostesses for the luncheon at $1.00 per plate.

Dr. Douglass will review his own book "Mission to America," which fits into the framework of the home mission theme, "Churches for Our Country's Need," preceding the luncheon and will lead a "question and answer" period afterwards.

Members of Eastern Virginia societies will want to share in this delightful occasion, when they will have an opportunity to gain first-hand information about the home mission study for this year.

OUR SPRING RALLIES.

The spring rallies are always important events for our societies. They provide a means of fellowship for societies which are close to one another geographically. Because they are for a closely related group of societies, many more women ought to be able to attend the rallies than get to the state conference.

This year the home mission study by Dr. Truman Douglass will precede the rallies and should provide an added impetus for attendance at them. The places and dates of the Valley of Virginia and North Carolina rallies were announced last week on this page, along with a picture and write-up of Miss Oline Nicholson who is to be the speaker.

From Mrs. Garland Spratley has come the following announcement of the Eastern Virginia rallies:

April 1—Waverly District—Bethlehem (Disputanta).

April 2—Suffolk District—Windsor.

April 3—Norfolk District—Second Church, Norfolk.

No word has come concerning the speaker for these rallies, but the program is sure to be worthwhile.

EASTERN VIRGINIA CRADLE ROLL.

Attention! Cradle Roll Leaders.

What are you doing for the Cradle Roll Department in your church? As we pause may we realize the importance of early Christian training of our children. It has been said that "A Child Shall Lead Us," so begin now to plant in the minds of our children the first seeds of Missions.

Looking forward to seeing you at our District Meetings, April 1, 2, and 3.

ELON OBSERVES WORLD DAY OF PRAYER.

Because the Elon College students would have gone home for spring vacation by February 29, the World Day of Prayer program was held there on February 25, at 10:00 a. m. in Whitley Auditorium.

The program for the service, which comes to us through the courtesy of Pattie Lee Coghill and Ruth Dunn, consisted of an introductory word by the minister, scripture readings, and the following prayers:

Prayers for the Coming of Christ's Kingdom.

Through World Governments—Dr. W. W. Sloan.

Through World Missions—Mrs. John G. Truitt.

Through Evangelism—Dr. Leon E. Smith.

Through Our Educational Systems—Dr. James Hill.

Through the Fellowship of Youth—Mr. David Crowle.

Special Prayers for a World in Crisis.

For World Peace—Dr. Ferris E. Reynolds.

For Our Armed Forces—Dr. D. J. Bowden.

For War Victims—Dr. W. T. Scott.

For the Church Universal—Rev. H. P. Bozarth.

The meeting closed with "A Period of Silent Prayer for Ourselves," followed by the Lord's Prayer and the choir response, "Spirit of God."

OFFICERS' DIRECTORY.

Ever since the fall conference for Eastern Virginia and North Carolina I have been planning to devote this page one issue to a Directory of all our women's officers—national, Southern Convention, and the three conferences and districts.

I received the Eastern Virginia and North Carolina lists soon after their conferences met, but waited for the Valley of Virginia list. That arrived recently and now I find that three North Carolina officers have resigned and one has changed her address—and so I still cannot publish a complete directory. Guess that is just another "good idea gone wrong" for this year!

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

One of the nicest things that is being done by our churches this year is the gift of the women to Franklinton Center in North Carolina. The ladies have a system for raising money: they give $10 for a life membership in the Women's Convention or $10 as a remembrance or memorial for someone who has finished their life here. This money has done some wonderful jobs—it helped Timothy Chang receive his education at Duke!

Last spring at the Norfolk meeting it was voted to give the money to Franklinton. This was unusual for it has not been our custom to give to our Negro churches. Many years ago when there were no schools for Negro children in the community, a white minister named Mr. Blood, and his wife, began having colored boys and girls come to their home at Franklinton to learn to read and write. As the school grew Mr. Blood bought land outside of the little village and with the help of others began the erection of the buildings. These buildings were not named until the 1940's when a girl from Virginia had the privilege of naming the first one built Howell Hall after a well known Negro educator from Newport News and the newer, incomplete building, Henderson Hall after the Rev. Mr. Henderson of Manson, who was Franklinton's last president.

White and Negro leaders worked and taught at the school which grew to be a college. Some of the students became ministers in the Afro-Christian Churches of Virginia and North Carolina. When the Congregational and Christian Churches became one, our country was in the depression, and Franklinton had so many debts that it was closed. The furniture was carried to Bricks, a Congregational Center, for colored folk, some miles away. There was much sadness about Franklinton Christian College.

In the summer of 1936 it was reopened not as a school or college, but as a training center. I happened to be there because my husband, a native of Franklin County, had known about the work there since his youth. Once, when he was in college, he wrote a letter to THE SUN urging the church people to remember Franklinton. Dr. J. O. Atkinson helped with the new start as did Miss Pattie Lee Coghill who was then in Florida and the Rev. Carl R. Key who was pastor at Holland, Va.

The school of the past may never be as it was, but it is a fine meeting place for teacher training, youth programs, inter-racial get-togethers, preaching missions, vacation schools, and pastoral guidance. The Winter Institute for Ministers is one of the finest programs offered at present. This institute is held in January when pastors are not as busy as before Christmas or at Eastertime. Ministers and lay leaders give their time to help ministers in their preaching, parish or conference problems.

Franklinton Center serves as the same kind of symbol as Elon College does for us. Let us hope that many ten dollar bills find their way to Life Memberships and Memorials Fund and on to Franklinton.

HOW SOME PARENTS REACT.

By M. LOUISE C. HASTINGS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Mother had to go to the barn to see about the grain which was being delivered. She left Peter and Paul, the three-year-old twins, and the baby with five-year-old Johnny. When she returned she stood in amazement. There was powdered jello of several colors on their beds, in their beds, and on the chairs. All she said was, "Now, all this must be cleaned up. Fetch the broom, Johnny, and get to work. Peter and Paul, you collect the jello boxes you tore up and put them into the wastebasket. Pick up every piece. We'll all work together."

Mother began shaking the sheets and brushing off the chairs, and although she had found the year-old baby flat on the ground in the yard licking powdered jello from the good brown earth, she kept her serenity. She did not punish the children. She talked to them, explained—and hoped they would not do it again. Then she immediately proceeded to put the jello and other groceries where the children could not reach them, even if they climbed on chairs.

What would you have done? Some mothers would have spanked each one, or called them naughty children and put them to bed. But if children know no better, are they naughty? Would punishing them register anything desirable in the minds of such small children? Of course, it would seem as if the five-year-old should have known better.

As I have said, some mothers would have punished the children, making the matter very much worse. I think a few mothers might have sat down and cried, for it was quite a mess to cope with. Any mother who can meet such a problem with quitness is to be admired and congratulated.

I remember a mother who, with her family, was on a two weeks' vacation in the country. One day the telephone rang. "Olive is not hurt," came over the wire. "She fell to the floor of the barn from the top beam, where the children were climbing. She is on her way to you."

The mother said nothing but went to the front piazza and waited. Down the road came ten-year-old Olive and her sister, three years older, and several other people. "I'm all right, Mother," called Olive. "Don't worry, Mother, I'm all right." Mother put her arms around her little daughter, smiling through tears that Olive never saw, and led her to the couch in the living room. She sat with her and talked about many things, drawing her mind away from the accident while, unobtrusively, she examined the child to see that everything was all right. She never scolded her for climbing, and Olive never knew until years afterward how frightened her mother had been.

Children naturally copy Father and Mother. As you react, so, in general, will they. Emergencies happen in every home, and children have sharp eyes and a keen sense of justice. If Grandfather or Grandmother, for example, comes to live in the home, children will soon note their parents' reactions—whether a real welcome is being given, or whether a "must-be-done" attitude is being manifested—and they will react accordingly.

If parents need to have discussions regarding troublesome problems, it is usually best for them to go off by themselves—perhaps for a ride in the car. Let them thrash things out to—

TWO BIG STATE-WIDE RALLIES.

All of you in Virginia—don't forget your big rally, March 23, in Richmond.

All of you in North Carolina—don't forget your big state-wide rally, March 30, in Elon College.

These two rallies are the highlights of our Pilgrim Fellowship activities for the year. We hope that each of you will come to your state rally. It is very important that those of us who follow Christ give evidence of our faith.

In the absence of Rev. Clyde Fields, pastor, Union Grove Christian Church, Mr. Bill Simmons was guest speaker at the regular third Sunday evening service on February 18 at 7:30 o'clock.

The members of the pilgrim fellowship group were also delighted to have Mr. and Mrs. Simmons meet with them immediately before the worship service.

RELAX WITH MAX.

First of all I want to tell you about a letter I got last week from Tommy Shoemaker, from our Pleasant Ridge Church, near Ramseur. He's in the army now. Here is a sentence from the letter that should make all of us think: How is everything back at Elon; I hope it is going good—no one can know what they have there until they have to be away from that Christian fellowship.

Tommy didn't write to complain. He wrote, asking me to print his address in THE SUN so that you people might write to him, yes, but for another reason—he suggests that you send him the addresses of your friends in the services, so that he can write them. This is a fine idea. I hope all of you will write to Tommy; send him the addresses of your men in service. If you will also send those addresses to me, we'll print them on this page. Tommy's address is:

AMBITION.

It was visitor's day at the state penitentiary and the old lady was making quite a nuisance of herself. She cornered one poor inmate and subjected him to a barrage of questions.

"And tell me," she concluded, "why are you in prison?"

"Madam," said the inmate with painful courtesy, "I want to be a warden, so I thought I'd start from the bottom."

THE BIBLE AND CHRISTIAN EDUCATION . . .

teachers "must not be so optimistically content with superficiality and mediocrity in Christian education. A course for leaders to help them teach the Sermon on the Mount would be valuable."

Acceptable methods of Bible teaching that he recommended included audio-visual aids, discussion, dramatization, handwork, lectures, questions and answers, reading, research and report, story telling and writing.

Parents Must Teach Too.

Dr. Gerald E. Knoff of Chicago, associate executive secretary of the Division of Christian Education also made a plea for "greater emphasis upon the teaching ministry of the church, without which the spiritual and social action ministry is certain to wither and fade away."

The much discussed religious revival in the United States isn't going to come without a greatly improved program of teaching in the churches, Dr. Knoff said. "Too many parents feel that they can turn the religious teaching of their children over to the Sunday school, and too often church leaders seem to encourage the idea. It's a job for both."

Dr. John C. Trever, head of the department of the English Bible of the Division of Christian Education, announced that churches of all denominations across the land are now lining up Bible study courses for Sunday school teachers for next fall.

"Our greatest need," he insisted, "is to guide people to see the Bible in its historical perspective, both in its origin and transmission. We must try to remove the iron curtain around people's religious thought that keeps them from accepting the findings of Bible scholarship."

"Link with Eternity."

The fear that subjecting the Bible to research robs it of vitality is groundless, Dr. Trever asserted. The basic message of the Bible has been mixed in the crucible of human experience, shaped by the anvil of passing time and tested repeatedly in the fire of world tragedies. It has not failed at any point. The witness of history reveals the power it contains, steadily progressing toward a divinely inspired goal for human betterment. The Bible is man's link with eternity."

Fifty thousand churches have discovered the value of motion pictures in imparting biblical teachings and are using motion pictures regularly, William L. Rogers, executive secretary of the Religious Film Association, reported. The association, official interdenominational agency, was celebrating its tenth anniversary during the week, happy with figures showing that 10 times as many churches use films as part of their educational program today as did a decade ago.

Bible Stories for Latin America.

Boys and girls of Latin America will be reading Bible stories in Spanish because of the interest of the children's workers who were attending the conference. They made their annual section dinner a simple meal and gave the extra as a sacrificial offering to provide Sunday school lesson materials for pupils in Mexico, Cuba, Argentina, Columbia, Peru, Chile and Guatemala. The offering from last year's dinner was added. The project started in May, 1950, when 200 Latin American religious leaders met and outlined a complete graded curriculum for use in Sunday schools south of the border.

Bible in Prison.

LYDIA, WHO OPENED HEART AND HOME.

LESSON XII—MARCH 23, 1952

MEMORY SELECTION: A woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised.—Proverbs 31:30.

LESSON: Acts 16:6-15, 40.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Proverbs 31:10-31.

Closed Doors and Open Doors.

Paul is on his second missionary journey. There seemed to be unlimited opportunities for preaching the gospel in Asia, but God said "No." The door was closed. Then he tried to go into another needy province, and again God said "No." Another door was closed. Seemed strange, a great host of men and women, boys and girls without the gospel, a man and his fellow-worker just "raring to go," and God closes the door, and says "No." But when God closes one door, he opens another. In fact he closes one door that he may open another. And to those who are committed to do his will, he makes known that will and opens another door. When Paul and Silas turned aside from the closed doors and came down to Troas, they found an open door. Like Abraham's servant of old, "they being in the way, God led them." If God has closed a door of service in your life you may be sure that he has opened another door for you.

Guided by the Holy Spirit.

The Holy Spirit does not always, or even usually guide by flaming visions, written in the skies, or by ecstatic experiences, wild and wierd. He does not always speak in articulate words to be heard by human ears, although of course he does this at times—the fact is that he does this through the voices of ministers and Sunday school teachers and friends and associates. But he also often speaks through circumstances, through commonplace experiences, through difficult and dark and even disappointing things. God moves not only in mysterious ways, but in simple and matter of fact ways, in guiding his children.

The Heavenly Vision.

In this case, God did speak in a somewhat unusual way. And yet it might not have been so unusual after all. As Paul stood on the shore of the sea at Troas and looked westward, he must have visualized the great continent of Europe that lay across those waters. Europe, a whole continent that had never heard of Jesus Christ. It must have set fire to his imagination. It laid hold on his mind and heart. And in his sleep that night, there appeared to him a man from Macedonia, from one of the provinces of that continent, with outstretched arms calling, "Come over into Macedonia and help us. Paul put two and two together. It all was made plain now. God had closed the door in Mysia in order to open the door to Europe, to the West. It was the call of God. Never mind quibbling over what kind of vision it was, whether it was a mere dream, whether there was an audible voice, whether there was a voice from the clouds. The thing was real. So real that the man staked his life upon it, and so real that a whole continent was changed because of it. That is the important fact.

Obeying the Heavenly Vision.

"And when he had seen the vision, straightway he sought to go forth into Macedonia, concluding that God had called us to preach the gospel unto them." The thing did make sense. And characteristically, Paul set out to make the dream come true. For Paul, a knowledge of God's will was a summons to start. When God spoke, Paul obeyed. The trouble with so many of us is that we see the vision and do nothing about it, we hear the voice and do not obey.

An Out Door Prayer Meeting.

Philippi was a Roman colony. The inhabitants were Roman pagans. But there were a few Jews living there. But such a few that they had no synagogue. True to their faith, however, they met together for prayer, and having no better place to meet, they went out and held their prayer-meeting by the side of the river. There were only a few people present, and like most modern prayer-meetings, they were all women. To an ordinary person this would have been a tremendous let down. Here was a vision of a man, representing a whole continent, calling for help, and when Paul answers the call he finds only a few women at a prayer meeting! But that didn't phase Paul. Wherever there were folks, there was human need and there was opportunity. And Paul was quick to seize the opportunity. He "sat down and spoke unto the women that were come together."

An Unusual Woman.

In that little group of women there was one who was unusual. Her name was Lydia. She was a business woman, something unusual in that day. That showed that she was a woman of initiative, resourcefulness, courage, independence. The fact that she was a business woman, set her apart. That was a man's world in her day. Most women were slaves, chattels, patient, toiling housewives. She did some pioneering. And she was a successful business woman, she had traveled, and she had made some money. And unlike many, successful, well-to-do business men and women, she had not forgotten God or left him out of her life. A pagan by birth, and a Gentile, she had become a proselyte to the Jewish faith. She attended the religious services of her faith. Here she was, a woman of integrity, of ambition, of wealth, at a prayer meeting by a riverside.

An Unusual Woman Pays Attention, God Opens a Heart.

What did Paul say as he sat and talked with those women that day? We do not know. Perhaps like so many modern hearers of today, some of the women did not know—they did not pay any attention. But Lydia heard and "gave heed unto the things that were spoken by Paul." And God opened her heart. The Holy Spirit did a work of grace because the woman "gave heed." Jesus was always telling men and women to "take heed how they heard." The woman was converted. With all her moral ideals and her material wealth, she found a new life in Jesus Christ. She was baptized. And so was her household with her, the family—the word may include her servants in her house. One never knows, the wind bloweth where it listeth and the Spirit works in unexpected ways and places.

An Open Hearth and an Open Door.

Lydia immediately invited the itinerant missionaries to make her home their headquarters while they were in Philippi. That took courage. But Lydia showed her courage later when after Paul and Silas had been beaten and thrown into prison, and then miraculously released from prison, she took them back into her home. In the face of a city gone mad, in the face of mob rule, this highly respectable and successful business woman invited the prisoners to her home. Social ostracism? Lydia laughed at that. Effect on business? She never considered that. Let the mob like it or not, she took these escaped prisoners into her home. This woman not only dealt with purple, the royal color, she wore it in her heart. She was regal in character and conduct.

The New Womanhood and the New Day.

The first convert in Europe was a woman. It marked a new day in the life of women. It was a very significant thing for that day and for this day. There is need for the consecrated talents of the modern woman both in business and in the home, in our modern world. Women need Christ; Christ needs women.

THE EVOLUTION OF A NEW CHURCH.

church meetings. One of our young men is considering the Christian ministry as a lifework and a young girl the call of the mission field. Beyond all statistics, this we feel is the true test of a vital church.

New churches are desperately needed on the sprawling edges of our large cities. This is a good time for "ploughing in the suburbs." We need not go back to apostolic times to discover heavy fields and fine ploughmen. We have equally burdensome opportunities and we possess equally heroic and determined men. . . .

Here is the frontier spirit and history being made right under our feet. Here is a new church in a new town for the first time in human history. It makes us all feel close to the Pilgrim tradition.

THE BIBLE AND CHRISTIAN EDUCATION . . .

prisons has proved so successful that the Committee on Adult Work voted to extend the idea to other institutions of correction.

Courses offered at San Quentin,

San Pedro and Chino, Calif. included "Our Times—What Has the Bible to Say?"; "Prayer," "How to Meet and Master Adversities," "Jesus Christ and the Problems of Today," and a Bible study course in Spanish. Altogether 79 classes, with 2,992 student completions, were held. Instructors' grade books show a majority of A's and B's, with corresponding improvement in morale.

A prisoner who has spent three-fourths of his life since the age of 13 in state institutions testifies: "Because of my wonderful religious experience from the school of religion, I can truthfully say that I am glad that I came to San Quentin; for, had I continued in my previous pattern of living, I might never have found God."

One of those who took the courses and received his certificate of recognition from the National Council of Churches has left the prison he entered "as a bum," and is now studying for the ministry in a theological seminary.

Mixed Marriages.

Religion in family life claimed the concern of the Pastors' Section. Dr. Roy A. Burkhart, pastor of First Community Church in Columbus, recommended changing the wording of wedding vows "for richer, for poorer, in sickness and in health," to positive thought such as "Will you stand by in all experiences of life?" Only sacred music should be used at weddings, he added.

The Rev. William H. Vastine of Chicago, executive director of intergroup education for the National Council led the ministers in think of their tasks regarding interfaith marriages—15 per cent of which end in divorce or separation because of religion.

The biggest help clergymen can give couples involved in interfaith marriages, Mr. Vastine said, is to point out that "inherent in the faith of Catholic, Protestant and Jew are spiritual qualities upon which each may draw to inspire great living. Since children are the real test of the spiritual solidarity of an interfaith marriage, the couple must work out a satisfactory agreement to make the family a church-centered family."

Vacation School Record.

More than 6,000,000 American boys and girls received Bible teaching last summer in vacation church schools—the largest enrollment in history, an appropriate record for the fiftieth anniversary of the movement observed in 1951. This announcement was made at the annual luncheon of the International Association of Daily Vacation Bible Schools, of which Congressman Ralph W. Gwinn, New York was re-elected president.

The national enrollment of 1,890,000 Protestants in released time weekday religious education now includes special classes for the blind and for the physically and mentally handicapped, Dr. Shaver reported.

ASKING FOR DOLLARS IS FUN!

Hall, who had recently moved out from the city. "I've had quite a bit of experience with church canvasses. If they don't want to see you, they'll go fishing that Sunday. The funny thing is that most of them appreciate the call, whether they make a pledge or not. It flatters them a bit to know that the church is thinking about them. The really tough customers are the church members who have grown weary of doing good and have quit giving. They have a guilty conscience, and that makes them uneasy to begin with. Then they have to think up some complaints to justify their stinginess."

"What can you do about such people?"

"Be sure and take your sense of humor along, for they really are a bit funny. Listen to their complaints, but don't take them too seriously. If you let them run on long enough they may talk themselves out and make a pledge. Should they have a real grievance, do your best to straighten things out—and then tell the minister about it."

"Maybe a salesman can give you some help at that point," suggested Drew Macklin. "We fellows who sell know that the man who has a grouch or who wants to argue is really a first class prospect, provided you handle him properly. When you get a gruff reception, get out your broadest smile. That makes the grumpy customer feel sort of guilty, and the only way he can square things up is to buy what you're selling. As for the arguer, if your patience holds out he is likely to end up by agreeing with you. Its really quite a game. But when all you get is a stony stare and a pair of lips which don't want to part—then

 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

What would you do? How would you work? If absolutely essential repairs, and increased cost of maintenance had left you a balance of only $32.27 on the 31 day of December where would you look for enough money to pay the wages and food and clothing bills each month? First I am praying that God will look in mercy and love upon these children and put it into the hearts of friends in our churches, and friends beyond our churches to help pay the bills currently. That is my prayer and now I have given you the facts in the situation is it, secondly, too much for me to seek the cooperation of every Sunday school in our Convention to receive a monthly offering to help care for these children?

I have faith in God and I have faith in God's people. Last fall a member of the Friends Meeting on Asheboro Church, Greensboro, sent us a donation, and asked for the privilege of writing some of his business associates asking them also for a donation. I gave him the privilege and essential facts and figures. He wrote several letters which helped us balance our budget at the close of the past year. I took his example and prepared a letter for a few much interested friends of the Orphanage which they could in turn send to friends, that also brought good results. I was so glad to see all bills paid at the year's end. But all that takes a great deal of cooperation. These friends of the Orphanage gave. So you can see why I would have faith in our friends. Without the help and suggestion of that good Quaker I do not know how we could have closed the year with a balance.

This then is an appeal to each and every Sunday school in our Convention—once each month—to give the Sunday school an opportunity to make a donation to the Orphanage. The people will be glad to give a little something, and when you put it together from all our Sunday schools it will help us keep up with current bills. We need that help.

One day this week eleven of our children were out of school with "colds." One boy had to be carried to the hospital Sunday afternoon for treatment of his "cold," and he has been in bed several days but is up and out again. We have been very fortunate this winter in having good health throughout the Orphanage.

Now that March is here we are beginning to look forward to Easter. We shall need Easter and summer dresses, suits and shirts for Sunday school and church for boys, and underwear and shoes. Many churches remember us and many more will if they are reminded. Already a few churches have expressed their intention of sending us clothes for Easter.

For all the many kindnesses we are most grateful. Only by your help can we make the home needed for these needy ones. We are urgently inviting you to come to see us—see for yourselves how these children are getting along, and how they are being helped.

In Memoriam

CARROLL.

It is with deep sorrow that we, the members of the West Memorial Bible Class of the Suffolk Christian Church, record the passing of our beloved member, Mrs. Eva Pierce Carroll on the 25 day of December, 1951.

Her many years of service and friendly smile made her but the more endeared to hearts of those who knew and loved her best.

Because then, of the love and esteem of our hearts for her, be it therefore resolved:

1. That we honor her life not only with our lips, but by being true in service to the cause she loved and served.

2. That we extend our sympathy to her family, praying that in their sorrow they may find peace of God that passeth all understanding.

ASKING FOR DOLLARS IS FUN!

you've drawn a blank. The guy who won't talk back has you licked."

"Here's something else which you learn on a canvass," volunteered Arthur Hall. "If somebody does 'put the dog on you' literally or figuratively, it makes a wonderful story to tell when you come back to church for that dinner they're giving you. It doesn't happen very often, and it does not hurt you at all. Folks who get mean are simply showing themselves up; they're not insulting you."

"According to the proposed set-up, we will be expected to call on a lot of people who may not give us anything. Won't that be discouraging?" asked Beth.

"Let the salesman answer that one. If everybody I called on bought, that would mean I was not calling on enough prospects. I'd be an order-taker and not a salesman. You expect to be turned down a certain number of times each day, but every now and then you get a surprise, and there is no way of telling where or when it will pop up. Not all your turn-downs are wasted, either. Some of it is missionary work, which pays off later on."

"Drew, you're almost made part of my speech for me," continued Bert. "If anyone gets pledges from more than half the people they call on, they'll be lucky. It is altogether likely that some couple will go out and work hard all afternoon and come back without a pledge. That is to be expected. We're out after dollars, but in one sense the dollars are only an excuse for these calls. What we are really after is to draw the new people and the outsiders closer to our church. They are asking us to make the calls because they think we can make a new and better impression for the church than can those who have done the work in other years. What they want is our gumption—as I suggested in the beginning."

"I wouldn't be any good begging for the church," objected Beth Thompson. "I can't even sell tickets!"

"That's the objection I was waiting for," laughed Bert. "You aren't going to beg, and you aren't imposing on the good nature of the public with tickets. You will go out as ambassadors of the Church of Jesus Christ offering to people a chance to share in its work. You have nothing for which to apologize. This is as important a job as you and I ever tackled. We are gathering money and enlisting people to serve the ends for which Christ lived and died. We are carrying forward the church into the next year by finding the dollars for its support. We're not begging, we're not even asking, we are offering people the privilege of sharing in the greatest enterprise the world has seen—the church."

"What Bert has said is all true," added Arthur Hall, "but we will also have a lot of fun. We will be dealing with two of the most interesting things in the world—people and money. Folks are always fun, but they get funnier when you ask for their dollars. In a sense we will be playing a game. Each prospect is a puzzle to work. You'll know something about most of these people before you ring their doorbells, but you should have your eyes open and your wits working when they come to the door. Making the right approach is more sport than fishing. The trick is to concentrate upon them. That compels you to forget about yourself. Then you feel your way along. If you do it right, in comes the fish—and they sign your cards!"

"Arthur's going to make real salesmen out of you people" chuckled Bert. "He really has all the instincts, even if he does work for the bank."

"The way the serious and the fun side can get mixed up on a canvass is wonderful," Arthur went on. "Once my wife and I solicited an Englishman married to a Scotch woman. We had an uproarious hour while he tried to get his Scotch wife to sign the pledge, but he finally had to do it himself. He wound up by giving us a quart brick of icecream as a sort of commission on the sale. But some weeks later the man died. This happened in the city, where you don't know many people. In her hour of grief, the Scotch woman called up my wife on the phone, and I went around to see her. That hilarious canvass call really meant something to those people. We were awfully glad that we had made it."

"We haven't voted anything yet," suggested Sam, "but I have a hunch that we're not only going to go out on that canvass, but that we'll have a heap of fun asking for dollars!"

"And the town will discover that our church has a new look," added Beth.

cerning the joy to be derived from giving. Not only are we promised joy, but we are promised an increase of that which may remain in our possession. The blessings of God upon nine dimes may mean more to us than if we kept the ten and did not give the one. The blessings of God upon an individual means more than a sense of economic security established by the withholding from God that which justly belongs to him.

OUR MISSION IN MICRONESIA

By ALICE E. CARY

THE AMERICAN BOARD, with 8 missionaries, aided by 4 Germans of the Liebenzeller Mission, is responsible for all the Protestant mission work being done in five island areas, separated by hundreds of sea miles from each other.

CHURCH AND SUNDAY SERVICES are of prime importance to the Islanders. Worshipping in rebuilt or repaired buildings, they are served by their island pastors, with the help of the missionaries.

THE CHURCH AND SCHOOLS go hand in hand. To send their children to our Christian Training Schools is the ambition of all church members. From these four schools come the future ministers for Micronesia.

A THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY is to open at Ponape this year to train pastors to serve the churches in both the Marshall and Caroline Islands, and to replace the men educated before the war, and now insufficient in numbers and strength to care for their parishes.

MORNING STAR VI has given fine service as it has sailed far and wide bringing inspiration to Christians on lonely islands. Now it must be replaced by a larger, more adequate Morning Star VIII. A ship, to carry people and supplies to our far flung mission field is a necessity in carrying on the work of the churches in schools.

NEW EFFORT IS NEEDED AT THE FOLLOWING POINTS:

Six new missionary families so that each of the areas may have at least two families. The Foreign Mission Division of the Community Churches and Park Street Church in Boston are considering sending recruits.

Funds to purchase Morning Star VII, which cannot be replaced by the sale proceeds of the present ship.

Funds to put our school buildings in good shape, and equip them to meet the educational standards set by the U. S. Government.

Assistance to the churches in their service to the peoples on the outlying islands who lack Christian teaching and leadership.

EUTAW COMMUNITY CHURCH CELEBRATES ITS FIRST ANNIVERSARY

Shown at the speaker's table are Mrs. J. O. Tally, Jr., wife of the Mayor; Mrs. John G. Truitt, Mrs. K. M. Lindner, Mr. Lindner, Mrs. F. L. Rogers and Dr. Truitt.

The Eutaw Community Church (Congregational Christian) of Fayetteville, North Carolina, celebrated its first anniversary with a dinner meeting on Wednesday evening, March 5. The Rev. Kenneth M. Lindner, minister, presided, and messages were given by Dr. John G. Truitt, the Rev. Fred P. Register and Dr. W. B. O'Neill. Mrs. F. L. Rogers, donor of the six-acre site in the new Eutaw subdivision, was present to light the candle and cut the birthday cake.

The neighboring Congregational Christian Church of Hope Mills sent greetings and a profuse floral decoration, which was presented by its Sunday school superintendent, Mr. Roy Kyle, and Mrs. Kyle.

Under the leadership of Mr. Lindner, the church has gained strength and is now holding Sunday school and church services in its temporary meeting place at 815 Ethelored Street. Plans are being developed for the building of a first unit on the Eutaw Church site.

News Flashes

Mr. A. H. Melver, prominent North Carolina layman, who has been under treatment at Duke Hospital in Durham, will return to his home in Sanford this week.

Dr. Robert Lee House is assisting Rev. Joe French in a financial project this week at Lanett, Alabama. The financial project is the initial step in a building project.

JOINT CLASS MEETING AT LIBERTY SPRING.

Mr. G. C. Mann, Principal of Cypress Elementary School was guest speaker at a joint supper meeting of the R. E. Rogers Ladies' Bible Class and the A. H. Savage Men's Bible Class, on February 18, at Liberty Spring Christian Church.

Mr. Mann's topic was "Two Words—Right and Wrong." He said we cannot escape history—in the past there has been conflict between right and wrong and there is the same today. He stated further we must have a revival of conscience. We must learn to put God first instead of self first. To help our American democracy to survive, we need Christian Education in the home, church, and school. It is only by precept and example that we may make a better world.

A delicious tenderloin supper was served by the young people.

Invocation was said by Mr. R. E. Rogers and the benediction was by Mr. N. W. Byrd.

There were sixty present.

MRS. EDWARD HARRELL.

AGRICULTURAL SPECIALIST GOES TO PHILIPPINES.

Guy A. Thelin, Congregational Christian agricultural specialist and educationalist in China, is sailing today, March 20, on the President Jefferson (American President Lines) from San Francisco to Manila en route to a new assignment as an agricultural specialist on the island of Mindanao, Philippine Islands, under the American Board.

Later Mr. Thelin will be joined by his wife, the former Elizabeth Cushman of Pawtucket, Rhode Island, but now residing in Sioux Falls, South Dakota. Their two sons, Mark, 19, and Robert, 17, will remain in the U. S. A. to continue their education. Mark Thelin is a student at Oberlin College.

Mr. Thelin began his Far Eastern career under the American Board in 1924 and helped carry on in the Union High School of Foochow China the kind of specialized, practical education that is now being advocated by the Point IV Program. He went with the school when it was forced to become a refugee institution before invading Japanese armies and worked in Foochow under the new regime of China for a period until it was taken over by the "liberating" forces!

PICTURE OF THE MONTH.

"CRY THE BELOVED COUNTRY."

This picture, released by Lopert Films Corporation, is a social document presenting a serious and compelling study of racial tensions and personal relationships in South Africa. To bring Alan Paton's celebrated book to the screen was no easy task, but it has been satisfactorily achieved by a realistic treatment of plot and characterizations. Filmed in the farming plateaus of Natal where large agricultural enterprises are to be found near barely-thriving native villages, and in Johannesburg and neighboring miserable shantytown, the picture encompasses all the situations exposed in the book. The old Zulu priest of the Anglican church leaves his village to go to the city to find his sister and his son. Both have fallen into serious trouble and the discoveries he makes are shattering to his emotions, his self-respect and his faith. His greatest sorrow comes when he finds that his own son had a part in the murder of a man who had been a foremost champion of the colored race. The old priest finds a friend in the grieving and at first bitter father of the murdered man.

In this strong adaptation of the novel, excellent character actors show people at their best and at their worst. The use of the local citizenry, who had never before acted, gives authenticity. Infinite pity is the thread holding the picture together. There are many heart-breaking episodes but no sentimental touches to spoil a soul-stirring drama which explores the greatness of man's soul and the depth of his suffering.

BON VOYAGE, MISSES BUELL AND CREW!

Miss Constance Buell of Wellesley Hills, Massachusetts, and Miss Angie Crew of West Milton, Ohio, both Congregational Christian missionary educators under the American Board in the Far East, sailed Monday, March 17 on the M. S. Lisholt (Ivaran Line) from San Pedro California, to Kobe Japan, where they will become members of the faculty of Kobe College.

Miss Buell, who was one of the last missionaries out of Tientsin, North China, in 1951, after five years behind the "Bamboo Curtain," now takes up her work in a new country.

Miss Crew began service in Japan in 1923 and with the exception of temporary service in Talas, Turkey, (Continued on page 7.)

Superintendents Meet

One of the stories making the rounds recently tells of a minister who seemed to be a failure, who could not hold a church for more than a year; then, after three months of Hadecol, he became a state superintendent!

No tonic was administered, but our Sunday school superintendents have been given a lift in a series of conference meetings. Sanford, Monticello, Asheboro and Suffolk will be remembered for these delightful meetings. At each meeting a bountiful meal was served and a most practical and helpful program followed.

The superintendent is the key man in every church. He must be on duty in some churches when the minister is not present. His leadership largely determines the educational policy of the church school. Since his is a volunteer, non-professional task, he deserves every possible assistance. Surely we need to magnify the office of the superintendent and give it every opportunity to succeed.

The Board of Christian Education and Sunday School Convention officers have given a fine example of churchmanship in setting up these meetings. The majority of the pastors found it possible to attend the meetings. We may reasonably assume that these superintendents returned home with a more adequate conception of their task and a closer acquaintance with the tools by which the task is accomplished. No little credit goes to the ladies of the host churches who served.

The Board of Christian Education has assembled a kit of varied, concise material for the superintendents. As this material is studied and the impressions of the various meetings are pondered by those who were in attendance, and as they are passed on to others in these various schools, one can visualize something of the progress which may be realized during the coming weeks in multiplied schools. A new day is dawning in many of these schools.

Your Offering for Missions

Various ways have been suggested for the receiving of your missionary offering. Some are using the Cent-a-Meal plan. The Easter Offering for missions will be received in many churches. Churches which of necessity must have a different emphasis at Easter may observe "One Great Hour of Sharing," March 23. In any event, it fits perfectly into our schedule of missionary emphasis.

Dr. Stanley I. Stuber, director, says:

"Some of us may have grown weary of special appeals. Many of us, not knowing the real needs, have grown indifferent in our Christian stewardship. A few of us, who have neglected Bible reading and prayer, have lost the compassionate spirit of Christ. All this adds up to a church which does not care.

"Just as long as people continue to suffer, Christians must try to help. Today thousands upon thousands of refugees are suffering terribly. They are mainly in Korea, India, Palestine and Central Europe. They need not only physical assistance, but spiritual aid. They need to know that Christians in America really care.

"Twenty-one denominations are providing this spring a channel, through local churches, by which we may aid those who are homeless and who need a spiritual, as well as physical, ministry. This channel is the united appeal for relief and reconstruction known as 'One Great Hour of Sharing.' Now is the time to plan to take an offering, either on Sunday, March 23, or some other Sunday. I invite every pastor, and every member of a Christian church, to participate in this great hour of sharing."

Whatever method of receiving the offering one may select, tithing will make a difference, a mighty difference in the amount received and the impact made on the ills of the world.

What is your Evangelistic Emphasis during Lent?

The Chairman of the Convention's Commission on Evangelism describes

Christ's Way of Winning the World

By Roy C. Helfenstein

In the first chapter of the fourth Gospel, we find the basic principle of the technique which Christ wished his followers to use in winning the world to an appreciation of God,—“And he introduced him to Jesus.”

Andrew, on the occasion referred to, introduced his brother Simon to Jesus, and in that simple act rendered God and humanity the greatest service of his entire life. That personal introduction by Andrew of his brother Simon, later to be known as the Apostle Peter, gave Jesus contact with a life without which the story of Christianity would have been sadly incomplete.

It was by personal contacts, personal introductions that Jesus launched the divinely human enterprise of his church, against which the powers of evil shall never prevail.

Andrew introduced others to Jesus besides his brother Simon. It was Andrew who introduced the Greeks to Jesus,—Phillip and his friends who had made known their desire to see Jesus. It was Andrew who introduced to Jesus the lad who was willing to share with the crowd his picnic lunch of five barley crackers and two sardines. Not until the Books of the Judgment unfold will we know what far-reaching significance those introductions had in laying the foundation of the church and in promoting the work of Christ's Kingdom upon earth. But as we read the Gospel narrative we are reminded again and again that through personal contacts Jesus envisioned the building of his Kingdom of love and truth among men. Down through the centuries, since Andrew introduced his brother Simon to Jesus, the greatest privilege and the greatest responsibility of those who have believed in the Lordship of Jesus has been and is “To introduce their relatives, friends, neighbors, business associates and others who have not personally met the Lord of Life,—to introduce them to Jesus.”

Pastors cannot assume that responsibility and privilege for the individual members of the church they serve. Professional revivalists absolutely cannot relieve pastors and the laity of their individual and personal responsibility in this basic work of the churches.

Dwight L. Moody, perhaps the most widely known layman of the Congregational Church in the past generation, was declared by the Merchant Prince, Marshall Field of Chicago, to know more about salesmanship than any other man he had ever met. Early in life, Mr. Moody turned his back upon the alluring business career that had opened before him, and dedicated his talents of salesmanship to the service of the churches of all denominations, because he felt that the laymen of the churches were falling down on the job in failing to act as contact mediums in the recruiting program of the Kingdom. Mr. Moody, while at the height of his fame which had spread throughout the English speaking world, told a large gathering of laymen in Chicago that unless the churches recaptured the conviction that the genius of Christianity lies in “each one winning one,” the churches themselves would be responsible for retarding if not defeating Christ's program of human redemption.

ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, A. M., D. D.

And leaders in every denomination today are realizing as never before the need of that conviction in all churches of all denominations,—the conviction that every person who professes to be a Christian is honored to prove the fact by influencing someone else to become a Christian.

I realize that because of the cheap, clap-trap pronouncements of certain professional revivalists and because of the programs of certain religious cults that have sprung up throughout the length and breadth of the land—partly due to the failure of the established denominations vigorously to sound the note of the evangel—that because of the offensiveness of the message and the method of the wrong types of evangelism, thousands of established churches have allowed themselves seemingly to forget that there is longer a place for even a rational evangelism or longer any responsibility resting upon the laity of the church in its programs of Christian recruitment. But unless the established churches recapture an interest and a passion in passing on the torch of faith into other hands they will find that gradually but surely their horizons will be narrowing, while the numerous cults will be thriving upon the fact of the evangelistic indifference of the established churches. A rational, practical, but enthusiastic program of lay evangelism,—a common sense promotion program of “man to man religion” is one of the greatest needs of the world today and the greatest need of the established churches in every land.

Thomas Carlyle, the great Philosopher and Author of Scotland, while professor in the University of Edinburgh, in addressing a large mass meeting of students of that great University made this thought-provoking statement,—“To have been the evangelist of a single soul is not to have lived in vain.” In other words, for a person to be able to influence a single life to seek and to fellow in the Christian way of life is to fulfill the highest mission of human existence. If down through the

IN FLORIDA.

Here we are again in the "Sunshine City," St. Petersburg, Florida. The Sun shines here with a welcome warmth and comfort to the people from "up North." Geography and direction may be relative in some instances and "up North" in Florida and Virginia may have different implications. My wife and I like this city and state in mid-winter. White-haired people with young hearts seek this climate in great numbers. Appearances indicate to the trained eye that many of the people who sit on the green benches in the park and along the streets are matrimonial prospects. It would be fine if the visiting minister's wife could be the recipient of several marriage fees in this beautiful state. The writer would be agreeable to such an experience. In the meantime a few words of encouragement to the would-be visitors may be freely spoken.

One has to join ranks of the thousands of tourists who daily anxiously seek a place to park the car and then get in a line that seems endless to find a place to eat. And if one wishes to attend church it is necessary to go early and move along by inches to get inside the far away door. We went to church last night (Thursday)—at 6 o'clock p. m. to hear the world renowned Rev. Martin Neimoeller speak on "Behind the Iron Curtain." Several hundred other people were already there where 2-500 people heard him speak at 7:30 p. m. I think of waiting one hour and a half to hear an address one hour and a half long! Next Sunday we shall be compelled to go to church an hour ahead of time if we find a favored seat.

What do you find in these churches crowded with tourists? Good fellowship, wonderful music a cordial welcome and great Biblical preaching. A roster of the churches indicates that one can find one of almost any faith and order desired. The "scisms" and the "isms" are here in great numbers. Yes, the churches are here and well attended. The people who attend get something worthwhile. Here is wishing that the church of my choice and love may always be alert to the will and word of God and be greatly enriched by the power of the Holy Spirit for a deeper spiritual life and a more effective gospel ministry—with an evangelistic and missionary objective.

I. W. JOHNSON.

WESTERN N. C. LAYMEN MEET AT LIBERTY.

On Saturday, March 1, the laymen of the Western North Carolina Conference met with the Liberty Church. Eighty-one men from 10 churches were present to enjoy the evening together.

The ladies of the host church began our enjoyment by serving an honest to goodness banquet dinner, for which I want to express my personal thanks as well as for the other men.

We were very sorry Mr. George Colclough, chairman of the Southern Convention Fellowship, was not able to be with us due to illness. We hope to have him at the next meeting. We were honored with the presence of Dr. William Mosley Brown who spoke to us about the Laymen's Position in God's Kingdom. These of you who did not have the privilege of hearing Dr. Brown certainly missed a great message. Let me say also that you missed hearing that men's quartet from Hank's Chapel. Speaking of singing, I believe that we have some of the best singers anywhere. Some of the men remarked after the meeting that the group singing was the best that they had ever heard. The fellowship of singing together was good for us. It's a good way for a tired man to relax. Try it the next time we meet. We voted to meet four times each year, on Saturday before each fifth Sunday. Since we met the 1st of March our next meeting will be the 28th of June, the place to be announced later. If your church would like to entertain the group please let me know about it.

I want to thank all who helped make the meeting a success: first the ladies of the host church for their fine dinner, Dr. Brown for the message, the quartet for its singing, and thank also to the six ministers

Testimonies . . .

Wholehearted Support

I am glad to learn of the plans of our American churches to join in an appeal for refugee and relief needs in Korea, India, the mid-East and central Europe.

I am confident that the people in Virginia will give their wholehearted support to this "One Great Hour of Sharing," March 16-23, 1952.

—John S. Battle, Governor of Virginia.

Dislocation of People

A major fact stands out when one visits various countries of the world today: post-war relief and reconstruction needs are still very pressing. The tremendous extent of dislocation of people due to war is greater than the American people quite realize. While the need for immediate relief for these dislocated ones is evident, rehabilitation is also essential. Funds raised through "One Great Hour of Sharing" will help tremendously, in immediate relief and in restoring people to some more normal form of life.

—Dr. David McKeith, Jr.,
The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

One of the Greatest Challenges

I believe that the 1952 United Appeal for Relief and Reconstruction in the devastated stricken countries of the world presents one of the greatest challenges that has ever faced the churches of our land. "One Great Hour of Sharing" can well become the spark which will ignite all of the Christian forces of the world for a more dynamic and vigorous Christianity. In this great appeal we will have a chance to express the true American Christian spirit of brotherly love. At the same time it will help us gain the confidence of millions of people that may well help determine the destiny of the world for years to come.

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

THE ELON COLLEGE SINGERS.

There is a group of Elon College students known as the Elon Singers, the majority of whom are music majors. The greater part of them are voice students of Miss Virginia Groomes, Voice Instructor in the college. The Elon Singers furnish music for the church services each Sunday morning on the campus. They give programs on special occasions in nearby churches of different denominations.

For the past five years the Elon Singers have gone on extensive tours through the states of North Carolina, Virginia, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, and up as far as Maine. The current year they sang eleven engagements beginning with the First Baptist Church in South Boston, Virginia, and closing with a program in Westmoreland Congregational Church, Washington, D. C. Each program is about an hour and forty minutes long, consisting of sacred music from the Negro spirituals to the classical selections from Bach, Handel, Mozart, and others. A music critic of Providence, Rhode Island, made the following comment after listening to the entire program which was presented in Beneficent Congregational Church in Providence:

"Any program containing sections of three major works presents a challenge to both singers and audience for a variety of reasons. The normal continuity is interrupted, of necessity, and sometimes the connecting joints are obviously missing. That was somewhat the case with 'Israel in Egypt' where 'He rebuked the Red Sea' and the two following sections, all very brief, seemed to lack coherence at the same time they unfolded the story.

"Except for this, the singers projected the sense of darkness and other pictorialisms extremely well, and the final fugue and section descriptive of the horse and his rider (with full organ background (was highly impressive.

"In the unaccompanied 'Missa Brevis' the tonal balance was fine and the pitch perfect. Mr. Westmoreland divided his forces in the chancel so that the four major parts, soprano—alto—tenor—bass, made up two choirs in effect instead of one. Singing four part music with half of the tenors thirty feet away from the other half can be a risky affair. The Elon Singers ignored all problems of this sort and sang with perfect ease at all times.

"Among the smaller numbers, the familiar 'Set Down, Servant' and the less familiar Wood number which followed it both had tremendous climaxes. The soloists were uniformly good, and they sounded generally mature beyond their years.

"Fletcher Moore, organist, gave excellent support to the singers and proved himself a recitalist of talent in the prelude and postlude. Mr. Westmoreland was hidden, but the results showed him to be a fine choral director."

The group is composed of thirty-two singers plus Mr. Moore, head of the Music Department and accompanist, and Mr. Westmoreland, director. They travel in a chartered bus. It is an expensive trip. The host church provides entertainment over night or meals, or both, which helps to cut expenses. During each performance a voluntary contribution is made by those present. The total amount contributed usually takes care of the expense. This is a pleasing and acceptable way of demonstrating the quality of work and results realized in our Music Department. This group reflects honor upon the college, and we are very happy to have them represent the college in these widely separated communities. Elon College is most appreciative of the work that our music faculty and music students are doing.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The spring semester at Elon College began Monday, March 10. One day during the previous week a young man came to my office and said, "I want to ask a favor. I have been expecting my check for the past two days. It was promised, but it has not come. Could I register and pay the college when my check comes in?"

I thought how true to the experience of Elon College. During January and February we were expecting to hear from every church and Sunday school in the Convention. January came and went. No word. February has gone and yet no word. Of course there were a number of Sunday schools and churches who did send in their contributions, and they were thankfully received, but there were many, many churches and Sunday schools that are just as the father of this college student was. They either forgot or failed to send their offerings. The college does not have anyone to whom it may go and request an extension of time. We are just depending on you, our co-laborers and fellow travelers along the highway of life. Have you forgotten? It isn't too late. Our needs are greater this week than last, and your contributions will mean just as much or more. Should you remember us, you will gladden our hearts and assist the program of Christian Education in Elon College along the way toward the completion of its year's work and success in its earnest and consecrated efforts. We are depending upon you. We have no one else to whom we may turn or upon whom we may depend.

Kobe College where both Miss Buell and Miss Crew will teach is a high grade Christian institution for girls, the oldest of its kind for women in Japan, founded in 1875 and often spoken of as a venture in international cooperation through the higher education of women.

Miss Angie Crew is the sister of Charles W. Crew, and Philip J. Crew of West Milton, Ohio, and Mrs. Charles A. Bratton, 101 West Up-land Road, Ithaca, New York.

She is the special representative of the Congregational Christian Church of Troy, Ohio.

AFRICA

By JOHN A. REULING, Secretary

New gold strikes, development of uranium deposits, racial violence, and the doctrine of apartheid all draw world attention to Africa. Less frequently reported but certainly of greater long-range world importance is the steady growth of the Christian Church. Mission societies and government of the American Board budget provides for:

Educational Work. The present high standard of African leadership and the thousands of fine Christian homes are to a large extent the results of the good educational work of the past. This work must continue ion, Mt. Silinda Institute in Rhodesia, and Means School for girls and Currie Institute for boys in Angola. These are all training institutions.

Medical Work. One doctor and two nurses in Southern Rhodesia and one doctor and two nurses in Angola constitute the entire Board-supported medical force in Africa, although it is expected that an additional doctor and nurse will be appointed to Angola very soon. A small grant to Mt. Silinda Hospital, supplemented by local income, and a more substanernments alike are increasing medical educational and social service facilities. The African people themselves are making substantial contributions in time and in money.

CRAFTS ROOM, JAN HOFMEYER SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK, JOHANNESBURG, SOUTH AFRICA

Our own Congregational Christian mission churches, in Angola (Portuguese West Africa), Southern Rhodesia, and the Union of South Africa play a worthy part in the continuing spread of the gospel.

Our Christian World Mission has an important continuing part to play in the continuing growth of the African Church and its related activities. During 1952 the Africa section to provide for the future. Seven missionary couples and eleven single workers constitute the board educational force for Africa. For the most part they teach homemakers, prospective teachers, high school classes, or ones associated as advisers and helpers with the more than 2,000 African teachers who, wholly supported from African sources, carry on the extensive primary and intermediate school system of the three Missions. The Board has also budgeted, all too inadequately, small grants for running expenses to Inanda Seminary and Adams College in the Understanding one to the hospital at Dondi, Angola are included in the general work budget. In addition, the general work budget of the four country stations in Angola includes a small amount for local medical work, usually done by an African nurse with the part-time help of a missionary wife. It should be noted that the extensive medical work in the South Africa Mission, including missionary personnel, is now completely supported from South African sources although it remains closely integrated with the total mission program.

MRS. WILLIAMS TO VISIT RALLIES.

You will all be delighted to know that Mrs. W. B. Williams of Newport News, Virginia, president of the women of the Southern Convention, will speak at all of the rallies this spring.

As previously announced, Miss Oline Nicholson, missionary of the American Board to India will also speak at the North Carolina and Valley of Virginia rallies, being held this month, as follows: 24—Halifax District, Liberty; 25—Henderson-Raleigh District, New Hope; 26—Sanford District, Shallow Will; 27—Asheboro District, Albemarle; 28—Greensboro-Burlington Districts, Palm St., Greensboro; 30—Valley, Newport; 30, (evening), Linville; 31, (evening), Winchester.

They will meet as follows: April 1, Waverly District, Bethlehem (Disputanta); April 2, Suffolk District, Windsor; April 3, Norfolk District, Second Church, Norfolk.

Every society is supposed to have representatives at the rally for its district. This is a "must." Let us be sure that as many women as possible attend these important meetings.

NORFOLK DISTRICT RALLY.

The Norfolk District Rally will convene at 10:00 a. m. on Thursday, April 3, at the Second Congregational Christian Church, 430 Grantham Road, Norfolk, Virginia.

"A Call to Ways Untrod" is the theme for the day. Mrs. E. G. Middleton of Christian Temple will lead the service of worship. The superintendent's message will be based on the subject, "Those of the Way." Special music will be rendered by Mrs. W. M. Sydenstricker of the Bay View Church. The two addresses of the morning will be given by Mrs. W. B. Williams of Newport News, president of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Women, and Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, educational secretary of the Southern Convention.

The ladies of the host church will serve luncheon at 12:15 at a cost of $1.00 per plate.

The afternoon session will be devoted to "Glimpses of Untrod Ways in Giving, Working Together and Praying." Rev. J. Everette Neese, pastor of the host church, will discuss "Ways Untrod in Giving." Miss Josephine Haynes, director of religious education at the Christian Temple, will speak on the young people's work in the Eastern Virginia Conference. Mrs. H. J. Kivette of the Bay View Church will bring an illustrated message on "Child Evangelism." Mrs. Robert Hoskin, a member of the Woman's Council for Interracial Cooperation, will speak on "Ways to be Trod—Interdenominational and Interracial."

The closing message will be given by Mrs. W. Stanley Carne of First Church, Portsmouth, using as her topic "Prayer—the Christian's Vital Breath." Adjournment will be at 3:30 p. m.

Let April 3rd be a day when you will drop the cares and work of home and local church and come to the rally, Christian fellowship and "good thoughts" shared can lift our spirits to high attainments.

LELYA P. NEESE, Supt.,
Norfolk District.

WOMAN'S BOARD MEETING.

The Woman's Board of the Southern Convention met in semi-annual session at the Warrenton Hotel, Warrenton, N. C. on March 11, with thirteen members present. The report of the president, Mrs. W. B. Williams, showed that she had given much time to this branch of church work since the September session.

The treasurer's report (given by Mrs. W. V. Leathers, our faithful treasurer) showed that we need to go a long way for our Thank Offering for the Japan International Christian University to reach as high an amount as our Thank Offering for Whitley Auditorium—we are about $1,000 behind. If you have not sent in that offering yet, please do so. If there are some societies which did not take their Thank Offering in November, it is not yet too late to do so.

Reports from the North Carolina and Eastern Virginia Conference presidents, Mrs. W. J. Andes and Mrs. Garland Spratley, showed that plans are underway for the rallies.

The cradle roll superintendent, Mrs. Carl Wallace, and the young people's superintendent, Mrs. Milard Stevens, reported plans for these groups. The plan suggested by Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, friendly Service chairman, to have only two projects for next year, was approved, the probable objects being Ellis Island and Miss Nordquist's work in Africa, since those fit into our studies for 1952-53.

At the suggestion of Mrs. Spratley, Christian family life chairman, and Mrs. W. T. Scott, visual aids chairman, it was decided to purchase four filmstrips concerning "the family," which will soon be available to local groups. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, literature chairman, announced that the packets would be ready by the time of the School of Missions.

Dates of the School of Missions were announced, July 8-12, with Miss Lucy Steel to be the Bible teacher again.

The report of the Thank Offering Project Committee, given by Mrs. J. Rollie Gayle, chairman, was adopted. The plan would be for the Thank Offering in 1952 to go to church extension in the Southern Convention, the particular place to be the Carroll County Mission if present plans of the Mission Board concerning it are continued.

GOOD MEETINGS AT CHRISTIAN TEMPLE.

While there is satisfaction in knowing we are meeting the required goals, we feel a sense of humility when we think of the unlimited possibilities still unmet.

We have found it helpful to make a Year Book outlining the year's programs, which are to be filled in with special events and news flashes from our mission stations.

The splendid program gotten out by the Thank Offering Committee was used at the November meeting with additional information on the I. C. U. of Japan.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Last Sunday was a happy one for our family. We had as guests some members of our Richmond Church whom we had enjoyed working with when we were there, and we laid the cornerstone for our new church school building that day.

Mr. and Mrs. B. W. Ward and their son, Bowden and Mrs. L. L. Bond were with us. Bowden had been to Duke University to take competitive scholarship exams. He was in my Primary Class at Richmond and so was Mrs. Bond's son, Lonny, who is now studying public school music at the University of Richmond. Another boy in that class was George Parsons, Jr., who has become a well known track star in Virginia. He is studying at U. of Richmond also. It is very gratifying to see boys and girls one has taught grow up into fine, Christian adulthood.

Churches put cornerstones in their buildings, as well as other civic or public buildings. Look for the one at your church. Very interesting things are engraved upon them. And it is customary to place papers, articles and items inside the stone for the future generations to see. Some of you are too young to remember that a time capsule with important information was buried at the New York Fair to be opened thousands of years from now. The Richmond Public Library has a sealed stone inside the main foyer which is to be opened sometime in the 21st century.

The cornerstone of our original church was opened last week and among the things in it was a copy of July 5, 1897 "Little Pilgrim—We will go up the King's Highway" Sunday school paper. It had an American flag on the cover with a fourth of July poem. This story was given and it was not signed.

MAMMA'S SOLDIER BOY.

Harry loved to go up in the attic and hunt among the cobwebs. There were so many beautiful things to be found there and since he wasn't a girl, he didn't mind the spiders.

One day he came down dragging an old blue soldier coat, its bright buttons all dull and its color spotted and faded. The old cap of blue was down over Harry's ears.

"Why, Harry!" cried grandma.

"Does you care?" he asked, dropping the heavy coat in a dusty heap in the middle of the floor. "I fought you'd let me have zem for playsings."

"Not those!" said grandma tearfully.

"Vey looks like playsings!" answered Harry. "I wants to be a soldier boy."

"I'll tell you what I'll do," said grandma, picking up the dear old blue coat that she loved for the sake of the one who had worn it, "let us go put these away and I will get some pretty blue cloth and some bright buttons and make a soldier boy of you, if you will promise to be a good, true brave one, like the man that wore all these!"

"Oh, yes! I'll be brave and true!" promised Harry.

"EVERY DAY IS A FRESH BEGINNING."

By M. LOUISE C. HASTINGS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"You did so!" exclaimed Shirley. "You did hit me yesterday, and today I'm going to hit you. So there!" And Shirley gave her sister a hard slap.

"Children," called Mother, "I want to talk with you. Did Sister slap you yesterday, Shirley, and did you just remember it and want to slap her back?"

"Yes, I did," answered Shirley in a newly acquired positive manner.

"Oh, I understand," Mother replied, but in our home, you know, we do not do things like that. In our home we always forget the unpleasant things that happened yesterday. We begin each new day by doing the most pleasant things we can do. 'Every day is a fresh beginning; Every morn is the world made new.' Let's keep saying it over and over; let's forget the unpleasant things just as soon as they have happened and begin again."

With talks like this, Mother began to form a philosophy for home life. She listened to the children's conversations and she always followed up any unpleasantness with words reflecting this type of philosophy. Sometimes she suggested that the children shake hands with each other.

The mother and father of this family very early adopted the adage, "Let bygones be bygones," and they made it a rule, with regard to themselves, never to go to sleep at night until any misunderstanding that had occurred had been cleared up. Such attitudes in a home cannot help but leave their mark on character building in childhood and youth.

Lately I have read Abigail Adams, by Janet Whitney, and I found that one of the maxims of Abigail's grandmother was, "Never bring a painful subject twice into recollection." I had occasion recently to hear a seventy-five-year-old woman rehearse, with indignation and anger, an episode in her life that had taken place as long as twenty-five years before. In all those years she had kept alive in her thoughts the event that had happened to disturb her, and she was just as ready now to make an issue of it as he had been then. She had been making herself and others unnecessarily disturbed for a long time.

It behooves parents to look ahead and think out what their influence and teachings day by day are going to accomplish in the end. Each of our boys and girls is continually building the adult and old person that each will be, and we, as their closest friends, should be continually alert to help them become lovable personalities.

Johnny and Tom are walking to school. Tom is talking vigorously about some grievance, and after a while Johnny exclaims, "Oh, forget it!" Johnny's father sometimes uses this expression and Johnny has heard it. It is a common everyday expression, simple in effect, but to the point. We all need to forget many unhappy incidents and start anew.

It is so unfortunate in any home when discords are allowed to drag on and on. It is easy to let old grudges pile higher and higher and to allow new ones to accumulate day after day. If they are not checked early in the lives of our children, their lives will become unhappy. It is our job as parents to see that this never happens. Do we parents bear grudges? Do we carry these grudges along week by week? Or, do we try to remember that, "Every day is a fresh beginning"? Never let us forget the little boy who said to his father, as they walked along the seashore in the wet sand, "I am following in your footsteps, Father."

RELAX WITH MAX.

Ain't having much time to relax, with all these rallies; but they sure are a lot of fun. Wish I could go to both of them. Guess I won't make it to Richmond, but I'll be looking for all of you at Elon. Don't disappoint me.

You should have seen Warren Matthews, Bill Simmons, Lois Scott, and Ruth Dunn working yesterday. It was a sight to see. They were sending invitations to the North Carolina State-Wide Rally. I've never seen such hard work or so many invitations. If you didn't get one, it is the fault of the Post Office. Don't feel slighted; come and you will be welcome.

LUKE, PHYSICIAN AND HISTORIAN.

LESSON XIII—MARCH 30, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: You shall receive power when the Holy Spirit has come upon you; and you shall be my witnesses in Jerusalem and in all Judaea and Samaria and to the end of the earth.—Acts 1:8.

LESSON TEXT: Luke 1:1-4; Acts 1:1-2; Acts 16:6-10; Colossians 4:14.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Luke 4:33-41.

Meet Dr. Luke—“The Beloved Physician.”

There are only three references in the New Testament to Luke, “the beloved physician,” and they do not tell us much about him. Colossians 4:14 says, “Luke, the beloved physician, and Demas, greet you.” II Timothy 4:11 says, “Only Luke is with me.” And Philemon 24 says, “There salute thee . . . Luke, my fellow laborer.” These few and brief references tell us that Luke was a dear friend of Paul, that he worked with Paul, and that near the end of Paul’s life, Luke was with him after all others had left him. Not much there to construct a picture of a man’s life.

But fortunately, in addition to these three references to Luke, there are two books by Luke. And these two books tell us a great deal about the man. For the Gospel of Luke and the Acts of the Apostles reflect the mind and heart and character of Dr. Luke. He is one of the finest characters of the New Testament and one of the greatest laymen of the Christian Church. Who, and what kind of man was this man, Luke?

He was a Gentile, the only Gentile who wrote a book of the Bible. He was a doctor or physician, a man of at least some scientific training. He was a careful observer, a man of culture, and a loyal friend. He was a Christian layman. He was modest—he never mentions his own name in either of his books—refined. He was a man of sympathy, compassion. He had traveled widely and observed acutely. He was artistic—tradition has it that he was also a painter, he certainly was an artist with words—poetic, spiritual, high-minded. He was cosmopolitan in outlook and sympathies. He was a man of unusual literary ability. A critic of Christianity said that the Gospel of Luke was “the most beautiful book that was ever written.” Thank be unto God that this man Luke, became a Christian and dedicated his heart and his hand and his head to the cause of Christ. How immeasurably poorer the Bible would be if it were not for the Gospel of Luke and the Acts of the Apostles, both of them written by this beloved physician!

Dr. Luke Meet Mr. Paul.

We do not know just where Luke and Paul first met. Some think that they met in Antioch, while Paul and Barnabas were working there. We do know that they were together at Troas when Paul had his vision of the man of Macedonia, for from this point in the narrative the words “we” appear—Luke joined Paul there, and went with him to Philippi. It does not matter much where they met—the important thing is that they met. It was the beginning of a friendship in Christ and a partnership for Christ that quickened the spiritual life of a continent, and which is still the inspiration of countless followers of Christ. They had much in common. Great minds great hearts, great faith, great compassion for people, great love for Christ.

Dr. Luke Becomes a Medical Missionary.

That is just about what happened when Luke met Paul. He not only accompanied Paul to Philippi, but he remained there and worked as a Christian physician and layman. Later he traveled extensively with Paul and helped in the work. And even unto the end he stuck to Paul, after all the others had deserted the aged apostle. It is quite likely that even as Paul preached the truth which made men whole in spirit, Luke ministered unto them in such a way as to make them whole in body. Here was a layman, giving his life and service as a medical missionary, the first of a long line of capable, devoted, compassionate men and women who have kept faith with the traditions of him who was the great Physician.

Luke became interested in the life and teachings of Jesus. Many stories or narratives had been written, and Luke had read them. But as a cultured, careful historian he felt that they all lacked something which would make them more effective. Accordingly he set about to write another gospel story. He interviewed those who had been eye-witnesses of the incidents he related and who had heard the words he records. He painstakingly traced “the course of all things accurately from the first,” and then he sat them down “in order” that his friend Theophilus and all others “might know the certainty concerning the things wherein” he had been instructed. The result was the Gospel of Luke or “according to Luke.”

This Gospel of Luke is characterized by several distinct features: It is the gospel of human interest, a story of real life, throbbing with life in its many phases. It is the gospel of childhood, of womanhood, and of the home. It is the gospel of the poor and lowly. It is also the gospel of prayer and praise. It is the gospel of universal interest—the good news of the gospel is vital to the welfare and redemption of the entire human race. Its stories are immortal.

The portrait of Jesus which Luke paints shows the Master as the ideal man. Luke emphasizes especially his matchless courage, his boundless sympathy, his constant faith. But for Luke, Jesus is more than the ideal man; he is the Saviour of the world. In him salvation is provided for all. It is conditioned upon faith in him, a faith which implies repentance and trust and submission and sacrifice.

Dr. Luke Writes Another Book.”

In his first book, the Gospel, Luke writes “concerning all that Jesus began to do and to teach until the day in which he was received up.” In his second book, the Acts of the Apostles, the beloved physician tells about what the Spirit of Jesus did in proclaiming the message of good news, and of the organization and work of the earliest Christian Churches. It is a thrilling story of adventure and of advance. It follows the general pattern of the words of our Risen Lord to the effect that his followers were to be witnesses unto him in Jerusalem and Judea and Samaria and unto the ut-years the men and women and boys and girls of all the churches had accepted that responsibility, I seriously doubt if the spring-up and the mushroom growth of the various cults could have taken place. Moreover, if down through the years since Christ launched his program of human redemption all the men and women and boys and girls who called him Lord had accepted the responsibility of introducing another life to Christ and the Christian way of life, how different would be the state of the church universal and of the world today!

CHRIST'S WAY OF WINNING THE WORLD.

Christ's way of winning the world, the plan on which he depends is that of personal contact—"each one win one." The world can never be won to Christ and the good life by legislation or by any other plan devised by man. It is only as men and women, whose lives God hath touched, in turn touch other lives that the kingdoms of this world can be made to become the Kingdom of our Lord and his Christ.

The greatest thing anyone can do is to introduce some other life to Christ. Introducing people to Christ is the major responsibility and the highest privilege of every church member. It is the primary, and the major responsibility of the church. This in no way discounts the importance of the other responsibilities of the church for Christian social action, Christian legislation, Christian stewardship, etc., but it is the recognition of the fact that all the other work of the church can but languish if the church neglect its primary task of evangelizing.

Without a sincere appreciation of this fact on the part of the members of any church, no church can fill its mission in society. Without sincere regard for and acceptance of this responsibility, any church but marks time, regardless of what its material wealth, its elaborate program, and its inclusive equipment may be. Not until a church recognizes itself as a recruiting station for Christ, with every member accepting the responsibility of a recruiting officer, can it render its full service to God and the world.

The biggest thing any man can do,—whether he be a scientist, a statesman, a scholar, a financier or whatever he may be is to influence by his own good life and by his personal recommendation another life of his own calibre to enlist for Christ and the church of the living, loving God. That is how the disciple Andrew gained his way into the spiritual aristocracy among the Twelve,—he introduced his brother Simon Peter to the Christ; that is the way he became a member of the group within the group who seemed always to receive special recognition from their Lord and who were most frequently mentioned by the gospel writers. Four out of the twelve disciples gained this special distinction as a member of the inner circle of Christ's friends. Peter gained it by his enthusiasm for his Lord, his power of leadership. James gained it by his quiet thoughtfulness and loyalty—his valued counseling. John gained it by his deep love for his Lord, his close companionship. Andrew gained it not because he was Peter's brother; not because he himself was a great preacher; but because the first thing he did after becoming acquainted with Jesus was to introduce his own brother to him. Andrew represents the ordinary disciple. He played the role which Jesus desires every disciple to play—that of a contact representative. The record says,—“He first found his own brother Simon and brought him to Jesus.” Everyone does not have a brother or sister in the flesh whom one may introduce to Christ—whom one may influence to embrace the Christian faith, but everyone has a friend or a neighbor to whom one may render life's highest service by so doing.

Of course Andrew's own life rang true or else he would not have been interested in having his brother meet Christ. And if his own life had not rung true, his recommendations would have made no impression upon his brother.

LET THE CHURCH BEAR THE WITNESSING IN AFRICA.

Social Work. One couple, only partly supported by the Board budget, are engaged in full-time social work, and draw to the Jan Hofmeyer School for social service large amounts of local support and a great deal of volunteer service. Many missionaries whose primary designation is in some other category do substantial amounts of social work.

Agriculture. One board-supported couple and one missionary couple on local support comprise the full-time force in this important field, but practically every mission station has a live program of soil conservation and agricultural improvement under the leadership of either African leaders or missionaries.

Evangelistic Work. The spreading of the Gospel and the establishing of the church are the primary functions of the board. All of the above-mentioned missionaries and their African colleagues, assigned to specialist duties, nevertheless play an important part in the evangelistic work of the missions, especially in training well-qualified African leaders.

The 1952 budget of the American Board provides for 14 couples and five single workers whose primary assignment is evangelistic work. These missionaries work largely with the approximately 50 ordained African pastors and 1,200 unordained evangelistic workers, visiting churches, counseling, guiding, teaching and suggesting. One of their most important functions is that of providing a direct and visible link between the Christian of Africa and those of America. The 1952 budget provides limited work funds for our evangelistic missionaries, largely used for travel, so that they can get around their vast parishes.

Unmet Opportunities. Thousands of Africans are pouring into the new Orange Free State gold fields, ripe for either Christianity or Communism. A few Africans who have gone as far as they could in their own countries should go overseas for further training as leaders. The migration to the cities has created serious problems for the women, children, and old people who remain while the men folk are away, and a program more nearly suited to present conditions must be developed. Standards in our educational institutions should be raised. The African Church is pleading for additional evangelistic, educational, and medical missionaries, and for funds so that they may do adequate work. These, and other opportunities are provided for in the full program of our Christian World Mission, but on the basis of present receipts cannot be included in the current budget.

Whoever admits that he is too busy to improve his methods has acknowledge himself to be at the end of his rope. And that is always the saddest predicament which anyone can get into.—J. Ogden Armour.

The Orphanage
 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Do you want to do something real, real nice? We have three girls—Mattie O'Neill, Jo Ann Black, and Ceelia Wilson—in the Girl Scouts. Other little girls have pretty Girl Scout uniforms. I think these three girls would appreciate it more than I can tell you if you would give them these uniforms. They will cost, without the shoes, around $10.00 each. We need the shoes, too, of course but we have to keep the children in shoes—so if you will just send us ten dollars for the uniform for one of these girls we shall be much obliged. Now there is a chance for three people or classes to really help celebrate Girl Scout Week, even if a little belatedly.

This 13th day of the month I am writing that 13 Sunday schools this week have given us an average of $13.00 per school. I have always claimed 13 was my lucky number and I shall think there is something to it if through this little appeal more Sunday schools take one offering each month for the Orphanage.

Soon we shall be buying shoes again for all the boys and girls. And spring outfits—such as they may be—for everyone. We like to speak of them as Easter clothes, but you know as well as I do that they are necessary after the long hard winter not only for Easter but for all the other Sundays. Help us with this major need, too, please. And again I shall be much obliged.

The Johnston Hall is getting a pretty costly renovation. That is costly considering what little we have with which to work. Plasterers have been here already two days, and painters are to follow. The Junior Chamber of Commerce of Burlington will help us with the painting, and I am hoping you will help us with the plastering. If more Sunday schools would give their members a chance to contribute once each month that would help to reward our faith and desire to see this building brought into the range of respectability.

Report cards are coming in this week from our public school. The children from the Orphanage are doing better, and there are many good reports. We are urging the children to make a game of seeing just how well they can study and learn. They are doing good work on the whole, although some are falling back. That grieves us, but we try to see that the child learns in other ways and has much to give them hope and joy. Everyone can make a good life even though they may not make a good grade.

Any time now please come to see us. Our oat and wheat fields, our pastures and hay fields, are beginning to be very green and beautiful. Our rolling hills are lovely. This afternoon I saw a group of little boys racing through the wide, beautiful field of oats. How bright and clear were their pretty voices as they called to one another. I thought what a fine place this is for boys and girls, so near to all the advantages of school, church, and the city, and yet so quiet and free open spaces. Daily I pray that those of us who live here may see our opportunity and accept the challenge before us to grow girls and boys into noble women and men and be able to launch out into life with beautiful memories to good days and years in this lovely spot.

In Memoriam

WEST.

It is with sad hearts we record the death May 11, 1951, of Mrs. Ollie Beale West.

She was the widow of the late Colonel Junius Edgar West, who both organized and taught the Senior Philathea Class at the Suffolk Christian Church. Mrs. West was a charter member. She was the sixth surviving daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. E. W. Beale, the Rev. Mr. Beale having been a pioneer minister of the Christian denomination.

There was one son, Edwin Beale, who preceded his sister in death only a short time, Mrs. West having been the last surviving member of a large family. She leaves an only daughter, Mrs. Margaret Beale West Frazier, and three grandsons, Henry, West, and Billy Frazier.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That though Mrs. West was frail in body, she was spiritually strong. She could not always be with us but she enjoyed the fellowship of the church and its organizations. We will miss Miss Ollie; also Miss Effie, as they were affectionately known in the class.

We will try to honor their lives by being loyal in service to the cause they loved.

2. To the only daughter, Mrs. Margaret Beale West Frazier, and her three sons, Henry, West, and Billy Frazier, those to whom she was nearest and dearest, we extend our love and prayerful sympathy and commend them to the God of love and mercy.

Mrs. M. W. STAYLOR,
Mrs. W. J. BRACEY,
Mrs. C. B. DUKE,
Committee.

South Dakota-born, Mr. Thelin was educated at Sioux Falls College; South Dakota Agricultural College and Massachusetts Agricultural College. He worked for the U. S. Government in agricultural extension work and served in the U. S. Army during World War I before going first to China as a lay missionary in 1924. He has had speaking engagements in the Southern Convention.

MINISTER CONCLUDES WORK AT UNION (SOUTHAMPTON).

On Sunday, March 9, Rev. Melvin Dollar concluded his work as pastor of the Union Christian Church, with 234 people for the morning service and 204 for the evening service. Six new members (all adults) were received into the church at the evening service. This made a total of 101 new members received during his two years as pastor. During this time the attendance for both the Sunday school and worship services was more than doubled.

Some of the outstanding things accomplished under the leadership of Mr. Dollar are as follows: The erection of a new chapel for worship; the converting of the old building into a religious education plant; the increasing of the finances to the point that the church is no longer dependent upon the Mission Board for aid toward the pastor's salary. (They were previously contributing $100.00 per month for this cause).

Mr. Dollar has been especially successful in the work of the young people. This has been proven by the fact that at least one-third of the present congregation for the worship services is composed of young people. Most of these have united with the church through his influence.

A reception was held at W. H. Scott's Club House on March 9, honoring Mr. Dollar and his family. A gift of appreciation was presented by the church. Little Sandra Dollar was also honored with a gift from the Junior Choir of which she was a member.

During their ministry at Union the Dollars have been an inspiration to the whole community, regardless of church affiliation. They enter their new field with the love and esteem of all who know them.

member meeting by Mrs. O. D. Gardner, a youth fellowship worker in Norfolk.

At a luncheon meeting in January, Mrs. J. F. Morgan gave a most delightful and thorough review of "We Americans: North and South." Other nearby societies were invited to share this with us. This topic was continued at the February meeting, with a delightful Mexican luncheon.

In addition to the quarterly luncheons the Council has served supper for the youth fellowship each Sunday evening following their regular meeting. A church supper was served in November, when an evening of fine fellowship was enjoyed.

We expect to take a large delegation to Suffolk to hear Truman Douglass review his own book, "Mission to America." We are looking forward with eager pleasure to our District Rally which meets with the new Second Church on April 3.

Our Pilgrim Group, composed of young mothers and those who work, is steadily growing in numbers and interest.

With part of the year behind us, we press onward towards greater achievements, and a finer sense of duty.

MRS. L. W. STAGG.

JOINT BOOK REVIEW.

The missionary societies of Turner's Chapel, Sanford, and Shallow Well Christian Churches gathered at Shallow Well Church on March 5 for an evening of worship, study, and fellowship.

A short worship service was conducted by Mrs. Cranford Fincher. Then our pastor's wife, Mrs. W. L. Wood, gave an excellent review of "Mission to America," the adult home mission study book for this year.

Following the book review, a social hour was enjoyed in the dining room of the church.

termost parts of the earth. Beginning as a somewhat localized movement in Jerusalem, the Christian movement overflowed its boundaries and broke down its barriers until it became a world-wide movement. When one's faith becomes weak and one's zeal becomes faint, let him read again Dr. Luke's book on "Missions in the Early Church"—Acts might well be called that—and he will thank God and take courage.

Dr. Luke's Books Become the World's Best Sellers.

He did not know it of course, but Dr. Luke wrote two of the world's "Best Sellers." The books he wrote have been translated into more languages and dialects, and more copies have been sold of them, than of any other book ever written, for of course, they became a part of the Bible. This Christian physician, turned Christian journalist, wrote with golden pen out of a great heart, words that have been spirit and life to men and women through the centuries.

*Let the Church Bear the Witness
In . . .
The Philippines*

Filipino Christians
Listening to
The Word

Church union is not new in the Philippines, but the United Church of Christ (organized in 1948) is a young church feeling its way to maturity. To it, through its area bishops or moderators, has been given the administrative responsibility for the Christian program which was formerly carried by the missionaries.

The Presbyterian and American Boards pool their appropriations, set aside old comity barriers, and work cooperatively throughout the whole archipelago. It is expected that the Evangelical Brethren and the Disciples will join this union before the year is over.

Through this United Program the Boards

Support about 80 missionaries—ministers, educators, doctors, nurses, agricultural and radio specialists, and furnish necessary work funds.

Contribute toward administrative expenses of the United Church.

Help maintain the programs of Evangelism, the Ministry, Literature, Christian Education, and Medical, Rural, Women's and Youth work.

Subsidize Evangelism Institutes in 19 conferences where lay leadership is trained to serve churches without regular pastors.

Help maintain three theological seminaries with over 250 students.

Furnish scholarships for theological students who could not study for the ministry without financial aid.

Bring three or four young people every year to America for study.

Contribute to radio station on Silliman University campus, and to visual aid projects.

Cooperate with church-related high schools stretching all the way from Northern Luzon to Mindanao.

Contribute toward seven hospitals and medical units.

The American Board alone is responsible for the work among the Mohammedan Moro people, maintaining a press to furnish literature in their own language, a library and reading room, and a Junior College.

The outstanding needs in the Philippines today are:

Five new families, three to replace serious losses during the year, one to teach at the College of Theology, and one at Southern Christian College.

Generous and stable scholarship funds to insure adequate support for young people coming from high schools to train for the ministry.

A dormitory for men and married couples at the College of Theology.

An annual fund of $5,000.00 to carry on the program for the Moro people. This has been supported by special funds until now, funds which will be used up by 1953.

THE FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCH OF DURHAM, NORTH CAROLINA

Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, D. D., Minister

Organized in 1887, with a charter membership of fifty, the church in Durham has, through the years, shown a steady and continuous growth, until today it is one of the outstanding churches of The Southern Convention. Called to become its pastor in 1919, Dr. Stanley C. Harrell has served the church during exactly half of its life. Four years after coming to the church, he initiated an extensive remodeling program which added greatly to the usefulness of the church plant. Again, in 1949, a campaign was begun to raise money for an educational building. This was completed at a cost of around $75,000.00, giving the Durham Church one of the most modern and efficient plants in the entire convention.

(See Tentative Convention Program on pages 12 and 13)

The Wake Chapel Laymen's Fellowship under the fine leadership of president Reno Cotton has already achieved two of its goals this year. They have conducted an extensive visitation evangelism program and enlisted twenty-two persons for Christ and the church. They have also purchased a new Underwood 18 Typewriter for the church. This modern machine is large enough to take a legal size stencil the long way and thereby removes much difficulty in preparing stencils for mimeographing church bulletins.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

The Editor Meditates on The Well Known Negro Spiritual

CLIMBING JACOB'S LADDER

Many of our people enjoy singing this number. It is a favorite in some of our youth groups. One hears it frequently in young people's conferences. It can be sung easily without accompaniment. You are likely to hear someone humming it in the home. Children learn it readily and sing it with eagerness. Here is a song they can sing without effort. This makes singing a joy. People need the exhilarating experience of singing with abandon, or singing without slavish dependence upon the song book.

Every Round Goes Higher Higher

As is true in all singing, it is quite possible to sing this particular spiritual for sheer enjoyment and overlook its message or implications. What does it mean to climb Jacob's Ladder? Are we endeavoring daily to climb to greater spiritual heights? Are we climbing or drifting? How can we hope to enjoy the desired Christian perspective without climbing to higher spiritual altitude? What better use of Lent could be made than to apply oneself daily to the discipline of spiritual mountain climbing? Moreover, would it not be appropriate to remember in gratitude the people who gave us this musical gem?

Stewardship Ladder

Jacob, we recall, had a stewardship experience. "And Jacob awaked out of his sleep, and he said, surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not." Then Jacob erected an altar and vowed a vow saying, "Of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee." Genesis 28:10-22.

Tithing, which has been widely frowned upon during recent years, is coming into its own again. We are beginning to train a new generation of tithers. Some children and young people, just now beginning to tithe, will make wonderful stewards for the rest of their lives.

In many instances tithing becomes contagious. The Rev. Bedros Baharian tells of three members of a church who held similar executive positions in the same company. Two of them began to tithe, while the other continued to give the traditional dollar a Sunday. The two who tithed talked so much about their new experience and the wonderful things that were happening in the church that the third person could not hold out any longer. These members became happier and more enthusiastic members, while the church tripled its budget and multiplied its services.

If we are really climbing Jacob's Ladder, from what point are we climbing? Are we still climbing toward the tithe, or are we climbing above that? Now let's not guess at it, but be sure. Mr. Baharian says if the Jew, who lives under the law, can give a tenth, then it seems logical that he who lives under grace should give at least 15 per cent of his income. There are those who follow this practice.

Lent, we repeat, is the time to begin Tithing. The leaven of tithers in each Church can leaven the lump, but the leaven must be present and active. Has your Church tried tithing?

Rise, Shine, Give God the Glory

The singing of this familiar spiritual may be not only a pleasant experience, it may be a transforming and redeeming one. When the members of a church grasp the truths of the gospel, mount steadily in their Christian experience, and launch out in a mighty chorus of tithing, then they can truly, "Rise, Shine and Give God the Glory." Every Church should know the experience.

An Interpretation of The Mission Budget

By REV. F. C. LESTER, D. D.

On the back page of this paper will be found the budget for the Mission Board for 1952. Those who helped to set up that budget were greatly perplexed. The needs were evident and urgent; but the income depended upon thirty thousand people who were not present.

Not an item went into the budget without careful thought. Nothing was put in that could be left out without injury to our work. Only essentials were included. Or so the budget-makers believed. Not a member of the board wanted a budget so large, for one was convinced that the gifts would match the needs—the opportunities for our church to grow.

But who were those elected representatives to say that any piece of work must be left to die, because there will not be enough money to support it? Ministers, laymen, and our Executive Secretary who knows more of our work in the Southern Convention than anyone else at this time, said that here and here are things that need to be done and if they are done a goodly return will come to our churches in increased usefulness and Christian fellowship.

And so it came about that the members of the Mission Board listed things that are our responsibility during this year, and promised themselves, and those in need, that they would tell the people who make up our churches what seems to be our opportunity, and ask that the money be given to do the work.

Salary Aid.

The twenty areas to which salary grants were made are not just lists of names. Each case has its own claim to aid from those who also seek to serve. Look down the list of names.

Asheville, a small church struggling to grow in a great city, the only church of our denomination anywhere in that area, asks for a small grant.

Bailey's Grove almost passed out of the picture, but now there is a little city growing up around it. They need ministerial service now so they can make larger contributions later.

Beverly Hills, a new church with a new minister, Bay View set in the midst of great opportunity but without needed facilities, Chapel Hill with our missionary Jacksons transforming it into a place of beauty and a bee-hive of industry under the shadow of one of American's greatest universities, Siler City trying to become a new church in our fellowship, some pastorates new and old striving to render needed service in rural communities where people have not yet learned to give quite enough to make the work go as it should, and our Carroll County work struggling to get out of the gully and on to the hill-top with at least one new church—these are some of the calls that come to us for aid in ministerial service. Each in its own way seems to be so challenging that everyone of us would like to share our income with these very important places of service.

Building Aid.

Asheboro heads the list only because a promise made several years ago has not yet been paid in full. Lack of funds was the answer.

A new church is anticipated at Rocky Ford, and is desperately needed. All who have seen the progress in our two churches in Greensboro are delighted. They are doing well, and are worthy of far more aid than is promised. Bay View and Second Church in Norfolk cannot possibly expect to meet the church needs of their extensive communities until they greatly expand their buildings. And neither church is financially able to render this service for our denomination. The time will come, no doubt, when they can return all they have received and far more. But now they need a lift.

Southern Pines, the home of our editor, is rebuilding wisely and well after a disastrous fire. You will certainly want to see their beautiful building when it is completed, and you will be happy if you have helped to pay for it.

When will we build in Harrisonburg? Not until we have bought some ground, organize a membership, and agree on a program. But long have we lost in that area because we have no church in that city where many of our people live, and more of them trade.

Fayetteville, why have we no church there or in that area? Well, we have made no investment there, that is, not until recently. Now we have land on which to build, a rented house, and both Sunday school and church members. But we are just beginning. And it takes real money to build a suitable church in a thriving city. But it will pay good dividends. Are we ready now to really start something important there and say to those who unite under our church banner, "We will help"? Now seems to be the time for us to come to the aid of this new church.

And so it goes. Every place on the list needs more than promised, and is well worth all we can do.

Across the Seas.

The calls listed above come from places near us. Anyone can see them within a few hours. They are inhabited by our people, people who speak our language. And they appeal to us.

But there is another side to our world. Most of us have never seen it, and perhaps never will. But its influence reaches us daily. In many homes there are vacant chairs, because the boys are in military service. This other side of the world has pulled them away from us.

And there are vacant places in our churches for the same reason. We have not offered the needed missionaries, nor been willing to pay for those who volunteer. But now they go without volunteering, and we pay the bill through exorbitant taxes.

Wouldn't it be better to give missionary money to build Christian fellowship around the world? China was a great friend of America until the Communists won. India will never fight us unless the atheistic Communists win. Africa will be our friend if we are friendly, and if both we and they practice the Christian religion.

And so it goes all around the world. Look at our budget and see how long you think it will take to make the world Christian at the rate we are trying?

The resolution stated below was prepared by Dr. Herman N. Moore and passed by the Assembly of the Division of Home Missions at its annual meeting of December 11th, at Buck Hill Falls Inn, Cresco, Pa. It is of importance in the light of the present stupendous demands upon the resources of the Protestant churches to meet the needs of church building in new communities:

"Resolved that we record our conviction that the extension of the Christian Church in America, so that its ministry is available to all our people, in new communities as in old, is an essential part of our historic mission, as vitally necessary in the present day as if any period of our history. This is not to be set over against other aspects of our missionary concern as though we should choose among them. On the contrary, we recognize the responsibility resting upon us to use all diligence to see that a well-rounded ministry in the name of Christ is given to all people in every community and every land. This we undertake to do in obedience to our Lord's command and not for any narrow purpose of advancing the cause of our denominations or enhancing our organizational prestige. At the same time, we recognize that the present situation, resulting from the unprecedentedly great migration of people in recent years, threatens seriously to weaken the ministry of the churches and lays upon us a special responsibility at this particular juncture which we urge our societies to attempt to discharge with all diligence, as a measure of wise churchmanship and in a spirit of Christian cooperation and mutual understanding."

A TREE GROWS IN AFRICA.

At one of our schools this year there was a man named Julio who had been a village leader, but not well enough trained to get the catechist's identity card required by the government. So he had been sent off to Sao Tome Island on the equator for contract (forced) labor, in accordance with Portuguese government's way of keeping a steady supply of labor for the cocoa, coguee and sisal plantations and the sugar factories and fisheries. He discovered fifty other Christians on the cocoa plantation where he worked. So he gathered them together for worship services when the long day's work was ended. On Sunday they met under a large tree for worship. The plantation manager found them, gave Julio a severe beating for leading the service, and said he would have no Protestant services on his plantation.

The next Sunday Julio led his group to a more distant tree, but the manager was on the lookout. He had heard how these Protestants persisted in worshipping in spite of opposition. This time there was another beating, even more severe, and four months in prison for Julio. On his release from prison he was sent back to the same plantation. When the manager saw him he said, "You again! I never expected to see you again. Now what are you going to do?" The sturdy leader replied, "I've come back to work and I'm going to lead worship services. You can beat me, you can throw me in prison, but unless you kill me I'll go right on teaching and preaching." The manager looked at Julio and saw his fearless determination and said, albeit grudgingly, "Go ahead and teach."

After several years in Sao Tome Julio was back home. His story had preceded him. Small wonder two of our school boys brought him to Carl and said proudly, "Nala, here is our teacher who taught us our first letters." He had indeed taught them, but something far more important than the ABC's.

We come to preach Christ and his kingdom to people such as Julio—and we stay to be taught and inspired.

NEW VITALITY.

Dr. William E. McCormack, president of the Board of Home Missions and minister of the First Congregational Church in San Francisco, points out that there is a new vitality in our churches. "New and younger leadership has begun to appear in places of influence and we are impatient with less than the best for the cause of Christ in those churches."

"Some of this youthful power was generated during the war when men and women in far places asked penetrating questions about the meaning of life," explains Dr. McCormack. "Many of them determined to aid the logical organization for the promotion of the full message of the gospel, their chosen church. When they returned they began to make concrete and specific their warborn dreams of a better life."

Welcome Aid.

According to the president of the Board of Home Missions the new leaders in our churches welcome the assistance of the Board in strengthening old churches and establishing new ones. In addition, they seek guidance and counsel from the Division of Church Extension and Evangelism and up-to-date curricula from the Division of Christian Education.

"The effect upon our whole church life is yet to be felt completely," declares Dr. McCormack. "The Board of Home Missions is aware of this new vitality of hope and plan. It is eager for more adequate resources to respond fully to the vast potential of new churches and churches being born again through the practical realization of the dreams of a new generation of church-minded Christians."

VIRGINIA RELIGIOUS WORK FOUNDATION.

The Trustees of the Interdenominational Religious Work Foundation, Inc., met in Richmond on January 17, 1952, and adopted a budget of $24,774.92 for the year 1952. This represents the cooperative effort of eleven Protestant denominations for religious work in state institutions. A representative of a twelfth denomination was present and it is possible that this denomination will become affiliated before the close of the year.

The Executive Director made his report to the trustees, a part of which is printed below:

The year 1951 was the most difficult year which your executive has experienced. We began the year with a surplus of $921.79 and ended with a deficit of $632.08. In reviewing the financial experience of 1951, it is interesting to note that the receipts were almost exactly the amount which was estimated when the budget was prepared. Expenditures crept up, partially due to inflation and rising prices, and partially due to increasing demands in the program of the Foundation. The only significant changes in income for the new year are an increase of $800.00 in the appropriation of the Presbyterian Synod of Virginia, an increase of

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

WAKE CHAPEL.

By invitation and the courtesy of the pastor, Rev. Fred Register, I had the privilege of preaching at Wake Chapel at the 11 o'clock worship service Sunday morning, March 16. At 7:30 o'clock in the evening I spoke about Elon College, calling attention to the high scholastic rating of the college today and outlining the curriculum of studies offered to the students on the campus.

Elon College is an institution of higher learning fully accredited by the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools and the Board of Education of the State of New York. In order to obtain these superior ratings there are certain essentials that are prerequisites such as buildings, equipment, endowment, library, and faculty salaries.

Religion in education is emphasized at Elon College, not only in the Department of Religion, but in every subject taught and in all campus requirements and activities. Efforts to make Elon College a Christian institution are not one hundred per cent successful. We haven't yet discovered a petition, wall, or barrier that will keep the devil out. He somehow gets in, but we are not his friends. We have a battle against him day in and day out.

Wake Chapel Church is a friend of Elon College and a very generous supporter, and has been through the years. It has provided a number of very loyal and consecrated men as Trustees of the college. Kemp and Beale Johnson served as Trustees from the time of their election until their deaths. At present Messrs. Joe Ballentine and Harold Johnson are Trustees of Elon College. They give of their time, abilities, services and means generously. They are both contributors to the Two Million Dollar Campaign Fund. Fred Register and his good wife are both graduates of the college. Young people from Wake Chapel congregation and community have customarily come to Elon College for their education. Ben Stephenson, a member of Wake Chapel Church, is a student at Elon College now. Miss Betsy Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Johnson, has made application for entrance in September and has been accepted. We trust that others may follow the worthy example set by her.

The congregations were good and the spirit of the service was inspiring. It was a real pleasure to have the privilege of worshipping with the good people of Wake Chapel Church.

In the afternoon I went with Fred Register to Lee's Chapel for an afternoon service, to assist this congregation which was left without a pastor when Rev. Eugene Tally went to Portsmouth as pastor of our Elm Avenue Church. Fred is now serving as pastor of Lee's Chapel. It was my privilege to bring greetings from the college and to bid them Godspeed in the erection of a new house of worship. This faithful band of people needs and would appreciate the prayers and gifts of our people of the Southern Convention.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

This week a letter has been addressed to the pastors and superintendents of our churches in the Southern Convention reminding them of the Convention's askings for the support of the college through apportionment giving and calling attention to the fact that while the Mission Board and the Orphanage receive monthly offerings from our Sunday schools, it has only provided for the college to receive an offering every three months. March 31 is the first fifth Sunday in the present calendar year. The letter appealed, and this is an appeal, to pastors, superintendents and congregations to please speak to Sunday school and church people about the college and give them an opportunity to contribute.

The college needs your help. The church needs the college. The two together can lay the foundation and map a course of advance for our church in its conquest for righteousness. Please do not forget the college.

CLASS HONORS MEMBER.

a surprise party on Thursday evening, March 13, at her home on N. High Street, the occasion being Mrs. Holland's 80th birthday.

Others present besides the honoree and class members were Rev. and Mrs. W. A. Grissom and Mesdames Maria H. Matthews, W. J. M. Holland, Jr., and Stanley T. Holland.

A delightful feature of the party was the trays and baskets of sandwiches, cookies and drinks—even a beautifully decorated cake—which the members had carried and which had been arranged in the dining room before Mrs. Holland and her guests were called in to be served.

Everyone present enjoyed the happy event. In her jovial manner Mrs. Holland, on whose brow rests lightly the weight of four score years, expressed her appreciation for being thus remembered. Hearty congratulations and good wishes were offered by all those who had gathered about her to help celebrate her anniversary.

A LETTER FROM ED RIGGS.

Manamadura, Ram-
nad District,
South India,
March 10, 1952.

Dear Friends of the Southern Convention:

The past three months have finally begun to show some progress in my getting acquainted here in India and doing real work. The magic key that has been opening opportunities is the so-called "magic-lantern" kerosene vapor filmstrip projector which finally arrived the middle of December. Since then I have been borrowing a few useful filmstrips on health from the United States Information Service in Madras for short periods of village touring with evening shows under the stars. Just recently I have been able to secure these and other useful visual aid materials on a more permanent basis, so that I can answer calls at any time instead of having to depend on the awkward system of periodic borrowing.

When we give a show my assistant does the lecturing for me because I still haven't made any real progress in language yet. We set up our projector on a table in an open space on the edge of a village, hang a sheet for a screen, prime and light our kerosene lantern, and get started on an hour or two of filmstrips—a few on the life of Christ and miscellaneous topics and the rest on health. The village children collect in great excitement and squat on the ground in front of the screen and the grown-ups silently gather afterwards in the dark and watch from the sides or back. Perhaps a hundred or a hundred and fifty will be crowded into a space about the size of an American schoolroom; the light is not powerful enough to give a clear image for any who are farther away. But it is adequate for the size of the village except when the audience in front are outcasts and the higher-caste group have to separate themselves so far away that they can't see the screen. In some places the villagers put on a program of Tamil singing and dancing after the show, especially if it is a brilliant moonlight night. But of course we can't choose such a night, if we can help it because the Indian moon is too bright to see the screen. We are also collecting and making posters, models, picture-card and flannelgraph skits, etc, that we can show the children in the daytime. Of course the adults are not available then as they have to work in the fields from dawn to dusk.

In addition to the work with visual aids, I have finally gotten official acceptance of my program by the Diocese, and a committee selected to advise and help me with the work. We plan to concentrate mostly on the children of our boarding schools and village day schools, starting or reviving Junior Red Cross Clubs in each one as a medium for health teaching. I also want to get the various kinds of church workers interested. So I am seeking publicity through church conferences and the Diocesan magazine. Of course it is quite an education for me in the workings of the machinery of this Indian Church organization.

Because we only have one more year here before scheduled furlough, the planning committees decided against trying to start a model village or a model area to concentrate the work, because it would be hard to do much with it in a year. But I have begun to realize that such a policy has its disadvantages. Not only is my health teaching superficial and ineffective when each village or group is just exposed to one brief show or demonstration. But also my own contacts with Indian village life are very brief and superficial when I descend on a village for a few hours or days and then retreat to my luxurious "bungalow" inside the Mission Compound walls. Here, as in China, we should be literally living in the villages, sharing their life to some extent and treating their ailments, in order to really understand them and get them to accept my preventive medicine ideas.

The matter is brought to a head with the question of leprosy work, which is half my job here. A leprosarium is a terribly inadequate method of dealing with the village leprosy problem. Fourteen times as many leprosaria would be required as now exist to take in the infectious cases alone. Yet sitting in the leprosarium office and telling the patients in the villages that they should get treatment and should isolate themselves from their families is the height of futility. I had the privilege last month of visiting briefly a new village-based leprosy project near Madras. The group there has a small leprosarium which they use only as a training center and base of operations. But in their "model area" of about sixty villages they are establishing a series of roadside treatment clinics so that treatment is made available to patients where they live. And the workers patiently visit each village and survey each house, discovering the ones with leprosy and slowly teaching them home or village isolation in sleeping arrangements. That sort of program urgently needs to be started down here too.

More recently I have become interested in an unusually isolated and medically needy area twenty miles southeast of here. A clinic had been running in Kilanjunai, one of the villages, as a branch of the Anglican Mission Hospital in Ramnad. But they suddenly lost their doctor and can't find another. To save the place from closure I promised to go there once a week to see patients, and let the nurse and "compounder" carry on as best they can between visits. But with a clinic building there, and a doctor's house, and a nurse and a pharmacist, and a tradition of Christian concern for the medical needs of the dozens of villages in the vicinity, why should I be bicycling in for a brief visit once a week instead of living there and making that the center for my village health work? With such a set-up already made to order perhaps I could do something in my one remaining year after all. There is even a "leprosy clinic day" every Wednesday, with fifty patients on the leprosy register, which could make the nucleus of a village-based leprosy project.

So now we have decided that we ought to be moving again. We have to push the scheme through all the various Church Committees and get permission from the Mission to Lepers. Then we hope to get the doctor's house in Kilanpunai fixed up a bit in time to move in June on our return from "Kodai," the summer resort where we will spend the hot season.

The move is not a small matter to

RALLY AT EBETHLEHEM.

The Waverly District Rally of the Eastern Virginia Conference meets on Tuesday, April 1, in Bethlehem Church of which Rev. John Gallo is pastor. Markers have been placed on highways directing us to the church. From Hopewell directions will be on Route 154. Markers will also be on road from Disputanta on Route 460.

The theme for the program is "A Highway for Our God," with special emphasis on "Ways Untrod." The meeting begins at 10:30 with a worship service conducted by the Hopewell society.

Highlights of the morning session are the messages from our own Southern Convention women, Mrs. W. B. Williams, president of the Woman's Missionary Convention, and Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, educational secretary of the Southern Convention.

Mrs. Williams of Newport News served the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference very efficiently as treasurer for a number of years. Mrs. Williams comes to us well informed on our mission work and with wide experience in all phases of Congregational Christian Church work.

Miss Coghill is a native of North Carolina, a graduate of Elon College and of Boston University. She was a field worker for our denomination in Florida and Georgia and then one of the secretaries of the Mission Council, with headquarters in New York. She visited our mission stations in India and has seen much of our work in the Near East. Working with all the churches of the Southern Convention, as she now does, she can give us firsthand information about our own problems and possibilities.

Lunch will be served at the church. "Ways Untrod" is the topic for thought during the afternoon session. Women of the district will speak on prayer, stewardship, and working together under that main topic.

Mrs. Garland W. Spratley, president of the Eastern Virginia Women's an's Missionary Conference, will conduct the closing meditation.

Welcome to Bethlehem Church for the spring rally on April 1!

Mrs. G. C. BRITTLE,

TEST YOURSELF.

This is known as the "Mission Period" in our Southern Convention. We are to make special gifts to missions and to think particularly about the missionary phase of our church work.

Below are some questions, the answers for which can be found in the American Board Year Book for 1952, a booklet "chock full" of information concerning the activities of our foreign mission board. (Incidentally, the answers will also be found on this page next week!)

We are planning to run a series of these "tests" concerning both home and foreign missionary work. You might use them personally, or as a "quiz" at your meetings.

Questions.

1. How many "missions does our denomination have at present?
2. In how many countries are these "missions" located?

GOOD DAY AT ELON.

On Thursday of last week about one hundred women and a few ministers, augmented by a college class, heard with interest Dr. Truman Douglass as he spoke at Elon College. This first day of spring was a perfect one, both as to weather and as to speaker and fellowship.

Mrs. L. E. Smith, president of the Elon College Women's Missionary Society, invited Dr. Douglass early last fall to speak on this occasion. Finding he was to be in the area, the Eastern Virginia women also invited him to speak to them and Dr. Scott arranged for a meeting with representatives of the North Carolina churches concerning the work of the Board of Home Missions.

Mrs. Smith presided over the meeting. The Elon College Choir, under the direction of John Westmoreland, sang a beautiful arrangement of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic." Dr. H. P. Bozarth, pastor of the Elon College Community Church, led in prayer. The speaker was introduced by Mrs. F. C. Lester.

Dr. Douglass presented a picture of the dynamic world in which we live, the mission of the church in that world, and our responsibility in relation to it. Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, a member of the board of directors of the Board of Home Missions, led a "question and answer" period following the address.

Lunch was served by the members of the Elon College Women's Society in the Society Hall of Alamance Building—and the visitors are still marvelling at the delicious lunch for only fifty cents!

Those who were absent can still read Dr. Douglass' book, "Mission to America," as those who were present now want to do, but they missed the challenge of his message as he urged us to make our churches fit this present age.

REPORT FROM A REVIEWER

Because I taught the foreign mission study book, "We Americans, North and South" at the School of Missions last summer, I have had the privilege of reviewing that book at four places. Each was different, and in making these four visits I feel I have seen a cross-section of all of our societies.

The first visit was to Franklin, Virginia, where the local society had invited me to speak for them, and then invited neighboring societies to share in the occasion. What an inspiring crowd, several hundred women, filling all the pews and using chairs in the aisles! This was followed by a delightful reception.

My second review was on a rainy Sunday afternoon at one of the newest societies in the Western Conference in a small, rural church—Mt. Pleasant. There were twenty people present—men, women, and children. A warm welcome made our family forget the cold, rainy weather and the muddy roads.

The third review was for the Pleasant Ridge Society, one of the older (Continued on page 15.)

"Star bright
Star Light

First star I see tonight. . . ."

And right through to a lovely wish. Or maybe you sing "Twinkle, Twinkle Little Star" as you swing toward the sky when even approaches.

Now is a lovely time of the year for star gazing.

Did you know that one of our minister's, the Rev. Mr. Carne at Portsmouth, made a telescope to use in his own search for the stars? He did and his picture appeared on our cover one day.

There are many books to help you find the stars. W. B. White wrote one called "Seeing Stars." It was published by Harter Co., Cleveland, and was once available at dime stores. Our own Pilgrim Press in Boston bought out Gertrude Chandler Warner's "Star Stories" which has diagram-pictures and the stories about the "patterns of the Sky." Golden Nature Book Guides has one called "Stars" which is a more advanced book tells about the planets as well as the stars.

The Psalmist of long ago said:

"The heavens declare the glory of God. . . .

"Hath made the stars and moon to rule by night. . . .

"... Which made the heaven. . . .

"Praise ye the Lord from the heavens, Praise him, all ye stars of light."

THE LONG LOOK.

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Look at Orion! Doesn't he shine brightly tonight?"

My friend, Linda Seymour, called my attention to the brilliant constellation as we were walking home together from a committee one evening last winter. "Don't you like to watch the stars in winter?" she questioned. "Orion and his Hunting Dogs, the Big and Little Dippers, and Cassiopeia's Chair?"

"Whoa!" I commanded humorously. "You're going too fast for me. I seem to have a dim memory of some such knowledge of the constellation, but lately I've been so busy that I haven't taken time to look up at the stars."

"That's the way I felt about being busy until Father gave me a better perspective on my work when he visited us last winter," Linda replied.

"Please tell me about it," I urged. Linda Seymour is a very helpful member of the committee that aids in the selection of books for the children's library where I serve as the librarian. I knew her story would be worth-while.

"Father is a science teacher," Linda explained, "and he taught all of his own children to know and love the stars. I remember being bundled up on cold winter nights and taken out to watch Orion stride across the sky and to look for Arcturus, the harbinger of spring.

"When Father visited us, he and Ted began having exactly the same good times watching the stars. One evening, as they were starting out, I exclaimed impulsively, 'I do wish I could go with you!'

"'Come along, Daughter,' Father answered generously. 'We'll wait for you.'"

"Almost crossly, I declared, 'I can't go tonight; I have too much work to do.'"

"'What do you have to do that's more important?' Father inquired.

"'I must give Anne her bottle and put her to bed,' I told him, 'and my work-basket is overflowing!'

"'You might let her daddy take care of Anne this evening,' Father suggested; and Fred added that he'd be glad to put Anne to bed.

"'Much as a little girl might relinquish her favorite doll, I placed the baby in my husband's arms and went off and on a refreshing walk with Father and Ted.

"When we came back the baby was quietly sleeping, and Fred was looking through a book that Father had brought to Ted—the one we chose for the library this evening. It tells about the stars and planets in a fascinating, non-technical way that a little boy can understand. I was glad to find that Fred shared my interest, and we both, profited by a little talk we had with my father after Ted had gone to bed.

"'It has always been of value in my teaching,' Father told us, 'to go out once in a while and take a long look at the stars. There is something about their changeless serenity that makes little worries and vexations shrink to their true proportions. After a brief walk under the stars I can actually get more work done in a given time, and next day I find myself more patient with my students and better able to help them find their way through the maze of some difficult problem.'"

"Your father is indeed a good teacher, Linda," I commented. "Just hearing you repeat that conversation has taught me something I needed to know."

"Of course I agree with you," Linda replied, smiling tenderly, "and so does Fred. We've both proved that Father's plan helps us immeasurably in our work. Fred says that taking a long look at the stars enables him to leave the turmoil of a busy day, at the freight office where he works, behind him, and to enjoy his family. I know it keeps me from being cross about minor mishaps—when Ted comes in with muddy shoes, because he walked across the lawn to see the first crocus in bloom, or when Anne accidentally tips over her bowl of cereal."

"I'm going to follow your father's plan, too," I promised my friend. "It would be well for all of us, particularly those who deal with children, to renew our fellowship with the stars."

HIGHLIGHTS OF BETHLEHEM YOUTH FELLOWSHIP FOR JANUARY AND FEBRUARY.

Beginning Sunday night, January 20, at our regular third Sunday night meeting, Richie Jordan, who is a member of the Providence Methodist Youth Fellowship, spoke to us, using for his subject, "The Challenge to Youth." He told us how we, as young people, could use the stumbling blocks that we find along life's pathway today as the stepping stones for tomorrow. If we could only see them in this light! We enjoyed a ham-biscuit supper at this time given by Mr. and Mrs. Brittle.

Sunday morning, January 27, Hugh Gray, our youth fellowship president and also our assistant Sunday school superintendent, was in charge of the opening worship service for Sunday school. This service was a very impressive one. The youth filled the choir to overflowing for our morning worship service.

Thursday night, January 31, the Women's Missionary Society entertained the young people at a lovely reception following an unusual and inspiring address by Dr. Bela Udvo-noke, minister of the Gatesville, N. C. Baptist Church. Dr. Udvo-noke is a Hungarian; he has been in America only a few years. He came to America when a young man and attended college, then went back to his country as a missionary until he was forced to leave for his own safety. At this time we were delighted to share this experience with Liberty Spring Christian Church and Providence Methodist young people. Otelia Westbrook conducted a most inspiring worship program at this time, basing her thoughts on the "Call."

Sunday, February 3, the young people of our church sat in a body, about 80 strong, at our morning service. At this service Mr. Brittle gave us a talk on Lent and its meaning. At this meeting each member was presented "The Lenten Devotional" book for youth.

WISSLER'S CHAPEL.

I am very happy to report a new young people's organization at Wissler's Chapel. We organized on February 8, and had another big, enthusiastic meeting on February 15. The society of about 25 includes both little and big, but we will divide into two classes—one for eighth graders and older, and one for seventh graders and younger, just for the discussion period. We meet on the first and third Friday evenings. The newly elected officers are Carroll Litten, president; Donald Litten, vice-president; Shirley Green, secretary; Patsy Baker, treasurer; and four adult advisors—Mrs. Nina Will, Claude Thomas, Mrs. Ella Baker, and Ralph Galt.

RELAX WITH MAX.

It has been called to my attention that I have erroneously called all of our young people's groups "Pilgrim Fellowship" groups. It seems that some groups do not recognize this name and that the official name in the Southern Convention is "Youth Fellowship." I would like to plead ignorance and ask your forgiveness. In the future I'll try to call you by your correct name. Okay?

SCRIPTURES FOR PRISONERS OF WAR IN KOREA.

A shipment of 150,000 Korean New Testaments, supplied by the American Bible Society, has arrived in Korea, according to information sent by General James A. Van Fleet, Commanding General of the U. S. Army in Korea to Dr. Gibert Darlington of the Bible Society.

The books are being held by the supply Chaplain Headquarters in Pusan for the specific purpose of distribution to all of the prisoners of war who are Christians at the time of their repatriation or release. General Van Fleet has written. In case the final number of these POWs, who will be repatriated voluntarily, and according to agreements yet to be reached by the armistice negotiators, does not reach this number the books will be distributed to other Koreans, with the military personnel having first priority. Civilians and refugees will receive any books not needed by the military.

General Van Fleet has asked for 25,000 additional copies of the Scriptures for the Korean military forces as well as for Testaments for the Greek fighting personnel. The Bible Society is forwarding more than 50,000 Korean books, containing the four Gospels and the Book of Acts. These have been especially prepared for the military in a convenient size and bound in flexible covers. The Society has also shipped 96,000 copies of the Sermon on the Mount in a Korean-English edition, 1,500 Korean Testaments and a supply of Greek Testaments.

A FELLOWSHIP OF MANY BELIEVERS.

LESSON I—APRIL 6, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: By this my Father is glorified, that you bear much fruit, and so prove to be my disciples.—John 15:8.

LESSON TEXT: John 15:5-9 Philippians 2:14-16, Romans 16:1-7.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Revelation 7: 9-17.

Concerning Fruitfulness.

As usual, Jesus put great spiritual truths in simple language. He wanted to tell his friends, about the nature of the relationship that should exist between him and them, and about how they could best fulfil their mission as his followers. He said it was like unto the relationship between a vine and its branches. Inasmuch as there were many vineyards in Palestine, and many of the people kept and dressed vineyards, the people readily knew what he was talking about. A branch cannot bear fruit if it is cut off from the vine. Neither can a vine bear fruit if it has no branches. The one is dependent upon the other. So is it with Christ and his followers. They can do nothing apart from him—it is the Spirit that quickeneth. But in a sense, Christ can do nothing apart from his followers—the Spirit works through people. We need Christ, but Christ needs us, we need each other.

Branches that bear no fruit are cut off and wither, and are burned. Even branches that bear fruit are pruned. In like manner there is the divine judgement and the divine discipline in the life of disciples. God is ever seeking to make us more fruitful, for it is only we are fruitful that we fulfil the divine purpose, and reflect the divine glory. "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; and so shall ye be my disciples." Followers of Christ are to be good, but they are to be good for something. And when Christ's followers abide in him, when they make him the center of their lives, they can ask whatsoever they will and it shall be done unto them. That is a great promise but it is based on exacting conditions—abiding in Christ.

Concerning Conduct.

The first followers of Jesus were called "those of the way." Christianity is just that, a way of life, or a way of living. Thus it was that Paul was concerned about the way his Philippian friends and followers lived. They were not to face life murmuring and complaining, griping and grumbling. To do so would be to cast reflection and discredit on their religion as the way of a good and happy life. Furthermore they were to be blameless and harmless, children of God, without blemish in the midst of crooked and perverse generation. These early Christians lived in a nasty world. Life was so bad it stank. These Christians were to have no part in its debauchery and deviltry. By their pure lives they were to be a silent rebuke to the standards of the day, and furthermore they were to be as lights in the world, guiding men and women unto the way of life that was life indeed. This word is needed today. Too many Christians, like chameleons, take their coloring from their surroundings. There is too much loose living and too much low living in our modern world. Christians need to "be without blemish," so that their lives may be seen as lights in the world. Christians ought to live in such a way that their lives will be their strongest arguments for the Christian life.

Concerning Ordinary and Unknown Folks.

One of the most interesting features of Paul's letter to the Romans is the long list of names in the last chapter. Here is, in a sense, the greatest doctrinal book of the entire Bible, the product of a great mind and a great heart. It deals with great principles and is characterized by deep and high thought. But the concluding chapter is full of references to folks, ordinary folks, who for the most part, are not mentioned anywhere else in the Bible. "Phoebe, Epaphroditus, Mary—not to be confused with any other Mary mentioned in the Bible—Andronicus, Junias" and so on, a long list of names, whom Paul salutes. They were humble Christians, each standing in his or her place, caught up in the common round of duties, unknown, unheralded, but the salt of the earth, and the pillars of the Kingdom of God. They were ordinary people in the common walks of life who had an air of greatness about them. Not one Christian in a thousand knows anything about them, yet the fate of the church once depended upon them, or on people like them. The church and the Kingdom must have leaders. But what would the church and the Kingdom do if it were not for the Phoebes, the Priscillas, the Aquilas, the Epaphrodituses, the Andronicuses, and the Junias and the Marys? Thank God for the ordinary folks, the unknown folks, in life and in the church and in the Kingdom of God.

Concerning Fellowship.

Essentially the church of Jesus Christ is a fellowship, a fellowship based upon a fellowship. There is a question as to whether Jesus deliberately set out to establish or to organize a church. But he did initiate a fellowship. Those who were

The Orphanage
 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Thank you everyone for your help, your kindness and your goodwill. The boys and girls are expecting me to tell you how much you mean to them. They want you to know from the senior class to pre-school children how much it means to them to have a home. They have been left in the world with no home, and you have given them a home. They have held out their little helpless hands and you have taken their hands in yours and they wish me to tell you something of the joy that they have in feeling your kindness and your help.

Saturday I went to Nansemond County, Virginia, and received a little girl from the arms of the County Welfare agency into my arms. The lady who passed her over to me was so delighted with the confidence with which she was received by me into the "arms of the church," never again until she is a grown young lady is she to wonder where she will sleep, who will care for her and love her. We stopped for lunch in the home of my sister-in-law and Clara was given every kindness and tender care for those few minutes, and as we were ready to go, she came right back into my arms with that inexpressible confidence, much to the surprise of all who watched her.

Yes, it is something really bigger than we can, any of us, realize. To be without a home, to be passed around, here and there, and then to feel the combined kindness and benevolence of the church rise up to meet that need. I want to thank you, one and all, for the joy of looking out, in your behalf, for these little homeless ones. To be sure it takes care and concern; prayer and love; and the combined help of a whole Convention and many other friends to maintain a home big enough, with helpers enough, and food, clothing, fuel, shelter, furniture, and all that is required in such a home; but it is worth it. They want me to thank you for them, and I do thank you from the depths of my heart.

The other day J. T. Raby came into my office to thank me as the superintendent of this home, for all the eleven years he spent here. How happy he was for all we did for him and his sister while here. Now he has a lovely family of his own, a good position with the Pennsylvania Railroad, and a real opportunity in life. He visited all those who were here when he was and seemed so glad to see them everyone. He noticed the many improvements and seemed so appreciative. He told me about his sister and the good things which had come to them in life. I read of other orphanages and am thrilled with what they are doing and the fine boys and girls they are turning out into life and I am always so glad when our own children come back and tell us of their good successes. It is your confidence in your orphanage, a confidence which brings out the very best in us, that make such a home possible.

Pray for us. We are a church home. We are operating with sacred challenge, church property, and on church ground. It is my daily prayer that there may be ministers, missionaries, teachers, home-makers and good church members going out from this home. Pray that God may inspire these boys and girls to give first place to God in their lives and let him call them into whatever places he would have them serve. Pray that we may grow more and more into the kind of home we should be in every respect. And may God richly bless you everyone.

RUDD.

Whereas, on Friday, January 18, 1952, our Heavenly Father call to her reward our friend and loyal co-worker Mrs. Essie May (Mamie) Rudd and.

Whereas, Mrs. Rudd was, for many years, a valued member of the First Christian Church of Portsmouth, Virginia, having been faithful and active in all phases of the work of the church, Sunday school and women's organizations, and

Whereas, her life was characterized by the virtues of kindness, humility, friendliness, self-sacrifice, a warm interest in the welfare of all around her and a constant zeal for the World Mission of the church.

Therefore be it resolved by the Woman's Fellowship that in this loss of a dearly beloved member who suffered long and patiently, yet with an unflinching trust in God, we bow in humble submission to the will of our Lord, whom she served to the end, and that we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the family of Mrs. Rudd, praying that in their sorrow they may find God ever near.

societies in the Western Conference. A great deal of preparation had gone into this meeting—there was a fine display of pictures, articles from Mexico, books concerning Latin America. The young people were dressed as "senors" and "senoritas." Some forty people were present to enjoy the exhibit, the clever map drawing by Mrs. Clyde Fields, the Mexican games led by Mrs. Sybrant Pell, the Mexican refreshments, and perhaps the book review, all of which took place in the fellowship hall of their fine new educational plant.

The fourth visit was to a city church, Palm Street in Greensboro, which had invited the First Church and Calvary Church women to share with them. Here, too, was a new church building, and following the review came delicious refreshments and an opportunity for fellowship.

These are our churches—some of them in the open country, some in small towns, some in cities. Here are our societies—some new and small, some old and including most of the women of the parish, some with new buildings and some with old. But in all of our societies you will find a warmth of reception, a Christian fellowship, an interest in missions, a desire to learn, and a desire to serve. May God bless them!

drawn to him and who followed were drawn into a fellowship with each other which enriched and strengthened their lives. It was a diverse fellowship, a fellowship of many followers. It is even more so today. Christian fellowship includes peoples of all colors and classes and cultures and creeds and conditions. The Christian Church is essentially a fellowship, the one universal fellowship on earth.

“What Is Christian Missions?”

By ROCKWELL HARMON POTTER

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS is the reproductive function of the Christian Church. Every normal healthy organism, vegetable, animal, human or social, must by the law of life reproduce itself. The Church, a social organism of Divine purpose, is subject to this universal law.

The function of Missions uses the other functions of the Church. It teaches the worship of the one, true God—but it does more. It tells the story of Jesus and of God's manifest love in Jesus—but does more than this. It teaches the truth about God and man, and about their mutual relations—but it is more than education in religion. It ministers to human need, in medical work, in schools in social centers, in manifold relief, remedial and reform activities—but it is more than community service.

Now what is the “more” in Missions? It is this reproductive function. The seed is the means of reproduction in each of the forms of organic life. The Missionary is the seed of the Church. If a church thinks about Missions, if it studies Missions, if it gives for Missions, if it prays for Missions, then it will produce a missionary.

Now, if you have an apple tree and it is normal and healthy, it will produce an apple, its seed. You can take that apple to any comparable soil and climate on earth, put it in the ground, care for it, and it will produce a tree like the tree that produced it.

Now when the Church produces a missionary, in his purpose and spirit, you can, by education and training, condition him for any comparable human soil and climate. Put him there and care for him and, in time, he will produce a church like the church that produced him. That church will “promote the worship of the one true God,” will proclaim the Gospel, will teach the truth, will minister to human need and will develop life in human and divine fellowship, which is the Kingdom of God.

But what if your apple tree never produces an apple? You would cut it down and burn it up—to get some use out of it. What if a church never produces a missionary? It may not be cut down—but it clutters up its place, it cumbers the ground on which it stands. It has failed in its function of reproduction—it defeats the growth of God's Kingdom.

Jesus said, “As the Father hath sent me, even so I send you.” He was sent to form the Church. We are sent to reproduce the Church.

God grant we become not barren and sterile in the purpose of our common life. God grant we may have part in reproducing the Church, that it may accomplish its purpose of bringing in his Kingdom, which is love, joy and peace for all mankind.

News Flashes

Don't forget the Easter Offering for Missions.

Rev. O. D. Poythress will have the assistance of Rev. Fred Register in revival services next week in South Norfolk, Va.

Our Richmond Church will observe a special service of Holy Communion on Good Friday. An invitation to church membership will be extended.

REV. CLYDE FIELDS ACCEPTS VIRGINIA PASTORATE.

"We have been very happy during our nearly four years of association at Pleasant Ridge; nearly three years at Union Grove and Spoon's Chapel; and for the last few months that we have served Ramseur Christian Church.

"We have been blessed of the Lord in our labors together and members have been added to the churches. God has been very gracious to us. Pleasant Ridge, Union Grove, and Spoon's Chapel have adopted yearly budgets to better carry on the financial work of the churches. Pleasant Ridge has added the envelope system this year. We have been good stewards. We should be better stewards.

"Pleasant Ridge has built and paid for a parsonage valued at some $12,000.00. This has made it possible for a pastor to live on the field and serve a group of churches. Pleasant Ridge has completed a remodeling and building program, adding a new Sunday school plant and stained glass windows. The project is valued at some $20,000.00. This project has made it possible to have a completely graded Sunday school. Some $5,500.00 indebtedness is financed by three members of the church. Plans are now in operation for leveling and grassing the cemetery. A Memorial Association has been formed. With 190 members, a parsonage, and a beautiful church, the time has come for Pleasant Ridge to seek at least half-time pastoral service. As I see it, it is a must for continued growth. Vision and better stewardship will make this forward step possible.

"Union Grove has been using the budget plan for two years. The financial strength has more than doubled. Church and Sunday school has grown in membership. Union Grove has completed and paid for a building project of nearly $5,000.00. Brick veneering and stained glass windows have made the church more beautiful. I can see a great future for the Union Grove Church.

"Spoon's Chapel has added a vestibule, painted the church, graded the grounds, refinished the pews, added new pulpit furniture and other improvements. The church has begun a building fund to build a Sunday school plant. Spoon's Chapel has given more per capita for benevolences than any church in the Western Conference.

"Ramseur is one of our fine old churches. I have been pastor for only a few months. I could ask for no better cooperation. I have not been able to give enough services to Ramseur. This good church should be at least half-time. Make this come true.

"In order that all the things should be done which I feel are imperative for continued health and growth of the churches, I am offering my resignation effective July 1 or earlier if mutually agreeable. This is not an easy or quick decision. Much prayer and consideration has been done. I feel this is the thing for the future growth of the churches. I shall become the pastor of the Union Christian Church of Franklin, Virginia. The Pleasant Ridge, Union Grove, Spoon's Chapel, and Ramseur Churches and good people will ever be on our hearts and minds. God bless you for many deeds of kindness done for the Fields family."

GOOD NEWS.

American Board missionary Marguerite Bicknell writes from Pierce College, Greece, after visiting Protestant congregations in northern Greece:

"These Protestant villagers remind one of the early Christians in the Book of Acts and in the Epistles of Paul. They look as though the Good News had just come to them with all its power in a hard and unrewarding world, and that its joyousness was still overwhelming."

Reports from Africa, India, and other areas where the American Board works constantly indicate that the gospel—carried to the frontiers by our churches—does mean new life, good news, to oppressed peoples. And in those areas, the church is strong and alive.

VOLUNTEER TEACHERS.

About three years ago, Dr. J. Leslie Dunstan of the Hawaiian Board suggested sending volunteer teachers from Honolulu to our schools in Micronesia. Right now Miss Leila Morgan, who is at Kolonia, is illustrating the outcome of this idea. She was a teacher in Honolulu when she learned of the need. She volunteered to go out at her own expense with only such help as the local church members could give her. She is making a wonderful contribution and there is a marked improvement in the discipline and the spirit of the whole group at Kolonia. Hail to the Hawaiian Plan. May there be more volunteers for such service.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Your Share In HOME MISSIONS

Share and Sharing are good old Anglo-Saxon words, the root idea of which is to cut, to divide, to give. They are frequently misused today in the sense of communicate. People say "I'd like to share with you the experience I have just had; i. e. I'd like to tell you about it; I'd like to talk." But real sharing goes deeper than talk—or even writing! It means cutting and giving—cutting into what I have in order that I may give.

That is the meaning of missions. It means that Christians cut into their earning, their substance, and share off a portion for those who are less fortunate but equally deserving. What will your share be—unto God who gives you both something to share and the holy will to share it?

Oh, it is not altogether a matter of giving money. For some it may be a matter of sharing membership in a new enterprise. The parent church must be willing to share some of its members in order to organize a church in a new community. A minister must make the decision to share some of his best years in a missionary project. Members moving in from strong churches elsewhere must be willing to share in the rigors and responsibilities of a small but new enterprise. Otherwise, we make the great refusal, choke the new and creative streams of Christian influence.

Then, too, it is a matter of shearing off a portion of our prosperity for the underprivileged, impoverished people of the earth. It is a privilege, is it not, to have a share in building the Church of Christ around the world? It is all Home Missions. "This is my Father's World." He is at home in his world. None of it is foreign to him and why should it be to us? By God' grace, we have a share in Home Missions, World Missions.

ALABAMA EXCURSION

By invitation of the Rev. Joe French and courtesy of The Church of Wide Fellowship in Southern Pines, the writer enjoyed spending some time recently in Alabama. The purpose of this visit was to conduct a Stewardship Institute at the Lannett Church, preparatory to the financial canvass for the new building. A similar institute was conducted in that church two years ago by Dr. Warren A. Denison. This church is taking stewardship seriously and now ranks third in benevolent giving in the Convention of the South. It is a great joy to find a congregation maturing in its conception and practice of stewardship.

The building program places new demands on the financial resources of the congregation, but brings out the real stewardship potential of the church. The new building, designed by a capable architect, will set a new standard of architecture in that area.

The service of Ground Breaking was held Sunday afternoon on the new and spacious lot. The members of the congregation brought spades and shovels, symbolic of the magnanimous and unanimous participation in the new project. Rev. E. M. Carter and other former pastors were present to participate in the service. Dr. Stanley U. North gave the sermon. Dr. Ernest Arnold represented the link with other denominations.

Lanett is one of the six inter-locking towns of the Chattahoochee River Valley. We have a number of churches in the Valley. Rev. Melvin Dollar went from Langdale to Franklin, Virginia. Rev. Julius Rice went from a pastorate in the Valley to Monticello in North Carolina. Rev. J. D. Dollar lives in Lanett and serves one of the new churches, Bethel at West Point. Many of our leaders in the Southern Convention have come from Alabama and Georgia.

Although these states have their own associations and conferences, there is no reason why they should not and many reasons why they should maintain fraternal relations with the Southern Convention. We hope they will be represented at our forthcoming session in Durham and that we can reciprocate.

Sun subscribers are found in Alabama and Georgia. Our weekly publication is adapted to their needs, and some of our contributors are their native sons. No wonder some of them say "We would not be without it." It is easily conceivable that a closer relationship might exist between Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina and Virginia, and that The Sun might fulfil a wider usefulness throughout the region. "We are not divided; all one body we." Relations which have been so happy and fruitful in the past should be given every opportunity to continue in the future.

A visit to the nearby Roosevelt State Park, the Little White House and the Warm Springs Polio Hospital was one of the incidental but interesting features of this brief excursion.

LEARNING OBEDIENCE THROUGH SUFFERING.

Hebrews 5: 7-10.

Although he was a Son, he learned obedience through what he suffered.—Hebrews 5: 8.

The unknown author of the letter to the Hebrews was familiar with a story of the sufferings of Christ which supplements the other records of the agony in Gethsemane. The other records do not mention the tears. But the tears are not far from the surface in the record of Luke as it has come down to us.—

And being in an agony he prayed more earnestly; and his sweat became like great drops of blood falling down upon the ground.—Luke 22: 44.

Furthermore, the records as they have come down to us testify that in Gethsemane, as nowhere else, "Jesus offered up prayers and supplications, with loud cries and tears, to him who was able to save him from death." The Gospel of Mark, our most reliable and earliest account, says that in Gethsemane Jesus "began to be greatly distressed and troubled." Jesus said to the disciples, "My soul is very sorrowful, even to death." And in his supreme agony he was falling upon the ground and was praying that, if it were possible, the hour might pass from him. Three times he prayed, "Abba, Father, all things are possible to thee; remove this cup from me."

This prayer in Gethsemane, "in the days of his flesh" "to him who was able to save him from death," reveals to us where the real conflict lay, and the physical agony of the Cross itself is comparatively insignificant beside what Jesus endured in facing it. Yet Jesus, by "his godly fear," concluded his prayer with the words, "yet not what I will, but what thou wilt."

It is evident that "although he was a Son, he learned obedience through what he suffered." Are we to assume from this that Jesus was at times rebellious and disobedient to the Divine Will and that God put him through a period of suffering to make him obey? The writer of the Hebrews would say, no, Jesus "in every respect has been tempted as we are, yet without sinning" (4:15). Dr. Theodore H. Robinson in The Epistle to the Hebrews (The Moffatt New Testament Commentary) says:

The key to which the whole phrase lies in the word "obedience." . . . It is only when obedience becomes difficult, painful, even disastrous, that we really discover its meaning. We must know what it costs, we must go down into the depths, before we can say that we really understand it. Jesus, on the theory of this writer, did not need to learn that he must obey, or how to obey; what he did need was the practical knowledge, only to be gained from actual experience, of what obedience implied. This even he could attain only by going to the extreme of suffering in fulfillment of his Father's will. Jesus knew all about obedience, because he knew all about the suffering that may be entailed in its exercise.

Jesus did not obey because he was made to obey by suffering; instead, Jesus suffered at the hands of men because he chose to obey God. In the path of obedience to God he went through the fire of suffering perpetrated by men. Jesus was obedient to God in spite of his sufferings and not because of them.

The world in which Jesus lived and in which we live, on the whole, demands obedience by making the disobedient suffer. We either conform or take the consequences for non-conformity. The totalitarian state is the extreme example of the attempt to make people learn by chastisement. In the February, 1952 issue of The American Magazine there is an article entitled, "We Stole a Ride to Freedom." Two Czech families who dashed over the border on a train and came to America make this point clear:

The normal punishment imposed on anyone trying to escape the "workers' paradise" is 12 years in the concentration camp. That is the punishment our wives would have gotten if caught alive. Our three children would have been taken over by the state and raised in special camps as faceless Communists. . . . It is a terrible thing when your government is deliberately trying to undermine and destroy your own family. And that is what the Communists were trying to do to us. They wanted our children to obey them rather than their parents.

In view of this, by historical retro-spection it is a striking fact that both the Greek and the Hebrew words for "learning" mean also "chastisement." A superb example of this is the trial of Jesus by Pilate according to the Gospel of Luke in the Greek New Testament, Pilate having found Jesus innocent, is trying to placate the hostile, persistent authorities who are shouting for Jesus' death. Twice Pilate says, "I will therefore chastise him and let him go" (Luke 23:16, 23); but this could mean just as well, as Dr. E. J. Goodspeed translates it, "So I will teach him a lesson and let him go."

We know that Jesus did not learn the lesson that Pilate wanted to teach him. Instead he learned the higher lesson: "Blessed are those who are persecuted for righteousness' sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

Here we see evil and goodness in juxtaposition. The two met when Pilate tried to teach Jesus a lesson by chastisement. It is hard to explain the sufferings of Christ, but it is still harder to explain his obedience, his goodness in spite of them.

The problem of evil has from time immemorial perplexed and baffled the very best minds of the human race, and, to the best of my knowledge, it has never been satisfactorily resolved. Why should there be hatred, fear and murder? Why should there be pain, tragedy and death? Why should there be war, concentration camps and starvation?

There is, on the other hand, a more basic question still which we must grapple with if we are to penetrate the mystery of evil. It is the mystery of godliness, the problem of goodness. How are we to explain those who, when powerful dictators seem to have the last word, still hold fast their faith in the ultimate triumph of justice and would die rather than consent to what seems to them morally wrong? But the strangest question of all is: How can you explain a love which hate cannot quench, the love of Jesus praying for his crucifiers: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do"?

You see, we cannot explain evil in isolation; neither can we explain goodness in isolation. We must think of them together because we live in a world which includes both evil and goodness. And this being the kind of world it is, the innocent suffer for and with the guilty, the blunders and sins of the guilty reaching far beyond the limits of the individual. How could it be otherwise, since we are in a very literal sense members one of another? Evil and goodness are so interwoven that Jesus said: "Let both grow together until the harvest" Mt. 13:30). The mys-

A Meditation on Palm Sunday

By KENNETH M. LINDNER

There are various ways of lighting the picture of the human race—often we like the illumination general and soft, with perhaps some human virtue accented, some kindness or charity. Then the picture may be tolerable, but let the light be increased to the whiteness of God's holiness and the camera focussed to the sharpness of an omniscient eye—what a negative results! And we are all pretty good at seeing what the other fellow prints up like—in fact we don't mind the glossy prints with their brilliant detail—oh, shall we say Pilate and the chief priests, the crucifiers of Christ of two thousand years ago—but we wouldn't want such a plain picture of our own attitude towards Christ today, and of our own thoughts and hearts to be hung in any public gallery. You might want all of the artifices of the retoucher employed—yes, and plenty of diffusion to render indistinct your response to that searching question: What think you of Christ?

Now if we continue our figure and open the album to a page appropriate for today we would see portrayed a man riding upon an ass, down a road leading to Jerusalem. He is surrounded by crowds who cast their garments in his path, who tear down branches from the palm trees which flank the way. The caption is "Christ's triumphal entry into Jerusalem."

What is the story of that picture which we think of this Sunday? Religiously, it is today called Palm Sunday, and St. John records that the multitude "took branches of palm trees, and went forth to meet Jesus, and cried, 'Hosanna, Blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord!'"

In the Bible, the palm is symbolic of victory, of triumph, of fruitfulness, of joy. In oriental lands its fruit furnishes food, its leaves shelter, its sap is made into wine, the seeds are ground into camel fodder, its fibres make ropes, the timber is valuable. The glory of the palm trees, the clothes of the crowd, the adornments of the multitude, cast into the dust of the road that the King of Israel might ride by in a moment of popular acclaim. Incidentally, the palms used in ceremony today, will on the Ash Wednesday of next Lent, have been burned to ashes.

Should we not pause and profit from the lesson intended in that ceremonial symbolism? True enough, there is not a shred of saving efficacy in the observance of any religious rites, if we listen to the voice of Scripture. But in Lent we do have a worthy emphasis placed upon the temptation, the sufferings, the death of our Lord.

The one who had glory with the Father before the world was, who had spoken and called into being the entire universe; the one who was rich, yet for our sakes became poor; he had emptied himself, veiling his glory, and stooped down in matchless grace to the humility of human flesh.

He had been tempted in the wilderness, yet demonstrated his sinlessness; he had gone about undoing the works of the devil, relieving the sick of the shackles binding them; he had raised the dead. He set his face as a flint to go to Jerusalem. O yes, he knew what was in store for him, the cries of adulation were but to echo back in the shrieking of the blackest hate, "Away with him, crucify him."

The palms under his feet already were powdered with the dust and ashes of death. A moment of glory, then the very intensity of suffering, then to die. But he was born to that end—every other child of Adam is born to live, he has the privilege of exercising his own will, but the Son of God—born to die. Before Pilate, he said in kingly dignity, "To this end was I born"—to bear witness of the truth, to suffer, to die.

How fickle the multitude, one day acclaiming; another condemning, and the mob has not changed its complexion with the passing centuries. The one in the spotlight today is forgotten tomorrow. How often in your own experience have you noted that.

Now, you have palms in your life, those things in which for a moment you exult, that give joy, that give strength, that give usefulness—the tallness of the palm tree in figure, the wine, the timber, the ropes made from it—all that is going down into ashes. "The paths of glory lead but to the grave."

But the Son of God went on his way to Jerusalem, palms and hosannas today—soon the thorns and spikes, being crucified on a tree. Hosanna, they cry—they knew not what they said. Shallow, superficial was their shout of praise, influenced by the miracles, excited to a wonderment by the raising of Lazarus from the dead. But they cried unwittingly the truth. "Hosanna, Hosanna,—save we pray" (for such is the meaning). "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

He was going to the Cross, he was going to die, taking the place of the guilty, "Blest substitute from God, wrath's awful cup to drain."

None could be saved unless Jesus went to the Cross, none could ever escape the stronghold of death unless Jesus first swept in conquering triumph through its dusty portals. He came from pinnacles of glory, to the most utter ignominy, he died even the death of the Cross. God's Lamb, that beareth away the sin of the world; the one who alone can save in a way that satisfies the holiness, righteousness, love and glory of God.

Hosanna, save we pray! Have you said Hosanna to Jesus, not because everyone is religiously flavored during Lent, but because as an individual your heart has been touched by his passion, his suffering. Will you cast your palm branches, your clothing, your life at the feet of the Savior, crying from the heart, "Hosanna, save me, O rightful King of my soul, my Savior, my Lord and my God?"

WHY GO TO COLLEGE?

This question doubtless confronts every high school senior. No one's education is complete without college credits. There are those who have definitely made up their minds that they are going to college. They have never thought of anything else. They look forward to graduation from high school to be prepared for the next step. There are others who wonder about the advisability of taking the time for a college education. There are others who are saying that if I ever get through high school this will be the last of classroom work for me. I never did like school and I don't intend to have any more of it. So the question—Why Should I Go to College?

There are many answers in the affirmative. No mind is at its best without opportunities for development and accuracy. These achievements result from the processess through which the mind of man has been put since the beginning of systematic instruction up to the age of complete maturity.

There are certain privileges and opportunities concerning a college campus that are never found in any other situation. We make new acquaintances, form new friendships, and are associating with a group of young people who are all ambitious and desire to fit themselves for a profitable life and better opportunities. They realize that the instruction and guidance received in college will fit them for these desirable associations and positions.

Many young people feel that a college course will fit them for a more remunerative business or satisfactory position in life. In this they are correct. A college education not only fits a man for a better living but for a better life if the mind is trained and developed, life is more complete, and richer in every respect.

As a rule we like congenial and agreeable companions in life. Those who have had advantages similar to what we have had, those who are interested in the things we are interested in and who are able to converse on topics that are familiar to us and in which we delight. Fifty years ago it was the exception for young people to go to college. There weren't nearly so many high school graduates and a small percentage of the high school graduates entered college. Today it is the rule for high school graduates to go to college, rather than the exception. Hundreds of thousands of young people graduate from high school every year and thousands enter college. Not to go to college today leaves the individual at a disadvantage in society, in church, in the professions, and in business. Many people who have succeeded economically in life started forty or fifty years ago when evident requirements for success were hard work, sensible investments, and economical saving. The next one-half century will perhaps count for different types of action.

Today the slogan is not so much a better living as it is a better life. That is the aim and the purpose of our church related colleges—to take lives as they are and make them better.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

I have a friend who entered business about 30 years ago. The business was a success at the beginning. The depression came along, money became scarce and more so with every passing day. The future looked dark. He and his partner in business had a little misunderstanding. He proposed to sell his part and his partner bought him out. Some years ago we drove by that business and he remarked that had he not been impetuous and hasty that he would have been worth some money today.

More than one-half century ago the Southern Convention became ambitious for the future. They pooled their gifts and built Elon College. It started up in a prosperous way. Everybody was happy. Reverses in economy overtook the country and the college felt the pinch but it weathered the storm. Again it went through similar experiences in the late twenties and early thirties when it experienced economic reverses but even so it has come out in fine shape. Today, the mist is gathering again, the clouds are becoming dark. The big question is—do the members of our church consider the worth of their college, realize the indispensable value, and are they willing to sacrifice for its future, or will they listen to more heart touching appeals and alluring propositions and when they think of the college ask themselves, "What's the use," and leave it by the wayside to die? Through systematic giving the needs of the college can be met. Our churches have the opportunity. Will they express their interest and loyalty by giving generously or will they fail to express their faith and loyalty by withholding their gifts?

LENTEN PROGRAM AT ELON. COMMUNITY CHURCH.

The program of the Elon College church, for Lent, is now well underway. Mid-week services, which are not ordinarily held during the year, have been held each Thursday evening, with fair attendance and indications of genuine appreciation. The Bible readings for the week in the Lenten devotional booklet, "The Fellowship of Prayer," have been the themes for discussion, in which those attending have shared. The week beginning Sunday, March 16, brought to our church Dr. Eddy Asirvatham, noted scholar, author and teacher, from India, who preached at the morning service on, "Christianity in a Free India," and addressed a public forum in the evening, on "Can India Be Saved from Communism." Both meetings were well attended. On Thursday, March 20, Dr. Truman Douglas, Executive Vice-President of our Board of Home Missions, addressed the students at chapel, and a large gathering of church women, at 11:30, his subject being, "Mission to America," the title of his book which is the study book of the women's department of many Protestant churches, this year.

We are looking forward (at this writing) to the big state-wide youth (Continued on page 15.)

A LETTER FROM FRANCES RIGGS.

Manamadura, Ram-
nad District
District
South India
March 10, 1952.

Dear Friends:

Whee—I have just been reading last paragraph or two of the letter Ed wrote you, and from the sound of things it would seem that we are practically moved! It's nothing of the sort. There are mountains of people that have to give their approval before we can budge. The more people involved the more resistance one finds for radical moves. It does give me a little thrill though to think that we might be getting back to earth and really getting to know this new culture which so far, it seems, we have only seen at a distance. There are also lots of physical hurdles to jump for Kilanpunai is fully as isolated as our mountain home in China, Erh Shih Tu, and in some ways more so. There is some chance that if we move there we may have to carry drinking water in from Ramnad or Madura to our home. All the stuff I've tasted so far (besides the rain water) tastes like very bad sea water. The rain water is going fast and we have no right to use the local supply when it is short already. Anyway we are hatching ideas about living closer to the people and quite a bit simpler.

Ed's letter sort of made me forget what I was going to write about. I hadn't expected him to breathe a word till we had our goal a bit closer in hand. Oh yes—it was Christmas I meant to start with.

Christmas came and went quietly. There was a Christmas evening at the church for the school kiddies and several programs at the church for adults. The church was very highly decorated with paper streamers and tinsel, and just like in the Chinese churches the decorations stayed up all through the month of January. We also had a Christmas tree, a collapsible wire-and-green paper one, which gave us a lot of fun. Our little two year old Louis must have decorated the tree at least twenty times. The tree seemed to impress him much more than the presents.

We carolled in the evening and Louis joined in a loud Tamil falsetto which just about broke up the singing each evening. We sang a few after he had retired. Christmas surely takes on more meaning as our family begins to grow.

Part of my time has been taken in entertaining numerous guests. Any missionary will tell you that they do a great deal more entertaining on the mission field—for our homes must be hotel part of the time to foreign guests that come through on business, or need relief from their own jobs and come to you to hide a few days and catch their breath. Also there are those that come to inspect the work we are doing, give us suggestions, keep us from falling into stale patterns, and from being lazy. They say, "How is your language coming?" and we blush; or, "Have you been to see so and so about this or that project?" which usually happens to be in their field of interest—and so on. No matter who comes, we find them all stimulating, and they help us tremendously as we get acquainted with the new country.

It has been fun to see Ed finally getting a grip on some useful work. He really is beginning to feel himself a part of the whole program here and since his field is village health and village leprosy he has been getting into the country and really seeing how India lives. He makes me "green with envy" with all the descriptions he brings home of what he has been doing. But with two children I do need to stay at home and keep the "home fires burning." (Our temperatures range from eighty to ninety degrees at present).

Our last guests have been the Keithahns, Dick and Mildred. I think they have impressed me more than any two people I have met in a long time. They weave their own clothes, keep their own house, and still have tremendous ability and time to help India find herself in her new freedom. Mildred is a doctor and has made nutrition her field. Dick is a minister and spends his time in helping those around him to use what they have available, both physical and spiritual, to make their life richer. That is no easy task in India.

FRANCES RIGGS.

BELOVED MISSIONARY TO SHAOWU DIES.

Rev. Charles L. Storrs, who devoted 39 years to service in China under the American Board, died March 21 at West Chester, Pennsylvania, at the age of 78. Mr. Storrs had had a number of speaking engagements in the Southern Convention.

Born in Boston, Massachusetts, Mr. Storrs was educated at Boston Latin School; Amherst College, Class of 1896 and Yale Divinity School, Class of 1901. He was ordained to the Congregational Christian ministry in the Hillsboro Bridge Church in New Hampshire.

In China Mr. Storrs did educational, evangelistic and administrative work over a wide territory where he had to travel in sedan chairs, or on foot, over rough, winding Chinese roads and lonely paths. He did a constructive piece of work, although the district in which he then worked was often infested with bandits and made unstable by the movements of the military.

He was there also in a period of much anti-foreign and anti-Christian feeling. In 1930 bandits and Communists forced the evacuation of the Storrs from Shaowu. Sending Mrs. Storrs and the children to Kulaing, Mr. Storrs stayed in Shaowu to work alone for nearly three years, earning the title "A one man mission" because he was the only foreign worker in residence there. The Storrs preceded the Jacksons at Shaowu.

When the Storrs came home just prior to retirement they used planes, busses, trains and boats covering a period of two and a half months through the air and over land and sea made dangerous by World War II.

THE TIME.

The time to counsel a young person about marriage is before he falls in love.

The time to teach a fellow the Bible truth above divorce is before he marries.

The time to save one from death is before he learns from experience that the wages of sin is death.

The time to teach obedience to authority is in the play pen instead of the state pen.

With Emphasis on Missions
 MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

ARE WE CONCERNED?

Please read first of all the article in the center box headed "Be Merciful—." This came to me in a letter which was also full of concern. I want to share some of its thoughts with you, too.

"When are we women going to really give? As Miss Nicholson talked to us I felt, 'What can I do?' There was a quiet hesitancy when Miss Nicholson finished; no questions were forthcoming, but many were concerned. Then there was an offering taken, but it was just like any other offering. And there was a luncheon served, as abundant as, or more so than, any other luncheon.

"Aren't enough of us women willing to really give up something and work for a genuine sacrificial offering at some future rally? Not even dare call it a sacrificial offering; but each one of us women actually do without something and bring or send that money in. Maybe our friends will wonder why we are still wearing summer before last's hat or no hat at all, or why we suddenly have unpolished nails or no gloves with our summer costume. Our friends may even think us queer when we no longer 'light up' at meetings or stop for a chat without a 'coke.' But we'll cease to think about this queerness as we recall the girl in India rescued from a famine stricken village by our dollars, or the pastor in Africa given an opportunity to study by our gifts. And it ceases to be queer when we're all doing it!

"I wonder if other women felt as I did, that after hearing of the famine in India to partake of such a meal costing so much in food and labor was cold-hearted, to say the least? Our women are so hospitable that I hesitate to even confess such a feeling. I, myself, have too much Martha in me and not enough Mary. But could we as a body in some meeting recommend that very simple meals be served at our rallies? We are women gathering for inspiration and fellowship in his name, he who fed the multitudes, yes, but fed them simply in a physical manner, and bountifully in a spiritual manner."

Let us read and re-read these words —and then approach Holy Week and Easter with a spirit that will in some feeble way measure up to the sacrifice of our Master—and give for Missions in his name and for their sake.

* * * * *

PLAN NOW FOR MAY FELLOWSHIP DAY.

It is hoped that our women are now making plans for the observance of May Fellowship Day. The purpose of this day as outlined in the Manual

"BE MERCIFUL—"

We Christian women were meeting in a rally, to show our concern for brethren around the world. We invited a speaker from India, full of horror at the havoc wrought by famine, full of sympathy for its victims, and full of grace to do something for these brethren. Within an hour of the missionary's report to us, we were gathered around a table so loaded with food that not twice our number could have consumed it.

The hostesses, having gone to much trouble to prepare the sumptuous meal still did not wish to be reimbursed for it, but rather urged us Christian women to give more generously to the offering for missions. Not a few dropped dollar bills in the plate. Bills pulled carefully from five-dollar pocket-books, bills disentangled from dollar lipsticks and two-dollar compacts, and bills dropped from hands gloved at the price of more dollars. Some bills given in this annual rally offering for missions were no doubt flavored with the cigarettes costing close to a dollar a month or even a week.

We Christian women had smiled when the missionary told of the prizes given her students—discarded lipstick cases, empty compacts, used greeting cards—prizes from the wastebaskets of American women. God, were you at that meeting? Did you see the shame beneath our smiles?

—A Concerned Woman.

of the United Church Women is to provide the occasion when Christian women can unite locally in fellowship.

Most towns, cities, or communities have more than one church group represented in it. The purpose isn't to do away with denominational groups but to make uniform our efforts and have a better understanding of each other. On the mission field and in our National boards we are working together more and more, and back here at home we are urged to take advantage of this nationally observed day and either unite in fellowship with other groups or invite them to meet with us.

There are many ways in which this can be done and since there is no formal plan it is left to the local churches. There can be an exchange of a group of members, or, there can be a luncheon where all groups come together, or, there can be a reception for ministers and their wives so other church groups can meet our ministers, or, in a community where there are many churches they can be grouped off and two or three churches can meet together, thus making a more intimate group. Whichever way we observe the day we must remember that our aim is to break down that denominational barrier and remember we all worship the same God and have the same aims toward Christianizing our community.

Your conference chairmen will probably have more suggestions as they get materials from the national office.

GOING TO CALIFORNIA.

Pattie Lee Coghill has arranged for a special bus to the General Council for the unbelievably low price of $104.60 round trip—going by way of Grand Canyon, San Francisco, Yellowstone. This bus will be for men, women, and young people.

The women who made the New York trip last summer will no doubt be eager to go again. And there should be enough to join them to make the thirty-seven that the bus will hold.

Miss Coghill says she thinks $225 will cover your meals, room, General Council expenses and all. The bus will only travel 10 hours a day and stopovers will be arranged in economical places. You will never have an opportunity to make this long a trip for this price again—and be "in" on the workings of our General Council, too.

Please let her know if you are at all interested. She needs to know in order to know whether to proceed further in plans with the bus company.

TELEPHONE CONSERVATION.

By LAURA GRAY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

I was visiting my friend, Doris, in my old home town and had retired to my room to write letters. The door into the hall was open and I could hear mother and daughter chatting merrily in the kitchen. Five-year-old Nan seemed to be arranging a "pretend" tea party—how that child loved to make believe! Doris was cooperating well—she was surely an understanding mother—and now, with me out of the way for a while, the child had her mother's full attention.

"Now, Mummy," Nan piped up, "I'm going to call for my friends, and when I get back you—"

The phone outside my door drowned out the voice. Mother answered the ring and was soon deep in a gossip conversation. I could see Nan's pouting face as she padded impatiently up and down the hall. Talk went on and on, Mother comfortably seated beside the telephone. Suddenly the child uttered a loud scream and stamped her feet.

Mother laid down the phone and gave her daughter a good scolding. The child burst into tears and ran out-of-doors. The telephone conversation was resumed and continued for more than half-an-hour.

Then Doris came into my room. "Dear me," she said, "I wonder where Nan has gone! That young lady certainly needs training. You must think she is a terrible child."

"No, Doris, I don't. She is just natural. A few minutes before the phone rang I was thinking how wonderful you were to enter so well into her play."

"I like to play with her, but she must learn not to interrupt."

This episode left me dissatisfied but I could not think of a solution to the problem. I arrived at one a few days later when I visited a friend with a four-year-old son, Bob.

"Look, Mum, it's snowing!" Bob jumped up from his trains on the kitchen floor and danced about in ecstasy.

"So it is, Bob. Hurry, get your coat; we'll just have time to make a snow-man before lunch!"

"You, too, Mom! Will you help?" he asked as his mother struggled into her rubber boots. "Oh, goody!" Then he glanced at me as if fearing I might spoil this wonderful fun.

"I have mending to do," I said, smiling. Then the phone rang! Oh, was the snow treat going to vanish just as the tea party had?

"I do want to hear about your trip—and everything," the mother's voice came from the hall. "But I have promised Bob to help him make a snow-man. You know how seldom we get snow in this part of the country—and how soon it goes. How would it be if I rang you later? Would two o'clock do? I'll call you."

Soon joyful shouts sounded from the lawn outside my window, as a fat snow-gentleman took shape, and how mother's and son's faces glowed. I was thrilled, but I wondered if this mother was, perhaps, spoiling her child.

After lunch my friend said, "Boy, I'm going to phone now. You take your books and curl up on the couch with them until I've finished."

"All right, Mum."

The phone conversation continued without interruption and all seemed happy.

Surely children should be treated with the same consideration as adults—and with even more understanding. We can hardly realize how much a little one depends upon us for his fun. "Pretend" games are fragile, fairy things—easily destroyed. The delight of having Mother's or Father's help in any play is so wonderful as to be almost "out of this world." When children know they are being treated fairly they are far more likely to be fair, too.

It's time for baseball again:

Yankee Tourist: Brother, that's nothing. Once, while standing in a ball park, I saw a player go out on a fly.

ONE THOUSAND ATTEND STATE-WIDE YOUTH FELLOWSHIP RALLIES.

More than one thousand young people crowded into the churches at Richmond and Elon College for their Second Annual Youth Fellowship Rallies. These were two of the largest meetings ever to be held in the Southern Convention. The First Church in Richmond was host to 401 young people, and 621 visited the Elon Campus. A feeling of fellowship and accomplishment was evident at both of these gatherings.

Phil Mann, of our Cypress Chapel Church in Eastern Virginia, was elected to serve as president of the Southern Convention Youth Fellowship for the next two years. Phil is a sophomore at Elon College and a leader in campus religious activities. A complete list of the newly elected officers will be found on this page.

Feature speaker for the Richmond Rally was Miss Oline Nicholson, a missionary just returned from India. Timothy Chang directed the recreation, and Rev. Duane Vore, pastor of the Suffolk Church, was in charge of the entertainment. Miss Becky Mann, president of the Eastern Virginia Youth Fellowship, conducted the business session.

The picture in this issue of THE SUN is of a group of the Virginia Fellowship members gathered in the Educational Building of our Richmond Church. It was furnished through the courtesy of Rev. S. E. Madren of the Virginia Valley Conference, who brought a large group to the Rally.

The North Carolina Rally had as its principal speaker Jose Dabuet, our Philippine student, who is studying at Princeton Theological Seminary. Timothy Chang was again welcomed as an old friend by all who attended. The opening worship service was conducted by Rev. Clyde Fields and the Pleasant Ridge Young People's Choir, from the Western North Carolina Conference. The evening session featured the Elon College Choir, under the direction of John Westmoreland. The choir sang several selections, closing with two Negro Spirituals and "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." The benediction was pronounced by Dr. Leon E. Smith, president of Elon College.

Among the persons who deserve special recognition for their efforts to make the rally a success are Bill Simmons, who was in charge of recreation; Mr. and Mrs. Baxter Twiddy, and Ruth Dunn, who assisted him; and the Women's Missionary Circle No. 3 of the Elon College Community Church, Tom Targett, Charles Joyner, John Truitt, and Max Vestal, who were in charge of the food. A fine job was also done by the three conference presidents—Bettie Burt Hight, E. N. C.; Curtis Young, N. C. and Va.; and Clyde Fields, Jr., W. N. C. The N. C. and Va. Conference had 304 young people present to lead in attendance, with the W. N. C. Conference coming in second with 213 persons.

Our appreciation should go to the retiring officers, who have served us well. They have led the projects which sent one of our young people, Max Vestal, to an international work camp in Agape, Italy, and which brought Jose Dabuet to this country to continue his study.

A large truck, attempting to go through a railroad underpass near a small Western town, found itself wedged between the roadway and the girders overhead. An emergency crew tried without success to extricate it, and in a short time traffic was stalled for almost a mile on both sides of the underpass.

THOMAS AND THE RISEN LORD.

LESSON II—APRIL 13, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: Have you believed because you have seen me? Blessed are those who have not seen and yet believe.—John 20: 29.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matthew 28: 1-10.

John tells us more about Thomas than any of the other gospel writers, but even he does not tell us much. What he does tell us, however, is very suggestive—it gives us a fine insight into the character of the man. It shows us a man of sincerity and integrity, a man of courage and loyalty, but a man of somber and melancholy outlook on life, a man of skeptical and doubtful spirit. Thomas had an open and inquiring mind, however, and a willingness to accept truth when it was revealed unto him. He was a good man. He was not a particularly happy man. He lacked that buoyancy of spirit which gives zest to life, and cheer to others.

The Courage of Thomas.

In the first scene in today's lesson, Jesus and the disciples have just received word of the death of Lazarus, and the urgent appeal of the sisters to come at once to Bethany in Judea. Jesus set out at once upon the journey. He knew it involved danger, and perhaps death. The disciples also knew it. Thomas could see in his imagination just what would happen to Jesus if he went back to Bethany—the religious leaders would probably kill him. And they might also kill his disciples if they went with him. Thomas did not understand Jesus, but he loved him. He was weak in faith, but he was strong in love. "Let us also go, that we may lie with him," says Thomas. To be sure, it was a courage somewhat born of despair, but it was courage, magnificent courage, an expression of love and loyalty that must have warmed the heart of the Master. Thomas was a "good soldier" of Jesus Christ—he might have been afraid, but he was willing to "go over the top" in the hour of battle. A skeptic or doubter who obeys is a whole lot better than a believer who deserts. Thomas had a spirit of courage in facing danger with and for Christ which modern Christians need. Don't get this fellow Thomas wrong—he had courage. His doubt was not as strong as his courage when action was called for.

The Questing Spirit of Thomas.

When Jesus, in the "Upper Room" told the disciples that he was going to prepare a place for them, and that he would come again and receive them unto himself, assuring them that where he was, there they would be also—"Whither I go, ye know the way," is the way he put it—Thomas said, "We know not whither thou goest; how can we know the way?" If a fellow does not know where he is going, how can he know the way? The trouble with Thomas was that he didn't understand the nature of the coming of the Kingdom, his gloom and melancholy spirit kept him from a full understanding of Jesus. But he had the inquiring mind, he was eager to learn, he had a hunger and thirst after knowledge and righteousness. Some folks doubt in order to dodge their duty; a lot of doubt is not honest doubt. Thomas was rather melancholy, he had a dark outlook on life, but he tried to resolve his doubts by seeking more truth.

The Honest Doubt of Thomas.

Thomas had seen the Master die upon the Cross. He knew he was dead, and buried. He thought that was the end of things. It had turned out badly, perhaps the way he had thought it would turn out. And for some reason—it might have been a good reason—Thomas was not with the Twelve on that first Sunday evening when the Risen Lord appeared unto them. They could scarcely believe it—it was too good to be true. But it was true, they knew it was true. And they told Thomas about it. Did he say, "Oh yeah!" Perhaps not, but he did declare that so far as he was concerned, he would not believe it unless he not only could see the print of the nails in the hands of the Risen Lord, but unless he could actually put his fingers into the prints of the nails and his hand into the side into which the spear had been thrust. In short, Thomas was the kind of fellow who finds it difficult to believe anything that cannot be apprehended with the senses. And like countless people today, Thomas missed so much, because he could not move from the seen into the realm of the unseen, because he could not make the leap from sight to faith. Ultimately, the real things in the world are not the things that can be seen. And life cannot be lived simply by the things with which the senses can deal. "Seeing is believing"—millions have said, and in so saying, they have missed the glory of life. They have missed fellowship with the Risen Christ, they have tossed away the key to glory. The one good thing that can be said of Thomas' doubt is that it was honest doubt. If he were shown, he would not only believe, he would accept and follow.

The Confession of Thomas.

Jesus deals wisely and winsomely with honest doubt. When upon his next appearance to the disciples he found Thomas present, he did not chide or rebuke or scold. He simply told Thomas to reach forth his hand and to feel the print of the nails, and to put his hand into the wound in his side. The man was honest in his doubt, and Christ would honor his honesty. But although Thomas had asserted that he would not believe unless he could do these things, he did believe without doing them. And there was no doubt in his mind—this was the One who had been crucified, dead and buried. He was standing there in person, alive before him. Falling on his knees in humility and joy, Thomas cried out, "My Lord and my God"—the greatest confession in the entire New Testament. The last shreds of skepticism and gloom are brushed away like leaves before the wind, and Thomas stands up, clean and strong and believing. The chief doubter among the disciples breaks forth with the greatest confession of faith that any of them had ever made. This is significant. It has momentous consequences for us. Here was one who, doubting the fact of the resurrection, was absolutely convinced that Christ was alive again. It is convincing testimony, irrefutable testimony to the historic resurrection of Jesus Christ.

Not Seeing, and Believing.

Thomas saw and believed, and was blessed. We cannot see, we are not granted a vision of the living Christ that the eye can see and the hands can touch. But on the testimony of believe something we cannot see and Thomas and the other disciples, and on the verdict of history and the continuing life of the Church founded on this fact, we can believe. We can experience something we cannot ex-

LEARNING OBEDIENCE THROUGH SUFFERING.

tery of evil and the mystery of goodness are bound up with the purposes of the universe. God, in his infinite wisdom and goodness, knows the purpose of goodness and evil as we term them, and we are confident that his will, and not ours, will be done.

However, when all is said and done, it is quite evident that only by taking a realistic view of evil we fully appreciate goodness. Only by realizing that sin is deadly can we lay hold of repentance and receive forgiveness. Only by seeing disease at its worst can we enjoy health at its best. Only by looking at Christ's sufferings for righteousness' sake can we begin to learn the meaning of his obedience to the will of God. And only by facing death in its imminent reality can we see the inestimable value of life.

Which brings us to the hard fact that Jesus' supreme agony lay in his facing of death in its stark reality. As Jesus learned obedience through death, we must keep in mind that there could be no death if there were no life. The problem of death is therefore the problem of life, and there is a law of life through death. Dr. William Adams Brown in the book entitled, "A Creed for Free Men," 1941, points out:

Within the limited area of our human insight we can see that death is not always the end of life. Often it opens the door to possibilities otherwise unattainable. It is so with the human body. We keep alive only by dying daily. When any part of us has outlived its usefulness we discard it. Something like this takes place in the life of the mind. We keep abreast of the times only by discarding old forms of belief which have served their day and appropriating new truths that are opening continually before us. In the mind, as in the body, the "good is the enemy of the best." Death is the door to life.

Death, then, in the divine scheme of things may not be evil at all. If God is good, and if death is naturally an incident of God's intent, then Socrates was right in what he said when forced to drink the cup of deadly hemlock:

This thing that has come upon me must be good: and those of us who think that death is an evil must needs be mistaken. And you, too, Athenians, must face death with a good courage, and believe this as a truth, that no evil can happen to a good man, either in life, or after death.

Similarly, Jesus did not look upon death as an evil. He was always looking beyond death to his vindication by the one "who was able to save him out of death" (Heb. 5:7). Jesus was not afraid to die. He did not pray for the removal of the cup of death; he prayed for the removal of the cup of suffering he knew would be involved in his death. What tried the soul of Jesus was that he was dying for the sins of the world, and the world did not know it. The innocent one was suffering for the guilty at the hands of the guilty, and nobody cared. That was enough to make even Jesus, the intensely human Son of God, want to draw back temporarily. D. M. Baillie has well pointed out that:

The Gospels were written at a time when Christians could look back and glory in the Cross as ordained by the purpose of God; but they do not conceal the fact that to Jesus himself, when he looked forward and saw that it was likely, and even when he embraced it by faith, it appeared as an unspeakable tragedy, and that up to the last night he hoped and prayed that it might not come.

It did come, and God made known to the world and to the generations that Jesus by being obedient, in spite of his sufferings and through his sufferings, was vindicated before all. "This Jesus God raised up. . . . Let all . . . therefore know assuredly that God has made him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom you crucified" (Acts 2:32, 36). "Although he was a Son, he learned obedience through what he suffered; and being made perfect he became the source of eternal salvation to all who obey him" (Heb. 5:8, 9).

The Orphanage
 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

We have had a most interesting and helpful Religious Emphasis Week on the Orphanage campus. Coming to the Orphanage nearly three years ago I had hoped to maintain an atmosphere in which some of our young people might be open to a decision for the ministry, or full-time Christian service. The spirit of Christian training I found good here, and I was and am delighted. However, I have felt all along that our boys and girls should take a definite share in Sunday school and church as those who had come to have a personal faith in Christ as their Savior, and who had joined the church on the basis of an understanding of what church membership really meant. Naturally I had had experience in leading youth in such a way as a pastor.

I thought to have a series of messages each night for at least four in succession, with singing, prayers, and the fellowship of worship which would provide a good opportunity for decisions on the part of our older boys and girls, and at the same time be a rewarding experience for each of our matrons and all of the others of us here at the Orphanage. We have just finished such a series of services. The Rev. W. C. Farrell, one of our Eastern North Carolina Conference pastors, came with us and brought the messages. He had visited the Orphanage before and is a favorite amongst many of our children. He made himself a part of our big family while he was here from Wednesday afternoon through the closing services Saturday night. He ate his meals in the dining room—breakfast at 6:00 in the morning, lunch at 11:30, and dinner at 6:00 in the evening. I ate in the Orphanage dining room at the 6:00 o'clock dinner, talked to all present at the close of the meal and led in a prayer for the services.

The services were held in Johnston Hall at 7:30, with Miss Melva Foster leading the singing—the songs and chorus, and how the children did love the singing. Miss Hattie Brakefield served most of the time at the piano. I presided over the services, and tried to help build up the spirit of understanding worship. Mr. Farrell's messages were quiet, plain, and most interesting. Both the children and the helpers were well pleased. At the closing service on Saturday night while the pianist played very softly and all were quietly seated, opportunity for anyone of the young people who wished to quietly arise and come forth in token of their acceptance of a personal faith in Christ was given, and nine of the older ones who were not already members of the church came forward. We are deeply grateful to our visiting minister for the fine way in which he entered into the spirit of our campus, and the excellent messages which he brought. We believe every member of our entire Orphanage family was blessed by the services, and we feel sure some boys and girls will look back on it in years to come with real character-building joy.

We were very proud of the way the children attended the services, and the fine spirit in which they gave up other activities to be present. Also the workers and helpers on our campus gave first place to the services, and I feel that real good was done all the way round. The children will be prepared for reception into the Elon Community Church at the time of the Easter in-gathering.

In Memoriam

McSHERRY.

Miss Lois McSherry passed away at Danville Memorial Hospital, Danville, Va., on January 15, 1952, at the age of 48. Miss McSherry was the daughter of the late George and Anna Hamlett McSherry.

Miss McSherry was a member of Lebanon Christian Church, Semora, N. C. During her extended illness she maintained a concern for the welfare of others.

Funeral services were conducted at Lebanon Church on January 16, by the pastor, Rev. M. W. Andes. Burial followed in the church cemetery.

She is survived by one sister, Mrs. Joe Fuller and by two brothers, George and Clyde McSherry, all of Semora.

MURRAY.

Mrs. Laura Murray Murray, wife of the late Ocie W. Murray, passed away unexpectedly at her home near Virgilina, Va., on March 20, 1952, at the age of 65.

Funeral services were conducted at Union Christian Church, of which she was a life long member, by the pastor, Rev. M. W. Andes. Burial followed in the town cemetery.

Mrs. Murray is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Lottie Thames, Nelson, Va., and Mrs. Mollie Bet Loftis of Virgilina; by three sons, Alonza, James, Bradley, of Virgilina; by two sisters, Mrs. Lula Seat and Mrs. Ida Averette of Virgilina; by five brothers, Robert, Albert, Holt, Howard, and Ealie Murray, all of Virgilina.

May the Father God bless this family who has lost both father and mother within the past four months.

BAGE.

We, the members of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Dendron Congregational Christian Church wish to pay loving tribute to the memory of one of our faithful and beloved members, Mrs. Adelaide Sewell Bage who passed away February 6, 1952. In her going we feel a deep sense of loss, yet are we strengthened by the faith and hope that was hers.

1. That we shall miss her in our work together and shall always cherish the memory of her friendship and faithful service.

2. That in Christian humility we bow in submission to the Divine will of our Heavenly Father where wisdom is supreme.

3. That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy, and point them to the Great Comforter who knows all our sorrows.

Mrs. LUTHER WILLIAMS,
Mrs. P. S. EMORY
Mrs. OWEN WHITMORE
Committee.

KIMBALL.

Mr. J. A. Kimball, a life-long resident of the Mt. Auburn community, a prosperous farmer and, otherwise a leading citizen of Warren County, died at his home February 23, 1952, at the age of 84. Early in life he united with Mt. Auburn Christian Church and became interested in every department of the work. Practically half of his life he served as superintendent of the Sunday school. He was for many years a deacon of the church and when there was an occasion he gave of his time and money for the church. He did those things with the idea that it was an indispensable duty.

For a number of years he was a trustee of Elon College. He was attentive to the duties relating to the interest and welfare of the institution. He gave liberally of his means to the college and his sons and daughters went to school there.

Brother "Jake" will live long in our memory and the true virtues of his life will continue to bear fruit. He has made his contribution to the church in good faith. In this he has left his testimony of the loyalty and devotion to a cause which he loved so dearly. So we feel he has not lived in vain, "For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us, that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together."

The funeral was conducted at Mt. Auburn Christian Church, February 24, by the pastor, Rev. William A. Rich, assisted by this writer.

E. M. CARTER.

ROBERTS.

On December 30, 1951, our Heavenly Father in his infinite wisdom called home, John Goode Roberts, loyal member and deacon of the Windsor Christian Church.

The members of the church offer the following resolutions:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father who doeth all things well.

2. That we try to emulate his Christ-like way of life and regret the loss of a faithful member and deacon. Even though he was afflicted during his last years he continued to be interested in his church.

3. That we extend our deepest sympathy to the members of his family and commend them to God for comfort.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, and a copy entered on the records of the Windsor Christian Church.

Mrs. SHIRLEY T. HOLLAND,
Dr. F. IVAN STEELE,
Mrs. OPHER B. WILKINSON, rally here on Sunday, March 31, afternoon and evening.

On Palm Sunday, our choir will sing Stainer's, "The Seven Last Words," as part of our Lenten program. A special Maundy Thursday Communion Service will be held in Whitley Auditorium, Thursday, April 10, with the choir singing specially chosen music for that evening. An Easter Sunrise Service, on the campus, sponsored by the Student Christian Association, will be conducted Easter morning by our students, for all who are interested to attend.

On the week end of April 19-20, the college and church will be hosts to the caravan of visitors from New England who annually visit our Mission schools and other centers of denominational interest in the South. The Student Christian Association plan a special Sunday evening program for the caravan guests, Sunday, April 20.

On the week end of April 25-27, the college and church will be hosts to a gathering of Congregational Christian students from our universities and colleges of North Carolina, plans for which are being made by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill and a committee of our students and church.

Thus it will be seen that we keep a fairly live calendar of events moving, as we seek to serve our mission as a church here at the center of our college and Convention life.

Let the Church Bear the Witness IN MEXICO

By JOHN R. REULING

The church is heart and soul of our Mexico work. City congregations of business and professional people and village congregations of peasant farmers alike, all feel strongly that the Evangelical Gospel has a real part to play in Mexico.

Working directly with this church we have on American Board support in 1952 three missionary families, and have budgeted for a fourth, for which search is still being made.

Leadership training is of the utmost importance, and the Board has provided for the support of the Mexican Dean of the Union Theological Seminary in Mexico City, for the support of other National leaders, and for scholarships.

Educational work is carried on at the Colon in Guadalajara and at Pacific College in Mazatlan.

Social service work in Guadalajara provides the only services of this kind available in the city.

Church assistance is still necessary, although the Mexican Church is increasing its efforts to become self-supporting.

ADDITIONAL OPPORTUNITIES, AS YET UNPROVIDED FOR.

The opening of new churches, improvements to existing ones, and more scholarships for potential leaders; extensive youth work; all of these and others await the attainment of the full goal of our Christian World Mission.

Do not fail to make your reservation, if you expect entertainment at the coming session of the Southern Convention in Durham, N. C. Write to Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, pastor of the church, 1010 W. Markham Ave., at once.

The members of United Church, Chapel Hill, are busy filling self-denial banks during the Lenten season. In response to the request of the Mission Board and in recognition of the tremendous need of the world, a special offering will be taken on Easter Sunday morning. These gifts will be over and above the regular apportionment giving.

Carol Ann Madren and her mother, the former Miss Marjorie Moore of Suffolk, Virginia, are doing nicely at the home of Marjorie's parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Moore of Suffolk. Carol's dad, James W. Madren, is reported "improving" at Martin Memorial Hospital in Mount Airy, N. C., where he has been confined with flu. He is expected to return home this week.

The first quarterly meeting of 1952 at the First Congregational Christian Church of Richmond, Va., was featured by unusually encouraging reports from the various organizations and committees in review of the first quarter's activities. A delightful supper hour fellowship preceded the business meeting. The showing of the impressive film "A Wonderful Life" followed the supper hour.

The parsonage of our Richmond, Va. Church was recently the scene of the marriage of Miss Janice Hariett Helfenstein, youngest daughter of Doctor and Mrs. Roy C. Helfenstein, and Mr. James Gerald Ryder, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Ryder of Shelby, Ohio. The father of the bride was the officiating clergyman using the double ring ceremony. The young couple will make their home in Shelby, Ohio.

WINCHESTER PARSONAGE DEDICATED.

This interesting news item comes from Rev. R. A. Whitten of Winchester, Virginia.

"Our parsonage was dedicated Sunday evening, March 30, following our evening worship. The service was held in the large social hall (basement) of the parsonage. The congregation joined in the following:

Minister—With sincere and earnest desire that this house may continually serve God in the cause for which it hath been prepared, we come now to dedicate it as the place of abode for the minister and his family, who now is, or may become, the shepherd of souls in this parish.

People: We most solemnly dedicate this house to God.

Minister: We dedicate it as an instrument of righteousness in the work of the church in building the Kingdom of God in the hearts of mankind.

People: We solemnly dedicate it to the promotion of peace and brotherly love.

Minister: With sincere desire and a holy purpose we pray that, under God's guidance, those who dwell here may prove themselves living examples of the Christian family life, and exemplify in word and deed the power and beauty of God's love in humble service for his glorious cause.

People: We invoke the blessings of God upon those who dwell within these walls.

Minister: To the promotion of godliness and brotherly kindness, and the proclamation of the principles of union of all believers in God the Father, Jesus Christ, His Son

What is the Per Capita Giving for Missions in Your Church? Compare Your Record With these Studies in the Yearbook

By Rev. PHILIP S. SAILER, Carversville, Pa.

To begin with, for 1950 the latest published Year-Book, we had 1,227,527 members. The missionary givings were $3,834,619. The per capita giving was only $3.12. We had at that time 5,651 churches. Of these I had compiled the churches giving from $500 to $20,777, of which there were 1,504 churches. The first 124 churches gave $1,000,262; 121 of these had given $5,000 or more. Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., Burlington, N. C., Troy O., Greensboro, First, N. C., Reidsville, N. C., and Suffolk, Va. were in the 124. Twenty-nine churches had memberships less than a thousand. Yet we had 77 churches with a thousand or more. There were fifty-nine churches showing more than 1,500 members, yet there were only forty of these had registered as enthusiastic missionary churches. But I am looking forward to the next Year-Book. From the pastor of The Christian Temple in Norfolk, came a report through the papers that Dr. Stauffacher had been announcing the results of our churches, showing that total contributions for 1951 were $50,500,000, and for missions were five and a half millions. That looks like an increase for missions nearly $1,700,000. And in an increase of total contributions of about 36 per cent or more.

I was a pastor at Norfolk, Va., at the Old Memorial Temple, when we gratefully realized that we had given a little more than $10.00 per capita. That was in 1907. Never since that time were we allowed to be gratified by that same type of rejoicing, until in the closing days of 1951 in our little church in Carversville, Pa. This time it was $10.66 per capita. But of course that was not so impressive since the church had only 109 members.

With gratitude we find our Florida Conference showing inspiring increases. That conference started to climb in 1942, or rather in 1943. In 1942, they had a per capita giving of $1.73. By 1950, they had climbed to $5.88. Dr. Warren A. Denison had been holding stewardship institutes there. But we are glad that our Southern Convention had a rather inspiring experience too. But the S. C. started a little earlier. In 1939 you were down to $1.33, in 1950, you had risen to $4.56.

I have discovered many riches buried in the Year-Book. For example, I found this golden nugget about two years ago. I found a little church in Hawaii, in Honolulu. It is a young church organized in 1946. Though they had only 17 members, they raised $11,271. The next year they had 19 members, and they raised $14,692. The third year they had 22 members and raised $16,972. In the next they had 24 members and raised $13,838. And at the last had 27 members raising $17,354. Thus their per capita giving five years looks like this: '46, $663.00, '47, $769.09, '49, $576.58 And last, '50, $642.74. But that was not all. I discovered a gem in Colorado. The church was organized in 1949. They had 38 members, and gave $22,172. And last year they had 64 members and raised $61,930. This church's per capita in 1949 was $583.47, and 1950 it was $967.66. There were seven churches showing from $208.53 to $967.66, each per capita. There were 34 more churches ranging from $102, to $183.86. There were several hundreds giving from their substance from $50 to $99.78 annually. We had 883 churches which gave $1,000 or more to $20,777 each, for missions. Dr. Barrett was the pastor of the Old Memorial Temple, in Norfolk, which was the first church in our denomination to give as much as $1,000 in one year. That was fifteen years after we begin our for-

EASTER APPAREL

The Easter Parade has become an American tradition. It is not altogether incongruous, as some think, to the Easter Message. Newness of life and newness of apparel are related, if not synonymous. The new dress or suit gives a psychological lift to the wearer, adds new dignity to life, and the financial transaction gives business a boost. On with the Easter Parade!

On second thought, we realize that many of God's children cannot afford new clothes at Easter. In fact, many will have inadequate food and clothes. Some would be most happy to have your old, cast-off clothes. How many of us will give to Missions the same amount we spend for that new Easter outfit? That would give a practical and potent spiritual impetus to our Christian World Mission.

Clothes have their indispensable place in modern society, but their importance is temporal. There are, we must remember, higher and more abiding values.

The story is told of a woman who died in London a few years ago. She had the reputation of being "the best dressed woman in Europe." After her death it was found that her only real legacy to the world was a wardrobe containing a thousand frocks.

A few years earlier there died in the same City of London a man who had one suit of clothes, a blue suit with a red collar—William Booth, the founder of the Salvation Army. Here was an old man with one suit, but he had touched, lifted and lived a thousand lives.

Where is your paramount investment, in costumes or in character? Your Easter offering for Missions will tell the story—the frank, determinate story.

Come now, isn't it better, far better to be on the giving rather than on the receiving end? Just suppose the best you could look forward to at Easter was a "hand-me-down"? But never forget this—we are on the receiving end, eternally so, of God's grace. We are the constant recipients of his bounty. Through his goodness we are free to give. What an opportunity!

"Put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem," cried Isaiah. Easter is the time for the church to put on its beautiful garments of praise, generosity and sacrifice.

St. Paul has this to say about the true Easter apparel: "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven. If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up in life." (II Cor. 5: 1-4.)

EASTER IN HEAVEN

The recent death of H. Augustine Smith removes one of the great song leaders of Christendom. He developed the multiple choir system in the First Congregational Church of Chicago, and then served as professor of church music in Boston University for many years. Many people would agree that he has done as much, if not more, than any other one person to lift the standard of church music.

Augustine Smith was a musical trouper in the best sense of the word. He took good music to the grass roots of Protestantism. He demonstrated the power of great hymns as he conducted innumerable hymn festivals across America. He did for our generation what Lowell Mason did for a previous generation. Those who missed seeing and hearing him may yet have the joy of reading his "Lyric Religion: The Story of Immortal Hymns."

Having sung his way into the heart of a generation, Augustine Smith has gone to that realm where earthly discords are forever vanished and eternal harmonies prevail.

Easter Roads

By REV. DUANE N. VORE

One of those roads is the mission of the church to our own community. There are many other roads, built, maintained by other agencies, that make a strong bid for our travel. The church can and should perform a special mission to the community.

Often we hear it said that the church does not really perform its mission as well as it should. Men are quick to point out many areas in which the church should serve both in physical and in spiritual ways. The criticism is a just one—but its solution depends upon more than the minister and the official boards of the church—the solution depends on you. The road of service to the community leads from the church but you have to walk that road. Yours is the knowledge that must meet the need of the day; yours are the lips that must tell the Good News of Christ working with men; yours are the hands that must be tireless in serving the needs of men; yours are the minds that must conceive and carry out the ways of service. The road is there but it will remain untraveled until you walk it.

Use the road to the church that you may be challenged, encouraged, inspired and dedicated. Use the road from the church that the spirit of our God may work in the lives of men to bring them to his righteous way.

There are usually two ways to go to a given destination. Certainly the church finds this true in service to others. One is a comparatively short route and well traveled—the other is longer and much less well known.

Service to others in our own state and nation is called "Home" missions. How well do you know the road? The church will never really fulfill its need until you walk the way with knowledge and with faith. These are our destinations:

There is the Christian Orphanage at Elon. Providing a physical home, mental and vocational training and spiritual undergirding for life for children is a worthy task. The youngsters need your interest and support—and they get it—sometimes to the exclusion of other equally needed projects.

We need to be vitally interested in the work at Fancy Gap and Elk Spur — here we provide Sunday schools and churches to an area where there is no church unless we make it possible. Add to these the need of Second Church, Norfolk, our Bay View Church, the new churches at Fayetteville and Burlington—established churches in many of our communities that need undergirding so that the church may increase its ministry to people like ourselves.

We need to be vitally interested in the mission effort in North Dakota—in the Southwest—in the migrant workers camps both North and South, East and West. Ministry in these areas has to do not only with Sunday school but with day schools, with animal husbandry, with medical care, with vocational training, with every area of life. The needs are great and the road will not be traveled until you walk it with your interest, your prayers, your active support.

We need to be vitally interested in the work of Elon College for this is a part of our mission effort, too. The training of young people from across the nation is an important business. Our interest and support is essential if that task is to be met successfully. Our interest ought to extend to Bricks and Franklinton too—for Christian education is an opportunity that should reach all people.

This road needs to be well traveled, deeply rutted by the passing of many feet—but you have to walk it.

Service to others across the world is the last road—not so well known and much less traveled. The needs are tremendous and the way waits for you. Where will you go if you walk it?

You will go to Japan—to share in teaching children, building new churches that hope and faith may come to fill the hearts of men who look with eagerness for a new way of life.

You will go to Korea to put clothes on the naked, give food to the starving, to provide shelter for the homeless and care for the sick. Above all you will go with a message of hope in a time of despair. You will bring the light of faith to men who are stumbling in the darkness of war.

You will go to India, to Africa, to France and Italy, to Mexico and South America—and you will go serving in the name of Christ.

The road stretches out before you and in a thousand places, large and small, men look with eager eyes for your coming. How long will they wait?

Roads leading to and from the church — they wait for you — the church can't go to the community except you take it—won't go to those in our own land until you walk in service—can't answer the need of men in far away places until you begin to walk the ways of service.

We extend to you the invitation and urge you to join your hands with others in your church through regular attendance at worship and through the program of the church that we may fill the roads of service to the glory of God and ministry to his children.

The Easter Glory

By REV. C. REXFORD RAYMOND

Palm Sunday past, the Cup and Broken Bread
Of Thursday night are gone. The Cross looms high Against a thunder-shaken, stormy sky.
But none who know Christ think of Him as dead;
For, "I have overcome the world!" He said.
His body cruel men could crucify;
But hark! "Abide with me," we heard him cry;
Around the world His saving love has spread.

The glory of the Cross exceeds surmise,
Revealing Christ as Saviour of mankind.
The deepest depths of sin that men can plumb
Are overcome by Christ-like sacrifice.
His Cross calls us to turn and change our mind
To be what God has planned us to become.

Romance of a Missionary to Japan

By PAUL F. WARNER.

"Please tell me a story of your country!"

The carefully spoken words, accompanied by a tap on the shoulder, aroused the missionary from his nap. For in Japan, you know, it is quite the thing to snatch "forty winks" whenever there is a chance, even in a street-car or a train. The missionary had had a hard day. In the morning there had been a five-hour journey on a crowded train, and he had stood up all the way, except for the few moments that he sat upon the end of a suitcase on the car platform. And after that there had been a committee meeting to discuss the purchase of a certain lot for the erection of a much-needed church building. What a strain such meetings were, too! The need was so great and there was such a little money with which to carry on the work. But at last the meeting was over and he was homeward bound. On the return trip he was fortunate enough to get a seat in the third-class carriage. Tired? No, of course not! Or, perhaps, just a trifle. It would be good just to rest his head for a few moments against the window frame. . . .

"Please tell me a story of your country!" The words broke in upon him. No, he was not homesick. Perhaps he had been dreaming of the day when the home church in America would catch a vision of its responsibility to the work of the Kingdom of Christ in the foreign fields, and give so generously that these problems would solve themselves, and the work of the kingdom increase by leaps and bounds! Ah, yes, that was it! But the voice was rousing him.

The missionary opened his eyes with a start. He knew exactly what to expect, for there had often been similar requests. Seated opposite him in the semi-compartment (in third-class cars the seat backs are not reversible) was a young high school boy. It was easy to distinguish him by his school uniform with its brass buttons, and the school insignia on his cap and the neckband of his coat. The boy had a nice face, with the innocence and earnestness of a youth of the rural districts. Of course, he wanted to speak English and the presence of a "foreigner" in the car gave him just the opportunity he desired. And so, with carefully thought out words he opened the conversation. The missionary knew what it meant.

Each sentence would have to be repeated several times, and pronounced so slowly and carefully as to be laborious. It wasn't a very pleasing prospect, particularly after the day's labors. Perhaps a little fun might save the situation. A sense of humor is always an asset. No doubt the missionary's eyes twinkled and the corners of his mouth twitched. At any rate, he assumed the best possible "shiran-kao" (not knowing face), and said to the student, in Japanese, "Once again!"

The boy was non-plussed. What! could it be possible that this man does not understand English? Surely he was not a Japanese; no Japanese ever had a high, thin nose like that, he thought. And now the man's eyes were open, they were green! Of course he wasn't a Japanese. But why in the world didn't he understand English? Perhaps it is because my pronunciation is bad, thought the boy. So he set himself again, and with flushed face and perspiring brow, for the third time he said, "Please—tell—me—a—story of—your—country!"

The missionary almost relented. The boy was certainly earnest. But now that the joke was started it had to be carried on. The missionary's brow was clouded by a puzzled frown. His lips moved slightly as if he were trying to repeat the sounds of the apparently unintelligible words; his head shook dubiously. After a moment or two his features relaxed, and looking at the boy with a smile, he said, "It's no use; I don't understand."

From now on the boy also spoke in Japanese. The use of his own vernacular restored his confidence. But he was still unable to conceal his amazement. "From what country do you come?" he asked.

In spite of the joke, the missionary did not wish to tell an untruth point-blank, if it could be avoided. So he evaded the question. "Suppose you guess," he replied.

"France?" asked the boy. No, it wasn't France.

"Germany?" No, it wasn't Germany either. Then after a pause—

"Switzerland?" What ever made him guess that, thought the missionary. No, it wasn't Switzerland. The boy's curiosity had reached the limit.

"Then from what country do you come?" he demanded.

There could be no more evasion. The missionary stifled his conscience. "Italy," he hazarded as a safe answer. Of course the boy wouldn't know any Italian. But questions about Roman history might also be embarrassing, so he decided to direct the conversation.

The boy had been quite satisfied with the answer. The scarcity of green eyes and mud-colored hair in Italy had not occurred to him. He found himself answering the missionary's questions readily.

"My name is Goto," he said (The missionary remembered the name. Goto—Behind the Wistaria—he had heard it before.) "I live in Kakegawa," he continued. (Kakegawa? Oh, yes Hanging River.) "I am a student in the third year of middle-school (high school), and I am very fond of English. Too bad you cannot speak it." The missionary winced. "My first name is Akira," he confided. "It means, brilliant or shining. The Chinese character which represents my name is a very unusual one, made of the characters for long or ancient, and the sun." He sketched the character on a sheet of paper. "My father chose it for me. He is very fond of the Chinese classics," said the boy, proudly. The missionary complimented him on having such a magnificent name.

"Goto-san," continued his questioner, "have you met many foreigners?"

"Yes, a few."

"How do you like them?" asked the man.

"They are very nice," answered the boy with characteristic Japanese politeness.

"But what do you think of these Americans?" persisted his questioner. "Don't you think they are a queer lot, stuck-up, conceited, thinking they rule the world, and so on? Tell me honestly."

"Well," replied Goto-san, "to be honest with you, I must say I like the Americans best of all!"

He said that to one he supposed to be an Italian! The missionary's conscience refused to be stifled any longer. He would make a clean breast of it. "Goto-san," he said, "I have been fooling you. I am an American. I understood your English words perfectly a while ago. Your pronunciation was very good. But I—I just wanted to find out what you might think of us if you did not know. . . ."

Goto-san was aghast. If he had

EASTER.

The Christian's hope is in the life to come. Christ gave him this hope: "He that liveth and believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." Paul accentuated this hope: "Christ died for our sins. . . He was buried and rose again on the third day. If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain and your faith also vain." We may not have much vital interest in the future life so long as we are in strength and our loved-ones are with us, but when the years pass, and friends, acquaintances and dear-ones begin to leave us, we wonder why and where? Surely they are not dead! They cannot be gone forever. Sometime, somewhere, it may be in a better land, we shall meet again.

By faith in Christ and surrender to his will, we may have the assurance in our own souls. It is not necessarily a process but vitally a transaction. By faith in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye we are saved. Christ is our hope and Christ is our life.

In Easter time we look backward across the years and forward toward the unfolding vistas of a vast forever, and as we look, hope rises within our hearts and we dream of the day when we shall meet again those who have given us life and others who have made life worthwhile and richer for us. We stand between yesteryears and future aeons. Backward we cannot go. The gates are closed against us. Forward we must go. The flood of time sweeps us on. True the grave lies between us and our hope but death cannot hold us. Christ hath broken the chains of death and revealed the secret of the grave. With a mighty shout he has risen and triumphs over our foes. The gates of Eternity stand ajar and the immortals invite us to come.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

This week's report is good, very good—in fact, it is excellent in the amount raised but in the number of churches and Sunday schools reporting to date it is disappointing. We have a total of $1,020.99. Never before in the history of man, other than following conference when reports are made closing the year, has our report been so encouraging. The disappointing feature is that we have not a single contribution from a church or Sunday school in the Eastern North Carolina Conference. We have contributions from 12 churches and Sunday schools in the Eastern Virginia Conference totalling $838.38; six churches and Sunday schools from the North Carolina and Virginia Conference with a total of $156.13, two churches from the Western North Carolina Conference with a total of $15.50; and two Sunday schools from the Virginia Valley Conference with a total of $10.98, making a grand total of 22 churches reporting out of 197 and $1,020.99 in receipts.

Of course, all fifth Sunday offerings do not come in the week following. In all probability we will have many coming in this week and doubtlessly the week following. At any rate, this is an excellent record and I am very happy to make the report. It comes at a time when we really need the money. For instance, we can buy coal cheaper now than we can in the fall, but the condition is that we must pay for it in cash. It takes thirty five car loads of coal annually at a cost of about $1,000 a car including freight. This is only one item of our current budget. You may easily realize how badly we need funds and how happy we are when our Sunday schools and churches remember us.

RICHMOND CHAPTER OF THE ELON ALUMNI ASSOCIATION MEETS.

The annual meeting of the Richmond chapter of the Elon College Alumni Association was held in the Raleigh Hotel in Richmond on Tuesday evening of this week. Dinner was at seven o'clock, and the business session was at eight. Approximately 25 graduates and former students of Elon were present, among them some of the graduates of the last few years.

The meeting was presided over by Mr. Ryland Johnson, who for the past three years has been president of the chapter. Dean D. J. Bowden of the college brought the message of the evening, his subject being "Students at Elon College and the Honor System." Dr. L. E. Smith, who was also present, in a short talk told of his work as president of the college and stressed the need of the church-related college in the times that are before us.

At the conclusion of these talks, the chapter went into business session. Mr. Johnson asked that he not be considered as president for a fourth term. He said that he had enjoyed the privilege of serving the chapter, but that he felt that it was time that some of the more recent students should take over. Mr. Delmar L. Brown, young Richmond attorney, was elected as president; Mr. Floyd, Boyce of the Gates Rubber Company, is the new vice-president, and Mr. Wallace L. Chandler, who is with the Universal Leaf Tobacco Co., will serve this year as secretary.

After the election of officers, Mr. Carl Wood, Jr., Alumni Secretary, showed a motion picture of a football game between Elon and Eastern Carolina Teachers' College.

Surviving, in addition to her husband, are one daughter, Mrs. Stanley C. Harrell; one son, Dr. Waldo W. Boone, both of Durham; and four grandchildren, Miss Mary Ann Harrell, a senior at Wellesley College, William Hugh Boone, Charles Stanley Boone and Myra Elizabeth Boone, all of Durham.

Mrs. Boone was the last surviving member of her immediate family.

At Home and Abroad

PROCLAIM THE EASTER MESSAGE IN DISTANT LANDS.

By DAVID MCKEITH, JR.

The major question which should be uppermost in the mind of every thoughtful Protestant today is this: Can the forces of the church move rapidly and effectively enough to build on the Christian foundations which have been laid in the past century of missions, and redeem the world through the gospel?

Time after time leaders in all walks of public life state that only a spiritual awakening can bring order and peace out of the struggle and chaos of our world. That men are seeking spiritual answers to their perplexities is evident in every land. In Japan SCAP estimates that 6 per cent to 7 per cent of the people believe Christianity to be the best religion, but less than 1 per cent of the people are Christians. The other 5 per cent to 6 per cent are enquirers. Other forces desirous of winning their loyalty are using every means of giving information and winning converts. Our Christian churches should be meeting this challenge. We are not doing so only because of a lack of funds and personnel.

The same story can be told in varying form of every country where the Board serves. In the Philippine Islands there is a new sense of freedom, and the people are discovering in Protestantism the spiritual freedom they seek. The devotion and commitment of Protestant Christians in the Philippines is an inspiration. They too need financial assistance and the help of American personnel.

Remember too, however, that the Secretaries of the American Board are thinking constantly not in terms of the present or even only the next year, but rather in terms of the long range program. We are well aware that if there is to be a strong church of committed Christians built upon the foundations of the past, two things are essential. First, the church in every land must be strengthened; second, national leaders, men and women of these lands, must be adequately prepared for positions of responsibility.

Charlotte DeForest, formerly President of Kobe College, Japan, gave me a phrase which she had heard the late Dr. Charles Beale of Milwaukee use in a college address years ago. I have used this phrase often in recent months to characterize the situation in the work of the Christian Church at home and abroad—"The merciless expansion of the moral task." As the gospel is preached, churches are organized, schools become essential, hospital and village health services are required as part of our Christian work, social centers develop, plans for the training of national leaders expand. These are the fruits of service, the normal development of our Christian work.

The time will come when institutions and services become self-supporting, but that time is not now. The demands upon mission boards for assistance in the expanding work overseas is greater now than ever. Additional requests from American Board fields for the 1952 budget which were considered absolutely essential totalled $35,608, but these could not be granted.

We are grateful for the pastors and lay leaders in America who have caught the vision of the essential tasks of foreign missions. We are grateful for these pastors and laymen who support the missionaries not only with funds, but also with prayer. We rejoice that the finest of our young people are looking forward to giving their lives in service.

MISS MEEBOLD GOES TO NEW FIELD.

Two Congregational Christian "Displaced Missionaries from China" sailed Monday, March 31 from San Francisco on the J. L. Luckenbach en route to new work under the American Board in the Micronesian Islands. They are Miss Louise Meebold of Chicago, Illinois and Miss Lucy B. Lanktree of Oak Park, Ill.

Few American women have come closer to the country people of China's great northwest than Miss Meebold, who began her work in that country in 1920 when mules, bicycles, rickshaws and two-wheeled carts were the modes of conveyance in her territory. She has been a church worker with headquarters in Fenyang, North China, working for nearly three years in that area after the advent of the People's Government.

In addition to creative work among the villarge women including classes in baby care, Bible study and elementary personal hygiene, Miss Meebold fought famine and flood during several tragic periods.

Following Pearl Harbor Miss Meebold was a civilian prisoner in the Weishsien internment camp for two years being released by an airbourne humanitarian mission of U. S. soldiers dropped out of the skies. She has many friends in the Southern Convention, where she has had speaking engagements.

In Micronesia Miss Meebold will live at Majuro, Marshall Islands probably teaching on Ron Ron part of the time.

ROMANCE OF A MISSIONARY.

been surprised before he was dumb-founded now. The missionary talked rapidly. He must make amends. What a terrible opinion Goto-san would have of missionaries if he did not. With all the friendliness and cordiality that he could command he told the boy that he was a Christian missionary, that he lived in the little town of Okitsu, some fifty miles from Kakegawa, and that he was greatly interested in young students. He expressed the hope that Goto-san would become a fine Christian, and urged him to read the Bible and attend a Christian Church.

The train was approaching Kakegawa. Goto-san rose to say good-bye. "Good-bye, Goto-san! I hope you will become a fine Christian!" were the missionary's parting words.

The remainder of the ride was not a very pleasant hour for the missionary. A troubled conscience is certainly not a pleasant traveling companion. Lost opportunity! A young man who might have been reached for Christ! Joking when there was serious work to be done! And Goto-san would think all Christian missionaries were fools! . . . But the missionary breathed a prayer that God would lead Goto-san to the Light!

* * *

The following Sunday morning Goto-san rose bright and early. It was the only day of the week on which he did not have to go to school. As soon as he could he made his way to the railroad station. "Give me a ticket to Okitsu," he said. . . .

It was ten o'clock when he arrived in Okitsu. So this was the town where the strange Sensei (teacher) lived! It was a pretty place indeed.

EASTER WORSHIP SERVICE.

Compiled by MRS. J. H. DULING,
Supt. of Spiritual Life
Eastern Virginia Conference.

Prelude—"The Day of Resurrection"—Pilgrim Hymnal, No. 132.

Call to Worship:

My risen Lord, I feel thy strong protection;
I see Thee stand among the graves today;
"I am the Way, the Life, the Resurrection,"
I hear Thee say.

And all the burdens I have carried sadly
Grow light as blossoms on an April day;
My Cross becomes a staff, I journey gladly
This Easter day.

(Author Unknown)

Hymn—"Christ the Lord is Risen Today"—Pilgrim Hymnal, No. 130.

Prayer Poem:

Lord, make my heart a garden,
As real a place of prayer
As was high-hushed Gethsemane
When Jesus suffered there.

Make it a place of flowers,
Whose fragrant cups distill
The dews of living water
Ensweetened in thy will.

Plant there the trees of kindness,
Where all who look above
May see the shadows softened
By the sunshine of thy love.

Fill it with Easter gladness
As fresh and new as spring,
Keep it the clean, pure dwelling
Of Christ, the risen King.
(Esther Baldwin York)

Scripture—Matthew 28:1-10, 16-20.

Prayer:

Our Father, we thank thee for the meaning of this day and the hope and peace that it gives to us in these times of stress and conflict. There is so much need of the reassurance of life after death now when we are losing our friends and loved ones in war as well as through natural cause. We pray that life shall be given meaning to us that we may live for thee and with thee, rather than aimlessly living from day to day. Help us to carry out thy purpose for the world, to do thy will, to sacrifice for others, and to love our brothers as ourselves. Amen.

Meditation:

Read "That Resurrection Morn" by Cynthia Pearl Maus on page 450 of "Christ and the Fine Arts." Or give an interpretation of one of the many lovely Easter pictures.

Hymn—"More Love to Thee, O Christ"—Pilgrim Hymnal, No. 146.

Closing Prayer:

O God, help us that our Easter faith be so manifest in our daily lives that goodness may become our belief and love our law. May we invest our passing tasks with enduring nobility, and reveal in ourselves the abiding goodness and power of our Master, victorious over death. In his name. Amen.

(From the "Fellowship of Prayer, 1952")

WHAT DOES EASTER MEAN TO YOU?

When Easter comes does it simply mean that springtime is here, that one should houseclean a bit, that it is a time for new clothes, that a lazy feeling called "Spring Fever" is expected, that you hope for a lily or a corsage from boy friend or husband, that you plan an egg hunt for the children?

Or does Easter mean the resurrection of Jesus, the beginning of real hope in the disciples' hearts, the time for a sacrificial offering for Missions, the time for a housecleaning of our souls, the time for a dedication or a re-dedication of our lives to the Master, a time of winning someone else to the Christian faith, the basis for our belief in immortality?

Each of us must decide for herself just what Easter is to mean in her life this year. The decision may not be easy, unless we have spent much time during this Lenten period in prayer and meditation, unless we have thought "long thoughts" after the mind and heart of Jesus.

Let us consider carefully and prayerfully just what Easter should mean in our lives, and just what it does mean. If there is a discrepancy between the two, let us remedy that before it is too late.

PLAN FOR THESE ACTIVITIES IN MAY.

MAY FELLOWSHIP DAY.

MAY 2, 1952.

Theme: "Spiritual Security for Today's Families."

"May Fellowship Day is the youngest of the three special days observed together by Christian women of all faiths. It grew out of the desire for an event in which all church women of the home community might come together for fellowship and a better understanding of common problems in the life of each person. It can be a time when we look at our communities and determine some of the things that need to be changed. Certainly security in the home is a basic concern of all Christian women at a time when practices in modern society which undermine our homes and endanger our youth have never been so apparent. Truly the fruits of our Christian faith are found in the expression of our democratic way of life. These are the values we must find in family life today. How the family reacts to fear, anxiety, trouble and need depends on its basic security. The ultimate influence of Christianity on community life will come through the influence of its Christian homes."

It is hoped that each society will order immediately the packet of material from The Department of Church Women, 156 Fifth Ave., New York 10, N. Y. The deadline for shipping program packet is April 18. The price is fifty cents.

NATIONAL FAMILY WEEK.

MAY 4-11, 1952.

Theme: "Brotherhood Begins at Home."

The churches in America will observe their tenth National Family Week on the above dates. Each year this observance is endorsed by the President of the United States and many prominent religious leaders. During the week the attention of the nation will be focussed upon strengthening the home. The love relationship between persons is first experienced in the family. The plans and activities for Family Week are such as to help families achieve such quality of living that the world may know what Christian Brotherhood is really like.

"Stories of Family Worship," "Family Week and You," "Your Church and Family Week" are pamphlets which will be helpful in planning your program for the participation in National Family Week. These may be obtained for five cents each from the National Council of Churches, 79 East Adams St., Chicago 3, Illinois.

May you and your families enjoy the activities of your home and church during the week of May 4-11.

EASTER WISHES!

How will you spend your Easter?
Dressing up? . . . Dyeing eggs? . . .
Receiving a basket?

Some families think only of their new clothes, egg hunts and baskets. Some Christian families have been dropping pennies in their Cent-a-Meal jars—pennies that will be the means of taking the Easter story to families far away.

Good Friday is a day for eating hot cross buns. Let mother make them, sister ice them and the whole family eat them. If you don't know how, get a ready mixed package and you will find the directions.

One family reported that they spent Saturday morning before Easter making a worship center. Father nailed a small shelf under a sunny window. Mother put a linen cloth on it, an open Bible, a candlestick and the children brought a bowl of jonquils. Is there anything in your home to tell your friends and visitors who come to your doors that you are a Christian family? It may be a picture of Christ, a cross, either made or bought, or just the open Bible.

The church school children of the Church of Wide Fellowship enjoy a traditional treat on Saturday afternoon before Easter when they hunt for colored eggs in the church garden. Perhaps you will spend Saturday afternoon coloring eggs and decorating them. Saturday night have a service before your worship center. Read the Easter story. Sing a song, make a litany of joy, say sentence prayers.

Sunday go to church together. It is a tradition to wear new clothing to show the change of the seasons, we take off the old and put on the new. But going to church on Easter Sunday as a family is the way Jesus would have us keep Easter. Our clothes do not matter.

Bunnies, eggs, baskets and hunts are fun. They are a part of old festivals of spring and new life. Chicks, ducks, rabbits, hamsters, flowers, eggs, grass and birds remind us of the awakening earth and skies.

In church you will hear glorious music and many of the anthems and songs will end with "Alleluia," and that can be our Easter song too.

Go to church Easter!

HAMSTERS AS PETS.

By BERTHA YOUNKIN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

When Cynthy Godwin's parents moved to the city, they were dismayed at having to live in a tiny apartment above a store in the business section of the town.

"This is no place to bring up a child," complained Andy Godwin bitterly. "Right now there seems to be little choice, however."

"We'll soon find something better," said his wife consolingly. "The only thing is—I'd promised Cynthy a pet when we moved and I don't see how we could possibly manage a dog or cat here."

Andy Godwin sighed. "She wants a puppy. When I was her age I had a dog I wouldn't have sold for a million dollars. A pet means more than toys or money to a child."

"Cynthy will be so lonely. It's too bad."

Andy suddenly brightened. "Say, I just thought of something! One of the men down at the shop said he was raising a small animal called a hamster. He said that they were of so little trouble and expense that in London they called them the 'Austerity Pet.' I'll ask him about it today."

That night Andy was late for dinner, but when he came in he carried a small Pasteboard box with holes in the top. "It's your new playmate, honey!" he announced to his daughter. He laughed as Cynthy danced excitedly about. "Take off the cover very carefully."

Inside the box sat a little bright-eyed ball of golden-brown fur. It gazed up at them expectantly, its whiskers twitching with excitement.

"It's a baby Golden Hamster," Andy explained. "It will grow to about seven inches in length and become very tame. Look!"

Everyone began laughing as the young hamster decided to clean up. He sat squirrel-like, washed his hands and face thoroughly, even managing to reach the back of his neck with tiny, almost human hands. Cynthy could scarcely take her happy eyes from the box.

"I'll make a cage for him so you can keep him in your room," promised her father. "Hamsters are very clean, and you can care for him yourself, Cynthy."

Norbert, as they named the pet, went to kindergarten that year with Cynthy, and his bright, friendly nature made Cynthy a very popular young lady. The teacher placed Norbert's cage in the very front of the room and told the class much about the Golden Hamster—how it had been developed from a single pair found in 1930, and how thousands of them were now being used as domestic pets all over the world.

"He fills his pouches so full of food at feeding time," Cynthy told the children, "that he looks as though he had three heads. Then he runs to his nest and buries most of it. He eats nearly any kind of food, though Dad says it's natural for him to eat green vegetables—lettuce and carrots—like a rabbit. We feed him scraps from the table, and Mother says that what is good for me is good for Norbert!"

"I find that the A.S.P.C.A. seems to be of the same opinion, and that makes hamsters easy to feed, doesn't it?" said the teacher. "We think you're a lucky girl, Cynthy, to have found a pet as fascinating as Norbert, the Golden Hamster."

PORTSMOUTH NEWS.

On Friday evening, March 21, the members of the Elm Avenue Church gave their pastor and his family, Rev. and Mrs. R. Eugene Tally, a house warming. Several games were played and enjoyed. Then refreshments were served. There were many useful gifts presented to the pastor and family for which they were most grateful.

Rev. and Mrs. George M. Tally, of Sanford, N. C., spent the week end of March 29 to April 3 with their son and his family.

While visiting here Mr. Tally spoke at the Portsmouth Youth for Christ service on Saturday night, then in both the morning and evening services at our Elm Avenue Church on Sunday, March 30. He was also speaker at the Wednesday night prayer services.

The people of Elm Avenue are responding in a very fine way to the penny-a-meal plan for missions, and are hoping and praying that by the close of the period in June they will have raised their apportionment in full.

A CALL FOR QUICK ACTION.

This call for quick action to meet immediate rehabilitation needs in Korea is made to each local Pilgrim Fellowship group. It is from the United Nations Korean Rehabilitation Agency (UNKRA), The Heifers Relief Committee (interdenominational), and CWS-CROP (the Christian Rural Overseas Program sponsored by Church World Service of which our own denomination is a member). The United Nations Civil Assistance Command for Korea (UNCACK) has asked the above agencies to meet this call at once, by a "pilot" experiment. Other well known denominational relief agencies are participating and UCYM is being asked to assist.

1. What is needed? The first urgent request is for—200,000 hatching eggs, 1,000 pigs, 2,000 goats.

They are asked to begin to replenish farm stocks depleted by the ravages of battle and foraging by advancing armies.

2. How to help? The channel through which local Pilgrim Fellowship groups can help is CWS-CROP, 308 West Washington Street, Chicago 6, Illinois. Set up some kind of quick project in your youth group to raise money to send for eggs, pigs, or goats. One group in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference is already planning a gift. A case of 30 dozen hatching eggs is $25.00. A half case or a whole one will help greatly. A pig or a goat is $50.00 each. Some groups can do even this much. The animals are bred before shipment to increase amount of rehabilitation. Cash gifts are desired now. Latter "on the hoof" gifts can be made. Send your cash gift through your Conference Pilgrim Fellowship Treasurer marked specifically for "Korean Rehabilitation" to be sent to the above CWS-CROP address.

3. Placement and Shipping? Both are done by the Heifer Committee, already experienced in such work. UNKRA has provided a fund for promotion, administration and shipping costs. On the spot placement will be made by UNCACK in cooperation with UNKRA and the Department of Agriculture of the Republic of Korea, with supervision by the Heifer Committee.

4. Assistance—state and local? Rev. Carl R. Key, 1421 Ruffin Street, Durham, N. C., Southeast Supervisor for CWS-CROP (a Southern Convention Minister) can answer other questions by mail and telephone and will send you as many "flyers" on this special project as you can use well. Ask your minister and local sponsors to help you now.

AN EASTER PRAYER.

By Barbara Nichols
Christian Temple, Norfolk.

Dear Heavenly Father, in this coming Easter season, help us to renew our love and loyalty to Thee. Help us to show others the pathway to happiness in Christ, our Lord. We are thankful for the many blessings thou hast bestowed upon us. Help us to understand Thy greatness. Thou art always near when we have need of Thee, but we cannot take Thee, O God, for granted. Jesus died so that men would be free. Let us live by his word always, and uphold the ideas for which he died. Though it seems hard at times, O Lord, grant us courage and strength that our rewards may be Thine. Guide us in Thy footsteps, and help those who have strayed come back to Thee. Help us to realize what the Easter season means, and to live in the manner in which it was given to us. We ask these things in his name, who died that men might live. Amen.

5. Approval? Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Educational Secretary of the Convention and Mr. Warren Matthews, President of our Convention Pilgrim Fellowship, were approached last week by Mr. Key about our help. Mr. Key spoke about this urgent call to action at our North Carolina Pilgrim Fellowship Rally April 30. At the request of Miss Coghill and Warren this call is presented to you through this page. No other appeal can be made to you in any way due to cost. Why not do this bit now as a plus gift or a second mile effort?

6. Why give now? Why? Four million families in Korea are without a home, food, or clothing now. An "Easter Egg Shower," a pig or a goat given by your group can be your answer to such stark reality! It can be an act of universal brotherhood in your home town, on your front door step. By sharing now you help CROP to continue to build bridges of peace and friendship among our needy brothers overseas. Act now by sharing to help send a "living symbol" of your goodwill!

NEW GROUP AT PORTSMOUTH.

On January 27th the young people of the Elm Avenue Christian Church, Portsmouth, reorganized their society and would like to share with all our friends the blessings which we have enjoyed at the beginning of another year.

Active and capable officers have been elected for a period of six months in which to function, and then new elections will be in order.

The program committee, composed of five members, selected for the first subject of study "A General View of Genesis." This committee, along with other officers, have periodic meetings to plan one or more of these programs in advance for the instruction and enjoyment of all.

Very interesting and informative talks have been given on various points of interest. For example, some of them were "God" by Christine Russell (secretary-treasurer), "Creation" by Joe Wetherbee (director), "Dispensations" by Robert Deans (president), "The Sabbath and the Lord's Day," by Doris Russell (program chairman), "Man's Fall," by Robert Deans and "The Seed of the Woman," by Ruthe Hammar (pianist). The more active parts of the programs have been silent and live skits presented by several young people, each teaching a spiritual truth. Participants in these were Paul Rabel, D. D. Frye, Beulah Wetherbee, Marie Jefferson and Harrison Bridgers.

"Noah's Ark," presented on flannelgraph, by Ruthe Hammar and Phyllis Tally, was another most interesting and enjoyable feature included in the study. This was followed up with a round-table discussion on "Noah's Ark—A Type of Christ," led by Harrison Bridgers.

A Friday night social at the parsonage with a lively program of games, fun and refreshments was quite a success. Our service boys played an active part in this and they have also been real blessings in many of our regular services. We are proud of each one who takes his stand in the service for the King, as well as for Uncle Sam.

. . . This is the first in a series of articles which we hope to continue approximately each month, in telling others of our active and fruitful work for Christ in Portsmouth. We

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS AND THE TEACHINGS OF JESUS.

LESSON III—APRIL 20, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: The law was given by Moses; grace and truth came through Jesus Christ.—John 1:17.

LESSON: Matthew 5:17-20; Mark 10:17-22.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 119:1-16.

Jesus and the Law.

We begin today a series of lessons under the general theme The Ten Commandments and the Teachings of Jesus. The theme for today's lesson is Jesus and the Law. This lesson, an introductory one, deals with the relationship between Jesus and the law, and his attitude toward the law. Then in succession, we will consider the Ten Commandments, one by one, and the teachings of Jesus concerning them, or his interpretations of them. It can be an interesting and informative adventure as we find how Jesus puts new meaning into the law. And it can be a searching and sobering one as we see the demands of the higher righteousness which Jesus demanded and embodied.

The Law.

The law was sacred to the Jews. It had been divinely given and sanctioned. It was the foundation on which the nation had been founded. It was the pattern of action for the individual and the nation. It was designed as a code of conduct for the individual and a code of righteousness for the nation. It was based on the Ten Commandments, but it was much more than the Ten Commandments—it included that great body of Jewish rules of order and regulations which in time came to be known as the Pentateuch, or the first five books of the Old Testament. Furthermore it included not only written, but oral rules and regulations, and it also included civil as well as religious laws. It was a comprehensive, complex, holy, sacred thing, the foundation on which the nation had been built. It was revered and revered. From it there was no appeal—it was final and authoritative. In it, God had spoken and had made his will known.

Jesus and the Law.

What should be the attitude of Jesus toward the law? Was he not the Messiah? Did he not see the limitations of the Law? Was he not above the law? Could he not disregard the law? Were not his followers also above or beyond the law? These were not academic questions—they were questions which Jesus had to face. And today's lesson, and the lessons that follow in this quarter, are the answers to these questions. They show how Jesus, while recognizing the validity and the authority of the law, went beyond the law and filled it with new meaning and power. Under the old covenant the law was an end in itself; under the new covenant the law was a means unto an end. The righteousness of the law, in Christ, became the righteousness that went beyond the law.

Not to Destroy, But to Fulfill.

"Think not that I came to destroy the law or the prophets," said Jesus; "I came not to destroy, but fulfill." Instead of saying "It is all wrong, I will abolish it," Jesus said in effect. "It is all right as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough." He would not abolish it, he would supersede it. He would fulfill it by filling it full of meaning. The same principle would apply to the teachings of the prophets. He would take their conceptions of the Messiah and improve upon them, go beyond them, fill them with new meaning and glory.

The Importance of the Old Testament.

There is a tendency in many quarters today to minimize the importance of the Old Testament. It is well to notice the words of Jesus on this point. He asserted that the law was an enduring and eternal thing—heaven and earth might pass away, but the law would endure till all things be accomplished. Whosoever took a light view of the law was least in the Kingdom of heaven. But he who did and taught the things of the law was great in the Kingdom of heaven. And Jesus was talking about the law, about the Old Testament, it was the only law he had.

The Righteousness that Exceeds.

"Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter into the Kingdom of heaven." That was a hard saying indeed. The scribes and Pharisees were experts in keeping the law, right down to the last and the least detail. How in the world could anybody exceed their righteousness? The point of the matter was that the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees was an external, formal, legal, mechanical righteousness. It dealt with the outward act, whereas the righteousness of the Kingdom dealt with the inner spirit or the motive. The righteousness of the law dealt with things that the policeman could see; that of the Kingdom dealt with that which God saw. Throughout these coming weeks we will see how Jesus was constantly dealing with this problem, and of how he was constantly emphasizing the inwardness of the righteousness of the Kingdom.

A Case in Point.

The story of the rich young ruler is a case in point. Here was a young man, wealthy, socially acceptable, decent, educated, talented who had kept all the moral law in terms of the letter of the law. But he lacked the elemental quality of the righteousness of the Kingdom. Careful to keep the commandments concerning his relations with his fellowmen, he had ignored those which pointed up his relationship with God. He was covetous, he loved gold more than he loved God, he had goodness but he lacked grace. He needed to renounce the thing that was keeping him from God.

Law and Grace.

"The law was given through Moses; grace and truth came through Jesus Christ." Here is summed up the whole thing. Moses placed before men the ten basic rules for living, as Dr. Chappell calls them, and commanded men to obey them,—without changing our nature or giving us power to obey. But Jesus gave us something beyond law; the grace that makes it possible for us to be born as sons of God, and through which we become heirs of salvation. He helps us to do the things he tells us to do. He puts the law of God in the heart. Grace and truth come through him.

"We are happy that all indebtedness has been paid, the church is out of the church which is composed of Sunday school class on the 2nd floor of the church and is composed of about a dozen intermediate boys and girls. This class is taught by Mr. H. F. Nelson. Volume one of our new monthly publication has been issued.

"We will broadcast our morning worship, 11 to 12, over WINC and WRFL (F.M.) each Sunday during April.

"All the Protestant churches of Winchester will hold Pre-Easter services, April 6, through 11, as a united campaign of Evangelism, following up our united campaign of Visitation which was conducted the past week with the Rev. John Pemberton, Jr., D. D. of Cape May, N. J., director.

"The Mid-Year Conference on March 27 at Bethlehem was well attended and a profitable session. The people at Bethlehem are going forward with the work of building their new church. The basement has been dug and the concrete foundation poured. Dirt in large quantity is being moved from the church lot."

Dear Friends:

Thank you for the $512.90 this week, and for the packages of clothes for Easter. Four other packages have come in since this report was made up. They will show in next week's report. You are good and kind people. You can well imagine how it would feel to have no home and have to depend on others, and especially if you had to go to school and church in worthless shoes and worn out clothing. Also you can sympathize with the one who finds himself surrounded by children asking if I can't have some better shoes than these for Easter. It is indeed gratifying to see how much real kindness and thoughtfulness there is amongst our people. God bless you and thank you.

Each morning when I come through the door of Johnston Hall I read the name of the late Charles D. Johnston inscribed on a bronze plate at the door. It reads that the building was erected in 1926 to the glory of God and the service of youth, in honor of Charles David Johnston, Superintendent. The bronze plate was donated by the board of trustees. It has bothered me no little because there has not been sufficient funds to replaced the long worn out roof, to stop the leaks from ruining the plaster in halls, corridors and rooms. Because we took our money and did the job anyhow we are now running behind.

The leaks are stopped. And again even though there were not sufficient funds we had the walls patched at considerable expense, because they needed it so badly and because the Junior Chamber of Commeree of Burlington said fix the walls and we will paint the stairways and all the halls and install inlayed lineleum on the floor and stairways. We accepted their challenge, and the work of painting is nearing completion. Now the Jay Cees have gone a step further, they are seeking classes and organizations and friends who will take a room, paint the walls and cover the floors with inlayed lineleum. Three of the rooms have been taken. The cost for such a job is around $140.00 per room. The JayCees are laying such lineleum on the stairways and through all the halls on the second floor where the bedrooms are. They feel that such floors will last a long time and be easy to keep clean in a boys building.

The two buildings in which the others live are in fairly good condition. We think rooms that are clean and wellkept will inspire better boys and nobler men. We invite you to come to see what is being done for Johnston Hall, "erected to the glory of God and the service of youth." "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches." Uncle Charley Johnston had the good name all right. There are several hundred boys and girls, now men and women, ready to rise up and testify to that. It will not take much money to make a building dedicated to the glory of God and the service of youth and named with "a good name" show that we desire to render worship and homage to God, service to the boys who come to live in Johnston Hall, and properly memorialize the name of a man who did so much for so many homeless children in a most unselfish manner.

BOONE.

In the death of Mrs. W. H. Boone, who was called quietly from a long active life, her devoted family, church and community suffered a great loss. She was the kind of wife, mother, grandmother, and community leader who inspires great devotion and love. Along with the emptiness and loneliness which her loved ones will feel comes also the joy of knowing how good our Heavenly Father has been in giving a life so well lived and of such rich benediction.

The writer and Dr. L. E. Smith shared in the funeral services conducted in the Durham Congregational Christian Church on April 1, 1952. I read from the 31st chapter of Proverbs, that which so beautifully and appropriately described her as a "woman who openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness." With her bereaved husband there sat the daughter, Mrs. Stanley C. Harrell, Dr. Harrell, and their daughter Mary Ann; also the son, Dr. Waldo Boone, and his wife and children; and a large circle of close relatives and dear friends. The church choir rendered most appropriate music and the church, crowded to the doors, was lovely with floral tributes.

There was felt by all a sense of gratitude and praise that a life had been so richly and triumphantly lived to the glory of God and the great help and benediction to her home and family and friends. May God's sustaining and comforting grace be richly bestowed upon her bereaved husband and family.

ROMANCE OF A MISSIONARY.

The sea reached up to the very edge of the town. How quiet and peaceful it looked, bathed in the warmth of the sparkling Shidzouka sunshine! Surely the Sensei had picked out a delightful spot in which to live!

Upon inquiry Goto-san found the missionary's house without difficulty, for there was only one foreigner in the town. It was a beautiful little Japanese house, facing the sea. Goto-san loved it. "I will come to see the Sensei often," he thought. But the little house was deserted. Goto-san looked in through the glass doors. Everything was arranged exactly as in a Japanese house. There were even flowers in the tokonomo (parlor alcove)! The landlord said the Sensei had gone to church in the next town. The church had a red roof. . . . Goto-san hurried away. There would yet be time. . . .

A red roof! There it was! That must be the place! Goto-san stepped into the vestibule. There were many pairs of shoes neatly arranged in rows; shoes of leather and of wood, and sandals of many kinds. The congregation was not yet dismissed. He was in time! There was a pair of shoes larger than the rest, polished, and very long, and narrow! Ah, the Sensei's shoes! He was there! Goto-san stepped out of his shoes, and entered the church.

The missionary was pronouncing the benediction. When he looked up he saw a familiar figure standing at the back of the church. Where had he seen that boy before? Why! It was Goto-san . . . the train! He advanced to meet him with a smile. . . .

* * *

It was New Year's Day. Goto-san stood at the altar of the church, with bowed head and trembling breast, solemn voice. "I promise," said The pastor read the ceremony with Goto-san, with feeling. . . .

* * *

The missionary opened the letter eagerly. It was from Goto-san, of course. He knew the handwriting. The characters written in an open and bold style were characteristic of the boy. The missionary's eyes gleamed with amusement. He was recalling the scene on the train. But as he read, the amusement in his eyes gave place to seriousness, and then a deep joy. On New Year's Day Goto-san had stood before the church, and confessed Christ as his Lord and Saviour, had been baptized and received into the membership of the church! Goto-san—another "son in the faith!" The missionary folded the letter almost with reverence. Surely, "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform," he thought. How marvelous are the workings of the Spirit! And the missionary breathed a prayer, this time a prayer of thanksgiving that another prayer had been answered.—Exchange.

I'm not sure about the exact figure when I resigned to take up the work of secretary of missions. But now we have thirty-nine churches giving for missions $1,000 or more each.

RELAX WITH MAX.

Rev. Fred Allred may not ever be superintendent of the Southern Convention, but he and Dr. Scott certainly have one thing in common—namely, the high foreheads. There is such a striking resemblance that Lois Scott, daughter of the Dr., ran up behind Fred and called him "Daddy" at the N. C. State-wide rally. Looks can be deceiving, can't they Lois?

The two jokes above were stolen from Robert Gibson's column in the Youth Fellowship News, Lenten Issue, Christian Temple, Norfolk. The one below was sent in by Mrs. F. E. Underhill, Henderson, N. C. Thank you very much, and I hope others will contribute to the page as often as possible.

The Impact of the Easter Message

By HENRY KNOX SHERRILL, President
The National Council of the Churches of Christ

The fact that we live in a time of crisis is evident to even the most thoughtless among us. The problems which confront us are so complex and massive that no one is able to predict the future or to give complete and satisfactory solutions of our problems. But deeper than the evident perplexities in regard to action, no doubt due to them, there is the even more serious fact that men and women everywhere are in a state of disillusionment, of intellectual and emotional confusion within themselves. There are so many evidences of hysteria based upon a nameless fear of what may happen in this chaotic world. The result is that so many times clear thinking and courageous action are lacking. We are too greatly governed by our prejudices and anxieties—particularly in a revolutionary age. We need some rock of reality upon which to stand.

Such was the experience of the first disciples. They had held exaggerated hopes of a new day—which were dashed by the hard fact of the crucifixion. They became discouraged and bewildered. "We trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel." Then came the impact of the Resurrection. The stern task given them still remained, indeed was intensified—but now they understood as never before the meaning and purpose of God, of life and their lives. They were given insight, courage, spiritual power and an indefinable radiance as they set about the preaching of the Good News. Even though they were persecuted they were "always rejoicing."

So may this Easter tide bring us once again these great gifts as we realize the truth that God reigns. The joyful news "He is risen" does not change the contemporary world. Still before us lie work, discipline and sacrifice. But there is an inward peace and strength—a freedom from worldly fears and anxieties—a joy which no circumstance can take from us. Here is the source of spiritual power to meet the necessities of our times—

And when the strife is fierce, the warfare long,
Steals on the ear the distant triumph song;
And hearts are brave again and arms are strong.
Alleluia, Alleluia.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty, — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CIV

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, APRIL 17, 1952

NUMBER 16

Moderator of the General Council Will Address Southern Convention

Dr. Vere V. Loper of Berkeley, California, nationally known Congregational Christian churchman and Moderator of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches in America, will speak at the Southern Convention meeting to be held at the First Congregational Christian Church, Durham, N. C., April 29-May 1, 1952. Dr. Loper will also install the new officers of The Laymen's Fellowship.

DR. VERE V. LOPER

Dr. Loper says: "The church can help people release power which will help solve their problems. The outward paraphernalia of churchmanship is important, but meaningless, if we do not build the inner substance of churchmanship which consists of the constant recognition that Christ not only lives in the church, but is its only head."

In 1950, Dr. Loper was elected Moderator of the General Council, the highest honorary office in the power of the Congregational Christian Churches to bestow upon a member. He came to this important post of denominational leadership at a strategic and difficult period, when the question of the merger of the Congregational Christian Churches with the Evangelical and Reformed Church has caused great differences of opinion and even legal action.

Minister of the oldest church in Berkeley, sometimes described as a "three-in-one church," or, "a small city church, a suburban church and a University church," since its outreach includes all these aspects, Dr. Loper previously held pastorates in Massachusetts, Montana, Minnesota, and Illinois. His church has long maintained close relationships with the University of California and the Pacific School of Religion where Dr. Loper is an Associate Professor.

Dr. Loper is not new to church quarrels and has the reputation of being a powerful force for reconciliation. While serving in Colorado he brought together two churches and from them built one of the leading parishes in the Rocky Mountain region. Although in favor of the union between the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church, Dr. Loper deprecates the spirit shown by some on both sides of the question. "We need to untangle ourselves spiritually as well as legally," he comments.

News Flashes

Let's make the forty days from Easter to Pentecost forty worth-while days for our church.

The editor is attending the annual meeting of the Associated Church Press in Washington on Wednesday and Thursday of this week.

Rev. Henry E. Robinson announces that the opening date for their new educational building at Burlington was postponed from April 6 to April 20. Open house will be observed 3-5 p. m.

The congregation of The Church of Wide Fellowship in Southern Pines returned to its renovated sanctuary on Easter Sunday. Members were received, babies christened, and a new window given by Mr. and Mrs. George W. Case was dedicated.

Dr. and Mrs. R. C. Helfenstein of our Richmond Church will spend this week-end with their daughter Charlotte and her family in Philadelphia, Pa. Mr. Eldridge Moore, the pastor's assistant and a student at Union Theological Seminary, will conduct the worship services on Sunday.

Rev. W. J. Andes of Winston-Salem conducted a ten-minute service each morning during Holy Week for his young people on the way to school. Attendance was good. On successive evenings services were held for women, men, choir, climaxed by Holy Communion for all on Tuesday.

REIDSVILLE NEWS.

The Congregational Christian Church in Reidsville has recently erected five signs of welcome on each highway leading into Reidsville. "Welcome to Reidsville and Congregational Christian Church, Montgomery St." is printed on the signs. The signs are beautiful and dignified, and the church feels that they will give that good first impression to the visitors to our city, which is always so important and necessary.

Charles McKinney, general superintendent of the Sunday school, and his committee composed of Claude Garrison, John Somers, and John Doekery were largely responsible for the completion and the erection of the signs after they were approved.

The Rev. Mr. Humphries stated that he and the membership of his church feel that not only will these signs bear the message of welcome to the many visitors of Reidsville, but at the same time they will let them know that the citizens of Reidsville are conscious of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

CHAPEL HILL.

The remodeling and redecoration of the United Congregational Christian Church is near completion.

Dr. John Scottford, Architectural Advisor for all Congregational Christian Churches, suggested a new trend in church color schemes which was followed throughout the entire church. Mr. Bill Ray, a member of the church who is now serving in the Army, drew the plans for the remodeling. These changes include a parlor, a new entranceway, the re-arrangement of seats, and a different chancel arrangement.

New chancel furniture has been installed. Mrs. J. T. Fowler, in memory of her husband, gave a set of altar appurtenances which includes a pair of candlesticks, a cross, offering plates and vase. A new dorsal curtain hangs at the back of the chancel.

The floor has been refinished and a new carpet for both the parlor and the auditorium has been laid.

The exterior of the entrance and a new front walk are to be completed soon, and the new pipe organ is to be installed later in the spring.

People serving as chairmen of working committees on the Church Building Improvement Council are: J. Earl Danieley, organ committee; Mrs. A. C. Shearer, committee on worship and furnishings and equipment; Bill Ray and J. R. Ellis, committee on plans and construction; S. H. Basnight and Mrs. George Nicholson, committee on finance and promotion.

CLAYTON CHURCH OFFERS CHALLENGE.

Again this spring the Amelia Christian Church at Clayton, N. C. is planting five acres of cotten as a project which is a part of the Lord's Acre Plan. Then too, there are individual projects such as raising a pig, chickens, eggs, as pledging the first hours' salary of each week which is being used by several public workers.

We are confident the Lord's Acre Plan is one of the best ways that a small country church can operate in meeting its financial needs so that all members may participate. This project also helps promote stewardship.

Last year our church raised more money than ever before in its history in one year. We have begun a ten-room educational plant on the back of the church. At the present time, we have almost completed five of these rooms so that we are able to have classes in them regularly. We hope to complete the remaining five this year, paint the interior of the church, and install new pews.

God has wonderfully blessed us here at Amelia, and under the leadership of our devoted pastor, Rev. Fred Register, our efforts have been very worthwhile.

If you haven't had the courage to venture forward on some project for your church, we challenge you to begin now. All that is necessary in a willing mind and faith in God.

MARY JOHNSON,
Reporter.

First Christian Church, Portsmouth, on Thursday, April 3. The services were conducted by Dr. I. W. Johnson, Rev. J. Everette Neese, Rev. Mr. Greppe, and the writer. The body was carried to the state of Maine for burial. Mr. Carne, born in England, had served our churches in Maine, New York, and Portsmouth. He was a devout Christian, and was a faithful pastor. He has done a good work amongst us. May God bless his family and his church.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

H-O-R-I-Z-O-N-S

A story is told of the late Bishop William Quale, "Skylark of American Methodism," as he was affectionately known. On a railway journey he was one of several men participating in a discussion. Finally one of the travellers, a sales-representative of a commercial firm, turned to the Bishop, whose identity he did not know, and asked, "What is your line of business? What do you deal in?" To which the Bishop replied very briefly and precisely: "Horizons."

Come to think of it, that is very properly the business of anyone who claims to be a follower of Christ. His commission as a representative of Christ requires him to lift men's eyes from the immediate and near to the distant skyline and beckoning goals of the kingdom. Preaching may not always measure up to this exalted goal, but it is refreshing to think of preaching in this vein.

One recalls the amusing if not justified description of Congregationalists as those who believe in the Fatherhood of God, the Brotherhood of Man, in the Neighborhood of Boston! Our boundaries, as parochial as they are delightful, must widen. Our only frontiers as Christian citizens are the boundaries of the world and of human need. Beyond the horizon of our community, city, state, or nation lies a world of human need. All frontiers dissolve under the impact of science, invention, and the fundamental fact of mankind's common destiny.

Now is the time for all of us to specialize in horizons. Now is the time to lift our sights. Now is the time to build bridges of friendship and assistance to span these glorious horizons. Fortunately, the church has the men, the means, and the machinery to do just that.

Easter opens the horizon of Eternity. Life takes on a new and magnificent dimension. The one dimensioned life, expressed in the naive remark, "One world at a time," is inadequate. Those who have had precious ones to precede them in the eternal realm cling to the calm assurance of the Master, that "where I am there ye may be also."

The oft-quoted passage from John Masfield's play, "The Trial of Jesus," expresses the truth very well. The Roman centurion who stood at the foot of the Cross talks with Pilate's wife just after the crucifixion. "Do you think he is dead?" she asks him. "No, lady," he answers, "I don't." "Then where is he?" And the reply she receives is, "Let loose in the world, lady, where neither Roman nor Jew can stop his truth."

This is what it means to live in a two-dimensional world, a world of limitless horizons.

MAN and MISSIONS

The man who instigated the establishment of the new International Christian University in Japan sailed recently for Tokyo to attend the dedication of the campus and first completed buildings of ICU on April 29.

He is the Rev. Dr. John A. MacLean, pastor of the Ginter Park Presbyterian Church in Richmond, Va., who proposed "a movement to raise funds among Christian people of American for the restoration of the Japanese cities of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, destroyed by our atom bombs."

In January 1946, following the spirit of his original idea, the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America (now the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A.), and the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, approved the proposal "that the American people be given an opportunity to provide funds for the establishment of a Christian University in Japan." Later, fourteen denominational boards agreed to participate in this outstanding undertaking.

Dr. MacLean, who sailed from Los Angeles, April 5, will officially represent the Richmond Ministerial Association at the dedication of ICU. His trip was made possible by funds by the Ministerial Association and laymen of Richmond, which included a gift from "one generous anonymous donor."

Think what one man can do for missions! What can you do?

Our Latin-American Neighbors

By DR. W. W. SLOAN,

Professor of Bible and Christian Education at Elon College

"We've made money enough. We want to dedicate the rest of our life to helping others. We also want our children to have a good environment and a good education" explains a young Mexican doctor of medicine, the product of one of our Congregational Christian Churches "south of the border." After being physician for a railroad a number of years and having a wealthy private clientele, this medical man and his wife quit. They then established a clinic for poor patients in Guadalajara, where, in the spirit of the Great Physician who came that people might have more abundant life, they are bringing physical and spiritual health to many people.

This neat clinic and small hospital is but one of many expressions of Christian service that Mrs. Sloan and I encountered when we were visiting in six Latin American Countries this past summer. We learned that dollars invested in our Latin American missions are dollars well invested.

The Latin American nations are in desperate need of the uplift and challenge that only Protestantism can give to civilization. Once again we recognized the importance of what Marmaduke Grove told us in Chile 14 years ago. Himself a Roman Catholic, the former president of Chile said: "I wish we had more Protestants here. They have broken with the past religiously and therefore are more willing than others to make changes, progress, in other fields."

In census statistics most Latin Americans are classed as Roman Catholics, but only about ten per cent take their Roman religion seriously. The dominant blood in much of Latin America is Indian. Did these Indians ever really become Christians? Spanish priests, eager to report large numbers of converts, had soldiers drive the Indians to places where towers or scaffoldings had been erected. The priest would climb up the tower and then with a flower-sprinkler sprinkle the Indians. He would then tell them that they had been baptized and now were Christians.

These Indians became Christians in name only. They had given up nothing, had done no serious Christian thinking. Their religious holidays became saints' days and a few other changes were made in forms and ceremonies. In many places they continue today to make sacrifices to their stone idols. Mrs. Sloan and I visited some of these idols still in use in Guatemala.

At one time Guatemala had several thousand priests, monks and nuns. Today there are less than a hundred—one priest to twenty-five thousand people. No wonder that the only time many churches see a priest is the once or twice a year one gets around to take care of baptisms and marriages. Pastoral care and sermons are almost unknown.

One priest found conditions in a church he visited so corrupt he attempted to preach a sermon. However, most of the people present insisted, "We have paid you to perform your magic. We don't want a sermon. Get out." As he was being put out of the church a few people attempted to defend him. This resulted in a vigorous fight. One man who tried to defend the priest found safety by climbing up a rope hanging from the ceiling. While up the rope he decided to get a copy of the book Protestants were reading, the Bible. This led to questions. Today this man is one of our Protestant leaders.

A larger per cent of the people of Latin America are dissatisfied. Roman Catholicism has failed them. They want something different. Two possibilities are before them—Communism, which with its promises is making a strong bid, and a new progressive Christianity. Only Protestantism offers the latter. Several million Latin Americans have discovered this and are now active Protestants.

However, the success of our Protestant missions cannot be measured by such figures. We are the leaven that may transform the Roman Church. On our visit to Puerto Rico three years ago we saw many improvements made in the Roman Catholic Church because of Protestantism. Roman Catholicism in the United States is a far better expression of Christianity than it is in any other part of the world, because of the influence of Protestantism. We can have that same influence throughout Latin America and thus counteract Communism. If we fail to answer the longing of our neighbors of the nations to the south they will turn to Communism as a possible solution. Which way Latin America goes depends upon us.

"TEASINGLY PROVOCATIVE"

Recently, I read the phrase, which is my subject, in a description of a heroine. She was attractive. She had the "come hither air." She knew her way around among the men, the author declared. She was glamorous, full of allure. She was "tinglingly alive, and teasingly provocative."

Maybe you have seen her. She is often "met up with" on the pages of up-to-date stories. Also, in the modern movie-talkie. She may even move in your social circle. She is the center of attraction, wherever she makes an appearance. The stage could not get along without her, neither could our current crop of popular stories.

But, I am not concerned just now with a heroine in fiction or in fact, whose picture is aptly painted by the words used by the author, to whose story I have just referred. I am thinking not of the female of the species howsoever "deadly" or bewitching. I am picking up the expression "teasingly provocative," because it aptly describes and defines the "ads" which set forth the alleged desirable qualities of beverage alcohol. Those "ads" are truly "something." They are colorful, appealing, attractive to an amazing degree.

I wonder if you ever studied them objectively. I have sought to separate myself from my attitudes and beliefs; and "yes, if you want to put it that way, my biases and prejudices," in order that I might get the feel of it all. Try it sometime. Those liquor ads are marvelous. They have been created by the highest priced artists and copy-writers in the country.

They are the most wonderful "ads" of our time and that means of all time. They surpass even those of "automobile manufacturers" and "cigarette makers" and "that's going some." If you doubt it, go back for thirty or forty months through a magazine that has run the "Beer Belongs" series. Or, look up the "Gracious Living" series in which the

New York State Appellate Court Lifts Ban on Merger of Churches

Word has just been received that the appellate division of the New York State Supreme Court, on Monday of this week, reversed the decision blocking the proposed merger of the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

This new ruling leaves open the way for the proposed merger which would bring together our two denominations into a single Protestant group with a total membership of nearly two million.

Monday's 4-to-1 ruling by the court nullified a two-year-old decision by Supreme Court Justice Meir Steinbrink banning the church union. The higher court declared that "the civil courts do not interfere with ecclesiastical matters in which temporal rights are not involved."

The court continued: "Ecclesiastical or doctrinal questions may be inquired into only insofar as it may be necessary to do so to determine the civil or property rights of the parties."

The appellate court further said that the opponents of the merger had failed to "establish any rights or interest to the funds or other assets" which would bring the ecclesiastical question of merger into the jurisdiction of the civil courts.

Judge Steinbrink, in his decision, had also restrained the General Council from using any Congregational Christian funds or properties to advance the proposed consolidation. Thus it was necessary in order to make an appeal from his decision to raise special contributions outside of the regular operating funds of the Council.

Dr. Douglas Horton, in commenting on the decision, said that it is a "vindication of the rights of religious groups to determine their own affairs without interference by the state," and continued: "The decision is in accordance with the views of the overwhelming majority of our denomination. This view has been expressed repeatedly by large majorities at our General Councils.

"But the majority has never ignored the minority and, if I know them, will not do so now. We are grateful for the understanding and patience of our brethren of the Evangelical and Reformed Church."

As most of our readers know, the proposed merger was attacked by a group opposed to the merger, headed by the Cadman Memorial Congregational Society, of Brooklyn, New York. The contention of the Cadman Church was that the merger would deprive individual congregations of "traditional autonomy." Such a suit, if brought and sustained before the merger of Congregational and Christian Churches, would have prevented that merger. Our own Southern Convention, while not unanimous in its vote, did approve the merger by a large majority. J. T. K.

THE METHODIST CHURCH IN VIRGINIA LOSES A LEADER.

Dr. Samuel Claiborne Hatcher, 82-year-old vice-president and secretary-treasurer of Randolph-Macon College, passed from labor to reward on Monday of this week. In his passing, The Methodist Church has lost a consecrated minister, the college an efficient administrative officer, and the Ashland community an outstanding citizen.

Dr. Hatcher joined the staff of Randolph-Macon College in 1911. Prior to that time, he was a prominent minister in the Virginia Methodist Conference, holding pastorates in Norfolk, Petersburg, Farmville and Richmond. He organized the Barton Heights Methodist Church in Richmond, one of the largest churches in the city. For several years before he went to Ashland, he was pastor of the Broad Street Methodist Church. It was during this time that the writer first became acquainted with Dr. Hatcher and learned to admire him for his outstanding graciousness and ability. Often, as a youth, we sat in his study (our home and the parsonage adjoined each other) and listened as he expounded his theories, biblical and otherwise, and we hope that the impact of his character upon our own was not entirely lost.

Dr. Hatcher was born at Springfield, Va., on May 4, 1869. He went to school at the college which he later served as an officer. He was chairman of the State Board of Public Welfare for 15 years, and was retired at his own request. He was a Mason, a Kiwanian, and an active leader in civic affairs.

Our sympathy goes to his wife, who survives him, and to his children.

J. T. KERNODLE.

It is not enough to be busy; so are the ants. The question is: What are we busy about?—Thoreau.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

On Monday of last week at the chapel hour nominations were made for the offices of student government for the year 1952-53. Elections will be held later.

* * *

Miss Virginia Groomes, voice instructor at the college, will sing the role of Leonora in Mozart's "School for Lovers," which will be presented by the North Carolina "Grass Roots" Opera Company in Mebane on Thursday evening, April 17.

* * *

The Elon Players as their third production will present a three act Broadway comedy, "Papa Is All," on April 16 and 17. This performance will be under the direction of Mrs. Elizabeth R. Smith, instructor in dramatics at Elon College.

* * *

Elon's athletic teams have done well this year. The golf team is undefeated in four meets. The baseball team, even though predominantly freshmen, is performing well and promises to win the championship again, which would be the fourth year in succession.

* * *

The Elon College Choir, one of the best in the history of the college, presented "The Seven Last Words of Christ," by Dubois at the college on Sunday night. On Wednesday night the choir presented the same program at Davis Street Methodist Church in Burlington. On Wednesday and Friday of this week, as a part of Holy Week services the program was given for the faculty and students at the regular chapel hour. Solo parts were taken by Annie Albright, Judith Ingram, Charles Crews, Jerry Smyre, Charles Lynam, Ben Stephenson and James Rhodes. Professor Fletcher Moore was the accompanist and Professor John Westmoreland the director.

RICHMOND ALUMNI.

Carl Woods, Alumni Secretary, is working faithfully to keep the alumni of the college interested and to secure the interest of those who have not heretofore been interested. He is making an effort to interest all through local alumni organizations. For a number of years we have had an active organization in the city of Richmond, Virginia. Ryland Johnson has been the president and the moving spirit that has kept the organization intact and going in the interest of the college. Ryland is the son of O. W. Johnson and the late Mrs. O. W. Johnson, and is a nephew of Dr. I. W. Johnson. He has done a good job in Richmond for the college.

On Tuesday, April 8, at seven o'clock the Richmond unit of the Elon College Alumni Association met at the Raleigh Hotel for a dinner meeting, the transaction of business, and reports from the college. There were eighteen members present. Ryland Johnson presided. He was nominated to succeed himself as president, but declined on the general principle that someone else should have the honor since he had been the president for three years. Delmar Brown, attorney, was elected president; Floyd Boyce, vice-president; and Wallace Chandler, secretary-treasurer. Dr. Bowden spoke concerning the work of the college and general student information. The writer spoke briefly calling attention to the present enrollment and possible trends that would affect the future student body of Elon College; also the very critical financial situations that are confronting the privately endowed or church-related colleges. The enormous amount of money appropriated by the state and federal governments for the support of the land grant or tax supported colleges is resulting in very unfair competition. The increase of federal support by the state and federal governments necessarily means increased authority over these schools. The question of freedom in education is a question that should be considered seriously by church representatives, state, and federal officials. It is essential that the dual system of education that we now have in this country should be continued if the American way of life is to continue. Freedom in all human endeavors is dependent ultimately on freedom in education. Education is the basis of all stability and progress. The church, and all who are interested in freedom in education, should bestir themselves before it is too late.

"FIRST THINGS FIRST."

This is a good motto. Christ said, "Seek yet first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." There is no question but that the Kingdom of God comes first but which of "these things" comes first—eat, drink, or clothing—all are necessary. We could not get along very well without either. All in proper proportion are necessary for life and are essential to comfort. We of the Southern Convention face the necessity of putting "first things first." There is no question about the Kingdom of God coming first. There is the purpose of the church, the responsibility of the church, and it should be the one consuming passion of the church, but the question confronting us as we approach the biennial session of our Convention is which of the "things" we endeavor to do is most important, most effective in bringing the Kingdom of God into the hearts of men and into society as a whole.

These "things"—missions, orphanage, publications, education—all are essential. The Kingdom of God could not come in its fullness and completeness without either, but which comes first, which is most important, which is the most effective as we look at the world today in its need and as we consider the "things" at hand that we have to do with. Bear in mind the one great purpose of the churches to bring the Kingdom of God to the hearts of men. Can it be done most effectively by and through what we term missions? True, the Gospel of Christ is a missionary gospel but if there had not been a Paul and other missionaries associated with him how far would the Kingdom of God have gone in his day, and if Paul had not been schooled in the schools of his day, how far could he have gone in carrying the Gospel to the ends of his known world? Your answer, God can do anything; he could have raised up another. Give God credit for having judgement. He chose a man who was prepared to do the job that he wanted done.

The Orphanage—There is no nobler act than feeding, clothing, and housing a hungry child. It is the fruit of pure religion. The need is not universal nor is it mandatory. We do not have to, but we should live comfortably and nobly. The one compulsion is to be prepared for the life after this life.

Publications—It is essential certainly that we impart our knowledge

REMEMBRANCE OF MISS OLIVE NICHOLSON AT RALLIES.

Pattie Lee up a tree to escape the snakes while visiting in India. "Nicky" putting her money in the shoe pocket while traveling in a Roomette—her interest in gadgets. Nick wearing a lovely sari while speaking. Her most interesting collection of articles made at her school—the cute little snake charmer. The little girl in India who had no blouse to wear to boarding school. Finally she got a blouse, a bar of soap, and a seven-toothed comb. She gave away her soap and comb to a younger girl who was homesick.

We need to send more missionaries and people who have the "know-how" to India, as well as our money and packages. People in famine sections boiling poisonous roots to eat after pouring off the water seven or eight times. People of the robber caste pray to their gods before going out to rob. Religious Christmas cards can teach the story of Jesus to children living in India. Each girl wants a Bible more than anything else. All contributors to the American Bible Society will help provide Bibles for India in Tamil, the spoken language.

A church service is held on Christmas day in every Christian Church in India. One person in fifty in India is a Christian. Our responsibility in India is our response to God's ability.

Madura, where Nicky works, is one of the three hottest places in the world. The temperature in winter gets down to 87 degrees. India is not as dark as the stories in papers and magazines would indicate. India itself loves the story of Christ. Rachynaparam, where Nicky works, is a school to help those who want to help themselves and could not go to school anywhere else. The children are from the most destitute homes in the village.

At the Christmas service, the children bring gifts for others, even though they need them for themselves. It is Jesus' birthday and he should have gifts, too.

India is the only country which has won its freedom through non-violence through the little man with a big heart, Gandhi, who believed in the Sermon on the Mount.

"Don't feel sorry for the missionaries," Nicky told us. "We have a thrilling time, and we would not change places with you for anything in the world." "We could probably feed all the poor and destitute in In-

WOMEN'S FELLOWSHIP DINNER.

The Woman's Missionary Convention will hold a Fellowship Dinner in connection with the meeting of the Southern Convention in the First Congregational Christian Church, Durham, N. C. on Tuesday evening, April 29, at 5:30 o'clock. The cost of the dinner will be $1.00.

All the women who can attend the sessions of the Southern Convention—and those living close by who can be there on Tuesday morning—are invited to attend this dinner meeting.

This is an "extra" opportunity for the women to get together for fun and fellowship. We will have an informal program at the dinner. The women are invited to remain for the evening session of the Convention and hear the sermon by Rev. Vere V. Loper, Berkley, California, Moderator, The General Council of Congregational Christian Churches of the United States. We will also have the opportunity to participate in the Southern Convention observance of the Lord's Supper.

Cards for reservations have been sent the President of each of our Women's Societies. Please forward your reservation to Dr. Stanley C. Harrell not later than April 22nd.

Mrs. W. B. WILLIAMS,

dia with what you throw away in America."

The Hindus do not give because they practice "love thy neighbor as thyself." They give so as to keep their high caste when they enter the next world.

It is impossible without television to imagine the desolate picture of the famine area, where there has been no grain for five years. We just have to use "heart vision." The people in the villages wanted to give something to the missionaries from their empty kitchen stores. They are more inclined to give milk to their husbands, as they can have more babies, but if the wage-earner dies, the whole family dies.

"I really feel sorry for you who have to spend Christmas in America," Nicky said.

The gift of grain from America was spoiled by the attitude of the American government when it came.

Travel to the famine villages was so slow because the guide had to go in front and pull the thorn bushes out of the way, so the tires would not be punctured.

Indians are very religious. In the famine villages, they all wanted a Thanksgiving service when they were given grain.

ANSWERS AND A QUESTION.

The answers to the questions asked last week are:

1. Rev. Ralph M. Galt, son of Rev. and Mrs. Elmer Galt, for more than thirty years missionaries to China, is pastor of a group of our churches in the Valley of Virginia.
2. Sandwich Islands. South America, South Africa, Sumatra, Persia, Borneo, Spain, Austria, and Italy are places where the American Board has attempted to establish missions and for various reasons no longer serves there.
3. We are studying the Mexican Mission of the American Board this year.
4. The Micronesian Mission is 100 years old this year.
5. Rev. Henry E. Robinson of Burlington is a member of the Prudential Committee of the American Board which has the final decisions to make concerning our foreign mission work.

* * *

Do you think these questions on our missionary work are worth continuing? If there is any response in favor of them, we will have more questions. Let me know what you think!

HIGH POTENTIAL.

Within the past ten years, the population of Florida has increased 46 per cent. Housing projects are mushrooming throughout the state.

One of our youngest high-potential churches is located at one of these projects in Key Biscayne, Fla. On January 27, which was charter membership day, 170 adults became members of the church—a church without a building! The congregation meets at temporary quarters; but under the leadership of their pastor, the Rev. Wilbert R. Lesser, they are planning to build the first unit of their church.

The Church Building Department of our Board of Home Missions strives to aid communities like Key Biscayne which need new churches. This, too, is a part of Our Christian World Mission.

"TEASINGLY PROVOCATIVE."

virtues of wine are extolled. The appeal to do what the pictured people are doing is tremendous. You say you have never felt it. Then, thank God. The reason they "leave you cold" lies in your education. You have learned the truth. You have come to believe that beverage alcohol is not "the friend," but "the foe," of the good life. You are fortunate and blessed.

But, there are multitudes that have not travelled the same road of understanding that your feet have trodden. To them, the appeal is very great. It is intended to be. That's what the makers of those "ads" have sought, and are seeking. They want to attract buyers of the product so bewitchingly proclaimed on printed page or televised screen. That's the plan and purpose. That's the cunning diabolism of the whole advertising build-up, which has as its objective, "profits, and yet more profits"; "business, and yet more business."

"Teasingly provocative" to the nth degree are these "ads," that whisper or shout lies into the ears of the inexperienced and gullible. Can you believe, can any thoughtful citizen believe, that they are in the public interest? Is it for the well-being of the people that they be allured and enticed by every art of persuasion to drink alcoholic beverages? Who, among the financially disinterested, would point with pride to the trail of alcohol in our life today?

Why do we stand idly by and see the toll of suffering and shame, misery and heartache, added to and heaped up by teasingly provocative "ads"? Why? Why? Why? Echo answers "Why?"

Some of these days the American people will answer that "Why?" One does not need to be anti-liquor to deprecate and deplore and destroy the pictured splendors that lift up liquor as a thing to be desired. The heart of it all is: "If you have not found out how good liquor can be, do not delay another day. Try our brand and be happy. Drink it yourself; serve it to your friends and guests. If it's to be an evening of slippers and ease, drink to get relaxed. If on the contrary, it's to be a time of guests and gaiety, drink to get 'pepped up' for entertaining." All advertised alcoholic beverages are wonderful, in that they can induce either of two totally anti-thetic results.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

In our joyful Easter celebration we sometimes forget that our Jewish friends and neighbors celebrate the Passover in the spring too. This year the Passover Season began April 10 and ends today, the 17th.

One of the customs is The Seder which is a happy family dinner and worship service held at home on one or several nights of the Passover Season. Seder is pronounced say-dur. It is the one time when Jewish families want to be together and they travel from far away to join their family in this joyful event. It is a very old custom dating back long before Jesus was a boy. Seder means "order" and there is an order of service for the family.

There are certain elements used for The Seder. The family sits at a beautifully decorated table and there is often a platter of china or silver with scenes showing the Exodus from Egypt. On the platter in order are:

Three matzoth (unleavened bread) in memory of the unleavened bread which the Jews ate when they fled from Egypt.

Bitter herbs because slavery was bitter.

A bone (shank) as a reminder of the Sacrificial lamb.

An egg roasted to symbolize the offering that accompanied the Sacrificial lamb.

Harosseth, a mixture of apples, nuts, cinnamon and wine, which looks like mortar and reminds them of the mortar used by the slaves in Egypt.

Parseley or watercress to be dipped in salty water or vinegar as a token of appreciation to God for his bounty to his children.

A cup of wine for each person present. It is customary for Jewish families to drink wine at times of rejoicing. They sometime use unfermented raisin wine for the small children.

It is not strictly a religious service although each bit of food is taken with the reading of Scriptures and litanies, but there is fun too. One of the matzah crackers is divided and a part is put away to be eaten at the close of the meal. It is hidden and the youngsters are kept excited by thoughts of it and the hunt for it. Some families make the father pay a forfeit before dividing it for eating.

Sunday's edition of the Raleigh New and Observer had several pictures on page 12 showing the Seder plate, Passover table and showed Jewish children around their Rabbi. I hope that you saw them.

Why should we be interested in this service? Because Jesus was a Jewish boy who observed some of the same Seder customs. When Jesus had become a man he sat at the Feast of the Passover which we have come to call the Last Supper. It was similar to the service which our Jewish friends observe to this day.

EASTER MUSING.

We cannot think of Easter
Apart from the empty tomb.
The angel and his message
That dispels forever the gloom.

He is not here! He is risen!
Is the core of the Christian creed.
He rose, and with him faith arose,
The tomb answers all our needs.

When Mary brought John and Peter
To see the empty tomb
John saw the linen clothes lying
But he did not enter in.

Very soon came eager Peter,
Stooping and looking in.
He, too, saw the linen clothes lying
And hurriedly entered in.

John followed, and there stood Peter,
Mystified and amazed.
The grave clothes all in order,
Not a fold seemed to be misplaced.

No human hand had touched them,
Collapsed, but undisturbed;
Left as a chrysalis is left
When the butterfly has emerged.

Peter was sorely troubled,
But light to John was given;
A sudden intuition, and a knowledge he perceived
That revealed the wondrous miracle—
He saw and he believed.

THE PATTERN.

By ESTHER H. DOOLITTLE.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Claire was in tears. "I can't do that old arithmetic, so there! Miss Alden kept me after school again today, and I don't know any more about it now than I did before."

Mrs. Stowe looked up from her mending. She smiled, even though she was worried about her eight-year-old daughter. "Well, never mind now. Run out and get some fresh air before dark, dear," she answered.

Aunt Stella looked up as the back door closed and Claire's skates rolled past the window. "What's the matter, Alice? Claire isn't looking well. I was going to ask you if anything is wrong with her."

"I don't really know what's wrong, Stella. Claire and her teacher seem to be at swords' point all the time these days. It's apparently all about arithmetic. The child scarcely eats anything, and her sleep is badly broken, too. It looks like a case of nerves to me. I think I'll take her to see Dr. Darrow next Saturday."

"Too bad," mused Aunt Stella. "Isn't there something we can do about this arithmetic business? Claire is not a stupid child by any means."

"Of course she isn't" agreed her sister, "but she evidently appears so in this one subject and it's making her very unhappy."

"It is just arithmetic then; no other study bothers her?"

Mrs. Stowe rose to put her mending things away. "On the contrary, she's quite proficient in everything else. All her marks, with that one exception, are very satisfactory."

Aunt Stella tied a pink gingham apron around her waist. "What does her teacher say about all this?" she asked.

"Miss Alden says Claire is inattentive; that she doesn't try, in this one subject."

"Nonsense," said Aunt Stella indignantly; then, after a minute, "and what does Claire herself say?"

"That she's just stupid and can't understand arithmetic."

"Too bad, too bad." Aunt Stella shook her head. "But I still think she could throw some light on the matter if we approached her correctly. Let's try after supper."

That evening, when Claire was curled up before the fire reading, Aunt Stella sat down on a low chair beside her. "Claire, dear," she began, "tell us why you dislike arithmetic so much."

The book closed with a snap, and the little girl's face clouded immediately. "I don't know," she answered. "I always have. I can't do it, that's all."

"But you like school, don't you?"

"I love it—all but arithmetic."

"Try to think why you dislike that so very much," Aunt Stella persisted. "You like grammar and that requires reasoning."

"Yes, and she likes puzzles, too," said Mrs. Stowe.

KEEPING UP WITH JOSE.

Jose Dabuet is back in Princeton, studying hard after his visit to North Carolina. He wrote the following to Pattie Lee Coghill. She would like to share it with you.

"I am taking this opportunity to thank you again for making my brief visit to Elon more pleasant. It was indeed a wonderful week end, a time well spent in happy fellowship and stirring witness for Christ and his church, and an experience worth remembering. I know the few moments I gave for the rally by association with the young people will prove helpful later on in my contact with them in the summer. I enjoyed very much every moment of my short stay there and I hope the people whom I met felt the same."

SUNRISE SERVICE AT ELON.

On Easter Sunday morning an impressive sunrise service was held upon the campus at Elon College. Rev. John G. Truitt, Jr., delivered the sermon to the early morning worshippers. The service was conducted by Max Vestal, and the singing was led by David Crowle. Both college students and members of the community shared in the service.

DISTILLERS ARE ANGERED BY RED SKELTON'S TV DRUNK PORTRAYALS.

"It is bad enough to have to put up with drunks in our taverns, let alone having them come into our homes via television." This, according to an editorial in the March 17 issue of Beverages Dealer News, is the observation of a tavern owner after a recent performance of Red Skelton's Sunday night TV program.

The editorial, which was headed "Liquor Trade Should Protest Public Portrayal of Drunks." Among other things it said: "Red Skelton's frequent portrayal of drunks on his otherwise refreshing TV comedy program Sunday nights over NBC are among the things that are encouraging the dries in their campaign for national prohibition.

"Skelton's impersonation of a drunk is grossly exaggerated, but it may give those who occasionally take a drink the fearful feeling that at some time or another they may over-indulge and make asses of themselves as do the drunks Red portrays. Many persons who do not drink also get the idea that everyone who does drink is in the same category. . . .

"The editor of Beverage Dealer News asked the presidents of leading distilling corporations in the United States for their views on the question, and with one exception those who replied agreed with us. . . .

"Said another distillery president, 'I feel definitely that the portrayal of drunks on TV is bad taste and that we in the industry should do everything possible to prohibit it.'"

An editorial in The National Voice, a temperance paper printed in Los Angeles, California, makes the following comment on the liquor trade paper's whine: "Well, it seems that the booze boys just can't take it. The distillery president who said, 'I feel definitely that the portrayal of drunks on TV is bad taste and that we in the industry should do everything possible to prohibit it,' believes in prohibition—but not the right kind. He wants the public prohibited from seeing the effects of the product he makes and sells. If he and his fellow drunk makers would go out of business—as it is the Prohibitionists' determination that they shall, as soon as possible—there would be no point in portraying drunks on TV or anywhere else. Meantime, we applaud Red Skelton (who, we understand, neither drinks nor smokes) for helping to bring home to America exactly what kind of 'men of distinction' the hooch hucksters are making of their customers. We hope this kind of 'liquor advertising' on TV keeps right on being shown until America get so sick of the booze business that she goes on the war-path on election day and smashes it to smithereens."

RELAX WITH MAX.

The best eraser in the world is a good night's sleep.—O. A. Battista.

* * *

The sentence above got me to thinking, which is pretty hard to do. It seems to me that too many of us are content to erase, or attempt to erase, our mistakes, and never do anything really worthwhile to replace them. A good night's sleep should lead to a new day of service.

* * *

I'm writing this on Easter Monday. Today most of us have thoughts of Easter, of Christ's victory over death. Think now if you have remembered this since then. Is his spirit always with you in everything you do?

FOR THE CHILDREN.

"Afraid," interrupted Aunt Stella. "Oh well," and Claire smiled, "puzzles are nothing to be afraid—" "So you're afraid of arithmetic. But why?"

Claire looked very unhappy.

"Never mind, Stella." Mrs. Stowe glanced uneasily at her little daughter, who showed unmistakable signs of returning tears. "Let's forget about it for now."

"Wait a bit, Alice. What is it you're afraid of, Claire?"

Claire fidgeted in her chair. "That the others will laugh at me, I suppose. I'm so stupid."

"You don't feel that way about music or reading or anything else, do you?" asked Aunt Stella.

"Oh, no they're just fun."

"When were you first afraid of arithmetic? Can you remember? Think hard."

"The very first day I went to school, I think it was. We had number-work on the board, and I knew it was arithmetic."

"But what had you heard about that to frighten you, dear?"

"Well, I had hear Mother telling Daddy how hard arithmetic was for her. She said she was stupid about it and was afraid I would be too."

Aunt Stella gasped, and then tactfully changed the subject.

"So now the cat's out of the bag!" she said to her sister, later, and then added very gently, "It has been your own fault, Alice, all this time. You set a pattern for your child to follow and she followed it. She only accepted your suggestion and faithfully worked out the pattern you gave her."

Every evening for the rest of the winter, Claire and Aunt Stella worked together by the fireside. It was a reconditioning process—a course in happy confidence and self-respect, with arithmetic as its medium. During these lessons the little girl became really interested and lost her fear, with the natural result that she soon came to understand that subject as easily as she did any other.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

SUPREME LOYALTY TO GOD.

LESSON IV—APRIL 27, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: Thou shalt have no other gods before me; Thou shalt not make unto thee a graven image.—Exodus 20: 3, 4.

LESSON: Exodus 20: 1-6; Luke 14: 25-27; 16: 13-15.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 148.

Totalitarian Religion.

“Thou shalt have no other gods before me,” (or “beside me”). Like it or not, that is totalitarian religion. God will brook no rival. He claims supreme allegiance. He will allow no divided loyalty. He wants us to worship and serve him, and none else. He makes exacting demands upon us. He wants complete control of our lives. This is the gist of the First Commandment. And if anybody thinks this is a bit of Old Testament legalism that has been displaced by the more liberal spirit of the New Testament, let him listen to Jesus when in reply to the question of the lawyer as to which was the first or greatest commandment, Jesus said “Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and thy soul and thy mind and thy strength. This is the first and the great (or greatest) commandment.” Talk about totalitarianism—here is totalitarianism indeed. It is a hard saying, who can attain unto it? Only grace makes it possible for men even to attempt it.

A God Who Cares.

“I am Jehovah thy God (or the Lord thy God) who brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage.” It is the God of the Old Testament speaking. He was, to be sure a God of law and justice, with a deep hatred of sin. But he was also a God of love and compassion. He heard the cries of his people, he came down to see them, he delivered them. He was the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, even in Old Testament times, but the people had not come to know the fullness of his grace and truth. The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. The law was an expression of his love. He commands men to give him first place in their lives, because in his great love he knows that life cannot be lived successfully any other way.

A thing is not wrong because he forbids it, but he forbids it because it is wrong. And he does this because he loves us.

No Idols.

“Thou shalt not make unto thee a graven image . . . thou shalt not bow down unto them, or serve them.” People are like the little girl who said “she wanted a god with a face, one she could see.” It seemed so vague and indefinite for men to worship something they could not see, so they made images of their gods, likenesses of those they worshipped. And in time they worshipped the thing created instead of the Creator. From the first Israel was forbidden to make idols or images, and to bow down and worship them. God is spirit and they who worship him must worship in spirit and in truth. But the Father seeks such to be his worshippers. The Israelites had just come from Egypt where on every side they saw idols and images. The Commandment was timely.

It is timely today. There is always danger that men will worship material gods. To be sure one seldom, if ever sees, a person bowing down and worshipping an idol such as people in heathen lands worship. But many a man worships his automobile, to use a simple example. He bestows on it loving and lavish care, buying for it every accessory on the market, spending Sunday in cleaning and polishing it, mortgaging himself to possess it, and yielding himself in bondage to it. The same thing is true of pleasure, of clothes, of material success. There are a hundred idols to which in our modern world people pay homage, and which come between them and God. And whatever does that is an idol. One does not have to make a graven image—he finds many at hand, ready to claim his devotion, and to crowd out God.

The Sins of the Fathers and the Suffering of the Children.

“Visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the third and fourth generation of them that hate me.” That seems like a cruel and even an unjust thing. But it is a bitter fact. We are all bound up in the bundle of life, as the Psalmist says, and sin has social consequences. Thousands of children suffer because their father or mother was a syphilitic. Dissipated parents often bear degenerate children. One generation of parents through greed and injustice and prejudice and exploitation can involve their children in the overwhelming horrors of war—we know, alas, too well, how true this is. But beyond all this it would seem that this commandment goes beyond mere physical or social or political sin and retribution. More likely it refers to the sins of worship, or false worship on the part of fathers. Let a father worship a graven image and the children will imitate him. Let the mother have a low estimate of God and the children will have it too. The worst thing a parent can do is to pass on children a wrong conception of God.

More Than Father and Mother, More Than Life Itself.

“If any man cometh unto me, and hateth not his own father and mother and wife and children . . . and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple.” Strange words indeed if they are taken literally! He who insisted that love was the law of life, here saying that men should hate even their own fathers and mothers and their kin, if they were to be his disciples! The fact is that love in the home is the thing that really makes it a home. He did not mean it literally. He was impressing a truth by exaggeration. He was saying what the First Commandment had said, nothing, not even love for father or mother, or even love of life itself, should come between a man and God. Here is a young man who feels called to the ministry, but his parents object. What shall he do? Even though it means disobeying his parents, the young man should obey God. Our first loyalty is to God. That may be a hard cross to bear, but it is the primary condition of discipleship. Who said being a Christian was easy? But strange as it may seem, it is the only successful way to live.

Trying the Impossible.

“No man can serve two masters . . . ye cannot serve God and mammon.” It can't be done. But multitudes are trying to do it, trying the impossible. They try to serve God and the world. They try to serve God and mammon. They try to be a servant of God and of money at the same time. Jesus says it just cannot be done. When money masters a man it ruins him; when God masters a man it makes him. If God masters a man, the man masters his money, and Highly successful in personal counseling, which he has both taught and practiced throughout his ministry, Dr. Loper has been close to the students of all his churches and for years has given lectures at the University of California on "Youth and Marriage." He is known throughout California for his contribution along the lines of marriage relationships and his booklet, "A Word Before Your Marriage" is used by ministers of several denominations in their pre-marital counseling.

Active in civic affairs in Berkeley, Dr. Loper in 1947 received the Benjamin Ide Wheeler award bestowed biennially upon the resident considered by a representative local committee as being "the city's most useful citizen." He has been president of the Community Chest, the Rotary Club and the City Commons Club.

At the end of his second year in Yale Divinity School Dr. Loper enlisted in the U. S. Army and became the first Yale Divinity student to go into military service in World War I. He served as a Lieutenant in the Field Artillery and then returned to his theological studies after the war. During World War II Dr. Loper, in company with a priest and a rabbi, made an 8,000 mile trip through Alaska and the Aleutians to visit U. S. troops.

Nationally Dr. Loper has served both his own denomination and the wider church as a member of the University Mission of the Federal Council of Churches and as author of one of the official Lenten Devotional Manuals for Protestantism in the U. S. A. and Canada. He has been a member of the Survey Committee of the General Council of Congregational Churches.

Dr. Loper has been a member of the Prudential Committee of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and during World War II was vice-chairman of the Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction.

Born and educated in Iowa, the son of a pioneer family, and a graduate of Grinnell College, Dr. Loper took his theological training in the East at Yale Divinity School. An athlete since college days, Dr. Loper still keeps his interest in sports, being an ardent football and basketball fan. His hobbies include the raising of roses, fishing, hiking and reading.

WALTER GRAHAM TO SPEAK AT LAYMEN'S BANQUET.

"Ordinary efforts bring ordinary results," he says, adding "these days are extraordinary and unusual plans and efforts must be used to bring extraordinary results."

Mr. Graham believes that the work of the laymen is important whether through the Laymen's Fellowship, the Men's Bible Class or some other organization. It is important as a means to an end, that end being better churchmanship.

Experience in business, law, government service, management and teaching, lies back of this energetic lay leader who is an attorney and member of the United States Court Bar, the United States Court of Appeals in Washington, D. C., and the Courts of his home state of Kentucky. For a time he was City Attorney in his own home town of Pembroke, Kentucky and vice-president of the local Peoples Bank.

Mr. Graham was in Government work for 13 years including a special confidential assignment in Puerto Rico during World War II.

A Kentuckian by birth, Mr. Graham was educated at Kentucky-Wesleyan College, Yale University Law School (LLB), Benjamin Franklin University and George Washington University. He always has had a deep interest in religious education, especially for young adults. He lists among his hobbies, bowling, golf, swimming, tennis, baseball, and music.

NEWS OF ELON COLLEGE.

to others. It is an effective way of evangelizing the world, but who is to do this "thing" unless he first be prepared? How can he inform others if he is not first informed himself?

Education—To inform, to train and direct is manifestly the responsibility of the organization, be it church or what not, if that organization is to be propagated in an ignorant or a learned society. Christ went into the wilderness to be taught of the Spirit he faced the crucial experiences of life. He instructed the apostles in the "things" of the kingdom and gave to them the gospel which is the power of God unto salvation.

As we turn the pages of scripture and acquaint ourselves with the stories of Christ it would seem that there is little chance of success in the advance of the church and the kingdom without preparation of mind, heart and body for those upon whom the responsibility rests, whether it be missions, orphanage, publications, education, or other "things." All these "things" are essential. With us it is not a question of which comes first or which comes last but the responsibility of giving our support in proportion to the needs of each of the causes that is our responsibility.

When an engineer faces the responsibility of moving a house he doesn't consider lifting one corner at the time or one corner higher than the other, but he knows that he must lift all corners equally and at the same time. This is our responsibility. If we are to advance our church we cannot advance one interest beyond the other. Brethren, it cannot be done, to undertake it means failure and disaster somewhere along the line. We must put the Kingdom of God first and give "these things" their respective importance and support. This is our task.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

I wish to express appreciation for the generous response to our appeal to the churches and Sunday schools for a fifth Sunday offering. Last week we reported a total of $3,859.41. This week is very good though it falls short of last week's offering, as was to be expected. The college is indebted to its friends for paying conference apportionments more generously than heretofore. I presume that the reason for advanced payments is that they know how badly the college needs money and are willing to send in their contributions to help out. At any rate, the college is most grateful for the support of our Sunday schools and churches.

Dear Friends:

Again I thank you for the good report. So many kind friends who have thought of the children—homeless except for the home you give them—and have made it possible for them to have a good Easter. It is something to see their faces light up with real surprise and joy when they are told they can have a new dress, or a new jacket and pants, and new shoes for all. It is something to hear their chatter and plans and joyous laughers as loads of them—I made six trips to town and back with them and a matron to see that they were directed in making the right selections. Many dresses were given, and several children had sponsors who saw to it that their children had complete outfits. Packages have arrived from many Missionary Societies, Sunday school classes, and others. All are much appreciated. This has been a very, very busy week.

The work continues in Johnston Hall. More funds are needed for its completion, but I feel sure it will continue until the hall named for a great, good man will look inside and out as it should. And also while we are thinking of the Easter clothes there are also running up general expenses. That regular monthly offering is much in need for seed and fertilizer, and wages; yes, food and fuel oil for cooking it. But God blesses us with many good friends, and while the work is steady and often tedious, it has its rewards. Their appreciation of little children, which keeps sadness and loneliness for normal homes from too often showing through, is worthwhile.

More people have wanted little girls for Easter holidays than there were girls to give. Several have wanted little boys, and there is plenty of them. I guess people want girls because they are made of sugar and spice and everything nice—but boys. A lot of people want boys, too! Are you remembering summer vacation for some boy or girl? When school is out they will be coming into my office besieging me with: Am I going to get to go somewhere for vacation? For many the answer will be yes. For all it would be good. Seven boys have begged to go to a Boy Scout camp and their fees of $2.00 each has been deposited with the troop master in hope that somebody who doesn't have a boy of their own to send will send one of these. As I recall it the total cost for a week is $14.00, or maybe it is less. I am not sure right now, but you can bet I will be told by the boys in plenty of time. Already I am beginning on the "vacation list" and checking it twice.

Again thank you one and all I am yours to help rear good men and women out of the boys and girls who find their lot of necessity cast with us.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

HODGES.

Mrs. W. F. Hodges passed away on March 9 in Norfolk, at the age of 66. Funeral services were conducted at Sykes funeral home, Norfolk.

Mrs. Hodges was a life long member of the Christian Church, coming to Rosemont from Berea in 1932. She has been a very faithful member of Rosemont, and her physical presence will be missed from the services. Her husband, who passed away six years ago, served as deacon of Rosemont for many years.

Mrs. Hodges is survived by two sons and two daughters. Her fine Christian influence will continue to live through the noble characters of these children.

MELVIN DOLLAR.

HAND.

William Arthur Hand was born in Randolph County, Alabama, January 13, 1886, oldest son of W. M. Hand and Fannie Seymour Hand. He married Miss Rosie Veazey, Truett, Alabama, December 11, 1904. To this union were born two sons and three daughters. The oldest son died in 1924, age sixteen years. A daughter died in 1925, age eighteen months.

The family moved from Wadley, Alabama, to Tift County, Ga., in 1910. Here he became a successful farmer and business man, and a faithful and loyal member of the Vanceville Christian Church. He loved his home, his church, and his Saviour. He had expressed himself that he was ready to take the journey into the great beyond any time the summons might come. The summons came at 10:15 p. m., March 20, at his home.

He leaves to mourn their loss his wife, two daughters, Mrs. Olin J. Sellars, Mrs. Arthur Pettigrew, and one son, Rev. W. A. Hand, Jr., eight grandchildren, two great-grand children, two brothers, six sisters, and a great host of friends.

The funeral was held from the Vanceville Christian Church, by his pastor, Rev. R. H. Abbot, with burial in the Lawrence Cemetery, to await the resurrection of the just.

May God bless and comfort the bereaved is the prayer of a relative.

SOURS.

She did not stand with idle hands
And wait for something grand,
She did not let the moments slip away
As tiny grains of sand.
She did her task nearest her
And never seemed to tire,
As long as there was work to do
Until he said, "Come higher."

The untimely death of our friend and neighbor, Mrs. Lena Hockman Sours, was a distinct shock to her many friends in the Leaksville community who mourn her passing. She unselfishly gave of her time and talents to the service of others and as she entered her Eternal Home, she must have heard our Saviour say, "Well done thou good and faithful servant."

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of him who doeth all things well and that we follow her example of going about doing good.

2. That although our missionary society and all organizations of the Leaksville Church have suffered a great loss, we rejoice in the thought that our loss has been Heaven's gain.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to The Christian Sun and a copy be put on the records of our society.

Mrs. RACHEL MILLER,
Committee.

The "ads" have gone far. Too far. Anti-liquor advertising bills are "in the hopper" in the Senate and the House. The Johnson-Case Bill (S. 2444) in the Senate would prohibit distilled spirits advertising on radio and television. The Bryson Bill (H.R. 2188) in the House would eliminate all kinds of liquor advertising. The Chairman of the Committees considering these two Bills are Senator Edwin C. Johnson and Representative Robert Crosser. If you care, and I'm sure you do, write to these Chairmen. Get others to do the same—W. E. Hammaker, in The Voice.

"And they scoffed at him"—these Pharisees. That was because they were lovers of money. "The hit dog always hollers." Men convicted of sin always try to justify themselves. But God knows the hearts of men. And that which is often highly exalted by men is an abomination in the sight of God.

Arriving at the Washington Zoo one afternoon just as the monkey house was being closed for the day, we were startled by the wails and shrieks coming from the building. When we questioned a keeper, he grinned and explained, "The monkeys always act like that when we shut out the visitors—they get so much fun out of watching the people."—Readers Digest.

Outstanding Christian Layman Walter Graham to Speak At Laymen's Banquet

"Christian laymen around the world have a big job ahead of them today and they are taking a renewed interest in the daily application of Christian principles," says Walter A. Graham, Congregational Christian layman, attorney and Executive Director of the National Laymen's Fellowship of the Congregational Christian Churches. Mr. Graham will speak at the Laymen's Fellowship Banquet at 5:30 p. m. Tuesday, April 29th at the Southern Convention, Durham, N. C.

Mr. Graham is the first full time lay worker with men that the Congregational Christian Churches have had. He was "drafted" for the job from an active business and professional life and from much experience as a Christian layman in church work.

In 1948 Mr. Graham visited Europe and Great Britain conferring with laymen in no less than eight countries. He was the first lay worker from America to visit the Vocational Training Centers for Christian laymen in Europe. While there he conferred at length not only with laymen but with European church leaders.

While in Italy he had diversified experiences, including an audience with Pope Pius XII and conferences with the Waldensian (Italian Protestant) leaders. In 1947 and again in 1950, Mr. Graham visited Puerto Rico, helping to establish a Laymen's Fellowship there. In 1950 he was the first layman to go to Hawaii representing the laymen of the mainland and he visited the entire group of islands. He found a rising interest there among the laymen not only in the actual work of the church but in the importance of basing daily business dealings upon Christian principles.

Mr. Graham's duties as Executive Director of the Congregational Christian Laymen's Fellowship keep him much in the field. He goes from coast to coast addressing men's gatherings and conferring with groups of Christian laymen. There is a strong National Committee of the Fellowship composed of 48 business and professional men from all over the U. S. A.

Mr. Graham speaks to men in a language they can understand based upon his own experiences and upon careful study of New Testament teachings. He talks to the "man in the back pew" who, he believes, is anxious to put his talents to work for the church.

"Religion as usual" is one of the troubles in the Christian Churches, says Mr. Graham. A church must be up to date in both the content of its message and the promotion of its program, he believes. (Please turn to page 13)

*Stewardship Leader Will Speak Twice
During Sessions Of Convention*

REV. T. H. THOMPSON

"The way a man makes his money is just as important in God's sight as the way he spends it. Christian stewardship includes not only the way a man spends his money but the way he spends his time, his abilities, his political influence and his personal relationships," says Rev. Thomas Kirkland Thompson, Executive Director of the Joint Department of Stewardship and Benevolence of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U. S. A. who will speak twice at the 40th Biennial Session of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, to be held at the First Congregational Christian Church, Durham, N. C., April 29-May 1, 1952. His subjects will be "The Biblical Basis of Stewardship" and "The Need of Christian Stewardship."

Mr. Thompson is an Arkansas born man, a graduate of Baylor University, Texas, and theologically trained in Kentucky and at Union Theological Seminary in New York. He came from a Congregational pastorate in Illinois to the post of Secretary of the Missions Council of Congregational Christian Churches. The United Stewardship Council, representing 25 denominations, made him chairman of their Visual Aids Committee which responsibility he carried in addition to his Missions Council duties.

A few years ago Mr. Thompson left the Missions Council to go into the pastorate of a "high potential" parish in Cranston, Rhode Island. In 1951 he accepted the call to become Executive Director of the Joint Department of Stewardship and Benevolence of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U. S. A.

A LETTER TO THE LAYMEN OF OUR CHURCH.

Fellow Laymen:

This is to remind you of the Laymen's Meeting during the Southern Convention at Durham on April 29. We will meet for dinner at 5:30. The Durham Church is providing to take care of 200. The price of the meal is $1.00. Mr. Walter A. Graham, Executive Secretary of the National Laymen's Fellowship of Congregational Christian Churches, will be the main speaker.

In addition to this, the Nominating Committee will make a report and new officers will be installed. S. H. Pell, Secretary of the Laymen's Fellowship of the Southern Convention, will report for the Laymen's Council. Suggestions will be made for future activities of our Laymen's Fellowship.

This is an important meeting and we hope that you and many others from your church will attend.

It is important that Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, 1010 Markham Avenue, Durham, N. C., know if you plan to attend this dinner.

There are great potentialities in the Laymen's Fellowship of the Southern Convention and we are counting on you to help develop our possibilities to the greatest extent.

Sincerely yours,

GEO. D. COLCLOUGH, Chairman,
Laymen's Fellowship.

KANSAS MAKES NOMINATION FOR MODERATOR.

For Moderator of the General Council, we should like to nominate Mr. Frank H. Korab, of Kansas City, Kansas. He has been endorsed unanimously by the Board of Trustees of the Kansas Congregational and Christian Conference.

Mr. Korab would bring to the Moderatorship wide experience in Congregational Christian affairs for he has been active in his local church, Kansas City First Pilgrim, in his state as Moderator of the Conference, chairman of the Unit Plan in its year of completion, and member of the 1954 Kansas Centennial Committee. Nation-wide he has been a member of the Missions Council, the Council for Social Action, also the important Nominating Committee of the General Council. Shortly after the National Council of Churches of Christ in America was formed, he was appointed a member of the Assembly of the Division of Home Missions. Doane College of Crete, Nebraska is proud to have him as an alumnus and a trustee.

Congregational Christians of the Middle West feel that it is fitting and right to present one of their number as a National Moderator as it has been twelve years since this area has been thus represented; they feel that Mr. Korab is well qualified for the job by experience, aptitude and devotion. No layman has been more zealous in his Master's work than he.

E. C. WENDELL,
Committee Chairman,
MRS. JOHN W. GIBSON,
Conference Moderator.

REMAINING MISSIONARIES TO CHINA RETURN.

The last three Congregational Christian missionaries serving in China under the American Board have been on the high seas on the way to the U. S. and freedom after having been detained by the People's Government of China in Tunghsien for 16 months.

They are Miss Alice Margarte Huggins of 1630 College Avenue, Topeka, Kansas, author of "The Red Chair

Waits" and "Fragrant Jade" who has been serving as a Christian educationalist in China since 1917, and Dr. and Mrs. Hugh Wells Hubbard of White Plains, New York, who have been specializing in Christian rural service in China since 1913.

Miss Huggins, who, on the President Cleveland left Hong Kong April 14, is expected to dock in San Francisco April 30. Dr. and Mrs. Hubbard who are on the S. S. Alcyone are returning by a circuitous route in order to visit their daughter, Mrs. Lloyd B. Swift, formerly of China, and now serving under the American Board in Talas, Turkey, with her husband.

In World War II Miss Huggins was interned for two years in Manila, Philippine Islands, by the Japanese, and came home to the U. S. A. on the Gripsholm repatriation ship. She was caught in Manila en route to the U. S. A., for furlough. Before going back to China in 1946 she served as a teacher of Chinese at Yale University.

Dr. and Mrs. Hugh Wells Hubbard have been doing a pioneering and unique piece of Christian rural service in China. For several years Dr. Hubbard was Director of the North China Christian Rural Service Union. In 1947 he was lent to UNESCO as a consultant in the China "Pilot Project" for Fundamental Education at Nanking. Later he was sent to Szechuan and then (1950-51) headed up the Audio-Visual Department and Workshop of the North China Rural Service Union in Tunghsien. He and Mrs. Hubbard were interned by the Japanese in Weihsien Prison Camp during World War II.

THE VALLEY CONFERENCE MID-YEAR SESSION.

The 22nd mid-year session of the Valley Conference was held at Bethlehem Church, near New Market, on March 27. As usual, the session was well attended. Every pastor, and all except one church had official delegates present. Mr. K. B. Doflemeyer, our layman president, presided over the session built around the theme, "Building the Rural Church."

Features on the program were the reports of progress from each church represented, the presentation of the Lord's Acre Plan by Dr. Dumont Clarke, of Asheville, N. C., and the address by Dr. Wesley A. Hotchkiss, of our Board of Home Missions, New York. Present for the session were two representatives from the old West Virginia Christian Conference. The churches of this conference are seeking closer fellowship with the Valley Conference. Since the merger the conference has not been actively affiliated with our Congregational Christian work, but there is promise that this condition will be improved.

MT. OLIVET (G) MAKES PLANS FOR BUILDING.

On Sunday, March 6, I had the privilege of visiting Mt. Olivet (G) of the Valley Conference, while Rev. Silas E. Madren, pastor, supplied at Timber Ridge. One of the purposes of my visit was to assist in raising a building fund. Some time ago a fund was started but it was not sufficient. On our visit the people responded generously, and over $3,000 was subscribed at the morning service. Mr. Madren and his people have plans drawn for improving the church sanctuary and providing more Sunday school rooms. This is one of our good churches. It is loyal in the whole program of the denomination, but in addition there is a lively interest in maintaining an effective local program.

FLINT HILL (M) MAKES PROGRESS.

Mr. Quintin Britt reports that extensive repairs have been made at Flint Hill (M) since the meeting of the Western North Carolina Conference session. The ceiling has been raised, and the walls and ceiling have been refinished. A choir loft has been built, and Sunday school rooms have been completed. The floors have been sanded, and oil heat has been installed. The repairs cost approximately $1,000, and the labor was donated. Increased attendance at the Sunday school and church services have been gratifying.

DR. HOTCHKISS VISITS THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

Dr. Wesley A. Hotchkiss, Associate Director of the Town and Country Department of the Board of Home Missions, New York, spent the week of March 25 in the Convention. We met him at Elkton, Virginia, and began a visit to practically all the churches of the Valley Conference, held conferences with pastors, attended the Valley Conference, and visited the Carroll County Mission, Dr. Hotchkiss's department of our church is anxious to be of help to us in our Valley work and that of Carroll County, where he feels we have a great opportunity for service.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

CHURCH PRESS MEETS IN WASHINGTON

Attendance at a meeting of The Associated Church Press is an interesting and stimulating experience. Membership publications in the A. C. P. now number 111, with a combined circulation of 5,500,000. This certainly represents a virile force for sanity and righteousness. It is heartening to contemplate the influence of these editors and their publications. No discouraged prophet need flee from the forces of evil with the feeling that "I, even I alone am left."

Religion, we are reminded, is news. While all expressions of religion are not news, religion has made the headlines through the centuries and its finest expressions are ever newsworthy. A most able crop of editors, both in the religious and in the secular field, are interpreting the spirit and achievements of religion to a vast audience. They are keeping Christian facts and Christian ideals before our people.

We cannot take it for granted that any other agency, church, daily press or radio gives our constituency what the church press has to offer. It does not always, nor does it usually maintain the highest standards of literary excellence, nevertheless it does offer a unique and indispensable service. It acquaints its readers with the broad scope of our contemporary Christian thought and experience, which, without the religious chronicle, would pale into anonymity.

The editor attended this Washington conclave at the behest of the Board of Publications. Some editors came from a great distance, even from Canada. Religious editors, like the churches, are indicating a greater willingness to cooperate. We have the satisfaction of knowing that our publication is an active member of The Associated Church Press.

PACING THE PENTAGON

Negotiating the long corridors of the Pentagon, Washington headquarters for the Department of Defense, is an experience one does not easily forget. One is reminded of the long and arduous expeditions of our Army, Navy, and Air Force.

Members of the Associated Church Press heard addresses by Mr. Robert A. Lovett, Secretary of Defense, and Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg, Assistant. Brigadier General A. Robert Ginsburgh explained the current military situation in Korea, indicating succinctly the tactical and logistical problems.

Mr. Lovett reminded the editors that we are not only mobilizing and fighting, but that we are constantly demobilizing. General Ginsburgh indicated that Korea is surrounded by powerful neighbors and that we have been there before to maintain Americal policy.

Mr. Frank C. Nash, Assistant to Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs, described America's relatively new role in world affairs and pointed to our success through the United Nations in arresting the tentacles of Communism.

Chaplain S. W. Salisbury declared that the Military Chaplaincy "has become a calling as valid and as important as the foreign missionary or the home pastorate. Our Chaplains are engaged in an effort to preserve and strengthen the Christian way of life among our service personnel, and in particular to conserve the work of the churches in the lives of hundreds of thousands of young men and women who come to the services from Christian homes. The Chaplains also utilize the unmatched opportunity to present the challenge of Christ to non-church connected youth in the services." He described the ministry of the Chaplain in holding divine services, counseling, offering the sacraments, providing religious instruction, and visiting in the hospital. "Here," said the Chaplain, "young men find a clergyman who is friendly, understanding and sympathetic. Here they learn that the Chaplain will go with them throughout their service, suffer the same hardships and undergo the same trials, through every danger including death."

A Sunday In Africa

Corrine Nordquest takes us to a Church School in a Johannesburg Township in South Africa

It is 9:30 and a beautiful day. Alexandra Township is only a short distance from Johannesburg, so we can easily reach the church shortly before ten o'clock. We drive through the city, out the main road to Pretoria. On the outskirts of Johannesburg we branch off the fine highway to enter Alexandra. Immediately we are in another world.

The streets are alive with activity. Old men, women, smartly dressed young men and children of all ages fill the streets. Taxis swerve recklessly through the congestion. Chickens, not knowing which way to go, run hither and yon. Big dilapidated green buses, crowded to capacity, roar up and down the rough dirt lanes. Lean dogs, often hardly more than skin stretched over bones, wander about in the confusion. A cow ambles across the road. We pass a young man with a white cloth wrapped around under his chin and tied on top of his head—generally a sign of toothache.

Children, clean and shining in old but neat Sunday clothes, hurry along to Sunday school, older brothers or sisters looking after the tiny tots. Many more boys and girls, clad in rags or sometimes not clad at all, with noses running and generally uncared for, play about the dirty streets. A group of a half dozen young boys, playing a game in the roadway, obstruct our passage. They move a little bit, enough to allow us to pass.

A barber shop blares jazz tunes out into the Sabbath morning. Nearby we see a non-Christian woman. She is clothed in a bright red print. Her hair is heavily dressed with red clay, as is the custom. Both legs from ankles half way to her knees are covered with narrow metal rings, one on top of another. All along the road we pass tiny ramshackle stalls where women are selling pumpkins, tomatoes, grapes, oranges, potatoes, most of poor grade. At several stalls coke and other bright red, green and orange soft drinks are lined up. Mealies (corn on the cob), are being roasted over hot fires in small buckets. We note a man setting out a wide variety of cigarettes at his outdoor shop. Yonder we see pieces of fried fish piled up for the day's trade.

Small houses, some nothing more than shacks, others rather well constructed, with perhaps one to three rooms, are crowded very closely together. Nearly all are separated from the street by leaning fences. Here and there a blanket or odd pieces of grey-white clothing are drying on the fence or on a makeshift clothes line.

Overhead beautiful pure white clouds drift in a lovely blue sky. The sun shines down with warmth and brightness. Yet here in the streets, the air is not fresh and clear. One is conscious of the many odors.

We stop across from our church, a small corrugated iron building, very unimpressive. As we walk to the door we notice several broken panes of glass. Inside a small girl is busily dusting the benches for Sunday school and church. She looks up, smiling with bright eyes, and shyly acknowledges our greeting.

We glance about the one small room. The pulpit is on a low platform at the center front and on the floor just below is a rather nice large table. Benches which have backs and are painted brown are arranged on two sides with a center aisle. We can't help noticing the paneled ceiling. One panel above the pulpit is threatening to fall, while several panels are gone, giving a direct view into the rafters and up to the corrugated iron roof. Pieces of wood and tin patch the breaks in the wooden floor. Why are things in such a bad state? For some years the children in a government day school having their classes in our church, were not well supervised and consequently our building suffered greatly. Our people have been unable to pay for the needed repairs. You know now, in a way which you never before quite realized, that these people are poor.

The outlook for the future of this church is hopeful, however. It is a small struggling congregation, but the people are gaining remarkably under new pastoral leadership.

Sunday school opens late with a hymn and a prayer. The teacher, Mr. Dlamini, proceeds to the lesson of Jesus feeding the five thousand. Being new and not yet having had any training, he reads the lesson word by word from the teacher's book. The children sit quietly—models of good behavior—then they stand and sing, "Wangithand' u Jesu lo" (Jesus Loves Me), three verses in Zulu and then one verse in English. After answering questions about the lesson, those children who have brought pennies march up to put them on the table as the offering song is sung. The pastor, who has arrived early for the church service, is then asked to give thanks for the offering.

At this point I am asked to speak to the children. For the benefit of all, but more especially for the small children, I tell again the story of Jesus feeding the five-thousand, using a large picture illustrating this lesson. The attention of every child is focused on the picture as they listen intently and study eagerly. Then in a few moments I teach them one verse of a new song translated in Zulu, "Jesus, Friend of Little Children." They learn quickly and sing it well.

It is nearly eleven o'clock and Sunday school closes with the singing of the Lord's Prayer in Sesutho, followed by the song, "Our Sunday School Is Over." The children are very much pleased with the Sunday school papers which I give them as they go out. (These papers are old story leaflets sent from Sunday schools in the U. S.)

I should like to share the experiences of the rest of the day, though this is probably enough for this time. Most Sundays I visit two or three Sunday schools and attend one or two church services. What we have seen is typical in some respects, but each location or township is different and each Sunday school has its own ways, its own problems and achievements. All of our teachers need more training and we are gradually trying to help them and to provide more and better teaching materials.

"THE LATER GLORY OF THIS HOUSE."

By ROBERT LEE HOUSE, Minister
The Church of Wide Fellowship.

Sermon on Reentering the Sanctuary
April 13, 1952

Israel had been in exile. These displaced persons cried: "How can we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?" Their homes were gone and their temple lay in ruins. Then Cyrus conquered Babylon and permitted the exiles to return and begin rebuilding the temple. The Samaritans interfered with the progress of the work. Misfortune had dogged their steps until the heart was all but gone out of them.

Then the word of the Lord came to Haggai, the prophet: "Be strong, go up to the mountain and bring wood and build this house and I will take pleasure in it and I will be glorified. The silver is mine and the gold is mine, and the latter glory of this house shall be greater than the former glory." Haggai 2:9.

This house of God was built in 1927. It was indeed "Beautiful for situation," as the Psalmist said of Mt. Zion. It brought a majestic touch to the Sandhills. Here faith was evidenced and faith was kindled. The gospel was proclaimed in word and song for a quarter of a century. Those who had worshipped in the adjacent framed building, constructed in 1897, felt that the latter glory of this house was greater than the former. A new architectural pattern had been set. A lovelier and more spacious setting for worship had been achieved.

Then in 1950 the fire laid its cruel and merciless fingers on the structure which had stood and witnessed for 53 years. This congregation has been in temporary exile while the sanctuary was being renovated. Away from our familiar setting some seemed to say, "How can we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?"

Today we return with joy to a renovated sanctuary. Color had been added, a window set and dedicated.

The setting is eloquent with the majesty of God. The cross symbolizes the heart of our gospel. And there are the two candles, symbolizing the two natures of Christ, human and divine. Light, we are reminded, dispels darkness. It moves with miraculous speed, gives both warmth and guidance. The pillars signify the apostles and saints, while the center aisle suggests the straight and narrow way which leadeth to life eternal.

But the latter glory of this house shall be greater than its present glory. A new building is now rising to the glory of God, opening new doors of opportunity, new aisles to worship and service.

While we thank God for newness, we realize that there is a spiritual glory that comes only with time, use and holy association. When an American complained to a Londoner of the sluggish dirty water in the Thames River, the Londoner rejoined: "Man, take off your hat! This is not water; this is liquid history."

This deeper significance comes to a house of God only with the passing of the years. When these aisles have been worn by a million footsteps, when generations of children have come to this chancel to sing the songs and anthems of the church, when the light that falls from these windows has been softened by the dust of a hundred years, when the flowers of Christian virtues have burst into multiplied gardens of character, and our stewardship has blessed the world, then the glory of this house shall be greater than its former glory.

Now there is only a step to the central message of Easter. St. Paul expressed it: "For we know that if the earthly house of our tabernacle be dissolved; we have a building from God, a house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens."

More recently, Henry Van Dyke expressed the same faith in these lines:

Let me live my life from year to year
With forward face and unreluctant soul,
Not hastening to nor turning from the goal.
So let the way wind up hill or down, Though rough or smooth, the journey will be joy;
Still seeking what I sought when but a boy,
New friendships, high adventure, and a crown.
I shall grow old, but never lost life's zest.
Because the road's last turn will be the best!

Among Our Churches

MINISTER AT ROSEMONT IS INSTALLED.

Last Sunday night, April 20, Rev. Melvin Dollar was installed as the minister of the Rosemont Church. Dr. J. H. Dollar, president of the Eastern Virginia Conference, was in charge of the service, and also gave the charge to the pastor. Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, president of the Ministers' Association of Eastern Virginia, gave the charge to the congregation. Dr. I. W. Johnson, former supply pastor of the church, gave the message. His topic was "The Minister and the Church."

HOLY NECK CHURCH, HOLLAND, VIRGINIA.

At our Easter service we had five young people who had attended the pastor's class to unite with the church by profession of faith. On Palm Sunday two members were received by letter bringing to a total of seven received during the Lenten Season.

Our church has just recently completed laying carpet on the entire floor of the sanctuary and is now in the act of completing the painting of the exterior walls and the roof. These improvements add greatly to the attractiveness and beauty of our church.

EURE CHRISTIAN CHURCH DEDICATES MEMORIALS.

Eure Christian Church, Gates, County, North Carolina, observed Easter in not only the regular sermon by its pastor, Rev. R. E. Brittle, but also by dedicating memorials to the church.

The memorials dedicated were: A new communion table; and a three piece solid brass altar set.

The setting for this afternoon service was simple and very fitting, yet lovely. Beautiful Easter bulletins, floral baskets, potted plants and music suitable for the occasion helped make the service.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the church sponsored the program. Memorials dedicated were:

WHEN THE CONVENTION MEETS.

When the Convention meets, if true to form, there will be certain formalities such as reading of minutes, enrolling delegates, brief devotions, introduction of speakers and visitors, recognition of dignitaries, etc., then we shall be favored with the Blue Book—the compilation of reports of what has been done or what should have been done. Then we shall have sermons and addresses of various types and lengths to which some delegates will listen and others will not.

There are so many things that need to be done that are waiting for the church to do that I trust we shall not spend too much time on records, figures, revisions and the like. If the records are correct that is sufficient. We have had enough revisions to last the Convention for a generation and more. We have spent a lot of money on new churches, new parsonages and other improvements. Today, with the influx of population in the territory in which our churches are located largely, we are confronted with an opportunity for church extension that we, as a denomination have seldom, if ever, faced before. We have started before this biennium now coming to a close to do something about this. More power to the leaders in our Convention who are moving in this direction, and I trust that our leaders shall see the opportunity and advantage of contributing to this progressive step. When we think of church extension we only think of the material side of the program. We should remind ourselves as a denomination that in the face of multiplied opportunities we have not extended our church in the field of evangelism which would necessarily mean an increase in the total membership of our church in the South, but instead of increases, in many instances we have suffered losses, and it may be that we have suffered losses in the total membership of our Convention. If we had been obedient servants, alert and spiritually aggressive, we could have easily added twenty-five per cent to our membership. There are tens, scores, and hundreds in our Convention area who are sympathetically inclined toward the Congregational Christian Church but who are not actually a part of the church. It may be that they have never been invited. It may be that no effort has been made to win them to Christ and to bring them into the membership of the church. We doubtlessly would be amazed and personally condemned for the lack of interest, should we know how many are really waiting to be brought to Christ and into the Kingdom through the church.

We, as ministers, stand up and preach the Gospel of Christ and never give an opportunity for people present to express their interest and concern for their own salvation. Having preached, we pronounce the benediction and proceed homeward. There is a denomination that feels the responsibility that whenever the Gospel is preached an invitation to those present to accept Christ is obligatory upon the leader. That denomination is going forward in great strides. It would be well, I think, if when the Convention meets we place the emphasis upon church extension, material and spiritual.

I trust also that the Convention shall make an effort to appraise the value of Christian higher education, its need for a time like this, the place that Elon College holds in our program and should hold in the future program of our church, that we should also make an honest effort to provide for the needs of the same. The three things that should receive emphasis, aside from the Convention itself, are church extension, evangelism, and education. These three constitute the major task of the church and hold its major opportunities. May we give ourselves anew to the program and in the name of Christ push forward to a better and more glorious day.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Some weeks ago I approached a very good friend of mine about contributing to the Elon College Two Million Dollar Campaign Fund. He replied that he had been giving and giving to Elon College, and it did seem that the college would get on a paying basis sometime. The college is like any other interest of the church. It requires continuous support if it is to continue its program. The church understood clearly when it founded the college that it would be compelled to continue to give its

At Home and Abroad

A LETTER FROM ED RIGGS.

Manamadura
April 5, 1952

Dear Friends of the Southern Convention:

We are still in Manamadura, but our address for the next month and a half, beginning April 14, will be, "Rock Cottage, Kodaikanal, South India"; and after that we are hoping—although we have no assurance as yet—that it will be: "Kilanjunai P. O., via Paramakudi, Ramnad District, So. India." In any case, mail sent to Manamadura will be forwarded to us without trouble.

The following account of this week's visit to Kilanjunai, a fairly typical one, should be entitled, "Why I Want to Move to Kilanjunai!" I have now started making my weekly stint there two days in duration rather than one, because so many patients were disappointed when I rushed off after one hectic day. Last week Dr. Jones, of the parent hospital in Ramnad, also spent the same two days there with me, and together we were able to see all the patients who came, for the first time. Thinking that the back-log was over with and that the interval between visits is still only one week, instead of two as it will have to be after we move to Kodia, I expected to have an easy time this week, and planned to bike there the first morning and return the second evening so that I would only be away from home one night instead of three. We have discovered so many shortcuts that the direct route there is now only a little over twenty miles and can be covered in three hours. So starting at six, we should have been there at nine. The morning started out auspiciously, with a cloud in the east rising as fast as the sun for awhile, so that the weather was cool and travelling was good. However, only four miles from Kilanjunai, the sun came out from behind the cloud and the rear tire of my bicycle went flat. It seemed like just a slow leak, so I sent my assistant ahead to warn them that I would be a few minutes late, and elected to push on and keep pumping the tire rather than stopping to mend it. But the leak became faster and faster, and I was finally having to stop every fifty feet or so. I pulled in nearly an hour late! That afternoon, during a lull in the clinic business, we took the inner tube out to patch it and found a thorn so big that it pierced holes in the opposite side of the tube whenever the tire got soft, a different hole for every time I had to stop and pump it up that morning!

In the rush of these periodic visits there I never seem to get time to do anything about promoting my preventive medicine program; and I will have to admit that I ran into conditions quite frequently whose only "prevention" is early adequate treatment. There are a lot of "routine" cases of stomach aches or other vague complaints which mostly seem based on malnutrition from an inadequate diet, and cataracts, cause unknown, requiring special eye surgery. I remember an old lady with an advanced cancer of the face, which I was able to do nothing for; another with an abscessed kidney, for whom my treatment will probably not work and who will need surgery in a larger hospital; a man with early syphilis and another with gonorrhoea, both of whom can be easily cured since I saw them early but who offer a challenge to preventive medicine. Another man, my first patient the first morning, was writhing in agony with an "incarcerated" umbilical hernia, only two hours old, and I was able to release it after a few anxious moments by simple manipulation. But a few more hours and I think it would have strangulated, and in his situation, so far from a big hospital, he would probably have died. Suppose it had incarcerated on some other day than the day I had been there. . . .

A schoolboy was brought with a stiff elbow, due to an old fracture which had knit improperly because of lack of treatment. It was easy—and futile—to lecture him on how that could have been prevented so much better than cured. So a couple of hours later in came another schoolboy with a fresh fracture of the elbow; and I, with no plaster of paris or proper splints, was challenged to make good my word about the value of seeing a doctor early. Being a poor boy it was out of the question for him to make a trip to a hospital in Madura where he could be X-rayed. My non-existent surgical skill is also being taxed in other ways. A little girl was brought complaining of a tick in her ear. It seems that in these parts the cattle ticks love to get into the ears of the domestic animals, and when the people sleep with their animals sometimes the ticks get a bit mixed up as to whose ears they are entering. I looked in the girl's ear, and sure enough, there was the tick, way down inside, attached and swelling itself with her blood. But that was too easy. The next one was a little tiny boy, with a "seed in his nose." I didn't know what to expect, but started digging away, amid much struggling and sneezing, and finally out popped a great big red thing about the size of a small kidney bean. He really would have had trouble if that had been allowed to stay there for a long time. Of course the dramatic thing should be taking these foreign bodies out of windpipes and lungs, the way you read in the papers, but I am afraid I won't be able to produce that kind of heroics!

One woman, in the advanced stages of pregnancy, came in complaining of inability to sleep at night. Since that was a very unusual complaint around here I asked what she was worrying about. She answered without hesitation that she was afraid of what was going to happen when her time would come. It seems that her two previous babies had been born dead after a horrible ordeal in each case. Had she been examined during the early stages of this pregnancy? I asked. No, she had not seen a doctor since the last childbirth. I couldn't do much of an examination because our nurse was out on an OB call, but I did find that the baby was in a hopelessly impossible position. If we moved here Fran and I would be able to offer one kind of preventive medicine that is not available for the village people in general, and that is a prenatal clinic, with examinations and counselling. The nurse finally sent word for me to come and help her out with her case in a village four miles away. We went by bullock cart (I'll try to remember never to make that mistake again!) and found a fifteen-year-old girl trying to have her first baby but not making any progress, apparently because the bony outlet was much too

NEW SOCIETY AT BEVERLY HILLS.

The Woman's Society of the Beverly Hills Community Church (Congregational Christian) Burlington, N. C., was organized on Tuesday, March 25, at the parsonage.

Mrs. Harold Ingle, president of the Woman's Auxiliary of the First Christian Church of Burlington conducted the meeting with the help of Mrs. Henry E. Robinson, Mrs. Russell H. Clem, and Mrs. M. Z. Rhodes, all from her church.

After the devotional, which was taken from the book of James, the following officers were elected: Mrs. Mrs. J. F. Faulkner, Jr., president; Mrs. W. W. Snyder, vice-president; Mrs. H. C. Miles, secretary and treasurer; Mrs. Raymond Sinner, friendly service chairman. Monthly meetings are planned by this group which consists of nine charter members.

DR. EDWIN D. MINOR IS SPEAKER AT RICHMOND.

One of the interesting meetings of the Richmond society was the open meeting on February 13, sponsored by the Women's Fellowship, with Dr. Edwin D. Miner, regional secretary for the American Leprosy Mission, as speaker. Dr. Miner, of Ridgewood, New Jersey, told of the work of this group which has had a Christian world ministry since 1874. Mrs. Virden presided over the meeting. "The Bond family" delighted those present with a special music feature, and a "coffee hour" concluded the meeting.

Mrs. W. P. Bowland, N. C. Superintendent of Cradle Roll work, asks that each society order "Manuel, a Little Mexican Boy," by Jeanette Perkins, from the Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Mass. The cost is eighty-five cents. She also hopes that each society will plan to have a Cradle Roll Party.

Cooperation

--Interdenominational

--Interracial

--With Young People

By MRS. W. H. JOHNSON

The term Interdenominational Cooperation has a rather formidable sound, but taking away the long words, it is simply a fellowship or working together of churches of different denominations.

Every community has problems that can be solved best by all churches working together. In the smaller towns and rural communities, Daily Vacation Bible Schools are often interdenominational and they work out well.

Sometimes there are civic problems the churches alike must face. It can best be done together. Often councils of church women and councils of churches have been organized to cope with mutual problems. Sometimes these councils are in small communities only two or three churches. They go on up to city, state and national levels.

These church councils are not trying to abolish denominations, but seeking to bring them together to meet the issues confronting all churches alike—on local, state and national levels.

Three Special Days.

The General Department of Church Women of the National Council of Churches of Christ, U. S. A., has set aside three days each year for the coming together of church women everywhere, for study, for worship, for fellowship and to bring an offering for those places of the world in greatest need.

On February 29 the World Day of Prayer was observed by women in practically every country around the world. Praying women everywhere realized:

NOTE.—This address was presented at the Waverly, Virginia, District Rally on April 1, by Mrs. Johnson, who is the Eastern Virginia Superintendent of Interdenominational Cooperation. It is printed by request.

In Christ there is no East or West,
In Him no South or North,
But one great fellowship of love
Throughout the whole wide earth.

It is now time to plan for May Fellowship Day, to be observed on May 2. "Spiritual Security for Today's Families" is the theme this year. What could be more pertinent? We hope our May Fellowship Day observance will be a satisfying occasion from the standpoint of fellowship, interest and understanding of the role of the Christian family in creating a spiritual security for its own members and for the community.

World Community Day will be observed on November 7, 1952. The theme this year will be "Building a Lasting Peace." It is urged that all groups observe these days, if possible in cooperation with churches of other denominations in your community.

Interracial Relations.

One problem confronting religious leaders in our area is the need of trained leaders for Negro churches. Their schools are now on a level with white schools. What about their churches, particularly in rural areas? The Virginia Council of Church Women is sponsoring an interdenominational Christian Training School for Negro Women at St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute, Lawrenceville, Virginia, June 16-21. You can help by sponsoring the attendance of outstanding Negro women in your community at this school, the theme of which is "The Living Bible" and the cost of which is $18.00.

The Missions Council of the Congregational Christian Churches sponsors Franklinton Center at Franklinton, N. C. This was chartered in 1891 to provide a high school education for Negro youth. For forty years it helped hundreds of young people, but was closed in 1931.

Six years of inactivity there proved the need for a center for fellowship, inspiration, and training for Negroes in this area. At present the chief activities are a series of summer conferences where youth, pastors, laymen, and church women gather at different periods to learn more about churchmanship, the Bible, the ways of worshipping, the world-wide service of the church. Another similar series is held in the winter. Because of the great need for trained leader-

A Page for Our Children

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Pilgrim Press has just released a small, paper back book called Security for Young Children, Foundation for Spiritual Values, by Elizabeth W. Campbell. The book which is illustrated and has many photographs costs $1.25.

Elizabeth Campbell graduated from Teacher's College, Columbia University. She taught public and private kindergarten in Chicago and Rye, N. Y. She is now supervisor of Student Teachers at Wheelock College in Boston. One wonders how many towns and cities have been blessed with Wheelock graduates. The little town of Southern Pines has a nursery-kindergarten school supervised by a Wheelock graduate.

The first three years of a child's life are so important as foundation steps, that mothers, fathers and teachers want to give these little folks the best physical, mental and spiritual beginnings. Miss Campbell has written down conversations of "her" children.

Here is a choice example. Little Bruce quizzed the visiting teacher and discovered that she taught big girls in college—

Bruce—"Hello. Whose mother are you?"

Teacher—"Hello. I am no one's mother."

Bruce. "Are you a teacher?"

Teacher—"Yes, I am a teacher."

Bruce—"What do you teach?" (Visitor was puzzled but decided to tell him the facts).

Teacher—"I teach in college."

Bruce—"That's where big boys and girls go, isn't it?"

Teacher—"That's right, but in our college we have only big girls."

Bruce—"What do you teach them?"

Teacher—"We try to teach them to be good teachers."

Bruce—"And good mothers?"

Teacher—"Oh, yes, and good mothers, too."

Bruce was serious. He looked directly at the visiting teacher and said: "Say, can you tell me any place where us boys can go to learn to be good fathers?"

Bruce will head a wonderful family some day we suspect!

There are lists of reading material, illustrations for toys and equipment, explanations of teacher-child relationships and teacher-parent relationships. It is a fine book with a fine theme and worthy of careful study.

Elise has such a winning manner that it is hard not to let her have her own way. She likes to play with Roy, the little boy next door, but she doesn't like to share her toys with him. She likes to play with his toys, but he does not mind sharing. What shall we do about it? How shall we teach Elise the desirability of sharing.

Susy stamps her foot and says that she "won't go to bed." Father explains to their guests that Susy hasn't been very well and that they hesitate to discipline her until she is stronger. It is a difficult problem, her parents think, and they hope they are handling it the proper way. What shall they do? How firmly shall they insist that Susy do what is right?

The hopefulness regarding both these situations comes from the fact that the parents are questioning their methods of procedure. The child in each case needs to understand that there is a right way of thinking and behaving, and a wrong way, and that happiness comes from understanding and following the right way.

"I love my littel boy so much that I hate to say 'No' to him," a young mother remarked.

"Well, if you don't begin to do it before long—whenever you know you should—" her friend replied, "your boy will have an unhappy life, for you are encouraging him to behave the wrong way. This isn't love; it is weakness on your part."

One who will present the truth as frankly as this was done is a real friend, although, perhaps, the one to whom it is given may not so regard it at the time. It takes courage to point out a parent's mistakes, and one can only hope it will help. Close relatives cannot usually speak as bluntly without disastrous consequences, but outsiders are often able to do so without causing offense; however, a little more tactfulness generally brings better results. Grandparents and in-laws sometimes learn the hard way that "hands-off" is a very necessary attitude to acquire.

A very great help in the lives of young mothers is a Mothers' Club, where all kinds of home problems in connection with the bringing-up of the family may be discussed. If one or two older mothers are included—mothers who have had the experiences that younger mothers are now meeting—it is an advantage.

Such a club needs a good leader—one who is able to handle not only the program for each meeting but also the discussion periods, at which some parents might, if not controlled, assume too much liberty and cause unpleasant feelings by becoming too personal. The club might be associated with the church, or the school, or might be just a little group of friends who meet together to sew and knit. All sorts of problems will come up; all mothers need help, and obtaining it through the association with other mothers means a great deal.

Take the subject of children's tantrums, for example, Mrs. Blank said to me the other day, "My little two-year-old daughter threw herself down on the floor and kicked and screamed at a great rate because I said, 'Now we'll go upstairs and take a nap.'" She went on to say that she was so surprised she didn't know what to do. "Why did she do it?" she questioned. "The child had never seen anyone kick and scream?"

"What did you do?" I asked.

"Well I took her up and washed her face and hands in cool water. I did not say anything about the kicking or screaming. Then I said, 'Now we'll go upstairs. Would you like to walk up or shall I carry you?'"

What a wise parent! Can you mothers think of a better way to handle such a situation? Without anger, reproach or pleading that mother had gently applied a little cool water and then diverted the child's thoughts from what she had been doing by asking her to decide how she would like to go upstairs.

Billy, across the street, has tantrums, too; he is eight years old. How did they happen to start? How much

TO THE N. C. AND VA. CONFERENCE.

Dear Young People and their Sponsors:

Below you will find directions for reaching Camp New Hope. It is the well located and splendidly equipped camp owned by the Presbyterian Church in this area. The easiest way to get there from churches of this conference is to come to Hillsboro and take Route No. 86 toward Chapel Hill . . . drive for about four and one-half miles and turn left at a road marked New Hope Church and the camp is two miles in.

Curtis Young, president of the North Carolina and Virginia Youth Fellowship, has written to some one in each church about the over night camp on Saturday and Sunday, May 3, 4. The program will begin with registration and assignment to cabins on Saturday at 2:30 p. m. and will close with a joint worship service with the Youth Fellowship of the Eastern North Carolina Conference at 2:30 on Sunday afternoon.

The cost for registration (use of the camp over night) and the three meals will all amount to fifty cents each—a total of $2.00. Important! Curtis must notify the camp directors of the number coming (and whether girls or boys) by Thursday night, May 1 (exactly one week from the time this letter is being printed), so please notify Curtis Young, 211 W. Trinity Avenue, Durham, North Carolina, immediately.

The program will be a good one, with much emphasis on fellowship and recreation at this camp. It is the only time during the year that the Youth Fellowship asks its young people to be away over Sunday. There is plenty of room for all at the camp but they must know ahead of time. And how nice it will be not to have to do our own cooking!

Rev. Richard L. Jackson, Curtis Young, and I visited the camp last week and very much liked the location. I hope to see representatives there from a large number of our churches. North Carolina and Virginia churches did a marvelous job of attending the State-Wide Rally at Elon and we were all proud of you.

Sincerely,
PATTIE LEE COGHILL.

RELAX WITH MAX.

A young couple sent a friend of theirs—an Australian woman living in this country—a playpen upon the arrival of her fourth child. Her thank-you note left them some what astonished. "The pen is a perfect godsend," she wrote. "I sit in it every afternoon and read—and the children can't get near me."

* * *

Will Rogers once spoke at a gathering of boys sponsored by a Cal. service club. At the banquet officials noted with growing horror the disappearance of the tableware as the kids began sneaking everything in sight for souvenirs. The harassed chairman begged, coaxed, cajoled the boys to return the loot; the youngsters returned nary a piece.

Finally it was Roger's turn to speak. With that inimitable grin, he began to empty one after another of his pockets of knives, forks, spoons, and salt shakers. To top it all, he removed a huge service plate from beneath his shirt.

For a moment there was an amazed silence from the boys. Then they howled with delighted laughter. And the clatter of silver echoed through the hall as the boys followed the leader and returned their loot.

* * *

We are often like the boys. We are afraid to do what we know is right because someone may think we are trying to be saints. Do what you know is right—you'll be surprised how many people will follow you.

2. The brass altar set:

(a) The cross—given as a memorial to Mr. and Mrs. Dempsey Harrell, by their children and grandchildren. This was presented by Mrs. Cletise Briseoe.

(b) 1st vase—Given as a memorial to Mr. and Mrs. Zeb Eure, by their children. This was presented to the church by Mrs. Linwood Askew.

(c) 2nd vase—Given as a memorial to Mr. and Mrs. John J. Mullen, by their children. This was presented by Mrs. Lyeurgus Howell.

The pastor accepted the memorials for the church and gave a prayer of dedication, after which the "thank you" for the church was given as a solo by Mrs. John Artz. She sang, "For the Beauty of the Earth," composing two extra stanzas using the names of the donors, thus making it suitable for the occasion and personnel.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the church presented an extra communion tray for the communion service, which is needed now. Mrs. Gordan Eure presented this.

The Woman's Missionary Society presented two new linen clothes for the new table to use during communion service. Mrs. W. N. Alexander made this presentation.

The service was well attended and a memorable one.

WARNING AGAINST PROFANE LIVING.

LESSON V—MAY 4, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: Thou shalt not take the name of Jehovah thy God in vain.

LESSON: Exodus 20:7; Matthew 5:33-37; 23:16-22.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isaiah 1:10-18.

Concerning Profane Speech.

"Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain."—this is the Third Commandment. It is generally considered to prohibit swearing or profanity or "cussing." It does that of course. Profanity is one of the worst and most useless of the sins to which men are addicted. It is an indication of ignorance, of irreverence, and of poverty of vocabulary. It is blasphemous. To invoke the name of the Most High God in vulgar and vicious words and language is a sin against God's name and God's character, for his name and his character as synonymous. God will not hold the man guiltless who thus profanes his name.

But this Commandment covers more than what we usually think of as cussing or swearing in the general sense. It also prohibits the careless use of God's name, the use of it lightly or frivolously. Many a person who would not think of swearing, takes the name of God "in vain" again and again. We tell stories which include the mention of God's name in such a way as to make men laugh. We jest of sacred things and ideas, when we know better. We use the name of God lightly, flippantly, irreverently. And in doing this we break the Third Commandment.

And the thing is even more inclusive. Irreverence for God's word, and God's house, and God's children is really profanity, it is to treat that which is sacred as merely secular. Careless worship is profanity. Monotonous repetition of God's name without any concentration on the holiness of that name is plain blasphemy.

Concerning Profane Living.

A man may be guilty of profanity if he never uses profane language. A man does not have to take God's name in vain to be guilty of profanity. The word profane means "to violate or treat with abuse, irreverence or contempt, something regarded as sacred, to put a wrong or unworthy use, to abase, to abuse, to defile. . . ." A man's life may be profane although his language may be polished. Profanity has as much to do with living and with speaking, with our lives as well as our lips. To live as if there were no God, to live only for things, to leave God out of our lives is to be profane. "Reverence for life," Sweitzer's great phrase is the ideal of life and the antidote against profanity.

Concerning Oaths.

In Jesus' day as in our day, oaths were quite common, men swore by everything in heaven and on earth, by word and by sign. Nearly everything was invoked to undergird the spoken word. Men thought it gave added power to the spoken word. Jesus rebuked and forbade the custom. "Let your speech be Yea, Yea, Nay, Nay," said Jesus. Be such a man that your word is taken as face value. A man's word ought to be as good as his bond. Our lives should be so straightforward and sincere and honest that when we say "Yes" or "No" men will accept it as inviolate. Truthfulness should be so binding that oaths should not be necessary.

"Swear not at all" said Jesus. Some folks, notably the Quakers for instance, take these words of Jesus literally, and they refuse to take oaths even in court. They do well if that is their interpretation. But it is hardly likely that Jesus was forbidding all oaths. An oath can be a sacred and sanctified thing under certain circumstances. What Jesus was trying to emphasize was the inner integrity of character which is the important thing. If a man is honest he will not have to swear on a Bible to make people believe he is telling the truth. If he is dishonest it will not make him tell the truth if he swears "on a stack of Bibles a mile high."

The Pharisees and scribes went to great lengths in making fine distinctions in oaths and their binding power. For instance if a man swore by the Temple he would not feel that he was bound by his oath, but if he swore by the gold that was on the Temple he was bound. Or if he swore by the altar, it was nothing, but if he swore by the gift or the sacrifice on the altar, he was bound to keep his oath. If he swore by Jerusalem, his oath was not binding unless he turned toward Jerusalem as he took his oath. Thus the thing had been reduced to an absurdity. As usual, Jesus went to the heart of the matter. He saw that it was sheer hypocrisy—it was an evasion of the obligation of one's word, given sacredly and solemnly, by saying that some forms of swearing or of taking oaths were binding, and all others were not. Whatever oath a man took, or whatever word he gave was sacred, said Jesus. Truthfulness and honesty are general and are generally binding, and not to be broken when it happens to suit our social or our personal convenience.

Thus again do we see how Jesus fulfilled or filled-full the Commandments. He went beyond the letter of the law to the spirit of the law. He put perjury among the worst of sins. He insisted upon an inner righteousness of the spirit as against the outer righteousness of the law. Furthermore he showed that profanity is more than a matter of speech; he showed that it is an attitude toward life and God.

A LETTER FROM ED RIGGS.

small, due to malnutritions and rickets as well as immaturity. Fortunately, being in the family of a wealthy farmer, she was able to accept my advice and arrange to be taken out to a hospital where she can have the Caesarian section which I think she will need. The farmer was profusely grateful for my coming there and giving that piece of advice; a dozen women relatives and neighbors immediately set up a loud wailing when they heard the news of what they assumed would be another example of hopeless suffering to which their sex had been doomed by unkind fate. The nurse had been waiting there for two days, but had not recognized what was wrong, and would probably have been still waiting faithfully with her until the bitter—and tragic—end, if it had not happened to be my day to visit Kilanjunai so that I could give them the necessary advice early.

But of course if there had been a prenatal clinic. . . .

But it was not only the glow of being able to do some timely good on my two days there and the knowledge that these emergencies can't always wait for such a schedule. Most of the patients the last afternoon left without being seen because I had gone out on this village call and they did not think I would be back. So we were ready to leave at five o'clock and thought we would get home that evening easily by moonlight. But we found our bicycles with two flat tires, and my tires went flat again within the first hundred yards; so we reluctantly turned back to Kilanjunai and got out the tools again. We never did find what was wrong in my tire, and it has been behaving since. But the other one had six thorns and three holes that needed patching; and it was tire-mending we found ourselves doing by moonlight instead of travelling across the desert in the direction of home. It seems that now is the time of the maturing of the desert thorn-bearing plants, and we might as well reconcile ourselves to picking up a batch of them in our tires on every trip. We came home without incident early the third morning; but if it means three night away from home every week, you can see why I would rather have my family at Kilanjunai instead.

We have the warm approval of the church and the mission for the scheme, and have good reason to believe that it will be approved by the Board in Boston, because they have just announced a new policy, recommending that missionaries give more attention to village work and less to the expensive institutions from now on. The big question mark is still the Mission to Lepers, from whom we have not yet heard. In a way it seems as if I would be neglecting my leprosy work by becoming immersed in a clinic job like that. But the number of patients on the leprosy register is now 54, and one or more new cases being diagnosed every week—even before any effort has been made to tour the villages and stir up interest. Of course such a program could not be attempted if I am only going to be there once a week.

I have just had one disappointment. My assistant who has been with me since we first moved to Manamadura, and whose own home is only eight miles from Kilanjunai, is leaving me the first of June to go back to school. He has a perfect right to do so because my job is only a temporary one and not a lifetime career. But I still will have to find and train someone else between now and the time we move to Kilanjunai and get started with the new work. I am only sorry that I still don't know enough Tamil to be able to get along without an interpreter. Otherwise I would hire someone to take the projector and health slides and other visual aid demonstration equipment and tour continuously over the whole Diocesan area, giving shows and demonstrations in the villages everywhere, which I will not be able to do next year if I am isolated in Kilanjunai. I hope to do that anyway but will need a second assistant to take care of my personal needs.

Much love to all,
Ed Riggs.

ship, this center has a most promising future in rendering Christian service to large number of Negro churches.

We are asked to give Life Memberships and Memorials which go to this institution, and also some of our friendly service gifts this year are to go to Franklinton.

Youth Work.

But perhaps the most important phase of the whole church program is working together with young people.

Since our young people today will be the church tomorrow, we should leave no stone unturned to give them the best possible training. Our best trained and most competent leaders should be those working with young people.

Youth is alive, alert, full of energy, that needs to be channelled in the right direction. They want to have a place, a very definite place in the work of the church. They must feel that they are needed. This is our task with young people.

There is no need to just hand them some rather hazy and indefinite material and tell them to go ahead. Their programs should be clear cut, worked out to meet the needs of the individual church. They should be made to feel that they have a very definite responsibility to the church. If they do not accept responsibility as young people, they may grow up to be irresponsible church members.

Another thing we should lay upon our hearts is the fact that young people should be gradually accepted into active church work as leaders to work together with the older leaders. As Paul chose Timothy to work together with him, to advise, to instruct, and gradually assume the burden as the older leaders have to lay it down.

In some instances it seems advisable that the young people's missionary work be integrated into the Sunday school work and have one Sunday in the month set apart for this task.

And last, whose responsibility is this young people's work? It should be the deep concern of the whole church, but most particularly of the mothers of the young people. Often there is among this group those who are capable leaders, and who are keyed to the tempo of this age group. Those who have no qualities of leadership, should see to it that their own boys and girls are on hand for meetings and their share of the work, as well as share in the fun and good times, which must be a part of the young people's work.

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

What does a superintendent of an Orphanage do? This morning I arose a little before 7:00; got out 35 letters to the members of the Elon Community Civic Club of which I happen to be president; called on the secretary for an authentic list of members for their addresses; drove to Greensboro to pick up Clyde Rudd, president of the Home Coming Society of the Orphanage, and on to High Point on a business trip; back by noon; took two of our oldest girls to Burlington to do some shopping; back to Elon in time to attend a meeting of the Scholarship Loan Fund of the Southern Convention, of which I am chairman; in my car to carry a visitor on a tour of the Orphanage; then off to Gibsonville to pick up a dozen pairs of mended shoes at the shoe shop, and to get a new pair of shoes which had had to be rebuilt for our little polio lad; back to my office to write this letter, and to thank you for your help; soon I am to hasten to supper; after which I shall attend a seminar of guests from New England who are here at Elon to visit the college and Orphanage; after the seminar I shall be ready to rest I hope, but you cannot tell what may call my attention before then. My guest, Mr. W. B. Williams, of Newport News says he believe they keep me pretty busy here.

Even this letter is a couple of days behind my usual schedule because I have been too busy to get to it. But my mother used to say it is better to wear out than to rust out. And, believe me, when you see the faces of the little folks light up with appreciation, especially the lad with the lame leg and foot, it rests a fellow. It puts a song in my heart and a smile on my face. I am not the only one that is busy. The others are busy cleaning house, cleaning lawns, breaking land, planting corn and gardens. Tomorrow will be rest day, when I shall show some of the New Englanders about the Orphanage; hurry to the Evangelical and Reformed Church of Burlington, where I shall supply the pulpit; home for dinner; back to the radio station for my broadcast, and then to First Christian Church for their open house service in their new educational building; then with Mrs. Truitt to help serve on the reception committee for the Eastern District meeting of Rotary, which meets in Burlington this year, where our own Geo. D. Colclough is to be installed as Rotary District governor. After the dinner and evening session of Rotary I shall be ready again to rest, I hope. All this I have to assume as good public relations. The Burlington Rotary Club takes the Orphanage as their annual project.

Well, such is just a little peep in at a busy schedule. It is not always quite as tight, but there is plenty to do, and to be left undone, all the time. Your response, your help, and the fine cooperation of the staff and these children make my work a joy. In the today's schedule I left out telling you of my several prayers and my daily written prayers, and my moment of Bible study this morning first thing when I came into my office; they help also to make my day happy. Thank you for the nice report hereto attached.

INFORMATION FOR CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS

What the Law Says—

Conscientious Objectors, accepted as such by their draft board, are required to do civilian work "contributing to the national health, safety, or interest," in lieu of induction, for a period of 24 months. Such work may be employment by the national or state governments, or by a non-profit organization operating for the benefit of the general public.

Within ten days after he has been found acceptable by the local draft board, the C. O. shall submit three types of civilian work (as described above) which he is able and willing to do. If he submits no such information, the board shall offer him three types of work. Disagreement over type of work shall be settled by the State Director of Selective Service.

(The "Civilian Work Regulations" in detail cover much further information, including possibility of volunteering, payment of travel to place of work, release because of health or undue hardship, penalties for refusal to perform work, etc.)

Steps a C. O. Should Take—

A person seeking the status of a C. O. should write to the National Service Board for Religious Objectors, 1105 K. St., N. W., Washington 5, D. C., asking for full information on filling out his questionnaire and on "Civilian Work Regulations."

He should write to the Committee on Conscientious Objectors of the Congregational Christian Church, 287 Fourth Ave., New York 10, N. Y., requesting a Registration Blank, on which he can tell us whether he is interested in possible work opportunities with our churches in relief and reconstruction.

CORRUPTION.

We have never known a government, national, state or local, which was not corrupt just about in proportion to its wetness.

Even under a dry law, it is the wets who violate the law and corrupt government, not the dries.

All wets are not corrupt by any means, but they are supporting a corrupting influence in government.

We have never known a government which was not inefficient to just about the same degree it was wet. Wet government corrupted our cities and plundered them; it has corrupted Federal administration in exactly the same way in which it became responsible for the "shame of the cities." The Federal government will never be cleaned up, it will never be purged of corruption and inefficiency until it gets rid of the smell of whiskey and beer.

support month after month and year after year. As we contribute for the support of Elon College no one should feel that these contributions are merely gifts but that they are investments. The money that the church invests in Elon College pays rich dividends every day and hour. The greatest asset that the church has is an energetic, thoroughly prepared, completely consecrated minister. He may be consecrated beyond question but if he isn't prepared to do his work he must labor under a terrible handicap. The woodman can do better work with a sharp axe than a dull one. The Lord can accomplish more with a prepared mind than with an ignorant one. If we realize the opportunity we have at Elon College we should count it a privilege to give it our support.

longer will they continue? I know the parents are working on this problem; it is not a simple one. Such problems as this can be talked over by a large group of mothers, and some of their experiences may be found helpful. The joining of such a group, or if one is not available the forming of one, is really worth considering.

Christian Statesman to Discuss
"TOMORROW'S LEADERS"
During Convention Session

A Christian statesman with a world background, educator, author and preacher, Dr. Henry Russell Stafford of Hartford, Conn., will speak on the

DR. RUSSELL H. STAFFORD

Christian Ministry at the approaching session of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches to be held at the First Congregational Christian Church, Durham, N. C., April 29-May 1, 1952. Dr. Stafford's subject will be "Tomorrow's Leaders."

Dr. Stafford is president of the Hartford Theological Foundation, one of the outstanding theological seminaries in America.

For ten years Dr. Stafford was the 11th president of the historic American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, the oldest foreign missionary society in America. His period of service covered the momentous years of decisions during World War II which so vitally affected the missionary work of the churches.

As an outstanding Congregational Christian leader, Dr. Stafford was one of 45 delegates from the United States and Canada to the International Missionary Council in India where leaders of all races, creeds and colors conferred on the problems of a world church.

He has held the office of Moderator of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches in America, the highest honorary post in the power of this fellowship to bestow on one of its members.

Born in Wisconsin, Dr. Stafford is a graduate of the University of Minnesota with graduate work at the University of California. He holds an M. A. from New York University; a B. D. from Drew Theological Seminary and a D. D. from Chicago Theological Seminary. He also holds degrees from Colby College, Columbia University and Oglethorpe University.

Dr. Stafford's first full pastorate after ordination in 1914 was in Minneapolis, Minn. from which he went to Missouri in 1923. In 1927 Dr. Stafford was called from Missouri to the famous pulpit of Old South Church, Boston, Mass., where his preaching maintained the high tradition of his distinguished forebears. His voice reached far beyond the people who attended his services for he broadcast regularly. He was installed as president of Hartford Theological Foundation in 1945.

During World War I Dr. Stafford was a chaplain in the U. S. Army. He is a trustee of Anatolia College and Emerson College as well as a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Among Dr. Stafford's books are "Finding God"; "Christian Humanism"; "Religion Meets the Modern Mind"; and "Religion for Democracy."

Hopewell Church Rededicated

HOPEWELL CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCH

During the morning service on Sunday, March 30, 1952, the Hopewell, Virginia, Congregational Christian Church was rededicated to the service of God. The service was opened with the prelude, "Spirit Divine, Come In." Reverend D. Nash, a former pastor, offered the opening prayer, after which the church choir sang an anthem, "A Happy Day for Me." The service of dedication was led by the pastor, Reverend Ernest F. Brickhouse, and Mr. William A. Sober sang "Open the Gates of the Temple." Dr. William T. Scott, Superintendent of the Southern Convention, delivered the address of the occasion.

Over a period of covering several months, many improvements have been made which add to the beauty of the church. The walls and ceiling of the sanctuary have been painted, the floors sanded and varnished, and the entrance laid in tile. The women of the Ladies' Aid were instrumental in securing carpet for the aisles and pulpit. Class rooms have also been painted and refinished, and the beginners' department has been reequipped, including new chairs and a table. The service was a most happy occasion for the members, many of whom had spent long hours working at the Church.

REV. CHARLES R. SINE.

Rev. Charles Rush Sine, 75, passed away at Winchester, Virginia, on Tuesday, April 1. His funeral services were conducted at Timber Ridge Christian Church, Saturday, April 5. Rev. J. Warren Hastings, Rev. E. D. Wolford, Rev. Charles Crank, Rev. Harold Rhodes, and Rev. R. A. Whitten officiated.

Mr. Sine was the grandson of Elder Christy Sine, a pioneer minister, of the Christian Church in the Valley of Virginia. Mr. Sine was named for Henry Rush, a great historian of the Christian Church who grew up in Randolph County, North Carolina. He was a friend of the Sine family.

Mr. Sine had a great interest in the historical records of the Christian Church and its close association with the Disciples of Christ Church in and around Timber Ridge Church. He donated to the Elon College library some very valuable historical material, including a handwritten diary prepared by his grandfather, Christy Sine, together with other valuable books, etc. Though he was a member of the Disciples Church at his death he maintained a great interest in the Christian Church. Mr. Sine had a long career in the church and in the various educational institutions of the Disciples Church.

Free Church Polity and Unity

AN EDITORIAL—

The General Council, in session at Cleveland on June 24, 1950, voted to appoint a special committee representing all points of view to make a careful study of the principles and polity of the Congregational Christian Churches, with "particular reference to the spiritual and legal methods for the participation of the free autonomous fellowship in the ecumenical movement." This is known as the Fifield Resolution.

In order to carry out the Cleveland directive a committee was named and a representative system of geographical panels has been created. The Southeast Panel met at The Temple in Norfolk last week. Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein served as chairman.

Each panel was asked to consider the Syllabus on Free Church Polity and Unity which had been prepared by the Central Committee. Some of the questions posed were: Are denominations sometimes justified? On what grounds is church union commended, questioned? Give examples of church union, and evaluate their gains, or losses.

Rev. Duane Vore expressed the consensus of the Panel in this statement: "Recognizing that there have been losses in intimacy and cohesiveness in thought and effort, the gains in strength, purpose, vision and fellowship far more than compensate for the losses incident to the Congregational Christian merger.

Rev. R. A. Whitten offered this apt illustration, "A young couple comes into the church to be married. One is Jones and the other is Smith. Both have family backgrounds. The church does not say that Jones or Smith no longer exist, but that they pool their common resources and background and sacrifice some of their independence by joining together to achieve a higher relationship and happiness. That is what I would consider we do as independent Congregational Christian Churches when we merge."

Other questions were related to the nature, advantages, and limitations of the various forms of church union: cooperation, federation, federal and organic union. Rev. Carl Heath Kopf formulated this statement, in which the Panel concurred: "We believe that in local situations, especially in larger cities, much improved religious work could be done through an active federation of churches, such as the Washington, D. C. Federation, where a staff of ten people with an annual budget of about $80,000 promotes teacher training, visitation, evangelism, comity supervision of the placement of new churches, pastoral service to prisons and hospitals, etc." The Panel agreed with Rev. Millard Stevens that "While we recognize that Federal Union is only a partial answer to the matter of full Christian cooperation, we do believe that it would bring about a greater degree of cooperation than that of existing councils of churches at various levels and not primarily at the top level of church leadership."

The questions on Free Church Polity and Unity constitute an orientation course in modern churchmanship. The proper relationship and balance between freedom and unity is not easy to maintain. It is hoped that past opinions on these problems will not be accepted without re-examination and verification.

While this Syllabus is sometimes referred to as a study of Congregationalism, many of us feel that the former Christian Church has made an important contribution to free church polity and unity. Although the local Christian Church enjoyed local autonomy, it was not a rigid autonomy. The churches were connectional in their relationship with other churches. They thought of themselves as a church, and not merely as churches. It may be that Congregationalism is even now gravitating to this position.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

PROGRESS IN AMERICAN CHURCH UNION

Denominations are not superfluous. They have made essential contributions in the organized expression of the Christian religion. They have given variety and balance in worship, theology and organization. Necessary correctives to error and abuse have been made by denominational emphases.

Only the iconoclast would undertake to scrap all denominational framework. The real values of denominational belief and practice must be conserved and brought into a larger synthesis. Church union, in its finest expression, would not jeopardize the values of a rich denominational heritage.

The maturing experience of a two-thousand-year-old Christian movement should enable it to avoid the recognized dangers in church union, set up the necessary safeguards, but move resolutely beyond the pale of rigid denominationalism.

Our own denominational history offers ample testimony to the possibility and reality of church union. It might be classed as exhibit "A" in the annals of American church union. It reminds us and it reminds Christendom that church union no longer is a nebulous ideal, a far-off divine event toward which we imperceptibly move; it is an achievement, a reality. It is in the realm of history as well as in the realm of prophecy.

A more careful study and wider use should be made of the successful ventures in American church union. An instrument, setting forth in detail these ecclesiastical transitions, would be a distinct service to Protestantism. The implications to other denominations would be clear and unmistakable: "Go and do thou likewise."

The union of the Congregational and Christian Churches was no mean or insignificant achievement. Not even yet has the full significance of this merger registered throughout our fellowship. This merger took place just when church union was beginning to gather momentum. It succeeded when other ventures failed. It is not a monument to futility. Future historians may accord greater significance to it than some of our own number have been wont to do. The criteria of judgement is not the magnitude of the merger, but the obstacles overcome and the new pattern set.

A decade of experience in this merger gives ample perspective to evaluate its relative strength and weakness. The preponderance of evidence points to its strength, its success. Buttressed by this solid achievement, we may look forward with confidence to new ventures in church union.

ROBERT LEE HOUSE.

MISSION OF THE FREE CHURCHES

I believe strongly that the God-given mission of the free churches in the next decade is to bring into a spiritual oneness the people and churches which are tired of sectarian division and the minutiae which have divided them for so long.

My personal conviction in this direction is strong because I was born a Baptist, went to a Presbyterian college, married a Methodist minister's daughter and entered the Congregational ministry 26 years ago because I admired its belief in the priesthood of all believers.

In our church in Washington we have some 27 different religious denominations represented, including Mennonites, Roman Catholic, etc. Each of these elements brings strength to our fellowship.

I feel the deep desire, among many Christians, to be reunited with each other in faith and work, rather than further split apart from the brethren. I believe the day of increasing fragmentation of the body of Christ should end, and that the day of reunion should begin.

This is another way of saying that the things which unite us to each other are stronger than the things which divide us.

Our concept of one God, a God of mercy and judgement, is the center of our faith. Our conviction that Jesus is Lord of our personal and public life is at the heart of our common faith. Among free churches the Word of God, the Bible, is the guide of life, and the church is the instrument of divine grace, perhaps never perfect but always striving after perfection.

It is because of this experience and belief that I am deeply concerned that our fellowship should take the lead in the reunion of the free churches of Christendom. I believe that our differences can be held within the framework of our agreements. I hope so.

I look for a United Church of America. It would be a church whose creed would center in the Fatherhood of God, the Lordship of Christ and the Brotherhood of Man. It would be a church where Christians of many backgrounds would work and worship together, learning from and teaching each other, under the leadership of God.

CARL HEATH KOPF.

On the Living Church

Address before the Fortieth Biennial Session of The Southern Convention
By REV. W. MILLARD STEVENS, President

"Ye are the body of Christ."—I Corinthians 12:27.

I would like to have you think with me this morning on something in which I believe most sincerely; namely, "On the Living Church." My text is the words of St. Paul to the church at Corinth (I Cor. 12:27), "You are the body of Christ." The living church is the living Christ. Without a body Christ is only a vague spiritual influence and not a vital force in the life of mankind.

Christ has been alive through the ages, because the church has been alive. The great works that have been done by Christ have been accomplished through the living church. It kept Christianity alive through the dark ages. It sent missionaries throughout the world. The living church has pioneered in education, built hospitals, established homes for the homeless, and championed the cause of human rights. The living church is the embodiment of vital dynamic whole religion, which Sherwood Eddy describes as that "... which is both individual and social; a religion that can form the character of a new man within and motivate the building of a new society without."

A little girl who had recently moved to a new city became lost in a holiday crowd. A kindly policeman found her crying on the street corner. She told the policeman her name but could not tell him where she lived. Since her father had been in the city so short a time his name was not listed in the telephone book or city directory. The policeman was baffled, but as he talked with the child, she said, "If I could find the church, I would know my way home." The little girl described the church building and the policeman took her to the steps of the building. Then with a gleam in her eyes she pointed down a street and said, "this is the way." Soon she was home.

This is what the church seeks to do for all of us! Moreover, this is symbolic of a higher reality, the living church meets our deepest needs, those needs which cannot be met by any other force known among men. These needs are many, but there are two or three which are outstanding; such as our need for effective forgiveness, meaningful fellowship, and love. When these needs are met, all others seem to have a way of either disappearing or becoming of secondary importance. The living church meets these needs.

Let us fix this in our minds and hearts for a moment.

1. We need effective forgiveness. The lives of all of us are beset by frustrations and uncertainties which rob us of much happiness, many pleasant associations, and prevent us from the full-realization of our highest potentialities. A sense of guilt, no matter how simple or insignificant its cause, can work havoc on our personalities.

This sense of guilt, for example, produces the fruits of anxiety and hostility in our lives which rob us of the true values in life. These are part and parcel of all our unhappiness. Anxiety produced by a sense of guilt even about some trifle can lead to the desire for death and make us unfit for companionship with ourselves, much less with others. This anxiety grows into open hostility toward others, both individuals and institutions and robs us of that happiness which we need and desire so much.

In the midst of our restlessness we can see nothing but impending disaster and feel that we cannot lift a finger to prevent it. The restlessness of our age indicates our need of a sense of effective forgiveness which will make us know that whatever there is in our lives of wrong which creates a sense of frustrating guilt can be removed by divine forgiveness and that we can have another chance to make our lives of real worth.

This is what the living church seeks to achieve. It never passes over our sins, but helps us to know that they are real, but it never leaves us without a word of assurance of God's forgiveness. Sin is not just an illusion. It is real in all its forms. If it were only an illusion, that would be wonderful. But just as the illusion some call sickness ends in the more unpleasant illusion of death, so the illusion of sin has consequences which are disastrous—broken hearts and wrecked lives, disintegrated personalities and homes.

But there is a cure. The church has it. It is divine forgiveness. The cross of Christ is a constant reminder of this forgiving love. The message of the church always includes this: "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." There is no sin so great or ugly, but can find forgiveness in true repentance.

If we here this morning will become aware of the sin which doth so easily beset us and confess that sin before God in our own hearts, he will say to us Jesus said to the woman taken in adultery, "Go, and sin no more."

The living church brings us effective forgiveness.

2. We need also a place in a meaningful fellowship. We are not made to live alone neither is our life so constructed that we can spend it in useless endeavor and find a sense of accomplishment which will produce real happiness.

Loneliness is the most heart breaking and spirit breaking thing that can happen to you. Friendship is the only cure for loneliness we have. In the living church this quality of friendship is always found. It is offered to all. Unless it is there it is not a living church.

Here is a real story. Just a little while back the Johnson family moved from a farm to one of our great cities. Back home they were "somebody." Here in the city they were lost in the crowd. The church visitor who called on Mrs. Johnson one day saw a lonely sick woman who cried, "I hate it! I hate it! We don't feel

"LIBERTY SPRING HIGH LIGHTS."

The past three and one-half months have been very busy and happy ones in the Liberty Spring Christian Church fellowship. This has been due largely to the splendid leadership and untiring efforts of our most beloved pastor, Dr. Jesse H. Dollar.

The church desires to share its joys and accomplishments with its friends of the wider fellowship. They are as follows: first, the church has been made beautiful inside. The walls have been plastered and the wood-work stained. The floors sanded and a beautiful rose-colored wool carpet has been put over the entire auditorium. The vestibules and the lower hallway has been covered with rubber tile. The old choir rebuilt and a new one built on the opposite side of the pulpit. Lovely oak panelling has been installed across the front of the two choirs and the pulpit leaving an entrance to the chancel on either side. To our communion table has been added a perfectly matched altar set of solid brass, consisting of the cross, candlesticks and four offering plates. A new Harrington piano has been installed. This fine piano along with our Hammond Organ will provide musical accompaniment for any occasion. These improvements to our church interior have added beauty, inspiration and reverence to our worship services.

The oak panelling was given through the generosity of Mr. G. O. O'Berry, a deacon of the church, Mr. and Mrs. Fermer Perry thoughtfully and generously gave the beautiful matched brass altar set. The new piano was paid for by the following organizations of the church: the Friendship Bible Class, the Woman's Auxiliary and the Sunday school. The other improvements were made possible through the generous gifts on the part of the church membership. The total cost of the improvement program amounted to $5,700.00.

The choir sponsored a tenderloin supper and used a part of the proceeds to buy choir robes. These were used for the first time at the Easter Sunday morning worship service. The adult choir is directed by Mr. John R. Lawrence and the newly formed junior choir is directed by our pastor. Mr. L. W. Wilkins is our church organist.

A Leadership Training School was held in our church from March 31 through April 4. This school was sponsored by the following churches: Bethlehem, Cypress Chapel, Holy Neck and Liberty Spring. Rev. R. E. Brittle served as dean of the school. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill taught a course on "The Children in our Church School." Dr. Dollar taught a course on "Teaching in the Sunday School." The school was not too well attended, but many did receive credit.

During Holy Week, services were held each night. Dr. Dollar used the following sermon subjects:

Monday—"The Church Points the Way to Courageous Action."

Tuesday—"The Church Points the Way to Great Questions."

Wednesday—"The Church Points the Way to Quiet Meditation."

Thursday—"The Church Points the Way to Fellowship and Communion."

Friday—"The Church Points the Way to Sacrifice and Suffering."

The nursery was open each night during the week for small children to enable their parents to attend Holy Week services.

Easter Sunday morning at six thirty o'clock Holy Communion was celebrated, sponsored by the young people of the church. This is always a "Mountain Top" experience.

At the eleven o'clock worship service on Easter Sunday, the pastor used as his sermon subject, "The Church Points the Way to Victory and Eternal Life." Our offering for missions taken at this service amounted to $245.57. At the close of the service 22 members were received into our church fellowship. Of this number 19 came on profession of faith and 3 by letters of transfer. Out of those who came on profession of faith 16 were children and 3 were adults. The children were members of the Pastor's Class. Our attendance for this service was 279.

We are happy to state we have paid our Elon College Sustaining Fund in full as well as our college apportionment. Our mission offering will be forwarded to the Convention office as soon as all Cent-a-Meal Boxes are returned. We have generously shared our dollars with the Christian Orphanage and will continue to do so through the year and years to come.

We are thankful as a group of Christian believers that we have been blessed and that we have the means with which to help further the Word of God and the teachings of the Master teacher of all mankind.

Mrs. WILLIAM T. HARRELL,
Reporter.

JESUS' GOOD CONFESSION.

In Paul's first letter to Timothy he refers to Jesus' testimony before Pontius Pilate and calls it "a good confession." Jesus was on trial for his life and the issue of the trial depended upon the attitude and action of the prisoner. Jesus might have saved himself from the court's condemnation had he chosen to do so by simply denying the charge against him which was a charge of rebellion against constituted authority. The charge was a very serious one, as it declared that he was an aspirant for kingship over the Jewish nation. The Romans held their power over the conquered peoples with jealousy and firmness. Woe to the man that was found guilty of leading in a revolt. But Jesus' record was clear. His teachings were in public and no word of his could be cited that would sustain a charge of rebellion. Why did not Jesus simply deny the charge and put upon his accusers the burden of proving it?

We think it was because Jesus saw greater issues at stake than the saving or losing of his own life. If he wished to die (as he did for the sake of others) he might have been silent and reached that goal. Had he wished to save his life, he might have done so as we have said by denying the charge against him. But he pursued neither course. He chooses a third course. He admits that he is a king, but declares that his kingdom is not of this world. Why not leave that unsaid? It did not save him from condemnation, but it did subject him to ridicule. We think this testimony is what Paul refers to when he speaks of Jesus' good confession. It took strong courage to say it in face of the outburst of ridicule it was sure to provoke. But Jesus chose to say it and did say it. Why?

Because his testimony as to the invisible kingdom and invisible world was needed. The world's dreamers may have dreamed of a future world and a future life, but there was needed the testimony of one that knew and could speak with authority, and Jesus was the one man of all the centuries qualified to speak with absolute confidence. His testimony was worth

Don Haitheox, of Guilford College, N. C., and Nelvin Cooper, of High Point, N. C., have just been elected co-captains for the Elon College basketball squad of 1952. Different captains were appointed for each game as it was played, and the selection of Haitheox and Cooper comes as a post-season honor for the two senior stars.

The Elon College May Day program, which will be staged on the south campus at 4 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, May 3, will feature the music of Stephen Collins Foster, with a series of original dances that have been planned by two Elon students. The youthful choreographers are Carl Coley, of Burlington, N. C., and Mrs. Laeala Wilkins Frazier, of Siler City. Or it is Leberty?

Dr. William M. Brown, Elon College faculty member, who has been a patient at Piedmont Hospital in Greensboro for two weeks, was expected to return to his home here on Friday, April 25.

Mrs. E. B. Huffine, accountant and acting treasurer of Elon College, is able to be back at her desk in Alamance Building after being disabled since September due to a fractured ankle.

President Leon E. Smith and Alumni Secretary C. Carl Woods attended two banquet meetings of Elon alumni in Norfolk and Suffolk on Thursday and Friday evenings, April 24 and 25. The first gathering was in Norfolk on Thursday evening, followed the next evening by a gathering in Suffolk.

A group of fourteen church leaders from the New England states visited the Elon College campus on Saturday and Sunday, April 19 and 20, and Rev. George M. Houton, of Manchester, N. H., filled the pulpit of the Elon College Community Church for the 11 o'clock service on Sunday morning.

DR. BROWN ILL.

Dr. William Mosley Brown was employed by Elon College in January, 1949. Dr. Brown taught history and German in the college for the remainder of the college year. On June 1, 1949, he assumed responsibilities with the Elon College Foundation as Executive Secretary. Since that date until April 1, 1952, he served the Foundation and the college through the Foundation. For the lack of funds the Foundation was compelled to relieve Dr. Brown of his responsibilities in connection with that organization. The college then offered Dr. Brown the opportunity to assist the college in the Two Million Dollar Campaign now under way; Dr. Brown was to work with the campaign until September 1, at which time he would again return to the faculty of the college as professor of history and perhaps to teach courses in German and French.

On April 2 Dr. Brown was taken seriously ill at his home. Two days later his physician, Dr. Lewis, had him transferred to Piedmont Hospital in Greensboro, where he has been quite seriously ill since. He is, however, recovering slowly but quite satisfactorily. He will be brought home on Friday, April 25, but will have to remain very quiet, spending most of his time in bed. We are hoping and trusting that his recovery may be more rapid than the physicians indicate.

ELON COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

The Sixty Second Annual Commencement at Elon College will be held May 24-26. The 24th, Saturday, will be Alumni Day. The alumni will gather on the campus in the morning. The five and ten year classes, beginning with 1947 and dating backward will gather on the campus for their reunion exercises. These are always delightful occasions when members of the classes who have been separated for years, and doubtless have not seen each other for many years renew acquaintances, live their college life over again, and make new acquaintances with others who are on the campus. A picnic lunch will be served on the campus at 12:30.

The annual business meeting of Alumni Association will be held at 2:00 in Whitley Auditorium. Important business will come before the association and every member that possibly can should be present. The annual alumni banquet will be served in the dining room at 6:30. In addition to the usual routine of business Mrs. Russell T. Bradford will be the alumni orator. Following the exercise in the dining room, the Elon College Players will present a Greek tragedy, a three-act play, in Whitley Auditorium, to which all visiting alumni are invited as guests.

Sunday will be Baccalaureate Day. Dr. Martin Goslin, pastor of the Evanston Congregational Church, Evanston, Illinois, will deliver the baccalaureate sermon. The music department will present its certificate and diploma recital at 4:00 in the afternoon. Sunday evening at 8:15, the Elon College Choir, assisted by Mr. A. J. Fletcher, will present the opera, "Elijah," in costume. It will be an impressive performance, and the public is invited to attend.

AN APOLOGY.

When material is published on this page with no name signed to it, it is correct to assume that it was written by the editor of the page. The entire page for the issue of April 17, containing material concerning the North Carolina Rallies, was written by Mrs. W. J. Andes, North Carolina Conference president, and I regret exceedingly that she was not given credit for preparing that excellent report. A suggested "lay-out" for the page, giving Mrs. Andes as the writer, was sent to the printer, but probably was mislaid. All of us make mistakes, and I think sometimes that surely I make more than my share of them!

This is just a public acknowledgment of my thanks to Mrs. Andes for preparing the material, and an apology to her for not so stating in that issue.

CALIFORNIA BOUND?

Thirty-seven people—men, women, young people—will fill the Southern Convention bus when it leaves Burlington on June 11, California bound. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill writes that more than 50 have made inquiries concerning the trip and a dozen have signed up definitely to go. The first thirty-seven to send in their registration fee of $10.00 will be the lucky people.

The itinerary sounds wonderful—out the southern route via Piedmont College and Tougaloo College, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, New Mexico, with a visit to the Carlsbad Caverns and Petrified Forest, and evening in Juarez, Mexico, a visit to the Grand Canyon in Arizona, and on to Claremont, California, and the General Council. The stay at Pomona College will be from June 18-25. The return trip will be via the northern route and will include Salt Lake City and Yellowstone National Park. Surely that is a lot of travel for $104!

Of course, you will have to pay for board and room. Reservations are being made for stop-overs each night along the way; food will be as much or little as you desire; the General Council stay will be $41.

We are hoping to have some fine reports on this page from the female passengers—however, don't let the thought of having to "report" on the trip keep you from going! Please write to Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Elon College, N. C., if you are interested in the trip.

PRAYER.

(A message given by Mrs. J. W. Maynard of the New Lebanon Church at the Waverly District Rally.)

"The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man, availeth much."

The great love of God made this wonderful provision for a highway whereby all men may come in direct communion with him. "If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth." Prayer is the connection to the Dynamo of Heaven, it is the key to the throne, it is the anchor of the soul. If we approach this subject of prayer from the divine standpoint, it may be truly said that effectual prayer is only that which the Holy Spirit prays through us. He quickens and uses our individual powers of will, intellect, and affection. His action is just as natural as if it all originated with and was carried on by ourselves, but he is the prayer, for we have yielded ourselves to him by an act of the will in definite faith for his working. How limitless are the possibilities of prayer when we have such a mighty, loving helper! How certain we may be of the answer when he breathes the prayer through us! What wonderful fellowship this kind of prayer gives! We can only realize his ideal for our prayer-life, by abiding in him and trusting him moment by moment to pray through us with his own mighty intercessions.

In the secret of his presence how my soul delights to hide!

Oh, how precious are the lessons which I learn at Jesus' side!

Earthly cares can never vex me, neither trials lay me low;

For when Satan comes to tempt me, to the secret place I go.

When my soul is faint and thirsty, 'neath the shadow of his wing

There is cool and pleasant shelter and a fresh crystal spring;

And my Savior rests beside me, as we hold communion sweet;

If I tried I could not utter what he says when thus we meet.

Only this I know, I tell all my doubts, my griefs, and fears.

Oh, how patiently he listens and my drooping soul cheers.

Would you like to know the sweetness of the secret of the Lord?

Go hide beneath his shadow; this shall there be your reward.

He will gently lead us onward to "A Highway for My God."

FINE ARTS SCHOOL ADDS CHOIR DIRECTORS COURSE.

Church choir directors of all denominations will be offered a highly-specialized two-week course at the Burnsville School of Fine Arts, of the Woman's College of the University of North Carolina.

Two musicians of national reputation are expected to draw choir directors from churches in several states for the summer classes, July 9-22. It is the first time the Woman's College has offered a course tailored to the needs of the church musician.

Richard Gore, director of the Conservatory of Music and professor of organ and composition at the College of Wooster, Ohio, will teach the first week. As a composer and as conductor of the Westminster Church Choir, he is recognized as a leader in the nation's church music circles.

Nine of his vocal and organ compositions have been published, one of them, "Let God Arise," as the winner in a publication contest of The Composer's Press. Mr. Gore holds two distinctions as an organist: he is one of the few American organists who has played the complete organ works of J. S. Bach, which he did in 15 recitals during the last year on the faculty of Cornell University; and he is a Fellow of the American Guild of Organists.

The second week of the course will be taught by Dr. Apstin C. Lovelace, composer and minister of music at the First Presbyterian Church of Greensboro.

Dr. Lovelace, before coming to Greensboro in 1946, was head of the organ department of Queens College, Charlotte, and had taught at the University of Nebraska. He holds master's and doctor's degrees in sacred music from Union Theological Seminary School of Music, and an A. B. degree from High Point College.

He is the composer of nearly 20 anthems and sacred songs which have been published, including one hymn, and an article on early sacred folk music in American selected for publication by the Hymn Society of America.

The concentrated work of the short course will cover the organization and training of a church choir, the technique of conducting and playing the organ at the same time, and a study of various liturgies. The course will also present a survey of the best material available for the average quartet or choir.

Applications for registration may be obtained from the Woman's College, Greensboro.

The choir directors' course is one of a number of special features scheduled for the summer school, July 9-August 19, in the heart of the Blue Ridge. The program arranged by Director Gregory D. Ivy gives full college credit for a summer term.

Classes in art, dance, drama, music, education and writing will be taught by skilled instructors, some of whom will teach for one week, others for the entire six weeks.

ON THE LIVING CHURCH.

at home here. I don't go out, because I feel sick most of the time. All I do is go to the store and back." What an appalling thing. But that is not the end of the story. Mrs. Johnson and her family were induced to go to the church and after a few weeks Mrs. Johnson had this to say, "We are so happy now everything has changed! We are in the church now; we know folks". When asked about her sickness, she replied, "I feel fine now, guess I wasn't sick after all—just blue and discouraged not having any friends."

Yes, Mrs. Johnson was sick, but not with any organic disorder, but with loneliness. The only cure for such sickness is friendship, a sense of belonging to meaningful fellowship. The living church offers this to all of us. We in turn share it with others to make a real fellowship.

But people need more than friendship, they need a sense of belonging to a fellowship which is doing something worthwhile which will endure beyond time. The church is a living church because it is a fellowship of people building in time for eternity. Here men make their lives and money immortal by investing them in human life and character which neither storm nor time can destroy. Only in the living body of Christ is this true.

The living church echoes the words of Jesus, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart and ye shall find rest unto your soul."

We need meaningful fellowship and we can find it in the living church.

3. In the third place we need love. They tell us that the most disastrous thing that can happen to a child is to feel that he is not loved by anyone, that he is not wanted. This is not only true of children, it is also true of all of us. We can endure almost anything as long as we know that someone loves us—that our very existence matters to someone.

We desire appreciation and concern from someone. Every man can find this in the living church. The very heart of Christ's Gospel is the eternal love of God for every man. The mission of the church is not to condemn but to declare to all the world the love of God for all mankind and to demonstrate that love is a vital concern for all mankind.

Dwight L. Moody, that great Congregational Evangelist, was a failure in the early years of his preaching because he preached only of the wrath of God. On his first mission to England he realized that the love of God was the heart of the Gospel. He began to tell people of God's love for them and men began to accept Christ in great numbers under Moody's preaching. When he went to Chicago and built his tabernacle, he put in gas lights across the front of the meeting hall "God is Love." One night a ragged bum came into the meeting and at the close came forward to confess his faith. Moody talked to him and asked what he had said which had caused the man to come forward. "Nothing," replied the man, "I never heard a word you said, I kept looking at the gas lights which spelled out the words, 'God is Love' and decided that God must love me and I want to serve him."

Every word and every deed of the church is saying to you and me, "God loves you." "If God so loves us, we ought also to love him."

All the world may turn its back upon you, but remember this, "God loves you," and in the living church you can find that love which no man can take from you.

When we are a part of the living church we can find forgiveness for our sins, meaningful fellowship with the children of God, and the constant assurance of God's love for us. Then we will concern ourselves with helping others to find these same things in the church.

Nearly two million casualties, the worst automobile accident toll in the nation's history, were recorded in 1951, according to figures released recently by The Travelers Insurance Companies.

Last year's traffic deaths totaled 37,100, an increase of 1,600 over the 1950 mark. The injury count soared to 1,962,600, more than 160,000 over 1950, the Hartford firm reported.

A happy May Day to you. Here's hoping that you will twirl around a May Pole or dance and sing for some lovely May Queen. The flowers are lovely now and it is warmish. Perhaps you already feel lazy, by mid-day, in school.

Spring comes early to the Sandhills and our dogwood has gone. We went to Virginia last week in our car and had the pleasure of a "second spring." Roses and pansies are lovely here. Do you know the old German legend of the pansy?

Pluck a pansy from somewhere and then sit down to see the old stepmother at the bottom—isn't she wearing a very colorful skirt? Turn over the pansy and you will see her fine green chair. Now look at her daughters—one on each side of her—and their skirts are gay too, but not quite as gay as the stepmother's. They each have a green seat too. At the very top you will find the Cinderillas in their perfectly plain frocks, no decorations for them, and they must share a green seat. Spread the petals and you will see the old king sitting on the throne with a crown of red atop his head! May is indeed a time for flowers.

While the flowers have been blossoming and you have been studying and playing, the ministers and some lay people of our church have been busy. The Southern Convention has been meeting at Durham and ends today. It is held every two years and is a very important meeting of our church.

CRAYONS!

By LAURA GRAY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

A friend presented our two-year-old daughter with a box of crayons. Nan was delighted. She spent hours taking the pretty pencils out of the box, putting them in again, dropping them, picking them up, shutting the lid—then doing it all over again. But the day came when she discovered that crayons made marks! Her first experiment was on the seat of a white kitchen chair, then on a table, then on Daddy's new sports magazine—and Daddy is particular about his belongings. I tried to take away the crayons without destroying the family peace, but only succeeded when the owner was asleep.

When she awoke she begged so hard for the crayons that I relented and gave them back. I coaxed her to use them on one of my magazines. This apparently was satisfactory, but while I was doing the washing in the basement Nan was ominously quiet—and no wonder! When I came up she was making murals on our newly decorated dining-room walls!

Then Daddy came home. He took one look, murmured something—which I did not quite catch about the donor of the crayons—then gathered them up, every scrap, and put them in the furnace. So ended our first experience with crayons for Nan.

When my sister visited us a few months later and produced a large box of fascinating colors, I exclaimed, "Nan's not allowed to have crayons!" And then I proceeded to tell her the reason for this.

She smiled; Mary is a teacher. "I promise you won't have a repeat performance with these crayons," she said. "I make myself responsible."

But Nan was already busy marking on the hardwood floor.

"No, no!" Mary caught the child up. "Here's a book to draw in." She opened a large scribbler and began to shape a red ballon, a blue one, and a yellow one, naming the color and explaining as she drew. Nan watched, enthralled, as her aunt then outlined roughly a cup, a pencil with a green point, a rake, a kiddy-kar, an apple, and an orange.

The child picked up a color and followed, scribbling over the pictures.

"Don't spoil Aunty's drawings!" I protested.

"She is just helping me, Mother," Aunty explained with understanding.

Then Nan settled down on the floor with colors and scribbler and proceeded to fill many pages, while Aunty talked to me but with one eye still on the child. At bedtime book and box were put on a high shelf. "When you wake up we'll play 'crayons' again," Aunty explained.

Each day after that Nan and Aunty made drawings together with the crayons, and whenever they stopped using them the box was put out of Nan's reach. "Crayon time" has become a happy time that is greatly enjoyed by the little one. Nan has filled many scribblers, which Aunty insists on keeping, declaring the artist is developing even though her marks still remain just scribble. I'll take her word for it!

Now that Aunty has gone I carry on. I have discovered that I, too, can draw simple objects—well enough to be understood. Better still, I have come to realize that time spent in this way with my daughter is well spent—not wasted. Nan has learned the names of most of the colors. She has found a way of self-expression that brings delight.

Crayons are worth-while toys when used under supervision. No one remains two years old. With the passing days intelligence develops together with ability. Chairs, tables, and walls are no longer considered the best medium for art work. But then, perhaps they never would have been used for that purpose—even by a two-year-old—had scribblers or large sheets of brown paper been provided in the beginning.

DRIVE CAREFULLY.

series of traffic accident data booklets published by The Travelers. The company collects and analyzes accident statistics from each state.

More than 13,000 persons were killed and 570,000 injured last year by drivers who were exceeding the speed limit, according to the report. Excessive speed was "far and away the most dangerous mistake in driving" in 1951.

More than 1,000 drivers under 25 years old were involved in fatal accidents and 416,000 more in personal injury accidents, the figures reveal.

Pedestrian experience in 1951 is termed "an island of encouragement in last year's ocean of accidents." A comparison of 1951 with 1950 shows that pedestrian deaths were "held in check" while injuries were reduced by nearly 9,000.

Other facts from "Lucky You": Saturday was the most dangerous day of the week to drive.

More persons lost their lives during the hour from six to seven p. m. than in any other hour. Injuries hit their peak two hours earlier, from four to five p. m.

Ninety per cent of drivers involved in 1952 accidents were males.

MAX VESTAL, Box 792, Elon College, N. C.

THE YOUTH PROGRESSE.

By MISS FRANCES FELTS.

*An Address to Ladies of S. C.
Bethlehem, April 1.*

I have been asked to outline to you some of the activities of our young people in our conference or Convention and how our Pilgrim Fellowship tries to carry its part of the load in the work of the Southern Convention.

It is well for us to realize that the young people are aware of the responsibilities that are being handed down to them from time to time. The Eastern Virginia Youth Fellowship has its own budget, which is divided into three parts. Home Missions, Foreign Missions and other Fellowship Projects. The amount in our budget is to help our Christian student from the Philippines to America, to study in one of our colleges. This student, Jose Dabuet, arrived in our country last August. He is enrolled in Princeton University for two years, and is being supported by the $2,500 promised by the young people of the Southern Convention. It is interesting to note that our young people have already raised $1,250 which is half of the total amount. This is something of which the young people are very proud.

Our young people in Eastern Virginia had a chance to meet Jose when he visited the Convention for the first time, at the rally last fall in Suffolk. Since then he visited the Hopewell Church and spent part of his Christmas vacation visiting the young people of the Valley Conference. Jose is expected to be with us this summer at the young people's conference at Elon College and at the Junior Camp at Bayside, Va.

The young people of Eastern Virginia are cooperating with the other young people of the Southern Convention in supporting the work camp at Moon Elon. Other phases of the budget go to home missions and to cover expenses of delegates to national regional and state meetings.

In January of this year I was privileged to attend a retreat of the Executive Board of our youth fellowship at the Bethlehem Church, Suffolk, Va., to make plans for the coming year. The budget I mentioned was adopted at this meeting, and goals were drawn up to be used in young peoples work during the year.

On Sunday, March 23, the state rally of the Valley of Virginia and Eastern Virginia Conference of young people met in Richmond. The president of the Valley Conference, Evelyn Allen, lead the devotionals, and the president of our Eastern Virginia Conference, Rebecca Mann, of Cypress Chapel, presided over the business session. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill and our missionary from India, Miss Oline Nicholson, were present. There were approximately 400 young people, counselors and ministers at this meeting.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill announced the dates of the camps at Bayside and Elon for the summer. Our churches are urged to send some of their young people to these camps. In our conference we have an Interdenominational Chairman, Personal Action Chairman, and a Missionary Action Chairman. Two of these chairmen are from the Waverly District. These chairmen strive to inform and permeate cooperation among the local fellowship groups, and help them to know what the young people are doing at home and throughout the Convention.

We appreciate the interest and support of the women of the Southern Convention and trust that we as young people will be able to carry out our part of the work that is to keep our convention on its feet. We shall try to hold our end of the bargain and prove worthy of the confidence that you have placed in us.

DETERMINED YOUTH FOLLOW THROUGH!

Last September a Christian Youth Council officer in Indianapolis followed up some old determinations and paid registration fees for a conference that is scheduled for August—just to make sure he would get in under the quota.

That officer is Gary Booher, a member of the Olive Branch Christian Church in Indianapolis. He was too young to attend the 1948 Christian Youth Conference of North America in Grand Rapids, Michigan, and is anxious to attend the 1952 Christian Youth Conference.

The second determined delegate is Benny Head, Methodist youth of Quitman, La., and the third early registrant is Richard Lloyd Barnes, Episcopalian delegate from the Christian Youth Council in Norman, Oklahoma.

Over 2,000 Protestant young people and their adult leaders are expected to attend the conference at Purdue University, Lafayette, Ind., August 27-31. Delegates will come from youth fellowships of over 30 denominations, from councils of churches and youth serving agencies.

"To unite committed youth in Christian action is our purpose in calling the conference," said Donald W. Shriver of Richmond, Va., national chairman of the United Christian Youth Movement.

Delegates from all parts of the United States and Canada will meet to extend and interpret the UCYM theme, "United! Committed! In Christ!" and to emphasize gains made in cooperative youth work through the recent Call to United Christian Youth Action.

RELAX WITH MAX.

Pretty soon a lot of you will be graduating from high school. I would like to see you come to Elon, but wherever you go, or if you don't attend college, there is something I would like to say to you. Your life is going to be different from now on. You may not feel any different, but you are going to have to make decisions for yourself. You're going to decide what you think is right and what you think is wrong. Your parents probably won't be with you all the time to do this for you. You may say that this is wonderful—just what you want. It is wonderful—if you know the difference between right and wrong; it is terrible if you fail to see this difference. I hope all of you will be able to make a decision such as Joshua made thousands of years ago. He said to his people: "Choose you this day whom ye will serve . . . but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

THE RIGHT USE OF SUNDAY.

LESSON VI—MAY 11, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.—Exodus 20: 8.

LESSON: Exodus 20: 8-11; Mark 2: 27-30, Luke 4: 16; 13: 10-17.

The Ten Commandments did not institute or establish the Sabbath—it was older than that code of laws. But the Fourth Commandment does order its observance. It commands us to “remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy.” And a consideration of this Commandment is timely. Disregard and desecration of the Sabbath, or the Christian Sunday is one of the most prevalent sins in our modern world. There are thousands of people, good people, Christian people, who misuse and abuse this “holy day” for one reason or another. Ignorance, selfishness, greed, love of pleasure, lack of love for God, the pattern of modern life, and many other factors enter into the picture.

A Good Thing Gone Wrong.

The fact that the words “Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy” are in the Ten Commandments, the basic “rules for living” indicates that it is a good thing, a good law. Like every other “law” of God it is designed for man’s welfare. It is a means to an end, a richer, fuller life. In his infinite wisdom, and infinite love, God knew that it was not good for man to work seven days in the week. It was not good even for an animal to work seven days in a week. A man needs at least one day in seven for rest and recreation. And God made provision for that by setting aside one day as a day of rest. But because man cannot live by bread alone, the Sabbath is also designed as a day of worship as well as of rest. Man’s body needs rest, and man’s spirit needs renewal. And here stands the Sabbath or Sunday, not as a stern duty, but as a high privilege. It is not a day to be dreaded but a day to be desired. God made it and he saw it was good.

But the Sabbath, originally a boon, became a burden. The Pharisees and scribes took the Commandment literally, interpreted it legalistically, and hedged it about with hundreds of petty rules and regulations until it became a formal and a forbidding thing. They went to fantastic ends in applying the letter of the law. And that which God saw was good, men came to think was bad and burdensome.

Work and Worship.

“Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work; but the seventh day is a Sabbath unto the Lord thy God.” We often, indeed usually overlook the second part of this Commandment. But the second part is just as important as is the first part. It is the will of God that man should work. It is also the will of God that whom the seventh day interval he should cease his work, and worship. As Dr. G. Campbell Morgan writes “The work of the six days, being the carrying out of the Divine purpose, is in itself practical worship of the highest description. The worship of the seventh day, in which man turns to the places of contemplation, meditation and adoration, is work in the highest realm. Each is the complement of the other. He who never works is unfitted for worship. He who never pauses for worship is rendered incapable of work . . . man fulfills the ideal relationship with God, contained in the first three commandments, only as he is a worker and a worshipper.”

Jesus and the Sabbath.

When Jesus came, he found the Sabbath all cluttered up with petty and meaningless details and traditions. The Jews had carried the idea of “no work” to absurd lengths. A man dare not walk with a cane on the Sabbath—he would be working by carrying a burden. And hundreds of other prohibitions just as absurd, some of them even more absurd. For instance in today’s lesson the religious leaders accused Jesus of breaking the Sabbath because he healed on the Sabbath day, or again because he and his disciples plucked a few heads of grain as they passed through a field and rubbed the grains out with their hands—they were guilty of threshing! The whole thing smacked of hypocrisy. As usual Jesus cut through all the “red tape” and got behind rules to principles. He interpreted the Sabbath in terms of ideals and principles that are timeless.

“The Sabbath was made for man and not for the Sabbath.” Here is the guiding principle in regard to the use of the Sabbath for all people and for all time. As always Jesus put personality above everything, even institutions, even religious institutions. God had ordained the Sabbath for man’s highest good. It was to be a day of change and rest and recreation. But it was also to be a day of worship. It was designed to minister to the physical, mental, social, moral and spiritual nature of man. Furthermore it was to be observed positively as well as negatively. A man remembers the Sabbath day, not only by what he refrains from doing, but by what he does.

“As his custom was he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up for to read.” He remembered the Sabbath day to keep it holy. He went to “church” on the Sabbath day. In this, as in other things, he gave us an example.

Jesus healed on the Sabbath day. That “burned up” his critics and enemies. The idea of working on the Sabbath; The folks were moved with indignation at the very thought of such a thing. Jesus tactfully, yet pointedly, mentioned the fact that these critics of his thought nothing of loosing his animal from the stall and leading it to the watering trough. Or of pulling a wayward animal out of the ditch on the Sabbath day. How much more, then, was he justified in loosing a woman from an infirmity of eighteen years standing! As in regard to all the other Commandments, Jesus came not to destroy or to abolish, but to fulfill and to fill full.

The Sabbath in Modern Life.

We have well-nigh lost the meaning of the Sabbath in our modern world. In many places and by many people it is regarded just like any other day. For many it is just another day of work. Even folks who do not have to work on Sunday, spend the day working at something else. For many others it is a day of recreation, and in many instances it is “wreckreation” instead of re-creation. For thousands there is no place for worship in their observance of the Sabbath. And even if they do not know it, life is much the poorer and weaker for it.

To be sure this Commandment cannot be observed literally in our mod-

SIN AND ITS REMEDY.

Rom. 6: 23.

By STALEY SORRELL, Danville, Va.

A SERMON

Nations, tribes, and kindred differ in language, customs, and manners, but human nature is everywhere the same. There is no difference in the most cultured and refined American citizen and the vilest heathen in the jungles of Africa, for the Bible hath concluded all under sin. Civilizations rise and crumble, but human nature remains unchanged, for men are sinners by inheritance; they are sinners by birth, and they are sinners by nature!

Having declared the exceeding sinfulness of man. I call to your attention a problem even more distressing—Man's inability to deliver himself from sin. The testimony of the Apostle Paul concerning himself well describes the state of every unsaved man and woman, boy and girl, "I am a slave sold into the captivity of sin." Like Peter the sinner is sinking in despair, like Lazarus he is dead—sleeping in the tomb amidst the odor of his own corruption, and like Samson he is bound with fetters and chains. Romans 5:6 describes the total depravity and helplessness of unregenerate man, "The sinner is without strength!" Reformation, church membership, baptism, good works, and every other human effort is incapable of delivering sinful man from his wretched state. For the Bible says, "Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots: then may ye also do good that accustomed to do evil." Jesus himself expressed the wretchedness of reformation by a parable which he presented to the Pharisees. "What the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest, and findeth none. Then he saith, I will return into my house from whence I came out; and when he is come, he findeth it empty, swept, and garnished. Then goeth he, and taketh with himself seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there: and the last state of that man is worse than the first." This is not a backslider but an unconverted reformer! To those who merely reform, it has happened unto them according to the true proverb, "The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire." The accusation of Jesus concerning the Pharisees may well apply to those who rely upon reformation, "Ye make clean the outside of the platter, but within ye are full of iniquity." While reformation may clothe you in an outward garment of self-righteousness, it has no power to change your sinful heart. Church membership may raise your social rank, but your standing in the sight of God remains unchanged. The River Jordan may cleanse the body, but it has no power to cleanse the soul. Works of righteousness may gain the applause of men, but they will gain no favor with God, for the Bible says, "It's not by works of righteousness which we have done, for all our righteousness is as filthy rags." Therefore, upon the authority of God's unchanging Word, I declare unto you that every human effort is insufficient to deliver sinful man from his wretched state, for the Bible says, "The sinner is without strength!"

As you listen to the mournful chimes of death you cry out like the prophet of old, "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from this body of death? Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no physician there?" And I reply with joyful but pleading heart, "The great Physician now is there; he is the balm of Gilead!" Thanks be unto God, there is a remedy—Jesus Christ the Righteous! On Calvary's Rugged Cross two thousand years ago, he settled the sin-problem once for all. He conquered sin. He paid the penalty. Those who turn by faith to Jesus Christ become new creatures, for the Bible says, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creation." This is known in the Gospel of John as the New Birth, without which it is impossible to enter the Kingdom of God. Regardless of social rank, financial status, or intellectual achievement, there is absolutely no substitute for a spiritual regeneration, for Jesus said, "Ye must be born again!" Through the transforming power of the Holy Spirit, old things pass away; behold, all things become new. The things you now hate, you'll then love, and the things you now love, you'll then hate, for the New Birth makes men new creatures in Christ. A Communist, pointing to a man clothed in ragged garments, once said, "Communism can put a new suit on that man." A minister standing nearby replied, "Christ can put a new man in that suit." The New Birth can do for you what intellectual, social, and moral pursuits cannot do. It was the New Birth that transformed the Apostle Paul from the most cruel and bitter opponent of Christianity to the most fervent, zealous, and devoted missionary in the history of the Christian Church. It was the New Birth that transformed Zaccheus from a crooked and perverse tax-collector to an alms-giver who restored fourfold all he had taken by false accusation and bestowed half his goods to feed the poor. It was the New Birth that transformed the Woman of Samaria from a harlot to a saint. Sinner, what the New Birth has done for millions of others in your condition, it can do also for you. The depths of your sin matters not, for the Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save. The love of God is far greater than tongue or pen can ever tell; it goes beyond the highest star and reaches to the lowest hell. Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; Today, he stands with outstretched arms saying, "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

DEADLIEST OF POISONS IS UN- GUARDED TONGUE.

An unmerciful tongue may be more cruel than the most terrible instrument of torture ever forged. It can stab more keenly than a dagger, and cut more deeply than a sword. That quick tongue; that fiery, temper-driven tongue; that insidious, insinuating tongue; that soft, slimy, slandering tongue; that sharp, sarcastic tongue; these, an inspired writer has said, are set on fire of hell! It is dangerous to handle such cruel weapons heedlessly. With one of them you may so rend your mother's bosom that she will wish she had never been born; you may so pierce your father's heart as to bring down his gray hairs in sorrow to the grave; you may cut the nearest, dearest ties and leave the heartstrings bleeding. —Montreal Family Herald.

The Orphanage
 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Mr. Robert W. Messer, a Burlington groceryman, will gladden the hearts of all children and their helpers by having us at the Burlington Park for a weiner supper, on May 7. It will take a lot of "fixings" for 79 children, and their matrons and the other members of the staff. The dairy will be in full operation with Mr. Hilliard and four or five boys on the job while the rest of us have the picnic but we shall make it up to them in some way. Dairy business is something that has to go on without interruption if possible.

A Sunday soon the Apple's Chapel Church will come over with a picnic dinner sufficient for themselves and all of us here at the Orphanage. They will allow us to arrange the dining-room tables for self-service and let the Orphanage children and their matrons go first and then they will follow. They tell me it is as much fun to see the children fill their plates as it is to eat, which evidently means they like very much to see the children fill their plates! Several churches came to see us last summer and brought picnic dinners. I cannot tell you how much the children appreciate this. All of us appreciate visitors, if for only a short visit, any day in the week. We like to feel that you realize this is your very own work and that you are thus interested in it.

Honor came to our farmer, L. W. Wagoner, this week in that the Orphanage farm was awarded a bronze plate designating it as a "Green Pastures" farm. A few years ago the farm won the designation of "Master Farmer." But I think a greater honor than this comes almost every month when some successful man comes inquiring to see him "because he was here when I lived here."

A few weeks when our report reads as this one does: "total for the week $287.61" can put us in quite a bind here. This is a low season for us and yet our expenses seem to keep going right on. It is easy to feel like someone else is going to help the Orphanage. It is easier for us if you make a donation yourself.

Three needy children are knocking at our door now, and their applications are being studied. As we see their helplessness and need, we are reminded that everyone of the 79 here came with the same sort of helplessness. To take care of these children and give them not only a home but hope and even happiness is a great thing. To help to shape and largely mold the destiny of a child is a very real responsibility. It is one that we are sharing with each of you who read these lines, and all the churches of our Southern Convention. Thank you for your help.

Superintendent.

WHEN SKIES ARE DARK.

A good many people never learn to sing until the darkening shadows fall. The fabled nightingale caroled with his breast against a thorn. It was in the night that the song of the angels was heard. It was at midnight that the cry came, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him."

Indeed it is extremely doubtful if a soul can really know the love of God in its richness and in its comforting, satisfying completeness until the skies are black and lowering.

Light comes out of darkness; morning out of the womb of the night

James Creelman, in one of his letters, describes his trip through the Balkan States in search of Natalie, the exiled Queen of Serbia.

"In that memorable journey," he said, "I learned for the first time that the world's supply of attar of roses comes from the Balkan Mountains. And the thing that interested me most is that the roses must be gathered in the darkest hours. The pickers start out at one o'clock and finish picking them at two.

"At first it seemed to be a relic of superstition; but when I investigated the picturesque mystery I learned that actual scientific tests had proven that fully forty per cent of the fragrance of roses disappeared in the light of day."

And in human life and human culture that is not a playful, fanciful conceit, it is a real veritable fact—Malcolm J. McLeod.

JESUS' GOOD CONFESSION.

to the world more than the earth was worth. Small and pitiable is the human hope that is based on nothing greater and better than this little planet which we cling to for a few years. Jesus by his testimony gave to life's outlook an infinite enlargement. "My kingdom is not of this world—it is the kingdom of the heavens." It is a kingdom without boundary lines. It is a universal and everlasting kingdom. The kingdoms and empires of earth are petty, mere playthings, in comparison. What men on earth call life—a few years of sleeping and waking or sleeping and dreaming—in comparison with life in the invisible and eternal world is as a fleeting firefly in contrast with the stars that shine forever and ever.

Men needed the enlarged vision and Jesus bore testimony to the truth in its grandeur. He said to Pilate: "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth." Did he not mean the truth regarding the future and eternal world? Men needed above all things to see and know that world in true perspective. What we call worldliness and the worldly life is due to ignorance of the life to come.

Worldlings close their eyes to that future state and laugh at those who believe in it and order their lives accordingly. This is as true our day and generation as it was in the time of Pilate. Men who follow Jesus in declaring their belief in a life to come subject themselves to ridicule today. The world laughs contemptuously at the Christian's creed and has a sort of pity for the one mentally weak enough to accept it. It takes courage to profess acceptance of the Christian religion. The world may laugh loud and long. But it is the Christian's part to witness a good confession, as Jesus did, in order that the unbelieving may be convinced. Paul charged Timothy to make his life and testimony a rebuke to the worldly life. If Paul were here now, would he not charge us? The intense worldly spirit of our time and the existing skepticism regarding the future life call for a Christian spirit and testimony of intense earnestness. We owe it to Christ, we owe it to our conviction of its truth, we owe it to our pitiable fellowmen of clouded minds, that we repeat Christ's testimony in a tone that will carry conviction. Men may laugh for a time, but some will in time be impressed and yield to their impressions.—Exchange.

YOUTH AT WORK.

One of the conference program features, Mr. Shriver announces, is a radio forum on the political responsibilities of Christian youth. A youth committee last fall invited as panel participants Senator Estes Kefauver of Tennessee, Senator Wayne Morse of Oregon, John Ramsey, CIO staff member from Atlanta, Ga., and Gordon Shull, University of Illinois graduate student. All four accepted.

Platform speakers include Rev. Charles Templeton, evangelist of the National Council of Churches' Joint Department of Evangelism; Miss Marjorie Penney, director of Fellowship House in Philadelphia, Pa., Dr. James Robinson, pastor of the Church of the Master, Presbyterian, in New York City; and Dr. Gerald E. Knoff, associate executive secretary of the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of Churches.

On the United Christian Youth Movement staff to direct the conference is Jameson Jones, president of the National Conference of Methodist Youth and student at Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, Ill.

Conference registration folders are being mailed on request from the UCYM at 79 East Adams Street, Chicago 3, Ill.

ern world. Suppose nobody worked in the power houses or the pumping stations or the fire stations of our towns and cities on Sunday! Suppose nobody worked in a hospital on Sunday, or in a home where there was sickness in the family for that matter! What about the farmer with cows to milk and stock to feed! Hundreds of examples could be given. One has to use commonsense in interpreting this Commandment. But making all due allowance for the things that we have to do on Sunday and that have to be done on Sunday, it is quite apparent that Americans, thousands of them do not remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. We are not free to do anything we please on Sunday, but only free to do anything that is needful and merciful, or Christian. Furthermore it is not simply a question of our personal desires in the matter. Society has a stake in the matter of Sabbath observance. Widespread disregard of the Sabbath will bring national decay and ultimately national destruction.

Fortieth Biennial Session of The Southern Convention Becomes History

A Group of the Delegates and Visitors to the Fortieth Biennial Session of The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches
Durham, North Carolina, April 29-May 1, 1952

News Flashes

The Eastern North Carolina Ministers had their final meeting of the season on Monday at Chapel Hill.

Fraternal delegates to the Durham Convention included Revs. C. C. and J. D. Dollar and Rev. A. G. Bedford of Alabama.

The Young Adult Department of the Berkley Church, under the leadership of Mrs. A. L. Rogers, recently completed renovation of the church parsonage. Rev. C. C. Thomas is the happy pastor.

On Wednesday and Thursday of the past week, Dr. Helfenstein, Chairman of the S. E. Geographic Panel of National Committee on Free Church Polity and Unity conducted a Seminar on this important issue at Atlanta, Ga.

The cut of the Educational Building of our Burlington Church on the back page last week was used by courtesy of the Burlington Times-News. The picture on the front page was furnished by the photographer selling pictures at the convention. He promised to write his name on the back of the picture, but failed to do so, so we cannot give him credit, but only our thanks.

MEMBERS OF SUN STAFF HONORED.

Citations were presented during the Durham Convention to three members of THE SUN staff.

To Dr. H. S. Harcastle who has for more than 25 years rendered invaluable service in the weekly presentation of the Sunday School Lessons prepared for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. His keen comment, deep understanding and timely suggestions have given greater insight to many of our people.

To Mr. John T. Kernodle for the 30 years of careful and continuous effort as the publishing agent for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Through good times and bad he has sought to serve his church in an effective manner. As Managing Editor he has made an invaluable contribution not only to the paper but to the life of the church as a whole.

To. Dr. Robert Lee House for the 12 years that he has served as editor of the paper. With real Christian concern and courage he has sought to present materials that will be truly productive for the church. He has with fairness and impartiality presented questions of almost every nature to our churches in an effort to bring them into deeper mutual understanding and fellowship.

EDUCATIONAL BUILDING AT BURLINGTON COMPLETED.

The recently completed Educational Building of First Church, Burlington, N. C., pictured on our back page last week, is a three-story structure of fireproof construction. It has the same general architectural lines of the church and the brick and stone trim in the new building were chosen to match those of the church.

The building contains six Sunday school departments for groups from the nursery to the high school age levels. A large assembly room which will accommodate 100 persons is located on the first floor, along with a modern kitchen and four classrooms.

Several departments have been equipped with new furniture, including three new pianos, which individuals and organizations of the church have cooperated in purchasing. A modern water cooler serves all three floors and venetian blinds have been installed on all windows.

The building is heated by a circulating hot water unit located in the basement.

Workmen are now engaged in grading and landscaping the lawn of the new building.

Members of the Building Committee which directed the construction of the Educational Building are as follows: Dr. J. R. Kernodle, chairman; H. N. Truitt, secretary; Miss Violet Holt, Mrs. C. R. Faucette, Mrs. Ed Foster, W. L. Cooper, Eugene Gordon, W. W. Sellers, and Rev. H. E. Robinson, pastor of the church.

NEWS FROM LEAKSVILLE CHURCH.

As I enjoy the reports in THE CHRISTIAN SUN from other churches from other conferences, it might be interesting to have a report from Leaksville, one church belonging to the Valley Conference.

I think the best news I can report is the use of the new basement nearly completed, in which we held a fellowship supper on the evening of April 18, 1952. Nearly 190 people of the community turned out with well filled baskets of every kind of palatable, old-time cooked food. After the pastor Rev. R. E. Newton led a short devotional service, the food was spread on a long table, and all were invited to help themselves. I tell you, what they did to that wonderful meal was a plenty.

After a pleasant social hour, Mr. B. F. McDaniel, our treasurer, stated that the cost of the work on the basement, so far, was $3,484.24, all paid for up to date. Then Mr. R. G. Rothgeb stated that the contractor had done a good job, also much credit was due Mr. Irvin Foltz who devoted much time to directing the work. Mr. Rothgeb said that we needed more money for another entrance at the vestibule, for furniture for kitchen and for other improvements yet to be made. He asked for a collection, and an additional $200 was raised toward the completion of the project. Everyone enjoyed the occasion and we had a good time.

The Leaksville Church was reorganized in 1880 with 15 members. I

FRIENDSHIP PRESS CELEBRATES GOLDEN JUBILEE.

Friendship Press this year celebrates the golden anniversary of the missionary education movement in the United States and Canada. Dr. T. H. P. Sailor, of Englewood, N. J., who has been with the movement for the half century, was the main speaker at one of a series of jubilee-year celebrations.

The overseas theme of Friendship Press publications for 1952-53 is Africa, and the home missions theme is Home Missions and Human Rights.

The first books on Africa to come off the press are one for adults, Africans on Safari, by Leslie C. Sayre, formerly a missionary in the Belgian Congo; a book for young people, Jungles Ahead, by Esther D. Horner, and three for children, Chama's Choice and Nyanga's Two Villages by Esma Rideout Booth, and Mpeno of the Congo, by Grace McCavran.

In African on Safari, Dr. Sayre tells of the long and difficult trek that Africans are making from conditions in primitive villages to Christian living, giving the histories of typical Africans who have made this safari with the aid of the churches and missions. Illustrations are by W. F. Burton, a missionary to Africa whose art work is well known.

The Africa books will include an analytical study of some basic problems by Dr. Emory Ross, also formerly a missionary to Africa, now secretary of the African Committee, Division of Foreign Missions, National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A. Dr. Ross's book, which will bear the title African Heritage, will be published in mid-May. Representatives to the U. N., who have read the galley proofs considered it so well informed and so well handled that they felt sure the writer must himself be an African.

The first book on the human rights theme to come of the press is "The World Is My Home," by Ewald Man, a New England pastor who knows by experience what it is to be a displaced person.

AWFUL UNCERTAINTY OF THE FUTURE.

It is a gloomy moment in history. Not in the lifetime of any man who reads this paper has there been so much grave and deep apprehension; never has the future seemed so dark and incalculable.

In France, the political cauldron seethes and bubbles with uncertainty.

England and the English Empire is being sorely tried and exhausted in a social and economic struggle, with turmoil at home and uprising of her teeming millions in her far-flung Indian Empire.

THE DURHAM CONVENTION

The entertainment of the Southern Convention is no small undertaking. Dr. Stanley Harrell and members of his congregation provided hospitality for a large number of delegates. The new educational annex provided added facilities and made the task easier. The Durham Church is one of the stronger churches of the Convention, one which has a consistent record of cooperation and generosity in Convention enterprises. Currently a group of laymen within the church are canvassing the membership to secure additional subscriptions to The Sun. Who said this was a job just for the women?

The reports were mimeographed and bound in advance in what was referred to as "The Blue Book." An effort was made to place a copy in the hands of every minister and delegate. The full wealth of these reports can be gained only by careful and thorough reading. If you are interested in getting the full story, borrow a copy of "The Blue Book" from your church delegate. The minutes will appear in our columns in due season.

In addition to the carefully prepared reports, there were major addresses, some of which we are publishing. Mr. Walter Graham declared that "More interest and activity is being shown and taken by the laymen of the Congregational Christian Churches than ever before. Through schools of churchmanship, week-end retreats, one-day rallies, Laymen's Sunday programs, early communion breakfast, Men's Bible Classes, new groups of local laymen, men of all walks of life are not only going to church but trying to practice Christianity in their daily works."

Dr. Vere Loper, Moderator of our General Council, describes some of the clouds which hover over our denominational scene, then pointed "Where the Sun Shines Through." Church Union and Social Action were listed in the former category. And yet, Dr. Loper declared, "There is something sound and hopeful at the heart of our fellowship: the manifest purpose to get along in good will, an aroused interest in our evangelistic task, a new dignity in worship, and a new expression of statesmanship in both Home and Foreign Missions."

Rev. Thomas K. Thompson of The National Council of Churches gave two addresses on stewardship, and counselled with some of the ministers on their stewardship problems. He urged his hearers to handle their economic resources in order that they may evangelize. In this connection, perhaps the most memorable action of the Convention was the vote authorizing the employment of a Stewardship and Evangelism Secretary.

There were many high moments from the opening worship by Rev. R. L. Jackson to the concluding one in which Rev. Orville H. White of Tryon urged the delegates to "Rise from the level of duty to the level of grace and commitment, and thus build the Kingdom through many avenues."

THE FUNCTION OF THE CHURCH PRESS

What is the function of the Church Press? No simple answer will suffice. Attendance at the Associated Church Press Conference brought one into touch with a galaxy of editors, and the names of their publications were suggestive. Perhaps these very names indicate some of the functions of the Church Press. No one name connotes the full significance of a church paper, but a number of them indicate the many facets of religious journalism. Let us call the roll of a few representative publications.

Advance. Here is a name which suggests action, progress. To be sure the church paper can help advance ideas, plans, causes. It undertakes to chart the course, provide some of the motivation, then record the progress of the advance.

Advocate. The Methodists have used this name to a good advantage, but every true religious journal is an advocate. It is not neutral. It advocates a way of life, a plan of action, a goal to be achieved. At times it may advocate a cause that is unpopular. The Christian Sun advocated missions and Christian higher education long before there was an Elon College or a Mission Board.

Beacon. In season and out of season the church paper flashes its messages of warning, encouragement, and hope.

Churchman. Ah, that is it! We are endeavoring to develop churchmen, devoted and efficient churchmen. Religious journalism helps lay the broad foundation for an enlightened churchmanship. How important it is for children and young people to read the church paper!

A Minister Looks at His Job

An Address before The Southern Convention

By DR. RUSSELL HENRY STAFFORD, President

The Hartford Seminary Foundation

I am going to talk to you about the ministry. It is the greatest job on earth. Let me tell you why I think so.

I ought to know. I was at it long enough. Thirty-five years, boy and man, from the time I was twenty until I changed over to school management in the same field at fifty-five. I changed then only because I felt that I had learned some things through the years which it was time for me to share with tomorrow's ministers; while I was sure also that a younger man, carrying on from where I left off, could get farther faster, in developing the new program which we had started to build in an old parish, than I could do, fagged as I was from laying foundations, and with only ten or fifteen years to go before retirement.

I lost money, and for a while I lost friends, by making that change. But so far everything has worked out as I hoped, and even better. It is hard to imagine how I could be happier anywhere than I am in what I am doing now. Yet even so there are times when I get a hankering to plunge back into the pastorate on my own, instead of standing on the edge, encouraging others to dive and cheering on those who are already in the swim.

For the ministry is so fascinating that it gets into your blood. And again I say, I ought to know. My first parish was in the country, seven miles from the nearest town, in central California. My last parish was downtown in a big city area, with my people scattered through some forty clustered municipalities. In between I had worked in two factory towns, a summer resort, two unprosperous suburbs, a college community, and two other big metropolitan churches, assistant in one, chief in the other. California, New York, Minnesota, Missouri, Massachusetts; and an army pastorate, a chaplaincy, in Arkansas, through a blistering summer, thrown in. I don't want to boast, but I think I know the lie of the land and most ranges of the ministry pretty well.

Don't get the idea that it has all been smooth sailing, either. Maybe it looked that way, from the outside; a minister has to understand the art of putting up a good front, like an actor or a politician. And on the whole I got the breaks, as they say. But, believe me, I have also taken the bumps. And why not? Who wants a downy couch? It is more fun to ride a bucking bronco than an elderly cart horse, if you can stick on, or climb back on after you are thrown.

You will see from what I have said that when I speak of the ministry I mean the parish ministry, the pastorate. Not only is that where I have had experience, but also that is the backbone of the church.

Up at Hartford in our Foundation—a peculiar word for such an institution, but probably a better one, because less pretentious for a community of small specialized graduate schools, than university, which would be technically more accurate, we have four schools for four different church-centered vocations: the pastorate, religious education, missions, and social service. These schools are all of equal rank in the Foundation. These vocations are all essential to the total function of the Christian Church, of which most of the branches are represented among the students on our non-sectarian campus. But of the four schools the Theological Seminary is the oldest, and founded the rest; that is why we call the whole collection The Hartford Seminary Foundation.

That is a parable. Of course we must have social workers, missionaries, and directors of religious education nowadays; and for each category there are special subjects and skills to be mastered, of which the others know next to nothing. But without pastors none of these other Christian leaders could carry on. For the pastors keep the churches going, and the churches keep these other lines of activity going. So I believe I am without prejudice when I insist, even though it happens to be the area where my own service has been rendered, that the pastorate comes first in every sense. It is of initial, continuing and supreme importance to the Christian Movement in every locality and as a whole.

Mainly the parish minister does three things. He is charged with the proclamation of the Word of God, the care of souls, and the administration of his parish. Each of these functions in turn can be broken down into two or more elements closely connected. Any of these functions thoroughly performed might well be a full-time position. They are all intensely interesting; I can't decide which strikes me as the most so. Link them together, as they have to be linked if the parish minister is going to measure up to his responsibilities, and you have a combination that in my opinion can't be beat by any occupation on earth for exhilaration and delight, that you believe with all your heart in the Lord Jesus Christ and would rather be his slave than any man's master: that you like to work; and that you have a lively imagination, so that you will make the most of your opportunities. Let's look at these functions a little more closely, and in reverse order.

First, then, parish administration. Every Church has a business side. It holds and maintains property, it pays salaries, it makes investments in outside activities (missions and the like). It has to have meetings of stockholders (all its members) and of directors (deacons, trustees, Church Councils) at stated intervals for the transaction of business. It must keep up regular relations on good terms with the other Churches of all denominations in its neighborhood, and with the Churches of its own denomination throughout the area and beyond. Here are finance, politics and diplomacy, all in one basket. And the general manager is the pastor. It is he who will be held to account, whether or not he is directly at fault. If anything goes wrong. So he must keep his feet on the ground, deal with people tactfully, and handle affairs systematically and with efficiency.

Secondly, the care of souls; an old-fashioned expression for looking out for people one by one when they need him, first winning their confidence, so that they will turn to him for advice and help when they are anxious or get into trouble. And the only way to win their confidence as every pastor knows is by going in and out among them unceasingly, making many hundreds of short friendly calls in their homes every year, with complete coverage, playing no favourites. The minister must be everybody's friend, and can't afford to be anybody's pet. When they do start coming to him, moreover, because they trust him, he must never be shocked by anything, no matter how shocking; yet he must never let down his own standards one inch. And besides confessing some, he will christen and marry and bury them all, sometimes throughout a whole countryside. This spells hard work. But what this is made up of is human relations. And it is from human relations that we learn the most and get the biggest thrills in life, this side of heaven.

Thirdly, proclamation of the Word of God. Preaching, we call it; sermons, we call these pronouncements. I wish we could discard both terms; they are terribly hackneyed. Of course we can't. But at least we can take pains to see clearly what they mean.

We are to make God, his love, his will, and the principles of human conduct grounded in his nature and our relation to him, known to men and women and children in terms of where they live, how they think and speak, what they have to do, and the world of which they are a part, with worldwide outreach and influence and therefore with worldwide obligation, whether as yet they realize it or not. That, reverently speaking, is some job.

We need to know God for ourselves, of course, to begin with. And we need to be saturated in the Bible, through which he speaks to us; especially in the Gospel, where we can win actual firsthand acquaintance with his son our Saviour if we will.

But we dare not stop there. We must also know the people to whom we have to make God known in such a way that they shall feel him, not merely think the correct things about him. We cannot reach them where they live unless we know them. We must know them in their real concerns and difficulties and strengths and weaknesses, not just in their Sunday-go-to-meeting clothes.

We must also know the whole world, backwards and forwards, up and down, as well as we can. For these people of ours are a part of it. By it they are conditioned; by them in some degree it is conditioned in turn. Hence, though our talks to them will be simple and intimate, yet they must come out of a background of wide and varied study. They must carry overtones of reality without any whine of sanctimonious singsong.

Hence the intellectual as well as the spiritual stimulus of the ministry to its executant is simply inexhaustible. Reading over broad fields, meditation, writing, and a contagious spontaneity of public utterance after all this private preparation—these together will keep the wheels of the mind spinning, and the brain will never get rusty.

When a man takes on these three functions simultaneously, he is going to be busy from then on, beyond any familiar measure of other men's business. Not for the pastor any thirty-five hour week, or forty hours, or forty-eight hours either. A competent and conscientious pastor builds his weekly time-budget around two fixed items: at least four hours daily for five mornings in study and sermon preparation, protected from interruption; at least three hours daily for four afternoons in systematic parish calling, rain or shine, well or ailing, subject to interruption only by funerals or tornadoes. To these two blocs of time he attaches other blocs on every side for other duties that must not be neglected, until before he knows it the hour total runs to around seventy or beyond. He will have no time to stay at home and help with the housework or baby-sit. He will hardly have time to sleep and eat.

He will get tired as a dog; more tired than any dog I ever met. But he will never be bored. This is the most exciting occupation any man ever tackled. It is no place for a lazy man. But there is no place for a lazy man in the Kingdom of Heaven, either. "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," said Jesus. Who but a moron wants to loaf, anyway, when there is something interesting to be done? The harder we work at what we like to do, the more alive we are.

But what is the use of all this hard work? Is the Church really important enough for such investment of energy? In answer I might speak of all the people one by one whom we pastors rescue from doubt, discouragement, despair, downfall, into courageness and constructive living in the joy of faith and hope and love. These are the first hand results which every devoted minister finds accruing from his toils, to his own astonishment, so far do they exceed through the years what he had dared to expect from such low-grade service as he can render. But instead let me ungratefully take all that for granted, and speak instead in the widest terms, with a world reference. It is in the main Protestant Churches of America which set the standard of conscience and motive for the middle class all over the country, even to a great extent for middle class people who do not themselves go to Church. And America is a middle-class country. That is what democracy means: grading down the top-lofty and building up the downtrodden to a sound middle position where everybody works, everybody thinks, and everybody has enough to live on. We have not got there yet, but we are moving in that direction.

But America cannot live by herself any longer. She has emerged suddenly and dizzily into preeminence among the nations of mankind. As goes America, so goes the world.

As goes the middle class, so goes American. As goes the Church, so goes the middle class. As go the pastors, so go the Churches. Now do you see why for depth of influence I would rather be a preacher than be President?

What kind of boys should set out to be ministers? What kind of man can qualify for such a big job, and how can he go about it?

Let me begin with two negatives. First, we don't want go-getters who are all out for number one. People who put a dollar mark on success had better go where dollars are to be found. In the ministry there are neither cushy posts nor any fat incomes relatively to the scale of living required. But that is true for scholars and artists and poets and honest politicians too. A man can be sure of a decent living if he hustles. That is all any decent man should want. No pastor will have to climb into heaven through a needle's eye. Does

May Day Exercises, under the direction of the Department of Physical Education, were given Saturday afternoon, May 3. Miss Ruby Adams, Director of Physical Education for girls, was in charge. A very lovely program was given and many former students, parents, and friends came for the occasion.

CONVENTION ADDS $500,000 TO ELON COLLEGE GOAL.

In 1946, at the request of the Board of Trustees and by vote of the Convention, Elon College was authorized to conduct a campaign for $1,000,000 for buildings, improvement, and endowment. It was obvious that this amount would not do what should be done at the college. Consequently, in 1948 by the same request, another $1,000,000 was added to the goal, making a total of $2,000,000. The campaign was to be launched and completed in ten years.

At the meeting of the Board of Trustees in February of this year, it was voted to ask the Convention to increase the goal by $250,000. When the Finance Committee made its report, the college was authorized to add $500,000 to the goal, making a total of $2,500,000. This is a lot of money. I know that there are many who are interested who will pronounce this an utter impossibility. We should not be hasty to write failure over a great effort, for a great institution, and for a great cause. We should remind ourselves to date that $1,177,300 of the $2,500,000 has been secured in cash and pledges, with a great deal of this amount in cash.

This amount is not beyond our ability. It may be beyond our faith. God help us. He has blessed us with material blessings sufficient to contribute this amount and more to the only productive institution that the church has. Surely the college is placed at the foundation of all progress, provided that foundation rests upon God through Jesus Christ, his Son. We are exhorted to accept his assurance that we shall receive if we believe. May we not hesitate to plan largely and expect God to take us and use us for the complete accomplishment of all things planned. There are limitations to man, but no limitations to God. There are many things impossible to us, but nothing is impossible with God.

ORGANIZATION FOR THE $2,500,000 CAMPAIGN FOR ELON TO BE COMPLETED.

Since June of last year the administration of the college, together with the Convention and church officials, have been working to form an organization for conducting the proposed campaign for the college. A bare skeleton of organization has been formed. Rev. W. Millard Stevens of Norfolk, Virginia, is the General Chairman. Rev. Duane Vore, Suffolk, Virginia, is the State Chairman for Virginia, and Mr. George D. Colclough, Burlington, North Carolina, is State Chairman for the State of North Carolina. There are other individuals who have agreed to take certain definite responsibilities in the organization for the campaign, but the organization is by no means complete. Rev. Millard Stevens, General Chairman, is issuing a call to a definite number requesting them to meet at Elon College, Monday, May 12, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. It is the hope of all who are interested that those who receive an invitation may make every possible effort to come. If you do not receive an invitation and are willing to serve in the organization, you are earnestly invited to come.

The purpose of the meeting is two fold; first, to complete our organization. We must form an organization sufficiently large to carry the information and appeal of the college to every individual member of our church, every individual alumnus of the college, and every sympathetic friend. The cooperation and assistance of all are required. If we will give such cooperation, the success of the undertaking is assured at the beginning. Second, divisions and districts must be formal. There will be no solicitation of funds, either in cash or pledges, at the meeting on Monday. Much depends on you and your presence. Please come, without fail.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

I have a friend who is a very good man, an educated man, and is an official in his church. He supports his church rather generously, but he

At Home and Abroad

THE TASK AHEAD.

By REV. R. L. JACKSON.

Six years ago, the Southern Convention met in Waverly, Virginia. At that time you commissioned Dorothy and me to go to Shaowu China to be your ambassadors in Kingdom building. We went with the expectation of spending the rest of our lives in China. You promised to support us with your gifts and your prayers to the very limit of your ability.

During the four years we remained in China, you fulfilled your promises beyond the expectations of everyone. Your letters, your gifts and your prayers never ceased to give us inspiration and help. There were times when we would grow discouraged as we faced difficult problems in new surroundings among strange people—but your letters always seemed to come through at just about the time we needed them most, giving us new hope and courage. After the Communists came, we lived daily in fear for our lives—but something brought us through. Your prayers succeeded in piercing the iron curtain when nothing else could.

The tide of world events has changed since that Southern Convention meeting six years ago. We stayed on as long as could—but after 18 months under the Communists, we could see the shape of things to come—and along with the others, finally reluctantly made our decision to leave. Today there is not one American Board missionary left in China.

Now things are back where they were before we went out—but are they really? No, I for one, don't think they will ever be the same again. We out there, and you here at home—we, together, made a contribution to the Kingdom of Jesus Christ in China which nothing can permanently destroy. No matter what the newspaper headlines say, the Communists nor any other earthly power can wipe out the seeds, God, through us, has planted. It was a significant undertaking and not only is the Church of Christ in China stronger because of it—but we are all better people because we gave and sacrificed—for this great cause.

I am hopping that something of that spirit which possessed us six years ago will be in our midst this Convention time. We can't send anyone to China—but there's work to be done in other lands; and there's much work to be done here at home—ministering to needy people, planting new churches, changing old patterns of thinking and acting that our country may become truly Christian. We have a job to do to give people faith, hope and courage—people who are bewildered and insecure in this changing, sin-sick world.

As we begin our 1952 Convention, let us be just as earnest, just as consecrated as we were six years ago. The times in which we live call for new ways of thinking—new ways of living. Fear, hatred and prejudice must be rooted out and replaced with love and understanding. Selfish living must go and Christian concern for others become the controlling motive in our lives. Trust in military power and force must make way for trust in God. Let us give ourselves—our best powers of mind and spirit to strike new trails for Jesus Christ.

After the death of Moses, when the children of Israel were just outside the promised land—there was much discussion and argument as to what course of action should be taken. The enemy was strong. Why not settle down here and be satisfied. Then God spoke to Joshua, "Moses my servant is dead. Arise and go over this Jordan, thou and all this people, unto the land I give to thee." —Joshua 1:1-6, 9.

Can we at this Southern Convention meeting use this as our own challenge? The way ahead is uncertain. Darkness covers much of the earth. Great sinister forces are at work seeking to destroy the ideals and purposes we hold dear. The power of the enemy is strong—we underestimate it at our peril. What shall we do?

There are those who say—"there's really nothing to get excited about. We'll just settle down here. We'll go on as we always have. We'll read a few reports—make a few high sounding resolutions—and above all, avoid all controversial issues. Then go home and tell all the folks back home what a lovely time we had."

I challenge you today to "Arise, go over this Jordan" to face squarely the main issues of life as Jesus faced them. I challenged you to put your hearts and souls and minds—yes, and your dollars behind the great program God has given us—not only to make America Christian, but to make the world Christian. I challenge you to arise go over this Jordan in the same spirit of togetherness we had when six years ago we set out to take Christ to Shaowu.

seems unable to change his method of giving. It has been his custom all his life to give what he gives to his church in the fall of the year, and give it in a lump sum. During the year he receives his salary every month. I hope that some day it may occur to him that as his expenses are daily and must be met monthly, that the expenses of his church, including his pastor's salary, are daily and must be met at the end of each month.

The same is true at the college. Its expenses are daily. These expenses must be met. These expenses include equipment, electric current, coal, and salaries. Our Sunday schools and churches have been doing very well since January. I am sure that they will keep it up. It would mean a very great deal to the college if the Sunday schools and churches that have not been contributing would join in by sending their contributions week after week or month after month. The average laborer and many farmers receive money regularly during the year. It should be a privilege to share their earnings with the college. It would be a blessing to them and to the cause that is dear to the hearts of us all.

As the home is the taproot of the state, so the influence of the home is the fundamental source of its civilization. We have all sorts of scales and measuring instruments by which we can weigh and measure various objects of our universe from the smallest grain of sand to the stars of the heavens that declare the glory of God—but we have no instrument or means by which we can measure the influence of the Christian home

William Shakespeare wrote long ago—"The strongest bonds of a true democracy are friendship and neighborliness" The strong bonds of love, understanding, thoughtfulness and kindness one for another bind a family together, making an institution called the Christian home

Prayer for Our Homes.

Our Father, we are keenly aware of thy wisdom in creating human-kind, lonely, unsatisfied, unless bound by the ties of family to an earthly home and by chains of divine kinship to a Heavenly Father. May we create homes where happiness is an obligation, and then spread the ideal of the family, the democracy of its structure, the sacrifice of its glad burden-sharing, the equality of its members, until thy beautiful world becomes not a battlefield for the greed and selfishness of men's desiring, but a home for all mankind. INFORMAL MEETING AT DURHAM.

The women of the Southern Convention held an "off the record" session on Tuesday evening, April 29, in connection with the biennial session of the Southern Convention, meeting at the Durham Congregational Christian Church.

Approximately two hundred women came through narrow or wide doors (Dr. Harrell had suggested there were double doors at one entrance in case any of the women needed a wide space to enter!) to enjoy the fellowship of a buffet style Brunswick stew supper, and then met in the church sanctuary for their meeting. (Hats off to the Durham women who were serving at the same time an equal number of men at a banquet-style meal in the new educational building!)

Mrs. W. B. Williams, president of the Southern Convention women, presided over the meeting. Mrs. John G. Truitt, chairman of the School of Missions, presented plans for that annual event, which is to be held at Elon College July 8-12, at a cost of $10 per person. Miss Lucy Steele, Bible teacher last year at the school, will again present the Bible study. Secretary Reuling of our American Board will teach the study of Africa, about which country he probably knows more than any other person in our denomination.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill presented plans for the bus trip to the General Council, which leaves Burlington, N. C., June 11 and returns July 2, making the round trip for a total of $104. (Via the grapevine, we hear that 37 have signed up to fill the original bus, but that a larger one may be secured. We do not swear as to the authenticity of either of these statements!)

The main feature of the program was a play "The Fair Family Worships" presented by a group of six from the First Church, Greensboro, under the direction of Mrs. W. E. Wisseman. This was very well done, and very thought-provoking—a fine prelude to "Family Week."

The meeting was closed with the Mispah benediction.

STALEY MEMORIAL SCHOLARSHIP FUND

The Woman's Missionary Convention has a scholarship fund, which enables it to award to a student at Elon College who wants to study for full-time Christian service $75.00 to $125.00 per year.

If there are students interested in this scholarship fund, write to Mrs. John G. Truitt, Box 157, Elon College, N. C., chairman of the Staley Memorial Scholarship Fund.

This scholarship is granted under these conditions:

1. The applicant shall be and remain a member of some local Congregational Christian Church (or its successor), and shall be properly certified and recommended for scholarship aid by his or her pastor and the conference of his or her local church.

2. Applicant shall be making satisfactory scholastic progress, which would mean the passing of at least four-fifths of his or her courses, but having an average of not less than "C" on all courses would have a distinct bearing with the scholarship committee.

3. The scholarship award will be made only to those individuals who are unable in person or through parents or guardians to pay the necessary expense.

4. He or she shall give a note bearing interest at 5 per cent, which shall be cancelled providing he or she continues in full-time Christian service in the Congregational Christian denomination (or its successor) for three consecutive years after graduation from Elon College.

am the only one living of that faithful group, and I am thankful.

We have a Sunday school, weekly prayer service, and an active Missionary Society, also a Youth Fellowship organization which meets each Sunday evening.

May I close with this admonition, that we all should pray more and give more, knowing our reward is sure.

A Page for Our Children

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Sometimes we complain that nothing ever happens to us. Everything is so dull. Well, is it? All kinds of unexpected surprises come to us.

For example, last week at Southern Convention. We stayed at the cabin of Dr. and Mrs. Waldo Boone nine miles out of Durham. It is a lovely rustic retreat and we were happy to share it with the Wissemans of Greensboro, Harcastles of Chuckatuck and Mrs. Mauldin of Winston-Salem. Mrs. Mauldin is a former resident of Durham and she was having a homecoming! It was an unexpected pleasured to go to a city convention and to stay in such a lovely country spot!

Dr. Harcastle was given an oral citation for 25 years of writing for THE SUN. He has been doing the Sunday School lessons for that long. Only those who have turned out a weekly page can appreciate what he has done. He gives his service free.

Another unexpected surprise was hearing music of Leroy Anderson played by the North Carolina Symphony and conducted by Capt. Anderson himself! If he wasn't a captain, he wouldn't have been at Fort Bragg and he wouldn't have been able to conduct here in Southern Pines. He has written the very popular "Waltzing Cat," "Plink, Plank, Plunk," "Sleigh Ride" and the favorite — "Syncopated Clock." We think of composers as being old and long-haired, but Capt. Anderson is young, tall and very genial. He is the father of two young children and they must love his musical effects! It isn't every day we see a real-live composer-musician!

Even as these words are being written another surprise came. This time it was a telephone call from Dr. Jack Neese, the son of Rev. J. L. Neese and brother of the Rev. J. E. Neese of Norfolk. Dr. Neese is in Pinehurst attending a medical convention. "Did we," he asked, "remember him from Elon summer conferences?" But of course! It is nice to know he has come back to North Carolina and is doing well. He has a three year old and a five year old.

First Church, Greensboro, has some distinguished actors, young and middlin', for they gave a cracker jack of a skit on the family at the Convention. Every boy and girl would have liked it and their parents too. Actors are known as thespians and troopers, and they deserve both titles! Look for surprises—they will keep you young enough to read The Children's Page.

A SONG OF WOE?

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"The books you have chosen will help the children to understand that, in spite of all the world's turmoil, there still are many things of enduring worth for us to appreciate and enjoy." I was speaking to the members of the book committee for the children's library, in which I serve as librarian. They had met to evaluate the books in some new catalogues and to make a tentative list of those for future purchasing.

"That thought was one of the tests we applied to all of our selections," Marian Westbrook replied "Lately it has been impressed upon us that, while we need to help children face reality, they shouldn't be obliged to listen to a continued song of woe."

"Tell me about it," I urged.

"Some of us belong to a neighborhood sewing club," Marian explained. "One day Anne called to our attention the fact that while we worked together we talked of nothing but trouble."

"I was the worst offender myself," Anne Stephens hastily interposed. "It was the old colored man who takes care of our flowers who awakened me to it, though he didn't know he was doing so.

"When I came home from the club one afternoon," Anne continued, "Uncle Eph was propelling himself around the flower beds to the half-audible words he so often chants—something about 'Dis heah worl' am full ob wo-o-oe . . . Oh, Lord, how much moah can ah bear?' Truly a song of woe, but I doubt if the words have any meaning for Uncle Eph; they just set the rhythm for his work.

"Certainly there was no sadness in his greeting, 'See how de zinyahs is growin', Miss Anne! Dey's mos' big as saucers!'

"Only a fraction of my attention was given to a casual reply, 'Yes, Uncle Eph, the flowers are doing well.' The rest of my mind was occupied with topics we had discussed at the club—tangled world affairs, traffic hazards, high prices, broken homes, and juvenile delinquency.

"Tense with my worried thoughts, I prepared the evening meal, and as Paul and our little girls joined me at the table I could think of nothing to talk about except the frightening subjects that were uppermost in my mind. Heedless of the growing anxiety in two small faces, I prated on about the spectacular rise in prices, the tragic accidents, and glaring examples of parental negligence.

"As we finished the meal, Uncle Eph's smiling face appeared at the door. 'Dey's somepin' nice for de chillen to see out heah,' he told us.

"Alice and Evelyn skipped into the yard, and Paul seized my hand and hurried me away from my after-dinner work. Uncle Eph's treasure proved to be a nest in the hawthorne tree, full of baby birds. After each little girl had been lifted up to take a careful look, the mother bird came flying across the yard, carrying a big worm in her bill.

"As we slipped quietly away, Paul said whimsically, 'There goes one mother that doesn't spend time worrying about the high cost of living—she just takes care of her family.'

"Though I knew my husband had no thought of chiding me, his words brought me the sudden realization that I was more of a worrying mother than a helping one. By dwelling so constantly on the ills of life I had been denying my family and myself the very things that give us strength to overcome those ills. I had almost forgotten that we also have faith and courage and truth and beauty in the world.

"I didn't know how to tell the other mothers in the club about my discovery," Anne finished. "I just tried to guide our talk into pleasant channels."

"Anne looked so happy," Marian added, "that we began to question her, and soon all of us realized that we'd be better mothers if we'd stop singing a perpetual song of woe. We want to enrich the lives of our children with good music, good books—all the fine things that will give them a core of inner strength to meet the stresses and strains of our today and their tomorrow."

Youth at Work in the Church

MAX VESTAL, Box 792, Elon College, N. C.

THE REPORT OF THE YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

The following report was presented to the Southern Convention by Warren Matthews, president of the Southern Convention Youth Fellowship, April 30, 1952. The report was adopted the following day.

During the past two years the Southern Convention Youth Fellowship has endeavored to carry on a program which is in keeping with the purpose and the plans of the National Council of Pilgrim Fellowship and at the same time adapted to the needs of the local organizations.

The Seventh National Council of Pilgrim Fellowship, which met in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, was attended by five delegates for the Southern Convention. Those delegates returned to explain and to put into practice the plans of the National Council. In order to do this reports were given at Conference rallies and also to local groups. An officers' training camp was held at Camp Crabtree so that the delegates might help incorporate the National program into the Convention program.

In the last biennium the Youth Council, whose officers are Warren Matthews, president; Jack Byrd, vice-president; Elna Doris Huey, secretary; John Truitt, treasurer; and Max Vestal, editor of youth publications, has promoted two separate missionary programs. In the fall of 1950 Max Vestal, who under the sponsorship of the Youth Fellowship, spent the summer in a work camp at Agape, Italy, toured the Convention reporting on some of the achievements and needs of present-day Europe.

January 1, 1952, was the opening date for the Philippine Project. This is a campaign in which the Youth Fellowship set a goal of $2,500 for the education of a Philippine student. The amount of the goal was divided among the conferences according to their ability. On January 1, 1952, the half way mark of the campaign, more than half of the goal had been realized; there is every reason to believe that the goal will be reached before December 30, 1952. Mr. Jose Dabuet, the student from the Philippines, is now a student at Princeton Theological Seminary. He has spoken at rallies in the Convention, and he will be available in the summer months to visit organizations and to help in mission work.

The Youth Fellowship groups have been holding conference meetings regularly. The attendance of these groups has reached a high quality, and the programs have developed into a high quality. But it was the feeling on the part of able Conference presidents that the Youth Fellowship needed greater unity. So in the years 1951 and 1952 state-wide youth rallies were held in Richmond for Virginia and in Elon College for North Carolina. Those were perhaps the largest gatherings of young people in the history of the Convention.

All of these programs and plans have been executed to aid the local organizations. It has been the work of the Youth Fellowship to carry on a program that challenges the highest development of Christian character, that calls forth young people to give their best to their Christ and to his church.

C C I F ORGANIZED.

On Saturday, April 26, Congregational Christian college students gathered upon the Elon College campus for an over-night meeting. The five colleges represented by a total of 40 young men and women were: Woman's College, State, Duke, the University of N. C., and Elon.

The principle address of the evening was delivered by Dr. D. J. Bowden, Dean of Elon College. The evening vespers were conducted by Miss Billie Masters, Woman's College. The group attended services Sunday morning at the Elon College Community Church.

A great deal of emphasis was placed upon fun and fellowship Saturday evening. The recreation was led by the group from Chapel Hill under the direction of Dick Jackson. Special music was furnished by the Symphony of the Hills, made up of Elon students.

Meeting in business session, the group chose the name Congregational Christian Intercollegiate Fellowship, and the following slate of officers:

Thomas Targett, President, Elon; Billie Masters, vice-president, Woman's College; Carolyn Ellis, secretary-treasurer, University of North Carolina; Irene Shultz, Duke; Timothy Chang, State.

Plans were made for strengthening the groups on each college campus. Irene Shultz and Clarence Walker are organizing a group at Duke with the help of Dr. Smith. Plans were made for two meetings next year, the first of which will be held at the new First Church in Greensboro. This meeting will be held in October, and it is hoped that more of our Congregational Christian college students may be present.

WEAR OUT THE CARPET!

This is the advice of Dr. Clinton L. Scott, who believes that one indication of the vitality and worthwhile-ness of a church's program is to be found in the frequency with which it wears out its carpets. What do you think?

It is the business of every church to wear out its carpet as rapidly as possible. The process requires the combined efforts of numberless pairs of feet. Big feet and little feet, tired feet and happy feet, the feet of the long-faithful and the feet of the stranger.

Sunday School Lesson

CONSERVING THE FAMILY HERITAGE.

LESSON VII—MAY 18, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.—Exodus 20:12.

THE LESSON: Exodus 20:12; Mark 7:9-13; John 19:25-27.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Proverbs 4:1-10

First Things First.

The Ten Commandments deal with a man's relations between a man and God, and a man and his fellowmen. The first commandment concerning his relationship toward God is "Thou shalt have no other gods before me, (or beside me)." Jesus said this was the first and the greatest commandment. The first commandment concerning a man's relationship toward his fellowmen is "Honor thy father and thy mother." It is a case of putting first things first. Just as surely as reverence for, and obedience to God is the basis of a sound social life, just so is respect for authority and obedience to that authority the basis of a sound and social life. Remember, these Ten Commandments are the "Rules for Living" as Dr. Chappell calls them. They are the rules by which men must play the game of life if they are to win in the long run. It is significant, therefore, that at the head of the commandments concerning a man's relations with his fellowmen, there stands this commandment, "Honor thy father and thy mother." That cannot be laughed off. It has never been repealed. It is still the law of God. Men cannot break it, it breaks them. They disobey it at their peril.

The First Commandment With Promise.

"Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." It is the first commandment with a promise. And the only one with a specifically given promise. And it has been verified and vindicated by the testimony of history. Respect for properly constituted authority and obedience to that authority tends to develop the kind of life that has both length of days and quality of living. There are exceptions, of course, in the case of individuals—not all children who honor and obey their parents live to a ripe old age or achieve great wealth. But the exceptions prove, rather than disapprove the rule.

The Responsibility of Children and Young People.

This commandment makes demands on children and young people and even adults for that matter, especially concerning the matter of honoring our parents. They are God's representatives in the home, and as such they are entitled to respect and honor. They are his properly constituted authority and hence they are to be obeyed in the Lord. They have lived longer, they know more, they love more wisely, they have a real concern for our welfare. We owe them an attitude of respect and honor and obedience. We wear their name, we ought to be careful not to bring shame upon their name.

The Responsibility of Parents and Elders.

If we expect our children to respect us, we ought to be worthy of their respect. If we expect them to honor us, we ought to be honorable. If we have a right to expect obedience, they have a right to expect wisdom as to the basis and object of obedience. Many a father and mother forfeit the respect of their children by the way they live and the things they do.

"Corban" Which Being Interpreted Is "Baloney."

"Corban" represented any offering "given to God" and refers to an offering to God, particularly in fulfillment of a vow. It represented anything dedicated to the service of the altar, and a sacrifice much emphasized by the Pharisees as part of their tradition. That was just the trouble. For instance here was a man who had some wealth. He also had parents who were old and in need. He would say, "I would be glad to help you, Dad and Mom, but I have said 'Corban,' and dedicated my goods to God." "Baloney" Jesus would say. Jesus would say that no man has the right, under this law, or any law, to allow his parents to suffer while he accumulates wealth, or wastes it; he cannot be content with outward observances while those who gave him life stand in need or want. There are great numbers of people who are doing the same thing as these old Jews did in regard to Corban. For instance there was the emperor of France who said that he had given everything to the Virgin Mary, and that he kept only the income for himself. How many there are who neglect their parents in their hour of need when they could well take care of them.

Jesus and His Mother.

The attitude of Jesus toward his mother is shown in a touching scene at the Cross. As the Master hung on the Cross, suffering and nigh unto death, he saw his mother standing nearby—that was where you would expect a mother to be if she thought she could help her son. In his agony he thought not of himself but of her. Calling to John, the beloved disciple, he committed his mother unto John's care. Thus at the close of his ministry he honored his mother as he had honored her through all his life.

Conserving the Family Heritage.

The home is the basic unit of life. The family is the working blueprint of the ideal which we call the Kingdom of God. It is the training ground of true democracy. It is the bulwark of our nation. If the home decays, civilization itself will decay. As goes the home so goes the school and the church and the nation. There are many forces in modern life threatening to disrupt and even to destroy the home. It is high time that the people of this land realize what a precious heritage the home is, and set about to conserve and to preserve all the values that are inherent in a Christian home. As a wise man has written "We need to think of the home as the cradle into which the future is born, and the family as the nursery in which the new social order is being reared. The family is a covenant with posterity."

EDITORIAL.

Messenger. Some churches have a monthly messenger. Although it is a difficult publishing tempo to follow, we are pleased that ours is a weekly messenger. It is an influence which, coming during the middle of the week, should bring the Lord's Day into the midst of the work-a-day week. Many people use this weekly messenger. It is far easier, and likewise more economical, to have an important announcement go out through the columns of the church paper than to write a letter to all interested individuals. It serves as a ready and dependable mouthpiece for many individuals and institutions.

Outlook. The church paper is not interested primarily in the weather forecast or the political outlook, but it does search the horizon for new developments in organized religion, the trends of religious thought, and the major achievements of Protestantism.

Outreach. Here is a journal name with an added connotation. Like the Church, the church paper would extend its outreach. It would like to get into new homes, among members and non-members of your church. You can help accomplish this by securing new subscriptions. The outreach of interest, loyalty and generosity to the ends of the earth is the objective of our publication. Loyalties must be stretched, extended. The two most illustrious institutions in human history are the family and the church. Perhaps no agency is better qualified than the church paper to make the local family conscious of its kinship with and responsibility for the world family.

Recorder. Here is the basic requirement of the church paper. It is a recorder, if not an interpreter. Some of the things recorded may appear trivial, and yet they are important to someone. Births, marriages, funerals, corner-stone layings, pastoral changes, and the like are worthy of proper and permanent recording. We are here not only to make church history, but also to record it. It is the function of the church press to record many items that would never make the headlines of the daily press. In fact, its basic concept of news is different from that of the secular press. The well-known formula of news arithmetic is this: "One good husband plus one good wife—zero. One ordinary husband plus two ordinary wives—News." The church press would record the secondary as well as the sensational news items.

Telescope. Through biography, statistics, stories and pictures the church press puts a telescope into the hands of its readers, so they may visualize the work of Christ around the world.

Watchman. The prophet, we recall, was stationed and kept watch at his town. The editor, it has been suggested, should be a watchdog and not a mere echo. He should point out ethical issues and help his people to distinguish between expediency and fixed principles.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Where could our founding fathers have found a better name? Our church paper has circulated and witnessed under this banner for more than a century. An analogy is suggested. The sun itself behaves like a CHRISTIAN SUN. It, like we, is God's creation. Its rays bombard our planet, giving light, fertility, comfort, healing and warmth without fail. Its heat is of such intensity that world would be instantly destroyed by fire if the sun deviated from its orbit and came flirting with a neighbor planet. Or, if it neglected its established sphere of influence to enjoy excursions into other nebulous regions, life on this planet would perish in arctic darkness.

Here, then, is the pattern for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Its rays bombard our hearts and our homes with its light, its truth, its messages of comfort and of hope. Thank God for all who by their writings and subscriptions have helped to keep the light shining. Others, please God will dip multiplied pens into the consecrated ink of the centuries, that its message and ministry will continue undiminished, that it will share and impart that light which shineth more and more unto the perfect day of God's blessed Kingdom.

TITHING OUR TIME?

The question often arises in our minds, "How much time can I give God and the Church?"

How many services can I attend? Before we answer this question intelligently there are other questions to be answered, such as "Why do we have Sunday School?" "Why do we have church?" "Why do we have prayer meetings and revivals?" Just to build an organization? Just to have large numbers? If that is all it would not be hard to answer. I am a soul that will live on in eternity, therefore, I must avail myself of every opportunity to better my spiritual living in order to make eternity what I want it to be.

I have 168 hours a week, 720 hours each month and 8,640 hours each year. How many of these hours will

I give God and the church? Suppose I aim at 10 per cent as we do of money.

As the average is set up one could attend every Sunday morning school and worship service and evening service of the year and use but 182 hours each year; 46 midweek prayer services of one and a half hours each, use 69 more hours. Allowing 22 revival days (most of them only run for a partial week), each service from seven-thirty till nine, would use up 33 more hours. Now allow a day for a convention (missionary home, or foreign, or Sunday school). This uses up 9 more hours. Now these services use up the total time of 293 hours, leaving us 8,347 hours. Let us now allow ten hours a day for labor for an average. This would use up 3,650 more hours of our time, leaving a total of 4,697 hours. Now let us allow eight hours a day for sleep. This takes up 2,920 hours for the year, leaving a total now 1,777 hours each year. Let us now not give God one tenth but pay him the tenth which is 177.7 of our time that is left. I am wondering if thirty people would tithe his or her time for a year if we could not do as much as the disciples did after Pentecost? The time spent for God would be 5,331 hours for each group of thirty people of each church.

Now after we attend all services of the church, revival, midweek prayer, convention, sleep and our labor we use up 6,863 hours of our 8,640 per year and after we tithe the remainder it would still leave us 599.3 hours each year to do as we wish as long as we use it. God does not demand so much after all, does he?

carpet should last before it becomes a reproach to the congregation. But we should say that after ten years if it doesn't show signs of falling to pieces, the congregation should be looked on with suspicion. And in another year or two, if no marks of deterioration set in, one might be justified in assuming that it is the congregation that is deteriorating.

Carpets are expensive, but any congregation that can succeed in wearing out a carpet has vitality to replace it with a new one.

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Twelve Sunday schools helped make this a good report. Thanks to them everyone. Clyde W. Gordon and R. A. Maynard of Burlington have sent generous selections of hose for all the children and matrons. Several others have sent in gifts of money and clothing. Everyone who has done something for these children, and their home, is happier. Thanks again and again.

Following are some quotations from the Orphanage report made this week at the Durham session of the Southern Convention:

"During the biennium the Orphanage has cared for 104 children. . . . We prepared and served 177,982 meals . . . used during the biennium 57,000 quarts of whole A-grade milk from the Orphanage dairy, and 5,000 dozen eggs from our poultry yard.

"During the biennium a superintendent's home has been built at a cost of $22,000.00 which includes a complete water and sewer system, furnishings for the guest room, and some built-in cabinets, etc.

"In 1950 we received from churches, friends and farm $60,506.27 . . . in 1951 from churches, friends, and farm $74,863.58.

"During the biennium fire escapes have been installed; a new roof on Johnston Hall; the milkhouse rebuilt; a large machinery shed erected; a new tractor purchased; a new truck purchased; and a new hay baler purchased; fences repaired; new fences built; wasteland prepared and sown into permanent pastures; and a new water tank installed; and brooder house rebuilt inside.

"Making a home for 80 boys and girls means more than clothes and shoes for 80 children; means more than loads of laundry each week; means more than beds and rooms; bathrooms and play-rooms; study halls and furniture; means more than meals every day and places where they may be prepared and served. More than all these. It means the lives and destinies of 80 children are being fashioned; their schooling being done; their faith in themselves, in God, and fellowmen being built; it means that security, love and guidance are being given. It also means that the membership and friends of nearly two hundred churches are being given the joy of doing something for a little homeless boy or girl."

Mr. Robert W. Messer, a Burlington grocer, will serve a weiner supper for our entire Orphanage family at the city park May 7, which means his own goodwill and friendship plus 30 lbs of weiners; 20 doz. rolls; 2 gallons of slaw; 1 gallon of onions; 15 lbs chili; 10 crates of drinks; 4 gallons of ice cream and I do not know how many cakes! It is a good thing we do not have that sort of supper too often, for the children are over enthusiastic about it! By the way, Mr. Messer is one of our Alabama Church boys, and a good friend of the Orphanage.

Many people find the loveliest ways of doing something good for the Orphanage.

A MINISTER LOOKS AT HIS JOB

that discourage you? Fine! We don't want your type, then, anyway.

Secondly, we don't want goody-goodies. Goody-goodies have only negative character. They are unreal, and most of them are dull. It takes brains and positive character to be a good minister. A boy who believes in God and goodness, who intends to get to know God better, and who is trying to be good but having a tough time of it, that is the sort of boy who has in him the stuff of sterling manhood which the ministry needs, and which it develops in its practitioners.

Now for the positives. First, just as the two basic time-blocs in his weekly schedule are for study and sermon preparation and for calling, so the minister needs at every point of his work a love for ideas and a love for people, running along together. His task is primarily to be a friend and an interpreter; people and ideas are his specialties. A boy who has no impulse to make friends among all sorts and conditions of men had better not apply. Neither had a boy who prefers tinkering with machinery to wrestling with hard books. There are plenty of other useful places no less honorable for boys like that; but not the ministry. Conversely, any boy who does love people and ideas had better think about the ministry. Very likely it is his vocation; if he will listen, God is calling him through these inborn predilections.

Secondly, the right kind of boy, as I have sketched him thus far, must go to a good college and work hard for four years at general education. Then, after he has taken his B. A., he must go to a good theological seminary and work hard for three years at technical education until he takes a B. D.

What, seven years' study beyond high school? Well, to be sure, there are shortcuts. If you can find a denomination which will ordain you without much or any thing by way of educational requirements, then go straight from high school to a short-course Bible Training School, and start out as a minister after a year or two there; and see where it gets you ten years later. Ten years later, you will either be mouthing pious platitudes without an idea in your head, under the impression that ungodly it would somehow be to know more than you do; or you will be sour on life because you have waked anything, and deep in your heart up to the fact that you don't know you doubt whether you believe any of the conventional notions which your job requires you to propound.

On second thought, I advise you not to make that costly experiment. You can't afford to waste the time, and perhaps your life in consequence. Better start right. Take my word for it, the ministry is as complex a profession, and should be as learned, as medicine or law or engineering or if you go into it without thorough training, you may be a good sprinter up to thirty; but you will not keep your wind and stay the course a lifetime, and reach the goal of true and lasting influence for Christ, unless you put in plenty of time to get set before you leave the starting line.

I said a good college, a good theological seminary. What did I mean? Well, Elou is a good college; Hartford is a good seminary. But there are others. The good ones are where they work you hard under teachers who know their subjects and can put them over, and where they flunk you if you fail. There are some B. A. degrees, and more B. D.'s proportionately, that are not worth the parchment they are written on. The only test I can propose is that if at the end of your first semester you feel that you have been able to get by without putting any strain on your grey matter, working at less than your full capacity, you had better transfer right away to a sterner, stiffer school. You want an education that is all wool and a yard wide, not just a narrow strip of shoddy. Easy days in class make hard times later on.

I have been speaking as if I were talking to boys about their plans. Actually, I suppose, there are few if any prospective recruits for the ministry present; but I could think of no better way of talking to their parents and pastors and masters, of whom there are plenty present, than to let them listen in on advice straight from the shoulder to their boys. We are not getting enough boys for the ministry nowadays. And, frankly, not enough of the boys we get are of first rate calibre, such as this greatest of all vocations must have, if the Church is to go from strength to strength instead of sinking into paltriness.

To be sure, Hartford is overcrowded; so are some other seminaries. Also it is undersupported; so are the rest. Incidentally, it costs us about nine hundred dollars a year more than a student pays, for each Hartford student; and Hartford is typical. Moreover, the funds we have for investment in your boys are not large enough to meet that drain on them; so most colleges and seminaries are running in the red. Somebody ought to do something about that.

But it is boys I am thinking about now, not money; specifically, recruits for the ministry. There are not enough of them to meet the need of the Churches. Give us the boys, and we will find room for them somehow, even if we have to build new seminaries. That would be better than to double the size of what we have; for in an intimate matter like religion, mass education is not satisfactory. We must have penetrative processes of close faculty-student interchange, with family rather than factory as the model and tone of a small community. In Hartford we go so far as to hold down the proportion to an average of only eight students to one full-time teacher. Our subjects can be taught; but our faith must be caught.

What are you doing about it? Are there boys in your Church to whom you can put the claims and challenge of the Christian ministry as I have just now put them to you? Have you done it yet? Have you been putting it off? Or have you simply not given it a thought? Where do you suppose the leaders are coming from if the Church to which you belong doesn't do its part? And what will become of the Church at large if leaders are lacking?

Go home and do it now. Send us your best. Send them to good colleges and good seminaries. Give them a vision and a chance by your encouragement to go into the greatest job on earth, to earn the richest income of interest and happiness that any vocation pays, and to serve God and his community on earth in the way they need to be served, for God's glory and the world's salvation.

Virginia Valley Church Breaks Ground for Addition to Present Plant

Lifting the first shovel of dirt is Mr. E. Z. Morris, chairman of the Building Committee. Others, left to right, are: Rev. Henry Kettering, pastor of Evergreen Church of the Brethren; Mr. Frank Morris; Rev. S. E. Madren, pastor of Mt. Olive Church; Mrs. B. G. Snow, chairman of the Finance Committee; Mr. Orville Shifflett, Mr. N. W. Morris, and Rev. Mr. Loving, director of the Blue Ridge Industrial School.

A most impressive ground-breaking ceremony was held at Mt. Olive Church, Greene County, in the Virginia Valley, on Sunday afternoon, April 13, in providing an addition to the present church plant. Rev. S. E. Madren, the pastor, presided over the meeting, and the other ministers present brought greetings and commended the church for beginning this new work.

Mt. Olive Church was built in 1921, and this is the first time since that a major renovation program has been begun. The plans call for remodeling the church building, and providing a space for an open chancel, with the choir on either side. Back of the altar there will be a large memorial window portraying "Jesus in the Garden." The seating arrangement of the church will be changed and the interior will be redecorated. Another room is to be added which will serve as the pastor's offices and also as a Sunday school class room. The building was insulated last fall and the exterior given two coats of paint.

When this work is completed, there will be provided a better atmosphere for worship and inspiration for all who attend the services. The Christian Sun congratulates church and pastor.

Aspire and A Spire

From time immemorial man has aspired to create the beautiful and the permanent. One climactic manifestation of that desire is the church spire, lofty, graceful, eloquent. Towering far above the deep foundations and the spacious sanctuary, the spire symbolizes the upward thrust of the human spirit toward the Eternal. It is not a retreat from reality, it is a penetration into a higher reality. "A man's reach should exceed his grasp, or what's a heaven for?"

The church pictured above is the architect's drawing of the new First Evangelical and Reformed Church of Salisbury. Rev. I. L. Levens is the pastor. The church will be of Georgian Colonial style, will have a seating capacity of 500, and was designed by the architectural firm of C. C. Benton and Sons, Wilson. It is typical of the fine structures which are rising today throughout Protestantism.

News Flashes

The Mission Board met in Fayetteville on Monday and Tuesday of this week.

Has your church forwarded its Easter offering for missions to the Convention Office? Funds are urgently needed.

Dr. Alfred W. Hurst and Rev. Carl Heath Koff of Washington, D. C. exchanged pulpits recently. The choirs did likewise.

A large group of ministers and laymen attended the organizational meeting of the Two Million Dollar Campaign Fund at Elon College on Monday.

Dr. Walter Judd will give the baccalaureate sermon at East Carolina Teachers College in Greenville, according to an announcement by President J. D. Messick. The date is May 18.

The Christian Press reports that 24 per cent of all Christians in Japan live in Tokyo. There are Christian Churches in 229 of the 245 cities of Japan, in 487 of the 1,815 towns, and in 193 of the 8,381 villages.

The annual Home Coming and Memorial Day service will be held at Lebanon Congregational Christian Church, Semora, N. C., on Sunday, May 18. Sunday school will begin at 10:00, and the morning worship at 11:00. Dr. W. T. Scott will preach the sermon. Lunch will be served in the church grove. There will be no afternoon service.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Deacons of the Congregational Christian Church of Reidsville, an expression of sympathy to the family of Mr. William Lamberth upon the recent passing of his mother was spread upon the records of the church. In the death of Mrs. Bertie Lamberth the City of Reidsville has lost a good citizen; the church has lost a good member; we have lost a good friend.

A survey of forty representative churches of the Church of Christ in Japan shows that 51 per cent of the members are under thirty, and 52 per cent have been baptized Christians for five years or less. There are significant implications in these figures: the pastor has to stress training his members; experienced lay leaders are few; the membership is often transient; the members have not reached their full earning power financially.

in the awkwardness of handling organizations, and in any possible temporary losses in personal experiences of Christian fellowship."

ARCHBISHOPS OF CANTERBURY PLEADS FOR SENSE OR PROPORTION.

"The world's suffering today is due to the lack of true proportion," stated the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Most Rev. Geoffrey Fisher, preaching in Canterbury Cathedral on Easter Day. "It cannot distinguish what is vital and primary, what is secondary and unessential for the lives of many, and what is debasing and devitalizing," added Dr. Fisher.

"It is for the Church and its members through their own sense of proportion to help princes and rulers to judge aright. The Church is terribly handicapped in its witness by its own disproportions and divisions. We dare not be anything but dismayed by the divisions within the ranks of Christ's people. We can be thankful that over the last 50 years there has been a great deal of growing together and discovery of a unity deeper than our disunities. But it is a very partial and precarious growing together so far. There are churches that resist it altogether and in all churches some regard it with suspicion and dislike. Again it is a matter of keeping our proportions right. . . . The Church is in the same danger as the world's politicians, of being so jealous of their rights and so insistent upon them, so convinced of their own self-sufficiencies, so suspicious of the other side, so practised in saying no, so inhibited from saying yes, that the proportions are lost and the peace of God in his church is as frustrated as the peace of God in the world."

DR. DENISON WRITES—

To The Editor:

I have just read your article "Progress in American Church Union," and that of Mr. Kopf on your same editorial page, and heartily agree with them. Church Union, in my judgement, is one of the vital matters of the Church. Union may be delayed sometimes but it must and will come, for Jesus prayed for it. There is another vital reason for it often overlooked—that it must come if we are to save our youth to the Church. They have no sympathy with all the divisions we have. Dr. Charles Emerson Burton was a great Christian statesman, and for long years Secretary of The National Council of Congregational Churches and was at the very center as secretary at the time of our union. I worked closely with him for more than ten years. This is what he wrote after several years following our Congregational and Christian Union:

"Let me express my conviction that we have launched a demonstration of the possibility of practical Christian unity which is successful far beyond anything we had a right to hope for in so short a time, and to express the further conviction that we intend to make this testimony of our faith in Christian union a living example before the churches of America that it is possible for denominations of diverse origin and experience to unite in fullness of Christian life. If that testimony can be given with strength it will be worth many times its cost

S O S ABOUT THE CHARTERED BUS TO CALIFORNIA.

The thirty-seven-passenger bus is completely filled. In addition there are about six people on the waiting list. I have had long distance telephone calls making inquiries for six others during the last two days. I have talked with the bus officials and they would be delighted, of course, to work with us on a second bus-load of 37 people. Both would be air-conditioned buses and very comfortable. Some of you already know that the bus will leave the Burlington, North Carolina, Bus Station at 9 o'clock on June 11 and return there July 2, exactly three weeks later. The route out includes such interesting places as Vicksburg, Mississippi, Shreveport, Louisiana, Dallas and Ft. Worth, Texas, the Carlsbad Caverns in New Mexico and an evening in Juarez, Mexico, a glimpse of the Petrified Forest and Painted Desert, and an over-night stop at the Grand Canyon. The group will arrive in Claremont, California, on the night of June 17 and those attending the General Council will live in the dormitories of Pomona College, and for those not attending the Council there will be a week in the Los Angeles area. Claremont is about 25 miles from Los Angeles.

The return trip will begin at noon on June 25 and the first over-night stop will be Las Vegas, Nevada; the following night at Salt Lake City, Utah; and a visit the next day at Yellowstone Park with an over-night stop in Cody, Wyoming. Denver, Colorado will be the next stop and on the following day the route includes Colorado Springs, Pueblo, and Pratt, Kansas. I shall be glad to write anyone giving further details of the trip, costs, ect. These are the prices quoted on our first folder: the round trip bus ticket—$104 (a deposit fee of $10 with the application, another $25 by May 10, and the remainder of the bus fare by June 1); expenses while there for those attending the General Council will be $3 for registration and $38 room and board. I have been saying that we should allow $3 for over-night accommodations and $3 a day for food. For some of us food may cost more. I have been thinking in terms of $225—some of you will spend more and some less.

Since starting this letter I have an application and a check for another passenger who has been trying to make arrangements for several weeks and is so thrilled over having worked it out. This makes me think that we must try hard to get a second bus. It is terrible to disappoint anyone.

What you can do. 1. Will you write me immediately if you can go? 2. Will you do your dead-level best to interest others in going and let me know who these people are? If we all work together I think we can work it out. You can tell your friends that this is by far the most inexpensive way one could ever go to California or make a trip like this. We must know right away not only to reserve the bus, but arrangements for over-night accommodations are our greatest problem of all. Some hotels in the west are already solidly booked for the month of June. Wire me if you are seriously interested.

"YES, WE HAVE NO BANANAS."

The "Pacific Island Monthly" reports that the people of Niue—an island between the Samoa and the Cook Islands—recently refused to export bananas because the ship always called on a Sunday to do business. Niueans are staunch churchgoers and virtually all are adherents of the London Missionary Society. Bananas are their third highest source of income.

PROJECTS FOR CHURCHES

Many churches thrive on projects. They enable people to visualize the results of their giving. Stewardship has risen to new and unsuspected heights as individuals and groups have worked at special projects. Churches have unsuspectingly moved into higher stewardship brackets, thus demonstrating to their own amazement acres of diamonds in the back yard of the church.

While we rejoice in the growing acceptance of the church budget and unified giving, there is ample opportunity in every church for the development of projects. The Convention, as well as the local church, can enhance its stewardship record by the cultivation of worthy projects. For the want of first-rate projects, some organizations within our churches are frittering away time and resources at second or third-rate tasks. Some classes and societies are stalling time, looking for a worthy project. Some organizations carry a substantial balance of funds, awaiting the challenge of human need or service. Many have never been prodded into energetic activity or sacrificial giving by the urgency of a great task. What, it may be asked, are some of the recommendations?

Moonelon. We rejoice in the acquisition of this property, valued at $35,000, as a Conference Center. Now we are reminded by Rev. Henry E. Robinson: "If we keep it, we are duty bound to develop it." Individuals, organizations, or churches may build and donate cabins. About $2,000 is needed for present obligations and the summer program. Money given here is a wise, character-development investment. Plans call for a central dining-room and assembly hall. This project should commend itself to those who are primarily interested in youth.

Church History Room. One valid test of a family or a church is the interest they take in preserving their own history. Our history is not being adequately preserved. We have not provided the personnel to care for the Historical Room at Elon. If modest funds were available, surely we could have a superannuated minister, or minister's wife, give the necessary time to file and care for this invaluable material. What greater labor of love could one desire? Surely a part-time custodian should be found. Those majoring in religion or church history could help. Present needs include filing cabinets, book-cases, display cases, preserving material, secretarial service, etc. Here is a continuing project for those who appreciate the history of the Christian Church, who will not stand idly by and allow it to perish. In this connection, gifts may be sent to the O'Kelly Memorial Foundation.

Superintendent's Home. Has the superintendent helped your church in a time of emergency? Do you appreciate his wide-spread, multifarious services? Then get some group in your church to help clear the indebtedness on the superintendent's home. Once the debt is payed, repairs and improvements may be needed. Here is a grand project for you, Mr. and Mrs. Class President.

Foreign Missions. Shaowu was a Convention-wide Missions project. It was a major project and a successful one. Reidsville has demonstrated the fact that a church can have its own missionaries. The American Board has its projects secretary, the Rev. Ralph Shrader. The Pilgrim Fellowship thrives on projects, bringing Christian nationals to this country for theological training. The field is world-wide, the projects ready and inviting. There are projects for you, Madam President of the Missionary Society.

Home Missions. Would you like to share the thrill of building a new church, a new parsonage? You may. If your own church is not thus engaged, you may, like Burlington First or the Norfolk Temple, aid a sister or infant church. Why not become responsible for salary aid to a Home Missionary Pastor. The Mission Board has a budgetary load too heavy to bear. Give them a hand. Select your project and get to work.

Elon College, The Christian Orphanage, and The Christian Sun offer opportunities for rewarding service. Support their programs, contribute to their endowments, remember them in your will. A project in time for a promotion in eternity: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Secular Courts and Ecclesiastical Matters

An Editorial Appearing in the May Issue of "The Churchman."

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, by a four-to-one decision, has reversed the ruling of Judge Steinbrink, which imposed a permanent injunction preventing the merger of the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

The higher court decided that the Cadman Memorial Church, which brought the original suit, had failed to establish "any right or interest in, or to, the funds and other assets" of the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches, the defendant. In unequivocal language the Appellate Court declared:

"In controversies such as this, ecclesiastical or doctrinal question may be inquired into only insofar as it may be necessary to do so to determine the civil or property right of the parties.

"The civil courts do not interfere with ecclesiastical matters in which temporal rights are not involved. The plaintiffs have failed to establish any right or interest in or to the funds and other assets which plaintiffs asserted were held in trust, which requires or permits a determination of the ecclesiastical issues presented."

At the time Judge Steinbrink made the ruling that this decision upsets, he made a parallel ruling in the Holy Trinity vs. Melish case, where he imposed a similar permanent injunction that directly trespassed on the forbidden area of ecclesiastical matters—namely, the interpretation of the Canon Law of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

In the light of its present unequivocal definition of the principle of non-interference, why did this same Appellate Court—and later the Court of Appeals and the U. S. Supreme Court—decline to review and grant similar relief in the Melish case?

The only conclusion that the laymen can reach is that judges do not always decide cases on the Law but are sometimes influenced by "extraneous" considerations. There was no suspicion of political taint in the Congregational Churches case and their appeal was argued by the high brass of the legal profession. In the Melish case, where the bishop of Long Island's memorandum bristled with prejudicial though unproven implications, and where legal counsel had to be obtained from outside the church, could any judge in this period of public tension and harassment remain wholly unaffected and impartial?

If Judge Steinbrink was wrong in the Congregational Churches case, as the Appellate Division now declares he was, is it not possible that he was equally in error in the Melish case? Those who sat in his courtroom felt that he was assuming an absolute "congregational principle" in Congregationalism and an equally absolute "episcopal principle" in the polity of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and, in so doing, was ignorant of the actual complexity of the history of both traditions and indifferent to the respective rights of the two church bodies in the matter of determining their own futures as living ecclesiastical organisms. The imposition of an injunction in both cases precluded further ecclesiastical consideration of the issues involved and clearly constituted intervention by the civil courts into the forbidden sphere. In the Congregational case, the Appellate Division now makes this error of the lower court unmistakably clear. In the Melish case, it is worth noting that the courts simply dodged and evaded the same issue, not even rendering a written opinion that would have indicated the basis on which they had reached conclusion. Was this justice, or was this because of "extraneous" considerations?

The Churchman is pleased that in the Congregational Churches case the Appellate Division has restored to its rightful place the traditional American principle of non-interference by the courts in ecclesiastical matters. We regret that this same court failed to do the same with equal grace and clarity in the Melish case decision it rendered just a year ago.

All this underscores for us the wisdom of the New Testament conviction as well as that of the Founding Fathers, that ecclesiastical matters should not be adjudicated by the secular courts.

Impressions of The Southern Convention

By REV. THOMAS KIRKLAND THOMPSON

Executive Director of Stewardship and Benevolence of the National Council of Churches

The Meeting of the Southern Convention, April 29th to May 1st, just concluded, was my first visit to the Southern Convention in official session. It was doubly interesting to me for I have visited many of the State Conferences over the Congregational Christian Fellowship, and I should like to record some of the impressions gained from this two-day visit at the meeting at Durham. The Southern Convention is unique in the Congregational Christian family in preserving a closeness of fellowship that is little known in the other State Conferences. Likewise, it is unique in doing its own Home Mission and Higher Education work as well as operating an orphanage and publishing a weekly paper. All of these projects make the Southern Convention entirely different from the usual State Conference over the nation.

The first impression was that of democracy in action. Under the chairmanship of Millard Stevens the meeting proceeded on schedule, and with the utmost fairness to many different points of view. Seldom, if ever, in a church meeting have I seen differences stated so freely and frankly without bitterness or rancor. Unity in diversity could well have been the theme of this particular conference. Underlying all of the differences of opinion was a common commitment both to Jesus Christ and to the work of the Southern Convention. It is refreshing to see democracy carried out in so full a measure.

The second impression was the sense of commitment to the cause of Missions. Missionary concern is not always a deep running movement in our Congregational Christian fellowship. To be sure, we have a missionary tradition, but, oftentimes it is inactive. However, in the Southern Convention in all their discussions there was a sense of the importance of the missionary enterprise. This was especially apparent in the budget discussion. Several times the concern with keeping the missionary giving up to the highest possible meas-

The Common Denominator Church

By DR. JOHN R. SCOTFORD

In many American communities the cry has been raised, "Let's all get together and have just one church!" Often has this been tried; rarely has it succeeded over a period of years. Why has this been so? To answer this question is our present concern.

Union churches were a commonplace when this country was being settled. They were logical, and they promised to save both dollars and ministerial manpower. Yet it was the exceptional union church which survived to a decent ecclesiastical age.

The community church movement arose in the wake of the first world war. It combined the endeavor to meet the needs of particular situations with a protest against the planting of competing churches and too much domination of the local scene by the denomination. It started bravely, but has not fulfilled the hopes of its promoters, although it is still with us.

The wide-spread setting up of state and local councils of churches has led to the general acceptance of the principle of comity by which a particular denomination is assigned the responsibility for the religious nurture of specific areas, with the understanding that the other denominations will stay out. These churches are expected to serve all comers; they are community churches under denominational auspices. This gives them far greater protection against ecclesiastical intruders than union and community churches enjoy; it also makes available to them larger resources of both money and manpower. In spite of these advantages, they face much the same problems as these other two groups.

The high mortality of union churches and the difficulties encountered by the community centered churches are not due to internal dissension over theological issues nor to the machinations of denominational officials; rather are they inherent in the nature of such congregations. The aim of these churches is to serve people of widely varied religious backgrounds. The easiest way to do this is to proceed on the principle of the least common denominator, and stress those things upon which all can unite. In theory this should mean sticking to the great central truths of the Christian faith, which is altogether desirable, but practically it does not work out in this way. A group of people gathered at random are not greatly concerned with the fundamentals of religion; what they want is a nice pleasant church which will make the minimum demands on either their intellects or their pocketbooks. The "community" ideal encourages them in what amounts to spiritual isolationism. The beliefs of such a church are those which its members chance to cherish, while its social ideals are those which happen to be current on that particular main street. Neither are likely to be at all exciting—or inspiring.

Of course this is a trap into which any church, regardless of its denominational affiliation, is likely to fall. There are plenty of pulpits, with all sorts of labels on them, dedicated to the glorification of what now is, or even of what once was. For a congregation to live to itself alone is the easiest form of ecclesiastical sin. But under the denominational system there are some remedies available. If a minister, or a lay person, wants to disturb the congregation in the cause of progress, he can quote the creed, or the pronouncement of some higher body in support of the proposed change. If a minister gets into trouble proclaiming social truths which his denomination has accepted, he will receive much comfort and possibly some aid. The denominations also have means for prodding congregations which have fallen too soundly asleep in Zion.

These benefits are denied the community centered church. If the congregation wants, or thinks that it wants, a watered down gospel, that's the gospel that it will get. . . . The teachings of the church reflect the minds of its members. If the members are a cross section of the community, all that can be expected is the glorification of the local mores. This is never very exciting, and can be positively stupid.

This situation does not become immediately apparent in a community-centered church. If it has no denominational ties, it will usually start with the proclamation of a high sounding doctrine of freedom—from ecclesiastical control. It is assumed that an independent church is by its very nature broader and therefore superior to the denominational church. Much stress is put upon "the twenty-two denominations represented in the membership." All this is made to look like a brave new adventure into an ecclesiastical no-man's land. This may serve as a smoke screen to conceal the spiritual barrenness of the situation.

Most community centered churches—whether denominationally sponsored or otherwise—are new congregations in new communities. Their life history for the first quarter century is likely to follow a fairly common pattern.

New churches in new communities usually start off with a bang. Everybody wants to get acquainted. All sorts of activities need to get underway. The church is often the one meeting place, and so everything happens at the church. The janitor has a hard life taking care of the meetings. Everybody is happy because "there is so much going on at the church." The minister is cast for the role of neighborhood errand boy. He keeps so busy that he has little time to grieve over the scanty attendance on Sunday morning. He comforts himself with the thought that many of the people are still going to Old First down in town, but that their children will grow up in the Sunday school and someday lead them into the neighborhood church. In the meantime the religious side of his program is tolerated rather than supported. If he is candid, he admits that the tail is wagging the dog rather lustily. What he may not be willing to face is that the community is accepting the church as a physical convenience rather than as a religious force.

But this period of "get together-ness" and super activity does not last. The Improvement Association dies. The new school house has a gymnasium, and not so many boys are seen around the church. The community women's association moves to the new country club. The lusty men's club dies. A branch library is established, and that becomes a center for the young life of the neighborhood. Less and less happens at the church.

The second or third pastor faces the problem of transforming a social group into a church. He struggles for pews, as the ancestral symbol of piety, and for a pipe organ. He gets rid of some of the "outside" activities. He may wear himself out striving to create a church consciousness—and to get his Sunday morning service of

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

MILLIONS NEEDED FOR CHURCH BUILDING.

Dr. Albert D. Stauffacher, Minister and Executive Secretary of the Missions Council of the Congregational Christian Churches for the past ten years, was voted release from the executive duties of this post as of May 1 to give full time as executive director of an important denominational committee appointed at the Mid-winter Meeting of the Missions Council in Cleveland, Ohio, last January.

This committee, now known as the Cleveland-to-Claremont Committee on the Church Building Loan Funds, was asked to conduct a series of area meetings across the nation to seek advice on a critical situation facing the Congregational Church Building Society, and to ascertain the advisability of raising a substantial increase to the Church Building Loan Fund.

The Missions Council in January heartily approved such an effort in principle, instructed this committee to lay the situation before the area meetings for inquiry and consultation, and then, on the basis of the reactions received, to bring a report with specific recommendations for denominational action to the General Council meeting June 18 to 25, in Claremont, California.

The overwhelming opinion expressed in these 26 area meetings across the country by over 1,200 Congregational Christian lay and clerical leaders who attended them was that a recommendation for a denominational effort to increase the present Church Building Loan Fund by at least $4,500,000 should be presented for action to the coming General Council meeting.

Without in any sense pre-judging the action of the delegates at the General Council in Claremont this June, the committee between now and June 18 will seek to blueprint an organization and literature so that if the General Council acts in favor of the recommendation to raise $4,500,000 for the Church Building Society the work may move forward at an early date.

"Within the past 10 years there has been the unprecedented increase of population in the United States of 19,000,000 people, and between 1950 and 1960 it is expected this figure will increase by another 30,000,000. This means the establishment of a large number of new communities and an overwhelming growth in older communities. (Continued on page 10.)"

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Some years ago we were on an automobile trip more than 600 miles long. We had a very fine trip, uneventful except for some unusually pleasant experiences along the way. Just before we reached the end of the journey one of the tires went "boom." It seemed most unfortunate to have this delay along the way and have this very, very disappointing thing to happen.

During the weeks and months of the year so far the churches and Sunday schools have been unusually thoughtful. Offerings for the college have exceeded many of the previous years. This is gratifying indeed since funds from other sources were less than in previous years. We came up to this week with rather of an inflated enthusiasm, but all of a sudden the thing goes "boom." Instead of hundreds of dollars to report, this week we have only dollars and cents; to be exact $9.12. This offering is to support a great institution, but like the automobile tire, we'll patch up and by another week or two we will get going again. I know the churches and Sunday schools haven't forgotten their college but they are just delaying a bit to come back with more and larger offerings. They have a way of encouraging us at the college when we most need it.

SOME FACTS GLEANED FROM THE REPORT OF ELON COLLEGE TO THE CONVENTION.

During more than sixty years Elon College has persevered, and today she takes her place in the forefront of the field of Christian higher education.

Student Enrollment.—An enrollment of 700 is required to provide funds for the present budget of the college. The present enrollment is only about 600. Operating expenses are about the same for this number as for 700. Our constituency should see that Elon has not less than 700 students next year.

Instructors.—There are forty well-qualified instructors on Elon's teaching staff—qualified from the standpoint of training, experience and of church affiliation. There are 10 with Ph.D. degrees, 26 with M.A. degrees and 4 with A.B. degrees. Our boys and girls who go to Elon will be well trained.

Buildings and Improvements.—The buildings that Elon has are good. She has excellent equipment. But the college badly needs new dormitories, a dining-room and other facilities. It is for this reason that the Convention is asking that we raise additional money for this purpose.

Finance.—Twenty years ago the operating budget was only $86,000. Today a far greater amount is required to balance Elon's budget, but this has been consistently done. Elon is making far greater use of its facilities than was then possible, and its student body is far larger. In addition to the physical plant, Elon has endowment funds with a book value of $472,000, and actual value of more than $500,000. There are more than $300,000 in invested funds, from which more than $25,000 is received annually. Elon is doing her utmost to help herself. We of the Southern Convention must not fail to do our part.

The Present Campaign.—In 1946 there was launched a campaign to raise a million dollars for endowment and buildings at Elon. In 1948, it was found necessary to raise this goal to two million dollars to be raised in ten years from 1946. The half-way mark in time has passed, but there has been raised in cash and pledges a total of $1,177,300 to date. The goal was again increased at the Durham Convention to $2,500,000. This makes a balance of $1,332,700 to be raised and paid by January 31, 1956. This is a big job, but it is by no means an impossible task if each of us will do our best.

A meeting was held at Elon this week to formulate plans to present the campaign to our entire constituency. When we are approached, let's respond to the utmost of our ability, that Elon may continue unabated her service to our Church. K.

At Home and Abroad

MISSIONARY TRAGEDY AND TRIUMPH.

By DOROTHY P. CUSHING.

A story of Christian fortitude and real faith was illustrated Saturday morning, May 10, at the Logan International Airport, Boston Mass., when a big Pan American Airliner coming in out of the cold dawn around 5:15 a. m. numbered among its passengers Mrs. Beryl Bowden Masters, Congregational Christian missionary and her three small sons from Mt. Silinda, Southern Rhodesia, Africa.

Mrs. Masters, and her youngest child two-year old Michael, are both victims of polio, the dread disease which in a period of 22 days (between October 13 and November 4) paralyzed Mrs. Masters and Michael, and killed her four year old daughter Carolyn and her 34 year old doctor husband, Victor Fanstone Masters, World War II British Army Surgeon in the Middle East and a missionary for three years under the American Board of Foreign Missions in Mt. Silinda, Africa.

"I know that we shall both walk eventually," says Mrs. Masters with unswerving faith. "I feel that we have much to be thankful for to God. If it be God's will I wish to carry on in some way the work among the Africans that Vic so dearly loved. I would like to work in the hospital and thus support my remaining three boys."

After a week or more at the Walker Missionary Home, Auburndale, Massachusetts, Mrs. Masters and baby Michael will be flown to Warm Springs Sanatorium, Warm Springs, Georgia, for treatment. Christopher 9 years old and Robert 7 will remain in Auburndale and go to school.

Accompanying Mrs. Masters and the children is Miss Patricia Kendall, a Nursing Sister from the Umtali Government Hospital where Mrs. Masters and Michael have been treated.

The long trek began on May 6 with a 175-mile drive from Umtali to Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia. There the Masters party took the plane to Johannesburg and then another plane from Johannesburg to the U. S. A.

A special Beryl Masters Fund is being raised by friends of the American Board to take care of the extraordinary medical expenses involved in the travel and treatment of Mrs. Masters and Michael.

Beryl Bowden Masters, just turned 30, was born in Kent, England, and educated at St. Christopher's Preparatory School; County School for Girls and the Hospital for Sick Children in London, where she took nurse's training.

Dr. Masters enlisted for medical missionary service under the American Board as Medical Superintendent, at its Mt. Silinda Hospital, Rhodesia, South Africa in 1948 following three years of service in the Medical Corps of the British Army during World War II in England and the Middle East. Born in the Belgian Congo, but brought up and educated in England, he thus fulfilled a life-time ambition to be a Christian missionary. His grandparents were pioneer missionaries in Brazil and his father, not a missionary, practiced medicine in the Belgian Congo.

The young missionary doctor had the reputation of not only being devoted to the physical relief of the Ndau people among whom he worked but as a physician of sick souls. He and Mrs. Masters brought their Christian faith to the hearts and souls as well as to the bodies they sought to heal. When his little daughter died last October, Dr. Masters wrote, "Underneath are the everlasting arms. Without that how could our faith withstand the trial."

MISSIONARY MEETING IN GERMANY.

An Enlarge Meeting of the International Missionary Council is to take place in Willingen, Germany, from July 5 to 18, 1952. A call to Prayer, by Christians everywhere, for the work of the Conference has been issued by the London office of I.M.C. The call reads:

"In an age when change is more in evidence than continuity, when more is heard of revolution than of stability, the world mission of the Church cannot be accomplished merely on lines that have become traditional. Revolutionary changes are, in fact, daily taking place in the missionary work of the Church. Some of these are being precipitated through the political and social revolutions of our time. Others are the consequences of deeper insight into the nature of the Gospel and the calling of the Church.

"What is it that matters most amidst all these changes? What new policies are called for not only on grounds of expediency but in sure awareness of the will of God for our time?"

"This concern underlines the action of the I.M.C. in launching a new inquiry under the general title of 'The Missionary Obligation of the Church.' In this inquiry an attempt is being made to bring together the deepest insights of recent years, to assess the significance of some critical events in the missionary scene today, and to point the way forward.

"As a stage in the whole process, a meeting of the I.M.C. is to be held in July, 1952, at Willingen, Germany, to which come representatives of the older and younger churches. It is the hope and prayer of all involved in this undertaking that it may be used to the glory of God and for the more faithful proclamation to all mankind of the Lordship and saving power of Christ.

"Study and action can only achieve such ends if study is accompanied by prayer, and action is guided and empowered by the Holy Spirit. The I.M.C., therefore, earnestly seeks the cooperation of its friends throughout the world in remembrance and intercession, so that 'Willingen, 1952' may be able to bear its own special testimony to the power of prayer.

"Preparatory work is taking place along five main lines of inquiry: (1) the theological imperatives of the Christian mission; (2) the indigenous Church, its present strength and weakness as an instrument for worldwide evangelism; (3) the place and function of the missionary society in a new day; (4) Christian vocation and its fulfillment in a world setting; (5) the pattern of missionary activity and the necessity for its reshaping.

"Will you pray: for all engaged in these preparatory studies . . . for all who attend the Willingen meeting . . . for those who are being called upon to give the principal addresses . . . for the officers of the I.M.C. and the members of its thirty-two constituent councils. . . .

SECOND BUS TO CALIFORNIA.

A bus holding 37 passengers was originally scheduled to leave Burlington, N. C. on June 11, headed for the West Coast and the General Council. Pattie Lee Coghill, general manager and chief high mogul of the trip, had hoped that this bus could be filled.

The demand for seats was so great that she decided to get a 41-passenger bus instead. And now that one is more than filled, with a waiting list of some six or eight people (at last report).

So now the plan is to try to get enough people to fill two busses, each holding 37 passengers. This means that some people who had been dreaming about going, but decided they had waited too late to send in their application, can still make the trip. If you know of someone in that category who might not see this issue of THE SUN, please help Miss Coghill by passing the word along to him or her. Overnight accommodations have to be secured all along the way, and so much additional planning will be necessary.

Men, women, and young people will be welcome on the bus. We understand that Dr. N. G. Newman is to be one of the passengers—this ought to be “enough said” for those who have intimated that they were not young enough for bus travel across the country. A few more with this spirit and Pattie Lee would have to charter a third bus, no doubt!

THREE NEW SOCIETIES.

The ladies of Lebanon Congregational Christian Church of Senora, N. C., have organized a new Women's Fellowship. Their first meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Pointer. The following officers were elected: Mrs. Foster Pointer, president; Mrs. Henry Earp, vice-president; Mrs. John McAden, secretary; Mrs. Ezra Stowe, treasurer.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill met with them on April 14 at the home of Mrs. Stowe. She gave an interesting talk on her tour of India and the need of spreading Christian fellowship through out the world. She also helped them to complete their organization and to work on programs for the coming year. The ladies of this newly organized group hope Miss Coghill will return again and often. Her visits are interesting and very instructive.

This information comes to us from Mrs. John McAden. We are sure that this new society will be heartily welcomed into our Halifax District.

* * * * *

MOORE UNION.

Miss Coghill reports that she helped to organize a new society at Moore Union on April 13. They appointed a nominating committee to prepare a slate of officers, and will have more to report later.

* * * * *

FAYETTEVILLE.

A new women's society has also recently been organized at our Eutaw Community Church in Fayetteville. The very first “get together” was held in the home of the former Dorothy Hendrix, whom many in the Southern Convention will remember as active in Pilgrim Fellowship work when she was a member of the First Church in Greensboro. Miss Coghill was present at the second meeting on April 7, when a nominating committee was selected to suggest officers for this new group.

These three reports of new societies in North Carolina are very encouraging. We wish for each of them good success and hope that we will hear more from them in the near future.

MAY FELLOWSHIP AT BURLINGTON.

About 155 women from 15 different churches met in the assembly room of the Educational Building of the Front Street Methodist Church of Burlington, N. C., on Friday, May 2, for the May Fellowship Luncheon, sponsored by the newly reorganized branch of the Council of Church Women. A delicious luncheon was served by the women of the host church. The decorations and programs were May baskets symbolizing friendship. The committee chairmen and those taking part represented six denominations.

The speaker for the occasion was Mrs. William Grimsley, who is the Family Life Specialist with the North Carolina Agricultural Extension Service. She won the hearts of everyone as she developed her theme of “Spiritual Security in the Home.” The meeting closed with two verses of “Blest Be the Tie that Binds.”

Mrs. Henry E. Robinson, wife of the minister at the First Christian Church, and president of the Burlington Council of Church Women, presided at the meeting.

ASHEBORO HOSTESS TO MAY FELLOWSHIP.

The May Fellowship Day program sponsored by the Asheboro Council of Church Women was held in the Congregational Christian Church, with Mrs. F. C. Lester, president of the council, presiding.

Because of a thunderstorm immediately preceding the hour of the service, the attendance was very small but there were people present from seven churches, representing six denominations.

In addition to the worship service, presented by Miss Dorice Waters, director of religious education at the First Methodist Church, the program consisted of the play, “The Fair Family Worship.” This play—presented through the generosity of Mrs. W. E. Wiseman in loaning of the play after its presentation at the women's meeting in Durham—used Rev. F. C. Lester as “Mr. Fair,” Mrs. Orva Brown as “Mrs. Fair” and the three Lester children and Jimmy Brown as the four “Fair Children.” These families from our church in Asheboro gave a “repeat performance” at the worship service in their own Sunday school on Mother's Day.

A Page for Our Children

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

We have been interested in reading the monthly publication The Willing Workers Newsette edited and published by the members of the Willing Workers Class of our Sunday school at Winchester, Va. The Rev. Robert A. Whitten is minister of the church. The Newsette tells of events and proclaims coming events. Congratulations to the Willing Workers!

By the way, Mr. Whitten writes very good poetry. So do Dr. John G. Truitt and Dr. C. Rexford Raymond. Does your minister write or recite poetry? Is it his own? Working with words must make one feel the poetic urge.

We read with interest that Mrs. Lessie Lee Alridge of our Union Ridge Church was elected Alamance (N. C.) County's Mother of the Year. Mrs. Alridge is one of the oldest members at Union Ridge Church and the paper stated that she was recently given a Life Membership in our Mission Convention. Congratulations to Mrs. Alridge and Union Ridge! Churches and good mothers go together.

It is a pity that all "Mother of the Year" awards have to go to mothers of grown children. Some mothers of young children show real courage, fortitude and ability even though their children haven't found their niche in life.

Exam. time is coming. Hope you will do well on them, but it is a fact that cramming in a few days what you should have learned in a school year will not help you much. What are you planning for summer? Are some of you going to the General Council meeting in California with your parents? Miss Pattie Lee Coghill is arranging for a bus load of folks to go. Want to go with them? I am sure they will take quiet, well behaved boys and girls.

FORMING GOOD HABITS.

By MABEL-RUTH JACKSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Mrs. Richmond, the new bride in our community, was returning Mrs. Williams' call. They had just exchanged a few remarks when four-year-old Ronnie came in from play.

"This is Mrs. Richmond, Ronnie," said his mother.

The boy went over and gravely offered his hand. "How do you do?"

"How do you do?" returned the he said.

young woman, evidently delighted with his grown-up air, but smiling at him with only a twinkle in her eye. "May I help you off with your coat?"

"Oh, no," said Ronnie, backing away. "I can do it my own self. See?" His small fingers wrestled with the buttons and buttonholes.

Unbuttoned finally, Ronnie wriggled out of his coat and took it into a bedroom adjoining; then he came out and announced that he was going to play with his boats. They were in the bottom drawer of a chest of drawers, and when he opened it Mrs. Richmond noticed other toys arranged there.

"I can't get over it," she said in a low tone to Mrs. Williams. "At home, when we youngsters came from school you'd have thought a cyclone had struck the rooms—coats and hats and gloves were thrown helter-skelter. Mom used to tell us that we should always put our things away as soon as we took them off, but generally she'd do it herself. She said it was less trouble than to keep nagging us. How do you do it? I hope to have children of my own some day and I'd like the recipe."

"I learned to care for my clothes the hard way," said Mrs. Williams, absently watching Ronnie maneuver his fleet of tiny boats. "My mother died when I was quite young and I grew up much like Topsy. I used just to step out of my clothes, often leaving them lying on the floor. I didn't have many changes, and when I had to wear a badly wrinkled one, it began to dawn upon me that there was something I could do about it. I made myself hang every single thing up the minute I took it off—I wouldn't even let go of it until it was on a hanger. In this way I broke myself of my bad habit. If I'd been taught—" She broke off and smiled deprecatingly. "You asked for a recipe and I've been giving you a life story."

"Don't stop," begged the bride. "I'm all ears."

"Well," went on Mrs. Williams, "not long before Ronnie appeared on the scene, I read an article about the value of forming good habits early. That, and remembering my own experience, made me want to start Ronnie out right. Come in here a minute."

She rose and, followed by her curious young neighbor, she showed her where she had placed coat hooks on the inside of the closet door. There hung the coat and hat Ronnie had taken off. The hooks were low enough so that it was very easy for him to reach them.

As the bride exclaimed in approval, Mrs. Williams added, "You know, when children are very young they love to do things that their elders do. I have tried to make caring for his clothes seem a privilege to Ronnie, not a duty, so that he would have pleasant associations with regard to every phase of it. That, I think, will have much to do with causing this carefulness to become a lasting habit."

communities either destitute of churches or already inadequately churching," says Dr. Stauffacher. "The vitality, and future witness of the Christian fellowship depends on our ability to respond to the growth and movement of the American people with a vigorous program for the establishing of new churches and the re-establishing and re-equipping of existing churches."

In addition to this rapid increase in population and the extraordinary mobility of the American people there has been inflation, which has reduced the purchasing power of the Congregational Church Building Society to about one-third of its 1940 value. This has made it impossible for the society to meet the drastic need for new churches in new communities and greater facilities for older churches in rapidly expanding areas. In the past two years the Society has had to turn down applications for $2,400,000.

In 1953 the Building Society will celebrate its 100th birthday. During the past century it has helped erect churches to the extent of $19,500,000 in every state and territory. Its present loan funds amount to approximately $3,500,000, all of which is either loaned out to churches or committed to churches under construction.

N. C. AND VA. WEEK-END CONFERENCE.

On Saturday, May 3, 1952, 72 North Carolina and Virginia Conference young people met at Camp New Hope near Chapel Hill, N. C., for a weekend of camping. There were ten churches represented.

Saturday afternoon was mostly engaged by softball and swimming. Our vesper service Saturday night was led by Rev. John Lacky of our Apple's Chapel Church. Afterwards two hours of fellowship conducted by Clarence Walker of our Durham Church were enjoyed by all. Max Vestal and David Crowle furnished our music.

Our Sunday morning church service was led by Rev. Max Vestal. After lunch, group singing followed. To close our conference and to open the Eastern North Carolina young people's rally a worship service was led by Persistent Curtis Young.

EASTERN N. C. YOUTH FELLOWSHIP RALLY.

On Sunday afternoon, May 4, beginning at 3:00 o'clock the Eastern North Carolina Conference Youth Fellowship held its spring rally at Camp New Hope near Chapel Hill with approximately one hundred representatives from eleven churches present. The opening worship was held as a joint service with the North Carolina and Virginia Youth Fellowship. When the worship service was concluded Timothy Chang led the group in singing.

Discussion groups were held on "The Christian Young Person in the Modern World" with David Crowle, Earl Danieleley, Richard Jackson, Barbara Jefferson, Mrs. J. Lee Lassiter, Jr., Max Vestal, Timothy Chang and Carl Wallace as the leaders. Each group reported on the discussion that was held. After the reports everyone was free until the supper hour. The highlight of this free period was the game of roller-bat played by the group. Mr. Jackson and Timothy Chang were the "stars" of this game.

When supper was over, closing vespers were held by the Oak Level Youth Fellowship and Rev. Earl Danieleley.

Christians should smile; frowns should be reserved for those who have not heard of Christ.

A Palo Alto policeman who stopped a college student driving backwards received this explanation: the car was rented on a mileage basis and the student was driving backwards because the speedometer didn't register in reverse.

* * *

Many of us are living just about like this boy was driving. We don't want to go on record as favoring or opposing anything. We are so afraid of making a bad record that we end up making no record at all. Who is going to be able to see our "foot-prints on the sands of time."

John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, used to recall that as a youth his behavior often displeased his father. His mother was more forbearing. "How can you have the patience," exploded the elder Wesley, "to tell that blockhead John the same thing 20 times over?"

"Why," replied Mrs. Wesley, "if I had told him but 19 times I had wasted my breath."

A SCIENTIFIC VIEW-POINT.

Dr. Andrew C. Ivy, vice-president of the University of Illinois, says:

The habit-forming or narcotic effects of alcohol are often ignored. Alcoholism is the state in which a person is under the influence of alcohol. When a person is addicted, he is suffering from alcohol. The same situation obtains with use of morphine. Alcoholism and morphinism are synonymous terms. There is this difference, however: in the case of morphinism, the amount needed to produce the addiction is known. The range of susceptibility is from three to 20 doses. Most cases arise between the eighth and fourteenth doses. Alcohol does not have the same habit-forming potentialities as morphine and cocaine.

Being intoxicated from four to five times a week for successive weeks will produce habit-forming in some teen-agers. Others can take the same amount and do not become alcoholics until they are 40 to 50 years old. This shows the wide range in possibility of alcohol addiction.

Alcohol interferes with cerebral activities. This results in impaired performance as is shown in drunken driving and in interference with industry. Because of this, alcohol cannot be tolerated.

In arguing a case at law, the clever opponent, when he does not have the facts, stirs up dust to cover this lack. The lawyer who really has a case confines himself to the facts. Others in a less secure position quibble over minutiae. Such are the tricks of debate and discussion. The relation of alcohol to food has been discussed with a great deal of dust obscuring the issue. The differences between a food and alcohol are these: alcohol can only be burned in the body; it cannot be stored nor furnish material for growth of tissue. When taken, alcohol injures both the mind and the body. . . . It is intellectual dishonesty to discuss the food value of beer.

Use of alcohol impairs the general health. Hence the user of alcohol contracts diseases more readily and has more difficulty in recovering from disease than the non-user. . . . Alcohol in the system affects the leucocytes in their fight against disease.

MAD DOG.

He was a rather poor specimen of a dog. He seemed uncertain as he moved along the street. He seemed to have lost his way, and he seemed to be afraid. Someone hit him with a rock; as he staggered and started to run, someone yelled, "Mad dog." That settled it. There was a shower of rocks. Some of them hit the mark. Now the dog was lunging almost blindly. After he had been stoned and clubbed until he was down, a policeman's bullet finished the job. But someone sent the head for examination. There was no sign of rabies. It was all a mistake; mob psychology. History records many instances in which the same thing has happened to a human being. No wonder our Father had Moses to write long ago: "Thou shalt not bear false witness," and "Thou shalt not take up a false report." — Batsell Baxter.

GOD'S ESTIMATE OF HUMAN LIFE. (TEMPERANCE.)

LESSON VIII—MAY 25, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: Thou shalt not kill.—Exodus 20:13.

LESSON TEXT: Exodus 20:13; Matthew 5:21-26; 18:5-6; Luke 9:51-56.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 8.

Thou Shalt Not Kill.

It might seem strange to call the attention of professing Christians to this ancient law. In its literal and legal sense it hardly presents a major temptation to any of us. And yet this ancient law does have something to say to us, even to those of us who are professing Christians. This is especially true when it is interpreted in the light of the teachings of Jesus. Here as elsewhere concerning the Ten Commandments or "Rules for Living" he fulfills or fills full this law.

Manifestly, the commandment forbids the taking of life either directly, as Cain killed his brother Abel, or indirectly or by proxy, as David killed Uriah. We have power to take life, but we do not have power to restore life. To kill, therefore, is wrong, because once done, it cannot be undone. There is a fatal finality about it.

This law also forbids suicide. Our lives belong to God—we have no right to take them. Our lives also belong to others. To fling life away is wrong. And the principle applies not only to the man who kills himself by one final act such as shooting himself with a gun or taking poison, but also to the man who kills himself by degrees. To shorten one's life by dissipation, to indulge in any pleasure, however innocent, at the price of premature death is wrong.

But still more. We may be guilty of breaking this law by taking unnecessary risks, or by exposing ourselves to dangers. Or by exposing others to dangers. The drunken and the drinking driver is a potential, and often an actual killer. Then too an employer who forces his workmen to work under conditions that involve needless risks, a landlord who forces his tenants to live under unsanitary conditions, the man who does bizarre stunts involving foolish and unnecessary risks—these and others may be murders or killers in a very real sense.

What about war? War was bad enough when it killed only the combatants. But what about modern war which kills combatants and non-combatants alike? There is honest difference of opinion in regard to war. It is conceivable that there are some things worse than war. There are some things more sacred than human life on the physical plane. But after all is said and done, war kills and war in principle is wrong.

Thus far nothing has been said about killing things or people in the moral or spiritual realms of life. But people have to have something to live for as well as to live with. We can kill without any blood-letting at all. We can kill by cruelty, by ingratitude, by neglect, by false gossip, by hate, by lying. We can kill by evil influence and by bad example.

Jesus and This Law.

As usual Jesus went beyond the law, the letter of the law, to the spirit, and to the motive back of the act. Jesus said that not only was it wrong to kill or to murder; it was wrong to hate. He condemns not only the act, but the attitudes and passions that lead to the taking of life. Anger, bitterness, the spirit of revenge, unwillingness to forgive, the desire to "get even," crass indifference—all these things came under the condemnation of Jesus. For it was out of the hearts in which these things found place that murder was born. And whether one ever allowed the spirit to find expression in the act or not, the man was condemned by Jesus. Furthermore Jesus put the emphasis upon the positive, rather than upon the negative aspects of this law. We are to use our lives and our possessions to make possible a richer fuller life for our fellowmen. To withhold may be as wrong as to do violence.

To emphasize the importance of the right spirit in the heart of man, Jesus said a striking and disturbing thing. He said that if a man came to the place of worship, or was engaged in the act of worship, and remembered that his brother man had ought against him, he had better leave the service of worship, and go and be reconciled unto his brother and then come and worship. What do you suppose would happen in your church if your pastor should announce, before the communion service or during any ordinary service for that matter, that only those who had nothing against their fellowmen, or against whom their fellowmen had nothing, could participate in the communion service or in the service of worship! And yet that is precisely what Jesus ordered. Readers of these notes know that in every church there are people who have grievances and grudges against each other, some folks, even members of the same family, "who do not speak to each other," who regularly worship, apparently with no compunctions of conscience regarding this matter. The fact is that only the man who is right with his fellowmen can acceptably worship God. Our horizontal relationships depend upon our perpendicular relationships and our perpendicular relationships depend upon our horizontal relationships. And if some of these folks would get right with each other it would start a revival in the church.

Jesus also said some other disturbing words in today's lesson. "Whoso shall cause one of these little ones that believe on me to stumble, it is profitable for him that a great millstone be hanged about his neck, and that he should be sunk in the depth of the sea." We are responsible for others, whether we like it or not. We have to be careful of what effect our actions and our influence will have upon others. If we do things that hinder or hurt another in his progress toward the Kingdom it would better for us if we had never been born. What about the liquor traffic? What about the man who sells it, or the man who gets dividends from the liquor industry? What about the man who gives another his drink? What about the home which serves it? It is most appropriate that today's lesson comes under the sub-title of Temperance. And alas, we folks are all in the liquor business, one way or another. But, thank God, we are in the liquor business over our votes and against our preferences—we never voted for liquor and if we had our way our State would not be in the liquor business.

Or again what about the man who knowingly rents property for purpose of prostitution? Or the young

IMPRESSIONS OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

ure was expressed. It is refreshing to see the cause of missions so vigorously portrayed.

A third impression was that of concern of education. Elon College has had a deep influence at this point. It was pointed out that many of the outstanding leaders of the Southern Convention are graduates of Elon College and that Elon College is pouring forth a steady stream of finely trained laymen and clergy for the Southern Convention. This has resulted in a raising of the level of ministerial training, that, whereas forty years ago few of the ministers were trained in both college and seminary, now, most of the ministers have one or both items in their list of credentials.

A fourth impression of the Southern Convention was the concern for church union. The Congregational Christian tradition is in favor of larger and larger units of cooperation. The Southern Convention is, I take it, 100 per cent in favor of the proposed merger with the Evangelical and Reformed Churches. Both on the floor and in private conversation, many men expressed to me the concern that the merger should now move forward now that the legal difficulties are out of the way. This concern for church union was expressed not only in relation to the merger, but in relation to the National Council of Churches. The Southern Convention delegates believe in federal cooperation as well as in organic union, and it is refreshing to see that both types of cooperation are vigorously presented and supported in the Convention.

The fifth reaction to the Southern Convention was the concern for Christian stewardship. It is only natural that a stewardship representative should have persons speaking to him on this subject. Yet, on the floor, as well as in private conversation, the matter of Christian stewardship was again and again presented. The ministers and the churches of the Southern Convention feel that out of gratitude to God for what he has given them, especially the gift of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, they should use their time and their resources for the doing of the will of God. This was apparent in the discussions of the question of a full-time Secretary for Stewardship and Evangelism. The question was carefully weighed whether or not the money thus expended might be better spent otherwise,—a question which faces the Christian steward in making every decision about expenditures. The decision to have a full-time Secretary of Stewardship and Evangelism pleased this observer because he feels that, in the long run, this movement and this action will enrich the Southern Convention both in its spirituality and in its financial stability.

God has richly blessed the Southern Convention with a great people and a great land. I pray that the Southern Convention may be increasingly used of God for carrying forward his gracious purposes to all mankind.

THE COMMON DENOMINATOR CHURCH.

worship taken seriously. His success at this point decides the future survival of the church—as a church.

Meanwhile a process of attrition is going on. When the church and the community were new, all sorts of people joined the church in the spirit of goodwill and hope. They assumed that time would bring them the sort of church of church to which they had been accustomed. Instead what developed was a social organization with only a mild religious interest, and gradually those who wanted something more intense wandered off to other churches. The Fundamentalists were probably the first to go, with nobody mourning their departure. Next would be the Lutherans, who may have excused themselves on grounds that they wanted their children to have the same sort of religious training that they had received. In the course of time the Episcopal bishop, with a fine disregard of comity, will establish a parish within walking distance, and more of the people who want to take religion seriously will depart in that direction. As churches of their ancestral faith enter the general area, Methodists and Presbyterians will return to their traditional folds.

The explanation will be offered that the denominations have crowded in on the community centered church, while the truth may be that it has been unable to offer its people a gospel of sufficient power to hold them. This has not been due to conscious neglect, but to factors inherent in the situation. A church, to prosper over the years, must have its interest focussed outside of itself. It must live for more than its own fellowship, and seek to serve something more than its community. It must do more than give religious sanctions to what is, it must lead its people onward toward new heights of understanding and service.

There are multitudes of situations which need the community centered type of church. We believe that our denominational labels are a most unfortunate legacy from the past. But how can the community-centered type of church develop that largeness of outlook and intensity of devotion which is necessary if it is to survive? We see three possibilities.

A strong minister can lead a community church to great heights of achievement, as Roy Burkhart has done in Columbus and others have done elsewhere. A community church needs an abler and more far-seeing pastor than does a denominational church simply because it must find its own way without much in the way of charts to steer by. Yet community churches have difficulty in getting such leadership, largely because the best men can do better elsewhere.

Used in the right way, denominational connections can give a community church the new ideas and the outreach into the world which it needs. If the church is denominationally affiliated, this means making a larger use of the services which this make available. Even though a church remains independent, it can secure much help from denominational sources. What it wants is spiritual stimulus through the presentation of both ideas and objectives which are beyond its own immediate life. What it does not want is to "turn" anything or to assume a denominational name.

The local and state councils of churches which are developing in most areas offer a third possibility. These are primarily service agencies helping local congregations to do their work better. The time may come when they can do many of the thing which the denominations now do but without any sectarian implications. When that happens the community churches will be among the prime beneficiaries.

He who lives to himself dies—and so do self-centered churches. A church needs to hear a voice from without and to address its energies to ends beyond its immediate environment. Only so can it enter into true fullness of life.

The Orphanage
 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

When all life's anchors have been swept away a little child needs security and guidance and loving care. Your orphanage joins with you in giving just such anchorage. You are often called upon to "give" money for the maintenance of this home, but as a matter of fact you are investing in a little human life, and I feel sure you do not regret a dollar you give.

All day long those swings which the Henderson Church gave us for little pre-school children are going. If you want to see a pretty sight just come over and watch them going, up in the air so high—at least it feels that way to them. And then when the first graders come home from school they get a go on the swings. Are these little children happy? Yes, truly, they are, and to see them well, sun-taned, and full of play is an inspiration. Thanks to Henderson.

At Long's Chapel last Sunday our children made quite a "hit" with their program. It was home-coming and memorial day. I preached in the morning. Everyone had dinner, and what a dinner! Then the following children put on an inspiring program: Jo Ann Black, Virginia Black, Jeanie Cook, Ann Kinch, Betty Lou Wilson, Jerry Wilkins, Betty Jean Proctor, Naney Watkins, Janis Spicer, Dorothy Spicer, Richard Bridges, Maragret Simpson, George Morningstar, and James Crumpler. This program with its emphasis on worship, and Christian loyalty, was prepared by Miss Melva Foster. Miss Helen Jackson, an Elon religious education student, served as pianist.

Long's Chapel was the late Superintendent Chas. D. Johnston's home church, and it was a real privilege to present our program there. I thought the children sang especially well that little chorus: "Let the Beauty of Jesus be Seen in Me." Fourteen children trained to sing it, sang it beautifully.

As I watched them go through their program the following little lines of mine came to my memory:

Matrons, matrons, help me grow,
 So the boys and girls I know,
 Where I live and dream and plan,
 Will proudly say when I'm a man,
 I knew him as an orphan boy
 Who brought his matrons hope and joy.

Matrons, matrons, help me be Good and sweet and bright and free,
 As I sing and dance and whirl,
 Help me grow a charming girl,
 So when I'm grown and big and fine
 You'll love me then as now at nine.

Matrons, matrons, help us fill
 The hopes of all upon this hill,
 Help us to show to all who share
 That we are worth their love and care,
 And that we love the home they give
 And bless it with the lives we live.

Thanks for the good report this week, for the Sunday schools which remembered us with their monthly offering, and for the friends and friends who gave.

Before I go let me ask you to get others, and still others, to subscribe to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Thank you, and please come to see us.

JOHN G. TRUITT,

man who takes advantage of a young woman? Or the purveyors of salacious literature or amusement? Or those who foment war? We are all bound up in the bundle of life. At the best, we are involved in some of the social evils of our modern life. But we ought to take special care lest we deliberately or carelessly "cause another to stumble." We ought by every means to stand and work for the best things in life, and for life. For life is sacred.

TUCK.

Mr. Charles W. Tuck, a native of Halifax County, Virginia, passed away at his home near Nathalie, Va., on February 29, 1952, at the age of 74. In 1889 he married Mary Bray, who preceded him in death nearly three years ago.

Mr. Tuck united with Union Congregational Christian Church of Virgilina, Va. in 1892. Later, he moved to the Nathalie community and became a charter member of Liberty Congregation Christian Church when it was organized. He also served as deacon of Liberty until his death. Funeral services were conducted by his pastor, Rev. Mark W. Andes, at Liberty.

He is survived by one daughter, Mrs. G. W. Love, and one foster daughter, Mrs. Clarice Alread, Miami, Florida; by one sister, Mrs. Cora Dalton of Kenbridge, Va.

Though in declining health for a number of years, he maintained an active interest in his church and community.

WHITFIELD.

On Saturday, April 19, 1952, our Heavenly Father, in his infinite wisdom called home to his reward Charles Junius Whitfield at the age of 74. He was the son of the late Wm Enoch and Matilda Harrell Whitfield of Nansemond County.

Mr. Whitfield was loyal to his church although he did not attend in recent years on account of a physical handicap, deafness.

He was quiet and unassuming in his manner, showing his Christian way of life in his everyday dealings with his fellowman.

Therefore:

The members of Holy Neck Congregational Christian Church bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father.

We extend our deepest sympathy to the family and commend them to God for comfort and strength in their bereavement.

TRUITT.

On February 24, 1952, the First Congregational Christian Church, Greensboro, lost one of its most devoted members in the passing of Mr. James Robert Truitt. Mr. Truitt was born in 1871 in the Hines Chapel community of Guilford County and came to Greensboro in the middle nineties. He was a builder by trade; he erected the old First Church as well as the parsonage.

Mr. Truitt was a loyal member of the church; for thirty-five years he served as chairman of the Board of Trustees; he was faithful in looking after the church property. He was always in attendance at the services of his church unless kept away because of sickness. He was a man of deep religious convictions and he was never ashamed to make them known.

In 1896 he was married to Luella Sharp, who survives him. Besides the widow, he is survived by two sons, L. O. Truitt, and Sam Truitt, one daughter, Mrs. Guy Burtner; three grandchildren and three great grandchildren; one sister, Mrs. J. R. Foster, and one brother, W. B. Truitt. Funeral services were conducted February 26 by his pastor, W. E. Wiseman. Burial took place in Guilford Memorial Cemetery.

HOWELL.

The Members of Holy Neck Congregational Christian Church wish to pay tribute to the memory of Miss Cordell (Dell) Barnes Howell who departed this life on March 6, 1952. She was a faithful and loyal member until fifteen years ago, she moved to South Norfolk to reside with her sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas E. Gregory.

She was the daughter of the late Samuel and Mrs. Cora Haslette Howell.

Her life was characterized by the virtues of kindness, humility, friendliness, self-sacrifice, and devotion to those whose lives were touched by hers, especially her immediate family.

Therefore, be it resolved:

That we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, and even though we shall miss her presence we feel that she has entered into a more abundant life.

The CHURCH At Work on the HOME FRONT

The works of Christ through His Church are manifold. Here we visualize a precious life being brought in the arms of a parent and dedicated to God. And again a group of people gather to burn a note of indebtedness on their church parsonage. These scenes from Greensboro and Winchester are typical of the many acts of devotion and the evidences of achievement among our churches. The infant and the adult have a part in the nurture, work, and worship of the Church. The building of homes and churches is climaxed by the building of character. We think that we build not only for time but for eternity.

NUMBER 21

The Expanding Task of The Church

CONSTRUCTION OF THE PARISH HOUSE, SOUTHERN PINES, N. C.

During the census decade 1940-1950 the people of the United States increased by a number equal to the total population of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, and New York City.

The rapidity of expansion of our population has confounded all the experts. It has forced a re-thinking of America's future—a re-thinking which is as radical as the reconsideration of military strategy required by the atomic bomb, or the review of foreign missions policy necessitated by the eviction of missionaries from China. Twenty years ago the experts were forecasting that by 1960 the population of the United States would have reached virtual stability. It is now apparent that by 1960 a new and terrific spurt will barely have started.

The Census Bureau estimates that during the current decade, ending in 1959, our population will increase by nearly 30 million. This is roughly equivalent to the total 1950 population of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota.

The task, then, simply stated, is that of establishing and strengthening the church where the people of America now are. In new communities—and in older communities suddenly transformed by the swift growth of population—the currents of American life and its future are running most strong. Here are children and young people. Here family life is struggling to maintain its character and integrity. Here, in the midst of the depersonalizing mass-movements of our time, there is a fighting chance of preserving the qualities of authentic community life—with the church as the living heart of it.

The supreme home missionary task of our time—and the supreme opportunity of the Church—has become that of matching the incredible expansive thrust of our nation with an equally dynamic outreach and evangelistic dedication on the part of the Christian fellowship. This is the simple issue—whether or not wide areas of American life will become de-Christianized and paganized by the default of the churches themselves

News Flashes

Dr. William M. Brown, who has been ill for some weeks, is back at his home here, at Elon College, and his condition is reported improved.

Since March 1st the Beverly Hills Church of Burlington has received 14 new members, four by profession of faith and 10 by letters of transfer. During the month of April the average attendance was 66 for the morning worship service.

HOME COMING AT ELK SPUR.

Elk Spur Congregational Christian Church, Fancy Gap (Carroll County), Va., is planning to hold Home Coming Day combined with Memorial Day on Sunday, June 1, 1952. The service will begin at ten-thirty o'clock and will be followed by a picnic lunch on the grounds. An afternoon service will be held at 2:30 o'clock.

All former pastors and friends of the church are invited to attend.

The church has traded pianos and the building is in the process of being painted now.

MOTHERS' DAY BANQUET AT BETHEL (V. VA.) CHURCH.

A delightful evening of fellowship and fun was enjoyed at the Bethel Congregational Church, Elkton, Va., Saturday night, May 10, when the mothers and ladies of the church were honored with a banquet. The occasion was in keeping with Family Week and Mothers' Day. The meal and entertainment were successfully planned and all work done by the men. The pastor, Rev. S. E. Madren, acted as master of ceremonies. The hour was opened with the singing of the Doxology. A. A. Dofflemeyer, of Richmond, Va., gave the Invocation. The menu and arrangements were a complete surprise to the mothers and ladies. Mrs. D. F. Dofflemeyer, the oldest mother present, was presented a corsage.

There was special recognition of visitors and guests present. This was the first occasion of this kind for honoring the mothers of the church, and everything was done to see that they enjoyed an evening of fellowship together with their families. Many expressed the desire to make this an annual event of the church. There were about 150 present.

THE BEVERLY HILLS SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Our Sunday school at Beverly Mills has shown a steady increase over the past two and one-half months. In order to take care of our needs we have four classes in operation. They are the Beginners, Primaries, Juniors and Jr. Highs, and the Young People and Adults. We hope in the near future that we will be able to divide our Juniors and Jr. Highs as well as the Young People and Adults. By making some reasonable changes at our church we can now take care of five classes by using the church auditorium.

In order to meet the needs of the pre-school age children for our Sunday school and church service a room was built in the basement of the parsonage. During the Sunday school hour this room is used for the children up to six years of age and then during the church hour the room is used as a nursery. This addition has been a tremendous help to both our Sunday school and church. This room only took about one-fourth of our space in the parsonage basement so we still will have sufficient room for the various social functions that the church might like to have. The men of our church did the work in building this room. They worked each night for a week in completing it.

The Sunday school is making excellent progress under the leadership of Mr. James L. Faulkner, Jr. We feel sure that this organization of our church will continue to show much growth. The teachers for our Sunday school are: Beginners—Mrs. T. A. Vincent, Mrs. J. O. Flynt; Primaries—Mrs. J. L. Faulkner, Jr.; Juniors—Mrs. Raymond Sinner; Adults—Mrs. W. P. Browning and Mr. Zeb Lynch. Mr. D. R. Fonville is the guest teacher for the Adult Class on the fifth Sunday.

THE WINDSOR PARISH.

The Windsor young people served a spaghetti supper April 24, and the proceeds will go to erect a sign with the name of our church, so people will know that it is a Congregational Christian Church. So many tourists take it to be an Episcopal Church or a Catholic Chapel.

The Antioch Church held a family night with covered dish supper in the Windsor community house last Friday night. I showed the film strip "Holiday of Harvest" and several short strips for the children. The Antioch Christian Church will celebrate the 100th anniversary of the present structure on this Sunday (May 18) at the same time we will have Home-coming and Memorial services. All day meeting and dinner on the grounds. Antioch is the Mother of four churches—viz., Windsor, Mt. Carmel, Isle of Wight, and Collossee Baptist Church. Former ministers and their families are to be on the program.

The Bethlehem young people met with the Windsor young people on May 11 and the Bethlehem youth presented the program. A delightful supper was served by the ladies of the Windsor Church.

The Rev. Raymond Grissom assisted me in a revival meeting at Isle of Wight the week of April 27-May 2. A good attendance each night—a large number of re-consecrations. Seven boys and girls united with the church. These young people were all members of the Junior Class. This shows the work of their good teacher, Mrs. A. C. Dillon.

The Mount Carmel Church will hold its Family Night on May 13, in the Woodman's Hall at Walters. The pastor and family will present a short skit, "Family Religion."

Mt. Carmel is still raising money to build a parsonage to be used when

Waverly Friends Honor the McCauleys

THE McCAULEYS AND THEIR NEW CAR

“Words fail us to adequately express our feelings in a time like this, so for the family I will say ‘Thank you,’ and pray that we may be more worthy servants in the future.” The above words of appreciation by Rev. Joseph McCauley, pastor of the Christian Church at Waverly, Virginia, were spoken following the formal presentation to the McCauleys of a new 1952 Ford, Fordomatic automobile by friends and members of his church.

On December 27, 1951, the McCauleys were in an automobile accident near Raleigh, North Carolina. Mr. McCauley was rather severely injured and his car was almost completely demolished. Members of his church had prior to that decided that the pastor and his family should have a new car, but after the accident they thought such a move still more imperative though it might be some time before he would be able to drive. Thus, the original idea was that his parish churches, Centerville, Spring Hill and Waverly, would give the car, but other friends in the town of Waverly wanted a part, so it ended as a community affair.

The presentation was made on April 13, just after church service. The picture above shows the car, the minister and his family, and several friends who participated in the presentation.

Mr. McCauley, when he learned of the plans, said he was more than surprised after the so many unusually generous things had been done for his family already during the year.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

$2,500,000.00

An organization for the Two and one-half Million Dollar campaign was effected at Elon College on Monday of last week. The representative group present evidenced interest and confidence in the campaign. The organization will be extended and the solicitations completed by June, 1953. This campaign, although ambitious, is urgently needed to keep Elon in the line of progress. Godspeed to the campaign.

Mission at Fayetteville

Members of The Mission Board met at the Eutaw Church in Fayetteville on Monday and Tuesday of last week. The Board was royally entertained by the host church. A number of Home Mission projects were reviewed and appropriations made. Every church can help the Board accelerate its work by forwarding its Easter Offering for Missions as an over and above gift.

A Great Partnership

Mrs. W. E. Wisseman reported at Durham that our National Board of Home Missions has made grants to churches within the Southern Convention totaling $123,531.64, and loans of $81,705.74. Total grants and loans are $205,237.38.

The Board of Home Missions works in close cooperation with our Mission Board. Joint enterprises are under constant development. This happy relationship is the fruit of our Congregational Christian Merger. All this, we believe, is but a prelude to a greater era in Home Missions.

God's Gift of Summer

Now is the time to begin planning your summer schedule or vacation. Vacation and vocation may go hand in hand. There are multiplied opportunities for education and recreation. The summer should yield great spiritual dividends for young and old in our churches. The series of camps and conferences for our children and young people should head the agenda for many of us. Wholesome friendships and transforming experiences are in the offing. A new crop of churchmen will be developed.

The summer choir school has brought a new day to many musicians and churches. Those who have had the opportunity of a formal musical education may receive concentrated instruction under expert leadership. Ministers whose musical training has been neglected may receive valuable guidance. Choir schools will be held this summer at nearby Lake Junaluska, Montreal, Lynchburg College, and Salem College. Why not send your minister or choir director?

The use of audio-visual materials in Bible teaching will be the theme of the Ninth International Workshop in Audio-Visual Education at Green Lake, Wisconsin, August 31-September 5. The Bible emphasis, it was explained by the Rev. Howard Tower, was planned to coincide with the September publications of the Revised Standard Version of the Holy Bible. They will take up such topics as whether Bible stories should be visualized in Biblical or present-day settings; how audio-visual materials can be used in Bible teaching and training Bible teachers; and how distributors and librarians can increase church use of Biblical subject material, he explained.

The Bible and Bible teaching will also be the theme of a regional workshop at Southwestern University, Georgetown, Texas, July 14-18. The Texas meeting is one of a series of eight regional workshops, a new program that has been described as "the most comprehensive and adequate audio-visual training program in the history of the church."

With four new workshops established this summer, Dr. Tower explained, effective audio-visual training is now available for the first time to every church and religious organization in the country.

A Layman's Church

By REV. FRANK E. RATZELL, Pastor
First Church, Asheville, N. C.

The Christian Church was founded by a layman. Those who took up the work where he laid it down, and spread the Christian message around the world, were laymen. For well over a hundred years after its founding there were no clergymen in the church as a professional and separate class. Those early Christians had revolted against clericalism, against priestcraft; and they were determined to be their own priests.

But as the church grew, certain men arose who by nature and belief were out of sympathy with the pure democracy enjoyed by the early church. They had been given responsibility, were elected as servants of the people in various capacities, but it was no great step for them to move the attitude of service to the attitude of authority and dominance. Thus, by the end of the third century, the church was firmly in the grip of a priestly hierarchy and the layman's power had all but disappeared. The common people who had once ruled their organization no longer had anything to say in its affairs. They did what they were told on pain of excommunication.

Some thousand years later, Martin Luther and others broke the grip of the hierarchy and restored the doctrine of "the priesthood of all believers." It was Luther's heretical belief that neither church nor clergy had a right to stand between a man and his God. This effort to restore the church and to reform the abuses that had grown up under the Roman Catholic system produced amazing results. When men's minds were freed of religious fears and superstitions, the stage was set for that great intellectual and social advance which eventuated in the present Western culture.

The Reformation was principally a layman's movement. Once more the driving zeal of the primitive church was let loose in the world. The church belonged again to the people. The free churches on the Continent and in the British Isles, of which ours was one, were primarily conceived and carried forward by the people. Among the tiny band of courageous souls who landed at Plymouth there was no professional clergyman, although they had had such a leader before they left their homeland.

It has been an underlying purpose of our church and other Protestant denominations to retain the Christian movement as it was in the beginning. While we do have professional clergymen, they are regarded as spiritual guides rather than as masters. Our concept of the church as a free organization owned and operated by the people and led by spiritual guides chosen by itself has much to commend it, though in some matters it may appear inefficient. It does not operate as smoothly as those churches which are ruled from the top down, in a military fashion; but it inspires and encourages individual initiative and enterprise. It stimulates thinking and gives to any members who will work a sphere of action and influence. And best of all, it trains people in the high art of living harmoniously together, in teaming up for the common welfare. In the Protestant scheme, the layman is not a pawn in an ecclesiastical chess game; he is the player.

This system places a great weight of responsibility upon the layman. If he understands his place in the church, he comes to see that the success or failure of the enterprise depends upon his willingness or unwillingness to be his own priest. If he is of the type of mind which wants to put the responsibility for his immortal soul in the care of the professional clergyman, he makes a very poor Protestant. More than likely, he will follow the same idea in his life as a citizen, being willing to stay away from the polls while others bear his obligation; and being content to have his country run by professional politicians who will "take care" of him.

There is something frightening about being responsible for your own salvation. It is to be "worked out in fear and trembling." There is something even more staggering in the knowledge that as a layman of the church you are responsible for a share in the building of the Kingdom of God. When Jesus walked by the shores of Galilee and said to Peter and the others, "Come with me," he did what he continues to do now through the church. The real churchman is responding to that call, "Follow me!" And so, we who have yoked ourselves with this church have not merely joined an organization; we have become part of a movement. We have taken upon ourselves the responsibility of Christianizing that part of the world which is within the sphere of our influence. We have children and young folk we must train in the Christian Way. We have a community which needs the service we can give. In the words of the old hymn, we must "brighten the corner" where we are.

The layman, therefore, is a minister, according to the Protestant view. And in strictest terms the clergyman is himself a layman who has been set aside by the people to devote himself to the learning and the teaching of the Christian life. In recent years we have been drifting again towards the dangerous notion that responsibility for the Kingdom and the church should be entirely in the hands of professionals, and ministers have been obliged to take more and more responsibility upon themselves to save the churches because laymen were unaware of or unwilling to assume their own high calling. That trend must be stopped or the freedom we cherish will slip away from us and we may find ourselves again under the heel of religious, political and economic dictatorship. Religious freedom is the first freedom, the freedom from which all other freedoms derive their ideals and their powers; and that religious freedom depends utterly upon an alert, responsible and devoted laity. The church is God's, to be sure. But there is a real sense in which it is also ours. Without us there can be no church at all.

We believe, then, that our church approximates, as nearly as is feasible and practicable, the church of the first century in its organizational pattern and in its concept of its purpose. This being so, the burden that was upon Peter and James and John, and the other disciples, becomes our burden. They were laymen who were canonized. They were made saints by their grateful descendants. They revolutionized the world. And there were only a dozen of them! We come up now to stand in their places because the job is not finished. That job is the layman's job. A layman was given the Keys of the Kingdom!

But where does our ministry lie? Where is the field of operations? We cannot all preach. We may have no ability as teachers. We are not all fitted to be deacons or qualified as trustees. We do not all have beauti-

The Late Rev. W. Stanley Carne Eulogized at Special Service

A sorrowing congregation gathered at the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Virginia, on Friday, April 4, for the funeral services of its pastor, the Reverend W. Stanley Carne, who passed away suddenly at his home in Portsmouth, April 1, 1952, after which the body was taken to Gorham, Maine, where appropriate services were held Sunday, April 6.

The funeral services in Portsmouth were led by Dr. W. T. Scott, who read from the Old Testament. The Rev. J. Everette Neese read scripture from the New Testament. The funeral prayer was offered by the Rev. C. W. Grepp, pastor of the Highland Park Baptist Church. A male quartette, members of the church choir, sang—"O God, Our Help in Ages Past."

Deacons from both the First Christian and Mt. Zion, Church, at Eclipse, served as pallbearers.

Large delegations from both the Portsmouth Ministerial Association and the Eastern Virginia Ministers' Association were in attendance. There were also delegations from the Kiwanis Club and Inter-Club Council of Portsmouth, in both of which Mr. Carne had been most active.

Left to mourn their loss are the bereaved widow, two sons, Homer Clait Carne of Paris, Maine, Lt. Lloyd Stanley Carne, Hunter Air Base, Savannah, Ga., two daughters, Mrs. Glenn H. Rudisill of Dumont, N. J., Mrs. George J. Poole, who flew here from Quito, Equador, South America, and eight grandchildren. Three sisters live in Devon, England.

Dr. I. W. Johnson read the following:

TRIBUTE TO MR. CARNE.

Rev. William Stanley Carne came to the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, to serve as pastor well recommended and properly avouched for. After serving for nearly five years, he passed to his reward. He also served Mt. Zion Church at Eclipse. It was my happy privilege to meet him soon after he came to this charge. An acquaintance ripened into a friendship which had been strengthened by a real fellowship of kindred spirits. The news of his unexpected death, after a brief illness, brought sorrow to the ministers of our Conference and to his many friends among the laymen of our church.

He came into our midst as a stranger in a strange land. It is not easy for all ministers to adjust themselves to such a change in environment and fellowship. Ministers usually make an attempt to adjust themselves by an effort to bring other people into their way of thinking and lead them to accept the new minister's methods of administration. Mr. Carne had the good sense and the gracious liberality of spirit to adjust himself instead of trying to require his church and congregation to discard all their methods and customs and accept his way of life and work. This did not mean that there were no changes and readjustments, but it meant that harmony and cooperation between the pastor and his people was an outstanding spirit of this pastoral relation.

This adaptability was possible because of his wide experience. He served as pastor of several important charges—including Spokane, Seattle and Leavenworth, Washington for five years; Gorham, Maine, thirteen years, Moody Church, Northfield, Mass., nine years, Elizazethtown, N. Y., six years. The importance of these charges indicated not only his adaptability, but his versatility as a pastor and preacher of the Word.

In trying to summarize his qualities, as a man and a minister, one should begin by saying—

1. He was a man of God. He was a Christian gentleman. He had a gracious personality which beamed with friendliness and goodwill. He was clean and chaste in his speech. His friends will long remember his smiling face and cordial greetings. His every day life was so filled with the grace of God that one was compelled to think of him as a man who felt and lived as though he belonged to God.

2. He was a real minister of the Gospel. Preaching the Word was a great joy to his soul. In the pulpit and out of it, his manner of life witnessed to his consecration and sincerity of heart. His sermons gave evidence of careful and prayerful preparation. He was a combination of ministerial dignity and humility; of profound meditation and clearness of speech; of spiritual devotion and human sympathy. As a hobby he delighted to study the starry heavens through his telescope; but his greatest joy was to think God's thoughts after him—in terms of God's redeeming love for a lost humanity. And his spiritual vision of the kingdom of God revealed to his searching mind and his warm heart the hidden secrets of that inner life hid with Christ in God.

3. He was faithful to the kingdom of God. This included, of course, loyalty and faithfulness to his church and denomination. Faithfulness to the kingdom includes faithfulness in the lesser realms of human relations. The family, friends, the local church, the Conference, the Convention, and all the larger general interests of the kingdom swing into the circle of a faithful minister's life and work.

His brethren in the ministry have been enriched by his life and example. We have gained much because he has lived and toiled in our midst. We shall miss his gracious greetings, his friendly approach, his cordial manner and his words of good cheer and encouragement.

We look away from our own sorrow, today, and think of him as greeting the glories of the heavenly life with the same cheerful smile.

He believed that God called him to be a minister, and in answer to that conviction, his conception of his duty involved the surrender of his life, with all his talents, to work for and to serve the Kingdom of God. The supreme duty for him was faithfulness and fidelity in responding to the will of God, with steadfast faith and unflinching devotion.

4. He was a faithful and devoted

PREAMBLE TO THE REPORT OF PRESIDENT SMITH TO THE CONVENTION.

In directing our attention to the necessity of Christian education in a changing age it is well that we remind ourselves of certain historical facts and evident trends in the field of higher education today. Seventy-five to one hundred years ago a dual system of education obtained in European countries as it obtains in our country at present. What we mean by a dual system of education is our land grant or tax supported institutions and our privately endowed or church-related colleges. In Europe as the state multiplied its support it naturally increased its authority over the state supported colleges. This continued through the years until eventually practically all of the privately endowed or church-related colleges disappeared from the scene. Germany and Russia are conspicuous examples. These conditions created a Hitler, a Stalin and others.

Fifty or seventy-five years ago in America all leading denominations had their academies or institutes to which children of high school age were sent for training. At that time, if not before, these denominations also started their colleges and opened their doors for the training of the young people of the homes of their churches and other young people, guaranteeing to them opportunities in the field of higher education under moral and religious influences. The state with tax money, began to build a system of secondary education for all young people of high school age. The public school system has grown, the academies and institutes have disappeared and the state holds undisputed pre-eminence in the field of secondary education up to the college level. Our dual system of education in America is in the twilight of the eclipse that descended upon higher education in Europe a half century and more ago. The state and the federal governments are constantly and decisively increasing their appropriation for the support of higher education in this country and resultantly and eventually will increase its authority over the entire curriculum of higher education in our country.

Beyond question the privately endowed college has made a significant contribution to the development of our resources, human and material. They have been the sustaining source of American democracy. They have contributed significantly to the American way of life and to freedom in every field of human endeavor. It would be a dark and dismal day should the force and contribution of these institutions pass from the field of higher education and the total training of our young people fall into the hands of the state to become dominated by unscrupulous politicians.

The time has come, the day is here, when the church with its resources, and in its passion for the truth and spiritual might, must dedicate itself to the cause of Christian higher education anew, and serve notice that with its resources and by the Grace of God it will assure to the present

CRADLE ROLL PROGRAM.

Mrs. Carl Wallace, Cradle Roll Superintendent of the Southern Convention Women, has sent to each society an excellent program for use by the Cradle Roll Department for a "party." I suspect that she did not have the name of the cradle roll superintendents in the local societies, but that the programs were sent to the society presidents. In that case, their first obligation will be to see that the program is passed on to the cradle roll superintendent immediately.

The program is divided into three parts. The first part is for the children who are one, two and three years old. The second part is for the children above three years of age and their parents. The third part is for parents and teachers. This division is excellent, but the use of the program will require careful planning. Perhaps some of the young people can be enlisted to care for the children while the parents and teachers have their important discussion. In most churches it is only once a year that the cradle roll children and their parents come together. It is important that we make that event a most meaningful occasion for both groups.

Mrs. Wallace makes one request: that you let her know whether or not you have this party, how you carry out the program, and what response you have from the children and the parents. Mrs. Wallace, in turn, needs to send this information to our National Children's Secretary, Miss Grace Storms. She cannot do this reporting she is supposed to do, unless you let her know what happens in your society. Please cooperate by using the program, and by reporting on its use.

* * * * *

HOW DO YOU RAISE MONEY?

Mrs. Richard Jackson suggests that it would be fine to have detailed reports on ways in which societies raise money for missions. She was much impressed by the leaflet "Grace of Giving" which was in the packet, and thinks that wide use should be made of it.

Has any group used an "Unseen Guest Meal," "Missionary Tea," or some interesting sacrificial, or educational method of raising money for missionary work? We hope so, and we hope you will send in an account of it for publication on this page.

Stewardship is an important phase of Christian living—in fact, some would say it is Christian living. How is your society promoting the idea of Christian stewardship? Share your ideas with us. Thanks!

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Mrs. Carl Wallace, our Convention Cradle Roll Superintendent has sent out a planned party program for the 1, 2 and 3 year olds. In case you did not receive one, here is a part of the program. Mrs. Wallace is very anxious to hear if you hold a party, what you do and how. Please write to her at RFD 1, Louisburg, N. C. She is anxious to pass on information to Miss Grace Storms, our national Children's Secretary. I feel that we would like to have the Southern Convention report to be good—so have fun and report it! (Please remember, this is only part of the program).

THEME: Parents and Teacher Planning for Religious Nature.

A Teacher: I am your child's teacher—One day a mother said to me: "I haven't taught my children any religion at all. When do you think I should begin?" Whether we are conscious of it or not, children are learning constantly; and this mother had been teaching her children religion all of their lives, for religion is caught as much as it is taught. Everything that takes place in a little child's day may have religious value if it is interpreted to him in the proper way.

Since the home exerts the greatest influence in the life of any child, it is here that the greatest amount of teaching is done. The church nursery and cradle roll, with their weekly sessions and limited time can only supplement the home teaching, but when there is cooperation between the home and the church, each may greatly help the other.

Religious growth is part of all growth; we cannot think of it as separate thing that comes at a time apart. For example, a child best learns that God has planned our world as he watches flowers grow or leaves turn beautiful colors, or as he helps to care for growing things. Those experiences help him to understand the meaning of the idea because he has the experience and does not just hear about it.

That is one reason why the home is the best place for a small child's religious guidance. There are so many opportunities for it there! However, the nursery class can help by providing special experiences, or by repeating familiar experiences in a somewhat different way.

By the time that a child is three years old, he usually has found that books may contain interesting stories. We cannot often read directly from the Bible to these little children, but there are ways in which we can begin with them to build up an appreciation of the Bible and a recognition of it as a special book. These ways can be used in the home as well as in the nursery class.

The home, like the nursery class, needs to let the children see the Bible used often and reverently by adults. Above all, grown people will show what the Bible means to them when they show the Christian kindness and helpfulness and love that is taught in the Bible. Children should be helped to live according to the Bible principles of being kind to one another, of sharing, of being thoughtful; they should be guided to want to care for pets in the spirit which is described in the Bible. Taken from Parents and Teachers Planning for Religious Nature by Eva B. McCollum.)

A Parent: I am your pupil's parent—May I share this story with you?

A Sunday school teacher was dreaming. You say there is nothing strange about that. Teachers dream often and sometimes their dreams are nightmares. This dream was different because Jesus was a part of that dream. He was standing before this teacher with his arms outstretched and an eager look in his eyes.

"Where are the souls of my children?" He asked the teacher.

"Here are their bodies," the teacher was able to reply. "They come to school very regularly and promptly."

Jesus took their bodies in his hands, and, lo! they turned to dust before the teacher's eyes.

"Where are the souls of my children?" Christ insisted.

"Here are their manners, faltered the teacher. "They are quiet and very respectful; they listen very carefully. Indeed, they are beautifully behaved."

Jesus took their manners, and they also turned to ashes in his hands.

Again the Lord repeated his question, "Where are the souls of my children?"

"I can give you their brains," the teacher answered. "They can name all the books of the Bible, forward and backward; they can repeat the list of the Hebrew kings. They know in order the seventy events in your life here on earth and they can recite the Sermon on the Mount from the beginning to end. Really they are excellent scholars."

Jesus took their brains, and, lo! they dissolved into vapor with sorrowful longing.

Then the teacher was filled with an agony that broke the bonds of slumber.

"Alas!" cried the teacher, "I have done much for my children; but it is all as nothing, because I have not done the one thing needful. Henceforth, my teaching, though it traverse many ways shall have the one goal, and perhaps it will be given me to dream that dream again." (Taken from Christ and the Fine Arts.)

We shall find help in understanding how to direct the religious guidance of little children if we will study carefully the method used by Jesus in his teaching. He did not seat people formally in rows or circles in a classroom while he lectured. He took advantage of every opportunity for religious teaching. Most of those opportunities were informal; they came in the midst of living.

Jesus' illustrations were drawn from the common things of life; his stories dealt with experiences that were familiar to his listeners. He told stories about shepherds and their sheep, about people who traveled on roads over which his listeners traveled. He spoke of the birds, the flowers of the fields, the seed that the farmer scattered, stones, the fig tree, the grapevine, the whole outdoor world.

Jesus led his listeners to do the things about which they learned. The disciples were not merely to watch him and listen to him; they were to help others as they learned. Those who heard his teachings about good ways of living were to "go and do likewise."

Nursery teachers, like parents, should try to follow Jesus' example. They guide the religious growth of children by means of the experiences they enable the children to have and by genuine interest in the children.

LET'S GO CAMPING.

JUNIOR HIGH CAMP.

Junior High Camp is just two weeks from now. Some of you haven't had this kind of experience before and are counting the days until June 1. You may have heard from different ones the things that happen at camp—swim periods, hikes, fun nights, vespers, special guests from other parts of the world, interesting classes and lots more. Whatever else I and others might tell you could never really express our past experiences. You will find for yourself that a week at Crabtree will perhaps mean more to you than anything you've ever done. Others that read this announcement will have been to Crabtree before, and I know you're anxious for the first week of June to get here. I welcome you all and want to know of you.

Here are some of the things for you to remember: Be sure to bring three blankets! You will need one to sleep on as a mattress and two for covering. (It can be cool early in the summer.) I think it would be a good idea to bring your raincoat along. A flashlight can come in handy when you're walking around at night. And don't forget these things: sheets, pillow, pillow case, towels, toilet articles, bathing suit, musical instrument, camp clothes, your Bible, pencil and notebook. Oh yes, pack a few post cards so you can write home. You know that there is registrations at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon. Because of cooking facilities at camp and help, we must ask you to bring a picnic supper. The camp will furnish drinks. The last meal for everyone is breakfast Saturday morning, June 7.

If you have any questions, write to me at Elon College. If you know of any young people in your church who haven't made up their minds yet about coming to Crabtree? Tell them there is still room for a few more campers. Send in your application at once to Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Elon College, North Carolina. And so until I see you at camp, remember to think seriously about what you want to get out of our week together and what you can do to make this the finest Junior High Camp ever.

BAXTER TWIDDY.

CAMP FOR JUNIORS.

Already applications are coming in for the Junior Camp at Crabtree State Park (on Route 1, Cary, N. C. between Raleigh and Durham). The camp is for Juniors (9, 10, 11 years old). We have room only for 60—so get your application in early.

Camp will begin with a picnic supper (and we are sorry to have to ask you to bring your own sandwiches). The camp will furnish the drinks. This is June 8, and camp will close with breakfast on June 12. There will be Bible study, supervised swimming, hikes, recreation and crafts.

No mattresses will be provided by the camp, so if you want to sleep comfortably, bring along a cot mattress or some good thick blankets.

You'll like Jose Dabuet from the Philippines and Timothy Chang from China—who will be two of the counselors. You'll enjoy learning new songs, hiking through the woods but most of all you'll like comradeship with counselors and fellow campers.

So—don't delay—get your application in right away.

RICHARD L. JACKSON.

RELAX WITH MAX.

You folks having exams along now too? Or maybe you are lucky and have finished yours. It's a good feeling, isn't it, to get your report card saying you have passed. Wonder if our churches sent out report cards how many of us would pass?

Joe: "Say, Moe, how're you feelin' today?"

fits most from his nursery experience when the teachers and parents work together closely. During the year, you and the teacher will find it helpful to talk together occasionally about your child's growth, how your joint plans are working out, and the like. These conferences may be suggested by those who feel a need for them. Be ready to help the teachers and expect them to help you.

Benediction: Dear Heavenly Father, as parents, teachers, and pupils alike, we look to Thee. We are all children of Thine and in Thy plan we know that those who are older people have always taught those who are younger. We accept our responsibility this day. Have mercy upon us and help us. Show us the simplicity and wisdom Jesus used in his ministry here on earth, that we too may lead Thy little ones into the paths of righteousness. Together may we understand Thee better; magnify Thee more; and seek Thy living presence through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

(If time permits it would be helpful for parents and teachers to have about fifteen minutes for questions and discussion. Teachers could show materials they use in the nursery or cradle roll classes and suggest ways in which parents might help. Parents might like to suggest ways that their children could be helped through the church.)

PREAMBLE TO THE REPORT OF PRESIDENT SMITH.

generation of young people, and the generations yet to come, the preservation of the type of education that has made its contributions, not only to the cause of education, but to the Cause of Christ as well, and made for freedom in all walks of life. The church must show these young people that these schools shall not pass from the field of higher education but shall endure to serve for all time.

These are facts and trends that we of the Southern Convention must face and should consider in all seriousness. Sixty-three years ago, with a love for their church, with a passion for the coming of the Kingdom of God, and with a determination to provide proper facilities for the training of the youth of our church and others, they arose and, out of their comparative poverty, put their meager offerings on the altar and built for our church in that far away day a institution of higher learning. We are confronted today with the questions: Do we realize what they did? Have we considered what these acts of devotion and sacrifice have meant to our church, its growth, its development, its future? Are we, in our comparative financial ease, in comparison to their comparative poverty willing and ready to give out of our abundance that the institution founded in faith and poverty may be given its needed financial and spiritual support, that it may embark anew on the high mission that was determined for it by its founders?

It is imperative that the denominations in our country sponsoring church-related colleges increase their economic support of these colleges. We of the Southern Convention cannot begin to estimate the total contribution of Elon College to our church, its institutions, boards, and departments. Increased interest and increased financial support are mandatory that the college may continue its services so necessary to the life and progress of our denomination.

During these more than sixty years Elon College has had its financial difficulties as well as its material successes. Through want and plenty it has persevered and today it takes its place in the fore-front in the field of Christian higher education together with other small privately endowed colleges in this country.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Last year we had a good football team. From the start it was a winning team, and it kept up this winning streak until the last two games. In these two games Elon was defeated miserably. January, February, March and April—funds for the college on apportionment came in at a most encouraging rate. We were made to feel that a new interest in the college had possessed our people and that we were on the way for steady support of the college. Like our football team, contributions have hit a new low. Instead of "over and above" one would feel that the offerings are "under and beneath." Perhaps we are just taking a little breathing spell and will come out of the slump and hit again our usual pace in support of our college.

Too frequently we make our contributions not as an act of worship or an expression of any particular interest, but simply because we have been taught that we should give and when the opportunity presents itself we usually give. It matters not where I am attending church or for what the offering is to go, but I always feel better when I have contributed. This perhaps is all right, but our contributions would be more meaningful if we give for specific things because we believe in these things and realize that they need support. When an object of personal interest is in need our contributions will be more generous and we shall find greater joy in giving.

Beyond question the founders of Elon College felt the need of an institution of higher learning. They gave not only what they could spare but they gave at times when they could not spare the gift, but they gave just the same. As a result of this interested and sacrificial giving we have Elon College, a great institution—an institution that has rendered to the church far more benefit than it ever received from the church. Elon College gives necessary and continued support to the church from which it receives support. Each is dependent upon the other and together they make contributions not only for the continuance but for the progress of the church. Elon College would not exist were it not for the privilege of supporting the church, nor could it exist without the support of the church.

CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY DEDICATED IN JAPAN.

Messages of greetings and congratulations from church and secular leaders in the United States to the new International Christian University in Japan on the occasion of the dedication of its grounds and buildings, April 29, are being received in Tokyo through President Hachiro Yuasa.

Excerpts from some of the scores of communications follow:

The Rt. Rev. Henry K. Sherrill, president of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A. writes: "It is indeed a pleasure to be able to send you and your fellow workers the warmest possible greetings on the occasion of this great step in the life of Christianity both in the United States and in Japan. I pray that God will bless you and the University abundantly in the important years which lie ahead."

Dr. John R. Mott, honorary president of the World Council of Churches, cabled his "heartiest congratulations on the most auspicious development in greater Japan." Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam wired: "Methodism rejoices in University's achievements." The Foreign Mission Board of the National Baptist Convention, U. S. A., Inc., through the Revs. C. C. Adams, secretary, and Marshall L. Shepard, chairman, notes that "this dedication opens a new chapter in World Christian Community. We pledge our prayers and support for continued progress."

John Foster Dulles, chief architect of the Japanese peace treaty, expresses that "this dedication is a significant occasion. The Christian spirit played a large part in preventing the Japanese peace being dominated by evil emotions. That spirit can, and I am confident will, continue to play a great part in developing permanent good will and friendship between our peoples. Let us do what we can to promote it."

Denominational support of the University is evidenced by these messages to Dr. Yuasa:

"On the occasion of your ceremony of dedication we wish you grace, peace, and joy, and we pray that God's blessing may be upon you as you advance into a future bright with promise," says the Rev. Douglas Horton, General Secretary of the Congregational Christian Churches. The Rev. B. M. Luben, Field Secretary, Board of Foreign Missions of

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

CHRIST'S STANDARD OF MORAL PURITY.

LESSON IX—JUNE 1, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: Thou shalt not commit adultery.—Exodus 20:14.

LESSON: Exodus 20:14; Matthew 5:27-32; Mark 10:2-9.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ephesians 5:1-10.

This is a hard lesson to teach. That is, if one teaches the truth, and teaches it in love. For it is concerned with adultery, impurity, and divorce, and heaven knows something needs to be said about these sins, ancient and modern. In the Sunday school class there may be the children of divorced parents—one does not want to break their hearts. Or there are children whose parents have taken their marriage vows all too lightly—their feelings should be regarded. There will probably be men and women who are divorced persons—they need to be dealt with wisely and well. And of course there are the wise and sophisticated folks, the younger generation, who know all about Reno, and who share the views of many moderns who regard marriage as a civil contract, rather than a divine sacrament. One must speak to all these folks, frankly, fearlessly, and yet wisely and well, and above all in the spirit of Christ. Let the teacher teach the truth, but let him teach it in love.

Safeguarding the Foundations of Life.

“Thou shalt not commit adultery.” In any set of “rules” governing the life of society, that commandment had to be there. It is absolutely essential to the welfare and even the stability of the life of society, that the sanctity or sacredness of the married relationships be safeguarded. It did not take mankind long to see the importance of this. And the Jews made the penalty for unfaithfulness to the marriage vow as expressed in adultery death for both the adulterer, and the adulteress! That seems harsh, but so much depended in Old Testament times upon the unity of the family.

Family life is sacred. The relationship between husband and wife must not be violated by either one.

Adultery is a sin against the individuals concerned, against children, against the family, against society, against God himself. So written here in “the basic rules for living” stands this Seventh Commandment, with no arguments, no compromise—a strict and sober prohibition against unfaithfulness as expressed in adultery. The Commandment has never been repealed. It is still God’s word on this subject.

The Letter of the Law and the Spirit of the Law.

“It was said, Thou shalt not commit adultery; but I say unto you that whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart.” Here again Jesus took the Commandment and filled it with new meaning. One could commit adultery not only by the overt or secret act, but by thought. A man standing on the street corner, passing a remark about a woman passing by, or even thinking impure thoughts about her, was guilty of adultery by the standards of Jesus. He made the thought equal to the deed. An impure desire in the mind or heart may be adultery just as much as going to a house of prostitution, or as illicit relationships outside the marriage bonds or where married persons are concerned. How searching are the standards of Jesus! How exacting are his demands concerning purity!

Drastic Treatment for Deadly Diseases.

“If thy right eye causeth thee to stumble, pluck it out, cut off your right hand, if it causes you to stumble” said Jesus. It is significant that these words follow closely Jesus’ words about impurity. They are not to be taken literally, of course. What Jesus is saying is that even though a thing is as dear to one as an eye or a hand, it must be given up, if it keeps him from being pure, or if it keeps him from being his best. Strait is the way that leads to life. Discipline is demanded. Effort is required. Eternal vigilance is the price of the soul.

A Champion of Woman.

The words of Jesus concerning divorce in Matthew are more than a prohibition of divorce as practiced in that day; they are a manifesto in behalf of the rights of women. Divorce was easy in that day, easy for a man. He could get a divorce on the flimsiest grounds—almost anything was grounds for divorce if he wanted one. But not so with a woman; she could not get a divorce—she had no rights in the matter. Jesus condemned the whole system. He refused to condone the double standard of morals. Women had rights as did men. They had the same rights as men.

To be sure Jesus said more than this. He said that if a man put away his wife for any cause except impurity, and then married another woman, he committed adultery. It would appear that Jesus did not recognize any grounds for divorce except adultery. Marriage was so sacred that it must be preserved at all costs, if possible. One thing is sure—Jesus would never approve of many grounds on which divorce is secured today. Nor would he approve of the remarriage of many divorcees. There is, to be sure, much difference of opinion among people, and even among scholars, as to just how far one can take Jesus literally in this matter. But our modern world has certainly taken Jesus too liberally and too loosely concerning this vital matter.

The Principle of Accommodation.

“For the hardness of heart he wrote you this commandment.” The scribes and Pharisees called the attention of Jesus to the fact that Moses permitted divorce. Jesus did not deny it. But he said it was not the divine or the original ideal. From the beginning God had ordained that under a love stronger than, because different from the love of child for parent, a young man or a young woman would leave their own home and their own homeland, and give themselves to each other. And their marriage was more than a civil contract or the establishment of a practical partnership in establishing a home. It was the union of two lives the fusing of two personalities. The two became one flesh. And what God had joined together, man was not to part asunder. Here was what might be called the principle of accommodation. But our modern world has carried this principle of accommodation too far. The number of divorces in America is alarming, and the grounds of some of these divorcees are amazing. (Continued on page 15.)

A LAYMAN'S CHURCH.

ful voices to grace the choir. But you will remember that illuminating parable of the talents in which Jesus praised the men who invested what they had and showed a return. You will recall, too, that the fellow who had but one talent thought so little of its value that he went out and buried it, showing no profit whatever for himself or his lord. The point is that God has created no one in whom he has not planted the seed of some ability, and that he expects a return on his investment. No matter how humble in our eyes our talent may seem to be, we are bound to invest it for all it is worth, or else lose it altogether. Somewhere in this grand scheme of God's for the making of a decent world there is a place and a function for us all—and that is our ministry, whether it is preaching or sweeping floors.

By this reasoning, also, our daily work becomes our "calling." The church cannot take hold of government, or of society anywhere, except through the ministry of its members where they live and work. We are constantly touching the lives of others, and that is the Christian's point of contact with the world. The best sermons ever preached were preached by persons who may have said not a word, but who by the influence of genuine Christian personality wrought a miracle of transformation in the mind and the life of someone who needed God. To become aware of this high call is to discover in yourself a tremendous release of energy, of thought and of love. You find yourself caught up in an enthusiasm which somehow sets your life in proper order, puts all values in their right places, and peels away your cover of shyness like bad paint blisters in the sun. You realize talents you never knew you had, and thus being delivered from the bondage of self-conceit and self-aggrandizement you "come to yourself," you find a happiness you never dreamed possible, you are—to use the traditional term—saved. Your churchmanship, then, become no burden, but a blessed privilege.

True, this being a minister in the church of God is a serious and often sober responsibility and we may feel, or should feel humbly unworthy of it. But to feel unworthy is to be worthy. No one who felt equal to this task ever was. But no man ever did something worth while for his faith or his church who did not in the doing feel himself yoked to the eternal purposes of God, and also that he had somehow laid a good, solid stone in the timeless temple not made by hands. There is a daring in it, a thrill that lifts one completely out of himself, so that he can feel his soul stretch and grow. . . .

We are "ministers of his that do his pleasure," and what a surprising revelation that is! We have in our keeping, we and all genuinely Christian churches, the ideals, the principles and the means to bring in to all areas of human affairs that reformation which can topple every tyranny and bring peace at home and abroad.

So, whether you are rearing a brood of babies, or laboring at a desk, or driving a truck, or whatever you do—remember that in you and through you Jesus Christ must say something that will bring a new life to men; that you as a layman in the noble tradition of the church have a mission to spread about you an idea, an ideal, and a great hope, knowing for a certainty that in thus giving your life you shall find it and keep it forever.

REV. W. STANLEY CARNE.

pastor. Many ministers are tempted to leave the arduous duties and demands of the pastoral relation and take up other fields of service, less exacting and more profitable in terms of financial reward. Not so with Brother Carne. He was first and last a minister with a love for the pastoral work. He loved the work of an under-shepherd. All the way from the pulpit ministrations to the comfort of some troubled soul in private counsel, he was a faithful and devoted pastor. In that respect as in many others, he followed the example of his Lord and Saviour. His people loved him and welcomed him into their homes. He loved his people and that is a fundamental must for any man who desires to succeed as a pastor. No minister can hope to succeed, as a minister, unless he is willing to be a faithful and devoted pastor. That work cannot be delegated to others without loss of spiritual power.

His brethren in the ministry have been enriched by his devoted life and worthy example. We have gained much because he has lived and labored among us. We shall miss him. We shall cherish his memory in our hearts. We look to the future with greater faith inspired in our hearts by his integrity of character.

Today we think of him as entering into the joys of the spirit world with the same cheerful smile with which he greeted his friends here. What a joy to enter the home of the redeemed where friendships are not broken by sad farewells, and where there are no tears, no night and no misunderstandings.

This fragmentary summary is inadequate in scope and content. Love never can find words to express deep devotion. Words fail us on this occasion. But the life of our friend and brother speaks more eloquently than any verbal tribute we can express. His ears cannot hear our praise and his voiceless lips cannot return thanks for our love and friendship. But we sincerely offer this small tribute to this man of God—to this worthy minister of the Gospel—to this faithful servant of the Kingdom of God—to this beloved and devoted pastor—with sincere gratitude to God for giving him unto our church and to this community.

To the family we express the sincere sympathy of our ministers and our churches in this bereavement. You can give thanks to God for giving such a worthy companion to you. The memories of the yesterdays will be a rich blessing to you. Yours is a rich heritage. The church has sustained a great loss by his home going. You are bereaved by the death of a man you loved. Your highest tribute to him can be expressed by carrying on the work he loved so well.

The servant has passed on to be with the Master. Surely the Lord has already said to him: "Thou hast been a good and faithful servant. Thou hast been faithful in a few things. I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." That kind of a home-going was so happy for him that, but for our personal loss—we might well rejoice with him. He is not far away from us, although present with the Lord. We should remember that our Lord said—"Lo, I am with you always—even to the end of the world. Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." A crown and not a tombstone—a beautiful home—not a casket—a heavenly fellowship—not a voiceless tomb—is the final reward for the man of God. We rest our weary hearts by leaning upon the precious promises of his word.

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Thank you for the good report. How eagerly we watch the mails to get the Southern Convention office's report each week showing how much has come in from our Sunday schools that week. This time, as you see, it was $219.83, from eleven Sunday schools. What we would do without these monthly Sunday school offerings I do not know. Give the people a chance each month to make a small donation for these children. They will give something, and you will have placed yourself in the category of those who have "remembered the widows and their orphans."

Janet Beers is graduating May 29th from the Elon High School. She is our only one this year. Send her your congratulations, and a little gift if you would like to do so. Thank you.

Jerry Wilkins is over his case of measles, and Janis Spicer and Margaret Simpson are wrestling with it right now. They are doing all right. They are both in the program we are presenting, and we shall have to bring their understudies into service.

Last Sunday we presented our program at three churches to enthusiastic congregations, and had two delightful "dinners." First of those three churches was Antioch (C), which by the way, was one of my student-days pastorates; from there we went to Christian Chapel for dinner and gave our program in the afternoon; and from there we went to Moore Union Church for supper and gave our program at the evening hour. Rev. George M. Tally is pastor of Christian Chapel and Moore Union. He gave us a very hearty welcome and made out visit to his churches most enjoyable. The children were disappointed that Rev. Clay Farrell, pastor of Antioch, was unable to be present as he had an appointment at another one of his churches. The people enjoy these attractive children and the program they present is a credit to any group of children. Miss Foster is in charge of the program.

Visit the Orphanage. See the children. Become acquainted with the seven matrons. They are your own church helpers, since the Orphanage is yours. They deserve your recognition and cooperation and friendship. Visit the Orphanage, and see Mr. Wagoner, the man that "boys look for when they return to their old "home." He has worked for the church by working for the Orphanage boys and girls for 28 years. Give him a word of appreciation. See Garner Hilliard who runs the dairy and works with a number of boys who help him. See Hilliard's 39 Holstein cows, and the other cattle—55 head in all. Tell him you appreciate the service he is rendering the church. He was reared here, and every person on this campus respects him greatly. He is another one whom "boys" look for when they return here.

This is your institution, your gifts have made it possible, your support keeps it serving little children, your money pays the workers. Get a group together in your Sunday school and church, pack a lunch, and visit us. See the improvements being made, the crops being sown, and the children being reared, trained, and educated; and then offer a prayer for these little fellows and the folks who daily guide their lives. We'll be mighty happy to see you.

DARDEN.

Mrs. Sallie Matilda Darden died April 19, 1952, after a short illness. She was a loyal member of Bethlehem Congregational Christian Church.

She unselfishly gave of her time and service to others. As she entered her eternal home she must have heard our Saviour say "Well done thou good and faithful servant."

Therefore, be it resolved:

That we bow in humble submission to the will of him who doeth all things well, and that we follow her example of going about doing good.

HODGES.

Mrs. W. F. Hodges departed this life after a long illness on March 16, 1952. We the members of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Rosemont Congregational Christian Church, wish to express our deep sense of loss in the passing of a beloved member, and submit the following resolutions of respect.

Therefore, be it resolved:

That we record our sincere appreciation of her pleasant fellowship and bow in humble submission to the will of our Father in heaven.

That we express our sincere sympathy to the family and commend them to the loving favor of our Lord Jesus Christ.

- Mrs. O. S. MILLS,
  - Mrs. H. R. MORRISON,
  - Mrs. M. K. HASSELL,
- Committee.

CUTCHIN.

We, the members of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Rosemont Congregational Christian Church, wish to express our deep sense of loss in the passing of a beloved member, Mrs. J. N. Cutchin, lovingly known as "Aunt Tolly," who departed this life January 2, 1952.

Her life was characterized by the virtues of friendliness, a kindly smile, warm hand-clasp, and deep interest in the welfare of all around her, and a constant zeal for the world missions of the church.

Therefore, be it resolved:

That in the loss of a dearly beloved member who suffered long and patiently, yet with an unfaltering trust in God, we bow in humble submission to his will.

That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family and commend them to the great Comforter who said "Let not your hearts be troubled."

- Mrs. O. S. MILLS,
  - Mrs. H. R. MORRISON,
  - Mrs. M. K. HASSELL,
- Committee.

UNIVERSITY DEDICATED.

the Reformed Church in America, adds: "Our prayer for the University is that it may be a strong arm of the church for teaching of the cardinal doctrines of the faith in the friendly and dynamic atmosphere of evangelical Christianity, and for the skilled training of young people who shall dedicate themselves in the high service of Christ and his Kingdom in Japan."

The Rev. Reuben E. Nelson, General Secretary, American Baptist Convention, asserts that "we know that as long as time lasts blessings will flow to the ends of the earth because of the vision and service of the University to a rising generation of leadership which in turn will multiply the blessings of Christian thought in generations to come."

Dr. L. W. Goebel, President, Evangelical and Reformed Church, says "we count it a very high privilege to have had a small share in the planning of your so highly significant institution. Coupled with our good wishes is the confident hope that through the establishment of this school, the bonds which now unite the followers of Christ throughout the world may be strengthened."

Mrs. Douglas Horton, vice-president of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A. and a former president of Wellesley College, sums up most of the greetings sent to Dr. Yuasa this way:

"The satisfaction which some of us have in supporting this venture grows out of the realization that we are cooperating with you who know Japan so well to accomplish something which you believe needs to be done. The establishment of a Christian University anywhere is a difficult but rewarding responsibility. To establish it on the international base which is characteristic of your university and in a non-Christian country is a more difficult and, I suspect, more rewarding assignment. . . . I am very happy to join your many friends in America in expressing our confidence in your ability to lead your colleagues in this truly exciting adventure in education and in international good will."

ing, to say nothing of amusing, if it were not for the tragedy involved.

A Covenant, Not a Contract.

Underlying all that Jesus said concerning marriage, was the basic fact that he regarded marriage as a covenant, and not merely a contract. It was of God. It had God's sanction. It was one of God's best gifts to man. It was safeguarded by God's commands. And it had God's blessing upon it.

A Great and Glorious Adventure.

It is one of life's most serious adventures. Think of all that is involved when two personalities come together to live in intimacy through all the years of their lives! Here are wrapped up tremendous possibilities for weal or for woe. Young people do not think seriously enough about it, or plan wisely enough for it, or work patiently enough at it. But it can be one of life's greatest and grandest adventures. And for thousands and millions of us, with all its limitations and adjustments, home life is the nearest thing on earth to heaven itself.

New Witnesses in The Philippines

Rev. and Mrs. Paul Furnas Pruitt of Anacortes, Washington, newly appointed young Congregational Christian career missionaries to the Philippine Islands by the American Board, were commissioned on May 14, in the Plymouth Congregational Church of Seattle, Washington. Mr. Pruitt has served as pastor of the Pilgrim Congregational Church in Anacortes, Washington, since 1948.

The Pruitts and their year old daughter expect to sail for their new work in the Philippine Islands in late summer or early fall. They will be stationed at Davao on the island of Mindanao, where Mr. Pruitt will serve with the Davao District Filipino churches specializing in youth work and counseling with the Filipino pastors. Here Dr. Frank Laubach began his great missionary career.

Mrs. Pruitt will use her nurse's training at Brokenshire Memorial Hospital at Davao.

The sermon at the Commissioning Service was preached by Dr. Dwight L. Gart, minister of Plymouth Congregational Church, Seattle. Dr. Archie Hook, Minister and Superintendent of the Congregational Christian Churches in the State of Washington, made the Commissioning Prayer.

The Pruitts later will attend the General Council in Claremont, at which time they take part in a Consecration Service for new missionaries conducted by the American Board.

Born in Shelton, Nebraska, 29 years ago, Mr. Pruitt is the son of Rev. and Mrs. R. W. Pruitt, now of 231 North Maple, Colville, Washington, where Mr. Pruitt is pastor of the First Congregational Church.

The Beverly Hills Church wants to not only meet the needs of its own members but also the needs of the people of its community regardless of denomination. About one-half of these boys and girls are members of our Sunday school. This group sings for all our special services and they participate in our regular services as

PRE-COUNCIL SPIRITUAL LIFE MISSION.

Three sessions of "worship, meditation and witness," will precede the official opening of the Biennial Meeting of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches assembling at Claremont, California, June 18 to 25. This Spiritual Life Mission will be under the general leadership of Dr. John S. Whale, distinguished English Christian educator and author, and a group of leading American Congregational Christian clergy. "We plan to deal, not with the mechanics of a denomination, but the dynamics of a faith," says Dr. Wofford C. Timmons of New York City, Executive of the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life of the Congregational Christian Churches and in general charge of this pre-session conference.

One of the highlights will be a Sunrise Service, Wednesday morning, June 18, at 7:00 a. m., led by Rev. Elden H. Mills of West Hartford, Connecticut, a bass-baritone concert and radio artist who gave up a career in grand opera to go into the Christian ministry.

A new sense of mission and a revitalizing of faith to meet the problems of today is the basis of the Spiritual Life Mission and the Committee in charge, of which Rev. Harold G. Jones of Claremont, California, is the leading figure, will begin at 4:00 p. m., Tuesday, June 17, and run through Wednesday noon, June 18.

It is planned that there will be formed from this mission 15 prayer groups which will continue to meet whenever possible through the week of Council meetings that follow.

Dr. Whale, right now Professor of Christian Theology at Drew University in New Jersey, was born in Cornwall, England, and educated at Oxford University, Cambridge University and holds an honorary D.D. from Glasgow University.

After serving in the ministry of Bowdon Downs Congregational Church in Manchester, England, he became Mackennal Professor of Ecclesiastical History in Mansfield College, Oxford, until he took over the Presidency of Cheshunt College in Cambridge in 1933.

In 1943 he became Head Master of Mill Hill School where he continued until he came to Drew University last year.

Theologian, preacher and broadcaster, Dr. Whale is the author of several books, the more recent being, "Facing the Facts" and "Christian Doctrine." He was Moderator of the Free Church Federal Council of England and Wales in 1941-42 and War-rack Lecturer in the Universities of Aberdeen and Glasgow in 1944.

Other Congregational Christian churchmen who will be leaders at this Spiritual Life Mission are: Dr. Albert J. Penner of New York City, Minister of historic Broadway Tabernacle; Rev. Howard James Conn of Minneapolis, Minnesota; Rev. Elden H. Mills, West Hartford, Connecticut; Dr. Albert Buckner Coe of Boston, Mass., President of the Massachusetts Congregational Conference and Missionary Society; Dr. Roy L. Minich of Malden, Mass., and Rev. Dwight L. Cart of Seattle, Washington.

Authentic Notes in the Chorus of Church Union

Although the chorus of Church Union has not yet reached a crescendo, the tempo of the movement is increasing. Denominational bodies are experiencing a deep searching of heart. Manifestations of widespread concern abound.

Dr. Kenneth Scott Latourette, president of the American (Northern) Baptist Convention, and noted professor of Missions at Yale University, went down to speak at the Southern Baptist Convention in Miami during May. He said Christians the world over are realizing their essential unity and are learning to have fellowship with each other in prayer, planning and action. He went on to say to the Southern Baptists: "I, for one, believe in adventuring with Christians of other denominations in exploring fresh ways to the unity in love of all Christians." This is indeed a word in season.

Our readers will be interested in this current announcement from the New York Times:

"In a concrete effort to expand its interdenominational character and to promote the spirit of Christian unity, New York's famed Riverside Church will affiliate in the fall with the New York City Congregational Church Association.

"At the same time it will maintain its historic and long-standing connections with the American Baptist Convention and the Southern New York Baptist Association.

"Announcement of the plan was made recently by the Rev. Dr. Robert J. McCracken, pastor of Riverside since the retirement of the Rev. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick in 1946.

"For many years Riverside has welcomed churchgoers from all denominations without requiring baptism by immersion as a prerequisite to membership. As a result, more than thirty denominations are represented on the church rolls.

"Three years ago a special committee was appointed to explore the possibility of affiliating with other denominations while at the same time continuing Riverside's connection with the Baptist churches."

The Church Council of the Evangelical Lutheran Church will recommend at its twentieth general convention, June 4-10, that it adopt proposals paving the way for merger of the five church bodies associated in the American Lutheran Conference.

The Evangelical Lutheran Church will be the first group to take action on three resolutions suggested in a report on the spiritual basis of proposed merger. The report was prepared by the 45-member official joint union committee, consisting of nine members each from the Evangelical Lutheran Church, American Lutheran Church, Augustana Lutheran Church, Lutheran Free Church, and United Evangelical Lutheran Church.

The resolutions ask the five churches to approve the committee's statements of agreement regarding doctrines and practice, and authorize further progress toward union.

Described as a "united testimony" on the faith, life and practice of the five church bodies, the committee's report is divided into two parts. The first section concerns God, the atonement, the means of grace (the word and the sacraments), justification, sanctification and the church. The second section deals with liturgical trends, lay activities, elements in the Lord's Supper, Christian liberty, evangelism and spiritual and church fellowship.

The committee said it had made a careful study of the confessional paragraphs of the constitution and articles of incorporation of the five bodies and that it "can discern in them no obstacle to union."

The proposed five-way union will mark the first crossing of nationalistic lines in a Lutheran church merger, the bodies involved having backgrounds in Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Germany. If the merger is consummated it will create the largest Lutheran Church in America, with nearly 2,150,000 members. The United Lutheran Church in America has somewhat better than 2,000,000 members and the Lutheran Church—Missouri Synod about 1,750,000.

St. Paul and the World Church

By REV. WALTON W. RANKIN, D. D.

That St. Paul was "ecumenically-minded" is a point which needs no laboring. In contrast with the group at Jerusalem under James and with the Palestinian Jewish Christians, generally, who failed to grasp the essential point that Christ's message was for the whole world, Paul had a world view which transcended racial, cultural and religious barriers. There were a number of reasons for this. To begin with, Paul was a Roman citizen. This in itself was a broadening influence, for Roman citizenship implied membership in a vast community—virtually the civilized world. The world outside the empire was regarded as barbaric. The empire filled the vision and served as the reality of "one world." Again, Paul was a traveler, and travel to the receptive soul, is both inspiring and educational. Paul's outlook was wide. He aspired to go to Spain and to preach the gospel there. There are conjectures that he visited England. If time had been spared him he would have gone to the farthest parts of the earth.

The universality of the Roman Empire was for Paul a fortunate circumstance. It interacted with his vision of the gospel as a universal gospel, a gospel for all men and races, all lands and kindreds, and tongues. The word "ecumenical" as we use it today expresses the deep consciousness of oneness across national, racial and cultural barriers that arises from a common loyalty to Jesus Christ as Lord. The Greek word "oikome" goes back to oikos, house, or household, or dwelling, and in its wider understanding the word "oikoumene" had come to signify the whole inhabited world. For Paul the gospel of Christ was by its nature as world-wide as the empire, and just as Paul saw at Rome, people of many races and lands, mingling together as a single entity under one head, he envisioned the Church as embracing all peoples and all the churches in one great united body. His idea of how the Church was to serve in the world was well expressed by a later writer, the nameless author of the Epistle to Diognetus:

"What the soul is in the body, that are the Christians in the world. For the soul holds the body together, and Christians hold the world together.

This illustrious position has been assigned to them of God, which it were unlawful of them ever to forsake."

Ecumenical Perspective of Paul.

That Paul knew the power which swept over the Church at the day of Pentecost—appropriately called the birthday of the Church—needs no arguing. "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto me unto the uttermost parts of the earth." (Acts 1:8). In this saying of the risen Lord, we should accent the word "power." This power descended on Paul as well as on those who were "all with one accord in one place" on the day of Pentecost. Luke, the companion of Paul, writing the Acts of the Apostles, catches from Paul, on the one hand, the sense of power generated by the Spirit, and, on the other, the quality of universality of Christ's gospel. It is not by chance that Luke does not neglect to give us the list of nationalities of those present on the day of Pentecost. We should be greatly the loser without that list! This list is not merely a catalog of names giving us a miniature textbook on geography; it is a token of the ecumenical perspective which had already come upon both Paul and Luke. In this picture of the Church as the family of God (consisting—note well!—not only of nationalities within but also without the Roman empire) praising God in the language of the whole world, we are presented with an image of that future age in which the whole world shall praise God in all its various tongues.

The Pentecostal gift was a rich gift, a new creation of the heart. Paul had it in an eminent degree. It moved him to seek to evangelize the world, to preach the gospel of Christ to all nations. For him the great thing was to preach Christ. So that Christ was preached he was not careful about nice distinctions. He wanted to bridge the gulf between Jews and Christians, he wanted all the world to enjoy the benefits of Christ and his gospel. Here again, in contrast with his Palestinian Jewish friends, he was not held up from making his missionary journeys or evangelizing people by considerations of orthodoxy or ceremony. Something of Paul's spirit was caught by the London Missionary Society, ideal and design to be "not to send when, in 1795, it declared its noble Presbyterians, Episcopalians, or any form of church government (about which there may be differences of opinion among serious persons) but the glorious gospel of the blessed God to the heathen, and that it shall be left (as it ought to be left) to the minds of the persons whom God may call to the fellowship of his Son from among them, to assume for themselves such forms of church government as to them shall appear most agreeable to the word of God."

Paul, the great interpreter of the mind of Christ, had early come to an understanding and appreciation of Christ's high priestly prayer, "That they may all be one; as thou, Father art in me, and I in Thee. Thus we see that for Paul, the work of Jesus Christ, the completion of his redemption, was that the Father's unity with the incarnate son had become a unity wherein the whole human race which believed in the Son, was one with the Father. In order to express this unity Paul uses the figure of the body. The unity of the body is like the unity of Christ with those who believe in him, namely, the Church. In the Epistle to the Romans he speaks of Christ's followers as "one body in Christ," and in the first Epistle to the Corinthians he dwells at length on the body.

Independence or Unity?

A well-known story of Roman history, with which Paul may have been familiar, refers to the body politic of the Roman state in much the same way as Paul here refers to the body of Christ. In 494 B. C. when the plebeians seceded from Rome, an envoy from the city persuaded the rebellious group to return to their allegiance by telling them of how once upon a time the members of the body had a grievance against the belly because it "did nothing but enjoy what they bestowed on it." They struck work, but soon found that in starving the belly they were really starving themselves. Which made it clear to the revolutionists that even the patrician order (i.e., the belly) nourished the other classes of society and was not merely nourished by them. The lesson here to the Church in our day is a most pointed one. There are still groups of Christians which persist in thinking of themselves as too good for their neighbors.

This kind of spiritual arrogance in

Mrs. Bradford, the former Miss Jennie Willis Atkinson, was born and reared on the edge of the Elon campus, and many friends welcomed her back for commencement.

THE CASE OF THE INDEPENDENT COLLEGE.

The plight of the privately endowed or independent college in this country becomes more complicated. It would seem that there are individuals in high political positions who are determined that the entire educational program of this country from the grade school through the university shall be under the complete control of the state. There is pending a bill before Congress entitled "Veterans Readjustment Assistance Act of 1952," which provides that all veteran's assistance shall be paid in a "lump sum" to the university to be used by the veteran only in technical or trade schools. This would manifestly be unfair to the veteran. Not all veterans are interested in technical or trade schools. Should he elect to attend a liberal arts college he would not receive benefits under the G I Bill, and would have to pay his own way. The veteran should be privileged to choose his school. Certainly, our government will allow that much of democratic freedom.

The bill, if enacted, would certainly be unfair to the liberal arts colleges of our country. This would mean that the government drafts its students and potential students for military service, thus depriving the privately endowed colleges of this privilege, and then to set up barriers that would virtually prevent their return to our independent colleges for training for life.

This bill, if enacted, would be unfair to the citizens of our country. Many of us are interested in the practical and cultural education administered on the campuses of our liberal arts colleges, where at least there is an attempt to make potent a moral and religious atmosphere, hoping thereby to influence the life of the student in moral stamina and character building.

We all pay taxes. The money that is appropriated to veterans comes out of our tax money. In a democracy every citizen has his rights. Fortunately, amendment to the Teague Bill will be offered which would continue the present G I Bill with practically all of its provisions. If the amendment should carry it would be satisfactory to all concerned other than those who are prejudiced against the liberal arts colleges.

The writer has communicated with Congressman Durham, Senators Hoey and Smith, urging their support of the amendment.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

This (last) week is Commencement week. We are closing another college year at Elon. There have been disappointments and occasions for discouragement but as a whole we have had a very excellent year. Indications are that we shall close another year without a deficit in the operating fund. This is an achievement. Thanks to our churches and Sunday schools. They have contributed through the Sustaining Fund, and many more have contributed through Conference Apportionments. We will get along fine with the assistance of our churches and Sunday schools. May I beg of you, however, not to forget the college during the summer months. These are hard months for the college. Faculty salaries are paid on a twelve months basis. Expenses continue through every day of every month. A total of approximately $35,000 monthly is required to meet the bills. It is not necessary for me to say that we need your support.

	E. Va.	Valley	E. N. C.	W. N. C.	N. C. - Va.	Total

Total	$ 35,799	$ 7,672	$ 13,058	$ 8,709	$ 34,562	$ 99,800

2. The Mission Board approached the Finance Committee asking for authority to raise special funds for its Home Mission projects, with the suggestion that an individ- ual might be employed to conduct this solicitation.

It is the considered judgment of the Finance Committee that in view of the finan- cial needs of the total work of the Convention, its Boards and Institutions, a broader base of a program of Christian Stewardship would bring about a more wholesome and continuous response to the need for additional funds than could be realized through any special financial drive or solicitation.

Accordingly, provision is made in the budget recommended for the 1952-54 biennium for the employment of a Stewardship and Evangelism Secretary. We believe that such a step by the Convention now is imperative and would result in new Christian vitality and increasing giving.

3. We recommend an Annual Operating Budget of $27,500 effective January 1, 1953, for Convention Leadership, Promotion, Stewardship and Evangelism Secretary, and the Convention Office, to be administered by the Executive Board of the Conven- tion.

Proposed sources of income:

Convention Fund	$ 23,000
Board of Christian Education	4,500
Total	$ 27,500

4. Proposed Annual Budget for The Christian Sun for the coming biennium:

Printing The Christian Sun (up to 2,250 copies, 50 issues) . . . . .	$ 9,500
Editor's secretarial expenses . . . . .	600
Editor's travel . . . . .	175
Office expense, for postage . . . . .	175
Addressograph plates, etc., for subscription list . . . . .	45
Printing of notices, envelopes, receipts, etc. . . . .	130
Meetings . . . . .	50
Audit and miscellaneous . . . . .	50
Total for operation . . . . .	$ 10,725

To meet this budget, we believe the following annual resources are available:

Subscription income . . . . .	$ 5,084
Mission subsidy . . . . .	1,000
Orphanage subsidy . . . . .	1,200
Elon College subsidy . . . . .	900
Advertising . . . . .	200
Apportionment . . . . .	2,000
Total estimate (annual) . . . . .	$ 10,000

It is apparent that a $400 operating deficit is present, but it is hoped to compen- sate for that by additional subscriptions.

It is recommended that boards and institutions pay the amounts specified for The Christian Sun and the Operating Budget of the Convention Office in monthly install- ments; and that appropriations from boards and institutions begin January 1, 1953, and run through the fiscal year ending December 31, 1954.

5. Elon College has made commendable progress and advancement in recent years. Its expanding program calls for larger and continued financial support.

We recommend that in addition to an annual Apportionment of $15,000 for Elon College that the Sustaining Fund for Elon College of $1.00 per member per year (ap- proximately $34,000) be continued for the 1952-54 biennium; that the Sustaining Fund be raised during the College Period, and that it constitute a ceiling on special funds to be raised from the church constituency of the Convention for current purposes; that Sustaining Fund contributions continue to be channeled through the Southern Con- vention Office and credited to the churches in a special column of The Annual; that this be a cooperative effort, participated in by the College Administration, the Conven- tion, conferences, churches and church officials; that the Convention appoint a com- mittee to work for the Convention in cooperation with the officials of the organiza- tions named above, to promote the Sustaining Fund plan throughout the Convention; and that, effective immediately, the Convention treasurer pay all Sustaining Fund receipts to Elon College to be used by the College as it sees fit. We recommend that each local church set up a committee to promote the Sustaining Fund.

We further recommend that the Convention approve the request of the Board of Trustees of Elon College to increase the Expansion Program of the College from $2,000,000 to $2,500,000.

6. The Christian Orphanage. We recommend that in addition to an annual ap- portionment of $15,000 for the Christian Orphanage that the Convention authorize the Orphanage to raise during the Orphanage period "An Authorized Special" of $25,000 annually from the Convention constituency for building, rehabilitation and current budget purposes, such "Authorized Special" gifts from Convention churches, organizations and individuals to be channeled through the Southern Convention Office and credited to the churches in a special column of The Annual. We recommend that this "Authorized Special" be a ceiling on special funds to be raised from the church constituency of the Convention for current operations.

We further recommend that the Convention authorize the Christian Orphanage to raise $20,000 per year from non-Convention sources for building rehabilitation pur- poses.

7. The Mission Board. We recommend that in addition to an annual apportionment of $12,500 for Convention Home Missions and Church Extension, the Convention authorize the Mission Board to raise during Mission Period an "Authorized Special" of $25,000 annually for these purposes, such "Authorized Special" gifts to be channeled through the Southern Convention Office and credited to the churches in a special column of The Annual. We recommend that this "Authorized Special" be a ceiling on special funds to be raised from the church constituency of the Convention for current operation. We also recommend an "Authorized Special" of $7,500 for Foreign Missions.

8. We recommend that all churches be urged to raise their Missions and Benevolent Funds by securing subscriptions for their entire Conference Apportionments. Churches which do not raise their entire apportionments by means of subscriptions should receive a special Offering for Missions at Easter, a special Thanksgiving Offering for the Orphanage, a special Christmas Offering for Ministerial Relief, and a special Offering for Elon College during the College Period. Until the regular contributions are sufficient to meet apportionments, churches should seek to raise the apportionments in full by seeking special gifts from individuals.

9. We recommend the continuance of the present plan of regular monthly offerings for Missions and the Orphanage, and the Fifth Sunday Offering for Elon College, to be taken by the Sunday Schools, until the amount of the apportionment for each shall be raised in full, thereafter all benevolent contributions from Sunday Schools should be allotted to the other items of apportionments which have not been raised in full. Contributions from Sunday Schools should be forwarded through the designated channels and credited on the respective Conference Apportionments.

10. We recommend that the Orphanage, the Mission Board and Elon College be authorized to make appeals for contributions, each during the period herein designated, as follows: Elon College—January, February, September and October; Missions—March, April, May and June; Orphanage—November and December; that Communion offerings may be received for Ministerial Relief; and that at Christmas a special offering may be taken for the "Christmas Fund for the Veterans of the Cross," said offering to be forwarded to the Division of Ministerial Relief of the Board of Home Missions, New York, as an emergency fund and extra appropriation to the Sunday Schools and auxiliaries for material or financial gifts at other times than during the periods designated, be discontinued.

11. We recommend that the Board of Christian Education be authorized to appeal for offerings on Children's Day from Sunday Schools, and from individuals during July and August.

We recommend that all funds contributed by churches, church organizations, or by individuals of churches of the Convention, be credited to their churches, be transmitted to the Convention Treasurer through the Convention Office; that the Convention Office report such gifts to the Secretary of the Conference in which the local church holds membership; and that each local church secretary be furnished with a report of all funds sent from his church for Convention enterprises, together with the balances due.

12. During the past biennium several churches have followed the practice of sending contributions to the Convention Office with the request that they be distributed proportionately to all apportionment items. We commend these churches in this practice and recommend it to all the churches of the Convention for their favorable consideration.

6. That those who have attended this Convention resolve in our hearts to strive more diligently to make real the unity of our fellowship, to strengthen the churches of our Convention so they may become the best it is possible for them to be, and that we do this for the honor of Christ.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

PERSONS AND PROPERTY.

LESSON X—JUNE 8, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: Thou shalt not steal.—Exodus 20: 15.

LESSON: Exodus 20: 15; Luke 16: 1-12.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Amos 5: 6-15.

The Eighth Commandment "Thou shalt not steal" is somewhat surprising on two counts: Where it stands in the Commandments, and What it says. Let us take a look at these strange things.

The Sixth Commandment says, "Human life is sacred—thou shalt not kill." The Seventh Commandment says "Family life is sacred—thou shalt not commit adultery." The Eighth Commandment says "Property is sacred—thou shalt not steal" Here it is closely tied up with the other two Commandments, putting the sanctity of possessions right along with the sanctity of life and home! It belongs there. Like life itself property is indispensable to train human beings into true children of God. In a sense, no man can realize his personality without possessions. Religion must be interested in things, because of their relation to persons and to character.

Then in the second place, it is surprising to some people that this Commandment is in the "Rules for Living" at all. They do not believe in the right of private property. And they are not all Communists either, living in Russia or other Communist countries. There are many people in America who seemingly think that private property has no rights, and that it is wrong. There is no justification in either the Old Testament or in the New Testament, including the words of Jesus, to support this view. From first to last the Bible accepts private property as a right, and safeguards it with fundamental laws. "Thou shalt not steal" is simply a summary of the safeguards which the Bible puts around the rights and sanctity of private property. Any laws against property were concerned with the method of getting and of using property. The Scriptures recognize three ways of getting property: by gift, by honest toil, and by theft. The first two are approved; the third is condemned everywhere and always.

The Letter of the Law.

"Thou shalt not steal." There stands the law, solid and stubborn. One can readily see how basic it is to the life of society. What kind of world would it be indeed if property rights were not sacred and respected? Suppose a man, any man, could come into your home or in your place of business or on your farm, and take anything he wanted when he wanted it! It would not make any difference whether he took it when you were not looking or not. Nor would it make any difference whether he took little or much. Society could not long endure if property rights were not respected and protected. It is a sad commentary on human nature that we have to have locks and safes and high fences and even armed guards to keep people from taking things, by stealth or by force. There are of course, some men and women who would never take anything from a bank for instance, if no accounting was ever made. But human nature has not developed to the point where we can do away with protection of property. Nor is it fair to human nature to subject it to undue temptations. You and I have no right to take another man's possessions, "without right, authority, or permission"—thus does Webster define stealing.

The Spirit of the Law.

As usual, the words of Jesus are searching and sobering words, and go beyond and beneath the letter of the law. Stealing takes on new breadth and comprehensiveness in the light of his ideals and spirit. It is stealing, of course, for the Collector of Internal Revenue to misappropriate funds which the taxpayers have sent in, but it is also stealing for the taxpayer to falsify his income tax. It is stealing for a man to pay his employees an inadequate or unfair wage, or to withhold wages, but it is also stealing when an employee does not give a good day's work to his employer. It is stealing when a parent takes his child on a half-fare ticket when the child is past the half-fare age. It is stealing when a manufacturer puts shoddy material in his products and sells them as genuine. A lot of souvenir hunting is plain stealing. The fact is, it is very difficult to be scrupulously honest in our modern world.

Perhaps a word should be said about gambling. Space forbids an extended treatment of this subject, and a dogmatic statement must be made. Gambling is stealing according to New Testament standards and principles. It is a giant evil in our land today, not only in terms of the legalized and also the under-world sense, but in the widespread prevalence of gambling in so many ways which people do not regard as gambling, or as being wrong at all.

Principles of Stewardship.

The second part of today's lesson is one of the many parables which Jesus told—sixteen of his thirty-eight parables dealt with money or material goods—to emphasize the principle of stewardship. It is the story of a man, who when detected in the misappropriation of funds or materials entrusted to him, resorted to the shrewd plan of making friends by settling with the debtors of his master by giving them a big discount. It should be understood that Jesus did not give his approval of the man's trickery. He simply told the story to impress his hearers with the fact that sometimes the people of the world are wiser than the children of light. We spend so much time and energy in making money, we burn ourselves out chasing the dollar, we call on every resource of body and mind, to get things, things that are temporal, and all the while we give little or no heed to the things that are eternal. What Jesus is saying is that those of us who are children of the light or of the Kingdom should give as much diligence in laying up for ourselves treasures in heaven as the worldly man does in laying up for himself treasures on earth.

In conclusion here are the principles of stewardship:

1. God is the owner of all things, the Sovereign Owner of all things.
2. God has given the earth to mankind as a family, and it is therefore family property.
3. Man is a steward of all that he has and is.
4. Man must give an account of his stewardship to God.

 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Thanks so much for the good report this week. The Women's Convention sent us a nice check, five Sunday schools sent us nice checks, and three children's performances netted us $328.87. The Women's Guild of Shelton Memorial sent us a nice check, and some others made contributions bringing us a total for the week of $745.86. Then there were many friends who sent lovely dresses, socks, shirts and other apparel. To all many grateful thanks.

What a fine impression the boys and girls who are going to the churches are making! Jo Ann Black is at her best in the welcome address. Three of our largest girls make a fine playlet showing for the privileges of modern church as compared with the suffering of Christians under the Roman Emperors. Ann Kinch, Virginia Black, and Jeannie Cook are doing this playlet. Jerry Kilkins, as usual, is a star with his speech "God's Plan." Betty Lou Wilson rings the bell, too, when she makes a speech for the church in a piece entitled: "If we all get in and do." Little folks wonder what gifts they can give Jesus, and say so in a most charming way in their playlet entitled: "Our Gifts"; performers in this section of the program are: Betty Jean Proctor, Nancy Wilkins, leaders; and Janis Spicer, Dorothy Spicer, Richard Bridges, Margaret Simpson, and George Morningstar. James Crumpler, my prospective judge, gives the farewell address. Three songs are sung by the entire group. As they sing "Let the Beauty of Jesus be Seen in Me" one feels that the prayer song is being answered. The first Sunday in June this program will be given at Liberty (Vance) 11:00 o'clock, and Mt. Auburn at 3:00.

We are having requests for children for their two weeks vacation. Most of the children are being sponsored through the year by some group or individual. That group or individual naturally has first chance to get the child for vacation. People have been very generous in asking to pay expenses for a child or two at Boy Scout or church camps. This is much appreciated. Some children have to divide their two weeks vacation into a week at one place and the other week at another. We are right now working on the "vacation problem," and hope we can work it out satisfactorily to all. If you are sponsoring a child and have not yet asked for him or her for vacation, and if you want them hurry, because we are receiving many request. For this interest in the personal welfare and training of the child we are most grateful. That is the final test of our efficiency and worth.

Last Sunday when I heard a fine layman, a college graduate (Elon), and a deacon in his church, stand up and tell a large congregation about the fine chance which was given him at the Orphanage, I said to myself uprising in noble manhood are the labors of my predecessor and his fine staff of workers, and the small gifts of more than a thousand people. Let the years tell. And may you be proud of the work you are having a share in doing.

Under her direction the choir has made much progress and adds greatly to our services whenever they participate. We are very grateful for the fine work Mrs. Wilkins is doing with this group.

Recently this Junior group was organized into a Junior Younge People's organization. They meet on the second Friday night of each month. They have a worship service, a business session, and a period of recreation.

We are very proud of this group of boys and girls. They not only mean a lot to our church now, but they will mean even more in years to come.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

We have talked of minister's children but what of missionaries' children? We know some who are grown up and some who are very young like the Jackson three, but recently we have met a full-fledged young lady.

Her name is Mary Emily Wonderly and she was born in Mexico City. Her mother and father were working in the southern tip of Mexico but came to the big Mexican city for her birth. She has a younger brother, Georgie, and a baby brother.

Mary Emily's mother grew up in a white cottage across the street from us. Townspeople say she looked like her little daughter does now. She grew up, married Bill Wonderly and went to Mexico with him where he was making a dictionary of an Indian language to assist in the translation of the Bible into that tongue. So Mary Emily who is in the third grade can think and speak Chiapa, Spanish and English. She is a sweet, attractive, lovely little girl. Missionary children are okay!

Her father belongs to a group known as the Wycliffe Bible Translators. After receiving special training these translators live among primitive peoples in South America and Mexico to help bring them the Bible and the promise of Jesus.

A movie called, "O, For a Thousand Tongues" has been made in technicolor and sound showing some of this work. It isn't altogether lovely (there are beauty spots and funny spots too) but it tells the story of Indians who live in fear, unhealthy conditions and in want.

Mary Emily's mother showed this movie to the children of our school and one little boy remarked "Next time I'm going to jump into the tub, no more dirt for me." Dickey Hoskins saw it and told his mother, "Going to see that movie? Don't know whether you should or not!" But all were agreed that it was a grand thing that our generation can help solve that misery, dirt and heartache.

You may write to the Wycliffe Translators in Chicago for information on their work and about their films. They are asking for prayer warriors—may be you could be one of those.

Soon Mary Emily, her brothers and mother will fly back to Mexico, over the long route, through lovely-colored, steep mountain gorges. We wish them well in this wonderful undertaking for Christ!

ST. PAUL AND THE WORLD CHURCH.

the name of Christ is exactly what Paul had in mind when he wrote:

"If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? . . . But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him. And if they were all one member, where were the body?"

The Church of Christ today is far behind St. Paul in understanding its true role in the world. It is a great tragedy at a time when mankind is turning to religion as never before, seeking an authoritative voice which can guide and direct it on the true path to peace and progress, the Church cannot speak as a body, with a single voice. At a time when scientists, educators, writers, and even military men are confessing that the problems of the world are basically moral and religious, the Church cannot give a unified lead which would turn men aside from the road that leads to the abyss. In a deep sense the Church, or at least certain branches of it, is guilty of the sin of thinking of itself more highly than it ought to think, of turning its back on the kind of humility its Lord taught it, and persisting in the indulgence of a pride which can only lead to disaster.

The world in her disunity is Babel. The Church of unity is the ideal Zion to which peoples of the world should come with bended knees and receive from it salvation and joy. That Paul had read the book of Isaiah and had absorbed its vision, no one can deny.

In the Epistle to the Ephesians we get the climax of Paul's thought about the church, his idea of it as the fulfillment of the eternal purpose of God. In the Epistle are repeated exhortations to unity, and it is evident that Paul can never be happy with a divided church. But in Ephesians Paul is thinking about fundamentals. He believes that the plan of the world in the mind of God was to reunite all things in Christ. Paul thinks of Christ as the central principle of existence. In this respect there is a contemporary value in the Epistle which is unique. The theme selected for the second assembly of the World Council of Churches will deal with Jesus Christ as Lord, as the only hope of both the Church and the world. What deeper ground of hope can there be than to conceive of Christ as representing the ultimate values, as standing for the inner meaning of the world? "All this visible creation exists not for its own sake but in order to unfold that divine purpose which was manifested in Christ." So Paul thinks, which is another way of saying that he believes the world was created for spiritual ends. And the Church as the body of Christ is the means or instrument by which God is bringing things into harmony.

This indeed is the highest ground we can reach in our thought of Christ and his Church. Ephesians is the great teacher of unity. Paul's achievement was in creating one Church in which the Jewish-Gentile division was bridged. Paul's Church, in which all the elect of God are so joined together in Christ that they depend upon him as their one head, have a unity through their living by one faith, one hope, and one charity. They are made truly one through the one divine Spirit. And they are called not only to one inheritance of eternal life but also to the sharing of one God and Christ. Such a Church has never been destroyed despite the divisions of which Church history speaks. Perhaps this Church has been small in number, perhaps it has been larger than we think.

In the formation of the World Council of Churches there has been re-affirmed in our day the determination that the Church across the world shall not permanently be divided, that the time has come for real effort toward unity, not on the basis of uniformity, but on the principle of "diversities of gifts but the same spirit," under the figure of the body, of which Christ is the head, "from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love." (Eph. IV, 16).

SPOTLIGHT on AFRICA.

THE CHURCH AT ADAM'S COLLEGE, ADAM, SOUTH AFRICA

The relation of Christianity to rapidly changing racial, political and social conditions in Africa, south of the Sahara, will be the basic theme of a special conference being called by the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A., at Wittenberg College, Springfield, Ohio, June 16 to 25.

Sponsored by the National Council's Africa Committee, the conference is said to be the most widely representative gathering on Africa held in North America during the past decade.

Representatives of 30 major Protestant denominations and seven African governments, along with delegates from the United Nations and the U. S. State Department are expected to attend. At least 40 delegates will be Africans, many of whom are being sent by churches, governments and private organizations.

A Call issued to the 400 delegates to the "North American Assembly on African Affairs," states that with 21 million professed Christians in Africa, the continent contains a "larger body of Christians than is to be found in all the rest of the so-called non-Christian world." It continues: "If Communism or secularism or other godless-isms win in Africa, it will be simply because Christians have failed in simple, practical living of their religion. For to Africans, Christianity is in many respects the natural and fulfilling religion of their future."

Dr. Emory Ross, executive secretary of the African Committee, said that "since Africa remains the last strong-hold to join the modern world, a thorough examination of its problems, especially as related to the Christian message, is of unprecedented importance."

"With such a tremendous stake in Africa's life, Christians need to come to grips with the vast, swiftly moving changes sweeping the Dark Continent," he said, "and to realistically apply the principles of the Christian Gospel to the life of its more than 160,000,000 people."

Four documents will be presented to the assembly for discussion and action: a study of economic, social, political and racial phases of African life made by the Hartford Seminary Foundation; a study of the missionary work in India under both foreign and independent rule and its significance to the Christian enterprise in Africa; a summary of a survey made of 150 missionaries and Africans; and a study of Islam in Africa and the Near East.

A basic objective of the assembly will be to "stimulate action . . . to shape policies and procedures more in line with the changing needs and conditions in Africa."

Men in Readiness for Church Canvass

Laymen and Minister, Rev. Joe A. French, at Lanett, Alabama

After a week of training in stewardship, these men went canvassing for pledges to cover the current budget and the building fund. The congregation responded favorably and pledged $9,500 for the annual budget and $18,000 for the building fund.

Offerings? Oh yes, during the month of April alone offerings for the building fund amounted to $909.36, and regular offerings to $713.00.

One explanation of the fine stewardship response in this church is the fact that it has approximately 125 tithers. Can you beat that?

News Flashes

W. N. C. LAYMEN TO MEET.

The Western North Carolina Laymen will have their regular meeting June 28 at the Ramseur Town Hall. The Missionary Society of Pleasant Ridge Church will prepare the dinner.

We will be expecting you. Watch THE CHRISTIAN SUN for further announcement.

REVIVAL AT HAW RIVER.

In preparation for our revival at Haw River, the men participated in a program of visitation evangelism, May 5-9. During that week they made around 50 calls. The next week, May 11-16, W. J. Andes came as guest minister. As a result of this program and these services, we received six new members—two by letter and four by profession of faith.

W. P. SMITH, Pastor.

REVIVAL AT NEWPORT.

Rev. E. J. Rohart, Linville, Virginia, assisted Rev. R. E. Newton at a revival meeting held at Newport Church (Valley Conference), for the week of May twelfth to eighteenth.

Fifteen conversions were recorded. In spite of cool and rainy weather much of the time, attendance was good throughout the week. Brother Rohart's inspiring messages were well received from the start. A baptismal service was held Saturday afternoon, June 1.

HOME COMING AT MORRISVILLE N. C.

Morrisville Congregational Christian Church, Morrisville (Wake Co.), N. C., is planning to hold Home Coming Day combined with the beginning of their revival on Sunday, June 22, 1952. The service will begin at ten o'clock a. m. and will be followed by a picnic lunch on the grounds. Services will be held each evening at eight o'clock through the week and at eleven o'clock a. m., Sunday, June 29.

All former pastors and friends of the church are invited to attend.

MINISTER OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION ORDAINED.

A service of ordination for John S. Graves was held at First Christian Church on May 22 at 7:30 p. m. The candidate was presented by Revs. Bland Leebrick and W. P. Smith. The Scripture was read by Rev. W. W. Snyder, Conference President. Dr. D. J. Bowden gave the sermon. Rev. Henry E. Robinson delivered the charge and Rev. H. P. Bozarth offered the ordination prayer. Supt.

JOHN S. GRAVES

Scott presented the Holy Bible. An informal reception for Mr. Graves followed.

Mr. Graves was born in Birmingham, Alabama. Most of his childhood and youth were spent in Atlanta, Georgia. He attended the public schools of Atlanta. He served four years in the Coast and Field Artillery branches of the Armed Forces during World War II. Upon discharge from the Armed Service he attended Elon College, serving, as Parish Worker in the Burlington Church for two years during his enrollment at Elon. From 1949-1950 he served as Director of the Recreation Center for the City of Burlington. In the fall of 1950, Mr. Graves entered The Hartford Seminary Foundation School of Religious Education, Hartford, Connecticut, where he received his Master of Arts Degree in Religious Education this month. On August 1st, Mr. Graves will return to this church as Minister of Christian Education.

THE HIGH POINT CHURCH MAKES PROGRESS.

The Congregational Christian Church at High Point, N. C. is one of our small churches numerically, which has less than one hundred members. It does have a good Sunday school under the efficient leadership of D. J. Cates, as superintendent, that outnumbers the membership of the church.

A parsonage was purchased a few years ago, and is now more than three-fourths paid for with some money already on hand to make the final payment September 1.

We received two adult members on confession of faith, Easter Sunday.

We ordained two fine young men to the office of deacon May 11.

Our Vacation Bible School will begin June 9.

Our revival will begin June 15, with Rev. Clyde Fields doing the preaching. We are expecting a harvest of souls at this meeting.

The Woman's Missionary Society is doing fine work.

The pastor and his wife are in the midst of painting the interior of the parsonage with the volunteer help of a few of the members.

Rev. and Mrs. Henry E. Robinson, Burlington, met with the Woman's group May 19, which was observed as Family Night, when we enjoyed a "covered dish" supper, and then entertained us all with the picture, "More for Peace," which was greatly enjoyed by all present.

VERY IMPORTANT NOTICE.

All material which is to appear in the July 3 issue of The Christian Sun must be in the publication office at 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond 19, Va., not later than the morning of Tuesday, June 24, as the office will be closed June 28 to July 7. Please keep this in mind when preparing materials for publication. There is no June 26 issue.

THE BOARD OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

Winston-Salem, N. C. May 26, 1952

Children's Day will be observed by many of our Sunday schools and churches in the Southern Convention. This is a good time to give emphasis to the place of children in our church life. And they love to take part. They thrill at the chance to do something.

Date is June 8, 1952—or it may suit to have the observance at another time in June.

Programs can be locally prepared. Also, most ministers received a letter from the Missions Council in New York offering the program, "We Would See Jesus." This is included in the Pilgrim Series Program Manual if you have this in your Sunday school.

Offering on Children's Day should go to the Board of Christian Education, Elon College, North Carolina. Your Board seeks to serve in many ways—materials, suggestions, leadership in Bible Schools, Training Schools, and so forth.

Denominationally speaking, the offering on Children's Day is for Student Summer Service work. Last year, our church helped to send 500 young people; college students on vacations, to places where there were no churches, or to isolated churches where there were few leaders or none at all. They taught Bible classes, led worship services, and in some instances instituted new churches.

This we do in a great way in the Southern Convention. Thus your Children's Day Offering helps to take care of our Student Summer Service workers, as well as to help in many other ways. Your offering should be sent to the Southern Convention Office, Elon College, North Carolina and it should be marked as Children's Day Offering from your church or Sunday school.

Service-to Children will be strengthened as you present your program and as you make your offering. And they will be the first to thank you.

W. J. ANDES, Chairman.

Given three requisites—means of existence, reasonable health, and an absorbing interest—those years beyond sixty can be the happiest and most satisfying of a lifetime.

CHURCH HONORS MRS. GERRINGER.

Apple's Chapel Church and Sunday school observed Mothers' Day with an appropriate service. During this service it is customary to select a Mother of the Year, and this year the honor fell to Mrs. Laura Thomas Gerringer.

Mrs. Gerringer is 75 years old, and the mother of six children. She has been a member of the church and Sunday school for 63 years. She is a charter member of the Ladies' Aid and Missionary Society. Mrs. Gerringer is very loyal to her church and its organizations, despite the fact that she is impaired in body.

It was a happy occasion. There was a feeling that honor went to whom it was due. The church wishes for Mrs. Gerringer a number of happy Mothers' Day events.

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and liberty of conscience is a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

OFF TO CALIFORNIA

Delegates from the Southern Convention will soon be on their way to attend the eleventh biennial session of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches at Claremont, June 18-25. The National Council of Congregational Churches was formed in 1871 at Oberlin, Ohio. The General Council was formed in 1931 at Seattle, Washington, when the National Council merged with the General Convention of the Christian Church.

In addition to the usual presentations of the national boards, intense discussion is anticipated on the pronouncements of the Council for Social Action, the decision of the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court on the E. and R. Merger, and the proposed launching of a $4,500,000 revolving fund for church extension. The editor plans to be there with at least an eye and an ear open. Reports will be forthcoming.

The first session will be called to order by Moderator Vere Loper on June 18th, at two o'clock to be followed by the invocation, and addresses of welcome by Rev. Harold G. Jones, pastor of the Claremont Church; Hon. Stuart G. Wheeler, Mayor of Claremont; and Dr. E. Wilson Lyon, president of the Associated Colleges of Claremont, who will be introduced by Rev. Jesse F. Perrin, superintendent of the Congregational Conference of Southern California and the Southwest.

Business meetings will follow with the reading of reports of the last Conference, nomination and election of Moderator for coming Biennium, and an address by the Minister of the Council, Dr. Douglas Horton.

Evening service will be conducted Wednesday at seven o'clock with the Owing of the Covenant and the Recognition of Deacons and New Superintendents, according to the "Directory for the Public Worship of God," which was published in 1644 and which, by Act of Parliament, then Puritan, became the Law of England.

Group meetings start June 19th with an hour of Fellowship at four p. m., and a Council lecture at five

p. m. by Dr. Daniel D. Williams of Chicago. The main address of the evening service, conducted by the American Board of Foreign Missions, will be given by Hon. Kiyoshi Togasaki, of Tokyo, Japan, editor and publisher of the Nippon Times.

On the evening of June 20 the delegates will celebrate the Hundredth Anniversary of the Church Building Society in a dramatization of the original meeting of the Society at "The Albany, New York, Convention of 1852," when the theme was "Aid to our Feeble Churches at the West."

Sunday, June 22nd, delegates will worship most of the day with special services at various times, conducted by members of the Pilgrim Fellowship, National Fellowship of Congregational Christian Women, and a worship presentation by the Rhythmic Choir of Margaret Palmer Fisk.

In addition, on Sunday afternoon there will be a dedication of The Women's Gift.

At this time, an added offering by the Women of the Fellowship to aid the programs of the world missions will be made. Mrs. Victoria Booth Demarest, famed woman speaker, will discuss The Woman in the Home, the Church, and the World.

Business sessions and group meetings on June 23rd will be followed by a special evening program being arranged by The Council for Social Action.

Reports of church activities will occupy most of Tuesday's sessions, June 24th, with the evening session of the Board of Home Missions devoted to Congregational Christian Colleges with Dr. Samuel Stevens, President of Grinnell College, Grinnell, Iowa, as principal speaker.

Final business session will take place on Wednesday, June 25th, with the closing services at 11:30 p. m. being the Transmitting of the Moderator's Cross, and the singing of "The Song of Moses and the Lamb," which has been sung at the close of all National Congregational Meetings since the Cambridge Synod in 1648.

Lutherans in North Carolina Resume Negro Work

It is worthy of note that the North Carolina Synod of the United Lutheran Church in America, at its 149th annual convention in Hickory in late April, voted to resume home mission work among Negroes after a lapse of nearly a century.

Action was taken on recommendation of the Synod's Home Mission Committee, which asserted that "church work in Negro communities has been neglected for many decades by the Lutheran Church in the South." "It is the prime responsibility of the Southern Synods," the committee added, "to take the lead in this work that has been so sadly neglected for more than a century."

The committee's report continued: "Early steps should be taken to organize regular mission congregations and develop them in a normal way. Immediate steps should be taken to secure ministers of the Negro race properly trained for this work. Only through such ministers will work be effective. We fully realize the wide implication of the matter and can see no legitimate reason for further delay."

Congregations organized under the program, it was said, will be composed wholly of Negroes, in accordance with the practice in the South. However, pastors and lay delegates from such congregations will, in keeping with Lutheran policy, have "full fraternal standing" at all Synod meetings and other church programs.

Dr. J. L. Morgan, president emeritus of the Synod, reminded the younger generation that "the records of the church and diaries of former pastors indicate very clearly that 100 years ago Negroes and whites of the Carolinas held membership in the same Lutheran churches, worshipped and communed at the same Altars."

After 1865, according to Dr. Morgan, some Lutheran church members of the Negro race sought permission to organize separate congregations and even a separate Synod, known as the Alpha Synod. The North Carolina Synod granted that privilege and sponsored and supported the Alpha Synod, he said. However, due to lack of sufficient leadership, the new organization disintegrated and passed out of existence.

"Whatever the decision of the Synod may be regarding the Mission Committee's report and recommendation," he added, "you should recognize that we are not treading on new ground. We simply need to renew our vision and zeal, neglected for a time."

Perhaps a plea would be in order for The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches to accentuate its program of home missions among Negroes. Time was when our white churches assisted in the organization of Negro churches, and the white churches were canvassed for contributions to Franklinton. We still have an opportunity unmatched denominationally. Interest, which had waned for a season, is on the rebound. Others, we realize, will take over this task if we fail. Interest, cooperation and contributions will yield great dividends in the work of the Kingdom.

Meditations on Family Life

By REV. HENRY E. ROBINSON

I. CONTRIBUTIONS WHICH THE CHURCH MAKES TO THE HOME.

First of all a man and a woman are joined in marriage through the auspices of the church. This ceremony is usually performed by a clergyman in a sanctuary. It is adorned by prayer and sacred music. The vows of such a service are spoken before God. His blessing and guidance are sought. The union effected is a spiritual reality. The home being established by marriage is based upon divine values and ordained of God. Every couple seeking to be married should be aware of these facts. Every minister should make it his business to counsel those about to take the marriage vows that this union is of God and must be conceived as sacred. Recent studies have indicated that couples, both members of which are active in church life, have three times as good a chance of avoiding divorce as couples that disregard their church relationships. The church is a uniting force in the home.

The church is unique in that it serves all ages in the home. The pastor and the cradle roll superintendent call at the birth of a child in a home of the parish. Before the child is more than a few days old, it is enrolled as a member of one of the departments of the Sunday school. Through the various ages of childhood and youth the church and home work together toward developing an understanding of the Christian way of life, in the mind and heart of this child. Through young adulthood, middle life, and old age, the church seeks to supply and support the religious needs of the individual. A church should provide occasions for the family as a whole. The family pew wherein whole families worship together with children, parents, and grandparents will never be outdated because such worship draws a family together in a way no other force or agency can bring them together.

The church through its pastor and Board of Deacons and Deaconesses stands every ready to serve a home in times of trouble or difficulty. If differences of a major sort divide man and wife the minister or some trusted Christian friend should be called on for counsel. Is it not much better to swallow one's pride and seek help than to let issues build up till it is too late to reconcile differences? Or it may be a wayward son or daughter which the church may help to reclaim. It may be in times of sudden loss of health by disease or accident when the pastoral ministry can be of great comfort. When death comes in a family, and it does come eventually to every family, the church stands by to offer the faith of eternal life and the assurance of a risen Lord. The Christian funeral service is not a farewell, it is a service of faith and thanksgiving. And during the long weeks and months that follow, it is the church which helps to heal the wounds of bereavement and loneliness.

Not only in these times of unusual strain or trouble but in the regular ongoing everyday life of the family it is the church which seeks to encourage daily Bible reading and prayer, and provides numerous channels of service whereby the family may express itself outside the limits of the walls of its home. In these days of conflict and international strife a family is apt to say, "What can we do, we count for so little." The most satisfying answer I can give to this question, is to reach out to the world's

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

Much interest has been expressed in the Elon College summer school for 1952, which will open on Monday, June 9, and indications point to a highly successful summer session.

* * *

The sixty-second annual session of Elon College came to a close on Monday, May 26, after one of the most successful and enjoyable commencement programs in the recent history of the college.

* * *

A large number of Elon alumni were back on the campus for the commencement program, with a number of them returning to see sons or daughters receive their degrees from their old Alma Mater.

* * *

Dr. D. J. Bowden, dean of students at Elon, accompanied by his wife and children, left early this week for a brief visit to Oklahoma. He will return in time for the opening of the forthcoming 1952 summer session.

* * *

Reports from the Elon College field secretary are that applications continue to come in steadily from students who plan to attend Elon next year, and others are expected as the the various high schools in North Carolina and other states hold their graduation exercises.

* * *

Walter J. Wilkins, of Norfolk, Va., a prominent business and civic leader in Eastern Virginia, was chosen as Elon's "Outstanding Alumnus of the Year," and he was the recipient at the Alumni Banquet of a certificate, emblematic of that honor.

* * *

Dr. William M. Brown, member of the Elon College faculty for several years, who was stricken ill early in April, continues to improve, although he is still confined to his home here.

COMMENCEMENT.

The Sixty Second Annual Commencement of Elon College is now a matter of history. The dates were May 23 to May 26. The attendance at the alumni functions was not as large as usual for such occasion. Rain prevented some from coming. Social functions were appreciated and programs and attendance were good.

Mrs. Russell T. Bradford gave a most excellent address on "Women in Today's World." Her address was illustrated by brief sketches of women who had made outstanding contributions to society in their day. She called upon the women of today to take their places and do their part in the building of a better world.

The Dramatic Department gave a dramatic presentation of a Greek classic, "Medea," which was well done. At 11:30 on Sunday Dr. Martin L. Goslin of Evanston, Illinois, delivered the Baccalaureate Sermon, using as his topic, "We Lock Ourselves Out"—Matthew 25:1-13 was used as the scripture background for the sermon. It was an expository type of sermon that placed emphasis upon the personal life of the individual.

REMEMBER

The men and women of tomorrow will be educated men and women.

Do you want to take your place?

Do you want to be educated?

Where do you want to be educated?

Education without character may be disastrous.

Elon specializes in character building.

Elon College Summer School opens June 9.

The Music Department presented some of the more advanced Junior and Senior students in a Vesper Recital on Sunday afternoon. In the evening the Music Department, assisted by Mr. A. J. Fletcher and Mr. Robert Bird of Raleigh, gave a most unusual program. They gave the religious Oratorio "Elijah" by Mendelssohn. It was presented in operatic form. The presentation was most inspiring and it was certainly one of the highlights of the entire commencement program.

Monday was Graduation Day. There were 96 graduates and in addition approximately 50 certificates and diplomas were awarded. The Honorable W. Kerr Scott, Governor of North Carolina delivered the literary address. He gave a hasty review of some achievements in the State of North Carolina during his term as Governor and called attention to the progress that the state has made along many lines—particularly those that involved our rural people.

After the awarding of the diplomas and certificates the Monroe Award was made. This award consists of $50 for the young man and also $50 for the young woman enrolled in Elon College who, in the judgement of the faculty, had made the greatest improvement in scholarship, in conduct, in citizenship, and in char- olina was the young lady who was honored, and Mr. Herman Johnson was the young man to whom $50 was awarded. It was also announced that the friends of Charles Lynam, baritone, is to receive, on account of the generosity of his friends, a minimum of $500 cash scholarship to continue his study in Columbia University. Also friends of Fred Sahlmann authorized the announcement of a cash award that amounts to $1, 100 to be used in graduate study in Columbia University. These two young men were very fortunate and very happy.

Commencement exercises closed with the trustee's luncheon in Society Hall given by President and Mrs. L. E. Smith. As we think of the Sixty-Second Annual Commencement of the college, we are delighted with the achievements of the year and a very satisfactory closing session.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

There is a growing feeling among our churches and in the college that the college is really a part of the church and that the church has certain obligations to the college. Higher education is coming high financially. Everything that is necessary for conducting an institution of higher learning is more expensive than ever before. If this sense of mutual dependence between the college and the church could keep pace with the increased cost of operation the program that is being conducted could be made more effective.

During the summer months there seems to be a tendency on the part of our Sunday schools and churches to forget the college and its needs. The facts are that the college's needs are more acute from the standpoint of the church during the summer months than at any other time. As this report is read and considered in the light of the past three weeks I hope that many of our churches and Sunday schools may feel inclined to come to the rescue of the college.

With Emphasis on Missions

VARIED ACTIVITIES SUPPORTED BY WOMEN.

During the year as reports come in from many women's societies we find that they are interested in a variety of things—all the way from roofing a church to planting shrubbery. At this time in the church calendar they may profitably interest themselves in activities pertaining to other age groups.

In June many societies sponsor a Cradle Roll party, which is the highlight for the year for that youngest group of our church family.

In June and July this year we have conferences available for our juniors, junior highs, and young people. In many churches nothing will be done (even by the minister, unfortunately!) about this important phase of our church's work, unless the women do it. They may urge attendance, or, better yet, encourage it by paying part of the expenses of delegates.

During the summer, too, come the Vacation Bible Schools. Here again the women are often the sponsoring group. They provide the teacher, furnish the refreshments, and often offer transportation.

Let us check and be sure that some group in our churches is responsible for these various activities for our children and young people—and if no one else is doing so, of course the women will!

NEW SOCIETY ELECTS OFFICERS.

Our church is the Eutaw Community Church of Fayetteville, North Carolina, which is a new church in a new area of the city.

On the first Monday of each month we hold our Women's Fellowship meetings. At the last meeting, which was our third meeting, held May 5, 1952, we elected our officers as follows: President, Mrs. J. R. DeVine, 962 McKimmon Road, Fayetteville, N. C.; first vice-president, Mrs. Robert L. Brunner, Box 4, Ft. Bragg, N. C.; vice-president and program chairman, Mrs. K. M. Lindner, 708 Pilot Ave., Fayetteville, N. C.; secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Warren H. Coolidge, Qtrs TA-671, Ft. Bragg, N. C.; stewardship chairman, Mrs. A. E. Cox, 813 Hillsboro St., Fayetteville, N. C.; missions chairman, Mrs. Mary R. Seals, 52 Hull Road, Fayetteville, N. C.

We have been having good attendance at our meetings, and most of us feel that it is like a stepping stone to help our congregation grow. We enjoy them, too, and I don't want to leave that out. We are all striving to make our little church grow into a big church.

NANCY H. COOLIDGE,

IMMEDIATE ACTION NEEDED.

An S. O. S. call has come from Pattie Lee Coghill—and similar word has gone to each society from Mrs. W. E. Wisseman—for articles for the Child Care Centers for Migrant Workers in North Carolina and Virginia. If the articles are to be of value for the summer months, when the migrants are in our states, they need to be sent right away.

Perhaps each society could do something about it at their June meetings, if the word does not reach you too late. In case you have already had your meetings, your Friendly Service Chairman could be responsible for securing these articles from individual members.

Miss Coghill also suggests that you drop your Conference Friendly Service Chairman a card, telling her what you have sent, so she will have a record of the total amount. The superintendents are: Valley of Virginia, Mrs. R. A. Whitten, 108 W. Clifford St., Winchester, Va.; Eastern Virginia, Mrs. Ray Gordon, 218 Grace St., Suffolk, Va.; North Carolina, Mrs. S. L. Mauldin, 317 Corona St., Winston-Salem, N. C.

Virginia societies send your supplies to: Rev. Isaac Henderson, Cheriton Labor Camp, Cheriton, Virginia.

North Carolina societies send your supplies to: First Baptist Church, Elizabeth City, North Carolina.

SOUTHERN CONVENTION BUS.

At last report there was one place still vacant on the second bus going to California for the General Council meeting and sightseeing en route. Miss Coghill has worked hard to arrange not only transportation, but overnight accommodations, and deserves the credit for this large number of people going to California. As someone said, if the General Council were meeting in a nearby state, we probably would not have near as many going as we are this time to California!

Those of us who remain at home will be very much interested in the progress of the bus trip, experiences en route, and reactions to the General Council meeting. We hope that someone will be found who will "report" to this page from one or both busses and keep us informed as to the behavior of our representatives! Also someone may need to keep an eye on Miss Coghill to see that she does not get lost—we would hate to think that a "riding, roping cowboy" or something like that might entice her away from the Southern Convention.

Anyhow, here is a "bon voyage" to all who go on the Southern Convention busses, and best wishes for a fine journey, a good time, and a profitable experience.

MEXICO.

Some who go to the General Council will slip over the line into Mexico so that they can say their feet have been on foreign soil. Others will be fortunate enough to really make a visit to this land "south of the border." Any of us can visit that land by proxy—through reading and seeing pictures.

This year we are supposed to study that country in connection with our women's work. Some of our societies have had delightful Mexican teas, or displays, or luncheon meetings—we only wish someone had written yours up in detail for this page!—and by October 1 we hope that every society will have at least studied something about Mexico.

In the packet is a booklet entitled "Report from Mexico" which tells the history of our work there from the time of the first missionary martyr from our denomination, through the era of the Wright family who did so

The Christians of India Conduct an Intensive Literacy Campaign to teach . . .

The A B C's

NO LAND can be compared with reawakening India—potentially one of the great world powers in this new age—as a ground for mature Christian and democratic development.

There is no other place on earth where, devoid of Christian and democratic influence, a calamity on the vastest scale would seem so inescapable.

Exploiting the illiteracy and the frustration of India's millions, communism has become a most powerful political force, as was disclosed in the country's recent elections.

Obviously, while tension between Soviet aggression and democratic freedom continues to threaten the peace and progress of India, the ability to read—and so to understand more readily the crisis of our times—becomes an increasingly important asset to each person. Yet, according to reliable estimates, almost 80 per cent of India's voters are unable to read or write.

In more and more communities, however, national Christians, assisted by competent missionaries, are pressing forward with a popular literacy campaign—equipping the citizens of this great nation to play a more intelligent role in the new age in which they and we are living.

On these two pages, we travel a short distance with one of these national Christian teachers, Miss Frances Dhyriam, a graduate of our American Board mission schools, as she carries the light of Christian understanding to a people who reach eagerly for the kind of knowledge that can be communicated only by the printed page.

5. It is Miss Dhyriam's policy to give individual attention to her most promising pupils, as they will assume responsibility for teaching others.

6. Overseers give villagers employed in brick-yard time off that they may "say their lessons."

A Page for Our Children

Mrs. R. L. House, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Boys and Girls:

There are those who grumble and complain about life. There are others who say they only read of tragedy, sorrow and meanness in their newspapers but here's what I saw in my paper last week:

An elderly lady in North Carolina has been blind for 20 years but she sews every day and has for her present motto "52 in '52." She is hoping to make an apron a week this year. Her daughter shops for her and then tells her which is the right side of the material and from that she goes to work! Think of the seeing people who don't bother to keep busy.

Another Tar Heel lady was distressed because her family farm wasn't getting along too well. A neighbor urged her to attend a Home Demonstration meeting. She did and learned from interest aroused in that first meeting how to make slipcovers. She made them for herself and for the neighborhood and has made major repairs on her home and added to the farm's equipment with her earnings. She was applauding her neighbor who insisted that she go to that first meeting.

Two young boys in Italy have been named this year's champion piggerbackers because they took turns carrying a crippled schoolmate on their backs more than a mile to school. The strongest boy volunteered to carry the cripple up the hill and the smallest boy carried him down the hill. St. Christopher must have attended their way!

And I hope you have read of the U. S. Spelling Champion who is also from the good old North State. It is great to have a Southern girl win. Girls, incidentally, seem to be the best spellers!

Good news is to be found if we will look for it.

* * *

Sunday our entire family will climb in our car and head West, for we are going to California for the General Council. The Lesters of Asheboro are going by car too. We hope to have a safe and happy trip and you will be hearing about it.

"SMALL THOUGHTFULNESSES."

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"When I have children I intend teaching them some of those smaller thoughtfulnesses many parents overlook," Carol, planning a June wedding, announced, as we sat sewing for her trousseau.

"What, for instance, Carol?" gentianeyed Lynne asked.

"My young ones will be trained to leave a bathroom as clean and orderly as when they began using it," Carol was emphatic. Then, she added, with a grin, "I mean—that will be one of my goals. Inexperienced as I am in the art of rearing youngsters, I do know that nothing likes this can be accomplished overnight."

"That's a perfectly dandy goal, Carol!" a mother of three spoke up.

"My roommate in college always left an unwashed basin and tub for me, if she got there first."

"Mine, too! That's what gave me the idea," Carol confessed. "Some of the girls left the bathroom spotless. There's really no excuse for doing otherwise."

"And my children," Carol's twin sister added, "will learn a lot about keeping a house livable and attractive. When I'm away Joe, my husband, hasn't the least idea of what to do."

"I visited in a home where the husband was as clever as his wife at that sort of thing," I put in. "Before a dinner party Tom would go through every room, plumping pillows, straightening pictures, and arranging magazines neatly. He can cook a superlative dinner, too. And every Saturday he insists that his wife stay in bed an extra hour, and he takes her breakfast to her on a tray. 'She's a busy girl during the week—now I'll give her a chance to relax,' he'll tell you."

"That man was unusual," answered one who had not before spoken. "But if our sons are to grow into good homemakers they need to learn many of the 'small thoughtfulnesses,' as Carol put it, just as much as our daughters."

My friends were right. My husband, to be sure, had never done anything in the way of cooking until our marriage. But what fun we now have preparing our "cooperative dinners"! I dare anyone to fry chicken better than he does or to make creamier gravy. But he, too, is unusual!

Our neighbor's two sons have been taught to cook, sew on buttons, set and clear the table, wash and dry the dishes. And they can make a bed that invites sleep.

Training for marriage really should begin early. Boys and girls ought to take care of their clothes—brush the woolen ones, clean hatbands, wash socks and mittens, and shine their shoes. They should keep fresh, orderly, sweet-smelling drawers for their things, and they should learn careful grooming as well as helpful homemaking habits.

If Martha and Jon learn to handle with consideration and to return quickly a borrowed book, to open and close drawers gently, to arrange flowers, to have a place for things and to keep their possessions there when not in use, to take care of their rooms, to help Mom around the house and Dad in the garden, they'll grow in emotional maturity along with their responsibilities.

It has been said, "Habit is a cable. We weave a thread of it each day until at last we cannot break it." The habits of happy homemaking should be well learned by boys as well as girls. One way to be sure that they obtain a good start is to teach them, through example and play, some of those "small thoughtfulnesses" at a very early age.

MAX VESTAL, Box 792, Elon College, N. C.

ELM AVENUE, PORTSMOUTH.

At the conclusion of the study of Genesis, the young people of Elm Avenue Christian Church have viewed wonderful and inspiring types of the believer and of the Lord Jesus in this "Book of Beginnings." If we were to choose outstanding examples of our increased knowledge, we might look at the lives of Jacob and his son, Joseph. Each of their lives are very fitting for the great lessons we find in them.

Jacob, the more spiritual of the two brothers, Esau and Jacob, was a zealous man, full of faith and desirous of the birthright—which he obtained. How much more should we allow our spiritual man to exercise the desire of the "birthright" which is the new birth through the blood of Christ, without which no one may enter heaven. Then, Jacob was abundantly blessed during his natural life just as the believer today. However, because of sinful flesh, he failed God but, later, renewed his covenant. We, too, have an advocate for our sin, even Christ. In response to this advocate, we (as believers) obey Christ's teachings and receive our rewards in the end, just as Jacob finally repented.

In the life of Joseph, we see many truths which cause us find in him a type of the Saviour. Joseph was his father's favorite son, God so loved us he gave his only begotten Son that we might have everlasting life. This Joseph, betrayed and sold by his own brothers, had done no evil but rather had lived righteously in man's sight. Then, he went so far as to redeem his brothers from certain death and even provided a home for them simply because he loved his family. A gracious Saviour we have, who, without sin, was betrayed by his friends and family, yet redeemed them and all mankind (who will accept his blood) with a promise of an eternal home throughout all ages—and in his glorious presence! "How excellent is thy lovingkindness, O God!" Psalm 36:7a.

It's wonderful to know Christ in his power and in the truth of his Word. Whether our name is Jacob, Joseph or whatever it may be, we may each live a separated life unto God, to be used in glorifying Christ, the Word and in winning lost souls to the Lord Jesus.

A CALL FOR QUICK ACTION.

This call for quick action to meet immediate rehabilitation needs in Korea is made to each local Pilgrim Fellowship group. It is from the United Nations Korean Rehabilitation Agency (UNKRA), The Heifers for Relief Committee (interdenominational), and CWS-CROP (the Christian Rural Overseas Program) is sponsored by Church World Service of which our own denomination is a member. The United Nations Civil Assistance Command for Korea (UNCACK) has asked the above agencies to meet this call at once by a "pilot" experiment. Other well known denominational relief agencies are participating and UCYM is being asked to assist.

1. What is needed? The first urgent request is for 200,000 hatching eggs, 1,000 pigs, 2,000 goats. They are asked to begin to replenish farm stocks depleted by the ravages of battle and foraging by advancing armies.

2. How to help? The channel through which local Pilgrim Fellowship groups can help is CWS-CROP, 308 West Washington Street, Chicago 6, Illinois. Set up some kind of quick project in your youth group to raise money to send for eggs, pigs, or goats. One group in the N. C. & Va. Conference is already planning a gift. A case of 30 dozen hatching eggs is $25.00. A half case or a whole one will help greatly. A pig or a bred before shipment to increase 'do even this much. The animals are bred before shipment in increase amount of rehabilitation. Cash gifts are desired now. Later "on the hoof" gifts can be made. Send your cash gift through your Conference Pilgrim Fellowship Treasurer marked specifically for "Korean Rehabilitation" to be sent to the above CWS-CROP address.

need through your church. On your table at home there is a little jar. It is being filled with coins which we put in at meal time. We cannot take food, clothing, hospitals, schools, and churches to distant lands, but our church and your church can by means of our missionary gifts which we place at the disposal of our respective missions boards. The church then becomes the long arm of the family that reaches literally around the world.

A much neglected service of the church is Christian literature. Are your church's publications on your library table? Do you encourage your family members to read these pages? They will pay big dividends in churchmanship and in personal living.

Further, what about a college for John or Mary out of high school? Your church has provided one—a good one. One concerned with the morals as well as the intellect of your children. A college is being supported by your church that seeks to undergird the democratic way of life by putting an emphasis on Christian

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

THE OBLIGATION TO BE TRUTHFUL.

LESSON XI—JUNE 15, 1952.

MEMORY SELECTION: Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor.—Exodus 20: 16.

LESSON: Exodus 20: 16; John 18: 15-27.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Philippians 2: 1-11.

Reputation and Truth Are Sacred.

Home life is sacred—Thou shalt not commit adultery. Property is sacred—Thou shalt not steal. Private reputation, and truth, are sacred—Thou shalt not bear false witness. Like the other Commandments, or "Rules for Living" as we have been calling the Ten Commandments, this Commandment is basic to human society. There cannot be any enduring civilization, or sound and safe social life, unless truth, and private reputation have sanctity. Paul with inspired insight writes, "Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbor; for we are members one of another." Ephesians 4: 25. There you have it—because we are members one of another, because we are all bound up in the bundle of life, the spoken or written word must have integrity and sanctity. Else how can society survive?

Bearing False Witness.

Perhaps the first thing we think about when we read this Commandment is testimony in court. A man is supposed "to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help me God." A court is a place where justice is supposed to be done. A court must have the facts. Witnesses must tell the truth. Thus it is that men are asked to take an oath, before giving testimony. Perjury has always been looked upon, and still is looked upon, as a grievous sin, a mortal blow against the security of society itself. The man who bears false witness against his fellowmen in court, does something worse than simply injuring his fellowman, and injuring even more himself—he strikes at the foundations of decent and orderly life. Perjury has social as well as personal effects. It is a deadly thing.

But there are several, in fact many, other ways of bearing false witness against one's neighbor. One can do it in a positive way. He can, out of court, tell a lie about another fellowman. He can slander his neighbor. He can ask an insinuating question about him. He can gossip about him. He can shrug his shoulders in connection with some remark about him. He can flatter him—some flattery is a form of false witness against one's neighbor. He can "run down" his neighbor, not with his cart but with his tongue. He can engage in controversy of a kind that amounts to false witnessing. He can tell half-truths about his neighbor.

A man can also bear false witness by doing nothing. He does not have to say a word. A lifted eyebrow, a suggestive gesture, and worst of all, silence when he ought to speak out in defense of another, are forms of false witnessing. Refusal to bear witness for a man may be as damaging and deadly as bearing witness against him. There are times when silence is not golden; it is criminal.

One of the most common and most dangerous forms of false witness in our modern world is propaganda. Its worst form is in what is called "the big lie." The theory, which alas finds confirmation in practice, is that if one tells a lie, especially a big lie, and tells it often enough, and long enough, people will believe it. Hitler did it. Stalin is doing it. Our own government is not entirely innocent of guilt in this matter.

There is a lot of it being done now in connection with the political campaign. Some of it will be done openly. Much of it will be done indelicately, and by innuendo. "Samer campaigns," "labels," "red herings" are all forms of false witnessing. It is a breach of the Ninth Commandment.

Let no one think that this Commandment has no pertinency to our modern world. There is, alas, too little confidence in the spoken and written word in our life today. There has been too much dishonesty and duplicity in government circles, too many "secret documents" in diplomacy, too much distortion of truth, too much false advertising in recent years. We need a revival of respect for the sanctity of the spoken and written word, and of high regard for personal reputation.

Tragedy and Triumph.

The second part of today's lesson is a study in contrasts. There are two main characters, Peter and Jesus. Peter thrice denied his Lord, using on the last occasion, an oath. When he got on a "hot spot" he did not have the courage to tell the truth. It would have been bad enough if he had kept silent. But perhaps that would have been just as bad as what he did—blatantly deny Jesus. But who is there of us, who on more than one occasion, has not kept silent when we ought to have borne witness to our discipleship, or spoken a good word for Jesus, even though we may never have spoken against him?

And there was Jesus, standing before the highest religious and civil authority of the Jewish nation. He was "on the spot." He knew the consequences involved in telling the truth. But for this end had he come into the world and for this cause had he been born, that he might bear witness to the truth. It was all a part of the price that he had to pay to be the Saviour of the world. He was The Truth. O God to us may grace be given to follow in his train.

principles in education. This is another way your church is seeking to serve your home.

If dire tragedy should take the mother and father from a home. The church through its orphanages will provide a home for your children. No, it cannot take the full place of the home they left, but it will be a home motivated by love and mercy where character and citizenship are given priority.

Yes, the church seeks to serve the home, for it has always recognized the home as the basic unit of society. Christian homes mean strong communities, a responsible citizenship, and a better world. Jesus said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." The church and the home labor together to bring Christ to the generation arising in our midst. This is the greatest service that can come to it.

The Riggs Move to Kilanjunai . . .

Dear Friends of the Southern Convention:

This letter has been held up for over a week, entirely because of my fault. Fran had her part finished a week ago Saturday, and I promised that I would write something and mail all together during the week while I was down on the plains attending conferences. But the week sped by and I found myself with no typewriter and no time. Now I am up in Kodai again, with a little breathing spell before starting the new year's activities. But I will have to take a little time out from my energetic program of picnicking, napping, and day-dreaming, to get this on its way!

While on the plains I spent another two-day stint in Kilanjunai, and again I was swamped with patients. It certainly was satisfying this time to be able to promise them definitely that we would be moving there permanently, and I would have a chance to try to do something constructive for them. Their attitude leaves no doubt in my mind that we are wanted. At present it seems as if the most common preventable diseases, besides TB and leprosy, are the conditions arising from lack of care during pregnancy and delivery for the women, so that Fran is needed there almost more than I am. While there I was called to a village just a mile away to see a woman dangerously sick with post-partum infection. That is, it was only a mile across the fields by foot-path which I was able to cover in a few minutes by bike, guided by my new assistant who is a local Kilanjunai boy and knows the countryside well. The nurse had to go the long way around by bullock-cart, and did not arrive until we were almost through with the case. If Fran had been there she would have also been able to come easily by bicycle.

It is interesting that while there I was asked to see a young woman, in the terminal stages of what was probably TB. The family appeared cooperative, and were willing to come to the clinic to bring specimens for lab exam and to get medicine. But apparently, like so many of the Chinese country people, the idea had never occurred to them before to seek western medical help—even from one mile away! I asked my assistant if he thought there were other people in other villages simply lying at home and dying because of ignorance and indifference. He said that he was sure there were at least one or two in every village. As in the North Fukien countryside, I will be able to do something simply by putting in an appearance at least once in each of the villages in the immediate vicinity of Kilanjunai, and publicizing the fact that something can be done about disease. The list of such villages from which patients have come to the clinic for help since I have started visiting there now numbers over fifty.

Of course I don't mean to imply that all our problems and theirs will be solved just by moving there! I hope that I can do something with leprosy, because its treatment and prevention, compared to many other diseases, is relatively easy and cheap. All I have to combat is the resistance and apathy of the patients. But I will hardly be able to do much for TB, with no X-ray or free Streptomycin, and with BGG vaccine still not available yet. And there are plenty of "non-preventable" conditions requiring surgery which I have neither the facilities nor skill to handle.

In that connection a peculiar problem comes up. The nurse and pharmacist there continually put pressure on me to attempt "minor" surgical procedures which I do not feel competent to undertake, because, they say, if I don't, some village "quack" will try it and do an even worse job. They say that even the Government hospitals in the District to which I refer them have no more equipment or skilled personnel than we have here; and we can't afford to lose the income from such procedures when the budget is so precarious. Also I am urged to give inferior medicines because they are cheaper and the patients can afford them, whereas otherwise they would have to go without treatment. Is it better to half-cure a case of scabies with the old fashioned sulfur-in-vaseline, or should I prescribe the newer, more efficient drugs or combinations and have the patient go away disappointed because he is not willing to spend so much money on a condition not dangerous to life? And of course the medicines which the patients cannot afford to buy we can't afford to stock. All of India is accustomed to doing things the cheapest way, even if it is inefficient. How much should I compromise principles of good medicine to accommodate to this custom—born of stark necessity?

Also the staff there have had no vacation or time off for years. In China, the custom of stopping all normal activities of life for a few days or weeks at the time of Chinese New Year's in the winter made the problem simpler. Patients just did not get sick during that period, or if they did they refused to leave their home to go to the hospital for treatment because their holiday celebrations were more important. So it was perfectly feasible for a small hospital in the country to close up altogether for a short period and let that serve as the annual vacation for the staff. Here in some parts of India the small hospitals in the country close up altogether during the hottest part of the hot season, because, as with schools and other institutions, it is simply too hot to do good work. But the country people have no tradition of stopping their ordinary activities of living during that time, and sickness is apt to be more prevalent than at other times. I was urged to close down and give the staff a vacation and stay away for a month during May instead of breaking up my vacation with bi-weekly visits and making the rest of them stay on duty continuously. But one look at the crowd of patients besieging me last week finished that idea. It even takes a lot of hardness of heart to stay away two weeks instead of going there every week as I was doing in the spring.

While there this week I had the pleasure of arranging for the necessary house repairs, and they promised to have the work finished by the first of June, so I hope the way will be clear to move very soon afterwards. Fran spoke of the small size and simplicity of the house by our standards. But the plans for improving it to meet our needs only served to emphasize the tremendous gulf that still exists between our scale of living and that of the Indian villagers, and the futility of all our talk about simple living. If we transplanted a Park Avenue mansion there I doubt if it would be more dazzling in their eyes than what we will have.

Of course we found the same thing true in our Chinese mountain-top home too. We used X-ray film instead of glass in our windows and Chinese tung oil instead of paint for

The Orphanage
 J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

We have three new children: Kenneth Ferrell, 9; Sandra, 7; and James, 5, his brother and sister. They are bright children. Kenneth made only high grades in his third grade this year, and Sandra was quite above average in being promoted to second grade. James is pre-school. They are lovely children, and good looking. Their father is dead. Their mother lives with her parents. Her father is an invalid, and her mother is not strong. There are two children under four—the minimum age at which we received them. “With the little help I get we cannot buy sufficient food for them,” wrote the mother. Sandra wept bitterly when she learned that she was going home with me. “Mother, I have not done bad, why are you sending me away?” It was a hard question to answer and I came quickly to her rescue. It is not easy for anybody. But they came away happy as they could be under the circumstance.

Supper time came while we were still en route. I stopped and ordered cornflakes and milk for each of them, and an extra glass of chocolate milk, and icecream. I offered them pie, but they said they were “too full.” A little later as we rode along Sandra said: “That was the best supper I ever had.” I laughed because that is just what I am always saying myself, when I have something I especially like. In her letter Mrs. Ferrell said, “God knows I love my children more than anything in the world and I do want what is best for them.” Well, there is a chance that they may have the best of care and opportunities, but it is pretty sad after all. But she is a good, Christian mother, and she will come to see them, and they will be happy. Prayers will be said for them, and God is good. Sandra climbed up in my lap while she was weeping, and I told her that I would look after her, and I shall, to the best of my ability. So will I for the two brothers.

They were happy on their trip here, and I wish you could have heard some of the fine brave things such little folks said. James spoke up once on the way and said “I’ll miss my little kittens.” His older brother told him that he bet they had kittens at the Orphanage. We do. (Don’t send any!) They talked pretty to each other. Sometimes I looked the other way, because I had to keep my eyes clear for driving. In fact all of us here have to keep our eyes clear, and our hearts and our heads clear, for going ahead.

Last Sunday as fine a citizen as I know about, a man with a real good position, a college degree, a lovely home and family, stood up before a large congregation and said: “I had a better chance at the Christian Orphanage than my parents could have given me had they lived.” However, be it ever so humble there is no place like home, and very poor parents have done very great things for their children. At any rate let us thank God for the privilege of helping homeless, needy children.

You are doing well in befriending us here, and I am most grateful.

EVERYDAY CHRISTIANS . . . FOR BETTER YOUTH MEETINGS. Kirk M. Dewey. The Pilgrim Press, Boston. $1.00.

This booklet for high school youth has been prepared none too soon. Many societies have been waiting for just such a publication.

Harry Thomas Stock has an introductory chapter on "Better Meetings This Year," and Henry Rust concludes with a helpful chapter on "The Planning Retreat." Programs follow on such fresh and vital topics as "Tickets to Adventure," "Another Bible," "Jobs That Take You Places," and "Maim Street."

Get it for your Pilgrim Fellowship.

RACE AND LAW ENFORCEMENT. A Guide to Modern Police Practices. Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, Georgia. 15c.

This very practical handbook deals with "Police and the Public." It deals with problems that may exist or arise in any community. This objective analysis of law enforcement will help any Christian to be a more intelligent and helpful citizen.

It stresses the fact that "policemen are symbols. They represent the official conscience of society. If they perform badly, they do so not just as men wearing uniforms, but as the embodiment of law in their communities."

Then it goes on to point out the fact that "In town after town over the South a new quality of law enforcement is emerging. Police officers are winning merited acclaim for averting mob violence, safeguarding unpopular prisoners, protecting the innocent, curbing illegal activities of hate groups, and in general enforcing the law impartially and humanely."

Such pertinent questions as these are raised: "Have we made known to police authorities our interest in sound police practices? Have we bothered to find out under what conditions our policemen are selected and do their work—qualifications, pay, training, recognition for service?"

Here is a valuable pamphlet for your Social Action Committee, Women's Fellowship, or anyone perplexed about law enforcement.

EPIC OF FAITH. A 96-page book on world Lutheranism, has been published by the National Lutheran Council at 50c a copy.

Author of the volume is Dr. E. Theodore Bachmann, guest professor of church history at Luther Seminary in St. Paul, Minn., who in the fall will join the faculty of the new Pacific Lutheran Theological Seminary at Berkeley, Calif.

"Epic of Faith" presents an account of the work and history of the LWF and its predecessor organization, and the Lutheran World Convention. It also contains a survey of the heritage of the Reformation and factual information on the Lutheran Churches throughout the world.

Dr. Empie said that "Epic of Faith" contains information which pastors and laymen "ought to have at their finger tips for a proper perspective and understanding of the work of Lutheran World Action."

THESE RIGHTS WE HOLD. Fred L. Brownlee. The Friendship Press, New York. $2.00.

This book deals with the struggle of minority groups for human rights, and, naturally, with those agencies which have assisted them. The author calls the roll of these groups—Indians, Orientals, Puerto Ricans, Negroes, Europeans—and sketches the nature of their struggle and the degree of their victory. The unfettering agencies are listed and described: Colleges, Mission Schools, labor organizations, industrial movements, Bill of Rights, organized Christianity.

This book helps us to understand that part of America which we normally overlook or understand superficially.

The limitation of this work is found in its abbreviated character. When used as a missionary study book, an unabridged edition should be provided for teachers.

RIGGS MOVE TO KILANJUNAI.

the woodwork. But the mountain villagers were going through our house in a continual parade all the time we were there, gaping and finagling, because they had never seen any kind of finished woodwork or transparent window covering to keep out the cold winds. But here the standards of living are even lower than they were in Erh Shih Tu, so that although this home will be even simpler, the contrast will still be greater. We require two verandahs, but one only is customarily provided by the Mission for its pastors and doctors, and other Indian houses rarely have any. We turn up our nose at the two tiny 12 by 12 rooms inside our house. But they have cement floors, plastered walls, and tile roof, while the average Indian house has only one room, much smaller, with mud floor and walls, and thatch roof. We need extra space because we, like the Chinese, eat at tables, sleep on beds, sit in chairs, and possess a lot of clothing, dishes, and implements, whereas the Indians, who own almost nothing and do their eating, sleeping, and sitting on the floor, have no use for so much space. In fact they prefer their sleeping quarters small and windowless so that even on cold winter nights without bedding they can huddle together and keep warm.

We lift our eyebrows at the outdoor bathhouse and latrine. But the Indians, even the women, use the nearest pond or mudhole for bathing, and a convenient field of roadside for a latrine. If you want a formula for simple living, try that one! Of course it would be possible for us to go all the way and change completely to their level. But if we did we would have some difficulty demonstrating how we can prevent the spread of TB and leprosy by not sleeping crowded together in unventilated quarters. We plan to boil our drinking water and send to distant markets to buy vegetables, milk, eggs, and meat, in order to keep healthy and have energy to do our work properly. Even the most of the people cannot imitate us now, we hope that eventually some good will come from this demonstration having been made for them. Meanwhile I am sure that we shall profit by having had the closer look at their life, even though we are not yet literally sharing it.

Here, however, we are definitely living in luxurious style in this beautiful vacation spot and hoping that soaking up all the relaxation and pleasure of family life together and fellowship with friends will fit us better for Kilanjunai.

Best regards,

Ed Riggs.

The Church Continues Its Advance on the Home Front

Gibsonville, North Carolina, Congregational Christian Church

Presented above is a picture of the house of worship of the Congregational Christian Church at Gibsonville, North Carolina. The Gibsonville Church was organized in the fall of 1939, Rev. Harold Lowman being the first pastor, and at the meeting of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, November 14 of that year, the church was received into the fellowship of the conference. The petition for membership was dated November 12, and was signed by 29 charter members. Since that time, this church has shown slow but steady growth, and at present has approximately 250 members. The present pastor is Rev. J. L. Stanley. We congratulate the church upon the completion of its new building.

"This We Do"

A COMMUNION MEDITATION

By WILLIAM ROBERT CATTON

"This do in remembrance of me."—Luke 22: 19.

THE COMMUNION SERVICE is something we DO, and it is important to do it. It is a simple thing to do. It is a profound thing to do. It is a brave thing to do.

The Communion Service is a memorial to a man, and to all that man was and did. One thing we "do," then, is pledge our loyalty to that man today. And loyalty means not just a pleasant nod in his direction, but the understanding of his purposes and the adoption of those purposes for our purposes in life. It is loyalty to the Christian program.

The Sacrament is a symbol of the death of Jesus, and when we take it we must come to realize how very much in earnest Jesus was, and how very much in earnest we must be if we are to work out his purposes in the world today.

The Sacrament, as a symbol of the death of Jesus, is the outward and visible sign of the eternal giving of himself for us that Jesus was and is. As we take the Sacrament to our comfort, we remember that God gave that we might have life. Our taking of the Sacrament is our taking of this gift; this gift of God, for our redemption.

All who wish to remember Jesus;

All who wish to become more loyal to him, and are willing to show this loyalty;

All who wish to be more in earnest about this business of Christianity;

All who wish to take the free gift of God's grace and love;

All of these are invited to take the Supper of the Lord, to be numbered among his dinner guests, to be his friends and comrades.

In a word, as we "do" this, we are seeking to become the "comrades" of Jesus.

LONG'S CHAPEL.

On Sunday, May 4, Long's Chapel Congregational Christian Church observed Home-Coming and Memorial Day. At the 11:00 a. m. morning worship service Rev. John G. Truitt, D. D., Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, delivered the sermon. A picnic dinner, on the grounds followed the morning service.

The afternoon service began at 2:00 p. m. and included an excellent program by boys and girls of the Christian Orphanage at Elon College; also a business session of Long's Chapel Cemetery Memorial Association.

A new room (used for the first time on this day) has been added to the church structure through the courtesy of Mr. and Mrs. Odell King.

INSPIRING MISSION PROGRAM.

On Sunday afternoon, May 18, a group from the Woman's Missionary Society of Winchester put on a most interesting and inspiring program at the Mt. Lebanon Christian Church near Shenandoah, Va.

The program was built around the theme: "Now—More Than Ever." Miss Virginia Mason was in charge of the devotional program followed by a business session in charge of Mrs. Cecil Whitlock, president of the society. Several members gave testimony to "What Missions Mean to Me." Various plans of work were discussed—Friendly Service, Interdenominational Cooperation and Young People's Work.

The Virginia Valley Woman's Conference voted to try the caravan plan this year and this meeting was the first. Several members from Bethel, including the pastor and his wife, were also present for the meeting.

After the meeting Rev. and Mrs. R. E. Newton invited the group to a delicious buffet supper where an hour of fellowship was spent together.

HIGH POINT REVIVAL.

Revival services at High Point Church begun last Sunday, June 8. Rev. Clyde Fields of Ramseur is the guest evangelist. Services are being held each evening at 7:30.

If we have a great revival
It must come down from above;
Christ our Lord will not deceive us
If we truse his perfect love.
There are many souls in darkness—
Some are seeking for the light.
Jesus needs more faithful workmen
Who will serve him day and night.

Don't forget that Jesus called us
Not to luxury and ease;
But to render faithful service,
And our Master strive to please.
Have you talked with those about you
Of God's never dying love?
Have you told them of his power
That descended from above?

Faithful prayer is greatly needed
And more humble service too;
We should try in every effort
God's own holy will to do.
As we pray to God the Father,
And to Christ his only Son;
We should pray as Jesus taught us,
Not my will but thine be done.

GUY H. VEAZEY.

OUR ASHEVILLE CHURCH.

Rev. F. E. Ratzell, pastor of our Asheville Church is taking seriously the recommendation of the Southern Convention in the matter of evangelism. In his bulletin following the Southern Convention he made the following notation:

"Churches of the Southern Convention (of which ours is one) have started an ambitious program of expansion. Each church will try to add one new member each month for every 100 members on roll. These members should be in addition to those who come by letter; they should be received on confession or reaffirmation. For us this means twelve new members each year. Membership inlistment committee please note!"

In reporting the work of the Asheville Church, Mr. Ratzell says further, "One bright spot is the new Couple's Club, which now has a membership over 30." "An improvement fund has been started, and in one week $1,000.00 was raised to repair and fix up the building. Much more will be needed, and it is coming in, so that we have now nearly $1,500.00."

Congratulations to Mr. Ratzell and his fine Asheville Church.

DR. SANDERSON RETIRES.

Dr. Ross W. Sanderson, since 1945 Director of Field Research for the Congregational Christian Board of Home Missions, retired on Saturday, May 31, after a distinguished career which has included pastorates in two states, executive posts with interdenominational Church Councils in Maryland and New York and his more recent assignment in New York City with The Board of Home Missions.

Because of his writing, committee service and field studies in states from Maine to California and in Canada, Dr. Sanderson has occupied a post of leadership in the ecumenical movement. Among his recent interdenominational research assignments have been the study of Protestant strategy in the Columbia River Basin and the Intermountain Area which includes Utah, Idaho and Wyoming.

During his service as Director of Field Research the denominational portion of Dr. Sanderson's time along research lines has been devoted to the study of Congregationalism in Montana, metropolitan Boston (Continued on page 15.)

WANT A PLACE FOR A PICNIC? MOONELON IS THE PLACE.

We invite our Congregational Christian Churches, Sunday schools, Classes, Young People's Groups, etc. to use our Convention Assembly Grounds (Moonelon), near Elon College, N. C.

Picnic tables are available, and we hope that the swimming pool can be in operation by the last of June. We regret that Moonelon cannot be used by individuals—but only groups from our Congregational Christian Churches. We invite groups to spend day or afternoon working on the grounds to make our property more attractive and useable.

For permit to use Moonelon, or to arrange a "work" party you should contact Rev. J. L. Neese, Box 456, Elon College, N. C. Rev. and Mrs. Neese are making their home at Moonelon for the summer and would be glad to see you. We regret that we must limit the use of Moonelon to Congregational Christian groups this summer. We hope that another summer we will have our buildings complete and the property can be used by other groups. Individuals are requested not to ask for permission to use the facilities—only groups are permitted.

We have a number of under graduates preparing for the Christian ministry at Elon College. However, it can be seen from the list of graduates of seminary we are still falling short a good number of ministerial students being prepared for the Christian ministry. We urge our churches to give consideration to the encouragement to our very fine young men to enter the Christian ministry. If we are to have ministers for our pulpits and pastorates we need to list a number of young people for this high Christian thought.

A SUPERB TRIO

The trio is an ideal form of music. It is not subject to the multiple conflicts and clumsiness of the chorus. Three individuals can learn to adjust and blend their voices in a most pleasing manner. Through study and discipline the voices are synchronized with a rare degree of proficiency. There are no mediocre or superfluous voices. Each has a clearly assigned responsibility and the three working together achieve a musical effect far transcending that of solo performances.

Commencement reminds us of another superb trio: the home, the school, and the church. Working together, they can overcome discord and liberate new harmonies in the community.

The home provides the raw material (no doubt some teachers would accept this apt description). The home provides the talent; namely, the talent to be trained and the wherewithal to finance that training. The trio is crippled without the effective cooperation of this member. Parents must establish a schedule and adhere to a routine in which school work can be accomplished. At times the music of this party may be light and gay and again it may be slow or somber. Surely the moods will vary. Occasionally the tempo may be that of a dirge. The home would certainly correspond to the contralto part, reflecting all the deep emotions and yet covering a vast range from pathos and defeat to victory and celebration. Here is the basic and indispensable member of the trio.

The school is the second member of the trio. Today its facilities are improved and it is able to do superior work. A director or supervisor of music with bands and glee clubs and music appreciation gives music a new status in the community. Music textbooks of today make music far more interesting and understandable than those of previous generations. Great things can be done in music where the young people are non-compartmentalized denominationally. This member of the trio usually takes the leading part. It will help lead the trio to even greater excellence.

The church is quite at home in this trio. It has been in the business a long time, longer than the school, and almost as long as the family. It has been guilty of an occasional sour note, but it has inspired, reproduced and kept alive sweet melodies. Appropriate settings in chapels, churches, and cathedrals have been created for the rendering of masterful compositions.

A boy ran out the front door one day and someone asked where his brothers were. "Oh," said he, "they are in there playing a duet. I finished my part."

An effective trio requires cooperation. No one can run out on the other two. While one may carry the melody for the moment, the others stand by for their cue, and all are essential for the climax. Teamwork, rather than solo performance, is the order of the day in every walk of life.

The church can weave its sweetest melody by carefully utilizing the resources of the home and the church. Few churches have dared to do this to the limit. The church can garner the vocal and instrumental harvest of this rich sowing if it will create the proper setting for worship, organize its musical program, and provide the necessary leadership.

AGAIN, FATHER'S DAY

Father's Day, June 15th, is dedicated to the theme, "Happy Families Make Peaceful World," in the belief that closer father-child relationships will help build a peaceful, democratic world. Within the family, the character of future citizens is formed.

As Ralph Waldo Emerson said in his essay, "Civilization," "The true test of civilization is not the census, nor the size of cities, nor the crops—no, but the kind of man the country turns out." This "kind of man" is first a child in the family. In the family, he learns the values with which he guides his entire life. The father has a great responsibility for the instillation of those values. But, as Dr. O. Spurgeon English and Constance J. Foster say in their book, "Fathers Are Parents, Too," published recently by G. P. Putnam's Sons, (The father) "has allowed himself to be unseated.

Under the pressure of serving as breadwinner, he has often lost sight of any other goal or purpose in life. He has failed to understand his psychological role, play it faithfully, and appreciate its full significance in the growth and development of his children. . . our ability to cope with this troubled world would be enormously increased by an effort on the part of fathers, especially, to gain more insight into the needs and developmental requirements of their sons and daughters."

Father's Day was founded in 1910 by the Spokane Ministerial Association through the inspiration of Mrs. J. B. Dodd. The National Committee urges that the observance of Father's Day include not only honoring fathers but also include the dedication of fathers everywhere to the teaching of good democratic citizenship to their children.

Stewardship Resources

By T. K. THOMPSON

The Southern Convention Meeting at Durham gave two addresses to the subject of Christian Stewardship. At the request of the editor, I am noting down through the pages of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, some of the stewardship resources that I would have mentioned had I had a third hour to speak.

Christian tithing is growing widely in interest throughout all of the denominations. This is true of the Congregational denomination and people interested in this subject should write to Dr. Stanberry J. Nichols of the Fellowship of Tithers, Medina, Ohio. They should ask for the leaflet, "We Tithe—Will You?" which gives stewardship testimonials from those who have enjoyed the experience of Christian tithing. The Presbyterians have recently published the classic, "Christian Tithing a Privilege," by Robert E. Speers. This is available from the National Council of Churches' Office, as are other materials listed with the initials, "N.C.C.," after them. In this new attractive format Dr. Speers' Leaflet costs $3.75 per hundred.

"Immortal Money," by Jay T. Stocking, a classic stewardship leaflet, is now available in new format and should be widely used again in this generation. This costs $2.50 per hundred. (NCC).

The best single book in the field of stewardship is, "Stewardship in the New Testament Church," by Holmes Ralston. This is largely an explanation of St. Paul's attitude on stewardship, and it offers the basis for any possible sermon and much fruitful reading by lay Christian people. It is available in paper covers for $1.00 from the John Knox Press, Richmond, Virginia.

The best single book on stewardship teachings of Jesus is, "The Stewardship Parables of Jesus," by Roswell C. Long, published by Abingdon Cokesbury in paper for $1.00.

Dr. Raymond Dudley, of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, has done an outstanding job in collecting the materials on the secret of growth in the churches of the mission fields. The book is entitled, "The Growing Edge of the Church." It costs 50c and is available from Agricultural Missions Incorporated, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Dr. Dudley discovered that self-support and lay evangelism are the two keys to success in the mission field. Perhaps they are likewise the keys to success in the home base countries.

Income is derived from the use of property and this presents the Christian steward with the philosophy of handling of property. This is a very serious matter and is adequately dealt with in a book entitled, "Christianity and Property," edited by Joseph T. Fletcher. This is a serious study on the Christian attitude toward property by a number of scholars in the Episcopal Church for the most part. It is published by Westminster Press and is available in cloth at $3.00.

Emile Brunner is one of the outstanding Theologians of our day and his two-volume Gifford Lectures on "Christianity and Civilization" have many fruitful suggestions about stewardship. Especially is this true of the chapter entitled "Wealth." These different lectures are easier reading than many of Brunner's earlier works.

Nels Ferre is one of the most stimulating theologians of our Congregational Christian Fellowship. He has written a brief practical book, "Strengthening the Spiritual Life." This discusses the practice of Christianity in a family. The last chapter is devoted largely to stewardship and to tithing and is very useful for lay readers. It is published by Harpers and is $1.00.

Children and youth are of vital importance in a stewardship program. The best work in this field is being done by the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., with their "Youth Budget Plan." Those who wish copies of the "Manual of the Youth Budget Plan," should write to my office in the National Council.

Audio-visual aids are of first rate importance in teaching stewardship. The best recent production in this field is "Seek Ye First," a film strip with record (with both 78 r. p. m. $10.00; and 33 r. p. m., $9.00; which is for the training of new members in Christian discipleship and stewardship as they join the church. If we do not train the new members, the chances are that we shall be having as many inactive persons on our rolls as come into membership in our church. This film strip is available from the Department of Unified Promotion, Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., 156 Fifth Avenue, New York 11, N. Y.

Stewardship naturally comes to a focus at the time of the Every Member Canvass, but it should be a year-round emphasis in the life of the church and to that end, this article is dedicated.

Meditations on Family Life

II—"PARENTHOOD."

First of all let me say what should be perfectly obvious, but is often forgotten, that parenthood is a sacred office created and ordained by God as the means by which the next generation is brought into the world. No obligation or responsibility can come to any of us that should be undertaken with greater care, greater sincerity, and deeper devotion. Those who are unwilling to go through the heartaches, trials, disappointments, monotonous routines of rearing a child to maturity through fifteen or twenty long and often lean years should not seek to become parents. But let me say quickly, that some if not most of life's deepest satisfaction can only come through these same trials and heartaches which are associated with rearing children.

The highest term which Jesus could find in our language for God was

"Father." The highest honor he could pay to his fellowman was to call him "brother." Yet these are family terms, for in the family our true relationships are manifest both to God and to one another. When we forget that parenthood is sacred and place parental duties on merely the physical level, something beautiful disappears from life and all manner of evils creep in. To be sure, as parents we seek to give our children food, clothing, shelter, medical care, and an education. But our higher privilege is to give them something that brings meaning into human existence, that gives a sense of value and perspective. We call this strange quality by the name of character. It is hard to define, but it is, oh, so evident whether a person has it or not. If we succeed in giving our children all the material possessions of life and

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

THE FRANCIS ASBURY PALMER FUND.

This fund was established by the late Frances Asbury Palmer of New York City. During Mr. Palmer's lifetime he was a member of the Presbyterian, Christian and Congregational Churches. He was a successful business man in New York City and a devout Christian. He gave assistance to the establishment of the Memorial Christian Temple in Norfolk, Virginia. He was not a college graduate himself but was greatly interested in Christian higher education. He was instrumental in the beginning of an endowment fund for Elon College. He contributed $10,000 on the condition that the church and friends raise $10,000. The condition was met and an endowment fund for the college begun.

At Mr. Palmer's death, he set up a fund of more than $1,000,000 to be administered by a Board of Trustees. The trustees were to give support to ministerial students of the Christian Church and others. He also directed that support should be given to Starkey Seminary, Lakemont, New York, Defiance College and Elon College. During the depression it was necessary to allocate practically all of the income to Starkey Seminary to keep that school going. For the past two years money has been allocated to Defiance and Elon. Last year these two institutions received $2,000 each. The same allotment has been made for the current year, and will be paid during the summer. Income from the fund is increasing.

The financial condition of Lakemont Academy, successor to Starkey Institute, is improving which will allow an increased sum for distribution to other causes. Mr. R. H. Long, son-in-law of the late Dr. Martin Summerbell, is secretary-treasurer of the fund. Rev. W. E. Baker and L. E. Smith are trustees of the fund.

The annual meeting is held on Friday before the third Sunday in May. The support given Elon College by this fund is not only of great assistance financially but it is greatly appreciated because of the memory and association with the college of the late Dr. Martin Summerbell and Frank S. Child. These two men were interested in Elon College and the ministerial students enrolled at Elon.

There are a number of foundations in this country that could be interested in Elon College to the extent of giving financial assistance if these foundations were approached by individuals who know Elon College and are acquainted with the directors of these foundations. This is a possible source of support that should be cultivated. Anyone having relation to or personal knowledge of such foundations would render a good service by communicating with the trustees or directors in interest of the college. At an early date the Executive Committee of the Two and One Half Million Dollar Campaign for the college will constitute a committee for this purpose.

FINAL WORD TO THE SENIORS.

As has been President Smith's custom for many years, he had a final word for the graduates just preceding the benediction and closing the entire commencement program. This short message was printed and placed inside the Bibles that were awarded to the graduates, and is herewith presented:

THE CLASS OF 1952.

During these four years of study, research and preparation you have been blessed with the quietness of our campus, the facilities of our college, the scholarship and thoroughness of our faculty, and the friendly atmosphere of our institution.

These have been yours while much of the world has suffered severely from the backwash of terribly destructive wars. Many people of the earth have been torn from their homes, driven from their countries and made to wander in strange lands to eke out an existence as best they can. Your own land is threatened with social upheaval, political stringencies, and economic stress.

This is the kind of world into which you are graduating; to which you go when you leave this campus. Go—go into this world of ours as if you had the answer to all of its problems; as if this is the fulfillment of the dreams of youth. Go as if God had matched you to this day. Who knows but that he has entrusted you with the ability, the leadership, the courage, and the power to bring order out of chaos, plenty out of poverty, comfort out of sorrow, and peace out of war. Go, and God be your companion and the man of your counsel as you face the storms and opportunities of this your day.

SCHOLARSHIP FUND HONORS DR. NED F. BRANNOCK.

Dr. Ned F. Brannock, veteran of more than forty years service as a member of the Elon College faculty, was honored during the 1952 commencement when announcement was made of the establishment of a scholarship fund to bear his name as a tribute to his service.

The scholarship fund, which was started by a number of his former students in tribute to his long service to the college, was announced at the annual Alumni Banquet by Prof. Earl Danieley, who stated that the interest from the fund will be used each year to aid some worthy senior student in the field of chemistry in carrying out a research project.

Dr. Brannock, who is thus honored, is a native of Alamance County who graduated from Elon as a member of the Class of 1899. He later pursued graduate study at Elon, at the University of North Carolina, at Johns Hopkins and at Columbia University, having received the Master of Arts degree from Elon and the Master of Science degree from Columbia. He also received the honorary Litt.D. from Defiance College.

After some years of work in North Carolina public schools, he returned to Elon in 1908 for work in the academic department and then became head of the chemistry department of the college, a post he has held to the present day.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

We are all hoping for the day when the members of our Sunday schools and churches will think of the money they give to Elon College not as gifts but as investments—investments not in houses, lands, stocks, and bonds, but in men and women, in human life that will pay dividends not in dollars and cents but in character and conduct. Elon College is an educational institution. This is our business. Our principal responsibility is, however, not simply education, but education with the Christian element. Our purpose is not only to insure the development of mental facilities, but to build character that will function

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. F. C. LESTER, Editor

840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, N. C.

A LETTER TO SOCIETY LEADERS.

Dear Friends:

How many women of your group are planning to attend the School of Missions at Elon College, July 8-11? It's just a month away, so here are some suggestions for your consideration:

1. Come yourself if possible (special recognition of this year's presidents). See that your woman's organization is represented.
2. Get your organization to pay the expenses of at least one car.
3. Contact someone of your group who can drive.
4. Then by personal contact fill the car, trying to get leaders or future leaders of your organization interested in going. They will have a good time, receive a great blessing, and it will pay wonderful dividends next year to your women's group.

You and I both know that everybody's business usually is nobody's, and things won't get done. As the president or a leader of your organization may we urge you to take the responsibility of having a good representative group to attend the school from your church.

If your leaders who would love to come have small children, get someone of your group who cannot come to keep the children for them. That would be a real service.

In other words, let's leave no stones unturned to make this the most worth while school we have had thus far. To do that, we must do two things:

1. Have a good program to offer, qualified leaders and teachers.
2. Have the women present.

The first of these, we feel we have. Now let's all get together and fill our dormitories to overflowing.

The cost is only $10.00 for registration, room and board, from Tuesday noon to Friday noon.

The teachers and leaders are:

MEET THE HAYES FAMILY.

In Guadalajara, Mexico's second largest city, we have a fine missionary family to represent our denomination—Malcolm and Lois Hayes and their two small children. The Hayes went to Mexico in 1946 as representatives of the American Board, although Mr. Hayes had worked there previously for several years with the Quakers.

Mr. Hayes is a native of Illinois. His parents were workers abroad with the Y. M. C. A. He graduated from the University of Nebraska in 1941,

MR. AND MRS. MALCOLM D. HAYES

with special training in music. He worked with the American Friends Service Committee in Mexico from 1941 to 1943 and in Civilian Public Service camps from 1943 to 1946.

Lois Kleinschmidt Hayes was born in Nebraska. She also graduated from the University of Nebraska with a degree in commercial art. After teaching that subject for a year she became the office secretary of our South Dakota Conference. Later she did the same type of work in the Southern California Conference.

Dr. Alden Clark of our board wrote about Mrs. Hayes after a year in Mexico: "She has become accustomed to awaking to the ringing of the bells in the many Catholic churches; to seeing a small store on each corner instead of a gasoline station; to boiling all her milk and water; to using no canned or ready-mixed goods and to greeting and bidding farewell to friends by saying 'Buenos dias' and 'Adios.' One week's activities include choir practice every night except one in preparation for a big Sunday concert conducted by a young Congregational Christian Church leader, Arturo Villilobos; a young people's Christmas party at her home with popcorn balls as a special treat; a school program for the benefit of other children in a poor rural school across town; international party one evening; and a school program for the students."

Mr. Hayes teaches in the Instituto Colon, our school in Guadalajara. He is choir director and pianist at the local church, and he is the mission treasurer, which carries with it many responsibilities. He frequently visits the churches of the four west coast provinces, which are our special concern.

One of the great contributions of the Hayes' household has been its willingness to welcome groups of children, young people or adults for evenings of music or discussion.

A BUS RIDE IN MEXICO.

By MRS. MALCOLM HAYES.

Among Malcolm's duties is that of managing the school bus, which in the course of its daily run picks up nearly a third of the pupils of the school, mostly of the kindergarten age and first and second grades. Parents send their children to our school for one of several reasons. Its teaching standards, including discipline, are much higher than those of the public schools which are at times overcrowded. There are many private schools, but the Instituto Colon is the only one where the children are not exposed to and drilled in the Catholic doctrine (even though teaching religion in schools is illegal in Mexico).

If you would like to see Guadalajara—not its tourist attractions—but its back streets, etc., you should get on the bus some chilly December morning at 6:30 and ride with it for two hours from one side of town to the other. First we stop for the young son of the pastor of one of the Nazarene churches. Further on a little brown-eyed seniorita about four years old gets on to ride over an hour before she arrives at school. Next we stop for a chubby youngster who lives in one of Guadalajara's tenements—a "vecindad," literally a "neighborhood." It consists of apartments of three small rooms built around a narrow court which opens into the street by a single door. One apartment houses as many as a dozen people. Later we pull up in front of a house near the Country Club in one of the new building areas of fine homes. Then a daughter of one of the leading doctors gets on.

We keep going, sometimes picking up one child, sometimes two or three from one family. Many are children of former pupils of the school. Two come from German families, and their blue eyes look strange among all the black-eyed children. Some are the children of church families—two of them are great grandchildren of a woman who recently had a service at the church in remembrance of her fiftieth wedding anniversary.

THE HAYES VISIT THE COUNTRY.

Besides local responsibilities, Malcolm tries to do visiting in churches which stretch over a distance equal to that from Boston to Denver. The program to mold men's lives is still the basic motive for our missionary work, and it is from these churches that we must find people with Christian ideals to move to posts of leadership in all phases of our work.

One of Malcolm's most interesting visits was to the region of Ameca, about 50 miles from Guadalajara. His companions were Marcelino Alvarado, a young man who is our colporteur (Bible distributor) and had visited the region before; and Elena Ortiz, the religious education worker of our field. Our first destination was Alta Vista. The people first heard the Gospel some fifteen years ago, and today Alta Vista is one of the rarities in Mexico—a Protestant community.

Because of poor bus connections, we did not arrive until 9 p.m. But here, as in all rural sections, the eagerness for the Bible and its teachings is so great that they sent out word of our arrival, and a group of a dozen assembled for a service which began at 10:15 p.m., after we had been served supper.

The following afternoon we took the bus to the village of Ipazoltic, an Indian name referring to the lime deposits there. Here we stayed in the home of a family who has dedicated a small room as a chapel. That evening a group of 25 walked from a town three miles away to attend the service.

In this area there is a circuit of five villages which have never had regular church services, but where there are great possibilities if it were possible to do an intensive work. But there is no leader to send.

A NOTE OF THANKS.

Our Women's Board sent a gift to be a part of the larger gift that the women of our denomination gave to Mrs. Berta McClintock, retiring secretary of women's work. Here is her note of thanks:

My dear Friend:

You and the members of your board had a share in the beautiful recognition gift presented to me at the Midwinter Meeting in January.

I want to tell you about the wonderful trip I am planning, which the gift of money will help make possible. I am joining the European Seminar sponsored by the Council for Social Action and led by Dr. Reissig and Tom Keehn. I can't quite believe it is true, but I have actually signed up!

We sail on July 9 on the Queen Mary and visit England, Germany, Switzerland, France, Italy—and I hope to visit our American Board work in Greece while the others go to Yugoslavia. I have never been to Europe nor have I visited any American Board mission, so this will be a great event in my life.

I shall feel that I represent you each day as we meet church and government leaders in these different countries. I wish you could actually be with us. Whether your part in my gift was a letter in the very precious Book of Memory or a share in the money, this note brings my deepest gratitude.

Faithfully yours,

BERTA McCLINTOCK.

ELON PROFESSOR VISITS MISSION FIELD.

Dr. W. W. Sloan, professor of Bible, and Mrs. Sloan, professor of Spanish at Elon, left Elon College the evening of Commencement Day for a visit to mission work throughout Africa and the Near East. Dr. and Mrs. Sloan flew Tuesday night from New York to Paris. From there they went to Lisbon, Portugal, and Friday flew from Lisbon to Monrovia, Liberia around the hump of Africa. From there their plan is to visit the Gold Coast, Nigeria, French Equatorial Africa, Angola where our own Congregational Christian mission is located, the Belgian Congo, Kenya, Ethiopia, the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, Egypt and the two Palestine nations of Jordan and Israel. On their return they will spend a few days in Spain where Mrs. Sloan spent five weeks three years ago.

Dr. and Mrs. Sloan expect to get back to Elon College August 29. THE CHRISTIAN SUN has asked them to send reports of their experiences from Africa from time to time. Since the foreign mission study subject for this coming year is Africa, doubtless both Dr. and Mrs. Sloan will be invited to speak in many churches of the Southern Convention next fall and winter.

A Page for Our Children

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Mrs. Wisseman has sent a list of Friendly Service needs to all women's societies. One of the immediate, urgent needs is the supplying of Child Care Migrant Centers. Listed are the needs. These things do not need to be new, just so they are clean and in working order. If your class or Junior Society helps with these projects please write Mrs. Wisseman or me so it can go into THE SUN.

Supplies for Virginia go to Rev. Isaac Henderson, Cheriton Labor Camp, Cheriton, Virginia.

And North Carolina to First Baptist Church, Elizabeth City, N. C.

So many of the strawberries, string beans, and potatoes that we eat are picked and harvested by these migrant workers. They are "strangers in our states" and there are many children with them. Let's share!

A PLEA FOR THE DREAMER.

By JANICE A. McDONALD.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Until yesterday Mrs. Jones thought that her son, David, was dull. When she had a long talk with his teacher and found that his mental test proved him to be one of the brightest children in the class, it stunned her.

"David is a dreamer," Miss Samuels said. "He never causes us trouble. He's a nice child."

Mrs. Jones frowned.

"He's miles away when I call on him," Miss Samuels continued. "He never volunteers, but when I call on him he has a good answer."

"But he should pay attention in class! I'm going to get after him!"

"We must help David without upsetting him, Mrs. Jones. If we are not careful we may force him to retire more and more into a life of fancy and imagination. Dreaming in itself isn't bad. Many 'dreamers' of the world have done and are doing great things, in every line of endeavor, by first dreaming and then acting."

"But he has to learn to live."

"I've watched David on the playground," Miss Samuels said. "He stands and watches the boys playing ball or sometimes plays with the younger girls."

"I'm largely to blame," Mrs. Jones confessed. "I have never encouraged him to play with the boys in our neighborhood. They are so rough, and most of the neighbors' children are little girls."

"I see," Miss Samuels said.

"His father is athletic," Mrs. Jones added. "He naturally wishes that David were, too. When he plays with him he keeps after David to try to catch, to kick, to run fast—"

"David dreams because of a feeling of insecurity," Miss Samuels said.

"Don't you see? He would like to participate on the playground, but he is sure that achievement would be hopeless for him. He dreams in the classroom because he thinks he doesn't measure up there, either."

"But how can we get David to stop dreaming and wake up!" Mrs. Jones persisted.

"Dreaming is good in its rightful place," Miss Samuels answered. "But we can work together to help David to wake up and still be happy. Think of the many successful people who have used their imagination to enrich their own lives and to help others.

This was so. Mrs. Jones brightened. David might become a great man!

"I wasn't always attentive," Mrs. Jones thought to herself later. "I was forever cooking up ways to make mischief!" But it was hard to accept the fact that David's dreaming came from insecurity. She loved David. So did Bob. Yet, she began to appreciate, if the boy wasn't athletic, he shouldn't be punished for it, nor should he see his parents distressed because he wasn't sufficiently practical. She, too, in such a situation, might seek refuge in dreams.

What if David's dreams were, now those of a wistful child, wearing seven-league boots and carrying a wand? With help he might some day have dreams that would prove worth-while and bring tangible results.

Approval by his parents and teachers and successes at home and at school are what David needs now. He might never play ball or run well, but if Daddy can enjoy David's antics and encourage him to 'play the clown' now and then, the father-son relationship will be bettered, and David will improve emotionally through having fun with his father.

Patience is necessary, in dealing with a dreamer, but small, frequent doses of praise and encouragement will work wonders. When David does something well, it should be praised; and if he merely tries to do so, he should be commended.
